superintendency, in which capacity he became widely known among the leading educators of northern Indiana. Professor Gavin was married in Fort Wayne, April 30, 1871, to Miss Sedonia R. Davis, whose birth occurred in Newark, Ohio, on the 29th of April, 1850. He continued in educational work until 1899, when he resigned his position and his death took place on December 24th of the year following, his wife dying in 1879. Prof. Gavin was reared in the Presbyterian faith, but later in life united with the Baptist church, being at the time of his death an ordained deacon of the congregation worshiping in Fort Wayne. Politically he was a staunch supporter of the Republican party and took an active interest in politics and public affairs, always keeping himself well informed relative to the leading questions and issues of the day. For a number of years he was an enthusiastic member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he rose to prominent positions, including that of Sir Knight and the thirty-second or Scottish rite degree.

Dr. Frank W. Gavin is the only child of Prof. and Isabella Gavin. He was born April 9, 1872, in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and received his literary education in the public schools of that city, graduating from the high school of that city as valedictorian of his class at the early age of seventeen. While still a mere youth he formulated his plans for the future and selecting the medical profession as best fitted to his tastes and inclinations, began a preliminary course of study as soon as he quit school, under the direction of Dr. George Greenawalt, one of Fort Wayne's leading physicians. Subsequently he entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York city, where he prosecuted his studies and researches under some of the most eminent medical minds of the age, receiving his degree from that noted institution in 1893, when but a little past his twenty-first year.

After his graduation Dr. Gavin served a term in Bellevue hospital, where he acquired valuable practical knowledge and later was similarly engaged in Mercy hospital in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. His experience in the above institutions was of especial value in fitting him for the active duties of his profession and while there he availed himself of every opportunity at hand to enlarge the area of his knowledge so as to become not only well grounded in the great truths of medical science but to reduce his knowledge to practice in the treatment of diseases.

Severing his connection with Mercy hospital, the Doctor entered upon the practice of his profession in Pittsburg and Fort Wayne, and remained there until taking a post-graduate course in New York, in 1898-99, after which he chose as a field of labor the city of Canton, Ohio, locating here in April of the latter year. Although of comparatively brief duration, Dr Gavin's professional career has been singularly successful, the reputation being awarded him as one of the most skillful and thorough practitioners in a city where a high standard of medical talent has long obtained. He has built up a large and lucrative practice in the city and adjacent country and among his professional brethren is held in high esteem, as he is by those who rely upon his services in time of suffering. In the various medical organizations to which he belongs he comes in contact with the leading physicians and surgeons of eastern Ohio and other parts of the country, participating with them in the deliberations and discussions whereby the profession is gradually being elevated to a higher plane and the unworthy weeded from the ranks. At this time he holds membership with the Stark County Medical Society, being secretary, the Medical Society of Canton, the Ohio State Medical Society, the State Medical Society of Indiana, Union Medical Society, the Medical Society of Allen county, Indiana, Northeastern Ohio Medical Society, the Mississippi Valley

Medical Society, the Maumee Valley Medical Society and the American Medical Association, besides being a member of the medical board of the Aultman Hospital at Canton.

As a citizen the Doctor is deeply interested in whatever concerns the general welfare of his adopted county and city, and as a man his friendship is warm and his loyalty to those worthy of his confidence and respect true and unflinching. Politically he is an ardent Republican and takes an active interest in the success of his party in local, state and national affairs. Dr. Gavin's professional success is mutually shared with a companion and helpmeet, to whom he was united in marriage at Massillon, Ohio, on the 24th of May, 1899. Mrs. Gavin was formerly Miss Ella M. Smith, daughter of James Benton Smith, of the above city. They reside at 425 South Cleveland avenue, the former rectory of the Episcopal church.

JOHN THEOBALD WEYBRECHT was born in the little village of Anspach la Haut, department du Haut Rhine, Alsace, France, now a portion of Germany, the date of his nativity having been January 27, 1829, being the eldest son of a family of three sons and five daughters. His parents, Theobald and Anna M. (Prickard) Weybrecht, were likewise natives of the province of Alsace, where they passed their entire lives, the father having been a contractor and builder by vocation, while he was a representative of one of the old and honored families of that section. John T. was reared in his native place, where he received good educational advantages in his youth, receiving instruction in both the French and German languages, and thereafter learning the trade of carpenter under the direction of his father and becoming a skilled workman. In 1853, as a young man of about twenty-five years, he severed the home ties and valiantly set forth to seek his fortunes in the United States, believing that here were to be found superior opportunities for one dependent upon his own resources for the attaining of a position of independence. He was animated by that self-reliance and self-respect which were his dominating characteristics through life, and by a courage and determination which augured well for his success in his new field of endeavor. He landed in the city of New York on the 10th of December of the year mentioned, and thence proceeded to Williamsport, Pennsylvania, where he worked at his trade about four months, at the expiration of which, in April, 1864, he again started westward, having in mind the city of Chicago as his destination. The Ohio & Pennsylvania Railroad, now known as the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, had then been in operation but a short time, and the train service was as yet somewhat irregular and uncertain. It thus chanced that the train on which he was traveling was detained for a number of hours in Alliance, and this incident caused a diametrical change in his plans, and no doubt in his entire career. He here met some of his countrymen and through them ascertained that conditions for obtaining employment at his trade here were very favorable, and he accordingly decided to locate in Alliance. For three months he was employed at his trade as a journeyman, and at the expiration of this interval he began operations on his own responsibility, as a contractor and builder, while for a time he also worked as foreman of a corps of carpenters employed in connection with the construction of the Fort Wayne Railroad. From the initiation of his independent career as a contractor his success was noteworthy, for he proved his ability and his inflexible honesty and fidelity, and thus secured many desirable contracts, eventually having to do with the erection of many of the most important public, business and private buildings in this section of the county. In fact it may be said that during the years that he was actively engaged in contracting fully three-fourths of the dwellings in Alliance and practically all the public buildings erected in the city of Alliance within that period, including the school buildings, the Alliance College buildings, churches, etc., were built by him, and he was ever found true to the every detail and specification of every contract into which he entered, the natural sequence being that he gained the unqualified confidence and esteem of the people of Alliance and vicinity. In 1865, in conjunction with his contracting business, Mr. Weybrecht erected a small planing mill and also began dealing in lumber, his original plant being located on Columbia street, near Linden avenue. With the rapid growth of the city it was not long ere the plant was found to be in the very heart of the city, while the business handled had kept pace with the development of the town, so that it became expedient for him to enlarge his facilities and to seek a location more eligible for such an industry, and accordingly, in 1878, he removed to the location of the present plant, on Broadway, where he erected extensive planing mills, which have been kept up to the highest standard to the present time, all kinds of lumber and mill work for builders' use being turned out, while the establishment is the most extensive of the sort in eastern Ohio, controlling a business of wide scope and importance. With great sagacity and energy Mr. Weybrecht gave his attention to the upbuilding of his business, becoming one of the successful and representative business men of the city, while he manifests at all times the deepest interest in the welfare of Alliance, his public spirit being such that he was always found in the forefront in the promotions of projects and enterprises for the upbuilding and progress of the city. Of this honored citizen a previous publication has given the following appreciative estimate: "Perhaps no man did more for the early growth of Alliance than did the late John T. Weybrecht; certainly no man better demonstrated by his daily conduct what thrift, good habits and business integrity will accomplish for the young man. He came to Alliance from Alsace about half a century ago, poor in purse but rich in practical knowledge and honest endeavor. He soon became the leading contractor in the town, and he lived to establish one of the finest planing-mill plants in the state, to which his sons have succeeded. He left his family large property interests and also that heritage which is greatest of all, a good name."

Mr. Weybrecht was a staunch Democrat in his political proclivities, and was a past grand of Alliance Lodge No. 266, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Weybrecht was summoned into eternal rest on the 31st of January, 1895, and his death was deeply mourned by all classes in Alliance, while the business community realized the loss of one of its most valuable and honored members. In 1892 Mr. Weybrecht admitted to partnership his two elder sons, Benjamin F. and Charles C., and thereafter the business was conducted under the firm name of J. T. Weybrecht & Sons until his death, shortly after which the present title was adopted, J. T. Weybrecht's Sons.

On the 11th of January, 1855, Mr. Weybrecht was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Honacker, who was born near Alliance, on the 27th of June, 1833, and who survives him, residing in the beautiful family home in Alliance and holding the affectionate regard of all who know her. She is a daughter of Christopher and Maria (Wolf) Honacker, who were natives of Wurtemberg, Germany, whence they emigrated to America in 1832, becoming pioneers of Stark county, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Weybrecht became the parents of eight children, of whom two, Antoinette and Lucinda, died in infancy. Mary is the wife of Leroy Lamborn, of Alliance; Annie is the wife of Fremont P. Livingstone, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Jennie is the wife of John M. Vitzthum, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Benjamin F. and Charles C., who succeeded their father in business, are individually mentioned in appending paragraphs; and Andrew T. is in Alliance, Ohio.

Hon. Benjamin F. Weybrecht was born in Alliance, on the 17th of March, 1861, and his educational discipline in his youth was received in the public schools of his native city, in which he completed a course in the high school. He completed his studies in 1878 and forthwith became actively identified with his father's business, becoming familiar with all details and soon gaining prestige as an able and discriminating young business man. He is now senior member of the firm of J. T. Weybrecht's Sons, and is numbered among the progressive and influential business men of his home city. He is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party and has been an active and efficient worker in its cause, while he served one term in the state legislature, having been elected in 1888. At this point we quote briefly from an article which appeared in a recent publication of local order: "Hon. B. F. Weybrecht grew up with the town and his fellow citizens are proud of his achievements and also of his marked ability. Since serving the people as a member of the legislature, he has firmly declined to become a candidate for public office. He is rarely gifted as a platform orator, richly endowed in natural ability and intellectual capacity, and would grace any office within the gift of the people. He takes an active interest in the growth, prosperity and general attractiveness of his home city and occupies a warm place in the hearts of its citizens." He is now senior member of the firm of J. T. Weybrecht's Sons, and the continuous expansion of the enterprise has been due in large measure to his administrative ability and progressive methods. On the 25th of December, 1884, Mr. Weybrecht was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Peterson, of Alliance, and they are the parents of four children, John W., Edgard Charles, Millicent M. and Mary K.

Col. Charles C. Weybrecht, junior member of the firm of J. T. Weybrecht's Sons, was born in Alliance, on the 6th of December, 1868, and he attended the city schools until 1885, when he was matriculated in the Ohio State University, at Columbus, where he remained three years. Thereafter he was in the railway mail service until 1892, when he became associated with his father and brother in the business described in the foregoing paragraphs, and to the promotion of its interests he has since given his attention. In 1892 he organized Company K, Eighth Infantry, Ohio National Guard, in Alliance, and he served as captain of the same until 1897, when he was elected to the office of major in the same regiment, in which capacity he served, in the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, during the Spanish-American war, including participation in the Santiago campaign. His command, the Third Battalion of the Eighth Ohio, was detailed as headquarters guard to Major General Shafter, and was present at the formal surrender of General Toral to General Shafter. In November, 1899, Major Weybrecht was elected lieutenant colonel of the Eighth Ohio National Guard, of which position he has since continued incumbent. He was one of the most popular officers in the army at Santiago, and his men were known as "Weybrecht's Bulldogs." He is vice-president of the Industrial Building and Loan Association of this city. In the 7th of May, 1904, Colonel Weybrecht was united in marriage to Miss Emilie Brosius, daughter of Enos H. Brosius, of Alliance. He is a Democrat in politics, and is ever loyal to his native city, being one of the popular young business men of the place.

CHRISTIAN E. GRABER, one of the most respected farmers of Stark county, Ohio, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, March 25, 1846, and is the son of Ulrich and Magdaline (Camp) Graber, who came from Switzerland when young and were married in Tuscarawas county, where the father, who was a farmer by calling, died in 1849, his widow surviving until August, 1900. To Ulrich and Magdaline Graber were born three children, two of whom still survive. After the death of Ulrich Graber, Mrs. Graber was married to Michael F. Lillich, also of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, but a native of Germany. Christian E. Graber was educated in the district schools of Tuscarawas county and was thoroughly trained to farming. He owns one hundred and four acres, and is, as was his father, a Democrat in politics. He purchased his present farm in 1873 and settled on it in 1874, and was the land appraiser of the township in 1900.

Mr. Graber married, in 1874, Miss Helen L. Hoerger, who was born in Holmes county, Ohio, and is a daughter of Godfrey and Helen L. Hoerger, who now occupy the old Graber homestead in Tuscarawas county. To Mr. and Mrs. Christian E. Graber have been born three children, namely: Harry A., July 14, 1875, now a farmer; Charles G., who was born April 30, 1877, and Alice V., who was born April 3, 1879, and is now the wife of Cyrus Stansburger, a farmer, and has one child.

The paternal grandfather of Christian E. Graber was also named Ulrich Graber, and his wife bore the maiden name of Mary Jontz, and both came from Switzerland in an early day and established their home in Tuscarawas county, where the grandfather rose to prominence as an agriculturist and as a citizen, and in that county he and his wife passed the remainder of their days, respected by all who knew them. Ulrich Graber, father of Christian E., was reared in Tuscarawas county and during his short life was very successful as a farmer, but death, which "loves a shining mark," called him away all too soon, but his widow was very fortunate in her second marriage, and young Christian E. was well cared for until able to take care of himself, which he has admirably done, as his present possessions clearly indicate. As a farmer he has been very successful, as he raises all the crop indigenous to the soil and climate, together with the usual live stock bred by the all-around farmer. This live stock, for which Ohio is somewhat famous, is comprised of thoroughbred horses, mules, milch cows, sheep and swine. Its agricultural products comprise wheat, corn, oats and buckwheat, hay, potatoes, flaxseed, etc., and in its horticultural products are to be found apples, plums, pears and cherries, as the more important of the fruits with which Mr. Graber has to do. Mr. and Mrs. Graber hold a very high position socially, being among the most respected residents of Perry township.

JOHN W. WALSER.—The Walser family is of pure Swiss extraction, and the subject is of the first generation born in America. He is a son of Robert Walser, who was born in Switzerland in 1809, the family being one of distinction in that fair land. Robert Walser was a son of Ussi Walser, who was a physician and surgeon of ability and who was engaged in the practice of his profession in Switzerland until 1809, when, accompanied by his family, he bade adieu to home and native land and set forth for America, where he believed better opportunities were afforded for individual accomplishment and being animated primarily by a desire to give to his children the ultimate benefit of these advantages. He located in Butler county, Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession for a number of years and then came to Ohio as one of its pioneers, settling in Columbiana county in 1820 and there taking up a tract of land in the virgin forest, being one of the first settlers. There he gave willing and devoted attention to such calls as came to him in a professional way and also instituted the reclaiming of his land. Subsequently he started on horseback for a visit to his former home in Pennsylvania and all trace of him was lost from that time, and it is supposed that he either fell a victim to Indian enmity or other outlawry, or else met with an accidental death. His devoted wife, brave in her bereavement and in the face of the uncertainty of her husband's fate, made the best possible provision for her children and gave them her solicitous care until she too was called upon to answer the inexorable summons of death. She continued her residence in Columbiana county, her death occurring near the little pioneer village of Dungannon, about the year 1834. To her were born two sons, Jacob, who was a child at the time of the family emigration to America and who was engaged in farming near Dungannon, Ohio, until his death, and Robert, father of the subject of this review.

Robert Walser was born on the 11th of August, 1809, and within a week after his birth his parents set forth on the voyage from Switzerland to America. He grew to maturity in Columbiana county, Ohio, his boyhood days being passed on a farm, and by reason of the loss of his father he was denied many advantages which would otherwise have been his portion. His scholastic training was such as was to be had in the primitive schools of the pioneer days, and his attendance in the same was of a desultory nature, since he was compelled to early assume the practical responsibilities of life. As a young man he acquired a knowledge of the carpenter trade, and to this he devoted his attention more or less for a number of years, in connection with farming. In about 1825 he was united in marriage to Miss Theresa Wiss, who was born in France, on the 30th of April, 1808, and who died in Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1835, her parents having emigrated to America about the year 1809, first settling in Butler county, Pennsylvania, whence they later removed to Columbiana county, Ohio, being numbered among the early pioneers of that section of the state. A few years after his marriage Robert Walser removed from Columbiana county to Carroll county, where he secured a tract of land and developed a good farm. After the death of his first wife he married her sister, Miss Catherine Wiss, who was his cherished companion and helpmeet for many years, her death occurring on the 23d of December, 1876. Thereafter the father passed his time in the homes of his children, where he was accorded the utmost filial solicitude, and he died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Simon Deiringer, of Newcassel, Wisconsin, on the 15th of February, 1887, at the age of nearly seventy-eight years. His first wife bore him three children, namely: John W., the immediate subject of this sketch; Barbara, who was born November 7, 1831, is the wife of Frank Strobel, of Newcassel, Wisconsin; and Eli, who was born April 26, 1833, married and resides in the city of Buffalo, New York: he was a lake and ocean sailor during the greater portion of his active life, and during the war of the Rebellion served in the Tenth New York Cavalry. Robert and Catherine (Wiss) Walser became the parents of four children, namely: Mary, who was born August 18, 1835, married Joseph Richardt and died in Canton, March 21, 1890; Catherine, born August 11, 1843, was first married to John Miller and after his death to Joseph Hearn, who was a soldier in the regular army for twenty-one years, within which time he served in the Civil war, being discharged with the rank of colonel, and residing for a number of years thereafter in the city of Cleveland, where his widow still maintains her home; Henry, born February 3, 1849, married Miss Rosa Soltner, and they reside in Cleveland; and Martin, born July 16, 1854, is likewise a resident of that city.

John W. Walser, whose name initiates this sketch, was born on the parental homestead, in Hanover township, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 15th of April, 1829, and he was a child at the time of his father's removal to Carroll county, where he was reared on a farm up to the age of thirteen, the homestead being located in Rose township and the land having been entered from the government by his father in 1823. The family abode for a number of years was a log cabin of the type common to the pioneer epoch, and, owing to the exigencies of time and place, his educational advantages were most meagre, and in his youth his entire schooling was comprised in the short period of fifteen months, covering three months during the winters of successive years. He was taken from school when thirteen years of age and was placed to work as a clerk and general utility boy in the general store of Harkness & Greer, pioneer merchants of Magnolia, Stark county, remaining with this firm for several years and gaining valuable business experience, while his alert and receptive mind enabled him in the meanwhile to practically supplement the limited educational training which had been his in a direct way. During his first year of service he received nothing in the way of recompense save the experience gained, and his emolument for the second year was fifty dollars, which was increased to seventy-five for the third year, while he paid seventy-five cents per week for his board. He recalls that at that time eggs brought three cents per dozen, while butter was sold for five cents per pound, so that a parity was maintained in the matter of expenses. On one occasion it became his duty to dump hundreds of dozens of eggs into the canal, there being no demand for the same. While in the employ of this firm Mr. Walser on one occasion indulged in a little individual speculation, buying a quantity of pork, which he salted and cured for the spring market, but he received no offer for the product, since the worms and rats had in the meantime taken up claims and practically destroyed the provender. After leaving this firm he was employed for nine months as a clerk in the store of Thomas Stanton, at Hanover, and thereafter he assisted in the work of the home farm for about two years. At the expiration of this interval he secured a position as clerk in the store of Isaac Teller, at Magnolia, receiving three hundred dollars a year, which was considered a large salary. Later he again engaged with Mr. Harkness (Mr. Greer having died), with whom he remained for about one and a half years, when Mr. Harkness died. He had saved the sum of three hundred and thirty-three dollars and now opened a modest grocery in Magnolia and thus gave inception to his independent business career. Success attended his efforts, and he continued the enterprise until 1854, when he sold out and removed to Waynesburg, this county, where he conducted a general store for the ensuing decade. In 1864 he came to Canton, where he forthwith established himself in the provision business, associating himself with Peter M. Myers and opening an establishment on North Market street, where John Santry now has his store, and there they continued in business for a period of fifteen years, when Mr. Meyers died and the subject acquired the entire business, which he there individually continued until 1876, when he removed his quarters to the location of the present store of Isadore Lefkovits. There he had a well equipped establishment and conducted a large and representative business until 1884, when he sold out to Julius Kline and retired from active business, having acquired a competency through his energy, industry and well-directed effort and being known as one of the reliable and distinctly representative business men of the city and as a citizen of sterling worth. His success was achieved through the proper utilization of the opportunities presented and through the bending of his intrinsic powers along a definite line, while his conservative policy and business sagacity enabled him to avoid mistakes and to make his success cumulative. He is a stockholder in each the City National Bank, the Farmers' Bank and the George D. Harter Bank, the leading financial institutions of Canton. In 1889 he became a stockholder in the Royal Brick Company, of which he was president at the time it was merged into the Metropolitan Brick Company, and he still retains his interests in the concern. He has made judicious investments in local realty and his position is that of one of the solid men of the community and one whose career has been unshadowed by wrong, so that he commands unequivocal confidence and good will. In politics Mr. Walser gives his allegiance to the Democratic party, and though he has been a staunch supporter of its cause he has never had any personal ambition in a political way. He served for a number of years as a member of the board of trustees of the Hartford poor fund, and he and his wife are communicants of the German Catholic church, in whose faith they were reared.

At Magnolia, Stark county, on the 26th of September, 1852, Mr. Walser was united in marriage to Miss Magdalena Markling, who was born in Germany, in 1834, and who accompanied her parents on their emigration to America when she was twelve years of age. She is a daughter of Clendennis and Magdalena (Christ) Markling, who settled in Ross township, Carroll county, upon coming to America, and both of whom died in Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Walser became the parents of five children, concerning whom we incorporate brief record, as follows: William Henry, who was born in Magnolia, this county, August 23, 1853, was married, on the 15th of June, 1880, to Miss Mary Kress, and he died in Canton on the 23d of August, 1882; Henrietta, who was born in Waynesburg, October 21, 1854, is the wife of Henry L. Miller, of Canton; Laura, who was born in Waynesburg, March 8, 1858, is the wife of John J. Schwalen, of Canton; Clorinda, born in Waynesburg, March 22, 1864, remains at the parental home; and Celestia C., born in Canton, February 21, 1868, is the wife of Charles A. Culp, of this city.

REV. JOSIAH KEIM was born in Holmes county, Ohio, December 8, 1834, and is a son of Moses and Lydia (Domes) Keim, of whom appropriate mention will be found in the biography of John Keim on another page of this volume. The childhood and youth of the subject were spent on the home farm and his early educational training included a knowledge of the branches constituting the common school course. After completing these he pursued his studies for some time in the Canton high school, subsequently entering Mt. Union College, which institution he attended for several years, meantime devoting his vacations to teaching, in which profession he soon achieved an honorable reputation. Mr. Keim began his career as an educator at the age of eighteen and for some time thereafter divided his time between teaching and attending school, making a fine record in both lines of work. He followed teaching continuously for a period of eighteen years and became widely and favorably known as an efficient and popular instructor.

In October, 1867, Mr. Keim was called to the ministry of the German Baptist church and during the ensuing seventeen years devoted his time and talents to the duties of his sacred office, preaching with great acceptance for a number of congregations and proving an able exponent of the doctrines peculiar to his denomination. An impressive and eloquent advocate in the German Baptist church, he took his position with what has since been known as the Progressive element and for five years thereafter filled the pulpit at Louisville, the congregation increasing greatly under his pastorate.

From 1894 to 1896 Rev. Keim had charge of the dining hall at Ashland University, but in the fall of the latter year resigned the place to resume the ministerial labors, accepting a call to the church at Winchester, to which he ministered with much acceptance for a period of four years. After much importunity on the part of the management of the Ashland University Rev. Keim, in the year 1900, was again induced to take charge of the dining hall and he continued in that capacity to the great satisfaction of the faculty and students until the spring of 1902, when he gave up the place permanently and returned to Louisville, where he is now living a retired life.

In addition to his regular work of the ministry and the running of the dining hall, Rev. Keim for about seven years held a clerical position in the Louisville Deposit Bank and while connected with that institution demonstrated business ability of a high order. Had he seen fit to devote his life entirely to secular pursuits he no doubt would have achieved a distinguished career, possessing as he does those sterling mental characteristics which eminently qualify one for leadership and success in large enterprises. As an educator he won more than local repute, but it is by his labors as an able, earnest and faithful minister of the gospel that his usefulness to mankind is chiefly to be judged. As a preacher he is clear and concise in statement, logical in deduction, earnest in presenting the claims of the gospel and fearless in denouncing sin in whatever garb arrayed. He has been exceedingly provident but by no means parsimonious of his means, being free in contributing to all worthy objects and a liberal donor to charitable, benevolent and religious enterprises. As a neighbor and citizen, his standing has always been above reproach and his integrity has ever been of that kind which wins for the possessor the unbounded confidence and esteem of the people with whom he comes in contact.

In politics Rev. Keim is a Republican in all the word implies and has been an earnest supporter of the principles of his party, but never an aspirant for the honors or emoluments of office. He is well versed on the leading public questions of the day and his wide range of reading on general subjects has made him one of the best informed men of the community in which he resides.

Mr. Keim has been twice married, the first time, in 1858, to Miss Mary A. Bosler, who died in 1872, leaving no children. On the 10th day of August, 1873, he was united in the bonds of wedlock with Sarah Hill, of Plain township, this county, daughter of Thomas Hill.

JACOB MARKLING, vice-president of the National Wringer and Manufacturing Company of Canton, is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, and the son of John Adam and Margaret Markling, both born and reared in Germany. These parents, with three children, left their native country in 1845 and came to the United States, settling on a farm in Carroll county, Ohio, where the father followed agricultural pursuits until his death, in the year 1872. Mrs. Markling departed this life in the same year in which her husband was called away, dying within less than a month after his departure. John A. and Margaret Markling were industrious, estimable and highly regarded in the community where they lived and their memory is still cherished by the people with whom they are mingled. They reared a family of ten children, five of whom have been reunited with them in the land beyond, the others living in various parts of the country and faithfully filling their respective stations in the world. The year following the arrival of his parents in the United States witnessed the birth of Jacob Markling, the event occurring on the home farm in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, September 27, 1846. Reared in the country, his childhood and youth were spent working in the fields in the summer time and attending school during the winter months and he was thus engaged until taking up the shoemaker's trade, which he began before reaching the years of manhood. After becoming an efficient workman, he followed the trade in his native county for a period of four years, at the expiration of which time he came to Canton and entered the establishment of A. Schwertner, his arrival in this city dating from 1873. After remaining one year in the employ of Mr. Schwertner, Mr. Markling accepted a position in the Wilson Rake Factory, since known as the Kohler Company, but later resigned his place there and engaged with James Dick, manufacturer of agricultural machinery, in whose works he continued in various capacities until 1892. In that year the National Wringer Manufacturing Company was established, Mr. Markling taking an interest in the concern and assisting in its organization. He was one of the prime movers in building up the company and establishing it on a solid financial basis and to his efforts is the enterprise largely due for the continued prosperity which has characterized its subsequent history. From a subordinate position he gradually rose to a prominent place in the conduct of the company's affairs and about the year 1897 he was elected vice-president, which office he has since filled with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of everybody connected with the enterprise. In the discharge of his official functions Mr. Markling displays not only marked ability and a familiarity with every detail of the business, but his relations with the trade and with the public at large have been such as to win patronage for the company and add much to its high rating among the leading business agencies throughout the country. Mr. Markling is a wide awake, energetic business man and as such has done much to promote the industrial growth of Canton, not only by establishing an important enterprise but by making it meet the high expectations of its projectors and by giving employment to a large force of workmen, all of whom spend their salaries in the city.

In the year 1878, in Malvern, Ohio, was solemnized the ceremony by which Mr. Markling and Miss Elizabeth Ebur, of that town, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, the marriage resulting in the birth of children as follows: Margaret, Mayme, William E., Henry H., Stella and James A.

In his political faith Mr. Markling is a zealous Democrat and since old enough to cast a ballot has been unwavering in his allegiance to his party. He takes an active interest in the leading questions and issues of the day, on all of which he is well informed, and supports the cause of Democracy from principle and not from the fact of inherited political tendencies. In religion he is a Catholic, and with his family belongs to St. Peter's church, to the material support of which he is a free and liberal contributor. A member of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, he makes his presence felt as an influential force in that excellent organization, in addition to which he is also zealous in all lines of religious and philanthropic work under the supervision of the church and equally active in the support of charitable and benevolent institutions of a secular and public character.

JACOB P. FAWCETT was born at Boyce Station, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, on the 2d of January, 1851, being a son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Pennypacker) Fawcett, both of whom were likewise natives of the old Keystone state and representatives of stanch old Pennsylvania families. The father of the subject devoted his life to agricultural pursuits in Pennsylvania, and there died, his death occurring in January, 1866, at which time he was sixty years of age. His wife passed away in 1901, at the age of eighty-one years. They became the parents of nine children, of whom four are living at the present time. Both were members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Mr. Fawcett was a stanch Republican in his political proclivities, having identified himself with the party at the time of its organization. On December 9, 1866, the widowed mother came to Stark county, Ohio, settling at Mt. Union, now the sixth ward of Alliance, and there died.

Jacob P. Fawcett received his early educational discipline in the common schools of Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, and at the age of sixteen years was matriculated in Mount Union College, near Alliance, this county, where he completed the scientific course and was graduated in July, 1871, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. He put his scholastic acquirements to practical use, engaging in teaching school for two years, while he also took up the study of the law in the office and under the direction of William C. Pippitt, a well known and able member of the bar of Alliance, and he was admitted to practice on the 9th of April, 1874, being well fortified for the active work of his chosen profession. He was engaged in practice in Alliance for two years, at the expiration of which, in August, 1877, he came to Canton, where he has since resided, and where he has built up a large and important business in his profession. For a number of years Mr. Fawcett has taken a prominent part in public affairs and is one of the leaders in the local ranks of the Republican party. In 1876, while a resident of Mount Union, he served as its mayor, and from 1882

to 1886 he was a member of the city council of Canton, representing the seventh ward, while in the latter year he was president of the body. In 1886 he was appointed by Governor Foraker to the office of probate judge of Stark county, receiving this appointment in November, and at the regular election, in November of the following year, he was chosen as his own successor and was re-elected in 1890, thus serving consecutively on the probate bench for a period of seven years and three months. In 1894 he was appointed, by the court of common pleas, a member of the tax commission for the city of Canton, in which capacity he served six years. In 1901 he was appointed a director of the Stark county work house, and at the first meeting of that body thereafter was chosen its president, of which position he has ever since remained incumbent. For six years Mr. Fawcett was attorney of the Ohio dairy and food department for the eighteenth congressional district of the state, and his services in both the above mentioned capacities have proved of marked value and acceptability. He was for two years a member of the Republican state central committee, for three years chairman of the Republican central committee of Stark county, while for the long period of fifteen years he was a member of the executive committee of the party in the county and four years a member of the Republican congressional committee, holding both at present. In 1903 Mayor Smith appointed him a member of the board of public safety for the city of Canton, for a term of four years. From the above statements it will be seen that Mr. Fawcett's abilities have been called into requisition in a significant way, and his course has ever been such as to command to him the unqualified confidence and esteem of all, while as a member of the bar he has won a prestige which stands to his credit and which indicates his thorough understanding of the science of jurisprudence and his power to make proper application of such knowledge.

His efforts while on the probate bench were such as to conserve equity and justice and every trust reposed in him has been held inviolable. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 6th of February, 1877, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Fawcett to Miss Jennie M. Mitchell, daughter of John H. Mitchell, United States senator from Oregon, and of this union have been born four children: Mattie E., Howard B., Ralph M. and John A.

ISAIAH OBERLIN.—In the subject of this sketch is presented an example of a well spent life, in that it was largely consecrated to the good of his kind and so employed as to insure him an abundant entrance into those mansions of which the Savior spake when he said, "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also." Although dead, and by the world at large forgotten, Isaiah Oberlin still lives in the memories of those with whom he once mingled—those friends and neighbors who trod with him the same rugged path of experience and from him received so many manifestations of kindness and regard. He was born in Stark county, Ohio, February 9, 1833, the son of Peter and Susannah Oberlin, of whom specific notice will be found on another page of this volume. He was the youngest of a family of ten children, and spent his early years on the homestead, dividing his time during his minority between attending the public schools and assisting with the labors of the farm. Later he pursued his studies for some years in the Belleville high school, and when a youth of about seventeen joined the tide of emigration to the far west in quest of fortune in the California gold fields. Mr. Oberlin's experiences in that far away country were thrilling in the extreme and his adventures among the mountains and mining camps, and with the rough element, which in the early day constituted the major part of the western populace, would, if written in detail, make a goodly sized volume of interesting reading. Whether he was successful in securing that which allured him so far from home, the writer cannot with certainty speak, but it is evident that his life amid so many strange vicissitudes and rough experiences inured him to life in its various phases and developed not only strong and vigorous bodily powers but a spirit of self assertion that subsequently enabled him to take advantage of opportunities and mould circumstances to suit his purposes. At the expiration of his adventurous career he returned to Stark county and became a contented and in due time a prosperous farmer, and as such continued to the end of his days, meanwhile by well directed industry acquiring sufficient means to live comfortably until called from the scene of his earthly struggles. Mr. Oberlin was married, in 1863, to Miss Fianna Fox, who was born in 1841, in Pennsylvania, and six years later with her parents, William and Catherine (Eby) Fox, came to Stark county, Ohio, the family settling in Tuscarawas township. To Mr. and Mrs. Oberlin were born six children, the oldest of whom is Edson A., who for over twenty years was one of Stark county's successful and popular teachers. He was married to Miss Nellie Malone, of this county, and is the father of one son by the name of Edson, and at the present time lives in Cleveland, where he is engaged in the lumber business. William, the second son, married Lizzie Stoner, who has borne him two children, Glenn and Russell; he is in the mining business and resides in Tuscarawas. A. M. was born and reared in Tuscarawas township, received his educational training in the public schools and Mt. Union College and is now engaged in agricultural pursuits, owning a fine farm of his own, beside an interest in the old homestead. On the latter place is a rich coal bank which he has developed and from which he derives no little part of his income. Mrs. E. S. Miller, the fourth of the family, is the mother of one child, Munford. Franklin, the next in order of birth, died when an infant, and Thurman, the youngest, lives with his widowed mother on the home place.

Mr. Oberlin was a Democrat in politics and all of his sons are adherents of the same party. In religion he was a member of the Reformed church and his life was ever a commendable example of Christianity practically applied. Mrs. Oberlin does not subscribe to the same faith her husband professed, being a communicant of the Lutheran church. Mr. Oberlin's career was that of a good man and obliging neighbor and a worthy, law abiding citizen, and his death, which occurred on the 7th day of April, 1900, was greatly deplored in the community where he had so long lived and prospered.

JACOB HILDENBIDDLE has long enjoyed marked prestige as one of the leading farmers and representative men of the township in which he lives and of which he is a native son. His ancestors in this country were among the early settlers of Pennsylvania, his father, John Hildenbiddle, having been born in Lancaster county, that state, about the year 1790. In early life John Hildenbiddle learned the blacksmith trade and worked at the same in his native state until about 1838, when he came to Stark county, Ohio, and settled on one hundred and sixty acres of land about a half mile southwest of Louisville. His father, Jacob Hildenbiddle, a wagonmaker by trade, preceded him to this county by about one year and located at the above place. John Hildenbiddle cleared and improved a fine farm, but six years later sold the place and removed to Canton where, in partnership with a friend, he engaged in the manufacture of gun barrels. After following the business about three years he changed his residence to Freeburg, where with the exception of two years he spent the remainder of his life, devoting his attention the meantime to agricultural pursuits and the manufacture of lumber. During the years 1850 and 1851 he ran a hotel in Louisville, being induced to engage in that business on account of the Pennsylvania Railroad, then in process of construction through that part of the state. Mr. Hildenbiddle was a man of excellent repute and for many years figured quite prominently in the public affairs of the various localities in which he lived. In early life he was an active supporter of the Democratic party, but at the breaking out of the great Civil war he changed his political views and from that time to his death was an unswerving Republican. He was a devout member of the Reformed church and lived a faithful Christian life until called to the church triumphant at the ripe old age of eighty-two, dying in the year 1881. Before her marriage the wife of John Hildenbiddle was Miss Mary Binkley. She bore him nine children, six of whom survive, namely: Rebecca, wife of Daniel Smith, of Marshall county, Indiana; Leah, wife of Adam Gibb, of Canton; Amanda, widow of the late Jefferson Rank, of Canton; Mary, who married Andrew Reese, of Freeburg; Jacob, the subject of this sketch; and Henry, who also makes Freeburg his home.

Jacob Hildenbiddle was born on the paternal homestead in Nimishillen township, Stark county, March 6, 1843. His early experiences included the usual routine of farm work of summer seasons varied by a few months attendance each winter at a school taught in an old log cabin, which had been used for educational purposes since the early settlement of the country. Young Jacob made the most of his opportunities, but at best his intellectual training was limited as his time was needed on the farm. He remained at home until twenty years of age, at which time he began earning money of his own by running a saw-mill, a venture which proved reasonably remunerative. In 1871 he abandoned the lumber business and engaged in agriculture, purchasing an eighty-acre farm in Washington township, to which he took a companion and helpmate one year later, October 17, 1872, in the person of Miss Jane Packer, a native of Columbiana county, and daughter of Michael Packer, who moved to the county of Stark in 1866. Michael and Catherine (Pentz) Packer were natives of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Hildenbiddle's grandfather, John Packer, came from the Keystone state to Ohio in an early day, locating southeast of Alliance, and dying on the farm where he settled. Michael Packer lived on the old homestead until 1866, when he moved to Washington township, Stark county, where he died, June 17, 1872, his widow surviving until July 4, 1886. They had one son, Addison, who died May 17, 1877.

During the ten years following his marriage Mr. Hildenbiddle cultivated his farm with encouraging results, but in 1881 disposed of the place at a good figure and two years later purchased his present farm of one hundred and ten acres, situated a short distance north of Louisville. As an enterprising and progressive agriculturist Mr. Hildenbiddle has long enjoyed distinctive precedence and that he made a success of his chosen calling is attested by the comfortable fortune which enabled him to retire from the farm in 1894 and take up his residence in Louisville. Since moving to the village he has devoted his attention principally to buying and selling wool, handling live stock, not as a means of accumulating wealth, but rather to afford him something to do, having always been accustomed to an active and busy life. However, he has made his present business quite successful and from it and the proceeds of the farm he receives an income which adds very materially to the handsome competence now in his possession.

Politically Mr. Hildenbiddle is a Republican, with a tendency towards prohibition, having long been an uncompromising foe of the liquor traffic, which he looks upon as the greatest curse of the land and the crying evil of the day. He is a member of the Reform church and for eight years has held the office of deacon in the congregation worshipping at Louisville. Unostentatious in character, his courteous manner, genial disposition and genuine worth, have endeared him to all with whom he mingles, and he is justly recognized as one of the estimable and resourceful men of the community in which he resides.

Mr. Hildenbiddle owns one of the handsomest private residences in Louisville and he has not been sparing in furnishing his home with the comforts and conveniences which make life so pleasant and agreeable. Mr. and Mrs. Hildenbiddle have had two children, one of whom is living, namely: Homer, a draftsman in the employ of the Morgan Engineering Works.

STEPHEN SCHELL.—Joseph Schell, the subject's father, was born about the year 1821 in Columbiana county, Ohio, and lived there until 1853, when he came to Stark county, where the remainder of his life was spent. In his younger days he worked at the shoemaker's trade, but after coming to this part of the state he purchased a farm of two hundred acres in Washington township and from that time until his death devoted his attention to the pursuit of agriculture, in connection with which he also did considerable in the way of contracting throughout the county, and also ran a saw-mill, adding very materially to his income from this source. He early took an active interest in public and political affairs and became considerable of a politician, having been one of the Republican leaders in Stark for a number of years. He was elected in 1860 to represent the county in the lower house of the general assembly and made an honorable record as a legislator, having been chosen his own successor in 1862. He served with distinction in the fifty-fourth and fifty-fifth general assemblies and made a reputation in which his constituents felt great pride. He was justice of the peace for a number of years and in addition thereto held several minor local positions, in all of which he discharged his duties with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the public. The maiden name of Mrs. Joseph Schell was Anna M. Fryfogle; she was born in Maryland in 1822 and when quite young was taken by her parents to Columbiana county, Ohio, where she grew to womanhood and married. She bore her husband nine children, and departed this life in 1897, at the age of seventy-five; Mr. Schell died on the 15th day of June, 1866. Of the nine children born to this excellent couple the following are now living: Stephen, of this review; Elizabeth, wife of Henry Shaffer, of this county; Abigail, wife of Caleb Oyster; Perry, and Ella, who married D. M. Calemant, the last three living in the city of Alliance.

Stephen Schell was born in Knox township, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 3d of April, 1846. He remained on the home farm as his father's assistant until seventeen years old, when, with true patriotic fervor, he entered the service of his country, enlisting June 14, 1863, in Company A, First Ohio Heavy Artillery. Shortly after that date he went to the front, but two months later, with one hundred and five others of his command, was sent to Johnson's Island in charge of a light battery. He remained at that place until the close of the war and saw no active duty further than the usual gun practice and daily drill. Mr. Schell received his discharge on the 5th of August, 1865, at Camp Dennison, and immediately thereafter returned home and resumed the pursuit of agriculture on the home place. After his father's death he took charge of the farm and managed it two years, at the expiration of which time he entered the employ of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad as brakeman, a position he held for a period of thirteen months. Severing his connection with the road, he made an extensive tour through Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and other states, at the conclusion of which he returned to Columbiana county where, on the 15th of June, 1871, he was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Knoll, a native of Pennsylvania, and daughter of Jacob Knoll.

During the three years following his marriage Mr. Schell farmed on rented land, but in 1875 he purchased a small place of forty acres in Knox township, Columbiana county, which he cultivated with fair success until changing his residence, in 1888, to the town of Homeworth, in the same county. Mr. Schell lived in that village about two years, when he disposed of his interests there and in 1890 moved to his present home in Louisville, Stark county, where he has since been doing a prosperous business, handling buggies, all kinds of vehicles, farming implements, etc., in addition to which he also has considerable lumber interests. Since locating in Louisville Mr. Schell has built up a large and lucrative trade, both in the lines of goods handled and in lumber and is now one of the most enterprising and successful business men of the town. He has been a conspicuous figure in the public affairs of the community, taking an active interest in whatever concerns the well being of the town. Mr. Schell is a pronounced Republican in his political belief, but he has never permitted his name to be used in connection with public office, having no aspirations in that direction. He is a firm believer in Christianity and for a number of years has been a faithful and devoted member of the Reformed church, in which he now holds the office of deacon. Fraternally he belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic, being a charter member of George D. Harter Post No. 555, at Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Schell had one child, a daughter by the name of Sylvia, who died some years ago.

T. CLARKE MILLER, M. D., is the son of James and Margaret (Miller) Miller, the father a native of North Ireland, the mother born and reared in Pennsylvania. By occupation James Miller was a tiller of the soil. He came to the United States many years ago, and spent the greater part of his life in Pennsylvania, dying in Ohio about 1882 at the age of eighty-six. James Miller's father was Samuel Miller and his wife was the daughter of Richard Miller, who was a soldier during the war of the Revolution. Samuel and Richard Miller were natives of Ireland or Scotland. The original ancestors of both were Scotch, and the characteristics of that race have been very pronounced in their descendants to the present day.

Dr. T. Clarke Miller was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, on the 17th day of July, 1842, and spent the first fifteen years of his life in his native state. About 1857 he accompanied his parents to Iowa, but three years later returned to Pennsylvania, locating at Pittsburg, where in 1861 he enlisted in Company F, Ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, which formed part of the Reserve Corps organized by special act of the general assembly, the state having already furnished more than its full quota of troops. Dr. Miller gave three years to the service of his country and took part in a number of the most noted battles of the Virginia campaigns, in one of which, Fredericksburg, he received a slight wound, otherwise he escaped injury or capture. At the close of the war he returned home and at once began preparing himself for the profession which he had previously decided to make his life work. His literary education, aside from the common school course, was obtained principally in the town of Dayton, Pennsylvania, and he began reading medicine with Dr. M. L. Miller, of Blairsville, Pennsylvania, subsequently studying for some time under the direction of Dr. W. J. Scott. After spending about the usual time with private instructors, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Cleveland, from which institution he was graduated in 1867, being one of the three highest in a class of thirty. On receiving his degree Dr. Miller opened an office at Newberg, Ohio, then a suburb of Cleveland but now included in the city limits as the eighteenth ward, and there practiced for a period of two years. At the expiration of that time he removed to the city proper. Dr. Miller conducted a general practice in Cleveland during a residence there of five or six years, and removed at the end of that time to Massillon. While in Cleveland he served four years as coroner of Cuyahoga county and was also a member of the board of pension examiners in that city from 1878 to 1884 inclusive. Since the year 1887 he has been health officer of Massillon, aside from which he has held no public positions. He is identified with the various medical societies of the city, county and state.

Dr. Miller was married, in 1868, to Miss Mary A. Culbertson, daughter of Isaac and Mary (McChesney) Culbertson, a union blessed with five children, of whom three sons are living, namely: Charles Rush, Thomas C. and Clarke C. Charles R. was educated in the School of Applied Sciences in Cleveland and at the present time is engaged as a mining engineer in West Virginia; Thomas, who also attended the above institution, is a member of the corps of civil engineers in the city of Cleveland, and Clarke is likewise doing engineering work in the state of Indiana.

ELI WALKER, retired farmer and one of the oldest native-born citizens of Nimishillen township, is the son of Matthias and Elizabeth (Baughman) Walker, the father a native of Pennsylvania, the mother born in Ohio. Jacob Walker, father of Matthias, was also a Pennsylvanian and spent the greater part of his life in Somerset county. Later he joined his sons in Stark county, Ohio, and passed the remainder of his days on a farm in Paris township, dying here many years ago at a ripe old age. When a young man of eighteen Matthias Walker, accompanied by his brother Jonas, left their home in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, and journeyed to Stark county, Ohio, for the purpose of improving a quarter section of land in the township of Paris which the father had purchased from the government a short time before. The country was new at the time and until their arrival not a stick of timber had been cut from the tract on which the brothers settled. After hastily constructing a rude log cabin they addressed themselves to the more formidable task of clearing and otherwise fitting for cultivation an area of sufficient magnitude to provide them with the necessities of life, preparatory to their further labor in the forest. In due time a small field was cleared and sown in wheat, which, harvested the following year, furnished breadstuff for the entire family, the father and the rest of the children having the meantime joined the two brothers in their wilderness home. Jonas Walker subsequently returned to Pennsylvania, but Matthias, having married, moved from the original purchase to an eighty-acre tract in Nimishillen township which his wife had received in a dowry from her father. To this place he afterwards added until his farm contained one hundred and forty-eight acres, the greater part of which was cleared and brought to a high state of cultivation. Matthias Walker was a true type of the strong, rugged pioneer of the olden time, and experienced all the hardships and vicissitudes of the period in which he lived. Like the majority of early settlers, he was possessed of strong convictions politically and religiously and never hesitated to express his opinions fearlessly upon these two important subjects. He was a Jacksonian Democrat of the old school and as such took an active and prominent part in the early campaigns of the county, having been to some extent a leader of political thought in his immediate neighborhood. The Lutheran church represented his religious creed and he lived a faithful and conscientious Christian life to the end of his days. To Matthias and Elizabeth Walker were born five children, of whom the following are living at this time; Eli, the subject of this sketch, Albert, a well-known citizen of this county, and Matthias, whose home is in the village of Osnaburg.

Eli Walker was born in Nimishillen township on the 24th day of March, 1833, and has made Stark county his home ever since. Reared on a farm when the country was comparatively new, his youthful years were spent amid a round of toil in woods and fields and he early learned to appreciate honest endeavor at its true value. He grew up a strong and sturdy young man, assisting his father during the spring, summer and part of the fall seasons, and in winter time attended school a few months in the old-fashioned log school house. Young Walker remained under the parental roof until attaining his majority and it was not until his twenty-second year that he began life for himself as a farmer on the paternal homestead. In 1856 he took to himself a wife and helpmate in the person of Miss Catherine Julliard, who was brought to the United States when three years old by her parents, John and Annetta Julliard, who were among the well-known residents of Paris township. Mr. Walker continued agricultural pursuits on the home farm until 1864, when he and his brother-in-law, George Julliard, purchased in partnership the Julliard homestead in Paris township, consisting of one hundred and fifty acres. One year later the subject moved to this place, but after residing about one year thereon sold his interest in the farm, also eighty acres in Osnaburg which he had previously purchased, and invested the proceeds in a fine farm of one hundred and twenty-two acres in the township of Washington. Moving to the last named place, he at once inaugurated a system of improvements which soon made it one of the best cultivated farms in the county, also one of the most valuable of its area. He took high rank as an energetic, progressive agriculturist, obtained the largest possible results from the time and labor expended and by adopting modern methods kept pace with the times in everything relating to agricultural science.

Mr. Walker lived in Washington township for a period of twenty-three years, during which time, by successful management and well directed thrift, he succeeded in accumulating a sufficiency of worldly wealth to enable him to turn his farm over to other hands and seek that rest and quietude to which he was so much entitled; accordingly, in 1889, he rented his place and removed to Louisville, where, in a beautiful home supplied with all the comforts and conveniences calculated to make life desirable, he has since been living in honorable retirement.

Mr. Walker is a close observer and keeps himself fully informed on the great public questions and political issues of the day. He is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and as such was elected the trustee of Washington township, in which capacity he served one term of two years. Since taking up his abode in Louisville he has been three times elected trustee of Nimishillen township, his long continuance in the office attesting the confidence of the people in his integrity and business ability. Religiously he subscribes to the Lutheran church and since uniting with the church his daily life has been in harmony with the faith which he professes. Personally Mr. Walker is one of the highly esteemed citizens of this community, his name being synonymous with all that is upright and honorable in manhood. Mrs. Walker has been her husband's adviser and earnest co-laborer in all of his endeavor and not a little of his financial success is due to her judicious counsel and active assistance. She also belongs to the Lutheran church and is a humble and zealous Christian, deeply interested in religious and benevolent work, and proves by her actions the genuineness and great value of applied Christianity. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have five children: Olena, wife of Frank Auer, of Louisville; Elenora, widow of the late Curtis Wilson, of Canton; Ida, who married Elmer Lilly, of Alliance; Mary Augusta, wife of J. D. Lovett, proprietor of the Union Pacific Hotel, Cheyenne Wells, Colorado, and Wilda, who is still a member of the home circle.

WILLIAM MYERS is descended paternally from an old Pennsylvania family, and maternally from equally and respected ancestors whose genealogy is traceable to an early period in the history of Maryland. John Myers, father of the subject, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1816, and when a child of four years was taken by his grandfather to Stark county, Ohio, from whence he subsequently moved to the county of Summit, where he is now living at the advanced age of eighty-six. His wife, Mary Middlekauff, was born in Maryland in 1821, and, as the name indicates, her family was of German origin. She bore him ten children, of whom five are living, and departed this life in the year 1887. John Myers was reared a farmer, and followed that calling in Wayne county until acquiring a competence, since which time he has lived a life of retirement. A man of great firmness and strength of will, he has long been an influential citizen, and his character and integrity have been such as to command the approbation of the people among whom he lives. In politics a straightout Democrat, with the courage of his convictions, and in every relation a man of sterling worth, he may be taken as a conspicuous type of a class only too rare in this day and generation. William Myers, whose name introduces this review, is the fifth of the ten children constituting his father's family, and he dates his birth from the 31st of March, 1851. He first saw the light of day in Wayne county, and his early experiences on his father's farm was helpful in laying the foundation of a vigorous physical growth, and the development of a well rounded character. Reared to habits of toil and thrift and trained in the school of practical experience, he was early taught to rely upon himself, a lesson very thoroughly learned, as his subsequent career abundantly demonstrated. In his younger days Mr. Myers received about the usual amount of intellectual discipline in the common schools, and at the age of twenty-five years began farming for himself in his native county, where he continued to reside until 1876, when he moved to the county of Stark. He now owns a beautiful place of eighty-three acres in Tuscarawas township, which by well-directed industry has been greatly improved in fertility and productiveness, comparing favorably with any farm of a like area in that part of the county. Mr. Myers is a typical agriculturist, and pursues his vocation with an interest and zeal which never fails of liberal financial results. He is an ardent supporter of the Democratic party, but has never aspired to public honors nor disturbed his quiet by partisan strife, having no ambition for the former, nor any taste for the latter. Mr. Myers' married life began November 30, 1875, when he was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary E. Bender, of Wayne county, daughter of Daniel and Mary (McDavid) Bender, both parents natives of Pennsylvania. The family circle at this time, exclusive of Mr. Myers and wife, consists of three sons, John C., Daniel W. and Adrian G., each of whom combines in his physical and mental make-up many of the excellent characteristics for which the parents are distinguished.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN FETROW was born in York county, Pennsylvania, on the 22d of July, 1814, being a son of Andrew and Phoebe (Speakman) Fetrow, the former of whom was born in York county and the latter in Lancaster county, that state, where both families were founded in the early colonial epoch. In the year which marked the birth of the subject of this sketch they left their native state and came to Stark county, Ohio, which was at that time a sylvan wilderness, the white settlers being few and usually far distant one from another. In this county Andrew Fetrow purchased four hundred and eighty acres of land and instituted the work of reclamation, while here he passed a number of years under the primitive pioneer conditions, though he eventually returned to his native state of Pennsylvania and passed the closing years of his life in Cumberland county, where he died. In 1831 his widow, in company with her children, came again to Ohio, locating in Wayne county, where she continued to reside until she was summoned into eternal rest, in 1838, at the age of fifty-seven years. In 1849 her son Benjamin F., the immediate subject of this review, who had been reared and educated partly in Pennsylvania and partly in Ohio, came to Sugar Creek township, this county, where he effected the purchase of three hundred and sixteen acres of land, the greater portion of which was reclaimed under his supervision, while by his earnest and indefatigable efforts he accumulated a competency, becoming the owner of one of the best landed estates in this section of the county. He has presented to each of his children a farm and one thousand dollars in cash, and this fact signifies not only his financial status, but also his deep paternal affection, indulgence and solicitude. When he arrived in Wayne county, this state, his capitalistic resources were summed up in the amount of twenty-five cents, and this he expended for food for his mother. He has been the architect of his own fortunes and is particularly deserving of that proud American title, a self-made man. For twenty-two years he followed the blacksmith trade to a greater or less extent, later conducted a profitable business as a drover, while his active identification with the agricultural industry extended over a long period of years. He was formerly associated with Austin A. Hay in the general merchandise business in Beach City, his former partner likewise being one of the honored pioneers of this section and one of whom specific mention is made on another page of this volume, and for about four years he was also engaged in the buying and shipping of grain. From these simple statements it is apparent that Mr. Fetrow has been distinctively a man of affairs, while as a citizen he has ever been true to duty, aiding in all good works for the benefit of the community and retaining the unqualified esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. In politics he was originally arrayed in support of the Whig party, and as such had the privilege of voting for William Henry Harrison for President, while he identified himself with the Republican party shortly after its organization and as a stalwart adherent of the same cast his ballot in support of Benjamin Harrison for the presidency, thus endorsing both the grandfather and grandson, both of whom won honorable places in the history of the nation as chief executives of its government. He was for a number of years incumbent of the office of township supervisor, and was shown other marks of popular confidence and esteem. Mr. Fetrow has ever ordered and guided his life according to the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, having been a member of the church since he was fifteen years of age. While a resident of Wayne county he was affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, but upon coming to Stark county he identified himself with the United Brethren church, of which he has ever since been a zealous and devoted member, while he has ever been liberal in his support of religious work, in which connection it may be appropriately stated that he has contributed more than two thousand dollars toward the erection of different churches. All of his children are likewise members of the United Brethren church, and thus have not departed from the faith in which they were so carefully and conscientiously reared, while their mother was likewise a signally earnest member of the church, as is also the present wife of our subject. Mr. Fetrow has eighteen grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren and all are members of the same church with which he has so long been identified, the United Brethren. During the entire period of his residence in Stark county, covering more than half a century, the subject has been a constant subscriber to the Canton Repository, one of the oldest papers in the county. He is at the present time the owner of three hundred and sixteen acres of valuable land in Stark county, while he also owns a quarter section of land in Floyd county, Texas. He is revered as one of the patriarchs of the community, and in the golden evening of his days is solaced by the esteem of a host of friends.

On the 26th of September, 1837, Mr. Fetrow was united in marriage to Miss Emaline Harris, who was born in Wayne county, this state, a daughter of Warren Harris, one of the sterling pioneers of that county, and of this union five children were born, of whom three are yet living, namely: Jane, who is the wife of Henry Read, a successful farmer of Sugar Creek township, Stark county; Ellen, who is the wife of George Howard, who is engaged in farming in Stark county; and William D., who is a representative farmer of Sugar Creek township. The devoted wife and mother was summoned into eternal rest on the 11th of December, 1887, at the age of seventy-two years, and on the 26th of December, 1888, Mr. Fetrow married Mrs. Mary (Freeman) Lowrey, who was born in Wayne county, this state, and whose first husband, Henry H. Lowrey, was killed in the war of the Rebellion.

JACOB DUPONT is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born in Marlborough township on the 15th of December, 1845, being one of three children whose parents were John and Margaret (Giant) Dupont. John Dupont and wife were born in Belford, France, and there grew to maturity and married. Shortly after their marriage they came to the United States and settled in Stark county, Ohio, purchasing a small farm of forty acres in Mulberry township, on which they lived until the father's death, in 1847. He was accidentally killed by falling from a barn which he was building, being in the very prime of life when the accident occurred. Of his three children two are living, the subject of this review and Rose A., who married Andrew Schoffin, of Canton. Some time after the death of John Dupont his widow married a second husband by the name of John B. Cunion, by whom she had five children, namely: August, a resident of Louisville; Peter, who manages the home farm; Jane, a sister in a convent at New Bedford, Pennsylvania; Louise, wife of Fred Blockler, of Middlebranch, Ohio, and Amelia, wife of Samuel De Vaux, a liveryman of Louisville.

Jacob Dupont spent the first twelve years of his life at home and then, owing to circumstances over which he had no control, was obliged to begin the struggle with the world upon his own responsibility. He earned his first wages as a farm hand, and in this way worked until his seventeenth year, meantime as opportunities afforded attending the district schools of his neighborhood. Abandoning farm labor, he secured employment in a brick yard in Canton, and during the ensuing four years devoted the summer seasons to this kind of work, spending the winter months as a coal miner. In 1867 he came to Louisville and for about nine years thereafter was in the employ of Nicholas Merley, who operated a large brick yard, the subject during the interim becoming familiar with every detail of brick making as well as obtaining a practical knowledge of business affairs.

With a laudable ambition to rise above the common level of a mere wage earner, Mr. Dupont, in 1876, with his brother August and a Mr. Landon, formed a partnership for the manufacture of brick, which, under the name of the Centennial Brick Company, soon proved a most fortunate and well paying venture. As originally organized the firm did a thriving business for about three years, at the expiration of which time Mr. Merley, the subject's former employer, purchased Mr. Landon's interest and as thus constituted the company continued six years, meanwhile extending the scope of its operations until becoming one of the leading concerns of the kind in the county. The name adopted at the time of Mr. Merley's admission was that of Merely, Dupont & Company, and by such it continued to be designated until the clay supply became exhausted, when Mr. Dupont disposed of his share in the plant and purchased a fourth interest in the Stoneware and Tile Company of Louisville, the transaction being consummated in 1885. Mr. Dupont was identified with the latter enterprise about four years, at the end of which time the company sold out their interest in Louisville and established a plant at Brazil, Indiana, under the name of the Brazil Brick & Pipe Company, the object of which was the manufacturer of all kinds of fire bricks, tiling, glazed under-ground brick, conduits, and various other articles of a similar character. Mr. Dupont looked after the management of the Brazil enterprise and in due time succeeded in establishing quite a large business, which he conducted with success and financial profit for a period of seven years, at the expiration of which time he sold out to his partners and in 1897 returned to Louisville, where he has since lived a retired life. During the many years in which he was connected with the brick and tile industry he served in the capacity of superintendent or foreman and the burden of the business management invariably rested upon his shoulders. In no instance did he fail to meet the high expectations of his associates, all of whom acknowledged their indebtedness to him for the measure of success which crowned their joint efforts as manufacturers and business men. At this point it would be almost tautological to enter into a series of statements to the intent of showing Mr. Dupont a man of broad intelligence, progressive ideas and public spirit, as these have been shadowed forth between the lines of this review. A man of marked individuality and great force of character, to which may be added soundness of judgment, executive ability of a high order and a shrewd knowledge of men, as well as of the principles governing business transactions, he has been able to manage successfully large interests and realize therefrom the greatest possible results. In politics he is a Democrat, believing thoroughly in the principles of the party as a party of the people, and being ever ready to labor in its behalf or make sacrifices for its success. He served two terms in the town council and as a member of that body discharged his duty with a view of the municipality in every respect. Religiously Mr. Dupont was born and reared a Catholic and he has always lived within the pale of the Holy Church, being loyal in his allegiance to its doctrines and traditions and faithful to its divinely appointed precepts. As an obliging neighbor and faithful friend, few men in Nimi-shillen township are held in as high personal esteem as Mr. Dupont.

Mr. Dupont has a comfortable home in Louisville, where he is now living, free from the cares which so long attended him during his active business career. His domestic ties have been of the most pleasant and agreeable nature and he looks forward to many peaceful years in which to enjoy the fruits of his industry and thrift. He was married on the 4th day of May, 1871, to Miss Sophia Jordan, of Stark county, a most estimable lady who has proven a faithful wife and true helpmate in all the terms imply; she has borne him two children, John, superintendent of the Brazil Clay Works, Brazil, Indiana, and Clara, now the wife of Frank Liske, of Louisville.

ROBERT D. BRADLEY, son of Edward and Mary (DeRome) Bradley, was born May 13, 1848, in the old historic city of Preston, Lancashire, England, and there spent the first sixteen years of his life, the meanwhile receiving a fair educational training in the public schools. While a mere youth he entered the cotton mills of his native place, where he was employed several years, and by close economy he succeeded in saving while thus engaged sufficient money to pay his way to the United States, for which country he sailed when a lad of only sixteen. Taking passage at Liverpool, he arrived in due time at New York, and from that city went to Portage, Wisconsin, where for several years he was employed in a sash, door and blind factory as stationary engineer. While at Portage he was married, in 1871, to Miss Carrie Davis, a sister of his present business associate, and two years later resigned his position there and went to Allegheny, Pennsylvania, where he accepted a similar post in the Crawford Malleable Iron Works. After running the engine in the latter establishment for a period of eight years and saving a snug sum of money, he went to Kansas and invested his means in cattle and hogs, which venture at the expiration of three years proved financially disastrous. Disposing of what interests remained in his possession, Mr. Bradley, in 1882, came to Canton, Ohio, and during the ensuing four years held a subordinate position with the Whitman & Barnes Manufacturing Company. His valuable services were in due time recognized by his employers, and by successive promotions he ultimately reached the position of assistant superintendent, in which capacity he continued at Canton for a period of seven years. When the company finally moved their works to Akron, he was made the superintendent at that place, and as such discharged his duties three years, the meanwhile developing rare efficiency and skill in the line of his work and continually adding to his reputation as an able, far-sighted business man and manager of important interests.

Severing his connection with his employers at Akron, in 1894, Mr. Bradley returned to Canton, and four years later, in partnership with Edwin Davis, began in the manufacture of seamless rubber goods, a line of industry with which he has since been identified. Messrs. Bradley and Davis began their enterprise on a small scale, establishing the business in a part of the subject's home on East Williams street, on the site now occupied by the large brick building in which the firm carries on its extensive and steadily increasing operations. The growth of the business from its modest beginning more than met the highest expectations of the founders and within a short time it was found necessary to remove it from the original quarters into a building of enlarged proportions; accordingly, in 1899, the brick edifice as noted above was erected, but the demands of the trade continuing to increase, an addition of the same size was built the following year, making the plant as it now stands one hundred and ten by fifty feet in area and three stories high. The building is furnished with the latest and most approved machinery and appliances for the manufacture of the different lines of goods with which the firm supplies the market, a large force of skilled artisans is given employment, and the enterprise has rapidly come to the front as the leading industry of its kind in Canton, and as one of the most important of the city's many industrial establishments.

Mr. Bradley has traveled extensively in the interest of the business, visiting all the leading commercial centers in the United States and Canada, establishing wherever he has gone a lucrative trade, and his efforts on the road have done much to establish and strengthen the high prestige the firm now enjoys. The firm of which Mr. Bradley is the head manufactures a number of articles never heretofore put upon the market, several of which are the result of his own inventive genius and mechanical skill. Among these devices is an improved rubber bottle, for which he has received letters patent, and he was also among the first to make a seamless rubber tissue finger-cot, and probably the first to introduce the justly noted seamless rubber glove, for which there is such a large and constantly growing demand. Recently Mr. Bradley made an extensive tour through England, Ireland, Scotland, and other countries of Europe, during which he combined business with pleasure, as he established agencies for the sale of his goods in many of the leading cities, in addition to re-visiting the scenes of his childhood and renewing acquaintances with his friends and companions of former years. Although leading a very busy and in many respects an exacting life and experiencing his full share of the difficulties which arise in the career of nearly every successful man, it must not be inferred that Mr. Bradley has been so immersed in his own affairs as to lose sight of his obligations to the community as a citizen. Interested in all that is calculated to benefit his fellow men, materially, educationally and morally, his influence has always been exerted in the right direction and from what he has accomplished in the various avenues in which his talents have been employed it is easy to see that his duties to the public have not been neglected.

In politics Mr. Bradley is a Republican, but he has been too busy to mingle much in party affairs, or to distract his attention with any official aspiration. He is a Mason of high standing, belonging to chapter, commandery and Lodge of Perfection, in all of which he manifests an abiding interest, and the principles of which enter very largely into his life and to a great extent govern his dealings with his fellow citizens. His personal relations are of the most pleasant and agreeable character, and socially, with his estimable wife, he enjoys the esteem and high regard of a large circle of friends in the city of his residence and in other places where known.

WILLIAM MAXHEIMER, retired farmer, and one of the old and venerated citizens of Tuscarawas township, was born August 26, 1818, in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, being the son of Christian and Nancy Maxheimer, of the same county and state. As the name indicates, the Maxheimer family is of German origin, and its first representative in America was the subject's grandfather. William Maxheimer, who came to the United States in a very early day, and spent the remainder of his life in Franklin county, Pennsylvania. Christian Maxheimer was reared to manhood in that county, and there married Nancy Crider, whose ancestors were also among the early settlers in the western part of the state. About the year 1820 Christian Maxheimer moved his family to Stark county, Ohio, settling in Tuscarawas township, where he purchased land, cleared and developed a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres, and in due time became one of the leading agriculturists and substantial citizens of the community. For many years he was quite an active politician of the old Whig school, later became a pronounced adherent of the Republican party, and by reason of his sound sense and excellent judgment was chosen trustee of his township, which office he held as long as he permitted himself to be re-elected. In early life he became an expert cabinetmaker, and he used his mechanical skill after coming to Stark county by making various articles of household furniture for the early settlers, although his principal occupation was that of a tiller of the soil. Religiously he was a member of the United Brethren church, to which communion his wife also belonged, and as earnest and devoted Christians both used their best endeavor to bring up their children in the way they should go by early implanting in their minds and hearts the correct principles by which their own lives were directed and controlled. Mr. Maxheimer died in 1885, at the age of eighty-eight, his wife preceding him to the silent land in 1870, when seventy-two years old. Of their eight children only one is living at the present time, William, the subject of this review. Mrs. William Maxheimer was the daughter of George Crider, who, as stated elsewhere, was among the early residents of Stark county, moving his family to what is now Tuscarawas township, as long ago as 1819. His descendants are still living in the community where he originally located, and are numbered among the most enterprising, intelligent and upright people of this section of the state.

Reverting to the personal history of William Maxheimer, it is learned that he was a child of about two years when his parents changed their abode to the county of Stark, and since 1820 he has lived in Tuscarawas township, meanwhile prospering in temporal things and establishing a reputation for industry, honor and integrity which has made him widely and favorably known as a man and citizen. The early life of Mr. Maxheimer on his father's farm tended to develop a strong and rugged physique and in the rough school of experience he learned the lesson of practical industry and honorable endeavor, which later inured so greatly to his advantage in the accumulation of material wealth and in the forming of a sturdy, manly character. With willing hands and decided purpose he assisted his father until such a time as it became necessary for him to engage in the struggle of life for himself, and it was then that he decided, after mature deliberation, to devote his time and energies to the ancient and honorable calling of agriculture. When twenty-two years old he began tilling the soil upon his own responsibility, and continued the same with a large measure of success until the accumulation of an ample competence, and the infirmities incident to advancing age, induced him to forego further activity and seek in a life of retirement the rest, recreation and quietude which his long and arduous struggles so well entitled him. He has always been greatly interested in organized means for promoting the farmer's vocations, and to him as much as any other man is due the credit of establishing upon a firm and permanent basis the Agricultural Society of Stark county, in the organization of which he was an influential factor. The initial meeting of the society was held on the Samuel Crider farm in Tuscarawas township, and among those present was Mr. Maxheimer, who presided over the deliberations. From that occasion to the present time he has been untiring in his efforts to promote the interests of the organization, and that it has been a success and fully met the purposes for which intended is as much due his labors in its behalf as those of any other individual. In matters politic Mr. Maxheimer was a Whig, and as such wielded an influence for the party in his community until it went out of existence, after which he became an uncompromising supporter of its successor, the Republican party. It was his privilege to cast a vote for Gen. William Henry Harrison, or "Old Tippecanoe," as he was then called, for President, and later supported for the same high office the hero's grandson, Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, being a great admirer of the two distinguished men. He has never entertained any political aspirations, contenting himself with voting his principles, and working in the interest of the ticket. He has long been a friend of education, and as a member of the school board he has done much to foster and keep alive an interest in intellectual training in the township of Tuscarawas. Owing to circumstances over which he had no control, his early education was considerably limited. Realizing the value of education in a free country, where the sovereign power is vested in the masses, he has done all within his power to diffuse knowledge among the people of his own community to the end that they might become intelligent, broad-minded citizens with a proper appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon them as members of the body politic.

The married life of Mr. Maxheimer dates from April 11, 1844, when was solemnized the ceremony which united him in the bonds of wedlock with Miss Elizabeth Cole, a native of Jefferson county, this state. Five children have been born to this union, the oldest of whom, Cecelia, is the wife of Nathan Moffitt, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this volume. Clarinda, the second, married L. P. Slusser, and is the mother of two children, Rollin and William. Franklin, the third child and oldest son of the family, married Miss Miller, of Wooster, Ohio, and has offspring as follows: William, Stella, Florence, Benjamin, Glenn, Ray and Perry. Clara, the fourth in order of birth, is not living. After her comes Sheridan, the youngest of the family, who took a wife in the person of Miss Laura Oberlin, whose oldest child, Mary E., died in the year 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Maxheimer lived a happy married life of fifty-seven years' duration, when the union was terminated by the death of the latter, who entered unto rest August 3, 1901, at the age of seventy-five. She was a devoted companion and faithful help-mate, a loving and indulgent mother, and her long residence in the community endeared her to all with whom she associated. Mr. Maxheimer occupies a high position in the estimation of his acquaintances and fellow citizens, and stands among the substantial men of his part of the county.

CLATON F. BREMER, farmer and auctioneer, one of the best known citizens of Tuscarawas township, is a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where his birth occurred on the 19th of September, 1864. The Bremers have figured in the annals of Lancaster county from a very remote period, the subject's grandfather, Jacob Bremer, having been born there in the year 1793. Susan Eshbaugh, who became the wife of Jacob, was also a native of the county of Lancaster, born on the 27th day of August, 1796. Just when the ancestors of this couple settled in Pennsylvania is not known, but it is supposed to have been early in the eighteenth century, as both names are familiar in various parts of Lancaster county and considered as belonging to the early families of that part of the state. Jacob Bremer reared a family of twelve children, and departed this life in 1862. Of this large family there are but two living representatives, David and Mattie. David Bremer was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, January 29, 1837, and when a young man married Miss Hattie Furgeson, whose birth occurred in the same county November 27, 1841. Mrs. Bremer is the daughter of Abram Furgeson, who was born in the county of Lancaster in 1829, and who is still living at the ripe old age of ninety-two years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan Green, first saw the light of day in 1818, and died in her native state of Pennsylvania in the year 1884. To this old couple were born nine children, and it is a rather remarkable fact that, with the single exception of the mother, death has not invaded the family circle. David Bremer has devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, and at the present time has a small but beautifully situated and exceedingly fertile farm, about four miles west of Massillon, in the township of Tuscarawas. He is now serving his third term as county trustee, and during the last thirty-three or thirty-four years his name has become quite widely known as a public auctioneer, a capacity in which he has achieved distinctive success. David Bremer and wife are the parents of quite a large family, thirteen in all, whose names are as follows: Susan, the oldest, married C. S. Hartman, of Stark county, and is the mother of two children, Sadie and Fannie, the former deceased; Emma, the second in order of birth, is the wife of H. B. Sweigart, of this county; Martin was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, received his education in the public schools in Massillon, and for some years has been in the employ of Sonhalta Brothers, leading merchants of Massillon. He married, June 22, 1892, Miss Ida Wicht, who has borne him two sons, Ralph F. and Harold M.; Claton F., the subject of this review, is the fourth of the family, and after him comes Simon F., who married Miss Malinda Werich, a union resulting in three sons, Edward, Earl and Willard; following Simon is Lillie, wife of Samuel Wenger, of Wayne county, this state, who has borne her husband children as follows: Emma B., deceased, Harry, Murrell, and Floyd. Abram, the seventh in succession, married Pearl Werich, and is the father of twin sons, Roy and Ray; David, the eighth of the family, married Miss Ada Baer, the union being blessed with a son by the name of Raymond: John is also a married man, and is the father of one child, Gladys, whose mother was formerly Miss Nora Miller; Ferres, the tenth of the children, married Miss Bertha Prinker, a union without issue: the three youngest, Edward, Ester and Lottie M., are still with the parents. The early life of Claton F. Bremer was spent on the home farm, and at the proper age he entered the district school of his township, not ending the same until in his teens. Unlike the majority of country youths, he began life for himself at quite an early age, entering when but fifteen years old upon his career as a public salesman, which, in connection with agricultural pursuits, he has since followed with most encouraging success. As a farmer he is careful and methodical, as the one hundred and fifty-five acres which he cultivates abundantly attest, and that he has been fortunate in his business affairs generally is demonstrated by the many evidences of material comfort which he has provided for himself and those dependent upon him. As an auctioneer Mr. Bremer has few equals and no superiors in this part of the state. With a natural fluency of language, which enables him to set forth the favorable qualities of articles offered for sale, is combined a thorough knowledge of value and soundness of judgment in matters of business, both facts being greatly to his own advantage as well as to the interest of the parties whose property he disposes of at public venue. Politically he is one of the leading Republicans in his township, and in public affairs he has always been deeply interested, taking an active part in all measures for the material advancement of his township and county, and giving a generous support to every enterprise for the moral and social good of the community.

Mr. Bremer was married August 8, 1891, to Miss Emma Hollinger, of Canal Fulton, a union blessed with one child, Howard C., whose birth occurred on the 13th day of June, 1901.

Above all other considerations Mr. Bremer is a man of marked domestic tastes, being devotedly attached to his wife, his child and his home. In the family circle he finds his chief happiness and all his interests appear to cluster around the fireside. Mrs. Bremer is a lady possessed of qualities which have retained not only the love and affection of her immediate household, but also the grateful appreciation of all who know her.

JOSEPH STIBBS HARTER was born in Canton in 1839. Canton was then only a fair-sized village, but the fact that it was the capital town of a rich and populous county enabled it to put on an air of some importance. Joseph's father, Isaac Harter, was one of the early settlers. He first kept a country store, and then established a very successful bank. His father came from Germany. Joseph's mother was of Irish-English stock.

The earlier schools of Canton were of a high order. In these Joseph, who was the oldest child, received an excellent elemental education. Although of a Protestant family, he received his elementary education in St. Peter's (Catholic) school. In practical matters he profited largely in his father's store. Many of its patrons were Germans—he learned German. A considerable number were French—he learned French. He became a ready extemporaneous speaker, being just as fluent in correct German as in English. These things show the tireless aggressiveness of his mental nature. Physically he was a little above the average height, and he was in every respect a very striking personality, having been noted for his manly beauty. After leaving the Canton schools he spent two years in the Miami University. Following upon that he entered the junior class at Kenyon College, at Gambier, and college records, in both institutions, put him in the front rank.

When the war of the Rebellion broke out the subject was at Kenyon. He dropped his books and enlisted in the Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, one of the first Ohio regiments, being made up largely of Canton men. He was first lieutenant of Company A, through the three-months campaign in West Virginia. At the end of its first term, the Nineteenth, responding to President Lincoln's proclamation, prepared to reorganize for a three years' campaign. Conscious of his ability to do so, young Harter resolved to enlist a company and go to the front with the rank of captain. But in this project he was confronted by a mother's veto—a veto having behind it, as supporting factors, his youth, his unfinished college term; also a mother's solicitude—perhaps a presentiment. Mrs. Harter was one of the kind of mothers one reads about in the biographies of men of mark; a mother whose counsels were heeded. She realized the country's danger and its need, but probably she hoped for the early peace that Secretary Seward had predicted. She proposed a compromise. If Joseph would finish his college course, which would be in the following June, he should be free to do as he wished. And so young Harter went back to "serve out his time." Some of his classmates lived to become men of note. One was Edward Stanton, son of Lincoln's famous war secretary. Another was James S. Kilbourne, of Columbus, a man who has won very honorable distinction. Speaking of Joseph Harter at college he remarked: "His was the quickest and strongest mind in our class, and he gave promise of greater distinction in future life than any member of the class." And his old regiment, the Nineteenth, had also gone back to the front, and had passed through the fiery flames of Pittsburg Landing and Corinth, on the west. And the North had made the awful useless sacrifice of its thousands and tens of thousands at Malvern Hill and Manassas in the east. And then, just in the nick of time, only a few days after Joseph's graduation, came President Lincoln's third proclamation. The first was for seventy-five thousand three-months men; young Harter had been one of these. The second, May 3, 1861, was for five hundred thousand men for three years, to which call over seven hundred thousand responded. The third, July 2, 1862, was for three hundred thousand men; more than four hundred and fifty thousand entered the ranks. One of the new Ohio regiments recruited under this call was the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The muster-roll of the One Hundred and Fifteenth, announced on September 19, 1862, gave the first official information of the new step Mr. Harter had taken, as follows: "Company E, ninety-eight men; captain, Joseph S. Harter; first lieutenant, J. J. Mohler; second lieutenant, George Hershey." One of the names printed on this master-roll was that of Corporal George D. Harter, a younger brother of Joseph. He rose to the rank of captain, and lived to be mustered out in July, 1865, at the end of the war, after a most honorable term of military service. Prior to his death, which occurred in 1890, he had come to be recognized as one of the most useful and prominent citizens of Canton. When the companies destined for the One Hundred and Fifteenth had been nearly filled they went into a camp that had been established at Massillon in the early part of August, 1862. The One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, which had reached its limit a little earlier, was already in camp there. Both regiments were largely from Stark county. Captain Harter had aimed to enter his company in the One Hundred and Fourth, but he had been somewhat handicapped. Before his college term had ended other companies had been getting together in anticipation of the new proclamation, and these often comprised men who would have been quick to enlist with him. By the time his complement had been reached the One Hundred and Fourth was full.

The year succeeding the episode at Camp Massillon was far the most eventful in the entire history of the American republic. During that year the names of Murfreesboro, Vicksburg, Gettysburg, Chickamauga and Chattanooga had been deeply graven on the tablets of the nation. Little wonder that an enemy whose sturdy valor and power was equal to a survival from such mighty conflicts should fill the land with very grave apprehension. That such an enemy should have many sympathizers, and even well-wishers, in the North, was by no means surprising. Even in Stark county certain districts were peopled by considerable numbers who entertained such unpatriotic views. During the occupation of Camp Massillon a government draft was also in progress for the purpose of equalizing the burdens of war, by compelling recalcitrant townships to furnish their quota of soldiers for the national defense. The malcontents were not without a form of organization, and their cause was zealously and openly championed by a Canton newspaper. Emboldened by the departure of the regiments from Camp Massillon, the Southern element called a meeting of anti-draft sympathizers at the county seat. The speakers at that meeting were arrested and imprisoned and the refractory townships had to bring in their quotas, which ended the movement for the time being.

An event of unusual local interest was a review of the One Hundred and Fourth and One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiments by Governor David Tod. Governor Tod, who had been a conspicuous defender of southern policies before the war, had espoused the Union cause with great ardor. The Governor and Captain Harter were very close friends, and it was hoped that the fervid appeal sure to be made by a chief executive with such antecedents would be of avail in giving a new impulse to the support of the national cause in this part of Ohio. The attendance was enormous, and the effect of the demonstration was mostly salutary.

It may be said, incidentally, that, a few months later, Clement L. Vallandigham, being candidate for the office of governor, became a champion of the southern cause of national repute. An order was issued for his arrest and deportation beyond the military lines and into the companionship of his rebel friends. On his way south, and while he was in Cincinnati, Captain Harter had the custody of his person.

Three days before the One Hundred and Fifteenth left Camp Massillon it received a visit from Mr. Isaac Harter, father of the Captain. He was the treasurer of the Canton city bounty fund, and, in that capacity, he handed to each soldier from Canton the sum of fifty dollars. The boys had pledged their time, with the risks of war, for three years at thirteen dollars per month, and this send-off by their home friends, at the hand of Mr. Harter, was a graceful act and was gratefully appreciated.

The One Hundred and Fifteenth was transferred from Camp Chase to Cincinnati early in October. In those days Cincinnati and Louisville were really border cities. Rebel advances and guerrilla tactics necessitated a large protecting force, of which the new regiment constituted part. Later on the regiment was divided into two battalions; the first, under Colonel Lucy, was stationed at Maysville, Kentucky, the second, comprising Captain Harter's company, was commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Boone and remained in Cincinnati. Between the great armies south of the Ohio river and the sources of supplies north of the river the collecting, guarding and forwarding of men and supplies constituted a vast work and one that could be entrusted only to men of the highest order of ability and trustworthiness. The battalion of the One Hundred and Fifteenth at Cincinnati was thus engaged during more than its first year of service. Ten months of this service had already elapsed when a telegram to his family announced that Captain Harter had been seriously wounded. The dispatch was dated August 24, 1863. He died two days afterward. In regard to the immediate circumstances of his death, and what followed, it will be more satisfactory to quote from an article printed at the time, in the Canton Republican of September 3, 1863, as follows:

The obsequies of Captain Joseph S. Harter, of Company E. One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, were held in this city on Saturday, August 29, 1863. His remains were interred in the new cemetery. The military escort was the most imposing ceremony of the kind ever beheld here. Captain Ball's company, in uniform, formed the main escort. A squad of thirteen of Captain Harter's men also followed the hearse. The pall-bearers were commissioned officers. Colonel Manderson, of the Nineteenth Ohio, conducted the military exercises. A very long procession of relatives and friends also followed the remains to their last resting place.

The wound of which Captain Harter died can not be attributed to carelessness. On the evening of Monday, the 24th ult., a number of officers were assembled at the headquarters of Colonel T. C. Boone. The latter ordered his acting adjutant to get him his revolvers. As they were being taken down from where they hung one of the revolvers dropped from the holster and fell on the floor, striking on the cock and discharging the pistol. The ball pierced Captain Harter through the body, inflicting a wound of which he died on the morning of Wednesday, August 26, 1863. Deceased was twenty-four years of age, and was a young man of most unusual promise. The peculiarly distressing circumstances of his untimely death have enlisted the most earnest sympathy for his grief-stricken parents and relatives.

He was among the first to volunteer in this county. He served in the old Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, a three-months regiment, in West Virginia, first as orderly, then as lieutenant in Company A. Last summer he raised the company he has since commanded. By the unanimous testimony of the officers and men of the One Hundred and Fifteenth he has always acquitted himself nobly and he has commanded their unbounded respect and confidence. Especially and most deeply do the members of his own company regret their heavy loss. They begged the privilege of escorting home his remains, and at their own expense—a request that the officers in command deemed it impossible to grant.

The commissioned officers of the regiment passed the following "Testimonial of Respect":

Cincinnati, O., August 26, 1863.

At a meeting of the commissioned officers of the battalion of the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, stationed in this city, of which Lieutenant-Colonel T. C. Boone was chairman and Captain H. R. Hill secretary, the following resolutions, proposed by a committee consisting of Major H. B. Johnson, Captain A. J. Ware and Lieutenant T. W. Saxton, were unanimously adopted:

First. Resolved, That we, the officers of the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, have just learned, with the deepest emotions of sorrow, of the death of our highly respected fellow officer, Captain Joseph S. Harter, of Company E of this regiment.

Second. Resolved, That Captain Harter, by his indefatigable attention to duty, his patriotic ardor, his genial manners and his manly character, had endeared himself to all.

Resolved, That we warmly sympathize with the family of the deceased, who, by this dire dispensation of divine providence, lose a beloved son and brother, this regiment a faithful and efficient officer, and the government one of its most willing and ardent supporters.

The esteem in which the deceased captain had been held was evidenced by the official action of all the civic, social and military bodies with which he had been connected, and in terms indicative of a keen appreciation of the loss that had befallen his friends and his country.

Had Joseph S. Harter lived until now (1903) this would be his sixty-fourth year. Into the mind of the friend of his youth who has thus endeavored to present to contemporary readers the outlines of a most precious life that was ruthlessly exacted by an incident of the war in defense of his country, there comes this query: What might have been his career had he been spared? That career seemed to be just at the turning point. He was known to have been impatient of the service in which he had been occupied and to have expected an advancement. In fact, on the very day of his death a letter from the secretary of war, summoning him to Washington, came to his address. What honors might so gifted a man have aspired to, what high places reached in military, and subsequently in civil life.

"Vain queries," "vain thoughts," you say. Not so vain as you may think. Can the lesson of such an example to the men of the republic ever be lost—the example of a youth who, though favored by every fortune, heard the very first cry of his country's distress, and who shouted back: "Here am I; send me!" If he culled no laurels from the battle field, he, none the less, gave the great sacrifice upon the altar of his country. He did his best, gave his all, gave his life, to perpetuate liberty, and to show future generations how to live and die for freedom and native land.

JOHN L. WARSTLER.—The family of which Mr. Warstler is an honorable representative came to Stark county in an early day and figured conspicuously in the pioneer history of Plain township. His grandfather, Christian Warstler, a native of Pennsylvania, moved his family to that part of the county in 1804, when the settlers were few and far between and entered a section and a half of land, which subsequently became one of the highly improved and valuable tracts of real estate in the township. Christian Warstler was a man of great energy and marked force of character and well endowed mentally and physically for the rugged duties of the pioneer period. He cleared and developed a fine farm, took a leading part in the general improvement of the country and left the impress of his strong personality deeply impressed upon the community which he assisted to establish. He became one of the large land owners and representative agriculturists of the county and lived to a good old age, departing this life December 26, 1858, in his eighty-eighth year. His family consisted of a wife, one son, Daniel, and a daughter, Margaret, both of whom were born before the parents moved to the new home in the wilds of Stark county.

Daniel Warstler was born September 24, 1804, in Pennsylvania, and was about three years old when the family removed to Ohio. He grew to maturity amid the stirring scenes of pioneer times and began life for himself as a tiller of the soil, inheriting at his father's death the large tract of real estate which the latter originally purchased from the government. Like his father, he too became an influential factor in the material development of the country and for many years was recognized as one of the most intelligent, progressive and public-spirited men of the township in which he lived. As a farmer he took high rank and as a business man his judgment and sound, practical sense caused his advice to be eagerly sought by his fellow citizens in matters of business and in the adjustment of differences, thus saving them much unnecessary and expensive litigation. When a young man he married Miss Catherine Lind, who was born in Maryland on the 21st day of September, 1810. She bore him eleven children, six of whom survive, and died at her home in Plain township December 7, 1883, at the age of seventy-three years. Daniel Warstler also lived to a good old age, departing this life later in the "eighties," honored and respected by the people among whom he had so long been a leader in temporal affairs. The following are the names of the children of Daniel and Catherine Warstler, now living: John L., whose name introduces this article; Christian, a farmer and prominent citizen of Plain township; Aaron, who lives in the town of New Berlin; David and Daniel, also residents of Plain; and Levi, who makes his home in Louisville.

John L. Warstler was born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, December 30, 1835, and grew to young manhood in close touch with nature on the paternal homestead. He was reared to habits of industry and his mind early received those correct impressions which had such a decided influence in shaping his character and directing his life into proper channels. At intervals he attended such schools as the county afforded, but in the main his education consists of a large fund of valuble practical knowledge, acquired by coming in contact with the world in the various business capacities that have occupied his attention from time to time.

In the year 1858 Mr. Warstler was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Essex, of Stark county, and immediately thereafter located at New Baltimore, where he engaged in the manufacture of lumber upon quite an extensive scale. After operating a large saw-mill at that place for about four years he purchased a farm of one hundred and twenty acres in the same township, and during the eight years following devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits with most encouraging financial results. At the expiration of that time he disposed of his place, and for a short time thereafter lived in Plain township, subsequently entering the employ of D. Lind & Company, of Canton, manufacturers of flour and lumber. After spending about one year with that firm he purchased a small farm in the township of Nimishillen, where he made his home until 1897, when he retired from agriculture and took up his residence in Louisville. Meantime, 1880, Mr. Warstler erected an establishment, a mile east of Louisville, for the manufacture of tile and rock-faced brick, the first enterprise of the kind in this part of the state, and was instrumental in bringing the industry up to the large proportions which it has since assumed. The rock-faced brick made at the factory continued to grow in favor as a building material until the demand exceeded the supply, consequently the capacity of the establishment was enlarged and a greater force of workmen employed. It is now one of the leading industries of the county and bids fair to grow to still larger proportions in the future.

In the spring of 1902 Mr. Warstler sold the old home farm which he had long owned and purchased what is known as the Henry Krall farm, a fine place of one hundred and sixty-five acres admirably situated about four miles north west of Louisville. This farm is cultivated by a tenant and from it the proprietor receives no small share of his income. Mr. Warstler conducted his manufacturing interests for a number of years, and his name became widely and favorably known in industrial circles throughout the state. Plentifully endowed with that most admirable of all qualities, good common sense, supplemented by sound judgment, keen discrimination, superior business training and a thorough knowledge of the underlying principles governing business transactions, he has carried to successful issue every enterprise, and has been fairly and honorably successful. For a number of years he served as school director, and as such was untiring in his efforts to advance the cause of education and promote a higher standard of intellectual and professional fitness on the part of the teaching force. Politically Mr. Warstler is a Republican; while active in supporting his party and upholding its principles he has had little time to devote to purely partisan affairs, making politics and every other consideration subordinate to his business interests. During the dark days of the great rebellion Mr. Warstler enlisted, May 20, 1864, in Company H, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving until September 4, 1864, when he received an honorable discharge. He had prior to his enlistment been a member of the Home Guards.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Warstler has been blessed with three children, namely: Glancy, a business man of Middletown, Ohio; Ida R., wife of Henry Preston, of Terre Haute, Indiana; and Leora, who married John R. Kagey, of Louisville. Adam Essex, the father of Mrs. Warstler, came to Stark county when a boy, his father, Simon Essex, having been one of the pioneers of Plain township. The name has long been familiar, and those bearing it have been among the county's most reputable and enterprising citizens.

JOSEPH COLEMAN is a native of England, born on the 4th day of July, 1823, at a place called Laken Heath. His father, William Coleman, was born and reared in the same town, as was also his mother, who bore the maiden name of Bailey. The subject's paternal grandfather was William Coleman, a native of England. Joseph Coleman spent his childhood and early youth at or near the place of his birth, and when ten and a half years old was brought by his parents to the United States, making the journey to this country in 1834. The family landed at New York, and from that city proceeded to Dundas, Canada, thence about one year later to the city of Hamilton, in the same province, where they lived for only a limited period. From the latter place William Coleman changed his residence to Detroit, Michigan, where he lived about one and a half years, supporting his family during that time as a brick mason, which trade the subject's older brothers also learned. In the year 1837 Mr. Coleman moved to Massillon, Ohio, in which city he spent the remainder of his life, dying here in 1868, at the advanced age of eighty-six, his wife having preceded him to the other life in 1842 when sixty-two years old. Joseph Coleman accompanied his parents to the different places in which they lived, the meantime, as opportunity afforded, attending the public schools. The greater part of his educational training was obtained in Massillon, and it was also in this city that he began life for himself, engaging in business about the year 1845 with some financial assistance from his brother, every cent of which he repaid before the latter's death. Before that time, however, he entered the jewelry store conducted by Martin A. Withington to learn the jeweler's trade, and after becoming a proficient workman and obtaining a practical knowledge of business, purchased in the above year a stock of goods and opened an establishment of his own. Mr. Coleman soon secured a liberal share of patronage in his line, and, being a skillful jeweler, it was not long until he had more work than he could do. Accordingly he employed assistants from time to time and in the course of a few years commanded the largest and most lucrative jewelry trade in the city. He achieved an enviable reputation as a sound, practical business man, and by strict attention and well directed energy succeeded in laying the foundation of the large fortune which he accumulated as the years went by. His establishment was not only the largest and most extensively patronized of the kind in the city, but its reputation became wide spread so that he drew a goodly portion of his patronage from other places, meanwhile by judicious investments realizing liberal returns from his surplus capital.

Mr. Coleman was actively identified with the jewelry trade for a period of fifty-six years, and his is one of the most successful business careers in the history of Massillon. Having acquired a handsome fortune and becoming weary of the pressing cares of business, the latter largely superinduced by the natural infirmities incident to increasing age, he turned over his establishment in 1901 to his son, Albert H., and since that time has been enjoying the rest of which he had so long stood in need.

While devoting attention primarily to his private affairs, Mr. Coleman has not been unmindful of other enterprises of a business and financial nature, having to the extent of his ability given encouragement to various interests calculated to promote the material welfare of the city of his residence. He was one of the prime movers in the organization of the Union National Bank, of Massillon, and, as stated in the initial paragraph, served thirteen years as president of the same, and is still a stockholder in the institution. As president he demonstrated executive abilities of a high order, while his thorough knowledge in all their bearings won him honorable distinction in the world of finance. A man of ripe judgment as well as profound knowledge, his influence and active co-operation did much to make the Union National Bank one of the most reliable and popular banks in this part of the state, and the continued prosperity which has marked its history from the beginning to the present time is largely due to his safe counsel, wise foresight and correct business methods.

For considerably over a half century Mr. Coleman has been an influential factor in the business and industrial affairs of Massillon, few men having been so long identified with the city's interests, and none in a more emphatic way having impressed his individuality upon the community. In every relation of life he has commanded the universal esteem of his fellow men, having always borne the reputation of an intelligent, broad minded, public-spirited man of affairs, and an honorable, upright citizen, whose aim has ever been to promote the general good as well as to advance his individual concerns.

Mr. Coleman's marriage was solemnized in the year 1852 with Miss Mary Bender, daughter of John Bender, of Pennsylvania, the union resulting in the birth of three children, viz.: Herbert Bailey, who died in 1893; Anna, wife of Edward F. Bahney, and Albert Henry. Mrs. Coleman died March 31, 1892.

LOUIS A. KOONS is the son of Jacob and Catherine Koons, the father a native of Germany, the mother born and reared in Columbiana county, Ohio. When a youth of eighteen Jacob Koons left the land of his birth and came to the United States, locating at Massillon, Ohio, where for a number of years he worked in the old machine shop operated by Hart & Brown. He was an expert mechanic, and possessed many excellent traits of character, which won him the admiration and esteem of all with whom he came in contact. He departed this life in 1868, at the age of forty-eight years, leaving to his descendants a name untainted by the slightest suspicion of dishonor. Mrs. Jacob Koons was the daughter of Rev. Michael Ruckenbroad, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, and an early settler of Columbiana county, Ohio. He came to America when a young man, locating first in Pennsylvania, thence a little later changed his residence to the above county, when eastern Ohio was little better than an unbroken wilderness. He entered land and improved a farm, and in connection with agricultural pursuits worked at the shoemaker's trade, which he had learned in Germany, and previously followed in Pennsylvania. In an early day he raised a great deal of flax, which he and his good wife manufactured into various kinds of fabrics for themselves, besides supplying with wearing material certain families of their neighborhood. Mr. Ruckenbroad was a preacher of the German Baptist (or Dunkard) church, and was instrumental in organizing the first congregation of that faith in the county of Columbiana. His society met in a little log cabin which stood on his farm, and he ministered to its spiritual necessities for a number of years, also preaching at various other places in Columbiana and adjoining counties. He lived to a ripe old age, departing this life in Massillon in his eighty-fifth year. Mrs. Catherine Koons died in 1895. Of the eight children born to Jacob and Mrs. Koons, four sons and four daughters, six grew to maturity, and of this number all but one survive. One of the sons has in his possession an interesting and valuable family relic in the shape of an old German Bible, printed in the year 1629. The book is in a remarkable state of preservation, and contains the family record on the maternal side for many generations past. Louis A. Koons is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and dates his birth from the 27th day of March, 1858. He attended the graded schools of Massillon until the death of the father, which event not only seriously interfered with his education but compelled him at the early age of eight years to seek the means for obtaining his own livelihood. Thrown upon his own resources when he most needed a father's counsel and guidance, it is no wonder that his future looked anything but promising, and that he took such advantage of circumstances which then presented themselves shows him to have possessed much more than ordinary mental endowment and determined energy. From eight until twelve he assisted his mother by working at various kinds of labor, but in the latter year he entered the employ of Kelly & Pepper, manufacturers of brick, with whom he remained two seasons, attending school a part of the intervening winter months. Although the labor in the brickyard was exceedingly hard for one of his years, he showed unusual pluck and perseverance, his remuneration of fifty cents per day being a great incentive to continue the work until something better presented itself. When a youth of fourteen, Mr. Koons severed his connection with the above firm and accepted a clerkship in a grocery store, in which capacity he obtained his first practical knowledge of business. Being apt and quick to learn, he soon mastered the details of trade, and during the two years following became a very thorough and efficient salesman. Realizing that a clerkship had little to offer in the way of remuneration, and desiring to settle upon something more to his liking for a life work, he resigned his position in the store at the end of the second year, and apprenticed himself to the Russell Manufacturing Company to learn the machinist trade. After spending two years with this concern, and becoming quite a proficient workman, he gave up his place to accept a much more remunerative position in the grocery and queensware house of H. A. Kitzmiller, where he continued for a period of three years, meantime bending all of his energies to learn the business, with the object in view of engaging in mercantile pursuits upon his own responsibility. Leaving Mr. Kitzmiller he spent the ensuing six years with the firm of Powell & James and at the expiration of that time, in the spring of 1882, began dealing in stoves, hardware, house furnishing goods, building material, etc. Mr. Koons embarked in business for himself with a limited capital and although at first his efforts were modest, it was not long until he obtained a liberal share of patronage, and found himself on the high road to success. Before the end of the second year he had by far the largest trade in his line in the city, and from that time onward his career was a series of continued advancements, which soon gained for him a commanding place among the leading tradesmen of Massillon and Stark county. The better to meet the constantly increasing demands for the materials handled he effected a co-partnership with a Mr. Heiniger, purchased a small ten-cent store, which under their combined efforts soon became one of the largest and most successful retail establishments in the city. They conducted the business until 1885 in a room seventeen by fifty feet in area, but in the latter year greatly enlarged the capacity of the store, besides establishing a branch house in Canal Dover, Mr. Heiniger subsequently taking charge of the business in that town. Mr. Koons gradually increased the stock in Massillon until the trade assumed vast proportions, and instead of a single room, he was soon obliged to provide additional quarters, by fitting up three extra departments, each of the four floors representing thirty-one hundred and twenty-five square feet of space, of seventeen feet in width by one hundred and twenty-five in length. The "Bazaar," the name Mr. Koons gave his store, was devoted to the retail and wholesale trade, the two upper floors containing the latter department, the first and second the former. Under his successful management the house became not only the largest and most extensively patronized establishment of the kind in Stark county, but one of the largest in the state, as the amount of business abundantly demonstrated. In addition to this mammoth enterprise, Mr. Koons has been identified with various other business ventures, prominent among which was the Union Cigar Company, organized and incorporated by him in the year 1891, and of which he was made superintendent and general manager. This company started out under most favorable auspices, and the amount of business transacted may be inferred from the fact that in addition to supplying the bulk of the local trade, two traveling men were kept on the road every working day of the year to meet the general demand for the Union cigars. Not only in commercial lines has Mr. Koons commanded public attention, but in other capacities his name has become widely and favorably known. He was the leading spirit in organizing the Massillon Building & Loan Association in 1888, and for several years thereafter he served as its secretary, but later was obliged to resign the position on account of the pressing demands of his business affairs. He is still a director in the concern, and much of its success is directly attributable to the interest which he has taken in its behalf.

In 1898 Mr. Koons sold the "Bazaar," and the same year purchased the large wall paper and paint store formerly owned by the late J. M. Walker. Since taking possession of this business he has more than doubled the capacity of the house, and made it the largest establishment of the kind in the eastern part of the state. He still owns and manages this large enterprise, and as its proprietor occupies a position in the business world second to that of none of his contemporaries in Massillon or the county of Stark.

Mr. Koons' rare judgment and sound business methods have been duly recognized and appreciated by his fellow citizens, but a few of whom have availed themselves of his services in the settlement of estates and the adjustment of differences growing out of misunderstandings concerning property and other causes. He has administered on several large properties, and having been a notary public for over twelve years, his advice on matters of law has been especially sought to avoid litigation. From his eighteenth year to the present time he has been a pronounced Republican and an active worker in the party, taking an active interest in local and general affairs, and doing much to promote the interests of the cause which he has so much at heart. He has served as delegate to the various city, township, county, congressional and state conventions, besides demonstrating superior ability as a party leader by his advice and generalship while in the county central committee, of which he has at different times been chairman.

On the 5th of June, 1900, Mr. Koons was appointed postmaster of Massillon, a deserved compliment to his fitness for the office as well as a graceful recognition of valuable party services. The Massillon office includes, in addition to the usual clerical force and free city delivery, three rural routes, the services of twenty men being required to carry on successfully the business of the different departments. Mr. Koons has introduced a number of reforms besides making many improvements tending to lessen the labor and expedite the business of the force.

Mr. Koons has never given his influence to any movement, public or private, savoring in the least of disrepute, his career from the beginning having been upright and entirely free from the faintest suspicion of wrong doing. He has served in various minor official capacities, not from a love of office, but to the end that he might render his fellow citizens effective service in transacting certain important business matters. Among these positions was that of township clerk, which he by no means desired, but which he accepted solely from a sense of duty. In 1891 he was elected city clerk, but resigned the office within a short time on account of the pressing claims of his business affairs. Upon divers occasions he has been put forward by his party as a candidate for mayor, but as often has withdrawn in favor of his friends, having no desire to add the duties of that office to his already heavy burden of business cares. As already stated, he has been honored with places on the Republican city and county committees, and at one time served as president of the McKinley Club, a political organization which under his leadership proved a potent factor in the last two presidential elections.

Mr. Koons is a Mason, being a member of the blue lodge and chapter, in addition to which he is also prominently identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having represented both fraternities in their annual state gatherings. The Pythian lodge of Massillon has long numbered him among its most zealous workers, and he also belongs to the Order of Chosen Friends, of which he is counsellor, the Protective Home Circle, and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, being a charter member of the last named organization. Last but by no means least, he is an earnest and faithful communicant of the First Christian church of Massillon, and as such has led a singularly pure life, thus proving a tower of strength in inducing others to choose the better way.

The married life of Mr. Koons dates from 1880, in December of which year, in the town of Canal Fulton, Miss Caroline Morgan, a native of Wales, became his faithful wife and loyal, self-denying helpmeet. Mrs. Koons is the daughter of Thomas Morgan, who came to the United States a number of years ago, and for a considerable length of time ran a hotel at the above place. To Mr. and Mrs. Koons have been born two children, the older of whom, Louis A., now a young man of twenty-one, holds an important position in the Merchants' National Bank of Massillon. Thomas Abel, the second son, is a student in the city high school, and possesses fine intellectual abilities, which in due time will doubtless lead him to a career of usefulness.

JACOB BASH, deceased, late an honored citizen and prosperous farmer of Tuscarawas township, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in the county of Westmoreland in the year 1821. His father was Michael Bash, a descendant of one of the old families of that county, and his mother, who was also born and reared in that same part of the state, bore the maiden name of Sarah Rugh. These parents were married in Westmoreland, there reared their family, and their earthly courses being finished, they now sleep side by side in the old burial ground, where rest the bodies of so many of their ancestors and friends. Jacob Bash spent his early life in the county of Westmoreland, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, which vocation he afterwards followed. He remained in Pennsylvania until 1861, at which time he sold his interests there and came to Stark county, Ohio, purchasing one hundred acres of land in Tuscarawas township, where he spent the remaining years of his life. He married, in his native state, Miss Lavina Huffman, daughter of George Huffman, a well-known citizen of Westmoreland county, and became the father of five children, namely: Martha J., wife of Henry Snyder; John P. died in childhood; Syblia L., who married Prof. Charles M. Smith, a teacher in the public schools of Massillon; Jacob L. and Reuben H., prosperous farmers in the township of Tuscarawas. On coming to this county Mr. Bash not only became a successful tiller of the soil, but also identified himself with every movement that seemed likely to contribute to the advantages of the community and encouraged all worthy enterprises. Of him it may be truthfully said that the world is better because of his presence therein. As a neighbor, kind and obliging, as a friend, loyal and true, as a citizen, ever ready to contribute his influence to advance the public welfare, as a husband and father the embodiment of love and affectionate solicitude, he lived well his day, and at its close left to his descendants the heritage of a good name and spotless character, which they value more than any bequest in the way of worldly wealth. He died at his home in Tuscarawas township in the year 1888, aged sixty-seven years, and eleven years later his faithful wife and devoted companion was reunited to him in the land where loving ties are never severed.

Jacob L. Bash, fourth child of Jacob and Lavina Bash, was born June 15, 1865, on the paternal homestead in Tuscarawas township, and spent the years of his childhood and youth amid the peaceful pursuits of farm life. The common schools, which he attended at intervals during minority, afforded him the means of acquiring a fair education, and later he began making his own way in the world as a tiller of the soil, which honorable calling he has continued to the present day, owning at this time one-half of the home farm. About ten years ago Mr. Bash engaged in prospecting for coal, which, in connection with agricultural pursuits, he has since followed, meeting with encouraging pecuniary success in both lines of work. In partnership with his younger brother, Reuben H., he is also interested in coal mining, the two having opened and developed a fine mineral property on their land in 1900, since which time they have realized a large income from this source. In June, 1899, Mr. Bash tendered his services to the government as a soldier in the Spanish-American war, enlisting in the Seventeenth United States Regulars, which in due time he accompanied to the Philippine Islands, where he experienced all the realities of military duty under conditions by no means pleasant or agreeable. After three years of faithful service he received an honorable discharge, and then returned home, where he once more took up the peaceful pursuits of civil life, meeting its responsibilities with the same fortitude that characterized his military life and discharged its duties as becomes a worthy man and true citizen. He has made a decided success of agriculture and is equally fortunate in other enterprises, both of which have redounded materially to his financial advantage.

Mr. Bash is a married man and at the head of an interesting family of three living children, whose names are: Leroy, Clyde and Gleen, the oldest, a daughter by the name of Myrtle, having died in infancy. Before her marriage, Mrs. Snyder was Miss Anna Rogers, and the ceremony by which it was changed to the one which she now bears took place on the 2d of April, 1888.

ARTHUR J. HILL, M. D., is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 12th of October, 1871, and being a son of Hiram F. and Adeline (Stackhouse) Hill, all of whose five children are yet living, their names, in order of birth, being as follows. Arthur J., who is the immediate subject of this review; Ada L., wife of J. B. Summer, of Canton; John E., who is a baggageman in the employ of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad; Jennie, who is the wife of Clarence Myers, of Alliance, this county; and Laura, who remains at the parental home. Hiram F. Hill was likewise born in Columbiana county, about the year 1850, being a son of Atkinson Hill, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, being a son of Joseph Hill, who was born in Ireland, whence he emigrated to America when a young man, by reason of the attempt made by his parents to compel him to marry a relative in order that a fortune might not pass out of the family possession. By reason of his disobedience he was disinherited, but he was a man of energy and strong intellectual ability, and after coming to the United States he accumulated a competence and became one of the prominent and influential citizens of Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he passed the remainder of his life, and where for a number of years he held an important county office. Atkinson Hill was reared and educated in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and as a young man came thence to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he was engaged in farming for a number of years, after which he established himself in the mercantile business in New Alexander, that county, becoming one of the prominent citizens of that section of the state, where he died in 1889, when well advanced in years. Hiram F. Hill was reared to maturity in Columbiana county, and received his early education in the public schools. After his marriage he engaged in agricultural pursuits, in which he has ever since continued, having a fine estate of about two hundred acres, and being one of the influential and honored citizens of his district. For nearly a quarter of a century he has given much of his attention to the buying and shipping of live stock, in which line he now conducts an extensive business, being one of the largest shippers of cattle in his section. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Democratic party. The mother of the Doctor was born in Columbiana county, about 1850, being a daughter of Benjamin Stackhouse, who is of Welsh descent, and is a prominent merchant of East Rochester, that county, and also the owner of a valuable coal mine in that locality. Though he is seventy-five years of age, he still gives his active attention to his business interests, and no day is too cold or inclement to prevent him from driving out to his mine and give his personal supervision to its operation, while he enjoys the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the community in which so many years of his life have been passed.

Dr. Hill was reared on the homestead farm in Columbiana county, and his educational privileges in his adolescent days were such as were afforded in the district schools and the select schools at East Rochester. In 1890 he began reading medicine, and in the fall of that year was matriculated in the Western Reserve Medical College, in the city of Cleveland, his preceptor being Dr. John E. Darby, of that place. He was assiduous and energetic in the prosecution of his studies, and was duly graduated in medicine and surgery in the spring of 1893, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. Shortly afterward he entered upon the active practice of his chosen profession, in East Rochester, Columbiana county, where he remained about four years, within which time he had passed the novitiate stage of his profession, and clearly established a reputation as an able and discriminating physician and surgeon. In the spring of 1897 Dr. Hill came to Minerva, where he has succeeded in building up a remunerative and representative practice and one which shows a constantly augmentive tendency. He keeps in constant touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery, recently having added an X-Ray outfit to his already extensive equipment. The Doctor is a member of the American Medical Association, and among his confreres is recognized as an able young practitioner, and is well deserving the success which has attended his efforts. Fraternally he is identified with Tubal Lodge No. 551, Free and Accepted Masons, at Minerva, and of Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar, at Canton. In politics he gives his support to the principles and policies advanced by the Democratic party. In 1898 Dr. Hill completed a post-graduate course in the Chicago Polyclinic and the year following took a special course in connection with the treatment of the diseases of the eye, in the Philadelphia Polyclinic, while he is a constant student of the best standard and periodical literature pertaining to his profession, and thus keeps fully abreast of the progressive element in his profession.

On the 22d of March, 1893, Dr. Hill was united in marriage to Miss Nettie R. Taylor, of East Rochester, Columbiana county, where she was born, being a daughter of Morris Taylor, who is there engaged in the hardware business, and who is also general manager of the Eastern Ohio Telephone Company, of which he was one of the promoters. Dr. and Mrs. Hill have one son, Don B., who was born on the 31st of July, 1894, and one daughter, Helen L., born October 25, 1902.

DAVID H. BAUGHMAN.—The name Baughman is undoubtedly of German origin, but of the remote history of the family the subject is not thoroughly informed. It is known, however, that his paternal ancestors came to this country at a very early period and settled in Virginia, and it was in that commonwealth that his parents, John and Margaret Baughman, were born and reared. The maiden name of Mrs. Baughman was Margaret Umbenower, the pronunciation of which is also indicative of Teutonic origin. These parents were married in their native state, and some years later moved to Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, where they lived until changing their abode to Stark county, Ohio, in the spring of 1834. John Baughman purchased a farm in the township of Tuscarawas the year of his arrival, and continued to make it his home until his death, on the 28th day of August, 1849, in the eighty-first or eighty-second year of his age. His wife survived him until 1869, on November 18th of which year she was called away, after reaching the ripe old age of eighty-three.

Father Baughman was a man of excellent repute, and by diligence and thrift became the possessor of a handsome estate, owning at the time of his death a good farm of one hundred and twelve acres, nearly all of which he cleared from the woods and reduced to a successful state of tillage. In politics he was a steadfast supporter of the Democratic party, and defended his opinions very tenaciously and labored earnestly for the success of the principles which he held so dear. He began life poor in this world's goods, and the property which he accumulated was the result of his own labor and economy. Of the twelve children born to John and Margaret Baughman only three are now living, Ellen, Adam and the subject of this review. By a previous marriage the father had a family of seven children, of whom there is no living representative.

David H. Baughman was born February 17, 1827, in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, and was a lad of eight years when his parents moved to their new home in the township of Tuscarawas, Stark county. Since coming to the place where he now lives sixty-nine years have dissolved in the mists of the past, during which long period his life and the history of the community have been very closely interwoven. Owing to circumstances which he could not control his early educational advantages were very limited, and it is a fact worthy of note that the sum total of his schooling did not exceed three months. Notwithstanding such a disadvantage, he largely made up the deficiency in after years by reading and private study, but in the main his knowledge consists of the practical kind which men of native intelligence and good judgment obtain by close observation and contact with the world in the daily affairs of life. To him work early became a paramount rule of life and he grew up with a full appreciation that true success and individual advancement must result from honest effort. Like the true son that he was, he gave the best years of youth and early manhood to his father's interests, working early and late to provide for the support of the family, and upon the death of his father David took charge of the homestead and later came into full possession of the same. The farm is endeared to him by many tender recollections and hallowed associations, and while he lives he will never relinquish its ownership. Mr. Baughman followed agriculture with success and pecuniary profit until 1888, when he rented the farm, and since that year he has been living more of a retired life, though still quite a busy man with large interests to look after. In bygone years Mr. Baughman was a Democrat, but becoming dissatisfied with the policy of the party and with what he considered the unwise course of its leaders, he finally abandoned its principles and became a Republican, having decided views on the leading questions of the day and being firm and outspoken in the defense of his opinions. He has been for some years an active worker in the organization known as the Patrons of Husbandry, which has for its object the promotion of agriculture and the bettering of the farmer's social condition, being one of the leading members of the local Grange, to which he belongs. To say that Mr. Baughman is an humble, devout and zealous Christian is to state what everybody who knows him will most cheerfully testify. He has long been a member of the Reformed church, and as such labors by word and deed to spread the truth of the Gospel among men and induce transgressors to abandon the wicked ways and seek a higher and better way of living. For over thirty years he has held the office of deacon, and about the same length of time has served as elder of his local congregation, known as the Myers church, in Tuscarawas township.

Elizabeth Bretz, who became the wife of David H. Baughman on the 15th day of May, 1848, was born in Tuscarawas township, October 13, 1830. She was the daughter of John and Mary (Krider) Bretz, of Pennsylvania, the former having come to Stark county as early as 1812, the mother some years after that date. The Bretz family were among the first permanent settlers in what is now the township of Tuscarawas, and the Kriders have also been represented in this part of the state for a long period of time, probably over three-quarters of a century. After a happy married life of over forty-two years Mr. Krider, on the 11th day of May, 1891, was compelled to part with his loving and devoted wife, who at that time bid farewell to earth and entered the region of the blessed. She, too, was a sincere Christian, and it was with a lively hope in the merits of her Redeemer that she fearlessly entered the valley of shadows, assured of a jeweled crown of rejoicing on the other side.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Baughman was blessed with twelve children, the oldest of whom is Mary E., who married Godfrey Bride, by whom she has had one child, that died in infancy. Sarah, the second in order of birth, is the wife of John Walter and the mother of seven children, Harvey, William, Benjamin, Howard, Mary E., John and Abbie, the last two twins. Julia A. is also married, being the wife of Z. Baughman, to whom she has borne children as follows: Ida, Nora, Mettie, Charles, Eva, Albert and Harvey. Benjamin, the fourth of the family, married Miss Alice C. Shilling and has three children, Carrie, Benjamin E. and Blanch. Elizabeth, the next in succession, entered the marriage relation with Thomas Patterson and is the mother of one son by the name of Thomas. Susan A., who married Henry Keller, died in Indiana in the year 1890, leaving a husband and four offspring, namely: Lottie M., Benjamin, Rebecca and Henry H. David, the seventh in regular order, chose a wife in the person of Miss Orpha Basler and is now the head of a family of seven children, Albert, Nellie, Warren, Care, Benjamin, Ralph and Paul. After David comes Ada, who is the wife of Michael Uth and the mother of one son, Warren. Annett I. married Charles Stansbury, a union which has resulted in the birth of three daughters, Florence, Bessie and Ananda. William H., the tenth in order of birth, took to wife Miss Ollie Lonas, daughter of Samuel Lonas, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in these pages. Additional to the above, there were two of the subject's children that died in childhood, John C. and Eliza.

HENRY STONER.—Few families of Stark county can claim a longer period of continuous residence than the Stoners. As early as the year 1818 there came to this state from York county, Pennsylvania, one Andrew Stoner, who, with his wife Elizabeth and several children, settled on a tract of one hundred and sixty acres in what is now known as the township of Tuscarawas, receiving a patent for the land from the government. At that time there were few white people in the county and for a number of years the pioneer family lived remote from neighbors, experiencing all the vicissitudes, hardships and dangers peculiar to the early times. The maiden name of Mrs. Andrew Stoner was Elizabeth Mitman; she was the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, who entered the American army at the beginning of the war and served gallantly until independence was achieved. Andrew and Elizabeth reared eleven children, all of whom have long gone to their reward. Among these children was a son by the name of Jacob, who was born about the year 1801 in York county, Pennsylvania. When a lad of ten years he began working for himself and by the time he was eighteen he had saved sufficient money to purchase a piece of wild land in Stark county, Ohio, taking possession of it about the same time his father moved to this part of the state. He became a successful farmer and, as the years went by, owned a large amount of valuable real estate, the greater part of which he cleared and otherwise improved. A few years after coming to this county he married Miss Mary Rodocker, whose father, Frederick Rodocker, was one of the earliest pioneers of Stark, having entered a quarter section of land within the present limits of Tuscarawas township about the year in which the Stoners made their settlement. Jacob and Mary Stoner were the parents of nine children, namely: Henry, Josiah, John, Jacob, Samuel and Lavina, twins, Levi, Jerry and L——, twins, of whom, John, Samuel and Lavina are deceased. The father of these children died in 1887, the mother ten years previous to that date.

Henry Stoner, the subject of this sketch, was the first born of his father's family. His birth occurred April 2, 1829, on the homestead in Tuscarawas township and his early experience included the usual routine of farm labor, varied in the winter time by attendance to such schools as were common to this part of the state sixty and seventy years ago. His advantages in the way of discipline were by no means as favorable as those of today, but he made the most of his limited opportunities and in due time became quite well informed. Being the oldest son, much of the work fell to him, and as long as he remained at home he discharged his duty faithfully, looking after his father's interests with true filial regard. In the choice of a vocation Mr. Stoner experienced no hesitation whatever, as he early decided to become a farmer, which resolution he carried out by beginning work for himself when about thirty years of age. With a tenacity of purpose knowing no interference, he has followed his chosen calling to the present day, the meanwhile succeeding well as an agriculturist, acquiring by industry, forethought and successful management a sufficiency of material wealth to make the remainder of his life comfortable and free from care. His farm, consisting of ninety-five acres of fertile land, is well adapted for general agricultural purposes, and by adopting modern methods he has never failed to reap abundant harvests.

Mr. Stoner's domestic life began in 1853, on December 3d of which year, he was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Culler, a native of Stark county, born in 1833 in the township of Tuscarawas. Mrs. Stoner is the daughter of Jacob and Leah (Poorman) Culler, who, like the Stoners, were early in this part of the state, both branches of the family coming about the same time. Nine children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Stoner, viz; Adaline, deceased; Marian E. and Loran, twins, the former not living; Franklin, deceased; Ida, Valentine, Ada and Sheridan. Loran F., the fourth in order of birth, married Sarah McIntosh, of this county, and is the father of five children, Belva, Alma, Beulah, Annie and Ivan. Ida is the wife of Frederick Weisgarver, to whom she has borne the following sons and daughters: Lottie, Hattie, Ola, Ora, Forest, Lloyd, Perry, Warren and John. Valentine married Miss Jennie Shank; Ada married Jacob Weisgarver and has this offspring: Grace, Stella and Lola B., the oldest deceased, Sheridan, the youngest of the family, is also married and the father of one child, Glenn H.; his wife was formerly Miss Delilah Snively, of Stark county. Politically Mr. Stoner is a Democrat, but he takes no very active part in political affairs further than voting his sentiments and maintaining the correctness of his opinions, when the latter becomes necessary. In matters religious he has profound convictions, being a zealous member of the Lutheran church, as is also his wife. Honorable in business, loyal in citizenship, faithful as a friend and neighbor, generous in sympathy, and kind and tolerant in his home, he holds a warm place in the hearts of all who know him.

MICHAEL D. HARTER was born in Canton, Ohio, April 6, 1846. His father was Isaac Harter, who was prominently identified with the business interests of Canton for many years, first as a merchant and afterwards as a banker. Young Harter's education was obtained in the city schools, he never having attended any other school or college. After leaving the high school he supplemented his school training by diligent application to the methods and problems arising in his father's bank, this lesson of practical, commercial life being well learned.

Mr. Harter was married to Mary L. Brown in the year 1869, and to this couple five children were born, three sons and two daughters. He died in Fostoria, Ohio, February 22, 1896, and was survived by his wife and all his children except one daughter.

Mr. Harter's personality was attractive in the broadest and best sense of that term. Physically he was a perfect type of manhood; his ways were courteous and winning; his manner of life, both in social and business circles, inspired such a respect for his character and such a measure of confidence in his judgment as few men enjoy. That there is in such a character, and inherent to it, another attribute, namely the power to largely influence his fellow men, is amply demonstrated in Mr. Harter's career. His activities were directed, first to business, and subsequently to politics, and to these we now direct the reader's attention.

Impelled by a restless, aggressive energy, which was also one of his characteristics, he established a bank in Canton in 1866; it is now known as the George D. Harter Bank. He was only twenty years of age at that time. The bank was a success from the start and its prestige has never suffered any impairment. The following year, 1867, the late Cornelius Aultman, of Canton, and Henry H. Taylor, of Chicago, established a large manufactory at Mansfield, Ohio, for the construction of threshing machinery. Mr. Aultman offered the financial management of the institution to Mr. Harter. It is rare indeed that such a tribute to ability and confidence falls to the lot of so young a man,—he was barely twenty-one. From the beginning of the Aultman-Taylor industry, and during Mr. Harter's life, the two were indissolubly linked. Mr. Aultman lived in Canton; Mr. Taylor in Chicago; Mr. Harter was always the present and controlling spirit. His methods were exceedingly aggressive in the factory, and just as conservative in the office. Not for a single year did the operations of the house show a loss. While most contemporaneous industries have either met positive disaster, or had a chequered career, the safety and soundness of the Aultman-Taylor house have been unmarred from the beginning. Justice to Mr. Harter demands that no less than this should be said of the institution which, in a business sense, was his life work.

Mr. Harter was a principal factor in the establishment of the Isaac Harter Milling Company, at Fostoria, one of the largest, if not the largest producer of flour in Ohio. He was also interested in a number of financial institutions, and his co-operation was sought for by many more. His equipment was eminently that of a financier, and it fitted him well for the honorable and distinguished part he was to take in political affairs during the later years of his life.

Mr. Harter was an entertaining conversationalist and, from the ranks of business men, he had few equals on the public platform. Being very outspoken in his views, it was natural that his party, the Democratic, should tender to him its nomination for congress. He was elected in 1890. He hoped to be instrumental in modifying the McKinley tariff law. He supported the Wilson act, which became a law in general harmony with his efforts, and with the wishes of his party. His greatest work in congress, however, was undertaken in opposition to the majority of his party. This was the establishment of the gold standard. He did not live to see the final fixture of the gold standard into our national policy, an achievement due largely to his efforts, and in the accomplishment of which he took a more prominent part than any man of any party in the nation.

Prior to the election in 1890 Mr. Harter, then a candidate for congress, issued a printed circular giving forcible expression to his views on live questions. He always carried his challenge on his sleeve.

In this limited space the salient features of his subsequent campaign against free silver and the Bland bill, within the Democratic party, will best appear from a list of the titles of documents issued by Mr. Harter while in congress. He was the soul and champion of that campaign—the only one. These documents are not all available, but the following will suffice:

June, 1891.—“Unlimited Silver Coinage for the Benefit of the Silver Bullion Producers and at the Expense of the Whole People. Shall the Democratic Party be true to Itself?” A printed circular.

October, 1891.—“The Currency Question.” An article in the Forum.

January 16, 1892.—“Shall the Democratic Party stand for the Rights of the Whole People or become the Servant of the Silver Ring?” Address before the Reform Club dinner in New York city.

January 22, 1892.—“A Plan to Re-establish the Rights of State Banks and to Improve and Perpetuate the National Banking System.” Address before the Commonwealth Club dinner in New York city. In this address the arguments in favor of an elastic currency coincide substantially with those recently expressed by President Roosevelt and Secretary Shaw.

February 19, 1892.—“Shall the Democratic Party desert the Cause of the People to become the Attorney of the Silver Ring and the Tool of the Lobby? Shall what costs the Silver Producers Forty-one Cents be made a legal tender for One Hundred Cents worth of the People's Sweat?” Speech in the house of representatives.

January 30, 1893.—“Why the Monthly

Purchase of Silver Bullion by the Government should be Stopped." Address to the railway interests of the United States.

February 1, 1893.—"The Democratic Party believes in the Free Coinage of both Gold and Silver, but it is Opposed to 'Free coinage' of either a Gold or Silver Dollar worth less than One Hundred Cents in the Markets of the World." Address to the Democratic voters of Ohio.

June 5, 1894.—"A Cure for the Greenback Delusion. A Remedy for the Free Silver Madness. Not More Money, but Better Money. Repeal of the Ten Per Cent Tax on State Banks." Speech in the house of representatives.

A printed address, without date, which was the subject of national comment, was one addressed to the Grand Army posts of the country. The subject was "Free Silver and its relation to Pensions."

By means of a bureau established by himself, and maintained at his own expense, Mr. Harter mailed his pension address to every Grand Army post; also distributed his congressional speeches and other anti-free coinage documents broadcast. In the business in hand he adopted the methods of reaching the public that he had found to be so successful in his factory. Everyone knows the result. The congress that was expected to repeal the demonetization act of 1873 did not repeal it; nor did it pass the Bland free silver bill. Senator Sherman's compromise bill, providing for a limited coinage, was passed, and was in effect until the spring of 1893, when a financial panic overwhelmed the country. President Cleveland, whose views of statesmanship coincided with Mr. Harter's, called a special session of congress to repeal the Sherman law, and the threatened ills of a degraded currency were, it is to be hoped, wiped from our statute books for all time to come.

Mr. Harter took a leading part in the congressional debates which led to the repeal of the Sherman law, and was almost the only man in American life to make a national reputation the first term he served in congress. He was a pioneer in the cause of the gold standard and a sound and elastic currency. Any history of this interesting and critical period in American finance which fails to give to Michael D. Harter a conspicuous place in the movement which led to placing the money of the United States upon a sound and stable basis, will neither be true to the facts nor just to him. Endowed with a brilliant and logical mind, he was a great and forcible thinker, a wise and constructive statesman and a patriotic citizen. In addition to his splendid intellectual qualities, Mr. Harter had a warm and generous nature, which secured him the respect and friendship of all who knew him, and when he died, he died beloved by his friends and neighbors as few men have been.

JOHN L. STEELE.—Paternally Mr. Steele inherits the blood of Scotch-Irish ancestry, being a lineal descendant of one Robert Steele, who on account of political or religious persecution was obliged to flee from Scotland early in the seventeenth century and take refuge in the Emerald Isle. Among the nearer descendants of this staunch patriot was Archibald Steele, who was born in Ireland and about the year 1790 came to the United States, settling in Pennsylvania, where he became a tiller of the soil. Subsequently, 1812, he was induced to move to the new and sparsely settled country of eastern Ohio and it was that year that he entered land in Stark county, receiving for the same a patent bearing the signature of James Madison, President of the United States. Mr. Steele selected a site for his future home in what is now Tuscarawas township, being one of the first permanent settlers in this part of the county. He cleared a good farm, took an active interest in the material development of the country and was a fine type of the rugged, fearless pioneer of the time and place in which he lived and labored. He and his good wife died many years ago. James Steele, son of Archibald and father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Pennsylvania in the year 1798 and is supposed to have followed his parents to Stark county in 1815, when a youth of seventeen. He was reared a farmer and in early manhood married Miss Margaret Latimer, who was born in Pennsylvania, and whose father, Robert Latimer, was one of the first settlers in the present township of Osnaburg, Stark county. James Steele became a man of considerable local prominence and for many years was justice of the peace of his township, also an active worker in the old Whig party. Like many of the early pioneers, he had profound religious convictions and, belonging to the Presbyterian church, reared his family according to the strict and rather austere Calvinistic creed. He lived an honorable life and at its close, about the year 1839, quietly and fearlessly passed into the rest prepared for those who have nobly fulfilled their earthly stewardship. Mrs. Steele bore her husband three children and entered into rest some time in the year 1830.

John L. Steele, the only child of James and Margaret Steele, was born on the 21st of March, 1826, in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, and spent his early years on his father's farm, with the rugged duties of which he became familiar as soon as old enough to handle to advantage the various implements of husbandry. During his boyhood he enjoyed the advantages of the common schools of the day, attending them a few months of the winter seasons, the course of study being mainly confined to the four fundamentals—spelling, reading, writing and arithmetic—although some pupils would frequently carry along with them such studies as geography and English grammar. From the beginning until his death the life of Mr. Steele was an active and busy one and, in the main, financially successful. He assisted his parents, was a dutiful son during the years of his minority and on the farm learned the lessons of industry and thrift that inured so greatly to his advantage when he began the pursuit of agriculture upon his own responsibility. His inclinations naturally led him to become a tiller of the soil and he followed this vocation all his life with satisfactory results, and at his death was the possessor of an ample competency for his declining years, besides providing comfortably for his family and giving his children substantial assistance as they one by one withdrew from the home circle. As already stated, the farm which Mr. Steele owned and on which he lived is one of the oldest settled places in the township of Tuscarawas, as it is also one of the best improved and most successfully cultivated. He was not sparing in surrounding himself with comforts and conveniences, believing, as he did, that the good things of this world are only held in trust for a time and should be well and wisely used.

On January 9, 1852, Mr. Steele was united in the bonds of wedlock with Miss Margaret Christman, of Pennsylvania, the marriage resulting in the birth of three children, the oldest of whom is Rev. James H. Steele, an able and well known clergyman of the Reformed church, who is now preaching in Tiffin, Ohio. He married Miss Alice Chapenan, who has borne him two sons and one daughter, namely: James, John and Mary. William, the second of the family, is a well educated physician, practicing his profession at Navarre, this state. He is also a man of family, having married some years ago Miss Mary McEwen, a union blessed with two offspring, Edith and Lura. Ida S., the youngest of the subject's children, was born in 1863 and after receiving a good literary education, took up a systematic course in music, in which she early displayed unusual talent, graduating from the conservatory at Massillon. On the 4th of March, 1882, she became the wife of John S. Erb, a worthy citizen of Stark county, an outline of whose life appears in subsequent paragraphs.

Mr. Steele lived a life protracted beyond that of the majority of men and, as indicated in a preceding paragraph, enjoyed the fruits of his many years of strenuous toil. He possessed strong traits of character, with a liberal endowment of good common sense and as a man and citizen his honor and integrity were prominent and above adverse criticism. His political affiliations were with the Republican party, but he never entered actively the arena of public affairs, preferring the quiet and satisfactory life of a farmer to any office or honor within the power of his fellow citizens to confer. Notwithstanding his indifference to public preferment, he was induced at one time to accept the position of township treasurer, and he discharged the duties of the office very satisfactorily for several years, retiring without the semblance of a stain upon his record as custodian of the public funds. He was a devout believer in revealed religion and for many years was a member of the Reformed church, his wife also belonging to the same communion. His death occurred March 27, 1903.

John S. Erb, who married the daughter of John L. and Margaret Steele, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and the son of David and Mary (Yost) Erb, the father born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and the mother in Germany. These parents were married in Pennsylvania in 1852 and the following year moved to Stark county, Ohio, settling in Tuscarawas township, where Mr. Erb followed agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred on the 10th day of March, 1902, his wife dying April 9 of the previous year. Mrs. Erb came to the United States when five years old and always recalled the voyage with pecular sadness in that she lost a sister en route, who was buried at sea.

John S. Erb was born in Tuscarawas township March 27, 1859, receiving his education in the public schools, and began life for himself as a carpenter, which trade he learned when a young man. He worked at his chosen calling for a number of years, but since 1893 has been engaged in farming, in which vocation he has met with encouraging success. He is a Republican in politics and quite an active worker in his party, generally representing his township in the various nominating conventions and laboring diligently for the ticket in campaign times. Religiously he belongs to the Reformed church and during her life his wife was also a faithful and consistent member of the same body of worshippers. The marriage of Mr. Erb and wife resulted in the following issue: John, Warren, Mary A. and Ida Martha. The son, who is an accomplished musician, lives at Mansfield, where he has a large number of pupils.

CHARLES A. KRIDER is a native of Stark and was born on the farm in Tuscarawas township, where he now lives, August 2, 1847, being the son of Samuel and Ann (Augustine) Krider. The father was born about the year 1811 in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, and the mother in Stark county, Ohio, in 1818. George Krider, the subject's grandfather, was a native of Pennsylvania and an early settler of Stark county, moving here as long ago as 1819, and departing this life in the township of Tuscarawas in 1873. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Frances Hoover, was also of Pennsylvania birth, and her death occurred on the home place in the year 1868. Samuel Krider was quite young when his parents moved to Tuscarawas township and he grew up amid the rugged experiences of pioneer times, bearing his share of the hard labor required to clear and develop the farm. He was self-educated and by much study and a wide range of reading became well informed—indeed, there were few men of his time who possessed a more general knowledge obtained without the aid of instructors. In his youth he learned the tailor's trade, and later worked at the same in the country, frequently employing as many as nine assistants at one time in order to meet the demand for garments, which he cut and made or had made. He was one of the prime movers in the construction of the old Ohio canal, and the records show that he twice represented Stark county in the general assembly, besides serving for over twenty-nine years as a justice of the peace. Politically he was a Democrat, and religiously belonged to the Reformed church, as did also his wife, who is remembered as a faithful and zealous Christian, whose life was largely devoted to works of faith and labors of love. Samuel Krider lived to a good old age, dying on the 6th of June, 1892; his wife survived him nearly nine years, departing this life on the 9th day of January, 1901. Mrs. Krider was the daughter of Andrew Augustine, one of the earliest pioneers of Stark county, her oldest sister, Rebecca, having been the first white child born in what is now the township of Tuscarawas. Of the eight children constituting the family of Andrew Augustine Mrs. Krider was the last to be called to the other world. To Samuel and Ann Krider were born three children, two of whom are living at the present time—Charles A., of this review, and B. F., who lives in Noble county, Indiana.

Reared amid the peaceful pursuits and scenes of rural life, the subject early formed a liking for the work of the farm, and when the time came to make choice of a vocation he wisely concluded to devote his energies to the satisfactory labors of husbandry. This he has since pursued and prospered, meanwhile adding to his material possessions until he is now the owner of a valuable and beautiful property. While successful in raising all the grains and vegetables indigenous to this latitude, he has made a specialty of fruit growing, a branch of husbandry that has been very satisfactory from a financial point of view. He has selected his varieties of fruits with the greatest care and discrimination, looks after his orchards with the interest of an enthusiast, and finds in horticulture a fascination nothing else offers. Mr. Krider has been a steadfast supporter of the Democratic party since his twenty-first year, and, in recognition of his valuable services, he has been honored at different times with official positions, among which were those of constable, assessor and deputy sheriff. In 1889 he was elected sheriff of Stark county, which office he held for four years, discharging his duties in an able and praiseworthy manner, gaining the confidence and good will of the people regardless of party ties. He has been identified with a number of enterprises of a public nature, including among others the Stark County Mutual Insurance Company, which has become one of the leading organizations of its kind in eastern Ohio, of which he served as president. He has also been quite active in organized efforts for the promotion of husbandry, being a member of the county agricultural board, and it was in his father's shop that the first agricultural society of the country was organized a number of years ago. In matters educational he has taken an active part, both in private and official capacities, having been a member of the local school board for a number of years, and for some time its president. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias, his name appearing on the charter of Lodge No. 87, of Massillon.

Mr. Krider was married December 24, 1889, to Mrs. Sarah Mobley, widow of the late Charles A. Mobley, of Canal Fulton, and a native of Crawford county, this state. By her previous marriage she had two sons, Frank L.

Mobley, who holds a clerical position with the Hancock Insurance Company, of Columbus, Ohio, and John M., a representative of a manufacturing firm of Canton. To Mr. and Mrs. Krider has been born one daughter, Ruth, an intelligent young lady with a bright and promising future. Mrs. Krider is a member of the Methodist church and a lady of exemplary Christian character, popular in religious and social circles and highly esteemed by all.

MARIA GILMORE PONTIUS, M. D., is a native of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and the daughter of Nathaniel and Anna Gilmore, the former born in that county in the year 1814, and the mother in County Down, Ireland, in 1827. The maiden name of Mrs. Gilmore was Anna Dugan and she was the daughter of James and Eliza (Karns) Dugan, both natives of County Down, and accompanied her parents to the United States in 1835, the family locating in Cadiz, Ohio. Before coming to this country James Dugan followed mercantile pursuits for a number of years and accumulated a competency of this world's goods. He died at Cadiz in 1867 at the age of sixty-one. His wife died about 1870, aged seventy-two years. James Dugan and wife had five children, whose names are as follows: William, Elizabeth, John, Mrs. Maria J. Asher and Anna, the Doctor's mother. To Nathaniel and Anna Gilmore were born seven children, namely: William, Albert, Eliza, Josephine, wife of Thomas Wilson; Maria, of this review; Florence, who married Charles Brown, and George M., all but William living. The paternal ancestors of Dr. Pontius were also natives of Ireland, her grandfather, Nathaniel Gilmore, having been born and reared in that country. His home was in County Down and he there married Elizabeth Carey, who, with two children, born in the old country, accompanied him to America in 1812. There also came with him to the United States his two brothers, John and Gordon Gilmore, and the three subsequently engaged in the banking business in Cincinnati when that city was little more than a frontier hamlet of half a dozen houses. When it became necessary to exchange specie for paper Nathaniel Gilmore would carry the gold and silver on horseback to Pittsburg, taking an extra man with him as a body guard, the road between the two places leading through a wild and in many places uninhabited country, known to be infested with robbers and lawless characters of the worst description. As far as known he was never molested nor did the bank sustain the loss of a single dollar by any of these business trips. After a number of years of successful business he disposed of his interest in the bank and moved his family to Tuscarawas county, Ohio, where he purchased large tracts of valuable land, much of which is still in possession of his descendants. He was a very successful man, prospered in every undertaking to which he addressed himself and is remembered as one of the prominent and progressive citizens of the county of Tuscarawas. He died there in 1857, his wife following him to the grave five years later. Nathaniel Gilmore, Sr., was the father of the following sons and daughters: William, Francis, Gordon, Elizabeth, Jane, Nathaniel, Rosie, Mary and two others, all of whom grew to mature years and reared large families, and all of whom are now dead. It is a fact worthy of note that the elder Nathaniel was a cousin of P. S. Gilmore, the celebrated band master, and one of the world's most renowned musicians.

Reverting to the history of Dr. Maria Gilmore Pontius, it is learned that she was born near Gilmoretown, in the county of Tuscarawas, May 28, 1857. She spent her childhood and youth on the home farm, was early instructed in the duties of domestic economy and received her elementary education in the district schools, which she attended at intervals until her nineteenth year. Animated by an earnest desire for greater intellectual training than the common schools could impart, she entered, in 1876, Scio College, which institution she attended the greater part of three years, meanwhile maturing plans for entering the medical profession.

Miss Gilmore began the study of medicine in 1879 under the direction of Dr. J. J. Gooding, of Gilmoretown, and after a very thorough course of private reading became a student of Starling Medical College at Columbus, from which institution she was graduated in 1883. In canvassing the field for a suitable location she decided to open an office in Canton, at the same time realizing the unreasonable prejudice she would have to encounter on the part of the public and the opposition that would be thrown in her way by the members of the profession in the city. Nothing daunted, however, she fearlessly swung her shingle to the breeze and announced herself a solicitor for a share of patronage. In due time her abilities began to be recognized and in the course of a few years her practice became quite liberal, so much so, indeed, that all opposition to female physicians gradually disappeared and she stood vindicated for her temerity in entering the profession, by a series of successes such as few achieve. So unreasonable was the prejudice against her at first that even the children on the streets would frequently call to her with unpleasant remarks, and the sneers and innuendoes of older people were often too palpable to be concealed. Actuated by a laudable ambition to come to the front and become a true healer, these unworthy and altogether unmanly attempts to retard her progress were treated with the silent contempt they deserved, and by a steady but sure advancement she finally won a high place in public favor, and had the satisfaction of numbering among her patients not a few who had formerly been loudest in their criticism of her course.

The Doctor's practice in the main is confined to the treatment of diseases peculiar to women and children, although general ailments receive her attention, in all of which her success has been truly phenomenal. For some years she practiced with her husband, but since the failure of the latter's health she has been alone. She is a lady of superior intellectuality and high professional attainments and occupying a field of practice for which she is especially adapted by reason of her sex, her future financial prosperity as well as her professional fame is a matter of easy prophecy. She was the first of her sex to matriculate at Starling Medical College, and the first lady to graduate from that or any other medical school in the city of Columbus. This, with her subsequent successful career, has given her a widespread reputation and by reason of both she occupies quite a conspicuous position in medical circles. She has been a member of the American Medical Association of Canton and the Stark County Medical Society.

Miss Gilmore on the 26th of October, 1883, was united in marriage to Dr. Lorin Worth Pontius, a native of Stark county, Ohio, born in Plain township on the 24th day of November, 1853, the son of Andrew and Sarah Pontius, who were among the early pioneers of this part of the state. He was reared to young manhood at or near the place of his birth and after completing the common school course entered Mt. Union College, where he made a very creditable record as a student. Later he took up the study of medicine and in 1881 was graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, after which he engaged in the practice at Canton. Dr. Lorin W. Pontius is a gentleman of high intellectual and professional attainments and had not ill health obliged him to retire from the practice in 1889 he would no doubt have achieved distinguished honors in his chosen calling. As already stated, his wife and he practiced jointly until his physical breakdown and the firm thus constituted attained enviable distinction, both as physicians and surgeons. The Doctor's retirement left a vacancy in the medical ranks of Canton difficult to fill, and it is the hope of his many friends and the public generally that his bodily powers may soon be restored so that he can resume his share of the lucrative business which he assisted to build up, and which his faithful companion now commands.

The grandparents of Dr. L. W. Pontius were natives of Pennsylvania and came to Stark county in about 1805, before Canton was founded, and they figured actively in its pioneer history. The parents of Dr. L. W. Pontius lived in Stark county, and to them were born seven children, all of whom are now living, as follows: Lorin W.; Jackson W., of Canton; G. C. resides near Myer's Lake; Lucy married Maurice E. Aungst, probate judge of Stark county; William J. is a farmer in Plain township; Charles A. is a farmer of Stark county; Rebecca married Edward Miller, of Canton. The parents of these children are still living, not a death having occurred in the family.

Dr. M. G. Pontius is erecting a modern flat house at No. 613 West Tuscarawas street, which is to be three stories in height, of pressed brick and contains forty-three rooms en suite.

HOMEOPATHY IN STARK COUNTY.

The system of homeopathy may be said to represent both modification and amplification in the treatment of disease, and of how great value has this system been, how far-reaching and insistent its value is not measurably appreciated by the laity. That great benefactor of the race, Hahnemann, wrought better than he knew when he carried through his careful investigations and experiments and arrived at the deductions indicated in the slogan of his school, "Similia similibus curantur." How greatly the influence of his teachings and that of his able followers has permeated the field of endeavor in the great profession which has to do with the issues of life itself is shown in no unmistakable way in the radical changes which the so-called "regular" school has been compelled, perhaps reluctantly, to adopt in its methods. The heroic dosage of even a quarter of a century ago would, if utilized by a practitioner to-day, bring him into disrepute for his abuse of the over-wrought human system. That homeopathy has been the leaven which has affected the entire lump is certain beyond peradventure. The great school of medicine, standing as an ally of nature in her workings and not as a disrupter, was at one time the object of suspicion and prejudice and its devotees had to summon all of fortitude in demonstrating the efficiency of the so-called innovation. A new era of thought had been introduced, and the cry of iconoclasm and even of charlatanism was given in no uncertain tone by those who were "joined to their idols" and refused to recognize the fundamental consistency and value of the new school of practice. None can doubt the efficiency and consistency of a plan of medication which provides the employment of remedial agents in such a way as to avoid physiological reaction and to assist nature to resume its normal functions, rather than imposing an additional burden. This system of high potencies as applied to the practice of homeopathy has stood the most strenuous test, and skepticism can no longer wield the weapons of upstart prejudice, for the wall of proof has proved impregnable and truth has once more proved triumphant, and that in a cause which has been most potent and beneficent, in alleviating human suffering. Close analysis, the most scrupulously exact and careful experimentation in determining the various indications of the vast array of remedial agents, a broad-minded policy—these have been the aims

Homeopathy is well established in Stark county and the prestige of the school is upheld by many able practitioners. In the connection it is gratifying to state that the dean of the school in the county, Dr. Marcus M. Catlin, of Canton, is made the subject of specific mention in its publication, and such have been his services and such is his distinguished ability in his profession that this record becomes a consistent portion of this historical compilation. The Doctor has been animated by that faith which makes faithful, and his labors have not only justified his choice of a profession, but have been such as to add luster to the fame of the school of medicine of which he is an eminent representative. When cognizance is had of the fact that he has been engaged in the practice of his profession in Stark county for a third of a century it will be seen that he is well entitled to the designation of dean of homeopathy in this section, and through his efforts much was done in the earlier days to further the precedence of this school at a time when it was made the victim of unjust criticism and even ridicule. Notwithstanding our vaunted progress in all lines of thought, action and material accomplishment, human nature remains the same, and men are reluctant to accept new and radical ideas, so that the reformer, the one of prescience, must have the courage of his convictions and also an unflagging perseverance and patience if he would attempt to successfully stand as advocate of a new idea. As such a sponsor Dr. Catlin stood in the interests of homeopathy, and it can not but be a matter of satisfaction to him at the present time to realize how high has become the status of his chosen school and how great its influence in bringing about more humane and scientific methods of practice in the work of the profession at large, without regard to school. He has been tolerant in all things, but has not sacrificed his beliefs, nor lacked the courage to defend his position. He has stood as an exemplar of the utmost professional courtesy and has gained the confidence and high esteem of his confreres, while his ministrations have been such as to place him among the benefactors of the race, pity and compassion with him having ever transcended the mere emotion to become a definite motive. Of the details of the career of this honored physician and pioneer of homeopathy in Stark county a resume is given in the personal sketch appearing in this work, and it can not but be gratifying to the profession to find this recognition given to him, since the record of his life and labors is eminently deserving of such historical perpetuation.

It is not necessary to offer further consideration of the rise of the great and popular school of medicine which he represents, such facts being left to publications of a technical order, but in the days to come the brief record here given, together with the personal sketch, will designate to those who follow how much was accomplished by this veteran physician, who has given himself to the noble work of his profession with signal self-abnegation and devotion and who is known as an eminent representative to the school of practice to which he has so long given allegiance.

JOHN W. SCHUSTER is a native of Germany, born on the 9th of March, 1852, in the city of Kallstadt, kingdom of Bavaria. He spent his childhood and youth at that place, and after graduating from the public schools in 1865 began planning for his future career, deciding about that time to seek his fortune in the United States. Five years later he was enabled to carry out this desire of long standing, as he took passage in 1870, and in due time landed in the city of New York, where during the ensuing two years he worked in a bakery and a trunk factory. At the expiration of the second year he went to Newark, New Jersey, where he was similarly engaged until 1874, at which time he engaged in the wine business at Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Schuster remained in the latter city for a period of twenty-four years and prospered in his business affairs, accumulating during that time a handsome capital, which he judiciously invested in 1898 in a brewery at Millport, near Massillon, with his office in the latter place. This enterprise proved successful from the beginning and it was not long until he was enabled to enlarge the scope of his business by organizing in 1900 the Schuster Brewing Company of Massillon, of which he was made president and general manager. Purchasing the Anton Kopp brewery, he soon more than doubled its capacity and later erected the large and handsome building which is now kept running with a full force of operatives almost night and day to supply the constantly increasing demand for the company's far-famed manufactured product. The brands of beer made at this brewery are noted far and wide for their high standard of excellence, and the reputation which Mr. Schuster has achieved as a master in his line of business has won for him honorable mention in commercial and industrial circles throughout the state.

Mr. Schuster came to this country as a poor stranger in a strange land and to him Dame Fortune held out no glittering favors. Endowed with a plentiful supply of good common sense, blessed with sound physical health and not afraid of hard work, he bent all of his energies in the way of success and in due time by steadfastness of purpose and commendable thrift, reached the goal of his ambition in the ample competence which he now commands. Mr. Schuster is thoroughly American in all his tendencies and has nothing but praise for the free institutions under which his most pronounced success has been achieved. He is a true and loyal citizen of his adopted country and takes as much interest in its welfare and in the welfare of the state, county and city in which he resides as any person to the manner born.

Mr. Schuster was married in 1881 to Miss Mary Schreiber, a native of Bavaria, and daughter of Henry Martin Schreiber, who came from that country in 1875 and settled on St. Clair street, Cleveland. He had previously visited the United States in 1864 on a pleasure trip. Seven children have resulted from this union, namely: Frank, who holds the position of secretary in the Schuster Brewing Company; William, who is serving his time in Cleveland, learning the brewery trade; Matilda, a student in the Massillon high school; Herbert, who is pursuing his studies in the high school at Cleveland; Carl and Amanda, who are still members of the home circle and pupils in the city schools. Mrs. Schuster and the children are members of the German Reformed church of Massillon. While not identified with any church organization himself, Mr. Schuster believes in religion and contributes liberally to the support of the congregation to which his family belongs. Fraternally he is a Mason, being a member of Concordia Lodge No. 345, and Cleveland Lodge No. 61, Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Improved Order of Red Men. He is also connected with the German Turnerverein Society and being a man of decided musical talent, belongs to a couple of organizations for the cultivation of that art. He is the soul of honest, hearty good fellowship, as all will attest who have formed his acquaintance or in a business or social way come within the range of his personal influence.

J. MELVILLE SCHUCKERS, cashier of the First National Bank of Massillon, is a native of Wooster, Ohio, and is the son of Jacob W. and Elizabeth (Kirkpatrick) Schuckers.

Jacob W. Schuckers was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and removed from that county to Wooster, Ohio, when a single man. He was a pioneer merchant of Wooster, where he died July 27, 1849. His wife was born near Penrith, England, and was the daughter of Thomas Kirkpatrick, who was of Scotch descent, was a practical miner and was interested in lead and coal mines in his native land. In 1832 he came with his family to America. He arrived in Massillon by way of the Ohio canal, and purchased a farm three miles north of the then village in Jackson township and engaged in farming. Later he discovered valuable coal deposits upon his land and in 1833 he opened the first coal mine in Stark county. He died in 1846. His wife was Frances Lee, who was born in Penrith, England, and died in Massillon in 1866.

J. Melville Schuckers is the second in order of three children born to his parents. Upon the death of his father he came to Massillon with his mother, he then being three years of age. He secured his education in the high school of Massillon. After leaving school in 1864 he served as deputy postmaster of Massillon for a time, and then became clerk and bookkeeper at the mines of the Massillon Coal Company, where he continued until 1869. He then spent a year with the above company in Cleveland, following which he became paymaster and bookkeeper for the Fulton Mining Company of Massillon. He also filled the same position for the Rhoades Coal Company and of the Willow Bank Coal Company, and then took charge of the mines as superintendent and manager of the Rhoades and Willow Bank Company until the mines were exhausted. About that time he helped to organize the Millport Coal Company, of which he became secretary and treasurer. In 1890 he became assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Massillon and in 1892 he was elected cashier of that institution.

The subject was married September 14, 1893, to Miss Frances S. Stokley, daughter of Mrs. Christina Stokley. Mrs. Schuckers was born in Massillon. Mr. Schuckers is an Episcopalian, while Mrs. Schuckers is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

CHARLES H. KNIGHT was born in the village of Farmer, Defiance county, Ohio, on the 18th of May, 1870, and after attending the public schools of his native county until he had attained the age of about fifteen years he then entered the Northern Indiana Normal School and Business College at Valparaiso, Indiana, where he completed a course in the commercial department, later being matriculated in Angola College, at Angola, Indiana, where he continued his scholastic work until about 1888, when he came to Canton and took the position of bookkeeper for the Canton Saw Company, of which his father was a stockholder at the time. When the latter established the business of the Knight Manufacturing Company in July, 1892, the subject assumed the position of general manager of the concern, and of this responsible office he has since remained incumbent, while through his discerning and well directed efforts much has been done to further the excellent and gratifying success which has attended the enterprise from the time of its practical inchoation, the products from the well equipped plant being of so superior excellency in design and workmanship as to command the highest favor wherever introduced, and it may be said that the business of the company now permeates into the most diverse sections of the Union. In addition to his executive duties in connection with the office affairs and general management of the business the subject also does effective service as its outside representative when such interposition on his part seems expedient. In politics he maintains an independant attitude, and fraternally he is identified with the 'Travelers' Protective Association.

In the city of Canton, on the 11th of February, 1891, Mr. Knight was united in marriage to Miss Eva Black, who was born and reared in this city, being a daughter of Jarvis Black, who was long one of the leading contractors and builders of this section, having erected the old court house in Canton, besides many churches, school houses, business structures and private residences in this locality. He is now living retired in Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Knight have two children, Earl and Paul.

HENRY C. MILLIGAN has been identified with the Carnahan Stamping and Enameling Company from the time of its inception, the success of the same being in a large measure due to his efforts and to his intimate knowledge of the details of the manufacturing of the various products. He is the inventor and patentee of various processes utilized in the manufacture of enameled ware, and these are utilized and controlled by the company with which he is identified, while in addition to his executive office he is also manager and has general supervision of the works.

Mr. Milligan was born in the city of New York on the 22d of October, 1851, being a son of Gilbert M. and Lucy (Cleveland) Milligan, both of whom were also natives of that city, where they were married and resided until 1854, when they moved to Elizabeth, New Jersey, where his death occurred in February, 1860. The mother afterwards moved to South Orange, New Jersey, where her death occurred in December, 1890. They were the parents of eight children, of whom five are living at the present time, viz: John C., of South Orange, New Jersey; Thomas P., of Elizabeth, New Jersey; Elizabeth M., who married W. E. Groves, of Beverly, New Jersey; Lucy C., now Mrs. Charles P. Fitch, of Beverly, New Jersey, and Henry C., the subject of this review, the youngest member of the family. Gilbert M. Milligan was secretary and treasurer of the Central Railroad of New Jersey for a great many years and served in that capacity up until the time of his death. He was a man of more than ordinary ability, was a leading factor in his vicinity and was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

The subject was reared to manhood in the national metropolis, and there he secured his early education in the public schools, after which he took a collegiate preparatory course at Auburn, New York. In 1868 he became entry clerk in the establishment of Lalance & Grogan Manufacturing Company of New York city, this being the first concern to engage in the manufacture of enameled metal ware in the United States, and from that time to the present Mr. Milligan has been consecutively identified with the same line of industrial enterprise in various capacities. Finally he became traveling salesman for the company mentioned, and was thus employed for a number of years, visiting all the large cities in this country and also South America and Europe. In 1875 he began to devote special study to the process of enameling metal and carried his investigations and experiments to the ultimate, while in 1884 he secured his first patent on enameled ware, and since that time has taken out other patents representing distinctive improvements along the same line. In 1886 his old employers paid him forty thousand dollars to keep his inventions out of the market, and he remained out of the business for seven years under the stipulations then entered into. At the expiration of this period he became connected with the Haderman Manufacturing Company, of New York city, as a stockholder, his processes being used and inventions manufactured by the concern, with which he continued to be identified until a number of different manufacturers of the sort entered into a combination, and he thereafter remained in the employ of this syndicate or trust until 1899, when he resigned his position and came to Cleveland, Ohio, where he effected the organization of the Crescent Enamel Company, of which he was president until the organization of the Carnahan Stamping and Enameling Company, in 1901, when he sold his Cleveland plant and business to this new company, of which he became vice-president at the time of the organization. He came to Canton in October, 1901, to supervise the establishing of the enameling plant of the company, and within twelve months the entire plant was in full operation. The products of the manufactory include what is known as granite ware, as well as blue and white ware, Servian ware and other lines of analogous character. When the works were put in operation the capacity was for the output of five thousand pieces a day, and since that time the business has so increased in extent that the daily output reaches twenty thousand pieces, while the trade of the concern extends into all sections of the Union. Mr. Milligan has given his special attention to the enameling department, of which he has had the superintendence from the start. He is a man of marked executive ability and the enterprise with which he is connected is a valuable acquisition to the industrial interests of Canton. In politics Mr. Milligan gives his support to the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the First Presbyterian church of Canton.

JOHN W. ALBAUGH.—The original progenitor of the Albaugh family in America came hither in 1735, in company with his three sons, having emigrated from the German fatherland. They located near the historic old town of Frederick, Maryland, whence two of the sons eventually came to the West; one locating in Carroll county, Ohio, while the other followed the star of empire still farther on its course westward. William Albaugh, grandfather of the Judge, was born and reared in Maryland and he became one of the early settlers in Ohio, having located in Carroll county about the year 1802. There he became numbered among the pioneer farmers of the state, and a citizen of prominence and influence. He served in the war of 1812 and thereafter continued identified with agricultural pursuits in the county mentioned until his death, about the year 1842, at the age of sixty-five years. In Carroll county was solemnized his marriage, the maiden name of his wife having been Weaver, and she likewise died in that county. Ezra Albaugh, father of the subject of this review, was born on the old homestead farm near Kilgore, Carroll county, on the 13th of February, 1807, and was there reared to manhood, receiving a fair education for the day. About 1836 was solemnized his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Walters, and they shortly afterward removed to a farm in Warren township, Tuscarawas county, where Ezra Albaugh passed the remainder of his long and useful life, becoming one of the successful and influential citizens of that section, and having served for twenty-one years as justice of the peace. He died on the old homestead farm April 5, 1885, and his devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest in 1892. They were originally members of the Lutheran church, but later became communicants of the Methodist Episcopal church. The mother of Judge Albaugh was born in the year 1819 in West Virginia, being a daughter of Jacob Walters, who was born in Germany, whence he came to the United States when a young man, here marrying a Miss Curry and settling in West Virginia, whence he later came to Ohio, becoming a pioneer of Tuscarawas county, where both he and his wife died. Ezra Albaugh was originally an old-line Whig in his political proclivities, later transferring his allegiance to the Democratic party, in favor of whose cause he thereafter ever exercised his franchise. He and his wife became the parents of thirteen children, of whom three are living at the present time.

Judge John W. Albaugh was born on the homestead farm, in Warren township, Tuscarawas county, on the 4th of July, 1844, and he continued to reside there until about fifteen years of age, while he secured his early educational discipline in the district schools. At the age of sixteen years he began teaching in such schools during the winter terms, while he continued his individual studies in select schools during the summer vacations. He followed this plan until he had attained the age of twenty-three years, when he began reading law under the effective preceptorship of Judge James Patrick, of New Philadelphia, being admitted to the bar of the state in 1869. He forthwith began the practice of his profession in New Philadelphia, the county-seat of his native county, there entering into partnership with Judge J. H. Barnhill, with whom he was thus associated for the ensuing three years, within which time he effectually won his professional spurs. He was then elected prosecuting attorney of Tuscarawas county, in 1873, and served in this office for two terms with marked acceptability, and within this period he formed a law partnership with his brother-in-law, John S. Graham, with whom he continued to be thus associated for seven years. In 1882 he came to Canton and here entered into a similar professional alliance with John C. Welty, one of the leading members of the bar of the county, and three years later the subject was elected to the bench of the circuit court for a term of two years, at the expiration of which he was chosen as his own successor for the long term of six years, after which he and his wife passed the summer of 1893 in the state of California. Upon his return to Canton Judge Albaugh again entered into partnership with his former confrere, Mr. Welty, and they have since continued to be associated in the handling of a large and important practice, their clientage being of representative order, while they have been prominent in much important litigation and stand as counsel for a number of leading corporations. In politics the Judge has ever been a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and he has done effective work in the party cause, though he has never sought official preferment aside from that directly in line with the specific work of his profession. Mrs. Albaugh is a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church and is also an active worker in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, being now (1903) a delegate from Ohio to the world's convention at Geneva, Switzerland.

On the 6th of August, 1866, in New Cumberland, Ohio, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Albaugh to Miss Estella Seran, who was born in that county, being a daughter of Micaiah and Sarah (Carnes) Seran. The Judge and Mrs. Albaugh have two sons—Thurlow K., who married Miss Gertrude Moushey, is now, in company with the Judge, owner and manager of the Grand Opera House in Akron, Ohio. Walter Alonzo is engaged in the furniture business in Canton. He married Miss Bernice King and they have two children—Walter Gayle and Bernice Helen.

DANIEL CAMP.—The subject of this review claims Switzerland as his fatherland, in which romantic little mountain republic he was born on the 7th day of August, 1831, being the son of Ulrich and Magdaline (Beeler) Camp, both natives of the country. By occupation Ulrich Camp was a farmer, in addition to which he worked for a number of years in France, cutting and selling cord wood. His home place in Switzerland consisted of nine acres of tillable land, quite a large farm for that country, and he was considered as belonging to the better class of agriculturists. About the year 1834 he disposed of his interests in his native land and came to the United States, settling in Wayne county, Ohio, thence, after three years, moving to the county of Tuscarawas, where he spent the remainder of his life as a moderately successful tiller of the soil, dying in 1869, his wife entering into rest five years previous to that date. Of the eight children born to this couple but two are living—Jacob, of Indiana, and Daniel, whose name introduces this sketch.

Daniel Camp was about three years old when brought to this country, consequently he has no recollections of the land of his birth. He was reared on a farm, attended the public schools during the winter seasons of his minority and grew to manhood in Ohio, early choosing agriculture as the calling best suited to his tastes and inclinations. In 1852, when about twenty-eight years of age, he went to Iowa, which at that time was a new and sparsely settled country, but not being pleased with the prospect there, he soon left and took up his residence in Missouri, where he remained until 1862. In that year he returned to Ohio and resumed the pursuit of agriculture, and nine years later purchased the fine little farm in Perry township, on which he has since lived and prospered.

Mr. Camp was married November 28, 1854, to Miss Mary Wallick, who was born in Coshocton county, this state, on the 7th day of November, 1828, the daughter of Philip and Elizabeth (Showalter) Wallick, both parents natives of Pennsylvania, the father's birth occurring in Bedford county, the mother's in the county of Berks. Mr. and Mrs. Wallick were among the earliest white settlers of Coshocton county, moving there when that part of Ohio was considered the western verge of civilization. They lived on a farm which Mr. Wallick cleared from the woods and were highly esteemed by the people of their neighborhood. They reared a family of seven children, four of whom survive, and died where they originally settled, the father in 1840 and the mother in 1862.

Mr. and Mrs. Camp have six children, the oldest living being a son by the name of Austin B., a farmer of Stark county, and also engaged in the United States mail service; he married Miss Catherine Hensel and is the father of two sons, Raymond and Charles A. Clara E., the second of the subject's family, is the wife of Ephraim Faltz, to whom she has borne children as follows: Clifford L., Ettie C., Ralph W. and Camp W. Sarah, the third in order of birth, married George Welty, of Stark county, and has two children, a daughter by the name of Beulah and a son who answers to the name of Isaac F. Mary M., the next in succession, is the wife of Arnold Harper, of Canal Dover, their family consisting of two children—Mary L. and Luther E. Ada P. is unmarried, and after her comes Clifford E., whose wife was formerly Miss Mary E. Barley; this couple have been blessed with two offspring, whose names are Clifford B. and Howard Daniel. Mr. Camp furnished his children with the best educational advantages obtainable and three of them, Austin, Clifford and Mary, taught for a number of years in the public schools of Stark county.

Of the subject's career as a farmer and citizen it is not necessary to speak except in general terms, as his life is an open book, known and read by the people of the community of which he had long been an honorable and praiseworthy resident. As already stated, his farm is not large, but what it lacks in area is more than made up in the high grade of its improvements and the success with which the soil is cultivated. A man of progressive ideas, he has pursued agriculture according to the most rational methods, and his means have been liberally expended in supplying his family with comforts and conveniences and in making the home beautiful, pleasant and attractive.

Politically Mr. Camp is somewhat independent, but in the main gives his support to the Democratic party, especially in state and national affairs, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the best qualified or most deserving candidate in local matters. He is a most pronounced temperance man and for years past has been an uncompromising antagonist of the liquor traffic, doing all in his power by example, precept and action to arrest the curse to which he attributes the great majority of the evils with which society and the nation are afflicted. He has the courage of his convictions on all questions and stands firm for what he believes right, having little respect for the weak policy which fears to run counter to public sentiment when it happens to be popular.

NATHAN E. MOFFITT.—The families of which the subject of this review is a worthy representative were among the early pioneers of Stark county and have maintained a continuous residence here to the present time. The name Moffitt is not only an old one in the annals of this part of the state, but also an honorable one and so far as known none bearing it have ever brought discredit to the high reputation it has always sustained. The Moffitts are of Irish origin. Many years ago the subject's great-grandparents left the Emerald Isle and sought a home in America, settling in Washington county, Pennsylvania, where they both spent the remainder of their days. One of their sons, Peter Moffitt, was about seven years old when the family came to the New World. He was reared in Pennsylvania and there married Mary Snee, who bore him seven children, all of whom have long since passed on to that bourne from which no traveler returns. In an early day Peter Moffitt moved to Mt. Eaton, Ohio, where he engaged in the furniture business, subsequently changing his abode to the town of Dalton, where he spent the remaining years of his life. Among the children of Peter and Mary Moffitt was a son by the name of William, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania. He accompanied his parents to Ohio, and when a youth learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed until his marriage, in Stark county, to Miss Lucinda Elridge, whose people were among the early pioneers of this part of the state. About the year 1843 William Moffitt gave up his trade and turned his attention to agriculture and from that time until his death, in 1898, at the advanced age of eighty-one, he was recognized as one of the leading farmers and representatives of the township in which he lived. In politics he was a Whig and later a Republican, and for a number of years held the office of trustee, though never an aspirant for public position. When a lad of fourteen he united with the Methodist church and entered upon the consecrated Christian life which characterized his career until the Master called him from the church militant to the church triumphant. He held every official position within the gift of the church except that of the public ministry and for over a half century served as class leader, in which capacity he was instrumental in strengthening the faith of his fellow communicants and inspiring them to renewed zeal and activity in the Master's vineyard. His life was in strict harmony with his profound faith and all who came within the range of his influence felt that they were in the presence of one who walked very closely with God. Mrs. William Moffitt was the daughter of Nathan and Elizabeth (Thacker) Elridge, both natives of Essex county, New York, the former a son of William and Sarah Elridge, who came to Stark county as early as 1811 and entered a section of land within the present limits of Tuscarawas township. Elizabeth Elridge was the daughter of Stephen and Mary Thacker, who were also among the early comers to this part of the state, having taken up their residence here the same year in which the Elridge family arrived, and were, like the latter, natives of Essex county, New York. Stephen Thacker was one of the first pioneers of Tuscarawas township and lived to see this part of the county developed from its original wilderness state into one of the most highly improved and prosperous sections of eastern Ohio, dying at the remarkable age of ninety-four years. Nathan Elridge became a prosperous farmer and a leading politician of the old Whig party, after the dissolution of which he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, and continued to support the latter as long as he lived. His daughter, Mrs. Lucinda Moffitt, widow of William Moffitt, is still living, having reached the ripe old age of eighty-five, retaining in a marked degree her mental and physical faculties for one so old. She bore her husband three children, two of whom are living, Mrs. E. J. Fletcher, of Stark county, and Nathan E., the subject of this sketch, the third of the family, Mary, dying in 1865.

Nathan E. Moffitt was born October 14, 1843, on the farm in Tuscarawas township which he now owns and cultivates. His early experience was that of toiling in the woods and fields with the desire ever uppermost in his mind of living a correct life and becoming of some use in the world. He received his education in the public schools and the high school of Massillon, adding to this training the self-culture of reading and study and the benefits to be derived from the best associations which his neighborhood afforded. Young Moffitt improved the intervals of rest by poring over good books and reading the best periodicals of the day and in this way became well informed on a wide range of subjects, besides keeping in close touch with the trend of current events.

Mr. Moffitt remained with his parents until twenty-two years old and then severed home ties for the purpose of taking his place in the busy world of affairs as an independent, self-supporting agent. After living five years in Dalton, engaged in handling general merchandise, he turned his attention to agriculture, which useful vocation he has since followed with success and financial gain, owning at this time in Tuscarawas township a fine, productive and well-improved farm of one hundred and seventy acres, besides a valuable coal mine which has proved the source of a very handsome income. As a tiller of the soil, he is progressive and up-to-date, as his home and its many attractive features abundantly attest, while his standing as a citizen, deeply interested in every agency calculated to develop the country's resources and foster industrial development, has made him an influential factor in what the world is pleased to term modern progress. He early cast his lot with the Lord's elect, and for over thirty-six years has been an humble disciple of the Nazarene, exemplifying by a life of continued service the exceeding beauty and priceless value of applied Christianity. In his church relationship, he is a Methodist and for the last eighteen years he has been an acceptable minister of the word, preaching wherever his services are required, and that too without any pecuniary emolument. He has broken the bread of life in every church within a radius of from five to ten miles of Massillon, frequently officiates at funerals, besides being constantly active in religious work in a less public capacity. He has been especially effective as a leader in the Sunday school, for which work he is well fitted by nature and education, and for a period of thirty years he has superintended the school under the auspices of the local church to which he belongs.

Mr. Moffitt is one of the leading members of the Stark County Agricultural Society and served one year as its chief executive. For four years he was honored with a place on the board of the organization and in addition to his activity in all work connected therewith he has also been one of the moving spirits in the Horticultural Society of this county. Fraternally he holds membership with the Order of American Mechanics, and in politics supports the Republican party.

Mr. Moffitt's domestic life dates from the 3d day of August, 1865, at which time was solemnized his marriage with Miss Cecelia O. Maxheimer, daughter of William and E. Maxheimer, the father one of the prominent men of Stark county, now living at the age of eighty-five years. Mr. Moffitt's home is a pleasant one and the spirit of hospitality reigning therein makes hearty welcome to all who cross the threshold.

ELI D. DOLL was born in Osnaburg township, May 4, 1842, and is a son of John Doll, a record of whose life will be found elsewhere in this volume. The subject was reared to farming on the paternal homestead and was educated in the common schools of Perry township, with the exception of five years passed in California, farming and mining. Mr. Doll since 1854 has lived on the farm he now owns and occupies in Perry township, which farm comprises ninety acres and is under cultivation in mixed crops.

Mr. Doll was united in marriage in 1866 with Miss Sarah Walcutt, who was born in Osnaburg township in 1849 and was a daughter of Elias Walcutt, who was an early settler of Stark county, and who died in Canton. To Eli D. and Sarah (Walcutt) Doll were born seven children, namely: Emma, wife of William Krisher, of Massillon; Rutherford H., of Perry township, a thrasher and a member of Lake Union; Frank L., a farmer, married to Emma Klein, is a Republican in politics and a central committeeman of Massillon precinct; Ida, wife of Eli Levinger, of Massillon; Carrie, married to William Lantzer, a carpenter; Hattie, wife of James Grant, a glassblower and a resident of the Doll homestead, and Cynthia, twin of Hattie, and wife of Joseph Holtz, a painter residing in Perry township. Mrs. Sarah (Walcutt) Doll, the honored mother of the above named children, was most untimely called from earth April 10, 1899, at the age of fifty years, to the great sorrow of her bereaved family, who loved her with an affection no words can express or convey an idea of to any person not a member of the family.

Mr. Doll has never aspired to public office, although he has invariably voted the Republican ticket. Fraternally he is a member of Clinton Lodge No. 47, Free and Accepted Masons, and he and family attend the Evangelical church.

With the exception of the legacy left him by his father, Mr. Doll has earned all he owns, and no small credit is due him for the good judgment he has displayed in the management of his affairs.

A. W. SMITH.—Conspicuous among the successful men of Stark county is A. W. Smith, of Perry township, who, as an artisan, business man and agriculturist has achieved repute and fortune such as only fall to the lot of the favored few. Mr. Smith is an honest representative of the sturdy German element in American industrial life, and exemplifies in a marked degree the sterling qualities of head and heart by which his nationality has been enabled to take a leading place among the civilized peoples of the world. He was born in Germany September 18, 1845, and in April, 1847, was brought to the United States by his parents, George and Catherine Smith, who settled in Stark county, Ohio. The father was a farmer and in addition to tilling the soil worked for some years in the coal mines in the county, by industry and economy acquiring a comfortable competence for his family. He was a man of sterling value to the community in which he lived, earned the respect of his fellow citizens and died in the year 1863, deeply lamented by all who were favored with his acquaintance. His wife, who bore him six children, survived him about fifteen years, being called to her eternal rest in 1878. Of the six children constituting the family of George and Catherine Smith two have joined their parents in the other world, the four living being residents of the county of Stark. The early life of A. W. Smith was spent in Lawrence township and he received his education in the public schools. When a youth he became quite proficient in the use of tools and later turned his mechanical skill to good use by learning the carpenter's trade, which he followed for some years at daily wages, subsequently becoming a contractor and builder upon his own responsibility. He began his career as a mechanic in Massillon, and in 1872 branched out for himself, from which time until abandoning the trade, in 1899, he erected many of the most pretentious public buildings in the city, besides building a number of private residences and other structures there and elsewhere.

In 1899 Mr. Smith gave up his trade and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, purchasing in August of that year the beautiful and highly improved little farm in Perry township, where he has since made his home. He has been as successful in tilling the soil as he was as a contractor and builder, and his standing to-day among the leading agriculturists of his community is freely conceded by his fellow citizens similarly engaged.

Mr. Smith was married January 24, 1867, to Miss Margaret Cramer, who bore him four children, but one of whom, A. H., is now living. This son, an intelligent and most excellent young man, well and favorably known in Massillon and throughout the adjacent country, was educated in the city schools and later took up the study of telegraphy, in which in due time he acquired a rare degree of proficiency. He has held several important positions, and is now located at Cleveland in the employ of the Lake Erie & Western Railroad. He married some years ago Miss Mame Blessing, who died in December, 1901, leaving one daughter, Gertrude.

Mrs. Smith, wife of the subject, departed this life in 1887, and later Mr. Smith entered the marriage relation with Miss Mary Harmon, of Massillon, a union resulting in the birth of three children--Stella, Harold and Florence. For a number of years Mr. Smith has been an influential factor in public affairs, being one of the Democratic leaders of his township and an active worker as well as a judicious counselor in all matters pertaining to the welfare of his party. In 1885 he was elected township trustee and by successive elections held the office for a period of ten years, during which time he discharged his functions as an able and faithful custodian of the people's interests, winning the confidence and praise of the public irrespective of political creed. He was one of the leading spirits in the organization of the People's Building and Loan Association of Massillon, and has served as a member of its board of appraisers to the present time. He also assisted in organizing the Massillon Savings Bank, the success of which enterprise has been largely due to his correct business methods and judicious oversight. In the different relations Mr. Smith has sustained to the public his course has ever been straightforward and businesslike and entirely free from the slightest suspicion of anything savoring of disrepute.

JOHN P. BLANK, one of the representative business men of Canal Fulton and son of John and Elizabeth Blank, to whom reference is made in a biography of William Blank, was born in West Virginia on the 13th of November, 1858. When a child he was brought by his parents to Stark county, Ohio, and from that time to the present his life has been mainly spent in Canal Fulton, with the business interests of which town he is now very actively identified. He enjoyed such educational advantages as the graded schools afforded and when a mere youth began earning money for himself by working in the coal mines, carefully husbanding his earnings, while thus employed, with the object in view of ultimately engaging in some kind of business upon his own responsibility. After following mining and various other pursuits until 1888 he and his brother William opened a grocery house in Canal Fulton, which in due time became a flourishing establishment, the firm of Blank Brothers soon taking high rank among the successful business enterprises of the town. The house enjoyed a series of uninterrupted successes for a period of eleven years, at the expiration of which time, in 1899, the partnership was dissolved. William engaged in the general mercantile trade and the subject establishing the prosperous confectionary business which he still carries on.

In addition to his specific line of trade Mr. Blank is also connected with the French Cereal Manufacturing Company, of Canal Fulton, being a large stockholder in the same and personally interested in its management. In a business sense Mr. Blank is thoroughgoing and progressive, and the various enterprises which have inured so greatly to the advancement of the flourishing town of his residence have always found in him an earnest friend and liberal patron. In his business transactions he has shown himself a man of uncommon sagacity and discreteness of judgment, of scrupulous integrity and gentlemanly demeanor. In all movements having for the object the moral good of the community his name and individual efforts have ever been foremost and in the attributes of honorable manhood, honesty of purpose and uprightness of character he stands pre-eminent, enjoying in full measure the friendship and good will of the people, among whom the greater part of his life has been spent. Mr. Blank is one of the leading Democrats of Canal Fulton, but it can not be said that he is a partisan in the sense of seeking official preferment, having no ambition in that direction. He is a prominent member of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Canal Fulton, and his religious views are in harmony with the Catholic creed, a church to which he was born and reared and to which he has ever remained loyal.

Referring to the domestic life of Mr. Blank, the record states that he was married in the year 1880 to Miss Mary Hammer, daughter of Simon Hammer, of Stark county, Ohio, the union resulting in the birth of ten children, whose names are as follows: Edward, deceased; Frederick; George, deceased; Lewis; Raymond, deceased; Carl, Edith, Lucile, Margaret and Walter. Mr. Blank has taken great interest in providing for the welfare of his children, affording them the best educational advantages obtainable, besides looking carefully after their material well being.

DAVID DANNER, one of the leading farmers of Lawrence township, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and the son of David and Mary (Young) Danner, the father born about the year 1808 in Center county, Pennsylvania, and the mother in Alsace, France (now a province of the German empire), in 1814. The subject's paternal grandfather, Philip Danner, was also a native of Pennsylvania and his name appears with the pioneer history of Stark county, as he came to this part of Ohio as early as 1817 and settled in what is now the township of Lawrence, where he purchased land and improved a good farm. David Danner, Sr., was reared on this place and some time after the death of his parents purchased the homestead. He owned the same until about 1861, when he disposed of it and bought what is known as the Jacob Kirk farm, which is now in the possession of his descendants. He acquired a handsome estate and died in Lawrence township in the year 1877, honored and respected by the people with whom he had so much in common. He was a prominent local politician, and for many years the leader of the Democracy in his part of the county, though never an office holder or a seeker after public preference. In matters religious he was a devout member of the Lutheran church, as was also his wife, who departed this life on the 23d of August, 1899. David and Mary Danner reared a family of six children, four of whom are living, namely: Margaret, Philip, Sarah and David; Caroline and George, the fourth and sixth in order of their birth, being deceased.

David Danner, Jr., the fifth of the above children, was born in Lawrence township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 23d of April, 1844. Reared on his father's farm, he was early instructed in lessons of industry and frugality, his mind took the proper bent and he grew to manhood with mental and bodily powers symmetrically developed. During his minority he attended the public schools during the winter seasons and spent the rest of the year as his father's able assistant, having become quite familiar with the duties of farm life at an early age. When it became necessary for him to choose a vocation of his own, he decided to become an agriculturist, and as such he has since continued, owning at this time a fine farm about one mile from Canal Fulton, besides an interest in the paternal homestead. His beautiful and attractive rural home contains all the comforts and conveniences calculated to make country life desirable, and he has spared no reasonable sacrifice in improving his place and bringing it to the successful state of cultivation for which he has long been noted.

Mr. Danner takes an active interest in political matters, having from his twenty-first year been an unswerving supporter of the Republican party. He has never been actuated by ambition for public office, but supports his party purely from principle. Religiously he is a Presbyterian, belonging with his wife to the church at Canal Fulton, being one of the congregation's active members as well as one of the most liberal supporters. Mr. Danner was married on the 25th of March, 1880, to Miss Nancy Lentz, who was born in Stark county October 4, 1849, the daughter of Joshua and Catherine (Folk) Lentz, natives of Germany and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Lentz came to Stark county in an early day and spent the remainder of their lives here, the former dying in 1868 and the latter in 1887.

JOHN M. CRAWFORD, M. D., is a native son of the Buckeye state and a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families. He was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 3d of February, 1844, being a son of James B. and Sarah (McClelland) Crawford, of whose five children we enter the following brief data: Cynthia, who is the widow of William Montgomery, resides in Mount Union, Ohio; John M., subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Elizabeth, who remains a spinster, is a resident of Richmond, Jefferson county; Nancy is the wife of John M. Jamison and likewise resides in that place, and Emma, who was the wife of William Wood, of Smithfield, this state, is deceased. The father of the Doctor was born in Carroll county, Ohio, about the year 1820, which fact indicates how early was the period in which the family became identified with the history of the state. He was there reared and educated and in his youth learned the trade of blacksmith, to which he devoted his attention for a number of years. Finally his eyesight became much impaired and he was compelled to abandon this vocation, having previously conducted an excellent business in the town of Richmond, Jefferson county, where he had a blacksmith and wagon shop. After his retirement from this line of enterprise he engaged in the insurance and real estate business in the same town and continued to devote his attention to this enterprise until his death, which occurred in the year 1894. In politics he gave his support to the Republican party from the time of its organization, while his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was a consistent and zealous member, as was also his wife. He was identified with the Masonic fraternity and also the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His father, Benedict Crawford, was of German ancestry and was born in Pennsylvania, whence he emigrated to Ohio and became one of the early settlers in Carroll county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. The mother of the subject was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, and her death occurred in the village of Richmond, that county.

Dr. Crawford was reared in the village of Richmond, where he received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools. When the rebel guns thundered against the ramparts of old Fort Sumter his intrinsic loyalty and patriotism were roused to responsive protest, and though he was but sixteen years of age at the time, he tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting on the 5th of September, 1861, as a private in Company K, Seventy-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was assigned to the western army, and he remained in active service until the close of the war, while the history of the regiment is the history of his military service, for he was ever found at the post of duty and took part in all of the engagements in which his regiment participated. He was wounded in the battle of Nashville, and in 1862 he was captured in Tennessee, being held a prisoner during one night and being then paroled, after which he rejoined his regiment and resumed active duty as soon as his exchange was effected. He received his honorable discharge on the 6th of January, 1865, his regiment having been sent to Texas in that year, and was sergeant of his company during the major portion of his term of service.

The Doctor reached his home on the 10th of January, 1866, and shortly afterward he was matriculated as a student in Harlem College at Harlem, Ohio, where he continued his studies for one year, and for a period of three years he was a successful teacher in the public schools. He then went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was employed for two years as clerk in a grocery, and from that city he returned to Ohio and located at Ironville, where he was employed in a mercantile establishment, one of his fellow clerks being ex-Governor R. G. Richards. He remained in that place about eighteen months and then returned to his home in Richmond, where he began reading medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Samuel Rothecker, thus continuing his studies until the autumn of 1875, when he entered the Ohio Medical College, in Cincinnati, where he continued his technical studies about one year, after which he was matriculated in the Columbus Medical College, in the capital city of the state, where he was graduated in the spring of 1877, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine and coming forth specially well equipped for the work of his chosen profession. Shortly after his graduation he established himself in the active practice of his profession in East Rochester, Columbiana county, this state, where he remained until March, 1882, having built up a large and representative practice. In the year mentioned the Doctor came to Stark county and located in the village of Minerva, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, controlling at the present time the most extensive business of all medical practitioners in this section of the county, while he enjoys the unlimited confidence and esteem of the community and stands high in the regard of his professional confreres in the county. He is one of the honored and valued members of the Stark County Medical Society. In politics the Doctor is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and he has been an active worker in behalf of the party cause, having served as a member of the county central committee and having been incumbent of various local offices of trust and responsibility. He was health officer of Minerva for several years and was also an efficient member of the school board for a number of years. He is one of the leading stockholders in the Minerva Banking Company, of which he is vice-president. Fraternally the Doctor is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, holding membership in Minerva Post No. 106, at Minerva, and he is also identified with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 24th of March, 1880, Dr. Crawford was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Calderine, of East Rochester, this state. She was born in England, being a daughter of Thomas Calderine, who was engaged in the manufacture of lace in that country up to the time of his emigration to the United States, since which time he has devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits, being now one of the influential citizens of Minerva, Ohio. Dr. and Mrs. Crawford have one son, Charles C., who is a graduate in pharmacy and who is now a student in Cleveland Medical College. The subject and his wife are members of the Methodist church.

JOHN W. MYERS was born in Wayne county, Ohio, March 1, 1846, and is the son of W. G. and Sarah Myers, a notice of whom will be found elsewhere in these pages. He accompanied his parents to Stark county about the year 1870 and was reared a farmer boy, early becoming inured to the strict discipline and rugged usages which such a life necessarily includes. In the common schools he acquired a knowledge of the fundamental branches of learning which, supplemented by his subsequent observation, reading and practical experiences, has made him one of the well informed and broad-minded men of the community in which he lives.

When the Rebellion broke out young Myers did not long hesitate between his love of home and sense of duty to his country, but yielded to the latter, enlisting in Company I, Fifth Ohio Cavalry, with which he shared the fortunes and vicissitudes of war until the cessation of hostilities. In the discharge of his onerous duties in the camp, on the march and in the midst of the smoke and carnage of battle he knew no fear, shirked no responsibility, hesitated in the face of no danger and at the expiration of his term of service received an honorable discharge, after which he once more resumed the pursuits of civil life. For several years Mr. Myers was engaged in teaching and earned a creditable record in that capacity. Having a natural taste for agriculture, he subsequently gave all his attention to the latter calling and he has followed it with success and financial profit to the present day, owning at this time a fine farm of one hundred and eighty acres in Lawrence township, where he is well and comfortably situated to enjoy the many favors with which he has been so bountifully blessed.

Mr. Myers has been liberal in expending his surplus earnings in the improvement of his place and now has one of the beautiful and well appointed country homes of the township, the conditions of the buildings and fields. in fact, everything on the farm, attesting the taste and interest displayed by the proprietor, as well as the other members of the family. As a farmer he is fully up to date and prosecutes his labor according to the most advanced principles of modern agriculture. He keeps nothing but the best breeds of live stock, a matter in which he takes great pride, and all his implements and appliances are of the latest and most approved pattern. In addition to his agricultural interests Mr. Myers is widely known as a public auctioneer, in which capacity his services have been utilized in the sale of property in nearly every part of Stark county, having followed the business very successfully for over thirty years. He is an excellent judge of the values and possesses the ability and tact to represent articles so as to dispose of them at the highest possible figure.

In business relations Mr. Myers has always demonstrated a proper conception of doing the right thing at the right time and success has invariably crowned his efforts. As a citizen he has always stood firm for the right and in the matter of public morals, social reform, of material enterprise his voice has been heard with no uncertain sound in the advocacy of whatever tended to the greatest good to the greatest number. Politically he is a Republican, but has little time or inclination to enter the arena of purely party affairs, preferring the quiet life of a farmer to any honor or emolument which office or public position can confer.

Mr. Myers was married, in 1869, to Miss Lelitia J. Young, a daughter of Cyrus and Margaret (Sheafer) Young, both parents natives of Stark county and a representative of two of its earliest pioneer families. Mrs. Myers departed this life November 21, 1901, after bearing her husband seven children, namely: Cyrus, William, John C. (deceased), Oscar (deceased), Sadie, Maggie and James. The mother of these children was fifty-three years old at the time of her death, and she left to her family the sweet memory of spotless character and a devotion to their welfare which will be a comforting benediction through all the years to come.

JOHN A. ESSIG, one of the leading farmers of Jackson township, is a son of Jacob and Madeline (Lind) Essig, both natives of Stark county. By occupation Jacob Essig was a tiller of the soil and as such met with encouraging success, owning at one time two hundred and eighty acres of land, the greater part of which is now in possession of his descendants. He was a good man and praiseworthy citizen and spent all of his life in the county of Stark, dying about four miles north of Canton in the year 1891. Mrs. Essig became the mother of ten children and departed this life in the month of May, 1901. Of his large family, six are living at the present time, the majority being residents of the county of Stark, well settled in life and useful in their various fields of endeavor.

The birth of John A. Essig occurred in Plain township, Stark county, January 21, 1849, and he spent his early years on the home farm, assisting as soon as old enough with the various duties of the same. Nothing of an eventful nature took place to interfere with the even tenor of his life and he grew to maturity with a full appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon him as a citizen of a country where all are given equal opportunities for the exercise of the talents in their possession. His educational training was such as the common schools could impart and he pursued his studies during the years of his minority until obtaining a practical knowledge of the fundamental branches of learning. The father's estate was by no means large enough to afford each of the children a substantial start in life, accordingly the subject on leaving home was obliged to rely upon his own resources for a livelihood. Determined from the outstart not to be contented with a passive existence, he at once formed his plans for the future, and sparing no effort within his power to carry them to conclusion, he soon found himself in a condition to realize his hopes of success in a business way. A strong heart and willing hands impelled him to undertake large things in the matter of agriculture and from a modest beginning he steadily forged his way to the front until in due time he came to be looked upon as one of the rising farmers and substantial citizens of the community in which he lived. Purchasing a good farm, he succeeded by industry and good management in adding to its area at intervals until finally he became the owner of three hundred and fifty-three acres of as fertile and well improved land as can be found within the geographical limits of the township.

Mr. Essig has given much careful study to agricultural science and perhaps is as well acquainted with the nature of soils and their adaptability to the grain and vegetable crops of the latitude as any other man in Stark county. He is a modern farmer, using modern methods and modern appliances and the splendid condition of his place as well as the bountiful harvests with which he is every year blessed demonstrate the practical value of his theoretical knowledge of husbandry.

Realizing that no true man lives for selfish ends, Mr. Essig devotes considerable time to public enterprises and as a good citizen takes an active interest in politics, supporting the principles of the Democratic party. He has never asked nor desired official distinction, but deems no reasonable sacrifice too great when working for his friends or laboring to promote the success of the party as a whole. Notwithstanding his indifference to public position, he was elected in 1893 trustee of Jackson township and filled the office three years, retiring not only with an honorable record but also with the universal good will of the people, regardless of party affiliation. In matters religious Mr. Essig has profound convictions and to say that he is an earnest and sincere Christian, whose works and faith go hand in hand, is to state which every body within the range of his acquaintance is only too willing to testify. As a communicant of the Lutheran church, he has been untiring in upholding the cause of Christianity in his neighborhood and the local congregation to which he belongs has benefited greatly not only from his liberal financial support but as much if not more from his wholesome personal influence in inducing others to seek the better life.

Mr. Essig is a married man and the proud father of eight children, who are growing up to honorable manhood and womanhood and giving promise to lives of usefulness in whatever stations they may be called to fill. His wife was formerly Miss Julia Oberlin and the ceremony by which it was changed to the one she now bears was solemnized in the year 1874. The following are the names of the sons and daughters that have come to brighten the home and make glad the lives of these fond parents, to-wit: Henry, Bertha, Etta, John, Lena, Walter, Nancy and William S.

FRANK A. ZIMMER, secretary and treasurer of the Harvard Company, Canton, and one of the accomplished young business men of the city, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and the son of Charles B. and Rosa Zimmer, the father born in Medard, Germany, December 27, 1844, the mother in the United States. Charles B. Zimmer was reared in the land of his birth and when a young man turned his attention to mechanical pursuits, in due time becoming a skillful machinist, which trade he followed until a comparatively recent date. In 1867 he left the fatherland and came to the United States, landing at New York, from which city he made his way direct to Navarre, Ohio, thence after a short time removed to Canton, where he worked at his trade for a number of years. He was employed by different industrial enterprises in this city, achieved an enviable reputation as an efficient mechanic and followed his chosen vocation until a few years ago, when he engaged with the furniture and undertaking establishment at Barberton, of which his son, the subject of this review, is a proprietor, holding a position with the same at the present time. Mr. Zimmer has been twice married, the first time in Canton to Miss Rosa Walters, who died in 1777, and subsequently to Emma Becherer, of Canton, who departed this life in August, 1902. By his first wife he had five children, namely: Frank A., whose name introduces this sketch; Lottie, now Mrs. George Zink, of Canton; Clara, who married Conrad Weigand, of Barberton, and two who died in childhood. Two children were born to Mr. Zimmer's second marriage, a daughter by the name of Marie, who is single and still a member of his home circle, and Loe, deceased. The Zimmers were born in the Catholic church and the different members of the family have been faithful in their allegiance to its teachings, those living in Canton belonging to St. Joseph's congregation, in the good work of which they are active and zealous. Charles B. Zimmer stands well with his German-American fellow citizens as a man of upright character and sterling worth who attends strictly to his own affairs and who has proven true to every trust reposed in him.

Frank A. Zimmer was born September 7, 1872, in Canton, Ohio, and until his thirteenth year attended the parochial schools of the city, in which he laid the foundation of what has since been a thorough practical training, principally along business lines. His first experience in the way of earning money for himself was as a clerk in a dry goods house, and after spending some years in that capacity and obtaining an insight into the business, he accepted a position with B. Dannemiller & Sons, leading wholesale grocers of Canton, in whose employ he continued until 1890. In the latter year he severed his connection with the above firm to become bookkeeper for the Harvard Company, which position he held five years, when he was promoted to the more responsible post of secretary and treasurer of the concern, the two-fold duties of which he has discharged in an able and satisfactory manner to the present time.

In addition to his official connection with the Harvard Company, Mr. Zimmer owns a half interest in the furniture and undertaking establishment at Barberton, which his father now manages, and the proceeds from the latter business, with his liberal salary as secretary and treasurer, yields him an income sufficiently liberal to make him financially independent.

Mr. Zimmer's business record is without a blemish, while his sterling worth as a neighbor and citizen has won him a host of friends and earned for him a conspicuous place among the enterprising, public-spirited men of his native city. All of his life has been spent in Canton and his personal history contains no pages marred or blotted by unworthy actions.

Mr. Zimmer, in the year 1902, entered the marriage relation with Miss Frances Kagle, daughter of Michael and Josephine Kagle, of Canton, and he has a beautiful and comfortable home in which the graces of refined womanhood reign and a spirit of hospitality is ever manifest. A Catholic by birth and training, religion enters largely into his every-day concerns and, directing his life according to its precepts, he makes his presence felt for good among those with whom he has business dealings or social relations. He and his estimable wife belong to the St. Joseph's church and for some time past he has been organist and leader of the choir in the same, being an accomplished musician with a wide reputation as a vocalist and as a skillful performer upon several kinds of instruments. In the different lines of religious work under the supervision of the church he is also quite active, being a member of the Knights of Columbus and a leading spirit in the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, the success of which organizations is due to him perhaps as much as to any other individual identified therewith.

Mr. Zimmer acts with the Democratic party, politically believing thoroughly in its principles and has an abiding faith in its mission as a party of the people. He has never been attracted by the allurements of office, but contents himself with voting his principles and supporting the party's candidates, leaving the responsibility of leadership and the honors of public position to those whose minds run in such directions.

T. J. REED, M. D., is proud to claim Ohio as his native state, a state which has probably produced as many distinguished men in all lines of human action as any other commonwealth in the American union. He was born July 31, 1838, in the county of Coshocton, and remained there until a youth of seventeen years, meantime acquiring a knowledge of the elementary branches of learning in the public schools. The training thus received was afterwards supplemented by a course in Keen Academy, and at the age of eighteen he selected medicine as the profession best suited to his tastes and inclinations, entering, in 1856, Rolfe Medical College in the city of Toronto, Canada. After spending two years in that institution, he became a student of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he pursued his studies until 1860, when he was graduated. Shortly after receiving his degree Dr. Reed was appointed acting assistant surgeon in the United States navy, being assigned duty on the ship "DeSoto," and later transferred to the United States ship "Stars and Stripes." After discharging the duties of this position with credit to himself and satisfaction to the department until 1864, he was appointed to a similar post in the United States army, entering upon his official functions at Washington City, D. C., where he remained until the year following, when he severed his connection with the service for the purpose of further perfecting himself in his profession. In 1865 he took a post-graduate course in obstetrics at Jefferson College, and the following year located at Massillon, where he has since devoted himself very closely to the general practice, building up a very extensive business and earning honorable distinction in a field long noted for its high order of medical talent.

Dr. Reed is a man of broad and liberal learning in his profession, skillful as a practitioner, and possesses what is so desirable in a true healer, cheerfulness, courtesy, a high sense of honor and an inspiring presence which never fails to command the confidence of patients and the respect of their friends. He has been untiring in his researches and investigations in the realm of medical science, and by close and critical study has kept pace with the age relative to the latest discoveries in medicine and the art of practice. Few physicians have been more successful in the treatment of certain diseases, notably among which are smallpox, typhoid fever and various kinds of fevers, in all of which his colleagues cheerfully acknowledge his eminence. In the general practice his efforts have likewise been rewarded with the most gratifying results. Dr. Reed has little time to devote to the social amenities of life, the never ceasing claims of his profession requiring nearly all of his attention, and he makes every other consideration subordinate to his patients' interests. In view of this fact, he has never taken a very active part in public matters or political questions, although he keeps himself well informed upon both, and has decided opinions relative to the leading issues of the day. As a citizen he occupies a high station in the community, being widely and favorably known for his many excellent qualities of head and heart, commanding the esteem of the people of his city and county, and ever ready and willing to show them any favor within his power to bestow.

Dr. Reed was married, in 1869, to Miss Belle Dickey, who has borne him two children, a son, T. F., and a daughter, Lulu F., now the wife of F. F. Tigert, of Massillon. The former was educated in the public schools of Massillon, Adelbert College and a preparatory school at Hudson, Ohio. He was graduated from the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, in 1893, and has been a successful practitioner from that time to the present, meanwhile taking a special course in the Eye and Ear Hospital, New York city. He is now making a specialty of the treatment of diseases peculiar to the eye, nose, ear and throat, and has already met with gratifying success in these lines of his profession.

WILLIAM DEFORD.—In the history of eastern Ohio few names are as prominent as that of DeFord. Those who bore it in early days were men of character, position, positive convictions and great personal force and it is needless to state that these with other admirable qualities have been displayed by their descendants from the pioneer period to the present time. As the name implies, the DeFord family is of French origin. Of the ancestral history little is known beyond certain facts connected with the life of one Jean DeFord, who with his wife, Marie (nee Marchand), was a native of France and a devout Huguenot in a time when to avow Protestantism was equivalent to confiscation of property if not death. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1686, Jean DeFord and wife, together with members of their respective families and others of like faith, fled from the city of Toulouse and, after various experiences, finally sailed for the new world, which they reached in due time, settling in Kent county, Maryland, where freedom of conscience was then allowed. Mr. and Mrs. DeFord had been married but a short time before their escape and were both young and without children when they reached their destination on the shores of Maryland. After coming to this country, they reared a large family of thirteen sons and one daughter, the latter in young womanhood marrying a prominent business man in the city of Philadelphia by the name of Merchant. From the sons all the DeFords in the United States are descended, the father, Jean (or John, as the name has since been anglicised), being the great-grandfather of William DeFord. The old family Bible containing the names of the early DeFords was brought to America by Jean DeFord and is in possession of a relative living in the city of Baltimore. It is a well-preserved volume, bound in canvas-covered boards, with large bronze hinges and clasps, very clear, legible print and by reason of its early date and long continuance in the family has a value far greater than mere dollars and cents.

When the war of the Revolution broke out John DeFord, son of the above Jean and grandfather of the subject, entered the American army and did heroic service for the country in many campaigns and noted battles, besides losing the bulk of his fortune during the struggle. Having confidence in the integrity of the colonial government, he converted much of his property into continental script, which finally became so much worthless paper, entailing upon him a loss from which it took him a long time to recover. At the close of the war he migrated from Maryland to what is now Fayette county, Pennsylvania, at that time Westmoreland county, where two of his sons, John and Marchard, were then living, selecting for his future home a tract of land near Redstone creek. He cleared and developed a farm and in due time became widely and favorably known as a man of affairs, taking an active interest in the material development of the country and by his correct conduct adding much to the social and moral status of the community in which he resided. The death of this worthy citizen was the result of an accident under the following circumstances: Having occasion to carry a grist of grain to a mill on the Redstone, he threw the sack across the back of his horse and mounting behind made the trip in safety and, as was the custom, waited until the grain was converted into flour. On his way home he led the horse until reaching the ford, when he again mounted and to make sure of crossing the creek took the sack of flour in front of him, letting it rest upon his knees and against his body. Being a very portly man, of great weight, he was obliged to lift the sack of flour as high as his chest and in so doing ruptured an internal blood vessel, from the effects of which he died before reaching home.

John DeFord, son of the above John and father of the subject, was born in Kent county, Maryland, and was about eighteen years old when his parents changed their abode to Pennsylvania. He worked in Fayette county several years for a farmer by the name of Stevens and in 1799 was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Hopwood, whose birth occurred in Maryland in 1785. Mrs. DeFord was the daughter of Rev. John Hopwood, a well known Baptist divine, who preached in various parts of Fayette county in an early day and helped to found several churches of his faith there and elsewhere in Pennsylvania. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. DeFord resulted in the birth of six children, whose names were as follows: Hannah, John, William, Harriet, Elizabeth and Daniel. The mother, a most worthy woman and for many years a sincere and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church, departed this life in 1815. A few years later Mr. DeFord married Miss Lydia Brownfield, of Pennsylvania, who died in 1838, leaving one son, now living near Kansas City, Missouri.

In 1811 John DeFord went to Carroll county, Ohio, and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in what is now Augusta township, after which he returned to his home in Pennsylvania. He was an industrious, hard working man, and by careful economy earned considerable money, which from time to time was judiciously invested in western lands, his last transaction of this kind in Ohio being about the year 1826, when his realty in this state amounted to something like nine hundred acres. As the country grew and population increased this land became quite valuable and in time represented a fortune of considerable magnitude. For over forty years Mr. DeFord kept a hotel at the foot of Laurel Hill, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, during which period his house became favorably known to the traveling public and earned the reputation of a first-class hostelry. The village in which it was situated was called Hopwood in honor of his father-in-law, but later the name was changed to Monroe, by which it has since been known. Meanwhile his Ohio lands continued to increase in value and in 1842 Mr. DeFord disposed of his interests in Pennsylvania and moved to his possessions in Carroll county, settling on the farm in Washington township which his grandson Benton now owns and cultivates. On coming to this state he turned his attention almost wholly to agriculture and was quite successful in the pursuit, developing a very fine farm and earning the reputation of a praiseworthy and public-spirited citizen. For many years he was a consistent member of the Methodist Protestant church and in politics supported the Democratic party, having been one of its leaders in the township of his residence. He spent his declining years on his farm in quiet and content and lived to a remarkable age, departing this life in 1873 in his one hundred and second year, being the oldest man in Ohio at the time of his death. In his younger days John DeFord became personally acquainted with quite a number of the nation's leading men and distinctly remembered many of the stirring events of the early days. He was at Laurel Hill when Washington occupied the fort at Baltimore, and he not only saw the father of his country frequently but was quite well acquainted with him. In many respects Mr. DeFord was much more than an ordinary man, being intelligent, public-spirited and in no small degree a leader of opinion among his neighbors and fellow citizens. He stamped his individuality upon the community, took an active interest in promoting all legitimate enterprises and always stood boldly for the right, maintaining the course of his convictions under all circumstances.

William DeFord was born April 28, 1807, in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and there spent the years of his childhood and youth, attending while young the public schools of his native place. Actuated by a desire for a more thorough intellectual training, he subsequently entered Madison College, of Uniontown, of which the Rev. Henry B. Boscomb was then president, where he made commendable progress in the higher branches of learning. In 1822 he made his first visit to Ohio, for the purpose of seeing some friends living at Wooster, but after a brief sojourn, returned to his native state where he remained during the fifteen years following. At the expiration of that period he decided to make Ohio his future place of residence, accordingly, in 1835, he settled on a farm in Washington township, Carroll county, where he lived for many years, an industrious, energetic and successful tiller of the soil. In the month of April, 1838, Mr. DeFord and Miss Mary Williams, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Acres) Williams, became husband and wife, the latter born in 1801 in the state of New Jersey. She bore him two sons, Nathan and John, and finished her earthly course on the 10th day of September, 1875, at the age of seventy-four. Until the breaking out of the Great Rebellion Mr. DeFord was a pronounced Democrat, but becoming dissatisfied with the party's attitude relative to slavery, state rights and kindred questions growing out of the disturbed conditions of the times, withdrew his allegiance and became strongly and aggressively Republican. Being an active participant in public affairs as a warm and patriotic friend of the union, he was elected in 1873 to represent Carroll county in the general assembly, in which relation he served until 1867, having been re-elected his own successor the meantime. His legislative experience was eminently satisfactory to his constituents and covering, as it did, one of the most trying periods in the history of the state, was replete with duty bravely and fearlessly performed. While the Civil war was in progress he was untiring in his efforts in behalf of the union, visited all parts of his county, inducing young men to enlist and otherwise appealing to the loyal sentiment of the people. For many years he held the office of justice of the peace, in which capacity he earned considerable repute as an able, impartial and judicious public servant. When a young man he united with the Methodist Protestant church and entered upon that earnest, steadfast, religious life which has characterized his career to the present day. In his business relations William DeFord has been uniformly successful and now in his old age he is enjoying the fruit of his labors in a life of honorable retirement. His experience as a farmer in Carroll county covers a period of over fifty-seven years, during which time he has been an influential agent in promoting the material interests of the country, while his activity in behalf of whatever tends to the moral and intellectual good of the community has been none the less active and fruitful. When a young man Mr. DeFord helped construct the old national road, taking a contract to build a certain section over Laurel Hill, one of the most difficult sections in the entire route. He remembers having seen General LaFayette on the occasion of the noble Frenchman's revisit to the United States and had the further honor of shaking his hand and engaging him in quite a lengthy conversation.

Nathan B. DeFord, the eldest of the two sons of William and Elizabeth DeFord, was born in Augusta township, Carroll county, Ohio, April 11, 1839. He was reared on his father's farm and after completing the public school course pursued his studies for some time in Springfield Academy, later becoming a student of the Western Reserve University. Finishing his education, Mr. DeFord decided to become a farmer and on attaining his majority began his career as such in the county of Carroll, taking possession of one of his father's places for the purpose. Later he purchased a farm of seventy acres in Augusta township on which he lived and prospered until 1879, when he disposed of his real estate in Carroll county and bought his present valuable farm of two hundred and eight acres in the county of Columbiana. This is universally conceded to be one of the finest and best cultivated places in West township and as an agriculturist Mr. DeFord enjoys precedence such as few attain. During the Civil war he was active in upholding the Union cause and it was largely to his efforts that Augusta and Washington townships were three times saved from the draft towards the latter part of the struggle. To secure sufficient men to fill the required quota, he went to Cincinnati, where he spared no pains in recruiting; paying five hundred and sixty dollars per man. This experience was attended with much hard work, many trials and disappointments, but he persevered untiringly until completing the task, thus earning the highest praise of his fellow citizens.

In the year 1861 Mr. DeFord was united in marriage to Miss Martha Duncan, of Trumbull county, Ohio, daughter of Thomas and Susan (Leach) Duncan, the father at one time a prominent farmer and representative citizen of that part of the state. Mr. Duncan figured actively in the affairs of Trumbull for many years as an influential Democrat and as a justice of the peace of far more than local repute. Mr. and Mrs. DeFord have one child, a son, by the name of Edwin S.

In 1897 Mr. DeFord, in partnership with his son and H. B. Couch, established a private banking establishment at Minerva, under the firm name of the DeFord & Couch Banking Company, with which he has since been officially identified. One year later the name was changed to the Farmers and Merchants Banking Company and in 1900 it became the First National Bank of Minerva, by which name the establishment is still known, the subject holding the responsible position of president and his son that of cashier. This is one of the strong and popular monetary institutions of Stark county and its prestige in financial circles throughout the state has won for the proprietors honorable reputations as safe, practical and eminently successful business men. Mr. DeFord has capably discharged the duties of the presidency and the continued growth of the bank in public favor is largely due to his practical knowledge of finance. In addition to his farming and banking interests he maintains a lively concern in all enterprises for the public welfare and has done much in various ways to promote the material good of his township and county. In politics he is a Democrat and as such wields a potent influence for his party without entering the arena as an office seeker. As a business man Mr. DeFord is clear, far-sighted, shrewd, eminently honorable and his success may be inferred from the commanding position he occupies in the financial world and the large fortune in his possession.

Edwin S. DeFord, distinguished as a business man and financier and holding marked prestige in the domain of citizenship, has made his presence felt in the world of affairs, and stand distinctively in the front ranks of the county's successful self-made men. His ancestral history as outlined in the preceding paragraphs throws light upon the sterling character of his antecedents, but it is a careful study of the man himself that will account for his gradual rise from a comparatively unknown station to the commanding position which he now occupies. Edwin S. DeFord is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, born on the family homestead in Augusta township, February 19, 1862. His home life was all that could have been desired and it is not at all strange that he early formulated plans and purposes as to his future course of action. At the proper age he entered the public schools of his native county and the training thus received formed the basis of more thorough study in the high school at Warren. Later he became a student of the Ohio Normal University at Ada, from which he was graduated in 1882, and subsequently he took a course in Mt. Union College, an institution attended by many of Ohio's noted public and successful business men. In 1886, soon after finishing his education, Mr. DeFord engaged in the milling business at East Rochester, New York, and spent ten successful years in that industry, at the expiration of which time, in partnership with his father and a Mr. Couch, he assisted in establishing what was formerly the DeFord & Couch Banking Company, now the First National Bank of Minerva. As originally organized the bank lasted until 1898, when the name was changed to that of the Farmers' and Merchants' Banking Company; in 1900 the name by which it is at present known was adopted, the subject being elected cashier, a position he still holds.

Mr. DeFord's long connection with one of the leading monetary institutions of Stark county affords the best proof of his ability and judgment as a sound practical financier and he has discharged his functions in a manner well calculated to inspire public confidence in the stability and integrity of the bank, his official record being without a flaw and his private character far above the suspicion of any but the most worthy and honorable motives.

Mr. DeFord is one of Stark county's leading Democrats and his interest in behalf of the party has done much to strengthen its cause in this part of the state. In 1901, he was nominated for county treasurer, but, owing to the overwhelming Republican majority, suffered defeat, though running ahead of the majority of candidates on his ticket. He has been quite active in municipal affairs, having served several terms in the common council of Minerva and at this time is filling the office of township treasurer. Fraternally he is a member of Tubal Lodge No. 551, Free and Accepted Masons, and of the Minerva Lodge, Knights of Pythias, in addition to which organizations he is also identified with Tent No. 122, Knights of the Maccabees. He has risen high in the Masonic brotherhood, being a thirty-second-degree Mason, belonging to the chapter at Alliance and Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar, at Canton, the Mystic Shrine and Lake Erie Consistory at Cleveland, Ohio, in all of which he has been honored with important official positions. His religious belief is embodied in the creed of the Methodist Episcopal church, being an active and consistent member of the congregation which meets for worship in the town of Minerva.

The domestic chapter in the life of Mr. DeFord bears the date of 1884, on the 17th of January of which year he was happily married to Miss Mary A. Cunningham, of Paris township, daughter of Richard Cunningham, one of the county's prominent and influential agriculturists. Two children brightened the home of Mr. and Mrs. DeFord, namely: Mark Duncan and Gertrude Marie.

FRANK E. CASE, president of the Harvard Manufacturing Company, is of Irish descent, but his family has been represented in this country ever since the colonial period, the name first appearing in connection with the early settlement of New York and Connecticut. With one of the early tides of immigration to the New England coast came two gentlemen from Ireland by the name of John and Aaron Case, both seafaring men, the former locating at Bloomfield, Connecticut, the latter settling in the colony of New York, both becoming heads of families. It is from the New England branch that the subject of this review is descended, his genealogy being traceable in an unbroken line to the original John Case, who, from the most reliable information at hand, appears to have been a man of considerable influence in the affairs of the town and county in which he lived. Among the descendants of this sturdy pioneer was one Aaron Case, a farmer by occupation, who was born in Bloomfield, Connecticut, and there lived until the year 1835 when he moved to northeastern Ohio, settling in the town of Windsor, Ashtabula county. After following his chosen calling for a number of years in that part of the state he migrated to Michigan, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1884 at an advanced age. Hiram Case, son of the above Aaron and father of the subject of this review, was born at Bloomfield, Connecticut, in 1822, and when a lad of twelve years, in company with his three brothers, came on foot to Ohio to rejoin his father, who had preceded him by a short time to this state, his mother having died some time before at the old home in Connecticut. He grew up on a farm, received his education in such schools as he could attend and, being of a studious nature and an omnivorous reader, in due time became a remarkably well informed man upon many subjects and to a large extent a leader of thought among the people with whom he mingled. He married, in Ashtabula county, Miss Mary Amidon, a descendant of a Revolutionary hero by the name of John Smith, who held a captain's commission in the American army and distinguished himself by gallant service in the battle of Bunker Hill, having been one of the last to retire before the British from the bloody field. George Amidon, father of Mrs. Case, married Miss Smith and died when quite a young man; his family was well known in the county of Ashtabula and the name has been familiar there since the early settlement of the country.

After his marriage Hiram Case engaged in agricultural pursuits and followed the same for a livelihood to the end of his days. He lived to the age of seventy-nine, and departed this life in 1901, his wife dying the same year. Of the family of Hiram and Mary Case there are two living representatives, Frank E., whose name furnishes the caption of this article, and Dr. F. D. Case, a physician and surgeon practicing his profession in the city of Ashtabula.

Frank E. Case was born on the home farm in the county of Ashtabula and until his seventeenth year remained under the parental roof, devoting the winter months to study in the public schools. After finishing the common branches he entered the Orwell Academy, where he fitted himself for teaching, which profession he followed for several years, first in the country, and subsequently as teacher of the Orwell schools, in which capacity he earned an honorable reputation as an educator. Resigning his position in the above schools, he accepted the principalship of the Jefferson high school and while serving in that capacity began to study law with Hon. S. A. Northway, under whose able instruction he made substantial progress until admitted to the bar in 1871.

Mr. Case opened an office in Canal Fuiton the same year of his admission to the bar and during the ensuing two years built up a lucrative business in that town and established the reputation of an able lawyer and successful practitioner. At the expiration of that time he removed to Canton, where he soon took high rank among the successful members of the bar, and he continued to practice with a large and lucrative patronage until 1890, when he retired from the profession for the purpose of engaging in his present important industrial enterprise.

In the above year Mr. Case became interested in the manufacture of dental and surgical chairs, a line of work which up to that time had been neglected in this country, but for which there had been a constantly growing demand. Taking advantage of the situation he soon had the enterprise upon solid footing. In 1887 the manufacture of surgical chairs was begun in a very small way in the basement of Mr. Case's house, and from this small beginning he has, without the aid of outside capital, built up a phenomenally prosperous and substantial business. The present plant is one of the finest and most modern in the state, being built of stone and brick. Employment is given by the company to about one hundred and twenty people all told. The company has agencies in London, England, and Melbourne, Australia, and manufactures the leading high-grade chair made outside the trust, the total output amounting to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually. Mr. Case is the patentee of many valuable improvements and designs in dental and surgical chairs, all of which he controls exclusively. In addition to being president and practical owner of the Harvard Company, Mr. Case is president of the Canton Public Library Association, president of the Dime Savings Bank and a director of the First National Bank.

Mr. Case was married, in Trumbull county,

Ohio, July 7, 1879, to Miss Theano Wattles, daughter of John and Esther Wattles, a lady of beautiful character and varied culture who has had much to do in shaping his subsequent life and establishing his success. Politically Mr. Case is a pronounced Republican, but being essentially a business man with the interest of the enterprise with which he is connected resting upon him, he has little time to devote to public affairs or matters outside his line of duty. He stands high in industrial and business circles and is equally esteemed as a citizen, being interested in the progress of his adopted city and ready to lend his influence to all agencies with that object in view.

EDWARD M. SHREINER traces his lineage back to sturdy German stock, the original representatives of the name having early settled in the old Keystone state, of which he is himself a native son, having been born in Maytown, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 8th of July, 1864, and being a son of Henry M. and Susie (Myers) Shreiner, both of whom were likewise natives of Lancaster county, where they were reared and where their marriage occurred, the father of our subject having been a shoemaker by trade. When Edward was but three years of age his parents came to Ohio, locating in Greentown, Stark county, where the father's death occurred in 1869, after which the subject was reared on a farm just south of Akron, Summit county, passing his youthful days in attending the public schools during the winter months and devoting his attention to work on the farm during the summer seasons, and the while working for his board while attending school. His mother is still living, having her home with her children, while she has attained the age of sixty-four years (1903). She is a devoted member of the Evangelical church, as was also her husband. They became the parents of four children, of whom all are living at the present time. George Shreiner, grandfather of him whose name initiates this sketch, was likewise born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he passed his entire life, having been a jeweler by trade and vocation.

After leaving school, at the age of eighteen years, Edward M. Shreiner put his scholastic attainments to practical test by engaging in teaching a district school, and while he was successful in his first term of work he was not sufficiently pleased with the pedagogic profession to further continue his efforts in the line. After giving up his school work he accordingly came to Canton, in 1885, and here he secured a clerical position in the shoe store of John D. Frank, with whom he remained three years, while for the ensuing four years he was employed in the Deuber watch works, in this city. He then resumed clerking, securing a position in the grocery establishment of Louis Dunnont, with whom he remained nearly five years. On the 4th of March, 1896, he engaged in business on his own responsibility, opening his store in the present location and initiating operations on a modern scale, in harmony with his capitalistic resources available at the time. Through correct methods and unfailing care to meeting the demands of his customers his trade has shown a cumulative tendency from the start, and he now has a large and well stocked store and caters to a representative patronage. In 1889 his business had so increased in extent as to render it necessary to increase the capacity and accommodations of his store, to which he then built an addition, while in the autumn of 1902 another addition was made to the building, so that he now utilizes an aggregate floor space of about two thousand square feet, while he has the confidence and respect of all whom he has dealings, enjoying that personal popularity which is justly his due.

In politics Mr. Shreiner gives his support to the Republican party in state and national affairs, and he is strongly in favor of prohibition, doing all in his power to promote the cause of temperance, but believing that reforms of a legal order can best be accomplished through one of the dominant political parties until more concerted and expansive action can be effected through an organization having this one issue as paramount. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of Trinity Lutheran church, in which he has held nearly all the important official positions. Fraternally he is identified with Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons.

In Canton, on the 10th of July, 1890, Mr. Shreiner was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Leininger, who was born in Pike township, this county, being a daughter of John and Henrietta Leininger, the former of whom is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Shreiner have two children, Nettie and John Frederick.

JONAS ESCHLIMAN. — For sixty-six years this gentleman has been an honored resident of Stark county and his name is very closely interwoven with the agricultural interests and material development of Lawrence township. On his father's side Mr. Eschliman is of German descent, although his ancestors for many generations lived in the little mountain republic of Switzerland. His great-grandfather, a native of that country, came to the United in a very early day and settled in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and from him the American branch of the family is descended. The subject's grandfather lived and died in Lancaster county, and it was there that Abraham Eschliman, the father, was also born and raised. Abraham Eschliman was reared a farmer and followed agricultural pursuits in his native state until 1837, at which time he disposed of his interests there and moved his family to Stark county, Ohio, settling on the place in Lawrence township which his son, the subject of this review, now owns. He married, in Pennsylvania, Miss Elizabeth Horst, a member of one of the Lancaster county's oldest families, and by her had eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom four are living, Jonas being the youngest of the family. Two of the daughters live in Elkhart county, Indiana, and one brother has made his home for a number of years in the state of Nebraska. Abraham Eschliman was one of the leading farmers of his day in the township of Lawrence, and earned the reputation of an honorable citizen and upright Christian gentleman. Originally a Whig in politics, he afterward became a loyal supporter of the Republican party and in religion he was of the Mennonite denomination in the county of Stark. He lived a singularly pure and upright life and died in 1870, his good wife and faithful companion being called to her eternal rest the same year.

Jonas Eschliman was born November 2, 1834, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and in April, 1837, was brought by his parents to Stark county, where he grew to maturity and has since lived. When a youth he knew what it was to work early and late in the woods and fields, and continued to give his father the benefit of his services until at the age to begin the struggle of life for himself. The common schools, which he attended at intervals during his minority, afforded him a fair education, and on reaching the years of manhood he turned his attention to the vocation which he followed with such signal success until he acquired a sufficiency of the world's goods to enable him to spend the evening in retirement. He managed his business affairs very successfully, rarely failed to realize handsomely on the time and labor expended in cultivating his lands and by well directed thrift added to his possessions from time to time until he now owns real estate in Lawrence township to the amount of two hundred acres, all well improved and very valuable. His farm is beautifully situated in one of the most highly favored agricultural sections of Stark county, and his buildings and other improvements, all first class, bespeak the labor and attention he has expended in making a home which all concede to be one of the most attractive places of residence in the township of Lawrence.

Mr. Eschliman has attained precedence in his community as an enterprising, public-spirited citizen, deeply interested in whatever concerns the material, intellectual and moral well-being of his fellow men. He served as trustee of his township to the satisfaction of the people, and as chairman of the local school board did much to advance the standard of education in this part of the county. His judgment on business matters is seldom if ever at fault, in consequence of which his services have frequently been retained in the settlement of estates and in the adjustment of differences which but for his wise counsel would doubtless have been litigated in the courts. As already stated, Mr. Eschliman is no longer engaged in manual pursuits, having recently turned over the cultivation of his farm to other hands, for the purpose of spending the remainder of his days in the peaceful and honorable retirement which he has so well and faithfully earned.

Mr. Eschliman's first marriage was solemnized in 1855, with Miss Fannie Martin, who died six years later, leaving four children, namely: Elizabeth, Jacob, Nancy and Jonas, all but Nancy living. Miss Nancy Eschliman married a gentleman by the name of Eberly, and bore him one child, Edith, whom Mr. Eschliman took to raise after the death of both parents. The subject's recent wife was Miss Martha Martin, a sister of his former companion; she became the mother of eight children, and departed this life in 1891, leaving her husband truly bereft. The following are the names of the sons and daughters of the second union: John H., Mary I., A. W., Amos (deceased), Ezra, Daniel R., William H. and Martha. Both of Mr. Eschliman's wives were devout members of the Mennonite church, with which religious body he is also identified.

WILLIAM FINDLEY.—The gentleman whose name introduces this review hails from the romantic domain of Scotland, a land long celebrated in story and song for heroes' brave and daring deeds. He was born on the 25th of May, 1853, the son of David and Elizabeth (Dougal) Findley, both natives of Scotland, as were their ancestors beyond the memory of man. By occupation the father was a coal miner. After following that vocation in Scotland for a number of years, he concluded to better his condition by coming to the United States. Accordingly, in 1856, he set sail and in due time reached his destination in Stark county, Ohio. The following year his wife and son, the subject of this sketch, started to join him, but on the voyage the former died and was buried at sea. So it was with feelings sad and forlorn that young William, then a child of about four years, arrived at Massillon, on the 4th day of July, 1857. On coming to this country David Findley resumed coal mining and followed the same in Stark county for a number of years, making his home the meantime at Massillon, where his death occurred in 1878. Young William was reared in the above town and at intervals during his youth enjoyed the advantages of the common school. Owing to his father's poor health, he was soon obliged to abandon his studies and do what he could to make his own living, and at the early age of eight years he earned his first money by working in the coal mines near Massillon. During the fifteen years following he labored incessantly as a miner, husbanding his earnings very carefully the meanwhile with the object in view of engaging in some other business as soon as he could command sufficient capital to do so. At length he was enabled to carry out this desire of long standing, having by industry and close economy saved enough money to start in the grocery business in 1876, taking as a partner Thomas Masters, the firm thus constituted soon obtaining a liberal share of the trade.

Messrs. Findley and Masters remained together about twenty-two years, at the expiration of which time Mr. Masters died and since then the subject has conducted the business upon his own responsibility. He has a fine store in the village of Neuman, carries a full line of carefully selected goods, and, by catering to the demands of the trade, has built up a large and lucrative business which gives promise of continued increase with each succeeding year. In addition to his mercantile interests, Mr. Findley discharges the duties of postmaster at Neuman, having been appointed to the position in 1886, when the office was first established. He is also trustee of Lawrence township, which office he fills with great acceptance, being a most judicious custodian of the people's interests in a position requiring sound judgment, shrewd business tact and good executive ability. Mr. Findley has proven himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens and every duty coming within his province has been discharged to the satisfaction of all concerned. He is greatly esteemed by the public and so ably and faithfully has he managed his present positions that his friends predict for him still higher official honors in the future.

On the 6th day of July, 1876, Mr. Findley was happily married to Miss Annie Rowland, a native of South Wales, who came to the United States when a girl with her parents, Edward and Margaret (Hughes) Rowland, the family settling in Stark county. This union has been blessed with one child, a daughter by the name of Margaret, who was graduated from the Massillon Business College and who is now her father's efficient deputy in the post-office at Neuman.

Financially Mr. Findley has been quite successful, having amassed a handsome competence, owning, besides his home and business property in Neuman, some valuable real estate in the city of Massillon. He is one of the stanch Republicans of this part of the county and takes an active part in public and political affairs, being one of the leaders of his party in Lawrence township, and ever ready to make any reasonable sacrifice to insure its success. His fraternal relations are represented by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Lodge No. 48 at Massillon.

Mrs. Findley and daughter are members of the Baptist church and earnest workers in all lines of religious and charitable activity. While not identified with any religious organization himself, Mr. Findley is a believer in Christianity and gives liberally of his means for the dissemination of its great truths among men, both at home and abroad. During the last fourteen years he has been a member of the local board, in which capacity he has been untiring in his efforts to build up the educational system and elevate its standard of efficiency. In brief, it can truly be said of Mr. Findley that he is one of the broad-minded and useful men of his day, and as a neighbor and citizen none stand higher in public esteem, nor have any been more faithful in laudable endeavors to make the world wiser and better.

JOHN J. LUTZ.—The name Lutz is an old one in Stark county and is also a familiar sound in various parts of Pennsylvania, where the ancestors of the American branch of the family settled in colonial times, coming to this country from Germany. Samuel Lutz, the subject's grandfather, a Pennsylvanian by birth, married in his native state Elizabeth Arnold, and when a young man moved his family to Stark county, Ohio, where he and his wife spent the remainder of their days. Among the children born in this county was a son by the name of Jacob, who grew to maturity in Jackson township and learned the shoemaker's trade. He also carried on farming in connection with his regular vocation and became a man of considerable consequence in his community, having been a substantial citizen and reasonably successful in the accumulation of worldly wealth, owning at the time of his death a well improved farm of one hundred and twelve acres in the township of Jackson. Jacob married Miss Catherine Whitmire, a native of Pennsylvania, who bore him eight children, four of whom are living.

John J. Lutz was born December 11, 1837, on the paternal homestead and spent the years of his youth and young manhood amid the stirring scenes of farm life. His early life developed not only strong bodily powers, but fostered habits of industry and thrift, and he grew up with the well defined purpose of living an honorable life and of becoming of some use to the world. While at home he spent the summer seasons assisting his father with the farm work and in the winter time attended the common schools, in which he acquired a fair knowledge of the branches which then constituted the course of study. When it became necessary for him to sever home ties and begin life's struggle upon his own responsibility, he chose farming for a vocation, and has followed the same with success and profit from that time until the present day. Mr. Lutz owns a small but finely situated and well improved place in Jackson township, and, by thrift and good management, has surrounded himself with a sufficiency of comforts and conveniences to make his condition practically independent. He has not been sparing of his means in improving and beautifying his home, having a good, substantial residence and a fine barn, the latter structure erected in 1890 at a considerable outlay of capital.

In the year 1867 Mr. Lutz was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Shook, who was born in Berlin, Stark county, in 1838. Her parents, George and Hannah (Harter) Shook, were also natives of Stark, the former being a son of David and Sarah (Marsh) Shook, of Pennsylvania, and early pioneers of this part of Ohio. David was a hero of the war of 1812 and participated in a number of battles, beside seeing much other active service during the progress of the struggle. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lutz has not been blessed with offspring, notwithstanding they have furnished a home to three orphan children, after whose welfare they have looked with all the care and interest that natural parents could possibly manifest. The names of the children are: Franklin E. McPike, John H. Bender and Ethel D. Lutz. Mr. and Mrs. Lutz are devoted Christians, having been zealous members of the Reformed Lutheran church for a number of years.

In his political adherency Mr. Lutz is a pronounced Democrat, and as such was elected in 1895 treasurer of the township of Jackson, which position he has held for eight consecutive years. He has discharged the duties of the office in a straightforward, businesslike manner, and handled the public funds most judiciously, rendering a strict account of every dollar in his possession, and proving himself worthy of the implicit confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens. Mr. Lutz is a man of strong common sense, excellent judgment and in all of his dealings and business relations his integrity has been above the slightest suspicion of dishonor.

HENRY HEISA.—As the name implies, Mr. Heisa is of German descent. His grandfather, George Heisa, was a native of the kingdom of Hanover, in which country the paternal ancestors of the family have lived for years beyond the memory of any of the surviving descendants. The maiden name of Mrs. George Heisa was Mary Rutterbusch. She also was born and reared in Hanover and after the death of her first husband, which occurred in his native country, came to the United States and spent the remainder of her life in York county, Pennsylvania. Frederick William Heisa, son of George and Mary Heisa, and father of the subject, was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1809, and came to America about the year 1834, locating in York county, Pennsylvania, where, in 1837, he was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Adams. Mrs. Heisa was born November 30, 1814, in the county of York, the daughter of Peter Adams, a native of England, and an early business man of Hagerstown, Maryland. Mr. Adams served as a fifer in the war of 1812 and after the cessation of hostilities engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods in the town of Hagerstown. Here he operated a large mill for a number of years, realizing from the business an ample fortune. His wife was Sarah Hibner, a daughter of Augustine Hibner, who came to America from Leipsic, Germany, and served under the Marquis De LaFayette in the war of the Revolution. During the thirteen years following his marriage Frederick William Heisa followed agricultural pursuits in York county, Pennsylvania, but in 1850 disposed of his interests there and moved to Holmes county, Ohio, where he lived about one year, changing residence at the expiration of that time to Summit county. Later he moved to Lake township, Stark county, and after residing there about six years, purchased a farm two and one-half miles southeast of Union, where he made his home for a period of seven years. At the end of that time he bought of Benjamin Conradt a farm in Jackson township, Stark county, which his son, the subject of the review, now owns and occupies. And it was on this place that his death occurred January 15, 1877. Mrs. Heisa survived her husband until 1891, dying on May 31st of that year. Frederick W. Heisa was a remarkably successful man in all of his business affairs, and at one time owned thirty acres of valuable real estate in York county, Pennsylvania. He also accumulated a large property in Ohio, his realty at the time of his death amounting to three hundred and thirty-four acres, in addition to which he had other possessions, which made his private fortune something in excess of thirty-two thousand dollars. He was an influential factor in public as well as business matters; an ardent Democrat in politics and to no small degree a molder of opinion in his community. To him and his wife were born six children, whose names are as follows: Sarah J., deceased; Mary S., deceased; George F.; Henry; Charles C. and Ida R.

Henry Heisa, whose name introduces this review, was born in Spring Garden township, York county, Pennsylvania, on the 22d day of November, 1847. He was quite young when his parents moved to Holmes county, Ohio, and until his eleventh year lived in Union and Lake townships, meanwhile obtaining a knowledge of the elementary branches of learning in the public schools. The greater part of Mr. Heisa's life has been spent in Stark county and his training on the farm eminently fitted him for the career which he has since followed with such a large measure of financial success. Although his early education was somewhat limited, he has read and thought much, and possessing a strong, discriminating mind, has never been at a loss to keep himself in close touch with the tread of events and in forming sound opinions relative to the great questions and issues of the times. His place, which consists of one hundred and sixty-one acres of valuable land in Jackson township, is one of the most desirable rural homes in this part of the county and no pains nor expense have been avoided in adding to its beauty and attractiveness. In addition to general agriculture, Mr.

Heisa devotes much attention to the breeding and raising of fine live stock, in which branch of farming his success has been commensurate with the energy displayed in all of his undertakings.

In his political views Mr. Heisa subscribes to the principles of the Democratic party, and ever since attaining his majority has manifested a lively interest in their success. He has been especially active in all organized efforts for the promotion of agriculture, being a leading member of the Patrons of Husbandry, and for several years served as treasurer of the Farmers' Alliance of Stark county.

Mr. Heisa was married on the 14th of November, 1872, to Miss Crecilla Tritt, of Summit county, Ohio, a union blessed with four children, namely: Hattie May, Curtis William Frederick, Elva Vernona and Ida Rebecca. Mrs. Heisa and her two daughters are members of the Reformed church. Mr. Heisa is not identified with any religious organization, although he is a believer in and a liberal supporter of the church.

CHARLES MARTIN, who was for many years one of the progressive and representative farmers of Plain township, was a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in the city of Lancaster, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 24th of July, 1825, and having been a son of George and Catherine (Croft) Martin, both of whom were likewise natives of that county, where the death of the former occurred, while the latter came to Stark county and here passed her declining days in the city of Canton, where she died at the age of sixty years. Eight children were born of this union, namely: John, Catherine, George, Magdalene, Rebecca, Henry, Emanuel and Charles, and of the number only two, Emanuel and Henry, are living at the present time.

children and was a young man of about seven years when he came with his widowed mother from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, to Canton, his educational training having been received in the common schools of Stark county, Ohio. In his youth he learned the trade of rope making, but the greater portion of his active business career was devoted to agricultural pursuits, in which he so directed his efforts as to attain independence and definite prosperity. On the 4th of December, 1845, in Plain township, this county, he was united in marriage to Miss Delilah Smith, who was born in that township, on the 13th of January, 1827, being a daughter of John Smith, who was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, and who was numbered among the earliest settlers in Plain township, Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life as a farmer, while his wife, who also died here, bore the maiden name of Mary Hollinger and was likewise a native of Pennsylvania. They came to Stark county about the year 1808, and settled in Plain township, where Mr. Smith reclaimed a good farm in the midst of the forest wilds, living to the age of sixty-eight years. His wife passed away on the 11th of March, 1840, at the age of fifty-two years. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Daniel, Elizabeth, Margaret, Jacob, Mary, Delilah and John, and of these children two, Margaret and Delilah, are living at the time of this writing. After his marriage Charles Martin settled near Canton, where he engaged in farming in connection with his trade, his place of operation being now within the city limits, and there he remained until March, 1871, when he removed to the present homestead farm, on section 27, Plain township, and there passed the rest of his life, his death occurring on the 27th of February, 1899. He was a man of mature judgment and unremitting industry and thus became one of the prosperous farmers of this section, being the owner of a valuable farm of seventy-eight acres at the time of his death, and this property being still the residence of his widow. Mr. Martin was a Democrat in politics and his religious faith was that of the Church of God, of which he was a zealous and consistent member, his wife attending the German Reformed church of Canton. His probity and honor in all the relations of life were beyond question and in his death the community lost a good citizen and an honored pioneer. To Mr. and Mrs. Martin were born five children, namely: Mary C., who is the wife of Jefferson A. Houser, of Canton; George R., who died in Canton township, when about twenty-three years of age; Edward, who died in Plain township, when nearly twenty-two years of age; William H., who has charge of the homestead farm and is a resident of section 26, Plain township, and who is the subject of an individual sketch appearing on another page of this work; and an infant, deceased.

AARON J. STONER is a native of Ohio, born in Plain township, Stark county, and dates his birth from the 21st day of September, 1856, being the son of John L. and Salome (Essig) Stoner, the father born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the mother in the county of Stark. Jacob Stoner, the subject's grandfather, was also a native of Pennsylvania, but came to Stark county as early as 1834, settling in Plain township. When the late Rebellion broke out he tendered his services to the government and, although over sixty years old at the time, was accepted and proved a brave and fearless soldier. At the close of the war he returned to Stark county, but subsequently moved to Wardles, Ohio, where his death occurred some years ago at an advanced age.

John L. Stoner learned the tanner's trade when a young man and followed the same a number of years. Later he operated a threshing machine and a stationary engine, in addition to which he also carried on the pursuit of agriculture, owning a farm of sixty acres in Plain township and two hundred and forty acres of fine land in the township of Jackson. He was a man of considerable local prominence, a Prohibitionist in politics and was actively interested in every movement for the material, social and moral advancement of the community in which he lived. His wife Salome was the daughter of Adam Essig, a prosperous citizen of Stark county, and she became the mother of three children, two of whom are living—Aaron J., of this review, and Lenie, who resides in Plain township.

Reared to agricultural pursuits, the early life of Aaron J. Stoner was devoted to farm labor and of winter seasons during his minority he attended the district schools of his native township, but did not receive as complete an education as he desired, his services being needed in carrying on the farm, much of the management of which fell to him when he became old enough to assume the responsibility. By taste and inclination he is a natural farmer and when the time came to make choice of a vocation he decided to follow these tendencies and devote his life to the wholesome work of tilling the soil. In due time he became the owner of his own land and by well directed industry, frugality and thrift succeeded in adding to his possessions at intervals until he now owns three hundred and forty-nine acres of valuable real estate in Stark county, nearly all improved and in a high state of cultivation. His home place in Jackson township, on which he has lived since 1875, is a model of neatness and successful tillage and from it alone he receives an income sufficient to place him in independent circumstances. A considerable portion of Mr. Stoner's land is farmed by tenants and he has been remarkably fortunate in their selection, receiving from his share of the proceeds a liberal return on the capital which such realty represents.

Mr. Stoner has been a supporter of the Republican party ever since old enough to exercise the rights of citizenship, and at one time was nominated for the office of county treasurer, but in the Democratic landslide of that year failed of election. He served a number of years on the local school board and for a period of nine years was a director of the Mutual Insurance Company of Stark County, which organization profited greatly by his safe, conservative course and wise business methods.

On the 3d day of January, 1878, Mr. Stoner was united in marriage with Miss Susan Click, who was born in Jackson township, Stark county, December 2, 1855. Mrs. Stoner's parents were Samuel and Julia (Koontz) Click, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively, the former a son of Samuel Click, who moved to Stark county in an early day from Pennsylvania and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in the present township of Jackson. Mrs. Julia Click was the daughter of Henry Koontz, one of the early pioneers of Stark county, the family moving to this part of the state when the settlements were few and far between. Mr. and Mrs. Stoner have three children—Emma, John and Cornin Robert.

MARTIN J. HOGAN has the distinction of being superintendent of the great threshing machine and implement works of the C. Aultman Company, one of the most extensive and important industrial concerns in the county and state. Mr. Hogan became a resident of Canton in the year 1875, coming here as a mechanic in the works of which he is now superintendent. He advanced through the various grades and departments of the concern until there came to him the appreciative recognition represented in his present executive office, and his practical training and good judgment eminently qualify him for the duties devolving upon him, his selection for the office of superintendent having been made in December, 1894.

Martin J. Hogan is a native of the old Empire state of the Union, having been born in Waterloo, Seneca county, New York, on the 22d of December, 1854, and having been there reared to years of maturity. His educational advantages were very limited, as the circumstances of the family were such that he found it incumbent upon him to become a wage-earner when but thirteen years of age, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of machinist in a local shop. He became a good workman and continued to follow his trade at various points in the state of New York until 1875, when he came to Canton, as has already been noted.

In New Brighton, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of August, 1879, Mr. Hogan was united in marriage to Miss Letitia Whiteleather, of Os-naburg, this county, where she was born, being a daughter of Dr. Benjamin A. and Margaret (Criswell) Whiteleather. Mr. and Mrs. Hogan are the parents of eight children, namely: Thaddeus (employed in the engineering department of the Aultman shops), Ludwell, Russell Max, Paul, Martin, Robert and Luke.

Patrick Hogan, father of the subject, was born in Ireland, whence he came to the United States as a young man, and he died in Seneca county, New York, when Martin was but six months of age, his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Maloney, passing away a number of years later, leaving two sons—John and Martin J. Mr. Hogan is not formally identified with any religious body, but his family attend Trinity Lutheran church. In politics he is a stalwart supporter of the Democratic party, and fraternally is identified with the Royal Arcanum and the Knights of Pythias. He has achieved success through his own efforts and his life has been one of consecutive endeavor, while at all times he has commanded the confidence and regard of those with whom he has come in contact.

EDWIN CALERDINE is a native of the "right little, tight little isle" of England, having been born in Derbyshire, on the 6th of September, 1847, and being a son of Thomas and Sarah (Weston) Calerdine, of whose seven children four are living at the present time, namely: Thomas H., who is a resident of Cincinnati, this state; Edwin, who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Agnes, who is the wife of William Lyda, of Carroll county, Ohio; and Rebecca, who is the wife of Dr. John M. Crawford, of Minerva, concerning whom individual mention is made on another page of this work. The father of our subject was born in Derbyshire, England, in the town of Heanor, on the 21st of August, 1807, and was there reared and educated and as a youth he there learned the trade of lacemaker, which he followed as a vocation until 1868, when he emigrated with his family to the United States, coming to Carroll county, where he located on a farm, in company with his son John, who had previously come to this country and who is now deceased. There he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits for a number of years, after which he resided for a short interval in the village of East Rochester, that county, and since that time he has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Crawford, in Minerva. He has attained the advanced age of ninety-five years and has been active to a remarkable degree, having given his attention to work in his garden, in which he has taken much pride, until the last summer, when he found the work too onerous, though he is still hale and vigorous for one of his patriarchal age. In politics he has ever given his support to the Republican party from the time when he became a naturalized citizen and thus acquired the right of franchise, while he has been a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church for a long term of years. His devoted and cherished wife entered into eternal rest a number of years ago.

Edwin Calerdine, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was reared to maturity in his native land, where he completed his early education in a boarding school in the town of Mackworth, Derbyshire. As a young man he began a practical apprenticeship at the dry goods business, becoming a clerk in the establishment of Thomas Bunting, in the town of Heanor, England, where he was employed about four and one-half years, remaining in England about two years after his parents had come to the United States, whither he followed them in 1869, and he forthwith came to Minerva, this county, where he became associated with his brother, Thomas H., in the wholesale lace business, to which they continued to devote their attention until the autumn of 1872, when the enterprise had become one of such magnitude that it was found expedient to remove the headquarters to the city of Cincinnati, and there the business was conducted under the firm name of Calerdine Brothers & Company until 1895, when our subject disposed of his interest in the same to his brother, who has since continued the enterprise. Mr. Calerdine's object in thus selling his interest was that he might retire from so exacting and active business life, and he then returned to Minerva, where he effected the purchase of the dry goods business of T. F. Lentz & Son, together with the building in which the store is located. Two years later he admitted his son, Arthur F., to partnership, whereupon the present firm name was adopted, and they have since been associated in the conduct of the business, which is one of wide scope, trade being derived from a wide radius of country normally tributary to the town, while the stock of goods is exceptionally large and select for a village of the size. Fair and honorable business methods have been brought to bear in the enterprise, and thus the firm commands the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the community and secures a representative patronage. In politics Mr. Calerdine gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and while he was engaged in business in Cincinnati he was a member of the village council of Hartwell, the suburban town in which he maintained his home. Fraternally he is identified with Tubal Lodge No. 551, Free and Accepted Masons, of Minerva; Alliance Chapter No. 83, Royal Arch Masons, and has advanced to high degree in this time-honored fraternity, having taken the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite. He is a member of Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar; Emuth Grand Lodge of Perfection, in the same city; and Lake Erie Consistory of the Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in the city of Cleveland, where he also holds membership in Al Koran Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On the 21st of August, 1873, Mr. Calerdine was united in marriage to Miss Laura Messemore, of Minerva, and they are the parents of two children—Arthur F., who is associated with his father in business, as already noted, and who married Miss Olive Conkle, of Minerva; and Ethel, who remains at the parental home.

CLARENCE FRANK SCHILTZ, M. D., is of German descent. The first of the family to come to the United States was John Schiltz, the Doctor's grandfather, who landed at New York city in the year 1834. Thence he proceeded to Ohio, where he worked for some time on the Ohio canal, later engaging in shoemaking at the town of New Berlin. He married in Canton Miss Apolonia Huffman, a native of Germany, who came to America with her parents in 1836 and settled in Stark county, Ohio. John Schiltz spent the remainder of his life at New Berlin, dying there about the year 1869.

Frank Schiltz, son of John and Apolonia Schiltz, was born in the above town January 31, 1841, and is still an honored resident of the place. After obtaining the rudiments of an education in the village schools he took up the shoemaker's trade, in connection with which he also worked at intervals on the farm. At the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in Company A, Nineteenth Ohio Infantry, his captain being the late United States Senator Manderson, of Nebraska, and the colonel of the regiment Samuel Beatty, both of whom afterward became distinguished for gallant service in defense of the national union. Mr. Schiltz served in the Army of the Cumberland under General Thomas and took part in some of the most noted campaigns of the war, participating in many of the bloodiest battles, in one of which he was wounded in the right lung by a minie ball, which still remains in his body. After lying in a hospital one month he rejoined his command at Nashville, thence proceeded to Louisville and later to Camp Denison, from which place he was sent to a hospital at Cleveland for further treatment. After remaining under the physician's care about four months he was again permitted to join his regiment and from that time until his discharge at Columbus, Ohio, in 1865, he saw much active service, including the battles at Chattanooga and other places, besides much hard marching, which tested the endurance of a soldier not entirely recovered from a gunshot wound that would have resulted in the death of the great majority of men. In the latter part of the war he was detailed as a sharpshooter and as such did effective service, being exceedingly skillful in using the rifle. Leaving the army, he returned to his home and shortly thereafter was united in marriage with Miss Mary Amanda Bitzer, of New Berlin. For several years he ran a meat market in that town, but later engaged in the live stock business, which he carried on for some time with successful results. He still lives in New Berlin, and is widely and favorably known throughout the county as a man of good business ability and sterling worth.

Dr. Clarence F. Schiltz, son of Frank and Mary A. Schiltz, was born in New Berlin, Stark county, Ohio, on the 17th of February, 1877. After completing the common school course he engaged in teaching, which line of work he followed two years, and then began the study of medicine, a profession for which he had long manifested a decided preference. Entering the Ohio Medical University at Columbus, he prosecuted his studies with great assiduity until his graduation in 1900 and for eighteen months thereafter he did hospital work in that city, thus becoming familiar with the practice as well as the theory of his chosen calling. Severing his connection with the hospital, Dr. Schiltz formed a partnership with Dr. Halleck, of Bowling Green, Ohio, the firm thus constituted lasting about six months, when it was dissolved by the subject withdrawing and locating at Canton. The Doctor opened an office here in December, 1901, and in due time established a remunerative practice, which has constantly increased until he is now in command of as large a business as any of the younger physicians of the city. Dr. Schiltz has a strong analytical mind and his knowledge of the profession has been acquired by close, critical study and painstaking investigation under the direction of some of the best medical talent of the day. Few physicians in the same length of time have accomplished as much as he and none of similar experience are better grounded in the science of medicine or have a more promising future. He holds membership with the Stark County Academy of Medicine, the Canton Medical Society, the Ohio State Medical Society; also the Wood County Medical Society, and as a man belongs to that enterprising class of citizens who, having the public interest always in view, exerts a marked influence on the community. In his fraternal relations he is a Mason, belonging to McKinley Lodge No. 431, and in matters religious is a member of the Trinity Reformed church of Canton. Believing that every true citizen should, to a certain extent, be a politician, he has ever manifested an active interest in political affairs, being a Republican in all the word implies, and always ready to maintain the soundness of the principles he upholds. In November, 1902, he was elected coroner of Stark county on the Republican ticket for the term of two years. As a member of society the Doctor has the confidence and esteem of the community and possesses the rare faculty of winning and retaining warm personal friendship among those with whom he mingles.

Dr. Schiltz is a married man, and has an attractive home. His wife was formerly Miss Isabelle Williams, of Mt. Gilead, Ohio, and it was in that city their nuptials were celebrated on the 1st day of June, 1901. They have one child, Dorothy, born December 2, 1902.

HENRY E. SHERLOCK is a native of the Dominion of Canada, having been born in the beautiful city of Kingston, province of Ontario, on the 11th of November, 1864, and being of stanch Irish extraction in the agnatic line and of Scotch in the maternal line. His father, John M. Sherlock, was born in the state of Massachusetts, where he was reared to maturity, there learning the trade of tailor, while for the major portion of his active career he was a prosperous merchant tailor, though for a time he was identified with maritime interests, sailing on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence river. He died in Kingston, Ontario, in 1901, at the age of seventy-three years, having long maintained his home in that city, whither he removed from Massachusetts some years after his marriage. He was a son of Philip Sherlock, whose birth occurred in County Antrim, Ireland, whence he emigrated to America as a young man, taking up his abode in the city of Boston and passing the residue of his life in the Old Bay state. Elizabeth A. (Robson) Sherlock, the mother of the subject, was born in Ogdensburg, St. Lawrence county, New York, and she died in Kingston, Ontario, in 1891, at the age of sixty-three years. In the family were five sons and two daughters, of whom three of the former are living at the present time.

Henry E. Sherlock was reared to the age of twelve years in his native city, where he secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools. At the age noted he went to New York city, where he made his home with his brother Philip until 1878, in the meanwhile continuing his school work. He then returned to his home in Canada, and thereafter continued to reside in Kingston until 1881, when he joined his elder brother, William E., in Canton, where he likewise entered the employ of C. M. Miller, who was then operating what was known as the Pioneer foundry, and here the subject learned the various details and processes of the foundry business. Later he was in the employ of the firm of Nobles & Sherlock, successors to Mr. Miller, the junior member of the firm being our subject's brother, and upon the organization of the stock company and its incorporation under the title of the Novelty Iron Works, Henry E. Sherlock became identified with the same, having been chosen secretary and treasurer of the company in 1893, and having since been incumbent of this position, in which he has been indefatigable in promoting the upbuilding of the extensive enterprise controlled. In his political adherency Mr. Sherlock is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and while ever loyal to the duties of citizenship, he has never sought or desired official preferment of a public nature. His religious views are in practical harmony with the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose faith he was reared. Fraternally he holds affiliation with the Freemasons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and he is well known and highly esteemed in both business and social circles in the city of his home.

On the 12th of November, 1889, Mr. Sherlock was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude A. Arment, who was born and reared in Stark county, being a daughter of H. W. Arment, a representative citizen of Canton, and a former official of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Sherlock have three children, namely: Helen G., Grace E. and Herbert A.

JOSEPH MARCHAND, postmaster of the town named in honor of his family, and one of the leading citizens of Jackson township, is a native of Summit county, Ohio, and the son of Joseph and Catherine (Pierson) Marchand, the father born in France, the mother in Stark county, Ohio. Frances Marchand, the subject's paternal grandfather, was born and reared in France, but in 1828 came to the United States and settled in Summit county, Ohio, where he lived until his removal to the county of Stark about the year 1835. His wife, whom he married in the old country, was Mary Friar. On coming to this county Mr. Marchand purchased eighty acres of land in Jackson township, which was subsequently increased by a like area, and on this place was afterwards located the village of Marchand, so named in compliment to the family. Joseph Marchand, the subject's father, erected the first house on the town site and shortly thereafter engaged in the grain business, also opened a sample room. In due time a postoffice was established and being in the midst of a fine agricultural district, the village grew apace, finally becoming the chief trading point for a large area of territory. Mr. Marchand was the moving spirit of the place and did much to advertise its advantages to the world. He was an enterprising business man, bought and shipped large quantities of grain and gained much more than local repute in business circles throughout the county and in certain parts of the state. He died at a good old age, in 1889, being survived by his wife, who is now a remarkably well preserved woman of seventy-one years. Joseph and Catherine Marchand had a family of twelve children, one dying in infancy and one when three years old, while ten are still living.

Joseph Marchand, Jr., whose name furnishes the caption of this article, was born October 31, 1850, in the county of Summit, and at the age of three years was brought by his parents to his present place of abode in Stark county. He received a good education in the public schools, but obtained his practical training as his father's assistant in the grain business, subsequently, when a young man, engaging in the mercantile trade at Marchand upon his own responsibility. Mr. Marchand continued the business for eleven consecutive years and was reasonably successful in a financial way, having gained a large and lucrative patronage, which he held by honorable methods and fair dealing. In 1892 he was appointed by President Cleveland postmaster of Marchand and held the position four years, proving a most efficient and obliging public servant. He was reappointed in 1898, and is the present incumbent. Politically Mr. Marchand is a Democrat, and for a number of years past has been an influential factor in local affairs, as well as an active worker in state and national campaigns. He served the people of his town very acceptably as health officer and in other capacities has proven himself a valuable adjunct to the community in promoting its material prosperity.

In March, 1873, Mr. Marchand and Miss Catherine Kintzmann were united in the bonds of wedlock, the ceremony being solemnized according to the impressive ritual service of the Roman Catholic church, of which both are communicants. Mrs. Marchand is a native of New York and the daughter of Conrad and Adeline (Baker) Kintzmann, the father born in Germany and the mother in the state of New York. These parents became residents of Stark county in 1858 and it was here that Mr. Kintzmann's death occurred in 1883. Mrs. Kintzmann is still living, having reached the age of seventy years, and of her eight children but one is deceased. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Marchand has been blessed with six children, whose names are as follows: Clementine C., Joseph J., Clara S., Oliver J., Arthur J. and Leo C. As already stated, the subject and his good wife were born and reared in the Catholic church and have ever remained loyal to its sublime precepts and time-honored traditions. They are respected by a large circle of warm friends in the community and are deservedly popular wherever known.

HENRY H. SNYDER comes of an old Pennsylvania family and traces his genealogy to an early period in the old historic county of Lancaster, where his ancestors settled many years ago. Jacob Snyder, his paternal grandfather, was born and reared in that county and there married Miss Margaret Swanger, whose antecedents were also among the early settlers of the Keystone state. About the year 1829 this couple disposed of their interests in Pennsylvania and came to Stark county, Ohio, settling on the farm in Tuscarawas township which the subject now owns. Mr. Snyder was a farmer and as such met with reasonable success in the accumulation of material wealth, besides earning for himself an honorable name as a neighbor and enterprising public spirited man of affairs. In politics he was a Democrat of the most orthodox stamp and appears to have entertained strong and positive convictions, not only on political matters but upon every subject to which he gave consideration. He reared a family of eight children, all now deceased, and, with his good wife, died a number of years ago on the place he settled when this part of the state was a new and comparatively undeveloped country.

Among the children of Jacob and Margaret Snyder was an only son by the name of Samuel, whose birth occurred in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, October 12, 1812. He spent the first seventeen years of his life in his native state and then accompanied his parents to Stark county, Ohio, where he was reared to manhood as a tiller of the soil, which vocation he ever afterwards followed. When a young man he entered the marriage relation with Miss Mary Bretz, who was also born in the county of Lancaster, and by her became the father of seven children, of whom John, Elias and Henry H. grew to maturity, the others dying in early childhood. Samuel Snyder was for many years a successful agriculturist and well-known citizen of Tuscarawas township and took an active interest in the growth and development of the community in which he lived. Reared a Democrat, he always remained loyal to his party, but aside from such minor positions as school director he never held nor sought public office, being content to spend his life as an honest, industrious husbandman and to be known merely as a private citizen. He was a man of substantial worth, possessed the confidence of the people with whom he mingled and his death, which occurred about the year 1883, was deeply deplored not only by his friends and neighbors but by the people of Tuscarawas township in general.

Henry H. Snyder was born in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, Ohio, October 22, 1851. Blessed with sound body and strong mental powers, he grew up on the farm a fine specimen of well developed American boyhood and from his excellent parents early received the bent of mind which shaped for good his subsequent course of life. In the winter months he pursued his studies in the district schools and the rest of the year assisted his father with the labors of the farm, becoming while still a youth quite an adept in the use of all kinds of agricultural implements. Reared to this kind of labor, he very naturally turned his attention when a young man to farming and from that time to the present he has followed his chosen calling in the township of his birth, being now the owner of the old homestead, on which both his father and grandfather lived in days gone by. This place, consisting of eighty acres, is highly cultivated and with its substantial buildings and other evidences of prosperity attests the well-directed efforts and excellent management with which its enterprising owner has ever prosecuted the labor of his hands. He follows general farming, raises considerable live stock, and everything to which he devotes his attention appears to result greatly to his pecuniary profit.

In his political affiliations Mr. Snyder is decidedly a Democrat and since his twenty-first year has been an earnest worker for the party and an influential factor in local affairs. Notwithstanding the fact that Tuscarawas township has long been reliably Republican by a large majority, he has been several times elected to the office of trustee, which position he now holds and in the discharge of the duties of which he has demonstrated ability and devotion to the public welfare that have won him the unbounded confidence of the people whom he served. His last election was by one of the largest votes ever given a candidate in this part of the county and the safe, conservative and straightforward business manner with which he has looked after the people's interest shows him a man of much more than ordinary wisdom and judgment whose highest aim has ever been to do his duty well and faithfully and prove himself worthy of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens.

On the 31st day of October, 1878, Mr. Snyder was happily married to Miss Martha J. Besh, daughter of Jacob and Lavina Besh, of Stark county, the union resulting in the birth of two children, Ida May and Grace E. Mr. Snyder and family belong to the Reformed church and for many years past he has held various official positions in the local congregation with which he is identified, being one of the elders at the present time, a station second in importance to that of the ministry.

SAMUEL M. ANDERSON is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, on the 8th of September, 1865, and he was reared to manhood in Leechburg, Armstrong county, that state, while his educational training was received in the public schools, his studies being prosecuted during the winter terms from the time he was about fourteen years of age, while he worked during the summer seasons. In Leechburg he learned the trade of steel treating, and there he continued to reside until 1893, when he came to Canton, where he secured employment in the Canton rolling mill, in which he followed his trade until July, 1901, while in February of the following year he was chosen to his present position, since which time he has devoted his attention entirely to the duties devolving upon him as secretary of the Ohio Mica Company. In politics he exercises his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party and his religious faith is that of the United Presbyterian church, while fraternally he is a member of Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons.

Samuel B. Anderson, father of the subject, was a native of Pennsylvania, where he passed his entire life, having been engaged in farming until his removal to Leechburg, after which he was engaged in general work until his death, which occurred in the year 1881. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Hoover, was born near historic old Valley Forge, whence her parents removed to western Pennsylvania when she was a child. She died in Canton October 1, 1901, being survived by seven children. Thomas Anderson, grandfather of the subject, was born in Scotland, and his wife was a native of Ireland. Upon coming to the United States they located in Pennsylvania, both having died in Clyde, Indiana county, that state.

In the city of Canton, on the 3d of February, 1896, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Glenn, who was born here, being a daughter of James and Ann Glenn. The subject and his wife have two daughters and one son—Ruth, May and Thomas.

J. J. ZUMBER, the present efficient trustee of Jackson township, and one of the popular men of the thriving little town in which he resides, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born on the 5th day of February, 1858. The Zumber family had its origin in Germany, but of its early history but little is known save that the name has always been a worthy one, and those bearing it have done nothing to impair its luster or bring it into discredit. Andrew and Tracy Zumber, the subject's parents, were born and reared in Germany, but about the year 1850 bade farewell to the fatherland and came to the United States, settling in Stark county, Ohio, where the father's death occurred in 1866 and the mother's four years later. For some years after locating in this county Andrew Zumber was engaged in the manufacture of lime and it was while attending to one of his kilns that he accidentally lost his life in the year referred to above. To Andrew and Tracy Zumber seven children were born, of whom four are living, the subject of this review being the oldest of the family.

J. J. Zumber was reared to manhood in the county of his birth and until twenty-two years of age worked on a farm, meanwhile during his minority attending the public schools and acquiring a good practical education. Becoming dissatisfied with agriculture or rather the way he was obliged to pursue it, he gave up farming and for three years thereafter was employed in a steel mill at Canton, during which time he became not only a capable but a very skillful workman. Severing his connection with this establishment, he returned to Jackson township and began the manufacture of lumber, which line of business he carried on for some time, also devoted his attention at the proper seasons to cider making, from which he realized considerable profit. In the year 1898 Mr. Zumber opened a sample room in the village of Marchand and to this he has since given his attention, his place being an orderly and favorite resort, entirely free from the objectionable features which often bring the friendly social glass into disrepute.

Mr. Zumber, on the 8th day of November, 1883, was united in marriage with Miss Louise Marchand, daughter of Joseph Marchand, the founder of the town, and for a number of years its most prominent business man. To Mr. and Mrs. Zumber have been born three children, one of whom, Charlotte, is not living; the other two are Flora and Olive, both bright and interesting young ladies, in whom their parents have centered many fond hopes for the future. In his political affiliations the subject is an ardent Democrat and as such has contributed not a little to his party's success in this county, being a safe and reliable adviser, as well as an active worker in the ranks and a trusted leader in local affairs. In recognition of valuable services rendered the party, as well as by reason of

of his eminent fitness for the position, he was elected in 1898 trustee of Jackson township, which office he has filled in an able and satisfactory manner to the present time, being now on his fifth year of service.

GEORGE E. McDONALD.—In the agnatic line Mr. McDonald comes of stanch old Scottish lineage, while on the maternal side the ancestry is of Scotch-Irish extraction, and in him abound those sterling attributes of character which such genealogy implies. He is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the village of Wellsville, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 2d of November, 1849, and having been reared to the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the farm. To his parents, John C. and Nancy P. (Douglas) McDonald, five children were born. He is the eldest of the surviving children, and the other three are as follows: Patterson, who is a resident of the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Morris Taylor, of East Rochester, Columbiana county; and John, who is likewise a resident of that place. The father of our subject was born in Scotland in the year 1820, and as a lad of ten years he came to America with his parents, who located in Canada, where he was reared to maturity and where he learned the trade of ship carpenter, to which he there devoted his attention until 1840, when he came to the United States and located in Wellsville, this state, where he became superintendent of a boat-building company and also had charge of an extensive saw-milling business, in which connection he furnished much of the sawed lumber utilized in the building of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad. About 1857 he purchased a farm near Wellsville and there he continued to reside until 1861, when he removed to a farm near East Rochester, where he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1894, when he retired from active life and took up his residence in the village mentioned, where he has since made his home. About fifteen years ago he lost the sight of one of his eyes and in December, 1901, the sight of the other eye failed and he is now totally blind, but is resigned to the affliction which so shadows his declining years. He is a stanch Republican in his political proclivities and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, in which he has served as elder for nearly two score years, being a man of the most inflexible integrity and one who has ever held the high regard of his fellow men. His devoted and cherished wife was born in Madison township, Columbiana county, Ohio, of Scotch-Irish parentage, and she is still living in her seventy-seventh year, being likewise a devoted member of the Presbyterian church, in whose work she took an active part for many years.

George E. McDonald, the immediate subject of this review, was reared on the home farm, and, being the eldest child, he early began to devote the major portion of his time to assisting in the work of the homestead, so that his educational opportunities were somewhat curtailed, though in the district schools he laid the foundation for that broad and practical fund of knowledge which he has since gained in the valuable school of experience and by personal application. He continued to remain on the home farm until he had attained the age of twenty-four years, when he purchased eighty acres of land from his father and began his independent business career. He continued to follow agricultural pursuits on this farm about eight years, and then, after the death of his wife, sold the farm and came to Minerva, Stark county, where he established himself in the shoe business, in which he was successfully engaged for a period of fourteen years. He disposed of the business in 1896. In 1898 Mr. McDonald was appointed postmaster of Minerva and since that time has continued incumbent of this position, having done much to improve the service and facilities of the office and having gained the unqualified endorsement and commendation of the people of the community. In politics Mr. McDonald has ever given a stanch and uncompromising support to the principles and policies of the Republican party and has taken an active interest in its cause. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of the Maccabees.

In 1872 Mr. McDonald was united in marriage to Miss Permelia Hostetter, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of Samuel Hostetter, a member of one of the honored pioneer families of this section of the state. Of this union two children were born, namely: Earl, who is engaged in the practice of dentistry in the city of Coshocton, Ohio; and Nannie, who is the wife of Professor E. L. Woodward, who is part owner of the Reno School in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and an able instructor in the institution. Mrs. McDonald was summoned into eternal rest in November, 1881, and on the 20th of June, 1883, the subject consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Ella Zembower, of Minerva, a daughter of the late John Zembower, who was a well known and highly honored carpenter and builder of this place. Of this union one child has been born, Frank T., who remains at the parental home.

CHARLES EDWIN JARVIS is a native of New York and the son of Edwin and Lydia (Gross) Jarvis, both parents born and reared in the Empire state. The family is an old and eminently respectable one and since 1849 the name has been quite familiar in Stark county, especially in Massillon and the territory adjacent thereto. By occupation Edwin Jarvis was a tinner, which trade he learned in his native state when a young man and which he continued to follow in Massillon, Ohio, from 1849 until his death, a number of years later. He was a man of considerable local prominence, a leader of the Republican party in Massillon and for some time served as city clerk, also filled the office of township clerk, besides holding other positions of minor importance, in all of which he demonstrated good business ability and manifested an ardent desire to prove himself worthy the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens. To Edwin and Lydia Jarvis were born five children, three of whom survive, the subject of this review being the fifth of the family.

Charles Edwin Jarvis was born on the 23d day of October, 1843, and six years later was brought by his parents to Stark county, Ohio, since which time he has made his home near Massillon. The common schools afforded him the means of a fair English education, but, like many other loyal sons of the North, he was not permitted to finish his studies by reason of his services being required to assist in crushing the great rebellion. In April, 1864, he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and shortly after entering the service proceeded to the front, where he bore his part as a brave and fearless defender of the Union until the expiration of his period of enlistment, retiring from the army with a record bright with duty faithfully performed. An older brother of the subject, Dwight Jarvis, was one of the first men of Stark county to respond to the President's call for volunteers, enlisting in 1861 in the Thirteenth Ohio Infantry, of which he afterwards became colonel, and as such continued to the end of the war, winning distinguished honors on some of the bloodiest battlefields of the Southland. Colonel Jarvis is now United States appraiser of customs at Tampa, Florida, having been appointed to the post by President McKinley, between whom and himself a warm personal friendship had long existed.

After the war Charles E. Jarvis returned to Stark county and about 1866 engaged in the dairy business near Massillon, which he carried on with gratifying success during the succeeding sixteen years. He ran the first milk wagon in the city and was extensively patronized, realizing from his dairy large profits, which from time to time were judiciously invested in real estate, which increased greatly in value as the years went by. In addition to dairying he devoted considerable attention to real estate business in Massillon, buying and selling farm lands and city property quite extensively, besides effecting a number of sales and trades for other parties, in all of which he received liberal commissions. Realizing the value of land as an investment, Mr. Jarvis in 1884 purchased a beautiful farm of one hundred and ten acres in Perry township and a few years later increased his home place by an addition of seventy-five acres, nearly all of which has been reduced to a high state of cultivation, besides being greatly improved by a commodious modern residence, substantial barns and good out-buildings. From time to time he has laid out and sold at liberal prices a number of lots, one of his last deals in this direction being in 1893, when he disposed of an addition of thirty-one lots to S. Burd, one of the leading real estate dealers in the city of Massillon.

For a number of years past Mr. Jarvis has devoted his attention largely to general agriculture and as a farmer ranks with the most enterprising and successful in the county of Stark. In conjunction with tilling the soil he carries on stock raising, in which branch of husbandry he has also been highly successful, in fact, all of his business ventures have returned him handsome profits, so much so, indeed, that he is today regarded as one of the financially strong men of the township in which he resides. From 1866 to the present time he has steadily added to his possessions, purchasing tract after tract from his savings and accumulations until he is now not only one of the large land owners of Perry township, but also commands a fortune independent of his real estate.

On October 7, 1880, Mr. Jarvis was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Johnson, of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, a union blessed with four children, whose names are Helen Fay, Annie S., Sarah and Mary F. Politically Mr. Jarvis is an ardent Republican and for many years his influence has contributed materially to his party's success in municipal, township and county affairs. He served four years as a member of the Massillon city council, during two of which he was president of the body, and he is now on his second term as township trustee, having first entered the office by appointment to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Castleman, succeeding himself in two elections following by the votes of the people. Mr. Jarvis is a gentleman of substantial worth and sterling integrity, enterprising in all he undertakes and as a citizen has so deported himself as to gain the esteem and good will of the public. In private life his character has always been unassailable, and in matters of business he is recognized as possessing that maturity of judgment, clearness of perception and wise forethought which seldom fail of winning the largest measure of success.

BENJAMIN DOLL.—The subject of this sketch is a native of Stark county and a descendant of two of the earliest pioneer families of this part of the state. His father, John Doll, was born in York City, Pennsylvania, and in 1814 came with his parents to Stark county, locating in what is now Osnaburg township when the present flourishing city of Canton was a mere backwoods hamlet. The subject's paternal grandfather, who also went by the name of John Doll, came from Switzerland and settled in York City, Pennsylvania, in colonial times and there married a Miss Kitt, whose ancestors were among the earliest white people in that part of the state. By occupation John Doll, Sr., was a farmer. He and his son John stood the draft in the war of 1812, as did two of his brothers, all but one of the number escaping military service. At that time there was nothing at Canton except a block house, in which a few scattered settlers took refuge when dangers from Indian warfare threatened. Among the pioneers who thus sought protection was one David Risher, a native of Germany, who moved his family to Stark county as early as 1809, having formerly lived in the state of Maryland, where he married a Miss Springer. Among the children of Mr. Risher was a daughter by the name of Elizabeth, who was about nine years old when her parents made a home in the wilderness of what has since been known as the township of Canton. She grew to maturity amid the stirring scenes of pioneer times and when a young woman became the wife of John Doll, Jr., to whom she bore fifteen children, the subject of this sketch being the fifth in order of birth. Of this large family that formerly gathered around the hearthstone but three are now living, viz: Isaac, Eli and Benjamin, all well known and highly respected citizens of Stark county. One of the brothers, George Doll, and his son Frank lost their lives in the great flood and tidal wave that destroyed the city of Galveston some years ago and another brother by the name of Frank was shot and killed at Alma, Arizona, having been postmaster of that town at the time of his death. All of the Doll brothers figured in the early history of California and other territories and were active participants in the many thrilling experiences and dangerous episodes which characterized the pioneer period of the far West. Josiah and Joseph died in California and after spending three and a half years on the Pacific coast the subject returned to Ohio, fully satisfied with his experience in that far-away and at that time not very inviting country.

John Doll, Jr., became quite a successful agriculturist and owned a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Stark county, on which his death occurred in 1867, his wife dying three years after that date. He was a good man and a substantial citizen and bore no inconsiderable part in the growth and development of the township in which he settled. He was a fine type of the strong, vigorous, resourceful pioneer of the early day and his memory will long be cherished as one of the forerunners of civilization in what has since become one of the most advanced and prosperous sections of eastern Ohio.

Benjamin Doll, whose name introduces this review, was born in Osnaburg township, Stark county, July 27, 1827, and from that date to the present time has spent the greater part of his life at no great distance from the scene of his birth. The country was by no means fully developed when he was a youth and his earliest practical experiences consisted of hard work in the woods and fields, assisting to clear the home farm, cultivate the soil and harvest the crops. Meantime, as opportunities afforded, he attended the old-fashioned subscription schools of the time and later, when a young man, he thought to acquire a fortune in the far West, whither so many people during 1849-50 had gone in quest of gold. As already stated, he spent three and a half years beyond the Rockies, at the expiration of which time he returned to Ohio, not much better off in the matter of worldly wealth, but far richer in the rugged experiences which had a decided influence in developing the sturdy elements of his nature and teaching him the important lessons of self-reliance. On returning to Stark county Mr. Doll engaged in farming, which vocation he has since pursued with marked success, owning at this time a finely situated place of one hundred and forty-nine acres in Perry township, besides other valuable property, every dollar's worth of which is the result of his own labor and management. Mr. Doll's home lies about two miles south of the business center of Massillon and the farm is admirably adapted to all the crops raised in this section of the state. He has not been sparing of his means in making his home beautiful and attractive, as his buildings and other improvements attest, and as an agriculturist he has long ranged with the most enterprising and progressive men of his township in which he lives.

Years ago Mr. Doll was a Whig in politics and while in California he became what was known as a "Know Nothing." Upon the organization of the Republican party he accepted its principles and from that time to the present has been one of its most ardent supporters, although not a partisan nor an aspirant for official honors. He has been quite active in promoting organized efforts for the advancement of agriculture, being a leading member of the Grange, or Patrons of Husbandry.

Mr. Doll's first marriage was solemnized on the 18th day of September, 1856, with Miss Catherine Fisher, of Stark county, daughter of Captain Jacob Fisher, of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, one of the early settlers of Stark. Mrs. Doll bore her husband eight children and departed this life in 1875, deeply lamented by her immediate family and highly respected by the people of the community. Following are the names of the sons and daughters born of this union: Josiah, Flora, Dennison, Logan, Melville, Cora, Albert and Kent. Two years after the death of his first wife Mr. Doll married his present companion, who bore the maiden name of Mary Ann Jefferson. Mrs. Doll was born in Michigan, but since her seventh year has lived in Stark county, being well known and much esteemed by all with whom she is acquainted. Mr. Doll and wife are members of the Baptist church and the sincerity of their profession has always been above criticism. They are excellent neighbors, loyal in their friendships, and by correct living have won a warm place in the esteem and love of the people with whom they associate.

WILLIAM O. WERNITZ.—As the name implies, Mr. Wernitz comes of staunch German lineage in the agnatic branch, and he was born in the village of Osnaburg, Stark county, on the 24th of May, 1860, being a son of William and Sarah Ann (Plum) Wernitz, the former of whom was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1814. He was there reared to the age of nineteen years and then, in 1833, he came as a pioneer to Stark county, settling in the village of Osnaburg, where he engaged in the buying of live stock, which, in the early days, he drove through to the market in Philadelphia. In Osnaburg was solemnized his marriage to Miss Plum, who was born in Lebanon, Warren county, Ohio, whence she came with her parents to Stark county when twelve years of age. Her father, Philip Plum, was born in Pennsylvania, and became one of the honored pioneers of Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. Mrs. Wernitz, who was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, was summoned into eternal rest on the 22d of October, 1877, her husband surviving her by more than a score of years and passing away on the 5th of February, 1889. He was originally a Whig in politics, but later espoused the cause of the Republican party, at the time of its inception, and thereafter he continued an ardent advocate of its principles, while he was a man of inflexible integrity and ever loyal and sincere in all the relations of life.

William O. Wernitz, the immediate subject of this review, received his educational discipline in the public schools and at an early age became a teacher in the schools of this county, devoting his attention to this profession for a period of nine years, while he was later superintendent of the Osnaburg schools, being incumbent of this position until 1891, when he came to Canton and began reading law in the office of the firm of Clark & Ambler, later being matriculated in the Cincinnati Law School, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1893 and coming forth well equipped for the active work of his chosen profession, as he had been a close and appreciative student and become thoroughly informed in the minutiae of the law, while his active career at the bar has demonstrated his facility in the application of his knowledge, and he has gained a high reputation as an able advocate and counselor. Mr. Werntz was admitted to the bar of Stark county on the 1st of June, 1893, and forthwith established himself in practice in the city of Canton, where his novitiate was of brief duration, recognition of his ability and devotion to his profession soon being shown, so that he has gained an excellent clientage of representative character, his practice being of a general character. In politics, while never an aspirant for office, Mr. Werntz has given a stanch allegiance to the Republican party and has been an active worker in its cause in a local way, and he holds membership in the Koontz Memorial church in Canton. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In his native town of Osnaburg in 1886 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Werntz to Miss Sally H. Sausser, a well known resident, who died in 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Werntz have one daughter, Georgia Lucille.

J. R. LAWRENCE.—The fatherland is worthily represented by the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this biographical review. Although of foreign birth he is thoroughly American in all his tastes and tendencies and retains but a faint remembrance of his native heath, having been brought to the United States when about three years of age. J. R. Lawrence was born in Berlin, Germany, in the year 1841 and is one of two children whose parents were Philip and Catherine (Hartz) Lawrence. Philip Lawrence and family left their native land about the year 1844 and coming to the United States settled in Stark county, Ohio, where he spent the remainder of his life as an industrious and fairly successful tiller of the soil.

Of the Lawrence family the subject of this review is the only living representative. He was reared on the home farm in Stark county, received his education in the common schools and when old enough to chose a vocation of his own selected agriculture as the one best suited to his tastes and inclinations. Mr. Lawrence was a young man of about twenty when the great Civil war broke out and feeling it his duty to aid the government in its extremity, he enlisted in 1862 in Company A, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Infantry, with which he served with an honorable record for a period of three years. He bore his full share of the hardships and dangers through which his command passed, took part in a number of hard-fought battles, including the various engagements of the Atlanta campaign, and had the honor of accompanying General Sherman on the celebrated march to the sea, serving a part of the time as a member of the One Hundred and Fourth United States Band. Returning home after the cessation of hostilities, Mr. Lawrence resumed the pursuit of agriculture, which he has since carried on with a large measure of success, achieving honorable repute as an intelligent and progressive farmer and acquiring a fortune of sufficient magnitude to place him in independent circumstances.

Mr. Lawrence's place, which consists of one hundred and seventy acres of fertile land, is admirably situated for agriculture and live stock purposes and he has spared no pains nor expense in bringing it to the advanced state of cultivation for which it has long been noted. He is a scientific farmer, making a careful study of the nature of soils and their adaptability to the different crops raised, and he has always reaped abundantly from the time and labor expended upon his fields. By fertilization and judicious rotation of crops he has not only retained the original fertility of his land but greatly enhanced its productiveness and through the instrumentality of modern methods his income has steadily increased with each recurring year. It is not assuming too much to claim for Mr. Lawrence distinctive precedence as a breeder and raiser of fine live stock, a business to which he has devoted especial attention for over thirty years. He is among the leading stock men of Stark county and perhaps is without a superior in the state as a judge of the merits of high-grade animals such as he raises. In cattle his special breed is the shorthorns, of which he now has quite a large herd of very valuable animals, among the number being a fine heifer recently imported from Scotland, for which he paid the sum of five hundred dollars. Mr. Lawrence has been the means of introducing a superior breed of live stock among the farmers of his section and is entitled to great credit for his activity in this important branch of industry. Not only has he taken an active interest in raising cattle, but as a breeder of fine Percheron horses he has long enjoyed much more than local reputation. He has made a careful study of this particular breed and wherever his animals have been exhibited they have invariably taken high honors. Their superiority over other breeds has been so apparent as to create a great demand for them, in consequence of which Mr. Lawrence has never experienced any difficulty in disposing of his horses at fancy prices. Indeed the greater part of his income is derived from the sale of live stock, his cattle and horses alone having been the means of accumulating a fortune of such proportions as to win him a place among the wealthy and enterprising farmers of Stark county.

Mr. Lawrence has long maintained a lively interest in advanced agricultural methods and to this end has taken an active part in agricultural societies, doing all within his power to promote their efficiency as a means of improving the farmer's condition, materially, socially and morally. Believing farming to be one of the noblest as well as one of the most useful of vocations, he has by his influence and co-operation done as much as any other man in the community to foster high ideals among the tillers of the soil and inspire them with a proper conception of the dignity of their calling. He has always stood for progress and, being a man of broad ideas and enterprising spirit, it is but natural that he should become the leader that he is in all that relates to modern improvements and advanced thought in agriculture. For a number of years he has been a member of the county agricultural board and by reason of his peculiar fitness for the position, he is invariably put in charge of the live stock department when the society holds its meetings.

In his political affiliations Mr. Lawrence was originally a decided Republican and for years was an active worker in his party. He defended his opinions intelligently and earnestly and during the progress of campaigns rendered valuable service to the ticket, both as a judicious counsellor and an active worker. Recently, however, he has refused to be bound by party ties, and is now what may be termed an independent. He is also a strong, uncompromising advocate of temperance reform and does all within his power to check the liquor traffic, which he justly considers the crying evil of the day.

In matters religious Mr. Lawrence claims the right of private judgment and is liberal in all the term implies. While not denying the wholesome moral influence of the church as a factor in civilization, he has never seen fit to accept its doctrines and dogmas and he reads and criticizes the Scriptures as he would any other literary production. His moral code includes the axiom "Do all the good you can in this world and live so as to merit the approval of your conscience and the commendation of your fellow man," a most excellent and time-honored rule of life. As a citizen Mr. Lawrence keeps fully abreast the times and discharges his duties as becomes a true lover of his country and his kind.

Mr. Lawrence was married, in the year 1866, to Miss Elizabeth Eschleman, of Stark county, who has borne him eleven children, namely: Lamamora; Abraham L.; Elsie, wife of Harley Foust; Eva; Ohio; Cora, wife of Ed McFadin; Chauncey, Jessie, Nettie, Portia and Columbus I.

JAY M. COGAN was born on the old homestead farm, in Bethlehem township, this county, on the 7th of February, 1865, being a son of Loomis and Leah (Young) Cogan, the former of whom was born in Pike township, this county, in 1837, while the latter was born in Bethlehem township in 1840. The father of the subject was reared under the scenes and influences of the pioneer epoch and has consecutively devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits from his youth up. He and his wife now reside on their fine farm in Bethlehem township and are numbered among the honored pioneer citizens of the county. Joseph and Sarah Cogan, the paternal grandparents of the subject, came from Pennsylvania to Stark county in the pioneer days, locating in Pike township, where they continued to reside until called upon to answer the inexorable summons of death. William Young, the maternal grandfather, came to this county at the time when this section was practically represented by a sylvan wilderness, and here he continued to be identified with the great basic art of agriculture until his demise. Several of his sons served with distinction in the war of the Rebellion, and the name is an honored one in this section of the state.

Jay M. Cogan was reared on the home farm and after availing himself of such advantages as were afforded in the district schools he became a student in the normal school, where he so thoroughly applied himself as to become eligible for pedagogic honors, having been a successful teacher in the public schools of the county for a period of five years, three of which were given to such work in the village of Navarre. In 1885 Mr. Cogan came to Canton and entered the law office of John C. Welty, under whose able direction he continued his technical reading and study until 1888, when, upon examination, he was duly admitted to the bar of the state. Thereafter he was associated in the active practice of his profession with his preceptor for a period of two years, at the expiration of which, in 1890, a distinctive recognition of his professional ability and acumen was given in his appointment to a position in the legal department of the C. Aultman Company, manufacturers of agricultural machinery, and in this department he made his services of such value to the company that he was made head of said department in 1897, retaining this incumbency until 1901, when he was advanced to his present office of secretary of the company, having, as a matter of course, the most important administrative and executive duties in his charge, while he has proved in his course the wisdom of the choice which gave him this important preferment. Ever true to the duties of citizenship, and taking a deep interest in all that conserves the welfare of his native county and home city, Mr. Cogan has never sought official preferment, and while he gives his support to the Democratic party in state and national affairs, he is liberal in local matters and is not constrained by strict partisan lines. He has been specially prominent and active in the work of the First United Brethren church, of which he is a trustee at the present time, as was he also when the organization was but a small mission, with its place of worship in an unpretentious building on Charles street. He was largely instrumental in securing the erection of the present fine church edifice at the corner of Tenth street and South Cleveland avenue, and has never abated his zeal in the work of the church. Mrs. Cogan is likewise a devoted member of this church and in full sympathy and accord with her husband.

In 1887 Mr. Cogan was united in marriage to Miss Loretta M. Williams, daughter of William B. Williams, of Canton, in which city she was reared and educated, and of this union have been born two children—Ruth and Ralph Warren.

GEORGE C. WOODS, D. D. S., is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, where he was born on the 5th of December, 1872, being a son of Isaac B. and Sarah J. (Masters) Woods, of whose ten children the eight surviving are as follows: Mary C., who is the wife of H. E. Tressler, of Canton, Stark county; Ada F., who is the wife of D. G. Orin, ex-superintendent of the public schools of Akron, Ohio, where they still reside; George C., the immediate subject of this sketch, and Elva L., Emma J., L. Pearl, James B. and Verne M., who still remain at the parental home. The father of the Doctor is likewise a native of Carroll county, where he was born in the year 1840, being a son of George and Catherine (Bardoll) Woods, who were numbered among the honored pioneers of the county. Isaac B. Woods was reared on the old homestead farm and after attending the district schools became a student in the normal school at Malvern, Carroll county, while later he continued his educational discipline in Harlem Springs College, in the town of the same name, also in Carroll county. After his marriage he purchased eighty acres of land in Harrison township, that county, buying the property of his wife's uncle, Cornelius Baxter, in whose home she had been reared, her father having died when she was a child. On this farm they have ever since maintained their home, the area of the homestead having later been augmented by the purchase of an adjoining tract of about sixty acres, while the place is one of the model farms of the county, having the best of improvements and being maintained under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Woods also purchased the old Woods homestead from the other heirs, and of this property he retained possession until the spring of 1902, when he sold the property. He has been a leader in the local ranks of the Republican party, in whose cause he has ever taken an active and intelligent interest. He has served as a member of the county central committee of his party and has been otherwise prominent in its work, while he has been called upon to serve in various local offices of trust and responsibility, including that of county commissioner, of which he was incumbent for seven years. In his younger days he was for several years a successful teacher in the public schools.

Isaac B. Woods also has the distinction of being an honored veteran of the war of the Rebellion. He was among the early volunteers from Carroll county, having enlisted in 1861 as a private in Company A, Eightieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he was in active service for three years, within which period he was a participant in a number of the most important and sanguinary battles incidental to that great internecine conflict, including the following engagements: Shiloh, Corinth, Pittsburg Landing, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and the entire Atlanta campaign, culminating in the famous battle at that point, being discharged just prior to the time when Sherman started forth on his ever memorable march "from Atlanta to the sea." Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, in which he has attained the Knight Templar degree, being a member of the commandery at Canton.

Dr. George C. Woods, the immediate subject of this review, was reared on the homestead farm and secured his early educational discipline in the public schools, while it is evident that he made effective use of the opportunities thus afforded, since for four years he was a successful and popular teacher in the district schools of this section. In 1897 he was matriculated in the dental department of the Ohio Medical University at Columbus, where he completed the prescribed course and was duly graduated in the spring of 1900, receiving the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery, and being well equipped for the work of his chosen profession, while he had further fortified himself in the line by working in the office of Dr. Stonebrook, a prominent dentist of Waynesburg, Stark county, during his college vacations. In the spring of 1901 Dr. Woods located in Magnolia, where he opened a well equipped and attractive office, and within the comparatively brief period of his residence here he has built up a remunerative practice, his clientage being of distinctively representative order. The Doctor is staunchly arrayed as a supporter of the Republican party and fraternally is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees, holding membership in Waynesburg Tent No. 29, at Waynesburg. He is a young man of ambition and progressive ideas, a close student of his profession and one whose further precedence is assured.

WILLIAM E. SHERLOCK belongs to that loyal class of American citizens who, while gaining individual success, also promote the public prosperity, and he has conferred honor and dignity on the city of his home not less by his well ordered business enterprises than by his upright personal career. The Novelty Iron Works, of which Mr. Sherlock is president, were originally owned by P. P. Bush, who was succeeded by the firm of Nobles & Sherlock, of which the junior member was he whose name appears above, while they had initiated their operations in a small foundry in Eighth street, where they conducted business until 1885, when they purchased the plant of the Novelty Iron Works from Mr. Bush and continued to be associated in the operation of the same until the death of Mr. Nobles in 1889. Mr. Sherlock then purchased the interest of his honored and deceased partner and later Charles Elmer and H. E. Sherlock were admitted to partnership, and the enterprise was thereafter conducted under the firm name of Sherlock, Elmer & Sherlock until the death of Mr. Elmer, which occurred in 1895. In the meanwhile the tract occupied previously by the lumber yards of James Weaver & Company had been purchased by the firm, whose plant was extended to cover the entire tract, thus utilizing about two acres of ground, located on Tuscarawas, Seventh and Eighth streets. Still later the site occupied by the Campbell Lumber Company was also secured and the fine plant still farther enlarged, so that its buildings and grounds now occupy about four and a half acres, while the structures are of substantial order and well designed for the uses to which they are applied, each department of the works being equipped with the best mechanical devices and accessories, while its operations are assigned to competent artisans in the various lines. In 1892, owing to the expansion of the business and the imperative demand for broader executive and capitalistic reinforcement, it was found expedient to organize a stock company, and this was effected by the incorporation of the Novelty Iron Company under the laws of the state of West Virginia, while later articles of incorporation were also secured under the laws of Ohio. The present executive corps of the company is as follows: William E. Sherlock, president; D. R. McCallum, vice-president; and Henry E. Sherlock, secretary and treasurer. The plant of the company was destroyed by fire in March, 1902, but was immediately rebuilt, with better buildings and the finest modern equipments throughout. The company manufactures under the trade-mark name of "Our Own," the finest type of boilers for hot water heating and for steam motive purposes, and the annual output is a large one and is constantly increasing, while the products of the concern are sold in the most diverse sections of the Union. The company maintains branch establishments in New York city, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis and San Francisco, which fact indicates to how thorough an extent the national trade territory is covered. The president of the company came to Canton in 1879 and entered the employ of C. M. Miller, proprietor of the Pioneer foundry, and he remained with this concern until he started in business on his own responsibility, while it may properly be said that he is the architect of his own fortune, his advancement having been the result of technical and business ability and the consecutive application of his energies to a definite purpose.

William E. Sherlock was born in a suburb of the city of Boston, Massachusetts, on the 31st of October, 1851, being a son of John M. and Elizabeth A. (Robson) Sherlock, the former of whom was born in the Old Bay state, while the latter was a native of Ogdensburg, St. Lawrence county, New York. The father of our subject was a merchant tailor by vocation, and for a time was identified with navigation interests on the Great Lakes. He died in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, in 1901, having attained the age of seventy-three years, his wife having been summoned into eternal rest in the same city in 1891, at which time she was sixty-three years of age. They became the parents of seven children, of whom three are living at the present time. Philip Sherlock, the grandfather of the subject, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, whence he came to the United States in his early manhood, locating in the city of Boston, Massachusetts, and passing the residue of his life in that state.

When William E. Sherlock was a child his parents removed from Massachusetts to Kingston, Ontario, where he was reared to maturity, having the advantages afforded by the excellent public schools of that attractive Canadian city, where also he learned in his youth the trade of molder. Later he was employed as a journeyman in various portions of the United States. At the time of attaining his legal majority he was residing in Shortsville, Ontario county, New York. On the 29th of January, 1884, in Kingston, Canada, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Sherlock to Miss Mabel C. Barrie, daughter of Robert and Fannie Barrie, of that city, the family being of Scottish lineage, and they became the parents of six children, all of whom are living except Elizabeth A., who died at the age of one week. The others are as follows: William E., Jr.; Jessie E., Fannie M., Robert E. and Phyllis L. In politics Mr. Sherlock gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

ELLIOTT M. JEROME is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Carroll county, Ohio, on the 9th of November, 1850, and being a son of James and Isabelle (Elliott) Jerome, of whose six children he is one of the two survivors, his brother John being a representative member of the bar of Stark county, and retaining his residence in the town of Minerva. The father of the subject was born in Bethany, West Virginia, in the year 1819, his father, who was of French lineage, having removed to that place from the eastern part of the state of Maryland, where the original American progenitor took up his abode in the colonial epoch of our national history, having emigrated hither from France and having undoubtedly been one of the Huguenots who fled their native land to escape the persecutions incidental to the revocation of the edict of Nantes. James Jerome was reared to maturity in West Virginia, where he learned the carpenter's trade, and as a young man he went to Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he was married, and where he remained until about 1845, when he came to Carroll county, Ohio, where he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, about six miles east of the village of Minerva, Stark county, and there he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1865, when he sold his farm and took up his residence in Minerva. In 1872 he was appointed postmaster of the village, of which office he continued incumbent for the long period of twelve years, under the administrations of Presidents Grant, Hayes and Garfield. During a portion of this time he also acted as mayor of the town, and later was again elected to this chief administrative office, in which he served for a total of sixteen years, a circumstance whose significance is at once evident, as showing the high esteem in which he was held in the community, and also indicating his distinctive executive ability, since his administrations were models of wise policy and proper economy. He was a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, and locally took an active part in furthering its cause. While residing on his farm in Carroll county he served for many years as justice of the peace. He was a worthy member of the Presbyterian church, in which he was a zealous worker, having held various official positions in the same. For a full half century prior to his death he was an appreciative and honored member of the Masonic fraternity. He died in February, 1902, in the fullness of years and well earned honors. His wife preceded him into eternal rest, her death having occurred in December, 1898. She was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1823, being a daughter of George Elliott, who was of Scotch-Irish extraction, and who emigrated to the United States from the north of Ireland.

Elliott M. Jerome was reared on the old homestead farm in Carroll county, and was educated in the public schools of the county, and at the college at Harlem Springs, Ohio. In 1867 he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in whose service he continued, in the capacity of station agent, and for a portion of the time as telegraph operator, for the long period of sixteen years, during the greater portion of which he was station agent here in Minerva. In 1883 Mr. Jerome accepted a position with the Union Express Company, becoming its agent in the city of Akron, this state, where he remained two years. In 1886 he returned to Minerva, and here again served as station agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad until 1893, when he resigned his position to accept that of cashier of the Bank of Minerva Company, which incumbency he has ever since retained, while through his able and discriminating methods as an executive and financier the success of the bank has been materially advanced, and it is known as one of the solid financial institutions of this section of the state, the deposits having increased in the past four years from one hundred and nine thousand dollars to three hundred and twenty-five thousand. Mr. Jerome has ever been staunchly arrayed in support of the Republican party, and he has been called upon to serve in offices of local trust and responsibility. For ten years he was a member of the town council of Minerva, while for four years he was incumbent of the office of township treasurer of Paris township, a fact that indicates his personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him by the people of the community, since the political complexion of the township is strongly Democratic. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church, and he is a member of its board of trustees. Fraternally he is identified with Tubal Lodge No. 551, Free and Accepted Masons, of Minerva; Alliance Chapter No. 83, Royal Arch Masons, of Alliance; Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar; Grand Lodge of Perfection No. 14, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, of Canton; and Al Koran Temple of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in the city of Cleveland. He takes a deep interest in the noble and time-honored fraternity, and has held various offices in the different bodies with which he is affiliated. He is also a member of Minerva Lodge No. 122, Knights of Pythias.

On the 21st of March, 1873, Mr. Jerome was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Clemans, who was born in Paris township, Stark county, being a daughter of the late Abram Clemans, who was one of the influential farmers of this section, and who passed his declining years in Minerva. To Mr. and Mrs. Jerome have been born five children, of whom four survive, namely: Percy, who is employed in the office of the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association in New York city, was graduated, in the spring of 1898, in the Springfield Training School, at Springfield, Massachusetts, and soon afterward accepted his present position; James, who is a civil engineer by profession; Bessie, who remains at the parental home, was graduated in the New England Conservatory of Music, in the city of Boston, and is an accomplished musician; and Helen, who received instruction in vocal music under an eminent private tutor in New York city, has been for a number of years, with her sister Bessie, engaged in the Presbyterian church in Minerva, having a voice of particularly fine timbre and fine cultivation.

THOMAS J. TAYLOR.—The name of the Diebold Safe & Lock Company is a familiar one throughout the length and breadth of the Union, and its products are to be found not only in the most diverse sections of this country but also in the majority of foreign lands, and through the magnificent enterprise of this concern the name of Canton has also been given still further celebrity, for here are located the great manufacturing works of this company. It is our privilege at this time to take briefly under review the career of the superintendent of this corporation's works, while he has been advanced to this office within but little more than a decade's association with the concern, which fact offers the best evidence of his ability and of the appreciative estimate placed upon the same and upon his services. Mr. Taylor arrived in Canton on the 4th of July, 1890, and it is needless to say that the attractions and diversions of the anniversary of our national independence were adequate to occupy his attention for that day, but within the same month he entered the employ of the company noted, in the capacity of draughtsman, being thus engaged for a period of three years, at the expiration of which he was promoted to the office of chief engineer, retaining this incumbency seven years, and then being shown a farther mark of appreciation, since at the annual meeting of the board of directors in January, 1901, he was chosen for his present responsible and exacting office of general superintendent, in which he has made a record creditable to himself and one that has inured to the benefit of the company in every way.

Mr. Taylor is a native of merrie old England, having been born in the town of Madeley, Shropshire, on the 6th of July, 1862, and there he was reared to man's estate, receiving his educational training in private institutions. Upon leaving school he secured a clerical position in the office of the freight and passenger department of the Great Western Railway, while later he took up the work of draughting, in which mechanic art he became an expert, devoting his attention to the same as a vocation consecutively until he was advanced from that department of work by the company with which he is at present employed. Mr. Taylor came to the United States in 1889, arriving in the city of New York in April of that year, and thereafter he visited various sections of the Union in search of a satisfactory location, and one in which he could put his abilities to the best use, and he finally en tour came to Canton as noted, while his subsequent career has been duly outlined in the preceding paragraph. In politics his views since coming to America are in harmony with the principles and policies advanced by the Republican party, while his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, he holding membership in the First church in Canton.

In this city on the 24th of December, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Taylor to Miss Anna J. Williams, who was born at Madeley, Shropshire, England, where she was reared, being a daughter of Alfred Williams, who is now living retired in this city, coming to America in 1888, and located in the city of Canton, he having been a cabinetmaker by vocation during the major portion of his active career. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have five children, namely: Cyril, Dorothy Jerrine, Harold W., Katharine, and Raymond James.

In conclusion we incorporate a brief record concerning the genealogy of the subject. His father, Charles Taylor, was a skilled metal worker in Shropshire, England, and he was of the fifth generation of the family to have been born in the town of Madeley, and there his death occurred in 1889, at the age of fifty-eight years. His father, who likewise bore the name of Charles, was an active participant during the entire Crimean war, as were also four of his brothers, one of whom later emigrated to the United States, where he passed the remainder of his life. The maiden name of the subject's mother was Ann Cooper, and she is still living, maintaining her home at Kidd's Grove, in south Staffordshire, England. Charles and Ann (Cooper) Taylor became the parents of ten children, of whom six are yet living, and of the number the subject and his younger brother, Albert A., who is an artist by profession, residing in East Liverpool, Ohio, are the only representatives of the family in America. Charles, Martha, Eliza and Mary still remain in England.

MRS. MARY A. COOK.—A business woman of marked ability, a resident of Canton from the time of her birth to the present time, and a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of Stark county, it is but consistent that Mrs. Cook, widow of the late Augustus Cook, be accorded specific recognition in this publication.

Mrs. Mary A. (Robin) Cook was born in the family home, which was at the time the last house on North Cherry street in Canton, and was here reared to womanhood, having received her educational discipline in the parochial and public schools. Her father conducted a grocery on the site of the present City National Bank, and as a girl, when not attending school, she assisted him in the store, so that she has had exceptional training in the line of practical business, while her knowledge has been put to effective use, as will appear in this context. On the 4th of October, 1880, she was united in marriage to Augustus Cook, who was born in New York city, in 1844, and who became a resident of Canton about 1870, and here passed the remainder of his life, having been for eighteen years in the employ of J. O. Palmer, in the carpet business. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Cook took up their residence on North Market street, where they remained until 1898, when they removed to the present home of Mrs. Cook, at 2105 North Cleveland avenue, where he died on the 29th of April, 1899. In politics he was an uncompromising Democrat, and his religious faith was that of the Catholic church. He was a communicant and worthy member of St. John's church, and was identified with the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association. Mr. Cook was a man of inflexible integrity and held the respect of all who knew him. Of the children of this union the following record is entered: Henry died in childhood; Dorothy J. is the wife of George M. Walters, of Canton, and Eva died in infancy.

After her marriage Mrs. Cook engaged in the hair-dressing business in Canton, at 419 North Market street, and seven years later she expanded the scope of her successful enterprise by the addition of a stock of millinery, and the two departments have since been continued, while she has built up a most gratifying business, catering to a large and representative patronage. She has been consecutively in business here for seventeen years, and was the first to engage in the hair-dressing business in the city, having acquired her knowledge of the art through the instruction of a traveling representative of the same. At the inception of her business Mrs. Cook showed her wisdom by effectively advertising her enterprise, and the result was that within the first three weeks she had netted a very satisfactory profit. Later on she took a more complete course in the art of hair-dressing, and she is now thoroughly competent in the line, her establishment being one which would be a credit to a metropolitan community. After the death of her mother, in 1880, Mrs. Cook purchased the old home farm, of forty-three acres, on North Cleveland avenue, and a portion of this she has since sold for building lots, still retaining twenty-six acres, on which is located her own attractive home. She has been a devoted communicant of St. John's Catholic church from her youth up.

George Robin, father of Mrs. Cook, was born in the town of Hombour, in the province of Loraine, France, on the 23d of April, 1804, and there he was reared and educated, learning the trade of stone-cutting in his youth. There also was solemnized his marriage to Miss Anna Fultz, and there were born to them two sons, John and Jacob. John, who was a clerk in mercantile establishments in Canton and Massillon in the early days, was a man of fine education, having completed his scholastic discipline in Europe, whither he returned for the purpose after the emigration of the family to America, and he was thoroughly conversant with seven different languages. When he started on his return to the United States he was accompanied by his paternal grandmother, but she died on the voyage and was buried at sea, being seventy-six years of age at the time. He was also in a critical condition while en route, having an abscess on his hip, but he finally reached his home, where his health continued delicate for some time. He finally accepted a position as bookkeeper in the store of Graham & Weaver in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was incumbent of this position at the time of his death, in 1859. Jacob, the younger brother, who likewise was born in France, died in Canton, in 1864, having here been united in marriage to Louisa Furnace.

About 1839 George Robin, in company with his wife and the two sons mentioned, emigrated from France to the United States and took up their abode in Stark county, the voyage being of more than fifty days' duration. They sailed from Havre, France, and landed in New York city, thence proceeding by rail to Buffalo, by steamboat on Lake Erie to Cleveland, thence by canal to Massillon and overland to Canton. Mr. Robin established his home on Plum street, between Third and Fourth streets, in a small brick house. He afterward secured a house on North Cherry street, paying for the same by contract work for the original owner, and there the family resided until 1852. In 1850, in company with a party of Canton men, Mr. Robin started for California, where the gold excitement was then at its height. He left his wife with three small children, and she protested greatly against his departure, and after reaching Wellsville, Ohio, he turned back and rejoined his family. Later in the same year, however, he accompanied another party on the long and weary overland trip to the Pacific coast. While en route across the plains they were attacked by the Indians, and the greater number of the party were killed. Mr. Robin escaped and pushed forward, finally reaching his destination, having endured manifold hardships and dangers. He remained in California two years, and was ill during the greater portion of the time, though for several months he was able to actively search for gold, being moderately successful in his efforts. He started for home by way of the isthmus route, and while on shipboard was attacked with scurvy, from which he partially recovered before reaching his home. The products of his labors in the gold fields he invested in the property where the City National Bank now stands, and there he engaged in the grocery business. Later he sold this property to Christian Oberly and retired from business, removing to a home at what are now Nos. 417-419 Market street. He then bought the forty-three-acre farm, on North Cleveland avenue, which his daughter, Mrs. Cook, subsequently purchased, as has already been noted, and he also became the owner of twelve acres on the west side of the city, a portion of which he platted into city lots, of which he disposed for building purposes. He died at his home, 417 North Market street, on the 21st of January, 1870, at the age of sixty-six years, and his loved and devoted wife passed away January 22, 1880, at the age of seventy-three years, both having been devoted members of St. John's Catholic church, while the father was a Democrat in politics. They became the parents of four children, mention having already been made of the two sons, and the others were Mrs. Cook, subject of this review, and Margaret, who is the wife of Conrad Appel, of Colorado. Mrs. Cook has a wide circle of friends in her native city, and is known as a woman of gracious presence and marked refinement.

ALPHEUS BALTZLY was born on the parental homestead farm in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 25th day of August, 1850, being a son of John and Lydia (Miller) Baltzly, both of whom were likewise born in Tuscarawas county. John Baltzly is a son of John and Elizabeth (Baker) Baltzly, who were born in Pennsylvania, whence they emigrated to Ohio in an early day and became numbered among the pioneers of Tuscarawas county, their home farm being in the immediate vicinity of the present village of New Philadelphia, where they passed the remainder of their lives, having had a family of two sons and seven daughters, of whom one of the sons and one of the daughters are still living. The maternal grandparents of the subject of this sketch were Zachariah and Gertrude (Hostetter) Miller, both of whom were natives of the old Keystone state of Pennsylvania, whence they came to Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in company with their respective parents. The former was a son of Henry and Barbara (Seese) Miller, natives of Pennsylvania, who passed the closing years of their lives in Tuscarawas county. Gertrude (Hostetter) Miller was a daughter of Joseph and Susan (Seaver) Hostetter, both of whom died in Tuscarawas county, whither they came from Pennsylvania, as has already been noted.

In 1856 John Baltzly, the father of the subject, removed from Tuscarawas county to Stark county, and located on the farm now owned by the former, and here he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until, with advancing years, he finally retired from active labor, passing the evening of his life in Beach City, where he died on the 5th of May, 1889, at the age of sixty-eight years, his widow still maintaining her home there and being now seventy-one years of age. Of their nine children only three are now living. The father was a stanch Republican in his political proclivities, and was called upon to serve in the office of township trustee, while he also was an efficient member of the school board for many years. He became the owner of two hundred and fifty-six acres of land in this township, and was one of the influential and honored citizens of the community. He held membership in the Lutheran church, as does also his widow.

Alpheus Baltzly, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared on the homestead farm, and secured a common-school education, and he eventually became the owner of two hundred and twenty-one acres of the old homestead farm, where he has ever since continued to be actively engaged in diversified agricultural pursuits and in the raising of a fine grade of live stock, having one of the best improved and most prolific rural estates in this section, and being known as an energetic and far-sighted business man, and as one whose word is as good as any bond ever issued. He is a stanch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but has never sought political preferment. He has, however, given most effective service as a member of the school board, and has also been trustee of his district, which was specially organized. Mr. Baltzly has been twice married. In 1871 he was united to Miss Annie Casebeer, who was born in Tuscarawas county, being a daughter of James Casebeer, and of this marriage two children were born, Florence and Annie. Mrs. Baltzly was summoned into eternal rest in 1879 and on the 25th of November, 1880, the subject wedded Miss Maggie Suter, who was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Henry and Catherine Suter, and this union has been blessed by six children, namely: Harry, John, Walter, Milton, Helen and Esther, the last named being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Baltzly are consistent and valued members of the United Brethren church.

WILLIAM E. YOUNG is of Scotch extraction in the agnatic line, his grandfather, John Young, having been a native of the land of hills and heather, whence he emigrated to the United States when a young man, locating in Pennsylvania, where he passed the remainder of his life. In Allegheny county, that state, was born William Hall Young, father of him whose name initiates this paragraph, and there he was reared and educated, devoting his active life to the machinist business, and being a man of sterling character. He died in his native county in 1892, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Ann Peters, was of French and German ancestry, and she likewise died in Allegheny county, in 1886, at the age of seventy-one years. They became the parents of five children, of whom four are living at the present time, the subject having been the fifth in order of birth. He is a cousin of Major General Samuel B. M. Young, of the United States army, the latter's father, John, having been a brother of William II., father of the subject.

William E. Young was born in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, on the 12th of January, 1854, the old homestead in which he first saw the light of day having long been in the possession of the family. His early educational discipline was received in the old-time township school, and he states that he was there "graduated" at the age of sixteen years, and that the term quoted was one unknown in such institutions at that time. Upon leaving school he entered upon an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade in the city of Pittsburg, serving four and one-half years, and becoming a skilled artisan in the line. Thereafter he was for three years an apprentice marine engineer on the Mississippi river, rising to the position of chief engineer on packet boats, and he continued to follow this vocation about eight years, at the expiration of which he was placed in charge of the forging department of the steel works of Hussey, Wells & Company, of Pittsburg, retaining this incumbency for five years, and then continuing with the concern for an additional six years as master mechanic of the entire plant, which is an extensive one. In 1889 he came to Canton as master mechanic with the Canton Steel Company, and three years later he was promoted to the office of assistant superintendent, while in 1900 there came still farther recognition of his ability and effective service in his being chosen to his present office of superintendent. He has a thorough knowledge of all details of the manufacturing and keeps a constant supervision of the same, and while he maintains a strict discipline his management is such as to retain to him the confidence and good will of the minor employes as well as of the officials of the company. In politics Mr. Young is a stanch advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and he has taken an active and commendable interest in public affairs of a local nature, while he has been called upon to serve in various offices of trust. He represented the fourth ward in the city council for four years, was for an equal period a member of the board of education, and three years served as a member of the board of health, being well known and distinctively popular in his home city, and being here recognized as a straightforward and capable business man. He and his family attend the First Baptist church.

In Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, on the 21st of May, 1878, Mr. Young was united in marriage to Miss Catherine M. E. Young, the two families being not related though of the same name. She was born in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Lieutenant Samuel Breck Young, who was born in the state of Vermont, where the family was established prior to the war of the Revolution, representatives of the same having served with distinction as soldiers of the Continental line. Lieutenant Young was an officer in the war of the Rebellion, and his wife, whose maiden name was Emeline Swope, was a niece of Bucher Swope, a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, and prosecuting attorney for the eastern district of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Young have six children, namely: Paul, who is engaged as a steel roller in the Canton Steel Company's plant, in Canton, married Miss Ida Rose; and Emily J., Donald B., John B., Ruth A. and James H. remain at the parental home.

HOMER F. COOPER was born on the parental homestead, in the immediate vicinity of the town of Knoxville, Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 25th day of July, 1863, being a son of Henry F. and Sophia (Ekey) Cooper, to whom were born four children, all of whom are living except Ophilon V., who died at the age of thirty-one years. The three surviving are as follows: J. Howard, who owns the old homestead farm in Jefferson county; Elizabeth, who is the wife of John Moore, of Bergholz, that county; and Homer F., the immediate subject of this sketch. Henry F. Cooper was likewise a native of Jefferson county, this state, having been born in the village of Knoxville, in the year 1829, and being a son of John Cooper, who was of Scotch lineage, and who was numbered among the early settlers of Jefferson county. The father of our subject was reared on the homestead farm, received such educational advantages as were afforded in the district schools of the locality and period, and after his marriage he purchased the old homestead, which comprised one hundred and eighty-five acres, where the subject of this sketch was born. There he continued to reside until the hour of his death. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Republican party from the time of its organization, and for a number of years he efficiently filled the office of justice of the peace, being one of the influential citizens of the community. He was a signally devoted and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he held the office of class leader for many years. Sophia (Ekey) Cooper, the mother of the subject, was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, near the town of Richmond, in the year 1830, being a daughter of Ezekiel Ekey, who was of Irish descent. After the death of her husband the mother bravely assumed the responsibility of rearing her children and assuming the management of the home farm until such time as her sons were able to lift this burden from her shoulders. She was summoned into eternal rest in 1888, loved by all who knew her and secure in that deep Christian faith which brightened and glorified her beautiful life; she was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Homer F. Cooper, the immediate subject of this review, was reared to maturity on the homestead farm and received a good common school education, while he and his brother early assumed much of the responsibility of managing and carrying on the work of the home farm. After the marriage of their two sisters the brothers purchased the former's interests in the farm, and later, when his brother wished to remove to the west, the subject purchased also his interest in the estate and thus assumed full control of the farm. After his mother's death Mr. Cooper, being unmarried and somewhat in debt, sold the home to his brother, who had in the meanwhile returned from the west, and he then took up his residence in the village of Kensington, Columbiana county, where he engaged in the general merchandise business, in which he there continued until 1893, when he sold the business to his brother-in-law, John Moore, and then removed to the city of Canton, Stark county, where he engaged in the wholesale retail coal business, of which he disposed in the spring of 1900, and then engaged in the tea and coffee business in the same city, gradually merging the enterprise into a general grocery business, which he successfully conducted until the 1st of October, 1901, when he closed out the same and took up his residence on his present fine farm, a portion of which was inherited by his wife, while he purchased the remainder from Mrs. Painter, his mother-in-law, then recently widowed. The farm constitutes one of the finest landed estates in the county, being under most effective cultivation and having the best of buildings, including a commodious and attractive brick residence, while the area of his holdings is over six hundred acres, the same being eligibly located in Sandy township. In politics Mr. Cooper has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he has taken an active interest. During the last campaign of the lamented President McKinley the subject was a member of the famous Canton Troop, whose duty was to meet the various delegations and escort them to the residence of the President in Canton. Since 1889 Mr. Cooper has been a member of the Presbyterian church, and while residing in Canton he served as trustee and treasurer of the church. Fraternally he is identified with Sandy Valley Lodge No. 725, Knights of Pythias. He is progressive and energetic in his farming operations, as has he been in all lines of enterprise with which he has been identified, and he holds the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the people of the community.

On the 25th of July, 1889, Mr. Cooper was united in marriage to Miss Violet E. Painter, the only child of the late Jacob W. Painter, who was one of the most honored and influential citizens of Sandy township, and of whom individual mention is made in following paragraphs. Mrs. Cooper is likewise a devoted member of the Presbyterian church and is a lady of gracious presence and distinctive refinement. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper have no children.

Jacob W. Painter, the father of Mrs. Cooper, was born in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 10th of November, 1829, being of stanch German lineage, his great-grandfather having emigrated from the fatherland to Pennsylvania in an early day, being accompanied by two of his brothers, one of whom located in New England and the other in Pennsylvania, while the name now has representatives in the most diverse sections of the Union. Jacob Painter, grandfather of Jacob W., was a man of influence in Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in farming, and where he also operated a gristmill, while he also served as judge of the court of common pleas and was several times a representative in the state legislature. He was a Whig in politics and was a member of the Lutheran church. Jacob W. Painter was a son of Joseph and Sarah A. (Wynn) Painter, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, whence they came to Stark county, the father having located in Sandy township as a pioneer of the year 1829, and here Jacob W. was reared under the conditions naturally implied, while he made such use of the educational advantages afforded him that he became eligible for pedagogic work, being a successful teacher in the district schools of this and Carroll county, while later he taught in Illinois. After his marriage he purchased a portion of the present homestead farm, and in addition to becoming one of the most successful farmers of this section he also operated the coal mines on his farm, from which enterprise he secured large returns, becoming one of the wealthy and influential men of the county. He was a prominent member of the Christian church, and in politics he supported the Republican party, of whose principles and policies he was a stanch advocate, though he never sought official preferment, the only position of the sort of which he was ever incumbent having been that of land appraiser, to which office he was elected in 1870. He was an appreciative and valued member of the Masonic fraternity, and in all the relations of life was true to the highest principles. He met his death as the result of a pitiable accident, being killed by a train at the Waynesburg crossing of the Pennsylvania Railroad, on the 22d of August, 1901, while the entire community felt the loss as a personal one, and to those nearest and dearest to him the blow came with crushing force, for to them had been shown the tenderest side of his strong and ideal nature.

On the 24th of December, 1861, Mr. Painter was united in marriage to Miss Nancy A. Miller, who was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and who became the mother of two children, Joseph, who died April 10, 1865, and Violet, who is the wife of the subject of this review. Mrs. Painter died on the 10th of December, 1865, and in 1867 Mr. Painter married Miss Susan Leyda, who died October 1, 1898.

JOHN R. ELSON was born in the village of Magnolia, which lies on either side of the line between Stark and Carroll counties, the date of his nativity having been April 3, 1865. He has been practically identified with the milling business from his boyhood days until the present, since at an early age he began to assist in various lines of work about his father's mills during the summer months, while during the winter seasons he prosecuted his studies in the public schools of his native place, eventually equipping himself more fully for the active responsibilities of life by completing a course of study in the commercial department of that well known institution, Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio. He left college at the age of eighteen years, and since that time his entire attention has been given to the work of the fine milling plant in which he is now interested as a stockholder in the operating company. About the year 1890 he and his elder brother, Richard R., began to receive a percentage of the profits of the business, having proved themselves worthy of this kindly consideration on the part of their father, and in 1900 the enterprise was duly incorporated as a stock company, under the title mentioned above, the stock being held entirely in the hands of the family, and our subject being chosen as head miller under the provisions of the re-organization. Of this position he has since remained incumbent, and his thorough knowledge of the practical details and all mechanical accessories utilized make him especially well fitted for the important charge, and it may be said that no portion of the work of operation escapes his careful supervision and scrutiny, so that the high reputation of the mills is not permitted to suffer in the least, but their prestige is being advanced through the co-operation and harmonious management of the interested principals of the company. Mr. Elson, like his father and brothers, is a staunch advocate of the cause of the Republican party, and his interest in public affairs of a local nature has been insistent and helpful. He has served several terms as a member of the village council of Magnolia, and for nine years has been incumbent of the office of treasurer of the school board of the town. He is one of the prominent and capable young business men of the county, and is well deserving of the success which is his, for it has not been acquired without forceful effort, each of his father's sons having early learned to honor honest toil, in whatever sphere of action. Our subject and his wife are members of the English Lutheran church and are liberal in its support, both through influence and tangible aid.

On the 24th of April, 1889, Mr. Elson was united in marriage to Miss Margaret E. Skeels, who was born in Carroll county, being the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Lotz) Skeels, residents of Canton, Stark county, where Mr. Skeels is a prominent contractor. Mrs. Skeels died in 1887, and Mr. Skeels afterward married Mrs. Lena Getchell. Mr. and Mrs. Elson have had three interesting children, Alwilda R., died in January, 1896; A. Catherine and Fredrika E., who lend brightness and cheer to the family circle, the home of the subject being one of the finest and most attractive modern residences in Magnolia, and having been erected by him in 1898.

HENRY BOWMAN was born on his present farm, in Sandy township, on the 5th of February, 1840, being a son of John and Lydia (Whitmer) Bowman, the former of whom was a native of Pennsylvania, where he was born in the year 1802, and when he was seven years of age his parents removed thence to Stark county, Ohio, being numbered among the earliest settlers of Pike township, where he was reared to maturity under the pioneer conditions and environments, the family home being a primitive log cabin, while educational advantages were notable for their absence rather than anything else, but he was endowed with an alert mentality and made the best use of the opportunities afforded in the little log school house, which he attended at varied intervals. As a youth he was for a time engaged as fireman on an Ohio river steamboat, and after his marriage he purchased the farm now owned by the subject of this review, in section 20, Sandy township, erecting a log cabin and forthwith instituting the work of reclaiming the heavily timbered land to the uses of cultivation. He was a man of marked energy and industry, and endowed with excellent business acumen, so that he was not denied a due measure of success as the result of his efforts, and he lived to see the development of the county from almost a veritable wilderness to a populous and prosperous division of a great state, while his own farm was so improved under his direction as to become one of the best in the county. He resided on this homestead until his death, in 1886, being cared for with true filial solicitude during his declining days by his son, Henry, subject of this review, who had become the owner of the home place. He and his wife were both devoted members of the Lutheran church. The latter was born in Bethlehem township, Stark county, and her death occurred in 1879, at which time she was seventy-seven years of age. She was a daughter of Benjamin Whitmer, who was numbered among the first settlers in Bethlehem township, where he reclaimed a good farm and became one of the influential men of the community, and where he died at an advanced age. John and Lydia (Whitmer) Bowman became the parents of eight children, namely: Mary, John and Samuel, who are now deceased; Henry, the subject of this review; Hannah, who is the wife of Riley Newhouse; Eli, who is a representative farmer of Sandy township; and Lydia, who died young. Sarah was the wife of Wm. Bonbrak, who died in Indiana; John died in California; and Samuel, who was a soldier in the Fifty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry during the Civil war, was taken prisoner at the battle of Chickamauga and died in Andersonville prison.

Henry Bowman, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was reared on the farm which is now his home, and he early began to lend effective aid in its reclamation and cultivation, his services in this line being in such demand that his educational training as a boy was cut down to the minimum, the longest period during which he attended school in any one year being thirty-three days, while the early "institution of learning" which was accessible to him was the log school house with its primitive equipment of puncheon floor, slab benches, etc. He continued to assist in the work of the farm until there came the clarion call to arms, when the Union was attacked by the southern Confederacy, whose guns thundered against the walls of old Fort Sumter. Mr. Bowman manifested the loyalty and patriotism of a true son of the republic, and on the 12th of October, 1861, at the age of twenty-one years, he enlisted as a private in Company K, Fifty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Camp Meigs. This regiment was commanded by Colonel Stanley Matthews, who later became the distinguished chief justice of the supreme court of the United States, while Charles Muller was captain of Company K. The regiment was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, and participated in many of the most memorable engagements of the great conflict. From Camp Meigs the command proceeded into Kentucky, where they did much skirmishing, thence going to Nashville, and later into the Cumberland mountains, whence they followed General Bragg through Tennessee and Kentucky to Louisville, where several skirmishes occurred. They continued in pursuit of Bragg and fought at Cedar Plains and Perryville, Kentucky, and later returned to Nashville, where they remained until December, 1862, when they were sent to Stone River, taking part in the spirited engagement at that point, Mr. Bowman being there injured by the explosion of a shell, but was not long incapacitated for duty, as is evident when we revert to the fact that he was in action in the important battles of Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. The regiment went into winter quarters at Shell Mound, and in the spring of 1864 again went forth to do valiant service in some of the most hotly contested battles which marked the further progress of the war. The list of the more important battles in which Mr. Bowman thus participated included the following: Tunnel Hill, Ringgold, Resaca, Rocky Face Ridge, Buzzards' Roost, Kenesaw Mountain, Peachtree Creek, Pine-top Mountain, Atlanta and Jonesboro, having been in front of Atlanta when General McPherson was killed. Later, while en route to Athens, Alabama, their train was wrecked and Mr. Bowman was thrown violently to the ground, and was seriously injured in the back, being incapacitated for active duty of any sort for some months. He was never wounded in a technical sense during all his long and arduous term of service, though he was badly lacerated by the explosion of the shell at Stone River, as before noted. Mr. Bowman received his honorable discharge at Pulaski, Tennessee, on the 17th of November, 1864, and his military record is one which will ever redound to his honor as a patriot and a brave and loyal soldier.

Soon after his discharge the subject returned home, and as his parents were well advanced in years he assumed charge of the home farm, to whose improvement and cultivation he has ever since devoted his attention. In 1880 he purchased the property from his father, and the following summer he erected his present commodious and substantial barn, while his large and attractive residence was erected in 1886. The other permanent improvements are of the best order, and his place may well be considered one of the model farms of the county, the same comprising one hundred and sixty acres of fertile and productive land, in connection with whose effective cultivation Mr. Bowman devoted no little attention to the raising of high grade live stock, including horses, of which he had at all times fine specimens, taking pride in keeping everything about the farm in the best possible order. On the 1st of April, 1903, the subject retired from the active conduct of the farm and moved to Magnolia. He is a stockholder in the Magnolia Mercantile Company, in the village of that name, and is a member of its directorate. In politics he gives an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, and he and his wife are zealous members of the United Brethren church. Fraternally he is one of the popular and honored comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, holding membership in Sandy Valley Post No. 433, of which he is past commander.

On the 24th of December, 1869, Mr. Bowman was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Farber, who was born just across the line in Rose township, Carroll county, being a daughter of the late Peter Farber, who was one of the honored pioneers of that township. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman are the parents of five children, namely: John F., who is engaged in the general merchandise business in Magnolia, as a member of the Magnolia Mercantile Company; Ann, who is the wife of Dr. Benjamin F. Richard, of Richards, Pike township; Frank P., who is associated with his father in operating the homestead farm; Margaret M., who resides in the village of Magnolia; and Mary A., who remains at the parental home.

HENRY H. CHAMBERLAIN, M. D., is descended from New England ancestry on the paternal side, but in what state the family originally settled is now a matter of doubt. The Chamberlains are of Quaker origin, and for many years the name was prominent in the history of that religious body. George Chamberlain, the grandfather, was born in one of the eastern states, but in an early day moved to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he lived the life of an honest, industrious tiller of the soil until called to the other world. His son, John Chamberlain, was born in Liverpool township, Columbiana county, in September, 1835, and was also a farmer by occupation. He married, in his native county, Miss Mary Etta Dixon, whose father, Joseph Dixon, was a prominent member of the Society of Friends, as were his ancestors for several generations before him. Mr. Dixon was one of the leading citizens of his community, whom to know was to honor and respect. The pathetic incident is related of him, that when an old man of eighty he was stricken with paralysis, which resulted in the absolute impairment of his power of speech. Having a presentiment of his approaching death, and knowing of no other way to impart the knowledge to his family, he worked the chair in which he was sitting close to the grate, and taking the fire shovel, formed the ashes on the hearth into the shape of a grave. His departure followed soon after this silent prophecy, and he was attended to the grave by a large concourse of relatives and friends, to whom he left as a heritage a name which is still held in deep veneration. His wife was a Miss Lydia Richardson, daughter of Joseph Richardson, to whom a reference is made in the sketch of Dr. Orter on another page of this work.

After his marriage John Chamberlain engaged in the pursuit of agriculture in the county of Columbiana, and continued to live and prosper there until his death, in the year 1890. He was a man of sterling integrity and genuine worth, and had a kind word for everybody with whom he came in contact. An earnest Christian, he exemplified his faith by a life void of offense to God and man, and as a Republican upheld the principles of his party with the same earnestness of purpose as he conducted his religious and secular interests. Mrs. Chamberlain is still living, and so well preserved are her bodily powers that she is frequently taken for a much younger woman than she really is. To this excellent couple seven children were born, namely: Henry H., whose name heads this article; Elmer Elsworth, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Willis W., residing in East Liverpool, Ohio; Clara died at the age of six years; Leroy died in infancy; Lydia is now Mrs. John Betz; and Ira, who lives with his mother at the old home in the county of Columbiana.

Dr. Henry A. Chamberlain was born August 22, 1860, in East Liverpool, Ohio, and spent the years of his childhood and youth on the old homestead. His was a studious nature, and from the time of entering the district schools until the age of sixteen he made rapid progress in his studies, meanwhile supplementing the knowledge thus acquired by reading all books and papers that came to his hands. In his sixteenth year he was sufficiently advanced to secure a teacher's license, and from that time until twenty-two he devoted the winter seasons to educational work in his native county. Deciding to devote his life to the calling in which so many of the world's great men have attained distinction, the medical profession, he at once formulated plans for preparing himself for his life work. Entering the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio, he applied himself diligently to study and research until his graduation in 1884, after which he began the practice at Paris, Ohio, where his abilities soon won him recognition as a capable physician and surgeon. In due time he succeeded in building up a large and substantial business, which continued unabated during the eight years he remained at the above place.

Leaving Paris, Dr. Chamberlain went to Venango county, Pennsylvania, but not being especially pleased with the outlook there, withdrew at the end of one year and moved to the larger and much more promising field of eastern Ohio, selecting Canton as the place of his future course of action. Since locating in this city he has rapidly come to the front as a representative of his particular school, and now has a large practice, which is as successful financially as it is professionally. He maintains an abiding interest in and familiarity with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery, and his professional attainments, of a high order from the beginning, are constantly being enlarged by close study and painstaking original research. He is a member of the Eclectic Medical Institute of Ohio, and avails himself of every opportunity this organization affords in the way of widening his scope of usefulness as a healer of diseases.

In his political adherency the Doctor is a stalwart Republican, casting his first vote for William McKinley for congress, and later supporting that distinguished statesman for governor, and twice for the presidency. His religious views are in harmony with the Calvinistic creed, and for some years he has been an active member of the Presbyterian church, at the present time affiliating with the First church of that denomination in the city of Canton.

Dr. Chamberlain was married at East Liverpool, Ohio, in the year 1885 to Miss Laura W. Smith, daughter of W. S. Smith, of Columbiana county, a union blessed with one son, Wilson S., a fine youth of fifteen years. The Doctor and his estimable wife are devoted church workers, to which interest they contribute liberally both in a tangible way and in the matter of vigorous influence. They are also popular in the best society circles of the city, and enjoy the esteem of all with whom they mingle, socially and otherwise.

ALBERT A. OLDHAM.—He to whom this brief sketch is dedicated occupies the responsible executive position of secretary and treasurer of the Bonnot Manufacturing Company, a representative industrial concern of the city of Canton, being also a stockholder of the corporation and a member of its directorate, and he is recognized as one of the able young business men of the city, having the progressive spirit so characteristic of the age. Since a detailed description of the enterprise with which he is thus prominently identified is given in the review of the life of the president of the company on other pages of this volume, it will not be required that the resume be repeated at this point, so we may proceed at once to a consideration of the more salient points in the career of Mr. Oldham.

Albert A. Oldham is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the village of Parma, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, on the 24th of July, 1869, and being a son of Albert H. and Josephine (Hodgman) Oldham, the former of whom was born near the city of Montreal, Canada, being of English ancestry, while the year of his nativity was 1843. He has followed the vocation of locomotive engineer during his active career, and it at the present time thus employed on a railroad, maintaining his home in Canton. His wife, whose ancestors and parents were of the Younger sect in their religious faith, was born in the old Hodgman homestead at Parma, this state. Of this union were born five children, of whom all are living at the present time. It may be said that the first representative of the Oldham family in America was the great-grandfather of our subject, who emigrated from England to the dominion of Canada in an early day, and there passed the residue of his life.

Albert A. Oldham was reared to the age of six years in his native village, and his parents then removed to Akron, this state, where he attended the public schools until 1881, when the family came to Canton, and here he completed a course in the high school, being graduated as a member of the class of 1886. After leaving school he entered the employ of the Peerless Reaper Company, in the capacity of bookkeeper, remaining with this concern until its business was suspended, in 1891. He then entered the employ of the Bonnot Manufacturing Company, and about the year 1899 he was promoted from the position of bookkeeper to that of assistant secretary and treasurer, while in the following years he was made the chief incumbent of this office, in which capacity he has since continued to render most effective service. In politics Mr. Oldham is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and its principles, and both he and his wife are zealous and valued members of the United Brethren church, and he is at the present time superintendent of the primary department of its Sunday school.

On the 6th of April, 1892, Mr. Oldham was united in marriage to Miss Ella G. Singer, daughter of Christian and Elizabeth (Kinsch) Singer, of Canton, where she was reared and educated, and they have one son, Laurence E.

WILLIAM R. KURTZ is one of the leading and prominent citizens of Minerva, Stark county, Ohio, not only from the fact of his long residence there, but also from the exercise of those qualities which inevitably gain for any man the respect and esteem of his associates. He is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Columbiana county on the 9th of November, 1866, the son of William and Sarah (Elliott) Kurtz. William Kurtz was also a resident of Columbiana county, where he was reared and obtained his education. He was early initiated into the mysteries of agriculture and followed that calling until 1893, when he left the farm and removed to Minerva, where he has since lived in retirement, enjoying the ease and comfort which he has so richly earned by his previous years of toil. A man of decided religious convictions, he is a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and while a staunch Republican in politics, he has never been an office-seeker, preferring to devote his time and energy to the honorable pursuit of agriculture rather than to the duties and emoluments of public office. Mrs. Kurtz passed into the silent world in 1890. To these parents were born the following named children, six of whom still survive: John E., a jeweler residing in Minerva; Frank D., at home; Jesse N., who is associated in business with the subject; Rose E. and Laura L., at home; William R., the subject, and Charles W., deceased.

William R. Kurtz was reared under the parental roof, and acquired his education in the common schools of the neighborhood, supplementing this by attendance at the high school of Minerva. At the age of twenty years he formed a partnership with W. J. Yengling in the dry-goods business at Minerva. After continuing in this line for two years he disposed of his interests and went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he accepted a position with Joseph Horne & Company in the retail dry goods business. Mr. Kurtz spent ten years in a clerical capacity with Joseph Horne & Company and with Boggs & Buhl, of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, with the exception of two years in the employ of J. S. Patterson & Sons at Findlay, Ohio. In 1898 Mr. Kurtz returned to Minerva and organized the firm of Kurtz Brothers, associating himself with his brother, Jesse N. They at once met with encouraging success in their business enterprise, and in the intervening four years have built up a large and satisfactory business. In September, 1901, they opened a branch store at Salineville, this state, in which they have also met with a satisfactory patronage. Courteous and affable, and evincing a desire to please their customers, they have won for themselves the confidence of the business world and a commensurate share of the public patronage.

On the 5th of March, 1900, William R. Kurtz was united in marriage with Miss Helen Burk, of Detroit, Michigan, an intelligent and highly cultured lady, who has proved to her husband a helpmate in the truest sense of the word. Religiously Mr. Kurtz is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he holds the position of treasurer. Politically he is a staunch Republican, but takes no very active part in matters political. The qualities which have made him one of the prominent and successful business men of Minerva have also brought him the esteem and good will of his fellow citizens, for his career from the beginning has been one of well directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods. Endowed by nature with strong powers of mind, and possessing the energy to direct his faculties in the proper channels, he early became a man of resourceful capacity, as the able management of his business affairs abundantly testifies.

RICHARD R. ELSON was born in the village of Magnolia, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 8th of March, 1860, being a son of Augustus R. Elson. His boyhood days were passed amid the surroundings of the parental home, and his early educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of the locality, while this discipline was later supplemented by a course of study in Duff's Business College, in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. As a lad he began to lend such assistance as was within his power to the work in his father's flouring mills, the rise of which important industry has been duly described in the foregoing paragraphs, and he continued to be identified with the enterprise under the direction of his father until he had become familiar with all the practical details of the business, having "grown up in the business," as the colloquial expression will indicate the progress made. In 1890 he and his brother John were admitted to a partnership interest in the milling business, which was continued under the firm name of A. R. Elson & Sons until the year 1900, when a stock company was formed and the business incorporated under the laws of the state, as the A. R. Elson Company, the interested principals being all members of the family, while at the time of organization the subject of this sketch was chosen secretary of the company, in which capacity he has since continued to serve with signal discrimination and ability, doing much to further the progress of the enterprise, which is one of the most important and most popularly appreciated industries in this section of the state. In politics Mr. Elson has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and he is known as one of the energetic and broad-minded business men and public-spirited citizens of the community, while he was called upon to serve three terms as treasurer of Magnolia, Stark county, giving a most capable administration of the fiscal affairs assigned to his charge.

On the 25th of August, 1892, Mr. Elson was united in marriage to Miss Iva Moffett, who was born in Rose township, Carroll county, being a daughter of Samuel M. Moffett, who was likewise born in that county, of sterling Irish lineage, and who is a prominent and influential farmer and stock grower of this locality. Mr. and Mrs. Elson have two children, Loren and Mack A.

JOSIAH B. EBERLY was born on the homestead farm, in Bethlehem township, this county, on the 11th of September, 1856, being a son of Joseph and Catherine (Bretz) Eberly, the former of whom was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, while the latter was born in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, being a daughter of John Bretz, who was one of the prominent and influential pioneer citizens of that township, and who served for a number of years as a member of the board of county commissioners. The father of the subject devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits, becoming the owner of a fine farm in Bethlehem township, having located upon the same in 1843, and there his death occurred in 1887, at which time he was eighty-one years of age. In politics he was originally a Democrat, later espoused the cause of the Whig party, and after the organization of the Republican party transferred his allegiance to the same, and ever afterward continued a staunch advocate of its principles. He was a birth-right member of the Society of Friends, and his religious views ever continued to be in harmony with the teachings of this noble body of Christians. He was three times married, and of the first union, to the mother of the subject, three sons were born, Josiah B. being the only survivor, his two brothers having sacrificed their lives on the altar of their country's righteous cause, in the war of the Rebellion, one having been a member of the Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, while another was a member of the Thirteenth Indiana Regiment of Volunteer Infantry. By the last marriage three children were born, and all are now deceased. The mother of the subject died in 1858 at the age of forty years, having been a member of the German Reformed church.

Josiah B. Eberly was reared on the old home farm, and after securing his rudimentary educational training in the district schools he continued his studies in the high school at Smithville, and later was matriculated in Mount Union College, near the city of Alliance, where he made the best possible use of the excellent advantages afforded him, and soon put his scholastic knowledge to practical use by engaging in pedagogic work, having been for twelve years one of the eminently popular and successful teachers in the public schools of his native county. In 1881 Mr. Eberly located on his present farm, which comprises one hundred and thirty acres of most fertile and productive land, while the place has the best of permanent improvements, and is one of the valuable and attractive farm homes of this locality. Mr. Eberly is one of the progressive farmers of the county, directing his efforts according to scientific principles, and with marked discrimination, while he is known as one of the public-spirited citizens of the community and as a man of fine intellectual endowments. He exercises his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. Fraternally he is identified with the lodge of the Knights of Pythias in Beach City, and formerly he was identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, while he has been a prominent factor in the ranks of the Patrons of Husbandry, and has the distinction of being at the present time master of the Stark County Grange of that order.

On the 23rd of September, 1880, Mr. Eberly was united in marriage to Miss Minerva Knepper, who was born on the home farm in Stark county, being a daughter of the late Godfrey Knepper, an honored pioneer of Stark county. Of this union have been born five children, namely: Benjamin G., who rendered valiant service as a soldier in the Philippines during the late war, being corporal of his company, and who is now a fireman in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; Grace M., E. May and Charles D. still remain at the parental home, and Elmer died at the age of six months.

WALLEN M. BEATTY was born on the farmer he now owns, in Rose township, Carroll county, on the 19th of September, 1846, being a son of William F. and Rachel (Miller) Beatty, to whom were born three children, the two survivors being the subject and his sister Mary, who is the wife of Sands B. Kimmel, of Mineral Point, Tuscarawas county.

William F. Beatty, father of the subject, was a native of the Old Dominion state of Virginia, where he was born in the year 1814, being a son of Wyburnce Beatty, who was born on the Emerald Isle, where he was reared to maturity. Shortly after his marriage he emigrated from Ireland to America, settling in Virginia, where he remained until 1820, when he came to Carroll county, Ohio, and cast in his lot among the early settlers of Rose township, entering claim to a quarter section of government land, which was heavily timbered and entirely unimproved, the deed to the property being signed by James Monroe, who was then President of the United States, and this interesting document is now in the possession of the subject of this review, who is the owner of the land thus entered by his grandfather, the property having never passed out of the possession of the family. On this old homestead, where the subject still resides, his father passed the residue of his life, passing to his reward June 3, 1890, at the venerable age of seventy-six years. He brought about the effective development of the farm, and became one of the highly honored and influential men of this section, enjoying the esteem of all who knew him.

Rachel (Miller) Beatty, mother of the subject, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, being a daughter of Wallen Miller, who was one of the first settlers in that county, where he passed the residue of his life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Jackson, a relative of Stonewall Jackson. The mother of Mrs. Beatty died in the year 1849, and the father, about nine years later, consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Isabelle Carson, no children having been born of this union. The father was summoned into eternal rest in June, 1890, having lived a life of signal usefulness and honor and having been one of the representative men of this section of the state. He inherited the homestead farm, and to its cultivation and improvement devoted his attention throughout his active business career.

Wallen M. Beatty, whose name initiates this sketch, was reared on the ancestral farmstead, which is now his home, and early began to assist in its cultivation, while his educational discipline during this time was such as was afforded by the public schools of the locality.

His youthful patriotism was roused to the point of definite action at the time when the integrity of the nation was menaced by armed rebellion, and in September, 1863, having been unable to gain his father's consent to tender his services in defense of the Union, he took matters into his own hands and ran away from home, and at Alliance, Ohio, he enlisted as a private in Company D, Twenty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front, having been with Sherman on the ever memorable march to the sea, and having participated in all the engagements incidental thereto. He received his honorable discharge in Charlestown, South Carolina, in August, 1865, as corporal of his company, having shown true soldierly qualities and having rendered faithful and valiant service in the greatest internecine war known in the annals of history.

After the close of the war Mr. Beatty returned home and resumed his work on the farm. His father insisted that he become a student in Mount Union College, but he was disinclined to follow this course, preferring to take up the active duties of life, and his father finally permitted him to have his way, and he purchased a team of horses and soon practically assumed the entire management of the homestead, his father's health being impaired, so that he was not able to do much active labor. After the death of his honored sire, in 1890, Mr. Beatty purchased the interest of the other heirs, and thus came into sole possession of the farm, which has ever since been his home, as, indeed, it has been during the entire course of his life. In 1895 he purchased a contiguous tract of eighty-seven acres, so that the aggregate area of his finely improved landed estate is now two hundred and fifty-two acres. On this farm, adding in marked degree to its value, are found practically inexhaustible deposits of the finest of clay for manufacturing purposes and as early as 1869 clay was shipped from the farm to Canal Dover, where it was utilized in the manufacture of fire-brick. At the present time the clay beds are being developed under the most favorable conditions. In 1892 Mr. Beatty organized the Beatty Fire Clay Company and a fine plant was equipped for the manufacturing of hollow building blocks and fire brick. In 1900 the Whitacre Company became the operators of the plant and Mr. Beatty still continued his interest in the enterprise, and in the following year it was sold to the syndicate known as the American Fire Proofing Company for a consideration of two hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars in cash. In the spring of 1902 Mr. Beatty associated himself with Clarence S. Greer in the organization of the Greer-Beatty Clay Company, and they will have completed and have in operation by the time this publication is issued one of the model plants of this section of Ohio, utilizing the clay from Mr. Beatty's farm. Mr. Beatty is essentially public-spirited in his attitude and takes a deep interest in all that tends to conserve the advancement and material prosperity of the community. In his political proclivities he is an uncompromising advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and has been an active and efficient worker in its cause, having served as delegate to state and county conventions of the party. Fraternally he perpetuates the more kindly memories of his army life through his membership in Sandy Valley Post No. 728, Grand Army of the Republic, at Magnolia, and he is at the present writing adjutant of the post. He is also identified with the Knights of Pythias, holding membership in Sandy Valley Lodge No. 725. He has never sought political office, but in 1890 he acted as census enumerator for Rose township.

In 1868 Mr. Beatty was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Whitacre, daughter of Dr. Thomas and Catherine (Elson) Whitacre, the latter of whom was a daughter of Richard Elson, one of the most honored and prominent pioneers of this section and one to whom specific reference is made in the sketch of his son, Anthony R. Elson, appearing on another page of this work. Mrs. Beatty passed away in 1872, and is survived by her two children, Rachel, who is the wife of a Mr. Barnes, of Texas county, Missouri, and Belle, who is the wife of Belden Brothers, of Pike township, Stark county, Ohio. On the 3d of July, 1873, Mr. Beatty was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Holmes, who was born in Carroll county, Ohio, being a daughter of William Holmes, who was an influential farmer of said county, where his death occurred in 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Beatty have five children, all of whom remain at the parental home except the second son, John, who is a graduate of the Cleveland Medical College, being a member of the class of 1903, and is now located in the city hospital at Grayston. The names of the children, in order of birth, are as follows: William, John, Milo, Blanche and Verne.

GEORGE COOK, late of Canton, was born in Summit county, Ohio, on the 2d day of February, 1827. In his youth he enjoyed only such limited educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools of his native place, but, possessing a studious nature, he made the best of his opportunities and in due time mastered the branches which in those days constituted the curriculum. Thrown upon his own resources at an early age, he turned his attention to mechanical pursuits and, entering a wagonmaking shop, soon became an efficient workman at that trade. While working at Greentown he early developed mechanical skill of a high order, which, coupled with executive ability rare in one of his age, led him in due time to outgrow the limited environments of the shop and embark in a much larger and more important undertaking. About the year 1849, in partnership with Cornelius Aultman, Jacob Miller, Ephraim Ball and others, he established at Canton a small concern for the manufacture of reapers and mowers, which, under the firm name of E. Ball & Company, soon became one of the leading industries of the city. These gentlemen began operations with a limited capital, but the demand for their output increased to such an extent that within a couple of years the capacity of the plant was greatly enlarged, necessitating the employment of a strong force of skilled artisans. In 1865 the establishment was reorganized as a stock company under the name of C. Aultman & Company with a capital which was gradually increased with the growth of trade until it finally amounted to one million five hundred dollars. From the above years dates the most rapid and substantial advancement of this mammoth enterprise and since that time it has continually increased in magnitude and importance until becoming not only one of the largest industries of the kind in the state, but in the United States, besides earning an international reputation. It is not the province of an article of this kind to give in detail either the history or present status of the great and farreaching enterprise with which Mr. Cook was so long and so actively identified. Suffice it to state, however, that the various agriculture machinery manufactured by this company, such as the Buckeye mower and reaper, the improved Sweepstakes thresher and the Monitor threshing engine, have achieved, as already stated, wide repute in every civilized country of the globe, while the standing of the establishment in the United States is second to that of no other similar industry. As may be inferred from this brief reference to the plant and its extensive operations, the gentlemen who established the concern and brought it to its high position were men of remarkable ability and superior judgment whose enterprising spirits no difficulties could discourage. Among these men, George Cook occupied no secondary place. With a tenacity of purpose rare as it was admirable, he seems to have possessed the peculiar faculty of moulding circumstances to suit his ends and to his sagacity and wise executive ability is the establishment indebted for a large measure of the success which has marked its history from its inception to the time of his decease. He was one of the heaviest stockholders of the company, as well as a member of the board of directors, and as assistant superintendent he took an active part in the practical management, earning while serving in that capacity the unbounded confidence of his associates as well as the universal good will of the employes. The history of the Aultman Company is but a page in the life of this enterprising and farsighted business man. Beginning with no capital save the sterling qualities of an honorable and industrious manhood, he gradually forged to the front, rising step by step until reaching the goal of success to which but few attain. He possessed strong mentality, was rarely mistaken in his judgment of men and things and foresaw with remarkable clearness future possibilities relative to his business interests, determining with a high degree of accuracy their probable bearing. In all of his transactions he manifested the most scrupulous integrity and gentlemanly demeanor and by reason of large success, unblemished character and a just and liberal life, he earned the universal esteem of his fellow citizens. In addition to his connection with the establishment at Canton, Mr. Cook served as director of the Aultman Miller & Company's works and iron company at Akron, and for a number of years was a director of the First National Bank in the former city. He was also officially identified with the Valley Railroad Company and it may be said that to him more than to any other man is the city of Canton indebted for the remarkable industrial growth which marked its history during the period of his residence. He was actively interested in nearly every industrial enterprise and gave to those with which he was not directly connected his sanction and, when necessary, liberal financial encouragement.

Without invidious distinction, Mr. Cook was pre-eminently one of Ohio's most enterprising and public spirited men of affairs. In every walk of life his aim was to do his whole duty and the people of Canton and Stark county felt justly proud of him as a high minded citizen and useful member of society. While giving personal attention to his large and varied business interests and discharging conscientiously all the duties of citizenship, he found time amid all these claims to devote to the higher duties growing out of man's relation to his fellow man and to his Creator. He prospered greatly in worldly things and gave largely of his wealth for the founding of and fostering of worthy institutions, secular and religious, besides expending in private charities sums which to the majority of people would be independent fortunes. His benevolent spirit was practically unbounded in the extent of his benefactions and the vast amount of good which he accomplished through the medium of his wealth will only be fully known in that day when the books are open and every man rewarded according to his deeds. Among his many liberal donations the following are cited as specific instances, to-wit: Thirty thousand dollars for the erection of the beautiful Baptist church building in Canton, which for years to come will stand as a monument to his generosity and Christian manhood; the sum of twelve thousand dollars to Dennison University at Granville, of which he was for some years a trustee, besides liberal endowments to other public institutions, while his private benefactions to different benevolent and charitable enterprises as well as to individuals are said to

Religiously, Mr. Cook subscribed to the Baptist church faith and two years and a half prior to his death united with the church in the city, donating, as already stated, a large sum towards the erection of its beautiful temple of worship. His was that broad catholic spirit which saw good in all religious movements and he supported churches, irrespective of creed, with the liberality which characterized his other efforts in behalf of humanity. Believing that the gospel should be preached to all men throughout the world, he was a liberal patron of missionary societies, especially those under the auspices of his own church, to which he gave large sums from time to time. Mr. Cook had a heart overflowing with love and good will for his kind and he used his ample fortune as a means to elevate humanity and develop a higher standard of citizenship. His greatest delight consisted in making others happy, in carrying sunshine into homes darkened by misfortune and bereavement, in binding up wounds received in unequal battles with adversity, in scattering blessings around him, thus imitating the adage that "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Notwithstanding all of his large wealth and the commanding position he occupied in the business and social world, Mr. Cook was one of the most modest men, easily accessible to the humblest of his fellows and ever ready to lend a listening ear to the cry of need. Politically he was a Republican, but the pressing claims of his business and the nature of his benevolent work prevented him from taking a very active interest in party affairs. Believing that a good name was more to be desired than riches or public distinction, and with no ambition for official station, he was governed from his youth by those fixed principles of honor and rectitude which through life stamped him as an honest man, an exemplary citizen, a sincere Christian and a kind and loving husband and father.

Mr. Cook was married, December 5, 1857, to Miss Mary Weary, of Stark county, the union resulting in the following children: Charles C., of Alliance, Ohio; George E., of New York city, who married Miss Carrie Peters, but is now a widower; Helen R. married Conrad Schweitzer, of Canton, and is the mother of eight offspring, Conrad, Helen N., Mary M., Margaret, George C., Frederick, Robert and Herman. Grace E., the fifth of the subject's children, died in infancy; Mary A., the next in order of birth, is the wife of William Kuhns, of Baltimore, Maryland, and has had three children, George W. (deceased), Margaret and Elizabeth; Ralph Weary, the youngest member of the family, married Miss Catherine Maloney and lives in New York city.

George Cook finished his earthly life in the city of Canton, dying on the 3d day of May, 1879. A leader in industrial circles and pre-eminently a man of noble aims and high ideals, he lived up to his high standard of excellence, and departing left behind him a name which for years to come will be enshrined as a priceless treasure in the hearts of the people among whom he so nobly acted his part in the world's affairs.

Mr. Cook's father moved to Huron county, this state, a number of years ago, as a contractor and builder, and made his home near the city of Clinton. He worked at his trade at different places throughout that county and elsewhere and was accidentally killed while putting up a new building. Additional to the subject of this review, he had the following children: Rachel, who married a Mr. Miller and departed this life in Summit county; Mrs. Elizabeth Swinehart, who died some years ago near Uniontown, this state; Lena married and removed to Indiana, where her death subsequently occurred, and Michael, who also died in the latter state.

Mrs. Mary Cook, wife of the subject of this sketch, is the daughter of Samuel Weary and was born in Marlborough township, Stark county, Ohio, June 7, 1833. She received her educational training in the district schools and after her mother's second marriage lived with a sister until becoming the head of a household of her own. Mrs. Cook is a lady of many marked traits of character and as long as her husband lived she heartily co-operated with him in his charitable and benevolent work, proving a blessing to hundreds of poor and unfortunate people in the city of her residence and elsewhere. A sincere and devout Christian, she exemplifies her religious convictions in a life of practical service, and in many ways has been an influential factor in the church circles of Canton. Her life has been fraught with great good and in the social as well as the religious world her presence has been the means of moulding the characters and directing into proper avenues the lives of those with whom she has been associated. Her father was born about 1790 near Bloomfield, Perry county, Pennsylvania, and there married Miss Mary M. Smith, whose birth occurred in the same county on the 1st day of September, 1794. Some time after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Weary moved to Trumbull county, Ohio, but after a brief residence in that part of the state changed their abode to the county of Stark, purchasing a farm in Marlborough township, on which the former's death occurred at the age of forty-two. Mrs. Weary was one of sixteen children constituting the family of Adam Smith, an early settler and prominent citizen of Perry county, Pennsylvania. She bore her husband eleven children, the oldest of whom was Margaret, wife of Peter Rue, who died near St. Paul, Minnesota; John, the second, was accidentally killed by felling a tree; Simon, the third in order of birth, resides in the city of Akron at the present time; Catherine, now Mrs. Amos Johnson, lived at Uniontown, this state; Daniel married Sarah Taylor and departed this life in Chicago, Illinois; Sarah married J. P. Smith and lived in Stark county; Jacob died in Akron; Henry, of Oil City, Pennsylvania, married Rosella Inman; Elizabeth is deceased and after her comes Mrs. Cook, the tenth in succession; Benjamin, the youngest of the number, was a soldier in the late rebellion, responding to the first call in 1861, and serving until the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox; he was the last Union man killed after the surrender, meeting his death at the hands of the bushwhackers the day following that event.

WILLIAM H. GREER, who bears the full patronymic of his father and who is incumbent of the position of ticket and freight agent of the Cleveland & Pittsburg division of the Pennsylvania Railroad in the village of Magnolia, was born in said village, in the old homestead, in the Carroll county portion of the town, on the 26th of May, 1860, and as a boy he began to render assistance in the mercantile establishment of his father, in the meanwhile pursuing his studies in the public schools of the town. At the age of nineteen years he was matriculated in Hiram College, where he completed his more peculiarly literary education and amply fortified himself for the labors and duties of an active business career. In 1881, when but twenty-one years of age, he was appointed ticket and freight agent of the Cleveland & Pittsburg branch of the Pennsylvania system in his native town, and he has been consecutively in tenure of this position ever since,—a period of more than two score years. Within this interval there has been a marked growth in the population and business of the town and tributary territory, so that the duties devolving upon him at the present time bear slight resemblance to what they were at the time when he initiated his efforts here.

Mr. Greer has exercised his right of franchise from the time of attaining his majority, in the support of the principles of the Republican party, and he has taken a lively and intelligent interest in the questions of the day, but has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office, though such has been his loyalty to his native town that he has not refused to serve as a member of the town council and the board of education, while he has also given most effective service as village clerk and treasurer. Fraternally he is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, being identified with Sandy Valley Lodge No. 725, of which he is the past chancellor. He and his wife hold membership in the Lutheran church.

On the 29th of July, 1886, Mr. Greer was united in marriage to Miss Addie Ross, who was born in Waynesburg, Stark county, being a daughter of I. N. Ross, a well known and honored pioneer of the county, and of this union have been born three children, namely: Helen H., William R. and Margaret A. Mr. Greer has an attractive home in his native village, and the family take a part in the best social life of the community.

AUGUSTUS R. ELSON was born on a farm in Sandy township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 1st of August, 1829, the old homestead being located one mile north of the present thriving little city of Waynesburg. He was the fourth in order of birth of the three children of Richard and Frederika (Beogle) Elson, and is now the only surviving member of the immediate family. Richard Elson was born in Brooke county, Virginia (now West Virginia), on the 12th of July, 1797, being a son of John H. and Margaret (Wiggins) Elson. As a boy he was independent and ambitious, and, having had a slight dispute with his father, he left home and crossed the Ohio river to Steubenville, Ohio, not far distant from his home, where he began an apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade, but within two or three weeks his better judgment prevailed and he returned to his home. Owing to the conditions and exigencies of the time and locality he was denied more than the most limited educational advantages in his youth, but he became a man of broad information and gained success in the face of the handicap of circumstances. His sturdy self-reliance and progressive spirit was early manifested, for at the age of nineteen years he constructed a flat-boat and engaged in trading on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, loading his rude craft with pork, flour, whiskey and other products and floating the same down to New Orleans, where he would dispose of his cargo, after which he would walk back to Steubenville, a distance of about fifteen hundred miles. He thus made the trip alone on five different occasions and had to traverse a country which to a large extent was an untrammelled wilderness, inhabited only by Indians and the beasts of the forest. He continued in this line of enterprise about seven years, within which on one occasion he found on his arrival in New Orleans that the scourge of yellow fever was raging and that all business was at a standstill, so that he could find no market for his cargo. He showed himself a master of expedients, as did he many times in later life, for he placed his products on board the brig "Native" and thus transported the same to Savannah, Georgia, where he sold his goods at a profit and then proceeded on another vessel to New York city, where he passed a few days and then returned to his home by the primitive means of conveyance in vogue at that time. While he was devoting his attention to this migratory trading his parents and the other members of the family had left their home in West Virginia, coming across the river into Ohio and taking up their abode in Stark county, the change having been made at his advice and solicitation. He abandoned his trading business in 1823 and joined the family in this county. He purchased forty acres of land in Sandy township, later selling this and purchasing a greater section in the same township, which is owned by Charles Long, and this he also sold and then took the quarter section now owned by his son by a second marriage, Corwin C., in Sandy township. This tract was government land and was entirely unreclaimed, so that there fell to him the task of instituting the work of felling the forest and instituting the work of cultivation. He later purchased an adjoining forty acres of school land, so that the homestead comprised two hundred and forty acres.

About the year 1833 Richard Elson associated himself with John W. Smith in purchasing from Benjamin Tappan the southeast quarter of section 30 and the southwest quarter of section 29, in Sandy township, Stark county, on the line of Carroll and Stark counties, the consideration being twelve hundred dollars. In 1834 they here platted and laid out the town of Magnolia. There were some forty names selected from which to finally decide upon the title which should be given the embryonic village, and the name of Magnolia was finally adopted, Mr. Elson having been impressed with the name from having seen the magnolia tree in full bloom in the south. In 1847 the town, and also the town of Zoar, were incorporated through a special act of the legislature, and this was the first postoffice of the name in the United States, while by reference to the official postoffice guide the writer finds there are now twenty-three postoffices in the Union to which the name Magnolia is applied. Having thus been instrumental in founding a new town, Mr. Elson spared no pains to promote its progress. In 1834 he erected the original Magnolia Mills, the site of which at the time of selection was heavily covered with underbrush, so that he had to crawl through on his hands and knees in order to make a survey of the situation to his satisfaction. He placed the grist mill in operation and otherwise did much to improve and foster the development of the town. He was one of the influential men of the county and was one of the best known sheep growers in this section of the state. His method was to loan out a number of sheep to the neighboring farmers, asking in return one-half the wool and one-half the increase, and through this means he largely laid the foundation for the fortune which he acquired. In 1877 the family received notification from Washington to the effect that there was a sum of money due them from the government, the same being accrued and unpaid interest on government bonds which had been called in, while the interest had not been collected. The subject of this sketch thereupon wrote a letter to the late lamented President McKinley, who was at that time a member of congress from this district, giving him power of attorney to collect the interest, amounting to somewhat more than five hundred dollars. Mr. McKinley refused to accept any remuneration for his services, saying that the Elson family had done enough for him in the days past to make it a pleasure for him to make this slight recompense.

In politics Richard Elson was originally an old-line Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he ardently espoused its cause, holding it as the avowed enemy of the institution of slavery, of which he had seen sufficient during his trading trips to the south to cause him to protest against it with all the ardor of his noble and loyal nature. He remained a radical Republican until his death, which occurred on the 28th of August, 1879, at which time, among other words of high appreciation, the Canton Repository spoke as follows "Richard Elson, who died at his home in Magnolia, on the 28th ultimo, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, was a remarkable man, whose life is worthy of emulation, and his name should be revered and honored as one of the pioneers of this county, who during his younger days contributed largely toward transforming this section, then a howling wilderness, into a garden of civilization and beauty. Commencing life poor, by his sagacity, industry, frugality and energy, he acquired a competency, and he died as he had lived, honored and respected by all who knew him. May he rest in peace."

About the year 1827 Richard Elson was united in marriage to Miss Frederika Beogle, of Waynesburg, this county, and she died about three years later, leaving three children, of whom the immediate subject of this sketch is the only survivor. A few years later he married Miss Sarah Ann Brandon, of Holliday's Cove, Virginia (now West Virginia), and of this union three children were born, there being three sons and three daughters in his family. Of the children of the last marriage those living are Corwin, a resident of Sandy township, Stark county; Richard, of Magnolia; and Mary, of Oskaloosa, Iowa. Mrs. Sarah Elson died about 1847. John Harris Elson, the paternal grandfather of the subject, was born in that section of Virginia which is now comprised in West Virginia, the original American ancestors having come hither from Wales and located in Maryland, in the colonial epoch. John H. was a captain in the war of 1812, and he died when a young man, his remains being now laid to rest at Mapleton, this county.

Augustus R. Elson, to whom this sketch is dedicated, grew to maturity under the parental roof, and is indebted to the primitive district schools of the pioneer epoch for the early educational privileges which came to his portion. He continued to work on the farm for his father until he had attained his legal majority, and in 1851 he began work in the mill owned by his father in Magnolia, being associated in the operation of the same as a partner for one year. By this time the mill was badly run down through long and constant use, the machinery being in poor condition, and our subject thus took the mill into his own charge, entering into a contract with his father with a view to ultimately acquiring the property, and he forthwith instituted the work of improvement, gradually putting in new machinery and making every effort to turn out a product of superior grade. Thus he was enabled to build up a good business and was clearing an average of five thousand dollars a year when, in 1867, he tore out all the old machinery and installed new throughout, while he ever kept abreast of improvements in mechanical equipment and methods of operation, and thus, in 1881, found it expedient to again practically equip his mill anew once more. At this time he put in a complete roller-process outfit, and today the plant is one of the most modern in Stark county, turning out a flour of unexcelled quality and having a productive capacity of one hundred barrels a day. From the time when Mr. Elson took charge of the mill it was his ambition to make it second to none in the quality of its products, and it is certain he has realized this desideratum. The superior excellence of the flour has gained to the mill an extensive patron in the person of a wholesale baker at Trenton, New Jersey, whose baking secured gold medals at Centennial exposition, in Philadelphia, in 1876, and later at the Paris exposition of 1900, the exhibit being made of articles in which the flour from the Elson mills was utilized. This one customer demands a shipment of from four to five car loads of flour from this source each month, and his patronage has covered a long term of years. In 1898 the business was incorporated under the title of the A. R. Elson Company, with the subject of this sketch as president, and his son Richard R. as secretary, while the two younger sons, John R. and Frank, are also members of the company.

To Mr. Elson is due much of the credit for the present prosperity and the material upbuilding of Magnolia. It was through his instrumentality that the depot of the Chicago & Pittsburg Railroad was built here, and he personally bought the right of way and presented the same to the railway company for the branch of the Valley Railroad, which was thus built to this thriving little town, which is also indebted to him for many of its earlier improvements. Mr. Elson owns a farm of one hundred and fifty acres, under excellent cultivation and highly improved, the same adjoining the town of Magnolia, while he has other important capitalistic interests, being a stockholder in the First National Bank of Canton, a stockholder and member of the directorate of the First National Bank of Canal Dover, of which he was one of the organizers, and a member of the directorate of the Miller Pasteurizing Company, of Canton, of which he is a large stockholder. In politics he has ever been staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and he was for two years trustee of Sandy township, and for many years a member of the board of school directors. He was president of the school board and also of the building committee at the time of the erection of the present attractive and substantial Union school building in Magnolia. Through not formally identified with any religious organization, he is a liberal contributor to all church work, without regard to denomination.

On the 20th of December, 1855, Mr. Elson was united in marriage to Miss Margaret E. Rose, who was born in Waynesburg, Sandy township, Stark county, being a daughter of the late John and Sarah Rose, and to them have been born seven children, namely: Austin; Richard R., who is individually mentioned elsewhere; Emma, who remains at the parental home; John R., who is the subject of a sketch elsewhere; Margaret, who is the wife of Dr. Clement R. Jones, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Frank, who is also associated in the ownership and operation of the mills; and Harry, who resides in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, being a chemist by profession.

RICHARD E. GREER was born in the family homestead in Magnolia, on the 3d of April, 1865, and he is indebted to the excellent public schools of this place for his early educational advantages, of which he duly availed himself, while his initial business experience, like that of his brothers, was received in connection with the pioneer mercantile establishment here conducted by their father. At the age of eighteen years Mr. Greer became acting agent of the Cleveland & Pittsburg division of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Magnolia, taking the place of his brother William H., and the subject remained incumbent of the position during the two years and four months his brother was in the west. At the expiration of this period he resumed his school work, attending during the winter term following, and on the 1st of September, 1887, he was tendered and accepted the position of bill clerk in the freight office of the same railroad company at East Liverpool, Columbiana county, later being promoted to the position of chief clerk and finally being transferred to the thriving town of Waynesburg, Stark county, as ticket and freight agent, an incumbency which he retained until April 1, 1890, his services having been faithful and able, as is evident from his retention in the important capacity. He then resigned the agency and went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, to accept the position of bill clerk in the offices of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad at that point. On the 1st of January, 1891, he resigned his position, by reason of the fact that a ten per cent. reduction was made in the salary of every employe of the system and he did not feel it necessary to submit to the same. After a short visit with relatives in Iowa and Nebraska he returned to his home in Magnolia, and about two months later he entered upon a position to do extra work in the employ of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad, and thus continued until April 1, 1892, when he was appointed freight agent of this road at Bedford, Cuyahoga county, filling this position until January 1, 1894, when he was appointed extra agent, his duties being to serve as temporary agent at various points, in case of removals, illness or other contingencies. In this important and exacting capacity he continued to efficiently serve until the 1st of December, 1898, when he came to the paternal home, in response to the earnest request of his venerable father, who was living alone with his only daughter at the time, and who, as the result of a small burglary which had been perpetrated in the home, felt the need of having his son with him; the subject resigned his position and resumed his place in the old homestead. After about four months the alarm felt by his father lost its insistency and our subject then resumed his association with railroading, in which his long and varied experience had made him a valued officer. At this time he became chief clerk in the executive office, in Wellsville, of the superintendent of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad, being called to fill the temporary vacancy caused by the illness of the regular incumbent. Three months later Mr. Greer resumed his former position as special agent with the same road and continued in such until the 15th of October, 1899, when he resigned the office, and on the 19th of the same month was solemnized his marriage to Miss Winona Pickering, of Wellsville, Columbiana county, where she was born, being a daughter of Milton and Theresa Pickering, an influential family of that place. After a wedding tour extending to leading eastern cities Mr. Greer returned with his bride.

to Magnolia, and on the 23d of November, 1899, the present banking firm of William H. Greer's Sons was organized and the Bank of Magnolia was established, and our subject became an executive officer in the same, assuming the position of cashier. The bank is further mentioned in the sketch of Clarence S. Greer. Of the Greer-Beatty Clay Company, organized in April, 1902, William Beatty was made president and superintendent; Richard E. Greer, vice-president; and Clarence S. Greer, secretary and treasurer, and this enterprise, with its fine facilities, is certain to become one of the most prominent industrial concerns in this section. In politics Mr. Greer is a stanch Republican and fraternally he is a member of Sandy Valley Lodge No. 725, Knights of Pythias, while he is popular in railroad, business and social circles, having a wide acquaintanceship throughout the state by reason of his long identification with railroading interests.

JOHN C. CORNELL.—In connection with the review of the career of George F. Knight, the founder and present head of the Knight Manufacturing Company, as incorporated on other pages of this volume, is given adequate description of the important industrial enterprise, and without recapitulation of the data we may here proceed to a consideration of the life history of the able and valued superintendent of the concern, John C. Cornell, through whose efforts much has been done to forward the rise of the enterprise to its present important standing among the leading manufacturing industries of the city of Canton, the output of the plant being sawmill, well drilling and prospecting machinery.

Mr. Cornell has been a resident of Canton since the spring of 1877, and during the first decade after here taking up his abode he was employed principally in the works of the C.

Aultman Company, while in 1897 he accepted his present position, of which he has since been incumbent, coming to the same well equipped with technical ability and with excellent executive capacity, as his services have amply demonstrated.

John C. Cornell is a native of the old Empire state of the Union, having been born in town of Honeyoye, Ontario county, New York, on the 18th of September, 1856, and being a son of Stephen S. and Sarah (Bigelow) Cornell, both of whom were born in the state of New York, while the former was a distant relative of Ezra Cornell, the distinguished founder of the university which bears his name. The Bigelow family was early founded in America, the original progenitors having located in Massachusetts, with whose annals the name has long been identified, and his family, as well as the Cornell, is of stanch English extraction. When the subject was but four years of age his parents removed from New York to Ohio, locating in Huron county, where his father was engaged in mercantile business until 1868, when they removed to Iowa City, Iowa, our subject being at the time a lad of twelve years. Stephen S. Cornell died in Canton, in the year 1895, and his wife passed away, in Canton, in 1888. They became the parents of four children, of whom two are living at the present time, he to whom this sketch is dedicated having been the second in order of birth. The subject received his rudimentary educational training in his native town, and thereafter continued his studies in the schools of Huron county, Ohio, and Iowa City, and he learned the trade of machinist in Iowa City and thereafter worked as a journeymen until 1877, when he came to Canton, and since that time his career has been already outlined in preceding paragraphs. In politics he accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote in support of James A. Garfield, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, being affiliated with Buckeye Lodge No. 11.

On the 14th of June, 1888, Mr. Cornell was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Black, who was born and reared in Canton, being a daughter of J. L. Black, who is now a resident of Canton. The subject and his wife have one son, Clifford, who was born on the 8th of August, 1872, and who is now eleven years old.

JACOB MUSKOPF.—He of whom we now write is a worthy scion of sterling pioneer stock in Stark county, and has himself contributed a due quota to the work of progress through his well directed efforts in connection with the great basic art of agriculture, being now one of the representative farmers of Sugar Creek township, and it is certainly consonant that he be given a place in this volume.

Jacob Muskopf comes of a stanch lineage on both the paternal and maternal sides. He is a native son of Stark county, having been born on a farm in Bethlehem township, on the 17th of March, 1852, and being a son of John and Mary (Zintsmeister) Muskopf, both of whom were born in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, the date of the former's nativity having been 1817. They were married in Stark county, having cast in their lot with the early settlers of Bethlehem township, where the father of the subject has developed one of the valuable farms of this section of the state, having a landed estate of three hundred and seventy-two acres and having attained his success entirely through his own efforts, while he has lived a life of industry and utmost honor, commanding the uniform confidence and esteem of the community in which he has so long maintained his home and being now one of the venerable pioneer citizens of the county. He is a stanch supporter of the Democratic party, and for a number of years has been a valued member of the school board of his district. He and his devoted wife have long been worthy and zealous members of the Evangelical church.

Jacob Muskopf, to whom this sketch is dedicated, came to Sugar Creek township when one year old. He early became familiar with all the details of that vocation to which he has ever since devoted his attention, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the district schools of the pioneer era. He continued to assist his father in the operation of the home farm until he had attained years of maturity, and his independent career has been one of signal success and honor. In 1874 he effected the purchase of his present fine farm, of two hundred and twenty acres, in section twenty-six, Sugar Creek township, and here he has since given his attention to diversified agriculture, to the raising of excellent grades of live stock and to the timber business, from which last department of his enterprise he has realized excellent profits, as has he also from his more specific farming industry, which he has conducted with marked discretion and energy, being known as one of the model farmers of this section of the county. He takes a lively interest in public affairs of a local nature and is stanchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, though he has never been an office-seeker. For the past seventeen years he has rendered effective service as a member of the school board, the cause of education finding in him a progressive supporter. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, affiliating with Lodge No. 520, at Beach City. The parents of Mrs. Muskopf were John and Catherine (Garver) Ricksecker, both of whom were born in Switzerland, whence they emigrated to the United States about the year 1834, and became numbered among the pioneers of Stark county, where the former died at the age of eighty-four years, while his wife lived to attain the age of eighty-seven years. Six of their children are still living. In 1874 Mr. Muskopf married their daughter Sarah, who was born in this county, where she was reared and educated, and of this union have been born seven children, namely: Clara, Aric, Vesta, Ruth, Kate, John C. and Walter.

URIAH C. WARD is a native of the state of Pennsylvania, having been born in Fayette county, on the 28th of August, 1846, and being a son of Frederick C. and Mary Ann (Lane) Ward, both families having been established in the old Keystone state at an early period in its history, both families being of German extraction. The father of the subject was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, on the 6th of April, 1809, and in that same county occurred the birth of his devoted wife, the date of her nativity having been February 28, 1818. Both were reared to maturity there and there they remained several years after their marriage, Mr. Ward having been a boatbuilder by trade and vocation, while he was also identified with agricultural pursuits in his native state. In 1852 they emigrated to Ohio and took up their residence on a farm, partially improved, in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, where they passed the remainder of their lives and where the father developed his place into one of the valuable farms of this section, the area of the same being one hundred and thirty-five acres. On this homestead his death occurred, on the 9th of March, 1898, at which time he had attained the venerable age of eighty-seven years, while his wife preceded him into eternal rest by exactly four years to a day, having passed away on the 9th of March, 1894, at the age of seventy-three years. None of the pioneers of the community were held in higher esteem and none lived lives of more signal usefulness and honor. Mr. Ward was originally a Democrat in his political proclivities, but transferred his allegiance to the Republican party soon after its formation, and ever afterward continued a staunch advocate of its principles. Though a firm believer in the verities of Christianity he was never formally identified with any religious body, his wife having been a member of the United Brethren church. They became the parents of four children, namely: Morgan, who is engaged in farming in Summit county; Jesse, who is a resident of Missouri, where he is engaged in farming; Melissa, who died at the age of ten years; Uriah C., who is the immediate subject of this review; and Laura B., who died at the age of fifty years.

Uriah C. Ward was a lad of six years at the time of his parents' removal from Pennsylvania to Stark county, and thus he has practically passed his entire life in this section and is known as one of its most loyal citizens. He was reared under the sturdy discipline of the farm and early became inured to hard work, which always exercises valuable functions in character building. As a youth he conned his lessons in the district schools of the pioneer days, and there laid the foundation for that broad and practical knowledge which now denotes his intellectual equipment. He has ever continued to be actively identified with the the great generic industry of agriculture, and on his fine farm of one hundred and forty-six acres, in Sugar Creek township, are found the most pronounced and unmistakable evidences of thrift and prosperity, the place being equipped with substantial and commodious buildings, including a spacious and attractive residence. Mr. Ward gives his attention to diversified farming and also to the raising of a high grade of live stock. He was one of those most prominently concerned in the organization of the Beach City Banking Company, in which he is one of the principal stockholders, and he has been president of the company since 1898, and as such gives most able service in directing the affairs of the bank, bringing to bear that same mature judgment and that business acumen which have been the conservators of his individual success. In politics Mr. Ward is a stalwart Republican and while he takes a deep interest in all that touches the general welfare of the community he has never manifested the slightest ambition for political preferment. He has been for a number of years a member of the school board of his district and is incumbent of this office at the present time. The family attend the United Brethren church in Beach City.

On the 5th of December, 1878, Mr. Ward was united in marriage to Miss Irene Rosetta Breninger, who was born in Noble county, Indiana, being a daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Weimer) Breninger, the former of whom was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and the latter in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, where her father, David Weimer, was one of the early settlers. The parents of Mrs. Ward removed from this county to Noble county, Indiana, where they passed the remainder of their lives, her father being there engaged in farming. In the family were eight daughters and two sons, and of the number eight are living at the present time. Mr. and Mrs. Ward have two sons, Harry B., who was born on the 23d of February, 1884, was graduated in the Beach City high school as a member of the class of 1901 and is now employed in the bank of which his father is president; and Cullen Artemas, who was born on the 13th of January, 1886, remains at the parental home, having received his educational discipline in the public schools.

FREDERIC S. HARTZELL.—Throughout the civilized world the name of the city of Canton, which was his cherished home and the present residence of his devoted wife, is inseparably associated with that of the lamented and martyred President McKinley, and in no quarter is his name held in higher reverence than in his home city. It is thus fitting that it should be the portion of a native son of Canton to be so prominently identified with the McKinley National Memorial Association as is the subject of this review, who has the distinction of being a secretary of the same, to the furthering of whose noble object, in the erection of an appropriate monument to the memory of the nation's distinguished and martyred executive, eminent statesmen and noble patriot, his services are being given with zeal and energy. Of the ancestral history of the subject we need not enter into detail at this point, since on other pages of this work appears a personal sketch of his honored father, Dr. Josiah Hartzell, one of the prominent citizens of Canton.

Frederic S. Hartzell was born in what is known as the old Lovett homestead, in North Market street, Canton, on the 22d of August, 1860, and through both paternal and maternal lines and through his marriage he is identified with prominent pioneer families of Stark county. He was reared to maturity in his native city, receiving his early educational discipline in the public schools, after which he entered the Canton Collegiate Institute, of which William H. H. Avery was president, and here he continued his studies under most effective direction until he had attained the age of sixteen years. He then went to North Platte, Nebraska, which was then a bustling little frontier city, where he secured a clerical position in a bank, retaining this incumbency two years, and thereafter being identified with the same line of enterprise in several of the new towns in Colorado, including Canon City, Silver Cliff and Leadville, where he became familiar with the scenes and incidents characteristic of life in the mining towns. He remained in Colorado until 1884, when he returned to Canton, and on the 5th of December of that year he was there united in marriage to Miss Helen Whiting, a daughter of the late Julius Whiting, one of Stark county's most distinguished citizens and one to whom a memorial tribute is consistently entered elsewhere in this work. After his marriage Mr. Hartzell was for three years engaged in business in Cleveland, then removing to Wooster, this state. Here and in Canton he was identified with manufacturing interests until 1898. His wife's health had in the meantime become seriously impaired, and thereafter he traveled with her for several years for the purpose of recuperating her energies. In 1901, when the McKinley National Memorial Association was organized, Mr. Hartzell was made secretary of the Ohio auxiliary of the same, and when the national organization was perfected he was chosen assistant secretary of the association, and has since continued in this capacity.

From the time of attaining his legal majority Mr. Hartzell has rendered a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and has been an advocate of the principles and policies for which it stands sponsor. He is well known in his native city and county, and his friends may well be said to be in number as his acquaintances. Mrs. Hartzell was summoned to eternal rest on the 28th of January, 1901, in New York city, and is survived by her only son, Donald Whiting Hartzell, who was born on the 3d of January, 1886, and who is at the time of this writing a student in the University School in the city of Cleveland.

GEORGE H. LEGGETT.—Among those prominently identified with railroading interests and maintaining headquarters in the city of Canton is Mr. Leggett, who is here incumbent of the office of local freight agent of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad. He has risen to this responsible preferment through his own efforts and is known as an able and discriminating official. Mr. Leggett came to Canton in 1880, as a young man, and here became a messenger and student in the employ of the Connotton Valley Railroad Company, the same being now operated by the Wheeling & Lake Erie Company and the line being known as the Cleveland, Canton & Southern division. In 1885 he was appointed station agent at Canton for the Connotton Valley Railroad, receiving this promotion in April of that year, and he served in the capacity noted until 1891, from which time until 1899 he was paymaster and traveling auditor for the Cleveland, Canton & Southern. In the meanwhile this line had been absorbed by the Wheeling & Lake Erie system, and in the year mentioned our subject was advanced to his present position, of which he has ever since been incumbent. He is known as a thorough railroad man, having been a close student of the intricate methods and systems involved, and he has the confidence and esteem of his superior officers and of the people with whom he is thrown in contact in his executive capacity.

George H. Leggett is a native of the Buckeye state, having been born on a farm in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 3d of January, 1858. There he was reared to the age of about twelve years, having in the meanwhile secured his rudimentary education in the district schools, and he then accompanied his parents on their removal to the state of Virginia, this being in the year 1873. Later they took up their abode in Barnesville, Charlotte county, that state, where the subject eventually engaged in the mercantile business, in company with his brother John, and there he continued to make his home until 1880, when he came to Canton, as has been duly noted in the opening paragraph of this sketch, while his later course has also been adequately outlined from that time to the present. In politics Mr. Leggett is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for James A. Garfield, and his religious views are to a large degree dominated by the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, under whose influence he was reared, his parents having been devoted members of the same. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, being affiliated with Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons, in Canton.

On the 5th of April, 1887, Mr. Leggett was united in marriage to Miss Rose A. Menches, of Canton, where she was born and reared, being a daughter of Jacob Menches. Of this union has been born one son, George Raymond, who is now a student in the Canton city schools.

Sutton Leggett, the father of the subject, devoted the major portion of his active life to farming, and he now lives retired in the city of Canton. He was born, it is thought, in Carroll county, Ohio, being of stanch English lineage, while his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Tressell, is of German extraction. She was born in Carroll county, Ohio, and is a sister of Dr. John Tressell, a representative physician of Alliance, Stark county, while her brother Leonard was formerly a prominent business man of Canton, where his death occurred several years ago. Mr. Leggett is vice-mayor and president of the city council of the city of Canton, being elected for two years at the last April election.

PAUL GSCHWEND.—On other pages of this work is given, in connection with the sketch of Gustavus Elbel, an adequate description of the important enterprise conducted by the Elbel Company, of which Mr. Gschwend is vice-president, and thus it is not requisite that we enter at this point further detail in regard to this well known manufacturing industry of the city of Canton. Mr. Gschwend arrived in Canton on the 12th of January, 1881, and became a partner in the concern of which he is now vice-president and general manager, having been previously identified with the enterprise during the time its plant was located in the city of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, his capitalistic interest in the business thus dating from the year 1875, while it was originally conducted under the title of the Crawford Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Gschwend was born in the town of Butler, Butler county, Pennsylvania, on the 27th of August, 1848, and was there reared to the age of eight years, initiating his educational work in the public schools of that place and completing his studies in the schools of Allegheny City, whither his parents removed in 1858. In 1862 Mr. Gschwend began work in the establishment of the old firm of Ohlhausen, Crawford & Company, of that city, his initial duties being those of a filer in the fitting department, while his emolument at this time was the princely stipend of two dollars a week. He thus started at the foot of the ladder and his rises through the various grades of promotion through his own energy and ability, until he has become one of the principals in a large and important industrial enterprise, while his intimate knowledge of all details of the work justifies his retention in his practical executive office of general manager, aside from the other position which he holds more particularly by reason of his capitalistic investment. He is a progressive and public-spirited citizen and is loyal to the interests of his home city in every way. His political allegiance goes forth in an unequivocal way to the Democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Roman Catholic church, both he and his wife being communicants of St. Peter's church, in Canton. Fraternally he is identified with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

Peter Gschwend, father of the subject, was born in Endingen, Germany, whence he emigrated to America in 1840, making the voyage on the sailing ship "Oceanic" and being forty-two days on the ocean. In Germany he learned the trade of shoemaker, and for some time after his arrival in America he followed the same in the city of Allegheny, after which he became tollkeeper on the Butler plank road, retaining this incumbency until 1874, when he died, at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife, whose maiden name was Rosa Hess, accompanied him on his emigration to the new world, their eldest child having been born in the fatherland, while ten were later added to the family circle, the subject of this review having been the seventh in order of birth, while of the number six are living at the present time. The venerable mother still maintains her home in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, and celebrated her ninety-first birthday on the 13th of September, 1903. The father of the subject was for six years a soldier in the German army.

In Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, on the 29th of October, 1872, Paul Gschwend was united in marriage to Miss Cecilia Zirhut, who was born in that city, and of this union have been born ten children, namely: Edward G., who died at the age of eleven years; William Bennett, who is a traveling salesman for the Elbel Company; Cecilia R., who is the wife of E. C. DePutron, of Canton; Lawrence J., who remains at the parental home, being employed in the office of the Elbel Company; H. Norbert, who is assistant bookkeeper for the company; Helen G., who remains at home; Grover E., who died at the age of twelve years; and Leo J., Marie B. and Ferdinand A., who are attending school in Canton.

CHARLES P. DUFF.—One of the important industrial enterprises of the city of Canton is that conducted by the Elbel Company, manufacturers of saddlery hardware, and of the same Mr. Duff is one of the stockholders and a member of its directorate, while he is also serving in the executive capacity of secretary of the company. Mr. Duff came to Canton in 1881 as bookkeeper and cashier of this concern, and upon the reorganization of the same, at which time the company was duly incorporated under the laws of the state, he was elected to the office of secretary, a position of which he has ever since remained incumbent.

Charles P. Duff is a native of the dominion of Canada, having been born in the picturesque old city of St. John's, New Brunswick, on the 10th of September, 1837. Three years later, in 1840, his parents removed to the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he received his early educational discipline in the public schools, later attending Westminster College, at Wilmington, Pennsylvania, where he completed his purely scholastic education at the age of nineteen years, after which he was engaged as bookkeeper and cashier with various firms in Pittsburg, where he remained until his removal to Canton, as already noted. His father, Peter Duff, was a native of Scotland and possessed of the dominating traits which have ever indicated the canny Scotsman, —integrity, marked pragmatic ability and well balanced mentality. He emigrated to America when a young man and engaged in mercantile pursuits in St. John's, New Brunswick, where he remained until his removal to Pittsburg, where he founded and long continued what was and is yet known as Duff's Business College, an institution which attained a high reputation and one which many residents of Canton attended in the early days, as is shown by various referencines in the sketches appearing in this compilation. After taking up his abode in Pittsburg Peter Duff also compiled and published a standard work on bookkeeping, while he attained marked precedence in educational circles. He died in Pittsburg, in 1869, at which time he was about sixty-seven years of age. In St. John's, New Brunswick, was solennized his marriage to Miss Eliza Jane Marter, a daughter of General Thomas P. Marter, of the British army, who was then stationed in that place, the family being of staunch English lineage. Of this union were born seven children, of whom five are living at the present time.

In the city of Pittsburg, on the 19th of March, 1862, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Edgar, who was born in that city. She was summoned into eternal rest at the family home in Canton, in 1888, at the age of forty-eight years, and her funeral services were conducted from the First Methodist Episcopal church, of which she was a devoted member. On the 22d of November, 1890, Mr. Duff consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Etta B. Snyder, of Canton, and they now reside in an attractive home at 3150 West Tuscarawas street extension. In politics Mr. Duff gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is affiliated with Center Avenue Lodge No. 124, of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

EDWARD S. RAFF, late president of the Central Savings Bank, and during life one of Canton's most prominent and progressive citizens, was born in Canton, Ohio, November 17, 1858, and was the son of the late Judge George W. Raff. His preliminary education was obtained at the Canton Union school, after which he attended the Canton Academy. Graduating from the academy in 1877, he entered Wooster University the same year, from which he was graduated with the class of 1881. While in the university he was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity and of the Irving Library Society. He took first prize in the Junior contest for an original declamation, and first prize in the inter-society oratorical contest, the latter at the end of his senior year. During the winter of 1881-82 Mr. Raff was for a short time in the employ of the First National Bank of Canton, and afterwards for some months was engaged in the office of the Peerless Reaper Works. In the spring of 1882 he went to Omaha, Nebraska, and shortly afterwards was appointed assistant cashier of the Omaha Savings Bank, then newly organized. He retained the position until October, 1885, when he resigned it and accompanied his parents into California, where he remained until March, 1886, spending his time in San Jose and Los Angeles, when he returned to Omaha and occupied a position in the Union Trust Company of that place. This position he held until October, 1886, when he surrendered it, and after a trip to New York and other points in the east, returned to California and remained with his parents in that state for some time. He then returned to Canton and soon afterwards he and his father established the Central Savings Bank of this city, with Judge Raff as president and the subject as cashier. The success of the bank was assured from the very beginning and continued, the institution becoming the leading banking house in Canton. In 1900, following Judge Raff's death, Edward S. was chosen president of the bank, a position he held until the time of his death, which occurred at Tucson, Arizona, on February 2, 1901. During the above period Mr. Raff was actively interested in a number of local enterprises and manufacturing concerns, and also with several local institutions. He was a director of the M. C. A., and a director of the Canton Library Association. He was a prominent member of the Trinity Lutheran church, and a member of the council of that congregation. He was a trustee of the Hartford Poor Fund, and an administrator of the estate of Mrs. Aultman; also left large sums to Canton institutions. He was also a director in the Congress Lake Outing Club. Mr. Raff was a Democrat in politics, and was prominent in the councils of that party both locally and in the state organization. In 1894 he was the Democratic candidate for congress in this district, in the three-cornered fight between himself, Taylor and Coxey. The district was largely Republican, but it is more than probable that had Coxey been eliminated from the contest Mr. Raff would have been elected, as Coxey drew the most of his votes from the Democratic party. Mr. Raff became a member of the Democratic state committee. In 1900 he was an elector on the Bryan presidential ticket. He was closely associated with the leaders of his party throughout the state, including such as John R. McLean and John H. Clarke, the present Democratic candidate for the United States senate.

GUSTAVUS ELBEL is a worthy representative of that valued type of men whom the German fatherland has given to America and through whose efforts the march of progress has been distinctively accelerated. He is a native of the kingdom of Saxony, Germany, where he was born on the 24th of June, 1835, and in his native land he attended the excellent schools until he had attained the age of fourteen years, when, in the year 1849, he accompanied his parents, Henry and Sophia (Bowers) Elbel, on their emigration to America. They embarked, in the city of Bremen, on the sailing vessel "Beethoven," and after a voyage of forty-nine days' duration the ship dropped anchor in the port of the city of Baltimore, Maryland, where the family remained for a few weeks. The father of the subject found it impossible to there secure a satisfactory position in the work of his trade, that of tanner, and he accordingly proceeded to Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, where he purchased a tract of land and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, becoming one of the prosperous and honored farmers of that section of the old Keystone state, where he passed the remainder of his long and signally useful life, passing away in 1874, at the age of seventy-four years, while his devoted wife died in the same county in 1882 or 1883, both having been zealous members of the Lutheran church, while Mr. Elbel espoused the cause of the Republican party after attaining the right of franchise. This worthy couple became the parents of five children, all of whom were born in Germany, and all of whom came to the United States with their parents, three of the number surviving at the present time.

The subject of this review remained in the city of Baltimore about ten months after the remainder of the family had removed to Pennsylvania, having secured work in setting up ten pins in a bowling alley, and receiving in compensation the munificent sum of two dollars per month, with board included. At the expiration of the time noted he made his way on a canal packet-boat to the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he entered the employ of his uncle, August Bowers, who was there engaged in the manufacture of scales. Mr. Elbel was thus engaged for several years, and thereafter he devoted his attention for a time to setting up stoves in a local factory. His next move was to serve an apprenticeship at the trade of patternmaking, in which he attained marked efficiency, and through this facility he was led to become identified with the line of enterprise through which he has attained so marked success. In the year 1847 the firm of Eaton, Olnhausen & Company had established a manufactory of saddlery hardware in the city of Pittsburg, and in 1850 a reorganization took place, the title of the firm being then changed to Olnhausen, Crawford & Company. Of this concern Mr. Elbel became an employe, while in 1868 the business had another change and was thereafter conducted under the title of John Crawford & Company, the subject becoming a member of this firm in the year 1869. In 1880 it was reorganized under the name of Elbel, Gilliam & Company, while the present title of Elbel & Company was adopted in 1884, the business having in the meanwhile been removed from Pittsburg to Canton. In January, 1881, the headquarters were established in Canton, the original plant having been the old printing-press works, on Mulberry street, alterations on the building having been started in September, 1880, in order to fit the same for the new uses to which it was to be devoted. The building at the time extended across the present line of East Ninth street. The plant was destroyed by fire in the year 1884, and the municipal government, in order to provide for the opening of the street mentioned, agreed to give the company two lots in East Ninth street in exchange for that portion of their ground upon which the former buildings had been located, the stipulation being made that the company erect their new plant back to the building line of East Ninth street, and through this arrangement the street mentioned was opened to the line of Mulberry street. The first plant of the Elbel Company was ready to be put into practical operation in the middle of March, 1881, while on the corps of employes were to be found many of the men who had formerly been employed by the company in their plant at Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, a large proportion of them having secured houses in Canton. At the time of the destruction of the plant, in the month of December, 1884, arrangements were immediately made for the rebuilding of the works upon a more extensive scale, and by August of the following year the new and finely equipped plant was ready to be put in operation, while since that time extensive additions have been made and many improvements inaugurated, the buildings now covering about two acres, while the grounds owned and utilized by the company comprise two acres, and the best of transportation facilities are afforded, the lines of several railroads being in close proximity to the plant, which has special connections. The manufactory was kept in active operation about three hundred days in the year until the financial panic of 1893, and thereafter, for a short period, the same was operated on half time, but at the present time the business is running at full capacity. The executive corps of the Elbel Company is as follows: Gustavus Elbel, president and treasurer; Paul Gschwend, vice-president and general manager; and Charles P. Duff, secretary. Mr. Elbel is a man of fine executive and initiative ability, broad-minded and progressive in his policy, and all this is well and significantly indicated in the great enterprise at whose head he now stands, while he enjoys unlimited confidence and esteem in the business world and the high regard of all who know him in a personal way. In politics he accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Swedenborgian church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted member. The wife died in 1895.

In the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1862, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Elbel to Miss Elizabeth Enderegg, of that city, and they became the parents of four children, namely: Louisa, who is the wife of Christopher Fultheimer, of Canton; Henry, who is identified with the business of the Elbel Company; Caroline, who is the wife of John Hobusch, of Canton; and Kate, who remains at the parental home.

JOHN M. STEWART is a native of the old Keystone state, where the family has been established for many generations, the original ancestors having come hither in the colonial epoch of our national history, being of Scotch and Irish blood, while the name has stood ever as exponent for sterling character and distinctive usefulness in connection with civic life and productive utilities. Mr. Stewart was born in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, on the 4th of April, 1873, being a son of Richard D. and Matilda (Moore) Stewart, whose six children are all living at the present time, while the immediate family has been signally favored, in that death has never invaded its circle. Of the six children we incorporate brief data, as follows: Mamie is the wife of James McCready, of Ottawa county, Kansas; Margaret remains at the parental home in Pennsylvania; Nannie is the wife of James Stewarts, of East Liverpool, Columbiana county, Ohio; John M., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and Frank and Harry remain beneath the old home roof-tree.

Richard D. Stewart was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, while the common schools of the locality and period afforded him his early educational privileges. He was married in his native county, where his wife was likewise born, and he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1875, when he took up his residence in Hookstown, Beaver county, that state, where he established himself in the undertaking business, in which he has ever since consecutively continued,—a period of more than a quarter of a century, while he simultaneously became identified with the coal business, and he still continues to own and operate his mines. In politics he is an uncompromising advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party. He and his wife are both prominent and devoted members of the Presbyterian church, in which he has served for many years as trustee and treasurer.

John M. Stewart was a child of two years at the time when his parents removed from the farm to Hookstown, and there he acquired his early education in the public schools, while as a boy he began to assist his father in the undertaking business, in which he literally "grew up," becoming familiar with all details and gaining that professional discrimination, sympathy and delicacy which are so essential in the proper handling of this branch of industry, and when he was but sixteen years of age he was given an interest in the business conducted by his father, and from that time forward assumed a large portion of the duties and responsibilities involved. In 1895 he was married, and in the following year he came to Minerva, Stark county, where he purchased the undertaking business conducted by T. H. Carpenter, while later he also acquired the stock and business of P. W. Arnold, who was here engaged in the same line of enterprise in connection with the handling of furniture, so that Mr. Stewart thus added this analogous and consistent department to his original business, and since that time he has conducted the only furniture and undertaking business in the city, while for one year after coming here he also retained his interest in his father's establishment in Pennsylvania. He has a well equipped establishment in Minerva, carrying a complete and select stock of furniture in all lines and having an undertaking department which will compare favorably with those of many of the far more populous towns and cities. He is a thoroughly skilled embalmer and funeral director, and his consideration and kindness in the sad hours when his services are in demand in this department of his business have been fully appreciated in the community and have given him a high place in popular confidence and esteem. From the time of attaining his legal majority Mr. Stewart has exercised his franchise in support of the principles of the Republican party, taking an active and intelligent interest in the questions and issues of the hour and in public affairs of a local nature, but never seeking the honors or emoluments of public office. Fraternally he is an appreciative member of the time-honored and beneficent order of Freemasonry, in which he has attained the degrees of the York rite, being identified with Tubal Lodge No. 551, Free and Accepted Masons, of Minerva; Minerva Chapter No. 123, Royal Arch Masons, of Carrollton, in the adjoining county of Carroll; and Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar, in the city of Canton, while he is also a member of Minerva Council No. 21, Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In religion he has ever held to the faith in which he was reared, being a prominent and valued member of the Presbyterian church in his home town of Minerva, in which he is at present serving as a member of the board of trustees, while he has also been treasurer of the church and superintendent of its Sunday school for several years, his wife likewise being a devoted member of the church, in whose work she takes an active part.

On the 5th of September, 1895, Mr. Stewart was united in marriage to Miss Eva R. Duff, who was born and reared in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of the late William B. Duff, a prominent oil operator in that state and Ohio, and a man of wealth and influence at the time of his death, which occurred in the fall of 1902, as the result of injuries received in a fall down a staircase. His wife, whose maiden name was Margret Hassen, still resides in the old home in Darlington, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have no children.

CLARENCE S. GREER.—In the old homestead in which he now resides, in the village of Magnolia, across the line in Carroll county, Clarence S. Greer was ushered into the world on the 8th of July, 1852, being a son of William H. and Charity Margaret (Elson) Greer, of whose five children he is the eldest of the four surviving, the others being William H. and Richard E., who are individ-ally mentioned elsewhere; and Margaret A., who is the wife of Charles E. Beck, Massillon, Stark county, where he is engaged in the banking business. William H. Greer, Sr., came of staunch old Scotch-Irish stock and was born near the village of Cookstown, county Tyrone, Ireland, on the 24th of June, 1814, being a son of James and Elizabeth (Harkness) Greer, the former of whom was a tenant on a small farm in the Emerald Isle, where he died in early manhood, leaving his young wife with four small children and dependent upon her own resources. The problem which faced the brave woman was a serious and critical one, but she showed her devotion by making the best possible provision for her little family, bringing to bear a self-abnegation which should ever cause her name to be held in reverence by her descendants, in whatever station of life. When the father of our subject was fourteen years of age he entered upon an apprenticeship in what was there known as a cloth shop (the same would in this country be designated as a select dry-goods store), and when his brother Samuel, who was two years younger, had likewise reached the age of fourteen he too began an apprenticeship in the same line, the stipulation in the connection being that each was to thus serve for a period of seven years, receiving only their board in compensation for their services. William H. served out his term and then went to the city of Dublin, where he secured a position as a journeyman, but a short time later his brother Samuel, who had quit his place, persuaded him to emigrate to America, and they decided to join their uncle, William Harkness, who was residing in Magnolia, Stark county, being one of the pioneers of this section. In course of time they reached their destination, in the year 1837, and their uncle advised them to take the best available means of becoming acquainted with American customs and methods, and he thus secured for Samuel a position in a dry-goods establishment in Springfield, Ohio, while the father of the subject secured a place in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia. After there remaining for a brief interval he returned to Magnolia, where he was given an interest in his uncle's business, while his brother Samuel proceeded to Wheeling, where the uncle likewise had property, and there Samuel was assisted to establish himself in business. William Harkness, who had thus so kindly aided and directed the efforts of his young nephews, died in the early '50s, and William H. Greer succeeded him in the control of the large business which they had built up as pioneer merchants, the firm having been one of the most prominent in this section. They bought cargoes of coffee from New Orleans, while their dry goods and other lines of merchandise were transported overland from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, by means of wagons. The members of the firm made annual trips to the city mentioned, making the journeys on horseback and carrying the gold requisite for their purchases in their saddlebags. William H. Greer continued to be actively engaged in the mercantile business in Magnolia until the time of his death, covering a period of almost sixty years. In later years he paid less personal attention to his store and gave his time more particularly to the extending of financial loans and to real-estate transactions, through which mediums he was not only helpful to others but also increased his financial resources materially, becoming one of the most substantial capitalists of this section and wielding a marked influence in local affairs. His death occurred on the 8th of August, 1899, and the community as an entirety mourned the loss of one of its valued citizens, able business men and honored pioneers. In his early life Mr. Greer exercised his franchise in support of the Democratic party, but at the time of the war of the Rebellion his uncompromising advocacy of the Union cause led him to transfer his allegiance to the party which stood as its avowed sponsor, and thereafter he was known as a staunch adherent of the Republican party. He was without personal ambition in a political way, but was chosen mayor of Magnolia, while he was the incumbent of the office of postmaster here for about thirty years. Thomas Greer, a cousin of William H., Sr., was a member of the English parliament, and another cousin, David Greer, was an eminent clergyman of the Presbyterian church. The Sinclair, Stanton and Kluff families were also related to the Greers. William H. Greer was reared in the faith of the Presbyterian church, and his religious views were ever in harmony with its tenets. His mother passed her entire life in Ireland, where she died prior to the emigration of her sons to America. Charity Margaret (Elson) Greer, mother of the subject, was a native of Stark county and a member of one of its earliest pioneer families. She was born in Sandy township, on the family homestead one mile north of the village of Waynesburg, on the 29th of January, 1828, and was one of triplets, two of whom survived, she and her sister Catherine E., who became the wife of Dr. T. H. Whitacre and who is now deceased. The two sisters resembled each other so closely that even their intimate friends often mistook one for the other. They were children of Richard Elson, who came to Stark county as a pioneer from Virginia, where the family was established in the pioneer days. Mrs. Charity M. Greer was summoned into eternal rest on the 10th of March, 1896, having been a woman of noble and gracious character and having held the affectionate regard of all who came within the sphere of her influence, while she was a devoted wife and mother.

Clarence S. Greer, whose name initiates this sketch, was reared in his native town and received his early business training under the effective direction of his able father, while his educational discipline was gained in the public schools of Magnolia. He continued to assist in the management and work of his father's store until two years after his marriage, which had been solemnized in 1882, and then removed to a farm of one hundred and seventy-five acres, one mile north of Magnolia, the property belonging to his mother. Here he continued to be actively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-growing until the death of his father, when he removed to Magnolia and soon afterward effected the establishment of a private banking business, under the firm name of William H. Greer's Sons, his brother being associated with him, while the enterprise is specifically designated as the Bank of Magnolia. The bank was organized in November, 1899, while it is recognized as one of the solid and ably conducted financial institutions of the county and its business is constantly expanding in scope and importance. In April, 1902, Clarence S. Greer became associated with Wallen M. Beatty in the organization of the Greer-Beatty Clay Company, and they now have in operation a fine modern plant in which are manufactured hollow building blocks and fire brick. They have recourse to beds of a very superior quality of flint clay on grounds owned and controlled by the firm, and thus have facilities which excel those of the greater number of concerns engaged in a similar line of enterprise in the state. Mr. Greer is a popular and valued citizen of Magnolia, of which he is at the present time mayor, giving an intelligent and thoroughly businesslike administration of municipal affairs. In politics he has ever accorded a stanch adherence to the Republican party, but his office-seeking proclivities are noticeable only from their absence. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias.

On the 7th of September, 1882, Mr. Greer was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Cable, who was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, being a daughter of David Cable, a prominent and influential farmer of that county, residing one mile north of Sandyville, and of this union have been born three children, Ada B., Mary E. and Richard C. The Greer family, as may be inferred, is one of prominence in the social as well as the industrial life of this community, and the family homestead, which is occupied by Clarence S. and his family, has long been known as a center of gracious hospitality.

FRANKLIN R. YARGER.—The earliest definitely known fact in regard to the Yarger family is that the paternal great-grandfather, whose Christian name was either Michael or John, was a resident of Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, in early life but later removed to Venango county, that state. He was a blacksmith by trade and highly respected by all who knew him. His son, Henry Yarger, the subject's grandfather, was born in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, about 1777, and died in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, in 1824, at the age of forty-seven years. In his youthful years he learned the trade of a blacksmith, which vocation he followed throughout his later years. In October, 1816, he came to Ohio, locating in Sandy township, Tuscarawas county, subsequently locating across the line in Pike township, Stark county. He was united in marriage before coming to this state and became the father of seven children. Adam Yarger, the father of the subject, was born in Sandy township, Tuscarawas county on the 11th of November, 1816. He was a lad of but eight years at the time of his father's death and his mother, with her seven children, had a hard struggle to get along. She was determined to rear them to honorable manhood and womanhood and devoted her every thought and action to that end. One son, Paul, was bound out, but the mother managed to keep the other children under the parental roof and succeeded in implanting in them those sterling qualities and traits of character which enabled them to attain to respected and honorable stations in later years. The subject's maternal grandmother was Sarah Lower, whose father, Adam Lower, came from Germany to the United States in 1772, his naturalization papers bearing the date of 1775. He enlisted in the colonial army during the Revolutionary war and served throughout the struggle. He was a weaver by trade and a man small in stature. His death occurred in September, 1804, and he was interred at Williamsburg, Blair county, Pennsylvania. Adam Yarger, as he grew to manhood, learned the trade of carpentering and after his marriage he located at Sandyville, where he resided until his death, excepting two years' residence at Navarre. His death occurred on the 10th of April, 1864, at the age of forty-seven years, and his remains lie buried at Sandyville. It is worthy of note that his father died at the same age and that with one exception all of his brothers and sisters died between the ages of forty and fifty years. The mother of the subject bore the maiden name of Mary A. Revell and was born in New Philadelphia, Ohio, the house in which she was born standing where the public square now is. Her birth occurred in August, 1823, and she is the daughter of Thomas C. and Eve (Hiple) Revell. Her father was a native of England and came to this country some time prior to 1827, Masonic records showing that he paid dues in his lodge in that year. He located in New Philadelphia, Ohio, where he was employed at his trade, that of contracting and building. After a residence there of some years, he contracted that dread disease, consumption, and became convinced that by going back to England he might recover. His daughter, the subject's mother, intended accompanying him, but prior to his departure her mother induced her to remain here. The father was in very poor physical condition when he embarked and on reaching Liverpool he wrote back to his wife, announcing his arrival and his frail condition. This was the last heard of him for seven years, and his wife thinking him dead, married William Fisher. Subsequently, when she was on her death bed, her first husband returned, but, while he wished to show affection for the dying woman, the second husband would not allow it. Mr. Revell claimed that he had been captured and held a prisoner by pirates, thus explaining his long silence. Some years afterward he was again married. He built the first court house in New Philadelphia and for many years was one of the prominent builders of that section of the state. He finally succumbed to his old ailment, consumption. Grandmother Eve Hiple was a native of Pennsylvania and accompanied her parents upon their removal to Stark county about 1815, they locating in Pike township.

Franklin R. Yarger, the subject proper, was born in Sandyville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, February 2, 1842. Of the seven children born to his parents, but four now survive besides himself, namely: Mary E., the wife of Warren L. Umstead, of Pike township, this county; Oliver H. P., of Canton township, this county; Irene, the wife of George Capes, of Cleveland, and John E., of Canton. The subject was reared at home and received such education as was obtainable in the common schools of the neighborhood. From his twelfth year he was compelled to look largely after his own interests and he worked for neighboring farmers and at whatever he could find to do. In the midst of his strenuous struggle to eke out an existence the tocsin of war was sounded throughout the land and the subject hastened to offer his services to assist in the preservation of the national integrity. On the 5th of June, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served valiantly in the defense of Old Glory until his final discharge, June 21, 1864, at Columbus, Ohio. He took part in all the battles and marches in which his regiment participated and bravely bore his part of the hardships and privations which fell to the lot of the brave sons of the North in that dire struggle. Among the battles in which he participated were Gettysburg, Mine Run, Fredricksburg, Chancellorsville, the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor and many minor engagements. The history of the Fourth Ohio Regiment is a notable one and includes the record of sixty-nine battles and skirmishes. The subject did not go through the conflict unscathed, being wounded at the battle of Hanover Junction, and again wounded during the continuance of this fight on the following day. In the battle of Cold Harbor Mr. Yarger was badly wounded in the back of the head and was put into a baggage wagon and carried eighteen miles. There were six other wounded soldiers in the conveyance and two of them died as a direct result of the rough jolting on the way. Mr. Yarger's time of enlistment expiring two days later, he was placed on a boat and taken home. His wound proved to be a severe one and he has not altogether recovered from its effects, the nerves of his right side having been slightly paralyzed ever since.

As soon as he was so far recovered as to be able to do so, Mr. Yarger married and settled on a farm belonging to his mother-in-law and at once entered upon his career as a farmer. After the death of his mother-in-law, in 1890, the estate was settled and the subject and his wife acquired possession of the farm, comprising one hundred and ninety-five acres of splendid farming land. Prior to this time Mr. Yarger had purchased two pieces of land, twenty acres being bought in 1875 and a like amount in 1881. In 1899 he bought thirty-eight acres of land lying across the road from the home farm and thus he has come into possession of some of the finest agricultural property in the county.

On the 25th of May, 1865, Mr. Yarger was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Reinhart, a native of Sandy township, Stark county, the daughter of Valentine Reinhart, her birth having occurred in the house in which she now lives. Her father was a native of Pennsylvania, but when a child was brought by his parents to Ohio, they being among its earliest settlers. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Yarger were born five children, of whom three survive, as follows: George M. farms one of his father's tracts; William E. cultivates the home farm, and Mary K., who is the wife of John W. Bartholomew, of Cleveland. In politics the subject is a firm and uncompromising Republican, while fraternally he is a member of Sandy Valley Post No. 433, Grand Army of the Republic, of which he was at one time commander. His religious principles are embodied in the creed of the English Lutheran church, of which he has long been a faithful and consistent member.

MASSILLON STATE HOSPITAL FOR INSANE.

By HELENA RICKS SLUSSER,

The law authorizing the establishment of an additional hospital for insane in the state of Ohio was passed March 31, 1892. Thereupon a committee, consisting of Dr. A. B. Richardson, George R. Davis and Dr. C. W. King, was appointed to select a site. After visiting different localities, the commission chose the beautiful location south of Massillon. The ground was a gift of the citizens of Massillon to the state of Ohio, and consisted of two hundred and forty acres. The state has added one hundred and sixty acres by purchase. In December, 1892, Governor McKinley appointed a building board, composed of Robert Sherrard, S. J. McMahon, W. H. Mullen, Dr. A. B. Richardson and Dr. H. C. Eymann. This board was, in the same month, organized by the election of Robert Sherrard as president, S. J. McMahon, vice-president, and Dr. A. B. Richardson, secretary. Plans for building were submitted by Yost & Packard, with F. L. Packard.

as supervising architect. The early part of 1893 was spent by the board in visiting institutions, comparing and perfecting plans. The first contract was let in August, 1893, and building commenced in September of the same year. Dr. A. B. Richardson was elected superintendent in May, 1898. After months of arduous labor in directing the details of completing the four buildings under contract, and furnishing the same, the patients belonging to this district, in the hospitals at Columbus, Toledo and Cleveland, numbering three hundred and thirty, were brought to their new, attractive home. The opening reception took place September 6, 1898.

October 15, 1899, Dr. Richardson received the appointment as superintendent of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington, D. C., and his departure was a source of regret to all. He was a distinguished alienist, a conscientious worker and a genial, Christian gentleman. It was the good fortune of the board of trustees to secure so worthy a successor to Dr. Richardson as Dr. H. C. Eynan, a man of experience, ability and enthusiasm for the work, who took charge November 1, 1899. At this writing twenty-one buildings have been completed and occupied, eleven for patients, nine forming the domestic group, and one large auditorium, named William McKinley Hall, dedicated to the memory of Ohio and Stark county's most illustrious son. The present capacity is for nine hundred and sixty patients. There is one large dining room for all the inmates able to leave their respective buildings. The room is light and airy, the floors and wainscoting of marble, and in every way constructed with a view to durability and sanitary conditions. The cottages are built after the style of the French-Swiss chateau, with large sun parlors and extensive porches added. A new hospital building for the care of the acute insane will be built on the brow of the hill to the extreme south. This building will be so arranged that the patients with suicidal tendencies will be cared for on the first floor, having their dormitory or sleeping room adjoining their sitting room. They will also have their dining room on the same floor. The acutely excited patients will be given separate sleeping rooms, a separate sitting room, bath room and dining room. There will also be a large dining room on the first floor for patients almost well enough to be transferred to cottages. On the second floor a large dormitory and sun room will be devoted to the care of the acute physically ill and bedridden patients. The central portion of the building will be carried up three stories in height. On the third floor there will be an operating room, with amphitheatre for training school and other students, an anæsthetizing room and a recovering room. There will also be four rooms built, in as nearly as perfectly sanitary manner as possible, for the purpose of isolating patients with contagious diseases. On the first floor there will also be reception rooms and examination rooms. Hydrotherapy and electrotherapy will be special features.

Under the instructions of a landscape gardener, the grounds have been beautifully laid out, and artificial lakes, ornamental trees and flowers abound. Base ball grounds and tennis courts have been prepared for use of patients. Each year, as appropriations are made, cottages will be added until the institution will probably be the largest in the United States. Dr. Eynan was the first superintendent in Ohio to establish a training school for nurses. The course is the same as in regular institutions, comprising two years, followed by examinations, with granting of diplomas. The ability to obtain this instruction, free of cost, at hours not interfering with their duties, attracts a far better class of men and women for this very important part of hospital work, and raises the service from an almost menial to a skilled employment.

A weekly medical society of the physicians is held under the supervision of the superintendent. Weekly dancing parties, concerts, lectures, stereopticon views and theatricals are given for entertainment of patients. An experiment of Dr. Eyman's, "The Monday Evenings at Home" for the patients in McKinley Hall, has been a great success. A stroll through the grounds on a pleasant summer evening is a source of great delight. The porches, sun parlors and grounds are filled with tidy, orderly people. Games of ball and tennis in progress, giving the place more the aspect of a resort for summer visitors than a hospital for insane. The only fitting attitude of mind in response to such a cheerful sight is one of prayer, in thankfulness for the privilege of living in these latter days of enlightened humanity, when insanity is no longer considered a crime to be punished with chains in prison cells, but a disease requiring the highest medical skill with the best environment.

ROBERT B. HAMILTON is a native of New York state, having been born in New York city on the 20th of October, 1829. He is the son of Robert and Finniah (Henry) Hamilton, of whose nine children but six now survive, namely: The subject; Cordelia, the widow of Alexander F. Atwell, late of Waynesburg; Adaline, the wife of John E. Wilson, of Waynesburg; Finniah, the widow of the late B. F. Taylor, of Augusta, Kentucky; Alecia, widow of the late J. C. Rogers, of Waynesburg, and Edward H., of Waynesburg. Robert Hamilton was a native of the Emerald Isle, having been born in the county of Donegal, Ireland, in 1795. In 1814 he was brought to the United States by his parents, two brothers also accompanying them. They located in New York city, where Robert learned the trade of morocco dressing. He was married while living in that city and in 1830, with his wife and the subject of this sketch, came to Stark county, Ohio. He purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land in Sandy township, two miles northwest of Waynesburg, where for a time the family resided. In 1838 he rented a farm near Waynesburg and removed to it and about the same time opened a hotel at that place, the hostelry being still run under the name of the Hamilton House. The house soon gained a well deserved popularity and Mr. Hamilton continued its management until his death, August 31, 1876. He was widely known over a wide section of country and was universally esteemed. In politics he was a Democrat and in religion a Presbyterian. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Finniah Henry, was born in Wilmington, Delaware, and was of Irish extraction. She was possessed of marked intelligence and strength of character and at the time of her death, which occurred three years subsequent to that of her husband, she was widely mourned by a large circle of friends.

The subject of this sketch was reared under the parental roof and early acquired habits of industry, his parents instilling in him right principles of thought and action. He was indebted to the common schools for his education. He was possessed of ambition and an energetic disposition and at an early age of twelve years he worked in the harvest fields, raking the grain and carrying the sheaves. Upon attaining maturer years he learned the trade of wagon and buggy making, at which he worked steadily for a number of years. At the age of about twenty-five years he began contracting, building a number of bridges in this section of the country and also constructing many of the locks on the Sandy and Beaver canal. In connection with his other enterprises, he also did considerable carpentering and house building. From 1864 until 1874 Mr. Hamilton engaged in the mercantile business in the building now occupied by Blythe & Newkirk. During these years he was also engaged in the manufacture of brick. The mercantile venture was unfortunate, however, and Mr. Hamilton lost in that enterprise much of his wealth. Of recent years he lived a retired life, maintaining his residence at Waynesburg, running a farm situated just east of the city.

On the 30th of March, 1858, Mr. Hamilton was united in marriage with Miss Usher Robertson, a native of Carroll county and the daughter of James and Jane (Nelson) Robertson, both natives of Ireland. Her parents, upon their emigration to this country, first settled in Pennsylvania, but later came to Carroll county, where they resided until their deaths. Mrs. Hamilton is a graduate of the Canton Female Seminary and is in every way a highly cultured lady. To Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton have been born six children, namely: James R., who lives in Oklahoma; Jane N. is the wife of R. T. Hawke, of Carroll county; Cora is an instructor in the commercial department of the Canton high school; Minnie M. is at home; Alexander lives in Oklahoma and Finniah is at home. In politics the subject is a Democrat and has been honored by the electors of his township with the offices of trustee and treasurer, serving two terms in the first named position. He was also for several years a member of the school board. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian church and does all in his power for the advancement of the interests of the organization to which he belongs. His fraternal affiliation is with the Free and Accepted Masons, he holding membership in Massillon Commandery No. 4. In every walk of life he is widely respected as a courteous, kind-hearted and generous man of perfect integrity and pure moral worth.

T. F. WILLIAMS, the wholesale and retail butcher and grain merchant of Waynesburg, Stark county, Ohio, was born in Rose township, Carroll county, this state, on the 14th of September, 1854, and is the son of John W. and Elizabeth (McIrvin) Williams. The father was also born in Rose township, Carroll county, the son of Levi Williams, the date of his birth being the year 1832. John W. Williams was reared upon the parental homestead and upon attaining manhood was given control of the farm, comprising one hundred and sixty acres, of which he later acquired sole possession. He resided upon that place until about 1885, when he sold it and removed to Mineral Point, where he resided for two or three years. He then located in Sandyville, but two or three years later removed to Waynesburg, which place has since been his home. For the past five years he has been in the employ of the subject in the latter's grain elevator. He is a Republican in politics and in religion affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal church. He has been for many years quite active in church work and has held various offices in the societies with which he has been connected. Mrs. Elizabeth Williams was born in Tuscarawas county, this state, in 1831, receiving a fair education and has proven to her husband a helpmate in the truest sense of the term. In the spring of 1902 Mr. and Mrs. Williams celebrated the golden anniversary of their wedding, a very enjoyable occasion for them and the many friends who gathered to offer congratulations. They became the parents of nine children, of whom the following named survive: T. F., the subject; Mary, the wife of Marshall Brown, who resides in Mississippi; Sarah, who is single and resides at home; Minnie is the wife of R. I. Stemple, of Waynesburg; Grant lives in Blue Fields, Nicaragua; William is engaged in the theatrical business.

T. F. Williams remained at home during the years of his minority, in the meantime acquiring a good practical education in the common schools of his neighborhood. At the age of twenty-one years he began his independent career as a farmer, renting land until 1884. In that year he came to Waynesburg and engaged in the grain business, buying the elevator at this place. He was very successful in his new enterprise and because of his many sterling qualities of character soon won not only a remunerative patronage, but that which he values still more highly, the esteem and confidence of those with whom he was thrown in contact. In 1898 Mr. Williams acquired an interest in the Waynesburg Buggy Company, with which he was identified about three years, severing his connection therewith in 1901. In 1900 the subject purchased the butcher shop in Waynesburg and was engaged in the wholesale and retail meat business. He butchered for the custom trade of the adjacent country and also catered to the Waynesburg trade. He has intrenched himself strongly in the good will of his fellow citizens and has been given a well deserved recognition as one of the leading business men of his city.

In 1877 Mr. Williams was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Mowls, a native of Carroll county, and the daughter of M. M. Mowls, a retired citizen of Waynesburg. This union has been a happy and felicitous one and has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Pearl E., a teacher; Roy F., Eva M., Ralph, Ray, Dean and Paul, all of whom are at home, and one deceased. Mr. Williams maintains a fraternal relation with Tent No. 29, Knights of the Maccabees, and takes deep interest in the work of that society. In politics he is a Republican and for a number of years has been one of the most influential and active party workers in this township. He has been honored by his party by election to the office of township treasurer, holding the office for two terms and discharging its duties in an eminently satisfactory manner. He has on many occasions served as a delegate to the county and state conventions of his party and for several years was a member of the central committee. At the present time he is serving as a member of the board of directors of the Stark county work house. Religiously Mr. Williams has for many years been a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church and has been active in advancing the cause of the Master. In the local society to which he belongs he has for years held official station and is at present the efficient superintendent of the Sunday school. During the past sixteen years Mr. Williams has missed but three sessions of the Sunday school, a record of which he certainly has just reason to be proud. He is one of the public spirited citizens of his community, always ready to contribute in any way possible to its improvement.

HARMON ANTHONY was born on a farm in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 23d of August, 1861, being a son of Josiah and Lucinda (Baughman) Anthony, of whose ten children all save two are still living, namely: Harmon, the immediate subject of this sketch; Edwin, a farmer of Osnaburg township; John, a resident of Hancock county, this state; Levi, also engaged in farming in Osnaburg township; Orrin, who remains on the old homestead; Minerva, who is the wife of Rufus Zartman, of Osnaburg township; Ella, who is the wife of William H. Chenot, principal of the public schools of Hartville, this county; and Ida, who is the wife of Herbert Starkey, of Osnaburg township. Josiah Anthony likewise was born in Osnaburg township, near the farm upon which he now resides, the year of his nativity having been 1836, his father, John Anthony, having come to Stark county from Pennsylvania and having been numbered among the early settlers in Osnaburg township, where he reclaimed land and continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. The father of our subject was reared and educated in his native township.

growing up on the farm, and while a young man he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed as a vocation for a number of years. Soon after his marriage he purchased and removed to his present home farm, in Osnaburg township, where he has ever since resided, and he has gained recognition as being one of the most progressive and influential farmers in this section, while his efforts, directed with excellent judgment and marked energy, have been attended with a due measure of success. His home farm comprises one hundred and twenty acres, and a short distance to the east of the same he owns an additional thirty acres, while he also has a valuable farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Hancock county, this state, and residence property in the city of Canton. He has been a stanch adherent of the Republican party practically from the time of its organization, and has served as township trustee and been accorded other marks of public confidence and esteem. He and his wife are active and valued members of the Reformed church and are numbered among the honored pioneer citizens of Osnaburg township.

Harmon Anthony was reared principally on the homestead farm and received in his youth such educational advantages as were afforded by the public schools of the locality, later supplementing this discipline by one term of study in the state normal school at Ada, learning the trade of telegraphing, at which he was employed in various places up to the year 1887, when he was appointed to his present position as station agent and operator at Robertsville, and here he has since given efficient and acceptable service, having the entire confidence of the authorities in charge and being one of the popular citizens of the town. Early in the '90s he engaged in the hardware and agricultural implement business in Robertsville, and continued this enterprise about three years, when he disposed of the same, and later he conducted a meat market for a year and for some time was local agent for various fertilizers. In 1902 he here established a general-merchandise business, having a well equipped store and securing a representative patronage, the business being largely assigned to the supervision of his wife and daughter, while his attention is given to his official duties.

In politics Mr. Anthony has ever given an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and he acted as census enumerator in Paris township in the government census of 1890, while he is now serving his second term as justice of the peace, having been elected on the Republican ticket by a majority of one hundred and seventy-three in a township whose normal political complexion is Democratic by an average of three to one. He and his wife are both members of the Reformed church, in whose work they take a lively interest, and fraternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, being a member of Ethan Allen Council No. 171, in the village of Paris.

On the 25th of April, 1889, Mr. Anthony was united in marriage to Miss Flora A. Bollinger, of Robertsville, she being a daughter of David Bollinger, an honored pioneer citizen, and of this union has been born one daughter, Helen, who is one of the popular and attractive young ladies of the community, having received her educational training in the public schools.

JOHN WILSON CRAINE comes of stanch Scotch-Irish lineage, the respective families of the agnatic and cognatic lines having been long established in the north of Ireland and in bonnie auld Scotland, and the name which he bears has been identified with the annals of American history for many generations. His paternal grandfather, John Craine, a saddler by trade and vocation, was one of the pioneers of Westville, Columbiana county, Ohio, where he died when well advanced in years, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Wilson and who was of staunch Scotch lineage. Samuel McClelland Craine, father of our subject, was born in Wellsville, Columbiana county, about the year 1828, and there received a common school education, so availing himself of the advantages afforded as to become eligible for successful work as a teacher in the public schools of the locality. A man of fine mentality and marked ambition, he early made definite plans for his future life work, taking up the study of law and in due time being admitted to the bar of his native state, within whose province he has ever since continued in active practice. In politics he was originally a Whig, but at the time of the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and has ever since continued an earnest and able advocate of its cause.

In Washington county, Pennsylvania, was born the mother of the subject, her maiden name having been Elizabeth H. Hoft, and she was a resident of Canonsburg, that county, at the time of her marriage, her father, John Hoft, having been an influential farmer of that section of the Keystone state and an avowed Covenanter. She is now about seventy-six years of age and is a woman of gracious presence, a strict Presbyterian and one who has the affectionate regard of all who know her. Samuel and Elizabeth H. Craine are the parents of four children, concerning whom we offer the following brief data: Agnes remains at the parental home; John W., subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; Annie is the wife of Charles M. Watson and they reside in the city of Cleveland; and Maude is the wife of Frank M. Graham, of Clay Center, Clay county, Kansas.

John W. Craine was born in the town of Wellsville, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 5th of March, 1859, and when he was a child of one year his parents removed to Carrollton, Carroll county, this state, where he was reared to the age of ten years, securing his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of that town, while it may be noted that his first teacher was Judge Thomas T. McCarty, now a representative member of the bar of Canton and incumbent of the office of judge of the common pleas court for a number of years. When the subject was eleven years of age his mother removed to Smith's Ferry, Columbiana county, this state, and shortly afterwards to Leetonia, Columbiana county, where she has since maintained her home. There he continued to attend the public schools until he had attained the age of sixteen years, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of telegraphing, becoming an expert operator and continuing to follow this vocation, at various points, for about a decade. In the meanwhile he also taught school at Canonsburg, Pennsylvania, for two years. He had determined to fit himself for a wider field of usefulness than that implied in the following of telegraphy, and he thus worked at his trade for a sufficient interval to accumulate funds adequate to enable him to continue his educational work, and when his exchequer began to show marks of depletion he would resume work until he had again husbanded his resources. He thus continued his studies for several terms in Mount Union College, near the city of Alliance, this county, while he also applied himself vigorously and appreciatively to the study of law, purchasing the requisite text books and thus applying himself diligently in his otherwise leisure hours. In 1882 he continued his technical reading of the law for five weeks under the preceptorship of Hon. H. W. Harter, of Canton, and later was for a time a student under the direction of William C. Pippit, an able member of the bar in the city of Alliance. In 1885, upon examination before the supreme court, Mr. Craine was duly admitted to the bar of the state, thus gaining the desideratum for which he has so faithfully and intelligently labored. He forthwith engaged in the practice of his profession in Alliance, and his novitiate was of brief duration, since the energy and ability which had led him to apply himself to his technical study with such avidity could scarcely fail to bring him popular recognition and support. He secured a representative clientage in Alliance and there continued in practice until the 1st of July, 1899, when he came to Canton, the capital of the county, in order to facilitate the important practice of which he was in control and also to broaden the field of his endeavors. Here he entered into professional alliance with A. M. McCarty and C. S. McDowell, under the firm name of McCarty, Craine & McDowell, and they were associated in practice until the 1st of December, 1901, when the present firm of Craine & Snyder was organized, the able coadjutor of our subject being Jacob B. Snyder, while the firm is recognized as one of the strong legal concerns of the county, retaining an important clientele and having to do with much of the litigation in the county and state courts, while the reputation gained by our subject both as an advocate and counselor is high and is based upon his thorough knowledge of the science of jurisprudence and his facility in applying that knowledge.

In politics Mr. Craine accords an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote in support of the "plumed knight" and eminent statesman, the late James G. Blaine, while he has been an effective advocate of the principles and policies of the party. While a resident of Alliance he served two terms as city solicitor, as a member of the city council one term and two terms as a member of the board of education. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, being affiliated with Canton Lodge No. 60, Canton Chapter No. 84, and Canton Commandry No. 38, Knights Templar, and his religious views are in harmony with the faith of the Presbyterian church, of which he and his wife are attendants, she being a member of the same.

In the city of Alliance, on the 15th of February, 1895, Mr. Craine was united in marriage to Miss Lida G. Graff, a daughter of Matthew Graff, a well-known citizen of that place, and of this union has been born one child, Henlen.

JAMES W. CARNES was born in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 13th of May, 1853, the son of James and Jane (Bechtel) Carnes. The latter were the parents of seven children, all of whom are living at this date. Their names are as follows: John W. is a painter and resides in Canton, Ohio; Katie A. is the wife of John H. Yarger, of Sparta, this state; Almira is the wife of A. D. Weaver, of Canton; Flora is the wife of D. F. Lash, of Bolivar, Ohio; the subject is next in the order of birth; Margaret is a widow and resides in Bolivar, Ohio; Joseph is a blacksmith and resides in Minerva, this county. The subject's paternal grandfather, John Carnes, was a native of Ireland, as was his wife, but they emigrated to the United States and became early settlers of Pike township, this county. He was a very successful farmer and succeeded in acquiring eleven hundred acres of land all in one strip, the land lying partly in Pike and partly in Sandy township. James Carnes was born in Pike township in 1823, his birth occurring in the same house in which occurred the birth of the subject. He was reared upon the paternal homestead and at the time of his marriage he acquired the old homestead as a marriage gift from his father. When a boy he was afflicted with white swelling which crippled him permanently, but aside from this he was strong and sturdy in physique. In early life he took a great interest in live stock and dealt quite extensively in various lines of stock, driving the animals over the mountains to the eastern markets. Through his dealings he became very well acquainted and it was said that he was personally known to almost every man, woman and child within a radius of twenty-five miles of his home. He became the owner of about two hundred acres of good land and in connection with his stock business he gave much attention to his farming interests. He was a liberal and kind-hearted to a fault in his relations with his friends. A staunch Republican in politics and wielding a wide influence for his party, yet he never sought nor desired public office of any nature. During the Civil war he contributed largely from his own means towards buying substitutes to take the places of friends who had been drafted for military service. He was not a member of any church, but was a regular attendant upon divine services and lived a quiet and consistent Christian life, contributing liberally to church work and to all charitable objects. His death occurred when he was fifty-five years old. His wife was born in Pike township about 1820, and was of German ancestry, her parents being among the early settlers of Pike township, having come probably from Pennsylvania. Mrs. Carnes died at the age of seventy-eight years, beloved and respected by all who knew her.

James W. Carnes was reared under the parental roof and received such education as was afforded in the common schools of the period. He early exhibited habits of industry and frequently when not otherwise employed worked for neighboring farmers. At the age of twenty years he left the parental roof and began life's battle on his own account, being employed as a farm hand up to 1892. That year he went into mercantile business, opening a stove and tinware store, and in connection therewith did a regular tinning business, doing roofing, spouting, furnace work, etc. He has been very successful in his various ventures and is today accounted one of the most progressive and enterprising citizens of Waynesburg.

In 1888 Mr. Carnes was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Norman, of Steubenville, Ohio. Mrs. Carnes is an amiable and agreeable lady and has succeeded in winning for herself a host of warm and loyal friends in the city of her adoption. The subject is a Republican in politics and was recently elected to the town council, but declined to serve. Religiously he is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church and takes deep interest in all movements having for their object the advancement of the moral or educational advancement of the community. As the architect of his own fortune he has builded wisely and well and the success that crowns his efforts is justly merited.

LOUIS SCHAEFER.—Among the citizens of Canton who by a long and useful career left the impress of their individuality upon the present generations was the late Louis Schaefer, who for over half a century was clearly identified with the growth of the city and its institutions, and who ever stood for the best interests of the community in all things. Mr. Schaefer was a native of the department of the Moselle, France, where he was born December 25, 1815, the son of Phillip and Elizabeth (Loehr) Schaefer. He received his education principally at the schools of his native place, this training being supplemented by valuable instruction received from his father, who was a man of fine education and a teacher by profession in early life. In 1830 the family emigrated to America, and soon afterwards came to Stark county, and settled in Osnaburg township, near the present village of Mapleton, where Philip, the father, engaged in farming. Subsequently he established a country store at that point, and for many years carried on farming and merchandising jointly.

Lewis Schaefer.

Louis Schaefer came to Canton in 1832 and took a position as clerk in the general store of Martin Wikidal, one of Canton's old-time merchants. He was a restless and ambitious youth, and after working for Mr. Wikidal a few years decided the vocation of a clerk was too slow for him. All along his ambition had been for the legal profession, which fact he had frequently confided to a fellow clerk in Mr. Wikidal's store, which fellow clerk was John Danner, of Canton, and he finally abandoned merchandising and took up the law by entering the office of Griswold & Grant, of Canton, where he remained as a student until 1842, when he was admitted to practice. He soon took rank among the members of the local bar, not so much as a brilliant lawyer, but rather as a careful, painstaking and thoroughly reliable attorney whose forte was along the line of commercial practice. He also rose rapidly as a public man and became an influential exponent of the doctrines of Democracy. But he was not an office seeker, by any means. In the fall of 1843 he was tendered, by the friends of the administration of President Tyler the secretaryship of the American legation at France, which, for valid reasons, he respectfully declined. Had he embraced this opportunity to enter diplomatic circles he would no doubt have made his mark, for besides notorial gifts he was a linguist of more than ordinary ability, and besides the English language spoke fluently French and German. In 1866 he was the candidate for congress of the Democrats of the seventeenth district, and was also on the commission sent to Washington City to demand the release of Vallandigham. He took an active interest and part in the development of Canton, and was for many years connected with the city council, in which body he was always found working for the good of the entire community. He was also a member of the board of education for a long period, during which time he devoted much of his time to the welfare of the public school system, of which he was a warm friend. In the establishment of the Canton city water works Mr. Schaefer was the leading active spirit, and to his efforts in this direction alone, if in no other, the people owe a debt of gratitude. He was also active in securing the passage of the bill authorizing county commissioners to build court houses, and the Stark county court house was the first one erected under the provisions of that law, he being a member of the board of county commissioners at that time. He was instrumental in the establishment of several important industrial enterprises in Canton, among them the Dueber Watch Manufacturing Company, in the bringing of which to Canton he was probably more influential than any other one man. He was also active in bringing the Dueber Soap Manufacturing Company to Canton.

In May, 1849, Mr. Schaefer was married to Catherine Anna, the daughter of the Rev. Stephen A. Mealy, of Savannah, Georgia, who was an estimable lady of more than ordinary intelligence and accomplishments. She died August 17, 1879, having been the mother of the following children: Louis M., who was educated at Kenyon College, took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1877. His death occurred May 31, 1890. Mary E. married William R. Day, secretary of state during the first administration of President McKinley, and at present an associate justice of the United States supreme court by appointment of President Roosevelt. Alice L. died in 1874, aged twenty-one years. In 1882 Mr. Schaefer was again married, his second wife being Miss Helen E. Couger, of Millersburg, who survives him.

Mr. Schaefer was a man of the strictest integrity, of great energy and very enterprising. He was an excellent lawyer, a good business man and an admirable citizen. He was warm-hearted and generous, but at the same time was impulsive, impetuous and quick-tempered, but like all men possessed of those characteristics was a warm and steadfast friend and companion. He did much for Canton in many ways, and probably no man is better remembered today or his memory revered more than is his, among those who came in contact with him during his busy life. He died November 12, 1889.

PHILIP ELSASS is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Piqua on the 13th of June, 1855. He is one of seven children born to Christian and Christina (Engle) Elsass, of whom but three survive, George W., of Waynesburg, this state; Sarah, the wife of David Muckley, of Sandy township, this county, and the subject. Christian Elsass was a native of Alsace Loraine, Germany, having been born in 1825. Early in life he learned the trade of shoemaking and in young manhood came to the United States. Coming at once to Ohio, he located at Waynesburg, where he was employed by a cousin, Peter Elsass. After a short residence here he returned to his native country, but a short time afterwards again came to Waynesburg, where he was shortly afterward married. Soon after this interesting event he removed to Piqua, this state, where for a few years he was employed at his trade. About 1857 he returned to Waynesburg, and there spent the remainder of his life, his death occurring there in September, 1894. He was in poor financial condition upon his arrival in the new world, but by dint of steady perseverance and rigid economy he amassed a comfortable competence, and also won that which is of far more value, the respect and confidence of those who knew him. He was a firm Democrat in his political proclivities, but took no very active part in public affairs. Religiously he was connected with the Evangelical Lutheran church and lived faithfully in accordance with the teachings of the Holy Writ. His wife, who in her maidenhood bore the name of Christina Engle, was also a native of Alsace Loraine, Germany, and was born in 1823. When but a young lady she accompanied her parents upon their immigration to the new world and was here united in marriage to the father of the subject. She was of marked intelligence and sterling character and was beloved by all who knew her. Her death occurred February 2, 1902.

Philip Elsass, the immediate subject, was reared under the parental roof and acquired a fair education in the common schools. At the early age of fifteen years he went to work at the bench in his father's shoe shop and soon acquired a thorough practical knowledge of the trade, which served him well in later years. He continued so employed until 1877, after which time only the winters were so employed, the summers being spent at carpentering. In 1886 Mr. Elsass engaged in the shoe business in Waynesburg, meeting with a marked degree of success. In 1893 he purchased the interest of his deceased brother in the mercantile firm of Beans & Elsass, to which he has since devoted his attention. Since casting his lot with the citizens of Waynesburg Mr. Elsass has won an honorable place in the business circles of the city because of his many excellent qualifications. He is essentially the architect of his own fortune, and his career presents a series of continued advancements until he now occupies a conspicuous place in the front rank of the city's most enterprising and successful business men. His name is a synonym for honorable dealing and his record demonstrates the utmost conformity to the ethics of commercial life.

On the 16th of March, 1876, Mr. Elsass was united in marriage with Miss Lucinda Gibler, of Sandy township, this county, the daughter of Gabriel Gibler, now deceased. To the subject and wife four children have been born, of whom three survive, as follows: Emma L.

is the wife of Rev. C. J. Lautenschlager, of Glenford, this state; Sarah F. is the wife of Marion O. Peters, of Steubenville, Ohio, and Mable E., who is still at home. In matters political the subject is liberal, though he possesses Democratic proclivities. He has served the public in several important capacities, having been for two terms a member of the board of councilmen and also for two terms a member of the school board and for three years a member of the board of health, being still an incumbent of the two offices last named. He is a firm and consistent member of the Lutheran church in which he has held various offices, being at the present time deacon, secretary and treasurer. His time is almost entirely given to his business interests and the excellent condition of everything with which he is connected indicates his care and supervision.

AARON B. BEANS is a native son of the Old Dominion state, having been born in Rappahannock county, Virginia, on the 12th of February, 1836. He is a son of John F. and Almira J. (Hawkins) Beans, of whose six children four are yet living, namely: Jane H., who is the wife of S. M. Sexton, of Wellsville, Ohio; John W., who is a general contractor in Van Buren county, Iowa; Mary, who is the wife of James Gibson, of Jones county, Iowa, and Aaron B., who is the immediate subject of this sketch. John F. Beans was born and reared in Virginia, and there he learned the trade of wagon-making, becoming a skilled artisan in the line. In 1844 he removed from his native state to Knoxville, Jefferson county, Ohio, where he was engaged in the work of his trade for the ensuing three years, at the expiration of which he removed to New Cumberland, Tuscarawas county, where he conducted a mercantile business up to the time when the discovery of gold in California led so many valiant argonauts across the weary stretches of plains, enduring innumerable dangers and hardships, to seek the hidden treasures. In March, 1849, he joined the "innumerable caravan" moving slowly across the continent to the New Eldorado, and he arrived in California in the following September, six months having been consumed in the perilous journey, the menace from the Indians being almost constant while enroute. He worked in the placer mines until the winter of 1852-3, having met with the varying success which has ever marked the search for gold, and then he returned to his home by the way of the Isthmus of Panama. The following spring he again made the trip across the plains, acting as guide for a party of six others, one of whom was his brother. They proceeded by the northern route and passed into Oregon, where all save himself decided to remain, while he went on to San Francisco, where he shortly afterward took passage for home, again making the trip by the way of the Isthmus route and reaching his destination in the winter of 1853-4. In the following spring he purchased a general merchandise store at Norristown, Carroll county, Ohio, where he continued in business until the close of the war of the Rebellion, when he removed to Van Buren county, Iowa, where he established himself in the wagon-making business, which he thereafter followed up to the time of his death, which occurred when he was about seventy-three years of age. In his early life he was an old-line Whig in his political proclivities, but during the crucial epoch of the Civil war he was a staunch Union man and he espoused the cause of the Republican party at the time of its organization and thereafter remained an adherent of the same. His religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, as was also that of his wife, whose death occurred in 1848, at the age of thirty years. William Beans, the paternal grandfather of the subject, was likewise born in Virginia, being a representative of one of its old and honored families, and there he passed his entire life, having been a wagonmaker by trade and vocation.

Aaron B. Beans received his preliminary educational training in his native county in Virginia, and was about eight years of age at the time when the family came to Ohio, which has thus been his home for the major portion of his life. Here he continued to attend the common schools, laying an excellent foundation for that broad and practical knowledge which he gained in later years. At the age of eighteen years he became a clerical assistant in his father's store at Norristown, Carroll county, where he gained his initial business experience. He remained in the store until 1858, when he came to Waynesburg, Stark county, where he accepted a clerkship in the general store conducted by the firm of J. Ranne & Company, and here he continued to make his home until the outbreak of the Rebellion, when his intrinsic loyalty and patriotism were roused to responsive protest, and scarcely had the smoke of the rebel guns cleared away above the ramparts of old Fort Sumter, ere he tendered his services in defense of a righteous cause. On the 17th of April, 1861, he enlisted, for a term of three months, as a private in Company A, Nineteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was organized in Stark county, Colonel Samuel Beatty commanding, while the captain of Company A was Charles F. Manderson. The regiment was assigned to the command of General McClelland in the Army of West Virginia, and actively engaged in the battle of Rich Mountain. Mr. Beans received his honorable discharge in the latter part of August, 1861, at Columbus, Ohio, and then returned to Waynesburg, where he shortly afterwards enlisted as a member of the home guard, being made first lieutenant of Company I, One Hundred and Sixty-second Regiment, John F. May, captain, and Colonel Ball commanding. In 1864, when a call was made for one-hundred-day men, the regiment promptly responded and was sent to Kentucky, where it remained on detached duty, guarding railroads, supplies, etc., until the expiration of the term of enlistment, when its members received their honorable discharges. Mr. Beans then returned once more to Waynesburg, and shortly afterwards he accepted a government position as special officer in the office of the provost marshal at Alliance, this county. In the spring of 1865 he returned to Waynesburg and became a clerk in the mercantile establishment conducted by the successors of his former employers, J. Renne & Company, and was thus engaged for the ensuing three years. In 1868 he initiated his independent business career by effecting the organization of the firm of A. B. Beans & Company, dealers in produce, the enterprise being continued in Waynesburg until the autumn of 1871, when the partnership was dissolved and the business sold. Our subject thereupon accepted a clerical position in the establishment of Elson & Higley, who were engaged in the general merchandise business in this town, and he remained with this firm until April, 1877, when he associated himself with J. C. Elsass and R. Netz in the purchase of the business of this firm, and operations continued under the title of Beans, Elsass & Netz. In the following spring Mr. Netz's interest was acquired by the other two members of the firm, and the firm name of Beans & Elsass has been continued up to the present time, while the enterprise has grown to be the most important of the sort in Waynesburg, deriving its trade from a wide territory normally tributary to the town. Mr. J. C. Elsass continued to be actively identified with the business until his death, in 1891, as the result of an accident, and his widow thereafter maintained his interest in the concern until 1893, when she disposed of the same to Philip Elsass, a brother of her late husband, and he has since remained an interested principal in the business. Of the senior member of the firm one who has known him long and well has given the following appreciative estimate: "Mr. Beans has learned the science of successful merchandising and his firm conducts the principal business of the town. His honor and integrity are as inflexible as the 'laws of the Medes and Persians, which change not,' and no citizen is more worthy of the confidence and esteem of the community in which he has lived and labored to so goodly ends, while it is evident that this objective appreciation of the man is not denied." Politically Mr. Beans is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, but he is essentially a business man and has never had any desire for the honors or emoluments of public office. He and his wife are both valued members of the Presbyterian church.

On the 26th of July, 1862, Mr. Beans was united in marriage to Miss Mary McCauley, of Wellsville, Ohio, and they are the parents of one son, Herbert S., who is now a resident of Waynesburg, Ohio.

MADISON W. WADE.—The great advances made in the science and art of photography within the last decade have been almost phenomenal and challenged the admiration of all, while the incidental value has been of great importance as touching various lines of reproduction for commercial and amusement enterprises, as well as in offering the most beautiful effects in art portraiture through the medium of the sun's rays. Among those who have introduced new lines of reproduction in the photographic line is Mr. Wade, who is widely known as the founder of the small photographs, or the process of securing several miniature portraits in different positions with but a single exposure for the securing of six or more photographs in the one position. That is, each plate, with its varying number of exposures, will contain many small portraits on the one negative. He now carries on an extensive business under the title of the Wade Photo Company, and his success is gratifying from the fact that he has gained the same through his own efforts and ability. From a small brochure issued by Mr. Wade we make quotations at this point, since the article thus published will afford an idea of the rise of the popular enterprise of which he was the founder. In these quotations we shall not follow the exact diction and shall eliminate extraneous data, as expediency may suggest, but retain the main points relevant to the subject.

"M. W. Wade, the genial proprietor of the Wade Photo Company, is the original founder of the small photographs and the attendant and important industry which has been built up through the same. In 1896 Mr. Wade was in the employ of Charles T. Pomeroy, a progressive photographer of Kansas City, Missouri, who had a special camera for copying photographs for a marriage bureau in that city, and from this camera Mr. Wade conceived the idea of the small photographs, with which he has achieved so much fame and success and delighted many thousands of customers. Mr. Wade now has this camera in his possession and would not part with it for many times its original cost, as it is the first and original camera with which small photographs were popularly and successfully introduced. When he first announced to some of the older and supposedly wiser heads of the profession that with the multiplying principle he had evolved from this camera he could produce sixteen photographs in four different positions for twenty-five cents and realize a profit, the general attitude manifested was one of incredulity and even ridicule. His generous employer, Mr. Pomeroy, however, realized to a greater extent the possibilities involved, and after several months of experimenting gave Mr. Wade a vacation from the Kansas City gallery and furnished equipments, finances, etc., for making a practical and thorough test of the new departure in the business. Accordingly, on the 17th of July, 1897, in Leavenworth, Kansas, Mr. Wade swung his sign to the breeze, 'Sixteen photographs of yourself, four different styles, twenty-five cents.' Thus the small photos were launched, and stranger than fiction reads the story of the growth of the enterprise. Before a background could be arranged a daughter from one of the wealthiest families in town was in front of the camera demanding her picture. She was photographed with the wallpaper for a background. The next customer was a prosperous young farmer who insisted that his name was William McKinley and that he wanted seven sets of those photos. The first day ran thirteen dollars and Mr. Wade thought his scheme was ruined by the unlucky number. But not so; the next day showed a still livelier trade, and for six weeks an unbroken line of customers filed in front of the camera from morning until night. Being unaccustomed to such constant operating Mr. Wade was physically exhausted at the expiration of this period, and he was compelled to take a rest of ten days in Kansas City, where he opened business in his special line at the end of this interval, turning the same over to Mr. Pomeroy ten weeks later."

In the above paragraph is outlined the inception of the important and extensive business which Mr. Wade has built up, and it is sufficient to say in this connection that his experiences in many of the leading cities of Kansas and Colorado in the following months were even more gratifying in the amount of business done and the public enthusiasm aroused. Mr. Wade had in the meanwhile thoroughly instructed his brother and sister, F. H. and Maude J. Wade, in the details of the business, and thereafter branch studios were opened in various places. Mr. Wade and his party of six assistants passed three months in Colorado, doing an enormous business, and enjoying the many scenic beauties of that fair commonwealth, and after defraying all expenses for the party he realized a profit of more than nine hundred dollars from his operations during the period mentioned, while he had also accumulated seven hundred and fifty dollars' worth of the best diamonds to be found in the markets of Denver. From the pamphlet to which recourse has previously been had, we continue to quote, as follows: "On his return to Kansas City from his triumphal tour, to say that Mr. Wade was made the lion of the hour by his former employer, fellow photographers, photographic stock dealers and acquaintances in general is putting it mildly. All who knew him when he launched the 'little photos' wished him well, but many doubted the success of the venture. They now bade farewell to their fears. Little photos had become the rage of the west. Photographers far and near were springing into line, as if by magic, and essaying the production of the popular little portraits. Western photographic supply houses which had watched the growing popularity of these photographs with keen interest, began pushing the sale of different styles of cameras for making them, and manufacturers of the same were worked to their utmost capacity supplying the demand. In May, 1899, Mr. Wade removed his forces from Missouri and commenced opening a circuit of galleries in Ohio, embracing the cities of Cleveland, Akron, Canton, Massillon, Mansfield, New Philadelphia and Coshocton, with headquarters at Canton. This was probably the largest circuit of photograph studios of the kind under one management and ownership in the United States. The business has since been constantly expanding in scope and importance, and Mr. Wade has control of a magnificent enterprise which has been built up solely through his own energy and talent. He attributes his phenomenal success principally to the following causes: His prices are within reach of the humblest, his results are good enough for the greatest, and he tries to give value received in every instance. He buys no cheap stock with which to execute his work, his materials and accessories being the best the markets afford. His pictures are as permanent as photographic science knows how to make them. In his finishing departments he has the most experienced and competent assistants to be found, regardless of price."

Madison Wright Wade, of whose successful career an outline has been given in preceding paragraphs and who maintains his residence in Canton at the time of this writing, is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the city of Logan, Hocking county, Ohio, on the 1st of June, 1866. He was there reared to maturity, receiving his early educational discipline in the public schools and thereafter attending the Ohio Normal University, at Ada, Hardin county, where he was a student in the years 1884-5-6. He put his scholastic acquirements to practical test by teaching in the public schools for a time, and in 1889 he went to Kansas City, Missouri, where he served a thorough apprenticeship in the photographic business in the studio of Mr. Pomeroy, to whom reference has been previously made in this sketch, while his future course has been noted in the preceding portion of this context, so that a recapitulation is not demanded at this juncture. In politics Mr. Wade is stanch adherent of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes a lively interest, his first presidential vote having been cast in support of Benjamin Harrison. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he was reared. Mr. Wade is a young man of pleasing and genial personality and sturdy physique, and is at yet a single man.

Edward Wade, the father of the subject, was born near the city of Altoona, Blair county, Pennsylvania, where he passed his boyhood days, then coming with his parents to Perry county, Ohio, in which state he has since continued to make his home, having been a resident of Logan, Hocking county, or its immediate vicinity, for the past forty years. He is the patentee of several proprietary medicines which have long commanded a large sale. His father, Hiram Wade, was a pioneer physician of western Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession for many years, the family having been established in New England in the colonial epoch of our national history and being of stanch English lineage. Hiram Wade was a cousin of Hon. Benjamin F. Wade, the eminent Ohio statesman and lawyer, long a member of the United States senate. The mother of the subject bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Wright, and she was born in Licking county, Ohio, being a daughter of Franklin Wright, an honored pioneer of that section of the state. She died in Logan, in 1884, at the age of forty-four years, and was survived by her nine children, two since dying. She was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, as is also her husband, and the latter has given his allegiance to the Republican party from practically the time of its inception.

ALFRED C. GOUDY, M. D., is a native son of the Buckeye state and a scion of sterling pioneer stock. He was born in Wayne county, Ohio, on the 25th of September, 1860, being a son of George W. and Sabina (Zortman) Goudy, both of whom were likewise natives of that county, where their respective parents took up their abode in the early pioneer days. In 1868 the father of the subject removed to Tuscarawas county and located in the town of Ragersville, where he remained until 1882, removing to New Philadelphia in 1882. His death occurred on the 3d of November, 1899, at which time he was sixty-four years of age. He was a miller by trade and vocation and a man of utmost integrity and honor in all the relations of life, while he was endowed with excellent business ability and held the unequivocal confidence and esteem of those with whom he came in contact. He was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party and for many years was an active worker in its ranks, having been incumbent of various offices of public trust and responsibility, including those of township trustee, township treasurer and justice of the peace, while in 1881 he was elected sheriff of Tuscarawas county, in which capacity he served two terms, giving a most able and acceptable administration. His father, William Goudy, was a native of the Old Dominion state of Virginia, whither he came to Wayne county, Ohio, as a pioneer of 1800, and there he passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Bates and who was born in Pennsylvania in 1788, where she was reared and educated. This worthy couple became the parents of the following named children: Samuel, James, Isaac, Henry, George W., Mary, Cynthia, Eliza and Tena, and of the number only one is living at the present time. The mother of the subject is still living, maintaining her home in New Philadelphia, Tuscarawas county. She is a devoted member of the Baptist church. Of their seven children we enter the following brief record: Martin B., who was born in 1855, is a resident of Kokomo, Indiana; Peter, who was born in 1856, resides in Strasburgh, Ohio; Mary V., who was born in 1859, is now the wife of Isaac Swihart, of Ragersville; Alfred C. is the immediate subject of this review; Frank E., who was born in 1866, is a resident of New Philadelphia; Charles L., born in 1869, lives in New Philadelphia, and Alta, born in 1872, is Mrs. William Price.

Dr. Goudy was a lad of seven years at the time of his parents' removal to Tuscarawas county, and he was reared to maturity in the town of Ragersville, where he secured his early educational discipline in the public schools, while he promptly formulated definite plans for the future sphere of action, determining to prepare himself for the medical profession, for which he early manifested a distinctive predilection. At the age of nineteen years he began his technical reading under the preceptorship of Dr. H. J. Peters, of Ragersville, an able and honored physician and one who did much to aid and encourage his young student. Dr. Goudy thus continued his studies for a period of three years, after which he was matriculated in that well known and particularly well equipped institution, the Starling Medical College, in the city of Columbus, where he gave himself earnestly to his study and practical clinical work until he had completed the prescribed course, being duly graduated as a member of the class of 1882 and receiving his coveted and well earned degree of Doctor of Medicine. Dr. Goudy forthwith established himself in the practice of his profession in the village of Strassburg, Tuscarawas county, where he remained until 1888, when he came to his present location, in Beach City, where he has built up a large and representative practice and where he has gained recognition among his professional confreres and the general public as a thoroughly able and discriminating physician and skillful surgeon, having the equipoise so essential in the time of emergency and ever keeping in close touch with the advances made in the various departments of his profession. In addition to the exigent work of his profession the Doctor also conducts a well-ordered drug store, in which he also keeps a select stock of books and stationery, and in this mercantile business he controls an excellent trade, drawn from the territory normally tributary to the town. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and while residing in Tuscarawas county he was elected to the office of township clerk, and in Beach City he has been a member of the board of education for the past nine years. He is a member of the Bankers' Fraternal Union.

On the 23d of September, 1881, Dr. Goudy was united in marriage to Miss Mary R. Eckert, who was born in Tuscarawas county, being a daughter of Frederick and Phoebe Eckert, her father being a prominent farmer of that county, where she was reared and educated, being a lady of gracious personality and marked refinement. Dr. and Mrs. Goudy have four children, namely: Phoebe S., Grover C., Earl E. and James A. The family are prominent in the social life of the community and their pleasant home is one in which a gracious hospitality is ever in distinctive evidence.

WILLIAM W. CLARK, JR.—He to whom this brief sketch is devoted is a son of that well-known and honored citizen and prominent business man whose patronymic he bears, William W. Clark, Sr., who has manifold capitalistic interests in Canton and elsewhere, while he is president of the Canton Steel Roofing Company, of which the subject of this review is treasurer. On other pages of this work will be found specific mention of the father and also of the brother of our subject, and in the connection has been given adequate information concerning the family history to forefend the necessity of reiterating the statements at this juncture, so that this article may be devoted entirely to him whose name appears above and who is treasurer of the Canton Steel Roofing Company and known as a young man of alert mentality and excellent business acumen, as may be inferred from the responsible position of which he is in tenure.

In the family homestead, in West Tuscarawas street, in the city of Canton, William W. Clark, Jr., was born on the 17th of December, 1880, and after attending the public schools he was entered as a student in that old historic institution, the Phillips Academy, at Exeter, New Hampshire, which he left and entered the army. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war Mr. Clark enlisted in Company I, Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was commanded by Colonel C. V. Hand, while Henry Willis was captain of Company I. Mr. Clark had received thorough military discipline in the academy mentioned, and this tactical knowledge stood him well in and during his practical efforts as a soldier, his record during the campaign in Cuba being one which was creditable to him and to the state from which he went forth to do battle in a righteous cause. After his return from the war he became a student in the law department of the Ohio State University, in the capital city of Columbus, and was there graduated as a member of the class of 1902, though he has never engaged in the active practice of the profession for which he has thus qualified himself. He became identified with the Canton Steel Roofing Company in a clerical capacity, and in January, 1903, was elected treasurer, in which office he is rendering excellent service. In politics he is a Republican, while he is distinctively popular in both the business and social circles of his native city and is a worthy representative of the name he bears.

NORMAN REESE was born in the village of Freeburg, this county, on the 24th of December, 1852, being a son of Edward and Emeline (Shidler) Reese, of whose eleven children the following named nine still survive: Norman, the immediate subject of this sketch; Harmon, who resides at North Georgetown, Columbiana county; Edward H., who is a resident of Freeburg, Stark county; John, who is a successful farmer of Paris township; Laura, who is the wife of Samuel Staffer, of Freeburg; Emma, who is the wife of Wilson Hartzel, of Freeburg; Ada, who is the wife of Calvin Aultman, of Alliance, this county; Nancy, who is the wife of John Irwin, of Freeburg; and Ella, who is the wife of Ellard Hoppis, of Alliance. The father of our subject was born in Washington township, Stark county, in the year 1834, being a son of George Reese, who was a native of Pennsylvania and of stanch German lineage, the family having been founded in the Keystone state at an early epoch of its history. In the early pioneer days in Stark county George Reese came hither from his native state and settled on a tract of heavily timbered land in Washington township, eventually reclaiming a goodly portion of the same and developing a good farm, upon which both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. On this pioneer homestead on which he was born Edward Reese was reared to maturity, and after his marriage he settled on a farm adjoining the homestead, renting the same for a few years and then purchasing the place, which comprised eighty acres. He later purchased thirteen acres lying contiguous, thus making the area of his farm ninety-three acres. Here he improved one of the valuable farms of the county and became known as a progressive and successful business man and a public-spirited citizen, and he has ever held the implicit confidence and esteem of all who know him. About 1896 he sold his farm to his son-in-law, Samuel Staffer, and then purchased a residence in the pleasant village of Homeworth, where he has since lived retired from active business. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and for several years he served as trustee of Washington township, while he has long been an active and zealous member of the German Baptist church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted adherent. She was born in Paris township, this county, being a daughter of David Shidler, who was one of the early settlers there, whither he emigrated from Pennsylvania. The devoted and loved wife and mother was summoned into eternal rest in 1891, at the age of fifty-six years.

Norman Reese was reared to the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm, and to the public schools of the neighborhood he is indebted for the early educational advantages which fell to his portion, while he supplemented this training by a course in the commercial department of Mount Union College, near the city of Alliance. He continued to assist his father in the management and work of the homestead farm up to the time of his marriage, in 1880, when he removed to the state of Michigan, where he remained about eighteen months, having devoted his attention to teaching and other occupations while in the Wolverine state. At the expiration of the period noted he returned to Stark county and settled on the paternal homestead, which he operated on shares for the ensuing three years, at the expiration of which, in 1886, he took up his residence in the village of Robertsville, where he established himself in the general merchandising business, in which he has ever since successfully continued, carrying a select and comprehensive stock of goods and catering to a discriminating and representative patronage. He has long been interested in pomology, and for the past six years has devoted special attention to the raising of fine fruits, utilizing a tract of about five acres in Osnaburg township, near his home, so that he gives the enterprise his personal supervision, in connection with the carrying forward of his mercantile business. In 1897 Mr. Reese was appointed postmaster at Robertsville and has ever since remained incumbent of the office, while for several years past he has been a valued and efficient member of the school board. He has exercised his franchise in support of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining his legal majority and is known as a stalwart advocate of its cause. Like his parents, he has been a prominent and worthy member of the German Baptist church, in whose faith he was reared and of which his wife likewise is a member.

On the 18th of March, 1880, Mr. Reese was united in marriage to Miss Anna Myers, who was born in Trenton, Grundy county, Missouri, and who became the foster-daughter of Henry Dessler, a prominent miller and honored citizen of Stark county, in whose home she was reared from her childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Reese have five children living, namely: Effie M., Carl N., Harry II., Lela and Ruby. One other child died at the age of twelve years. They have a pleasant home in the village and the same is a center of refined hospitality, while they are prominent in the social life of the community, in which it may well be said they have "troops of friends."

THOMAS C. BELDING.—Among the progressive and highly respected business men of Canton is Mr. Belding, who holds the responsible position of superintendent of the Canton Steel Roofing Company, of whose directorate and executive he is a member, having been for a number of years one of the stockholders of the company, while it may be said in due commendation that he has gained success through his own efforts. His grandfather, Titus Belding, was born in the state of Massachusetts, the family having been established in New England in an early day, and he became one of the pioneer settlers in Portage county, Ohio, where he served as a captain in the state militia, that section of the commonwealth continuing to be his home until death.

Thomas C. Belding is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, having been born in the town of Sherodsville, on the 7th of June, 1851, and being a son of Gershom B. and Margaret (Long) Belding, the former of whom was born in Portage county, this state, and the latter in Carroll county. When our subject was a child his parents removed to Leesville, Carroll county, and shortly afterward took up their abode in Uhrichsville, Tuscarawas county, where the father was engaged in bridge building for a period of six years, while our subject there received his early educational discipline in the public schools, while the family came to Stark county and located in the village of Waynesburg when he was nine years of age. His parents came to Canton, Ohio, to reside in 1892, at which place occurred the death of his father, who passed away in 1895, at the age of seventy-eight years, while his wife died the same year, at the age of seventy-six years. They became the parents of three sons and two daughters, and of the number two sons are living at the present time.

Thomas C. Belding learned the trade of carriage wood-working in the town of Carrollton, Carroll county, beginning his apprenticeship at the age of nineteen years, and to this vocation he gave his attention about five years, at the expiration of which he learned the pattern-making trade. In 1886 he came to Canton, and on the 1st of the following year assumed his present position as superintendent of the Canton Steel Roofing Company, in which he later became a stockholder and director, as has been previously noted in this context. He has been indefatigable and discriminating in his efforts and has done much to foster the up-building of this now large and important industrial enterprise, while his course has ever been such as to retain to him the confidence and high regard of all with whom he has come in contact. Though never a seeker of political preferment of any order Mr. Belding has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and has been loyal to the various duties of citizenship. He was reared in the faith of the Disciples' church, and his views are in harmony with its teachings.

At Waynesburg, this county, on the 21st of October, 1879, Mr. Belding was united in marriage to Miss Emma McCort, who died in 1882, leaving one child, Margaret, who is now employed as stenographer in the Central Savings Bank, in Canton. On the 19th of May, 1891, Mr. Belding consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Mary B. Ross, who was born in Stark county, Ohio, being a daughter of James H. Ross, and of this union have been born two children, H. Ross and Ruth C.

ALEXANDER B. CLARK was born in Canton, Ohio, on the 23d of March, 1874, the oldest son of W. W. and Eunice Bierce. He received his early education in the Canton public schools, attended preparatory school at Wooster, Ohio, entered college at Yale University and graduated in course in 1897 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After graduation from college he studied law in the office of Clark & Ambler for one year, and in 1898 entered the law department of the Ohio State University and was admitted to the bar of the state of Ohio in the following March, graduating from the law department of the Ohio State University with the degree of Bachelor of Law. Immediately after graduation from the law school he accepted a clerical position with the Canton Steel Roofing Company, and was elected secretary in 1901. Besides being connected with the Canton Steel Roofing Company, he is also director of the Diebold Safe & Lock Company and the City National Bank of Canton, Ohio. On September 26, 1900, Mr. Clark was married to Faith Fogle, and they have one child, A. B., Jr.

THOMAS S. CULP is engaged in the manufacturing of bicycles, tricycles, motor cycles and automobiles in the city of Canton, and has labored faithfully and loyally during the many years of his active business career. His first establishment in Canton, opened in the year 1885, was a little shop twelve by twenty feet in dimensions, the same being a portion of his present quarters, at the corner of Mahoning street and Sandal Court. He first established a tin shop and handled stoves on a modest scale, and when the bicycle was at the height of its popularity he found it expedient to abandon his tin and stove business and engage in the handling, repairing and manufacture of the "wheels," while in 1901 he expanded the scope of his enterprise to include the manufacturing of automobiles and motor cycles, in which lines he has turned out some fine models, being an expert mechanic and one of individual ideas, so that he has brought out numerous improvements in methods of construction. The motors utilized by him are principally of the gasoline type and are very effective in their operation, as well as economical.

Mr. Culp was born near the village of Sugar Grove Ridge, Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 20th of December, 1858, and there received his preliminary educational training in the common school, while he later attended the public schools of Uhrichsville, Tuscarawas county. When he was fourteen years of age his parents removed to Steubenville, Jefferson county, and at the age of sixteen he began his apprenticeship at the trade of tinner, serving three years, and thereafter working as a journeyman until the centennial year, 1876. In 1877 he located in Toronto, Jefferson county, where he opened a small tin shop and worked at his trade, carrying a small stock of stoves and tinware in connection. About three years later he removed to Elliottsville, Jefferson county, where his father was at the time conducting a brick yard, and of this enterprise the subject had the management for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he removed to Wellsville, where he secured employment in the tin and copper shops of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad Company. Two years later he took charge of the tin shop of the Wellsville Hardware Company, in whose employ he remained one season. During the following autumn and winter he conducted a roller-skating rink in the village of Minerva, Stark county, and then took up his residence in Canton, where he assumed charge of the copper shops of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad Company, retaining this incumbency more than eight years. Within this interval he opened a little shop of his own, giving it his personal attention in the evenings, after leaving his regular work. Later he built up his present flourishing enterprise, of which adequate mention has been made in an earlier paragraph of this article.

In politics Mr. Culp is a stanch adherent of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes an active interest, and fraternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Daughters of Liberty, Daughters of America, Knights of the Macca-bees, and the Home Guards of America. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he was formerly an active member of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton.

Of the ancestry of the subject we may say that he is a son of Jacob G. Culp, who was a railroad engineer for a quarter of a century, having been thus engaged in the employ of the Panhandle, the Baltimore & Ohio and other lines, while at the present time he is a stationary engineer at Conneaut, this state. He likewise is a native of Ohio and a scion of one of its pioneer families, having been born in Jefferson county, in 1841. His wife, whose maiden name was Hannali Cole, was also born in that county, in 1847, and she is a sister of Leander C. Cole, who was formerly mayor of the city of Massillon, Stark county. John Culp, grandfather of the subject, was a successful farmer, wool buyer and speculator in Jefferson county, where he died, having been a man of worth and influence and having been commonly known as 'Squire Culp. He married Elizabeth Cooper, who was of Irish lineage. The Culp family is of stanch German stock, and the first representative of this immediate branch in America was the great-grandfather of the subject. It is but consistent that we make mention of the fact that during his entire life the subject has never used tobacco in any form nor taken a drink of intoxicating liquor, while to his abstemious habits he feels that he owes his fine physical health today, being a man of vigor and energy and in the very prime of an active and useful career.

On the 27th of May, 1886, in the city of Canton, Mr. Culp was united in marriage to Miss Lillie Arnold, of this city, and she was summoned into eternal rest on the 18th of April, 1891, at the age of twenty-seven years, being survived by her only child, Earl E., who is a fine lad of fourteen years at the time of this writing (1903). On the 10th of November, 1892, Mr. Culp consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Mary A. Reinhold, daughter of Captain Urias R. Reinhold, of Canton, and they have one daughter, Viola, aged nine years. The pleasant family home is located at No. 622 Mahoning street and here a hospitable welcome is ever assured to the wide circle of friends whom the subject and wife have gathered about them.

HAL B. STONEBROOK, D. D. S., is a native of the village of Bakersville, Coshocton county, Ohio, where he was born on the 17th of February, 1869, being a son of Hiram J. and Emaline (Thompson) Stonebrook, of whose twelve children ten are living at the present time, namely: Alonzo O., who is a teacher in the high school at Port Washington, Tuscarawas county; Hal B., who is the immediate subject of this review; Harry G., who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Canal Dover in partnership with the subject; Florence, who is the wife of Levi Schoonover, of Canton, Ohio; Emma, who is the wife of a Mr. Spraug; William H., who is in the employ of the Canton Steel Company, at Canton, Stark county; Francis M., a laborer in Canton; Oliver H., who is a farmer near Bakersville, Coshocton county; Carlyle H., who is at the parental home, as is also Cecil V. Hiram J. Stonebrook, the father of these children, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 1st of August, 1840, and was there reared to maturity, receiving his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools, and effectively supplementing the same by a course of study in the Ohio Wesleyan University, in the city of Delaware, where he prepared himself for the profession of which he was to prove so successful and popular an exponent during a long and active career. Soon after leaving the college he turned his attention with marked efficiency to the pedagogic profession, and for the long period of twenty years he continued his active labors in the educational field, though for the greater portion of the period of the war of the Rebellion he laid aside all civic efforts to respond to the call of higher duty, serving as a loyal and patriotic soldier in the Union army and aiding in perpetuating the integrity of the nation. In the autumn of the year 1862 he enlisted as a private in Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued in active service until the close of the war, his regiment having been assigned to the command of General Sheridan. Among the more notable battles in which he participated may be mentioned the following: Monocacy, Cedar Creek, Winchester, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, siege of Petersburg and Appomatox Court-house. Through gallant and meritorious service he rose through the different grades until he became commander of his company, as first lieutenant of which he led his valiant comrades of Company C into the memorable battle of the Wilderness, after which he continued in command of the same until the close of the war, when he received his honorable discharge. After his return, Lieutenant Stonebrook resumed teaching, to which he devoted his attention during the winter months, while in the summer seasons he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1874 he established himself in the manufacture of woolen goods in Bakersville, Coshocton county, the while continuing his pedagogic labors during the winters until about 1880, after which he gave practically his entire time to his manufacturing interests until 1897, since which year he has lived retired in the city of Coshocton. In politics he has ever given a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and for a period of twelve years he was incumbent of the office of justice of the peace. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose work he has taken an active part, while fraternally he is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being past commander of the post with which he is affiliated. At one time he was quite prominent in the Knights of Pythias fraternity, having organized several lodges, but in recent years he has allowed his membership to lapse. He is a son of Frederick and Priscilla Stonebrook, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, of stanch old German lineage, and they emigrated from the old Keystone state to Ohio in the pioneer days, taking up their abode in Carroll county, whence they eventually removed to Tuscarawas county, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Emaline (Thompson) Stonebrook, the mother of the subject of this sketch, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 19th of November, 1843, and her death occurred on the 25th of October, 1892. She was a daughter of James Thompson, who with his wife emigrater from Ireland, their native land, to America and took up their residence in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in the early days, there passing the residue of their lives. Mrs. Stone-brook was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church and was a woman of gentle and gracious presence, ever retaining the love of those who came within the sphere of her kindly influence.

Dr. Stonebrook, whose name introduces this article, passed his boyhood days on the homestead farm and his early educational privileges were such as were afforded by the district schools. After sturdily completing the curriculum of the district schools he became a student in the Bakersville high school, where he completed the prescribed course. At the age of eighteen years he began his active endeavors in that profession in which his honored father had attained so marked success, and during a period of seven years he was engaged in teaching during the winter months, while during the summers he was employed in his father's woolen mills, in Bakersville. In 1894 he began his technical preparation for the profession of dentistry, by entering upon an apprenticeship in the office and under the direction of Dr. J. H. Riggle, a skilled practitioner at Sherodsville, Carroll county, and so earnestly and effectively did he apply himself to the mastering of all details of operative and laboratory work that in 1896 he passed a rigid examination before the state board of dental examiners, in session at Columbus, and was granted his diploma and license to practice. In July of the same year he located in Waynesburg and established himself in the practice of his chosen profession, his novitiate being of very brief duration, for his unmistakable skill and discrimination in his professional work and his genial personality soon gained to him a representative patronage. His offices are equipped with modern accessories and conveniences, and the highest grade of workmanship and most careful operations in the line of dental surgery are assured under all circumstances.

In politics the Doctor gives his allegiance to the Republican party, but he has had no ambition for official preferment of any sort. He is a prominent and zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which his wife likewise is a member, and at the present time he is a steward of the church in Waynesburg, while for ten years he has been a teacher in its Sunday school, and for several terms served as superintendent of the same, taking a lively interest in all departments of the church work. He is identified with the Knights of the Macca-bees, affiliating with Waynesburg Tent No. 29, of which he is past commander, while for three years he was keeper of records in the same. He also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 3d of September, 1892, Dr. Stonebrook was united in marriage to Miss Lillie M. Riggle, a daughter of Charles Riggle, a prominent retired farmer of Bakersville, Coshocton county, and of the five children born of this union four survive, namely: Mary Edna, Audrey Evangeline, Lois M. and Charlotte Lucille.

JOHN E. BETZ is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the town of Leetonia, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 13th of June, 1861, being the youngest of the three children of Joseph and Susanna (Stumpf) Betz, both of whom were of staunch German lineage. His two sisters are still living, Della being engaged in the dressmaking business in the city of Alliance, this county; while Amanda is the wife of Lewis Waters, of Waynesburg. Our subject received his early educational discipline in the public schools, and when he was but fifteen years of age began to prepare himself for that vocation in which he has attained so signal prestige and success. He then entered upon an apprenticeship at the tailor's trade, under the direction of an able journeyman named Hilliard, becoming proficient in all departments of the art and for a number of years traveling about the Union as a journeyman at his trade, working in Chicago and in eastern cities and in various places in the middle west. In the year 1884 Mr. Betz purchased his present tailoring establishment from William H. Evens, a former employer, and with the exception of two and one-half years, which he passed in Malvern, Carroll county, he has been continuously engaged in business in Waynesburg. He has a well equipped establishment, keeping in line a select stock of imported and domestic fabrics, while he employs only skilled assistants and gives his personal supervision to all portions of the work, allowing nothing to pass muster that does not come up to the highest standard of excellence. Though he is known as one of the best of cutters and fitters, he still maintains that his art is one in which something new may always be learned, and he receives yearly courses of instruction from some of the most skilled and fashionable tailors in the metropolitan centers and in this way keeps in touch with the latest styles and with all advances made in the various departments of his business. He has built an extensive business, controlling not only a representative trade in Waynesburg but also in surrounding towns, while an evidence of his skill is shown in the fact that even in the city of Canton he has a goodly list of regular customers, in the face of the brisk competition which he there encounters, while he has patrons as far west as Breckenridge, Colorado. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, being a member of Lodge No. 122, in Minerva.

On the 29th of August, 1889, Mr. Betz was united in marriage to Miss Mary Shaffer, who was born in Sandy township, being a daughter of Hamilton Shaffer and a representative of one of Stark county's old and influential families. Mr. and Mrs. Betz have two children, Leutia S. and Herbert S.

WILLIAM A. LYNCH.—Among the prominent and distinguished citizens of Canton and northern Ohio, William A. Lynch easily takes rank. For many years he was one of the recognized leaders of the Stark county bar, subsequently was active in the promotion and development of the street railway enterprises, besides being interested extensively in manufacturing and the development of railroad and mining properties.

William A. Lynch was born at Canton, Ohio, on August 4, 1844. His father and mother were both natives of Ireland, who met in Stark county and were here married. His father served as county surveyor and county recorder, and was a man of great energy and unusual business ability. He was a pioneer in the development of coal mining interests of this county, and also in the opening up of the coal fields of western Pennsylvania. Besides these he became deeply interested in railroad construction and promotion. He was one of the projectors of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, and of the Mahoning Valley Railroad between Youngstown and Cleveland, now part of the Erie system. He was also interested more or less in other railroad enterprises. These vast projects necessarily carried with them a corresponding responsibility, and upon his death, which occurred just prior to the financial panic of 1857, it was found that by reason of the great depreciation in values of all properties, especially railroads, caused by the stagnation of business and the general financial depression, his estate had become seriously involved. Indeed, so great had been the shrinkage in values and the loss entailed by the want of his personal supervision, that a large indebtedness was shown. At this time William A. Lynch was a boy of twelve years, old enough to realize his great loss, and yet quite too young to assume the burdens which at an early age were placed upon his shoulders. That these early trials had much to do with developing the breadth and keenness of his business capacity, and the firmness, decision and earnestness of his character, cannot be doubted. One of the earliest acts of his business career was to pay off all outstanding obligations of his father's estate, facing the trying situation more like one of mature years than as a youth just reaching his majority. He appreciated the value of education, and set himself to work most assiduously to acquire knowledge. With the assistance of the education he acquired in the public schools, he became a great reader and deep student, and when he had attained his sixteenth year he entered the law office of the Hon. Louis Schaefer, of Canton. He was admitted to practice immediately upon reaching the legal age, on September 1, 1865, and was taken into partnership by his preceptor. While studying law, and afterwards in the early days of practice, he made the acquaintance of many men of prominence and distinguished ability. Among others the Hon. John McSweeney was attracted to the young man by reason of the promise shown in him of future strength, and he took delight in aiding him by advice and counsel from his own wide experience. This was always gratefully received and wisely utilized by the young man, so that in a few years the young and ardent student was by far the strongest advocate that his friend, McSweeney, had to contend with in the courts of northern Ohio. His partnership with the Hon. Louis Schaefer was dissolved at the end of four years' time, and Mr. Lynch remained alone until 1872, when he was joined in practice by William R. Day, afterwards secretary of state under President McKinley and at present associate justice of the United States supreme court, the firm being styled Lynch & Day. On April 17, 1878, an addition was made to the firm by the admission of Austin Lynch, a brother of the senior partner, under the style of Lynch, Day & Lynch. In 1885 Mr. William A. Lynch retired from the firm. A notable and historical case in northern Ohio, in which Mr. Lynch was prominent, was that of the State vs. Richardson. The defendant was a woman charged with the killing of her husband, and the legal talent engaged on both sides was of the strongest character. The state attorney was assisted by Mr. Lynch and Judge Day, while the defendant had employed John McSweeney, Judge Ricks, Judge Meyer and Judge Pease—an array of talent that is rare in one case. Medical expert testimony lent its aid in exciting the public interest, and the tragedy concluded with a verdict of manslaughter.

Mr. Lynch was twice elected by the people as prosecuting attorney of Stark county. The first time his opponent was Charles Manderson, recently United States senator from Nebraska, the second time he had Major McKinley for a competitor and failed of election. But at the succeeding term he again contested with Major McKinley and was returned to the office to which he had aspired. During this period the county of Stark was strongly Republican. The offices of prosecuting attorney and solicitor of the city of Canton are the only offices to which Mr. Lynch has been elected, and the only ones for which he permitted himself to be placed in nomination. He has always been a staunch, consistent, old-time Democrat, and has repeatedly been tendered the nomination for congress from his district, but always declined to enter political life. So firm was this resolve that he declined even an appointment to the common pleas judgeship tendered him by Governor Hoadley. Mr. Lynch was a delegate to the Indianapolis national sound money convention in 1896, and was one of the electors-at-large on the Palmer-Buckner ticket for the state of Ohio, representing the hard-money wing of the party. Realizing the hopelessness of victory at the polls of the third, or sound-money party, Mr. Lynch openly declared for his warm friend and fellow townsman, Mr. McKinley, and was active in his support. Again, in the presidential campaign of 1900, did Mr. Lynch declare against the election of Mr. Bryan, and with the Hon. John Cowen, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, spoke in the city of Baltimore to a large meeting under the auspices of the Maryland Sound-money Democratic League. It was during this memorable campaign of 1896 that Mr. Lynch delivered at Canton what is considered one of the most forcible speeches in the interest of sound money that was ever delivered, it being a strong and convincing argument and plea for sound money that met with response in all parts of the country, and was a factor in the campaign literature used so tellingly for the first time probably, in that critical struggle, which meant so much to the prosperity and credit of the nation.

In 1885, upon retiring from the firm of Lynch, Day & Lynch, he directed himself to the work of counsel to corporations, and this, with his natural predilection for business, soon led him into an active participation in the management of several enterprises of great magnitude. He was one of the projectors of the Pittsburg, Akron & Western Railroad, in northern Ohio, besides being exceedingly active in the promotion of new railroads in the west and the reorganizing of railroad, coal and iron properties and manufacturing companies. He was the projector and president of the Canton & Massillon Electric Railway, which was built up to a system comprising thirty miles of track. The Canton & Massillon line was the first inter-urban road in the United States to be equipped with modern improvements and conveniences, including the long car provided with cross-wise seats, with center aisle, and with provisions for carrying baggage, mail and express matter. In December, 1901, this system was sold to a syndicate, at which time Mr. Lynch retired from participation in its management. He has a number of times been appointed receiver for large interests, while in matters of litigation and reorganization of big properties his counsel and active co-operation are frequently sought. In 1895 Mr. Lynch reorganized the Aultman Company, and became president of the same. From time to time he has made large investments in the company, until he is now one of the principal owners of its stock. Under his able management and guidance this old and prominent industry has continued its prosperity and bids fair to enjoy even a greater and grander career in the future than in the past.

Mr. Lynch was married, October 14, 1874, to Eliza Ruth Underhill, daughter of Judge Underhill, of Canton.

A prominent member of the Ohio bar, in speaking of Mr. Lynch, said: "I have known him from his school days. He is a man of keen, logical, analytical mind. No fallacy escapes his attention. He was always most studious and industrious. He has the principles of the law thoroughly mastered and knows more of the philosophy of the law than of mere case law. He is well versed in law literature and the best English literature. He is a wide reader and of good general intelligence, reading and experience. When he was in the general practice of the law he was easily a leader of the bar in Stark county, and while his reputation was somewhat local, I know of no better trial lawyer in the state. He possesses exactly the temperament for a trial lawyer, sufficiently combative, but not unnecessarily so. He always retains complete control of his temper, his feelings and of himself, and never permits any of these to get the better of him to betray him into a mistake. He is full of wit, pathos and logic, and possesses command of a wonderful vocabulary. He is a most forcible and convincing speaker. If elegance of diction, pathos, humor, analysis, logical argument and forcible manner, combined with a warm enthusiasm, make an orator, then William A. Lynch is one. He has a cool head and rare tact and ripe judgment. His perceptions are quick. He is a broad-minded, capable man, who in a law suit or other matters quickly grasps the strong points and relies in them for success, rather than be magnifying unimportant details, the common fault with loose thinkers. Mr. Lynch's position at the bar was entirely the result of his high character, his great ability and his sterling integrity. A man, of solid parts, he relied upon the public judgment of his character and qualifications for his business, and never resorted to the arts of the small lawyer to bring it to him. He has a warm, generous, sympathetic nature, free from all demagoguery, a man of convictions and a man of courage. The measure of the man, his strong sense of duty, courage and fearlessness where duty prompts any line of conduct, was shown in the campaign of 1896. He had always been a strong Democrat and an ardent partisan, but his conscience impelled him to oppose the action of his party in 1896, and he did it with all the force and ability of his character. On this occasion he made a truly magnificent speech in Canton. In my opinion there was no speech made during the campaign on the sound-money question, excepting, perhaps, that of Carl Schurz, at Chicago, which will in any way compare with it. Mr. Lynch is a consistent Catholic, but always tolerant of the religious views of others. He has never sought office, and yet there is no public office, even to the highest, that he would not be well qualified to fill. Had his mind and inclination run in that direction, he would certainly have achieved a great national reputation."

JAMES C. LUPHER is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born on a farm in Sandy township, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 3d of February, 1861, being a son of Thomas C. and Nancy A. (Miller)

Lupher, of whose ten children the following six are yet living: John W., who is a resident of Canton township, Stark county; James C., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Cora B., who is the wife of Welty B. Cable, of Tuscarawas county; Emma J., who is a trained nurse, being the first graduate of the school for trained nurses conducted in connection with the Aultman hospital in the city of Canton; Ada K., who is the wife of William Hay, of Canton; and Bertha B., who is the wife of William Cable, who is a resident of the city of Chicago, where he is in the employ of the government. Thomas C. Lupher, father of the subject, was born on the same farm in Tuscarawas county as was his son, of whom this sketch is written, and that he was a representative of one of the early pioneer families of that locality is evident when we revert to the circumstance that the date of his nativity was the year 1830. He continued to reside on the ancestral farmstead until within about a decade of his death, having taken up his residence in Waynesburg, Stark county, in 1888, and having here passed the residue of his life retired from active business, his demise occurring in 1898. He was a man of exceptional energy and business acumen, and for many years, in connection with his agricultural operations, he did a quite extensive business in the buying of wool and also cattle. He was an uncompromising Republican in his political proclivities and while in Tuscarawas he held the office of township assessor for a number of years, while in 1890 he was elected land appraiser of Sandy township, Stark county. He became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in his youth and ever continued a worthy and active adherent of the same; he was for many years an officer in the church, having been called upon to serve in various capacities. He was a son of Henry Lupher, who was a native of Pennsylvania and of staunch German lineage. He emigrated from the Keystone state to Ohio in an early day, settling in Tuscarawas county, where he passed the residue of his life, devoting his attention to farming and to the work of his trade, that of blacksmith.

Nancy A. (Miller) Lupher, the mother of the subject, was born in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, in the year 1835, being a daughter of Jacob Miller, who was a native of Pennsylvania, whence he came to Stark county and became numbered among the early settlers of Pike township, where he reclaimed a good farm and became an influential citizen, having been engaged also in a freighting or transfer business in the pioneer epoch, transporting goods and produce over the mountains to and from the eastern markets by means of teams and wagons, this being prior to the advent of railroads in this section of the Union. The mother of the subject, who likewise was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, was summoned into eternal rest in 1884, at the age of forty-nine years.

James C. Lupher, whose name initiates this article, was reared on the old homestead where he was born, and his more rudimentary education was acquired in the public schools. When about fifteen years of age, in the spring of 1876, he gained his first definite business experience, being placed in a general-merchandise store at Sandyville, Tuscarawas county, where he remained one year. In the spring of 1877 he was matriculated in Richmond College, in Jefferson county, this state, where he continued his studies for one year, while within the following two years he was for four terms a student in Mount Union College. That he took due advantage of the opportunities thus afforded him is evident when we advert to the fact that in the winter of 1879 he put his scholastic acquirements to practical use by engaging in pedagogic work, proving a capable and successful teacher from the start. In the summer of 1881, in order to still further fortify himself for the work of his profession, he attended the Northeastern Ohio Normal University, at Ada, and thereafter resumed his teaching in the public schools. In 1883 he was called to Waynesburg to assume charge of the grammar department of the city schools, and this incumbency he retained for somewhat more than three years, having in the meanwhile purchased a grocery and provision store in the village and finally resigning his place in the schools in order to devote his attention to the mercantile enterprise, which he continued for a period of about five years. In 1888 he accepted a position with the fraternal order known as the Knights of the Maccabees, for the purpose of organizing new tents of the order, and to this line of endeavor he gave his attention for one year, within which time he traveled quite extensively through eastern Ohio. He was thus engaged up to the time when he resigned to accept a salaried office as special agent for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, in which connection he was traveling the major portion of the time, not being assigned to any one territory. He was thus engaged for one year, after which he became a commissioned agent for the same company, with headquarters in Waynesburg, while he simultaneously became the local agent for various fire insurance companies of the most reliable order. In 1892 Mr. Lupher was elected to the office of justice of the peace, of which he remained in tenure for three years, while in 1894 he was honored in being called to the head of the municipal government of Waynesburg, having been elected mayor and having retained the incumbency for two years, giving a most economical and business-like administration and having shown a progressive policy, doing all in his power to advance the best interests of the city in all departments. In 1896 he was made secretary and superintendent of the Waynesburg Brick & Clay Company, in which capacity he gave efficient service until the reorganization of the business, three years later, when he retired from the office. On the 13th of November, 1897, he received his commission as postmaster of Waynesburg, taking charge of the office on the 1st of the following month, and he is still incumbent of this position, in which he has given a most able and popular administration, having done much to improve the facilities and service of the office. Since 1895 he has also been a notary public. No man in this section of the county is better known or more highly esteemed, and it may well be said of Mr. Lupher that his friends are in number as his acquaintances. As will be inferred from the governmental office which he holds, the subject is to be found staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, while he and his wife are both valued and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose spiritual work and collateral benevolences they take a deep and helpful interest. Fraternally he is identified with Waynesburg Tent No. 29, Knights of the Maccabees, in which he has held the various offices.

On the 2d of April, 1884, Mr. Lupher was united in marriage to Mrs. Cynthia E. Hewitt. She was born in Waynesburg, being a daughter of the late Edward Boory, who was one of the well known tanners and prominent citizens of this section in the early days, his death occurring, in Waynesburg, a number of years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Lupher have two daughters, Mary E. and Dorothy B., and she has one daughter by her previous marriage, Ruth Irene, who is assistant postmaster under the subject. The family are prominent in the social life of the community and their pleasant home is a center of gracious and refined hospitality.

CHARLES M. STANDS was born in Pike township, this county, on the 5th of August, 1869, being a son of Leonard H. and

Catherine (McKinney) Stands, to whom were born three children, namely: Cora, who is the wife of William G. Smith, of Canton, this county; Emmet, who is a resident of Sparta, Pike township; and Charles M., the immediate subject of this review. Henry Stands, the paternal grandfather of the subject, was a native of Pennsylvania, where the family was established in the colonial epoch of our national history, and from Westmoreland county, that state, he came to Stark county, Ohio, and became one of the early settlers of Pike township, his original location here being on a tract of land a short distance south of the present village of Sparta. He eventually removed to another farm, in the western part of the same township and there passed the residue of his life, being seventy-six years of age at the time of his demise. He was one of the leading horse dealers of this section of the state for many years, and through his operations in this line he became known to practically all the people of the county. In the later years of his life he became a prominent and zealous member of the United Brethren church. Leonard H. Stands was born in Pike township, in 1835, and was here reared to manhood, while he received superior educational advantages for the locality and period, having completed a thorough curriculum in the common schools, after which he entered Mount Union College, where he took a course of study which ably fortified him for the pedagogic profession, to which he devoted his attention for the long period of thirty years, teaching during the winter months and during the summer seasons giving his time to the cultivation of his small farm, which is located one and one-half miles west of Sparta. He proved a particularly successful and popular teacher and since his withdrawal from that line of work he has continued to reside on his farm, which is maintained under a high state of cultivation and equipped with excellent improvements. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and for eighteen years he served as clerk of Pike township, while for many years he was incumbent of the office of school director, ever maintaining a lively interest in the cause of education. In 1864 he enlisted, for a term of one hundred days, as a member of Company F, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which he was commissioned second lieutenant, continuing in service until the expiration of his term, when he received an honorable discharge. He is a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church and for many years has been an official in the church. Fraternally he is an honored member of B. F. Steiner Post No. 511, Grand Army of the Republic, at Sparta.

Catherine (McKinney) Stands, the mother of the subject, is a representative of one of the sterling pioneer families of Stark county, having been born in Pike township, in the year 1840, a daughter of Daniel McKinney, who was a prominent farmer of the county. He was born in Pennsylvania, whence he came with his father, Martin McKinney, to Stark county, prior to 1820, the family taking up their abode on a tract of land in the vicinity of Sparta, while eventually Daniel McKinney bought a farm immediately adjoining that town, the original American ancestor, who was the father of Martin McKinney, having emigrated from Ireland to Pennsylvania in the colonial days. Grandfather McKinney continued to reside on his farm near Sparta until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-three years. He was a man of influence and prominence in the township, where he held the office of justice of the peace for many years, while for two terms he served as township treasurer. The mother of the subject is likewise a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose work she has taken an active part.

Charles M. Stands, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared on the homestead farm, near Sparta, and secured his preliminary education in the public schools, after which he completed a course of study in the Sparta Academy. He early determined to prepare himself for the profession of law, and with this end in view, when in his eighteenth year, he entered the law office of John C. Welty, a representative member of the Canton bar, and under effective preceptorship began his technical reading, and in December of the year 1890 he was duly admitted to the bar of the state. He forthwith entered upon the active practice of his profession, opening an office in the city of Canton, where he remained until 1898, when he removed to Waynesburg, where he has since maintained his home and where he has built up an excellent practice, being thoroughly informed in the science of jurisprudence and having gained marked precedence both as an advocate and counsellor. In politics Mr. Stands is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and he has done effective work in its cause. He has the distinction of being at the head of the municipal government of Waynesburg, having been elected to the office of mayor in the spring of 1900, and having given a most able and discriminating administration. Mr. Stands is not married.

JOSEPH L. TODD, M. D.—The Todd family is of staunch Scotch-Irish extraction and has been established on American soil for many generations, while the name has long been identified with the annals of the old Keystone state, whence representatives have gone forth into the most diverse sections of the Union. James Todd, grandfather of the Doctor, passed his entire life in Pennsylvania, his death occurring on his farm, in Beaver county, that state. James Todd, father of our subject, was born on the old homestead farm, in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1835, and there he received his education in the common schools of the period, after which he learned the tanning trade, to which he devoted his attention for many years. He finally withdrew from this line of enterprise and devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits in his native county, where he died about the year 1897, his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Brown and who was a relative of that historic character, John Brown, having passed away in 1869. Both were devoted members of the United Presbyterian church and were people of sterling character, honored by all who knew them. James Todd identified himself with the Republican party and was a staunch advocate of its principles, while he was a man of prominence and influence in his native county, where he served as county commissioner and jury commissioner and in other offices of local trust and responsibility. They became the parents of nine children, concerning whom we offer the following brief record: Wilbert A., an able physician and surgeon, located in Sterling, Kansas, in 1890, and was there engaged in the practice of his profession until his death, in 1898; Mary died at the age of thirty-two years; Samuel B. is a resident of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Alice is the wife of Martin Ramsey, of Hookstown, Pennsylvania; Margaret is the wife of Samuel Reed, of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania; James W. is a resident of Osnaburg, Stark county, Ohio; William S. resides in the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; and Clarence is engaged in the practice of dentistry in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Joseph Llewellyn Todd, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born on the homestead farm, in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, on the 10th of December, 1868, and as a youth he assisted in the work of the farm during the summer seasons and attended the public schools during the winter months, later supplementing this discipline by a course of study in the normal school at Slippery Rock, Butler county, that state. In 1892 he entered the medical department of the Western University, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1895, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine, for which he had worked faithfully and with marked ambition, availing himself of every opportunity to increase his technical knowledge and render himself better prepared for his noble vocation. Shortly after his graduation the Doctor came to East Rochester, Columbiana county, Ohio, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession for the ensuing two years, when he sold his practice, having been advised of the illness of his brother, who had been established in practice at Sterling, Kansas, as previously noted in this context, and he went to that place and there continued in practice one year, after which he returned to Ohio and took up his residence in Mapleton, this county, where he has built up a large and representative practice and where his friends are in number as his acquaintances. He is a member of the Stark County Medical Society and the Ohio State Medical Society, and enjoys the respect and good will of his professional confreres to the fullest degree. The Doctor is associated with his brother James W. in the manufacturing of brick and tile at Mapleton, the enterprise being a successful one and one that is rapidly increasing in scope and importance. The Doctor is devoting considerable attention to the propagation of the ginseng root, having a half-acre under cultivation and his garden in this line being considered the finest in Ohio. This product has long been recognized by the Chinese as a valuable remedial agent, and large quantities are now exported to the Orient from this country, the natural supply in China being inadequate, while the consumption in the home market is rapidly increasing as the value of the remedy becomes the more appreciated, the same being clearly indicated in case of physical debility and other specific ailments. In politics the Doctor is a stalwart Republican, and his religious views are in harmony with the tenets of the United Presbyterian church, in which he was reared. Fraternally he is identified with the Juliard Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, at Louisville, this county. In 1900 he erected his present modern and attractive residence in Mapleton, and the family home is a center of refined hospitality.

On the 30th of October, 1897, at East Rochester, Ohio, Dr. Todd was united in marriage to Miss Lillie Summers, who was born in that place, being a daughter of Galen Summers, and of this union one child has been born, Janice.

THE McClymonds Public Library, MASSILLON.

By HELENA RICKS SLUSSER

In the spring of 1897, through the bequest of Hon. George Harsh, ten thousand dollars were left for the establishment of a public library in Massillon. This was followed by the gift of the Nahum Russell homestead by Mrs. Flora R. and Annie M. McClymonds, daughters of Mr. Russell, as a memorial to their parents.

To these generous gifts J. W. McClymonds added the munificent sum of twenty thousand dollars as an endowment fund. These gifts were appropriately acknowledged at a public meeting of the citizens.

The McClymonds Public Library Association was formed under a state charter and June 4, 1897, organized with the following officers as trustees: J. W. McClymonds, president; Caroline McCullough Everhard, vice-president; E. A. Jones, treasurer; C. A. Gates, secretary; Helena Ricks Slusser, F. H. Snyder, J. C. Corns. The building was remodeled to adapt it to library uses. The current expenses are met by a tax levy made by the city council.

The library opened with seven thousand volumes, purchased with the George Harsh bequest. Current literature and additional books are now supplied by the income from the endowment fund. The library has been in operation nearly five years and has over twelve thousand volumes on its shelves, and has reached an issue of forty thousand volumes annually.

PATRICK L. MANLY is a native of county Mayo, Ireland, having been born in the town of Killala, a seaport on the bay of the same name, the date of his nativity being July 12, 1841. He was about five years of age when his parents, Thomas and Mary (Holmes) Manly, emigrated to America. In 1846 they set sail from Killala for Quebec, Canada, and from the dominion they came by the great lakes to Cleveland, Ohio, and thence by canal to Massillon, Stark county, thus having made practically the entire trip from Ireland to their destination by water. Thomas Manly was born in the same town in the Emerald Isle, and he died in Massillon in 1868, at the age of sixty-three years, his wife having here been called to her eternal rest in 1854, at the age of thirty-six years, she also having been born in county Mayo. The father of the subject located on a farm in Jackson township, improving the property and becoming one of the successful and honored citizens of the county, while he continued to follow agricultural pursuits until his death. He and his wife were devoted members and communicants of the Catholic church and in politics he was a staunch Democrat.

Patrick L. Manly was reared on the homestead farm and secured his rudimentary educational training in the district school in the vicinity of his home, his first teacher having been Jacob Bechtel of Massillon, one of the honored educators of the county in the early days, while later he received instruction under the tutorship of Thomas Harvey, the author of the various and well known school text-books which bear his name,—the Harvey Speller, Grammar and Arithmetic. Mr. Manly completed a four-years course in the Massillon high school, and later he continued his studies in St. Patrick's Seminary, an excellent institution in the city of Toronto, Canada, passing the time while there in the homes of his two uncles. He had assisted in the work on the farm until he had attained the age of eighteen years, and the labors there devolved upon him were arduous in the extreme.

While in Toronto, on the 8th of September, 1860, Mr. Manly was united in marriage to Miss Adeline Jones, of Markham township, that province, where she was born, being a daughter of Norman Jones, a native of Connecticut, who was there engaged in teaching and farming until his death. In 1863 Mr. Manly returned to Stark county, in company with his wife, and located in the city of Massillon, where he secured employment in the painting department of Russell & Company, manufacturers of threshers, mowers and reapers, and he continued to remain with this concern until 1876, when he was elected to the office of county recorder, and this of course demanded his removal to Canton, the capital of the county, in that year. He remained incumbent of this office three years, until the autumn of 1879, and upon his retirement engaged in the livery business in this city, devoting his attention to this enterprise until 1883, when he was again called upon to serve in an official capacity, having been elected, in the fall of that year, county auditor, and this position he retained, by successive re-elections, until 1890, his long service indicating most forcibly the appreciative estimate placed upon the same by the voters of the county. Since his retirement from this office Mr. Manly has been engaged in the real-estate and fire-insurance business in Canton, and he has built up a thriving enterprise in both departments, his books showing at all times many desirable investments in both city and country realty, while in the insurance branch he is a representative of a number of the leading and most reliable companies doing business in the state. He is a man of excellent executive ability and his success has been furthered by the unequivocal trust and confidence which the general public so implicitly place in him. Mr. Manly has given an unqualified allegiance to the Democratic party from the time of attaining his legal majority and has been one of the leaders in its local ranks, having served as chairman of the county central committee of the same and having done much to advance the party cause in this action, while he has held other offices of trust in the gift of the party. He has been a notary public since 1900. He and his wife are communicants and valued members of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, and fraternally he is identified with the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

In conclusion we enter the following brief record concerning the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Manly: Amelia is the wife of William L. Caldwell and they reside in New York city; Frank S. married Miss Elizabeth Koswosky and they reside in Canton; Carlotta is the wife of Walter Sanford, of Cincinnati, this state; Araminta married Frank J. Shively, of Louisville, this county, and they now reside in Manistee, Michigan; and Edward, who married Miss Cora Dannemiller, of this county, now resides in the city of Toledo, Ohio.

GEORGE M. MEISER was born in the village of Clinton, Summit county, Ohio, on January 30, 1859, being a son of Frederick and Catherine (Keiser) Meiser, of whose six children the following named three survive: Louisa, who is the wife of W. A. Hawer, of Canton, this county; Mary, who is the wife of W. V. Stimmel, of Paris, this county; and George M., of this review. Frederick Meiser was born in Luffaw Laffal, Germany, on the 10th of August, 1830, being a son of Conrad and Martha (Grusrak) Meiser, and he was reared on the old homestead farm in the fatherland, where he remained until he had reached the age of twenty-four years, his educational privileges being such as were afforded in the excellent schools of his native land. In 1854, at the age just noted, he severed the ties which bound him and friends and set forth to seek his fortunes in the United States, his total reinforcement being his energy, honesty of purpose and a determination to win success through worthy means. He had learned the trade of wagonmaking in Germany, and upon arriving in America he made his way to the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he worked at his trade about one year and then came to Stark county, Ohio, and secured employment in the same line in the village of Paris. Three years later, having been in the meanwhile married, he removed to Clinton, Summit county, which continued to be his home for an equal period, at the expiration of which he came to Canton, Stark county, and here, after being engaged in the work of his trade only three months, he fell from a wagon in such a way as to injure his spine and render him badly crippled for life. Well may we imagine that the future presented a dark and forbidding aspect to him, for he was no longer able to work at his trade, was entirely without means in a financial way and had a family dependent upon him. The outlook would have appalled the average man, but not so with this valiant soul, and he girdled him for the stern duty which lay before him. As soon as he had sufficiently recuperated as to be able to move about he secured a small stock of notions and began peddling in a most modest way but with utmost perseverance, and finally he was able to provide himself with a wagon and to increase the extent of his stock and also widen the field of his operations. After three years of assiduous application in this line, with weariness of body, and no doubt of mind on many occasions, he had accumulated sufficient surplus to justify him in purchasing a stock of groceries and opening a modest store in Paris, where he remained about three years and then removed to New Berlin, this county, where he continued in the same line of business about seventeen years, carefully conserving his resources and gradually gaining that position of independence which had been his ultimate aim from the time the physical misfortune fell to his lot. In 1883 Mr. Meiser returned to Paris, having sold his business in New Berlin, and here he opened a general-merchandise store, under the firm name of Meiser & Son, the subject of this sketch being the junior member. Through their strict attention to business, their discrimination in the selection of stock and their scrupulously fair and honorable methods they have built up an enterprise which can not fail to challenge the admiration of even the casual visitor to the establishment, for the store is well equipped with modern conveniences and accessories and the stock carried in the many and varied lines represents a capitalistic investment extraordinarily large for a town of its size, though the firm have by no means transcended the just limits of conservatism in this regard, for such has been their policy that they draw their trade from sections not normally tributary to the village.

Frederick Meiser well deserves the esteem and confidence which he so unequivocally commands and which he has so well earned, and he is to-day one of the able and conservative business men and public-spirited citizens of Stark county. In politics he is staunchly arrayed in support of the principles of the Democratic party, and within the first regime of Grover Cleveland as President of the United States he was appointed postmaster of Paris, retaining the incumbency four years. He and his wife are devoted members of the Reformed church. The latter was born in Badeu, Germany, on the 28th of December, 1833, being a daughter of John and Anna M. Keiser, who were born and died in Germany.

George M. Meiser, who is associated with his honored father in business, was reared under the influences of a good home and acquiring his educational discipline in the public schools. From his boyhood days he continued to assist his father in the work of the grocery store in New Berlin, and after he attained maturity he acquired an interest in the business and relieved his father of much of the active management. Since coming to Paris the son has been a member of the firm, and has ever proved an able business coadjutor to his father. He is well known and highly esteemed in the community and he ever takes a lively interest in all that touches its welfare. In his political proclivities he gives an unqualified allegiance to the Democratic party, and both he and his wife are active and valued members of the Reformed church and he is an efficient and popular teacher in its Sunday school.

On the 23d of July, 1899, Mr. Meiser was united in marriage to Miss Effie Heim, who was born in Paris township, this county, being a daughter of the late Isaiah Heim, who was a prominent and influential farmer of this township. He was born in Pennsylvania, November 19, 1832, and his wife, whose maiden name was Lizzie Haines, was born April 8, 1847, in Paris, Stark county. Mr. and Mrs. Meiser have two children, Mildred S., who was born on the 31st of August, 1900, and Max F., who was born on the 14th of March, 1902.

AUSTIN A. HAY claims the old Keystone state of the union as the place of his nativity, having been born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, on the 3d of February, 1845, and being a son of George and Sarah (Fleck) Hay, who were likewise natives of that county, where the former was born on Christmas day of the year 1816, while the latter was born on the 3d of June, 1823. In 1853 they came to Ohio and located in Dalton, Wayne county, but before the close of that year they came thence to Stark county and became numbered among the first settlers in what is now Beach City, Sugar Creek township, where they continued to reside until the year 1870, when they removed to Mower county, Minnesota, where the father died in June, 1886, having been there engaged in the hotel business in the town of Austin. While in Beach City he was engaged in the general merchandise business. After his death his wife returned to the old home here, and here her death occurred on the 13th of August, 1901. They became the parents of two sons and two daughters, both of the latter dying in infancy, while James N., the elder of the sons, is now a resident of Gallipolis, Ohio. The father of the subject was originally an old-line Whig in his political proclivities, but upon the organization of the Republican party he identified himself therewith, and ever afterward was a stanch advocate of its cause. Fraternally he was identified with the Masonic order, having been a member of the lodge at Navarre, this county. He and his wife were members of the Reformed church until their removal to Minnesota, when they identified themselves with the Methodist Episcopal church, there being no organization of the former in the vicinity of their home there. They were folk of sterling worth of character and ever commanded the utmost respect and esteem on the part of all who knew them.

Austin A. Hay, the immediate subject of this review, attended school in his native county in Pennsylvania until he had attained the age of eight years, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Stark county, where he was reared to maturity, his further educational advantages being such as were afforded in the public school in the village of Beach City. He continued to assist his father in the store until there came the call of higher duty, as the thundering of rebel guns against old Fort Sumter gave evidence that an effort was to be made to bring about a dissolution of the great Union founded at so great a cost by the patriots of the Revolution. Though he was but sixteen years of age at the time Mr. Hay promptly tendered his services in the support of the Union, and in September, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company F, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front, the regiment being assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, and thereafter he continued in active service for more than four years, and up to the time when victory crowned the Federal arms and the integrity of the nation was insured. He took part in all the engagements in which his regiment participated, seeing much hard fighting, and the history of the command is the history of his personal military career. He received his honorable discharge at Columbus, Ohio, on the 24th of November, 1865, and as a youthful veteran and patriotic soldier returned to his home in Beach City, where he has ever since maintained his home. His honorable methods and careful attention to the demands of his patrons enabled him to soon build up a large and representative trade, his establishment being the leading one of the sort in this section of the county, while he has ever held the implicit confidence and esteem of the people of the community, who have signalized the same in divers ways. He has been called upon to serve as township trustee and treasurer, and for three different terms he was incumbent of the office of postmaster of his home town, while in 1901 a still more distinctive evidence of his popularity in the community was given in his election to the office of county commissioner, of which he now is incumbent, and in which he is rendering effective service to his constituents and the county at large. In politics he has always been a stalwart Republican, taking an active interest in its cause and being a leader in its local ranks and a director of opinion, while he is essentially progressive and public-spirited in his attitude at all times. Fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, being an honored member of Coiton Post No. 510, at Beach City, and he also belongs to the Knights of Pythias and Elks.

On the 25th of February, 1869, Mr. Hay was united in marriage to Miss Amelia Agler, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of George and Eva (Wygant) Agler, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, and the latter in Maryland, while they were numbered among the early settlers in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, where they passed the residue of their lives. Of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Hay we enter the following brief record: J. Frank, who is the present postmaster in Beach City, receiving his education in the public schools, and was for a time engaged in the newspaper business in Kentucky, being a young man of fine mentality and marked business ability. Eva A. and Sarah W. are twins. Mary, the first child, died in infancy. The family is one of prominence in the social life of the community, and the home of the subject is a center of gracious hospitality.

JOHN McWHINNEY was born on the farm which is now his home, in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 13th of June, 1835, being a son of John R. and Nancy (Wholf) McWhinney, the former of whom was born in county Down, Ireland, in the year 1797, while the latter was a native of Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, where she was born in 1804. John Rand McWhinney was reared and educated in the Emerald Isle, where he remained until he had attained the age of twenty-five years, when he emigrated to America, landing in New York city, and for a decade he continued to reside in the old Empire state. At the expiration of this period, in 1829, he came to Stark county, Ohio, and settled on a tract of wild land in Sugar Creek township, where he established his home in true pioneer style and forthwith instituted the reclamation of his land for the purposes of cultivation, and thus meriting recognition as one of the founders of the county. He continued to reside on this homestead, the present farm of our subject, until he was called from the scene of life's activities, his death here occurring on the 17th of April, 1863. He was for a number of years superintendent of the Ohio canal, and prior to his death he had succeeded in clearing a considerable portion of his farm, which comprised one hundred and sixty acres. In his native land he had learned the trade of shoemaking, and to the same he devoted more or less attention during the years of his residence in Ohio, while he was known as a man of impregnable integrity and excellent business ability. He came of staunch Scottish ancestry, both of his parents having been born in the fair land of hills and heather, the maiden name of his mother having been Margaret Bailey, and they removed across the border into the north of Ireland, where they passed the remainder of their lives. The father of the subject was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian church. They became the parents of two sons and two daughters, and of the number the subject of this review is the only surviving son.

John McWhinney, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared on the old homestead farm where he now resides, and as a boy he began to contribute his quota to the work of clearing and cultivating the land, while his educational opportunities were such as were afforded in the pioneer log school house of the neighborhood, the same being a mere log cabin, with punchon floor and slab benches and other crude accessories. He owns the original home farm of one hundred and sixty acres, and the same is one of the model places of this section of the county, thrift and prosperity being in evidence on every hand, while the permanent improvements are of substantial order, including a commodious and attractive residence. Mr. McWhinney follows diversified farming and also gives no little attention to the raising of high-grade live stock, while his energy, discrimination and progressive methods have enabled him to gain marked success, while he has ever retained the unqualified respect of the community in which he has thus passed his entire life. In his earlier years he gave his support to the Democratic party, but finally became convinced that the Republican party stood sponsor for the principles and policies best adapted for the government of the republic, and, with the courage of his convictions, he transferred his allegiance thereto, and since 1863 he has exercised his franchise in its support, having thus been identified with the "grand old party" during nearly the entire period of its existence. He was a staunch Union man in the period that led up to the war of the Rebellion, and he supported Lincoln for the presidency at the time of his second nomination, while he rendered the valiant and loyal service of a true patriot during that great conflict through which the perpetuity of the Union was insured. In 1861 he enlisted in Company F, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as a private, and on the 7th of September of that year his regiment left Wilmot, this county, and departed for the front, and Mr. McWhinney continued in service until April 17, 1865, when he received his honorable discharge, being at the time in a small-pox hospital in Louisville, Kentucky, and having but recently recovered from an attack of that dread disease. He participated in all of the engagements of the Atlanta campaign, having been under fire for eighty days, and in the battle of Atlanta he received injuries which necessitated his being sent to the rear, after which he was not in active service in the fighting line, while for some time he served as wagon and forage master. After receiving his discharge Mr. McWhinney returned to the home farm, and here he has ever since followed the vocations of peace, gaining victories no less renowned than those of war. In addition to the homestead farm he also owns another farm, of eighty acres, also in Sugar Creek township, and he likewise has the general supervision of this place. He erected his present modern and attractive residence in 1881, while the fine large barn on the homestead was built in 1902. The confidence and esteem in which our subject is held in the community has been signalized by his long retention in the office of township trustee, of which he is incumbent at the time of this writing, and in which he will have served seven years, including his present term, while for many years he has been a valued member of the school board of his district. Fraternally he vitalizes his interest in his old comrades in arms by retaining membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, being a member of Scott Wyant Post No. 384, at Wilmont, while he is also a member of Caldwell Lodge No. 346, Free and Accepted Masons; Ohio Lodge No. 246, Knights of Pythias; and Wilmont Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.

On the 9th of October, 1861, Mr. McWhinney was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Hall, who was born in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, being a daughter of Samuel Hall, one of the sterling pioneers of the county, and of this union six children have been born, namely: Carrie E., Sterling J., Cullen H. (deceased), Columbia, Minnie H., and Jessie W. Cullen H. married Miss Sibil Reed, and died in 1899, being survived by his wife and one child, who is the only grandchild of the subject.

HENRY C. BURWELL is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Rose township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 7th of August, 1862, and being a son of Adam and Barbara (Little) Burwell, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, of German ancestry, and the latter in Carroll county, where their marriage occurred. The father is now a resident of Magnolia, where he has devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits. The subject was reared on the homestead farm where he was born, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools, which he attended during the winter months until he had attained the age of eighteen years, while his services were required in connection with the work of the farm during the summer seasons. He remained at the parental home until he had reached his legal majority, when he initiated his independent career by hiring out to do farm work, to which he devoted his attention until his marriage, in 1885, after which he continued to follow agricultural pursuits on rented farms, in Carroll county, until 1890, when he came to Waynesburg, Stark county, where he was employed in driving a mule for the first two and one-half years. In 1893 he secured a position in the employ of the Waynesburg Brick & Clay Company, whose plant was later absorbed by the H. B. Camp Company, with whom he continued in the capacity of boss burner of the kilns until 1898, when patent recognition of his ability and fidelity was given in his being chosen superintendent of the plant, in which responsible office he was retained, in April, 1902, when the business was purchased by the National Fire Proofing Company. Mr. Burwell has been a careful student of the details of the business, and through his practical knowledge and earnest efforts much has been done to advance the interests of the concern, both in facilitating production and securing the highest order of products. Under his superintendency the output of the plant has been increased from sixteen thousand to twenty thousand Hellvor building blocks a day, while the equipment has been greatly improved, the concern being one of the largest of the sort in the Union. In politics Mr. Burwell gives his support to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 5th of September, 1885, Mr. Burwell was united in marriage to Miss Maggie L. Williams, daughter of David and Emeline (Gurst) Williams, of Carroll county, and of this union have been born six children, all of whom remain at the parental home, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Iva, David A., Emma Ethel, Bertha Blanche, Adam Arthur and Reuben Henry.

JOHN H. KRUMLAUF is a native son of the Buckeye state, and comes of staunch German lineage, his ancestors in both the paternal and maternal lines having settled in the state of Pennsylvania several generations ago, while there were born and reared his parents, John and Sarah (Hahn) Krumlauf, who came to Ohio in an early day, locating in Hancock county, where his father devoted his attention to farming for many years. He died in Arlington, Hancock county, Ohio, having attained the venerable age of eighty-nine years, while his wife passed away in 1882, at the age of sixty-six years. He was a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, having identified himself with the party at practically the time of its organization, and his religious faith was that of the Evangelical church, of which his wife also was a devoted member. Of their nine children seven are living at the time of this writing.

John Krumlauf came to Stark county in 1857, and became one of the prosperous and honored farmers of Osnaburg township, where he ever held the maximum confidence and regard of all who knew him.

John H. Krumlauf, the immediate subject of this review, was born on a farm in the vicinity of Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, on the 4th of October, 1855, and he was thus about two years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Osnaburg township, Stark county, where he was reared to maturity under the grateful surroundings of the old homestead farm. He received the advantages of the public schools of the locality, in which he continued his studies until he had attained the age of nineteen years, in the meanwhile assisting in the improvement and cultivation of the farm, and also working on neighboring farms at intervals. At the age noted he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of stone-cutting, becoming a skilled workman, and to this vocation he devoted his attention for several years, finally receiving an injury which compelled him to permanently abandon the work of his trade. Thereafter he entered the employ of the Canton Steel Company, in the capacity of stationary engineer, continuing to be thus engaged about four years, at the expiration of which he turned his attention to the real estate business, from which he retired to engage in the grocery business, opening a store on East Tuscarawas street and later being engaged in the same line of enterprise at the corner of Walnut and Second streets, where he continued operations successfully until 1896, when he disposed of the business and once more engaged in dealing in real estate, which has ever since constituted his province of endeavor and in which he has met with gratifying success, being an excellent judge of realty values, while most desirable investments are ever recorded on his books, both in the line of city and farm property. He has conveniently located and well equipped offices in the City National Bank building. In politics Mr. Krumlauf has ever given an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for Garfield, and he has taken an active part in furthering the party cause in the local field, while his name is entered as a candidate in the nominating convention of his party for the office of county recorder, a position for which he is thoroughly well qualified, and for which he is a logical candidate. Fraternally he belongs to Council No. 137, United American Mechanics.

In February, 1883, in the city of Alliance, this county, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Krumlauf to Miss Ida Shidler, daughter of Eli Shidler, of that city, and of this union have been born three children, Maud, Wilmer and Helen, all of whom remain beneath the parental roof.

CHARLES O. HEGGEM is an American by adoption, being a native of the old historic country of Norway and as such inherits the sterling characteristics and honorable virtues which have long distinguished the Scandinavians from the other peoples of the world. His father, Ole Heggem, was born about one hundred and fifty miles north of Bergen, Norway, on the 9th of April, 1832, the son of Axel Heggem, whose birth occurred in Bergenstift May 19, 1783. By occupation the latter was a farmer. He also served as a soldier in the Norwegian army and took part in the war with Sweden, which lasted from 1807 until 1814, inclusive. Ole Heggem spent his youth on his father's farm, but when a young man learned the trade of pattern-making in the shops of his native place. He married in Norway Miss Johanna Mucklebust, a native of Bergenstift, and daughter of Knut Mucklebust, a farmer, living not far from the city of Bergen. In 1868 Ole Heggem and family immigrated to the United States and took up their residence in Chicago, where the father and mother still reside, the father aged seventy-one, the mother, seventy-two.

Charles O. Heggem is the oldest of ten children, five of whom are living at the present time. He was born in Bergen, Norway, on the 29th day of November, 1851, and received his early education in the Latin school of that city, attending the same until a youth of fourteen. He then entered upon a three years' apprenticeship in the Bergen machine works, and at the expiration of that time accompanied his parents to America, taking passage at Stevanger in 1868, on the "Atlanta," a sailing vessel which at that time made its first voyage to the new world. In due time the ship reached its destination at Quebec, Canada, from which city the Heggem family proceeded to Chicago, where Charles soon found employment in the Chromatic Printing Press works, afterwards the Alden Printing Works, removed to Canton. After working in that establishment for two years he resigned his place and went to Salem, Ohio, where during several ensuing years he was employed by the Buckeye Engine Company, rising by a series of promotions to the important position of foreman. He early developed unusual proficiency as a machinist and in addition to his skill as a workman displayed business abilities of such high order as to win the confidence of his employers, with the result as above stated. Mr. Heggem continued with the Buckeye Engine Works until 1884, in the spring of which year he severed his connection with the company and accepted the position of foreman in the Russell & Company machine shops at Massillon. He served several years in that capacity, meanwhile so conducting the affairs under his immediate charge as to win promotion to a higher position and from that by a series of continued advancements until he reached the responsible station of superintendent, in 1887, which he still holds. Keen, shrewd and vigilant, he is complete master of the situation, nothing escaping his ever watchful gaze, being as familiar with the most minute detail of the works as he is with the business in the aggregate. To manage successfully such a large force of men and retain their confidence and good will and to get from them the largest results obtainable, requires executive ability, tact and generalship rarely combined in a single individual. As already stated, Mr. Heggem is master of his calling, and as a skillful workman, thoroughly acquainted with scientific mechanism in all of its details, he has few equals and no superiors.

Chas. O. Heggem

Reverting to his domestic history, it is learned that Mr. Heggem was happily married, in the year 1872, to Miss Rebecca Boe, also a native of Norway, and the daughter of Knut and Mary Boe, who came to the United States in 1870 and located at Salem, Ohio, where the father engaged in the manufacture of stoves. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Heggem has been blessed with three children,—Oscar E., Alfred G. and Chalmer R.

In addition to his official position with the Russell engine works, Mr. Heggem is a director of the company, and is similarly interested in the Massillon Iron and Steel Works, besides being a director of the Massillon Building & Loan Association. He is also interested in the Warwick Glass Company, in the organization of which he bore a prominent part, and to him is largely due the credit of its incorporation and success. Like many of the leading men in every city and town of any consequence, he is identified with the ancient and honorable order of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he has risen to high station, belonging to Clinton Lodge No. 47, Massillon Commandery No. 4, and Hiram Chapter, Royal Arch Masons. He has also taken the Scottish rite and Mystic Shrine degrees, and in 1893 was elected eminent commander of the Knights Templar organization referred to above. He has also represented his commandery in the state conclaves and for several years past has been a member of the grand commandery of Ohio, meeting with the distinguished body in its annual gatherings. Mr. Heggem is a great admirer of the free institutions under which he has achieved such marked business success and high social standing, and takes great interest in the affairs of his adopted country, discharging the duties of citizenship with the same devotion to the nation's interest as if he were born and reared on American soil. He is pronounced in his advocacy of the Republican party and has labored earnestly for its success in state and national affairs, sometimes losing sight of politics in matters purely local. He occupies a high position in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, to which organization he has belonged since 1889, and in the deliberations of which he always takes a prominent part. Religiously Mr. Heggem was reared according to the gentle but strict teachings of the Society of Friends, and when he entered the marriage relation the ceremony was solemnized according to the manner of that church.

Oscar E. Heggem, oldest son of the subject, is a young man of splendid business attainments, and at this time holds the responsible position of assistant superintendent of the Russell & Company's works. He was married, in 1893, to Miss Lizzie E. Davidson, of Wayne county, Ohio, and is the father of two children,—Frankie Elise and Charles O. Alfred G., the second son, has also achieved enviable repute as an energetic, far-seeing business man, and as superintendent of the Russell Engine Company's shops in this city. He is a graduate of Cornell University, with the degree of Mechanical Engineer, class of '97. Chalmer R., the youngest of the family, after completing his literary education, took up the law and is now prosecuting his legal studies in Cornell University, New York. He is gifted intellectually and will no doubt distinguish himself in the profession to which he proposes to devote his life. Mr. Heggem has contributed papers and articles to the press on mechanical engineering and kindred subjects, many by request.

THOMAS S. WOLF claims the old Keystone state of the Union as the place of his nativity, having been born on the parental farm, near Tarentum, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, on the 25th of September, 1862, being the youngest of the eleven children of Samuel and Mary (Haney) Wolf, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania, and of stanch German stock. Samuel Wolf, grandfather of the subject, was born in Germany, where he was reared to maturity. Shortly after his marriage he emigrated with his bride to America, landing in New York city, where he made his home for some time and then removed to Tarentum, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, where he died about the year 1857, in the prime of his manhood. His wife survived him many years, her death occurring in Freeport, that state, in 1875. They became the parents of four children, namely: Joseph; Samuel (father of the subject); Jackson and Wallace, the last mentioned being now the only survivor. The father of the subject was born in the state of New York, in 1818, and was a boy at the time of his father's removal to Pennsylvania, where he was reared on a farm and where he received limited educational advantages. He was early compelled to assume the practical responsibilities of life and to depend on his own resources. While he was still a mere boy he secured employment in connection with the repairing on a canal, receiving twenty-seven cents a day for his services. He continued to labor without ceasing as the days passed by, and through his industry and frugality saved a small amount of money, and finally felt justified in taking unto himself a wife and establishing himself in a home of his own. In the connection it is interesting to recall the fact that in providing for the furnishing of his modest dwelling he purchased seven chairs in Freeport, Pennsylvania, and that he transferred the same to his home, seven miles distant, by carrying the entire number on his head, while his sturdy vigor may be imagined when it is stated that he did not remove the load until he reached his destination. He eventually became the owner of a farm of two hundred and ten acres near Tarentum, and there he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits during the balance of his life, having disposed of the farm and removed to the town mentioned about six months before his death, which occurred in 1890. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Jane Haney, was born in that section of the Keystone state, and she is now living in the city of Pittsburg, at the venerable age of eighty years. The father of the subject was a man of sterling integrity and became an influential citizen of his community, having served in various local offices of trust and having been a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, as is also his widow. Of their eleven children eight are living at the present time.

Thomas S. Wolf was the youngest son and he remained on the old homestead after the older boys had left the parental roof to establish themselves independently in life, a large portion of the work of the farm thus devolving upon him in his youthful days, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools, which he attended during the winter months of each year until he had attained the age of seventeen years, while he thereafter continued to assist in the work and management of the home farm until he had reached his legal majority, when he initiated his independent career by securing employment in a barrel factory, where he was engaged about three years. Thereafter he engaged in coal mining at Hughes, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, and with this line of industry he has now been identified for a period of twenty years. In 1883 he came to Osnaburg, Stark county, where he worked in the coal mines for several years, later carrying on operations on his own responsibility. while in January of the year 1901 he entered into contract for the getting out of coal and clay for a local tile and brick concern, and to this contract he is now devoting his attention and is handling same with marked fidelity and ability. He has been an earnest and indefatigable worker, and his integrity of purpose has never wavered in the least, so that he has at all times commanded the confidence and esteem of those with whom he has been associated in business or social life. Mr. Wolf has an attractive home in Osnaburg, the house having been erected by him in 1899. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Evangelical Lutheran church, of which his wife likewise is a devoted member. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

On the 1st of January, 1885, Mr. Wolf was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Lisbtage, who was born in Osnaburg, being a daughter of George and Mary Lisbtage, and they are the parents of five children, namely: George C., Nettie Grace, William S., Noble and a baby.

JOHN H. MONG was born in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 24th of March, 1861, being one of the three children of John and Mary M. (Young) Mong, while he and his brother Philip are now the only survivors of the immediate family. The father was born in Rheinberger, German, in the year 1818, and was there reared on a farm and continued to follow agricultural pursuits in the fatherland until 1846, when he emigrated to the United States, the trip being made on a sailing vessel, which was thirty-six days in making the passage. He made his way to Indiana, and his cash capital at the time of his arrival there was represented in the sum of sixty cents. He remained in that state for a short interval, and then came to Carroll county, Ohio, and settled in Brown township, where he engaged in farming on rented land, continuing operations in this line for about ten years, at the expiration of which he purchased the home farm of forty acres, in Osnaburg township, Stark county, which is now owned equally by his two sons. Here he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in the year 1871. For about three years he followed a threshing outfit, and with this exception his entire attention was given to agricultural pursuits from his youth up. Upon becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States he espoused the cause of the Democratic party, and ever afterward remained a stalwart adherent of the same. He was a consistent member of the Reformed church, and was a man of exalted integrity and honor, ever commanding the high regard of his fellow men and living a life of signal usefulness and honor. His devoted wife, who was a true companion and helpmeet to him, was likewise a native of Rheinberger, Germany, where she was born in 1821, whence she came to America with her parents in 1846, the family locating in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, where her marriage to John Mong was solemnized. She died on the homestead farm, on the 10th of May, 1891, at the age of three score years and ten. She was a woman of noble attributes of character, and was a zealous and devoted member of the Reformed church.

John M. Mong remained beneath the parental roof until he had attained the age of twenty years, when he initiated his independent career by securing employment as a farm hand, being thus engaged for about eight years, after which he devoted about six years to working as an engineer, operating stationary and portable engines. Since that time he has given the major portion of his attention to the mining of coal, in which line of enterprise he has met with gratifying success, while he is also associated with his brother in the ownership and management of the homestead farm acquired by their father so many years ago. Mr. Mong is a bachelor, and for more than a decade past he has made his home with his brother, in Osnaburg township. He is known as a man of progressive ideas and marked business ability, while he has so ordered his course as to retain the confidence and good will of those with whom he has come in contact. In politics he is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Reformed church, of which he has been a member from his youth up.

ADAM HAY was born in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 17th of May, 1857, being a son of Peter and Susan (Zwahlen) Hay, whose eight children are still living, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Margaret M., who is the wife of Samuel Marks, of Osnaburg township; Adam, the immediate subject of this review; John, who is a resident of Denver, Colorado; Edward, who is in the employ of the Aultman Manufacturing Company, of Canton, this county; Albert, who is likewise a resident of Canton; Susan C., who is the wife of Allen Baughman, of Portland, Oregon; Mary E., who is the wife of Jacob Sweitzberger, of Canton township; and Cora A., who is the wife of Grant Shearer, of New York city.

Peter Hay, the father of the subject, was born in Rheinbeyn, Germany, in 1830, and in 1837 he accompanied his parents on their emigration to America, the voyage being made on a sailing vessel, which reached New York city after an interval of thirty-six days on the Atlantic. The grandfather of our subject likewise bore the name of Adam Hay, and he came forthwith from New York to Stark county, Ohio, and purchased a tract of land in Osnaburg township, the same having been an integral portion of the farm now owned and occupied by the subject. Here he passed the remainder of his life, passing away in April, 1868, at the age of seventy-one years. Peter Hay was reared on the old homestead farm and he continued his residence in the township until his death. Shortly after his marriage he came into possession of one hundred and sixty-two acres of the homestead farm, which originally comprised two hundred and six acres, the remaining forty-four acres having been set off as a home for his sister, Mrs. Schwartz. Some time in the '60s he purchased two pieces of land adjoining his farm on the east and comprising forty-four and fifty-six acres, respectively, while in 1881 he bought eighty-four acres which lay contiguous on the west, and in the following year acquired the forty-four acres which had been allotted to his sister, thus making the area of his landed estate three hundred and ninety-four acres. He was a thoroughly progressive and scientific farmer, and was very successful in his efforts, having developed one of the fine farm properties of the county. In politics he gave his support to the Democratic party from the time of attaining his legal majority, while his religious faith was that of the Reformed church, of which both he and his wife were devoted members, while he held various official positions in the church. He was a man of sterling character, true and loyal in all the relations of life, and he held the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who knew him. His death occurred on the 17th of September, 1901, and the community mourned the loss of one of its most able and honored citizens. Mrs. Susan (Zwahlen) Hay, mother of the subject, was born in Switzerland, in the year 1831, and was twelve years of age at the time when her parents emigrated to America, taking up their abode on the farm now owned by her brother,

Henry Zwahlen, in Osnaburg township, where they passed the remainder of their lives. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 12th of October, 1889, at the age of fifty-eight years, having been a woman of noble character and one who proved a devoted wife and mother, while her children may well "rise up and call her blessed."

Adam Hay, whose name initiates this sketch, was reared on the ancestral homestead where he now resides, and his early educational privileges were such as were afforded in the district schools, his attendance being somewhat irregular, however, as he was the eldest son and was thus early called upon to assume much of the work of the farm. In 1879 Mr. Hay was married and he then settled on what is known as the Shearer farm, of one hundred acres, adjoining the home farm, the same having been purchased by his father in the '60s. He operated the farm on shares for two years, at the expiration of which he removed to the farm which his father had purchased on the west of the homestead, and there he continued in agricultural pursuits for five years. He then, in 1886, removed to the city of Canton, where he entered into partnership with his brother John and engaged in the grocery business, the enterprise being successfully conducted for one year, at the expiration of which they disposed of the same at a good profit, and for nearly two years thereafter our subject was employed as a carpenter and millwright in the works of the Dueber-Hampden Company, in Canton. He then engaged in house carpentry on his own responsibility, and continued in this line of enterprise for a number of years. In 1892 he engaged in the livery business in Canton, and one year later traded the same for a grocery store, of which he shortly afterward disposed. In 1896 he returned to the home farm, which he rented until the death of his father, when he purchased two hundred and six acres of land, and has here continued successfully in agricultural pursuits to the present time, the farm being under most effective cultivation and equipped with model buildings and other permanent improvements of the best order. In politics Mr. Hay accords a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and in 1901 was made the nominee of his party for township trustee. He and his wife are prominent members of the Reformed church at Mapleton, in which he holds the office of deacon, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Maccabees, affiliating with Malvern Tent No. 349, at Malvern, Carroll county.

On the 6th of March, 1879, Mr. Hay was united in marriage to Miss Susan Starkey, who was born in Paris township, this county, being a daughter of the late John Starkey, who was a prominent farmer and carpenter of that township. Mrs. Hay's death occurred on the 18th of December, 1884, and she left one child, Laura A., who remains at the paternal home. On the 25th of February, 1886, Mr. Hay consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Elizabeth E. Foltz, of Marshall county, Indiana, and they are the parents of one son, Earl E.

PHILIP MONG was born in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 12th of December, 1863, and he received his educational discipline in the public schools of that county and Stark county, where the family took up their abode at an early day. At the age of nineteen years he severed the home ties and secured employment as a farm hand, and to this line of work he continued to devote his attention for a number of years, being energetic and industrious and turning his labors to good account. In 1890 he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret N. Biler, who was born in Osnaburg township, on the farm which is now her home, and which is conducted so successfully by her husband. She is a daughter of the late Philip Biler, who was born in the province of Alsace, France, which is now a portion of the German empire, and who emigrated thence to America when a young man, becoming one of the early settlers in Osnaburg township, this county, where he developed and otherwise improved a good farm, upon which he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1881. After his marriage Mr. Mong settled on the Biler homestead, and since 1890 he has continued agricultural operations here in connection with the cultivation of the old Mong homestead, which lies contiguous. For the past twelve years he has also been associated with his brother in the development of the coal mines, devoting his attention to this work during the winter months and remaining in active supervision of his farming interests during the balance of the year. He is recognized as one of the able and progressive young men of the township, where his friends are in number as his acquaintances. In politics he is staunchly arrayed in support of the Republican party, and he and his wife are worthy members of the church near Mapleton. Of their four children two are living, William R. and Harry W.

EDWARD A. BIECHELE is a member of one of the prominent pioneer families of the county, and who is numbered among the representative business men of the city of Canton, controlling an important enterprise which had its inception many years ago, through the collaboration of his father, Augustus G., and his uncle, Leopold Biechele. The subject is sole manufacturer of the Golden Star patent Swiss steam and fire copper cheese kettles, candy pans, and also of sheet-metal work of every description, while in his establishment are also handled furnaces, mantels, grates, tile flooring, gas fixtures, and stoves of all kinds, while a specialty is made of plumbing work and the executing of contracts for roofing, spouting, etc., the headquarters of the business being in a large and well equipped building at 206-8 East Fifth street. This enterprise was established in the year 1853, by the firm of L. Biechele & Brother, the interested principals being Leopold and Augustus G. Biechele. The original headquarters were located on the site of the present Dime Savings Bank, and later the firm removed to the lot on which the present building of the subject is located, said lot at the time extending through from East Tuscarawas street to East Fifth street, while the building fronted on the former thoroughfare. The present building, fronting on East Fifth street, was erected by the firm in the year 1879, and here the brothers continued their partnership operations until the 20th of March, 1882, when a dissolution took place, Leopold Biechele retiring, and thereafter the father of the subject continued the enterprise individually until his death, which occurred on the 22d of November, 1896.

Augustus G. Biechele came of staunch German lineage, and was a sturdy representative of the valuable element of citizenship which the German fatherland has furnished to the United States. He was born in the town of Emden, in the central portion of the province of Baden, Germany, the year of his nativity being 1828. He attended the excellent schools of his native land for the customary number of years defined by government law. In 1847 he came to America in company with his brother Leopold, and later became associated with his brother in the establishing of the enterprise of which his son is now in control, operations being instituted on a modest scale, and here he continued to reside until he was called from the scene of life's activities, having been a man of sterling character and one who held the unqualified confidence and esteem of the community in which he so long lived and labored. In politics he was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and while he was never a seeker of public office, he served most efficiently as a member of the board of trustees of the Canton water works, being loyal to his home city and ever lending his aid and influence in support of measures concerning its advancement and prosperity. He was a communicant of St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic, and contributed liberally to its support. In Canton, in the year 1855, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mary A. Lothamer, a daughter of Peter Lothamer, who was born in the province of Alsace, France, whence he emigrated to the United States, and located in Canton, where he engaged in the shoe business and where he passed the remainder of his life. The mother of the subject is still living, being seventy-one years of age at the time of this writing, and she likewise is a communicant and devoted member of St. Peter's church. This worthy couple became the parents of seven children, all of whom still reside in Canton with one exception, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Edward A., the immediate subject of this sketch; Andrew, who lives in Canton; Tina, the widow of Dr. August Leininger; Alfred, who is engaged in the tin jobbing business in Canton; Ella, who is the wife of Harry Webb, of this city; Corrine, who is the wife of James Burns, of Louisville, Kentucky; and Arthur, who is engaged with the Aultman Company in Canton.

Edward A. Biechele was born in the family homestead, at the corner of Third street and Cleveland avenue, in Canton, the date of his nativity being September 3, 1856. He received his early educational discipline in the public and parochial schools and the Canton Academy, and supplemented the same by a course of study in Duff's Business College, in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he completed his education at the age of twenty years. He then entered his father's establishment and here learned the trade and familiarized himself with all other details of the business, so that he was eminently qualified to assume the full management of the enterprise at the death of his honored father, in 1897, subsequently to which he settled up the estate and in 1899 he purchased the interests of the other heirs in the business, to which he has since given his undivided attention, while through his well directed efforts he has increased its prestige and expanded its scope, controlling a large and important business in the various departments of the enterprise. He owns valuable patents and the articles manufactured in his establishment find a ready demand throughout a wide trade territory. He accords an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, and fraternally is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Columbus, Woodmen of the World and Knights of the Macca-bees. He and his wife are communicants and valued members of St. John's church, Roman Catholic.

In Canton, on the 18th of October, 1881, Mr. Biechele was united in marriage to Miss Lottie Trout, who was born in this city, being a daughter of Joseph Trout, concerning whom individual mention is made elsewhere in this volume, and of this union have been born three children, namely: Burdeene, William Arnold and Josephine.

Reverting to the life of the father of the subject, we may consistently make note of the fact that he was one of the argonauts who made their way to the state of California at the time of the ever memorable gold excitement in that section. In company with a party of Canton men he went to the Golden state in 1850, making the trip by way of the Isthmus of Panama, while the return trip was made by the overland route. He and his companions prospected in the gold fields and located a valuable mine, but they became involved in litigation with an English syndicate relative to the ownership of the property and finally abandoned the claim, having remained in California two years. In the party were L. V. Barkius, John Trout and Frank Galler, and others of Canton, and all are now deceased except the last mentioned.

DANIEL SCHWARTZ was born in Millhoven, Prussia, Germany, on the 13th of May, 1826, the son of Peter and Catherine (Claty) Schwartz. He is one of seven children, of whom the only survivor besides himself is Jacob, a resident of Canton. Peter Schwartz is also a native of Prussian Germany, having first seen the light of day in 1789. In 1833 he came to the United States with his family. He had been a tavern-keeper in his native country and was considered a prosperous man there, so that upon his arrival in the new world he was enabled to buy eighty acres of good land in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, this tract being now owned by the heirs of his youngest son, William. The father cultivated this farm, made for himself and family a comfortable home, and passed the remainder of his days there, his death occurring in 1857. In politics he was a firm and uncompromising Democrat, while his religious creed was in harmony with that of the Reformed church. He was a man of sterling character and upright, Christian manhood, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

Daniel Schwartz, the immediate subject, was reared under the parental roof and attended the pioneer schools of the locality, acquiring but a limited education. This lack of schooling has, however, been compensated for in a large measure by a course of wide and liberal reading and a close observation of men and events, so that he is today a well informed man, well able to deal successfully with the affairs of life. At the early age of fifteen years Mr. Schwartz apprenticed himself to learn the trade of shoemaking in Canton. Completing his term of apprenticeship in 1846, he went to Cincinnati, and was there employed at his trade for about two years, being for the following two years employed upon farms in that locality. In 1850 he returned to Stark county and was married, after which event he went to Waynesburg and worked as a farm hand for one year, his compensation being forty cents a day and everything found. He was economical and carefully husbanded his earnings, meager as they were, so that at the end of the year he found himself in the possession of almost his entire earnings for the year. Returning to Osnaburg township, he rented land for a year and then bought a home in the southern part of the township, the place comprising four and a fraction acres. Upon this little place Mr. Schwartz resided for some five years, and then purchased a farm of twenty acres near his present home farm. After remaining upon this place about seven years he disposed of it and purchased his present home farm, comprising about eighty acres of fine and well tilled land, upon which he has since made his home. During the dark days of the Civil war things were in bad shape with Mr. Schwartz, as he was still in debt for a part of the purchase price of the farm. The draft debt on the township was a heavy burden on the taxpayers and for a time the subject found it hard to keep things moving. However, he pulled through, and through his persistent and strenuous endeavors has succeeded where many others would have failed, and is today enjoying a fair degree of prosperity. It was a severe test for him, and showed the stuff of which he is made. Indomitable industry, sound judgment and honorable business methods are the elements which have contributed most largely to his success, and he is today one of the most highly esteemed residents of his township.

In the fall of 1850 Daniel Schwartz was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Grossman, a native of the little republic of Switzerland. She accompanied her parents to America when she was but three years of age, and in this country acquired a good, practical common school education. This union has been a most happy and congenial one, and has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Jacob and Daniel are residents of Indiana; William lives in Denver, Colorado; Samuel is at home; Frank resides in Louisville, this county; Lucy is deceased; Ellen is the wife of Charles Hayman, of this county. Daniel Schwartz renders his political allegiance to the Republican party, and has taken a keen and active interest in public affairs. For ten years he served as supervisor, and was for several years a school director. Religiously he is a member of the Reformed church, and not only lives a life consistent with the teachings of that society, but contributes liberally of his material substance to all movements having for their object the amelioration of the world's condition. He has held official station in his church, having been for four years deacon and two years elder. All in all, there are few men in Osnaburg township who have enjoyed in a larger degree than does the subject the warm regard and high esteem of his neighbors, a relation which he has well merited.

WALTER G. LOWE, M. D., was born in Wayne county, Ohio, on the 28th of March, 1863, being a son of Gilbert and Catherine (Armstrong) Lowe, the former of whom was born in the state of New Jersey, on the 5th of September, 1823, while the latter was born in Holmes county, Ohio, on the 9th of August, 1824. The paternal grandfather of the Doctor was Jacob C. Lowe, who was born in Auburn, New York, on the 9th of April, 1792, this date practically establishing the fact that the family became identified with the history of America in the colonial epoch. Jacob C. Lowe was engaged in the butchering business in Auburn for a number of years, and sold his meat products in New York city. About the year 1837 he came with his family to Ohio, and for a number of years he was a drover by occupation, and finally he purchased a tract of land near the capital city of Columbus, reclaiming the land and eventually disposing of the property. He then purchased a farm near Fredericksburg, Wayne county, and in that town he passed the residue of his long and honorable life, his death occurring on the 28th of May, 1868. His wife, whose maiden name was Phœbe Kershaw, was born on Long Island, New York, on the 8th of June, 1795, of an old colonial family, and she died on the 13th of February, 1865. Of this union nine children were born, and of the number only three are living at the present time.

Gilbert Lowe did not accompany his parents on their removal to Ohio, but remained in the state of New York, where he was reared and educated, but in 1847 he joined his parents in the Buckeye state, being at the time about twenty-four years of age, and here he continued to be actively engaged in farming in Wayne county, until his retirement from active labors, and he now resides in the village of Apple Creek, that county, while he still retains possession of his valuable and finely improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which is located in East Union township, that county. In politics for many years he gave a staunch support to the Republican party, but about 1880 he transferred his allegiance to the Prohibition party, of whose cause he has ever since been a stalwart and uncompromising advocate. His cherished and devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest on the 22d of February, 1866, at which time the subject of this review was but three years of age. They became the parents of four sons and three daughters, two of the children dying in infancy, while the remaining five are living, two sons and three daughters, the Doctor having been the sixth in order of birth. Gilbert Lowe has long been a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church, as was also his wife.

Dr. Lowe was reared on the homestead farm in Wayne county, and after securing such advantages as were afforded in the district schools he continued his studies in the high school at Apple Creek, the Ada Normal School, and Wooster University. Thereafter he continued to be identified with the farming industry until he had attained the age of twenty-three years, when, having determined to fit himself for a wider sphere of endeavor and to adopt the medical profession, he initiated his work of technical preparation by taking up the study of medicine in Apple Creek, where he had as a preceptor Dr. Joseph K. King, an able and honored practitioner of that county. Later he was duly matriculated in the College of Physicians & Surgeons in the city of Keokuk, Iowa, where he continued his studies for one year, while in 1888 he entered the Toledo Medical College, in the city of Toledo, Ohio, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1889, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. His novitiate in the practice of medicine was served in the village of Burbank, Wayne county, where he remained one year, after which he came to his present field of labor, establishing his home and professional headquarters in Justus, Stark county, where he has attained marked prestige and popularity and where he controls a representative and successful practice. In politics he gives a loyal support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, and he ever manifests a lively interest in all that touches the general welfare of the community, where he and his wife enjoy marked popularity in social circles, while both are valued and active members of the United Brethren church.

On the 18th of October, 1893, Dr. Lowe was united in marriage to Miss Almeda Hoffman, who was born in Sugar Creek township, this county, on the 29th of July, 1863, being a daughter of Daniel and Selecta (Putman) Hoffman, the former of whom died on the 1st of February, 1895, while his widow now resides in Justus. Dr. and Mrs. Lowe have two children, C. Fay, who was born on the 18th of July, 1895, and Inez A., who was born on the 28th of January, 1900.

ALVAH P. TRUBEY, D. D. S., was born on the homestead farm, in Sugar Creek township, this county, on the 31st of March, 1876, being the youngest of the eleven children born to Jacob M. and Elizabeth (Pherson) Trubey, while six of the children are still living. The father of the subject was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, in 1820, and when he was but three years of age his parents came to Stark county, being numbered among its earliest pioneers, and they located on a tract of wild land in Sugar Creek township, where they passed their entire lives. There Jacob M. Trubey was reared to manhood, and he continued to reside on the old homestead until his death, which occurred on the 26th of May, 1902. He became one of the prominent farmers and representative citizens of that section of the county, commanding uniform confidence and esteem and being called upon to serve in various offices of public trust and responsibility. He served several years as county commissioner from his township, and for a long period was incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, while his political allegiance was given to the Republican party, of whose cause he was an ardent advocate. His religious faith was that of the Church of God, while his widow is a devoted member of the United Brethren church. Jacob Trubey, the grandfather of the Doctor, was likewise a native of the old Keystone state, whither his father emigrated from Hesse-Cassel, Germany, his native province. Grandfather Trubey died on the old homestead farm, in Sugar Creek township, in the year 1834, having been one of the honored pioneers of the county, and one of the first to make permanent settlement in the township mentioned. It may further be said that his father came to America at the time of the Revolution, as a Hessian soldier. The mother of the subject still remains on the home farm, endeared to her through the memories and associations of the past, and she celebrated her seventy-first birthday anniversary on the 26th of February, 1903.

Dr. Trubey remained on the old farm until he had attained the age of sixteen years, his educational discipline up to this time having been received in the public schools. At the age noted he secured employment in various capacities, and through his earnings defrayed the expenses of his course of study in the high school at Beach City. In 1897, when twenty-one years of age, he was matriculated in the dental department of the Ohio Medical University, in the city of Columbus, Ohio, where he completed the prescribed three years' course, and was graduated as a member of the class of 1901, having defrayed the expenses of his technical education through his own efforts. The Doctor came forth from the university with a thorough knowledge of all branches of the dental profession, whose demands under the improved modern system are such as to require distinctive surgical skill and mechanical ability, and he began the practice of his profession in Beach City, where he remained six months, at the expiration of which, in order to secure a wider field for his efforts he came to Canton, where he formed a professional partnership with Harvey B. Carl, with whom he was associated in practice until July, 1902, when he purchased the interest of his partner and has since continued an individual practice, having tasteful and well equipped offices and laboratory, and having gained a support of distinctively representative order. In politics the Doctor exercises his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Protective Home Circle, while he is also a member of the alumni association of the Ohio Medical University, his alma mater.

On New Year's day of the year 1902, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Trubey to Miss Emma B. Caler, who was born in Beach City, this county, being a daughter of George and Elizabeth Caler, well known citizens of that place, Mr. Caler being a retired farmer.

GEORGE A. JUILLIARD, as the name implies, comes of staunch French lineage, and he is a native son of la belle France, where he was ushered into the world on the 2d of January, 1834, being a son of John N. and Anna (Burllette) Juilliard, both of whom were likewise natives of France, where they were reared and educated and where their marriage was solemnized. Of their seven children six are still living, namely: Julia A., who is the widow of Thomas Hall and resides in the city of Bucyrus, Ohio; Frederick, who is a resident of Santa Rosa, California; George A., subject of this sketch; Catherine is the wife of Eli Walker, of Louisville, this county; August D. is a banker in New York city; and Anna is the wife of David Cahill, of Bucyrus, Ohio. The father of our subject learned the trade of shoemaking in his native land, and in 1836, when our subject was but six years of age, he emigrated with his family to the United States, landing in New York city and forthwith coming to Stark county, where many of his countrymen had previously located, and shortly after his arrival he effected the purchase of a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of heavily timbered land in Washington township, and there established his home. He employed men to clear the land and continued personally to devote his attention to his trade, realizing more profit from this source than could he have done by individually grappling with the monarch trees of the forest, and he continued to work on the shoemaker's bench for about forty years.

In 1854 he disposed of his farm in Washington township and purchased the farm, in Paris township, now owned by his son George, subject of this review, and there he continued to make his home, honored by all who knew him, until his death, which occurred on the 7th of June, 1876, at which time he was about eighty years of age. His loved and devoted wife was summoned to the "land of the leal" March 30, 1874, at the age of eighty years, both having been active and consistent members of the Lutheran church, while in his political proclivities he was ever an ardent advocate of the principles of the Democratic party as expounded by Jefferson and Jackson.

George A. Juilliard was reared under the conditions and influences of pioneer life and early began to assist in the work of the old homestead farm in Washington township, while in the primitive log school house he conned his lessons when his services were not in requisition at home, and well he remembers the little "institution of learning," with its puncheon floor, slab benches and its yawning and cavernous fire-place, which the boys supplied with fuel which they chopped during the noontide recess. He remained on the home farm until he attained maturity and, being the only son left at home, much of the management of the place devolved upon him, and he thus continued in charge of the farm until the death of his father, whom he had accompanied on the removal from Washington township to Paris township. After the death of his father Mr. Juilliard purchased the interests of the other heirs and thus came into sole possession of the homestead, which he has ever since retained, and here he continued to be successfully engaged in diversified farming and stock-raising until the year 1900, having made excellent improvements on the place and developed it into one of the valuable farms of the township. In the year mentioned he leased his farm and removed to the village of Paris, where he has since lived a retired life. The attractions of the bachelor's life have proved sufficient to retain him in the ranks of the celibates, but he is fully appreciative of the charms of home life and enjoys entertaining his many friends with the genial cheer so characteristic of him in his intercourse with his fellow men. In politics Mr. Juilliard has ever been staunchly arrayed in the ranks of the Democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Lutheran church. Fraternally he is a valued frater of Juilliard Lodge No. 460, Free and Accepted Masons, in the village of Louisville, said lodge having been named in honor of his brother Charles L.

AMOS B. MASE was born in Bethlehem township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 13th of September, 1850, the son of Henry and Sarah A. (Kern) Mase, and is one of three children, the others being Elamina, the wife of William Staum, a resident of Portage county, this state, and Christina, who is the wife of Levi Lash and resides in Bethlehem township this county. Henry Mase, the subject's father, was born in 1821 in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, the son of Michael and Christina (Spangler) Mase. The latter couple came to Stark county, Ohio, in 1830, settling on a farm of eighty acres two miles west of Navarre. Four years later they sold this place and purchased one hundred and ninety-five acres in Bethlehem township, where they passed the remainder of their days. The subject's father was reared upon this latter place and on the 13th of January, 1847, was united in marriage with Miss Sarah A. Kern. Shortly after his marriage Mr. Mase purchased seventy-five acres of land adjoining his father's farm and there settled down to the pursuit of farming. He resided upon that place until 1859, when he purchased eighty-four acres comprising the farm upon which the subject now resides. Upon this place he resided until his death, though prior to that time he had bought another eighty-acre tract adjoining, making a total landed estate of one hundred and sixty-four acres. In politics he was a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, though he steadfastly refused all offices of a public nature. He was a man of steadfast qualities and unquestioned integrity and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. His religious affiliation was with the Reformed church and for many years he held various offices in the local society to which he belonged. His death occurred on the 3d of December, 1892. Sarah A. Kern, mother of the subject, was born in the township of Bethlehem, Stark county, Ohio, March 31, 1829, the daughter of John and Christina (Baughman) Kern, who came to Stark county in 1828 from their native locality, Cumberland county, Pennsylvania. Upon coming to this county they settled in Bethlehem township, two miles west of Navarre, where the subject's mother was reared to womanhood. She now makes her home with the subject. She is a woman of marked intelligence and strength of character and by her fine womanly qualities has won and retains the warm friendship of a host of acquaintances.

Amos B. Mase was reared to maturity under the parental roof and acquired his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. About 1872 he assumed charge of the home farm and for six years conducted the same as a renter. In 1878 he purchased the place and has since continued to make this his home. From 1872 until 1881 farming was his principle occupation, though in connection therewith he also was engaged largely in the stock business, raising, buying and feeding large numbers of stock and finding in his business a source of considerable revenue. In 1881 Mr. Mase entered the employ of the McCormick Harvesting Company in the capacity of local and traveling salesman, being so engaged until 1896 and meeting with very gratifying success. Since the latter date Mr. Mase has found it possible to live a comparatively retired life, putting the active management of the home farm into the hands of his son Henry.

In 1872 Mr. Mase was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Miss Esther Baker, a native of Tuscarawas county, this state, and the daughter of Henry and Catherine (Bender) Baker. Henry Baker is now a resident of Bethlehem township, this county, and is accounted one of the foremost citizens of the township. To the subject and his wife has been born one son, Harry Clayton. The latter married Mand B. Stuck and they are the parents of one child, Archie Hazen. In matters political the subject has always been a firm and uncompromising advocate of Democratic principles and has taken an active part in advancing the interests of the party in his township. The party has twice honored him with the nomination for sheriff of Stark county. In 1897, while not successful in the race, the county going Republican by three thousand majority, he ran ahead of his ticket about twelve hundred votes, being defeated by about one hundred and seventy-five votes, thus affording striking evidence of his popularity and the high regard in which he is held throughout the county. He was at one time elected to the office of township treasurer and efficiently filled the position for six years, to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He takes a deep and intelligent interest in educational matters and for the remarkable period of twenty-three years served as a member of the school board, doing much effective service in the interest of the schools of his township. Fraternally Mr. Mase is a member of Massillon Lodge No. 484, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Navarre Lodge No. 240, Knights of Pythias, John Hancock Council No. 76, Senior Order United American Mechanics, and the Grange. His religious affiliation is with the United Brethren church, of which he is a trustee. He takes a keen interest in the welfare of the church and in all matters looking to the betterment of the community, morally, educationally or materially. Financially he is, as already indicated, in independent circumstances, the fruit of his industry and sound business methods, and few men in his county stand as high in public esteem as does he.

DANIEL W. DEHOFF was born in Nimi-shillen township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 7th of October, 1842, being a son of Anthony and Barbara (Metz) DeHoff, of whose eleven children seven are living at the present time, namely: George, who is a resident of the city of Canton, this county; Daniel W., who figures as the subject of this review; Louisa, who is the wife of Frederick Shrefler, of Darke county, Ohio; John, who maintains his home in Indiana; Ellen, who is the wife of Isaac Shrefler, of Canton; Delilah, who is the wife of Joseph Holliland, of Paulding county, Ohio; and Moses, who resides in Darke county, this state. The father of the subject was likewise a native of the Buckeye state, having been born on the pioneer homestead, in Columbiana county, in the year 1816, a son of Henry DeHoff, who was born in the state of Maryland, whence he emigrated to Ohio within the first decade after its admission to statehood, becoming one of the early settlers in Columbiana county, where he passed the residue of his life. Anthony DeHoff was reared to maturity on the old homestead, and in his youth he learned the trade of tinner. As early as the year 1838 he came to the village of Louisville, Stark county, where he was shortly afterward married, and there he continued his residence one year subsequently to this event, after which he returned to his native county and settled near Georgetown, where he made his home for a number of years, continuing in the work of his trade. Later he came again to Stark county, where he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and thereafter he made several removals back and forth between the two counties, and at intervals worked at his trade, in which he was exceptionally proficient, having marked mechanical talent. Though his early educational advantages, owing to the exigencies of time and place, were necessarily limited in scope, he has been endowed with very alert and receptive mental powers, ready of assimilation and an omnivorous reader, and during the course of his long and useful life he rounded out his fund of information until it may be consistently said he was a man of fine education. For many years he acted as a local clergyman of the German Baptist church, and was known as a forceful and convincing speaker, his utterances ever bearing the impress of earnestness and sincerity. Although he was eighty-six years of age he was exceptionally well preserved, both physically and mentally, and was one to whose reminiscences and general conversation it was a pleasure to listen. He stood six feet and six inches in height, and his son Samuel, now deceased, was six feet and seven inches in height, of consistent physique, and is said to have been the tallest man in Stark county, where he died January 28, 1879, at the age of twenty-one years. Another son, Eli, who is likewise deceased, attained the same stature as his father. Anthony DeHoff had exceptional talent in the line of vocal music in his younger days, and even at his advanced age his voice was singularly strong and sympathetic in timbre. For the past fifteen years he resided in the home of his son Daniel, subject of this review, and he here received the utmost filial solicitude and veneration, while he held the affectionate regard of the people of the community. He gave his support to the Democratic party from the time of his youth, and was a zealous and devoted member of the German Baptist church. He died December 9, 1902. His wife was born in Nimishillen township, this county, in the year 1816, being a daughter of Abraham Metz, who was one of the earliest settlers in that township, where he took up a tract of government land, which he in a large measure reclaimed from the virgin forest, and there he passed the remainder of his life. His son, Dr. Abraham Metz, was a celebrated eye and ear specialist at the time of his death, which occurred at Massillon, this county, and was president of the Cleveland Medical College, being a man of national reputation in the medical world. The mother of the subject was summoned into eternal rest in 1894, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Daniel W. DeHoff, to whom this sketch is dedicated, secured his early educational training in the district schools, and when but fifteen years of age he began his independent career as a farm hand, while at the age of eighteen he turned his attention to the manufacture of pipe-staves, which were shipped to foreign countries. These staves were for wine casks, and were four feet long, four inches wide and one and a half inches thick, being manufactured from the finest oak timber. To this line of enterprise he devoted the major portion of his time for about four years, while in 1863 he entered the employ of the Aultman Company, manufacturers of agricultural machinery, in the city of Canton. On the 17th of December, 1864, he was united in marriage to Miss Harriet Van Voorhis, who was born in Osnaburg township, this county, being a daughter of Peter Van Voorhis, an honored pioneer of the county, concerning whom more specific mention is made in the personal sketch of his son, Abraham, appearing on another page of this work. Shortly after his marriage Mr. DeHoff took up his residence on a rented farm in Osnaburg township, and to the cultivation of the same he devoted his attention for the ensuing two years. In 1867 he made his initial purchase of land, securing a tract of twenty acres, in the same township, a property now owned by David Miller. There he resided five years and then sold the place and purchased forty acres a short distance to the south of his original purchase, and nine years later he disposed of this property and bought eighty acres of his present fine homestead, which is located on section 21, Osnaburg township, and which has continuously been his home and field of operations to the time of this writing. In 1892 he purchased an adjoining tract of twenty acres, so that his homestead now comprises one hundred acres. On the place he has made the best of permanent improvements, including the erection of a commodious and substantial residence of modern architectural design and accessories, and also a fine barn, sixty-four by thirty-six feet in dimensions.

At the time of the war of the Rebellion Mr. DeHoff enlisted in the home guard at the time of Morgan's famous raid through Ohio, in 1863, and when, in the following year, the President issued a call for volunteers for the term of one hundred days, he enlisted as a private in Company G, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he remained in service until the expiration of his term, the command being assigned to detached duty, in the guarding of railway lines, supplies, etc. Mr. DeHoff is a member of McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, in the city of Canton. In politics he accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and he and his wife are consistent and valued members of the Christian church. To them have been born five children, namely: Barbara E., who is the wife of William Deckert, of Canton township; William H., who died July 9, 1899, at the age of thirty-two years; Abraham L., a successful farmer of Canton township; Charles W., who is engaged in farming in Osnaburg township; and Albert, who remains at the parental home.

WILLIAM L. DAY was born in the family homestead, in North Market street, Canton, on the 13th of August, 1876, the son of Judge William R. Day, and after securing his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of his native city he continued his studies in Williston Seminary, at Easthampton, Massachusetts, where he remained until 1896, when he was matriculated in the law department of the State University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated in June, 1900, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws, being admitted to the bar in the same month, and within the following month he became a member of the firm of Lynch, Day & Day and has since been engaged in the work of his profession in Canton. He has shown a determination to win his legal laurels by personal effort and to not rely upon the prestige of the honored name which he bears. He has to do with much important litigation and is known to be well grounded in the science of jurisprudence and to have facility in its application. In politics Mr. Day pins his faith securely to the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes a deep interest. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in his home city, where he enjoys marked popularity in both business and social circles. Mr. Day was married, September 10, 1902, to Estelle McKay, of Cairo, Michigan.

JOHN H. SPONSELLER was born on the homestead farm, in section 25, Canton township, this county, on the 27th of June, 1851, being a son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Stoner) Sponseller. Abraham Sponseller was likewise a native of Stark county, having been born in the same township as his son, on the 8th of October, 1820, and being a son of John and Elizabeth (Herbster) Sponseller, the former of whom was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, and the latter in the state of Maryland. The grandfather of the subject was born and reared in Adams county, Pennsylvania, whence as a young man he emigrated to the wilds of Stark county, Ohio, making his advent in this section in about 1816, and taking up a tract of heavily timbered land in Canton township, reclaiming the same to cultivation and developing a good farm, on which he lived the balance of his life. The property has consecutively remained in the possession of the family, and is now owned and occupied by his youngest son, David Sponseller. The farm is located on the Waynesburg road and on the same is what is known as the Sponseller school house, the site of which was donated by John Sponseller, grandfather of the subject. It has been utilized for the purpose ever since, so that the school is one of the landmarks of the section, and took its name from the donor. On said farm John Sponseller and his noble and devoted wife passed the residue of their lives, honored and esteemed by all who knew them. He died at the age of eighty-four years, and his wife had attained the venerable age of nearly ninety-two years when she was summoned into the life eternal. They were consistent members of the Lutheran church. Their eight children were as follows: Frederick, deceased; Mary Sponseller Houtz, deceased; Abraham, deceased; John, deceased; Catharine Sponseller Sellers, deceased; Julia Sponseller Zeller, deceased; Henry, deceased; David, the only one living.

Abraham Sponseller, father of the subject, grew up under the conditions and scenes of the pioneer epoch, contributing to the work of the homestead farm and securing his early educational training in the district schools of the day, while later he supplemented this by a course of study in the Canton schools, gaining, through this means and his private reading and study, what might be considered a liberal education. He was a successful teacher for several years, and was a man of excellent intellectual powers and unbending integrity of character. After his marriage he located on the farm on which the subject was born, and devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits, being successful in his efforts and being known as one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of his native county. He died on his homestead farm on the 27th of August, 1899, at the age of nearly seventy-nine years, his wife having passed away on the 7th of June, 1897, at the age of seventy-three years. He was a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Lutheran church, of which his wife likewise was a member. Concerning their children we enter the following brief record: John H. is the immediate subject of this sketch; George W. resides at New Berlin, this county, where he is engaged in mercantile pursuits; Samuel W. is a prosperous farmer of Plain township; William E. resides in Canton, where he is engaged as a machinist; Mary A. is the wife of Charles Lehr, of this city; David W. is engaged in farming in Canton township, this county; Lucy is the wife of Douglas W. Stahl, of this city; and Augustus is engaged in farming in Perry township.

John H. Sponseller was reared on the old homestead, and after availing himself of such advantages as were afforded in the district school he continued his studies in the public schools of Canton, completing a course of study in the high school, after which he was matriculated in Alliance College, a Presbyterian institution at Alliance, this county, being there a student for a period of three years, and effectively rounding out his more purely literary education. At the age of nineteen years he put his scholastic attainments to the practical test by engaging in teaching, and for the following decade he was numbered among the popular and successful pedagogues of the county, having taught in various schools. Thereafter he served five years as deputy probate judge, during the regime of Judge Seraphim Meyer, and within this period he devoted assiduous attention to the specific reading of the law under the preceptorship of John C. Welty, a prominent member of the bar of Canton, and in 1887, upon examination before the supreme court of Ohio, he was duly admitted to the bar of the state. He thereafter served three years as deputy county auditor under Patrick L. Manly and one year during the regime of his successor, Louis A. Loichot. In 1892 Mr. Sponseller established himself in the general practice of his profession in Canton, where he has ever since continued, and no indefinite success has attended his efforts, since his ability and devotion to his profession soon gained him recognition, while his life acquaintanceship in his native county has likewise proved an element in his success, and he has secured a representative clientele and had to do with much important litigation, being known as an able advocate, ever giving careful preparation to his causes and also being a safe and duly conservative counsel.

In politics Mr. Sponseller has given his allegiance unequivocally to the Democratic party from the time of attaining his majority, having cast his first presidential vote in support of Horace Greeley, while he has taken a deep interest in the party cause, in which he has been more or less active in a local way. When but twenty-one years of age he was elected township assessor of Canton township and he served as such for three terms. Fraternally he is numbered among the members of the Knights of the Maccabees, and his religious views are in harmony with the tenets of the Reformed church, in which he was reared, his wife being a devoted and active member of Trinity church, of this denomination.

On the 10th of October, 1872, Mr. Sponseller was united in marriage to Miss Emma

J. Smith, who was born in Perry township, this county, being a daughter of Joseph and Nancy (Burger) Smith, her father being an influential farmer of that section of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Sponseller have two children, namely: Cennora E., who is the wife of Horace E. Deuble, of Canton; and Niles A., who was admitted to the bar of the state in June, 1902, and is now engaged in the practice of his profession in Canton. He is the junior member of the law firm of Sponseller & Sponseller. Niles A. Sponseller was married, on June 21, 1903, to Kathryn A. McKeon, of Cleveland, Ohio.

SAMUEL GREGORY is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Carroll county on the 29th of June, 1844, one of eight children born to James and Jane (Moody) Gregory. The names of the children who survive are as follows: Mary is the wife of James A. George, of Carrollton, Ohio; Agnes is the wife of William George, of Colorado Springs, Colorado; Eliza is the wife of H. H. Denny, of Elbert, Colorado; Emma is the wife of Frank Long, of Kiowa, Colorado; Peary is the wife of Leonard Orrin, of Carrollton; and the subject. James Gregory was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, in 1810, and when a boy was brought by his parents to Stark county, Ohio, the family locating in Canton township. This was early in the '20s, at which time the city of Canton was but a small, unpretentious hamlet. James Gregory was but a boy when his father died, and he was reared to manhood by a Mr. Baestle. At an early age he became apprenticed to the trade of cabinetmaking, at which he worked for some years in Canton, with George Raunk. Subsequently he removed to Carroll county, this state, where he was married, and where he remained during the rest of his active years. In advanced age he went to reside with a daughter in Minerva, and died there, at the age of eighty-five years, on February 26, 1898. He was a well known man and was noted as a fifer, being probably the most skillful performer upon that instrument in the United States. His services as a fifer were in great demand and he was present at all the reunions and musters in his section of the state, and sometimes even at greater distances. He carried on the business of undertaking for some years in connection with his cabinetmaking and made many coffins for use in his locality. In politics he was a staunch Republican, taking a keen interest in the success of his party, while in religion he was allied with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was long a faithful and consistent member. Because of his faithful and consistent life he won and retained the highest regard and esteem of all who knew him.

Samuel Gregory remained under the parental roof until his twentieth year, and early became inured to hard toil. He is indebted to the common schools of his neighborhood for his mental discipline. Upon attaining mature years he learned the trade of carpenter and was employed at that occupation for some time. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he took a keen and anxious interest in the trend of events in the Southland. At length, feeling that his services were needed in the effort to suppress the insurrection, he enlisted, on the 16th of February, 1864, in the Twenty-sixth Ohio Independent Battery, under command of Capt. T. D. Yost, the term of his enlistment being for three years, or during the war. The battery was assigned to duty with the Southwestern army and saw much hazardous service. The subject bore his full share of the hardships and privations incident to a soldier's life and served his country faithfully until the close of hostilities, receiving his final discharge at Columbus, Ohio, September 5, 1865. After his discharge from the army

Mr. Gregory returned home and resumed work with his father at the carpenter business. In 1868 he removed to Canton, and for three years was in the employ of A. J. Kintz. Upon quitting the latter gentleman's employ he entered the shops of the Aultman Company, remaining there for eleven years. His position here was a very pleasant one, his employers being exceptionally fair in their treatment of him. In 1882 Mr. Gregory resigned his position with the Aultman Company and purchased a farm in Osnaburg township, near Mapleton, to which he removed. He applied himself with diligence to the work of cultivating this place and in a few years became known as one of the progressive and enterprising agriculturists of the township. In 1895 Mr. Gregory suffered the loss of his wife, and shortly thereafter removed to Mapleton and occupied the handsome and commodious residence in which he now resides. Because of his former diligence, wise judgment and economy, he is now enabled to live free from the cares and worries of an active life and in the enjoyment of the ease which is the rightful heritage of an honest and industrious man.

On the 5th of September, 1866, Mr. Gregory was united in marriage with Miss Mary Gibler, a native of Carroll county and the daughter of Daniel Gibler. To this union were born two children,—Elva E., the wife of George Shott, of Canton, and Rachel, the wife of Charles Criswell, also of Canton. As before stated, Mrs. Gregory died in 1895, and in January, 1897, Mr. Gregory married Miss Cordelia H. Tressler, of Waynesburg. In politics the subject is a stanch Republican and takes a keen interest in the success of his party, though possessing no personal ambition to hold office. His religious principles are those embodied in the creed of the Christian (or Disciples) church, and in his daily life he endeavors to exemplify the teachings of the man of Nazareth. The qualities which have made him one of the prominent and successful citizens of Stark county have also brought him the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens. After the election of McKinley Mr. Gregory was tendered a very lucrative office, which he declined, Mr. McKinley saying he could have anything in his gift that he felt competent to fill.

JAMES A. ROBINSON was born in the village of Washington, on the national turnpike, in Guernsey county, Ohio, on the 12th of October, 1860, and there he attended school until he had attained the age of thirteen years, when he went to Bellaire, Belmont county, where he learned the trades of painting and paper-hanging, serving an apprenticeship of four years, during the summer seasons, while during the winter months he continued his studies in the public schools. Thereafter he passed six years in the work of his trades, at various points in the state, and on the 3d of September, 1883, at Martin's Ferry, Belmont county, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Keller, who was born in that place, being a daughter of Henry Keller, and since his marriage he has lived, for varying intervals in Byesville, Bellaire, Barnesville and Columbus, Ohio, and also in Wheeling, West Virginia. In the city of Columbus he was engaged in business on his own responsibility for a period of four years, and in May, 1896, he came to Canton, where he continued to follow his trade until the 1st of November, 1902, when he purchased a half interest in the Craftsman, a paper devoted entirely to the interests of union labor. He has been an active worker in the labor cause for the past twenty-seven years, maintaining a duly conservative attitude and being at all times careful and discriminating in his counsels. When but fifteen years of age he was made a member of the Knights of Labor, at Bellaire, Ohio, and even as a boy he manifested a lively interest in the furthering of the interests of the laboring man, having a supreme respect for the dignity of honest toil and endeavor, in whatever capacity. He has been delegate to various labor conventions, and since September, 1902, he has rendered efficient service in the office of district organizer for the American Federation of Labor, while in January, 1902, he was elected president of the Central Labor Union of Canton, where his interposition met with so appreciative endorsement that he was chosen as his own successor at the election in January of the present year. He was for two terms president of the local union of painters and paperhangers in Canton, of which he is at the present time treasurer, and his various official duties, together with his work in connection with the Craftsman, an ably edited and managed publication, issued weekly from its office in Canton, now place such demands upon his time and attention that he has practically abandoned the active work of his trade. In politics Mr. Robinson has ever given a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for James A. Garfield. In 1903 Mr. Robinson was running for the nomination for mayor of the city of Canton on the Republican ticket, and was third in a field of five candidates. He was reared in the faith of the Presbyterian church, and fraternally is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. He and his wife are the parents of four interesting children,—Harry A., Allen C., Flora May and James A., Jr. Mr. Robinson is a man of fine intellectuality, being an omnivorous reader and a close student of the questions and issues of the hour, so that his opinions are always based on careful analysis and fortified by mature judgment.

Alexander Robinson, father of the subject, was born in Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio, in 1825, being a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of that section, where he was reared to maturity, becoming a most skillful artisan in the line of wood manufacturing and having been long engaged in the cabinetmaking and undertaking business. He secured his educational discipline in the primitive log-cabin school house of the pioneer epoch, the same being equipped with puncheon floor and rudely constructed benches of slabs, but his was a mentality that was not circumscribed by the curriculum of school or college, and through personal application he became an excellent mathematician and also gained a good knowledge of the classical languages. Soon after the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he tendered his services in defense of the Union, becoming a corporal in Company F, Thirtieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He veteranized in 1863, and was at home on a furlough at the time when Morgan made his memorable raid through Ohio and Indiana, and he aided in repelling the invasion and also in burying the dead Confederate soldiers. In this engagement he received a wound in the right side of the face, and from the same resulted a state of chronic ulceration, from the effects of which he died, in 1881, having suffered much as a result of the injury and its sequelae. He was a stanch Republican from the time of the organization of the party, and served for eighteen consecutive years in the office of justice of the peace, while such was his integrity and honor in all the relations of life that he ever commanded the unqualified esteem of all who knew him. He was master of the local lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons at Washington until its organization lapsed, and was for many years a member of the school board, while he was an elder in the Presbyterian church. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Jenkins, was likewise a native of Guernsey county, where she was born in the year 1833, being a daughter of James Jenkins, who emigrated to the county from Virginia in the early pioneer days. The mother of the subject died in 1897, there having been nine children in the family, of whom six are yet living. William Robinson, the paternal grandfather of the subject, was born in Scotland, and his wife on the neighboring island of Guernsey. He came to America as a young man, being a cabinetmaker by trade, and he was one of the pioneers in this line of Guernsey county, where he also conducted an undertaking business, his son Alexander having learned the business under his direction.

WILLIAM STEELE, M. D., is a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of the county and was born on the old homestead farm, in Tuscarawas township, on the 10th of May, 1858, being a son of John L. and Margaret M. (Christman) Steele. John L. Steele was born in this county, on the 21st of March, 1826, being a son of James and Margaret (Latimer) Steele, who were natives of Pennsylvania, whence they came to Stark county in the early days of its settlement. The father of Margaret Latimer was Robert Latimer, who was one of the first to make a permanent settlement in Osnaburg township, while Archibald Steele, father of James and the first representative of the family in America, as well as in Stark county, was a native of the north of Ireland, whence he emigrated to the United States about 1790. He was of stanch Scottish lineage, being a descendant of Robert Steele, who was driven from his native land for political reasons, and, like many another of his countrymen, took up his abode in the north of Ireland. James Steele, the grandfather of the Doctor, was a man of sterling character and wielded much influence in the pioneer community in the early day, while for a number of years he was incumbent of the office of justice of the peace. He died on the old homestead, in Tuscarawas township, as did also his devoted wife, who had been a true helpmeet to him during the days when he was subduing the wilderness and developing what has become one of the finest farms in this section of the Buckeye state, the homestead now being owned by the father of the subject of this sketch. John L. Steele was reared to manhood on his present farm and received such educational advantages as were afforded in the primitive log school house, with its puncheon floors and slab benches, while he early began to contribute his quota toward the reclamation and cultivation of the home farm. His marriage to Margaret M. Christman was solemnized on the 9th of January, 1852, she being a native of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Henry and Susan (Bash) Christman. Of this union have been born three children, namely: Rev. James H., who is an able clergyman of the Reformed church; William, who is the immediate subject of this review; and Ida, who is the wife of John Erb. John L. Steele has been a stanch adherent of the Republican party from the time of its organization and has served as treasurer of his township and also in other local offices. He and his estimable wife are among the most honored pioneer residents of Tuscarawas township and both are consistent members of the Reformed church.

Dr. Steele was reared on the old homestead farm, and received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools, after which, at the age of twenty years, he was matriculated in Heidelberg College, at Tiffin, Seneca county, Ohio, where he continued his studies, in the scientific course, for three years, withdrawing from the institution in his junior year, in order to enter upon the specific work of preparing himself for the noble profession which he had determined to adopt as his vocation in life. In the autumn of 1880 he entered the Cleveland Medical College, in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, and there completed the thorough technical course prescribed, and was graduated in the spring of 1883, receiving his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine and being ably fortified for the practical work of his profession. Within the same spring he located in the village of Navarre, in his native county, where he has since been established in the active practice of his profession. He has long since left the ranks of the many to stand among the successful few, his ability and his devotion to his profession gaining him this relative precedence. He has studied and read broadly and with marked discrimination, carrying his investigation into every field of thought bearing upon his profession, and adopting those methods and improvements which his experience and judgment indicated to him as being of practical valuation in connection with his work. Though ever heeding the duties of citizenship, he has never manifested political ambition in a personal sense, though he gives unqualified endorsement and support to the principles and policies of the Republican party. His religious views are those of the Reformed church, in whose faith he was reared.

In 1882 Dr. Steele was united in marriage to Miss Mary McEwen, of Massillon, this county, and they are the parents of two daughters,—Edith and Laura, both of whom remain at the parental home.

DAVID MOTTS was born on a farm in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 28th of July, 1859, being a son of Michael and Mary (Fahl) Motts, who still reside in Osnaburg township, where they hold high rank among the honored pioneers of the county. Of the father of the subject individual mention is made on other pages of this work.

David Motts was reared on the parental farmstead on which he was born, and his educational privileges in his youth were such as were afforded by the public schools of the locality and period. Upon attaining his legal majority he initiated his independent career by assuming the management of the home farm, which he operated on shares for about three and one-half years, at the expiration of which he became associated with his brother Eli in the purchase of the Paris grist mills, which had previously been owned by their honored father, and under the title of Motts Brothers the firm continued the enterprise until the spring of 1891, when our subject purchased his brother's interest in the mills and assumed the sole ownership. In 1899 he admitted to partnership his only son, Curtis A., and simultaneously the firm name of D. Motts & Son was adopted and operations have since continued under these auspices. Soon after Mr. Motts and his brother purchased the property from their father they tore out the old burrs with which the mill had been equipped and then installed a full roller system and other modern accessories of the most improved design, thus making the equipment of the highest standard and enabling them to turn out products of superior excellence and to greatly expand the scope and importance of the enterprise, which has by this means, as coupled with correct business methods, energy and progressive policies, been made a profitable venture and an industry which is greatly appreciated in the community. The daily capacity of the mill is in the output of sixty barrels of flour, and it is operated to this full capacity, while its products not only command an appreciative patronage throughout the county but are also shipped into other portions of the state, as well as into contiguous states. Mr. Motts is an ambitious, far-sighted business man and public-spirited citizen, and his efforts have not fallen short of popular appreciation, while he has an able and energetic coadjutor in his son, who is actively concerned in the management of this important enterprise. In politics Mr. Motts has invariably exercised his franchise in support of the principles of the Democratic party, of whose policies he is a staunch advocate, and he and his wife are valued and zealous members of the Reformed church in Paris, of which he has served as deacon for the past fifteen years.

On the 28th of March, 1880, Mr. Motts was united in marriage to Miss Amelia A. Otto, who likewise was born in Osnaburg township, this county, her father having been one of the honored pioneer farmers of said township, while he is now living retired, in the city of Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Motts have two children,—Curtis A., who is associated with his father in business, and Myrta N., who is a student in the public schools.

FRED ALBRECHT.—The Albrecht family had its origin in Germany and for generations beyond the memory of man its antecedents lived in a part of Bavaria bordering on the river Rhine. Nicholas Albrecht, the subject's grandfather, was born at Seele, Bavaria, and there married Christina Engel, whose ancestors were also among the old families of that kingdom. By occupation Nicholas was a farmer, and spent all his life in his native land, dying near the place of his birth a number of years ago, and his faithful companion also departed this life and lies buried in the same locality. Of their seven children, six sons and one daughter, all but one of the former, who died in the old country, came to the United States and settled in Stark county, Ohio, where they became well and favorably known. Among these sons was one by the name of John, whose birth occurred in Bavaria in 1820, and whose arrival in Stark county was some time in the year 1843. John Albrecht came to America poor in purse, and for some time after reaching his new home in Ohio supported himself by working as a common farm laborer, receiving for his services the sum of fifty cents per day. He was a man of great industry and by prudence and thrift succeeded after a few years in getting a substantial start, judiciously investing his earnings in real estate, which in due time increased greatly in value. As the years went by he added to his possessions until he finally became one of the largest land owners in the county, his estate in the country at the time of his death amounting to something over seventy-five thousand dollars, in addition to which he also owned considerable valuable property in the city of Massillon. For a number of years he was engaged in merchandising in partnership with his brother, and it was from this business that he laid the foundation of his subsequent career as a land owner and successful agriculturist. In his business affairs he exercised great prudence and forethought, exerted considerable influence in financial circles and so deported himself as to win and retain the confidence of those with whom he had dealings, enjoying worthy prestige as a man and citizen. In politics he was a Republican, and while taking an active interest in the success of his party, never manifested any desire for office or public distinction. Margaret Zimmerman, wife of John Albrecht, was born in Bavaria in 1824 and became the mother of eleven children, seven of whom are living at the present time; she is now a hale, well preserved woman of seventy-eight, and a widow, her husband having died on the 9th day of July, 1893, when seventy-three years old.

Fred Albrecht, the first child of John and Margaret Albrecht, was born in Perry township, Stark county, Ohio, June 24, 1845. He spent his childhood and early youth in Massillon, receiving his education in the city schools, and when old enough to work was sent to the farm, where he grew up a strong, well favored young man, with a proper appreciation of life and its responsibilities. From his father he received a substantial start and to this he added from time to time until he became the possessor of a fine landed property in Tuscarawas township, where he has since resided, as one of the county's leading agriculturists. In addition to his home place and an interest in his father's estate, he recently divided one hundred and two acres of fine land among his children, besides providing liberally for their welfare in other respects when they set up domestic establishments of their own.

Mr. Albrecht was married, April 2, 1870, to Miss Margaret Corman, of Massillon, who has borne him children as follows: Henry, Amelia, Annie, Emma and Flora. In all matters of business the subject has been heartily seconded by his good wife, who has proven herself a true and faithful helpmeet, contributing much to his success and by her wise and judicious counsel prompting him to noble deeds and great activities in behalf of his fellow men. None stand higher in the esteem of the public than this worthy couple, and wherever known their names are synonymous with what is good and upright in manhood and womanhood. Politically Mr. Albrecht supports the Republican party, and religiously belongs, with his wife, to the Evangelical church of Massillon.

REV. CLEMENT H. TREIBER, son of Maximilian and Amelia (Helmer) Treiber, is a native of Ohio, having been born in the city of Cleveland, on the 20th of July, 1856. His father was born in the historic old city of Stuttgart, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, in the year 1836, and his mother was born in Kaiserlautern, kingdom of Bavaria.

By occupation Maximilian Treiber was a stone cutter and stone mason, having learned this dual trade in his native land, although the greater part of his active business life was passed in the United States, whither he came and located in Cleveland, where he continued to follow his chosen vocation until within a short time prior to his death, which occurred in April, 1870, while his widow resides at Berea, Ohio, near Cleveland. Their marriage was solemnized in Cleveland, and of the same were born children as follows: Joseph, who was drowned at the age of twelve years; Clement H., who is the subject of this review; Albert, who died at the age of nine years; Rudolph, who is agent for the live-stock exchange of Kansas City, Missouri; Otto, who is secretary of the Van Cleve Glass Company, of Cleveland; Rosa, living in Cleveland; and Theodore, who holds an important position with a business house in Chicago.

Reverting to the life of Maximilian Treiber, father of the subject of this sketch, it is learned that for a number of years he followed marble cutting, but that later he became a contractor for various kinds of stone work, in which capacity he erected some of the finest church edifices in Cleveland, as well as a number of the city's largest and most pretentious public buildings. He was a master of his calling, was a man of utmost integrity and as a citizen stood high in the estimation of the people of his adopted city. He and his wife became communicants first of St. Mary's of the Flats, next of St. Peter's and next of St. Joseph's, the change in church being the result of new parishes and boundary lines being formed.

Father Clement H. Treiber passed his childhood and youth in his native city, receiving from his worthy parents instruction in moral and religious things, while this gracious discipline had a decided influence in moulding his character and shaping his future course in life. He was baptized by Very Rev. John H. Luhr, pastor of St. Peter's church, in Cleveland, and when of sufficient age he entered the parochial school of this church, attending the same until 1862. Then St. Joseph's parish, by a change of parochial boundaries, claimed him as a member, in consequence of which he attended its church and school thereafter until 1869, when he began his classical studies under the direction of the Franciscan fathers at Teutopolis, Illinois. He was graduated in the college at that place in June, 1875, and in the following September became a student in St. Mary's Theological Seminary, at Cleveland, where he completed a five-year course in philosophy and theology, after which he was ordained to the priesthood, in St. John's cathedral, by Bishop Gilmour, the ceremony taking place on the 4th of July, 1880. After a fortnight's vacation Father Treiber was assigned to the charge of the missions at Mineral Ridge, East Palestine, Salem, Canfield and Austintown, in northeastern Ohio, in all of which he soon endeared himself to his parishioners, by earnest work and kindly deeds. During the first year of his pastorate he established the houses of worship, and in 1881 effected the erection of the East Palestine church and St. Paul's church, at Salem. He ministered to the people of these parishes for seven years, during which time the churches were much strengthened numerically and the cause of religion given an impetus which had a decided influence for good in the several communities.

Father Treiber's next charge was St. Joseph's church, at Crestline, Ohio, to which point he was transferred in June, 1887. Some idea of the magnitude of his work in this parish may be gleaned from the statement that within the year following he built a beautiful temple of worship, at a cost of twenty-three thousand dollars, while the church was free from debt save to the comparatively nominal amount of twenty-five hundred dollars. After ministering to this parish with great acceptability until September, 1899, he was then commissioned by Bishop Horstmann to organize the new parish of the Immaculate Conception, in Canton, to which undertaking he at once addressed himself most manfully and with great enthusiasm. This congregation began its career, with Father Treiber as its organizer and pastor, on the 8th day of October, 1899, at which time were formulated well defined plans for the future work. Within the first three months there was purchased a large plat of ground, favorably located in the southern part of the city, and as soon as practicable thereafter a beautiful building, known as the chapel school of the Immaculate Conception, was erected and opened, for the twofold purpose of worship and education. The structure, which is erected of brick with stone trimmings, and which represents an expenditure of twenty-one thousand seven hundred dollars, is of beautiful design, is commodious and conveniently arranged, so as to meet the requirements of the congregation for some time to come, although the numerical growth of the church will in no far distant future necessitate an edifice of enlarged proportions. During his pastorate of two years and nine months in the church of the Immaculate Conception he raised twenty-seven thousand dollars, and the indebtedness at the end of his ministry was but eleven thousand dollars, a fact which is significant as showing his earnest labors and the devoted co-operation accorded by people of the parish. Within the period mentioned he established the parochial school, which was placed in charge of four sisters of St. Joseph, from Cleveland, who still remain as teachers, and he also arranged a home for three sisters and one for the priest, leaving the work in admirable condition for the further labors of his successor. Father Treiber resigned the work of this parish to enter upon a new and equally strenuous field of labor. The bishop of the diocese requested that he accept the charge of organizing a new parish in the west end of the city, under the auspices and patronage of St. Joseph. On the 15th of June, 1902, he initiated the services of the new church in Benskin's hall, which was thus utilized until the 8th of March, 1903, when the basement of the new church was made ready for occupancy, and the edifice was dedicated June 21, 1903. In August, 1902, Father Treiber purchased the parish lots, one hundred and fifty by five hundred and fifty feet in dimension, at a cost of ten thousand dollars, the same being attractively located at the corner of West Tuscarawas street and Columbus avenue. The church, when completed, represents an expenditure of thirty thousand dollars, and fronts on Bedford avenue, while the priest's residence, a fine building, with facade facing Tuscarawas street, is on Columbus avenue. The parochial school was opened September 8, 1903, with an attendance of one hundred and twenty-five pupils, in charge of three Sisters of St. Joseph of Cleveland. The church now has a membership of one hundred and fifty families, and its spiritual and temporal affairs are in most prosperous and gratifying order.

Of the forty-seven years of his life Father Treiber has devoted twenty-three to the priesthood of the holy Roman Catholic church, and within this period he has gained the highest reputation for energy, business ability and zeal in good works. He is still as vigorous and resourceful as when he inaugurated his missionary labors, in 1880, and is really better prepared than ever before to carry forward the great work to which he has consecrated his life and labors. There are devolving upon him at the present time many temporal duties and responsibilities in addition to his spiritual and pastoral obligations, but he holds all as in the direct line of duty and cheerfully proceeds with the work, conscious that all is for the advancement of religion and the uplifting of his people. It is needless to assert in this connection that Father Treiber is a man whose varied talents fit him for great usefulness in his sacred calling. Father Treiber has seemingly realized at every point of progress the maximum potential for accomplishment at that point. Broad-minded and charitable, erudite and devout, he well deserves the high regard thus accorded, as his efforts have been fruitful of good results in winning many souls to the higher life. In the spiritual sphere of his labors Father Treiber is zealous, earnest, serious and exact, setting forth the living word of the lowly Nazarene with a due sense of the burden of responsibility resting upon him in his sacerdotal office, while naught of materialism is ever permitted to encroach upon or in any way interfere with that to which all else is secondary and tributary,—religion pure and undefiled. In the public service of the church he is collected, graceful and precise, using his musical talent to impress the people with the beauty and solemnity of its office and ceremonial.

A. F. BLANTZ is a native of Stark county, Ohio, but traces his family history to Germany, in which country his parents, Andrew and F—— (Kreser) Blantz, were born and reared.

Andrew Blantz, a brick and stone mason by trade, came to America a number of years ago and settled in Stark county, Ohio, where he followed his chosen calling the rest of his life, dying at his home in the town of West Brookfield, Tuscarawas township, in 1901, aged seventy-eight years; his widow survives him, and still lives in the above village, having reached the age of seventy-six. Mr. Blantz was a man of great industry, an efficient workman and his standing as a citizen was such as to win the esteem of the people among whom he lived. In politics he was a Democrat, in religion a Catholic, in which church his wife was also reared. Mr. and Mrs. Blantz were the parents of nine children, all but two living.

A. F. Blantz was born in West Brookfield, Tuscarawas township, July 4, 1867, and spent his childhood and early youth in that town, securing his educational training in the public schools. His father owning a farm not far from the village, young Blantz was put to work thereon as soon as old enough to be of practical service, and in this way learned the lessons of industry and thrift which have marked his career in all of his subsequent undertakings. He continued a tiller of the soil until about the year 1885, when he abandoned agriculture and became a mining engineer, in which capacity he has since been actively engaged in the mines of Stark county, meeting with encouraging success not only as a master of his calling, but also in the matter of adding to his material possessions.

In addition to a fine residence and other valuable property in West Brookfield, Mr. Blantz owns an interest in the old family homestead in Tuscarawas township and is well situated so far as temporal wealth is concerned. He has displayed excellent business ability in his transactions, all obligations, whether written or verbal, being alike sacred to him, and by and honorable and signally useful life he has fully merited the esteem with which he is regarded in the community. In politics he has always been a Democrat, but while deeply interested in the success of his party, has avoided official position, having no aspiration in that direction.

On June 9, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Blantz and Miss Sophia Garver, the latter born in the town of West Brookfield, Stark county, March 15, 1869. Mrs. Blantz is the daughter of Christian and Jennie (Maulter) Garver, natives of Germany, who came to Stark county about the year 1855 and settled at West Brookfield, where the father's death occurred in 1888, at the age of sixty-three years and eight months; Mrs. Garver, who is the mother of eight children, all living, survives her husband, and is still a resident of the above town, where she is highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Mr. and Mrs. Blantz have one child, a daughter by the name of Bridget S., whose birth occurred on the 29th of June, 1901. In religion the subject and wife are Catholics, and as such have been influential in promoting the success of the local church to which they belong. They are respected by their neighbors and thus far their lives have been worthy and consistent, with nothing connected therewith which does not reflect credit upon them.

LOUIS BESSLER.—Though an American by birth, Louis Bessler is German in nationality, his parents, Bartholomew and Keninunda (Brucher) Bessler, being natives of the kingdom of Bavaria. In his native country Batholomew Bessler was an iron worker, having been especially skilled as a maker of fine-edged tools, by reason of which he earned the appellation of "Knifsmith." About the year 1852 he came to America and in looking for a favorable location settled in Massillon, where he worked for some time at blacksmithing. After spending three years in the above city he removed to West Brookfield, where he opened a shop and soon secured a large and lucrative patronage, his efficiency as a mechanic winning him much more than local repute. He spent the rest of his life in this town, earned the reputation of an honorable, industrious man and praiseworthy citizen, and died March 2, 1892, at the age of seventy-three. Mrs. Bessler survived her husband, and is still living, having reached her eighty-fourth year, a remarkably well preserved woman for her age. Mr. and Mrs. Bessler reared a family of six children, all living, namely: Sophia, Thomas, Louis, Daniel, Mary and Frederika.

Louis Bessler was born in West Brookfield, Stark county, Ohio, August 27, 1859, and spent his childhood and youthful years under the parental roof, meantime enjoying such educational advantages as the town schools afforded. When old enough to rely upon his own efforts he began working as a miner, first in the coal fields of Stark county and later turned his attention to something which he considered more remunerative in a region of country far remote from his native place. Actuated by a laudable ambition to acquire, if not a fortune, at least a competence, young Bessler, about 1884, went to California where he spent five succeeding years in quest of gold, visiting a number of mines in that state and experiencing the vicissitudes which usually attend the seekers of wealth under conditions similar to his own. At the expiration of the above period he returned to Stark county and resumed coal mining, working mostly for other parties, but at times operating upon his own responsibility. Mr. Bessler continued delving in the earth until he spent about twenty years as a miner, the meanwhile providing liberally for his own comfort besides laying aside a surplus with the object in view of ultimately engaging in some other line of business. In 1890 he started a meat market in West Brookfield and to this he devoted his attention for about seven years, disposing of his establishment in 1897 for the purpose of opening a sample room. The latter enterprise proved quite a financial success and he has conducted a very quiet and orderly place to the present time, realizing such profits from the business as to make him one of the well-to-do men of the town.

Mr. Bessler is wide-awake, shrewd and in every respect honorable in his business transactions and his reputation as an intelligent, enterprising man of affairs has won him the confidence and regard of the community. In politics he is a staunch Democrat and makes many sacrifices for the party, in all of which he loses sight of self. He is not an office seeker, but works diligently for his friends who become candidates, deeming no effort too strenuous to promote their interest or assure their success. Religiously Mr. Bessler was born and reared within the pale of the Roman Catholic church and he adheres to its tenets, doctrines and traditions with the same loyalty as did his ancestors before him.

The domestic life of Louis Bessler dates from 1881, on September 30th of which year he was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Holtzman, of Stark county, the union being blessed with children whose names and dates of birth are as follows: M. Amelia, June 26, 1882; Olivia E., March 16, 1884; M. Esther, April 20, 1887; Stanley F., January 6, 1890; Isabella M., May 11, 1892; Adolph S., February 3, 1894; Hilda H., April 8, 1896; William J. B., May 29, 1898, and Lillian A., July 10, 1900, the last named dying in infancy.

Mr. Bessler owns a beautiful home in West Brookfield and a fine lot of twenty acres adjoining the town, both valuable and attractive properties. He has not been sparing in supplying his family with comforts and conveniences, being a liberal provider and generous in his efforts to make his children happy in the home circle and contented with their lot.

JOHN J. SNYDER was born on the parental homestead in Osnaburg township, this county, on the 8th of October, 1847, and is now the only surviving child of Jacob J. and Margaret (Moke) Snyder, three other children having been born of the union. He was reared under the vitalizing influences of the farm and in the public schools of the locality secured his early educational discipline, which in later years he has most effectively supplemented through keeping in touch with the questions and issues of the hour and through his active association with men of affairs. He continued to abide beneath the parental roof-tree until the time of his marriage, and when but nineteen years of age showed the energy and self-reliance which have ever been his dominating characteristics, since he then secured a threshing outfit which he continued to successfully operate for a period of five years. After his marriage, in the year 1871, he assumed charge of his father's farm and thereafter continued to operate the same on shares for about nine years, sparing no pains to conserve his financial resources and ever looking to the establishing of himself in a position of conservative independence. After leaving the home place he rented the Frank Spiegel farm, also in Osnaburg township, for one year, and in the spring of 1881 he effected the purchase of a tract of ninety acres in section 6, Paris township, and forthwith removed to the same and began farming his own land. In 1887 he purchased another farm, of seventy acres, in the same township, and removed to the same, where he continued to reside until 1892, when he purchased a contiguous fifty acres and removed to this place, while two years later he still further increased his landed estate, having retained all he had previously bought, and at this time he purchased his present homestead place of one hundred and ten acres in section 8, where he has since maintained his home; he also has thirty-two acres in section 2. The place is equipped with substantial and attractive buildings, while each of the farms is well improved and under effective cultivation, the entire landed estate of three hundred and fifty-seven acres being located within the limits of Paris township, which is one of the most attractive agricultural sections of the county. Mr. Snyder is one of the most extensive stock growers in this section, and the major portion of the products of his farm are utilized in the feeding of the stock, while he has given special attention to grading up the same and has many fine specimens of thorough-bred strains. The discrimination which he has brought to bear in the connection has made the enterprise a very successful one, and his annual shipments are large and net him good returns. He is public-spirited and progressive and his influence and tangible aid may ever be counted upon in the promotion of all legitimate enterprises for the general good of the community, while the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who know him is freely extended to him. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. He and his wife are consistent and valued members of the Evangelical church, in whose spiritual and temporal work they take an abiding interest.

On the 18th of April, 1871, Mr. Snyder was united in marriage with Miss Maria Shearer, the fourth daughter of Jonathan and Eliza Shearer. Mrs. Snyder was born near Mapleton, Ohio, July 10, 1847, and was reared by kind and Christian parents. By frugal and industrious habits she was enabled to attend Wooster University, after which she taught school until the time of her marriage. Jonathan Shearer, an industrious and prosperous farmer, noted for his many acts of kindness, was born near Mapleton, Ohio, June 8, 1819. He married Anna Eliza Lautzenheiser, to which union were born eight daughters. Mr. Shearer's ancestors were among the pioneer settlers of the county, having come from York county, Pennsylvania, in 1813. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are the parents of four sons, to each of whom have been afforded exceptional educational advantages, of which they have been most appreciative. John R., who was a graduate of Mt. Union College in the year 1899, is now incumbent of the responsible office of county treasurer of Stark county and is individually mentioned elsewhere in this work. Arthur T., taught school for several winters and graduated at Mt. Union College with the class of 1901, delivering the class day oration. He is now a student in the Harvard Law School. Irwin A. was married to Miss Emma Krieger and now resides on one of his father's farms. He has decided to follow farming and to remain in the neighborhood of his youth. Harvey R., the youngest son, prepared at Mt. Union College and is now a junior in Harvard College.

JOHN STIMMEL was born on the pioneer farm of his father in Paris township, this county, on the 22d of May, 1834, being a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Hagerman) Stimmel, who became the parents of eight children, of whom the only survivor is the subject of this sketch. His maiden sister, Elizabeth, died at her home in the village of Paris, this county, January 5, 1903. The father was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, about the year 1792, his parents having come to the old Keystone state from Germany, which was their fatherland. They died when he was a mere child and he was reared in the home of an English family, thus finally losing all familiarity with the language of his parents. As a young man he was employed on a farm and in a gristmill, and in the latter connection he gained a practical knowledge of the cooper's trade, to which he continued to devote his attention at intervals for a number of years. He was twice married, his second wife having been the mother of the subject. She likewise was born in Pennsylvania, and their marriage was there solemnized. In 1826 they came to Stark county, and here the father effected the purchase of a farm of eighty acres, in Paris township, the same being practically in the midst of the virgin forest, so that no easy task confronted him, since he was compelled to literally hew out his farm. He succeeded in his efforts to an admirable degree and was one of the prosperous and honored citizens of the township at the time of his death, which occurred on this homestead in the year 1865. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and he was called upon to serve in various offices of distinctive trust and responsibility. He was first elected constable, later served several terms as township assessor, held the office of county commissioner one term, and for several years he was incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, in which connection it is interesting to record the fact that he learned to speak the German language, his mother tongue. His second wife, the mother of the subject, was summoned into eternal rest in 1844, at the age of forty-two years; she was a Methodist.

John Stimmel was reared to maturity on the homestead farm which was the place of his birth and he is indebted to the pioneer schools for his early educational discipline. He assisted in the fork of the farm until he had reached the age of eighteen years, when he left home and, after passing a short interval in Canton and Louisville, this county, he came to the village of Paris, where he entered upon an apprenticeship at the wagonmaker's trade, and within the time he was thus working, at wages of thirteen dollars a month, he was married, and for some six months thereafter he and his bride managed to maintain themselves on this meager amount, their courage being unlimited and their mutual trust inviolate. After completing his apprenticeship Mr. Stimmel was employed as a journeyman in Paris about ten years, at the expiration of which he leased the shop and continued operations on his own responsibility. He was an earnest and indefatigable worker and such was his desire to accumulate a competence for the future that the days were not long enough for him to accomplish all his energy prompted, and he frequently labored far into the night. While employed as a journeyman he received one dollar and twenty-five cents a day, which was considered good wages at that time, and such was his careful economy that he found it possible to save an average of one hundred dollars a year out of his earnings. From this source, while still working as a journeyman, he was able to erect for himself a good residence, and in 1871 he had accumulated a sufficient surplus to enable him to purchase his present home farm, of twenty-five acres, which is eligibly located one mile distant northwest from the village of Paris and in the township of the same name. He forthwith took up his abode on this place, which has ever since been his home and upon which he has made excellent improvements. Here he engaged in gardening and the raising of small fruits, conducting his operations with such discrimination and care as to make the venture a profitable one, and that in a cumulative way. For two years after coming to the farm Mr. Stimmel continued to work at his trade at intervals, but eventually found it expedient to give his entire time and attention to the work of the market farm. Though he takes a proper interest in all that pertains to the wellbeing of the community he has not been an active factor in public affairs, and in politics he maintains an independent attitude, supporting such men and measures as his judgment approves.

Mr. Stimmel has been twice married. On the 5th of October, 1855, he was united to Miss Mary E. Turner, of Paris, a daughter of Jesse Turner, a pioneer of the county, and of this marriage were born five children, of whom the following named four survive: Arthur, who is a carpenter and blacksmith by vocation, is located in Paris; Robert is living in Indianapolis, Indiana; Jennie is the wife of Rev. Levi Ditch, a clergyman of the Dunkard church, now located in the state of Nebraska; and Ellen, the wife of Ezra Stuckey, a successful farmer of Paris township, this county. The wife of Mr. Stimmel's youth was summoned into eternal rest in 1869, and on the 3d of April, 1871, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Stimmel, who was born in Paris township, this county, a daughter of Christian and Rebecca Stimmel, who came as pioneers from Pennsylvania, and she still remains with him to solace his declining years, having been a devoted companion and helpmeet. They became the parents of two children, of whom the one survivor is Walter, who is engaged in mercantile business in the village of Paris.

ZADOCK NUMAN is one of the progressive and prosperous farmers of Osnaburg township, of which section of the county he is a native son, having been born here on the 9th of February, 1847. He is one of the six children of John and Catherine (Freyfogle) Numan, and of the number four are living at the present time, namely: John, who is a resident of Allegheny, Pennsylvania; Lydia, who is the wife of Hiram Doll, of Canton, this county; Zadock, who is the subject of this sketch; and Miranda, who is the wife of Zachariah Doll, of Newcastle, Colorado.

The father of the subject was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1793, and was there reared to maturity, adopting agricultural pursuits as his vocation in life. About 1835 he emigrated with his family to Stark county, Ohio, and here purchased a farm about three miles east of Osnaburg, in the township of the same name. Later he disposed of this property and purchased another tract of land, two miles east of the present village of Mapleton, in the same township, where he erected the first gristmill in this section of the county, and there he continued to do a successful business in the operation of his mill and farm for a number of years. In the early '40s he disposed of his farm and mill and purchased what is now known as the McKinley farm, one mile west of Osnaburg, where he continued to make his home during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in March, 1868. His wife survived him about six years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1874. In politics he was originally a radical Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward gave to its cause an uncompromising support. He was an active and influential member of the Reformed church, in which he held various official positions, his wife likewise being a devoted member of the church. Henry Numan, the paternal grandfather of the subject, came to Stark county in company with his son John, or perhaps somewhat later, and here passed the remainder of his life. The maternal grandfather, George Freyfogle, who was a patriot soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, was a prominent farmer in the state of Maryland, whence he eventually came to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he remained until his death.

Zadock Numan remained beneath the parental roof-tree until he had attained maturity, having attended the common schools and also attended the high school at Minerva for a short period. In 1857 he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah E. Marks, who was born in Canton township, this county, being a daughter of the late Peter Marks, who was one of the early settlers in that portion of the county. After his marriage Mr. Numan located on the farm of his father-in-law and there continued to follow agricultural pursuits for the ensuing five years. In 1873 he purchased his present home farm, on section 29, Osnaburg township, the same at that time comprising one hundred and twenty-four acres, and here he has ever since maintained his home. The place now comprises one hundred acres, the remaining twenty-four acres of the original tract having been sold a number of years ago. Mr. Numan is to be distinctively mentioned as one of the model farmers of the county, and a more attractive rural estate than his would be difficult to find in this section of the state. In politics he is a stalwart supporter of the Republican party, and while never ambitious for political preferment, he served two years in the responsible office of township trustee, giving a most able and satisfactory administration of the duties devolving upon him. He and his wife are the parents of four children, namely: William, who is associated with his father in the operation of the home farm; Florence, who is the wife of Louis Deckert, a representative farmer of Canton township; Edward, who is in the employ of Bucher & Gibbs, plow manufacturers in Canton; and Clara, who remains at the parental home. In the spring of 1903 Mr. Numan rented his farm and moved to Canton, where he is living a retired life.

NAHUM S. RUSSELL.—In the death of Nahum S. Russell, on the 18th of November, 1891, Massillon lost one of its most distinguished and valued citizens, and it is the desire to accord within these pages a proper tribute to his memory, avoiding undue eulogy but affording a true estimate of the man and of his accomplishment. He was president of the extensive corporation of Russell & Company, manufacturers of threshing machines, horse-powers, portable traction engines and sawmills, in Massillon, and held this office until he retired from active business in 1888.

Nahum S. Russell was born in Weston, Middlesex county, Massachusetts, on the 17th of February, 1813, being the fourth in order of birth of the eleven children of Cyrus and Louisa (Stratton) Russell. The Russell family is of stanch old Scottish stock, and in Scotland occurred the birth of the great-grandfather of the subject of this memoir. Early in the eighteenth century he left the fair land of hills and heather and emigrated to America, locating in Middlesex county, Massachusetts. From the old family Bible, which is carefully treasured by the family, we are able to secure much interesting ancestral data, though little is given concerning the original American progenitor. His son Joseph was born in Weston, Middlesex county, Massachusetts, on the 5th of July, 1745, and on the 20th of May, 1773, was solemnized his marriage to Susanna Upham, who was born August 20, 1751. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Joseph, Sukey, Sarah, Cyrus, Abigail, Sylvanius and Clement.

Cyrus Russell, father of the Russell brothers, of Massillon, was born in Weston, Massachusetts, December 17, 1784, and in 1820 he removed thence to New Hampshire, purchasing a farm at Alstead, Cheshire county. This he improved and conducted until 1829, when he removed with his family to Sutton, Caledonia county, Vermont, where he continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits until his retirement from active labor, by reason of the infirmities of advancing age, and he then went to the home of his daughter in Thompson, Connecticut, where he died at the age of eighty-eight years. In politics he was originally a Whig and later a Republican, and while a resident of Massachusetts he served with credit as an officer in the war of 1812. His wife, Louisa, was a daughter of Isaac Stratton, a farmer of Lincoln, Massachusetts, where she was born on the 8th of November, 1786, and lived to attain the age of eighty-four years. Of their children we enter at this point brief record in order of birth: Charles M. was born October 1, 1806, and of him further mention will be made in an appending paragraph. Martha Upham was born January 12, 1808, and became the wife of Rev. Alanson Rawson, four children being born to them, Alanson R., Mary A., Juliette and Harriet. Harriet was born April 12, 1809, and became the wife of Milan Harris, and her death occurred in December, 1880, being survived by one daughter, Harriet L. Nahum S., the next in order of birth, is the immediate subject of this memoir. Sylvanius was born

August 22, 1815, and died August 18, 1844. Clement was born December 29, 1817, was twice married,—first to Laura M. Waterman, who bore him two children,—Charles and Louisa,—and second to Mrs. Augusta Miller, no children being born of this union. Joseph K. is individually mentioned later on in this context. Sarah Susanna was born November 25, 1825, and became the wife of Alfred Q. Evans, to whom she bore one daughter, Susan S. Mrs. Evans died May 20, 1851. Thomas H. was born May 15, 1828, and he married Ellen Dunn, five children being born of this union, while three of the number are now living,—Warren R., Laura and Harriet. Thomas H. is deceased. George L. was born October 27, 1830, and he married Sarah Gallagher, who bore him one son, William C. After her death he married Martha Kennard. He is now deceased. Alba Allen was born May 7, 1833, and first married Lorinda Chase and second Olive Cook, two children being born to the second union, Harley A. and Carrie B.; he is now deceased.

Of Nahum S. Russell, a previous publication has offered an appreciative estimate, the same having been written prior to his death, but the words are well worthy of perpetuation at this point, as outlining his career, and incidentally those of his brothers, with whom he was so long and intimately associated in business: "Few men have had more humble beginnings than the Russell brothers or have achieved for themselves a brighter and clearer record as business men. By their zeal and unflagging industry they pioneered their way through an eventful past, many times dark and portentous, surviving panics and hard seasons which seemed at times ready to involve them in business disaster and ruin, and yet by their adherence to the principles of right and justice, coupled with their energy and praiseworthy fidelity to their business and its concomitant obligations, they have ever surmounted the difficulties which environed them and distinguished themselves as manufacturers and stalwart business men. They are now sending their products all over the world, and the manufacture of the same gives employment at their shops to hundreds of men, and indirectly to thousands of others. Nahum, the eldest of the brothers living at the time of this writing, was reared on the home farm. His advantages for attending school were poor, since he was enabled to pursue his studies in the country schools for a short time during the winter months, working on the farm during the remainder of the year. In the winter of 1831 he went to Walpole, New Hampshire, to learn the trade of carpenter and joiner, serving an apprenticeship of three years' duration. During this time he strove to improve himself in every way. Realizing the value of an education more extended than he had hitherto acquired, he attended the academy at Walpole during such intervals as he could spare from his work. In the spring of 1835 he removed to Keene, New Hampshire, where he remained one year, working at his trade, after which he was similarly engaged at Virgennes and Buffalo, New York. Later he came to Ohio, taking up his residence in Cleveland, where he assisted in building the American hotel, on Superior street. He remained in Cleveland until 1838, when, in company with his brothers Charles M. and Clement, he came to Massillon, where the three brothers became associated in the building and contracting business. On the 1st of January, 1842, the three brothers formed a co-partnership under the title of C. M. Russell & Company, for the manufacture of threshing machines and horse-powers, in conjunction with their enterprise as carpenters and builders. Their capitalistic investment was but fifteen hundred dollars, and yet from the signally modest nucleus, by hard work, tireless energy and unflagging perseverance, they built up one of the largest and most prosperous industrial enterprises in the county, giving employment to hundreds of men."

In the connection it may be stated that Charles M. Russell, the senior member of the firm, had examined the Pitt threshing machine of Buffalo, and becoming convinced that he could improve upon the same he forthwith essayed the task, and that he was successful in this initial endeavor is evidenced by the fact that his improved machine vanquished the original prototype at the Ohio state fair of 1845. Thus encouraged, the new firm vigorously pushed forward their manufacturing enterprise and continued to improve their Massillon thresher until it distanced all competitors, while its precedence has never been permitted to wane to the present day. After the death of Charles M. Russell, in 1860, the name of the firm was changed to N. S. & C. Russell, and in 1864 three others of the Russell brothers—Joseph K., Thomas H. and George L.—purchased interests in the business. In 1865 William K. Miller and Thomas H. Williams were admitted to the concern, the former being the patentee of the Peerless mower and reaper, which was manufactured by his firm until 1871, when it was sold to C. Russell & Company, of Canton, to which city was transferred its manufacturing. In 1868 Mr. Williams retired from the firm and three years later Allen A., the youngest of the Russell brothers, was admitted to partnership, as was also Alanson R. Rawson, a nephew, who died in 1875, at which time his interest was acquired by J. Walter McClymonds. On the 1st of January, 1878, Clement Russell, one of the founders of the business, withdrew from the firm (incorporated under the old firm name of Russell & Co.), after thirty-six years of active connection therewith. Prior to 1865 the shops were located on Erie street, between Tremont and South streets, but the business had then outgrown its accommodations and the firm accordingly purchased a tract of twenty acres south of the railroad and erected the main structures of the present substantial plant. On the 17th of May, 1878, fire destroyed all the iron-working machinery, involving the destruction of the entire south wing and one-half of the Erie street front of the building, while the entire stock of patterns, valued at seventy-five thousand dollars, with machinery of tantamount value, was a complete loss, the insurance realized being but fifty thousand dollars. The firm at once rebuilt and its plant is now one of the largest and most thoroughly equipped in the country, offering adequate facilities for the constantly increasing business. In the autumn of 1878 the enterprise was incorporated under the laws of the state, with a capital stock of one million dollars, a fact most significant when we recall the original capital of fifteen hundred dollars. The company maintain many branch offices throughout the most diverse sections of the Union, and in addition to the manufacture of the New Massillon thresher, known today as the most successful in America, the company also makes a specialty of their portable farm engine, with traction attachment. They were the first of the large manufacturers to introduce steam threshing, and their engines have attained the highest reputation. The products of this great plant are sold in all agricultural sections of the United States and have been successfully introduced in the various European countries, South America, Australia and other foreign lands. The officers of the company at the present time are as follows: J. Walter McClymond, president; Charles M. Russell, vice-president; Edward C. Merwin, second vice-president and secretary; Charles O. Heggen, superintendent, and Jesse J. Pitts, treasurer.

Of Nahum S. Russell it may be consistently said that such was his acumen, business prescience and progressive policy, that he contributed in a large measure to the upbuilding of this gigantic industry, which continued to feel the impress of his strong individuality until he was summoned from the field of life's endeavors. In the light of his temporal accomplishment we can not but pronounce him a successful man; in the light of his noble and sincere character we can not but realize that his life was prolific in good and in all directions and that it reached its maximum of potentiality at every step. To him was accorded the utmost confidence and esteem in his home city and county, to whose interests he was ever loyal, and his gracious and unostentatious personality won to him strong and inviolable friendships. In politics he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church.

On the 27th of April, 1841, was solemnized the marriage of Nahum S. Russell to Miss Esther K. Millard, who was born in New York, on the 27th of February, 1819, being a daughter of William J. and Betsey Jerome (Ball) Millard. They were the parents of three children, namely: Flora R., who is the wife of J. Walter McClymonds, of Massillon; Anna, who is the wife of Louis K. McClymonds, of New York; and Mary Louise, who died on the 10th of March, 1861, at the age of nineteen years.

Charles M. Russell, the eldest of the brothers of the subject, was likewise a citizen of marked prominence and influence. He was born in Middlesex county, Massachusetts, on the 1st of October, 1806, and accompanied his parents on their removal thence to New Hampshire and later to Vermont. His fine mental gifts and sturdy self-reliance enabled him to make good the lack of early educational advantages, and yet it was a slight presage of the eminence he was to attain in the industrial world when we revert to his early labors on the farm and to his later efforts as a contractor and builder. Of his career after coming to Massillon, in the spring of 1838, we quote from a previous publication: "The genius of Mr. Russell would never permit him to pursue the beaten path, but wherever there were imperfections in his way improvements marked his course, and this characteristic, added to his great energy and enlarged enterprises, never permitted him to rest until the manufactured articles of his firm had deserved and acquired a reputation surpassing that of all others. The unerring judgment of the Russell brothers did not rest with the securing of the greatest prestige for their threshers, but they also established an extensive manufactory of cabinet ware in Massillon. Soon after the completion of the railroad through the town Charles M. Russell, in association with Messrs. Wellman and Davenport, erected large works for the manufacture of railroad cars, this enterprise later passing into the control of the firm of C. M. Russell & Company. Mr. Russell was elected to the directorate of the Pennsylvania & Ohio Railroad in 1856, retaining this office until the consolidation under the title of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Company, of which he was at once made a director, remaining such until his death. His position on the board was a prominent one and his counsels had much weight with the company, his loss being deeply felt by those interested in the road. Within the last year of his life, in connection with Mr. Davenport, he invented and patented an iron railroad car. His benevolence, though exerted without ostentation, was constantly put into practice, and the unfortunate who applied to him for relief never went away empty-handed. There was no class of people who had a larger place in his regard than the mechanics, for he never forgot that he himself arose from this same class, and he was ever ready to aid and encourage them in every consistent way. He had been the chief among the citizens of Massillon and, unlike many others who departed from her confines in her hour of adversity, brought about by a change in the means of intercommunication, he was always foremost in her defense and using his best energies for her welfare. Her citizens always had the benefit of his wise counsels and wise experiences. He was equally prompt to distribute his money to forward the best interests of the town, either in a religious, social or public point of view. His death occurred on the 19th of February, 1860, and thus passed away a dear brother, a loyal friend and worthy citizen. He married Nancy Davis, but no children were born to their union."

Joseph K. Russell, who was the vice-president of Russell & Company, was born at Alstead, Cheshire county, New Hampshire, on the 26th of June, 1823, and well upheld the high standard of the family name through his business and civic career in Massillon. He came to this place in 1842 and served an apprenticeship of three years with his brothers, who were then engaged in contracting and building, having, like them, grown up on the homestead farm and secured such educational advantages as were offered in the primitive district schools, which he attended during the winter terms. At the expiration of the period noted his health had become so impaired that he returned to his native county, where he entered the woolen-mills of his father-in-law, at Harrisville, eventually becoming overseer of the weaving department and incidentally working on one of the first power looms ever installed in New England. He returned to Massillon in 1863, and in January of the following year purchased an interest in the firm of N. S. & C. Russell, the title of which was at that time changed to Russell & Company, and upon the incorporation of the company he was made vice-president and superintendent of the lumber department, in which dual capacity he rendered most effective service for a long term of years, ably complementing the labors of his brothers and gaining high prestige as a citizen and representative business man.

In Harrisville, New Hampshire, Joseph K. Russell was united in marriage to Miss Lucretia J. Harris, daughter of Milan Harris, one of the pioneer woolen manufacturers of New England. Mr. and Mrs. Russell became the parents of five children, as follows: Vinet S., deceased; Charles M. is vice-president of Russell & Company; Mary E. is unmarried; Louisa J. is the wife of Isaac Conrad, of Massillon; and Jessie L. is unmarried. Mrs. Russell died on the 28th of February, 1875, and subsequently Mr. Russell married Mrs. Lydia H. Harris, who was born in Nelson, New Hampshire, a daughter of Oliver Heald. Mrs. Russell died in February, 1888, without issue, and in December, 1890, Mr. Russell married Mrs. Harriet W. Ballard, daughter of Dr. Perkins Wallace, a pioneer physician and citizen of Canton, a portrait of whom may be found on another page in this volume.

CHARLES N. DEWALT was born on the farm where he now resides, the date of his nativity having been September 29, 1865, while he is the third of the four children of Samuel S. and Barbara (Newhouse) Dewalt, the elder members of the family being as follows: Sadie, who remains at the parental home; Mary, who is the wife of McClelland Shy, of Osnaburg township, and Flora, who is the wife of Alva I. Lotz, of this township. The father of the subject is likewise a native of this township, having been born on this same homestead, where he still resides, on the 27th of December, 1838, being a son of Charles and Saloma (Shook) Dewalt, the former of who was born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Plain township, this county. Charles Dewalt was born in the year 1821, and two years later his father, Henry Dewalt, came to Stark county, Ohio, settling on a tract of unimproved land one-half mile north of the present village of Osnaburg, the farm being now owned by David Gehman. There the family maintained their abode until the year 1833, when the purchase of the farm now occupied by our subject was effected, the property being owned by his father, Samuel S. Dewalt, who also makes his home here. With the children of the subject five generations of the family have thus lived on the one farm. The property was transferred by Henry Dewalt to his son Charles, in 1841, and in 1886 the latter devised the property by will to his son Samuel S., father of the subject, who still owns the property. Both Henry and Charles Dewalt died on this farm, the former at the age of sixty-six years and the latter at the age of eighty-six. Charles Dewalt was a staunch and uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Democratic party and was one of the highly honored and influential citizens of Osnaburg township, where he held the office of township trustee for several years.

Samuel S. Dewalt, the father of the subject, was reared on the old homestead farm, and at the age of eighteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, to which he has consecutively given his attention save for a few years when he remained at home and cared for his honored parents in their declining days. For the past twenty years he has devoted his entire time to the work of his trade, as a contractor and builder, while our subject has had the entire charge of the farm. Samuel S. Dewalt secured his early educational discipline in the primitive log schoolhouse of the pioneer epoch, the building being equipped with puncheon floor, slab benches, oiled paper windows in lieu of glass, and yawning fireplace in one end of the room. From such unpretentious institutions have been "graduated" some of the noblest and strongest men that our nation has ever produced, and we may well revert with a feeling of respect to these rude little cabins in which future greatness was thus nurtured. In politics Mr. Dewalt is a stalwart Democrat, but he has never been an aspirant for political preferment of any sort. He and his wife are both zealous members of the Reformed church, in which he held the office of deacon for many years. Fraternally he is identified with Juilliard Lodge No. 460, Free and Accepted Masons, at Louisville, and he is honored as one of the sterling citizens of the county, being an able business man and one whose word is ever inviolable. His wife, Barbara (Newhouse) Dewalt, was born in Waynesburg, Sandy township, Stark county.

Charles N. Dewalt, the immediate subject of this sketch, has passed practically his entire life on the homestead farm where he was born, his early educational privileges being such as were afforded in this district schools. For eighteen months he worked at the blacksmith trade in Robertsville, this county, but was compelled to abandon this vocation owing to severe rheumatic troubles, and with the exception of this brief interval he has resided consecutively on the ancestral farm from the time of his birth. He assumed the entire management of the place when seventeen years of age, and is to-day recognized as one of the most progressive and thoroughly scientific farmers of the county, never faltering in his allegiance to the great fundamental art of agriculture and considering it worthy of his best efforts and undivided attention. He is a reader of the best classical and contemporary literature and is a man of broad and exact information and excellent intellectual powers. In politics he gives his unqualified support to the Democratic party, and in 1899 he was first elected to the office of assessor, serving two terms, while in 1900 he was elected to the office of trustee and is the present able incumbent, being president of the board. Fraternally he is a member of Juilliard Lodge No. 460, Free and Accepted Masons, at Louisville, with which his father has been identified for many years, and he is signally appreciative of the noble teachings of this time honored fraternity. He is at the present time senior deacon of the lodge, which he had previously served for two years as worshipful master. He is a deacon in the Reformed church at Robertsville, of which his wife is a member, and for the long period of ten years he gave most efficient service as superintendent of the Sunday school.

On the 21st of March, 1889, in Robertsville, this county, Mr. Dewalt was united in marriage to Miss Minnie E. Combs, who was born in that village, being a daughter of James and Matilda Combs. Mr. and Mrs. Dewalt have had five children, of whom four survive, Guy G., Floyd V., Ruth N., and E. Carme. Odane died at the age of ten months, in 1897.

ABRAHAM VAN VOORHIS is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, on the 12th of December, 1822, a son of Peter and Margaret (Sickman) Van Voorhis, of whose fourteen children seven are living at the time of this writing; Susan, the wife of Albert Glass, of Missouri; Margaret, the widow of George Welker, of Mapleton, Stark county; Sarah, the widow of Samuel Foulk, of Mapleton; Mary, the widow of George Judd, of the same place; Eliza, the wife of David Coy, of Mapleton; Harriet, the wife of Daniel Dehoff, of Osnaburg township; and Abraham, the immediate subject of this sketch. Peter VanVoorhis was of sturdy Holland ancestry and was a native of the state of New York, whence he later removed to Pennsylvania, where he remained until 1824 when he came to Stark county, Ohio, passing the first year in Canton township and then purchasing a farm of eighty acres of heavily timbered land in Osnaburg township, one and one-half miles west of the present attractive village of Mapleton, and there he continued to make his home until his death, which occurred when he was about seventy-two years of age, his wife surviving him by about a decade. Both were consistent members of the Christian church and held the high regard of all who knew them, being worthy types of that sterling pioneer element which conserved the laying of firm foundations for the future prosperity and pride of this section of the state. In politics the father was originally an old-line Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward supported its cause, being a man of excellent intellectual powers and mature judgment and taking a deep interest in the questions of the hour.

Abraham Van Voorhis was but two years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Stark county, so that this has been his home for nearly eighty years, the locality being endeared to him by the memories and associations of the past and by the privileges and prosperity of the present, as the glorious twentieth century swings into the cycle of the ages. As a boy he did his part in the work of the pioneer farm, assisting in clearing off the underbrush on the new land and later in the cultivation of the fields, the duties devolving upon him being more numerous and insistent than the average farmer boy of the present day can well appreciate. The pioneers were not unmindful of the value of educational advantages, but the exigencies of time and place rendered it impossible to make as ample provision for their children as they desired. Still from the historical viewpoint we well know that some of the grandest characters in the history of our republic have been "graduates" of the same sort of primitive log school-houses, with slab benches, puncheon floors, oiled-paper windows and wide fire-place, such as the subject of this sketch attended in his boyhood days. Character has been made and exalted manhood and womanhood fostered within the walls of those rude little institutions of learning, and we may not revert to them with contempt or lack of appreciation. In such a school Mr. Van Voorhis received his early education, and he continued to assist in the work of the home farm until his marriage, on the 8th of December, 1842, when he was united to Miss Elizabeth Ingle, who was born on the farm where the subject now resides, and after this important event he rented the farm of Samuel Ake, in Osnaburg township, and there continued in agricultural pursuits for a period of eight years, at the expiration of which he purchased the farm of eighty acres, in Canton township, now owned by Douglas Pierson, which he sold soon after, while about the same time he also bought one hundred acres of the farm on which he had been living, and he continued his residence there for a further period of eight years. He then sold the one-hundred-acre farm and in 1859 purchased of the Ingle heirs his present fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, where he has ever since maintained his home, having developed the farm into one of the best in this part of the county, while its permanent improvements are in keeping with the day, including a commodious and attractive residence, with many modern accessories and conveniences, and substantial barns and other outbuildings for the accommodation of stock, produce, etc. He is now enjoying the aftermath of his labors, in that rest and comfort which are the fitting crown to a signally active and useful career. Mrs. Elizabeth (Ingle) Van Voorhis, who had been a true helpmeet to our subject, was summoned into the eternal life on the 19th of February, 1891, having become the mother of five children, of whom only one survives, Cyrus, who has charge of the operation of the homestead farm and who is a young man of excellent business ability. On the 22d of February, 1893, Mr. Van Voorhis consummated a second union, being then married to

Mrs. Belle (Judd) Ingle, who was born in this county, a daughter of Christian Judd, a pioneer of Stark county. It may be noted that at one time the subject was the owner of thirty-two acres of land where the village of Cooktown, this county, now stands. In politics he has been a staunch Republican from the time of the organization of the party, but has invariably refused to permit his name to be considered in connection with nomination for office, though he has always shown a public-spirited interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community. He is a prominent and honored member of the Christian church, in which he has served as deacon for more than forty years, and no man in the community is more highly esteemed or can claim a wider circle of friends than he.

Cyrus Van Voorhis was born December 9, 1848, and married, March 10, 1870, Ellen, daughter of George Judd, of Osnaburg. Their three children are: Alvesta, now Mrs. Charles Hershey; Olive, now Mrs. Robert Griffith, and Louis, at home.

LEWIS L. DAUM was born in the province of Darmstadt, Germany, on Christmas day of the year 1851, and is one of the seven children born to George L. and Catherine (Shauer) Daum, four of the number surviving at the present time, namely: John, who is a resident of Canton, this county; Margaret, who also resides in that city, having never married; Leonard, who also has his home in Canton; and Lewis L., who figures as the immediate subject of this review. George L. Daum was born in Darmstadt, Germany, about the year 1809, and his early educational discipline was received in the excellent schools of the fatherland, where his vocation was that of farming. In the spring of 1853 he emigrated to the United States, in company with his wife and their five children, and came forthwith to Stark county, locating on a farm in Osnaburg township, one mile west of the village of Mapleton. He there became the owner of a small farm and there he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in the autumn of 1880, when somewhat past the age of three score years and ten. He was possessed of moderate means, and after coming to America lived practically a retired life. He was a Republican in politics, and both he and his wife were devoted members of the Lutheran church. She survived him by about thirteen years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1893, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years.

The subject of this sketch was about two years of age at the time of his parents' emigration to America, and he has thus passed essentially his entire life in Stark county, having been reared on the home farm and being indebted to the public schools of the locality for his early educational privileges, while the discipline thus secured has been most effectively supplemented by self-application, broad and well directed reading and intimate association with the practical affairs of life, so that Mr. Daum stands as a man of wide information and marked intellectual strength. At the age of seventeen years he went to the city of Canton and secured work in the shops of the Aultman Company, and he was thus engaged for a period of about four years, while in later years, at intervals, he was again in the employ of this company, as an expert, his duties being in the line of setting up machines and giving instruction in regard to their operation. His services were thus in requisition in the most diverse sections of the Union, and it may be said that he was twice sent to California as a representative of the company, and worked throughout that state. In 1875, soon after his last trip to the Golden state, Mr. Daum engaged in the sawmilling and lumbering business in Mapleton, this county, and in 1878 he sold his mill site to the village, the same being utilized as the site of the new school house and shortly afterward he erected a new mill, while he also received a patent on a portable sawmill which he had invented. He has since continued in the sawmill and lumber business, though this has represented but one department of his active and successful business operations, since he conducts his fine farm, near the village mentioned, and also finds his services in frequent requisition as an expert machinist, being employed by some of the largest and most important corporations. He has saved the lumber for many of the finest houses and barns in Stark, Carroll and Tuscarawas counties, and for twenty-six years he has operated a threshing outfit, having at the present time a most modern and improved equipment in this line and receiving a representative support throughout this section of the state. He has been employed as an expert not only by the Aultman Company, but also by the Walter A. Wood Harvester Company, while he is now handling special work for the Westinghouse Electric Company. He resides on his farm, of forty acres, one mile south of Mapleton, the same having the best of improvements, including a commodious and attractive modern residence, while the place is maintained under a high state of cultivation, showing that, in the midst of the thronging exactions of a peculiarly active and busy life, he finds time to give proper supervision to his model little farm.

Mr. Duam has ever been animated by a distinctive public spirit, and his influence has been exerted in a most helpful and judicious way in furthering the advancement of local interests, for he has brought to bear the same energy and business acumen which have conserved his success in his individual enterprises. He gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party and has been an active worker in its cause, having been for several years a member of the county central committee. He is now serving his second term in the office of township trustee of Osnaburg township, while for the past nine years he has been clerk of the school board. He has wielded marked influence in local affairs of a public nature, and his advice and counsel are sought in connection with matters of public policy as well as of private import. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church, and fraternally he is identified with Osnaburg Lodge No. 570, Knights of Pythias, and Waynesburg Lodge No. 29, Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 1st of April, 1875, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Daum to Miss Elizabeth Weis, who was born in Carroll county, this state, being a daughter of the late Jacob Weis, who was a stone mason by trade and vocation. Mr. and Mrs. Daum are the parents of five children, all of whom are still beneath the home roof, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Clarence, Ida, Irena, Herman and Walter.

Mr. Daum's career has been one of consecutive application and well directed energy, and the success which it records stands to his credit as a man of marked business sagacity and inflexible integrity of purpose,—a record which offers both lesson and incentive. Mr. Daum built the tile works at Mapleton in 1902 and also built the first portable sawmill ever built in Stark county.

JACOB J. SNYDER is a native of the fair province of Alsace, Germany, which was still a portion of France at the time of his birth, which occurred on the 5th of May, 1820. He is the youngest son and only surviving member of a family of six children born to George H. and Margaret (Grose) Snyder, the former of whom was born in Alsace, in 1785. He was there reared to maturity and there learned the shoemaker's trade. In 1827 he emigrated to the United States, being forty days on the ocean, and he landed at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he established himself in the work of his trade, also conducting a modest shoe store. There he remained until 1836, when he came to Stark county, Ohio, and here he purchased eighty acres of land in section 36, Osnaburg township, where his grandson, William H. Snyder, now resides. He continued to work at his trade, assigning the work and management of the farm to his son, the subject of this sketch. He continued to reside on the homestead until within a short time before his death, in his seventy-fourth year, on the 12th of March, 1859, having passed the last few years of his life in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Geiger, in Carroll county, this state. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and his religious faith was that of the Lutheran church. He was a man of fine intellect, honorable and straightforward in all his dealings, industrious and Godfearing, and ever devoted to his family, while with him friendship was ever held inviolable. His wife was born in Raabach, Germany, in 1788, and she died on the 20th of June, 1866, at the home of her son George H., in Mapleton, this county.

Jacob J. Snyder, the immediate subject of this review, was seven years of age at the time of his parents' emigration to America, and he was reared to the age of sixteen in the city of Philadelphia, where he secured his early educational discipline in the public schools, and there he early began to assist his father in the work of his trade, working on the bench as a shoemaker, in the handling of repairs and the more common class of work. On coming to Stark county he at once gave his attention to the work of the homestead farm, and the same was to a large extent still covered with the native timber, but he proved equal to the task assigned him, and, even as a boy, showed marked discrimination in carrying on the work of improving and cultivating the farm. On the 23d of October, 1843, Mr. Snyder was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Moke, who was born in Germany, being a daughter of John Moke, who emigrated to America when she was a child, locating in Stark county as one of its pioneers. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder became the parents of four children, of whom the only survivor is John J., a successful farmer of Paris township, this county. Mrs. Snyder entered into eternal rest on the 23d of May, 1854. Mr. Snyder's second marriage occurred on the 28th of September, 1854, when he wedded Miss Elizabeth Groseman, who was born in the city of Buffalo, New York, being a daughter of Christian and Elizabeth (Walzhart) Groseman, who were pioneers of Carroll county, Ohio, where they took up their residence in 1834.

Four years after his first marriage Mr. Snyder purchased a farm of eighty acres, adjoining the parental homestead, and took up his abode thereon, but one year later, his parents being left alone, he returned to the old farm to care for them. In 1854 he purchased the old homestead of his father, and thus became owner of one hundred and sixty acres in the two contiguous tracts which he had thus purchased, the same being the southwest quarter of section 36, Osnaburg township. In 1863 he purchased, of Samuel Leohr, his present home farm of one hundred and sixty acres, constituting the southwest quarter of section 35, in the same township. In the spring of 1864 he took up his residence on this farm, which has ever since continued to be his home,—a period of forty years. For a number of years he gave his attention to the cultivation of both farms, but in 1895 he disposed of the old homestead farm, together with the adjoining eighty acres which figured as his original purchase, the same becoming the property of his son William H., who still resides there, being one of the successful and honored farmers of this section. Mr. Snyder has made the best of improvements on his home farm, having erected a large and substantial residence and other good buildings, while he has placed the land under a high state of cultivation and has shown great discrimination in his efforts. He has capitalistic interests of importance and is known as one of the substantial men of the county. It has been his pleasure and gratifying privilege to be able to assist each of his children in securing a start in life, and his reward has not been denied, for they have proved altogether appreciative and accord to him the highest measure of veneration and filial solicitude.

In politics Mr. Snyder accords an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, and has ever taken an active and intelligent interest in the questions and issues of the day. He has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office, but his distinctive eligibility led to his selection to the office of township trustee, of which he has been incumbent two terms, bringing to bear in the connection the same mature judgment and business sagacity which have conserved his personal success, and thus proving a capable and acceptable official. He is a consistent and honored member of the United Evangelical church, taking a deep interest in the spiritual and temporal advancement of the church and in the general cause of religion, and for many years he served as classleader of the church at Mapleton. He has given material aid in the erection of six different church buildings. He has conducted a Sunday school for many years and though eighty-three years old is still a regular attendant and teacher.

She who has been his loved companion and helpmeet for more than forty years was called to the "land of the leal" on the 16th of August, 1900, but there remains to him the consolation of the memories of her pure and beautiful life and gentle womanhood, through which their wedded years were idealized.

Jacob J. and Elizabeth (Groseman) Snyder became the parents of ten children, of whom seven survive their devoted mother, namely: Ellen, who is the wife of John Weckman, of Carnegie, Pennsylvania; William H., who resides on the ancestral homestead in Osnaburg township; Frank, who resides in the city of Canton; George E., a representative farmer of Paris township; Carrie E., wife of William Hontz, who has charge of the subject's farm; Lucinda A., the wife of Frank Haynam, of Paris township; and Emma M., wife of Sherman Singer, of Canton.

WILLIAM H. SNYDER, who is one of the progressive and successful farmers of Osnaburg township, was born on the farm which is now his home, on the 27th of September, 1857, the land having been entered by his grandfather in the pioneer days and having later been the property of his father, who is still a resident of the township, of which he is a revered and patriarchal citizen, so that the property has been in the possession of the family for three generations. He is one of ten children of Jacob J. and Elizabeth (Grossman) Snyder, and eight of the number still survive, as is duly noted in the personal sketch of their father, elsewhere in this volume. William H. was reared on the old homestead, early beginning to lend his aid in the work of the farm, while he is indebted to the public schools for his educational privileges in his youthful days. He continued to reside on the home farm until his marriage, which occurred on Christmas day of the year 1884, when he was united to Miss Retta Creighton, who was born in Carroll county, this state, being a daughter of Thomas Creighton, who was of Irish lineage. After his marriage he assumed full charge of the homestead farm, and conducted the same on shares, thus continuing until 1895, when he purchased the property of his father, and since that time he has continued successfully to devote his attention to the great basic industry under whose beneficent influences he was reared, while his efforts have been directed with that mature judgment and thorough knowledge which invariably make for definite success. He is known as one of the representative farmers of the township and county, and his place is one which can not fail to challenge the attention of even the cursory observer, being a model of thrift and neatness and having the best of permanent improvements. The farm comprises one hundred and sixty acres, of which one-half was the original tract taken up by his paternal grandfather in the pioneer days, while the other eighty acres was the farm purchased by his father and used as the place of his first independent venture in connection with the practical activities of life, so that the homestead is one of which he may well feel proud, both from its historic associations and its value and attractiveness as one of the best farms of the township.

In politics Mr. Snyder has ever been staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the United Evangelical church, of which he is a prominent and influential member, having long taken an active part in the church work, while he has served as trustee, steward and classleader of the same and also as superintendent of the Sunday school, his wife also being a zealous worker in the church. They are held in the highest esteem in the community, and the pleasant family home is a center of unreserved and refined hospitality. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are the parents of five children, all of whom are still members of the home circle, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Effie V., W. Rogers, Nora Alice, Ella E. Z., and Henry Roland.

WILLIAM CLAPPER, who is one of the representative and influential farmers of the younger generation in Osnaburg township, was born on the farm which is now his home, on the 13th of March, 1866, being a son of John and Elizabeth (Neidig) Clapper, to whom were born nine children, namely: Hiram, who is a resident of Nimishillen township, this county; Jonas, of Paris township; Hezekiah, of Osnaburg township; Harriet, also of this township; Eliza, of Trumbull county, this state; Levi, of Osnaburg township; John, of Nimishillen township; William, the subject of this sketch; and Cora, the wife of Henry Royer, of Louisville, this county. The father of the subject was born in 1815, in this county, being a son of Henry Clapper, who came to this locality from Pennsylvania in the early pioneer days, becoming one of the first settlers in Osnaburg township, where his son John was reared to maturity on the farm, eventually becoming the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of the old homestead, and also accumulating other farm land. He was a man of intelligence, energy and sterling character and through his well directed effort attained marked prosperity. He attained the venerable age of eighty-six years, his death occurring on the 21st of July, 1901. His widow survives him and resides on the old homestead farm with her youngest son, the subject of this review. She was born on this farm, being a daughter of John Neidig, who settled here among the early pioneers, having come hither from Pennsylvania. She has long been a devoted member of the United Brethren church, of which her husband likewise was a consistent adherent, while in his political views he was a stanch Republican from the time of the organization of the party.

William Clapper was reared on the homestead farm where he now resides, contributing his quota to its work from his boyhood days and receiving his educational training in the public schools of the township. In 1891 he assumed charge of the home farm, which he forthwith began operating on shares, thus continuing until 1895, when he located on a small place of his own, one mile to the west of the homestead, but about two years later he disposed of his property and returned to the home place, where he has since resided. He has been successful in his agricultural enterprises, being progressive, alert and discriminating, and in January, 1902, he showed his good judgment by expanding the scope of his operations, establishing a dairy and finding a ready market for his product in the town of Robertsville, where he has a large list of appreciative patrons. The milk and cream supplied is handled with the greatest care, in order that the maximum of purity and cleanliness may be insured, and a herd of about fifteen high-grade milch cows is kept in requisition. This department of his farming enterprise has proved very profitable and Mr. Clapper has spared no pains in catering to the best class of patrons,—those most appreciative and discriminating. He takes an active interest in the cause of the Republican party, of which he is a stanch adherent.

On the 28th of December, 1890, Mr. Clapper was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Sefong, daughter of Samuel Sefong, of this township, and they are the parents of four children, Bertha, Nova M., Earl and Albert.

stanch Welsh lineage. His father, Charles Eynon, was born in England, of Welsh parentage, and was there reared and educated, the place of his nativity having been the city of Bristol, and near that place was born Miss Fannie Childs, who became his wife, she likewise being of Welsh-English ancestry. Their marriage was solemnized in the year 1840, and they came to America on their wedding tour, their marriage having been a somewhat romantic one, since the mother of the subject was the daughter of a proud old English 'squire, who made serious objections to her marriage to Mr. Eynon. Her mother died when Mrs. Eynon was a child and she was reared principally in boarding schools and seminaries, so that the paternal authority was not adequate to frustrate her plans to unite her destinies with the man of her choice. Charles Eynon was an expert machinist and patternmaker, and was superintendent of important concerns in England, as was he also after his removal to Canada. He made his home in the town of Thorold, Ontario, during the greater portion of the time after coming to America, and there his death occurred in the year 1898, at which time he was seventy-six years of age. His widow still resides in that place, and of their nine children four are living at the present time, the subject of this review having been the fifth in order of birth.

Alfred C. Eynon was reared in his native province and remained at the parental home until he had attained his legal majority, while he received a good common-school education. At the age of seventeen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the plumber's trade, in which he became an expert artisan, and he continued to be employed as a journeyman in Canada until 1883, when he came to Ohio and passed one year in the city of Cleveland, after which he came to Alliance, Stark county, and entered the employ of the plumbing firm of Oby & Love, eventually becoming foreman of

ALFRED C. EYNON is a native of the province of Ontario, Canada, having been born in the picturesque town of St. Catharines, on the 4th of September, 1859, and coming of their establishment. In 1887, when Mr. Oby organized the firm of Oby & Company and located in Canton, Mr. Eynon came with him to this city, and later the subject secured an interest in the business, the firm of Eynon & Company succeeding that of Oby & Company, while one year later a reorganization took place and the firm name became the A. C. Eynon Plumbing Company, under which the business has since been continued, the concern having been incorporated in October, 1902, and the business now being conducted on the co-operative plan, five of the employes being given an interest in the business. The company does a large and representative business, having the most modern equipments and accessories and executing the highest class of work, so that a high reputation has been gained, insuring the continuous expansion of the enterprise.

Mr. Eynon has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party and is one of the leaders in its local ranks, having been chairman of the Republican central committee of Stark county in 1893, while he has also served efficiently as a member of the Republican executive committee and was chairman of the executive committee of a McKinley day banquet. He has not been a seeker for public office, but has taken a most lively interest in the advancement of the cause of his party and is known also as a thoroughly public-spirited citizen. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and the Knights of Pythias, while both he and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal church, of Canton.

In the city of Alliance, this county, on the 30th of June, 1888, Mr. Eynon was united in marriage to Miss Nellie V. Haun, daughter of George and Lucy Haun, well-known residents of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Eynon have three sons, George A., Charles Chester, and Walter E.

HEZEKIAH CLAPPER was born on the parental homestead, in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 9th of September, 1849, being the third in order of birth of the nine children of John and Elizabeth (Neidig) Clapper, a brief record concerning the children being as follows: Hiram is a successful farmer, of Nimishillen township, this county; Jonas is similarly engaged in Paris township; Harriet maintains her home in Osnaburg township, being a maiden lady; Eliza is the wife of Joseph Barb, and resides in Trumbull county; Levi is a prosperous farmer of Osnaburg township, and John, of Nimishillen township, while William is similarly engaged in Osnaburg township; and Cora is the wife of Henry Royer, of Louisville, this county.

John Clapper, the father of the subject, was probably born in Osnaburg township, while the date of his nativity was 1815, this fact indicating that the family must have become identified with the history of Stark county in the early pioneer epoch. He was a son of Henry Clapper, who emigrated from his native state of Pennsylvania to Stark county, Ohio, and here devoted the residue of his life to agricultural pursuits, having at one time been the owner of the farm upon which our subject now resides, while he contributed materially to the developing of the land of this section from the primeval forest into well cultivated fields—a work which was carried forward by his descendants. John Clapper was reared to maturity amidst the conditions and environments of pioneer life, and the entire span of his useful and honorable life was passed within Osnaburg township, where his early educational advantages were far more limited than was the amount of sturdy labor which fell to his portion in reclaiming the land to cultivation. He became the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of the old homestead farm and also owned for a time the present fine farm of the subject. He was a man of good intellectual powers and inflexible honor in all the relations of life, so that he ever held the unqualified confidence and esteem of his fellow men. He was summoned into eternal rest on the 21st of July, 1901, in the fullness of years and honors, having attained the venerable age of eighty-six years. His widow still survives, at the age of seventy-seven years, and continues to reside on the old homestead, so endeared to her by the associations and memories of the past. John Clapper was originally a Whig in his political proclivities, but identified himself with the Republican party at the time of its organization and thereafter continued a stalwart advocate of its principles. He was a consistent and valued member of the United Brethren church, of which his wife likewise has been a member from her youth. She was born on the farm where she now resides, her father, John Neidig, having come to Stark county from Pennsylvania and cast in his lot among the first settlers of Osnaburg township.

Hezekiah Clapper, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared on the parental farmstead, and received a common school education, while from his boyhood up he has been intimately associated with the great basic art of agriculture, and thus has gained an intimate and valuable knowledge of the most effective methods to be utilized in securing results from the cultivation of the soil of this section, having the advantage of personal and ancestral experience. After his marriage, in 1875, he took charge of his present farm, which he operated for his father until about 1887, when he effected the purchase of the property and has since devoted himself with marked discrimination and judgment to its cultivation, while he has not been denied a full measure of prosperity, being known as one of the substantial and progressive farmers and public-spirited citizens of the township and county. In politics he is staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and both he and his wife are prominent members of the Lutheran church at Mapleton.

On the 8th of April, 1875, Mr. Clapper was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Hein, who was born in Osnaburg township, being a daughter of Powell Hein, who emigrated hither from Germany in the pioneer days. Mrs. Clapper died on the 2d of January, 1887, at the age of thirty-six years, and is survived by five children, namely; John H., Benjamin, Elizabeth L., Viola C., and Alpha T., all of these children remaining at the paternal home, and Elizabeth, who is the wife of Charles Krumlauf, a successful young farmer of Osnaburg township. On the 14th of March, 1889, Mr. Clapper consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Elizabeth Betts, who was born in Columbiana county, this state, a daughter of Henry Betts. No children have been born of this marriage.

WILLIAM STUART is one of the representative business men of the city of Canton, where he has a well equipped and metropolitan furniture establishment, the same being eligibly located at 323, 325 and 327 East Tuscarawas street. He comes of the staunch old Scottish stock of the famous clan Stuart, so well known in the songs and stories of bonnie old Scotland, and his record bears evidence that he possesses those sterling attributes of character which have ever designated the true Scotsman, though he himself is a native of the United States and was reared under its institutions.

William Stuart was born in the immediate vicinity of the city of Baltimore, Maryland, on the 16th of October, 1860, being a son of Harry and Jessie (Fife) Stuart, both of whom were born in Ayrshire, Scotland, where they were reared to maturity. There their marriage was solemnized and after the birth of two of their children they emigrated to America and located in Allegany county, Maryland, later removing to the vicinity of Baltimore, where they passed the remainder of their lives, the father having been engaged in farming and dairying. He was left an orphan when a mere boy and won his own way in the world, providing for the support of a large family, since he and his wife became the parents of ten children after coming to the United States. Harry Stuart died in 1869, at the age of forty-seven years, and his wife passed away in 1871, also aged forty-seven, both having been devoted members of the Presbyterian church and folk of sterling character.

William Stuart was about ten years of age when he became doubly orphaned, and such were the exigencies of the case that his early educational advantages were limited in scope, though he made the best use of the opportunities afforded and later through his own efforts effectively supplemented his rudimentary education, since he attended night school in the Bryant & Stratton Business College in Baltimore and thus was able to fortify himself for the practical responsibilities of an active business career, while he has found the entire course of life a valuable school, being a close observer and profiting from his association with men and affairs. As a boy he became identified with business affairs, receiving his early experience as a clerk in a furniture and carpet store conducted by John Melia, in Baltimore, while later he was for a number of years employed by the Baltimore Furniture Manufacturing Company, and through these associations he gained an intimate knowledge of the details of the furniture business and also of the values of all lines of stock handled, so that in his individual enterprise he is a careful and discriminating buyer. In 1885 Mr. Stuart engaged in the furniture and carpet business in Baltimore, where he conducted operations on his own responsibility for a period of four years, at the expiration of which, in 1889, he came to Canton, Ohio, where he established his present enterprise, which has grown to be one of the leading undertakings of the sort in the city, the large and representative trade having been built up by careful business methods and fair dealings, while the stock is at all times select and comprehensive. He is progressive and energetic and has gained the confidence and good will of the community. In politics, while without personal ambition for official preferment of any description, Mr. Stuart accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party and takes a proper interest in the questions of the hour and in local affairs of a public nature. He and his wife are consistent and active members of the Presbyterian church.

On the 26th of May, 1887, in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, Mr. Stuart was united in marriage to Miss Isabella Eirich, who was born in New York city, being a daughter of Louis Eirich, and of this union has been born one daughter, Jessie I.

GEORGE DUNBAR, SR.—Among the distinguished and honored pioneers of Stark county stood the subject of this brief memoir, who was a man of high intellectuality and exalted character, who was prompt in public affairs, having held offices of distinctive trust and responsibility, and who was known as an able and representative business man of Canton during the long years of his residence here. He was summoned into eternal rest on the 31st of May, 1859, and in his death the community lost an honored and valued citizen. In this connection we may state that the family is of distinguished and patrician Scottish extraction, its original home having been Dunbar castle, whose ruins are still to be seen among the fair highlands of Scotland, the same having been the scene of many historic events. John Dunbar, the founder of the family in America, came hither in the early colonial epoch, having been born and reared in the town of Dunbar, Haddingtonshire, Scotland.

Of the life history of George Dunbar we can not do better than to quote from an appreciative estimate appearing in one of the Canton newspapers at the time of his demise: "When those who have lived long among the pioneers of our state who aided in laying the foundations of society in our community, are removed from us by death, it is becoming that a proper tribute of respect be paid to their memories, and that by this means their names and their virtues may be perpetuated. The subject of this notice had passed far beyond the ordinary limit of human life,—eighty-nine years! How few number so many! The deceased was born in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, on the first day of May, 1770, and was thus six years, two months and two days of age at the time when that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence, was signed. His father, John Dunbar, soon afterward removed to Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, in company with his family, comprising his wife, two sons and one daughter, George being the eldest of the children. The father having been called to participate in the perilous events of the war of the Revolution, was engaged as a commissary, supplying the army of General Washington at Valley Forge with such provisions as he could secure, and while thus engaged he contracted what was then known as camp fever and was brought to his home, where he soon afterward died, leaving his widow and children to struggle along through the trying days that followed, the hardships entailed being the greater by reason of the dangers and uncertainties attending the progress of the great struggle for national independence. Under such conditions and vicissitudes as these George Dunbar was reared to manhood. On the 21st of April, 1796, he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Elliott, and they became the parents of five sons and four daughters, all of whom survived him except one son and one daughter. The first six years after his marriage were passed in Hummelstown, Dauphin county, and at the expiration of this period, in 1802, he removed to Mifflinburg, Northumberland county (now Union county), where he resided until 1814, when he came to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he made his home until 1816, in which year he came to Stark county and located in the little pioneer village of Canton. On the 12th of August of that year he was called upon to mourn the death of his wife. In the autumn of 1821 he married Mrs. Catherine Slusser, who survived him and lived to an advanced age, her death having occurred about 1892. Mr. Dunbar ever manifested a deep interest in the growth and prosperity of Canton. Within the forty years of his residence here he witnessed the gradual and healthy growth of the place until, from a town of three or four hundred inhabitants, it had grown to a city of five thousand population, while since his death the advancement has been still more marked. By his kind and amiable disposition, his integrity, his sympathy with his neighbors in their trials and afflictions, and his fidelity to those stations of public trust which he had been called upon to fill, Mr. Dunbar won for himself the respect, the confidence and the affection of all those by whom he was known. Mr. Dunbar was a notary public and had been mayor of the city and justice of the peace. He and his sons conducted a chair factory and did a flourishing business, manufacturing chairs of all kinds, while their trade extended into all parts of the state. Upon the death of his son George he closed out the business and thereafter lived retired until his death. He was at one time a member of the Ohio legislature, and during his term of service rode to and from the capital city of Columbus on horseback, this being prior to the era of railroad building."

Mr. Dunbar was a man of fine intellectual gifts and mature judgment and was well fitted for leadership in thought and action. His opinions were always well fortified and he never lacked the courage to defend them, though he was always tolerant and chairitable in his judgment of others and his sympathy for those in affliction was instant and helpful. In politics he gave his allegiance to the Democratic party and was an active worker in its local ranks, while his religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church. No children were born of his second marriage, and of those of the first union we enter the following brief data: John, who was a talented portrait painter, died in Canton in 1877, and his grandchildren, Paul and Ella Rider, are now the only descendants of the family living in Canton; George died in 1851; William was a representative member of the bar of Mt. Vernon, Ohio; Allison was for a number of years sheriff of Stark county; Horace was a successful and prominent lawyer of the county; Mary became the wife of Eli Sowers; Elizabeth married Hiram Myers; Margaret was the wife of Doctor Sala; and Matilda died unmarried, all of the children being now deceased.

Of the Rider family we may say that it was of staunch German extraction, the name having originally been Von Reuter, while the first representatives in Stark county were Paul and Sarah (Shorb) Rider, who came from Frederick county, Maryland, in 1823, and settled on a section of land in Plain township, where the Plain Center mills now stand. Mr. Rider having erected the first mill on that site. Mr. Rider died shortly after the erection of the mill. The children of their son Louis Dubarth Rider are now the only representatives of the family in Stark county, as are they also of the Dunbar family, as has been previously intimated.

JEREMIAH E. SHEARER was born on the fine farmstead which is now his home, in Osnaburg township, the date of his nativity having been April 23, 1837. He was the second in order of birth of the ten children of Adam and Eliza (Clapper) Shearer, and of the number six survive, namely; Harriet, who is the wife of Jeremiah Herslberger, of Osnaburg township; Jeremiah E., the immediate subject of this review; William, who is a resident of Waco, this county; Hezekiah, who is a successful farmer of Osnaburg township; Fleanora, who resides in the home of her brother William; and Charity, who is the wife of William Tate, of Zoar, Tuscarawas county. Adam Shearer, father of the subject, was born in York county, Pennsylvania, in 1809, the family having been established in the Keystone state at an early epoch in its history, the original American progenitors having emigrated thither from Germany. He bore the full patronymic of his father, Adam Shearer, Sr., who came to Stark county, Ohio, about the year 1814, two of his brothers, John and Henry, and his sister, Catherine, having come here a short time previously, their father, Jacob Shearer, having acquired three quarter-sections of wild land in Osnaburg township and transferred the same to his children, in order to afford them a start in life. The father of our subject was a child of about five years at the time of his parents' removal to Stark county, and he was reared to maturity on the pioneer farm, early beginning to lend his aid in reclaiming the land and placing it under cultivation, while his educational advantages were perforce very limited, owing to the exigencies of time and place. He gave inception to his independent career by locating on a tract of eighty acres of heavily timbered land, in Osnaburg township, erecting a log house upon the same and setting himself vigorously to the task of clearing off the forest and otherwise improving the place, his previous experience giving him a certain facility in the handling of his arduous work. After bringing a considerable portion of the land under effective cultivation he disposed of the property and purchased the eighty acres now owned by Daniel Dehoff, in the same township, and there he remained eleven years, at the expiration of which he sold his farm and purchased from General Augustine, who had been an officer in the war of 1812 and who was one of the honored pioneers of Stark county, the farm of one hundred and sixty acres which constitutes an integral portion of the subject's present fine landed estate. He developed this into one of the best farms in the township, making the best of improvements and showing marked discrimination in his management of his farming enterprise. In 1881 he sold the farm to our subject and removed to the village of Osnaburg, where he lived retired until his death, which occurred in 1884, at which time he was seventy-five years of age. In politics he was originally an old-line Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward gave a staunch support to its principles and policies. His religious faith was that of the Lutheran church, with which he identified himself when a young man.

Eliza (Clapper) Shearer, mother of the subject, was born in Osnaburg township, this county, about the year 1820, being a daughter of Henry Clapper, who came hither from Pennsylvania shortly after the Shearers had here taken up their abode, and here she passed her entire life, honored and loved as a noble, earnest woman and as one whose influence was ever exerted for good. She lived to attain the venerable age of eighty years, her demise occurring in the year 1900, and she likewise was a devoted member of the Lutheran church.

Jeremiah E. Shearer was reared under the influences of the pioneer days and has been a witness of the transitions which have marked the magnificent development of this favored section of the Buckeye state. As a boy he found it his portion to labor arduously and almost consecutively on the home farm, so that he was not able to take full advantage of even the limited educational advantages afforded by the primitive district schools. However, through personal application and association with men and affairs he has effectively supplemented the knowledge which he gained through his somewhat irregular attendance in the schools of the early epoch, being a man of broad information and distinctive business and administrative ability. He was married in 1860, and two years later he left his young wife and their one child at their home and valiantly went forth in response to the call of higher duty, grim-visaged war having reared its horrid front and the rebellious south having taken arms against the nation, which thus became as a house divided against itself. On the 12th of August, 1862, Mr. Shearer enlisted as a private in Company B, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served three years, lacking one month, receiving his honorable discharge, in the city of Cleveland, on the 12th of July, 1865, and having made the record of a true soldier and faithful son of the republic, whose integrity he thus aided in perpetuating for future generations. The regiment was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland and during the greater portion of the time was on detailed duty, in guarding railroads and block houses, having frequent skirmishes and taking part in a number of spirited engagements. After his return home, his father-in-law having died during his absence, Mr. Shearer purchased the latter's farm, on section 27, Osnaburg township, and there he continued to reside about sixteen years, disposing of the property in 1881 and purchasing the old homestead of his father, as has already been noted in this connection. Here he has since maintained his home, having a finely improved and most productive farm of one hundred and seventy-two acres, upon which are fine buildings, including one of the most spacious and attractive residences in the township. Mr. Shearer is essentially progressive in his attitude, and this is not only exemplified in the ability and success with which he has carried forward his farming enterprise, but also in the deep and helpful interest which he has shown in all that tends for the well-being of the community. Though he has never been an aspirant for public office, his signal eligibility has led to his being called upon to serve in the responsible office of township trustee, of which he was incumbent for three terms, his political allegiance being given to the Republican party. Fraternally he vitalizes his interest in his old comrades of the Civil war through his association with the Grand Army of the Republic, affiliating with McKinley Post No. 25, in Canton. He and his wife hold membership in the Evangelical Association and have taken a lively interest in the work of the church.

On the 4th of June, 1860, Mr. Shearer was united in marriage to Miss Rachel Criswell, daughter of William Criswell, a sterling pioneer of Osnaburg township, and of this union seven children have been born, namely: Benjamin F., who is a traveling salesman; Ulysses S. G., who is engaged in the brokerage business in New York city; William, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Osnaburg township; Adam, at home; Homer, who also resides in that city; Grace, who is the wife of Henry Jones, who is associated with the subject in the management of the homestead farm; and John, who died in infancy.

AMOS M. HORST, deceased, was a native of Ohio, having been born in the county of Stark on the 6th day of February, 1864. His father, John Horst, also a native of the same county, was born in the month of December, 1819, and on March 9, 1843, married Barbara Metzler, whose ancestors were among the old and valued people of Lancaster. John Horst was the son of Christian Horst, a native of Lancaster county and a man of considerable local prominence in the community where he lived. Some years after their marriage John Horst and wife disposed of their interests in Pennsylvania and moved to Stark county, Ohio, settling in Tuscarawas township, where the former's death occurred January 29, 1870. He was the father of ten children, all deceased, the widowed mother being the only living representative of the once large and happy family.

Amos M. Horst was reared a farmer and followed that calling in Stark county all his life, having been brought to Tuscarawas township when quite young. He was educated in the public schools and grew up to the full stature of well rounded manhood with a proper conception of the responsibilities of life and a full appreciation of the duties which devolved upon him as a neighbor and a citizen. His habits of industry early led him to plan well and take advantage of opportunities and he prosecuted his labors earnestly, always making it a point to live within his income and add to his surplus against old age or a possible season of adversity, neither of which exigencies were ever realized. By successful management he succeeded in accumulating a valuable estate, his landed property at the time of his death amounting to one hundred and seventy acres, nearly all tillable and highly improved, in addition to which he was also the possessor of large personal interests representing several thousand dollars of capital. Mr. Horst was judicious in his business affairs, succeeded in everything to which he addressed his time and energies and his judgment of men and things was seldom at fault. In politics Mr. Horst was a Republican, but had little inclination to enter the arena as a party worker, though well informed upon the issues of the day. He was reared according to the rather strict but eminently high and correct religious tenets of the Mennonite faith and to the day of his death remained a true and loyal son of the church and one of the most valuable members of the congregation worshipping in Pleasant township.

Mr. Horst was married, November 24, 1886, to Miss Annie Eschleman, of Lawrence township, Stark county, who bore him children as follows: Grace E., born March 4, 1887; Arthur R., born November 13, 1891, died in infancy; Ella, born April 24, 1893, and Ralph, whose birth occurred November 25, 1896.

Mr. Horst was cut down in the very prime of life and in the midst of his usefulness, being a few months past thirty-three when summoned by the grim messenger to join the silent majority. He died June 30, 1898, and in his sad taking off his family suffered the loss of an almost ideal husband and father, the church one of its most faithful and efficient members and the community an honorable, upright, God-fearing citizen, whom all held in the highest confidence and esteem.

Mr. Horst's maternal grandparents were Samuel and Mattie (Sensenich) Metzler, natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. They came to Stark county, Ohio, in 1835 and settled on a farm in Sugar Creek township, later removing to the county of Holmes, where Mr. Metzler died on the 26th day of August, 1850. Subsequently the widow returned to Stark county and here she departed this life February 24, 1882; she bore her husband seven children, three of whom are living at the present time.

Miss Annie Eschleman, who married Amos M. Horst, was born in Lawrence township, Stark county, Ohio, July 3, 1861, the daughter of Samuel and Anna Eschleman, the father a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the mother of Wayne county. Mr. Eschleman was born March 29, 1833, and when about four years old was brought to Stark county by his parents, Abram and Elizabeth Eschleman, of whom mention is made in the biography of Jonas Eschleman, on another page of this volume. He was reared on the farm in Lawrence township where he spent the remainder of his life, became one of the enterprising and successful farmers of that part of the county, owning at one time real estate to the amount of three hundred and sixty-two acres. Of the eleven children born to Samuel and Elizabeth Eschleman eight survive, all highly regarded where they live and reflecting in their conduct the sterling characteristics for which their parents were distinguished. Mrs. Eschleman died June 19, 1888, her husband on the 10th of January, 1896.

MARSHALL C. BARBER.—To the subject of this sketch is accorded the unique distinction of being a descendant of the first white man that settled on the present site of the flourishing city of Canton. According to the most reliable information obtainable, the individual referred to was Harry Barber, a native of Connecticut, who about the beginning of the nineteenth century penetrated the wilderness to the present site of Steubenville, from which point, in 1804, he moved his family over the old Indian trail into what is now Stark county and located on Nimishillen creek, selecting for his home what has long been known in local annals as the old Sherrick place, not far from the northern limits of the city, but within the corporation. The fact of his having been the first settler was long a matter of dispute among old residents and local historians, but Peter Lautzenheiser, who was known to have been here in 1806, stated that upon his arrival Mr. Barber and family were the only white people living in this part of the county and that there were no evidences of any others having preceded them. The fact has also been verified by other incontrovertible proofs, in the light of which the honor of having paved the way of civilization into what is now one of the most enterprising and progressive sections of Ohio, and to have been the first white man to erect his humble cabin where one of the commonwealth's most flourishing cities and important industrial and business centers stands will always belong to the sturdy old pioneer whose claims to it appear so well founded.

Harry Barber and family lived a number of years where they originally settled and he appears to have been a striking example of the strong, fearless, industrious pioneer of the early times. He cleared a farm, provided as well for those dependent upon him as circumstances would admit, lived peaceably with the Indians, and spent much of his time in pursuit of game, with which the country then abounded, having been a natural hunter and an unerring shot with the rifle. In an early day he hauled from his farm stone for the foundations for many of the first buildings in Canton, among which was the block on what was formerly known as the Hazlett corner, now the McKinley block. Subsequently Mr. Barber disposed of his interests here and moved to Lockport, Tuscarawas county, where he purchased land, developed a farm, and spent the remainder of his days, and where a monument now stands to his memory. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and preceding and following that struggle took an active part in the campaigns against the Indians throughout the northwest. After his death his widow returned to Canton and spent the rest of her life with her son, the subject's father. She is remembered as a most genial and lovable old lady and would frequently entertain her grandchildren by narrating her thrilling experiences on the frontier. By kind treatment, she won the friendship of the Indians, among whom she lived a number of years, gave them sugar and other things they craved, nursed their sick and in many other ways demonstrated an interest in them, which they were not slow to recognize and appreciate. She died in Canton many years ago, at the advanced age of eighty years, and her memory, like a benediction, is still cherished and revered by her descendants.

Harry Barber reared a family of five children, namely: William, James, John, Leonard and Harry, some of whom moved to western states and all of whom have exchanged the earthly life for the life eternal. William Barber, the eldest of these sons, and father of the subject of this review, was born on the old farm, within the present limits of Canton, and grew to manhood among the stormy scenes and varied vicissitudes of the pioneer period. When a lad of twelve years he drove stage from Canton via Waynesburg and Carrollton to Steubenville, and on attaining his majority was made superintendent of the line. He followed staging exclusively until the completion of the Ft. Wayne Railroad, when he opened a livery and sale stable in Canton, to which business, with the exception of a few years on a farm, he devoted the remainder of his life. He married, in Canton, Miss Fredericka Houk, a native of Germany, who was brought by her parents to the United States, when a child and who lived for some time thereafter in Pennsylvania. Subsequently her family moved to Canton, where she was reared to womanhood. William Barber died in this city about the year 1886 and his wife was called to the other life two years later. They had children as follows: Mary, deceased wife of George Buckius; Preston, who served four years in the late Civil war, married a Miss Allen, and died some years ago in Akron; Marshall C., the subject of this sketch, is the third in order of birth; Lavenia, now Mrs. John Yost, lives in Canton, as does Orrin, the next in succession; Edward is a resident of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and Emma, the youngest, who became the wife of Charles Pence, is not living.

Marshall C. Barber was born in the city of Canton, on the 23d day of July, 1847. Here he grew to manhood's estate, enjoying the advantages of the city schools, and on attaining his majority he began life in the grain business, in connection with which he was also interested for a considerable time in the manufacture of flour. He followed the grain trade in Canton for a number of years, bought and shipped large quantities to the eastern markets, and met with encouraging success from his undertaking. Later he followed the same line of business in New York, but Canton has been the scene of his most extensive operations, and it was in this city that his success was mainly achieved. In 1890 Mr. Barber, with several other parties, organized a company for the purpose of building an opera house in Canton, he being made secretary, treasurer and business manager of the enterprise. In due time the present large, imposing structure was erected, a building meeting all the requirements for which designed and reflecting great credit not only on the projectors, but upon the city as well. Since its completion the management has been in the hands of Mr. Barber, who spares no pains to furnish the people a comfortable, elegantly appointed and thoroughly up-to-date place of public entertainment, one of the finest buildings of the kind in the state and comparing favorably with the best opera houses in the metropolitan cities of the country.

Mr. Barber, on August 20, 1873, contracted a matrimonial alliance with Miss Mary Saxton, who has borne him seven children, the oldest of whom, a son by the name of James, died a few years ago in Hong-Kong, China, while in the discharge of his duties as assistant paymaster of the United States navy; Mary, the second of the family, married Ralph Hartzell and at the present time resides in Denver, Colorado; George is in business in New York city; John is past assistant paymaster in the United States navy on the cruiser "Tonpeka;" Ida is the wife of Luther Day, a son of Hon. William R. Day, formerly secretary of state in President McKinley's cabinet, now associate justice of the supreme court of the United States; William is a student of Yale College and Kate, the youngest of the number, is prosecuting her literary studies in Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts.

Mr. Barber has long been interested in the material prosperity of Canton and, like all good citizens, takes pride in the city and has faith in its future. He is public spirited to the extent of encouraging all laudable enterprises having for their object the social, intellectual and moral as well as the material welfare of the community, and lends his influence to every legitimate agency, for the accomplishment of these ends. In politics he supports the Republican party, but has never been an office seeker nor an aspirant for any kind of public honor.

WILLIAM L. STOLZENBACH is a native of the Buckeye state, having been born in the town of Roseville, Muskingum county, Ohio, on the 4th of May, 1861, and being a son of Henry and Louise (Jockers) Stolzenbach, the former of whom was born in the city of Hamburg, Germany, and the latter in Zanesville, Ohio, of German lineage. The father of the subject came to America when a young man, having learned the trade of tanner in his fatherland, and to this vocation he continued to devote his attention for many years, while he is now living retired in Lima, where he removed some fourteen years ago. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the Lutheran church. To them were born seven children, of whom all are living. William L. Stolzenbach was reared in his native town and in the city of Zanesville, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of eighteen years, when he secured a position as traveling salesman for a mercantile house in Roseville, continuing to be thus employed for four years, at the expiration of which he became associated with his brother-in-law, James W. McCoy, in the general merchandise trade in his native town of Roseville, where they successfully continued operations for several years. Mr. Stolzenbach then disposed of his interests to his partner and removed to Lima, Allen county, where he entered into partnership with his brother, Charles F., in the baking business, remaining there until 1894, when he came to Canton and established his present business, having at the present time a finely equipped establishment, with the most modern and approved facilities for the turning out of the best order of bakery goods in all lines, while he employs the best class of assistants in the various departments, so that the best attainable results are at all times assured. The business requires the use of six wagons and much of the product is shipped to outside points. In politics he is a stanch Republican, his religious faith is that of the Lutheran church, both he and his wife being members of Trinity church, of this denomination, in Canton, and fraternally he holds membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the county board of review, having been appointed to the same in May, 1903, for one year.

On the 30th of December, 1885, in Roseville, Muskingum county, Mr. Stolzenbach was united in marriage to Miss Lulu Brown, who was born and reared in that county, being a daughter of James Brown. The subject and his estimable wife have won a wide circle of friends in Canton, and their pleasant home is one in which a genuine spirit of hospitality is ever in evidence. They have four children, namely: Lawrence, Jacob, Henry and Harold.

MILLARD FILLMORE TAYLOR is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in the town of Leechburg, Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, on the 24th of December, 1856. He was reared to manhood in his native place, where he received excellent educational advantages, having completed the curriculum of the public schools and thereafter supplemented this discipline by a course of study in the Leechburg Academy, while he also studied the higher branches and took a special commercial course while prosecuting his regular course in this institution, being thus able to well fortify himself for the active responsibilities of life. Mr. Taylor left school at the age of eighteen years and then entered a drug store and began to devote careful attention to the study and practical work of pharmacy. He was employed as a drug clerk for several years, and in 1879 he engaged in the general merchandise business in Leechburg, continuing the enterprise until 1886, when he established himself in the drug business in the same town, conducting the same most successfully until 1894, when he became associated with other citizens of Leechburg in the organization of the Canton Rolling Mill Company, of which he was chosen secretary, the headquarters and mill of the concern being established in Canton, Ohio, within that year. He continued to be actively identified with this concern, in the capacity noted, until the absorption of the business by the American Sheet Steel Company, in 1899, and he then became an interested principal in the Carnahan Stamping & Enameling Company, of which he is at the present time secretary and treasurer, the enterprise being one of the important industries of the city. Mr. Taylor is a man of initiative power and has shown progressive spirit by identifying himself with other enterprises. He is vice-president of the A. P. Gould Dental Chair Manufacturing Company, of Canton, and is national secretary of the Lincoln Insurance Company.

Mr. Taylor is intrinsically public-spirited, taking an active interest in all that concerns the moral, intellectual and material welfare of his home community. He has ever given a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, and while a resident of his native town in Pennsylvania was called upon to serve in various offices of public trust. He is a member of the Republican Club of Canton and takes a lively interest in the party cause, while he was a member of the speakers' committee on the memorable occasion of the birthday banquet tendered in honor of the late President McKinley in his home city in 1903. Fraternally Mr. Taylor has completed the circle of York rite Masonry and has advanced to the fourteenth degree (Grand Lodge of Perfection) in the Scottish rite, while he is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. He was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and from his youth up has been a devoted member of the same. He is at the present time a member of the board of trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton, having been elected to this position in 1895, at which time President McKinley was likewise chosen a member of the board. He is also a member of the board of managers of the Canton Young Men's Christian Association. In the First Methodist Episcopal church he is chairman of the committee on music and also has charge of the music in the Sunday school, while he takes an active part in all departments of the church work. He has a cultured musical taste, as have also the other members of his family, and their attractive home, at 120 West Lake street, is a center of gracious hospitality, the refined amenities being there even in distinctive evidence, while the entire family are devoted members of the Methodist church. In Leechburg, Pennsylvania, Mr. Taylor was prominently concerned in effecting the erection of the present fine edifice of the Methodist Episcopal church, his father having been one of the pillars of the church from the early days, and his home having been ever open to the itinerant clergyman and others who were actively engaged in church work. He erected the first Methodist church in Leechburg and was a man who commanded the most unequivocal confidence and esteem in the community in which practically his entire life was passed.

In Leechburg, Pennsylvania, on the 19th of September, 1878, Millard Fillmore Taylor was married to Miss Anna Maria Schwalm, who was born in that place, being a daughter of John and Sarah (Smail) Schwalm, representatives of old and honored Pennsylvania families. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have three children, Royal and Raymond, who are twins, the latter being organist of the First United Brethren church in Canton; and Helen Marie, who likewise remains at the parental home, the family being prominent in the social life of the city.

Mr. Taylor's father, John Taylor, was born in the western part of Pennsylvania, and resided in the town of Leechburg from his boyhood days until his death on Monday of the week of President McKinley's death, in 1902, at the age of seventy-seven years. He was a man of fine intellectuality and spotless integrity of character, wielding a beneficent influence in the community where he lived and labored to so goodly ends. In his youth he learned the trades of tanning and harnessmaking, and to the same he devoted his attention for a long term of years, while he became known as one of the prominent and influential business men of the town. His wife, whose maiden name was Julia Bair, was likewise a native of the Keystone state, where she passed her entire life, her death occurring in 1885, at which time she was fifty-two years of age. She was a noble and devoted Christian woman, and the family home was one which fully justified the name. This worthy couple became the parents of seven children, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: George B. is a resident of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania; Mary C. is the wife of Jacob H. Parks, of Leechburg; Millard F., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Harriet C. is the wife of Samuel M. McCracken, of Leechburg; Charles G. is a resident of Canal Dover, Stark county, Ohio; William L. is engaged in business in Canton, this county; and J. Siebert is a resident of Janesville, Wisconsin.

Matthew Taylor, grandfather of the subject, was born and reared in England, whence he emigrated to America as a young man, his birth having occurred in the year 1797. He was a merchant tailor by trade and was engaged in this line of work in Leechburg for a number of years, but in later life was identified with various other lines of enterprise. He died at the age of eighty-eight years, while his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Crawford and who was born in Pennsylvania, of Scotch-Irish descent, passed away at the age of seventy-five years.

ATLEE POMERENE.—An able and representative member of the bar of Stark county, Mr. Pomerene comes of distinguished French ancestry in the agnatic line, his great-grandfather having come to America as a member of the staff of General Lafayette and having served most valiantly until the close of the war of the Revolution, after which he established his home in the state of Pennsylvania, where he secured a grant of land. There was born his son Julius, grandfather of the subject, and he was reared to agricultural pursuits which he followed in the old Keystone state up to the time of his emigration to Ohio, where he became a pioneer farmer of Holmes county. He married Miss Elizabeth Piersol, and both died in Holmes county, honored by all who knew them. Peter P. Pomerene, M. D., the father of him whose name initiates this paragraph, was born in Holmes county, Ohio, in the year 1832, and was there reared to maturity. He became one of the leading medical practitioners of that section of the state, where he continued in practice for forty years, while in the early period of professional labors he prosecuted the same under circumstances which called for the utmost self-abnegation and devotion. He was reared under the discipline of the pioneer farm and received his early educational discipline in the district schools of Holmes county and in a seminary in Medina county, after which he was for a time engaged in teaching school. He studied medicine under the direction of his older brother, Dr. Joel Pomerene, who was later a surgeon during the war of the Rebellion, having been thus attached to the regiment commanded by General Garfield. Later Dr. Peter P. Pomerene continued his technical studies in Cleveland, Ohio, and eventually was matriculated in Jefferson Medical College, in the city of Philadelphia, where he was graduated. He was a man of fine intellectual and professional attainments and was one of the influential and honored citizens of Holmes county, where he died in 1892, having been for some time a member of the faculty of the Ohio Medical University, in Columbus, of which position he was incumbent at the time of his demise. He was reared in the faith of the Baptist church, with which the family has long been identified.

In his native county Dr. Pomerene was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Wise, who was born in the same county in 1841, and who still maintains her home in the village of Berlin, where she has resided for so many years and where she is sustained and comforted by the affection of a wide circle of friends. Dr. Pomerene ever gave an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, taking a deep interest in local affairs of a public nature and being particularly active in promoting the cause of education. He was twice married, the maiden name of his first wife having been Loretta Maxwell, and of his eleven children the subject of this sketch was the eldest of the children born of the second marriage.

Atlee Pomerene was born in the parental homestead, in Berlin, Holmes county, Ohio, on the 6th of December, 1863, and after availing himself of such advantages as were afforded in the public schools of his native village he entered the Vermilion Institute, at Hayesville, Ashland county, where he also acted as tutor for one year. He thereafter secured admission to the junior class in Princeton College, New Jersey, where he was graduated in 1884, as one of the honor men of his class. He then located in the city of Cincinnati, where he began the reading of law under the direction of General Durbin Ward, later being matriculated in the Cincinnati Law School where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1886, and while a student in this institution he secured the prize in a debating contest. Soon after graduating from this college Mr. Pomerene came to Canton, and entered into a professional partnership with Major Charles R. Miller, who is now a resident of the city of Cleveland, and this alliance continued until July, 1901, after which Mr. Pomerene conducted an individual practice about six months, at the expiration of which he entered into partnership with Robert S. Shields, under the firm name of Shields & Pomerene, which association still obtains, the firm having well equipped offices in the Eagle Block.

Mr. Pomerene is one of the leaders in the local ranks of the Democratic party and is a prominent worker in the cause of the same, while he has been called upon to serve in positions of trust and responsibility in the gift of the voters of Stark county and touching the technical work of the profession for which he has been so thoroughly well trained. In 1887 he was elected city solicitor of Canton, in which office he served two terms of two years each. In 1896 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Stark county, with a majority of six hundred and twenty. The county is strongly Republican and he being the only candidate elected on the Democratic ticket since 1892. He was incumbent of this office until 1900, and within his term as prosecutor he was identified with many important cases, including the trial of the murderer of George B. Saxton, in which he handled the prosecution with marked ability and discrimination, adding much to his prestige as an advocate. He served one year as a member of the board of education and has at all times shown a marked interest in all that makes for the well-being of his home city and county, while his course has been such as to retain to him the unequivocal confidence and regard of his professional confreres and also of the general public. Mr. Pomerene is president of the William R. Hearst Democratic Club, of Canton, and fraternally he is identified with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he has the distinction of being past exalted ruler. Mr. Pomerene is a stockholder of the Canton Steel Roofing Company and a member of its board of directors, thus representing one of the important industrial enterprises of the county.

On the 29th of June, 1892, Mr. Pomerene was united in marriage to Miss Mary Bockius, daughter of Lewis V. and Caroline (Graham) Bockius, of Canton, and they are prominent in the social life of the city.

JUDGE HENRY A. WISE was born on the old homestead farm, near Middlebranch, Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 11th of September, 1845, and there also occurred the birth of his father, Aaron S. Wise, on the 25th of January, 1819, this fact indicating that the family came to the county in the early pioneer epoch. Aaron S. Wise was reared to maturity under the invigorating discipline of the farm, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the district schools of the time and locality. In 1843 he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Houser, who was born in Nimishillen township, this county, on the 5th of January, 1825, being a daughter of Martin Houser, who was one of the pioneers of that township, and who was a son of Martin Houser, Sr., who was located in Pennsylvania prior to the war of the Revolution, in which he was an active participant. He was taken prisoner by the Indians, in company with a companion, and they were held in captivity for a period of three years, when they effected their escape by secret- ing themselves in a hollow log until the Indians had passed. The father of the subject passed his entire life in Stark county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and also ran a general store and flouring mill and tannery, and here his death occurred in the year 1858, his funeral services being held on the 4th of July of that year. There his parents also died, having been folk of sterling character and having lived lives of honor and usefulness, as did also their children, who did not depart from the lines of rectitude along which they had been so carefully and conscientiously trained. The mother of the subject is still living, and resides in Canton. Of her five children we enter the following brief record: Phoebe, who became the wife of Philip R. Thompson, died in 1891, leaving one child, Catherine, who is now the wife of Joseph Hartzell, of Canton; Henry A., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Aurelia died in infancy; Amanda is also deceased; and Ella is the wife of Walter S. Chance, of Washington, D. C.

Henry A. Wise passed his boyhood days on the old homestead farm, securing his early educational training in the district schools and thereafter attending the high school in Canton. He later entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was a student for two years, taking the scientific course. In 1867 he was matriculated in the Dennison University at Granville, Ohio, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1870, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After leaving college he began reading law in the office of and under the direction of Alexander Bierce, an able member of the Canton bar, and two years later he was admitted to the bar of the state. He forthwith established himself in the practice of his profession in this city, associating himself with Anson Pease, who was subsequently elected to the bench of the court of common pleas. They continued to be associated in practice about ten years, the firm gaining marked precedence and retaining a representative clientage, while Mr. Wise gained a high reputation both as an advocate and a safe and conservative counsellor. He has in the past appeared in connection with much important litigation, and has shown himself well versed in the law and facile in the application of his broad and exact knowledge of the science of jurisprudence. In July, 1882, Judge Wise was appointed to serve out the unexpired term of Timothy Sullivan in the office of county treasurer, and at the end of the term, in September of the following year, he accepted the position as cashier of the City National Bank, remaining incumbent of the same until the autumn of the year 1890, when he resigned the office and was engaged in the practice of his profession until the following spring, when he was elected vice-president of the Farmers' Bank, to which institution he gave his attention until taking his seat as judge of the probate court in February, 1894, having been elected to that office the previous November. He was incumbent of this office until February, 1900, and his administration was one of signal discrimination and ability. The popular appreciation of his efforts in this connection was signified by his having been re-elected for the second term. Since his retirement from the office Judge Wise has not been engaged in the practice of his profession, devoting his time and attention to his various financial and real estate interests. During the year 1901 he was secretary and treasurer of the Canton & Malvern Fire-brick Paving Company, remaining in tenure of this dual office until the plant and business was sold. For fifteen years he was treasurer of the Stark County Agricultural Society, in whose promotion he took a most zealous interest. He is president of the Canton Cemetery Association and vice-president of the Dime Savings Bank, of this city, and also has farming interests in Jackson township and other real-estate investments of importance. Since 1862 he has made his home with his widowed mother in Canton.

In May, 1864, Judge Wise enlisted as a private in Company B, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued in service until the expiration of his term of enlistment, when he received an honorable discharge. In politics he has ever accorded an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, his first presidential vote having been cast in support of General Grant. The Judge has attained the thirty-second degree in the Scottish-Rite Masonry, affiliating with the consistory at Cleveland, Ohio, while he had the distinction of being the first eminent commander of Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar. He is also identified with Canton Lodge No. 68, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Nimishillen Lodge No. 39, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and McKinley Post No. 25, of the Grand Army of the Republic.

ISAAC N. DAGER.—Jacob Dager, father of the subject, was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, on the 29th of September, 1814. His parents were Jacob and Catherine (Hewitt) Dager, of Pennsylvania, while his grandfather, Martin Dager, was a native of Germany. Jacob Dager was reared under the parental roof and remained there until his twenty-eighth year. In the meantime he had acquired a good practical education and became qualified for the profession of teaching, which he followed for about five years in the home locality. He was ambitious to broaden his knowledge and between his terms of school applied himself to the study of the higher branches in Washington College, in his native state. In 1840 he came to Carroll county, Ohio, teaching during the winter months and devoting the summers to the arduous toil of clearing the heavy growth of timber from his newly-purchased farm. In the spring of 1853 he purchased the farm which his son, John H., now owns and added to it from time to time until he at length possessed a splendid tract of two hundred and eighty acres. The locality was remarkably well adapted to stock-raising and Mr. Dager combined this with farming, and it may be said with perfect truthfulness that no other man in all this part of Ohio did so much to advance the interests of sheep breeding and raising as did Mr. Dager. He first introduced Merino sheep into his township and at all the fairs and exhibits for a number of years carried off all the premiums on this breed of sheep. He was financially successful in all his operations, particularly in connection with his sheep industry. On the 8th of November, 1838, Mr. Dager and Miss Eleanor Hastings were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, a union which was blessed by the birth of five children, of whom two survive, John H. and the subject. Jacob Dager died on the 4th of March, 1889. In all political matters he allied himself with the Democratic party and, though never what might be termed an office seeker, he served several terms as trustee of his township and for many years filled the office of justice of the peace. All in all, he was widely known and highly respected and few men exerted so potent an influence in his township as did he.

Isaac N. Dager was born in Carroll county, Ohio, on the 17th of December, 1846, and was reared under the parental roof. He acquired his preliminary mental discipline in the common schools and supplemented this with attendance at Mt. Union College. At the age of nineteen years he commenced teaching school, continuing this occupation four winters. About the time of his marriage, in 1868, he settled upon the farm on which he now resides, it then comprising one hundred and twenty acres and having been given him by his father. He continued to teach school for two winters after his marriage, attending to his farm duties during the summers, but has since then devoted almost all his attention to agriculture. He is thoroughly up-to-date in his methods and is accounted one of the substantial farmers of his township.

In 1868 Mr. Dager was united in marriage with Miss Rachel Gibler, also a native of Carroll county. To them have been born four children, of whom three survive, as follows: Ida Viola, wife of Byron B. Bowman, of Robertsville, Ohio; and Eleanor F. and Hannah R., at home. The subject is a Democrat in his political adherency, has taken an active part in advancing the interests of his party and for many years served as a member of the school board. Fraternally he is a member of Juilliard Lodge No. 460, Free and Accepted Masons, and in his daily life exemplifies the beneficent principles of that time-honored fraternity. As an agriculturist Mr. Dager has long enjoyed the reputation of being a leader among his fellow citizens of Osnaburg township. He cultivates the soil according to the latest and most improved methods, and, believing husbandry to be a science worthy of the most careful thought, is very thorough in all he attempts and seldom fails to reap abundant harvests as a reward for the care and toil expended.

JOHN F. SPITLER comes of stanch German ancestry in both the agnatic and maternal lines, and the name which he bears became early identified with the annals of the state of Pennsylvania, from which commonwealth his grandfather, Christian Spitler, emigrated to Summit county, Ohio, in the pioneer epoch of its history, having been a cabinetmaker by trade and vocation and having become the pioneer undertaker of Greensburg, Summit county, where he died when well advanced in years. Darius Spitler, father of the subject, was born in that town, in 1846, and there learned the trade of cabinetmaker under the effective direction of his honored father, while, being the eldest of three sons, he carried on the business after the death of his father. At the age of sixteen years, against the wishes of his father, he tendered his services in defense of the Union, joining three other boys of Greensburg and going to Indiana, where they enlisted, Mr. Spitler becoming a private in Company F, Twelfth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, with which he rendered valiant service during two years of the war of the Rebellion, being then discharged by reason of physical disability and having been taken prisoner at Richmond, Virginia, being held in captivity for some time and then released on parole. His regiment participated in many important campaigns and he had his full quota of hard service. His father died soon after Darius returned home, and the latter then assumed charge of the undertaking and cabinetmaking business in Greensburg, where he remained until 1862, when he came to Canton, where he was for a time engaged in the same line of enterprise, after which he was employed in the plow factory of Ephraim Ball, of this city, and later in the wood-working department of the Aultman shops, while at the present time he is incumbent of a responsible position with the Ohio Table Company, at Massillon, this county. In politics he has been a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining his majority, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which his wife likewise is a devoted member.

In the city of Canton, on the 18th of September, 1864, Darius Spitler was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Boom, who was born in Canton, in 1848, being a daughter of Conrad and Mary Boom, both of whom were born and reared in Germany, where they married, and shortly after this event came to America and located in Canton, where their seven children were born. Here Mr. Boom was a pioneer shoemaker and cobbler, having been for many years engaged in business on East Tuscarawas street, and here he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. Darius and Margaret (Boom) Spitler became the parents of five children, namely: Elta, who is the wife of Charles Diebold, of Cleveland, Ohio; John F., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Forest, who is in the employ of the Albrecht Company, of Akron, Ohio; Oscar, who is stenographer at the Best Street Light Company, of Canton; and Howard, who is likewise a resident of this city and employed as estimating clerk in the office of the J. H. Eller Company, of this city.

John F. Spitler was born in the city of Canton, on the 23d of May, 1868, and here he attended the public schools until he had completed the studies of the eighth grade. He then determined that it was expedient for him to initiate his independent career, and accordingly he secured a position in the cabinet department of the Diebold safe works, where as a boy of fifteen years he secured six cents an hour in recompense for his services, while later he supplemented his educational discipline by taking a thorough course in the Canton Business College in bookkeeping and stenography. In 1890 Mr. Spitler became clerk and stenographer in the office of Baldwin & Shields, a representative law firm of Canton, at the same time taking up the study of law with the Sprague Correspondence School of Law, of Detroit, Michigan. With this law firm he remained for the long period of ten years, at the expiration of which the firm was dissolved, Judge Baldwin having been appointed by President McKinley consul to Nuremberg. In the meanwhile Mr. Spitler had acquired an excellent knowledge of the law and of the various publications pertaining thereto, so that he was distinctively eligible for the preferment which then came to him in his appointment by the court, February 1, 1900, over ten other applicants, to his present office of librarian of the Stark County Law Library Association, in which capacity he has rendered most efficient service, his management of the library having gained him the unequivocal commendation of the members of the bar, who have not failed to manifest their appreciation of his fidelity and scrupulous care. In October, 1902, Mr. Spitler was appointed by the trustees of Canton township, justice of the peace, to fill out the unexpired term of T. C. Snyder, entering upon the discharge of his official duties on October 16, 1902. He has devoted no little attention to the reading of law in the past few years, and is thus specially well qualified for the handling of this judicial office. In April, 1903, Mr. Spitler was elected by the people to succeed himself as justice of the peace, for a term of three years, receiving the largest plurality of any of the candidates on the Republican ticket at said election. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with several of the prominent fraternal orders in Canton.

On the 2d of September, 1891, Mr. Spitler was united in marriage to Miss Rose L. Bechele, who was born and reared in Canton, being a daughter of John Bechele, a well known and honored citizen of the county, and of this union have been born two children, Viola and Arthur.

PROF. EDMUND A. JONES is one of Ohio's distinguished educators and for over a quarter of a century he has been at the head of the public schools of Massillon, of which city he is an honored and influential citizen. He is a New Englander by birth and an Ohioan by adoption. He was born February 11, 1842, at Rockville, Massachusetts, and is a son of Elisha Adams and Rhoda (Ellis) Jones. His great-grandfather was Simpson Jones, a native of Medway, Massachusetts, and an agriculturist by occupation. Elisha Adams Jones, grandfather of the Professor, was born in Massachusetts in 1781 and died in 1860. He was well educated, taught school many years, and in later life was a farmer. He was prominent in his community and served as a captain of the Massachusetts militia. Elisha Adams Jones, second, the subject's father, was born in October, 1815, and died in October, 1899. He was also a teacher and followed farming. Rhoda Ellis, the Professor's mother, was born in Medway, Massachusetts, in 1820 and was the daughter of Moses Ellis, also a native of Massachusetts, and a descendant of one of the old families of that commonwealth. She was a lady of more than ordinary intelligence and education, having been a student of the old Bradford Academy. Her death occurred in 1873.

Professor Jones received his early education in the common schools, and was fitted for college at Mt. Hollis Academy. In 1860 he entered Amherst College, where he pursued his studies for two years, leaving the college in the fall of 1862 to enlist in Company B, Forty-second Massachusetts Regiment of Infantry. With the Forty-second he was sent first to New Orleans to join Banks' expedition.

The first battle he participated in was Bayou LaFourche, in June, 1863, in which engagement he was seriously wounded in the left shoulder. While the wound was most painful and needed attention, he was compelled to remain on duty for three days thereafter, before he was ordered to New Orleans to have it properly dressed. He held the rank of fifth sergeant, and was recommended by his lieutenant-colonel for promotion for meritorious service. He was honorably discharged and mustered out of service at Boston, in July, 1863. He soon resumed his studies at Amherst College, where, in 1865, he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and three years later received the degree of Master of Arts. While at Amherst he was president of the sophomore class of '64, and of the senior class of '65.

Professor Jones began his educational work in 1865 as professor of Latin and gymnastic instructor at Lake Forest, Illinois. At the close of his second year he was made associate principal, and so continued until the fourth year, when he was advanced to the post of principal of the academy. In October, 1869, he came to Massillon as superintendent of the city schools, in which position he served for four years, then resigned to accept a similar position at Marietta, Ohio, to which he had been elected without solicitation on his part and without ever having even met a member of the board of education of that city. But so pleased had been the people of Massillon with his administration of school affairs in their city that in 1875 he was elected and induced to accept the superintendency at this place again, and from that time on he has continued at the head of the city schools, his administration proving so uniformly successful and satisfactory that he has been re-elected from time to time practically without opposition. For ten or twelve years Professor Jones was a member of the board of examiners for Stark county, and was president of the board several years. In 1889 he was elected principal of the West Cleveland high school at an advanced salary, but the Massillon board of education, unwilling to relinquish him, promptly met the raise and retained his services.

Professor Jones was a member of the Ohio state board of examiners from 1887 to 1895, of which board he was made president. He assisted in the organization of the State Teachers' Reading Circle in 1883, and for several years was corresponding secretary and treasurer. He has been a member of the board of control continuously to the present time. He is a member of the Ohio Teachers' Association and in 1892 was president of the same. He has been secretary of the board of trustees of the Charity Rotch School for many years, and treasurer of the McClymonds Public Library. He has been a trustee of the Presbyterian church for twenty years or more, also an elder, and for more than a quarter of a century was superintendent of the Sunday school. He is an active member and past commander of Hart Post No. 134, Grand Army of the Republic, and has been president of the Stark county soldiers' relief commission for sixteen years. He was a delegate to the Grand Army of the Republic national convention at Boston in 1890. He helped to organize the Massillon board of trade, and has served as its secretary from the time of its organization. On June 4, 1903, Professor Jones received the Republican nomination for state commissioner of common schools.

December 23, 1873, Professor Jones married Flora Richards, who was born in Massillon. She was a daughter of Warren C. and Helen (Ford) Richards. One son, Walter Elisha, was born March 4, 1893. There was also a daughter, Flora Ellis, born in December, 1879, but who died the same year. The son graduated from the Massillon high school, afterward attending the Hudson Preparatory School and is now at Amherst College, from which he will graduate in 1904. Professor Jones has long been a popular lecturer before county institutes and teachers' associations. In June, 1903, he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the Ohio University at Athens.

JOHN H. SPRANKLE.—The paternal grandparents of the subject were Michael and Elizabeth Sprankle, the former a well known and influential resident of Bedford county, Pennsylvania. He was the owner of the Bedford mills and was reputed to be the wealthiest man in his native county. Selling his property there in 1815, he removed to Stark county, Ohio, with the declared purpose of becoming the wealthiest man in that county also. But his ambition was not to be realized, as a short time after his arrival he was killed by a falling tree. Upon coming to this county he had entered a large tract of fine land, which upon his death was inherited by his sons. Jacob Sprankle, the father of the subject, after his father's death made his home for two or three years with his brother Michael, when he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Drushal. Soon after his marriage he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land which is now within the city limits of Canton and is the property of Mr. Deuber, the watch manufacturer. Here he resided up to within about a year of his death, when he removed down into the city. He was twice married, there being no issue to the second union. To his marriage with Margaret Drushal were born ten children, of whom but three survive, Anna, the wife of Emanuel Cover, of Michigan; Catherine, wife of Abraham Murphy, of Canton, and the subject.

In politics Jacob Sprankle was a Democrat up to the time of the organization of the Republican party, when he allied himself with the new party and remained faithful to its principles until his death. He was notably successful financially, owning two residences in Canton, and besides his home farm he also owned a farm of one hundred and forty-eight acres in Pike township. He was the owner of the Eagle Woolen Mills, but did not operate this enterprise himself, having rented it to other parties. Religiously he was a member of the German Baptist church and lived a life consistent with his profession. His death occurred in April, 1887.

John H. Sprankle was born in the city of Canton, the date of his birth being September 7, 1829. He was reared under the parental roof and received his education in the common schools of his neighborhood. In May, 1849, at the age of twenty years, the subject went to work in the Eagle mills, where he was employed until 1854, when he left the mill and purchased his present farm, the tract at that time comprising one hundred and ten acres. During subsequent years he added to this tract until eventually he became the possessor of three hundred and twenty acres. He has since sold one hundred and ten acres of this to his sons, now owning two hundred and ten acres. In 1885 he purchased the Osnaburg grist mills, but in December, 1887, they were utterly destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of over eight thousand dollars. Mr. Sprankle has been very successful in his various financial operations and is now one of the heaviest tax payers in his township. For the past fifteen years he has not taken a very active part in business matters, having rented his farm to other parties, though he still makes his home there.

On the 20th of November, 1852, Mr. Sprankle was united in marriage to Miss Anna E. Frey, a native of Osnaburg township and the daughter of Frederick Frey. The latter was a native of Germany, but when a young man fled to this country in order to escape army service, which is compulsory in his native country. Upon his arrival in this country he was the possessor of but six dollars in money, but was energetic, ambitious and economical, and at the time of his death was considered a wealthy man. For a number of years he ran a cooperage shop and a distillery in connection with his farm, making much money in both enterprises. He has also for many years practiced veterinary surgery, with marked success. To the subject and his wife were born six children, four sons and two daughters, of whom those surviving are Henry, a resident of Osnaburg township; Florence, the wife of Louis Loutzenheiser, of Louisville, this county; and John G., who is employed by the American Bridge Works, of Chicago. In politics the subject is a stanch and uncompromising Republican and served one term as trustee of the township, refusing to accept the office longer, though importuned by his friends to do so. Mr. Sprankle is one of the oldest native born residents of Stark county and his life has been closely interwoven with the growth and development of the county. He early realized the necessity of good citizenship and with strong mind and determined purpose addressed himself to the bringing about of this result. He has always been optimistic enough to look upon the bright side, and, unlike the majority of old men, he still retains much of his youthful spirit and is popular with all who know him.

JONATHAN BOWMAN was born in the township in which he now resides, the date of his birth being December 13, 1821. His parents were Samuel and Mary M. (Klinger) Bowman. His father was probably born in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, and in 1817, in company with two brothers, Jacob and John, and a sister, Mrs. Clark, he came to Stark county, Ohio. Here Samuel entered eighty acres of land in Osnaburg township, that is now owned by his son Isaac; Jacob entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in Pike township, and John, after remaining in this county nearly a year returned to his home in Pennsylvania. Samuel Bowman resided upon this farm until his death, which occurred when he was in his seventy-fourth year. He was a Whig in politics and a Lutheran in religious belief. His wife was a native of Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, and survived her husband about seven years, dying at the age of about seventy-seven years. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom three now survive, Benjamin, a resident of Iowa; Isaac, who resides on the old homestead, and the subject.

Jonathan Bowman was reared under the parental roof and secured his education in the common schools. The school facilities at that time were crude and scant in comparison with the splendid system in operation at the present day, but such as it was it was eagerly taken advantage of by the subject, who proved an apt pupil. This education has since been supplemented by a wide and liberal course of reading, covering a long line of topics, and a close observation of men and events, so that today there are in Osnaburg township but few better informed men than the subject. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Bowman became apprenticed to the carpenter's trade and for some ten years followed that occupation, meeting with a fair degree of success. About 1850 Mr. Bowman settled upon the farm whereon he now resides and has since made that his home. This farm was formerly owned by his father-in-law, who died some two years before the subject's marriage.

On the 20th of October, 1850, Jonathan Bowman was united in marriage with Miss Eliza A. Kelly, the daughter of Colonel Richard Kelly, in his day one of the most prominent men in Stark county and at one time a candidate for the legislature on the Whig ticket. He came to Stark county from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, about 1819, buying the farm which is now the home of the subject, on which he resided until his death. He bore an honorable military record, having enlisted for service during the war of 1812 and rose to the rank of captain. To the subject and his wife have been born six children, four of whom survive, namely: Mary is the wife of Isaac Clapper, of Osnaburg; Sadie is the wife of Daniel Myers, of Osnaburg; John B., who is a teacher at Mt. Union College, this state, was for three years superintendent of the Northeast Ohio College at Canfield; Homer is a farmer and has charge of the home farm. In politics the subject is a stanch advocate of Republican principals, believing them to be the most conducive to the welfare of the American people. He possesses sound and well-founded convictions on all public questions and has the courage to express himself upon them when occasion requires. He takes a deep interest in educational matters and for fourteen years was a member of the school board, four years of the time being its president. Religiously he is identified with the Methodist Episcopal church and lends his support to all movements having for their object the welfare of the community and society at large.

JOHN D. FRANK is of the third generation of the family in the United States, his grandfather, George Frank, having been born in the province of Alsace, France, now an integral portion of the German empire, whence he came to America as a young man and located in Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he married and where he continued to reside until 1808, when he came as a pioneer to Stark county, Ohio, taking up a tract of heavily timbered land in Lake township, where he developed a good farm and became one of the wealthy and influential men of the community, both he and his wife passing the residue of their lives on this old homestead.

John Frank, father of the subject, was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1806, and as a boy accompanied his parents on their removal to Stark county, being reared on the pioneer homestead in Lake township, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the common schools of the period. He was self-reliant and independent and gave manifestation to the possession of these attributes by marrying against the wishes of his father, believing that this should be a matter for he himself to decide and having confidence in his ability to make his own way in the world. He accordingly was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Thompson, daughter of John Thompson, who was of Scotch-Irish descent and who was one of the sterling pioneer farmers of Lake township, where his daughter was born and reared. After his marriage Mr. Frank located on a tract of land in Lake township and in course of time he reclaimed a valuable farm and became one of the substantial and representative citizens of that section of the county, where he commanded the high regard of all who knew him. He retired from the farm in 1860 and took up his residence in the village of Uniontown, where he passed the remainder of his life, being summoned into eternal rest in 1886, at the age of eighty years. His first wife, mother of the subject, passed away in 1855, at the age of forty-seven years, having been a devoted member of the United Brethren church. She was survived by her six children, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: Keziah became the wife of George K. Bolander and she died in Michigan; Lewis, deceased; Isaac died in Lake township; Mary Ann, the wife of Ezra Harris, died in Medina county, Ohio; David T. is a resident of the city of Massillon, Stark county; John D. is the immediate subject of this sketch; and Milton F. is a resident of East Liverpool, Columbiana county. After the death of his first wife John Frank married Miss Savilla J. Reynolds, of Springfield, Summit county, by whom he had one child, Elva, who is the wife of William F. Shoner, of Uniontown. Mr. Frank was a Democrat in his political proclivities and his religious faith was that of the United Brethren church, of which he was a consistent and valued member.

John D. Frank was born near the village of Uniontown, Lake township, this county, on the 20th of June, 1847, and he early began to lend his quota in the work of the homestead farm, while his educational opportunities were above the average accorded to the farmer boy of the day, his father being fully appreciative of the value of discipline in this line, so that he did not deny his son such privileges as were in his power to offer. John D. attended the village school in Uniontown, later was a student in the academy at Greensburg, Summit county, and thereafter was matriculated in the Iron City Business College, in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated at the age of eighteen years, being thus thoroughly equipped for the practical duties of life. In May, 1864, when but seventeen years of age, Mr. Frank showed his intrinsic loyalty and patriotism by enlisting as a private in Company G, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for a term of one hundred days, Colonel Ephraim Ball commanding the regiment. The company was raised at Osnaburg and Mapleton. The regiment was assigned to duty in Covington, Kentucky, doing guard duty, and after the expiration of his term of service, having received his honorable discharge, at Camp Chase, in September, 1864, Mr. Frank returned home and for a time assisted his brother, David T., who was at the time engaged in the grain business at Uniontown, and later he was employed as clerk in mercantile establishments at Canaan, Wayne county, and in the city of Sandusky. In 1870 Mr. Frank entered the employ of the firm of Cutter & Howe, in Akron, Ohio, who were there engaged in the shoe business, and he remained with this concern about five years, within which time he gained a thorough knowledge of the business in all its details, while for a time he was a clerk in the shoe store of S. E. Phinney, in the same town. In 1877 he came to Canton and engaged in the shoe business on his own responsibility, his original quarters being one-half of his present store, on the east side of the public square, while the other half was occupied by Calvin and Alfred Herbruck, who were engaged in the jewelry business. Mr. Frank's business rapidly expanded in scope and importance and he soon required the entire store in which he had first located, while in 1889 he also added the store on East Tuscarawas street. His establishment is now one of the most metropolitan and well stocked shoe store in the county, and he caters to a large and representative patronage, being known as one of the reliable, progressive and public-spirited business men of the city, while the extent of his enterprise indicates the personal esteem in which he is held in the community. In politics Mr. Frank gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith is indicated by his holding membership in Trinity Lutheran church, of which Mrs. Frank is likewise a devoted adherent. Fraternally he is identified with McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, and with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In 1882 he erected his present commodious and attractive modern residence on North Market street, the same being one of the many beautiful homes of which Canton may well be proud.

In the city of Akron, Ohio, on the 26th of July, 1876, Mr. Frank was united in marriage to Miss Alice Seiberling, a native of that place, where she was reared and educated, and of this union have been born five children, Nellie, Grace, Fred, Margaret and Katherine, all of whom remain at the parental home.

MICHAEL MOTTS was born in Germany on the 16th of February, 1835, the son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Wingert) Motz. These parents had three children, all of whom survive, as follows: Jacob, of Paris township, this county, the subject, and Elizabeth, wife of John Zwahlen, of Louisville, this county. The father was born in Germany in 1803, was reared upon a farm and in 1836 came to the United States, settling in Paris township, just north of Paris. He bought fifty-two acres of land, to which he added until he possessed one hundred and fifteen acres. Upon that place he lived the remainder of his days, dying at the age of eighty-one years. His first wife, the mother of the subject, had passed away at the age of fifty-three years and he later married Mrs. Elizabeth Gugkeman. The latter had two children by her first husband, of whom one survives, Frank, of Paris township.

The subject was reared at home and was given the advantage of such schooling as was then available, but which at best was but limited. He was early inured to the hard toil incident to the life of a pioneer farmer and was taught the mysteries of successful agriculture. He followed farming as a vocation and after his marriage he purchased sixty acres of his present farm. Subsequently he bought additional tracts of fifty-five, forty-one and forty acres respectively, making an aggregate of one hundred and fifty-six acres. In 1881 Mr. Motts purchased the grist mill in Paris and, removing to the town, ran the mill for about four years. He was unfitted for this business, however, and lost about six thousand dollars in the venture. He finally disposed of the place to his sons and returned to the farm, where he has since remained. Mr. Motts was united in marriage February 27, 1857, with Miss Mary Fahl, also a native of Germany. Her parents died in their native land and she came to America in company with a sister. To the subject and his wife were born nine children, seven of whom survive. They are briefly mentioned as follows: Eli lives in Cleveland; David is a mill man at Paris, this county; Emanuel and John are residents of this township; William and Elizabeth are at home, the former conducting the home farm; Rose is the wife of Edward Hay, of Canton.

In politics the subject is a firm and uncompromising Democrat, ever taking a keen and intelligent interest in the success of his party and keeping closely in touch with public questions. On national questions he votes in line with his party, but frequently in local elections he casts his ballot for those men whom he considers best qualified for the offices sought. In religion he is affiliated with the Reformed church and endeavors to live a life in harmony with the teachings of the man of Nazareth. He is an energetic, industrious gentleman who has made a success of life by his persistent efforts. His farm is well cared for, the soil having been enriched until it is one of the most productive and fertile in the township, no part of which is permitted to lie in idleness.

LAWRENCE ALEXANDER was born in the city of Dublin, in the year 1815, where he was reared, availing himself of such educational advantages as were presented and early becoming dependent upon his own resources. He entered a woolen mill in his native city for the purpose of learning the trade, and was thus employed until about fifteen years of age, when he came to America, landing in the port of Boston, from which place he proceeded to Lowell, Massachusetts, where he soon found employment in one of the leading woolen mills of the place. He mastered the trade in all details and continued to work in Lowell until 1835, when he came west to Ohio, locating in Steubenville, where he remained a short interval, after which he came to Stark county, working in Massillon for a short time, and taking up his residence in the village of Waynesburg. He worked at his trade during his residence in these places and eventually accumulated a sufficient sum from his earnings to justify him in the purchase of a small woolen factory at Lexington, Stark county, where he carried on a successful business until the industrial prestige of the town began to wane, when he disposed of his interests there, and in 1857 came to Canton, where he established the Alexander Woolen Mills, which, under his management came to represent a prosperous industry, while he continued to be actively identified with the same until his death, which occurred in the year 1889, since which time the enterprise has been continued under the same title.

In the city of Boston, Massachusetts, Mr. Alexander, in the year 1836, was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Fitzgerald, who was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1818, her mother, whose maiden name was Mary McCarty, having died shortly after the birth of Mrs. Alexander. In the year following that of her nativity her father, Richard Fitzgerald, brought her to the United States, his other two children remaining in the Emerald Isle. He located in Lowell, Massachusetts, and there Mrs. Alexander was reared to maturity, and there met him who was to be her companion on the journey of life. She survived her husband by a number of years, her death occurring in Canton, in 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander became the parents of twelve children, of whom three are living at the present time, all of whom reside in Canton.

The third child in order of birth was Charles Augustine, and he was summoned into eternal life in 1883. He was educated for the priesthood of the Roman Catholic church, and entered upon the duties of his holy office as a member of the order of the Passionist Fathers, his title being that of Father Augustine. He was a young man of brilliant intellect and bade fair to live a long life of distinguished usefulness, but that inscrutable Providence whose ways are past finding out, removed him in the bloom of young manhood to another and better sphere. His remains were interred in the vault of St. Paul's monastery, in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, with those of other consecrated members of his order, they will lie until the resurrection morn. Lawrence and Hannah (Fitzgerald) Alexander were devoted members of the Catholic church, and during their many years' residence in Canton were valued members of St. John's church. Mr. Alexander was an enterprising and broadminded business man, and one who ever commanded unequivocal confidence in the community, while he manifested his loyalty to the duties of citizenship by a deep interest in affairs of a local nature. During his residence in Lexington he served for six years as a member of the board of county commisisoners, and for some time he was a member of the Canton board of health, and also board of education. He also held membership on the board which had charge of the poor fund of the Hartford estate, through which provision is made for the care of the indigent of Canton, and in many other capacities he proved his usefulness as a citizen and his sterling worth as a man among men. Earnest in all he attempted, he carried to successful issue the enterprises to which he gave his attention, while his social qualities made him popular among all classes of persons. He was a fine type of the intelligent, large-hearted and progressive business men of the day, and he impressed himself upon the various communities in which he lived, while he left to his descendants the most valuable of all heritages, an honored name. A life-long Democrat in politics, he supported the principles of this party with earnestness but never was a seeker of public office, notwithstanding the fact that he was called upon at various times to serve in positions of trust and responsibility in this line. Mr. Alexander died in 1883.

GEORGE RANK.—The Rank family is of stanch German origin, the original orthography of the name having been Reinke. The first representatives of the family in America emigrated from the fatherland in the colonial epoch of our history and took up their abode in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, so that the name has been identified with pioneer annals in more than one generation, while it has ever stood exponent of lofty integrity, well directed industry and distinctive loyalty and patriotism. George Rank, whose name initiates this review, was born in Canton township, in May, 1810, being a son of Abraham and Susan (Wertemberger) Rank, who took up their abode in Canton in 1807, so that the entire life of the subject was passed in this county. It may be consistently noted in the connection that the celebrated German historian, Reinke, was of the same lineage as he of whom he write, the family having been one of distinction in Germany for many generations.

Abraham Rank, grandfather of the subject, was born in Reading, Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared to maturity and where he learned the carpenter trade, becoming a fine mechanic, and this he there followed, in connection with agricultural pursuits, until the time of his removal to Ohio. As he came from the productive districts of the old Keystone state he was naturally prejudiced against the level land or plains in the vicinity of Canton, and thus secured a wooded tract, his dictum being that land which would not produce timber would not produce wheat. He became the owner of about fifty acres of land in the immediate vicinity of Canton, a portion of the city being located on the same, and he reclaimed his farm to cultivation, having that energy and thriftfulness so typical of the Pennsylvania farmers of German type from the early days to the present time. He erected the first log cabin on the meadow to the east of the little pioneer village of Canton and near natural springs, the same being constructed of round logs and having two rooms. Later he built another house, two hundred feet distant from his original cabin, and in building the new residence he utilized hewed logs, while it was located on higher ground. Here he dug a well, which he eventually equipped with a pump, which constituted a marked event in the family affairs and the history of the neighborhood, since so modern a facility was very unusual in the locality at that time. The family were devoted members of the Lutheran church, and in the primitive pioneer home was reared the family altar and the daily worship was never neglected, divine guidance being asked in connection with all labors and duties. Abraham Rank was an old-line Whig in his political proclivities and was a man of decided opinion but never intolerant or arbitrary. He died on his homestead farm December 15, 1851, at the age of seventy-three years, and his loved companion did not long survive him, her death occurring on October 25th of the following year, at the age of sixty-seven. His wife's maiden name was Susan Wertenberger and she was a woman of fine presence and noble attributes of character. They endured the privations and hardships of pioneer life but were ever sustained and encouraged by mutual love and sympathy, theirs being the faith that makes faithful. Abraham and Susan Rank became the parents of eleven children, concerning whom we are able to offer the following brief data: Nancy, who became the wife of Rev. Benjamin Faust, died in Canton; Betsey, the wife of Jonas Weidner, died in Marlborough township, this county; Salome, the wife of Samuel Essig, died in Canton township; Magdalena, who never married, is deceased; Susan, the wife of George Schweir, died in Perry township; Lydia, the wife of Peter Sell, who died in Canton; Kate, the wife of Eli Sipes, died in Canton; George was the father of the subject of this memoir; John married Elizabeth Hull and his death occurred in Canton township; Mary, the wife of John J. Trump, died in Canton; Abraham, who married Mary Rahn, likewise died in this city.

George Rank was born on the old homestead farm, in Canton township, in May, 1810, and here his death occurred on the 17th of June, 1873. He was for many years prominently engaged in the work of his trade, that of carpenter and cabinetmaker, and he erected the Monitor block, which he utilized as a sash, door and blind factory, having purchased two-thirds of the block where the city library is now being built, in 1858, for one thousand dollars. He became one of the most prominent and influential business men of Canton, commanding unequivocal confidence and esteem in the community and being called upon to serve in offices of public trust and responsibility. He was for a number of years incumbent of the office of township trustee and was also a valued and efficient member of the city council. In politics he was a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and during the Civil war he ardently upheld the cause of the Union, having on more than one occasion stripped his shop of lumber, which he utilized in setting up temporary tables upon which he set forth food for the volunteers assembled in the city. He was reared to the strenuous life of the pioneer farm and early began to lend his aid in its reclamation and cultivation, while for his educational discipline he was indebted to the primitive district school, which he attended during the winter months when his services were not demanded in connection with the work of the farm.

On the 20th of May, 1830, George Rank was united in marriage to Miss Henrietta Emich, who was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, on the 15th of September, 1811, and who came to Canton with her parents in 1815. She was a daughter of George and Dorothy (Smith) Emich, both of whom were born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, and Mr. Emich was a man of means at the time of his emigration to Stark county. Here he took up a tract of land and turned his attention to farming, becoming one of the influential citizens of the pioneer community. His wife died about 1825, and he thereafter passed his time in the homes of his children, his death having occurred at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Kimmel, in Waynesburg. Mrs. Henrietta Rank died at her home, 534 West Seventh street, Canton, on the 24th of April, 1901, at the venerable age of nearly ninety years, her death resulting from the infirmities incidental to advanced age, while she was one of the few remaining representatives of the pioneer epoch in the history of the county, loved for her gracious womanhood and her unvarying kindness in all the relations of life. At the time of her death a local publication spoke of her as follows: "Her life for many years was typical of the epoch in which she lived, and with a memory that never failed she could entertain her grandchildren and their children with reminiscences of a wild country, long walks to school—a part of the time to the old academy where the central high school now stands—when her path often showed the footprints of wolves and Indians. She was familiar with the flax field, the raw wool, the spinning wheel, the old-time fulling mill and the loom, from all of which the needs of life called for industry and self-sacrificing patience."

George and Henrietta (Emich) Rank became the parents of eleven children, concerning whom we offer brief record, as follows: Jefferson, who was born in 1831, and who served four months during the Civil war as a member of the One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, married Amanda Hilderbiddle and he died in Canton in 1875; William, the next in order of birth, is individually mentioned in appending paragraphs; Adaline is the widow of O. J. Hardgrove, of Canton; Amos, who married Rebecca Wright, resides near Chattanooga, Tennessee; Sarah is the widow of Dr. J. H. Estep, of Canton; Amanda is the wife of L. F. Hake, of this city; John, who married Martha Wright, is likewise a native of Canton; Ellen is the wife of L. P. Farnham, of Canton; Mary is the widow of J. F. Johnston, of this city; Orlando, a resident of Canton, was first married to Rebecca Ewart and after her death to Alice Krider; and Ada is the wife of F. F. Trimble, a prominent citizen, of Salem, Ohio.

William Rank was born on the old homestead farm in Canton township, on the 20th of September, 1832. His first educational discipline was received in the school house located on East Tuscarawas street, and his instructor was Philip Everhard, while later he conned his lessons under the guidance of Hon. B. F. Lester, who eventually was chosen to represent this district in the halls of congress. Mr. Rank's early schooling comprised an attendance of about two months in each year, this being in accord with the laws of the state, while it was also the custom at that time for the average youth to learn a trade. Mr. Rank completed his specific educational work in the old Union school, on West Tuscarawas street, under Prof. Ira M. Allen, and he was eighteen years of age when he left school to devote his undivided attention to the practical duties of life. At the age of fifteen he began an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, under the effective direction of his father, who was for many years, in connection with his other business enterprises, the leading undertaker in this section, and from his boyhood days William Rank assisted in this special department of his father's business. After leaving school, having a disinclination for carpenter work, he turned his attention to ornamental painting, and at the age of nineteen he went to the city of Cleveland, where he engaged in sign painting, while later he followed the same line of work in various other cities and towns of the state, being recognized as an expert workman and having distinctive artistic taste in the connection, so that he found a ready demand for his services. In the summer of 1855, through the interposition of a representative mercantile firm in Massillon, he was enabled to establish himself in the furniture business in Canton, conducting a branch establishment here for one year, after which he resumed the trade of painter. In 1859 he returned to Canton and assumed the position of foreman in the painting department of the C. Aultman Company, and he continued to be thus identified with this great manufacturing concern for the long period of thirty-one years.

At the time of the Rebellion Mr. Rank tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a member of Company B, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was recruited in Canton and vicinity, and he was made first sergeant of his company, in which capacity he served until the close of his term of four months, receiving his honorable discharge, at Camp Chase, in Columbus, on the 4th of September, 1864, after which he resumed his duties in the Aultman works. In April, 1889, Mr. Rank was elected to the office of secretary and superintendent of the Canton Cemetery Association, in which capacity he has ever since continued to render efficient and discriminating service, the duties involved demanding practically his entire time and attention. In politics, while without personal ambition for office of any sort, he has accorded a staunch support to the Republican party from the time of its organization, his first presidential vote having been cast for John C. Fremont for the presidency, in 1856. He was a charter member of the first post of the Grand Army of the Republic organized in Canton.

On the 19th of January, 1860, was solemnized the marriage of William Rank to Miss Mary M. Chilson, who was born in Conneaut, Ohio, in 1837, a daughter of Abel and Mary (Gould) Chilson, the Chilson family having come from Virginia and the Goulds from Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Rank have one child, Warren A., who was born in Canton, on the 28th of January, 1861, and who was educated in the public schools of his native city, being graduated in the high school when eighteen years of age. After leaving school he secured employment in the machine shops of the Aultman Company, where he remained until 1881, when he accepted a similar position in the city of Cleveland, where he remained nine months, during which interval he completed a commercial course in a night school. In 1882 he returned to Canton and here took a position in the advertising department of the Aultman Company, later being assigned to the shipping department and finally being promoted to the office of collector for the company. He served his connection with this concern in 1888 and in the following year became a clerk in the census office in Washington, D. C., retaining this incumbency until 1894, and passing the following two and one-half years in Canton, after which he returned to Washington, in 1896, where he continued in government employ, in a clerical capacity, until June, 1902. In the national capitol, in 1891, Warren A. Rank was united in marriage to Miss Minnie M. Clinton, daughter of Jesse and Helen M. Clinton, and a lineal descendant of DeWitt Clinton, at one time governor of New York and known in history as an eminent statesman. Warren A. and Minnie M. Rank have one child, William Clinton, who was born in Washington, in 1899.

ADAM LOTZ is descended from German parentage, his father being Peter H. Lotz, who was born in 1780, and his mother's maiden name being Elizabeth Nets, both of whom were born in Prussia, Germany. Peter Lotz was reared upon a farm in his native country, and when twenty-one years of age came to America with his mother, brother and two sisters. His future wife was also in the party, and as they were all too poor to pay their ocean passage in advance they were, upon their arrival in this country, bound out for three years to pay for their passage. They first settled in Wilmington, Delaware, but in 1803, shortly after their marriage, they removed to Washington county, Pennsylvania, where they resided until 1818, when they came to Stark county, Ohio, where they made their home, became well known and well liked people, and there died at advanced ages, the father at ninety-three years and the mother at eighty-eight. They were the parents of fourteen children, of whom but three survive: Elizabeth, the widow of Daniel Allen, of Carroll county, Ohio; Maria, the wife of John Pottorff, of Columbiana county, Ohio, and the subject. The father had entered eighty acres of land upon locating in Ohio, in what was then Stark county, it later being made a part of Carroll county, and had later by purchase added to this until he had in his possession one hundred and seven acres. He was an active Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Reformed church. He was an enterprising and progressive man, and one highly esteemed by all who knew him. For a number of years he conducted a saw mill upon his farm.

Adam Lotz first saw the light of day in Washington county, Pennsylvania, on the 25th of January, 1816, and his youthful years were passed under the parental roof. His education was somewhat limited, having been such as was obtainable in the old-fashioned pioneer log school houses of that early day. These schools were crude in the extreme when compared with those of the present day, and the subject well remembers the old slab benches and the greased-paper windows. But these were the best facilities that could be provided at that time, and of these the subject took full advantage. After his marriage, in 1842, Mr. Lotz settled on a farm of one hundred and ten acres in Carroll county, which he had purchased a long time previously. In 1867 he disposed of this place and purchased his present farm, consisting of two hundred and forty acres in Osnaburg township, where he has since resided. Mr. Lotz has all his life been a hard working man. For some years prior to his marriage he worked at the carpenter's trade, and he was also employed for five years in clearing land, about the hardest toil imaginable. He received the first three crops off his land as his pay, and this largely enabled him to make the payments on his first purchase of land.

In 1842 Mr. Lotz was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Hanck, a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, who died April 5, 1898. She was of foreign ancestry, her parents having come to this country from Wurttemberg, Germany. This union was a most happy and congenial one, and was blessed by the birth of fifteen children, thirteen of whom survive, as follows: Simon Z., a carpenter of Canton, Ohio; Alpheus J., of Labette county, Kansas; Reuben, of Carroll county, Ohio; Elizabeth A., the wife of John Ritz, a blacksmith of Canton; Margaret J., Belinda C. and Willis W. are at home; Maretta I. is the wife of Frank Shirk, of Canton; Alvin K. is a farmer of Osnaburg township; Alvina L. married John P. Richen, and lives in Canton; Flora I. is the wife of Frank Henning, of this township; Phenora I. is the wife of Thomas Nimmon, of Canton; Edward M. is at home; Tina M. is deceased, and one that died in infancy.

Politically the principles of the subject are those embodied in the platform of the Democratic party, and he has for many years taken a keen and intelligent interest in the trend of public events. He has done much active campaign work for his party, though he has never been an office seeker. He was, however, at one time elected to the office of township trustee, the duties of which he discharged efficiently for several years. Religiously he is a member of the Reformed church, and has lived a life strictly in accordance with the teachings of that society.

JAMES C. BURNHEIMER, as the name implies, is of German descent, although his family has been represented in America for many years, his great-grandfather emigrating from old country and settling in Pennsylvania at an early period in our national history. Samuel Burnheimer, the subject's grandfather, was born and reared to manhood in the Keystone state, and there married a lady of the name of Bechtel, whose ancestors also came from the Fatherland. Shortly after his marriage he moved to Stark county, Ohio, settling in Pike township, but later changed his abode to Indiana, in which state he lived for several years. Returning to the county of Stark at the request of his son, he spent some years here, but afterwards went back to Indiana, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there in 1897 at the advanced age of eighty. His wife died in Stark county in the year 1880.

John Burnheimer, father of the subject, was born in Pike township, this county, and in early manhood worked at various occupations, finally turning his attention to agricultural pursuits. He married, in his native township, Miss Margaret Carnes, and later purchased the old Henry Keety farm, one of the first settled places in the township. Mrs. Burnheimer died on this place at the early age of thirty-seven years, and Mr. Burnheimer subsequently married the widow of John Briggie, of Sparta. Moving from his farm to Sparta, he remained in that town until 1886, when he emigrated west, locating at Breckenridge, Colorado, where for several years he was engaged in mining and dealing in live stock. Subsequently he moved to Oregon, in which state his death occurred on the 15th of October, 1896, his wife dying there in the year 1900. By his first marriage John Burnheimer was the father of children as follows: Flora, deceased, married John Muckley; Ida, wife of D. S. Van Vorhis, of Van Wert, Ohio; James C., of this review; Maggie, now Mrs. Robert Foote, of Colorado; and Cora, who married Peter Cummins, also a resident of the latter state. Two children resulted from the second union: Edward, who died at the age of four years, and Charles.

The birth of James C. Burnheimer occurred in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 9th of May, 1862, and he received his early educational discipline in the village of Battlesburg. He attended school in the winter time until the death of his mother, after which he started in the world to make his own living, spending the first three years as a farm laborer. Realizing that the future held out little promise to one who depended upon poorly remunerative labor as a tiller of the soil for others, he took up the carpenter's trade, and being naturally skillful in the use of tools it was not long until he became an efficient workman at liberal wages. In the year 1880 Mr. Burnheimer was married, in Sparta, to Laura, daughter of James Sanford, and shortly thereafter took up his residence in Mineral City, where he soon found remunerative employment at his trade. During the greater part of the ten years following he was in the employ of the Valley Railroad as a bridge builder, later devoting his attention to contracting and building at that town and elsewhere, meeting with good success in his undertakings. In the year 1887 he moved to Canton, and from that date to the present time he has been actively plying his trade, taking numerous large contracts for buildings in this city and other structures in different parts of the country.

Mr. Burnheimer is a master workman, as is attested by his workmanship on the many buildings which today stand as monuments to his efficiency and skill. He was early thrown upon his own resources, but has succeeded in spite of the many obstacles in his way, occupying a conspicuous position at this time among the leading contractors and builders in this part of the state. As a citizen he is respected by the people of Canton, and in industrial circles he has long been an influential factor, being one of the leaders in his own craft besides taking an active interest in behalf of organized labor of whatever name or character so it is honorable. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and ever since old enough to cast a ballot he has earnestly defended the soundness of his principles and labored zealously for the party's success. In November, 1902, he was elected for the important office of county commissioner on the Republican ticket by a majority of twenty-four hundred, having previously served two terms on the board of education of the city of Canton.

For a number of years past Mr. Burnheimer has been prominently identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in its several departments, joining the fraternity in 1883. He has held high official stations in the subordinate lodge, encampment and Rebekah degree, in addition to which he is also a member of the Order of Eagles, belonging to Society No. 143. He has pronounced religious views, and is a firm believer in Christianity, belonging, with his wife, to the Simpson Methodist Episcopal church of Canton. Mr. Burnheimer is a gentleman of progressive ideas and in many ways has done much to elevate his fellow workmen and improve their social and moral condition, assisting to the extent of his influence and ability all enterprises with these objects in view. The pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Burnheimer is brightened by the presence of two children, a son and daughter whose names are Blanche L. and Dennis M.

LEONARD M. LEAS was born in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 14th of January, 1846, being a son of Jacob and Maria (Strayer) Leas, of whose nine children six are living at the present time, namely: Leonard M., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Lucy, who is the widow of J. S. Bissell, of Wooster, Ohio; Elizabeth, who is the widow of William Montgomery, and resides in Osnaburg township; Margaret, who is the wife of Isaac N. Kinney, a hardware merchant in Wooster, this state; Josephine, who is the wife of Joseph Firestone, who is identified with the Columbus Buggy Company, in the capital city of the state; and Alice, who is the wife of W. S. Earseman, a successful member of the Stark county bar, residing in the village of Louisville. The father of the subject was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, in the year 1817, which date is significant as indicating how early was the period at which the name became identified with the annals of the Buckeye commonwealth. He was a son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Zimmerman) Leas, and he was reared on the old homestead farm and received a common-school education. After his marriage, which occurred about the year 1840, he came with his bride to Stark county, and located on the farm now owned by his daughter, Elizabeth, Mrs. Montgomery, one-half mile north of the village of Osnaburg, the land having been previously entered from the government by his grandfather, John Leas, who came here in an early day, and secured this property and also the farm now owned by the American Fire Proofing Company. He placed his son John on the first farm and his son Leonard on the second, but the former proved unsuccessful in the connection, and his father then sold the farm to his son Jacob, grandfather of the subject, and from him it came to the father of our subject. John Leas, the original representative of the family in this section of the state, after securing the two farms in Stark county, passed on through Carroll county and thence to Jefferson county, where he acquired extensive tracts of land. His son Jacob located in that county, and also a son-in-law in the immediate vicinity, and they all became prominent in the pioneer community. The son Leonard later removed to Carroll county, where he located on a farm and where he also conducted a tannery. The father of our subject boarded with his cousin John for about eighteen months after coming to Stark county on the first occasion, and then returned to Jefferson county and married, after which he came again to Stark county, and with his bride located in a small log cabin on his farm, which was practically a virgin forest at the time. He set to himself the task of reclaiming the land to cultivation, and was successful in his efforts, eventually becoming one of the representative farmers of the county and retaining the high regard of all who knew him. Here he passed the residue of his life, his declining years being spent in the home of his son, the subject of this review, and his death occurring on the 30th of May, 1900. He was a staunch supporter of the Republican party, but never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. He was a member of the Lutheran church, having been active in its work and having been an officer in the same for a long term of years. His wife was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, in August, 1821, being a daughter of Samuel Strayer, who was a prominent farmer and teamster in that county for many years, doing a large freighting business to Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other eastern points in the pioneer days, while he wielded a large influence in his section, his death occurring in Jefferson county when he was well advanced in years. The mother of the subject was summoned into eternal rest on the 20th of March, 1885.

Leonard M. Leas was reared on the old homestead farm on which he was born, and after completing the curriculum of the district schools became a student in Mount Union College, where he completed his literary education. In 1867 he went to Waterloo, DeKalb county, Indiana, where he was for two years employed in a drug store, after which he purchased a half interest in a livery business in that city, the same being conducted under the firm name of Leas, Zwilling & Company, and while he was thus concerned he was employed in the dry-goods store of his partner to offset the latter's work in connection with the livery. The enterprise, however, proved a financial failure, and after a period of three years had elapsed Mr. Leas disposed of his interest in the same and returned to Stark county, where he had charge of the home farm for the ensuing three years, after which he passed a similar period on other farms in the vicinity, renting the same, while during this interval he also did a quite extensive business in the buying, feeding and shipping of live stock, in which connection his energetic and discriminating efforts were attended with marked success. In 1873 he purchased his present home farm, which is located in sections 5 and 8, Osnaburg township, the same comprising seventy-eight and one-half acres. During the financial panic which followed matters did not present a flattering outlook to Mr. Leas, but by working assiduously and with characteristic sagacity and energy he kept forging forward and finally developed one of the valuable farm properties of the county and attained a position of independence and definite prosperity. He has erected substantial and attractive farm buildings and kept the soil of his farm up to the highest state of productivity, and today he is referred to as one of the model farmers of this section. He still continues to devote much attention to stock-growing, and not only feeds the major portion of the products of his own farm but also purchases much grain from outside sources, making this department of his farming enterprise a source of excellent revenue. In politics Mr. Leas upholds the principles of the Democratic party, but is liberal in his views and is not insistently partisan in public affairs of a local nature. He is a consistent and valued member of the Lutheran church, as is also his wife, and fraternally he is identified with Osnaburg Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.

On the 5th of March, 1871, Mr. Leas was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Farr, who was born in Orleans county, New York, being a daughter of Chester Farr, who died six months after his removal to Kansas, his widow later removing to Waterloo, Indiana, where our subject formed the acquaintanceship of the family, and Mrs. Farr later removed to Bryan, Ohio, where she was residing at the time of Mr. Leas' marriage to her daughter. To Mr. and Mrs. Leas have been born three children, namely: Alberta, who is the wife of Lee Housley, of Canton, this county; Lucy, who is a student of osteopathy, in Des Moines, Iowa, and who was a companion to Mrs. Angel, wife of a well-known attorney of the city of Cleveland, on a European tour in 1898, Mr. Angel later starting to join them and meeting death on the ill-fated steamer, "La Burgoyne," which went to the bottom, entailing the loss of nearly six hundred lives; and Elizabeth, the third daughter, remains at the parental home.

CHARLES F. NARWOLD is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the city of Cincinnati, on the 28th of August, 1867, and having been there reared to maturity. He began the battle of life on his own responsibility at an early age, having attended the public schools until he was fourteen years old, and having thereafter been variously employed until he had attained the age of sixteen years, when he began an apprenticeship at the trade of confectioner, learning the same thoroughly in all details. With this line of industry he has ever since been consecutively identified, and through the same he has gained definite success and precedence as a business man. In 1891 he came to Canton from Cincinnati, and here engaged in the confectionery business on a modest scale, at the corner of Fifth and Cherry streets, utilizing rooms in the basement of the Flickering block. The superior character of his products as conjoined with his energetic and enterprising methods brought about a rapid expansion in his trade, and he was soon compelled to seek more commodious quarters. In 1892 he purchased a building on Mahoning street, and there he continued operations until 1898, when he purchased his present commodious and eligible headquarters, where he has the best of facilities for the manufacturing of high-grade confections, and from which he transacts a large and important business, his trade extending throughout the wide area of country naturally tributary to Canton as a wholesale center, while the products of the establishment have attained the highest popularity wherever introduced. In 1890 Frederick Narwold, a brother of the subject, became associated with the enterprise, but was later succeeded by C. C. Palmer, who withdrew from the business in 1894, at which time Frederick Narwold again became associated with the business, though he was not a partner in the same until April, 1902, when the business was incorporated under the title of

C. F. Narwold & Company, the interested individuals being Charles F. and Frederick Narwold; John F. Diebel, who had formerly been bookkeeper for the concern; and Jacob Hawk, of Bolivar. The Messrs. Narwold are both staunch supporters of the Republican party, and both are valued members of the First Reformed church, in Canton. Fraternally the subject is prominently identified with the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of Pythias and the United Commercial Travelers.

In the city of Canton, on the 16th of September, 1891, Mr. Narwold was united in marriage to Miss Sophia Lammers, who was born in Cincinnati, being a daughter of Frederick Lammers, of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Narwold have had four children, namely: Carl, Lewis, Alfred and Marion, the last named having died in infancy. Frederick Narwold, the brother of the subject, was born in Cincinnati, on the 14th of May, 1870, and he married Miss Matilda Beneker, of Cincinnati, where, like his brother, he has gained a reputation of being an able and straightforward young business man. Their parents, Richard and Louisa Narwold, were born in Germany, and both still retain their residence in Cincinnati, where they located soon after coming to America.

JAMES A. SAXTON was born in Canton May 1, 1812, in the old family home, a brick house which stood in a part of the present site of the McKinley Hotel, on South Market street. He was the son of John and Margaret (Laird) Saxton. He received his early education in the village schools, having for his classmates a number of lads who, like himself, afterwards became prominent in the affairs of the city, county and state. His early training was such as to foster habits of industry and self-reliance, as is attested by the fact of his having engaged in business for himself at the age of eighteen, when he opened a hardware store in a building which stood on part of the present court house site, adjoining what was formerly known as Laird's Tannery. After conducting this line of trade for some years with liberal financial profits, he founded the Stark County Bank, of which he was made president, and which under his efficient management became one of the most successful and popular institutions of the kind in the eastern part of Ohio. Mr. Saxton devoted much attention to the study of monetary questions and became familiar with every phase of finance, theoretical and practical, and continued at the head of the above bank for a number of years, during which his reputation as a sound, conservative and eminently honorable business man added greatly to the standing of the institution in the financial circles of the state. Subsequently Mr. Saxton retired from the bank and went to New York, where, in addition to other business enterprises, he settled up the estate of his old friend and former partner, Mr. Schweitzer, who for a number of years had conducted a large hardware house in the city of New York. After satisfactorily adjusting the affairs of this important undertaking he returned to Canton, where he spent the remainder of his days, having by diligent attention to business during a long and active career, acquired an ample competence, which enabled him to pass his closing years in the enjoyment of the fruits of his well directed toil.

Mr. Saxton was a man of mark in the business and social circles of Canton, and his life, eminently honorable and upright, was crowned with useful labors and efficient service. During his active years there were few enterprises or movements appealing to public spirit in which he was not a conspicuous, constant and worthy co-laborer. He was originally a Whig in politics, later became a Republican, and while always zealous in upholding the principles of his party and untiring in his efforts to promote its success, he never aspired to official preferment, nor sought any kind of public distinction at the hands of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Saxton was twice married, the first time on August 31, 1846, to Miss Kate Dewalt, of Canton, daughter of George and Catherine (Harter) Dewalt, who was born August 18, 1827, and who shared with him the esteem and respect of the community and was his loving and faithful coadjutor in everything in which her womanly heart and brain could do service. She departed this life at the old Saxton home March 14, 1873, after bearing her husband the following children: Ida, born June 8, 1847, married, January 25, 1871, William McKinley, afterwards President of the United States, and to whose union two daughters were born,—Ida M. died at the age of four months, and Katie died at the age of three and a half years; Mary B., born December 15, 1848, married, August 20, 1873, Marshall C. Barber; George D., born October 31, 1850, died October 7, 1898. Sometime after the death of his first companion Mr. Saxton contracted a matrimonial alliance with Mrs. Hettie Medill, a most estimable lady, whose former husband was a brother of the late Joseph Medill, of Chicago, editor of the Tribune of that city and for many years one of the leading journalists of the United States. The life of Mr. Saxton terminated at the home he loved so well and around which so many tender associations and hallowed recollections clustered, on the 14th day of March, 1887. His was indeed a full life, fraught with good to all with whom he came in contact and crowned with blessings to the world. In him the city of Canton lost a truly great man, a useful citizen, and the community a kind neighbor, a sympathizing and self-sacrificing friend. His ambition always ran to the benefit of others and never to public distinction or personal aggrandizement. With a single exception of serving for a short time in the city council, he never held public office, nor desired or attained political prominence, although his personal popularity and influence were such that he might have stood first among his fellow citizens and received the most distinguished honors at their command, had he so chosen. His indifference to the customary objects of ambition, his constant services in all kindly offices and labors, his benevolent face, genial manner and venerable appearance, all combined to make him for almost a generation one of the most conspicuous and revered citizens of the community in which he was born and with the history of which his life for over three-quarters of a century was so closely identified.

HENRY MILLER was born on a farm in Washington township, this county, on the 6th of October, 1856, being a son of Christian and Fanny (Krabill) Miller, all of whose seven children are yet living, namely: Michael, a successful farmer of Washington township; Christian, who is similarly engaged in the same township; Peter, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Nimishillen township, as is also Jacob, who is associated with the subject in the ownership of the farm where he resides; Henry, who is the subject of this sketch; Catherine, who is the wife of Rudolph Pfander, of Nimishillen township; and Jonas, who is engaged in farming in Washington township. The father of our subject was born in the province of Alsace, France, which is now a portion of the empire of Germany, the date of his nativity having been 1821. When he was twelve years of age his father, who likewise bore the name of Christian, emigrated with his family to America, and came forthwith to Ohio and located on a farm of eighty acres, in Washington township, Stark county, where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. The father of the subject was reared to maturity on this pioneer farm, which has been in possession of the family since the year 1833, and after his marriage he purchased a farm of one hundred and twenty-seven acres, in the southwest corner of Washington township, where he continued to reside until his death, on July 26, 1892. In 1876 he purchased the farm of one hundred and sixty-two acres in Nimishillen township, where our subject now resides, and he was known as one of the progressive and substantial farmers of the county, while he ever held the esteem of all who knew him, being a man of sterling character and marked business ability. In politics he gave his support to the Democratic party, and both he and his wife were devoted members of the Mennonite church. The mother of the subject was likewise a native of Alsace, France, where she was born about the year 1827. When she was about thirteen years of age she accompanied her parents on their emigration to the United States, and her father, Christian Krabill, located on the farm where the subject now resides, and here passed the residue of his life. The mother was summoned into eternal rest in 1885.

Henry Miller was reared on the old homestead farm, in Washington township, and early became inured to the labors pertaining to its cultivation, while he is indebted to the district schools for the early educational advantages which fell to his portion. At the age of eighteen years he became associated with his brothers Peter and Jacob in operating the farm, of which he is now part owner, and in 1882 they leased the same from their father and continued to conduct the same for a number of years. In 1891 our subject and his brother Jacob purchased the property, and the latter now has charge of the place, the subject having given up his active association with the work of the farm in 1895, in order to devote his entire attention to the buying and shipping of live stock, in which line he has met with most gratifying success, having shown marked discrimination in his business affairs and handling a large amount of stock each year, the field of his operations extending over a wide radius of country. As early as his fifteenth year Mr. Miller purchased, contrary to the advice of his father, two yearling cattle, and his judgment proved good in the connection, since he realized a good profit from his transaction, and from this modest initiation he has gradually built up his present business, whose extent is indicated in the fact that he is known as the most extensive buyer and shipper of live stock in this section of the county, shipping to East Liberty, Buffalo and New York city. In addition to the home farm Mr. Miller owns a half interest in another tract, of fourteen acres, in this township, and he is also the owner of the old Krabill school house, which he now rents for residence purposes. He has twenty-six acres of land in Washington township, and owns a half interest in a steam cider press and apple-butter factory in that township. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Democratic party, and for the past fifteen years he has been a member of the school board of his district, ever taking a lively interest in all that tends to conserve the progress and material prosperity of the community.

On the 19th of October, 1882, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Feller, who was born in Switzerland, whence she came to America with her parents when sixteen years of age, her father, John Feller, settling on a farm in Nimishillen township, this county, where both he and his wife remained until their death. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have one daughter, Laura, who remains beneath the home roof.

HUGH DANIEL McCREA is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, but when two years of age his parents moved to the village of Hanover, Columbiana county, Ohio. He was born on the 21st of May, 1849, and received his educational discipline in the public schools. He is a son of John B. McCrea, who was born in Blairsville, Indiana county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared, and there he learned the trade of cabinet-making. In the old Keystone state was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mary McGarry, who was likewise a native of Pennsylvania, and in 1851 they removed to Hanover, Columbiana county, Ohio, where Mr. McCrea was engaged in the mercantile business for a period of eighteen years, at the expiration of which he came to Canton, where he established himself in the furniture and undertaking business on East Tuscarawas street, between Walnut and Cherry streets, and this enterprise he continued until the time of his death, a period of eighteen years. He became known as one of the able and progressive business men of the city, and so ordered his course as to retain the unqualified esteem of all who knew him. He was a Democrat in politics, and both he and his wife were communicants of the Roman Catholic church, having been members of St. John's church during the entire interval of their residence in Canton. Here the father of our subject died in 1887, at the age of sixty-one years, while his wife survived until April 24, 1901, when she was summoned into eternal rest, at the age of seventy-four years. They became the parents of three sons and three daughters, and of the number five are living at the present time, the subject having been the eldest in order of birth.

Hugh D. McCrea accompanied his parents on their removal to Canton, in 1868, and here he was employed in his father's store until 1875, when, in company with Joseph Bour, of Canton, he went to New Castle, Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, where they engaged in the furniture business, under the firm name of McCrea & Bour. At the expiration of three and one-half years this partnership was dissolved, and Mr. McCrea then removed to Youngstown, Mahoning county, Ohio, where he was engaged in the same line of business until 1886, when he returned to Canton and assumed control of the furniture business which had been conducted by his father, whose death had recently occurred. He continued to individually carry on this enterprise until 1892, when he moved to Market street and engaged in undertaking only until 1899. Then he formed a partnership with John L. Arnold, and they have since conducted business under the name of the Canton Home Furnishing Company. They have greatly expanded the scope of the original enterprise, and their finely equipped establishment is located at 238 North Market street, and controls a large and ever increasing trade, all lines of furniture and house-furnishing goods being carried in stock, and the display is at all times select and comprehensive. The policy of the firm is progressive, and the honorable methods brought to bear have conserved popular appreciation and confidence, so that the business has taken high rank among the mercantile enterprises of the city. Mr. McCrea exercises his franchise in support of the principles of the Democratic party, and he has ever clung to the religious faith in which he was reared, being a communicant of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, as is also his wife. Fraternally he is identified with the Catholic Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 30th of April, 1874, Mr. McCrea was united in marriage at Butler, Pennsylvania, to Miss Catherine Sheridan, who was born near Butler, being a daughter of Bernard and Ellen Sheridan. They have two children, Frank A., who was born in New Castle, Pennsylvania, on the 20th of October, 1876, and Clarence, who died at the age of two years.

Mr. McCrea has been identified with undertaking all his life, and has officiated at over six thousand funerals, having had charge of our lamented President McKinley's funeral, and also of the latter's mother. He served as president of the Canton Business Men's Association, and was also secretary and treasurer of the Miller Coach and Livery Company, also secretary and treasurer of the Canton Home Furnishing Company.

BENJAMIN M. ESHELMAN comes of staunch German lineage, and of that stock which the fatherland contributed to the great state of Pennsylvania in the initial stages of its history. He was born in Nimishillen township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 9th of October, 1847, being a son of Michael and Susan (Matthias) Eshelman, whose children were five in number, namely: Levi, who is a resident of Belford, Nimishillen township; Julia, who is the wife of A. B. Hess, of Canton; Benjamin M., the immediate subject of this review; Isaac, who is a resident of Marlboro township; and Henry, of Nimishillen township. Michael Eshelman was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared to years of maturity on a farm. As a young man he came to Stark county, Ohio, in company with a man named Rothrock, in whose employ he continued for a number of years. After his marriage he purchased eighty acres of heavily timbered land from Mr. Rothrock, this being the farm, in Nimishillen township, now owned by Henry Wertenberger. He erected a modest frame house on his land, and at once entered vigorously upon the task of reclaiming his farm and placing the land under cultivation, eventually developing one of the valuable farms of the township, while his indefatigable and well directed efforts were attended with a due measure of success. He finally erected upon the farm a substantial brick house, while he added to the area of his farm, which comprised one hundred and fifty acres at the time of his death, in 1894, at which time he had attained the venerable age of eighty-five years. He was a man of high intelligence and upright character, ever commanding the confidence of his fellow men, and though not a member of any church was a believer in the Christian religion, and lent his support to church work, without regard to creed or dogma. His political support was given to the Republican party, with which he identified himself at the time of its organization. His wife was born in Nimishillen township, Stark county, being a daughter of one of the honored pioneers of Stark county, and she died in 1897, at the age of eighty years, having been a devoted member of the Progressive church.

Benjamin M. Eshelman was reared on the old homestead farm, and early began to assume his share of the work about the place, while he is indebted to the district schools for the early educational opportunities which came to his portion. After he had reached his twenty-first year the management of the farm largely devolved upon him and his brothers, Isaac and Henry, and they conducted the same on shares up to the time of the subject's marriage, in 1884, when he removed to his present home farm, comprising sixty-six acres, which had been purchased by him and his two brothers previously mentioned, in 1881, while upon his locating upon the farm he effected the purchase of his brothers' interests in the property, and has ever since continued to follow agricultural pursuits here, having made excellent improvements on the farm and placed the same under most effective cultivation, using that discrimination in his methods which insures the maximum return therefrom. In 1900 he erected his present commodious and attractive modern residence, and on the whole the farm is one of the model ones of the township. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, though he has never desired official preferment, and his religious faith is that of the Protestant church.

On the 25th of December, 1884, Mr. Eshelman was united in marriage to Miss Lydia Z. Sefong, who was born in Ninihillen township, being a daughter of Jacob Sefong, a prominent pioneer farmer of this section of the county, and of this union four children were born, all of whom remain beneath the home roof, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Florence P., Dora B., Harrison M., and Zella M. Mrs. Eshelman was summoned into eternal rest on the 4th of July, 1895, at the age of thirty-two years, having been a loving and devoted wife and mother, and a woman of noble character.

WILLIAM WAGNER comes of stanch German lineage, and is a son of the late Jacob Wagner, who was born and reared in Germany, whence he emigrated to America when a young man, having learned the shoemaker's trade in the fatherland, and having devoted his attention to the same for a number of years after coming to the United States. He first located in the state of Pennsylvania, but later came to Stark county, Ohio, locating in Lake township, where he reclaimed an excellent farm, becoming one of the prosperous and highly honored citizens of the county, where he passed the remainder of his long and useful life. He died at Hartville, this county, in 1900, at the venerable age of eighty-six years, and there his widow, whose maiden name was Magdalena Emerich, and who was likewise born in Germany, still maintains her home, being now eighty-seven years of age. They became the parents of six sons and three daughters, and of these five of the former and three of the latter are still living: Lovina married Daniel Fulmer, who is now deceased; Caroline married Louis Werstler, now deceased; Mary married Milton Richards; Jacob resides at Cairo; Frank L. died in 1903; John is a retired farmer of Hartville; U. R. lives in Hartville; and Edwin, at Akron. Jacob Wagner was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and his religious faith was that of the Reformed church, of which his wife also is a member.

William Wagner was born on the old homestead farm, in Lake township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 25th of May, 1845, and he received his early educational training in the district schools, and later continued his studies in Greensburg Seminary and Mount Union College, this county. In 1864 he came to Canton, where he was employed in the factory of the late Colonel Ephraim Ball for a few months, at the expiration of which time he resigned his position in order to respond to the call of higher duty. On the 4th of October, 1864, in Canton, Mr. Wagner enlisted as a private in Company K, Twenty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Ferguson and Colonel Horton, and he therefore continued in active service with his command until victory had crowned the Union arms and the integrity of the nation had been perpetuated. He took part in many spirited skirmishes in South Carolina, and was ever found at the post of duty. He received his honorable discharge at Columbia, South Carolina, in November, 1865, and he then returned to Stark county, and with the funds which he had saved from his pay as a soldier he resumed his educational work, at this time entering the seminary at Greensburg, and later prosecuted his studies in Mount Union College, as has already been intimated in this context. Thereafter he was successfully engaged in teaching in the district schools of his native county for fourteen terms, and he then opened a country store at Uniontown, and later he established himself in the general merchandise business at Hartville. While thus engaged he also served as township clerk and township treasurer of Lake township, and also became incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, and during the administration of President Cleveland he was postmaster at Hartville, ever retaining the implicit confidence and high esteem of the people of the township in which he was born and reared.

In 1890 Mr. Wagner came to Canton to assume the position of deputy sheriff under Charles A. Krider, retaining this incumbency four years during the regime of that able sheriff, and later remaining for two years as deputy under Sheriff Hiram Doll. He was twice arrayed against Mr. Doll as candidate for the office of county treasurer, being defeated in each instance, and Mr. Doll manifested his personal esteem and good will when he was elected sheriff by retaining Mr. Wagner as his deputy. The latter left the sheriff's office in 1896, and for about three years thereafter devoted the major portion of his time and attention to the real estate business, with headquarters in Canton. He was one of the organizers of the People's Savings Bank, in 1891, and a member of its original directorate, while for several years he served as vice-president of the institution. He was also concerned in the organization of the Canton State Bank, and he has been a member of its board of directors from the time of its inception. In March, 1899, Mr. Wagner became associated with others in the organization and incorporation of the Citizens' Building & Loan Company, of Canton, the original executive corps of the institution being as follows: John B. Brothers, president; William H. Smith, attorney; Albert S. Griffin, secretary; and William Wagner, treasurer. In the spring of 1902 Mr. Griffin resigned his office and the subject was appointed to fill the vacancy, since which time he has held the dual office of secretary and treasurer, devoting the greater portion of his time to the executive duties involved.

In politics Mr. Wagner has ever given an unqualified allegiance to the Democratic party, and has taken an active interest in its cause, and since coming to Canton he has served three years as a member of the board of park commissioners. He and his family are regular attendants of Trinity Reformed church, to whose support he contributes liberally, though he is not formally identified with the same as a member. Fraternally Mr. Wagner is a valued member of the Grand Army of the Republic, holding membership in McKinley Post No. 25, of which he has served as commander, adjutant and quartermaster, while he is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In the village of Hartville, this county, in 1868, Mr. Wagner was united in marriage to Miss Urena Baum, who was born in this county, being a daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Bomberger) Baum, honored pioneers of Lake township. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner have four children, namely: Jennie and Effie; Kittie, who is a graduate of the Canton high school, and who is now a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of this city; and Paul, who was graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1902, and who is now assisting his father in his business.

DAVID SNIDER was born and reared on his present farm, in Nimishillen township, Stark county, Ohio, the date of his nativity having been August 28, 1837, while he is the eighth in order of birth of the nine children of Michael and Elizabeth (Holben) Snider, and the eldest of the three survivors, the others being as follows: Elizabeth, who is the widow of Henry C. Wise, and who resides in the village of Louisville, this county; and Rebecca, who is the widow of John Hook, and resides near the city of Birmingham, Alabama. Michael Snider was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, on the 5th of January, 1797, the original American ancestors having emigrated to American in the early colonial epoch, and his father, George Snider, was the first representative of the family in Stark county, Ohio, which locality he had visited in the year 1810, and entered claim to three quarter-sections of government land, in the midst of the virgin forest, which property he subsequently divided among his children. The deed to the land is now in the possession of our subject, and is a valuable heirloom. It bears date of November 1, 1810, and is signed by James Madison, who was at the time President of the United States. The family made a permanent removal to their new home in the primitive wilds of the new country shortly after the war of 1812, and here the grandfather of the subject passed the residue of his life. His son Michael received the quarter section where our subject now resides, and forthwith made a clearing in the midst of the woods, and there erected a log cabin of the primitive type, and then set to himself the herculean task of reclaiming his land and bringing it under cultivation. How well he succeeded, and how earnest his endeavors, the conditions today indicate, and he lived to witness the development of the county from the condition of a primeval forest to that of a populous and opulent division of one of the greatest states in the Union. He died on the old homestead on the 30th of October, 1880, at the venerable age of eighty-three years and nine months. He was a staunch Democrat in his political views, and took an active interest in local affairs of a public nature, while he served as township assessor, and was shown other marks of popular confidence and esteem. Both he and his wife were devout and worthy members of the Lutheran church, in whose faith they reared their children, whose welfare was their deepest solicitude. The mother of the subject was born in Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, on the 1st of July, 1799, and her death occurred on the old homestead farm, in Stark county, on the 7th of January, 1888, at the age of eighty-eight years and six months. Her parents came to Stark county about the same time as did the Snider family, and the two families were the first to take up a permanent abode in Nimi-shillen township.

David Snider passed his youthful days on the old homestead, which is still his abiding place, and it is needless to say that he early became familiar with the manifold details that entered into the reclamation and cultivation of a pioneer farm, this formative period in his life being one that has had its influence upon his entire subsequent career, since he then learned the value of consecutive endeavor and to appreciate that sturdy independence which is ever begotten under such circumstances and environments. His scholastic privileges were necessarily limited, being confined to an irregular attendance in the little log school house so typical of the early days, but this alert mentality has enabled him to fully profit by the lessons of experience, and he is today a man of broad information and mature judgment. Upon attaining his majority he began farming a portion of the homestead "on shares," as the colloquial expression has it, and in 1873 he purchased the interest of one of the other heirs to the estate, while by successive purchases, —in 1873, 1875, 1877, 1884, and 1889,—he finally acquired the interests of all the heirs, thus becoming the sole owner of the ancestral farm. He also purchased thirty acres adjoining the home place, and his landed estate now comprises one hundred and eighty-two acres, while no more prolific a farm can be found in the county.

In 1862 Mr. Snider was drafted into the government service as a soldier of the Civil war, being mustered in as a private of Company K, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to Camp Steel, Tennessee, and the first engagement in which he participated was at Arkansas Post, where seven bullets passed through his clothing, and where the scabbard of his bayonet was shot off, showing that he must have been in the thick of the fray. He next took part in the battle of Haines Bluff, and the command then followed Grant down to Grand Bluff and crossed over into Mississippi, taking part in the capture of Jackson, the capital of that state, and later participating in the forty-seven days' siege of Vicksburg, after which they returned to Jackson and took part in the five days' fight with Johnston. Mr. Snider continued in the service until August, 1863, when he was mustered out, at Black River, Mississippi, receiving his honorable discharge in August, 1863, at Black River, Mississippi. He suffered severe attacks of chills and fever while in the south, and this, as taken in connection with other hardships and privations, worked havoc with his physical system, as is evident when we revert to the fact that when he entered the service he weighed two hundred and ten pounds, while there were only one hundred and thirty pounds of the individual to be mustered out. Prior to the war Mr. Snyder was a Democrat in politics, but upon the organization of the Republican party, as the avowed opponent of slavery, he espoused its cause, and the "grand old party" has ever since had his firm allegiance. Though not formally identified with any church Mr. Snider is a firm believer in the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, and is an upright, sincere Christian gentleman.

On the 18th of October, 1866, Mr. Snider was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Ringer, who was born in Marlboro township, this county, a daughter of Michael Ringer, who came from Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and became one of the early settlers of Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. Of the five children born of this union four are living at the present time, namely: Isabelle, the wife of Peter Monter, of Marlboro township; Thaddeus, a successful farmer of Osnaburg township; Eliza J., the wife of Herbert Heise, of Marlboro township; and Lora, the wife of Irwin Warner, also a resident of that township. Mrs. Snider was summoned into eternal rest on the 26th of December, 1875, and in 1878 the subject married Miss Elizabeth Knepper, who was born in Nimishillen township, a daughter of Ananias Knepper, who came to the county from Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Snider are the parents of four children: Phœbe, who is the wife of Otis Burgett, of this township; and Elisworth, John D. and Lillie, who remain at the parental home.

JOSEPH LARKIN HIGLEY comes of staunch English ancestry in the agnatic line, the original progenitor in the United States having been Captain John Higley, who was born in Frimley, Surrey county, England, whence he came to America in 1665, taking up his residence at Windsor, Connecticut, where he resided until his death. He gained his title of captain by reason of service in the Colonial militia. Joseph Higley, grandfather of the subject, was a native of the state of Massachusetts, having been born in Becket, Berkshire county, whence, in 1815, he came as a pioneer to Ohio, locating in Portage county, where he entered claim to a tract of government land in what is now the town of Windham, where he developed a good farm, upon which he continued to reside until the close of his life. On this homestead was born his son John Larkin Higley, father of the subject, and there he was reared to maturity, and he succeeded to the ownership of the farm, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his long, honorable and signally useful life, his death occurring at the age of eighty-one years. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Frary, was of Scottish ancestry, and was born in Becket, Berkshire county, Massachusetts, whence his parents removed to Windham, Portage county, Ohio, when she was a child, and she still resides on the old homestead, endeared to her through the hallowed memories of the past, and she is eighty-two years of age at the time of this writing, in 1903.

Joseph Larkin Higley was born on the homestead farm mentioned, the date of his nativity having been January 23, 1847, and after availing himself of such advantages as were offered in the district schools he continued his educational discipline in the high school at Ravenna. At the age of seventeen years he assumed a clerical position in a general store at Newton Falls, Trumbull county, later on occupying similar positions at Cleveland and Ravenna, Ohio. He continued in the mercantile business for the period of fourteen years, having removed, in 1870, to Stark county, and located in Waynesburg, where he established himself in the general merchandise business, continuing the enterprise until 1877, and in 1879 he removed to Mansfield, this state, where he became interested in the sheet-metal roofing business, the headquarters of the business having later been removed to Canton, where the enterprise was reorganized under the title of the Canton Steel Roofing Company. In 1880 Mr. Higley came to Canton, and for about six years he was in the employ of the Peerless Reaper Company, and for one year with the C. Aultman Company, and then purchased an interest in the Canton Brick Company, with whose operations he continued to be identified as secretary and treasurer until 1897, when it was reorganized under the name of the Canton & Cleveland Brick Company, and in March, 1902, he disposed of his interest in the same, and has since given his attention to his various capitalistic and industrial interests. He is president of the Cleveland Brick & Clay Company, a director of the Canton Savings & Trust Company, also secretary and treasurer of the Sevres China Company, being concerned in several other important enterprises, while he is also the owner of a considerable amount of valuable realty. In politics Mr. Higley is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but he has never had any personal ambition in a political way and has never held office. Mr. and Mrs. Higley hold membership in the First Presbyterian church, and he is serving as a member of its board of trustees.

At Waynesburg, this county, on the 31st of October, 1876, Mr. Higley was united in marriage to Miss Jane Scott, who was born at Bushnell, Illinois, being a daughter of Captain George M. Scott, who served with distinction in the war of the Rebellion, and who died in the service during the war. The maiden name of his wife was Nancy Gibson, and she is still living, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Higley. The subject and his wife have had three children, all of whom died in early childhood.

JOHN R. MATTHEWS.—The Matthews family is of stanch English stock, the grandfather of the subject having been John Matthews, who was born in the city of Bristol, England, whence he came to the United States as a young man, locating in the state of Massachusetts, where he passed the remainder of his life. John Matthews, father of him whose name initiates this sketch, was born in the old Bay state, where he was reared to maturity, after which he removed to Monroe county, New York, locating in the village of Pittsford, where he was engaged in the cooperage business for a number of years. There was solemnized his marriage to Miss Martha Enisted, who was born in England, and who was about four years of age at the time of her parents' emigration to the United States. She died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Whitcomb, in North Hartland, Niagara county, New York, in May, about twenty-eight years ago, about sixty-eight years of age, and her husband preceded her into eternal rest in the city of Rochester, New York. He was originally a Whig in his political proclivities, and later transferred his allegiance to the Republican party, while both he and his wife were consistent members of the Presbyterian church. He was a close Biblical student, and was very familiar with all portions of the scriptures, from which he was able to quote almost any passage from memory. He and his wife became the parents of eight children, of whom only two are living at the present time, John R., the immediate subject of this review, and Charles H., who is likewise a resident of the city of Canton.

John R. Matthews was born in Pittsford, Monroe county, New York, on the 30th of November, 1831, and he was reared and educated in his native state. He was early thrown on his own resources, and his educational advantages were limited, since he was compelled to walk two miles to and from the little school house, which he was enabled to attend only during the short winter terms. He left home when quite young, and served a thorough apprenticeship at the nursery business, to which he continued to devote his attention for many years. In 1860 Mr. Matthews came from Rochester, New York, to Canton, for the purpose of taking charge of the nursery of Henry Meyer, who had advertised for a man to fill this position, our subject having noted the advertisement in the Rural New Yorker, and he was selected to fill the position, for which fully fifty persons had made application. He continued to be actively identified with this line of industry until about 1877, when he accepted a clerkship in the establishment of the Gunsborg Clothing Company, of Canton, later entering the employ of the Goldberg Clothing Company, with which he remained about four years, and was then with that company's successor, I. & D. Rosenthal, until about 1900. For several years past he has conducted an independent business in Canton, where he is agent for eastern clothing concerns. In politics Mr. Matthews accords an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, and in the spring of 1902 he was elected to the office of trustee of Canton township, in which position he is rendering most efficient and satisfactory service. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Royal Arcanum, the Senior Order of United American Mechanics and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is well known in Canton and vicinity, and holds the high regard of the community in which he has so long made his home.

In the city of Rochester, New York, Mr. Matthews was united in marriage to Miss Julia Stiles, who was born in the city of Syracuse, New York, being a daughter of Martin J. Stiles, a farmer and blacksmith. When she was a child her parents removed to Fairport, Monroe county, New York, where she was reared and educated, and where they passed the remainder of their lives. Of the eight children of Mr. and Mrs. Matthews we incorporate the following brief record: Della is the wife of John H. Diffenbacher, of Middlebranch, Stark county; Charles died in childhood; Ida is the wife of Ewing S. Barnes, of Youngstown, Mahoning county; Minnie is deceased; William died in childhood; Harry, who was born in Canton, on the 4th of September, 1867, and who was educated in the public schools of this city, is now engaged in business with his father; Fred resides at Salem, Ohio; and John resides in Canton.

HIRAM SMITH was born on the parental homestead farm, in what is now North Canton, on the 12th of October, 1852, being a son of John J. and Nancy (Shriver) Smith, the former of whom was a son of Daniel Smith, who were numbered among the very early settlers in Stark county, whither they emigrated from the state of Maryland. John J. Smith was born in Maryland, in the year 1806, and was reared to maturity amid the scenes of pioneer days in Stark county, where he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until the time of his death. His wife was a daughter of Daniel Shriver, who likewise was among the very early settlers in the county. His farm lay in Canton township, and the north and north-eastern parts of the city are located on the land which he thus secured. His land extended as far southward as the present Turner Hall, and he used to cultivate the flats which are now practically in the center of the city. He owned a large amount of land, and through its appreciation in value with the growth of the city and the increase in population throughout the county he became well-to-do, and was an influential citizen of the community. The mother of the subject inherited eighty acres of the old homestead, and after their marriage she and her husband located on this farm, where the latter passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1865, at the age of fifty-nine years. His widow survived him by many years, her death occurring in 1897, at the venerable age of eighty-three years. In politics the father was a Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he transferred his support to the same, and both he and his wife were worthy and zealous members of the Lutheran church. Of their children we incorporate the following brief data: Daniel is a farmer of Plain township; Mary, who became the wife of Matthias Groffmiller, is now deceased; Jeremiah is a resident of the city of Canton; Susan died at the age of about twenty years; Harriet is the wife of Benjamin F. Smith, of Plain township; William maintains his residence in the state of Texas; Orlando and Amanda, twins, the latter residing on the old homestead, and the former on North Market street, this city; Hiram, subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and Emma J., the widow of William J. Adams, lives on the McKinley farm, east of Minerva.

Hiram Smith was reared on the home farm, early beginning to contribute his quota to its work, while his educational privileges were those afforded by the public schools of Canton. He continued to be actively identified with agricultural pursuits until after his marriage, while in his present line of business he has been engaged since 1889, when he associated himself with his brother-in-law, Alva C. Zeiter, in establishing a grocery at their present location, on North Market street, the enterprise being conducted under the firm name of Zeiter & Smith. They have a thoroughly modern and well equipped establishment, are known as reliable and progressive business men, and control a representative trade. In politics Mr. Smith accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, though he has never desired the honors of public office of any order. He has a pleasant residence at 911 Lawrence avenue, where he resided until recently, and which thoroughfare was named in honor of the father of his first wife. Mrs. Smith is a devoted member of the German Reform church, and takes an active part in its work.

In October, 1874, in Canton, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Smith to Miss Josephine Lawrence, daughter of the late George Lawrence, who was formerly an influential citizen and prominent banker of Canton, and who for the past ten years has resided in Los Angeles, California. He served as treasurer of Stark county and also as county commissioner, and was highly esteemed in the community. Mrs. Smith entered into eternal rest on the 11th of January, 1883, there having been no children of the union. On the 8th of April, 1886, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Mary Zeiter, a daughter of Christian Zeiter, a well known and highly honored pioneer of Canton, and of this union have been born three children, Nellie, Earl and Esther.

JACOB B. SNYDER.—Jacob Snyder, grandfather of the subject, was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, where the family was established in an early period, the original American progenitors having emigrated from Germany prior to the war of the Revolution. The grandfather came to Stark county in the early pioneer epoch and took up a tract of heavily timbered land near the present village of Belfort, Nimishillen township, where he made a clearing and erected his primitive domicile of round logs, the building being twenty-two by thirty feet in dimensions. He continued to reside on the pioneer farm until his death, in about 1870, having reclaimed a considerable portion of his land. His son Jacob, father of the subject, was born on the old homestead farm, in this county, in the year 1826, and there fell to his portion from his boyhood much arduous toil in connection with the reclamation and cultivation of the farm, while his educational advantages were perforce most limited, owing to the exigencies of time and place. As a boy he assisted in threshing out wheat with the old-fashioned hand flails, and later by using horses to tread out the grain. He learned to read and write in the German, as well as the English, language. In 1863 he was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Bolinger, who was born in Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Daniel Bolinger, who was numbered among the pioneers of Stark county and who died at the age of eighty-five years, at the home of his son Benjamin, a clergyman of the Dunkard church, in Michigan, three others of his sons having likewise been ministers of that church. After his marriage Jacob Snyder, Jr., located on a farm adjoining the town of Osnaburg, this county, and there he continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred on the 25th of October, 1891. He became one of the prominent and successful farmers of that locality and ever commanded unqualified confidence and esteem in the community, while in politics he gave his support to the Republican party practically from the time of its organization. His wife passed away on the 1st of January, 1897. Both were devoted members of the Dunkard church. Of their children we enter the following record: Callie is the wife of Jacob Keim, near Middlebranch; Jacob B. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Benjamin is a resident of Salem, Columbiana county; Louis resides in Akron, this state, as does also Mahlon, who is the youngest of the children.

Hon. Jacob B. Snyder was born on the homestead farm, near Osnaburg, this county, on the 26th of July, 1866, and attended the public schools in a somewhat desultory way from the age of six years to that of twenty, and it may consistently be said that he is self-educated, since he has been untiring and assiduous in his personal application and has thus rounded out a symmetrical and broad education of a practical order. He began teaching in the district schools at the age of eighteen years, and was engaged in this line of work during two winter terms. In 1889, during the administration of President Harrison, he was appointed postmaster at Osnaburg, remaining incumbent of this office for a period of two years, at the expiration of which he resigned, in order to give his entire time and attention to the study of law, which he carried forward with such concentration and energy that he secured admission to the bar of the state in the year 1892. Thereafter he was engaged in the practice of his profession in the city of Canton until 1898, when he was elected to represent the Stark district in the lower house of the state legislature, serving as a member of the seventy-third general assembly, in which he proved himself a capable and progressive legislator and one who so acceptably represented the interests of his constituency that he was returned to the seventy-fourth assembly as his own successor in the election in the autumn of 1902. At the opening of the seventy-third assembly he was a prominent candidate for speaker of the house, withdrawing at the last moment and being elected speaker pro tem, in which position he proved that he was well equipped as a presiding officer, being well versed in parliamentary usages and having that self poise so essential in that connection. He gained recognition as one of the leaders of the Republican side of the house, and during his present term his retention of membership on important committees will work for the promotion of effective legislation. Mr. Snyder is essentially a working member and one who is known to permit no compromise for the sake of partisan expediency at the sacrifice of principle, so that he commands the respect and esteem of his confreres in the legislature, as does he the high regard of the people of Stark county. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has been one of the active and valued workers in the Republican party and is one of its wheel-horses in Stark county, while it may be said that he cast his first presidential vote in support of James G. Blaine. Mr. Snyder is an able and honored member of the bar of the county and is still engaged in the practice of his profession in Canton, where he has maintained his home since 1899.

On the 27th of November, 1894, Mr. Snyder was united in marriage to Miss Alice Steinmetz, a daughter of George Steinmetz, a prominent and influential farmer of Pike township, where Mrs. Snyder was born. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have two children, Bernice, who was born in 1897, and Hubert, who was born in 1898.

LOUIS DUMONT.—In the early epoch of its history Stark county was favored in the acquisition of a large number of sterling citizens of French birth or extraction, and today there remain within its borders many representatives of this line, among the number being him to whom this brief sketch is dedicated. His ancestors lived for many years in the suburbs of the fair city of Paris, and there his father, John J. L. Dumont, was born in the year 1816. He was there reared and educated and in the suburbs of Paris he became the owner of a small tract of land upon which he had an excellent vineyard, devoting his attention to the manufacturing of wines. His father, Louis Dumont, served for seven years in Napoleon's army and ever remained loyal to the great commander. He married Virginia Gillette, and they became the parents of several children. In the year 1833, in company with his family, he emigrated to the United States, landing in New York city, whither they came to Stark county, Ohio, by way of Buffalo and Lake Erie, while from Cleveland they proceeded by canal to Alliance, this county. Shortly after his arrival in the county the grandfather of the subject purchased a tract of one hundred and twenty acres of land in Jackson township, and there the family resided for several years, after which they removed to the city of Canton, and for a number of years the grandfather lived with two of his daughters on the corner of North Walnut and Fourth streets. The closing years of his life were passed in the home of his son John, father of the subject of this review, who was then engaged in farming northeast of the city of Massillon. This venerable and honored pioneer of Stark county entered into eternal rest in 1869, at the age of eighty-two years, his devoted wife having passed away in 1851, when nearly sixty-six years of age. Of their children we enter brief record, as follows: John was the father of the subject; Ulillia, who became the wife of Dennis Charinois, of this county, died in a hospital in Cincinnati; and Euphrosia, who never married, died in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. In his native land the father of the subject received his educational advantages, and after coming to Canton he attended the Canton schools for three months, early becoming quite proficient in the English language. He was eighteen years of age at the time of the family removal from France to the United States, and later was united in marriage to Miss Malina Mariee, who was born near Bellefort, in the province of Alsace, France, and who was but six years of age at the time of her parents' emigration to America. They located in the village of Louisville, this county, where she was reared and educated. After their marriage the parents of the subject located on a farm four miles west of Canton, and the father continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred on the 29th of December, 1891. He was a man of high principles and fine mentality, and through his well directed efforts he accumulated a competency, having been the owner of a landed estate of about four hundred acres at the time of his demise. His widow still survives him, having now attained the venerable age of eighty-four years. In politics he was a stanch supporter of the Democratic party, and both he and his wife became members of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Dumont died March 9, 1903, aged eighty-three years. They became the parents of eight children, namely: Henry, who resides near Chagrin Falls, Cuyahoga county; Louis, who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Hermance, who is the wife of Jefferson Clay, who likewise resides near Chagrin Falls; Amelius Joseph P., who is engaged in the grocery business in the city of Canton; Olympia and Flora (twins), the former of whom became the wife of Calvin Clay and died in Stark county, in 1900, while the latter is the wife of Joseph Pierson, of New Berlin, this county; Edward, who is associated with the subject in the management of the grocery business; and Mary, who died at the age of six years.

Louis Dumont, son of John J. L. Dumont, was born on the old homestead farm, on the Fulton road, in Canton township, this county, the date of his nativity having been December 18, 1842, and he was reared under the sturdy discipline of the farm, while his rudimentary scholastic training was received in a log school-house of the primitive pioneer type, the same being known as the Scharid school. Later he continued his studies in the Robinson district, No. 6, near the city of Massillon, and he availed himself of the advantages of the public schools until he had attained the age of nineteen years, his first teacher having been Ira M. Allen, who was later principal of the union school in Canton and who also served as treasurer of Stark county. After leaving school Mr. Dumont came to Canton and secured a clerkship in the general store of John R. Miller, on the public square, and here he continued in the employ of George Fessler, who purchased the business of Mr. Miller in 1863, with whom he remained until 1869, in which year he purchased the grocery business of George A. Winterhalter, his place of business being in the building standing immediately to the south of the present Harter block, on the public square. Here Mr. Dumont maintained his headquarters for two and one-half years, at the expiration of which he purchased of A. J. Douds the site of his present fine establishment. The building originally occupied was destroyed by fire in 1893, and our subject shortly afterward erected his present substantial and commodious brick building, in which he has a select and complete line of staple and fancy groceries and provisions, while the facilities of the store are of metropolitan character. Mr. Dumont is known as a thoroughly progressive and reliable business man and he has ever commanded the entire confidence and esteem of the community and is recognized as one of the leading business men and valuable citizens of Canton. Though taking a public-spirited interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community, he has never evinced the slightest personal ambition in a political way, yet is not neglectful of his duties as a citizen and exercises his franchise in support of the principles of the Democratic party.

Mr. Dumont has been thrice married. On the 18th of February, 1872, he wedded Miss Christina Kryer, who died in 1891, without issue, and in 1896 he was united to Miss Clara E. Lincoln, who passed away on the 7th of May, 1900. On the 19th of November, 1902, Mr. Dumont wedded his present companion, whose maiden name was Anna C. Haggart. He has no children.

MICHAEL W. OBERLIN was born in Akron, Summit county, Ohio, on the 12th of February, 1856, being a son of Obed and Catherine (Smith) Oberlin, of whose eleven children nine are living at the present time. Obed Oberlin was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, being of sturdy German lineage, and the original progenitors in the new world settled in the old Keystone state prior to the war of the Revolution, and two representatives of the family served as members of Washington's body guard during that great conflict which determined the independence of our republic, while the intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of the family has ever been of insistent order, and members of it were found arrayed in the ranks of the American army during the Mexican war and also that of the Rebellion, while it should also be noted, apropos of this statement, that the eldest son of our subject rendered valiant service as a soldier in the late Spanish-American war. In Pennsylvania Obed Oberlin was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Smith, who was likewise a native of that state, and about 1850 they came to Ohio, locating in Akron, whence, about 1859, they came to Stark county and took up their abode in Plain township, where the father continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits until his death. Both were persons of sterling character and were consistent members of the Lutheran church, exemplifying their faith in their daily life. In politics the father gave his support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, with which he identified himself at the time of its organization.

Michael W. Oberlin was about three years of age at the time when his parents took up their residence on the farm in Plain township, and there he was reared to years of maturity. His early educational discipline was secured in the Middlebranch district school and he later supplemented this training by a course of study in an academy at Mount Union, this county. He was matriculated in the Ohio State Agricultural & Mechanical College (now the Ohio State University), in the capital city of Columbus, having been one of the first students to enter this institution from Stark county. In order to defray expenses of his collegiate course he engaged in teaching during the winter months, and with the funds thus secured he attended the summer session of his alma mater. After leaving college Mr. Oberlin was for five years a general teacher in the public schools of the county, and thereafter his services for a full score of years were enlisted as a special teacher of penmanship, drawing and bookkeeping, in public and commercial schools of Canton and Massillon, in which lines he achieved noteworthy success, while his name has thus been indelibly impressed on the history of educational work in Stark county, where are to be found many able and prominent business men who are indebted to him for much of their practical education in business forms and methods, for he was ever careful and conscientious in every detail of his pedagogic work, in which he kept in touch with all advances made and spared no pains to create a spirit of enthusiasm and ambition in his students. He continued to be actively engaged in educational work until 1902, and during these long years of active and efficient service he gained the highest confidence and esteem of a very wide circle of appreciative friends. In politics Mr. Oberlin has ever accorded an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and in the autumn of 1901 he became the candidate of his party for the office of county auditor, to which he was elected by a gratifying majority, his peculiar eligibility for the position being distinctly realized in the county where his many friends rallied to his support. He entered upon the discharge of his official duties in October, 1902, and his administration is fully justifying the choice made by the electors of the county. Fraternally Mr. Oberlin is identified with the Knights of Pythias, holding membership in Perry Lodge No. 87; with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, as a member of Patrick Henry Council, and with the Protective Home Circle.

In the city of Canton, on the 28th of April, 1880, Mr. Oberlin was united in marriage to Elizabeth Lind, who was born in this city, being a daughter of Samuel and Mary Lind, honored pioneers of the county, and Mr. and Mrs. Oberlin have become the parents of six children, namely: Edgar G., who is now a cadet of the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, being a member of the class of 1904; he was a member of Troop D, First Ohio Cavalry, during the late war with Spain, having been but sixteen years of age at the time of his enlistment; Ralph L. is an assistant to his father in the auditor's office; and Mary, Florence and Mariette remain at the parental home.

MORTIMER M. SOUTHWORTH was born in New Baltimore, Stark county, Ohio, on the 28th of November, 1842, being a son of Velorus N. and Paulina S. (Benson) Southworth, of whose six children only he himself and his brother Dallas are now living, the latter being a resident of Marlboro, this county. Velorus Southworth came of staunch New England ancestry and was himself a native of the Green Mountain state, having been born in the city of Rutland, Vermont, on the 20th of May, 1807, and having been there reared to maturity, receiving a common school education and learning the painter's trade. In his native state he was married about 1856 and shortly afterward he came with his bride to Columbiana county, Ohio, locating in the village of Lisbon, where he was engaged in the hotel business for several years and then came to Marlboro, Stark county, where he followed his trade about three years, at the expiration of which he removed to New Baltimore, this county, where he continued to be employed in the work of his trade until 1852, in which year he removed to Delphi, Indiana, leaving his family in Stark county, and while he was thus absent his death occurred. In 1852 he officiated as drummer for the Democratic delegation from his district at the time when they attended the county convention, and the subject, who was then but ten years of age, bore the unwieldy bass drum, which he manipulated with precision and with a feeling of distinctive pride, which was increased when the delegation carried off the honors of the occasion. Velorus Southworth was in active service as a Union soldier during three years of the Civil war, having been first a member of the Ninth Indiana Regiment of Volunteer Infantry and later of the Sixtieth Regiment, while he held the office of drum-major during the greater portion of his terms of service. He died in Delphi, Carroll county, Indiana, in 1874. The Southworth family is of sturdy Scottish origin, and representatives of the same became early settlers in the state of New York as well as New England, and in the Empire state there have been many of the name who have attained prominence and distinction, one having been a judge of the supreme court of New York and another having long presided on the probate bench, while of this family Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, the celebrated novelist, was also a member, her home having in Yonkers, New York. Preston Southworth, a cousin of the subject, and a son of Myron M. Southworth, was a judge of probate in the state of Alabama and was prominent in the public affairs of that state, which he stumped effectively in support of General Grant at the time of his first nomination for the presidency.

Paulina (Benson) Southworth, mother of him to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born in Rutland, Vermont, on the 20th of December, 1810, and eventually through the intemperance of her husband they became separated, the father leaving his home and family, and after he went to Indiana, as noted, she assumed the task and reared her two sons Andrew and Dallas, while the subject was bound out to William Thompson, a farmer of Portage county, Ohio, where he remained up to within four months of his twentieth year, having received such educational privileges as were implied in a somewhat desultory attendance in the district schools. At the age noted he manifested the intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of his nature by tendering his services in defense of the nation, whose integrity was thrown in jeopardy through armed rebellion.

On the 25th of July, 1862, Mr. Southworth enlisted as a private in Company B, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which his brother Andrew also became a member. Shortly after his enlistment at Camp Massillon, this county, Andrew J. Southworth was unanimously chosen by his company as second lieutenant, and later he was promoted to first lieutenant and finally captain of the company, and was offered still higher promotion, but refused to leave the comrades of Company B, with whom he had become very popular. On the 1st of August, 1864, he received his commission as captain, but before being mustered in as such he was killed, before Atlanta, on the 16th of that month. His brother Dallas served one year as a member of the Sixty-second Ohio Regiment, and was then discharged by reason of physical disability, but four months later he re-enlisted, becoming a private in the One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, with which he continued in active service one year. At the time of his enlistment the subject was promised the position of sergeant-major of his company, but as he failed to secure this office he was made drummer of his company, and after serving four months in this capacity he was ordered into the ranks, because the fife-major, C. L. McLean, entered the claim that he could not learn to drum. Mr. Southworth refused to be placed in the ranks and asked to be sent home. Before definite action was taken, however, he asked of Major Woodworth the privilege of receiving instructions from one of the drummers of the regiment, and his request was granted. The following night he beat taps and drummers' call, and within three weeks was acknowledged to be one of the most skillful drummers in the regiment. About six months later the One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Cornet Band was organized and Mr. Southworth was made its snare drummer. In January, 1865, there was held at Goldsboro, North Carolina, a musical convention, with all the bands of Sherman's army in attendance, and the One Hundred and Fourth Ohio band, in the competitive playing, secured second honors, while a similar honor came to Mr. Southworth in his specialty. Among the more prominent engagements in which Mr. Southworth took part were those of Camp Ruff, Fort Mitchell, and Frankfort, Kentucky; Crab Orchard and various subsequent skirmishes through Kentucky; the siege and battle of Knoxville; Resaca; Marietta; Atlanta; Peach Tree Creek; Jonesboro; Columbia; Franklin; Nashville;

Fort Anderson; Wilmington; Kingston; and Goldsboro. He received no wounds during his term of service and was confined to the hospital but three days. He was mustered out at Greensboro, North Carolina, in June, 1865, and received his honorable discharge in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, on the fifth of the following month. A number of his ancestors in the paternal line participated in the war of 1812, while in the maternal line were representatives to be found both in that conflict and the war of the Revolution.

After his discharge Mr. Southworth returned to Portage county and, realizing that his education was deficient, he made an effort to supplement the discipline which he had previously received, and for two terms attended a select school conducted by H. D. Smalley, at Randolph, that county. Later he went to the city of Cleveland, where he completed a course of study in the Bryant & Stratton Business College. His funds became depleted before he completed his studies in this institution, and in order to make provision for continuing his course he secured a position as delivery boy for J. H. Lodge, who was then a prominent grocer of the Forest City, and within eight months he had saved from his earnings a sufficient sum to enable him to complete his work in the college. Here he assisted simultaneously in keeping books for Dr. L. W. Sapp, under whose preceptorship he began the study of the Hahnemann school system of medicine, with a view to becoming a physician of the Homeopathic school. He remained with Dr. Sapp two years and then accepted a position as bookkeeper for the firm of Hogan & Carr, wholesale grocers of Cleveland, his object being to thus earn the funds necessary to taking a collegiate medical course. After ten months' service, however, his health became so impaired that he was compelled to resign his position, and he then came to Alliance, Stark county, and here, on the 11th of September, 1867, he was united in marriage to Miss Allie M. Heacock, of Atwater, Portage county, who had been a school mate while he was residing with his foster-father, Mr. Thompson. After his marriage Mr. Southworth established himself in business in Alliance, where he opened a music store, handling all kinds of musical merchandise, and in this line of enterprise he continued until the financial panic of 1872, when he disposed of the business, which had become unprofitable, and then entered the employ of the Adams Express Company, with which he remained in the capacity of railroad clerk and messenger, for a period of three and one-half years, at the expiration of which he resigned the position to accept a clerkship in the establishment of D. G. Hester, who was engaged in the general merchandise business in Alliance. A year later he resigned this position and for the following two years was employed as baggage master at the local station of the Pennsylvania railroad. He then resigned the position and became manager of the Sourbeck hotel, in Alliance, whose proprietor, Daniel Sourbeck had recently died. Two years later he assumed the management of the Hotel Conrad, at Massillon, and at the expiration of a year he resigned to accept the superintendency of the Charity Rotch School, to succeed Ira M. Allen, who had been superintendent for a decade. The board, however, discovered a discrepancy in the returns from the endowment of the institution and considered it expedient to reduce the salary of the superintendent, and on this score the subject refused to enter upon the duties of the office. He then assumed the management of John Huntington's summer home and fruit farm, near the city of Cleveland, and two years later the home was burned and Mr. Southworth lost valuable household effects and also his collection of army relics, which he prized very highly. He and his family barely escaped with their lives. Through exposure during the fire Mr. Southworth's health became seriously impaired, and he then returned to Alliance, where he was shortly afterward appointed to the position of truant officer, by the board of education, and in 1891, while incumbent of this position, he was chosen to his present responsible preferment as superintendent of the Fairmount Children's Home, which is most eligibly located in Washington township, the board of trustees having granted him this well merited preferment. Within his regime sixteen hundred children have been inmates of the home, while the average number in the institution at one time is about two hundred. Since he assumed charge there having been but sixteen deaths in the home, though there was a severe epidemic of malignant diphtheria in the institution during his first years, thirty-seven cases having developed, while only two deaths occurred. From a total of sixty cases of measles and nine of scarlet fever only one death was recorded. These facts bespeak in no uncertain way the careful attention given to the children by Mr. Southworth and his noble wife, while a more able and satisfactory administration of the affairs of the institution could not be asked. Mrs. Southworth keeps watch and ward over her numerous foster family, and of many children who came to her care in the most frightful physical condition the large majority have been brought through her devoted ministrations to health and happiness and many of the little wards have been established in good homes, where they are doing credit to the training received at Fairmount. A distinctive evidence of the appreciation of the board of trustees was recently accorded, when, in joint session with the county commissioners, they gave most emphatic and commendatory endorsement to the course taken by Mr. Southworth and gave a farther recognition by increasing his salary by three hundred dollars per annum.

In politics Mr. Southworth has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he and his family are valued members. Fraternally he is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, affiliating with John C. Fremont Post No. 29, at Alliance, Ohio, while he has attained high rank in the time honored order of Freemasonry, being identified with the following named bodies of the same: Conrad Lodge No. 271, Free and Accepted Masons; Alliance Chapter No. 83, Royal Arch Masons; Omega Council No. 44, Royal and Select Masters; Salem Commandery No. 42, Knights Templar; Al Koran Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and Lake Erie Consistory, Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret. It will thus be seen that he has completed the circle of both the York and Scottish rites, and he stands high in the Masonic circles of the state, as does he in the respect and confidence of all who know him.

Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Southworth three are living, namely: Glenn A., who is in the employ of the Alliance Machine Company, as an expert machinist; Ferdinand L., who is a rising young lawyer of Cleveland; and Esther M., who is the efficient bookkeeper for her father. Mr. and Mrs. Southworth are also educating a foster daughter whom they took from the home seven years ago, and who is amply repaying their care and devotion.

HENRY E. WEBER was born in Canton, on the 27th of April, 1861, and in its public schools he received his educational training as a boy, and when nineteen years of age he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of machinist in the tool department of the Diebold Safe & Lock Company, of Canton, where he served for a term of four years, while later he held the position of head machinist for the

Connotton Valley Railroad, in the employ of which he continued for two years. In the meanwhile he was carefully conserving his financial resources, his mental makeup being such that he has ever worked toward some definite object, and in 1885 he felt himself justified in continuing his educational work in a technical way. He entered the College of Pharmacy in the city of Cleveland, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1887, and shortly afterward he passed the required examination before the state board of pharmacy and was duly registered as a licensed pharmacist. In 1885, in company with his brother Charles, he effected the purchase of the drug store of John Geiger, in Canton, and they continued to conduct the same, under the firm name of Weber Brothers, for a period of seven years, at the expiration of which our subject purchased his brother's interest and remained as sole proprietor until 1894, when he sold the business to the firm of Pope & Binckley, of Doylestown, Wayne county. He then accepted a position as traveling salesman for the Harvard Company, of Canton, Ohio, in whose interests he visited the most diverse sections of the Union and also the principal European countries. At the end of three years he resigned his position and came again to Canton, where he began manufacturing dental supplies and specialties. The inception of the enterprise was most modest, since his original headquarters comprised one small room in his stable, where he placed a foot lathe and other absolutely essential machinery and personally did all portions of the manufacturing, turning out a considerable quantity of products and then going out on the road and disposing of the same. At the end of six months his business had so sufficiently increased as to justify him in removing to more commodious quarters, at 404 East Fifth street, while in November, 1902, he removed to his present well equipped and commodious establishment on East Ninth street, having purchased the property in 1902, and having utilized much discrimination in installing the needed mechanical devices and accessories. On the 19th of December, 1899, he secured his first patent on his newly invented dental cuspidor, known as Weber's fountain spittoon, while in 1901 he also secured another United States patent and also one in Canada, while he has patents in Great Britain, France and Germany. He has also invented a hot-water syringe, which he has patented and is manufacturing, while he also has patents pending on dental operating chairs of very superior order. The Weber fountain spittoon has gained a high reputation and has secured a representative and appreciative reception by the dental profession throughout the United States and also in foreign countries, shipments being made to the various European countries and also to South Africa. The sole agents for this ingenious and attractive dental accessory are Lee S. Smith & Son, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and the demand for the product is rapidly increasing in scope as the undeniable superiority of the same over all others becomes known. While it is aside from the province of a publication of this nature to enter into details in regard to aught aside from pure genealogical and biographical record, yet the products of Mr. Weber's genius constitute a phase of his life work, and there can thus be no impropriety in quoting briefly from the attractive trade circular issued by his agents: "The Weber fountain spittoon is the most beautiful and at the same time the most practical thing that has ever been made for use in the dental office. Without sacrificing a single essential feature an article has been made that is an ornament to any office. The artistic features of the Weber spittoon will appeal to anyone. It is practical as well as beautiful. From the practical standpoint it combines the three features essential to perfection in an article of this character. Of first importance is the fact that it is sanitary. The bowl is made of one solid piece of glass or porcelain. No part of it revolves. There is nothing complicated about it. There are no parts to wear out or get out of order, hence there are no places for impurities to lodge and become foul. Second in importance is its noiseless operation. It is utterly impossible to hear it running, even when seated in the chair beside it. Water from the supply pipe is fed into the bowl beneath the surface of the water already in the depression. Under these conditions it simply is not possible for it to be heard. The water on entering the bowl does not come in contact with the air. There is no other possible way to insure noiseless operation. This is one of the patented mechanical features of this spittoon. The third essential feature is the rapidity with which the saliva is carried out of sight of the patient. Nothing that is thrown into the bowl can remain in sight for more than a fraction of a second."

In 1893 Mr. Weber converted his manufactory into a stock company and incorporated the same for one hundred thousand dollars, his associates being W. L. Smith, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, L. A. Loichot, of Canton, H. B. Stewart, of Canton, M. E. Weber, of Canton, and R. Humelbaugh, of Canton.

Mr. Weber is a man of fine mechanical skill and technique, as is evident to all who have seen the article mentioned, and he is constantly devoting his attention to experiments and is certain to patent other articles which will meet an equally favorable reception. He is well known in Canton and commands unequivocal confidence and esteem as a citizen and business man. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, but has never sought official preferment, though he served one term as a member of the city council, from the first ward, being assigned to membership on the ways and means committee and also that on fire and water. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He was reared in the faith of the English Lutheran church, but is not formally identified with any religious body, his wife being a devoted member of the Baptist church.

On the 5th of January, 1887, Mr. Weber was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Morris, who was born in Canton, being a daughter of Elliott and Sarah (Miller) Morris, of this city, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Helen E., Mirriam L. and Mary J. Mr. Weber is an ardent sportsman and greatly enjoys excursions afield and afloat, being an excellent shot and being one of the enthusiastic members of the Canton Gun Club.

THEODORE C. McQUATE, M. D., was born in the city of Canton, Stark county, Ohio, on the 19th of December, 1870, and was here reared to maturity, having completed the course of study in the high school, which was then a department of the old Union school, where he was graduated. During his vacations he traveled about the country as a jockey, gaining an excellent reputation on the turf, while he also worked as a mechanic at intervals. He grew up with a great appreciation of fine horses, this having been fostered, no doubt, by reason of the fact that his home was located opposite the county fair grounds, now the city park, so that he early became interested in the racing events there scheduled and was finally led to adopt riding as an avocation. He has ever continued to be a fancier and lover of fine horses and dogs, fancy poultry, etc., and it was through his work as a veterinary surgeon that he was led into the wider sphere of professional endeavor in which he is now laboring. In 1886 he took up the study of veterinary surgery in the famous McGill University, in the city of Montreal, Canada, and later entered the Ontario Veterinary College of Toronto University, where he was graduated on the 29th of March, 1889, at the age of nineteen years, receiving the degree of Doctor of Veterinary Medicine. He then returned to Canton and here built up a large practice as a veterinarian, his services being in requisition throughout all parts of this section of the state, while he became particularly expert in surgical work, doing a large amount of individual experimentation in the line. He continued in practice here about four years, and at the age of twenty-three years, as candidate on the Republican ticket, he was elected to the office of county coroner, receiving the largest majority ever accorded a candidate for this office in the county, while he was elected for a second term, during which he continued to serve, as did he also through a portion of a third term, pending the qualification of his successor, and while incumbent of this position the Doctor made it a point to gain as much practical supplemental knowledge as possible in regard to anatomy and surgery, while during the winters he studied medicine in the medical department of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in the city of Cleveland. After retiring from the office of coroner he went to the city of Cleveland, where he continued his study of medicine and surgery under the direction of the eminent surgeon, Dr. Crile Gillette, of Toledo. In the spring of 1897 he left Cleveland, on account of the radical laws advocated by a few physicians of the city, demanding that the state prohibit the awarding of medical diplomas to such candidates as had not previously taken the degree of either science or arts. An amendment to the proposed law was drawn up by the students in the different medical colleges in Cleveland and Dr. McQuate was chosen to present their grievance before the state legislature, in session at Columbus, and through his efforts the amendment was finally added and thus effectually did away with the unjust discrimination attempted. From Cleveland Dr. McQuate went to Chicago, where he attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons for one year, while he gained valuable clinical experience in Cook County Hospital during this time. He later entered the Toledo Gillette's Hospital for abdominal surgery, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1901. While pursuing his studies, in order to see the country and also to earn the funds with which to enable to continue his college work, the Doctor traveled for two seasons with the New England Carnival Company. After his graduation he did post-graduate work in Chicago, and there had a wide and varied hospital experience. He has defrayed the entire expense of his literary and professional education through his own efforts, applying himself diligently to whatever work he has undertaken and ever working with a definite end in view, so that his precedence in his profession is sure to be cumulative, for he brings to bear the same self-reliance and enthusiasm and is thoroughly well read in the science of medicine and well equipped as a surgeon, while he is a close student and keeps abreast of the advances made in his profession, while he devotes no little time to personal experimentation and original investigation. He was first assistant to the well-known surgical expert, Dr. William Gillette, of Toledo, one and a half years, the latter being noted for his wonderful success in gun shot wounds in the abdomen, and also holding the world's record on operations on women. In the spring of 1902 Dr. McQuate opened his present office, at 208 South Market street, in the city of Canton, and here he is building up a satisfactory practice, being well known in the community and holding the high esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. The Doctor makes a specialty of stomach diseases.

The Doctor has ever been a staunch adherent of the Republican party and a zealous worker in its cause. In 1896, when the late lamented President McKinley's campaign was in progress, the Doctor was a member of the Republican reception committee in the President's home city of Canton, and he also was a member of the reception committee at the time when the remains of the martyred President were brought to Canton for interment. During the last presidential campaign Dr. McQuate was also a member of the McKinley escort troop. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics.

PETER V. LOUTZENHISER.—As to the subject's early family history we can not do better in this connection than to make excerpts from the interesting and carefully prepared little brochure entitled a "History of the Loutzenheiser family," which was read at the annual reunion of the family on the 17th of August, 1893, and later published by its author, whose name introduces this sketch. He speaks as follows: "Then, A. D. 1764, we find our more direct ancestors settled in America. The record left does not even show what country they came from, but, being written in the German language, it goes to show that they had been educated in a German country, and all tradition agrees that they came from the German Rhenish country. It has, however, been more definitely learned that Zweibrucken, a town in the kingdom of Bavaria, was the original home of the Loutzenheisers who first came and settled in America. * * * The only known authentic record of the arrival of our ancestors in this country was written by Peter Loutzenheiser, great-grandfather of your historian. Let us note here that all traditional accounts agree that there were three brothers named Loutzenheiser who came to this country together, but this is probably not strictly true. No account tells anything as to age, or whether married or single, and these traditional accounts do not state whether the parents of these three men also came to this country or not, but all accounts do agree that all persons of the name of Loutzenheiser in this country sprang from two of the brothers. The record of our elder Peter incidentally shows us that his parents were also in this country and that his father's name was Henry. * * * Now let us go back to 1764, which is the time the elder Peter says he arrived in this country. As before mentioned, he does not say that his father was in this country, but incidentally we learn that he was, and just the same way he speaks of one Jacob Loutzenheiser, who we think it reasonable to believe was an older brother. Now we believe that it was this Jacob and the elder Peter who were the progenitors of all the Loutzenheisers in this country. We have already learned that the father of these men was also in this country, therefore we have found the one man who was the father of all the Loutzenheisers in America. His name was Henry, or Heinrich, and he was great-grandfather to Henry, the chairman of our reunion. Just when and where he was born or when he died we are not informed. It is quite probable, however, that he came to America when the elder Peter did and that he died somewhere in the state of Pennsylvania."

From the same source of information we learn that this elder Peter Loutzenheiser, great-grandfather of the subject, was married to Anna Barbara Schneider, on May 14, 1770, and on November 1, 1771, was born their first child, John Jacob, who grew to manhood in Pennsylvania and there married Elizabeth Weber, daughter of a clergyman of the German Reformed church in Westmoreland county, that state. He came from that county to Stark county, Ohio, in 1806, in company with his family, and settled on land which he had chosen the preceding year, about one-half mile north of the present Nimisilla Park, in Canton township. He was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who has written as follows in regard to his honored ancestor: "Here he built his cabin and lived among the native red men, always on friendly terms with them. He was one of the first justices of the peace commissioned for Stark county, his jurisdiction extending all over the northeastern portion. He died in 1810, at the age of thirty-seven years, and his widow died in 1843. Their children were John, Barbara, Peter, William, Polly, Sarah and Jacob." All of these children are now deceased, and in the connection it is imperative that we speak specifically only of the second son, Peter, who was the father of him to him whom this sketch is dedicated. Of this honored pioneer of Stark county his son and namesake has written as follows: "Peter Loutzenheiser was born April 13, 1800; came to Stark county with his parents in the spring of 1806; 'grew up with the country,' a genuine pioneer of Stark county and a backwoodsman, yet a man of more than ordinary attainments for the opportunities afforded him. He kept himself well posted on the general topics of his day, especially in political affairs and the laws of Ohio. He was a lifelong Democrat but never allowed political prejudice to interfere with his better judgment. He faithfully served in many places of trust, to which he was chosen by the people of Plain township, having served nearly twenty years as justice of the peace, while he was twice elected associate judge for Stark county, by the legislature of Ohio, and was president of the Pioneer Association at the time of his death, which occurred June 8, 1882. This pioneer Peter had six sons: William, of Grass Valley, California, who has two sons and two daughters; Jacob, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, now deceased, had one daughter; Joseph, who died the 8th of August, 1893, left four sons and one daughter and a number of grandchildren; George, of Williams county, Ohio, has three daughters and a number of grandchildren; John, deceased, of Plain township; and Peter V., of Canton, Ohio, who has three sons and three daughters. Of the three daughters of the pioneer Peter—Hannah, Amanda, now deceased, and Rebecca—there have sprung the Mountains, the Pontiuses, the Stettlers, Beards and Goodrichs, and other younger side branches are being cultivated."

From the foregoing paragraph it will be seen that the father of the subject was a man of no little prominence in his community, while he continued to reside on his old homestead farm in Plain township, this county, until he was called from the scene of life's endeavors, secure in the confidence and regard of all who knew him and had appreciation of his sterling manhood. In the year 1823 he was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Kimmel, who was born in Union county, Pennsylvania, on the 13th of January, 1801, being a daughter of Joseph and Hanna Kimmel, who were numbered among the pioneers of Stark county. She proved a devoted companion and helpmeet and a kind and loving mother, her memory resting like a benediction upon all who came within the sphere of her gracious and kindly influence. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 9th of November, 1884, having been a consistent and zealous member of the German Reformed church, as was also her husband. Of their children due mention has already been made, and after this brief summary of the family genealogy we may now turn to the more salient points in the personal career of the immediate subject of this sketch.

Peter Van Buren Loutzenheiser was born on the old homestead farm owned by his father, two miles north of the city of Canton, in Plain township, on the 14th of June, 1842, and there he was reared under the benign and invigorating influences ever implied under conditions where "those who in the love of nature hold communion with her visible forms," while at an early age he began to contribute his quota to the work of the farm, waxing strong in mind and body under the influences brought to bear in this formative period of his character.

His initial scholastic training was secured in district No. 8, and his first teacher was Miss Rebecca Niesz, who boarded in his home. The lad became a favorite pupil of this successful teacher, and he accompanied her to and from the little school house, while as a child he showed a notable fondness for books and study. As a boy he began writing verses in a crude way, and furnished his playmates with numerous effusions which were duly presented to the favored sweethearts in the respective cases, the budding poet being at the time but twelve years of age. Mr. Loutzenhiser continued to attend the public schools until he had attained the age of seventeen years, having passed his fourteenth and fifteenth years in the Canton schools, where he made marked progress in his studies. At the age of seventeen he put his scholastic acquirements to practical test by engaging in pedagogic work, becoming a successful and popular teacher in the district schools of Lake and Plain townships, this county, and he continued to teach at intervals until the intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of his nature was roused by the clarion call to arms when the dark cloud of civil war cast its pall athwart the national horizon. He forthwith responded to this higher call of duty, and in October, 1861, in Canton, he enlisted as a private in Company C, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for a term of three years or until the close of the war. The regiment passed the ensuing winter in camp at Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, and in the spring proceeded to Commerce, Scott county, Missouri, near which place General Pope's army had mobilized, and thence they went forward to New Madrid, that state, where the regiment took part in its first battle. Mr. Loutzenhiser had been ill for two weeks prior to this engagement, and later, in company with others, was sent back to the hospital which had been established in the town of Commerce, while such was his disability that two weeks later he was transferred to the hospital in the city of St. Louis, and there, being incapacitated for further service, he received his honorable discharge on the 2d of June, 1862. He then returned to his home, where he endeavored to recuperate his wasted physical energies, having contracted a low type of fever and also been attacked with asthma, and from the latter ailment he has continued to suffer to a greater or less degree up to the present time. Mr. Loutzenhiser passed the summer of 1873 in studying law, in the office of Brown & Myers, in Canton, with the intention of adopting the profession as his vocation in life. His finances reached a low ebb, and the following winter he resumed teaching, and it eventuated that he never resumed his reading of the law, having been led to take up the study of theology, to which he devoted his attention at home, having first become interested in religious work while visiting his brother and sisters in the northwestern part of the state. He became an exhorter in the Methodist Episcopal church, laboring zealously for the cause of the divine Master and the uplifting of his fellow men, and later was licensed as a local preacher in this church. Endowed with strong imaginative powers and a fine appreciation of poetical form, Mr. Loutzenhiser had written a number of very able short poems prior to 1866, when he unfortunately abandoned his efforts in this line, partially at the suggestion of his elder brother. In 1869, mainly in the hope of regaining his health, he joined his brother William in Grass Valley, Nevada county, California, where he was employed in his brother's drug store until November, 1870, and during this interval he was very active in church work, holding regular services and being urged to enter the regular ministry. However he felt that so precarious was the condition of his health that he was not justified in seeking ordination in the church, and he thus returned to his home in Stark county, finding his health somewhat improved by his sojourn in the Golden state.

On the 19th of May, 1872, at Sandyville, Tuscarawas county, this state, Mr. Loutzenhiser was united in marriage to Miss Ida M. Sternberger, who was born in Dover township, that county, on the 20th of June, 1847, where she was reared and educated, her parents, Adam and Anna Mary (Burkhardt) Sternberger, having been pioneers of that section, whither they emigrated from the Rhine section of Germany, her father devoting the balance of his signally and active and useful life to agricultural pursuits. After his marriage the subject resided for a time in Plain township, and then removed to Beach City, this county, where he established himself in the drug and grocery business, in which he was there successfully engaged until the Centennial year, 1876, when he returned to the old homestead farm to care for his venerable parents, all the other children having left the old home roof. He remained with them until they answered the inexorable summons of death, his father passing away on the 8th of June, 1882, and his mother on the 9th of November, 1884, as has been previously noted in this context. He then settled up the estate, and after the old homestead had been sold he removed to the city of Canton, and here he afterward turned his attention to the huckstering business, in which he continued until his health became so impaired as to necessitate his withdrawal. In 1893 Mr. Loutzenhiser purchased his present property, at the corner of Cedar and High streets, and there, in April of that year, he opened a general store, where he has since continued operations, having built up a very gratifying trade and receiving a representative supporting patronage. He commands the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who know him, and is recognized as one of the sterling citizens of his native county. In 1891

Mr. Loutzenhiser resumed the writing of verses, and since that time has composed some very creditable poems, which have been published in various papers. One of these, entitled "A Grocer's Meditations," was published in the Inland Grocer, a leading trade journal, issued in the city of Cleveland. Mr. Loutzenhiser still continues to take an active part in church work, and both he and his wife are devoted and valued members of Simpson Methodist Episcopal church. In politics the subject usually voted the Democratic ticket until after the first administration of President Cleveland, and since that time he has mainly exercised his franchise in support of the cause of the Prohibition party. Fraternally he is identified with McKinley Post No. 25, of the Grand Army of the Republic.

In conclusion we enter a brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Loutzenhiser: Peter S., who is a resident of the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, is there secretary of the South Side Young Men's Christian Association. He secured his early education in the public schools and later attended the Northwestern University, at Evanston, the beautiful lakeside suburb of the city of Chicago. In 1897, in Canton, he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Snyder, and they have two daughters, Ruth E. and Grace Thelma. Aquilla B. died at the age of six years and Ruth Orpha at the age of four and one-half years, while Paul Leo was three and one-half years of age at the time of his death; Byron S. and Fernanda Q. remain at the parental home; Rue Olga died at the age of about three years; and the three younger children—Mary E., Pansy V. and Inez L.—are attending the public schools of Canton.

HUGO STANDKE is a native of the empire of Germany, having been born in the picturesque little Rhine city of Bonn, on the 10th of August, 1870, and being the youngest of the six children born to Otto and Emily (Schoenhals) Standke. Otto Standke was born in the town of Lennep, province of Westphalia, Germany, on the 8th of February, 1836, and was there reared and educated. He was a talented musician, and attained no little celebrity as a composer and as conductor of orchestras and singing societies, while for many years he held the position of organist in the English Lutheran church in the city of Bonn, where his death occurred in 1888. His widow survived him by several years, her death occurring, in the same city, in the year 1892. One of their sons, Ludwig, is a distinguished physician of Bonn, having been formerly a surgeon in the German army, and another son, Otto W., is chief chemist in an extensive aniline factory in Rummelsburg, near the city of Berlin, Germany.

Hugo Standke received his preliminary educational discipline in the common schools of his native city and thereafter entered the celebrated University of Bonn, where he continued his studies until he had attained the age of eighteen years. Mr. Standke severed the ties which bound him to home and fatherland and proceeded to the city of Bremen, where he embarked for America, and in due course of time he landed in the city of Baltimore, whence he proceeded directly to the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, to join his uncle, Charles Schoenhals, who was there engaged in the manufacturing of soap. For the first year of his residence in America our subject was employed as time-keeper and shipping clerk in his uncle's factory, after which he gave inception to his independent business career by becoming agent for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, while a year later the company promoted him to the office of assistant superintendent. In 1893 he came to Canton to assume charge of the company's business in this district, and a few months later he was transferred to the city of

Brooklyn, New York, as assistant superintendent. Subsequently he determined to establish himself independently in the general insurance business. He accordingly came to Canton, where he became district manager of the New England Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Boston, the oldest organization of the sort in America, and later he also became agent for the Security & Trust Company, of New York city, and the Pacific Mutual Accident Insurance Company, of San Francisco. In August, 1899, Mr. Standke acquired the interests of the John Raeber insurance agency in Canton, and thus became the local representative of the Teutonia and the Cooper Fire Insurance Companies, both of Dayton and both leading concerns of the sort in the state of Ohio, and later he also became agent for the Northwestern Underwriters, of Milwaukee, the Baltimore Fire Insurance Company, of Baltimore, Maryland; the National Fire Insurance Company, of Cincinnati; the Commerce, of Albany, New York; the German, of Wheeling, West Virginia; the German, of Indianapolis, Indiana; the North German, of New York city; and the Farmers' & Merchants', of Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Standke conducts an extensive and profitable business and his agency is one of the most important in this section of the state. In connection with his insurance business he is also agent for a number of the leading steamship lines, including the following: The Hamburg American; North German Lloyd of New York; North German Lloyd, of Baltimore; the Red Star line, American line; the Holland American line; the American, of Philadelphia; and the Cunard, White Star, Italian, Beaver, Anchor and French lines. He is also representative of the German Bank, of Cincinnati, and the banking firm of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, of New York city, through which latter he transacts his foreign business, in the way of inheritance claims, etc. In politics Mr. Standke gives his allegiance to the Republican party in national affairs, but in local matters, where no issue is involved, he maintains an independent attitude. He has served for the past three years as secretary of the Canton Turnverein and is now president of the German Turnverein, of Canton. Fraternally he is identified with Mannheim Lodge No. 408, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is treasurer at the present time. He is one of the popular young men of the city, and is held in high regard in both business and social circles.

CHAUNCEY A. WALKER, M. D., is a native of Stark county and a worthy representative of two of its old and highly respected families. His father, Albert Walker, born and reared in the township of Osnaburg, was reared to agricultural pursuits and when a young man married Miss Sarah Brownell, after which he followed farming in this county until his removal, about six years ago, to Denver, Colorado. He has since returned east, and is now living in Canton, Ohio. For many years he was a conspicuous figure in the affairs of his township, prospered in temporal things, and his reputation as an honorable, God-fearing man and consecrated Christian was duly recognized and appreciated by his fellow citizens. Politically he was long a potent factor in the Democratic party, but never aspired to official honors, and as a member of the Reformed church he executed a wholesome influence in the community, the effect of which is still felt by those among whom he mingled. To Albert and Sarah Walker have been born two sons,—Roland G., for many years connected with the public schools of Canton, now a medical student; and Chauncey A., whose name introduces this review.

Matthias Walker, the subject's grandfather, was a native of Pennsylvania and one of the early pioneers of Stark county, coming here when the few settlements were but niches in the forests and entering land in what is now Osnaburg township. He was by vocation an agriculturist, and his death occurred in 1877. His children were: Albert; Juxop, deceased; Eli; Mathias and Catharine, deceased.

Mrs. Sarah (Brownell) Walker, the Doctor's mother, was born in Pennsylvania, the daughter of George and Sarah Brownell, who were also among the early settlers of Stark county. The Brownell family made the journey to their new home in Osnaburg township by wagon and spent a number of days en route, experiencing many difficulties and hardships before arriving at their destination. They were among the substantial residents of the community in which they lived and bore an active part in the growth and development of the country, also maintained a lively interest in everything pertaining to its social and moral advancement. George and Sarah Brownell spent the remainder of their lives where they originally located, and died a number of years ago, honored and respected by all who knew them.

Dr. Chauncey A. Walker was born August 5, 1873, in Osnaburg township, and received his educational training in the public schools, supplemented by a course of training in the high school of Minerva. His early life on the farm and the wholesome influences of his home training early inspired him to noble aims and high ideals, and while still a youth he carefully formulated his plans for the future, determining to make the most of his opportunities and if possible achieve a career of honor and usefulness. When it came time to decide upon a vocation he chose the profession of medicine, and in 1893 began the study of the same under the direction of Dr. J. P. Schilling, of Canton, in whose office he pursued his investigations until entering the Ohio Medical University at Columbus in the fall of 1895. He attended that institution until completing the prescribed course, in the spring of 1898, spending the last year as assistant professor of anatomy, an honor seldom conferred upon a student, in that the position calls for a thorough mastery of that difficult and important branch of the profession. Immediately following his graduation Dr. Walker opened an office in Louisville, where his abilities soon won recognition and it was not long until he succeeded in building up a large practice, as successful financially as it was professionally. His patronage has steadily increased in magnitude and importance, and he now enjoys worthy prestige among the leading physicians and surgeons of the county, keeping pace with the most advanced of his professional associates in all that pertains to modern discoveries in the domain of medical science. He has no specialties, being equally successful in all branches of the profession, and as a skillful surgeon stands in the front rank of his compeers. He loses no opportunity to keep himself in close touch with the trend of modern medical thought, and to this end has become identified with the various organizations to which the members of his profession in this part of the state belong. Among these are the Northeastern Ohio Medical Society, in the deliberations of which he is no passive spectator, but an active and influential participant.

In 1898 Dr. Walker was appointed health officer of Louisville, the duties of which position he has discharged to the present time, and so satisfactorily has been his course that in all probability the place will be his as long as he cares to hold it. He has also held the office of township physician since the above year, and as far as is known there is no disposition or desire on the part of the public for a change in this important and far-reaching position. In politics the Doctor is independent, preferring to exercise his own judgment in the support of candidates and principles rather than obey the behests of party leaders. He is well posted upon the leading issues and public questions of the day and is never at a loss what measure to support when it comes to exercising the elective franchise. For some years he has been a prominent worker in the Masonic order, belonging to Juilliard Lodge, at Louisville, having also risen to the degree of Sir Knight. In matters religious he has well defined views, being one of the influential members of the Reformed church of Louisville and active in all good work in which the congregation is engaged.

On the 5th day of May, 1893, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Walker and Miss Ida M. Schilling, daughter of Dr. J. P. Schilling, of Canton, to which union two children have been born,—Nellie and Helen.

DAVID HAMMOND is a native of Stark county, having been born on the old homestead farm in Plain township on the 12th of September, 1830, and the environment, associations and privileges of his youth were such as attended the average farmer boy of the locality and period. He remained at the parental home until he had attained the age of eighteen years, when he came to Canton and here entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, and after his term of apprenticeship he continued to follow his trade as a journeyman until 1861, when he turned his attention to bridge building, and has since continued to be identified with this particular line of industry. In 1870 Mr. Hammond effected the organization of the Wrought Iron Bridge Company, of Canton, and of this he served as president for many years, being vice-president of the company in 1890, when he disposed of his interests in the concern. In 1892 the Canton Bridge Company was organized and incorporated, and though he became a stockholder at the time of its inception it was not until two years later that he became an executive officer of the company, then assuming an active part in promoting its interests. He was president of the company about four years, and since that time has been incumbent of the office of vice-president, while in addition to giving the benefit of his mature judgment and business sagacity in directing its affairs he also engages more or less in active solicitation in the securing of important contracts, his thorough knowledge of the details of the business rendering his interposition particularly effective. Mr. Hammond is essentially a business man, thoroughly trained through long experience and having those natural attributes which make for precedence, and his success has been achieved through legitimate channels and by means ever upright and honorable. He is quick to see and prompt to act, and has had a seemingly inexhaustible capacity for hard work, so that prosperity has come as a natural sequel.

Mr. Hammond was united in marriage, in Canton, to Miss Margaret Henlin, who proved a true wife and helpmeet, kindly and generous in all the relations of life and devoted to her home and family, while her gracious womanhood won to her the love of an exceptionally large circle of friends. She died in 1882, at the family home, on North Cleveland avenue, having been a devoted and active member of the Lutheran church. Some time after her death the family removed to their present residence on North Market street, and this has since been the abode of the subject.

JAMES C. DEIDRICK is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in East Liverpool, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 24th of November, 1864, and being a son of Joseph L. and Louisa C. Deidrick, both of whom were likewise born in Columbiana county, the father having been for many years a prominent merchant and stock broker at Pittsburg, but being now retired from active business. The paternal grandfather of the subject was George W. Deidrick, who was born in France and who served in the French army prior to his emigration to America. He located in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he married Catherine Garrett, who was born in that state, whence they came to Columbiana county, Ohio, in the pioneer epoch, passing the remainder of their lives there. The maternal grandfather of the subject was Gibson Verner, who was born in Maryland, being of French lineage, his parents having come from Brest, Brittany, and located in the city of Baltimore, where his father engaged in the ship-building business. The paternal grandmother of Mr. Deidrick bore the maiden name of Gray. She was born in this country, the family having been members of the Society of Friends.

James C. Deidrick was reared to maturity in his native town, where he received his educational discipline in the public schools, and there he became identified with the newspaper business in his early youth, finally becoming editor and publisher of The Crisis, at East Liverpool. He was identified with this enterprise from 1884 until 1899, when he came to Canton and effected the purchase of the News-Democrat, which he has since conducted, while a semi-weekly edition is also issued, and is known as the Stark County Democrat.

Mr. Deidrick has taken an active interest in politics and is an influential figure in the ranks of the Democratic party, while he has held office in the party organization about twenty years. He was elected a delegate to the state convention and was chairman of the Columbiana county Democratic executive committee before he had attained his legal majority. He was for three years a member of the state central committee of his party, and during two of these years he thus represented the eighteenth congressional district, better known as McKinley's district. In 1893 he conducted the campaign in this district, and his able marshal-

ing of his forces resulted in the defeat of the Republican candidate for congress and in the election of the Democratic candidate, who had been his associate in the newspaper business. For five years Mr. Deidrick was chairman of the board of trade at East Liverpool. He is identified with a number of fraternal organizations. While a resident of East Liverpool Mr. Deidrick conducted a very spirited fight in the pottery district, the same attracting national attention, while it resulted in the radical changing of conditions which then existed in the manufacturing and political situation in that section and which were admitted to be injurious to the people and to the cause of good government.

On the 1st of August, 1889, Mr. Deidrick was united in marriage to Miss Louise M. Lindesmith, of Wellsville, Ohio, she being a representative of one of the earliest pioneer families of Columbiana county, her ancestors having there located before the formal settlement of the state had been inaugurated. Her paternal grandfather was a soldier in the war of the Revolution.

PERCY L. McLAIN.—He to whom this sketch is dedicated may consistently be said to have grown up with the business with which he is now identified in so important a capacity, being secretary and treasurer of the J. H. McLain Company, manufacturers of steam and hot-water heating apparatus, feed mills, horse-power saw mills, etc., at 901-29 South Cleveland avenue, in the city of Canton. The plant of the concern is well equipped and an excellent business has been built up, the enterprise being one of no slight importance in connection with the industrial activities of the city and county. The J. H. McLain Company was organized in the year 1884, and the founder of the enterprise, the name of which perpetuates his name, was James H. McLain, father of our subject.

James H. McLain was born in the city of Massillon, this county, on the 16th of November, 1842. In Canton, on the 3d of August, 1865, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Ellen M. Tonner, who was likewise born in this county, being a daughter of Rev. John Tonner, who came to this section in an early day from Bellefonte, Center county, Pennsylvania. After his marriage the father of the subject eventually became identified with the coal, stone and brick business in Massillon, having owned a well conducted brick yard in which he carried on a successful manufacturing business in that line. About 1880 he came to Canton and here effected the organization of the company through whose enterprise the city gained its first electric-lighting plant, with whose operation he was prominently concerned for the ensuing four years, at the expiration of which he exchanged his interests in the same for the plant and business conducted under the firm name of Underhill, Fogle & Lynch, and thereupon organized the J. H. McLain Company, of which he became the head and with which he continued to be actively identified until his death, which occurred on the 9th of March, 1894. He was a man of marked executive ability and indomitable energy, and upon no portion of his career rests any shadow, for he lived so as to command the confidence and high regard of all who knew him, while he was a distinct and worthy type of the self-made man. He was a stalwart Republican in his political proclivities, but never sought or desired official preferment. He was a prominent and appreciative member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he had attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite. His religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church, of which his widow is likewise a devoted member. She now resides in the city of Massillon, where many years of her life have been passed. They became the parents of five children, namely: Charles T., who died at the age of eight years; Frank C., who is a resident of New York city, where he is engaged in the heating and radiator business; John E., who is president of the J. H. McLain Company and resides in Massillon; Percy L., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; and Helen R., who is the wife of Robert Hess, of Massillon.

Percy L. McLain was born in Massillon on the 27th of February, 1874, and to the public schools of his native city he is indebted for his early educational advantages. He left school at the age of thirteen years, being anxious and ambitious to inaugurate his business career and showing a decided aptitude for business while thus a mere boy. He assisted his father in his various business operations from that time on, and after the organization of the company of which he is now secretary and treasurer he began doing general work in the various departments of the enterprise, working his way up from the bottom round of the ladder and persistently continuing his efforts until he had mastered every detail of the business and thus became thoroughly qualified to assume the manifold duties of his present dual executive office, and it may consistently be said that much of the success which has attended the industry has been the result of his efforts, while he has had the valuable co-operation of his brother. He is known as an alert and progressive young business man, and his rise is certain to be consecutive in connection with business affairs with which he finds it expedient to identify himself. In politics Mr. McLain is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he holds membership in the Masonic order and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His pleasant home is located at 3140 West Tuscarawas street.

In October, 1896, Mr. McLain was united in marriage to Miss Anna Fast, of Canton, and to this union two children have been born, —Ruth and Louise A.

CHARLES A. DOUGHERTY, recorder of Stark county, Ohio, and a prominent real estate man of Canton, was born at Greentown, Stark county, Ohio, October 28, 1850, the son of the late Dr. James E. Dougherty, a biography of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Charles A. Dougherty was educated in the public schools of his native village, and in 1869 he came to Canton to begin his career. He studied dentistry in the office of Dr. Siddall, and after practicing a few years he took a course at the Philadelphia Dental College, graduating from that institution in 1882. He then practiced his profession in Canton until his health broke down, in 1890, when he became superintendent of the McLain Machine Company of this city, a position he held for several years, after which he engaged in the real estate business, at which he has since continued. In 1897 he was elected county recorder, and was re-elected in 1900. His father also served as recorder of the county, and this is the only instance in the history of the county where a son succeeded his father to the office. For twelve years Mr. Dougherty was a member of the Canton board of trade, and twice president of the board. He is manager of the Southern Gum Company and director in the Sanitary Milk Plant of Canton. He has on many occasions demonstrated his public spiritedness by giving freely of his time and money in securing for Canton new industries, having done as much in this direction as any other one in the city.

Mr. Dougherty married Miss Mary Fessler, and to this union two daughters were born, —Ada and Mary, both of whom were educated at Nottingham, Ohio. The older daughter married I. H. Clark, superintendent of the Massillon Stone and Fire Brick Company. The younger daughter died at the age of nineteen years. Mr. Dougherty's second marriage was to Miss Tamazine Tonner, who was born in Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, and to this union two children were born,—Charles T. and Margarite.

ROBERT P. SKINNER is a native of Massillon, where he was born February 24, 1866. He is a son of Augustus T. Skinner, also a native of Massillon, and whose father, Charles K. Skinner, was one of the early settlers in Kendall. His great-grandfather, a veteran of the colonial army, lies buried in the Massillon cemetery, together with the succeeding generations. After a common school education, in part completed at Cincinnati, Robert P. Skinner acquired a half interest in the then Massillon Weekly Independent. The following year, 1887, a daily edition was established, and Mr. Skinner continued to be its editor until the date of his appointment as consul at Marseilles, in 1897. During his newspaper experience Mr. Skinner left Massillon upon a number of occasions, serving upon the staff of the New York World as telegraph editor, and also as a political correspondent in the field. President McKinley gave him the post of consul at Marseilles, and subsequently promoted him to the grade of consul general. This being a recess appointment, and President McKinley having passed away before the assembling of the senate, he was nominated for the same office by President Roosevelt and promptly confirmed.

During Mr. Skinner's consular career he discovered the importance of the hard or macaroni wheat in the French market, a wheat not at that time grown in the United States, and succeeded in arousing the interest of the agricultural department in the subject to such a point that experts were sent to Europe to procure seed, and the foundation of a promising agricultural and manufacturing industry laid down. He also wrote a handbook upon the question.

While residing in Marseilles Mr. Skinner had frequent opportunity to study the commercial and political situation in Africa, and noting the entire absence of official contact with the empire of Abyssinia, where the United States enjoys a considerable commerce, recommended the negotiation of a treaty of amity and reciprocal establishments, and was himself appointed commissioner by President Roosevelt, and instructed to proceed to Abyssinia for the purpose of carrying out his recommendations. Mr. Skinner expected to sail from Marseilles on October 25, 1903, for Djibouri, Africa, and to proceed thence to Addis Ababa, the capital of Abyssinia.

On June 17, 1897, Mr. Skinner married Miss Helen Wales, daughter of the late Arvine C. Wales.

GEORGE D. EVANS is a native of the "tight little isle" of England, having been born in the town of Pontyminster, Monmouthshire, on the 10th of June, 1849, and being a son of Benjamin and Sarah (Robbins) Evans, the former being of Welsh and Scotch descent and the latter of English. The father of the subject was a nailer by trade, and followed the same as a vocation in his younger life, later becoming an inspector of rails in mills at Cumberland, England, where he died in 1876, at the age of fifty years. His widow later joined the subject in Wheeling, West Virginia, where she died in 1898, her remains being taken to Little Washington, Pennsylvania, for interment. This worthy couple became the parents of ten children, of whom seven are living at the present time. The maternal ancestors of Mr. Evans were from Bristol, England, and his grandparents were John and Betsey Robins, the former of whom was a manufacturer of shoes and one of the first to avail himself of machinery for this purpose. He had large manufactories at Bristol and Beaufort, England, and was a man of prominence and influence.

George D. Evans passed his boyhood days in his native town, and his early education was somewhat desultory and limited in character. At the age of eight years he began work at the cold rolls, in the mills of his native county, and advanced through the various grades of work in the iron industry in that section, including casting, furnace work and rolling of the metal plates. At the age of twelve he began attending night school in his native town, and thus continued for several years, and when seventeen years he gave up his work and devoted his entire attention to his studies for an interval of sixteen months, thoroughly improving his advantages and thus supplementing his limited discipline of his boyhood days. He early manifested distinctive musical taste and appreciation and managed to secure good instruction in this art, taking up his technical study at the age of ten years, and at the age of fourteen his services were brought into requisition as organist in the parish church. As a youth he arranged very effective music for bands, and that his knowledge of the theory of music is of superior order may be seen when it is stated that he has taken eleven certificates for proficiency in this line. All of these were awarded him by the Royal Academy of Music, in London, and he also has diplomas from the Royal Academy of Music.

At the age of eighteen years, after having become proficient in roll turning in the mills of his native county, Mr. Evans went to Staffordshire, England, where he was employed at this vocation for five years, while he also learned to operate the plate mills. At the age of twenty-three he became superintendent of the tin mill at Wolverhampton, in Staffordshire, retaining this position two years, and he then made an extended tour through Ireland, France, Germany and the United States, being absent for a period of eleven months, and visiting all the principal manufacturing centers in the United States. He then returned home, but during his visit to America he had become so impressed with the advantages and attractions offered in the United States that he tarried only ten days in his native land and then took passage for New York city, where he landed in April, 1881. From the national metropolis he proceeded to Wheeling, West Virginia, where he was employed at his trade for one year, after which he came to Bridgeport, Ohio, and was there employed as a roller in the Aetna Standard Mills for several years, also as assistant superintendent of these mills. He then became associated with others in the erection of a mill at Lisbon, Columbiana county, and he continued in supervision of its operations for the ensuing five years, at the expiration of which the plant and business were sold to the syndicate which was buying up the various mills here and elsewhere in the Union, and he continued to manage the mill for three years thereafter. He then, in 1901, came to Canton and assumed the position of superintendent of the Carnahan Tin Plate & Sheet Company.

In politics Mr. Evans gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious views are in harmony with the faith of the Protestant Episcopal church, his early training having been under the influence of the established church of England, representing the same faith, and he and his wife are regular attendants of the Episcopal church, to whose support he contributes a due quota. Fraternally he is identified with the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, being popular in both the business and social circles of the community.

At Pontyminster, England, in 1872, Mr. Evans was united in marriage to Miss Jane Davis, who died there in 1878, and she is survived by their three children,—Sophia, who is the wife of Matthew Griffiths, of Canton; George Drayton, who is engaged in tin mill work in this city; and Margaret, who is the wife of George Miller, of Canton. On the 18th of June, 1896, at Lisbon, Ohio, Mr. Evans wedded Miss Helen M. Smith, daughter of Albert G. and Maria R. (Leland) Smith, of that place; no children have been born of this marriage.

AUGUSTUS J. RICKS was born in West Brookfield, Ohio, February 10, 1843. He was educated at the public schools of Massillon, graduating at the high school and entered Kenyon College, at Gambier, Ohio, in 1861. He left college at the end of the first year, intending to enlist as a private soldier, but receiving a commission as first lieutenant, he recruited, with the aid of some of the leading citizens, fifty-three men in the city of Massillon, and entered the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving in Kentucky from 1862 to 1863, when he joined General Burnside's expedition to east Tennessee. Immediately upon entering Knoxville he was made post adjutant, and formed such an attachment for the city of Knoxville that it resulted in his subsequent location there. He served with Burnside in east Tennessee at the capture of Cumberland Gap, the siege of Knoxville and the operations of that army during the winter of 1863-64. In January, 1864, he was detailed on the staff of Brigadier General Milo S. Hascall, commanding the Second Division, Twenty-third Army Corps, and served with that corps through the Atlanta campaign. In January, 1865, he served as aide-de-camp on the staff of Major General J. D. Cox, of the Twenty-third Army Corps, in North Carolina. In April, 1865, he was appointed captain, but seeing the early termination of the war declined to be mustered.

Returning to his home in Massillon Mr. Evans began reading law, and in September, 1865, went to Knoxville, and there finished his course of law, reading in the office of the late Judge John Baxter, of the United States circuit court. In 1866 he became a member of the firm of Baxter, Champion & Ricks, which for five years was one of the leading law firms of the state of Tennessee. In 1870 he became one of the founders of the Knoxville Daily Chronicle, the only Republican daily paper then published in the entire southern states, outside of Louisville, continuing as one of the editors and proprietors until September, 1875, when he sold his interest to Parson Brownlow. Returning to Massillon, he resumed the practice of law with Judge Anson Pease. He was appointed clerk of the United States circuit court in March, 1878, by Judge Baxter, and later was also made clerk of the district court by Judge Welker. While serving as clerk he acted as master in chancery for this district. In 1889 he was appointed to the vacancy caused by the retirement of Judge Welker, of the United States district court, which position he now holds.

WILLIAM F. RICKS was born in Pittsburgh February 16, 1839. The family came to Stark county in 1840, locating at West Brookfield, but removed to Massillon in 1853, where as a youth he attended the public schools of the city. In 1857 he entered his father's store as a clerk. In 1862 he purchased the business and continued the same until 1890, when he closed the same to accept a position as cashier of the Merchants' National Bank of Massillon, which position he holds at this time.

The bank is one of the prosperous institutions of Massillon and of Stark county. Mr. Ricks has always taken a deep interest in the prosperity of Massillon. He was active in securing the location of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railway in that city, and was one of the charter members of the Massillon Building and Loan Association, the first one in the city, and has been a director continuously. It is the largest association today in Stark county. He took an active part in securing the location of the State Hospital for Insane in Massillon. Mr. Ricks has been president of the board of trade for a term of years. Politically he has ever been a staunch Republican. He cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln for President. Believing earnestly in the principles of the "grand old party," he has always taken an active interest in securing its success.

LEWIS CONRAD.—Peter Conrad, the subject's father, was a native of France, born in 1793, but when a young man left that country in company with his parents and sought a new home in a land where there are no distinctions of class and where opportunities for rising in the world are opened alike to all. With these objects in view he came to the United States and for a short time thereafter lived with his father and mother in Pennsylvania, moving thence to Stark county, Ohio. Shortly after coming to this part of the country he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Loutzenheiser, and then turned his attention to agriculture, purchasing a farm of one hundred and twenty acres in Paris township, on which he lived until within a year of his death. Mr. Conrad was an honest, industrious man of strict integrity, and became an influential factor in the county. For some years he was engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, having operated one of the early carding and woolen mills of the township, in addition to which he also built a saw-mill which he ran for some time on quite an extensive scale. One year before his death he turned the homestead over to his son, the subject of this review, and, purchasing a smaller place of twenty acres near by, spent the short residue of his life in retirement. In politics he was a Democrat, in religion a devout member of the Reformed church, and as a citizen his career was all that the most loyal and patriotic American could have desired. He died March 20, 1858.

Lewis Conrad was born February 15, 1829, on the place in Paris township where his parents originally settled. He grew up at home, and as soon as old enough became accustomed to the varied duties of farm life, learning while a mere lad how to use all kinds of agricultural implements. Young Lewis' early years were routines of honest toil, varied of winter seasons by attending the district schools, in which he received about the average educational training of country lads. Reared to agricultural pursuits, Mr. Conrad took a natural liking to the same, and when about twenty-three years old began farming for himself on the home place. As already stated, he took possession of the farm one year prior to his father's death and continued to cultivate it until the estate was sold, after which he purchased his present home in Paris township, consisting of one hundred and twenty acres, on which are some of the most substantial improvements in this part of the county. As an agriculturist Mr. Conrad has long taken high rank, as the fine condition of his place sufficiently attests, and as a financier and successful man of affairs he occupies no inconsiderable place among the most enterprising of his contemporaries. Although an unflinching Democrat, he has never had any political aspirations, and, a zealous member of the Reformed church, his religion is of that broad, generous kind that recognizes good in all denominations.

The domestic life of Mr. Conrad dates from 1854, on May 4th of which year he took a wife in the person of Miss Mary Stucky, of Washington township, this county, the union resulting in the birth of the following children: Mirian (Mrs. Robert Shearer); Addie (Mrs. F. Booth, of Pennsylvania); Eliza (Mrs. W. Walker, of Canton); Marion, of Canton; Howard, a farmer of Nimishillen township; Nettie (Mrs. Albert Coen, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania); Amanda (Mrs. Rev. Jacob Streasley, of Delaware, Ohio); Alvin, of Washingtonville, Ohio; Carrie and Olive, who died in infancy.

CHRISTIAN SEFERT is the son of Michael and Salome Sefert, both natives of Alsace, formerly one of the French provinces, now a part of the German empire, the father born March 20, 1805, the mother on the 11th of April, 1815. These parents came to the United States in 1830 and shortly after their arrival were married, the wife being but fifteen years old at the time. For several years after his arrival in this country Michael Sefert was employed in the rolling mills at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, but later abandoned that kind of labor, and, moving to Stark county, Ohio, worked for some time on the farm near Canton now owned by Mr. Cornelius Faust. He proved a valuable hand, and nearly all the labor of the place, together with the greater part of its management, fell to him while thus employed. Later Mr. Sefert purchased forty acres of land near Mapleton, on which he lived until 1852, when he disposed of the place and bought what has since been known as the Sefert farm, situated one mile west of Paris. In connection with farming he was for a number of years engaged in buying cattle, which he drove to the Pittsburg market, and in this way he acquired the greater part of his wealth. In 1866 he left his farm and moved to the town of Paris, where he spent the remainder of his life in retirement, dying there in 1884, his wife preceding him to the other world by seventeen days. Michael and Salome Sefert were consistent members of the German Reformed church and their lives beautifully exemplified the gentle but powerful influence of the faith which they professed. They had a large family of children, fourteen in all, only three of whom survive, viz: Michael, a resident of Mobile, Alabama; Christian, of this review, and Henry, whose home is in Canton.

Christian Sefert was born January 23, 1843, in Osnaburg township, Stark county, and there spent his early life pretty much after the manner of the majority of country lads. Surrounded by an atmosphere of industry, he grew up accustomed to labor and until young manhood he remained at home assisting his father on the farm, meanwhile acquiring a meager education in the township schools. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, when but little more than seventeen years old, he responded to the call for three months men, enlisted in Company A, Nineteenth Ohio Infantry, which saw considerable active service in Virginia, taking part in the battle of Rich Mountain, one of the first engagements of the war. After serving his time, he returned home and accepted the position of brakeman on the Pittsburg & Ft. Wayne Railroad, in which capacity he continued for some months. During the succeeding three months he worked in a machine shop at Canton, at the end of which period he again entered the army, enlisting in Captain F. D. Yost's company of volunteers, which formed part of the Twenty-sixth Ohio Light Artillery. Mr. Sefert accompanied his command through all its varied experiences in the Southland, took part in numerous engagements and at the close of the war received an honorable discharge at Natchez, Mississippi, the document bearing date of June 8, 1865. Returning home at the cessation of hostilities, he took up the duties of civil life and March 25 of the year following witnessed his marriage with Miss Julia Sponseller, daughter of George and Leah Sponseller, of Paris township. Mr. Sefert set up his first domestic establishment in Paris township and from that time to the present has given his attention to agricultural pursuits, meeting with success as a farmer and stock raiser such as few attain. At the death of his father, he purchased the home place and immediately thereafter inaugurated a system of improvements which in due time made it one of the finest and most desirable farms in the township of Paris. The buildings which he erected are surpassed by few structures of the kind in the county, being models of design and as comfortable and convenient as modern architecture can possibly make them. The other improvements are in keeping with the dwelling, barns and outbuildings, everything on the farm attesting the deep interest the owner manifested in making his home one of the most beautiful, attractive and valuable places of residence in this part of the state. After acquiring a sufficiency of this world's goods to render further activity unnecessary, he sold his farm to his son Walter, and in 1892 removed to the village of Paris, where he now owns a beautiful home, also a small and highly improved farm of forty-three and a fraction acres, adjoining the town limits. Although practically retired, Mr. Sefert devotes considerable time to the cultivation and improvement of his place and that he has made it one of the model homes in this part of the county is apparent to every passer-by. His dwelling is a magnificent building with all modern improvements, the barn is substantially constructed and finished much better than the majority of residences, while the fine orchards, tastefully arranged shrubbery, neat lawns, grateful shade trees, in fact everything connected with the premises bespeak the home of a gentleman of refined ideas and elegant leisure.

Politically Mr. Sefert is a staunch Republican and takes much more than a passive interest in the great questions and issues upon which men and parties are divided. He has never held office nor desired public recognition, preferring to devote his time and attention to his business and domestic affairs and to be known merely as a citizen. He served for a number of years on the school board and in that capacity was instrumental in advancing the cause of education in his township. His religious belief conforms to the creed of the Reformed church, with which body himself and wife have long been identified.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Sefert has been blessed with five children, namely: Herman, who lives in Paris township; Walter, who owns and farms the home place; Horace, deceased; Frederick, one of the well-known young men of Paris township, and Ruben, who is still a member of the home circle.

George Sponseller, father of Mrs. Sefert, was a native of Pennsylvania, his wife, Leah Cameron, having been born in Scotland. Mrs. Leah Sponseller was the daughter of John Cameron, a Scotch Covenanter who came to this country a number of years ago to escape religious proscription in his native land. Father Sponseller was one of the pioneers of Stark county, coming here in an early day when his sole earthly wealth consisted of a mattock, a team of oxen and what little clothing he wore. Possessing an indomitable spirit and knowing no such word as fail, he set to work under many discouraging circumstances and in due time succeeded in getting a substantial start in life. He purchased land when it was cheap, cleared a good farm and as the years went by added to his possessions until finally his real estate amounted to over two hundred acres, the greater part of which he reduced to cultivation by the labor of his own hands. He became one of the leading farmers of Paris township. earned the reputation of an enterprising and worthy citizen and his memory is fondly cherished as one of the noble, God-fearing men of his day and generation.

DAVID BATES is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having first seen the light of day in Paris township, this county, on the 7th of September, 1843. He is the son of Frederick and Catherine Ann (Slack) Bates, and is one of nine children, of whom but two survive besides himself, namely: Maria, now the widow of Adam Sawner, of Canton, and Levi, of Washington township, this county. Frederick Bates was born in Pennsylvania in 1785. In his early manhood he was engaged in teaching school, following this profession for a number of years. He also learned the trade of shoemaking, at which he was employed when not engaged in teaching school. He was in the military service of his country during the war of 1812 and shortly after the close of the struggle he came to Stark county, Ohio, and was engaged in teaching school in this and Columbiana county. He was twice married, his second wife being the mother of the subject. Shortly after his second marriage he settled on a farm two and a half miles south of New Franklin, and in 1855 located in about the center of the township, where he remained until his death, four years later.

David Bates at the early age of twelve years was thrown upon the world practically dependent upon his own resources. His father being in rather straitened financial circumstances, the subject began to work for neighboring farmers. He met with many rebuffs, but was energetic and determined and managed to get along in a manner, until, at the age of eighteen years, he apprenticed himself to an uncle, Levi Slack, to learn the trade of a carpenter. At this time the air was filled with portentous warnings of the terrible struggle which was so soon to overshadow the land and a year later, August 6, 1862, when the country became involved in a conflict the like of which the world has never witnessed, the subject offered his services to assist in maintaining the integrity of the national union. He enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war. This regiment was assigned to the Army of the Ohio and remained in active service until the close of the war. Among the battles in which the subject participated were Knoxville, Cumberland Gap, Franklin, Tennessee, Nashville, Atlanta, and the many engagements during Sherman's Georgia campaign. The regiment was also engaged at Fort Fisher, North Carolina, besides many minor engagements, and at Greensboro the regiment was designated to receive Johnson's implements of war. On the 17th of June, 1865, the regiment was discharged at Greensboro and the subject immediately returned home and again engaged in peaceful pursuits. During his military service Mr. Bates never missed a roll call except when absent on detailed duty and was not in the hospital a day. Upon his return home he again engaged with his uncle to complete his apprenticeship at carpentering and remained with him four years. At the end of that time he commenced contracting and building on his own account and was so engaged up to 1887, since which time he has worked at his trade only at odd intervals.

Mr. Bates has been twice married. On the 7th of November, 1867, he was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary C. Essick, of Columbiana county, this state, and the daughter of William Essick, deceased, who during his life was one of the prominent and well known farmers of his county. One child, now deceased, was born to this union. Mrs. Bates died on the 29th of January, 1869, and in 1870 Mr. Bates married Miss Elizabeth Walter of Columbiana county. Her father, Henry Walter, now deceased, was a prominent agriculturist and a well known preacher of the Mennonite church. His wife died October 17, 1902, at the age of eighty-four years. She made her home with the subject. To the second union of the subject three children have been born, namely: David W., of Columbiana county, is a farmer and is also engaged in teaching in the district schools; Anna is the wife of L. C. Hickory, of Oakmont, Pennsylvania; Mary O. is the wife of Lloyd Blanchard, of Columbiana county. In politics the subject is a staunch Democrat. He was elected a justice of the peace in 1886 at a special election to fill a vacancy and for sixteen years continued to discharge the duties of that responsible position to the eminent satisfaction of all classes of people. He takes a deep interest in educational matters and for nine years served as a member of the board of education, doing much effective service in the cause which means so much to the future of the republic. In his religious faith he is a Lutheran and for many years has held various offices in the local congregation with which he is identified. He keeps alive his old army associations through his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic and takes a strong interest in the welfare of the old soldier.

JOHN M. FOULKS.—The Foulks family has a most remarkable military record. William Foulks, the subject's great-grandfather, served gallantly in the struggle for independence and his son, also named William, gained distinction as captain in the war of 1812. John Foulks, son of the latter, was also a veteran of the second war with England, serving with Captain Harbaugh's cavalry company, which won honor on a number of bloody battle fields. Later when the clouds of rebellion darkened the national horizon and armed hosts of treason threatened to disrupt the government, six sons of John Foulks took up arms in defense of the nation and nobly upheld its honor. With a single exception, these sons passed through the fiery ordeal safely, the exception being one who received a painful wound in the leg while facing the storm of shot and shell in the engagement of Resaca, Georgia. Another brother, William, was captured at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and for some months suffered all the untold and unexplainable horrors of the prison at Andersonville.

Reverting to the genealogy of the subject, it is learned that his paternal ancestors were among the early white settlers of Pennsylvania, and that shortly after the revolutionary period many representatives of the family found homes within the present limits of Beaver county. Not long after the close of that war, the Indians, incited to hostility by British emissaries, took the war path and devastated that part of the country, mercilessly murdering men, women and children, but few of the Foulks escaping the general massacre. It is a matter of record that the savages, for some reason, refrained from killing a few of the unfortunate captors that fell into their hands, among the number being two daughters and a son of William Foulks, the Revolutionary hero referred to in a preceding paragraph. The son, whose name was George, finally succeeded in making his escape and for many years thereafter his fame as a scout made him widely known on the frontier. He was a warm friend and intimate associate of the celebrated scout and Indian fighter, Brady, of "Brady's leap" fame, and the two met with many thrilling experiences and daring adventures during the troublesome time which characterized the early settlement of western Pennsylvania and the eastern counties of Ohio. While in captivity one of the daughters married a man by the name of Whittacre, who was also a prisoner, the Indians according this privilege to such white people as fell into their hands. Subsequently they appear to have fared quite well as the chief not only gave them their liberty but also allotted them a large tract of land near the present site of Upper Sandusky, Ohio. There Mr. Whittacre improved a farm on which he and his wife spent the greater part of their lives, but of the fate of the other daughter nothing definite was ever learned.

William Foulks, Jr., grandfather of the subject, was born June 10, 1770, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and shortly after the Revolutionary war removed with his parents to Beaver county, where he grew to manhood and married. While living there he laid claim to four hundred acres of valuable land and was intending to make it his home when a law was enacted requiring all holders of real estate to perfect their titles to the same. In this matter Mr. Foulks did not experience any difficulty as his claim was perfectly valid, but a number of unscrupulous speculators organizing themselves into a company for the purpose of defrauding settlers out of their holdings, instituted proceedings him, his place being one of the most fertile and in many respects one of the most desirable farms in the county. Compelled to defend his rights, he contested the matter in several law suits which were tried in Philadelphia and each time received a favorable verdict, but the expenses of so much litigation exhausted all of his means and well-nigh impoverished his family. The land sharks persisting in their persecutions, he finally was obliged to let matters take their course as he had no means with which to defend himself further. Driven to this extremity, he finally abandoned his home to his persecutors and, with others similarly situated, moved in the year 1800 to the newly settled country of eastern Ohio, locating on the present site of New Lisbon, Columbiana county. His dwelling, a rude log cabin of the most primitive pattern, was the first improvement on the land where now stands the above county's flourishing seat of justice, one of the most beautiful as well as one of the wealthiest cities of its size in the state.

After remaining a few years where he originally settled, Mr. Foulks moved to what is now the thriving town of Calcutta, where he subsequently built the first brick dwelling in that section of the country. His place soon became the nucleus of quite a flourishing settlement and, being centrally located, with superior natural advantages, he finally laid out a town which in compliment to him was called Foulks-town. The village grew apace and became the chief trading point for a large area of territory, but in the course of time the name was officially changed to Calcutta, by which it has since been known.

While a resident of the village, William Foulks took a leading part in the public affairs of the county and became one of the most influential politicians in the eastern part of the state. He represented the district of which Columbiana formed a part, three times in the general assembly, having been one of the leaders of his party during the sessions of 1810, 1811 and 1818. His legislative career was eminently satisfactory to his constituents and his name is prominently connected with many of the most important laws enacted during his incumbency. He spent the closing years of his life in Richland county and in his death, which occurred on the 3d day of September, 1832, the state lost one of the most influential legislators and high-minded men of his day and generation.

Elizabeth Morgan, wife of William Foulks, was a granddaughter of the celebrated Revolutionary patriot, General Daniel Morgan, whose prowess and leadership saved the day at Saratoga, and it is also to his gallant feats of arms that the history of our country is indebted for many of its most interesting and thrilling pages. Mrs. Foulks' father, who was also named Daniel, served with distinction during the war for independence and no doubt held an important commission as he was ever afterwards known as General Morgan.

John Foulks, son of William and Elizabeth Foulks, was born in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, about the year 1793. He was a small child when his parents moved to Ohio and grew to mature years in the county of Columbiana, experiencing all the vicissitudes of life in a new and undeveloped country. When a youth in his 'teens he engaged in the overland freighting business as a teamster between the settlements of eastern Ohio and the Alleghany mountains. He devoted his attention to this line of work for several years and after giving it up followed different vocations for a livelihood until finally becoming a farmer and keeper of a house of public entertainment. As stated in a preceding paragraph, he served in the war of 1812, having been a youth of about fifteen when he entered the service to fight for his country. Of his military experience sufficient is known to warrant the statement that he proved a brave, cool and collected soldier under many trying circumstances and that he did nothing to bring discredit to a name distinguished for gallant and meritorious service.

Mr. Foulks was twice married, the first time to a Miss Fisher, who lived but a short time and bore him no children. In 1830 he chose a life companion in the person of Mrs. Mary Hassler (nee Slence), whose former husband, Daniel Hassler, died while moving his family from Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, to a tract of land in Columbiana county which he had purchased the previous year. After the death and burial of her husband the widow Hassler continued the journey until reaching her destination and then set resolutely to work to hold her land and meet the payments as they came due. A woman of fine natural endowments and not lacking the qualities that overcome difficulties and win success, she managed her business affairs admirably, provided well for her children and was in very comfortable circumstances at the time of her second marriage. By Mr. Hassler she had five children, all now deceased, and her union with Mr. Foulks was blessed with seven, of whom the following survive: John M., the subject of this sketch; Theodore L., of Boise City, Idaho; Calvin, a resident of Springport, Michigan, and Minerva, widow of the late William Vink, of Canton.

After his second marriage Mr. Foulks settled on his wife's farm, just east of Moultrie, on the "Hahn Bottoms," and in addition to cultivating the soil, opened his house for the entertainment of the traveling public. He kept a tavern at this point for many years and met with fair success, later removing to the town of Moultrie where he built a larger and much better equipped hotel. Mr. Foulks continued to run a hostelry until the death of his wife, when he broke up housekeeping and from that time on lived among his children. In 1878, at the ripe old age of eighty-five, his spirit gently passed into the great beyond, leaving as a monument to his posterity a name and reputation above reproach.

John M. Foulks was born in West township, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 5th of June, 1840. His childhood years were confined to the usual routine of labor and play which characterize the early life of the majority of boys, and when old enough he began his studies in the public schools, the training thus received being afterwards supplemented by a course in a private educational institution at North Georgetown, conducted by Rev. Mr. Heming, a teacher of scholarly ability and high professional attainments.

At the age of fifteen young Foulks earned his first money by working for a neighboring farmer, receiving for his services the modest compensation of four dollars per month. In this way he earned thirty-two dollars, after which, in his sixteenth year, he apprenticed himself to learn the carpenter's trade, his wages while thus engaged to be seven dollars per month the first summer, nine dollars the second and eleven dollars the third, by which time it was supposed he could master the craft. Meanwhile he applied himself so diligently to his studies that in his twenty-first year he was sufficiently qualified to pass the required examination and secure a license entitling him to teach in the public schools. Mr. Foulks taught his first term in the winter of 1861-62, and achieved an honorable reputation as an instructor. He continued to divide his time between educational work and carpentry until 1864, in September of which year he laid aside his books and tools for the purpose of entering the army. He enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Ohio Infantry, and two weeks after entering the service was made orderly sergeant, in which capacity he served until honorably discharged at the close of the war. The One Hundred and Seventy-eighth formed part of Twenty-eighth Corps, Army of the Ohio, and took part in all the campaigns and battles in which that command was engaged. Among the more noted actions in which Mr. Foulks participated was the fighting in the vicinity of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, where he was under almost constant fire from November 30th to the 14th of the following month, the arrival of the Confederate forces under General Hood necessitating a change of operations at the latter date. From that time until the expiration of his period of enlistment his conduct was all that could be expected of a brave and courageous soldier. On the 29th of June, 1865, he received his discharge at Charlotte, North Carolina, and as soon as possible returned home and resumed the dual duties of mechanic and educator.

Meantime, September 15, 1864, Mr. Foulks was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Jones, daughter of Joseph Jones, the father one of the largest and most successful farmers of Columbiana county, in which part of the state Mrs. Foulks was born and reared. In 1866 Mr. Foulks moved to his father-in-law's farm, which he ran for several years with the assistance of hired labor, devoting the greater part of his own time to contracting and building. Two years later he gave up his trade, the better to look after his agricultural interests, but he still devoted the winter seasons to school work, continuing the latter profession with marked success until 1873. From that year until his retirement Mr. Foulks was exclusively a tiller of the soil. In 1890 he purchased of Mr. Jones the large and beautiful farm on which he had been living for twenty-four years and after cultivating it with encouraging financial results until 1901 turned it over to the management of his son-in-law and moved to the town of New Franklin, where he is now living a retired life.

Mr. Foulks has always maintained an active interest in the affairs of his community and township and served the latter three terms as assessor. In politics he is staunchly Democratic and for years has been a leader of his party in local affairs, also rendering valuable service in state and general elections. He belongs to Homeworth Lodge No. 499, Free and Accepted Masons, and is also an influential member of the Grand Army post at Minerva.

A pleasing incident in the career of Mr. Foulks occurred in 1898 when the beautiful monument erected in honor of the soldiers from West township, Columbiana county, was publicly unveiled. The occasion attracted a large concourse of people, and the beautiful and impressive ceremony served to arouse their enthusiasm and patriotic pride to a degree seldom witnessed on any previous occasion. When asked what part he proposed to take in the exercises, Mr. Foulks replied to the effect that he had but one favor to ask and that was the privilege of designating the party to whom should be accorded the honor of pulling the cord that was to loosen the veil and expose the monument to view. He gave as reasons for this request the fact that he could name a person present who had one grandfather, five times removed, and four grandfathers, four times removed, that served with distinction in the Revolution; three grandfathers three times removed and two, twice removed, that were veterans of the war of 1812, also one grand uncle that took part in the latter struggle; two grandfathers, eleven grand uncles and more than ten cousins, more or less distant, that fought for the Union during the late Rebellion; one grand uncle that participated in the Black Hawk war, besides a number of near relatives that served in the war between the United States and Spain, designating as the one honored by such a patriotic lineage, his own little granddaughter, Ruth Bates. It is needless to state that his request was most freely and cheerfully granted and at the proper moment the little miss pulled the cord which exposed the noble shaft to the gaze of hundreds in attendance, the closing ceremony being marked by the most enthusiasm.

Mr. and Mrs. Foulks have a daughter by the name of Anna M., now the wife of D. W. Bates, a well-known farmer of Columbiana county, and the mother of the little Ruth referred to above; also one son, Victor, and one daughter, Elva.

FRANKLIN UNKEFER.—The Unkefers had long lived in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the first of the name to locate there coming to America at an early period in the history of the colonies. It is not definitely known when the subject's grandfather left Lancaster county and took up his residence in the wilderness of eastern Ohio, but it must have been shortly after Stark county was opened for settlement as there were but few white people here at the time of the family's arrival. The place where they originally located is what is now known as the old Dupes farm, in Washington township, so named by reason of Mr. Dupes purchasing the land of Mr. Unkefer a number of years after the latter had settled and improved it. Among the sons of Mr. Unkefer was one by the name of John, who was a young man when the family came to Ohio and who in due time became one of the leading spirits in the community in which he lived. He was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, about the year 1798, and in his youth learned blacksmithing, but did not work very much at the trade after becoming a resident of the county of Stark. A good scholar for his day and possessing the requisite qualifications for teaching, he was early induced to take charge of a school in the little settlement and to this line of work he devoted his attention of winter seasons for a number of years.

When a young man John Unkefer married Mary A. Thomas, after which he located in Paris township, on the present site of New Franklin, which town he afterwards laid out and for the growth of which he devoted so much of his time and energy. Shortly after moving to the place he erected a large and substantial brick building which was opened for the entertainment of the traveling public and for many years his tavern was reported the best hostelry between the cities of Massillon and Pittsburg. Mr. Unkefer was a typical host of the time in which he lived, and for a period of forty years his place was a favorite public resort. While thus engaged, he also devoted much of his attention to other lines of business, in all of which he met with marked success. He bought and shipped horses on quite an extensive scale for a number of years, also dealt in real estate and, with an eye to the future, platted the town of New Franklin with the object in view of ultimately making it the county seat. This purpose, however, was never realized, but he did succeed in attracting a class of substantial men to the town and lived to see it become the chief trading and distributing point for an extensive territory and the center of a large and flourishing populace. As a Democrat of the old Jacksonian school, he wielded a powerful influence for his party in local and general affairs, but he never sought official preferment although well qualified by nature and training to fill any office within the power of the county to bestow. He was exceedingly careful in the management of his business affairs, but conducted them so honorably that his name became a synonym for fair dealing, nothing savoring in the least of disreputable practice having ever attached to his character. Besides valuable town property, he owned a large amount of fine land contiguous to New Franklin, his real estate amounting to over four hundred acres, the greater part well improved and thoroughly cultivated. He entered into rest in 1853, his companion departing this life about the year 1855. John and Mary A. Unkefer were the parents of thirteen children, of which large family there are now only four living representatives, namely: William, a resident of Barton county, Missouri; Franklin, whose name introduces this review; John, of New Franklin, and Alvin, who lives in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Franklin Unkefer was born in the village of New Franklin, Stark county, Ohio, March 30, 1836. He early manifested a sturdy manliness unusual in one of his years and gave evidence while still a child of the correct bent of mind which had so much to do in shaping his subsequent course of life. At the proper age he entered the public schools where in due season he received about the usual amount of intellectual discipline, but his education however did not cease with the time spent under the instruction of teachers. With a natural craving for knowledge he so utilized his intervals of freedom from manual labor that upon attaining manhood he had acquired those habits of application and prompt, self reliant action which have since marked his career in many responsible situations. Mr. Unkefer grew up with the sincere love and profound respect for his country, and when the South insanely attempted to disrupt the union and destroy the government, his patriotic indignation was so aroused that he did not long hesitate in the matter of offering his services for its defense. Two of his brothers, John and Alvin, enlisted with him shortly after hostilities began and served with distinction to the close of the war; William, who went to Missouri some time prior to the 'sixties, was living in a section of the country where the secession sentiment greatly predominated, and much against his will he was forced to join a Confederate regiment, but so determined was he not to raise hostile hands against the union that, shortly after going to the front, he deserted his command and in due time entered the Federal army, in which he rose to the position of lieutenant. In 1862 Franklin Unkefer enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Infantry, which for some time thereafter was mainly on detached duty to guard railroads, block-houses and various other kinds of public property. Later the regiment took part in checking the rebel advance on Nashville, in the battle of which place the subject participated. During his military career Mr. Unkefer proved a good soldier and was never known to complain of any position to which he was assigned. At the expiration of his period of service, June 22, 1865, he was discharged at Cleveland, Ohio, and immediately thereafter returned home where he again took up the duties of civil life.

During the eight years following the war Mr. Unkefer was engaged in railroading with the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Company, with headquarters at various places, and for about the same length of time he worked in the car shops at Minerva, this state. Severing his connection with the latter branch of service, he took up carpentry and subsequently, in addition to that trade, devoted considerable attention to agriculture, both of which vocations he pursued until appointed, in 1891, postmaster of New Franklin, a position he has since held. On the 1st of July, 1862, a short time before entering the army, Mr. Unkefer was united in marriage with Miss Elenora Hahn, of Columbiana county, the daughter of Henry Hahn, for many years one of the leading farmers and prominent citizens of West township, but now deceased. The mother of Mrs. Unkefer is still living, a remarkably well preserved woman of eighty, and now the wife of Jacob Holwick and making her home in New Franklin.

The Hahns, like the Unkefers, were among the early pioneers of Stark and Columbiana counties, the two families settling in the same locality, the former on what has since been known as the "Hahn Bottoms." Father and mother Hahn were for many years leading church workers, having been among the original members of the first Methodist church in this part of the state, this organization being still in existence, and Mrs. Holwick being the only constituent member now living.

Mr. and Mrs. Unkefer have one son and two daughters, viz: Jack L., Minnie and Maude E. The first named married Eva Hawkins and is the father of two children, Edna and Floyd. Minnie is the wife of William Kingsbury, of Dayton, and the mother of a child by the name of Mabel. Maude E. married E. E. Early, of Minerva, a union blessed with two offspring, William McKinley and Franklin W.

In politics Mr. Unkefer is an uncompromising Republican and his fraternal relationship is with the Grand Army of the Republic, in which he has long been an active and prominent worker. His religious belief is embodied in the Methodist creed, himself and wife being faithful and zealous members of the church in New Franklin.

JACOB MATZ was born in Germany on the 7th of January, 1829, being a son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Wingerd) Matz, both of whom were born and reared in the Fatherland, where they continued to reside until 1836, when they emigrated with their children to America, the subject of this review being eight years of age at the time. The father, who was born in the year 1803 and who was thus a comparatively young man at the time of leaving his native land, came forthwith to Stark county and settled on a tract of wild land just north of the village of Paris, in the township of the same name. His original purchase comprised fifty-two acres, and he subsequently added to the area of his farm until he was the owner of one hundred and fifteen acres. Here he developed a valuable property and here continued to reside until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-one years, having been a man of exalted integrity and indefatigable industry, while he was honored as one of the worthy pioneers and valuable citizens of the county, while he and his wife were consistent members of the Reformed church, while in politics Mr. Matz gave his allegiance to the Democratic party. This worthy couple became the parents of three children, all of whom are yet living, namely: Jacob, the immediate subject of this review; Michael, who is a successful farmer of Osnaburg township, and who is the subject of an individual sketch appearing on another page of this work, where it may be identified under the name of Motts, to which he has changed the original German orthography; and Elizabeth, who is the wife of John Zwallen, of Louisville, this county. Mrs. Matz was summoned into eternal rest at the age of fifty years, and her husband subsequently married Mrs. Elizabeth Guckeman, no children being born to this union. By her first marriage Mrs. Matz, who is now deceased, had two children, of whom one is living, Frank Guckeman, who is a prosperous farmer of Paris township.

Jacob Matz, Jr., grew to maturity under the beneficent influences of the pioneer farm, his youthful days being filled with "ceaseless toil and endeavor," while his educational privileges were such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality and period. He continued to assist his father in the work of the homestead until he had attained the age of nineteen years, when he assumed connubial responsibilities. Shortly after his marriage he purchased eighty acres of land on the line between Paris and Osnaburg townships, in the immediate vicinity of the village of Robertsville, and here he continued to reside for a period of seventeen years, applying himself indefatigably to the work of improving his farm and bringing it under effective cultivation. As prosperity attended his efforts he added to the area of his landed estate until he was the owner of five hundred acres, in Paris township, but in later years he generously made provision for his children by giving to them portions of this land, and he now retains in his possession one hundred acres, to which he still gives his personal supervision, the homestead being located in section 7, Paris township, and being one of the fine farms of the county. The improvements are of excellent order, including a commodious and attractive farm residence, and Mr. Matz is now in the full enjoyment of the rewards of his many years of earnest application in connection with the great basic art of agriculture. In 1881 Mr. Matz took up his residence in the village of Paris, where he purchased the American hotel, which he conducted for a brief interval. The prerogatives of a boniface did not prove sufficiently attractive to him to long demand his allegiance to this line of enterprise, and he thus disposed of the hotel property and purchased the Shidler farm, near the village, the same having been a portion of the estate of his father-in-law, and here he resumed agricultural pursuits, in the meantime retaining his residence in the village. In 1897 he returned to his old homestead, where he has since remained. On the 27th of March, 1847, Mr. Matz was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Shidler, who was born in this township, being a daughter of George Shidler, one of the honored pioneers of the county, and of this union were born eleven children, of whom six are living at the present time, namely: Jacob, Jr., who is a prosperous farmer of Paris township; Caroline, who is the wife of Joseph Bair, of Malvern, this county; Aaron, who is likewise engaged in farming in this township; Samuel, who has active charge of the homestead farm; Eliza, who is the wife of John Otto, of this township; and Isreal, who is conducting a meat market in the village of Malvern. Mr. Matz has been a stanch adherent of the Democratic party from the time of attaining the right of franchise and though he has never been an aspirant for office he has taken a proper interest in local affairs of a public nature and is a loyal and progressive citizen. He and his wife are both devoted and active members of the Reformed church.

ALVIN SCHMACHTENBERGER is a son of Jacob Schmachtenberger, whose grandfather was one of seven brothers that served with distinction in the American war of the Revolution, Adolph Schmachtenberger, father of Jacob, was a native of Maryland, but moved to eastern Ohio as early as 1806, settling in Osnaburg township, Stark county, where he entered land and made some improvements. Subsequently he changed his abode to the township of Canton where he lived for a period of twenty-two years and died near Mapleton when about middle aged; his wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Repuert, lived to be quite old, dying at the age of ninety-one years.

Jacob Schmachtenberger was born in Canton township, Stark county, August 13, 1819, and continued to live there until 1840, when he moved to the township of Paris, where in due time he became a prominent farmer and leading citizen. In 1849 he purchased the home farm just north of the village of Minerva, and this he increased at intervals until the place embraced an area of one hundred and eighty-one acres of fine land, in addition to which he also owned two others farms in the vicinity, besides valuable property in the town, buying the latter in 1868. His careful management, steady habits and successful financiering resulted in the accumulation of an ample competence and he also won the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens, having filled worthily many public trusts, among which was that of assessor in which he served six years, and for over thirty years he held the office of justice of the peace, besides filling the position of president of the Minerva school board for a period of eight years. In the latter capacity he showed excellent financial ability by extricating the town from a long impending debt of seven thousand, five hundred dollars, erecting a fine brick school building and leaving the corporation entirely free of incumbrance. In politics Mr. Schmachtenberger was a Democrat and an active and influential worker for the party, representing it in various county, district and state conventions and proving himself a safe and conservative leader. In addition to agriculture, he devoted considerable attention to wool growing, which yielded him a large income. He also operated two saw-mills and in connection therewith bought, sold and otherwise handled large quantities of lumber.

In 1840 Jacob Schmachtenberger was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Meyers, who bore him six children, of which number two only survive, Alvin, the subject of this review, and David, who is also a resident of Stark county. The death of this excellent man occurred April 3, 1892, while his wife died January 6, 1886.

Alvin Schmachtenberger was born March 1, 1863, on the farm in Paris township, where he now lives. After mastering the fundamental branches in the district school he took a course in the high school at Minerva and when eighteen years old began his career as an agriculturist by farming the home place for a share of the proceeds. In this way he prosecuted his labors until his father's death, after which he secured possession of the homestead, consisting at that time of one hundred and thirty-four acres of as fertile and well situated land as the township of Paris can boast. Mr. Schmachtenberger devoted his attention exclusively to husbandry until 1886 when he engaged in the dairy business, which, in connection with farming, he carried on for a period of about seven years, meeting with marked financial success the meantime. In 1893 he disposed of his dairy stock for the purpose of again giving his entire time and attention to the pursuit of agriculture. During the ensuing seven years he carried on farming quite extensively, but at the expiration of that time he once more began dairying, convinced that the enterprise if properly conducted would yield greater profits than he was then realizing from his crops. Purchasing in 1893 quite a number of the finest and most valuable milch cows that could be procured, he started under favorable auspices a business which has steadily grown in volume and importance until he is now in the enjoyment of a trade of greater magnitude than that of the majority of the men of this county similarly engaged. He sells principally to the consumer, has an extensive patronage and by fair and honorable dealing has so ingratiated himself into the confidences of the public as to gain the unqualified good will of all with whom he has relations of a business nature. Mr. Schmachtenberger has been quite successful in his financial affairs and is now one of the well-to-do men of his community, owning one of the finest and best improved farms in the township besides possessing other means, the whole constituting a fortune sufficient to make him independent. Politically he is a stanch Democrat and for a number of years past has been a forceful factor in local affairs, having been twice elected justice of the peace, in which capacity he is serving at the present time. His personal popularity with the people of his township is attested by the fact of his having received the largest majority ever given a candidate for the office of justice. Republicans as well as Democrats recognizing his peculiar fitness for the position and vieing with each other in giving him their support.

Mr. Schmachtenberger was married on the 22d of October, 1885, to Miss Theodosia Freed, of West township, Columbiana county, the daughter, of Peter and Sarah (Brown) Freed, the father a leading farmer and a prominent citizen of that part of the state. Eight children have been born of this union, namely: Jacob W., John Franklin, Arthur F., William E., Harry D. and Clyde F., all living; one who died at the age of five years, and Hazel, who died at the age of one and one-half years.

WILLIAM IRWIN.—This representative of two old pioneer families of Stark county is the youngest of twelve children whose parents were Joseph and Mary (Cooper) Irwin, natives of county Tyrone, Ireland. Joseph Irwin was born about 1790 and in 1815, when twenty-five years old, came to America and for eight years following worked for an old Quaker farmer, in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. At the expiration of that time he came to Stark county, Ohio, entered eighty acres of land in Paris township and for some time thereafter experienced the hardships and vicissitudes common to life in this part of the state in an early day. His first dwelling was the conventional log cabin peculiar to the pioneer period, the barn was composed of the same kind of material and while raising her children the good wife and mother had recourse to the sugar trough for a cradle, with her own fingers spinning and weaving the coarse material of which clothing for the different members of the family was made. Mr. Irwin was a hard working man and, possessing great bodily strength and persevering energy, his labors were in due time rewarded with a good farm and much better and more convenient buildings than the original structures. Later he increased his purchase by twenty-five additional acres and by industry, frugality and prudent management succeeded finally in placing himself and family in very comfortable circumstances. He lived where he originally settled until his death, departing this life at the ripe old age of eighty-six years, carrying with him to the end the confidence and esteem of the people with whom he had so long mingled. Of the twelve children born to Joseph and Mary Irwin, three only are living, to-wit: Nancy, wife of David Unkefer, of Paris township; Samuel, who lives in the city of Cleveland, and William, the direct subject of this review. The mother died about the year 1860; she was a devoted Christian woman, greatly beloved by her neighbors and friends, and, with her husband, belonged to the Methodist Episcopal church.

William Irwin is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and was born September 10, 1835, on the family homestead in Paris township. His life up to the time of young manhood was the uneventful one of a country lad in a family of moderate means. In his youth he attended school in an old log building not far from his home, his means for acquiring an education being limited. He early became accustomed to all kinds of farm labor and continued until his marriage with Miss Hannah Sponseller, daughter of George Sponseller, one of the early settlers of Paris township, moving here from Columbiana county, where the family located many years ago. During the nine years following his marriage the subject farmed the homestead on the shares, but in 1864 purchased one hundred and six acres of his present place, which he improved and reduced to a successful state of tillage. Later he added to his real estate until the farm was increased to one hundred and thirty-three acres, its present area. Mr. Irwin has long been regarded as one of the intelligent and enterprising citizens of Paris township, energetic and quite successful in the management of his own affairs and equally so in the interest he has manifested in the public good. He has acquired a fine property and raised himself to his present respectable position in the community solely through his own efforts and persevering industry.

Ten children were born to Mr. Irwin's first marriage, of which note is made in a preceding paragraph, two of the number being deceased; those surviving are Ellen, wife of Edward Rosenberg, of Washington township; George and Frank, who live in the township of Paris; John, a resident of Washington township; Alice, who married Jasper Croft, of Osnaburg township; Florence, wife of William Mackenderfer, of Washington township; Grace, now Mrs. Frank Schwartz, of Osnaburg, and Frederick, whose home is in the township of Canton. The mother of these sons and daughters passed out of life July 4, 1893, and later Mr. Irwin married Elizabeth Gray, a native of Ireland who came to the United States in 1896, the second union being without issue.

Mr. Irwin's political training has been with the Republican party, but he has never been a very active politician, much less a seeker after public place. He is a liberal contributor to all worthy enterprises especially those of a charitable and benevolent nature and while not identified with any church he has always been generous in the support of religion, donating freely of his means for the maintenance of the Reformed church, to which his wife belongs.

JOSEPH FOLK is a native of Nimishillen township, Stark county, Ohio, where he was born on the 6th of July, 1847, being a son of Peter and Lydia (Reese) Folk, of whose two children he alone survives. Both parents were likewise born in Stark county, the former having been ushered into the world in Nimishillen township, on the 26th of October, 1826, while the latter was born in Washington township, on the 22d of October, 1822. The paternal grandparents of the subject were Peter and Catherine (Miller) Folk, the former of whom was born in the state of Pennsylvania, near the line of Maryland, while the latter was born in Westmoreland county, of the old Keystone state, where their marriage was solemnized. Peter Folk, Sr., was a son of George Folk, who was one of the original representatives of the family in America, whither he was brought from Germany by his parents, who emigrated to the United States when he was a child of but four years, the family taking up their abode in Pennsylvania in the pioneer epoch. Concerning the ancestral history we enter farther record by quoting briefly from a previously published sketch: "Peter Folks, Sr., grew to manhood in Pennsylvania, where he was married and where four of his children were born, three daughters and one son. One of the daughters died in infancy. Elizabeth married Frederick Herbster, whose home was in Washington township, Stark county, Ohio, where her descendants still live. She left eight children by her first husband and one by her second husband, Abraham Lutz. Catherine married Joshua Lentz, and they likewise resided in Washington township, this county, where she died, leaving four children. John resided for many years in Nimishillen township where he died about 1881, when more than sixty years of age, leaving four children."

Peter Folk, Sr., was numbered among the earliest settlers of Stark county, where he entered a section of government land in the midst of the virgin forest of Nimishillen township, and here his youngest son, Peter, Jr., father of the subject, was born, all the other children having been born in Pennsylvania, as before noted. After the survey of the land was completed Peter Folk, Sr., divided the same among his three sons, Peter, Jacob and Abraham, each of whom received two hundred and seventeen acres. After the father of the subject grew to manhood he and his brother John came into possession of their father's farm, and there the former continued his residence until the early eighties, when he removed to the village of Louisville, this county, our subject having purchased the old homestead about this time. Of the father of the subject the following has been written: "Peter Folk, Jr., attained his growth on the farm entered by his father and received a fair education for his day. His early life was spent in hard labor in clearing the farm, and amid pioneer scenes. He was married a little before his twenty-first birthday on the 11th of December, 1846, to Miss Lydia Reese, and shortly afterwards his father gave him one hundred and six acres of land. This young couple began housekeeping in a log house, and although they had little else to begin with save willing hands and any amount of energy, they met with much success and were classed among the substantial and representative citizens of the county. In the year 1858 Mr. Folk purchased a quarter section of land in the state of Michigan, retaining possession of the same for twenty years and then disposing of the property. In 1847 he erected on his farm a good bank barn, and 1861 a fine residence, which still stands. The farm has now been in the possession of the family for four generations. Mr. Folk is a Republican in politics, and his first presidential vote was cast in 1848, for General Taylor, the candidate of the Whig party. He was school director about fifteen consecutive years and is a member of the Progressive Brethren church of which he was trustee for a long term of years."

Joseph Folk was reared on the old homestead farm, and early began to contribute his quota to its work, while he received such educational advantages as were afforded in the public schools of the locality and period, thus laying the foundation for that broad fund of information which he has since gained through being in active touch with men and affairs. As before noted, he came into possession of the farm about the time of his father's removal to the village of Louisville, and he continued to reside there until 1891, when he also removed to the same town, renting the farm, and in Louisville he has since continued to make his home, while for the past two years his venerable and revered father has resided with him. When the integrity of the Union was in jeopardy through armed rebellion on the part of the Confederate states, Mr. Folk showed his intrinsic loyalty by enlisting, on the 4th of September, 1864, as a private in Company I, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued in service until victory crowned the Union arms. Soon after the organization of the regiment was effected it was sent to Nashville, Tennessee, and thence to Tullahoma, where it was detailed on guard duty about two months, after which it moved back as far as Murfreesboro, where it was stationed at the time of the memorable battle of Nashville, after which it went to Clifton, Tennessee, and there embarked for the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, from which point it proceeded to the national capital and thence to Newbern, North Carolina, where it disembarked and marched forward to Goldsboro, having a spirited engagement at Clifton while en route. The command joined Sherman's army at Goldsboro and remained with his forces until the surrender of Lee, after which the regiment returned to Columbus, Ohio, where Mr. Folk received his honorable discharge on the 28th of July, 1865. He was under fire at Cedar Flats and Kingston, North Carolina, and also participated in numerous skirmishes, having several narrow escapes from capture and having been fortunate in escaping all wounds. He was found at the post of duty every day save one of his entire period of service, and made the record of a gallant and faithful soldier.

After the close of the war Mr. Folk returned to the old homestead, where he continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits, while in addition to this he manifested his enterprising spirit by securing a modern threshing outfit, which he continued to operate for a number of years, the same having been the first threshing machine operated by steam in the county. In 1872 he purchased a half interest in a saw-mill on the home farm, eventually acquiring full control of the same, which he kept in active operation for a number of years, and which is now used for short periods on special work. In politics Mr. Folk has ever given a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, and his personal popularity in Nimishillen township was brought into distinctive evidence in about 1886, when he was elected to the office of township trustee, in face of the fact that the political complexion of the township is strongly Democratic, while he naturally appeared as the candidate of the Republican party. In 1889 he was the nominee of his party for director of the county infirmary, but was defeated with the remainder of the party ticket, the normal Democratic majority being large and impossible to overcome. Mr. Folk and his wife are prominent and zealous members of the Reformed church, in which he is deacon and treasurer of the church in Louisville, taking a deep interest in its spiritual work and the support of its collateral benevolences.

Fraternally he holds membership in George D. Harter Post No. 555, Grand Army of the Republic, in the city of Canton, and Louisville Council No. 152, of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics.

On the 14th of December, 1873, Mr. Folk was united in marriage to Miss Eliza A. Miller, who was born in the village of Louisville, this county, on the 3d of December, 1847, being a daughter of Peter and Barbara (Kloffenstein) Miller, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania and the latter in France, while they were numbered among the honored pioneer citizens of Stark county, where the death of each occurred, as did also that of the mother of Mr. Folk, who entered into eternal rest in 1898, at the age of seventy-five years. Mr. and Mrs. Folk have no children.

WILLIAM T. SOMMERVILLE is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on the 10th of December, 1854, and being a son of William and Catherine (Weatherspoon) Sommerville, of whose six children all survive except Margaret, who died in 1865, the others being as follows: Jane, who is the widow of John Kelly, of Hanover, Licking county, Ohio; Thomas, who was killed by a cave-in in a coal mine in 1902, in Columbiana county; Catherine, who is the wife of Melvin Scholenberger, of Freeburg, Stark county; James, who is a resident of East Rochester, Columbiana county; and William T., whose name indicates this sketch. The father of the subject was born in Scotland, in the year 1822, and there he was reared and educated, while as a youth he began working in the coal mines and became thoroughly familiar with the methods of development in this line of industry. Shortly after his marriage he emigrated to America and located in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, where he became a member of the coal-operating firm of Pierce, Fish & Sommerville, and there he maintained his residence until 1865, when he came to Ohio and located on a farm near East Rochester, Columbiana county, the same comprising one hundred and sixty acres. On the farm which he thus purchased was a good deposit of coal, and he there remained for eighteen years, engaged in farming and in the development of his coal bank. In 1883 he left his son James in charge of this farm and came to Stark county, where he purchased the farm, in Paris township, where our subject now resides. On the place a coal bank had been opened many years previously, but the development had not been carried forward to any considerable extent, and through abandonment for a term of years the property was in very bad shape. The father of the subject forthwith employed a corps of men, and at an expense of several hundred dollars drained the mine and put the same in proper order for effective development. He continued to work this mine until 1888, when his son William T. of this sketch, purchased the farm and coal bank, and has since carried forward the dual enterprise with distinctive discrimination and success. The father's death occurred in 1891. He was a Republican in politics, and was a valued member of the Masonic fraternity. His devoted wife, who was likewise a native of the fair land of "brown heather and shaggy wood," survived him by about two years, having been a woman of noble and gracious character.

William T. Sommerville was reared to maturity beneath the home roof-tree, and received his early educational training in the public schools, his opportunities in this line, however, being somewhat limited in scope. On the 4th of February, 1883, Mr. Sommerville was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Emmons, of East Rochester, Columbiana county, and about this time his father purchased the farm in Stark county, and the subject entered into partnership with him in the operation of the coal mine on the place, thus continuing until 1888, when he purchased the farm and mine, as has already been noted. In politics he accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, and he is known as a public-spirited and progressive citizen. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose cause they are zealous workers, Mr. Sommerville being a member of the board of trustees of the church at New Franklin, and also treasurer of the same. To him and his wife have been born two daughters, Carrie E. and Olive A.

DAVID L. VAN DYNE was born on his present farm, in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 10th of January, 1834, being a son of William and Elizabeth (Slagle) Van Dyne, of whose three children he is the elder of the two surviving; his sister, Mary Elizabeth, is the widow of Abraham H. Bair, of Akron, Ohio. As the name indicates, the Van Dyne family is of Holland derivation, and the original American progenitor emigrated from the sturdy land of dykes to the new world prior to the war of the Revolution, thus adding another to the list of his countrymen who have played so important a part in our nation's history from the time of the foundation of New Amsterdam, the quaint and characteristic Dutch village, which has given place to the magnificent metropolis of the republic. This ancestor settled either on Long Island or Staten Island, but eventually removed over into New Jersey, where the old family homestead, erected in the Revolutionary epoch, is still standing, in Keyport, Monmouth county. Dennis Van Dyne, the grandfather of the subject, was a soldier in the Continental line during the great struggle for independence, as were two of his brothers, and after the war he migrated to Pennsylvania and took up his abode in Adams county, where he maintained his home for a number of years, being engaged in agricultural pursuits. In that county William Van Dyne, father of our subject, was born and reared, and there his marriage was solemnized. The date of his nativity was the year 1788, and he grew to maturity on the homestead farm, while he received a good education for the day and was a man of strong intellectual powers. About the year 1828 he came to Stark county, Ohio, being accompanied by his family and by his venerable father, who here passed the residue of his life. William Van Dyne located on the farm now owned by his son, subject of this sketch, settling in the midst of the primeval forest and setting to himself the herculean task of reclaiming the land to cultivation, while the original family abode was a primitive log cabin of the type common to the locality and period. The maternal grandfather of the subject, Daniel Slagle, having entered two sections of land in this county, and having divided the same among his children, his daughter Elizabeth (Mrs. William Van Dyne) securing one hundred and fourteen acres as her share. Mr. Van Dyne reclaimed and improved this farm, making it one of the valuable properties of the county, and on this homestead he continued to reside until his death, in the year 1860, when more than three score and ten years of age, his devoted wife passing away in 1880, at the age of eighty-six years.

David L. Van Dyne was reared to maturity on the pioneer farm, and the educational advantages which fell to his portion in his youth were such as were afforded in the little log school-house of the period, the same being equipped with puncheon floor, slab benches, yawning fire-place and windows of oiled paper in lieu of glass,—primitive institutions often described and often the places where future greatness was nurtured. In 1858, up to which time he had assisted in the work of the home farm, he became imbued with an earnest desire to see somewhat more of the outside world, and, at the age of twenty-four years, he then started forth on a tour of the west, visiting various sections and being in Nebraska at the time of his father's death. Upon receiving tidings of the demise of his sire he returned home and purchased his sister's interest in the homestead, and since that time he has consecutively maintained his home here, having remained in the west about two years. He has been successful in his farming enterprise, is a man of broad information and fine intellectuality, a constant and omnivorous reader of standard literature and one who also keeps in close touch with the questions and issues of the day, so that his reminiscences of the pioneer days, as well as his discussions of the latter-day topics, are of marked interest. He has given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party from the time of its organization, and his religious faith is that of the Lutheran church, of which his devoted and cherished wife was likewise a member.

On the 16th of September, 1862, Mr. Van Dyne was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Smith, who likewise was born in Paris township, being a daughter of Lewis Smith, who was one of the prominent pioneer farmers of this township, and she remained his devoted companion and helpmeet for nearly forty years, being summoned into eternal rest on the 11th of September, 1898, secure in the affectionate regard of all who had come within the sphere of her gentle influence. One child was born of this union, Ada, who is the wife of Charles Newcomer, who has active supervision of the homestead farm of the subject.

HENRY R. SWALLEN is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, on Christmas day of the year 1841. He is a son of Christian and Elizabeth (Schory) Swallen, of whose nine children the following named five are yet living: Sophia, who is not married and who resides in the city of Alliance, this county; Henry R., subject of this sketch; Christopher, who is a successful farmer of Washington township, this county; Albert, who resides in the city of Alliance; and William L., who has been for the past nine years a missionary of the Presbyterian church in Corea. The father of our subject was born in Switzerland, in 1813, and was there reared to the age of twelve years, and then accompanied his parents on their emigration to America, the family coming to Stark county and residing for a brief interval in what is now the city of Canton, the place being at that time a mere village, and from here they proceeded over the line into Carroll county, where the grandfather, Henry Swallen, took up a tract of unclaimed land, in Brown township, where he passed the remainder of his life, clearing his land of its heavy growth of native timber and bringing the same under effective cultivation. On this old homestead Christian Swallen was reared to maturity, and it is needless to say that he had his full quota of hard work in connection with the reclamation and cultivation of the pioneer farm, and for a number of years after attaining maturity he had charge of the homestead. In 1859 he removed with his family to Stark county and located on a farm in Paris township, the same comprising one hundred and sixty acres and being about two miles east of the village of Paris, and the property being now owned by daughter, Sophia, of Alliance. The farm had been partially improved, and he developed the same into one of the valuable places of this section, equipping it with good buildings and bringing the land under a high state of productivity, while this continued to be his home until he was called from the scene of life's labors, his death occurring in the year 1880, at the age of sixty-seven years. He was energetic and discriminating in his efforts and was one of the highly honored citizens of the county, being signally true and faithful in all the relations of life. In politics, though never an aspirant for official preferment, he was an uncompromising advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, while both he and his wife were zealous members of the Reformed church. His wife was born in Switzerland, and survived her husband by about a decade, her death occurring in 1890.

Henry R. Swallen was reared to maturity on the homestead farm, and his educational privileges were such as were afforded in the public schools of this locality. He continued to assist in the work of the home farm until his marriage, in 1867, after which he purchased a small farm southwest of the village of Paris and there made his home for the ensuing ten years, at the expiration of which he purchased his present fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, where he has since been successfully engaged in general farming, devoting somewhat of his attention to the raising of a high grade of live stock. He has ever been staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and was elected to the office of township trustee, in which he served one term, proving a capable and acceptable incumbent, though he has never been an aspirant for the honors or emoluments of public office. He is a valued member of the Reformed church in the village of Paris, as is also his wife, and the family are prominent in the best social life of the community.

In February, 1867, Mr. Swallen was united in marriage to Miss Florence Goodin, who was born in Osnaburg township, this county, being a daughter of the late William B. Goodin, who was an honored pioneer of the county, where in the early days he had his residence while conducting a quite extensive freighting business overland between Massillon, this county, and the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. In the later years of his life he was one of the influential farmers of Osnaburg township. Mr. and Mrs. Swallen are the parents of eight children, namely: Frank O., who is a successful young farmer of Osnaburg township; Edgar, who is engaged in the produce business in the city of Canton; May, who is the wife of Orwig F. Sinigar, of that city; Arthur who is a popular and talented teacher of music in Canton; and Anna, Karl, Webster and Edith, all of whom still remain at the parental home.

JAMES E. DOUGHERTY, M. D., deceased, was one of Stark county's most prominent physicians and citizens, he having practiced medicine in the county for over thirty-six years, and his prominence and popularity led to his being twice elected county recorder. Dr. Dougherty was a native of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, and was born on March 13, 1820, being the eldest child and only son of four children born to John and Elizabeth (Crail) Dougherty. The father was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on December 3, 1796, and was the son of James Dougherty, a native of Ireland. The mother of the Doctor was born in Pennsylvania on June 25, 1801, and was the daughter of John Crail, Esq., a native of the Isle of Man, who was a Revolutionary soldier. John Dougherty died at Richmond, Ohio, March 20, 1831, his wife, Elizabeth, preceding him to the grave, she dying in 1827.

Dr. James E. Dougherty attended the common schools of Jefferson county, Ohio, and was afterwards a student at the classical institute of Richmond, Ohio, where he spent two and a half years. He then taught school at intervals and at the same time took up the study of medicine with Dr. E. M. Pyle, of Richmond, Ohio, as his preceptor, and from whom he received his diploma, that being previous to the regulations later prescribed by law requiring a diploma from a medical college. The succeeding five years were spent in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, where he practiced his profession, after which he located in Jefferson county, Ohio. In 1849 he took up his residence at Greentown, Stark county, where he continued in the active practice for thirty-six years. During the Civil war he enlisted, in May, 1864, and became lieutenant colonel of the One Hundred and Sixty-second regiment, Ohio National Guard, which was called out for one-hundred-day service and sent to Covington, Kentucky, at which point it did garrison duty most of the time. He was always a stanch Republican, from the organization of that party. In 1885 he was elected on the Republican ticket to the office of county recorder, and removed to Canton in December of that year to take charge of the office for a term of three years. His majority at the polls was only sixteen votes, but so faithfully and acceptably did he discharge his duties and so popular did he become that in 1888, at the expiration of his term, he was again nominated by his party, and was re-elected by a majority of six hundred and seventy-one votes, running one thousand votes ahead of his ticket. The Doctor was a member of Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons, Canton Chapter No. 84, Royal Arch Masons, Hodassah Lodge No. 350, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Greentown, and of Canton Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He served from 1877 to 1885 as secretary of the Lake Township Mutual Fire Insurance Company, resigning when he removed to Canton.

Dr. Dougherty was twice married. His first wife was Miss Phoebe L. Thompson, of Carroll county, Ohio, whom he married April 11, 1844. At her death she left one son, William T., who is now engaged in the real estate business and also insurance business in New Castle, Pennsylvania. On September 27, 1849, the Doctor married Miss Angeline, the daughter of Thomas Gorgas, of Greentown, Ohio, who was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. To this marriage eight children were born, as follows: Charles A., recorder of Stark county; Louis Edwin, physician, of Greentown, Ohio; James E. died in 1888; John F., a dentist of Canton; Mary E., who was deputy recorder during her father's incumbency of that office, and is filling the same position under the administration of her brother, Charles A., present recorder; Sarah A., who married Martin A. Mattice, and died in 1891; Maggie, who died at the age of seven years; and an infant daughter who died unnamed. Dr. Dougherty died March 24, 1894. His widow, who survives him, was born January 4, 1833.

J. E. Dougherty

MRS. MARY E. GROOM was born in New Franklin, this county, being a daughter of Thomas and Catherine (Kiplinger) Martin, of whose four children three are yet living, namely: Andrew A., who is a resident of Sebring, Mahoning county, this state; Anna E., who is the wife of Frederick Goodman, of Akron, Ohio; and Mrs. Groom. Thomas Martin was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, his father being a native of England and his mother being of Scottish parentage. The Martin family was one of wealth and prominence in England, and the father of Thomas became involved in some dissension with the family and manifested his independence by emigrating to the United States. He located in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in contracting and building, and he was killed by a falling timber when forty-seven years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Campbell, was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, shortly after her parents' emigration to that place from Scotland. Thomas Martin was reared and educated in his native county and learned in his youth the trade of tailoring, to which he there devoted his attention until 1852, when he came to Stark county and located in New Franklin, where he was engaged in the work of his trade and in conducting a hotel for many years. In 1870 he withdrew from the tailoring business, but he still continued his hotel enterprise until 1890, when he removed to the city of Alliance, where he lived till 1894, when he returned to New Franklin, where his death occurred in 1897, at which time he was seventy-eight years of age. He was well known in Stark county and was a man who commanded unqualified confidence and esteem. In his political proclivities he was a staunch Democrat, and for many years he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, but in 1865, on account of the political dissensions which brought about a division in the northern and southern branches of the church owing to the war of the Rebellion, he withdrew from the body and identified himself with the Lutheran church, in which he remained a consistent and active member until his death, his widow being likewise a devoted adherent of this church. She was born in New Franklin, this county, in 1840, being a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Slagle) Keplinger, who came from Franklin county, Pennsylvania, as early settlers in New Franklin, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Martin now makes her home with her elder daughter, Mrs. Goodman, of Akron, this state.

Mrs. Groom was reared in her father's hotel in New Franklin, and as a child began to assist in the culinary department of the same, ever manifesting a lively interest in the preparation of attractive and wholesome viands, and this early discipline is what has led her to continue in the line of enterprise in which she has achieved so noteworthy success, her parents having been consecutively engaged in the hotel business in this place for more than forty years. She received her educational discipline in the public schools, but was married at a very early age, since she was united to Kersey H. Groom only twenty-two days after her twelfth birthday anniversary. Her husband was a blacksmith and wagon maker by vocation, and after their marriage they continued to reside in New Franklin. In 1890 her parents retired from the hotel business and removed to Alliance, and Mrs. Groom was persuaded to provide table accommodations for transient guests, as the town was left without proper hotel facilities. Her hospitality and attractive service caused her business to soon assume such proportions that she found it expedient to remove from her cottage to the brick hotel building, where she conducted a successful business for one year, at the expiration of which she was called to Alliance to take charge of the boarding house conducted by her mother. She personally leased the building for a term of two years and when this lease expired she returned to her New Franklin cottage, where she lived retired from all business associations for the ensuing two years. On the 22d of January, 1897, directly after the death of her honored father, she again removed into the hotel building and there carried on a very popular and successful business until the 17th of February, 1900, when she removed to her own building, which is conducted as a hotel and whose accommodations are fully appreciated by the traveling public, so that her indefatigable and earnest efforts are crowned with a due measure of success. An idea of the extent of the business may be gained when we state that during the year 1901 she entertained more than two thousand guests, implying the serving of more than four thousand meals, while the last year showed a marked increase in the volume of trade. Of Mrs. Groom's four children the following named three survive: George W., who is a mechanical draughtsman in Allegheny, Pennsylvania; and Myrtle E. and Daisy M., who remain with their mother. Mrs.

Groom is a member of the Lutheran church and has taken a deep and helpful interest in the various departments of its work.

HIRAM H. ESSICK is a native son of Ohio, having been born in Columbiana county, on the 14th of March, 1856, and being a son of William and Catherine (Hossler) Essick, of whose eleven children ten are living, namely: Abram, who is a resident of Ellsworth county, Kansas; William A. and John M., who likewise reside in that county; Hiram H., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Charles E., who resides in Columbiana county, Ohio; Anna L., who is the wife of Dr. John J. Chambers, of Alliance, this county; Ella, who is the wife of Benjamin F. Sullivan, of Alliance; George, who is a practicing physician in Wayne county, this state; Katurah, who is the wife of David V. White-leather, an attorney of Columbia City, Indiana; and Ida, who is the wife of Fernando S. Pieren, of Knox township, Columbiana county, Ohio. The father of the subject was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1819, and was reared on a farm and continued to follow agricultural pursuits during his entire life. In 1850 he emigrated with his family to Ohio and located on a farm in West township, Columbiana county, near the line of Stark county, and there he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1898. He owned a well improved farm of one hundred and sixty-five acres, and devoted his attention to general agriculture and the raising of high-grade live stock. He was a stalwart Democrat in his political proclivities and was prominent in public affairs of a local nature, having served as township trustee and treasurer and in other offices of trust and responsibility. He was a valued and consistent member of the Lutheran church, as was also his estimable wife, who survived him by about four years, her death occurring in April, 1902.

Hiram H. Essick was reared to maturity on the homestead farm where he was born, and secured an excellent common-school education. Upon attaining his legal majority he assumed the management of the home farm, which he operated on shares up to the time of his marriage, in the year 1881, when he leased a farm two miles west of the village of New Franklin, in Paris township, Stark county, and here he continued to follow farming as a renter until 1891, when he purchased the place and continued his residence on the same until 1897, when he purchased and removed to his present handsome home, a quarter of a mile south of New Franklin, the same having been formerly the home of his father-in-law and the residence being one of the most spacious and attractive in this section of the county. In this farm, which Mr. Essick purchased of the heirs of the estate, are eighty-eight acres, while in his other farm, which he still retains, are seventy-three acres, both places being operated under his direct supervision. In politics he gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, and at the present time he is president of the board of education of his district, while he is a leading member of the Home Mutual Insurance Company, of Paris and Washington townships, of which he is secretary, proving a most capable and popular executive in the handling of the affairs of this well established and beneficent organization. He and his wife are both earnest and zealous members of the Lutheran church, in which he is an elder, while for the past four years he has done a most helpful and highly appreciated work as superintendent of the Sunday school.

On the 20th of September, 1881, Mr. Essick was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Deppen, who was born in New Franklin, Paris township, being a daughter of the late Andrew Deppen, who was for many years a prominent business man of New Franklin, where he was engaged in the harness and saddlery business, while he also conducted his fine farm, lying contiguous to the village. Mr. and Mrs. Essick have one daughter, Edna C., who was born on the 27th of September, 1884.

THOMAS C. HAYNAM, of Paris township, is descended from one of the earliest settlers of Stark county, his grandfather, Thomas Haynam, a native of Maryland, having come to this part of the state as long ago as 1804 and settled on the place now owned and occupied by James Haynam. This land was entered for Thomas Haynam by his father, who was also a pioneer and a man of sterling worth.

After clearing his land and converting it into a good farm Thomas Haynam purchased additional real estate and in due time became one of the prominent agriculturists and leading citizens of this community. He reared a family of three sons, George, William and John, and four daughters, Mary I., Barbara, Betsey and Rachel, all deceased. Mr. Haynam died on the homestead about the year 1859, honored and respected by all who knew him. John Haynam was the first white child born within the present limits of Paris township, and the birth of several other members of the family also occurred in a very early day. George Haynam, another son of Thomas, was born in Paris township in the year 1822. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and after his marriage settled on one of his father's farms, which he continued to cultivate until purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of his own, the latter having also been a part of the paternal estate. As an agriculturist and man of affairs John Haynam enjoyed marked prestige. A pronounced Republican in politics, he never aspired to official station, but in a courageous, manly way did much for the success of his party during the active period of his life.

Religiously he was one of the pillars of the Disciple church in Paris township and to him as much as to any one man is due the remarkable progress which has marked the history of the Current Reformation in this part of Stark county. The maiden name of Mrs. George Haynam was Elizabeth Crowl, whose parents were also among the early settlers of Stark county. She bore a family of thirteen children, eleven of whom survive, namely: Angeline, wife of George Rutledge; Henry; Thomas C.; Mary, who married George J. Holben; Elmira, wife of James Neiman; John, Jeremiah, Charles, Daniel, Frank and Curtis, all residents of Paris township except Mrs. Rutledge, who lives in Carroll county, this state. The father of these children departed this life in February, 1901, at the age of seventy-nine years; the mother is still living.

Thomas C. Haynam was born in the paternal homestead in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, February 5, 1852. He grew up a well developed youth of marked individuality and when old enough entered the public schools where he acquired a practical knowledge of the fundamental branches of learning. During the working seasons he assisted his father and other brothers in running the farm, and when it became necessary to chose a vocation of his own, he did not long hesitate in deciding to devote his life and energies to the time honored calling of agriculture.

On the 11th day of October, 1874, Mr. Haynam was happily married to Miss Amelia Werle, of Paris township, whose father, Michael Werle, came to the United States from Germany and in the early 'fifties settled in Stark county where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Haynam settled on one of his father's farms in Paris township and later in 1884, came into possession of the place by purchase. Subsequently, in 1897, he bought of Mr. Marshall a seventy-acre farm on which, two years later, he began the erection of a fine residence, which was completed and ready for occupancy in 1900. Mr. Haynam moved to his second purchase the year in which his house was finished and since that time has managed both farms, meeting with most encouraging success in his agricultural and other business interests.

Mr. Haynam's private character is without a stain and his name carries no blemish. In the public affairs of his township he has long been an influential factor and for many years his name has been identified with nearly every enterprise for the general good of the community. In politics he supports the Republican party, in religion he is one of the leaders of the Disciple church, and in all things his life has been characterized by that broad spirit of charity and philanthropy which bespeak the sincere Christian and the true lover of his kind. Aside from seeing six years as a member of the local school board, he has held no public office and it may be safely said that his tastes and inclinations have been in other directions than that of political distinction.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Haynam has been blessed with six children, of whom the following are living: Ida, wife of Ira Myers; George, Arthur and Clay, the last three still with their parents.

HENRY HAYNAM stands distinctively as one of the enterprising and progressive farmers of his township and is a native of Stark county, born in Paris township on the 17th day of February, 1852, being the first son of George and Elizabeth (Crowl) Haynam, and a brother of Thomas C. Haynam, to whose sketch the reader is respectfully referred for facts concerning the family's ancestral history. The subject's early life on the paternal homestead passed quietly and in the main uneventually. Being one of the oldest of the family, there fell to him, while still a mere lad, much of the labor and responsibility of the farm. On this account his educational discipline was quite limited, notwithstanding which he attended, during his childhood and youth, the country schools and by making the most of such opportunities as they presented, obtained a fair knowledge of the common branches of study, so that on reaching the age of manhood he was well prepared to assume the responsibilities which mature years naturally bring. After careful reflection he decided to follow the pursuit to which his ancestors for many years had devoted their lives,—farming,—and the better to prosecute it successfully he chose in his twenty-first year a companion and helpmate in the person of Miss Lydia Newcomer, of Columbiana county, who became his wife on the 9th day of January, 1873.

Shortly after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Haynam set up their first domestic establishment on a part of his father's place in Paris township, and he continued to cultivate the land as a renter until purchasing a farm of his own, about ten years later. His present place, consisting of sixty acres of finely tilled and beautifully situated land, is one of the model farms of the township, being well improved and presenting every appearance of a home of an intelligent and progressive American agriculturist of the most enterprising class. Mr. Haynam has not been sparing of his means in improving and making attractive his place, as its present aspect testifies. His wife proved in every sense of the word a fitting partner, sharing his trials, helping him to face and overcome them, rejoicing in his success until, in the sunshine of a happy home, they enjoyed the tranquil peace and content which resulted from difficulties conquered and obstacles removed. After a happy wedded life of twenty-one years. Mrs. Haynam, in 1894, gently passed into the great beyond, leaving two children, namely: Venum and Zetta, a third having died some time previous to the mother's departure. Subsequently, April 18, 1896, Mr. Haynam was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary Heastland, widow of the late Levi Heastland, of Paris township, and daughter of Jacob Wolfe, the union being without issue. By her previous marriage Mrs. Haynam had one child, Roy Heastland. The subject's political views are in harmony with the Republican party, of which he has been a firm adherent ever since old enough to exercise the rights of citizenship. Like his father and brothers, he was reared according to the teachings of the Disciples and for a number of years has been an earnest and devout member of the church.

DANIEL H. HAYNAM is a son of George and Elizabeth Haynam and a younger brother of Thomas C. and Henry Haynam, of Paris township, and was born in Stark county, Ohio, May 10, 1867, having first seen the light of day on the home farm where his father spent the greater part of a long and useful life. Young Daniel was reared in Paris township and as a farmer's boy early laid broad and deep a solid foundation upon which in subsequent years the superstructure of a well rounded character was gradually builded. When old enough to work he was assigned his proper place in the fields and he there learned that devotion to duty and steadfastness of purpose which in after years made so much for his success in material things and earned him enviable repute in the domain of citizenship. The educational experience of young Haynam embraced about the usual attendance at the public schools, which was afterwards supplemented by considerable reading. When a mere lad, Mr. Haynam manifested extraordinary mechanical ingenuity and nothing pleased him as much as to display his skill in making various kinds of contrivances. He handled all kinds of tools with the ease of an adept, and when older turned this ability to good account by taking up the carpenter's trade, at which he soon became a very efficient workman. At the age of twenty he rented a part of the home farm and four years later entered the marriage relation with Miss Manuela Baughman, of Paris township, the ceremony being solemnized on the 14th day of July, 1894. Mrs. Haynam is a native of Stark county, and the daughter of Isaac and Mary J. Baughman, the father for many years a leading farmer and prominent citizen of Paris.

Shortly after taking to himself a wife and helpmeet Mr. Haynam moved to his present place in Paris township and cultivated the same as a renter for a period of five years, purchasing the land from his father at the expiration of that time. He has brought his place to a high state of tillage, besides adding many substantial improvements such as the majority of farms do not contain. Mr. Haynam is not only a man of energy, but also possesses business ability of a high order, as witness the liberal financial returns with which his labors have been rewarded. When not otherwise engaged he adds very materially to his income by working at carpentry, his efficiency in this direction causing his services to be in great demand, not only in his own neighborhood but throughout the county generally, his reputation as a builder being much more than local.

Mr. Haynam is a fine example of the loyal public spirited citizen. He has always been deeply interested in political questions and since his twenty-first year has supported the Republican party. Recently he was nominated for the office of trustee, but owing to the overwhelming strength of the opposition he failed of election, but only by the narrow margin of thirteen votes in a township whose normal Democratic majority is many times that number. Mr. Haynam is popular with the people of Paris, irrespective of party, many of his warmest friends holding views directly opposite to those he entertains. He has decided views on the leading questions of the day, keeps well informed relative to the great issues before the American people and his ideas and opinions have no little influence upon those with whom he associates. His religious views coincide with the plain simple teachings of the Disciple or Christian church, of which body he has for some years been a faithful and constant member, at the present time holding the office of trustee in the congregation to which he and his wife belong.

To Mr. and Mrs. Haynam has been borne two bright children, both daughters, namely: Lila L. and Aline M. Their home life is happy and in the best social circles of Paris township no family is better known or more highly respected.

LEVI HAYNAM.—As stated elsewhere in the sketch of Henry W. Haynam, a brother of the subject, the ancestors of the Haynam family were among the early pioneers of Stark county and the name is inseparably connected with the origin and gradual development of civilization in the section of country included within the present boundaries of Paris township. For a brief notice of William Haynam, the subject's father, the reader is respectfully referred to the biography of his son, Henry W. Levi Haynam, the second son of William and Louisa Hayman, was born on the family homestead in Paris township, July 2, 1849. In the usual manner of farm lads he spent the days of his boyhood and youth, and when old enough became a pupil of the public schools, which he attended of winter seasons until a young man in his teens, making the most of such opportunities for intellectual improvement as came his way. As his father's assistant, he nobly accepted his share of the burdens and responsibilities of the farm, and in this way labored diligently until his twenty-first year, when it became necessary to plan for his own future as an independent, self-supporting factor in society. He chose agriculture and on attaining his majority he was given a part of the homestead, on which he began his life work. Four years later he took to himself a wife and helpmeet in the person of Miss Annie C. Miller, of Columbiana county, Ohio, daughter of John Miller, a well-known citizen of that part of the state, and as soon as practicable thereafter located on the beautiful little farm of forty acres where he has since lived, coming into possession of the same by an exchanging of properties with his brother Amos. As an agriculturist Mr. Haynam has always taken high rank; although his farm is not as large as those of some of his neighbors, the deficiency in area is more than compensated for in successful tillage as he realizes a much greater income from his few acres than do the majority of men from vastly more extensive estates. That he has succeeded in life is abundantly attested by the beautiful and commodious home in his possession and the ample share of material wealth at his command, having now a sufficient competence to answer all his purposes for the remainder of his days.

In politics Mr. Haynam is a stalwart Republican and for a number of years past has been one of the leading members of his party in the township of his residence. He has been a worker rather than an aspirant for public honors, his ambition never having led him to desire official position of any kind. He is not only a believer in the religion of the Bible but for years has been an humble and devout disciple of the Nazarene, belonging, with his wife, to the Disciple church.

Mr. Haynam is the father of two children, one, Harry E., living with his parents. Of the home life of the subject much might be said, as he finds his greatest pleasure with his family. His dwelling is a substantial structure, tastefully furnished and well supplied with all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life, and the spirit of hospitality which abounds within its walls bears evidence of the kind hearts and open hands of the inmates.

TOBIAS M. HAYNAM, son of William and Louisa (Slack) Haynam, was born in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio; on the 17th day of January, 1862. His early life on the farm was characterized by the experience common to country boys and he grew to the full stature of manhood with a proper conception of life and its responsibilities, assisting his father in the summer time and during the winter seasons pursuing his studies in the common schools. On attaining his majority Mr. Haynam engaged in agriculture for himself and from that time until his marriage cultivated a part of the home farm for a share of the proceeds, his efforts being crowned with encouraging success. In 1885 was solemnized his union with Miss Lettice Crowl, daughter of Hubbard Crowl, of Paris township and immediately thereafter he moved to his present home, a beautiful place of seventy-eight acres which originally formed a part of his father's estate. Mr. Haynam cultivated this farm as a renter until the father's death, after which, in 1897, he purchased the place and has since made it one of the finest and most desirable rural homes in the township, his improvements as well as the fine condition of the land bespeaking the presence of a man of advanced and progressive ideas in all matters relating to modern agricultural science. Subsequently, 1901, Mr. Haynam increased his original holding by an addition of twenty acres, thus making a farm of ninety-eight acres, which for productiveness and general agricultural purposes is not excelled by any like area within the limits of Stark county.

A man so actively identified with the growth and upbuilding of the community as Mr. Haynam would hardly be indifferent to or separated entirely from political life. While he has read much and is well informed on state and national issues, he is not a politician in the modern sense of the term, although an earnest and pronounced supporter of the Republican party. He has decided views as to revealed religion, and by much reading and unprejudiced observation has learned to look upon man-made creeds and formulated statements of doctrine as inimical to God's word and subversive of the plain teachings of the Savior who prayed that his disciples might be one even as He and the Father were one. Accepting the Bible alone as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, he united some years ago with a church founded on this statement, in the Disciple church, of which he and his wife are earnest and consistent members. Mr. and Mrs. Haynam have one daughter, Hazel, born May 29, 1891.

HENRY W. HAYNAM.—The family of which the subject of this review is a representative has been prominent in the affairs of Paris township ever since the pioneer period. Just when the subject's grandfather, Thomas Haynam, came to this country is not known, but it must have been at a very remote date, as he is remembered as one of the early pioneers of what is now the township of Paris. He purchased land, developed a farm, took an active part in the stirring times in which he lived and, dying many years ago, left to his descendants the heritage of a good name which they prize among their most cherished possessions. Among the children of Thomas Haynam was a son by the name of William, whose birth occurred in Paris township, February 17, 1820. He grew up familiar with the rugged duties of the pioneer period, received a limited knowledge of books in the old log school house common to this part of the Buckeye state three-quarters of a century ago and assisted his father in clearing the farm and supporting the family. After his marriage he purchased eighty acres of woodland in Paris township and at once addressed himself to the formidable work of removing the timber and reducing the soil to a state of tillage. This in due time was successfully accomplished and in the course of a few years he became not only one of the energetic and progressive farmers of his neighborhood, but also an active participant in all enterprises tending to the general improvement of the community along material, social and moral lines. He was a fine business man and from a small place of eighty acres increased his holdings until he became the owner of four hundred and fifty-six acres of land. In politics he was a staunch Republican and in religion a consistent member of the Disciple church. He died on the 5th of February, 1897, in his seventy-seventh year, honored and revered by his immediate family and esteemed by all who knew him. The maiden name of Mrs. William Haynam was Louisa Slack, and she was born in Stark county in 1826, the daughter of Henry Slack, one of the pioneer settlers of Paris township. She died in 1871, having borne her husband ten children, of whom the following survive: Amos; Levi; Sarah, wife of Jacob Myers; Samantha, wife of Ed. Zininger; Tobias; E——; Cora, who married Benjamin Smook, and Henry W., all residing in the county of Stark. Some time after the death of the mother of these children, Mr. Haynam entered the marriage relation with Miss Eliza Ross, who is still living, the union being without issue.

Henry W. Haynam was born in Stark county, Ohio, and grew to mature years on the home farm in Paris township, the meanwhile acquiring a fair education in the public schools. He was reared a tiller of the soil and has always followed that humble vocation, beginning for himself in 1882, when he was united in marriage with Miss Charlotte Heim, of Paris township, daughter of Isaiah Heim, a carpenter and prominent farmer and a member of one of the county's old families. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Haynam moved to the place where he now lives and cultivated the same on the shares until his father's death, when he purchased the farm, buying the interests of the other heirs to the estate. Since then he has brought the farm to a very high state of cultivation, making numerous substantial improvements in the way of buildings, etc., and earning well merited repute not only as a progressive agriculturist but as a public spirited and far-seeing man of affairs. In his political adherency Mr. Haynam is one of the leading Republicans of Paris township and occupies no small place in the councils of his party in county and district affairs. Religiously he adheres to the plain, simple teachings of the Christian church, of which for some years he has been an humble and devout communicant. Of the six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Haynam four are living, namely: Arthur, in the employ of the Lake Erie & Western Railroad; Elsie, Pearl and Dwight, who are still members of the home circle.

CURTIS L. HAYNAM.—Not the least prominent of the Haynam brothers mentioned in these pages is Curtis L., of Paris township, to a brief review of whose life and achievements the reader's attention is here respectfully invited. A native of Stark county, he was born on the 28th of May, 1872, in Paris township and here spent his childhood and youth, growing to maturity amid the quiet scenes and wholesome influences of farm life. He enjoyed the advantages of a public school education and at the early age of eighteen began life for himself as a tiller of the soil, renting a portion of the home farm which he continued to cultivate for a share of the proceeds until reaching his twenty-fourth year. At that time he assumed sole management of the entire place and subsequently, 1896, contracted for the farm, agreeing to devote a specific amount to the support of his parents during their lifetime and otherwise provide for their comfort and look after their interests. It is needless in this connection to state that the mutual agreement was most faithfully and religiously observed by all concerned and to the credit of the subject be it said that he never wavered in carrying out his part of the contract. He was untiring in his efforts in his father's behalf, spared no pains in ministering to his comfort and alleviating his suffering in his last illness and since the latter's death, which occurred February 24, 1901, he has manifested the same tender, filial regard in relation to his mother, who is still living and an honored inmate of his household.

Since taking possession of the homestead Mr. Haynam has come rapidly to the front as an enterprising agriculturist and stock raiser, in both of which respects he is easily the peer of any of his contemporaries in the township of his residence.

On the 10th of September, 1896, was solemnized the ceremony which united Mr. Haynam and Miss Emma Baughman, daughter of Willard Baughman, of Paris township, in the holy bonds of matrimony, the union being blessed with one child by the name of Royal J. The domestic life of Mr. Haynam is a happy one and his pleasant home is the center of a genial hospitality which he and his good wife freely dispense to all who may choose to claim it. Since his twenty-first year, he has been an uncompromising supporter of the Republican party and at the present time is one of the leading local politicians of his township. He has also achieved considerable repute as a raiser of fine short-horn cattle, in which branch of farming he is destined ere long to take marked precedence, as he is now stocking his place with the most valuable animals to be obtained in this part of the state. Like his father, mother and older brothers, Mr. Haynam is a man of profound religious convictions, and since young manhood he has been a sincere and devoted communicant of the Disciple church. He is active in all lines of religious work, as is also his wife, and his influence in the community has always been on the side of right.

ELMER E. HAYNAM, the fifth son of William and Louisa (Slack) Haynam, was born April 10, 1868, in Paris township and spent his early life on the paternal homestead, where he acquired those exact and commendable habits which have characterized his career to the present time. In the public schools, which he attended during his minority, he received a fair intellectual training, but in the stern school of experience was acquired the sturdy, practical knowledge which formed the principal groundwork of his subsequent career. Mr. Haynam remained with his parents until attending his majority and then engaged in agricultural pursuits for himself, beginning his life work as a renter on a part of the home farm. In the year 1890 he was united in marriage with Miss Emma Lentz, daughter of John Lentz, one of Paris township's prominent agriculturists, and from that time until his father's death continued to cultivate the soil as above stated, meeting with satisfactory success in his undertakings. His father dying in February, 1897, Mr. Haynam, some time the following month, purchased eighty acres of the Jacob Newcomer estate and has since lived on the same, meantime by a system of well conducted improvements converting his place into one of the finest and most desirable as well as one of the most valuable country homes in the county of Stark. The dwelling, thoroughly remodelled, is both commodious and sightly, a fine specimen of modern architecture and supplied with all the comforts and conveniences which money can procure. That Mr. Haynam is a model farmer will not be questioned by any one at all acquainted with the methodical and systematic manner with which he prosecutes his labors and conducts his business affairs. In connection with agriculture he devotes considerable attention to the raising and selling of fine live stock, his success in this respect being equally as great as that which has crowned his efforts as a tiller of the soil.

Politically Mr. Haynam is a Republican of the most orthodox type and as such takes a very active interest in party questions and issues. He has never sought official preferment and aside from serving for a number of years as president of the school board, has neither held nor desired public position. Although plain and undemonstrative in manner he is enterprising and progressive in his ideas, strong and faithful in his friendships and pre-eminently kind hearted and charitable. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Haynam has been brightened by the advent of four children, namely: Grace, Carrie, Loy and Sylvia.

FRANK L. HAYNAM is a native of Stark county, born August 15, 1869, on the old Haynam farmstead in Paris township, being the twelfth in a family of thirteen children whose parents were George and Elizabeth (Crowl) Haynam. Raised in the country and early inured to manual labor, his youthful experiences were about the same as those of the majority of lads reared in close touch with nature on the farm. In common schools he obtained a fair educational training and as soon as old enough took his place in the fields where he bore his full share of the work required to keep them in cultivation. Young Haynam remained at home, assisting his father, until twenty-one years of age, at which time he engaged in agricultural pursuits for himself, renting a portion of the homestead for the purpose. He continued as a renter until 1896, when he bought of his father one hundred and sixty-two and a half acres of fine land in Paris township, while his holdings at this time consist of one hundred and forty-two and a half acres, he having sold twenty acres. In addition to general farming Mr. Haynam devotes considerable attention to live stock, especially to fine hogs of the Poland China breed, in the raising of which his success has been most encouraging. Familiar with every detail of modern agriculture and a systematic worker and superior manager, he runs his farm well and never fails to realize abundant returns from the land in cultivation.

The married life of Mr. Haynam began in 1896, on March 28th of which year Miss Lucinda Snyder, of Osnaburg township, daughter of Jacob Snyder, became his wife. The father of Mrs. Haynam has long been one of the successful and wealthy farmers of Osnaburg and as a citizen ranks with the prominent men of his part of the county. It was shortly after his marriage that the subject moved to his present place of residence in Paris township and he is now numbered with the enterprising and progressive citizens of his community, being alive to everything calculated to advance its material prosperity and deeply interested in the moral and intellectual improvement of the neighborhood. In politics he is a pronounced Republican and an earnest worker for his party; in religion his views are in harmony with the teachings of the Disciple church, having been reared under its influence, as were also his parents and several of his brothers, the latter, at the present time, being leading members of the congregation worshiping in Minerva. Mrs. Haynam is a lady of sterling worth and has proved an admirable companion to her husband, promoting peace and harmony in the domestic circle and making home the dearest and happiest spot on earth to its inmates. She has borne her husband four children, three daughters and one son, namely: Mable E., Flossie F., Earl E. and Lela L., all living.

JACOB BURGER was born on the 23d of November, 1850, being a son of Jacob and Anna (Morrow) Burger, to whom were born six children, all of whom are living at the present time, namely: Rachel, who is the wife of William Haynam, and resides in the state of Oregon; Hannah, who is the wife of Henry Crowl, of Columbiana county, Ohio; Daniel M., who is likewise a resident of that county; Jacob, Jr., the immediate subject of this sketch; and Harriet and Hiram, who are twins, the former being the wife of William Holmes, of the state of Oregon, while the latter is a farmer of Columbiana county, this state.

The father of the subject was born in the year 1807, in the state of New York, being a son of Daniel Burger, who came with his family to Stark county in the year 1819. For a number of years after his arrival in the county he leased land, having cleared and improved the farm upon which David Chaddock now resides, near the village of Minerva. The father of the subject was reared to manhood on this homestead, and lent his due quota of aid in reclaiming the same from the forest, the tract having been heavily timbered, while eventually he came into possession of the farm, which he purchased of his father. Here he continued to devote his attention to farming up to the time of his death, which occurred in the year 1885, at which time he had attained nearly the age of four score years. He was an adept in the use of the ax and was a man of much physical strength in his day. For many years he did much chopping and also hewed many of the timbers used in the erection of buildings in the early days. In politics he was a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and he was a man of much public spirit and progressive ideas. His wife was born in Stark county, Ohio, and her death occurred in 1873, both having held membership in the Disciple church at Minerva.

Jacob Burger was reared to the sturdy and invigorating life of the farm and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of this section nearly a half century ago. At the age of eighteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of carpenter, in which he became a skilled workman, and he followed this as a vocation for a number of years, while for nearly a quarter of a century he devoted his attention to the moving of buildings, having an excellent equipment for the purpose and finding his services in requisition throughout a wide radius of country. He abandoned this branch of his enterprise in 1900, since which time he has given his undivided attention to his farming interests. In 1884 he effected the purchase of the old homestead from his father, and somewhat later he purchased a tract of ninety-three acres in Columbiana county, where he now lives, and he has since continued to give his active supervision to the operation of both farms, which are separated by a distance of about two miles. Mr. Burger clings to the political faith in which he was reared and is known as a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, in whose cause he has taken a zealous interest. He served for two terms as trustee of Paris township, and for several was a member of the board of education of his district. He and his wife are both consistent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church, while fraternally he is identified with the Senior Order of United American Mechanics, affiliating with Minerva Lodge No. 21.

On the 25th of December, 1877, Mr. Burger was united in marriage to Miss Liddie M. Kurtz, who was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, being a daughter of Charles Kurtz, who was one of the honored pioneers of Columbiana county. Mr. and Mrs. Burger have three children, namely: Clay O., who is station agent for the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad at Martin's Ferry, Ohio; and Mary A. and Carrie B., who remain at the parental home.

MICHAEL WERLE was born in the province of Baden, Germany, on the 16th of August, 1844, being a son of Michael and Mathilda (Weishar) Werle, who became the parents of ten children, nine of whom are living at the present time, namely: Catherine, who is the wife of Chris Kepinger, of Bushnell, Illinois; Barbara, who is a maiden lady and who resides in the village of Osnaburg, this county; Michael, who is the subject of this sketch; Amelia, who is the wife of Thomas C. Haynam, of Paris township; Mathilda, who is the wife of John Starkey, of Minerva, this county; Lena, who also resides in that village; Eugene and Harmon, both of whom are residents of Osnaburg township; and Cora, who is the wife of Henry Foltz, of Minerva.

In the year 1852 Michael Werle, Sr., accompanied by his wife and the children who were born to them in the fatherland, emigrated to the United States, landing in New York city, where they remained for a short interval and thence came directly to Stark county, Ohio, where he purchased a farm of sixty-six acres, near the southwestern corner of Paris township, later purchasing an adjoining tract of forty acres and eventually becoming one of the successful and independent farmers of the county, having personally reclaimed a considerable portion of his farm, as much of the native timber was still standing on the place when it came into his possession. Here he lived and labored to goodly ends until he passed to his final reward in the fullness of years and secured in the esteem of all who knew him. having been eighty-two years of age at the time of his death. His loved and devoted wife survived him about three years, passing away at the age of seventy-two years. In politics he was a stanch Democrat and both he and his wife were consistent and valued members of the Reformed church.

Michael Werle, Jr., was about eight years of age at the time when the family bade adieu to the fatherland and came to America to establish a new home, and he was reared to maturity on the homestead farm in this county, having such educational advantages as were afforded by a somewhat irregular attendance in the district schools of a half century ago. He continued to assist in the work of the home place until his marriage, in 1870, when he rented the farm of which he is now the owner, in section 23, Paris township, and for the ensuing decade he continued to here follow farming as a renter. In 1880 he purchased the farm now owned by Jerry Haynam, in section 23, this township, where he remained four years, at the expiration of which he returned to his present farm, to whose improvement and cultivation he has since devoted his attention, while it may consistently be said that he has one of the most valuable farms in this section, so far as comparison may be made according to relative areas.

On the 17th of March, 1870, Mr. Werle was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Hein, of Osnaburg township, she having been the daughter of Powell Hein, who was a native of Germany, whence he came to Stark county several years prior to the arrival of the Werle family and here passed the remainder of his life, being one of the honored pioneer farmers of the township mentioned. Mrs. Werle was summoned into eternal rest in 1886, and of her five children four yet survive, namely: Amelia, who is the wife of William Myers, of Paris township; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Grant Ford, of this township; and Matilda and Cora, who remain at the paternal home. In 1888, Mr. Werle married his present wife, whose maiden name was Wilhelmina Miller, and who was born in Osnaburg township, being a daughter of Jacob Miller, an influential pioneer farmer of this county, whither he emigrated from Germany and where he resided until the time of his death. The farm now owned by the subject was a portion of the Miller estate and after his second marriage he purchased the interests of the other heirs aside from his wife, and now has a finely improved farm of one hundred and eighteen acres. No children have been born of the second marriage. In his political proclivities Mr. Werle exercises his franchise in support of the Democratic party so far as national issues are involved, but in local affairs he is not dominated by strenuous partisanship, giving his support to such men and measures as meet the approval of his judgment. He and his wife are honored members of the Reformed church and take an active interest in its work.

JOHN CARSON, who was in his eighty-fourth year at the time of his death, was a native of the fair Emerald Isle, having been born in county Tyrone, Ireland, on the 15th of July, 1819, and being a son of Samuel and Mary (Aiken) Carson, both of whom were likewise born in Ireland, of the stanch old stock, and of their eleven children only three are now living, namely: Rebecca, who is the widow of John McIntyre and resides in Hebron, Indiana; James, who is a resident of Carroll county, this state; and Isabelle J., who is the widow of William Beaty, and resides in Waynesburg, Stark county. The youngest of these children is seventy-seven years of age. The father of the subject was born in county Tyrone, on the estate of the Marquis of Abercorn, the year of his nativity having been 1788 while he was a son of John Carson, who also was born on the same estate, where he passed his entire life. The subject well remembered as a boy he saw Lord Russell and the Marquis of Abercorn, with their retinues of servants, when they were on a visit to their estates.

In 1834 the father of the subject emigrated with his wife and ten children to the United States, landing in the city of Philadelphia and thence coming westward to Ohio, stopping in Carroll county, where he joined his maternal aunt, who was residing in Rose township. There he rented a farm, on which he remained about two and one-half years, after which he removed to Brown township, that county, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres, to which he subsequently added a contiguous tract of forty acres. The subject of this sketch and his brother James, upon attaining maturity, purchased an adjoining tract of eighty acres, and there they continued to be actively engaged in the improving and cultivating of the farms until 1856, when father and sons all disposed of their holdings there and came to Paris township, Stark county, and here effected the purchase of the Daniel Shively farm of two hundred and thirty-two acres, lying two and one-half miles south of the village of Paris. In 1859 the honored father was summoned into eternal rest, and two years later the farm was sold and the subject received his due portion of the proceeds. He thereupon purchased one hundred and fifty-seven and one-half acres of his present farm, which was badly run down at the time, being thus so depreciated in value that he secured it for a reasonable price. Soon afterward he made a trip to Pennsylvania, where he purchased one hundred and fifty head of thoroughbred Delaine-Merino sheep, with which he stocked his farm, and within a few years following the price of wool rose to one dollar per pound, and through this circumstance Mr. Carson realized profits far beyond his most sanguinary expectations, and was thus enabled to carry vigorously forward the improving and reinvigorating of his farm, whose fertility had become impaired through neglect on the part of the previous owners. He began to erect new buildings and continued to make improvements in this line, as his available resources justified, until the place became recognized as one of the most attractive and well equipped farms in the township. All the buildings at present in evidence on the place have been erected by him and give evidence of his discrimination and energy during the past years. He devoted the farm to general agriculture but continued to devote special attention to the raising of high-grade sheep and did much to improve the type and breed in this section of the state, being an excellent judge of values and understanding the best methods to be utilized in the carrying forward of this department of his farming enterprise. Though he was an octogenarian, this by no means implies that he was withdrawn from active duty, for he maintained an active supervision of his farm and his years rested so lightly upon him that in appearance he belied his age to a notable degree. The home farm comprises one hundred and eighty-five and one-half acres, and is a model of thrift and attractiveness, while Mr. Carson was known as one of the representative and influential citizens of the township, where his friends were in number as his acquaintances.

Mr. Carson was a Democrat in his political views, but was broad-minded and independent, and where no issue of national import was involved exercised his franchise in support of the men whom he considered best qualified for office, having at various times gone into the campaign and pressed the claims of Republican candidates when he believed the candidates of his own party were not fit for the respective offices. He served his township for the long period of twenty years as trustee and was tendered the office of county commissioner, but refused to become a candidate, while such was the regard and confidence in which he has ever been held in the community that his nomination to any local office would have proved equivalent to an election had he consented to accept nomination. He was a veritable pillar and patriarch in the Presbyterian church, in which he served as elder for fourteen years, while for several years he was a member of the session of the church.

On the 27th of April, 1853, Mr. Carson was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Bell, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and her death occurred on the 7th of May, 1887, no children having been born of the union. On the 2d of October, 1889, Mr. Carson wedded Mrs. Celestia (Kurts) Lang, the widow of Rev. William Lang, and a daughter of the late Daniel Kurts, who was a wealthy and influential farmer of Columbiana county, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Carson had two children, Mary J. and John S., both of whom remain at the parental home, as do also Mrs. Carson's two children by her first marriage, namely: Catherine, the wife of Charles Bates, who has charge of the homestead farm; and Harvey, who also assists in its work. Mr. Carson died March 19, 1903.

DAVID WEIMER was born on a farm in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 23d of January, 1848; being a son of David and Catherine (Hepler) Weimer, of whose twelve children the following eight are still living: Jacob, who is a resident of Kosciusko county, Indiana; Martin, who resides in the village of Minerva, Stark county, Ohio; Susan, who is the wife of Eli Dumbleton, of that village; David, Jr., who is the subject of this sketch; Samuel, who makes his home in Minerva; Reuben, who is a successful farmer of Paris township; Frank, who resides in Carroll county, and Catherine, who is the wife of Peter Schorey, of Sandy township. The father of these children was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, about the year 1810, being a son of Jacob Weimer, who was of staunch German lineage and a member of a family early established in the Keystone state. About the year 1818 Jacob Weimer came with his family to Ohio and took up his residence on a tract of heavily timbered land in Brown township, where he purchased seventy-seven acres, about the only improvement that had been made on the place being in the erection of a small log house, in which the family took up their abode. Here the grandfather of the subject, with the able assistance of his sturdy sons, reclaimed the farm and placed the same under effective cultivation, while substantial improvements of a permanent order were made as rapidly as opportunity permitted. He had been well-to-do in Pennsylvania, but lost heavily through over-confidence in his supposed friends, for whom he went security and who took advantage of him. He was thus led to seek a new home in Ohio, in the hope of recuperating his resources. He passed the remainder of his life on the homestead farm in Carroll county, and was called to his reward when well advanced in years. The father of the subject was reared to maturity on this pioneer farm and as a boy began to contribute, according to the measure of his strength, to the work of reclaiming the same and carrying forward its cultivation. After his marriage he continued to operate the home farm for his father during a number of years, and finally purchased the place from his father and sisters and continued to make it his home during the remainder of his life. He identified himself with the Republican party at the time of its organization and though a stalwart advocate of its principles was never an aspirant for office. He was a worthy and consistent member of the Lutheran church, as was also his devoted wife, who passed away in 1897 at the age of seventy-nine years.

David Weimer was reared to maturity on this ancestral homestead, and is indebted to the public schools of the locality for the early educational advantages which fell to his portion. At the age of eighteen years he practically initiated his independent career, securing employment at farm work, while for a short time he also devoted his attention to work as an apprentice carpenter. On the 28th of October, 1874, Mr. Weimer was united in marriage to Miss Charity Combs, who was born on the farm where she and her husband now reside, in Paris township, being a daughter of James Combs, who came with his parents to Ohio from New Jersey, which latter was his native state, and he became one of the honored and influential farmers of Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. After his marriage Mr. Weimer rented a farm in Carroll county and continued in charge of the same for two years, at the expiration of which he bought a small farm in Washington township, Stark county, the same comprising thirty-two acres. From this place he was able to secure better returns than would many a farmer from a place of twice the area, and there he remained for a period of six and one-half years, at the expiration of which he disposed of the property and purchased his present homestead of eighty-five acres, the same having been a portion of the estate of his father-in-law, and it is one of the fine farms of the township.

Mr. Weimer accords an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and is ever able to show a reason for the faith that is in him, keeping in touch with the questions and events of the day and having his convictions well fortified. In 1899 he was elected to the office of trustee of Paris township, and in 1902 he was chosen as his own successor in this office, by the flattering majority of two hundred and eighteen votes, the compliment being the more pronounced from the fact that the normal political complexion of the township is strongly Democratic. He and his wife are both consistent and valued members of the Lutheran church, in whose work he has taken a zealous interest, as has he also in the cause of education, having served for a number of years as a member of the school board. Mr. and Mrs. Weimer have three interesting daughters, Zoa, who remains at the parental home, as do also Edith and Eva, who are twins.

J. WALTER McClymonds is an ex-soldier of the Civil war, one of the representative business men of the state, president of the Russell & Company and the Russell Engine Company, two of the most extensive and important industrial concerns in their line in the country, and president of the Merchants' National Bank of Massillon, which he organized and established in the year 1890. Mr. McClymonds was born in New Lisbon, Ohio, September 18, 1842, and is of Scotch-Irish extraction. His grandfather, John McClymonds, a resident of Pennsylvania, was a soldier in the war of 1812, with the rank of captain, and was also for many years postmaster at Darlington, in that state.

The father of the subject, John McClymonds, came from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and settled in New Lisbon, where for many years he conducted a mercantile and banking business. He was married to Elizabeth Kincaid, at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, whose father, Thomas Kincaid, came from Hagerstown, Maryland, where she was born and raised. In 1860 John McClymonds removed to Massillon, where for nine years he was engaged in banking. In 1869 he removed to Cleveland and became one of the organizers of the Ohio National Bank of that city, of which he was president until he retired, a few years before his death, which occurred in 1894, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. He was also active in organizing and es-establishing the Cleveland Rubber Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, and the Chicago Rubber Works, of Chicago, Illinois, in both of which concerns he was a director.

J. Walter McClymonds graduated from the New Lisbon high school at the age of eighteen, and in April, 1861, entered the service of the government by enlisting as a private in Company E, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three months, his regiment being assigned to the Army of West Virginia under McClellan and Rosecrans, and the subject was complimented by General McClellan for his gallantry in the battle of Rich Mountain. At the expiration of his term he re-enlisted, becoming a member of Company A of the same regiment. A short time afterwards he was promoted to the office of sergeant major, in which capacity he was in active service with his regiment until the summer of 1862. His regiment was attached to the Eleventh Brigade, Second Division, Army of Ohio, under General Carlos Buell in his campaign in Kentucky and Tennessee, during the fall and winter of '61 and the spring of '62, which terminated in the battles of Shiloh and Pittsburg Landing, April 6th and 7th, and in the advance upon and siege of Corinth and campaign below Iuka, in Mississippi. Sergeant Major McClymonds was honorably discharged in July, 1862, to accept promotion, and was commissioned adjutant of the One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was active in organizing that regiment at Camp Massillon, Ohio. During his connection with the One Hundred and Fourth he saw service in the defense of Cincinnati against Kirby Smith's attack, the engagement at Fort Mitchell in September, 1862, and in the pursuit of Morgan in Kentucky, during the winter of 1862. In the spring of 1863 his regiment and brigade were with Burnside in the East Tennessee campaign, and in the operations about Cumberland Gap; in the Knoxville campaign and siege of Knoxville, which terminated in the spring of 1864. His regiment was then assigned to General Cox's division of the Twenty-third Corps of Sherman's army, where it began its campaign towards Atlanta, at Dalton, in May, 1864. His service covered all of the marches, skirmishes and battles in which his brigade and corps participated during this campaign—at Resaca, Cartersville, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Lost Mountain, battle of Peachtree Creek, battle of Atlanta, siege of Atlanta, Utoy Creek, Battle of Jonesboro and Lovejoy Station and in pursuit of General Hood into Alabama, which terminated in October, 1864. His regiment, forming part of the First Brigade, Third Division, Twenty-third Army Corps, Army of Ohio, under General Schofield, participated in the Nashville campaign of November and December, 1864, which included the battles around Pulaski, Columbia and Columbia Ford, Tennessee, Spring Hill and battles of Franklin, November 30th, and Nashville, December 15th and 16th. At the close of this campaign the regiment was transferred to North Carolina and participated in the operations against the forces of General Hoke about Fort Fisher and Fort Anderson, and in the battles of Town Creek, Wilmington and Golsboro, where they were mustered out, after the surrender of Johnson's army, April 5, 1865, and where Mr. McClymonds was honorably discharged from the service. He was commissioned captain on June 27, 1864, and served as assistant adjutant general of brigade, on the staff of General Reilly, from August, 1863, to April, 1865. At the close of the war he received a commission in the regular army, as first lieutenant Fourteenth Regular Infantry, but after holding the commission for a few months returned it, preferring a business to a military life.

During the summer, fall and winter of 1865 Mr. McClymonds was employed as secretary in the office of General Poe, chief engineer on General Sherman's staff, in Washington, D. C. In the spring of 1866 he located in Massillon and for some three years was engaged, first, as a clerk in the manufacturing establishment of Russell & Company, and subsequently as teller in the Union National Bank of that place. In the spring of 1869 he removed to Cleveland and for three years was employed as assistant cashier in the Ohio National Bank of that city, of which his father was president. In the spring of 1872 he returned to Massillon and held the position of bookkeeper for Russell & Company. He became a partner in the concern in January, 1876, and was placed in charge of the financial management of the business. In January, 1878, the firm was incorporated as Russell & Company, and Mr. McClymonds was made secretary and treasurer, which positions he held until 1888, when he was made president of the company, and has retained this position until the present time. In 1900 he reorganized the firm of Russell & Company, separating the stationary engine business, organizing a separate corporation under the title of the Russell Engine Company and building a separate plant for the conduct of this branch of the business. The old firm of Russell & Company was re-incorporated under the title of the Russell & Company, and continues the manufacture of traction engines, threshing machines and saw-mills, Mr. McClymonds being at the head of both concerns as president. The firm of Russell & Company was established in 1842, the horse power consisting of one blind horse and the investment being only fifteen hundred dollars. From this small beginning it has grown to large proportions. The two corporations, as now constituted, conduct business that runs into the millions annually. Their product is in demand in every state in the Union and large shipments are made annually abroad. Russell & Company was one of the first agricultural machinery houses to commence the manufacture of a successful grain thresher and separator, and also among the first to embark in the manufacture of farm engines.

Mr. McClymonds has always been an ardent Republican, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln while in the army. He never sought political preferment, though he has been repeatedly tendered positions in his party. In 1884 he served as president of the Ohio commission at the New Orleans exposition, having been appointed as a commissioner by Governor Hoadley. He was one of the presidential electors in 1888, when Benjamin Harrison was elected President of the United States. He was tendered the position of director general of the board of Ohio commissioners to the world's fair at Chicago in 1894, by Governor McKinley, but declined the honor, owing to his extensive business engagements. As pertains to continuous service, he is one of the oldest members of the board of directors of the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling Railway Company.

On November 9, 1870, Mr. McClymonds married Flora A., daughter of Nahum S. Russell, the head of the firm of Russell & Company, who has borne him two children. His eldest daughter married Arvine Wales, treasurer of the Russell Engine Company, his second daughter being Ruth E. Mr. McClymonds, while a member of no church organization, is liberal in his contributions to all religious and charitable objects, and interests himself in every enterprise that promises to benefit his community. A broad-minded and public-spirited citizen, he occupies a place of prominence in industrial and financial circles of the country, while his course has ever been such as to command for him the unequivocal confidence and regard of all who know him, or with whom he has business relations.

THOMAS T. CROWL.—The Crowl family is of sterling German origin but has been established on American soil since the colonial epoch, the original representatives in the new world having located in the state of Maryland, with whose annals the name has been identified for several generations. The subject of this review, who was one of the highly esteemed and prosperous farmers of Stark county, was a native of this county, having been born on the parental homestead, in Paris township, on the 1st of November, 1833, being a son of Daniel and Anna (Townsend) Crowl, of whose six children he was the eldest of the three surviving at the time of his death, which occurred May 17, 1903, the other three being Hubbard and David, who are prominent and honored farmers of Paris township, and Henry, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Columbiana county, this state. Daniel Crowl was born in the state of Maryland, in the year 1808, being a son of Michael Crowl, who was likewise a native of that commonwealth. The father of the subject was reared on the home farm in Maryland, and shortly after his marriage he came with his bride to Stark county, Ohio, where they made their advent in 1833. For the first two years after his arrival he was employed by Peter Conrad, and he then effected the purchase of a tract of eighty acres of timbered land, in Paris township, the same being now owned by his son Hubbard. He gradually brought about the development of this farm, and in 1851 he purchased seventy-one acres of the farm now owned by the subject. His first purchase was in the midst of the virgin forest, no improvements having been made on the place, and there he erected a log cabin of the primitive type common to the locality and period, later building another and more pretentious residence, in harmony with the other improvements which he made on his farm, and here he continued to reside until 1857, when he purchased twenty acres of land in the village of Minerva, and in a comfortable residence thereon he passed the remainder of his signally honorable and useful life, passing to his eternal reward in 1882. He was a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and though never an aspirant for public preferment, he was called upon to serve in various offices of local trust and responsibility and ever discharged the duties involved with marked business acumen and distinctive fidelity. He was a devoted member of the Disciples church, in which he held various official positions for a long term of years. His first wife, the mother of the subject, was summoned into eternal rest in 1845, and he later married Miss Matilda Unkefer, who bore him one child, Nora, who became the wife of Joseph Alexander, of Minerva, this county, and who is now deceased, as is also her mother.

Thomas T. Crowl was reared on the old homestead farm where he was born and received a common school education. Upon attaining his legal majority he assumed charge of the farm which he afterward owned, operating the same on shares for his father. In 1855 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Boory, who was born in Paris township, being a daughter of Frederick Boory, who was a native of Switzerland, whence he came to America with his parents when he was a boy, and he became one of the early settlers in Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. After his marriage Mr. Crowl continued to cultivate his present farm, for which he paid a cash rental up to 1881, when he purchased a half interest in the property from his father, after whose death he acquired the remaining interest, while he eventually increased its area by the purchase of an adjoining twenty acres, so that he had a fine farm of ninety-one acres, all of which is maintained under a high state of cultivation, while the permanent improvements are of that substantial and attractive order which indicate thrift and prosperity. For the last six years Mr. Crowl relegated the active management of his farm to his sons, who are prominent and successful farmers and stock-growers of this section of the county, and he personally retired from the more active labors. In his political proclivities he was an ardent Democrat and took an active interest in the party cause. He served one term as trustee of Paris township and was a member of the school board for many years. He held membership in the Disciples church, to whose support he was a liberal contributor. Of his ten children nine are still living, and of them we offer the following brief record: Ola is the wife of Henry Perdue, of Paris township; Laura is the wife of John Stucky, also of this township; Frank H. is individually mentioned elsewhere in this volume; Orin is a resident of West township, Columbiana county; Caroline is the wife of Milton Slack, of Minerva, this county; Morris D. and Horace J. are twins, the former being associated in the management of the home farm, while the latter resides in the village of Minerva; Jennie Maud has been in charge of the domestic economies of the home since the death of her mother; and Homer C. is associated with his brother Horace in conducting the farm, as has already been noted. The devoted wife and mother was summoned into eternal rest on the 18th of July, 1896, at the age of sixty-one years, having been a zealous member of the Disciples church and having had that faith that makes for faithfulness in all the relations of life. Mr. Crowl erected his first residence in 1866, and the same was destroyed by fire in the spring of 1902, the present fine residence being erected immediately afterward and being one of the most attractive farm homes in this section of the county. Mr. Crowl died May 17, 1903.

HOSTETTER FAMILY.—The original American progenitor of the family was Ulrick Hostetter, who came to America with nine brothers, they all being born in Switzerland, where they were reared to maturity. As young men they emigrated to America and took up their residence in the state of Maryland, where they passed the remainder of their lives. David, son of Ulrick, was born in the city of Baltimore, and was there reared, educated and married, and there two sons were born, David and an infant deceased. David, Sr., was the founder of the family in Stark county, whither he came in the year 1808. He first located in Lisbon and later he entered a tract of heavily timbered land in what is now Paris township, and it is pleasing to note that the property remains in the possession of the family to the present time. He became a man of prominence and influence in the pioneer community, and at the outbreak of the war of 1812 his son David tendered his services in defense of the republic, becoming a second lieutenant in a company of Ohio volunteers commanded by Captain Roller, participating in the battle of Malden and being present at the unfortunate surrender of General Hull, at Detroit. He succeeded in reclaiming a considerable portion of his land and here continued to reside until his death, as did also his wife. They became the parents of seven children, of whom the only two now surviving are Ephraim, of whom specific mention is to be made later in this context, and Elderkin. Of his son Hiram, who died on the 28th of April, 1902, a previous publication has given the following appreciative estimate:

Hiram Hostetter was born on the pioneer homestead, September 19, 1825, and remained on the farm until his twentieth year, when he entered the Wooster Academy. He completed his education by "swinging the ferule" for a few terms in district school. In 1854 he taught school at Racine, Wisconsin, and in the following year he taught a precinct school in the city of Chicago, Illinois. In 1857 he returned to Ohio and began the study of law at Ashland. With this fine foundation in erudition and knowledge of men, he chose the pleasant occupation of husbandry, and returned to the homestead, which he later enlarged and improved. Mr. Hostetter never ceased the prosecution of his studies, to which the retirement of rural life is so favorable. His reading and research were wide and liberal and gave him high rank in the community for his accomplishments in the sciences and history.

Hiram Hostetter was in politics originally arrayed in support of the Whig party, but when the Republican party came into being, as the avowed opponent of the further extension of slavery, he allied himself therewith and ever afterward remained a stanch advocate of its cause. At the time of the war of the Rebellion he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in which he became a second lieutenant, continuing in service for three months. He was one of the most zealous members of the Disciples church and was active in the promotion of religious and educational affairs in the community. He was seventy-five years of age at the time of his demise, and his loss was deeply deplored in the community where practically his entire life had been passed,—a life consecrated to good works and kindly deeds.

On the 1st of January, 1860, was solemnized the marriage of Hiram Hostetter to Miss Elizabeth P. Walker, who was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, on the 22d of June, 1838, being a daughter of Ely and Elizabeth (Barden) Walker, and she is still living on the old homestead, being one of the revered pioneer women of Paris township. Of this union were born nine children, two of whom met accidental death,—Ethel, deceased, and Hiram B., who received a fatal shock in falling from a tree. The living children are Karl M., concerning whom individual mention is made in later paragraphs; Almira, who died at the age of twenty-six years, and Atta Carma, who is a missionary in Japan, under the auspices of the Disciples church. She thus rendered effective service in the orient for a period of five years and then returned home for a rest and in August, 1900, she again returned to Japan to resume her devoted labors. Before entering the missionary field she taught for several terms in the public schools, after which she completed a special course of study at Hiram College, at Hiram, Ohio, and after returning to the United States she took a course of study in Nashville, Tennessee. Of Victor Grant, a prominent clergyman of the Disciples church, further mention will be made at a later point in this article. In the ownership of the old homestead Hiram Hostetter was associated with his brother Ephraim, and of the latter we now enter a brief record.

Ephraim Hostetter was born on the old homestead farm on which he now resides, in section 25, Paris township, the date of his nativity having been January 11, 1835, and it may be further said that his grandfather here took up an entire section of land, and that the latter was one of the ten brothers who came from Switzerland to the United States. Ephraim was reared to the sturdy discipline of the pioneer farm, and in his youth has such educational advantages as were afforded in the primitive log school house of the pioneer epoch. In 1862 he tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in Company B, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued in active service nearly three years. He participated in the battle of Resaca, and the regiment thereafter was engaged in almost constant skirmishing during the long and weary march to Nashville, where the command was held in reserve. They then returned with General Thomas to Knoxville, Tennessee, where, under Longstreet, the Confederates laid siege to the city, and the beleaguered Federal soldiers were eventually reduced to a diet of bread made from bran, depending on this subsistence at the time when

Sherman came north and raised the siege, the troops going then on the Georgia campaign. The One Hundred and Fourth Ohio then returned with General Thomas, and took part in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and Mr. Hostetter was mustered out and honorably discharged at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 17th of June, 1865. After his return to Stark county he again resumed his association with agricultural pursuits, he and his brother Hiram eventually purchasing the present fine homestead, which comprises one hundred and sixty-four and one-half acres, and which has been devoted to diversified agriculture and to the raising of high-grade live stock. In politics he has ever given an unequivocal support to the Republican party and he is a devoted member of the Disciples church. Fraternally he is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being identified with Minerva Post No. 106, at Minerva. Mr. Hostetter remains a bachelor and has resided consecutively in the home of his brother and the latter's estimable wife.

Karl M. Hostetter, the eldest son of the late Hiram Hostetter, was born on the old homestead farm where he now lives, on the 19th of May, 1861, and he received the advantages of the excellent public schools of his native county. He continued to be identified with the work of the farm until he had attained maturity, and in 1888 he removed to the village of Minerva, where he became an interested principal in the Minerva Furniture Company, whose establishment was destroyed by fire in 1901, after which he returned to the home farm, of which he now has the active management, being known as one of the able and progressive business men of this section. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the Lutheran church. On the 27th of January, 1888, Mr. Hostetter was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hockenberger, a daughter of Henry Hockenberger, of Paris township, who came to this county from Germany when a boy, being now one of the influential farmers of Paris township. Mr. and Mrs. Hostetter have two children, Claire and Bessie.

Rev. Victor G. Hostetter, the younger son of Hiram Hostetter, was born on the home farm, on the 28th of August, 1871, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools he entered Bethany College, at Bethany, West Virginia, where he completed a theological course and prepared himself for the ministry of the Disciples church, in which he was ordained in 1899. Previously to this he had been engaged in teaching for a number of years. He is at the present time pastor of the church at Lorain, Lorain county, Ohio, and previously to this he had held three other charges in the state. He accepted the pastorate of the church at Mungen, Wood county, and later resigned this to become pastor of a church in Zanesville, where he remained until 1901, when he took the Elmore charge at Elmore, Ohio, and in July, 1902, he assumed his present charge. He has been most successful in his work and is one of the valued clergy of the church and a man of high ability. He married Miss Alma Groh, of Bays, Wood county, and they have one child, Glaris.

FRANK H. CROWL was born on the paternal homestead in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 2d of March, 1861, being a son of Thomas T. and Mary (Boorey) Crowl, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work, so that a recapitulation of the family history is not demanded at this juncture, though it may be stated that his father still resides on the old homestead mentioned. Our subject was reared to maturity on the home farm and from his boyhood up contributed his share of work to the same, while he was accorded such educational advantages as were afforded in the public schools of the locality. Upon attaining his legal majority Mr. Crowl began work at the carpenter's trade, to which he devoted his attention about four years, becoming a skilled artisan in the line. On the 14th of September, 1885, he was united in marriage to Miss Leone Myers, a daughter of David M. Myers, one of the well known pioneer farmers of Paris township, and after his marriage Mr. Crowl rented the Schorey farm, located near the home farm, and there continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits for the ensuing five years, at the expiration of which he leased the farm of Madison Farmer, also in this township, where he remained two years, while he passed the following year on the Thomas Jackson farm, near Minerva. In these years he had husbanded his resources in such a way that, in 1894, he found himself justified in purchasing his present fine farm of eighty acres, and here he has since been successfully engaged in general farming, conducting his operations upon scientific and practical principles, keeping his land at the highest possible state of productiveness and having excellent improvements of a permanent nature, including a comfortable and attractive residence. Mrs. Crowl was summoned into eternal rest on the 22d of September, 1898, being survived by two of her four children, Myrtle and Frederick, both of whom remain at the paternal home. The two deceased are Anna and Harry. On the 23d of January, 1900, Mr. Crowl consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Mary Alice Barnhouse, who was born in Carroll county, Ohio, being a daughter of the late Samuel Barnhouse, who was an influential and honored farmer of that county, and of this union one child has been born, Bessie.

In politics Mr. Crowl is found staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and in the spring of 1900 he was elected to the office of trustee of Paris township, his term expiring in 1906. He is a worthy member of the Disciples church, in which he held the office of deacon for a number of years and in whose work he has maintained a deep and helpful interest, his wife likewise being a member of this church. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees, holding membership in Minerva Tent No. 153.

HENRY SCHORY was born in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 31st of July, 1843, being a son of Christian and Anna (Zwallen) Schory, to whom were born nine children, all of whom are living, namely: Sophia, who is the widow of Charles Lebeau and resides in Paris township; Henry, who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, who is the wife of William Foltz, of Carroll county; Mary, who is the wife of Jacob Geiger, of that county; Christian W., who is a successful farmer of Canton township, Stark county; Peter S., who is a prominent farmer of Sandy township; Amelia M., who resides in Lancaster, this state; Caroline J., who is a resident of Alliance, this county; and Melinda M., who is the wife of John R. Miller, of Alliance, where he is foreman in an extensive hammer factory. The father of these children was born in the fair little republic of Switzerland, the place of his nativity having been the fair little village of Radelfingen, in the picturesque canton of Bern, where he was ushered into the world on the 14th of February, 1803, and where he was reared to the sturdy life of the farm. After the death of his parents, in company with his five brothers and two sisters, he emigrated to America, setting sail in the year 1833 and landing in due course of time in the city of New York. The family came forthwith to Canton, Stark county, their intention being at the time to seek a permanent location farther west, but the father of our subject, in company with his brother Peter, set forth to seek a desirable location, and finally selected one in this county, and the family forthwith effected the purchase of this farm of one hundred and sixty acres, in Paris township and near the village of Minerva, the property being owned jointly by the brothers and sisters. There all took up their abode and there all continued to reside for a number of years with the exception of Peter, who returned as far eastward as Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in teaching school for a time and then studied theology and became a clergyman of the German Reformed church. Eventually the father of the subject became associated with his brother Jacob in the joint ownership of the farm, having purchased the interests of the other members of the families and in 1853 Jacob acquired the entire property and Christian then purchased eighty-five acres of land in the same township, the tract being contiguous to the present homestead of his son Henry, subject of this review, who purchased the property about three years ago. Here Christian Schory passed the residue of his life, being successful in his efforts, which were directed with energy and discrimination, and being known as one of the reliable and upright citizens of the community, commanding unequivocal confidence and esteem. He died on this homestead, in September, 1894, at the patriarchal age of ninety-one years. He was a man of fine intellectual powers and could speak the German, Swiss, French and English languages fluently. In politics he was a stanch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Reformed church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted member, she having preceded him into eternal rest, her death occurring in February, 1892, at the age of seventy years. She likewise was a native of Switzerland, being seven years of age at the time of his parents' emigration to the United States. Her father, Henry Zwallen, located on a farm in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, purchasing the property from its original owner, who had shortly before entered the claim from the government and thus he became one of the first settlers in that locality, where he passed the residue of his life. Of the members of the Schory family who emigrated to America, seventy years ago, the last one, Rev. Peter D. Schory, died May 1, 1901, in Lancaster, this state, at the very advanced age of ninety-five years.

Henry Schory, whose name initiates this sketch, was reared to maturity on the homestead farm, to whose work he early began to contribute his due quota, while in the district schools he pursued his studies and laid the foundation for that broad and practical knowledge which he has since acquired in connection with the active associations of an eminently successful business career. On the 26th of March, 1867, Mr. Schory was united in marriage to Miss Mary M. Geiger, who was born in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, being a daughter of John P. Geiger, one of the influential and well known pioneer farmers of that township, and after his marriage the subject located on his present homestead farm, which he rented for a period of about five years, at the expiration of which he purchased the property. At the beginning he acquired a tract of seventy-five acres and by subsequent purchases its area has been increased to one hundred and eighteen acres, while in 1899 he purchased of the other heirs of his father's estate their interests in the old homestead farm, comprising eighty-five acres, so that his landed estate now has an aggregate area of two hundred and three acres, while it is maintained under most effective cultivation and has the substantial improvements and well ordered appearance which invariably indicates thrift and prosperity. In his early manhood Mr. Schory devoted his attention to threshing for about a decade, being part owner of an excellent equipment for this purpose, but he now gives his entire time to his farming operations. He exercises his franchise in support of the Democratic party, so far as national issues are involved, but is liberal in his views in the application of politics to local affairs, and gives his support to the men and measures endorsed by his judgment, rather than following strict partisan dictates. He and his wife are prominent and consistent members of the Reformed church, of which he is a deacon. To Mr. and Mrs. Schory have been born seven children, all of whom are living except one, and of them we here enter a brief record, in order of birth; Ella F., who is the wife of Edward Schearer, of Mapleton, this county; Ida E., who is the wife of Clifton Coffel, an accomplished teacher of music in Paris township; Alice, who died at the age of eighteen years; Mary, at home; Edward H., who is a successful school teacher and who remains at the parental home, as do also Grace A. and Erna E.

THOMAS B. KEITH, deceased, passed the major portion of his life in Stark county, though he was a native of the adjoining county of Carroll, having been born in the village of Pekin, on the 29th of September, 1841, and being the fifth in order of birth of the nine children of James and Sarah (Huett) Keith. The father of the subject was born in Virginia, about the year 1804, and was reared to maturity in the Old Dominion, and there he was employed as a slave-driver for a time, but became cognizant of the fact that his employer had stolen a number of slaves and was paid to leave the state in order that his compromising testimony might not be entered. He was a young man at the time and he came to Stark county, where he was employed at farm work for some years and finally became identified with the construction of the Ohio & Beaver canal, in which he took a certain amount of stock, practically investing all his savings, and thus, when disaster overtook the venture, he found himself again at the foot of the financial ladder, but not deprived of the recuperative power ever inherent in self-reliant manhood. He continued in the employ of others until he had accumulated sufficient funds to justify him in the purchasing of a tract of sixty acres, in Paris township, this county, and he then located on this place, to which he subsequently added until he had a farm of one hundred and twenty-nine acres, his original place of abode being a primitive log house, which had been erected by the former owner. Here he continued to reside until his death, as a result of an attack of typhoid fever, in 1857, at which time he was fifty-two years of age. In politics he exercised his franchise in support of the principles of the Democratic party and both he and his wife were members of the Disciples' church. The mother of the subject was born in Paris township, this county, in 1810, being a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Johnson) Huett, who were born in Ireland, where they were married and whence they emigrated to America, locating in Pennsylvania, where they remained until 1807, when they came to Stark county and cast in their lot with the early settlers of Paris township, where Mr. Huett took up a tract of wild land, upon which he passed a portion of each year until his death, in the interim remaining in Pennsylvania for the purpose of earning the money with which to sustain the family and carry forward the improvement of the pioneer farm. He died in the old Keystone state and his wife thereafter took up her permanent abode on the Stark county homestead, where she passed the remainder of her life, surviving her husband several years. The mother of the subject survived her husband by nearly forty years, her death occurring in 1893, at which time she had attained the advanced age of eighty-three years. She was a woman of noble character, self-abnegating and ever mindful of others, and she held the love of all who came within the range of her immediate influence.

Thomas B. Keith was reared to manhood on the old homestead farm in Paris township, and here he passed practically his entire life. The district schools afforded him his preliminary educational privileges, and he made good use of his opportunities and laid the foundation for that ample fund of knowledge which he has since gained in the beneficent and practical school of experience. While he was still a youth he became associated with his brother Smith in assuming charge of the home farm, which they took from their father on "shares," and this partnership continued until 1890, when the subject purchased his present homestead farm, of eighty acres, on section 21, Paris township, where he forthwith took up his residence and where he resided until his death, May 21, 1903. After the death of his mother Mr. Keith also purchased the old homestead, the place being now in charge of his son, Smith, Jr., and his son-in-law, Allen Zininger. Through his indefatigable industry and good judgment Mr. Keith advanced to a position as one of the essentially representative and influential farmers of this section, and at no point in his career can there be found a shadow upon his integrity and honor. He exercised his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, in whose faith he was reared.

On the 31st of October, 1874, Mr. Keith was united in marriage to Miss Rachel Wyman, who was a daughter of Jacob Wyman, one of the prominent farmers of Holmes county, Ohio, and of this union have been born four children, concerning whom we incorporate the following brief data: Lulu is the wife of Allen Zininger, and has one daughter, Ruth C.; Mr. Zininger is in associate charge of a farm adjoining the old homestead farm of the subject's father, as has been noted; Smith, Jr., is associated with Mr. Zininger in carrying on the work of the farm mentioned, and both are known as able and progressive young business men; and Richard R. and Carrie remain at the parental home. Mr. Keith had typhoid fever in the spring of 1903, and later died from the effects of pneumonia. His widow still resides on the homestead.

ELMER A. HURSH was born on the parental homestead farm in Paris township, on the 6th of December, 1872, being a son of John and Catherine (Riegel) Hursh, of whose eleven children the following named eight are still living: Mary, who is the wife of Thomas Watson, of Carroll county, this state; Milton, who is a resident of Butler county, Kansas; John L., who is engaged in the coal business in the city of Canton; Francis, who maintains his home in Canton, being a traveling salesman for the Ohio Oil & Grease Company, of Cleveland; Alice, who remains at the old home; Curtis G., who is likewise engaged in farming in Paris township; Elmer A., who is the direct subject of this resume; and Martha J., who is the wife of Jacob Potoff, of Carroll county.

John Hursh, the father of the subject, was born in the old Keystone state of Pennsylvania, on the 7th of January, 1826, being a son of Jacob and Mary A. (Harsh) Hursh, and he was but two years of age at the time when his parents removed to Carroll county, Ohio, locating on a pioneer farm, and there his father died shortly afterward. John was then placed in the home of an uncle, Philip Harsh, while his mother passed her time in the homes of her brothers, Leonard, Philip, Lewis and William Harsh, all of whom came to Carroll county in an early day. The father of the subject was reared on the farm of his uncle and received most kindly treatment, while he secured such educational privileges as were to be had in the pioneer schools of the locality. As a young man he served an apprenticeship at the trade of cabinetmaking, but devoted his attention to the same for a comparatively brief interval, preferring to engage in agricultural pursuits. He accordingly settled on a farm in Carroll county, the property having been an inheritance of his young wife, whom he had married a short time previously. In 1863 they disposed of this farm and came to Stark county, where they effected the purchase of the present Hursh homestead, which comprises two hundred and five acres, and here Mr. Hursh continued to reside until his death, which occurred on the 13th of April, 1889. In politics he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, while his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church. His venerable widow survived him and lived on the old homestead, endeared to her by the memories and associations of the past, and cheered and solaced by the love of her children and the affection of a wide circle of appreciative friends until her death, April 1, 1903. She was born in Carroll county, Ohio, on the 11th of February, 1825, being a daughter of George and Catherine (Stinger) Riegel. Her father was born in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, on the 19th of October, 1774, and he came to Carroll county in the early epoch of its history, becoming one of its honored and influential pioneers. He was twice married, and of his first union were born six sons, while his second wife, mother of Mrs. Hursh, bore him thirteen children, of whom only three are living at the present time. His second wife brought him a handsome dowry and he became a wealthy man, his landed estate at the time of his death comprising about seven hundred and sixty acres. Mrs. Catherine (Riegel) Hursh is likewise a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, while in her home community she is revered as one of the noble pioneer women of the locality.

Elmer A. Hursh was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm and the public schools of his native township afforded him his early educational discipline. One year after his father's death, at which time he was eighteen years of age, he became associated with his brother Curtis in the operation of the home farm on shares, and this partnership thus continued for a period of four years, at the expiration of which the subject assumed the entire charge of the farm, which he conducted successfully for the ensuing three years. In the spring of 1898 he rented his present farm and forthwith took up his residence on the same, where he remained until the following October, when he removed to the village of Paris and there established himself in the general merchandise business, in which he was associated with Allen O. Zininger, under the firm name of Zininger & Hursh. The enterprise did not prove as successful as Mr. Hursh had anticipated and at the expiration of one year he disposed of his interests in the same, and in May, 1899, he purchased his present farm, upon which he had previously resided, the same comprising eighty acres of exceptionally fertile land. In politics he accords a staunch support to the Republican party, and both he and his wife are valued and consistent members of the Reformed church. Fraternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, being affiliated with Ethan Allen Council No. 171, in the village of Paris.

On the 21st of March, 1894, Mr. Hursh was united in marriage to Miss Grace Sponseller, who was born in Paris township, being a daughter of Frederick Sponseller, a prominent and influential stock buyer and a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of Stark county. Mr. and Mrs. Hursh have two children, namely: Vera M., who was born on the 14th of May, 1895, and Carl H., who was born on the 6th of February, 1897.

OLIVER C. BATES was born in Washington township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 8th of February, 1860, being one of the ten children born to John and Eliza (Bush) Bates, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Adaline, who died in 1884; Henry, who is a farmer of Paris township; Mary A., who is the wife of Oliver Haynes, of the same township; Phoebe, who is the wife of Reuben Dourm, also of this township; Oliver C., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; John, who is a resident of Elwood, Indiana; Wesley, who is a farmer of Paris township; Matilda, who is the wife of John Myers, of this township; Jesse, who is likewise engaged in farming in this township; and Harriet E., who is the wife of William Keister, of Osnaburg township.

John Bates, father of the subject, was likewise a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Columbiana county, on the 8th of October, 1827, his parents having been numbered among the prominent pioneer settlers in that locality. He was reared to manhood on the old homestead, assisting materially in reclaiming the same from the forest wilds, and there he remained until his marriage, soon after which he came to Stark county, where for a number of years he was engaged in farming on rented land, in Washington township. In 1863 he purchased the present homestead farm of seventy acres, on section 17, Paris township, and there he made his home for nearly forty years, up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 25th of October, 1902, at which time he had passed the span of three score years and ten allotted by the psalmist. In politics he was a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and during his long life he never failed to exercise his right of franchise after attaining his legal majority save in the case of the last two elections prior to his death, when he was too feeble to go to the polls. He was a consistent and valued member of the Reformed church, with which he identified himself when a young man, and his was the faith that makes faithful, and when he passed on to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns," the community mourned the loss of a distinct man and one in whose nature were many noble attributes. Mr. Bates was a veteran of the war of the Rebellion, in which he served with the patriotic devotion of a true son of the republic, and he was an honored comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic, being affiliated with the post in the village of Minerva. His wife, who survives him, was born in Paris township, within a short distance of her present home, in 1830, being a daughter of Philip and Martha (Konkle) Bush, who were natives of Pennsylvania and who came to Stark county and settled in Paris township in an early day, here passing the residue of this lives and being numbered among the sterling pioneers of this section of the state. Like her husband, Mrs. Bates is a devoted member of the Reformed church, and she still resides at the old home so endeared to her by the memories and associations of the past.

Oliver C. Bates was reared on the home farm and secured his early educational discipline in the public schools. At the age of seventeen years he located in the village of Paris, this county, where he entered upon an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade, at which he served the regular three years' term, becoming a thoroughly competent workman in the line. At the expiration of his apprenticeship he entered the employ of Pennock Brothers, the well known car builders of Minerva, this county, and while thus engaged he was united in marriage, on Christmas day of the year 1881, to Miss Mary E. Brothers, who was born in Paris township, being a daughter of James and Susan (Shepard) Brothers, both of whom are now deceased. In 1884 Mr.

Bates located in the village of Robertsville, where he conducted a blacksmith shop for one year, after which he removed to the farm of his maternal grandfather, Philip Bush, in this township, where he remained one year, while for the ensuing three years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits on the farm of George B. Maser, in the same township. In 1888 he disposed of his stock and farming implements and removed to the village of Minerva, where he purchased a home, and there remained in the employ of John Starkey, in a planing mill, for one year, at the expiration of which time he sold his property and removed to the farm of his father-in-law, to whose cultivation he devoted his attention for the ensuing two years, and then was again in the employ of the Pen-nock Brothers, in Minerva for a year. In 1892 he entered into a partnership with B. M. Stier and they jointly purchased the present fine farm occupied by the subject, who forthwith took up his residence on the same and who has since continued to actively superintend its cultivation. In politics he has never had any ambition for official preferment, but he accords a stanch allegiance to the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose support he has been arrayed from the time of attaining his legal majority, and fraternally he is identified with the Senior Order of United American Mechanics, holding membership in Minerva Council No. 21. He has two children, Nora N. and Chauncey H.

RICHARD CUNNINGHAM was born in East township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 21st of April, 1839, being a son of Sutton and Mary (Harsh) Cunningham, who became the parents of five children, of whom two survive, Alexander, who is a resident of Kensington, Columbiana county, this state, and Richard, who is the subject of this sketch. Sutton Cunningham was born in the state of Pennsylvania, whither his parents emigrated from Ireland, of which fair land they were natives, coming of stanch old Irish and Scotch lineage. The father of the subject was reared in the old Keystone state and as a young man he came thence to Carroll county, Ohio, being at the time without financial reinforcement and dependent entirely upon his own resources, so that with the attainment of the marked success of later years he also gained the right to the title of self-made man, which is one which the loyal American citizen ever holds in the highest regard and honor. For some time after his arrival in Carroll county he was employed as a farm hand, and later he became a clerk in a general store, the while gaining valuable knowledge and business experience and also husbanding his resources and having ever in mind the placing of himself in a position of independence. Finally he engaged in the general merchandise business on his own responsibility, in the village of Augusta, that county, and he successfully conducted the enterprise for a number of years, then disposing of the same and purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land in East township, that county, and forthwith taking up his residence on this farm, which continued to be his home until his death, which occurred in the year 1866. He was a man of alert mentality, progressive ideas and marked business acumen, and thus he attained a high degree of success in his efforts. In addition to his home farm he also became the owner of the one-hundred-acre farm where our subject now resides, together with two other farms in Augusta township, Carroll county, one comprising one hundred and fifty-six acres and the other one hundred and fourteen acres. He devoted special attention to the raising of sheep, and through this branch of his farming enterprise he realized large profits, becoming one of the leading representatives of the industry in this section of the state. In politics he was a stalwart adherent of the Democratic party and was one of the influential men of his county, though he never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. His wife was born in Ohio, being a daughter of Leonard Harsh, who was one of the honored pioneers of the county. Mrs. Cunningham survived her husband by ten years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1876, at the age of about sixty years, and having been a devoted member of the Disciple church.

Richard Cunningham was reared beneath the parental roof and acquired his educational discipline in the public schools of his native county. When he attained the age of eighteen years his father assigned to him a portion of the home farm upon favorable terms, since he was to have all the crops raised on the land and with only specific recompense asked was that he should pay the taxes during the five years through which the agreement was to remain in force. He made the best use of the advantages thus given him by his honored father, and to give further assurance of his independence and self-reliance, he assumed connubial responsibilities and the dignity of a man of family, since, on the 11th of December, 1861, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary C. Huett, who was born in Washington township, Carroll county, being a daughter of the late Samuel Huett, who was one of the honored and influential pioneer farmers of that locality. After his marriage Mr. Cunningham removed to his present homestead farm, and one year later he purchased the property from his father, while the finally improved farmstead has ever since continued to be his home, the same having greatly appreciated in value through the efforts which have been brought to bear in bringing it into the highest possible state of productivity and through the excellent improvements of a permanent nature which he has made on the place during the long years since he here took up his abode. He has carried on general farming but has devoted his attention more particularly to the raising of sheep and cattle, and thus finds use for the greater portion of the products of the farm. He has shown marked discrimination in the breeding up of his live stock to the standard grade and has thus done much to improve and facilitate the live-stock industry in this section of the state, while his judgment in the line is considered authoritative. He has not been denied the full measure of prosperity, and as time has passed he has added to his landed possessions, owning, besides the homestead place of two hundred acres, a farm of eighty acres in East township, Carroll county, two, of one hundred acres and eighty-three acres respectively, in Augusta township; one of one hundred and thirteen acres in Brown township, that county; and ninety-five acres in Columbiana county, so that the aggregate area of his landed estate is now six hundred and sixty-eight acres. While Mr. Cunningham has thus devoted scrupulous attention to his industrial enterprises and has so directed his efforts as to attain the maximum of success in the connection, he has at no period been unmindful of the duties of citizenship nor those involved in his association with his fellow men. He has thus maintained a public-spirited attitude and has ever stood ready to co-operate in every legitimate movement looking to the advancement of the general welfare and material prosperity, while he has given an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, though never an aspirant for the honors of public office. Though not formally identified with any religious organization, he gives his tangible and liberal support to church work, and his wife is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church. They became the parents of two children, of whom one is living, Alameda, who is the wife of Edward S. DeFord, engaged in the banking business in Minerva.

SMITH KEITH.—The Keith family is of English ancestry, but the present generation in Stark county unfortunately have but little definite data relative to the ancestral history. It is known, however, that Thomas Keith, grandfather of the subject, emigrated from England to the United States when a young man, and it is probable that he took up his residence in the Old Dominion state of Virginia, where it is supposed his children were born, and where the closing years of his life were passed.

Smith Keith, whose name introduces this sketch, was born in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 12th of April, 1843, being a son of James and Sarah (Huett) Keith, whose three living children are as follows: Eliza, who is the widow of Nicholas Stonehill and who resides near Robertsville; Smith, who is the subject of this resume; and Sarah, who is the wife of Irvin Cross, of East Rochester, Columbiana county. The father of the subject was reared in Virginia, but the place of his birth is not definitely known by his children. He became a slave-driver in the Old Dominion, and in this way he became aware of the malfaction of his employer in the matter of stealing slaves, and was paid to leave the state so that his testimony might not cause the apprehension of his employer. He thus came to Stark county as a young man and without financial resources to maintain himself save for a short interval. For a number of years he worked on a farm and at such other occupations as he could secure, and finally became identified with the construction of the Ohio and Beaver canal, in which he took a number of shares of stock. The venture proved ultimately a failure, and thus his savings of several years were swept away, but he bravely faced the outlook and set to work to retrieve his losses. He was variously employed until about 1837, when he found himself in a position to justify him in purchasing a small farm of sixty acres, in Paris township, and he forthwith located on the place and turned his attention energetically to the improvement of the place and to putting the land under effective cultivation, his original dwelling being a small log house which had previously been erected on the farm. As prosperity attended his efforts he made purchases of small tracts adjoining his home place until the same had an area of one hundred and twenty-nine acres, while he made excellent improvements of a permanent nature as his circumstances justified. He died on this homestead in 1857, at the age of fifty-two years, and here it was that the subject was ushered into the world. In politics he accorded a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party and his religious faith was that of the Disciples of Christ, of which church his wife likewise was a devoted member. Sarah (Huett) Keith, the mother of the subject, was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1810, being a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Johnson) Huett, both of whom were born in the Emerald Isle, where they were reared and where their marriage was solemnized. They emigrated from Ireland to America and first took up their abode in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, where they maintained their home until 1807, when they came to Ohio and numbered themselves among the early settlers of Stark county, though they did not settle here until 1812. Mr. Huett took up a tract of heavily timbered government land in Paris township, this section being at the time a veritable wilderness. They would pass a few months each year on their pioneer farm, gradually working its reclamation, and would then return to Pennsylvania to earn more money in order to provide themselves with the necessities of life and the means to continue the improvement of the farm. The grandfather died while in Pennsylvania, and his widow then took up her permanent residence on the Stark county homestead, where she passed the remainder of her life, the place being now owned by the Haynam family. The devoted mother of the subject survived her husband many years, entering into eternal rest in 1893, at the venerable age of eighty-three years, and loved and venerated by all who knew her, while her reminiscences of the early pioneer days were interesting in the extreme, for her memory was very exceptional and she loved to recall the scenes and incidents of the "dear dead days beyond recall."

Smith Keith was reared to maturity on the old homestead where he was born and his early educational advantages where such as the public schools of the place and period afforded. He well recalls the primitive log school house in which he secured his first scholastic discipline, but after he had attended the same for two terms it was replaced by a more pretentious structure. After his marriage he became associated with his brother Thomas in the operation of the home farm, and this partnership continued until 1890, when Thomas withdrew to engage independently in the same line of enterprise and our subject thereafter remained in charge of the farm until the death of his mother, in 1893, when he purchased the interests of the other heirs and thereafter continued his farming operations there until the spring of 1902, when he disposed of the homestead and removed to the village of Minerva, where he is now living practically retired, having accumulated a competence and enjoying the rewards of his years of earnest toil and endeavor. In politics he is a stanch adherent of the Democratic party, and the confidence and esteem in which he is held in Paris township had signal manifestation in the circumstance of his being for nine years retained as incumbent of the office of township trustee. From his youth he has been identified with the Disciples of Christ, and of this church his wife also is a devoted member.

On the 3d of March, 1868, Mr. Keith was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Clemens, who was born in Paris township, this county, being a daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Rhodes) Clemens, who came to this county from Pennsylvania in an early day, being of stanch German lineage, and here the father engaged in farming, to which he devoted his attention for many years, finally taking up his residence in the village of Minerva, where both he and his wife died. Mr. and Mrs. Keith have five children, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: Harry is engaged in farming in Paris township; Nora is the wife of Charles Stockman, of Minerva; Maud is the wife of William Archibald, of Paris township; Grace is the wife of Frank Mitchell, of Minerva; and James A. remains at the parental home.

ANDREW REESE was born in Washington township, this county, on the 13th of April, 1843, being a son of Andrew and Mary (Eisenman) Reese, of whose six children four are living at the present time, namely: Andrew, who is the subject of this review; Emanuel, who is a prominent farmer of Plain township, this county; Catherine, who is the wife of Alfred Unkefer, of Washington township; and Mary C., who is the wife of George Schwalen, of Homeworth, Columbiana county. The father of the subject was born in Westminster, Carroll county, Maryland, in the year 1802, being a son of John Reese, who was undoubtedly born and reared in that state, where he became the owner of valuable property. Shortly after the British shelled the city of Baltimore, in the war of 1812, he left Maryland and went into Pennsylvania, where he remained a few months in Franklin county, whence he came with his family to Stark county, Ohio, where he arrived in the latter part of the year 1812, and he settled in Canton township, near the present city of Canton, having here entered claim to a quarter section of government land, while he also took up three tracts of land in the adjoining county of Tuscarawas. He held a large amount of real estate in the state of Maryland, and when he left there he still retained possession of a considerable portion of the same, though he never thereafter received any revenue from the property, which he practically neglected, though still retaining his title to the same. This property, as a matter of course, has greatly appreciated in value with the lapse of years, and is now worth many thousands of dollars, and his heirs are making an effort to either regain possession of a portion of the estate there or else secure equitable returns from its holders. Grandfather Reese continued to reside on his farm in Canton township until his death, and was known as one of the sterling pioneers and influential citizens of the county, being a man of fine mentality and impregnable integrity of character.

Andrew Reese, Sr., father of the subject, was a lad of about ten years at the time when the family came to Stark county, and he was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm in Canton township, while he attended the primitive schools of the locality and period as opportunity afforded. As a young man he was employed for a number of years by Peter Trump, who established one of the first distilleries in this section of the state, and after his marriage he removed to one of the farms owned by his father in Tuscarawas county, where he continued to reside for two years, and there his eldest child, Catherine, was born. At the expiration of the period noted he came to Washington township, Stark county, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, all of which was covered with the heavy growth of native timber, and which is now the property of his second namesake, with whom this sketch has specifically to do. He made his home with his brother, George, who had located in the township about five years previously, until he had made a clearing on his own land, and there erected a log cabin of the usual pioneer type, when he established himself in this primitive dwelling and set himself valiantly to the work of reclaiming his land to the uses of cultivation, in which work his indefatigable and well directed efforts were eventually attended with a high degree of success, and it was his privilege to live to see the wonderful transformation of this section of the state from its status as practically a virgin forest to one of the most prosperous and attractive divisions of the great Buckeye commonwealth. He was eighty-four years of age at the time of his demise, and had survived all of his brothers, being thus the last of the immediate family to pass away. In politics he was a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, but he never sought official preferment of any order. A few years prior to his death, after deep reflection and study, he became a communicant of the Catholic church, in which faith he died. His wife was born in France, being, it is thought, a daughter of Joseph Eiseman, who was one of the sterling pioneers of Stark county, but died in Missouri. She lived to attain the age of seventy-one years, her death occurring in 1886. She was a devoted wife and mother and a consistent member of the Catholic church.

Andrew Reese, Jr., was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm, where he was born and which he now owns, and he early became familiar with the manifold and arduous duties pertaining to its reclamation and cultivation, while he is indebted to the public schools of the period for that basic knowledge upon which he has reared a fine superstructure indicative of broad intellectuality and valuable information. On the 3d of May, 1866, Mr. Reese assumed connubial responsibilities, since he was then united in marriage to Miss Mary Hildenbiddle, who had been for fourteen years a successful and popular teacher in the district schools of Washington township and who was a young lady of distinctive refinement. She was born in Nimishillen township, this county, where her father, John Hildenbiddle, was an early settler, and whence he removed to Washington township when she was seven years of age. He was a native of Pennsylvania and of stanch German ancestry, and he came to Stark county when a young man, from Lancaster county, that state.

After his marriage the subject settled on the old homestead farm, and the following year he removed to the village of Freeburg, where he has since maintained his home, though he still retains possession of the old farm, as has previously been intimated in this context. For a period of six years after his removal to the village Mr. Reese was incumbent of the office of postmaster, and in connection with his official duties he also conducted a grocery for two years, while his wife assumed the practical charge of the postoffice after he had disposed of his grocery business. He then purchased an interest in a sawmill, and has since continued to be associated in the operation of the same, also conducting a prosperous lumber business and being known as one of the progressive and representative business men of the town. In 1888 he purchased the old homestead, which he has since rented, and from which he receives a good income. For nearly a quarter of a century Mr. Reese also carried on a successful threshing business, keeping the best sort of outfit for the purpose at all times and having the patronage of the farmers throughout a wide radius of country. He disposed of his interests in this line in 1901.

Although he was reared in the Democratic faith, Mr. Reese early became convinced that the principles of the Republican party were best intended to conserve the prosperity and well-being of the nation, and he showed the courage of his convictions by casting his first vote in support of the "grand old party," of which he has ever since been a stanch adherent, while he has been a leader in its local ranks. He served for three years as assessor of Washington township, and in 1877 he was elected to the office of justice of the peace, in which he has served consecutively to the present time, with the exception of an interim of six months, having thus been incumbent for a full quarter of a century, while his administration has been such as to conserve peace and good will instead of promoting litigation and personal animosities. In the autumn of 1899 he was nominated and elected to the office of director of the county infirmary, and his interposition has proved of marked benefit in the handling of this worthy eleemosynary institution, where the unfortunate wards of the county are cared for in an effective manner, and he has been clerk of the board of directors from the time of being inducted into office, having been re-elected to the office of director in the autumn of 1902. Mr. Reese is not formally identified with any religious organization, but he has ever given a ready support to church work. Of their nine children we enter the following brief record: John A. is engaged in the mason business in Louisville, this county; Amanda M. is the wife of Byron O. Meese, of Washington township; Harry is engaged in the Lake Erie, Alliance & Southern shops in the city of Alliance, this county; Joseph H. resides in the village of Minerva, where he is devoting his attention to carpenter work; Jeanet E. died at the age of eleven days; Arden O. remains at the parental home, as do also Robert F., Maud and Alfred B.

CHRISTOPHER T. SWALLEN is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born on a farm in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 7th of June, 1847, and being a son of Christian and Elizabeth (Schory) Swallen, to whom were born nine children, of whom five are yet living, namely: Sophia, who resides in the city of Alliance; Henry R., of Paris township, of whom individual mention is made elsewhere in this volume; Christopher T., who is the subject of this review; Albert, who is a resident of the city of Alliance; and William L., who resides in Corea, where he has been for the past nine years engaged in missionary work as an emissary of the Presbyterian church. Christian Swallen was born in Switzerland, where he was reared to the age of twelve years, when he accompanied his parents on their emigration to America. They came to Canton, this county, which was then a mere village, and shortly afterward they removed over into Carroll county, where Grandfather Swallen took up a tract of wild land, in Brown township, where he reclaimed a good farm and where he passed the remainder of his life. On this old homestead Christian Swallen was reared to manhood, and for a number of years after attaining maturity he had charge of the farm. In 1859 he removed with his family to Stark county and purchased a farm in Paris township, the same having been partially improved, and here, as the years fell into the abyss of time, he made the best of improvements and developed one of the valuable farms of the county, the property being now owned by his daughter Sophia. Here he remained until his death, at the age of sixty-seven years. He was a man of energy and sterling character, and while he was industrious and progressive he was unassuming and kindly in all the relations of life and held as his own the unmitigated confidence and regard of the community in which he lived and labored to so goodly ends, while he is to be remembered as one of the honored pioneers of this portion of the county. He was a staunch Democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife were consistent and valued members of the Reformed church. His wife was born in Berlin, Switzerland.

Christopher T. Swallen was about twelve years of age at the time when his parents removed to Stark county, and he was reared under the sturdy discipline of the farm and gained that practical knowledge of means and methods which has proved of so inestimable value to him in his independent operations along this important and beneficent line of industry. As a boy the major portion of his time was demanded in connection with the work of the farm, and thus, like the average youth of the locality and period, he received but limited educational advantages, attending the district school at irregular intervals and in a desultory and perfunctory manner. However, he thus laid an adequate basis for that excellent practical education which he has since gained in the broad school of experience. On the 24th of September, 1870, Mr. Swallen was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Stuckey, of Washington township, she having been born on the farmstead now owned by our subject and being a daughter of Samuel Stuckey, who came to Stark county from Pennsylvania and took up his residence in Washington township, where he cast in his lot with its early settlers and here passed the residue of his life. After his marriage Mr. Swallen located on the farm of his father-in-law, and conducted the same "on shares" for a number of years. After the death of his wife's parents he purchased the interests of the other heirs and has since retained the ownership of the place, which comprises ninety-nine acres and which is one of the most valuable places in this section. He devotes his attention to diversified agriculture and has used such discrimination as to gain the maximum returns from his efforts, while he has erected the present substantial and attractive buildings which add to the appearance of unmistakable thrift and prosperity and indicate the progressive spirit and excellent business methods of the owner. Mr. Swallen is recognized as one of the influential men of the township and is held in the highest regard in the community where so many years of his earnest and useful life have been passed. In politics he is an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Prohibition party, believing that the liquor traffic is one of the most menacing agencies with which our republic has to contend, and his religious faith is that of the German Baptist church, in which he holds the office of deacon, while his wife likewise is a devoted member of the church, both taking an earnest interest in the forwarding of its spiritual and temporal welfare. They have no children, but in their home they have reared with true parental kindness and affection two orphaned brothers, David and Frederick Eshler, the former of whom is associated with our subject in the work of the farm, while the latter is married and retains his residence in the city of Canton, where he is engaged in the Canton Rubber Works.

The Stuckey family, of Swiss ancestry, came to Virginia prior to the Revolutionary war and later went to Pennsylvania, and in 1811 settled in Washington township, Stark county, where he and his wife (Samuel and Catherine (Studebaker) Stuckey) passed the remainder of their lives. They had ten children: Jacob, Samuel, Simon, Abram, Daniel, Elizabeth, Barbara, Catherine, Susan and Hannah. Samuel, Jr., was born in Pennsylvania in 1804 and was eight years old when he came to Stark county. He married Catharine Burgert, daughter of David and Catharine (Heffner) Burgert, she a native of Pennsylvania, and they became the parents of eleven children, Simon, Herbert, Eliza (deceased), Mary, Adaline, Sarah, Lydia Ann, Harriet (deceased), Amanda, Lucinda, and Catharine, Mrs. Swallen being the tenth in order of birth.

WALTER S. TAYLOR, M. D., is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born in North Benton, Mahoning county, Ohio, on the 16th of August, 1875, and being a son of Hugh S. and Catherine (Shaffer) Taylor, of whose nine children eight are still living, namely: Robert, Enlow, Martin and Emlon, all of whom are engaged in agricultural pursuits in Mahoning county; Marion, who has charge of the old homestead farm in that county; Margaret, at home; Walter S., who is the immediate subject of this sketch, and Frank, who is a representative young member of the bar of Portage county, maintaining his residence in Fremont, Ohio. The Taylor family has been identified with the annals of Mahoning county from the early pioneer epoch, as is evident from the fact that the father of the Doctor is likewise a native of that county, having been born on the farm where he now resides, in the year 1826, his parents having been numbered among the first settlers in that county. He was reared under the conditions and influences of pioneer life, and after his marriage he assumed charge of the home farm, which he purchased after the death of his father, and there he has made his home from the time of his birth to the present, a period of more than three-quarters of a century. The homestead comprises one hundred acres, but Mr. Taylor was signally prospered in his efforts and acquired a landed estate of about five hundred acres, which in recent years he has divided among his children. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, exercising his franchise in support of men and measures rather than being guided by strict partisan dictates. He and his wife are consistent and valued members of the Presbyterian church.

Dr. Taylor grew up under the invigorating influences of the home farm, waxing strong in mental and physical vigor and securing his preliminary educational discipline in the district schools, after which he entered the high school at Alliance, Stark county, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1895. In the autumn of the succeeding year he was matriculated in the medical department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he continued his technical studies for one year, at the expiration of which, in the autumn of 1897, he entered the Ohio Medical University, in the city of Columbus, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated in the spring of 1900, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine and being amply fortified for the practical work of his profession. Shortly after his graduation Dr. Taylor located in the city of Canton, this county, where he served his practical novitiate, being there established in practice about seven months, within which period, on the 10th of October, 1900, he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret M. Fortney, of Sterling, Wayne county, Ohio, a daughter of Thomas Fortney, who is now a resident of New Pittsburg, that county. In February, 1901, Dr. Taylor came to the village of Maximo, and here, within the comparatively short period of his residence in the village, he has built up a gratifying practice and one that shows an unmistakable accumulative tendency, for his professional ability and pleasing personality have brought him into marked favor and given him precedence in his chosen field of endeavor. The Doctor also holds a diploma granted him by the Protestant Hospital, in Columbus, where he served as interne from April, 1899, until the time of his graduation in the university, his clinical experience in this connection being of varied character and of inestimable value to him in a practical way. In politics the Doctor gives an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he takes a deep interest. In the spring of 1902 he was the nominee of the party for the office of justice of the peace, and was elected by a gratifying majority. He and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian church, in whose work they take an active part, while they enjoy distinctive popularity in the social circles of the community in which they have their home.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.—Not to a work of this nature is the privilege of entering more than incidental record concerning the great and all pervading influence which the holy Catholic church has exerted in connection with the history of Stark county, and yet from no compilation which touches the generic history of this section of the Union can there be eliminated frequent and appreciative references to those noble emissaries of the gracious mother church who have here lived and labored for the salvation of souls and the furtherance of the Master's cause. From the earliest period until the present time, when the majestic twentieth century swings into the cycle of the ages, there have been found within the borders of the state of Ohio priests of the church who have lived lives of high consecration and utmost usefulness, "rejoicing in hope, patience in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer, distributing to the necessity of saints, given to hospitality," and with the utmost self-abnegation giving themselves and their lives to the work which stands for the only ultimate good in human life and human accomplishment. The work of the early missionaries was such as to merit a volume in record, for theirs it was to condescend to men of low estate," "in weariness and painfulness, in watching often, in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness," ever holding to the mark of their high calling as servants in the vineyard of the Divine Master. Thus in this work will be found many incidental references to the holy Catholic church and its zealous workers in Stark county, and among the members of the priesthood in the diocese at the present times is Father Charles H. Gardner, who is installed in charge of St. Joseph's church in the village of Maximo, and who has kindly supplied us with data concerning the history of his parish.

The parish of St. Joseph in the village of Maximo was organized, under missionary auspices, in the year 1874, and the present church edifice was erected in 1874. The first priest to minister to the people of the parish, which was then attached as a mission of the church in the city of Alliance, was Father James O'Leary, who continued to look to the spiritual welfare of the parish until April, 1882, when the church was transferred to the missionary supervision of the parish of Harrisburg, while it was then placed in pastoral charge of Rev. Father F. Senner, whose ministrations continued until 1884, when Father A. Sauvedet was appointed to the station, where he remained until succeeded by Father J. P. Kunnert, in 1886, and the latter was pastor until 1888, when Father J. J. Hetet was installed and continued incumbent until the recall of his predecessor, in 1890. Father Kunnert then continued to serve the parish until September 26, 1899, and after his regime, which was blessed with excellent results, Father Thomas Kolb filled in the interregnum until the appointment of the present pastor, on June 15, 1900, as the first resident priest of the parish. Father Gardner has thrown the full force of his enthusiasm and energy into the work of the parish, and its spiritual and temporal affairs have been materially prospered under his able and devoted administration. Extensive repairs have been made on the church buildings and a term of parochial school is now had each year, while, as before intimated, the church has, for the first time in its long history, a resident priest. The parish has about forty families, of French and German descent, and Father Gardner is favored in having the earnest co-operation, sympathy and affection of his people, so that he finds that his lines are cast in pleasant places and that he has abundant field for his consecrated and earnest labors.

JOSEPH L. VESSERIAT is a native of Washington township, where he was born on the 21st of November, 1866, and here he has passed essentially his entire life. He is a son of John C. and Margaret (Moinet) Vesseriati, of whose nine children seven are yet living, namely: Mary, who is the widow of August Jordon and resides in Chillicothe, Missouri; Louis, who is a resident of Kent, this state; Louisa, who resides in the city of Canton, this county, being the widow of the late Joseph Maudru, who was formerly treasurer of Stark county; Charles, who is a resident of Maximo; Celesta, who remains at the parental home; Frank L., who is a resident of the city of Indianapolis, Indiana; and Joseph L., the immediate subject of this sketch. The father was born in Barraux, France, in the year 1816, where he was reared to the age of seventeen years, when he came with his parents to the United States, his father, Benoit Vesseriati, coming to Stark county and purchasing two hundred and forty acres of land in Washington township. This estate eventually came into the possession of his sons, John C. and Celestine. As a young man the former of these two brothers went to Randolph, Portage county, where he served an apprenticeship at the trade of shoemaking, and he then went to the city of Louisville, Kentucky, where he was employed as a journeyman at his trade about three years. In 1845 he returned to the old homestead in Washington township, and shortly afterwards was married, and thereafter he continued to work at his trade in the village of Maximo until 1851, when he returned to the farm, which he and his brother Celestine purchased at this time, and here he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, in 1891, his demise occurring six days subsequently to his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary. He had developed and admirably improved the one hundred and sixty acres of the old homestead, which represented his portion of the purchase and the same is still held intact by his estate. Since his death his widow has resided with her son Joseph, subject of this review. She was born near Bedford, France, being a daughter of Frank and Magdelene (Juif) Moinet, both of whom were born in France, whence they came to Stark county in the pioneer days. She is a devoted communicant of the Catholic church, as was also her honored husband, and he was a stanch Democrat in his political proclivities, and though never a seeker for public office he was called upon to serve as township supervisor and also as school director, while his integrity was beyond cavil and he held the esteem and confidence of all who knew him.

Joseph L. Vessieriat, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared to maturity under the gracious influences of a good home, in all the name implies, and as he was born after his father's removal to the farm he early began to lend his aid in this work, while he received such educational advantages as were afforded in the public schools of the locality, later supplementing this by a course of study in Duff's Commercial College, in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he well fortified himself for the active responsibilities of an active business career. In 1892 he located in the city of Alliance, where he worked at the plumber's trade about two years, and his college business course was taken subsequently to this time. After his return from Pittsburg he accepted a clerical position in the mercantile establishment of J. A. Shaffer, in Maximo, and incidentally served as assistant postmaster, thus continuing from 1895 until 1898. In February, 1900, he received from Governor Nash his appointment as notary public, in which office he has since continued to serve, while in the spring of 1902 he was elected to the office of township clerk, of which he is still incumbent and in which he has handled the records and duties committed to his charge with admirable ability, gaining unqualified commendation from the public, irrespective of political allegiance. He is himself an unwavering supporter of the principles and policies of the Democratic party and maintains a lively and intelligent interest in the questions and issues of the day. In 1894 he was elected township assessor and continued in tenure of this office three years, while he has been called upon to serve as administrator of various estates, whose affairs he has handled with consummate judgment and ability, thus adding materially to his just hold on popular confidence and esteem. He is a communicant of the Catholic church, in whose faith he was reared, and for a number of years he served as treasurer of St. Joseph's parish, in Maximo. Mr. Vessieriat has not yet been cajoled into entering the ranks of benedicts, and his mother presides over the domestic economies of his bachelor home, which is a favorite rendezvous for his many friends. In 1895 he served as deputy treasurer of Stark county, holding this office about eighteen months.

JOSEPH SHAFFER.—Although of German lineage, the Shaffers originally lived in Alsace, France (now a province of the German empire), and in an early day representatives of the family came to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania. William Shaffer, the subject's grandfather, was born and reared in that state and there married Sophia ———, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany. As early as 1816 this couple left their Pennsylvania home and moved to the newly settled country of eastern Ohio, locating in what is now Washington township, Stark county. About one year later Mr. Shaffer acquired a tract of land in section 10, one mile northeast of the subject's present place of residence, and in due time developed a fine farm, on which he and his good wife spent the remainder of their days. He appears to have been a man of great energy and from time to time added to his original purchase until he became the possessor of about six hundred and forty acres of land, much of which he cleared and reduced to cultivation. He was not only a highly successful farmer and enterprising business man, but also took the lead in his community in all matters making for the public welfare and his influence was always exercised for the good of his fellow men. William and Sophia Shaffer reared a large family of six sons and seven daughters, all of whom grew to mature years and became the heads of families, and it is a remarkable fact that but one of these children died under the age of forty-eight. The father and mother of the family lived to be four score, one of the sons dying in his ninety-fifth year.

Among the children of this excellent old couple was a son by the name of John, who was born in Washington township, Stark county, in 1819. He was reared on the home farm, experienced the vicissitudes incident to life in a new country and grew up a strong, well developed man with a definite purpose to make the most of his opportunities. He remained with his parents until his marriage with Miss Margaret Cairns, when he settled on a small farm in section 10, where he lived for a short time, subsequently, in partnership with his brother, purchasing the quarter section on which his son, the subject of this sketch, now resides. In the division of the estate, one hundred acres fell to John Shaffer and on this farm he spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1866 at the age of forty-seven years, being the youngest member of the family to pass away. In politics he was a staunch Democrat and at one time filled the office of township trustee, besides being an active and influential worker for the success of his party under all circumstances. Religiously he was a Presbyterian and his life was in harmony with the rather strict training for which that church was formerly noted. Margaret Cairns, wife of John Shaffer, was born in 1814 in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, and at the age of twenty-four came to the United States with her parents. Andrew and Margaret Cairns, who settled in Washington township, Stark county, on a part of the farm now in possession of the subject of this review. Mrs. Shaffer bore her husband five children and survived him a number of years, dying in 1890. She was a woman of excellent judgment and strong powers of mind, a faithful wife and devoted mother, and her death was deeply lamented not only by her family but by a large circle of friends and acquaintances who learned to love her beautiful character and exemplary Christian life. Of the five children constituting the family of John and Margaret Shaffer all but one are living, their names being as follows: Andrew J., a farmer of Washington township; James A., of Maximo, Ohio; Jennie, wife of Charles F. Reickert, of Lexington township, and Joseph, whose name introduces this interview.

Joseph Shaffer was born November 27, 1846, in Washington township, Stark county, Ohio, and spent his childhood and youthful years in close touch with nature on the home farm. He was taught the true nobility of labor and while still a lad assumed his share of the work and responsibility of running the place, the meanwhile looking carefully after his mother's interests, to whose welfare he continued to devote his attention until her death, four years later.

Mr. Shaffer carries on general farming quite extensively and in addition thereto has achieved wide reputation as a successful raiser of fine live stock, his income from these sources resulting in a fortune of no small magnitude. Since his twenty-first year, he has voted the Democratic ticket and at the present time is regarded as one of the influential members of his party in the township of Washington. While not connected with any church or religious organization, he believes in and has profound reverence for Christianity and in many ways has aided the good work in his neighborhood and elsewhere. He is a liberal contributor to different churches and all moral enterprises have his sanction and hearty support. Standing for social reform and public order, he advocates a strict enforcement of the law and few have been more active and energetic in upholding the dignity of manly conduct and good government. Mr. Shaffer is a single man, with no family ties of his own, notwithstanding which he has strong domestic tastes and is as great lover of home as those whose households resound to the laughter and music of childhood.

HENRY ALDINGER is a native son of the Keystone state, having been born on the 13th of May, 1846, and being the eldest of the three surviving of the four children born to Andrew and Catherine (Knoll) Aldinger, his brothers, Joseph and John, being residents of the village of Maximo, Stark county. The father of the subject was born in the province of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and when he was a child of three years his parents bade adieu to the Fatherland and set sail for America, for the purpose of establishing a new home in a country where they felt that superior opportunities were afforded for attaining a position of independence. They settled in the state of Pennsylvania, which had become the home of so many of their worthy countrymen, and there Andrew Aldinger was reared to maturity and secured his educational training in the common schools. He grew up on a farm and toil was his daily portion from his youth up. As a young man he was for some time engaged in rafting on the Ohio river, transporting produce and other commodities by the primitive means then in vogue, and through the exposure thus entailed his health became impaired, the effects being particularly appreciative during the later years of his life, when he was much enfeebled. In 1853 he removed with his family to Stark county and took up his residence on the farm now owned and occupied by the subject of this sketch, in sections 9 and 16, Washington township, and here he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1860, at which time he was about forty-five years of age. He was a man of inflexible integrity, industrious and progressive and very active until the time came when his health rendered it impossible for him to assume the more arduous work of his farm. He was, it is thought, a Democrat in his political proclivities and both he and his wife were devoted members of the United Brethren church. The mother of the subject was born in Pennsylvania, of stanch German ancestry, and she survived her husband by several years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1900, at the age of eighty years.

Henry Aldinger was about seven years of age at the time when his parents came to Stark county, and he was reared to manhood on the farm which is now his home, his educational privileges being such as were afforded in the district schools of about a half-century ago, while his attendance in the same was desultory, since much of his time was demanded in connection with the work on the farm. He was but fourteen years of age at the time of his father's death, and as he was the eldest of the boys the major portion of the responsibility of the farm fell upon his youthful shoulders.

He continued in charge of the homestead, comprising sixty-seven acres, up to the time when he purchased the property, in 1878, since which time he has devoted his attention to its improvement and cultivation, having erected excellent buildings and brought the land to the highest state of productivity. He is staunchly arrayed in support of the Democratic party, but is not insistently partisan in local affairs, preferring to cast his vote in support of men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment. He has been called upon to serve in offices of trust and responsibility, this fact not only indicating his eligibility but also the confidence and esteem reposed in him by the people of the community in which he has lived from his childhood to the present time. He served two terms as trustee of Washington township, and, with interregnums of varying length, has been incumbent of the office of township treasurer for a total of about twelve years. He is in tenure of this position at the present time, and the fiscal affairs of the township are administered with economy and marked business judgment as placed in his keeping, and that popular appreciation of this fact is not lacking is evident from his having been again and again called to the office. He has served as a member of the Democratic county central committee on several different occasions and has been a valued factor in the promotion of the party cause in this section.

In October, 1873, Mr. Aldinger was united in marriage to Miss Mary Fox, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of John Fox, an honored pioneer farmer of Washington township, and she has proved to him a true helpmeet and devoted companion. Of their four children two are deceased, Ida, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, and an infant. The two surviving are Orpha and Charles, both of whom remain at the parental home.

JOHNSON GRANT is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and was born in Mount Union, December 13, 1839, a son of Josiah and Tabitha (Johnson) Grant, who were the parents of three children, of whom two are still living, viz: Johnson of this record, and Jennie, wife of William Reck, of Bradford, Pennsylvania. The deceased brother, whose name was likewise William, died at home from disease contracted in the army while in the pursuit of the rebel general, John Morgan.

Josiah Grant, father of Johnson Grant, was a native of New Jersey and was born about 1816. Stacey Grant, father of Josiah, and his brother John were among the earliest settlers of this section of Stark county, but from a fear of the Indians left their families in New Jersey. Stacey Grant entered a farm in Alliance and his brother John entered just back of him, on what is now known as West Main street, in Alliance, where the Indians were still troublesome, so that the brothers were frequently compelled to flee to Salem for safety. These brothers, it is said, were first cousins of Jesse Grant, father of General U. S. Grant. Shortly after settling here the brothers sent for their families, and here they passed the remainder of life, the grandfather of Johnson being eighty-two years old at the time of his death. Josiah Grant was reared a farmer, but later learned the wagonmaker's trade and after marriage lived a short time in Mount Union, where he worked at his trade until his removal to his farm of forty acres, a mile and a quarter south of Mount Union, upon which farm he died eventually, his wife dying about eleven years later.

Josiah, when twenty-one years of age, located in Alliance, where he worked at his trade until his death, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife was a daughter of Simon Johnson, who came from Washington county, Pennsylvania, to Stark county, Ohio, in a very early day and entered a section of land in Washington township, one-quarter of which is that now occupied by the Children's Home. He gave each of his children a farm, but not one of them is at present practicing his profession.

Grandfather Johnson, on settling in Stark county, occupied a log hut in the wilderness, a blanket serving for a door, through which the bears and wolves chased the house-dog with impunity, and here the grandfather lived to be seventy-seven years of age. Johnson Grant, after the death of his mother, went to live with this grandfather, remained until eighteen years old, then went to Wood county, Ohio, and there passed a year at work for his uncle, Col. B. W. Johnson, and then returned to Stark county and took charge of the home farm, which had by that time come into his possession. In 1861 Mr. Grant rented out his farm, and in October enlisted in Gen. John C. Fremont's body guards at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Missouri, and served about three months, when they were disbanded for the reason that Fremont was superseded by Gen. Halleck. Mr. Grant then returned home and at once enlisted in Company K, Seventy-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he took part in the siege of Fort Donelson and the battle of Shiloh; next he fought at Corinth; then went with General Grant to Vicksburg and Jackson, Mississippi, and later, retaking the latter city, went to Chattanooga to relieve General Rosecrans; then went to Lookout Mountain, and thence to Missionary Ridge, Ringgold and Resaca, and later joined General Sherman in his famous march to the sea, and with him forward on to Washington, D. C., where he participated in the grand review.

From this city Mr. Grant was sent to Louisville, Kentucky, where he was soon afterward honorably discharged from the service. The only mishap that befel Mr. Grant while in the army was a wound sustained at Dallas, Georgia, from the effects of which he so suffered that it was necessary to confine him in the corps hospital for two months. On recuperating Mr. Grant returned to his home and resided on his farm for ten years, and during that period added fourteen acres to his estate. In 1876 he traded off his old homestead for his present home of eighty-seven acres.

Mr. Grant, who is acknowledged by all his neighbors to be one of the leading and most experienced farmers of the county, has made a specialty of Jersey cattle, and is one of the most successful dairymen in the county, his output being that which is known as the "Fairmount Jersey Farm" milk, cream and butter, being largely sought after at the best market prices.

In 1866 Johnson Grant was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Hilles, of this township, and a daughter of Enos Hilles, a prominent early settler from Pennsylvania. The union here alluded to has been graced with two children, namely: Willis, a graduate of Mount Union College and of Harvard College, and at present a professor in a high school in Pittsburg, and Lawrence, at home.

In politics Mr. Grant is a sturdy Republican, and has been satisfied with serving his party and fellow citizens as township trustee.

Fraternally Mr. Grant is a member of John C. Fremont Post No. 729, Grand Army of the Republic, of Alliance, and is Master of Fairmount Grange No. 1458, Patrons of Husbandry, his eminent abilities as an agriculturist readily pointing him out as the proper person to fill the important position. Socially he and family mingle with the best people of Washington township, by whom they are greatly honored.

JOSIAH A. LUTZ comes of stanch German ancestry in the agnatic line, and the family was early founded in the old Keystone state of Pennsylvania, from which its representatives have been disseminated throughout the most diverse sections of the Union. He was born on his present farm, in section 31, Washington township, on the 2d of November, 1849, being the only child of Abraham and Elizabeth (Folk) Lutz. His father was reared to maturity in the state of Pennsylvania, whence he came to Stark county, Ohio, in the 'twenties and became one of the pioneers of Washington township, where he continued to reside for several years. Early in the 'thirties he purchased and removed to the farm now owned by his son, and here he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, while he also devoted much attention to the work of his trade, being a skilled carpenter and having erected a number of the first frame barns built in this section of the county. He was twice married, and of the six children of his first union five are yet living, namely: Sarah, Catherine, Elizabeth, Margaretta and Daniel. The mother of our subject was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and she likewise was twice married, her first husband having been Frederick Herbster, to whom she bore eight children, of whom the six surviving are as follows: John, Jacob, Peter, Mary, Elizabeth and Catherine. The honored father of the subject died in the year 1854, and his widow survived him by nearly a score of years, entering into eternal rest in 1871.

Josiah A. Lutz, the immediate subject of this review, was reared under the invigorating influence of the homestead farm, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of the locality and period. After his father's death the farm was sold with the exception of his mother's dower rights, which she retained in her possession until her death. In 1870 our subject and his half-brother, Peter Herbster, repurchased the old homestead in its entirety, and continued to be associated in its operation until 1883, when Mr. Lutz purchased his brother's interest, and thus became the sole owner of the farm upon which he was born, while he has added to its original area by the purchase of a contiguous tract and now has one hundred and one and a half acres. The farm is maintained under a high state of cultivation, giving evidence of thrift and prosperity and also of the scrupulous care bestowed by a progressive and energetic owner, while the improvements on the place are of substantial and attractive order. He commands the uniform esteem of the people of the community in which he has passed his entire life, and takes a public-spirited interest in all that touches the general welfare. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, but he has never sought the honor or emoluments of public office. He and his wife are valued members of the Lutheran church.

On the 27th of April, 1873, Mr. Lutz was united in marriage to Miss Mary Horn, who was born in Nimishillen township, this county, on the 22d of January, 1849, being a daughter of Christian and Magdalena Horn, honored pioneers of that section, where Mr. Horn died a number of years ago. His widow is still living and has attained the extremely venerable age of ninety-one years, while she retains remarkable vigor for one of her many years. To Mr. and Mrs. Lutz were born nine children, and the six surviving remain on the old homestead where they were born, their names being as follows: Harvey, Edward, Ida M., Emma F., Norman and Charles. The devoted wife and mother was called upon to answer the inexorable summons of death in January, 1889, having held the affectionate regard of all who knew her. On the 25th of December, 1892, Mr. Lutz consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Mary J. Sells, who was born in Washington township, being a daughter of John Sells, who is now a resident of the state of Michigan. No children have been born of this marriage.

BERNOUILI J. G. WILLIARD is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in New Lisbon, Columbiana county, Ohio, on Christmas day of the year 1831, and being a son of Jacob G. and Christina A. (Getzen-daner) Williard, of whose eight children only three are now living, our subject being the eldest of these, while the other two are Catherine, who is a maiden lady and resides in Homeworth, Columbiana county, and Andrew Jackson, who is a representative attorney of that place. The father of the subject was born near Middletown, Frederick county, Maryland, on the 17th of April, 1801, coming of fine old French Huguenot stock. His parents were likewise natives of Maryland, but his great-grandparents in the agnatic line were natives of France, whence, as did many other of the unfortunate Huguenots, they fled to Holland to escape the atrocious persecutions incidental to the revocation of the edict of Nantes. From Holland they emigrated to America in the year 1641 and located in Maryland, where they acquired about two thousand acres of land, while a brother of this emigrant ancestor went from Holland to England and thence came, in 1635, to America and settled in Massachusetts. One of his descendants, Francis Williard, became governor of the state of Indiana, and many members of both the Maryland and Massachusetts branches became eminent at the bar and in the ministry, Rev. George W. Williard, D. D., LL. D., having been for many years president of Heidelberg College, at Tiffin, Seneca county, Ohio, one of the leading educational institutions conducted under the auspices of the Reformed church, while he became widely known as a minister of the gospel and as an educator and editor, his son George P. being at the present time one of the leading physicians and surgeons in Tiffin. The paternal grandmother of our subject was a native of Holland, her maiden name having been Grove, and was a member of an old and distinguished family of that country, and in recent years her descent in the United States have been making efforts to secure their just share of her heritage from an estate of twenty million dollars in Holland.

Jacob G. Williard, father of the subject, was reared in his native state and there received a thorough collegiate education, while as a young man he adopted civil engineering as a profession, having been thoroughly trained in the same. In 1822 he came to Ohio and located in Dayton, where one of his uncles had previously taken up his abode, and there he was tendered and accepted a professorship in a local college, but he retained the incumbency but a short time and then went to Sandusky, where he was engaged in teaching for a brief interval. He was then induced to take up his residence in Columbiana county and to assume pedagogic work there. After teaching for a time in the district schools of the pioneer epoch he located in the village of New Lisbon, that county, where both he and his wife taught school for several years. He then gave up this line of endeavor and turned his attention to surveying, being later elected county surveyor and retaining the office a number of years, within which he did much important work. He surveyed the Sandy & Beaver canal, and incidentally it may be stated that his son, the subject of this review, stood by the side of Benjamin Hanna, father of Senator Marcus Hanna, when he turned the first shovelful of earth at the initiating of the construction of the canal, he having been at the time president of the canal company. Jacob G. Williard was later elected to the office of treasurer of Columbiana county and was recognized as a man of distinctive influence and ability. In 1848 he came to Washington township, Stark county, where he had purchased a half section of land about a decade previously, and here he built what was at the time considered the best farm house in the county. He continued to devote his attention to the improvement and cultivation of his farm until 1858, when he was elected county surveyor and removed to the city of Canton, and he later was incumbent of the office at different times, his entire period of service in this capacity covering twelve years, while there remain on the county records many evidences of his efficient work in this line. He also served for a number of years as city engineer of Canton and was in tenure of his position at the time of his death, which occurred on the 17th of April, 1878. His political allegiance was given to the Democratic party and his religious faith was that of the Reformed church, while he was numbered among the early members of the Masonic fraternity in the state. He was one of the best known and most influential citizens of this section, a man of fine intellectuality and high character, and he held the uniform esteem of all with whom he came in contact. His wife, Christina A. (Getzendaner) Williard, was born near Frederick City, Maryland, on the 16th of April, 1804, being a daughter of Jacob Getzendaner, who was a wealthy and influential manufacturer, owning and operating extensive woolen mills at Georgetown, Maryland, while he resided on his fine estate, of about three hundred acres, lying contiguous to the corporate limits of Frederick City. Mrs. Williard was afforded the best of educational advantages, having completed a collegiate course and having been an accomplished musician. The first piano ever brought to New Lisbon, Ohio, was hers, and while she was engaged in teaching in Stark county one of her pupils was the mother of the late lamented President McKinley. Mrs. Williard, a woman of noble and gracious character, preceded her husband into eternal rest by two years, her death having occurred in the city of Canton, on the 18th of April, 1876, while she, like her husband, had been a devoted member of the Reformed church. The father of the subject acquired extensive landed interests in Ohio, owning two entire sections in Williams county, one section in what is now Beaver township, Mahoning county, two hundred and twenty acres near New Lisbon, Columbiana county, and eighty acres on which the village of Guildford, that county, was platted, while he also owned town property in Canton and New Lisbon.

Bernouili J. G. Williard, the immediate subject of this sketch, passed his early youth in his native town of New Lisbon, Columbiana county, where he attended the public schools and also received most excellent instruction under the guidance of his honored father, who had been an advanced and able educator, as has been previously noted, while he also had the superior advantages implied in a cultured and refined home. During his school vacations he assisted in his father's office, and at the age of fifteen years he was appointed his father's deputy in the office of county treasurer. At the age of seventeen years he assumed the management of his father's farm in Stark county, whither the family had removed within the year he attained the age noted, and he continued to superintend the management of the farming and stock interests of this homestead until the time of his marriage. At the age of eighteen he began teaching in the district schools of Washington township during the winter terms and thus continued for a number of years, proving one of the popular and successful teachers of the county, while during the intervening summer seasons he gave his attention to the farm. In 1858 he was married and shortly afterward he settled on his present homestead farm of sixty acres, in section 25, Washington township, having purchased the property two years previously. Later he acquired ninety acres adjoining this on the east, and he utilized the entire farm until 1898, when he sold the ninety acres. He has for many years devoted his attention largely to the raising of high-grade live stock, feeding a large number of cattle during the winter months and then placing the stock on the market. His farm is one of the model places of the county, and its permanent improvements are of most substantial and attractive order, including a commodious and pleasant residence, which is a center of cordial and refined hospitality. In politics Mr. Williard is a staunch advocate of the basic principles of the Democratic party, but in local affairs, where no issue is involved, he is liberal, giving his support to the men and measures approved by his judgment. He served one term as township clerk and has been for many years a valued member of the school board of his district. He early devoted his attention to the reading of the law, and has gained a concise and discriminating knowledge of the science of jurisprudence and its practical application, while he has practiced in the minor courts for the past forty years, though never formally admitted to the bar. He is a zealous and devoted member of the Presbyterian church, as are also his wife and children, and when about five more years shall have elapsed he will have served a full half century as an elder in the church. Fraternally he is identified with the time-honored order of Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 15th of September, 1858, Mr. Williard was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Beer, who was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, being a daughter of James and Elizabeth (McClellan) Beer, honored pioneers of that county, and of this union have been born seven children, namely: Lillie A., who is the wife of Martin Bechtel, of Washington township; Grace E., who is the wife of John C. Unger, of Marlboro township; Mary E., who is a graduated physician and is now following the profession of a trained nurse in Elgin, Illinois; James B., who is a successful farmer and stock-grower of Washington township, as is also Walter G.; Margaret A., who remains at the parental home; and Susan B., who is the wife of William McQuilkin, of Homeworth, Columbiana county.

GEORGE G. TAYLOR was born on the 30th of September, 1869, on the old homestead, on section 27, Canton township, being a son of Samuel and Mary C. (Wigginton) Taylor, the former of whom was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, being a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of the Buckeye state, and the date of his nativity having been January 9, 1815. He was reared in his native county, receiving a common-school education, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits up to the time of coming to Canton township, Stark county, where he purchased the farm now occupied by his widow and their only son, and here he became known as one of the representative citizens of the township, making the best of improvements on his place and through his well directed efforts gaining a high degree of success. Here he continued to reside until his death, on the 19th of February, 1887, at the age of seventy-two years. He was a man of marked business ability and his reputation throughout life was untarnished by shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil. On the 1st of October, 1868, in Canton township, Stark county, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary C. (Wigginton), Oyer, the widow of Christian Oyer. She was born in Virginia, on the 17th of June, 1833, and was there reared to the age of thirty-three years, when she accompanied her parents on their removal to Ohio, the family locating in Stark county, where was solemnized her first marriage, no children being born of this union. Mrs. Taylor survives her honored husband and with her son remains on the old homestead, so hallowed to her by the memories and associations of the past.

William G. Taylor, the immediate subject of this review, grew to manhood under the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the home farm, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools. He has had the wisdom to consider the industry of agriculture worthy of his best study and efforts, and thus has been eminently successful in carrying forward the work inaugurated so many years ago by his honored father. The farm comprises two hundred and fifty-five acres, and is one of the finest rural estates in the county, the buildings being of substantial order and well adapted to their respective uses, while the residence is spacious and attractive and provided with many modern improvements conducive to comfort and convenience. In his political proclivities, though never ambitious for office, Mr. Taylor is a staunch Republican, and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal church in Canton township, in which he has been a prominent and active worker, doing all in his power to advance its spiritual and temporal welfare, while for several years he has held the office of steward of this church. His mother and wife are also members, as was his father, whose interest in religious work was ever a vital and helpful one.

In Rose township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 6th of October, 1892, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage to Miss Margaret E. Weaver, who was born in that county, a daughter of David and Sarah H. Weaver. This happy union has been blessed with three children,—Howard S., Grace M. and Ray C.

CORNELIUS AULTMAN.—Strong, true men are always benefactors. Their usefulness in the immediate and specific labors they perform can be in a certain degree defined. The good they do through the forces they put in motion, and through the inspiration of their presence and example, is immeasurable by any finite gauge or standard of value. The death of such a man is a public calamity, because by it the country loses not only his active energy, but the stimulus of his personal presence and influence. There is, however, some compensation for this loss in the memory of his services, the effect of his example and the continued fruitfulness of the activities he quickened into life. The late Cornelius Aultman was such a man. To epitomize his life and character within the limits which this work allows is impossible. The force and power of his living presence are realized by the void his death has made. The clearness of his purpose, the soundness of his judgment, his tireless activity, his indomitable will, his achievements, have left their impress upon all who were in any way in touch with him or his life work.

Cornelius Aultman was a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born on a farm a few miles east of Canton, on the 10th of March, 1827, while his death occurred in Canton on the 26th of December, 1884. His father dying when he was but two years old, he was thrown largely upon his own resources. While still a youth he determined to strike out for himself and, leaving the farm, he went to Greentown where he entered the shop of Michael Wise for the purpose of learning the trade of wheelwright, wheels for transport, mill construction and spinning comprising the main output. Subsequently Mr. Aultman, with his wife and child, in company with a party of friends, removed to Plainfield, Illinois, making the journey by wagon, camping out of nights while on the way. They remained for about one year in the locality, at the end of which time they returned to Greentown, where the subject, in company with others, formed a business partnership that was more fruitful of far-reaching results than any that was ever known in this part of the country.

One of the earliest men to perceive and endeavor to meet the demands of agriculturists for improved farming machinery was Ephraim Ball, who, back in the 'forties, conducted a small plow shop in Greentown. Upon his return from Illinois Mr. Aultman secured employment in Mr. Ball's shop and in a remarkable short time had mastered all there was to be known of the trade. It is said that he was able to turn out more and better work than any of his fellow workmen. He was endowed by nature with a splendid physique, which was accompanied by when he was united to Miss Elizabeth Young, who was born in that township in 1844, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Sheffer) Young, the former of whom was born in the eastern part of the state, whither his parents emigrated from Ireland. After his marriage Josiah E. Schuffell continued his residence in Osnaburg until 1886, having followed various occupations. In that year he established a general store in the town, and in this line of enterprise he has ever since continued, being one of the representative and influential citizens of the town and having attained success through indefatigable and well-directed effort. He has been unfaltering in his allegiance to the Democratic party, and has taken an active part in public affairs of a local nature, while his inflexible integrity, his marked business ability and his personal popularity have led to his being chosen incumbent of various offices of trust. He served for many years as corporation clerk and has held other local offices, ever commanding the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the community. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. Both he and his wife are members of St. Paul's Reformed church, in whose work they have taken an active part for many years. To them two children were born, Harry M., the immediate subject of this sketch, and Minnie, who died at the age of two years.

Dr. Harry M. Schuffell was born in Osnaburg, Stark county, on the 13th of July, 1866, and he attended the village schools until he had attained the age of twelve years, when he assumed the practical responsibilities of life, his first efforts being as an employe in the coal mines of the county, where he worked during one summer. In the following autumn he entered upon an apprenticeship at the tinner's trade in Osnaburg, under the direction of Henry Sell, with whom he remained for a period of four years. In the autumn of 1882, when in his sixteenth year, he again entered the public schools of his native village, and that he made good use of his time is evident when we revert to the fact that in the following spring he passed the required examination and was given a teacher's certificate for the county. After his examination, and while he was still a student in the public schools of Osnaburg, his instructor informed him that he had secured him a position to teach an unexpired term in district No. 7, Osnaburg township, said district being locally designated as "Dutch Kingdom." He was successful in his pedagogic efforts in the "kingdom," and just before the close of his term he secured a similar position for the following term, in a neighboring district. When he finished his labors in said district, with two months' salary in his pocket, he proceeded to Ada, this state, where he was duly matriculated in the Northwestern Ohio Normal University, where he continued his studies from the spring of 1884 until the following autumn, when his funds became exhausted, and he found it necessary to give immediate attention to his depleted exchequer. He accordingly returned home, and taught in a school in his native township, during the ensuing winter term, while in the spring he resumed work at his trade, in which he continued until August, having during this entire interval the one aim in view,—to secure the funds with which to continue his educational work. In August he returned to the normal university, where he continued his studies until October, when his finances, though he practiced the utmost economy, again reached so low an ebb that he returned to his home once more, and he again entered the public schools of Osnaburg. A few weeks later, however, he accepted the position of weighmaster for the Doll Coal Company, of Osnaburg, retaining this incumbency until the following spring, that of 1886, when he taught a two-months term in one of the district schools of Nimishillen township, and thereafter followed his trade, in Canton and Louisville, this county, until the following autumn, when he engaged to teach the winter term in the school of district No. 10, Osnaburg township. In the spring of 1887 the Doctor again became a student in the normal university, where he remained until November, when he taught again through the ensuing winter, in the meanwhile devoting his attention to the reading of medicine, his self-reliant and ambitious nature leading him to form definite plans for his future vocation. From the spring until the autumn of 1889 he was again a student in the normal school at Ada, teaching in Osnaburg township during the ensuing winter, and then resuming his studies at the normal, where, in the following autumn, he completed the course in science and pharmacy, while shortly afterward he passed the required examination before the state board of pharmacy, at Cleveland, and was duly granted a certificate as registered pharmacist. He then taught another term of school, at the close of which he came to Canton and assumed a position in the establishment of the Canton Pharmacy Company, as pharmacist, where he remained until the following spring, in the meanwhile having continued his medical studies under the direction of Dr. Alonzo B. Walker, of Canton. In July, 1891, he returned to the Ohio Normal University, where he was duly graduated with his class, in the scientific and pharmaceutical courses, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science and Graduate in Pharmacy. In September, 1891, he matriculated in the medical department of the Western Reserve University, at Cleveland, where he received credit for his degrees and was entered as a member of the junior class. He completed the prescribed course and was graduated in March, 1893, receiving his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine, for which he had worked with such marked zeal and devotion. During the intervening summer vacations he was in the employ of the Canton Pharmacy Company. Two weeks after his graduation Dr. Schuffell, for the purpose of still farther fortifying himself for his chosen profession, went to the national metropolis, where he completed a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic.

On the 19th of June, 1893, the Doctor opened his offices in Canton, at the corner of Cleveland avenue and Tuscarawas street, where he remained until 1898, when he removed to his present convenient and attractive quarters, at 314-16 South Cleveland avenue. It is pleasing to note that the Doctor has secured a large and distinctively representative support, while he is known as a thoroughly skilled physician and surgeon, a close and constant student and as one who ever observes the unwritten code of ethics which is prescribed for his profession. In 1898 he was elected coroner of Stark county, on the Republican ticket, in which capacity he continued to serve for two terms, while since 1900 he has been visiting surgeon to the Aultman hospital. He is an active member of the Canton Medical Society, the Union Medical Society of Northeastern Ohio and the Cleveland Academy of Medicine and Ohio State Medical Society, while fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Foresters, the Knights of Pythias, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and the Protected Home Circle. He and his wife are prominent members of Trinity Reformed church, in which he holds the office of elder.

In Canton, on the 29th of May, 1895, Dr. Schuffell was united in marriage to Miss Cora M. Stone, daughter of Isaac and Eliza (Lyons) Stone, the former of whom is deceased, while the latter still maintains her residence in Canton. Dr. and Mrs. Schuffell are prominent in the best social life of the city, where their friends are in number as their acquaintances.

ANTHONY A. RUFLIN is a native of Switzerland, where he was born on the 18th of January, 1828, and he is now the only survivor of the six children born to Anthony and Catherine (Keese) Rufin, both of whom were likewise born in the fair little republic of Switzerland. Anthony Rufin, Sr., was a natural mechanic and was a skilled workman at both the carpenter and blacksmith trades, while his genius enabled him to do all sorts of mechanical work with exceptional facility and effectiveness. In 1831 he and his family bade adieu to their native land and set forth to establish a home in America. They reached the hospitable shores of the new world in due course of time and forthwith came westward to Ohio, settling in Columbiana county, where the father of the subject purchased fifty acres of land. About eighteen months later he disposed of this property and came into Stark county. In Washington township he secured eighty acres of heavily timbered land, the property now being owned by Samuel Hoiles, and here he took up his residence in a log cabin which had been erected by a former owner, a small portion of the place having been cleared at the time when Mr. Rufin came into possession of the same. He devoted his attention to reclaiming and cultivating this farm until 1856, when he sold the property, and in the spring of the ensuing year he effected the purchase of the farm where the subject now resides, in section 9. Here he continued his efforts as an agriculturist and did much toward the proper improvement of the farm which is now one of the valuable places of the township. Here he continued to make his home until he was called from the scene of life's activities, on the 20th of May, 1863, at which time he was over seventy-two years of age, his devoted wife surviving him only about eighteen months and being sixty-eight years of age at the time of her death. They were folk of sterling character and held the unqualified respect of the community, while their religious faith was that of the Catholic church. Mr. Rufin was a Democrat in his political proclivities.

Anthony A. Rufin, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was reared on the old homestead farm and early began to lend his aid in the work of reclaiming the land and rendering it available for cultivation, so that he has ever appreciated the dignity of honest toil. The scholastic institution which it was his privilege to attend was the primitive log school house, with its rude equipment of puncheon floor, slab benches, etc., and yet the advantages here afforded were sufficient to enable him to lay an adequate foundation for the broad fund of practical information which has come to him through his active association with men and affairs during the years of a long and useful life. He continued to assist in the work of the home farm until the time of his marriage, in 1864, and he then purchased the homestead, his father having died in the preceding year, being associated in this purchase with his brother August, while they also bought all stock, implements, etc. For nine years the two brothers continued to be associated in the ownership and management of the farm, and at the expiration of this time our subject purchased his brother's interest and has since remained the sole owner of the fine property. The area of the estate has been increased to two hundred and twelve acres, and the same is maintained under a high state of cultivation, while the permanent improvements are of the most substantial, attractive and consistent order, so that the farm is recognized as one of the most valuable in this section of the county. Mr. Rufin inherited much of the mechanical skill of his honored father, and for a number of years he devoted no little attention to work at the carpenter's trade, having erected numerous buildings in this locality. For several years he also operated a threshing outfit, securing a representative patronage in this section, where he is well known and where he has ever commanded the maximum confidence and good will of the people of the community. In politics Mr. Rufin has ever accorded a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he and his family are prominent and valued members and communicants of the Catholic church.

On the 2d of February, 1864, Mr. Rufin was united in marriage to Miss Teresa Warner, who was born in Washington township, being a daughter of Anthony Warner, who was born and reared in Germany, whence he emigrated to America in 1857 and took up his residence in Washington township, this county, where he became a successful farmer and where he passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Ann New. Mr. and Mrs. Rufin became the parents of six children, of whom four are living, namely: Joseph, who farms a portion of the old homestead; Frank A., who remains at the parental home, as does also Emma T.; and Charles A., who is a student in the medical department of the Ohio State University, at Columbus, being a member of the class of 1902.

EDWARD G. McCORMICK, M. D., is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the city of Zanesville, Ohio, on the 27th of May, 1856, and being a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Fisher) McCormick. The former was a native of the Emerald Isle, and there he was reared and educated and there learned the trade of tailor. Upon his emigration to the United States he first settled in Miami county, Ohio, and thence removed to Zanesville, where he was established in business as a merchant tailor for more than a half century, being one of the honored citizens of the place and a man of high intellectual powers and utmost probity of character, so that esteem and confidence came to his portion as a natural sequel. He now resides in the home of his daughter, Mrs. T. J. Saup, in the city of Toledo, Ohio, having attained the advanced age of seventy-seven years. The mother of the Doctor was born in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, near the city of Harrisburg, whence she accompanied her parents on their removal to Miami county, Ohio, where they passed the residue of their lives, while she died in the city of Zanesville, on the 20th of May, 1892, at the age of sixty years. She became the mother of nine children, of whom five are yet living.

Edward G. McCormick received his preliminary education in the district schools, and thereafter passed two years with his uncle, Peter McCormick, in the city of Lafayette, Indiana, where he continued his studies in the public schools. He began his technical study of medicine under the effective preceptorship of Dr. Alfred Ball, of Zanesville, and in 1877 he was matriculated in the Ohio Medical University, in the city of Columbus, remaining there during one course of lectures, after which he entered the Columbus Medical College, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1879, having shown himself to be a close and discriminating student and coming forth well equipped for the practical work of his profession, while he received his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine at the time of his graduation. In May of the same year Dr. McCormick established himself in practice at Zanesville, where he remained for a short time and then removed to Coshocton county, Ohio, where he was associated in practice with Dr. A. E. Walker for a short interval. In 1884 he was there married and in the following year removed to Kimbolton, Guernsey county, where he was actively engaged in practice until the autumn of 1889, where he has since maintained his home and where he has significantly gained precedence as a skillful physician and surgeon, controlling a gratifying and representative practice. He was a member of the United States board of examiners for pensions in Stark county for four and one-half years and is a valued member of the Stark County Medical Society. In politics the Doctor exercises his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which his wife is likewise a devoted member. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees. Dr. McCormick is essentially a self-made man, having defrayed the expenses of his college course through his own efforts, and thus being the more appreciative of the advantages which he secured and which he was careful to neglect in no manner. While in college he clerked in a drug store to secure the means to continue his studies, and when he left the medical college with his dignified diploma as a physician and surgeon, his financial resources were represented in the sum of fifty cents. Men of such courage and self-denial deserve success and it is seldom denied, for such labors indicate the virile power and the strength of character through which success is gained in any field of endeavor.

In Coshocton county, Ohio, on the 29th of April, 1884, Dr. McCormick was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Conley, a daughter of Charles Conley, of that county, and of this union two children have been born, Charles E., who was born November 18, 1887, and Helen M., who was born on the 29th of May, 1893.

HON. JOHN P. JONES is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born at Mineral Ridge, Trumbull county, Ohio, on the 19th of August, 1868, and having been the third in order of birth of the eight children of William and Rachel (Owens) Jones, the former of whom was born in Gloucestershire, England, and the latter in Wales, whence both came to the United States when young, the father of our subject having been actively identified with mining interests from his youth until the time of his death, which occurred as the result of an accident in the mines at North Lawrence, on the 24th of May, 1894, at which time he was fifty years of age. He was a man of unassuming nature and his life was filled with consecutive toil and endeavor, while it was so ordered that he merited and received the respect of his fellow men. In politics he was a Republican and his religious faith was that of the United Brethren church, of which his widow is a devoted member.

When the subject of this sketch was but two months of age his parents removed from Trumbull county to Stark county and settled in North Lawrence, and this village has ever since been his home. Here he was reared to manhood and here he received his early educational discipline in the public schools, while, incidentally, it may be said that he is largely self-educated, having gained a wide fund of practical knowledge through personal application and through active and intimate association with men and affairs. When he was but eleven years of age he began working in the mines of this locality, where his father was also employed, and here he gained that appreciation of the dignity of honest toil which has made him so significantly appreciative of the aspirations and difficulties of laboring men. He continued to be employed in the mines for a period of eleven years, at the expiration of which, being then twenty-two years of age, he was elected to the office of justice of the peace in Lawrence township, retaining this incumbency for three years, within which he devoted much attention to reading and study, particularly as touching political issues, and he early became an active and ardent worker in the local ranks of the Republican party, of whose principles he has continued to be an uncompromising advocate. In 1890 Mr. Jones was elected president of the Ohio State Miners' Association, in which position he rendered timely and effective service for a term of three years, having thus been twice chosen as his own successor. In January, 1892, he was elected a member of the executive board of the national organization of miners, and in the summer of that year President McKinley appointed him inspector of mines for the state of Ohio, which important position he continued to most acceptably fill until January, 1898, when he resigned the same to enter upon his duties as a member of the lower house of the state legislature, to which he had been elected as a representative from Stark county in November of the preceding year. He served in the legislative body only until May, 1898, when he resigned his office to accept that of labor commissioner, to which he had been appointed by Governor Asa S. Bushnell, who recognized his peculiar eligibility and urged him to make the change. In this important office he continued for two years, and since that time he has devoted his attention to operating coal mines of his own, still retaining his residence in North Lawrence, where it may well be said that he has hosts of friends, and this is but a natural sequel, for he is known as the true friend of every worthy laboring man, while he also commands the unqualified regard of those who are able to offer employment to others, as well as of many personal acquaintances who stand high in the councils of state and nation. He takes a lively interest in all that concerns the local welfare and no worthy cause fails to secure his aid and influence. For the past two years he has been a member of the board of education of Lawrence township and is at the present time secretary of the same. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, in which he has advanced to the Knight Templar degree, being member of the Mount Union Commandery No. 1, at Columbus, while he also holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Forresters, and still maintains his association with the miners' organization.

On Christmas day of the year 1889 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jones to Miss Lillie Rowe, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of Cyrus Rowe, who is engaged in mining in Lawrence township. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have two children, William and Mary Arden.

ROBERT A. POLLOCK was born in North Lawrence, Lawrence township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 24th of August, 1870, being a son of John and Catherine (Mains) Pollock, the former of whom had his nativity in northern Ireland, and the latter in Scotland, while both are of stanch Scottish lineage. They were married in the fair lands of hills and heather, "bonnie auld Scotland," and thence emigrated to America in the early 'sixties, forthwith coming to Stark county and locating in the village of North Lawrence, which has ever since been their home. Here the father of our subject was originally identified with the mining industry, in which he continued for a number of years, while in 1880 he established himself in the mercantile business in this town, where he has built up a most successful enterprise in the line, receiving a representative patronage and being known as a business man of absolute integrity and marked acumen, ordering his affairs with mature judgment and ever aiming to meet the demands of his customers, while his fair dealing and unvarying courtesy have gained him the esteem and confidence of the entire community. He served for a term of four years as mail clerk on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, and for two terms he was incumbent of the office of postmaster of North Lawrence, giving a most acceptable and capable administration and doing much to improve the local service. In politics he gives an unfaltering allegiance to the Republican party, and both he and his wife are valued members of the United Brethren church. Of their four sons and four daughters the subject of this sketch was the fifth in order of birth.

Robert A. Pollock received his early educational discipline in the public schools of North Lawrence, and at the age of thirteen years he secured employment in the coal mines near the town. He continued to be thus engaged until he was nearly twenty-one years of age. During the summer term of 1892 he was a student in Mount Union College, near the city of Alliance, this county, while during the following fall and spring he again attended the public schools of North Lawrence, and in the summer of 1893 he completed a commercial course in the Northern Indiana Normal School and Business College, in Valparaiso, where he remained four months, making the best use of the advantages thus afforded. He then returned to North Lawrence, where he has since continued to assist his father in the conduct of his mercantile business. At the November election of 1899 Mr. Pollock was elected, on the Republican ticket, as representative in the seventy-fourth general assembly of the Ohio legislature, and in November, 1901, he was chosen as his own successor in this office, in which he has given efficient service, being assigned to several important committees and taking an active part in the deliberations of the house, on whose floor he has given a number of strong speeches in advocacy of measures which his judgment approved. For the past five years he has served as justice of the peace in Lawrence township and he is known as one of the radical and enthusiastic young Republicans of the state, having attended various party conventions and ever showing a zealous interest in the cause. For two terms he has been a member of the board of education in his native town, and in 1896

he was a member of the state executive board of the Ohio Miners' Association, being known as a staunch friend of the laboring man under all conditions. Fraternally he is identified with Newman Lodge No. 787, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in North Lawrence; with Nathan Hale Council No. 172, of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics; and with Massillon Lodge No. 441, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 18th of December, 1901, Mr. Pollock led to the marriage altar Miss Gloria C. Blakely, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Blakely, of Doylestown, Wayne county, Ohio, where she was born and reared, her father being one of the prominent and influential citizens of that place. Mrs. Pollock is a lady of gracious presence and marked accomplishments and she and her husband take a prominent place in the social life of their home town, where they have a wide circle of friends.

JOHN M. BARNETT claims the old Keystone state of the Union as the place of his nativity, having been born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, on the 17th of December, 1841, a son of Jacob F. and Hannah (Myers) Barnett, both of whom were likewise natives of that state and representatives of prominent pioneer families. In 1849 they removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio and took up their abode on a farm in Nimishillen township, Stark county, where they maintained their home for a number of years. In 1867 they came to Canton township, and here the mother died when sixty years of age. Her husband continued to conduct his farm until the infirmities of advancing age compelled his retirement, and he also died on the homestead farm, having attained the venerable age of eighty-two years. They were folk of sterling character, true and loyal in all the relations of life, and they did not live in vain, for their memories are enshrined in the hearts of those who knew them and their strength for good works was as the number of their days. They became the parents of nine children, of whom our subject was the second in order of birth, and of the number four are living at the present time.

John M. Barnett was about eight years of age when his parents took up their abode on the farm in Nimishillen township, and on that homestead he was reared to maturity, being indebted to the district schools of this county for the early educational privileges. He remained beneath the parental roof-tree until he attained the age of twenty-six years, and after his marriage he located on a farm in Nimishillen township, where he resided for the ensuing twelve years, at the expiration of which he returned to Canton township, where he has since been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He is now the owner of a finely improved farm of sixty-eight acres, and so thoroughly has he studied the science of agriculture and the best methods to be employed in the rotation of crops, proper fertilizing, etc., that he has been most successful in the returns which he has secured from his assiduous labors. Upon his farm he has erected an attractive and commodious house, while the other buildings are of substantial and appropriate order, neatness and careful attention being indicated in every portion of the place.

The military service of Mr. Barnett is one which will ever redound to his credit and honor as a leal and loyal son of the Republic. In August, 1862, he tendered his services in defence of the Union by enlisting as a private in Company B, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he remained in active service for nearly three years, or practically until victory was assured to the Union arms. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, and he participated in a dozen or more important engagements, besides many skirmishes, while he bore himself with true soldierly dignity and fidelity, ever being found at the post of duty and ready for any service that might be demanded of him. Among the more important battles in which he took part may be mentioned the following: Chattanooga, Franklin, Atlanta, Georgia, and Fort Fisher. Mr. Barnett was mustered out of the service at Cleveland, Ohio, in July, 1865. He retains a lively interest in his old comrades in arms, and signifies the same by his membership in McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, of Canton.

In Canton township, on the 26th of September, 1867, Mr. Barnett was united in marriage to Miss Lovina Trump, who was born in this county, being a daughter of George J. Trump, who was one of the sterling pioneers of Canton township, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, at the age of seventy-two years. His wife, whose maiden name was R. Weaner, died at the age of eighty-six years. Both were natives of the state of Pennsylvania, whence they came to Ohio about 1820. Mrs. Barnett has proven not only a companion and helpmeet to her husband, but has also been his counselor and able coadjutor, and to her influence he attributes in a large degree his success in life. To them have been born six children, one of whom died in infancy, while their daughter Jennie died at the age of twelve years. Those living are: Nellie, who is the wife of Isaac C. Greenawalt, of Canton; and Clinton and Lloyd, who remain at the parental home. In politics Mr. Barnett is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and both he and his wife are consistent members of the First United Evangelical church of Canton, taking a deep interest in its work.

ANDREW YODER was born in Milton township, Wayne county, Ohio, on the 2d of October, 1855, his father having been there engaged in farming at the time. The subject was the eighth in order of birth of the ten children born to Eli D. and Nancy (Kapp) Yoder, the former of whom, it is interesting to recall, was born in Canton township, Stark county, while his wife was a native of Lancaster county, where she passed her girlhood days on a farm owned by the late President James Buchanan. She died in Canton, at the age of seventy-two years, and her husband still survives, having attained the venerable age of eighty-four years and having his home in that city. They became the parents of three sons and six daughters, and of the number five are living at the present time.

When the subject was but six years of age his parents removed from Wayne county to Canton township, Stark county, where they settled on the farm now owned and conducted by him, so that practically his entire life has been passed in this township. On this homestead he was reared to years of maturity, being indebted to the public schools of the locality for his educational discipline. He consecutively maintained his home on this farm, with the exception of eighteen months, which he passed on an adjoining farm known as the Henry Bans place. He never faltered in his liking for an allegiance to the great basic industry of agriculture, and through its benefices he attained a success worthy the name, while he fully appreciated the free and independent life of the farmer, being well content to remain "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife," and finding enjoyment and indubitable profit in his chosen vocation, while since 1890 he gave special attention to dairying, in which department of his enterprise his success was very pronounced, the same resulting from the discrimination and scrupulous care which he accorded to every detail, from the selecting of his stock to placing his product on the market. The farm comprises one hundred and twenty-five acres and its well tilled fields render fruitful harvests in season, while the attractiveness of the homestead is heightened by the evidences of care bestowed upon the place.

In politics Mr. Yoder accorded an unqualified allegiance to the Democratic party, and while he never sought the honors or emoluments of public office, he showed a deep and constant interest in all that conserved the welfare and progress of the community, and was for many years a member of the board of school directors of his district, his policy in regard to the cause of education being a liberal and progressive one. He was a zealous member of the United Brethren church, taking an active part in the various departments of its work, particularly the Sunday school. His death occurred October 1, 1902.

At the home of the bride, in Bethlehem township, this county, on the 9th of December, 1880, Mr. Yoder was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Van Dorsten, who was born and reared in that township, being a daughter of Harmon and Julia (Shepler) Van Dorsten, the former of whom was a representative farmer of that section. She was born on the 2d of June, 1858, and her educational discipline was received in the district schools. She is a woman of gracious presence and unvarying kindness, and proved a true helpmeet to her husband, while their union was blessed with seven children, namely: Walter R., Bertha A., Howard C., Neil H., Ruth C., Roy R. and Ralph E.

DAVID SPONSELLER was born on his present farmstead, in Canton township, the date of his nativity having been April 4, 1837. He is a son of John and Catherine (Herbster) Sponseller, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and of staunch German lineage, while the latter was born in the state of Maryland. Their marriage was solemnized in the old Keystone state, and it is altogether probable that shortly afterward they emigrated to the wilds of Stark county to establish a home and work out the problems of life with self-reliance, courage and faith. They came here and settled on a tract of heavily timbered land in Canton township, the property having been purchased from the government and the deed to the same bearing the signature of James Madison, who was then President of the United States. In the midst of the forest a clearing was made and there was erected the diminutive house of round logs which was to figure as the family home for a number of years, until the returns from the herculean labors put forth should justify the erection of a more pretentious dwelling,—perhaps a stately building of hewn logs, which was considered the practical acme of elegance and luxury. The parents gave themselves faithfully to the task set before them, and as the years passed by the forest was found to be gradually displaced by cultivated fields, and prosperity began to smile on the brave and noble toilers. They lived to see the march of improvement well inaugurated, and on this old homestead the honored parents lived and labored until they were called forward to that “undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns,” resting from their labors, while it may well be said that “their works do follow them.” The father of the subject lived to the age of eighty-five years, sustained and comforted until the last by the companionship and affection of her who has been his true helpmeet during all the long years of their wedded life. His wife continued the journey until she had attained the venerable age of ninety years, when she too was summoned to the “land of the leal,” a noble Christian woman, whose children may well “rise up and call her blessed.” They became the parents of eight children, namely: Frederick, Mary, Abraham, Julia, John, Kate, Henry and David, and of these all have passed away except the subject of this sketch.

David Sponseller, who was the youngest of the children, was reared on the old pioneer homestead, and in his boyhood days he became inured to the sturdy and invigorating work involved in the clearing and cultivating of the farm upon which he now lives, while his educational privileges, owing to the normal exigencies and conditions, were meager in character. As a boy he plodded his way, during the winter months, to the little log school house, which was equipped with slab benches, punch-eon floors and wide fire-place, and there conned his rudimentary lessons under such instructors as the primitive settlement could offer. He is the owner of one hundred and twenty-five acres, and the farm is under most effective cultivation, while he also devotes attention, in a subordinate way, to the raising of high-grade live stock. He has made excellent improvements on the homestead, having erected a commodious and substantial dwelling and other buildings well adapted to the uses to which they are applied. Mr. Sponseller has not allowed his interests to be confined to his personal affairs, but has taken a deep concern in all that has contributed to the wellbeing of the community in which his life has been passed. In politics he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Lutheran church, of which he has long been a valued member, being one of the elders of the church. His parents were also devoted members of this church, as is also his wife.

On the 14th of February, 1860, in the city of Canton, Mr. Sponseller was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Croft, who was born in Canton township, on the 21st of October, 1836, being one of the three children of Michael and Mary (Lichtenwalter) Croft, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Pennsylvania, while they were numbered among the honored pioneers of Stark county, where both died.

The father died in the city of Canton, at the age of eighty-eight years, his wife having passed away in Osnaburg township, at the age of seventy-eight years. Their three children were: William; Elizabeth, who is the wife of the subject; and Susanna. To Mr. and Mrs. Sponseller have been born nine children, namely: Mary Ellen, who is the wife of Christian Marks; Alice, who became the wife of John Rindchen, and who died in Canton township on the 29th of October, 1901; Laura Ann, who is the wife of Samuel Snortz; the next child died in infancy; William; Ada is the wife of William Kitzmiller; Cora remains at the parental home; Kate is the wife of Charles Miller; and Senora is still living beneath the home roof-tree.

DAVID W. SPONSELLER.—When it is stated that the subject of this review is of the third generation of the family in Stark county it becomes evident that the name has been identified with the annals of this section of the state from the early pioneer days. His paternal grandfather, John Sponseller, of stanch German ancestry, was a native of Pennsylvania, whence he came to Stark county, taking up a tract of wild land in Canton township, where he instituted the work of reclamation and improvement, and where he passed the remainder of his life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was C. Herbster. They were folk of sterling character, industrious and unassuming, and they reared their children to lives of usefulness and honor, so that the name has ever been one unblemished by shadow of wrong or suspicion of injustice to others. Their son, Abraham, the father of the subject, was born on the old pioneer homestead, in Canton township, in the year 1820, so that it was his privilege to be a witness of the transition stages through which this locality developed from the primitive conditions of a practically frontier wilderness to that of an opulent and prosperous section of one of the most advanced commonwealths in the Union. Abraham Sponseller was reared to manhood under the sturdy discipline of the farm, aiding in the work of clearing off the native forest and placing the land under cultivation, while his educational advantages were of course limited by the exigencies of time and place, though a naturally alert mentality led him to individual application through which he became a man of broad information and mature judgment, as may be seen from the records which bear the evidence of his wise and impartial decisions while incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, in which he served for a number of years. His political support was given to the Democratic party, and in addition to the office already mentioned he was also called upon to serve as township trustee, ever commanding the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the community and being known as one of the representative citizens and farmers of Canton township. While he was not formally identified with any religious organization, he had the deepest reverence for spiritual verities, and his life was guided and dominated by a deep faith in Christian truth. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Stoner, was born in Pennsylvania in 1824, her sister removing thence to Stark county, Ohio, when she was thirteen years of age, settling in Canton township, where she grew to maturity and where her marriage to Mr. Sponseller was solemnized. She was a woman of noble and gracious character, and was loved by all who came within the immediate sphere of her influence. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 2d of June, 1897, and her life companion, with whom she had walked side by side during the long years of a singularly ideal married life, did not long survive, his death occurring on the 28th of August, 1899. Of this union were born eight children, namely: John H., George W., Samuel, William, Mary (the wife of Charles Lehr), David W., Lucy (the wife of Douglas W. Stahl) and August, all of the children surviving their loved and honored parents.

On the parental homestead, in Canton township, where the father located immediately after his marriage, David W. Sponseller was born on the 6th of April, 1861, and there he was reared to man's estate. On the 20th of December, 1884, in Canton township. Mr. Sponseller was united in marriage to Miss Emma Yoder, who was born in this township on the 18th of September, 1865, being a daughter of Samuel S. Yoder, one of the influential farmers of the township. Her mother, whose maiden name was Delilah Deckard, is a daughter of the late Daniel Deckard, an honored pioneer of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Sponseller are the parents of five children, namely: Grover, Hazel, Freda, Russell and Mary.

SAMUEL YODER is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born on a farm in Milton township, Wayne county, Ohio, on the 17th of September, 1843, being the third in order of birth of the ten children of Eli D. and Nancy (Kapp) Yoder, the former of whom was born in Canton township, this county, while the latter was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, having passed her girlhood days on a farm owned by the late President James Buchanan, at Wheatland, in the Keystone state. She died in Canton, at the age of seventy-two years, and her husband is still living in that city, having now attained the venerable age of eighty-four years. Of their ten children five are living at the present time.

The subject of this review was reared on the parental homestead in Wayne county, where he remained until he was eighteen years of age, having been indebted to the public schools for the educational privileges which he enjoyed in his youth. At the age of eighteen he accompanied his parents on their removal to Stark county, and here he has ever since maintained his residence, with the exception of one year, which he passed in Wayne county, and he has been consecutively identified with agricultural pursuits from his youth up. In his home farm, which is located on section 34, Canton township, are comprised one hundred and thirty-three acres of as arable and prolific land as can be found in this signally favored agricultural district, and the place is maintained under a high state of cultivation, while Mr. Yoder has made excellent improvements of a permanent nature, including a commodious and attractive residence and other buildings admirably adapted to the uses for which they were erected, the entire place having an air of distinctive thrift and prosperity and being unmistakably one of the desirable rural estates of the county. Mr. Yoder is progressive and public-spirited, straightforward and sincere in all the relations of life, and has the high regard of the community in which he lives. In politics he accords an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, but has never desired official preferment. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Evangelical Lutheran church at North Industry, in which he has served as deacon since 1885, and both are active in the promotion of the spiritual and temporal welfare of the church.

In Bethlehem township, this county, on the 22d of January, 1874, Mr. Yoder was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Shaffer, who was born in Pike township, Stark county, on the 31st of January, 1848, being a daughter of Adam and Mary (Rosenfelter) Shaffer, both of whom were born in Germany, while both were representatives of sterling pioneer families of Stark county, where their marriage was solemnized, after which they located on a farm in Pike township. Mr. Shaffer was killed by lightning while at work in a grist mill, in Canton township, being about thirty-five years of age at the time. His widow survives, having attained the venerable age of ninety years and being a resident of North Industry. Of her three children Mrs. Yoder was the youngest, and the only one living. To the subject and his estimable wife, a woman of refinement and gracious personality, have been born five children, namely: Ida O., who is the wife of John Shertzer, of Canton; Harvey E. and Stella E., who remain at the parental home; Lawrence, who died in infancy; and Nelson D., who is likewise beneath the home roof.

GEORGE STEINMETZ comes of stanch German lineage, as do many others of the sterling citizens of Stark county, whither emigrated from the fatherland many of the sturdy sons of the German empire during the early pioneer epoch, while many others came here from Pennsylvania, where they had been established for one or more generations. From this source the county has gained much and lost nothing. He was born on his present farm on the 14th of October, 1832, being a son of John Steinmetz, who was born in the province of Morburg, Germany, May 11, 1783, and who was but one year of age at the time when his parents bade adieu to the fatherland and emigrated to America. They settled in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, whence he later removed to Licking county, Ohio, shortly after the admission of the Buckeye state to the federal Union, and in 1818 he came to Stark county and settled on the farm now owned by our subject, the same having been at the time marked by a veritable wilderness, the native timber still standing intact, while the settlers were few and far removed from each other in the average cases. He later took up his residence on the farm now owned by his son Hiram, in the same township, and there passed the remainder of his life, passing to his reward on the 24th of June, 1869, as one of the honored pioneers who had contributed his full quota toward the development of this favored section, while his devoted and cherished wife entered into eternal rest on the 14th of April, 1882. The father belonged to the German Baptist church and the mother to the Disciples, while in politics the father gave his support to the Republican party. The maiden name of the subject's mother was Mary Painter, and she was customarily and affectionately known by the name of Polly in her family, which was established in Pennsylvania in an early day, probably prior to the war of the Revolution, her birth having occurred in Westmoreland county, that state, on the 14th of October, 1796. Of her marriage with John Steinmetz were born twelve children, of whom the following eight lived to attain years of maturity: Joseph, Catherine, Louisa, John, Harrison, George, Hiram and Harriet, and of these three are living at the present time.

George Steinmetz was reared under the conditions and influences of pioneer life, and has made his home consecutively on the farm which he now owns and which he has seen developed from the virgin forest to its present condition as one of the most productive, attractive and valuable rural estates in Pike township. He received such educational advantages as were afforded the average farmer boy of the locality and period, and early began to lend his aid in the improvement and cultivation of the old homestead, which is now endeared to him by the memories and varied associations of the past. He has given his attention to diversified farming and stock-raising and has carried forward his efforts with that rare discrimination and progressiveness which render the life of the husbandman anything other than monotonous and unprolific in definite success. His farm comprises two hundred and fifty-two acres, and upon the same he has erected substantial and attractive farm buildings, includ-

In politics the subject gives a staunch support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, and is known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen. While he has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office, he has been called upon to serve in various local positions of trust and responsibility and has ever been found signally true to duty in these connections, as has he been in all the relations of life, ever commanding unmeasured esteem in the community in which his entire life has been passed. For seventeen years he was connected with the Pike Township Fire Insurance Company. Both Mr. and Mrs. Steinmetz are devoted and valued members of the Christian church, in which he was baptized at the age of seventeen years, while a similar consecration was received by his wife in 1877. Shortly after becoming a member of the church he was elected a deacon in the church in the village of Sparta, and served acceptably for a term of two years. He now holds membership in the church of this denomination at Greenridge school house.

In Pike township, this county, on the 2d of July, 1854, Mr. Steinmetz was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Apley, who was born on the parental homestead in this township, on the 26th of January, 1836, being a daughter of Michael and Sarah (Slabaugh) Apley, the former of whom was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania. They came to Stark county in an early day and first settled in Canton township, whence they came to Pike township, where the father developed a farm, upon which both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. He died in October, 1840, when about fifty-one years of age, while his widow survived until 1875, when she was summoned into eternal rest, at the age of eighty-two years. Of their eight children all but one attained maturity, namely: Elizabeth, Maria, John, Lucinda, Catherine, Melinda and Mary Ann, and of the number three are still living. Mrs. Steinmetz was reared and educated in Pike township and has here passed her entire life, while through her gentle and gracious womanhood she has won the affection of a wide circle of friends in the community, and her home is a favorite resort for them.

JOHN A. DONAT is a son of Peter Donat, who was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of October, 1805, and there he was reared to the age of fifteen years, having attended the common schools of that locality, and he then accompanied his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth Donat, on their removal to Tuscarawas township, Stark county, Ohio, where they made their advent in the autumn of 1819, settling in Perry township in the following spring, in the midst of the forest, where his father instituted the herculean task of reclaiming his land to cultivation, having taken up a tract of one hundred and sixty acres. On this old homestead Peter Donat was reared to maturity, and in this township he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, becoming the owner of a valuable farm which he had improved through his own efforts, and ever commanding the respect and high regard of the community. On the 9th of March, 1843, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Crossland, who was born in Akron (then known as Middleburg), Ohio, on the 4th of May, 1826. For nearly a half century this worthy couple walked side by side down the pathway of life, mutually encouraged and aided by the appreciative affection and sympathy, and sharing alike the joys and sorrows which no man escapes in this unintelligible world. The loving and cherished wife and mother entered eternal rest on the 30th of August, 1890, and her venerable companion did not long survive her loss, his death occurring on the 3d of January, 1892. They became the parents of eleven children, namely: Amanda, Lydia S., Hannah, Ann Eliza, Olivia, Mary Alice, Azariah C., Emma R., Eva C., John A. and Loretta. Of these all are living except four.

John A. Donat, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the tenth in order of birth in the above mentioned family of children, and was ushered into the world on the old homestead in Tuscarawas township, the date of his nativity having been November 11, 1861. He was reared to the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the farm, receiving his educational discipline in the public schools of the township, and he remained at the old homestead until after the death of his parents, when, in the spring of 1892, he located upon his present farm, which is most eligibly situated, in Lake township and which comprises eighty acres of most productive land, the place being well improved and maintained under effective cultivation. Mr. Donat has a thorough knowledge of the best methods to be employed in the various departments of the farming enterprise, and his policy is that of a discriminating and progressive business man. In politics Mr. Donat gives a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he manifests a commendable interest in public affairs of a local nature, contributing to the advancement of legitimate enterprises and measures for the general good. Fraternally he is a valued member of New Berlin Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, while his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, his affiliation being with the church at Greentown.

At Greentown, this county, on the 14th of December, 1892, Mr. Donat was united in marriage to Miss Nettie Grace Shanafelt, who was born in that village on the 22d of July, 1866, a daughter of Henry and Rose Shanafelt. Of this happy union were born five children, namely: Peter S., J. Donald, Virgil W. and Mabel R. and Mary E. (twins). The sacred precincts of this home circle, whose conditions were ideal in nature, were invaded by death, on the 11th of November, 1901, when the devoted wife and mother was summoned to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns." Mrs. Donat was a consistent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal church, earnest and devoted in its work and showing her deep Christian faith in thought, word and deed.

JOHN BANKER was born in the canton of Berne, Switzerland, on the 8th of August, 1840, being the only son of John and Elizabeth (Fellman) Banker, both natives of that fair land, where the former died at the age of forty-five years. In 1851, husbanding the limited resources at her command, the brave and loyal mother of the subject proceeded to Havre, France, where she embarked for the new world, in company with her seven children, the eldest of whom was but eleven years of age. After a voyage of forty-two days they disembarked in the city of New York, whence they forthwith came to Ohio, settling at Zoar, Tuscarawas county, where Mrs. Banker was later married to Daniel Schnab, with whom she came to Canton township, Stark county, in 1858, and here passed the residue of her life on a farm, being summoned into eternal rest in the seventy-fifth year of her age. She was a noble Christian woman, brave in the face of trial and adversity and ever devoted to her children, who may well "rise up and call her blessed." Of the seven children who accompanied her to America we enter the following brief record: Elizabeth became the wife of Jacob Kanzig; Barbara is the wife of Adam Karret, of Perry township, this county; Mary, who was the wife of the late Robert Breil, died at Zoar, Tuscarawas county; Fanny, who became the wife of Christian Tseli, died in Wisconsin; John is the immediate subject of this review; and Rosa is dead.

John Banker had attended school as a boy in his native land, and he continued his studies in a desultory way after the family located in Tuscarawas county, this state, where he was reared to manhood. He became dependent upon his own resources at an early age, and from his youth up has been identified with the agricultural industry, having come to Stark county when seventeen years of age, when his mother and step-father removed to this section. Here he continued to be employed at farm work for a number of years, and finally, in 1873, he effected the purchase of his present fine homestead, which is eligibly located in Canton township, and which comprises one hundred and six acres of excellent land, the place being located three and one-half miles from the city of Canton. Mr. Banker has shown a great capacity for "toiling terribly," as was said of an eminent English statesman, and through his earnest and indefatigable efforts he brought about the development of his farm, which is under most effective cultivation and which has the best of permanent improvements, in the way of a commodious and modern residence and other excellent buildings, the entire farm giving unmistakable evidence of thrift and prosperity. In the midst of the arduous labor and cares of a workaday life, Mr. Banker has never been unmindful of the duties of citizenship, and has shown a deep interest in all that concerns the welfare and progress of his home county, while his support has never been withheld from any enterprise advanced for the public good, though he has never been an aspirant for official preferment. In politics he is stanchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, with which he has been identified from the time of attaining his majority. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion Mr.

Banker manifested his loyalty to the land of his adoption by tendering his services in support of the Union. Scarcely had the smoke of the rebel guns risen from the battlements of old Fort Sumter when, on the 4th of September, 1861, he enlisted as a member of Company A, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was recruited in this county, S. Beatty being the colonel of the regiment. Mr. Banker in the capacity of "high private" proceeded to the front with his regiment, which had been assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, and he continued in active service for a period of fifteen months, within which time he participated in the battle of Shiloh and various minor engagements, and at the expiration of which, because of physical disabilities, he received an honorable discharge.

In Canton township, on the 20th of February, 1868, Mr. Banker was united in marriage to Mrs. Anna Wenger, widow of Joseph Wenger. She was a daughter of the late William Gerber, an honored pioneer of Canton township, and here she was reared and educated. By her first marriage she became the mother of two children, William H. and Lydia. To Mr. and Mrs. Banker were born five children, one of whom died in infancy. The four who attained years of maturity, and who are still living, are as follows: David F. who is a representative physician of Canton and Emma L., Newton S. and John C., who remain at the paternal home. This ideal home circle was broken by the hand of death on the 21st of March, 1902, when the loved and devoted wife and mother passed forward to the life eternal, the veil being lifted to disclose a new beauty when death set its seal upon the mortal lips of this noble and gentle woman, who held the love of all who knew her. She was sixty-three years of age at the time of her demise, and had long been a consistent and zealous member of the German Baptist church.

BENJAMIN FETTERS was born on the old homestead farm, in Pike township, Stark county, on the 7th of August, 1826, being a son of George and Elizabeth (Wilt) Feters, both of whom were born in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, of staunch German lineage, both families having been established in the old Keystone state in an early period of its history. The paternal grandfather of the subject likewise bore the name of George Feters, and he was born and reared in Pennsylvania, when, in 1811, he emigrated with his family to Ohio and took up his residence on a tract of heavily timbered land in Pike township, Stark county, bending his energies to the reclamation of his farm and being ably aided in this work by his son and namesake, the father of our subject. The grandfather lived to advanced age and commanded the high regard of all who knew him. In his native county in Pennsylvania George Feters, Jr., was reared to maturity, and there was solemnized his marriage to Elizabeth Wilt. They remained in Pennsylvania until about four years after the removal of George Feters, Sr., to Stark county, their arrival here dating back to about the year 1815, while they were accompanied by their two children, six others being added to the family circle after the establishing of the home in Pike township. The father took up a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land, a considerable portion of which he had placed under effective cultivation prior to his death, in 1845, when fifty-eight years of age, while in the meanwhile he had spared neither his strength nor his mental energies in his endeavors to make the best possible provision for his family, being a man of excellent intellect and one of flawless reputation for integrity and sincerity. His widow survived him by many years, and she, too, died in Pike township, at the venerable age of eighty-four, loved for her gentle womanhood and for faithfulness in all things. Of this union were born five sons and three daughters, Benjamin, subject of this review, having been the ninth in order of birth and being now the only survivor. His father was a Republican in his political proclivities and his religious faith was that of the Lutheran church, of which his wife also was a devoted member.

Benjamin Feters, whose name initiates this article, was born on the old homestead farm and early became inured to the manifold details involved in reclaiming the land from the forest and making it ready for the plow. He continued to assist his father in the work of the farm until he had attained the age of nineteen years, having in the meanwhile been accorded such educational advantages as were to be had through a somewhat irregular attendance in the primitive district school of the pioneer epoch. How often have we read and heard the description of these little log houses, with their rude equipment of punch-eon floors, slab benches, wide fire-place and windows supplied with oiled paper in lieu of glass, and yet there is ever pleasure in reverting to these modest institutions, for from them have come forth some of the grandest characters our republic has produced,—men of perhaps not recondite knowledge but men whose nobility and strength of character have been adequate to leave a perpetual impress on our nation's history in various avenues of usefulness. Their diplomas were signed by the great and wise headmaster, Experience, and their accomplishment has often put the blush to the face of presumptuous scholasticism. Mr. Feters has been continuously identified with the great basic art of agriculture from his boyhood to the present, and his entire experience in the line has been practically one of consecutive identification with Pike township. Here is the owner of a well improved and fertile farm of one hundred and thirty-five acres, and the same is devoted to diversified agriculture and the raising of live stock, though the latter is made a subordinate feature of the farming enterprise. He has been a man of marked enterprise and energy and has achieved a gratifying success through his well directed efforts, being recognized as one of the prosperous farmers and thoroughly representative citizens of his native township, in whose advancement and material well being he has ever manifested a most lively interest. During the war of the Rebellion he was an earnest supporter of the Union cause, and for a time was a member of the home guard and prepared for active service when demanded. In politics Mr. Fetters is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and he has been called upon to serve in many of the minor township offices, while for the long term of twelve years he was continued in tenure of the office of township trustee, which fact indicates better than can mere words that his interposition must have been most satisfactory to his constituents. For about a score of years he also served as constable, and he has also labored effectively in the past as a member of the board of school directors. He and his wife have been for many years zealous and devoted members of the German Baptist church, exemplifying their faith in their daily life.

In Marshall county, Indiana, on the 29th of February, 1859, Mr. Fetters was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Inzel, who was born in that state, being a daughter of M. and Elizabeth Inzel, who died in Indiana. To Mr. and Mrs. Fetters have been born ten children, namely: George, who is a merchant; Amanda, who is the wife of a Mr. Buchtel, a farmer; David, who is in the railroad business; William; Ella, who is at home; Mary, who is the wife of Homer Brothers, of Pike township; Phoebe, who is the wife of Ira Peters, of Pike township; Benjamin H., who is at home; James Garfield, who is slate roofing at Canton; and Amos, who died in infancy.

BENEDICT DANNEMILLER.—For many years the subject of this sketch was actively identified with the industrial and commercial interests of Canton and, as a far-sighted, public spirited man, stood foremost among his contemporaries in eastern Ohio. He bore a leading part in the material development of this part of the state and during his lifetime exercised as great if not greater influence than any other man in directing attention to Canton as a safe place for the investment of capital. He was also instrumental in locating here a solid and substantial class of people, and in introducing the general system of public improvements which, during the last half century, have done so much to make Canton one of the most important industrial and commercial centers in the commonwealth.

Mr. Dannemiller was a native of France, born on the 22d day of December, 1813, in the province of Alsace, now a part of the German empire. He was the second child and oldest son of Benedict and Magdaline (Bechel) Dannemiller, both parents born and reared in Alsace, where the ancestors of their respective families had lived for years beyond the memory of man. Besides Benedict there were seven other children, three sons and four daughters, all of whom, together with their parents, emigrated to America.

While yet a mere boy the subject became acquainted with a gentleman by the name of Sharios, who owned and operated a cotton-mill in Alsace, which both young Benedict and his father frequently visited. This Mr. Sharios had served under General Lafayette in the American Revolution, and in his old age never tired of relating his interesting experiences and thrilling adventures in that far away, but what he considered one of the most highly favored countries upon which the sun ever shown. He entered the army as a private, but for meritorious conduct rose to the rank of lieutenant, in which capacity he did valiant service in the cause of liberty for a people whom he afterwards held in profound esteem. Not infrequently would young Dannemiller and his father dine with the old soldier and whenever such was the case the lad was sure to turn the conversation to America, of which country and its wonderful resources he was very anxious to learn more than he then knew. These talks with Mr. Sharios, together with the knowledge derived from a couple of books relating to the marvelous discoveries of Columbus in the new world, filled the lad's mind with a burning desire not only to learn of the great free land beyond the sea, but to go there as soon as he could arrange his affairs to that end. Quite a number of parties had already left Alsace and settled in various portions of the United States and from certain of these, who had located at a place called Canton, came letters describing at considerable length the advantages which awaited the young man with any ambition whatever to succeed in life.

Finally, when about seventeen years of age, young Benedict obtained his father's consent to seek his fortune in the new world, and on the 9th day of September, 1830, there was put into his hands sufficient money to pay his passage to his destination, with a small surplus to meet expenses until he could find employment. Before starting, the father admonished his son to write for money with which to return if the new country failed to meet his expectations or if he should at any time become dissatisfied with his venture so far from kindred and home. On the above date, in company with his uncle, Philip Bechel, Benedict Dannemiller bade adieu to the familiar scenes of his childhood and started upon what proved a long and far-reaching destiny. Embarking at Havre on the American ship "Eric," the two reached their destination on the 4th of November following, landing on that day in the city of New York. Shortly after landing young Benedict found, to his no little embarrassment, that he would not have sufficient money to pay his way further, accordingly he was obliged to borrow a small sum of his uncle to enable him to reach the town of Canton, situated he knew not how far from the sea coast. Leaving New York, they went by way of Albany, Buffalo and Cleveland and arrived at Canton on the 28th of November, spending nearly twenty-four days on the inland part of the journey. It was while waiting for a canal boat at Cleveland that Mr. Dannemiller earned his first money in this country. A small schooner was being loaded with grain from a warehouse by the wharf and, as help was needed, a man called to young Benedict and putting a shovel into his hands made him understand that his services were required. The lad cheerfully responded and after the boat was loaded the gentleman threw him a small Spanish coin of the value of about eighteen and a half cents. This proved the beginning of his long and eminently successful financial career upon American soil.

His uncle, Mr. Bechel, was a blacksmith by trade and Mr. Dannemiller had worked in his shop about one year before leaving for the United States. Shortly after reaching Canton the two opened a shop, at the corner of South Walnut and Tenth streets, where they worked about one year, changing their location at the expiration of that time to the corner of Fifth and Plum streets. After remaining with his uncle until July, 1834, Mr. Dannemiller, on the 14th day of that month, started a shop of his own and during the ensuing twenty-four years carried on a very successful business, spending twenty-nine years in all as an iron worker in Canton. Mr. Dannemiller and his brother-in-law, Jacob Scheiber, invented and manufactured a bar-share plow, which had an extensive sale throughout northern Ohio and Indiana, and they were also engaged in the manufacture of farm wagons.

On the 13th of August, 1835, Mr. Dannemiller made application in the common pleas court of Stark county, declaring his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and three years later received his final papers entitling him to all the rights and privileges for which the term stands. To him the year 1838 was peculiarly eventful in that it not only saw him made a citizen of the Republic, but witnessed his marriage, on the 21st day of December, to Miss Barbara Scheiber, who proved his loving companion and faithful helpmeet during the most successful part of his life. Mrs. Dannemiller bore her husband ten children, the oldest and youngest of whom died in infancy, the others were named: Mrs. Clara Deville, William, Mrs. Helena Neuhausel, Augustus, Rosa, Edward, Julius and Mrs. Mary McCrea, all of whom are living and well settled in life.

Mr. Dannemiller cast his first presidential ballot for General Harrison in the famous "log cabin and hard cider" campaign of 1840 and continued to support the old Whig party until it ceased to exist, when he became a Democrat, and in 1861 became a Lincoln Republican.

The beginning of Mr. Dannemiller's remarkable business career was in the year 1852, when the Pennsylvania railroad was being constructed through Stark county. The first train into Canton created great excitement and its thunderous noise hailed the advent of a new and better era, an era attended with momentous consequences in that it has witnessed a material growth and prosperity of which the wisest and most sanguine of the fathers never imagined. Prior to the advent of the road all the grain raised in this part of the county was hauled to Massillon, or Navarre, these towns being the two most important shipping points on the old Ohio canal. The coming of the road changed this by bringing a fine market nearer home and such far-seeing business men as Mr. Dannemiller were not slow in taking advantage of the situation. Closing his shop in 1858 the subject turned his attention to the buying and shipping of grain, erecting a warehouse on the lot now occupied by the McLain Manufacturing Company. Disposing of this property subsequently to Mr. Ball, he purchased the southeast corner where the Ft. Wayne railroad intersects Eighth street, and erected thereon a much larger warehouse, which is still standing. In this building he continued the grain business quite extensively for many years and became one of the largest and most successful shippers in this part of the state. In addition to his operations in grain Mr. Dannemiller soon embarked in other commercial enterprises, buying, in June, 1869, the wholesale grocery house of Thomas Kimball & Bros., whose place of business was the room now used by the United States Express Company. The Kimballs also owned a warehouse on Piedmont street, which passed into the possession of the subject when he made the purchase referred to above. When Mr. Dannemiller succeeded the above firm he took in as partners his two sons, William and Augustus, the three founding the well-known and popular wholesale grocery firm of B. Dannemiller & Sons, the leading establishment of its kind in the city at that time and ever since. After occupying the original quarters three years, the constantly increasing patronage of the firm necessitated a building of enlarged proportions, accordingly the business was moved to the building on the corner of North Market and East Tuscarawas streets, now occupied by W. E. Homer and the Farmers Bank. As originally constituted the firm lasted until 1876, at which time the two younger sons, Edward and Julius, were admitted to partnership, the business the meanwhile continuing to grow in magnitude and importance until it again became necessary to have a building of sufficient capacity to meet the requirements of the trade. In due time the large and imposing brick building on the corner of Fifth and Market streets was erected and when completed it was thought large enough to answer all the purposes of the firm for many years to come. The Dannemillers began handling coffins as a specialty in 1876, and to this line of trade is their success from that year largely due. So rapidly did the business increase that it soon outgrew the capacity of the block on Fifth and Market, thus making another move essential in order to keep pace with the constant demands for the various lines of goods handled. Accordingly in the spring of 1891, the firm moved into the massive five-story brick structure on the corner of Seventh and Cherry streets, which is most admirably located for wholesale purposes, being in such close proximity to the railroad that cars can be loaded and unloaded from one side of the building.

The Dannemillers are not only the largest and most important wholesale firms in Canton, but in the volume of business annually transacted the house is second to no other establishment of the kind in the state, ranking indeed with the leading wholesale houses in the largest cities of the Union. From the beginning the career of the firm has been marked by continued and almost unparalleled prosperity and at this time it is not only one of the most successful partnerships in the country but also one of the oldest. The different members are men of high business qualifications and their standing in commercial circles has made them widely and favorably known throughout the United States, especially in Ohio and adjacent commonwealths. April 1, 1902, the concern was turned into a stock company of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars paid-in cash capital.

As a broad-minded, far-seeing man of affairs, Benedict Dannemiller had few equals and no superiors. Ripe judgment, scrupulous integrity, with a profound knowledge of business and a deep regard for the ethics of commercial life, were among the predominant traits which added luster to his name, while his energy and well-defined purposes led him to embark in large enterprises with the assurance of reaping success in the end. His long and illustrious career won for him a conspicuous place among the leading business men of his day and the commanding position he occupied in the affairs of his adopted city earned for him a reputation which is now the common heritage of the people with whom he mingled. Feeling the infirmities incident to advancing age and becoming somewhat weary under the weight of the business which he had so long and so ably conducted, Mr. Dannemiller, in 1887, divided among his children his personal and real estate and retired to the peace and quiet of private life. He was reared in the Catholic faith and as long as he lived his life was made to conform to the sublime teachings and beautiful precepts of the Holy Mother church. During his long residence in Canton he was one of the most active members and liberal supporters of the St. Peter's congregation, having donated large sums of money for the erection of the different church buildings, besides other bequests of a religious and benevolent character. Mr. Dannemiller's last bequest to his parish was in the form of a large, clear-toned bell, presented in memory of his wife, who for many years was a faithful and devoted communicant of the same congregation with which he was identified. This bell was placed in the beautiful tower of St. Peter's church and its sweet tones are like benedictions upon the head of the donor, whose upright walk and conversation were instrumental in winning many to the higher life.

In all that constitutes sterling manhood and true citizenship, Mr. Dannemiller was a splendid example. Although of foreign birth, he was intensely American, his love for his adopted country being on a par with his affection of family, kindred and friends. While never swerving in his loyalty to the institutions under which he achieved such marked success, he ever retained a warm feeling for the land of his birth and in 1876 it was his privilege to visit the familiar scenes of home and childhood. While there he met a number of his former playmates and companions, but the majority of those whom he had once known were scattered over various parts of the earth or sleeping the last quiet sleep which knows no waking. But few changes, however, had taken place in the general appearance of the old home and surroundings when compared with the remarkable changes which he had witnessed after becoming a resident of a new and rapidly growing country.

Mr. Dannemiller was public spirited in all the term implies and, as already stated, used his wealth to a good purpose in improving and beautifying the city of his adoption. The various buildings which he erected and other improvements made at his instance stand as monuments to his enterprising and progressive ideas, while the wholesome influence he exerted among his fellow men is a more enduring epitaph than the most eloquent panegyric carved on marble or granite. Mr. Dannemiller's life was fruitful of beneficent results in many ways and when it went out, on the 24th day of April, 1897, the city of Canton lost one of its most estimable and useful citizens and the state a broad-minded man of affairs, to say nothing of the deep bereavement of his immediate family and the keen personal loss sustained by the many hundreds who called him friend. His life was a shining example of moral rectitude under all circumstances and his career, from the penniless stranger to one of the proudest positions in the business and social world, furnishes many lessons which may be profitably read by the young and rising generation. He went to his rest as a shock fully ripened for the garner, and while his body

HERMAN S. KAUFMAN was born in the family homestead, on South Market street, in what was then the village of Canton, on the 31st of March, 1844, being a son of Peter and Catherine (Wiltz) Kaufman, both of whom were born about the year 1800. Peter Kaufman was born in the western portion of Prussia, where he was reared and educated, remaining in the fatherland until about 1818, when he emigrated to America and took up his residence in the city of Philadelphia. His father, who passed his entire life in Prussia, served in the army of Napoleon. The father of the subject became a tobacco manufacturer in Philadelphia, and shortly after his marriage, which occurred in the year 1822, he removed to Pennsylvania, where he remained for the ensuing three years, after which he passed one year in Economy, that state. He then came to Ohio and located in Columbiana county, where he resided until 1828, when he came to Canton, which continued to be his home until his death. He here established and was editor and publisher of the Vaterlands Freund und Geist der Zeit, the first German newspaper in the town, and he also published an annual almanac which attained high popularity in this section of the Union, the same being known as Peter Kaufman's Western Almanac. Of his labors in these connections mention is made in the series of articles by John Danner appearing in this volume. The names of his paper and almanac are familiar to the old settlers throughout the state. At a later period Mr. Kaufman published Der Deutsche in Ohio, a paper with which he continued to be identified until within a short time prior to his death, which occurred in 1869. The paper ceased publication many years ago.

Catherine (Wiltz) Kaufman, the mother of the subject of this sketch, was born in a small town on the Rhine, and her parents were members of the Society of Friends. The family immigrated to America in 1816 and settled in Philadelphia, where was solemnized her marriage to Peter Kaufman. She died in Canton in 1893, at the venerable age of ninety-four years, while both she and her husband were well known throughout the country and were numbered among the sterling pioneers of Canton. They became the parents of nine children, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: Lydia is the widow of Professor Henry J. Nothnagel and resides in Columbus, Ohio; Herman (first) died at an early age; Walter died at the age of eighteen years; Peter R. was a valiant soldier in the war of the Rebellion and met his death during the siege of Vicksburg; Louisa M. is the widow of Charles Behlen and resides in East Cleveland, this state; Alfred died at the age of twenty-seven years; Maria M. is the wife of M. M. Herbst, of Canton; Herman (second) died in infancy; and Herman S. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Herman S. Kaufman received his preliminary educational training in a private school conducted by Professor Lang, on North Plum street, Canton, said thoroughfare being now known as McKinley avenue. He later became a student in the public schools, and was graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1862. In the spring of that year he tendered his services in defence of the Union, whose integrity was in jeopardy through the rebellion of the southern states. He enlisted as a private in Company I, Eighty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was organized at Camp Chase, in Columbus, and the command was thence ordered to West Virginia and assigned to guard duty in the vicinity of Clarksburg and Parkersburg. He continued in the service until the expiration of his term of enlistment, being mustered out, at Delaware, Ohio, in September, 1862. Mr. Kaufman then returned to Canton, where he was employed in his father's office until the early spring of the following year, when he again entered the military service, in the quartermaster's department, and was on duty in the south for the greater portion of the year, returning home in December, 1863, after receiving his honorable discharge. In the early part of 1864 he entered upon an apprenticeship at the machinist's trade in the shops of C. Aultman & Company in Canton, while in the spring of the same year he became a member of Company C, Ohio National Guard, which was commanded by Colonel Ephraim Ball. His command passed three or four months at Tod barracks, in the state capital, being there assigned to guard duty. After his return to Canton he decided to not continue his apprenticeship, and accepted the position of bookkeeper for R. C. Kimball, a merchant of Canton, retaining this position one year, and thereafter he was incumbent of various clerical offices for varying intervals.

In March, 1867, Mr. Kaufman entered the employ of the Russell Company, one of the leading manufacturing concerns of Massillon, this county, and was there employed as bookkeeper for two years, at the expiration of which he went to Cleveland, where he was employed in the Ohio National Bank for a long period of fourteen years, gaining a thorough knowledge of the business in all its details and rising to a position of responsibility. He then removed to El Paso, Texas, where he remained eight years as cashier of the First National Bank. In 1890 he returned to Canton and became a member of the executive corps of the City National Bank, of which he has been cashier for the past twelve years, his able and discriminating services having proved a potent factor in insuring the building up of this solid and popular financial institution, while he is highly esteemed in business circles and is recognized as one of the able financiers and representative citizens of his native place. He has been treasurer of the Canton board of trade for the past eleven years and ever manifests a lively interest in all that tends to promote the progress and general welfare of the city and county. In politics he is an independent Republican. He is a member of El Paso Lodge No. 130, Free and Accepted Masons, at El Paso, Texas, and also of El Paso Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar.

In the city of Cleveland, on the 5th of October, 1869, Mr. Kaufman was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Williams, a daughter of Thomas H. and Anna (Bender) Williams, both of whom were born in the state of Virginia, while they were for a number of years residents of Stark county prior to their removal to Cleveland, both being now deceased. Mrs. Kaufman was born in Ohio, and her educational training was received in the public schools of Massillon. Mr. and Mrs. Kaufman are the parents of four children, all of whom remain beneath the home roof, their names being as follows: Mary Josephine, Alfred William, Charles Augustus and Walter Herman.

JOSEPH S. SAXTON.—In its original form the family name of the subject was spelled Sexton, but for several generations the name has been used in its present form. The ancestors of Joseph S. Saxton were originally from England and came to America at a time long prior to the war of the Revolution, but there is no definite knowledge as to where they first settled. The most reliable information obtainable would indicate that it was at Westfield, Connecticut, as it is of record that George Sexton came to that place from England, and died in 1690. The family name is met with frequently all through the eastern states and it is thought that members of this family were among the early settlers of the New England states.

The subject's great-grandfather, George Saxton, who lived in Maryland, was married in Frederick county, that state, to Miss Sarah Harlan, of near Frederick, where they both died. Sarah Harlan's great-grandfather was George Harlan and her grandfather was James Harlan. About 1736 or 1740 James Harlan and wife left Chester county, Pennsylvania, and settled in Maryland or Virginia. They were members of the Friends church and appear to have borne a prominent and honorable part in the settlement of that part of the country in which they resided. James Harlan died in Frederick county, Maryland, and the names of his children were as follows: John, George, James, Jacob, Stephen, Moses, Philip, Elizabeth and Hannah. Of these children, John, the father of Mrs. Sarah Saxton, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1716, and married Martha Ashby. Sarah was born in Frederick county, Maryland, which was afterward cut off and named Washington county.

The descendants of these Harlan ancestors are many and have become scattered through all the states and territories of the Union. They inherited the spirit of venture, perseverance and enterprise and assisted in the opening and settlement of Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas, Texas, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan and many sections of the great west. The name is a familiar one in the public mind, many members of the family having held exalted and honorable positions in state and national affairs during many years of our country's history. Among them may be mentioned Hon. John M. Harlan, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, Major Sellis Harlan, who lost his life at Blue Lick, Kentucky, in August, 1782, and Hon. James Harlan, for many years a representative in congress from Kentucky. It is also a matter of record that several members of this family took part in the struggle of the colonies for independence.

James Saxton, the grandfather of James S. Saxton, was born February 1, 1768, at Frederick, Maryland, and upon attaining mature years learned the trade of nail making. In April, 1785, he removed to Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred on the 21st of December, 1845 or 1848. He was a man of strong character and was reared in the faith of the Methodist church, of which he was long a faithful and consistent member. He was married in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, in 1791, to Miss Hannah Ashbaugh, the daughter of William Ashbaugh. She died at Huntingdon July 14, 1822. Their children are briefly mentioned as follows: (1) John, born September 28, 1792, at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, married, August 3, 1815, Margaret Laird and died at Canton, April 16, 1871. (2) George, born November 11, 1793, died September 22, 1819, at New York city. (3) Rebecca, born December 10, 1795, married October 18, 1831, Christian Perghtal, and died October 1, 1865. (4) Ruth, born January 17, 1798, died in March, 1798. (5) Joseph, born March 22, 1799, married Mary Abercrombie, and died at Washington, D. C. He acquired great repute as an inventor, scientist and maker of clocks, among the latter being the clock in the tower of Independence Hall, Philadelphia, and he was also the maker of United States weights and measures. (6) Penniah, born September 1, 1801, died March 12, 1872. On the 26th of September, 1822, she became the wife of Mordecai Barry, whose death occurred July 29, 1823. (7) Wilson Lee, born October 24, 1803, died September 25, 18—. (8) James, Jr., born October 4, 1805, died February 7, 1873. He was three times married, his first wife, to whom he was united December 15, 1828, being Mary Ann Fochler, his second, Catherine Fochler and the third, Emily Brotherline. (9) Joshua, born December 11, 1807, married, July 15, 1834, Margaret Hemphill and died February 7, 1890. (10) Catherine, born January 30, 1810, died February 27, 1828. (11) William A., born January 19, 1817, died July 9, 1895. On the 28th of April, 1859, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Abercrombie, whose death occurred August 13, 1879.

John Saxton, the father of the subject, was reared to manhood in his native place and attended the subscription schools of the period. He was of a studious disposition and by close application was enabled to acquire a fair business education. In youth he commenced to work at the printing trade and in 1815, accompanied by his young wife, he came to Canton, Ohio, she making the trip on horseback in front of him. Here he established himself in the printing business and issued the first paper ever printed in Canton, it being called the "Repository." He was long and prominently identified with the publishing interests of this city and bore an influential part in many movements contributing to the upbuilding of the city and county and the advancement of many of its interests. His death occurred at Canton on the 16th of April, 1871. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Laird, was born at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, December 13, 1792, and passed away March 28, 1858. They were the parents of the following children, all born at Canton: James A., born May 1, 1812, died March 14, 1887; John L., born November 6, 1817, died July 6, 1836; William, born November 12, 1818, died December 25, same year; Hannah J., born May 13, 1820, and died February 22, 1895; she married Thomas Goodman; George R., born July 3, 1823, died August 25, 1883; he married Kate B. Shorb; Joshua A., born October 9, 1826, died October 10, of the same year; Joseph S., the subject; Thomas W., born October 9, 1831, and died November 1, 1884; he married Maria Slanker.

Joseph Simmons Saxton was born in an old house on the site where now stands the McKinley hotel, the date of his birth being the 7th of October, 1829. At the age of six years he commenced his education by attendance at a private school taught by Mary Atwood, for which his quarterly tuition was two dollars and a half. The first sessions of this school were held up stairs in a building situated on the east side of the public square. Young Saxton was fond of sewing and frequently took such work to school with him, among his work being a patch quilt. He was of a quiet and studious disposition and made good progress in his studies, so that when he quit the school room he had acquired an excellent knowledge of the common English branches. In 1844, in company with his brother James, he embarked in the hardware business, locating in a two-story brick building on East Tuscarawas street owned by F. A. Snyder. Then for four years he was employed as a clerk by his brother. In 1850 the business was removed to South Market street and at that time the subject entered the printing office of his father, who at that time was the editor and published of the Repository. At this time he was but sixteen years old and by the terms of the contract entered into with his father he was to receive a portion of the profits of the business. However, finding that his father needed all the money he could command, young Saxton drew only what money was actually required by him to cover his living expenses, thus proving his filial devotion. There was a book store in connection with the printing office and in this the subject also worked at times. He retained his connection with the printing office but one year and then resumed his position as clerk in the hardware store conducted by his brother. In 1856 Conard Schwedges and the subject were admitted as partners in the business and two years later the subject and John F. Raynolds purchased the stock. They possessed in a eminent degree those qualities so essential to success and for sixteen years continued the business with profit, selling out at the end of that time to Pontius & Essick. Mr. Saxton next engaged in the fire insurance business, which he later added life insurance, and has since been successfully engaged in these lines. His business transactions have demonstrated financial ability of a high order, and his career throughout has been characterized by sound judgment, keen discernment and concentration of purpose which have enabled him to carry successful issue the enterprises to which his energies have been addressed.

On the 7th of October, 1851, Joseph Saxton was united in marriage with Miss Harriet A. Danner, sister of John A. Danner, of Canton. She was born July 15, 1830, and to the union with the subject have been born the following children: Anna Laura, born September 25, 1852, died December 23, 1853; John M., born July 25, 1857, is unmarried and lives in Pueblo, Colorado; Charles C., born January 19, 1860, married, January 19, 1887, Kitt Van Kruren, and also resides at Pueblo, Colorado; Helen B., born April 8, 1862, was married, October 25, 1887, to Appertion H. Dappitt; William G., born June 7, 1867, occupying the position of teller in the First National Bank of Canton.

Religiously Mr. Saxton is a member of the Presbyterian church and at one time served as treasurer of the congregation to which he belonged. Politically he was formerly a Whig, but upon the organization of the Republican party he allied himself with it and has since been a stalwart supporter of its principles. He has never been an office seeker, but has ever used his influence to induce his party to place upon the ticket the names of men morally and mentally qualified for the positions to be filled. A man of unswerving integrity, his high standing in the community is second to that of no other citizen.

NORMAN C. RAFF, of Canton, was born January 29, 1857, in the city of Canton, and is the son of the late Judge George W. Raff. He attended the Union public school, and the Canton Academy, graduating from the academy in 1876. He then entered Wooster University, where he was graduated with honors in the class of 1880. While at Wooster he was a member of the Phi Kappi Psi fraternity and of the Irving Literary Society. In his sophomore year he took what was known as the "Sophomore Prize" and at the end of his junior year he took the second "Junior Prize" for an original declamation, while in his senior year he received first honors as a debater in the college inter-society contest, in addition to taking the honors of his class. After graduating he remained at Wooster for several months, assisting the grand treasurer of the Knights of Honor in managing the business of his office, and in July, 1881, he went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, and took a position as bookkeeper in the Central Bank of that place, owned by Reynolds Brothers. His advancement was so rapid that in less than three years he had risen to the position of cashier. Not long afterwards the Central and First National Banks of Albuquerque were merged in one, and he was made cashier of the joint concern, which bore the name of The First National Bank. In October, 1885, he accompanied his parents and brother on a visit to California, returning to Albuquerque in January, 1886. In April, 1886, he resigned his position as cashier in order to give his attention to several mining interests, which he owned at Kingston, New Mexico, intending afterwards to engage in the study of the law, but soon after reaching Kingston he was induced to take the management of the Percha Bank, as cashier. Later, after disposing of his banking interests in New Mexico, Mr. Raff established the Bank of Indian Territory at Guthrie, Oklahoma, at the time that territory was opened to the public by the government. This bank was one of the first establishments of the kind in the territory, and of it Mr. Raff was president and practical owner. In 1891 Mr. Raff returned to Canton, and after a short stay in this city went east and became associated with Thomas Edison, the inventor, in connection with some of that gentleman's inventions. This called Mr. Raff to Chicago, where general offices were then located, during the World's Fair year. One year later the offices were removed to New York city. Mr. Raff was at the head of the company which brought out Mr. Edison's kinetoscope, vitascope and other moving picture machines, and which also had much to do with the introduction of Mr. Edison's phonograph. After these machines had been thoroughly introduced and the business fully organized throughout the country, and he had completed the object of his original association with Mr. Edison, Mr. Raff turned over the business and entered into a general bond and high-grade investments business at No. 63 Wall street, New York city, in which he is still engaged.

On the death of his brother, Edward S., Mr. Raff became, under the will, executor of the estate, and frequently is called to Canton to attend to the business in this connection.

JAMES H. ELLER is a native of Monroe county, Ohio, and was born at Malaga, Ohio, on the 3d of July, 1838, his parents having devoted the major portion of their lives to agricultural pursuits and having been in moderate circumstances. The subject received only a limited education. He passed his boyhood days in Monroe and Belmont counties, assisting his parents in the farm work and attending the country schools as opportunity afforded, while he also served an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade. He was preparing to enter educational work in a private school, but turned from this plan in order to assume the higher duties which came with the President's call for volunteers to assist in defending the union against the rebellious South. In the month of August, 1861, in Monroe county, Mr. Eller enlisted, for a term of three years, as a private in Company E, Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, but was promoted to sergeant soon after entering the service, the regiment being in command of Colonel George Crook, who was later made brigadier general of volunteers and who attained distinction through his gallant record in this great fratricidal conflict. The regiment was assigned to the Army of West Virginia, and later on was attached to the Fourteenth Corps of the Army of the Cumberland and participated in many of the notable and sanguinary engagements of the war. Later on the regiment was detached from the Fourteenth Corps and served the remainder of time in the Eastern Army, the subject having taken part in the battles of Corinth, South Mountain, Antietam, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and many other engagements of minor importance, while he served as color sergeant in all of the above named engagements, being incumbent of this office at the time of receiving his honorable discharge, at Harper's Ferry, in September, 1864. He was in active service somewhat more than three years and was ever found at the post of duty and ever ready to discharge all labors devolving upon him, his record being one which will redound to his credit as long as the nation is mindful of the brave boys in blue through whose efforts its integrity was thus perpetuated.

At the close of his military service Mr. Eller returned to Ohio and engaged in contracting and building, his principal field of operations in the line being in the counties of Monroe and Belmont, and there he remained until 1884, when he came to Canton and accepted the position of foreman for the Canton Steel Roofing Company, with which concern he remained until the spring of 1887, when he started in his present line of enterprise on a modest scale, his original place of business being the barn on his residence premises, on East Tuscarawas street. Later he leased ground from the Markling estate and thereon erected temporary shops and in 1891 he purchased the site of his present well equipped plant, at the corner of Gibbs and East Fifth streets, where he has succeeded in building up an excellent business and one which is the result of well directed effort on his own part, since his capitalistic investment at the inception of the enterprise was only three hundred dollars. In addition to his business plant Mr. Eller is the owner of an excellent residence property at 1005 West Tuscarawas street, where he has maintained his home for the past six years. He is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, having been identified with the party from the time of attaining his legal majority, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose spiritual and temporal work he takes a deep and active interest, being at the present time a member of the board of trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton, of which his wife likewise is a devoted member. Fraternally Mr. Eller vitalizes his interest in his old comrades of the Civil war by retaining membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, being identified with McKinley Post No. 25, while he also holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1867 Mr. Eller was united in marriage, in Monroe county, to Miss Elizabeth Sloan, who died eighteen months later, and in 1877 he was married to Miss Melissa Claudy, a daughter of Judge Robert Claudy of Somerton, Belmont county. One child was born of the first marriage, Martha C., who is now the wife of Ellis Deaver, of Canton.

EDWARD J. MEYER was born in Canton township, Stark county, on the 9th of April, 1858, being a son of Joseph and Catherine A. (Meyer) Meyer, the former of whom died at the age of fifty-eight years, while the latter is still living in Canton, venerable in years and loved and revered by a wide circle of friends. In the memoir of the honored father of the subject, appearing on other pages of this work, is incorporated most interesting genealogical data, and to this sketch we would refer the reader for information patently germane to the personal career of our subject. Joseph Meyer passed his entire life in Stark county, though he completed his educational discipline in Emmittsburg College, Maryland, in which state his father had been an influential citizen prior to his emigration to Ohio. He devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits in Stark county, owning fifteen hundred acres of land and maintaining the active supervision of this large estate, which he devoted to diversified farming and to the raising of high-grade stock, including fine horses, so that the subject early became familiar with the line of industrial enterprise in which he has attained so marked precedence.

Edward J. Meyer secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools and thereafter continued his studies in the college at Louisville, this county, while in 1871 he was matriculated in his father's alma mater, Emmittsburg College, Maryland, where he remained three years. That the best of advantages were afforded him in the pursuit of his education is thus certain, while he supplemented the training secured at Emmittsburg by entering Duff's Commercial College, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he completed the prescribed course and was duly graduated as a member of the class of 1876, being thus well fortified for the practical duties and responsibilities of life. After leaving school Mr. Meyer located on a farm on the Fulton road, west of Canton, where he made his home for a period of three years, at the expiration of which he effected the purchase of the Meyer's Lake property, two miles northwest of Canton, said property having been a portion of the landed estate of his grandfather, in whose honor the lake was named. When the subject assumed control of the property the lake, though of ample dimensions, was lacking in attractiveness, being surrounded by marshy banks and being little more than a stagnant pond. He at once set himself to the task of improving the shore, removing the tangled and decayed vegetation from the bed of the lake, and developing it into an attractive sheet of water. Here he erected the Lakeview hotel and transformed the property into a most idyllic summer resort, and one whose attractions have been greatly appreciated by the people of Canton, from which city thousands go each year for a day or season of recreation and rest. It was largely due to the efforts of Mr. Meyer that the lines of the electric street car system of Canton were extended to this popular resort, thus rendering it easily accessible, and that at a cost within the means of even the poorest individuals, so that from a humanitarian standpoint, aside from personal enterprise, his labors proved singularly effective. Mr. Meyer conducted the resort most successfully for an interval of four years and then disposed of the property. In 1883 he purchased his present magnificent estate, which comprises three hundred acres of most productive land, the major portion of which is available for cultivation, though he, as a matter of course, utilizes many acres in connection with the breeding of his horses, in which line he conducts business upon a very extensive scale.

This farm was likewise a portion of his grandfather's estate, and at the time our subject purchased it was the property of his brother Henry. In 1889 Mr. Meyer erected his large and finely equipped training station, the same being one hundred and fifty feet in length and eighty feet in width, in the extreme measures, while it is two stories in height and surmounted in the center by a fine tower, which rises to a height of sixty feet. The building is semi-Gothic in architectural style, and was designed throughout by Mr. Meyer, while it is doubtful whether there is a finer structure of the sort in the Union. The barn proper is encircled by a covered track, practically enclosed within the building and a tenth of a mile in length, the same being for training purposes during the winter months and in inclement weather, while a short distance in the rear of the stables is a fine half-mile track, which is one of the best private tracks known to western turfdom. Mr. Meyer is an enthusiastic horseman, and there are few, if any, better judges of the good points in the noble animal to whose breeding he has so successfully given his attention. He was the owner of "Black Cloud," the fastest Mambrino stallion in the world, with a record of 2:17 $\frac{1}{4}$. Concerning the more notable horses on this fine farm a decade ago, a publication issued at that time spoke as follows:

"Black Cloud" was purchased and taken from Kentucky to Michigan by General Custer, and after the death of the General was the object of prolonged litigation. He made his record of 2:17 $\frac{1}{4}$ in the great champion stallion race in Chicago in 1882. Another noted horse owned by Mr. Meyer is the famous "Bud Crooke" with a pacing record of 2:15 $\frac{1}{4}$. He is the fastest pacing entire son of "George Wilkes," and the third fastest entire son in the world of the mightiest stallion the world ever knew. "Bud Crooke's" sire, "George Wilkes," held a world record (2:22); "Bud Crooke" holds a world record, and "Bud Crooke's" son "Hontas Crooke," holds a world record—something never before known in the history of horses—three world's records held by one breed of horses. Another stallion with a running record of 1:44 $\frac{1}{2}$ is "Wanba." He was bred by Charles W. Bradley, of Richmond, Kentucky.

Mr. Meyer also has upon his farm the great-great-granddaughter of the horse his grandfather rode to Stark county from Baltimore, Maryland, in 1817, when he came west to purchase his land, for which he paid eleven dollars per acre. The horses have been kept and bred on the farm ever since, and are very high-spirited and fine animals. The training barn is undoubtedly one of the best, if not the best, in the country. There is nothing lacking, and in some departments the barn is almost palatial. Under a large oak tree standing near the residence of Mr. Meyer, Beaver Cap, the famous chief of the Wyandottes, at one time had his cabin. A large spring rises out of the earth near the tree.

Prior to going into the trotting and pacing horse breeding, he bred and raced runners, among which were Emma Abbott, Wanba, Seymour, What Not, and many others which became noted on the turf. Mr. Meyer, together with his brother, George W., and his sisters, Mrs. John Blake and Celeste, gave twenty acres of land in the incorporate limits of Canton for the site of the present magnificent plant of the Deuber-Hampden Watch Manufacturing Company, which was indeed a donation of magnitude and incalculable advantage to Canton. Among the other interests and properties acquired by Mr. Meyer was the Yohe Hotel, one of the old and well-known hotels in Canton, situated on the corner of North Market and Third streets, which he purchased in March, 1903. He at once began remodeling the property and transformed it into a first-class, up-to-date hotel. This hotel he re-named the St. Edward. The hotel has sixty rooms, with all modern improvements, such as elevator, steam heat, and electric lights. The hotel has a fine collection of oil paintings, being the only hotel in Canton to boast of anything of the kind.

Mr. Meyer is a man of fine administrative ability and business sagacity, as is evident from the pronounced success which has attended his efforts, and he is regarded as one of the representative horse-breeders of the Union and as one of the most influential and successful business men of Stark county, while his course has ever been ordered along the undeflecting line of integrity and honor, so that he has retained the confidence and high regard of all who know him. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party. He was twice nominated by his party for the office of county commissioner and also for county treasurer. He is thoroughly public-spirited in his attitude and all worthy enterprises projected for the conservation of the best interests of his county and state are certain to receive his earnest co-operation and support. Fraternally he is identified with the Canton Lodge No. 68, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in Canton. Upon his farm Mr. Meyer has one of the most spacious and beautiful residences in this section of the state, the house being constructed of brick and being thoroughly modern in all its appointments, though its nucleus is the residence erected by his paternal grandfather in 1822, the place then being one of the finest in the state, as is it now under its modernized form.

On the 21st of December, 1881, Mr. Meyer was united in marriage to Miss Helen C. Patton, who was born in Canton, being a daughter of Thomas Patton, who was likewise born in this city when it was a mere pioneer hamlet, his parents having been numbered among its first settlers. He was for many years prominently engaged in the mercantile business in Canton, where he passed the evening of his life in retirement from active labors, his death occurring in 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer have one son, Joseph E.

PRESTON HOPPES was born September 29, 1847, and is a son of William and Sarah (Lee) Hoppes, of whose nine children six still survive, namely: Mary, whose home is in Alliance, where she still enjoys a life of single blessedness; Adeline, also unmarried and likewise a resident of Alliance; Rebecca, wife of Samuel B. Tea; Valeria, widow of William Fitzpatrick, with her home also in Alliance; Preston, whose life career will be further detailed in this brief record, and Lonisa, who is the wife of William Busby, of this, Washington, township. Those deceased are Abigail, who died, aged forty-eight years, in 1900, and William H., who was shot in the Civil war.

William Hoppes, the father of the above named family, was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, in 1808, a son of Jacob Hoppes, a very prominent farmer of his community and also a veteran of the war of 1812. William Hoppes was reared to the blacksmith's trade in Berks county, Pennsylvania, where he worked until 1841, when he came to Stark county, Ohio, and located on what is now known as the Richard Lee farm, but which was then the property of Mr. Hoppes' father-in-law, and worked at his trade in connection with farming about one year. In 1842 he purchased the present Hoppes homestead, which is now owned by Preston Hoppes' two maiden sisters. Soon after making this purchase Mr. Hoppes erected a modern dwelling, in which he resided until his death, which occurred in his ninety-third year, in the faith of the Lutheran church and in politics a Republican. He was one of the best known horse dealers in his section of the country, as he entered into the trade in the pioneer days and drove his animals through to the Eastern markets until the advent of railroads, which he utilized until his seventy-fifth year.

Mrs. Sarah (Lee) Hoppes was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, about 1814, and was a daughter of Jeremiah Lee, who was distantly connected with the Lincoln family and the ancestors of Gen. Robert E. Lee. With the family of Daniel Boone, grandfather Lee and Richard and William Hoppes walked all the way from Pennsylvania to Stark county, Ohio; they then returned to the Keystone state, but came back to Ohio in covered wagons with their families, in 1841, and made permanent settlement. Here the mother died at the age of sixty-four years, in 1878.

Preston Hoppes was reared to agriculture in the home place and acquired his education in a structure now used by him as a wagon shed. He continued to work during the summer seasons on this farm until within four years of his marriage, during which period he worked on a railroad. In 1874 he was joined in matrimony with Miss Louisa Maudrue, who was born in Maximo, Ohio, a daughter of Joseph Maudrue, whose life record is given in full on another page of this work. After his marriage Preston Hoppes settled on his present farm, which was then the property of his father and which comprises sixty-nine acres, besides which he owns a farm of thirty-eight acres three miles to the west. Mrs. Louisa (Maudrue) Hoppes passed away in 1884, the mother of two children, Lucius J. and Bertha. Lucius J. is married to Zula Hoiles, who has borne him two children, William and Leonard, while Bertha is still single and resides with her father, who remains a widower. The father and Lucius J. are now farming the old homestead, while the daughter manages the household.

Lucius J. Hoppes was one of the brave boys who volunteered for the Spanish-American war and served in Cuba with Company K, Eighth Ohio Infantry. That the martial spirit pervaded is also shown by the fact that William H. Hoppes, a brother of Preston Hoppes, served in Company K, One Hundred and Tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and lost his life in the battle of the Wilderness. Mr. Hoppes and his son Lucius are Republicans in politics, but neither has ever sought an office. The family hold a very high position socially, and the name is honored wherever it is known.

MRS. CAROLINE JANE McCULLOUGH EVERHARD was born at Massillon, Ohio, September 14, 1843. Her Scotch-Irish ancestors on the paternal side settled in the latter part of the eighteenth century in that part of eastern Ohio which is now Jefferson county. They were large landholders, taking a prominent part in the development of the commercial interests in that section, in municipal affairs and in church organization. Her father, Thomas McCullough, a trusted associate and lifelong friend of James Duncan, the founder of Massillon, came to the infant place in 1838. In 1840 he was married to Nancy Warriner Melendy, of English ancestry, of the Perry family, from near Brattleboro, Vermont. A most cultivated woman, she was firm in her faith and adherence to the principles which have so unfailingly and distinctively marked our Puritan ancestors. The daughter, who early manifested the decided and distinctive traits of a strong character, was fortunate in having the careful guidance of a wise and thoughtful mother, most conscientious and conservative, with the high ideals, pure and lofty motives which notably characterized the New England mothers. Hence it may be that, although Ohio born and bred, Mrs. Everhard seemed, in her life and character, to hold a place side by side with the foremost of New England's noble women, yet she had that broad charity and liberality of thought which is claimed as a development of the western life. She inherited in large measure the sturdy traits of her parents, which made their lives such an influence in the commercial, religious and social life of Massillon in its early formative period, where they were among the pioneers. After completing the course of instruction in the Massillon high school under the foremost educators of the state, she was placed in Brooke Hall, Media, Pennsylvania, Miss M. L. Eastman principal, graduating valedictorian in 1862. November 7, 1865, in St.

P. M^cCallough Everhard

Timothy's Episcopal church of Massillon, she was married to Henry Hewit Everhard. To them were born three children—Ethel Rebecca (Mrs. Charles A. Schmettau, of Toledo), Melville McCullough (located at Massillon) and Marion (Mrs. S. B. Johns, of Brooklyn, New York). A devoted mother, her children were given her personal care and training. No pains or labor were spared, no sacrifice was too great to aid in their development. An ardent student, to her the companionship of books was very real, and the accumulation of her large and valuable library was as the gathering of friends. Fond of travel, her published letters were filled with vivid description and most entertaining incident. She was one of the founders of the U. C. D. Club and was always active and interested in the work of the literary or study clubs of the town. By special request she served for several years on the examining board for teachers. Her withdrawal from the board called forth many expressions of regret. Her mother died in 1877. The loss of a brother in early life left her an only child, and at the death of her father, in 1885, she assumed much of the care and responsibility of the inherited estate and was chosen to fill positions that he had occupied. She was the first woman to be made a bank director in the state of Ohio. In 1886 she was appointed by the judge of the court of common pleas trustee of the Charity Rotch School to fill the vacancy caused by the death of her father, the first instance in Ohio of the appointment of a woman to a place of trust that required bond. She was made president of the board and served in that capacity until her death. She was also appointed by the court a member of the visiting board of the public institutions of the county, including the jail, infirmary and children's home. With her keen sense of justice she was an enthusiastic worker for equal suffrage. She organized the Equal Rights Society in Massillon and Canton, and was an active worker in the state and national associations. She served for some years as president of the Ohio Woman Suffrage Association. It was principally due to her efforts, assisted by Mrs. Katherine B. Claypole, as secretary, that the school suffrage was secured for women in Ohio. As an officer of the national association she appeared during their conventions at Washington before the congressional committee appointed to consider the question of equal suffrage. A fine parliamentarian, a woman of commanding presence, she presided with grace and dignity. She was prompt and accurate in the conduct of business, just and considerate in the treatment of her co-laborers and always a popular officer. She was vice-president of the board of trustees of the McClymonds Public Library from the time of its organization. Her trained mind and cultivated literary taste made her a valuable member also of the book committee. As president of the Woman's Cemetery Association she gave much time to the furtherance of that work. From childhood an ardent friend of dumb animals, she promoted the work of the Massillon Humane Society, of which she was an efficient officer from its beginning. Her earnestness and enthusiasm were an incentive and inspiration to others. Naturally a reformer, she was ever ready and anxious to right wrongs; a humanitarian in her efforts to help the oppressed and strengthen the weak. Called to public work beyond her strength, she entered upon it as a duty, labored most conscientiously, striving eminently to be just, consistent and firm in her conviction that in the home, the church and the state man and woman should work side by side. Her death, April 14, 1902, after a short illness, was felt to be a public calamity. She was a woman of marked individuality, keen insight, ready wit; a strong personality, with untiring energy, intolerant of deceit or meanness; an earnest seeker for truth and light, accepting no dogmas, inculcating morals founded on principle not superstition, combining with strength and force of character a touching love of nature and tender humanity.

JACOB M. HOWENSTINE.—The subject's parents, George and Christina (Sickafosse) Howenstine, were both natives of Pennsylvania, the former having been born in Franklin county and the latter in Westmoreland county. Both were of stanch German lineage, the respective families having been identified with the history of the old Keystone state from the early colonial epoch. After their marriage the parents removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and in 1823 they took up their abode on the farm now owned by our subject, the same being then covered with the native timber and bearing slight semblance to its present condition, as one of the finely improved farms of one of the most attractive sections of a great state. These worthy folk here continued to reside during the remainder of their long and useful lives. The mother of the subject died when nearly eighty years of age, and her husband passed away in his eighty-ninth year, both having died on the old homestead. Mr. Howenstine was a Republican in his political proclivities and both he and his wife held the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. They became the parents of nine children, of whom six were living at the time of the father's death, namely: William S., deceased; John S.; Margaret, who became the wife of Christian Henry, died in Indiana; Catherine is the widow of Jesse Hissim, and resides in South Whitley, Indiana; Harriet, who became the wife of S. P. Wilson, died near Louisville, this county; Samuel S., Sarah and Lyman are deceased; and Jacob M. is the immediate subject of this review.

Jacob M. Howenstine, whose name initiates this sketch, was born on the farm where he now lives, on sections 11 and 12, Pike township, on the 8th of December, 1851, and here he was reared to maturity, being indebted to the district schools for the early educational advantages which were his, while he waxed strong in physical vigor in assisting in the work of the farm, to which he began to contribute his quota while a mere boy. At Sparta, Pike township, on the 6th of October, 1872, Mr. Howenstine was united in marriage to Miss Alice Sanford, who was born in Illinois, on the 4th of June, 1853, being a daughter of James and Jane (Russell) Sanford, both of whom are living. To the union of the subject and his estimable wife has been born one son, Homer C., who is now at home.

Mr. Howenstine is essentially public-spirited in his attitude, and has ever shown a lively interest in all that has touched the general welfare and in political matters he is stanchly arrayed in support of the Republican party. That he holds the high regard of the people of his native township is evident when we revert to the fact that for eight consecutive years he was incumbent of the office of township trustee, in which capacity he did much to further the legitimate improvement of public utilities in the township and county. In the autumn of 1895 he was elected a member of the directorate of the county infirmary, of which position he was incumbent for two terms, having been chosen as his own successor in the autumn of 1898. His interest in education has been of a helpful order, and for fifteen years he has been a most progressive and efficient member of the board of education of Pike township, while he has been chairman of this body since 1899. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, to whose spiritual and temporal work he contributes liberally in a financial way and also by personal influence and active interposition, his wife likewise being a member of the church. Fraternally he is identified with the Junior

Order of United American Mechanics, of which he has been an officer in the state council of Ohio, and he also holds membership in J. C. Luper Tent No. 49, Knights of the Maccabees, at Sparta. The fine farm of Mr. Howenstine comprises one hundred and nineteen acres, is devoted to diversified farming and stock growing, and is equipped with an attractive and substantial residence and other excellent buildings, everything about the homestead being kept in the best of repair and order, and the operations being conducted according to those scientific principles and true business methods which have as great potency in this line of industry as in any other field of human endeavor and achievement.

ALFRED P. YOUNG was born on the paternal homestead, in Pike township, on the 6th of October, 1847, being the fifth in order of birth of the ten children—eight sons and two daughters—of George J. and Harriet (Parker) Young, who took up their residence on a farm in this township shortly after their marriage, and here passed the remainder of their lives, retaining the respect and esteem of all who knew them. The father attained the age of seventy-seven years, his wife having preceded him into eternal rest, her death occurring at the age of sixty-four. George J. Young was a man of sterling character, industrious and energetic and endowed with excellent administrative ability, so that he not only improved a good farm and brought the same under a high state of cultivation, but was also able to so manage his affairs as to attain a high degree of prosperity. He was a Republican in his political faith and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Of their children nine are living at the present time.

of field and meadow and gaining that practical knowledge of methods and agricultural economics which has enabled him to make a definite success of the noble and basic vocation of husbandry. He received his early educational training in the public schools of the locality and period, and made good use of the advantages thus afforded him, thus laying a secure foundation upon which to rear the superstructure under the direction of that wise headmaster, Experience. He gave evidence of the intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of his nature at the time of the war of the Rebellion, when at the age of eighteen years, in February, 1860, he enlisted as a private in Company F, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war, the regiment going to the front and being assigned to the Army of the East, under command of General Thomas. After victory had crowned the Union arms and the perpetuity of the nation was assured he received his honorable discharge, at Nashville, Tennessee, whence he returned to his home in Pike township and prepared to win the victories which peace ever has in store,—victories no less renowned than those of war, if the same fidelity to duty be manifest. Mr. Young retains an active interest in his old comrades in arms, whose ranks are so swiftly being decimated by the one invincible foe, death, and is a member of B. T. Steiner Post No. 511, Grand Army of the Republic, at Pierce.

In Pike township, on the 28th of December, 1869, Mr. Young was united in marriage to Miss Jane Buchman, a daughter of Henry and Mary (Whitehead) Buchman, honored pioneers of Pike township, where the death of each occurred. Mrs. Young was born on the parental farmstead, in this township, on the 26th of September, 1850, and was here reared and educated, being a woman of kindly and gracious presence and one who has proved a true helpmeet to her husband. They became the parents of two sons, Edward H., who is now at Canton, and Homer, who died in childhood. The home farm of the subject comprises sixty-nine acres of most fertile land, and its productivity is maintained at the highest standard, through the discriminating methods employed in its cultivation, while the permanent improvements are of the best order, bespeaking thrift and progressiveness on the part of the owner.

In politics Mr. Young has ever accorded a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and has been an active worker in its ranks, while recognition of his peculiar eligibility for positions of public trust and responsibility has led to his consecutive retention in the office of township trustee since 1895, a fact whose significance is prima facie, showing the confidence and regard in which he is held in his native township and the satisfactory character of his administration of official duties. Fraternally he is identified with J. C. Luper Tent No. 49, Knights of the Maccabees, at Pierce, and also with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics.

GEORGE W. HINES was born on the 23d of January, 1840, his birth taking place in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio. His father, Washington Hines, was born in York, York county, Pennsylvania, July 4, 1811. His mother, whose maiden name was Christina J. Hockensmith, was also a native of the Keystone state, having been born near the banks of the beautiful and far-famed Juniata river, in 1815. Subsequently they removed with their respective families to Stark county, Ohio, and there, about 1837, they were united in marriage. Shortly after this event the young couple settled in Pike township, this county, and there passed the rest of their lives. Washington Hines passed away in October, 1883, and his wife in September, 1894. They were the par-

The subject was reared upon the home farm and is indebted to the common schools for his mental discipline, receiving a fairly good education. He was of a studious disposition and attained a sufficient proficiency to entitle him to a teacher's certificate, after obtaining which he taught one term of school in 1869-70. Mr. Hines learned the carpenter's trade and followed that occupation for about nineteen years. He was a careful and conscientious workman and was constantly kept busily employed in the building line. With the exception of his carpenter work Mr. Hines has all his life followed the pursuit of agriculture and his entire life thus far has been spent in Pike township. That he stands high in the estimation of the citizens of his locality is evidenced by the fact that for the long period of fifteen years he held the office of justice of the peace, administering the affairs in a thoroughly impartial and satisfactory manner. He has ever taken a deep interest in educational matters and for nine years served on the board of education. He has also held a commission as notary public since 1897.

During the later months of the war of the Rebellion, when the result seemed to be hanging in the balance, Mr. Hines volunteered his services to aid in the suppression of the insurrection, enlisting, in 1864, in Company F, One Hundred and Sixty-second Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The term of his service was four months, but, though the period was comparatively brief, yet in that short time Mr. Hines saw some arduous service and nobly bore his share of the hardships and privations which were a soldier's lot, having at last the satisfaction of feeling that his efforts had not been altogether in vain, but that once more Old Glory waved over a reunited people and liberty, in its fullest sense, was an established fact.

Mr. Hines' farm consists of fifty-nine acres of as good and productive land as can be found in Pike township. He believes thoroughly in the dignity of his calling and spares neither time nor expense in keeping his place in every respect up to a high standard of excellence. His improvements in the way of buildings, fences and other accessories of an up-to-date farm bespeak the presence of an intelligent and wide-awake farmer, while his influence as a citizen, interested in whatever is calculated to promote the material interests of the community, marked him as public spirited in all the term implies.

In Pike township, November 7, 1869, Mr. Hines was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Miss Jane M. Steiner, a daughter of the late Jacob and Elizabeth Steiner. Mrs. Hines is a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in Westmoreland county. She is a lady of wide reading, marked intelligence and force of character and has proven to her husband a helpmate in the truest sense of the word.

JOHN SCHRANTZ.—The ancestors of the subject have been numbered among the sturdy German emigrants who gave so great impetus to the industrial development and civic progress of the old Keystone state. His father, Michael Schrantz, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared to the age of sixteen years, when he drove a team to Stark county. He married Miss Sarah Mohler, in 1840, who was likewise a native of that county. Here Michael Schrantz reclaimed and improved the farm and continued his residence here until 1880, when he removed to a farm in Jackson township, where both he and his wife passed the residue of their lives, honored by all who knew them and distinguished for those attributes of character which make for strong and noble manhood and womanhood. The father died at the age of sixty-eight years and his widow lived to attain the age of seventy, both having been devoted members of the German Baptist church. They became the parents of nine children, of whom the subject of this review was the eighth in order of birth, and of the number one son and one daughter are still living.

John Schrantz was born on the farm which is now his home, the date of his nativity having been September 18, 1854, and it is interesting to here record the fact that this place has continuously been his home during his entire lifetime. He grew to manhood under the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the farm, finding the work and experience of value to him in more ways than one, while he has never faltered in his allegiance to the noble art of husbandry, of whose independence and vitalizing powers he has been fully appreciative. His fine farm comprises sixty-six acres, is maintained under effective cultivation, is improved with excellent buildings, good fences, etc., and gives unmistakable evidences of thrift and prosperity.

Mr. Schrantz has not confined his interest to the forwarding of his own success merely, but has ever been known as thoroughly public-spirited in his attitude. He has been a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, in whose cause he has taken an active interest. In 1898 he was elected to the office of township trustee, and that his efforts in the connection met with popular approval and endorsement was significantly shown in his re-election to the office in the spring of 1902, so that he is now incumbent of the same. He also served one term as township assessor, whose somewhat delicate functions he exercises with that discrimination and fairness which forbade antagonism, while he was for many years a member of the school board of Lake township, also serving in this capacity in Plain township, his interest in educational affairs having been insistent and constant. He is a member of the New Berlin

Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, while he and his wife are prominent in the social life of the community, having a host of warm friends, to whom the hospitality of their pleasant home is ever extended.

In the city of Canton, on the 6th of August, 1876, Mr. Schrantz was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Good, who was born in Plain township, this county, on the 10th of May, 1858, a daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Witwer) Good, both natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where their marriage was solemnized and whence they came to Ohio about the year 1848 and located on a farm in Plain township, this county, where the father devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits, being one of the honored citizens of the community. He died on the 18th of June, 1877, at the age of fifty-six years, his widow being now seventy-nine years old. They became the parents of thirteen children, of whom six are yet living, Mrs. Schrantz having been the seventh in order of birth. To the subject and wife have been born six children, namely: Olivia, who is the wife of Hiram Wehl, of Lake township, Stark county, Ohio; Ira, who died at the age of ten years; and Pearl, Grover, Florence and Claude, who remain at the parental home.

HON. JOHNSON SHERRICK.—Among Canton's prominent citizens, few, if any, have had a more active and successful career than has the Hon. Johnson Sherrick, who is a native son of old Stark, and who for over thirty years has been closely identified with the commercial, financial and public interests of this city. Mr. Sherrick was born on a farm near the city of Canton, on August 28, 1841, the son of Christian and Mary (Danforth) Sherrick. His grandfather was John, a native of Washington county, Maryland, and who was one of the pioneers of Stark county. He married, in his native state, Nancy Wyant, and with his family came to Ohio in 1816, settling in Stark county, near the present city of Canton. Christian, father of the subject, was born in Washington county, Maryland, on November 8, 1812, and was but four years of age when his parents made the long and tedious journey from Maryland through Pennsylvania into Stark county. He remained with his father in Stark county until 1839, when he went to Dayton, Ohio, and engaged in packet canal boating between Dayton and Cincinnati; he also visited New Orleans, spending a winter in the south. In the fall of 1840 he married Mary Danforth, of Hamilton, Ohio, and soon afterwards returned to Stark county. He then located on one of his father's farms, where he resided for two years, and then removed to the old Sherrick homestead. In 1873 he retired from active life, and removing to Canton, resided here until his death, in 1892. His wife died in 1856. Seven children were born to Christian and Mary Sherrick, as follows: Johnson, the subject; Louisa married Charles Spangler, of Stark county; Joseph died at the age of twenty-four years; Elvina, unmarried; Jacob D. resides in Seattle, Washington; Ida married W. J. Hartzell, resides at Ballard, Washington, and Alwyn B., who resides in Canton.

Johnson Sherrick was educated in the common schools, attending the Canton high school, and taught school during several winters. In 1863 he engaged in business in St. Louis, Missouri, but a short time thereafter he enlisted in the marine service of the federal government, and was detailed for duty on a government transport. He was discharged from service after a severe spell of sickness for disability, and returning to Stark county he taught school in 1865. During the years 1866 and 1867, he held a position in the hardware stores of C. C. Snyder, at Canton, Miller & Byers, at Wooster, Ohio, and Whitney & Gaines, at Loudonville, Ohio. In 1870, together with Louis Miller, he engaged in the hardware business in Canton. Four years later Mr. Miller sold his interest in this business to D. D. Miller, of Wooster, Mr. Sherrick's father-in-law, but about eight years after he purchased his father-in-law's business and conducted the business himself under his own name until 1887, when he formed the Canton Hardware Company, which was corporated with Mr. Sherrick as president and treasurer. This position he held until January, 1903, when he retired from the business. This company is one of the largest in the hardware line in northern Ohio, and will remain as a monument to the industry, enterprise and fine business ability of its founders. For a number of years Mr. Sherrick has been prominent in financial and banking circles in Canton. He was for several years vice-president of the City National Bank, and in 1890 he was elected president of the First National Bank, a position he held until his resignation. He is still largely interested and a member of the board of directors of this bank, which is one of the strongest institutions of the city. He was one of the founders of the Nye Manufacturing Company, and was president of that company for a length of time. He was also one of the founders of the Canton Pottery Company. He served as a director of the Board of Trade of Canton for many years.

In 1873 Mr. Sherrick was elected from Stark county as a member of the Ohio legislature, being the first Democrat elected from the county in many years. He was re-elected in 1875 and in 1877 was elected to the Ohio senate from the district composed of Stark and Carroll counties. He served as chairman of the Democratic county central committee and has frequently been a delegate to the Democratic state conventions. He served a term as president of the Canton board of education and also served a term in the city council.

On October 14, 1875, Mr. Sherrick married Charlotte, only daughter of the late D. D. Miller, of Wooster, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Sherrick are experienced travelers, they having traveled over this country and Europe extensively. In 1889 they spent a portion of the winter in the Bermuda Islands; in 1894 they visited England, Scotland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Italy, Switzerland and France; in 1896 they spent the winter in the city of Mexico and the surrounding country, traveling through Mexico, and returning home by way of California; in 1900 they visited Egypt, ascended the Nile, traveled through the Holy land, Syria, Damascus, Jerusalem, Turkey, visiting Constantinople, Greece, Italy and France; in 1903 they traveled through Spain, the northern part of Africa, visiting Tangier, Morocco, Algiers, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Germany, Holland, Belgium and Switzerland. From each of these countries and places visited Mr. Sherrick sent letters home to the local papers which were published and read with great interest and pleasure by their friends and acquaintances, and by the public in general.

FREDERIC HECKMAN is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born on the parental farmstead, in Green township, Summit county, Ohio, on the 25th of October, 1856, and being the second in order of birth of the six children of Joseph and Elizabeth (Myers) Heckman, the former of whom was born in Summit county, Ohio, and the latter in Summit county, Ohio. The father of the subject was a man of sterling character and ever held the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who knew him, and while his life was not lived upon an exalted plane, it was one which typified the maximum of honor and usefulness. He died on the 2d of October, 1890, at his home, in the fullness of years and well earned honors. His loved and devoted wife is still living, at the age of sixty-nine years, and she maintains her home in Green township.

Frederic Heckman was reared under the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm, and his preliminary educational training was received in the district schools of the locality. He was appreciative even as a boy, and his ambition for the attainment of a more liberal education was early quickened. Thus he continued his studies in the high school at Uniontown, Stark county, under the tutorage of Professors Benjamin F. Carl and John R. Davis, and through his own efforts largely supplied the means which enabled him to continue his educational work. He was for a time a student in the Ohio Normal University, at Ada, and in 1888 he was matriculated in the normal department of Mount Union College, near the city of Alliance, this county, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1891, while in 1895 he was graduated in the commercial department of the same institution. He thereafter completed the scientific course in his alma mater, and in 1897 received from Mount Union College the degree of Bachelor of Science. In the intervals of his collegiate work he continued to be actively engaged in teaching, his initial efforts in this line having been made when he was twenty-two years of age, and his particularly effective pedagogic labors have been in the schools of Portage, Summit and Stark counties, where he has held positions of high trust and exacting responsibility. Professor Heckman was for seven years principal and superintendent of the public schools at Peninsula, Summit county, and in July, 1899, he came to Hartville, Stark county, where he was duly installed as principal of the Lake township high school and superintendent of the public schools of the township, in which dual office he gave most able administration, doing much to further the efficiency of the work and to improve and systemize the system. He retained this incumbency until May, 1902, since which time he has devoted his attention to farming. He is the owner of a well improved and valuable farm of one hundred and eighteen acres, in Lake township, which property he rents, while he still maintains his home in the attractive town of Hartville. In politics the Professor accords a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he takes a lively interest in the questions and issues of the hour, being a man of strong convictions and one who is amply fortified in his opinions, as he has ever continued a close student; while his reading has covered a wide field, his powers of absorption and assimilation enabling him to profit to the fullest degree from his study and investigation in any realm of thought or action. He and his wife are both zealous members of the Reformed church, in which they are active workers and in which he has been a teacher in the Sunday school for many years. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Macabees, being a member of Hartville Tent No. 382.

On the 28th of March, 1891, Professor Heckman was united in marriage to Miss Ellen F. Harley, who was born in Lake township, this county, being a daughter of Daniel and Anna (Kauffman) Harley, honored citizens of the county and representatives of the pioneer stock. Mrs. Heckman is a woman of gentle refinement and gracious personality and has taken a deep interest in the work of her husband, in which line she has been most helpful to him in many ways. They became the parents of two sons and two daughters, but both of the sons, John W. and Stanley H., are deceased. The daughters are Mabel A. and Grace E., aged respectively ten and one years (1903).

HENRY HEWIT EVERHARD is descended paternally from an old Pennsylvania family, and maternally from ancestors who figured in the early history of Maryland. His father, Henry Everhard, of German lineage, was born in the former commonwealth, and served with distinction in the war of 1812. When a young man he married Rebecca, daughter of Daniel Slanker, a native of Maryland and a man of considerable prominence in his day. The family moved to Stark county, Ohio, where Mrs. Everhard died on August 18, 1866. Mr. Everhard operated for a time the grist mills north of Canton, formerly owned by his father and known as the Everhard Mills.

Henry Hewit Everhard was born on a farm, about six miles north of Massillon, March 15, 1837. He received his preliminary education in the district school of his neighborhood, and in the Massillon high school, and later he prepared for and entered Kenyon College, of Gambier, Ohio, which course was cut short by the breaking out of the Civil war. Feeling it his duty to go to the defense of his country, he entered service as a private. Company E, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, July 24, 1862. He was promoted to first sergeant July 30, 1862, commissioned first lieutenant October 17, 1863, and captain September 14, 1864. The regiment organized at Camp Massillon, Ohio, and immediately moved into the field of active service, the war department noting the regiment as having been in over fifty operations, skirmishes, sieges and battles, the most prominent engagements being the siege of Knoxville, Tennessee, the campaign against Atlanta, Georgia, the battles of Franklin and Nashville, Tennessee, and was mustered out of service June 12, 1865.

During Mr. Everhard's military career, which included the most important years of the war, he saw much active service, but was fortunate in escaping injury or capture, and was not absent from duty a single day on account of illness or disability. He left his company with the good will of his men and the confidence and esteem of his superior officers.

Immediately after the close of the war Mr. Everhard returned to Massillon and engaged with Warthorst & Company in developing the large stone quarries previously opened by the firm. With the exception of about four years, during which time he opened a quarry southwest of Massillon, and conducted a wholesale grocery business in the city, he has been identified with the Warthorst quarries. The firm has been lately dissolved, and the business reorganized and incorporated as The Everhard Company, of which Mr. Everhard is the president and chief stockholder. The company's business consists in the manufacture of grindstones, block and dimension stone, furnace dried sand, pressed facing brick, and hollow rod drilling and prospecting machinery, employs one hundred and fifty to two hundred men daily and its tonnage of annual shipments is very large. Mr. Everhard is known in financial circles as a stockholder and vice-president of the Union National Bank of Massillon.

November 7, 1865, Mr. Everhard married Caroline McCullough, daughter of Thomas McCullough, one of the founders of the city of Massillon. Three children were born to them, Ethel Rebecca, Melville McCullough and Marion. Mrs. Everhard died April 14, 1902.

Mr. Everhard is represented by his fellow citizens as a man in every way worthy of the high measure of esteem which he commands, and that his character and integrity are above reproach is generally conceded in the community in the affairs of which he has borne such an active part. Firmness and tenacity of purpose are among his most pronounced characteristics. His standard of conduct has always been high, and to the best of his ability he has endeavored to realize in his own career the ideal man and citizen. As soldier, business man, or in social circles his life has been an example of the wisest and best in American manhood.

AZARIAH C. DONAT, who is a successful farmer and representative citizen of Lake township, Stark county, was born on the old homestead farm in Tuscarawas township, this county, on the 19th of October, 1855, being the eldest son of Peter and Mary Ann (Crossland) Donat, the former of whom was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of October, 1805, while the latter was born in Akron (then known as Middleburg), Summit county, Ohio, on the 4th of May, 1826. In the autumn of the year 1819 Peter Donat, who was then a lad of fourteen years, accompanied his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth Donat, on their removal from the old Keystone state to Ohio, and in the following spring they settled on a tract of heavily timbered land in Tuscarawas township, this county, where the grandparents of our subject passed the remainder of their lives, and there also did their son Peter assume the responsibilities of carrying forward the improvement of the old home farm, developing the same into a valuable property and making the best of improvements, so that in the old home, so hallowed with the memories and associations of the past, he reared his children to lives of usefulness and honor, being ever of good repute among men and true to every responsibility which canopied his life. Leal and loyal, strong in his convictions, never sacrificing conscience on the altar of personal expediency, this noble pioneer lived a "godly, religious and sober life," and was gathered to his father in the fullness of time, his death occurring on the homestead where he had passed so great a portion of his days, on the 30th of August, 1890. "He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him." His devoted and cherished wife, who had been a true helpmeet to him from the time of their marriage, on the 9th of March, 1843, until the seal of death was placed upon his mortal lips, did not long survive him, since she was summoned into eternal rest on the 3d of January, 1892. Standing in the pure light of lives and characters like these, we can not be moved to a spirit of reverence, nor can we fail to realize the spiritual consistency of the merging of the finite lives into the transcendent glory of the infinite, for theirs was the faith which makes faithful and greater consecration could not be than this. Both were active and zealous members of the Reformed church, exemplifying their Christian faith in their daily walks and in all the relations of life. This worthy couple became the parents of two sons and nine daughters, whose names, in order of birth, are as follows: Amanda, Lydia A., Hannah, Ann Eliza, Olivia, Azariah C., Emma, Eva, John A. and Loretta. Of this number all are living save four.

Azariah C. Donat was reared to maturity on the old homestead, in Tuscarawas township, and, being the elder of the two sons, he early began to contribute his quota to the work of the farm, while his educational discipline was received in the public schools of the vicinity. He continued at the parental home until the time of his marriage, which occurred in Sugar Creek township, this county, on the 11th of November, 1880, when he was united to Miss Eleanor S. Kaylor, who was born in that township on the 23d of July, 1863, being a daughter of Daniel M. and Mary (White) Kaylor, honored pioneers of Stark county, where the latter died on the 24th of January, 1886, her husband surviving until September 1, 1896. The subject and his wife are the parents of three children, Mary L., Claude K. and Helen, all of whom remain at the parental home. After his marriage the subject located on a farm in Sugar Creek township, and to its cultivation he devoted his attention from the fall of 1880 until the spring of 1884, when he took up his residence on his present fine homestead, in Lake township. The place has a commodious modern residence and other excellent buildings, is under a high state of cultivation and on every hand shows the care bestowed by a progressive and scientific farmer. The homestead comprises one hundred and sixty acres and is one of the model farms of this favored section of the state. The family occupy a place of prominence in the social life of the community, where their friends are in number as their acquaintances, and the subject and his wife are devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose work they take an active interest. In politics Mr. Donat gives his allegiance to the Democratic party, but he has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office.

ELIAS HIMEBAUGH.—As the name implies, Mr. Himebaugh is of stanch German extraction in the agnatic line, though the family has for several generations been identified with American interests, the original representatives in this country having settled in Pennsylvania in the early pioneer epoch. He is a son of Abraham and Adeline (Reed) Himebaugh. His father is now a resident of Portage. He was the eldest of their eight children, and of the number six are living at the present time. Elias Himebaugh was born in Portage county, Ohio, November 23, 1861, and was reared to the age of thirteen years in his native county, where his father was engaged in farming, and there he secured his rudimentary education in the district schools. The family then removed to the vicinity of Cuyahoga Falls, Summit county, and there our subject remained until he was nineteen years of age, assisting in the farm work and attending the public schools as opportunity offered. Thereafter he resided in Portage county about four years, and on the 16th of October, 1883, when twenty-two years of age, he was united in marriage to Miss Amanda C. Schreiner, who was born in Greentownship, Summit county, being a daughter of Michael and Almira (Smith) Schreiner, both of whom are now deceased. After his marriage Mr. Himebaugh resided in Summit county, being there engaged in the dairy business, and in the spring of 1896 he came to Stark county and took up his residence in Uniontown, where he associated himself with his brother-in-law, M. Schreiner, in his present line of enterprise, in which his efforts have been attended with excellent success, for he has brought to bear marked energy and discrimination and has maintained the highest policy of business integrity in all his transactions, so that he has gained the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who know him, while he is ably seconded by his partner, who is likewise a capable and straightforward business man. In the manufacturing of apple-butter and jellies he utilizes a device of his own invention and secures a product of such superiority that he can not supply the demand placed upon him in this department, while he has secured a patent on the invention mentioned and the same is destined to come into very general use, as it simplifies the process of manufacture and insures better results than can be secured by any other method as yet employed. In politics Mr. Himebaugh is a stalwart supporter of the Democratic party, though he has never sought official preferment of any order, and both he and his wife are zealous members of the Reformed church, in whose work they take an active part. They have no children.

LEWIS E. DOUGHERTY, M. D., is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the town where he now makes his home, on the 28th of August, 1853, and being a son of the late Dr. James E. Dougherty, who was born in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, whence he came to Stark county in 1849, locating in Greentown, where he attained distinction in his profession and won the affectionate regard of the many in whose homes his kindly and helpful ministrations were accorded. He was consecutively engaged in practice in Greentown from 1849 until 1885, in which latter year, as candidate on the Republican ticket, he was elected to the office of recorder of Stark county, an incumbency which he retained for a period of six years, during which he, as a matter of course, was a resident of the city of Canton, the county seat. He died in that city, on the 24th of March, 1894, having had a wide acquaintanceship throughout this section of the state and having ever held the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who knew him, while his record as an official was one of the same ability and fidelity that characterized his work in his profession. He was a stalwart supporter of the Republican party and its principles, while he was a devoted and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church from his boyhood until the hour came when the veil of the life eternal was lifted for him, as death set its seal upon his mortal lips. He was superintendent of the Sunday school when but sixteen years of age, and in later years was incumbent of various other offices in the church. His wife, whose maiden name was Angeline Gorgas, is likewise a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in Lebanon county, and she still resides in Canton, where she has a wide circle of devoted friends and where she is a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Of her seven children, of whom our subject was the second in order of birth, four are living.

Dr. Lewis E. Dougherty was reared in his native town and here he has ever maintained his home, while the prestige he has secured in his profession is the more noteworthy from the fact that it has been gained in the community where every step of his career has been watched and known by the people who have been familiar with his life history from his youth up. After attending the public schools of Greentown, he entered the seminary at Greensburg,

Summit county, this state, where he continued his studies for a time, as did he later at Mount Union College, near Alliance, Stark county. After completing his more purely literary education he began the work of technical preparation for his chosen profession by taking up the reading of medicine under the effective preceptorship of his honored father, and eventually he was matriculated in the Columbus Medical College, in the capital city of the state, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1879, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine and coming forth specially well equipped for the work of the profession, since his instruction from the start had been of the most scrupulously careful and painstaking order, his father constantly advising him as to his work, and encouraging him in his efforts, so that his ambition was quickened to the utmost. After his graduation he was favored in becoming associated with his father in practice, and he thus continued until the latter's removal to the city of Canton, when he practically succeeded to the large and representative practice which had been built up by his father during the long years of his active and effective work in this place. It is to the credit of our subject that he was able to maintain the prestige of the name, notwithstanding his youth, and he has ever held the confidence and high esteem of those to whom he has ministered, and his success is based upon the sure foundation of broad and exact knowledge and the power of making decisive and practical application of the same. He is a close and appreciative student and keeps in close touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery, having always at hand the best standard and periodical literature pertaining to his profession, and also finding much of inspiration and aid through his membership in the Northeastern Ohio Medical Association. In politics the Doctor is a staunch adherent of the Republican party and fraternally

he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of the Macca-bees.

On the 3d of July, 1879, in Summit county, Ohio, Dr. Dougherty was united in marriage to Miss Clara Hart, who was born in that county, being a daughter of Benjamin and Mary Hart, and of this union two children were born,—James B., who is preparing for the medical profession, and Ervin G., who is to study dentistry. Mrs. Dougherty was summoned into eternal rest on the 12th of December, 1886, having been a woman of gracious and noble character, and a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church. In the city of Canton, on the 14th of June, 1892, the Doctor was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Griffith, who was born in Durham, England, whence she came to America with her parents in her girlhood. Dr. and Mrs. Dougherty have one son, Lewis E., Jr. The family home is one of the most attractive in the village and is a center of refined hospitality.

MILTON M. BAUER, M. D., was born in the village of Loyal Oak, Summit county, Ohio, on the 4th of June, 1853, being a son of John J. and Catherine (Everhard) Bauer, who are natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively, and both of whom are living, the father having devoted his life principally to tanning and farming, and having been one of the honored and influential citizens of Summit county, where both he and his wife have resided forty years. They became the parents of seven children, of whom the Doctor was the second in order of birth, and of the number four sons and one daughter are living at the present time, all being well established in life. John J. Bauer is of stanch German lineage, as the name implies, and the family was founded in Pennsylvania many years ago, while from the old Keystone state it has sent representatives into the most diverse sections of the Union. Dr. Bauer passed his youth in his native town, where he received his early educational training in the public schools, and he was for a number of years identified with the tanning business there, while later he was successfully engaged in teaching school for a portion of the time during an interval of seven years, showing that he had duly profited by the scholastic privileges which had been accorded him, for in the meanwhile he had continued his studies in the National Normal University, at Lebanon, this state, where he thus became specially eligible for pedagogic work. He was there graduated as a member of the class of 1876, having to a large extent depended upon his own exertions in defraying the expenses of his college course, as did he later in the prosecution of his technical studies in preparing for the work of his chosen profession. Soon after being graduated in the normal school he began reading medicine under effective preceptorage, and was finally matriculated in the Long Island Hospital College, in Brooklyn, New York, where he completed a thorough and exacting course of study, having the best of incidental advantages in the matter of clinical work and experience, and he was duly graduated as a member of the class of 1880, receiving his diploma in June of that year and also the coveted title of Doctor of Medicine. Soon after his graduation Dr. Bauer came to Uniontown, Stark county, and here established himself in practice, duly displaying his "shingle" and preparing to serve his novitiate. This, however, proved of very brief order, since popular recognition of his abilities and his gracious personality were not long denied, and here he has remained in continuous practice to the present time, and he now controls an essentially representative business, being the family physician in many of the leading homes of this locality and enjoying the highest measure of esteem and good will in the community where he has lived and labored to so goodly ends. He is always ready to respond to calls upon his time and professional attention, even at distinct personal sacrifice and discomfort, for he holds that his profession involves a duty from which no worthy devotee of the same can consistently shrink. Dr. Bauer is a valued member of the Ohio State Medical Society and the Cleveland Medical Society, while, as previously noted, he has been president of the North-eastern Ohio Medical Association. He takes a deep interest in the work and the deliberations of each of these bodies, realizing the practical value of interchanging ideas and profiting by the experiences of others. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees, being a member of Union Tent No. 158, in his home village. In politics the Doctor accords a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he and his wife hold membership in the Evangelical Lutheran church, in whose work they take an active interest.

In Uniontown, on the 19th of September, 1888, Dr. Bauer was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Schoner, who was born in Lake township, this county, being a daughter of the late Henry and Saloma Schoner, who were honored pioneers of this section of the county, where her father devoted the active years of his life to agricultural pursuits. Dr. and Mrs. Bauer have one son, Paul Emerson, who was born on the 8th of December, 1892.

REV. FREDERICK KELLER comes of stanch German lineage in the agnatic line, and also on the maternal side, both families having long been identified with the annals of American history. He was born in the village of Bellevue, Huron county, Ohio, on the 27th of January, 1863, being a son of Rev. Eli Keller, D. D., who has been a clergyman of the Reformed church since the year 1855 and who is prominent in its councils, as has he been in the active and fruitful work of the ministry. He is now a resident of Allentown, Pennsylvania, and his is the good fortune to still have the companionship of his loved and devoted wife, whose maiden name was Emma J. Hoffeditz. To them were born eight children, of whom six are living at the present time, while the subject of this sketch was the fourth in order of birth. While he was a mere child his parents removed to Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, where he passed his youthful days and where he secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools, later supplementing this by a course of study in Ursinus College, a church institution at Collegeville, near the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He was there graduated as a member of the class of 1883, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In the meanwhile Mr. Keller had decided to follow in the footsteps of his honored father and prepare himself for the ministry of the Reformed church, in whose faith he had been carefully reared and of which he had been deeply appreciative from his youth up. He accordingly began his technical study by being matriculated in the theological seminary of Heidelberg College, at Tiffin, Ohio, one of the leading institutions maintained under the direct auspices of the Reformed church in America, and he was there graduated as a member of the class of 1886 and being ordained to the ministry in May, 1886. He was engaged in home mission work for four years, the field of his labors during this time being principally in the state of Kansas, and he then returned to Ohio, where he filled various pastoral charges prior to 1898, when he came to Hartville as pastor of the church here. He has done much to vitalize the work of the church here, both along spiritual and temporal lines, being a forceful and convincing speaker, his every utterance bearing the impress of sincerity and conviction, while he is known as a man of ripe scholarship and as one endowed with marked executive and administrative ability, so that he is well equipped for exercising all the functions of his high calling. The church has a membership of about two hundred individuals, and its affairs are in a prosperous condition, while the pastor has the zealous co-operation of his flock and can not but feel that his lines are cast in pleasant places. He is an earnest and indefatigable worker, is of gracious and genial presence and holds the respect and good will of all sorts and conditions of men. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party.

On the 19th of October, 1886, at Tiffin, this state, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Keller to Miss Anna Lechrone, who was born in that county (Seneca) being a daughter of Benjamin Lechrone, an honored and influential citizen of that section, and of this union three children have been born, namely: Bertha, Howard and Ralph.

LORENZO CROCKER is a native of Summit county, Ohio, having been born on a farm in Springfield township, on the 3d of March, 1849, and being a son of Myron and Lydia Crocker, both of whom died in that county, where the father devoted his active life to farming, being one of the honored citizens and pioneers of the locality. Lorenzo Crocker was reared to maturity in his native county, early becoming inured to the sturdy work of the farm and securing his educational training in the district schools. As a young man he served an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, and when twenty years of age he came to Stark county, where he was engaged in the work of his trade for a period of thirteen years, at the expiration of which he established himself in the sawmill business in the village of New Baltimore, also operating a cider-mill in season, and there he continued to reside for nearly a score of years, being one of the prominent and honored business men of the place. In 1899

Mr. Crocker came to Hartville, and here he has established himself in a profitable business, operating a feed mill, saw mill and cider mill, and also dealing in grain, and through good management and honorable dealing each department of his enterprise has been placed on a paying basis, while he has been given distinctive marks of public confidence and esteem, as is evident when we advert to the fact that for two years he served as clerk of Marlboro township, within the time of his residence in New Baltimore, while in the spring of 1902 he was elected to the office of justice of the peace in Hartville. He takes an active interest in public affairs of a local nature and is one of the staunch advocates of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, in whose support he has been arrayed from the time of attaining his legal majority.

On the 10th of December, 1874, in Portage county, this state, Mr. Crocker was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Baughman, who was born in Summit county, being the daughter of James Baughman, one of the sterling pioneers of that county. The subject and his wife have no children.

IRVIN O. GOETZ, as the name implies, comes of staunch German ancestry, though the family name is one which has been for several generations identified with the annals of the American republic. He was born in the village of Hartville, Stark county, on the 9th of January, 1868, being a son of Henry and Mary (Agnex) Goetz, both of whom still maintain their home in this village, being held in the highest esteem by all who know them and being entitled to consideration as pioneer residents of the place. Of their five children three are living at the present time, and he to whom this sketch is dedicated was the fourth in order of birth. He received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of his native village, and supplemented the same by a course of study in the Ohio Business University, in the city of Cleveland, where he gained that technical training which has proved of so great value to him in his active business career. After leaving the institution mentioned he was for seven years employed as bookkeeper for his uncle, John Goetz, who is engaged in the milling business in the city mentioned, and later he was himself engaged in the grocery business in Cleveland for a period of about three years. In the spring of 1900 he returned to Hartville, where he associated himself with Dallas Keller in the establishing of their present enterprise, and its growth has been most gratifying, while through fair and honorable dealing and scrupulous care in the handling of all details of the business, the firm have gained the implicit confidence and esteem of the community. The store is well equipped and is supplied with a select and comprehensive line of general merchandise, while no effort is spared to cater to the most exacting demands of the many and appreciative patrons of the establishment. Mr. Goetz is thoroughly public-spirited in his attitude, and whatever is projected for the best interests of the village or the community at large is certain to receive his cordial support. In politics he has been a staunch adherent of the Democratic party from the time of attaining his legal majority, and his religious faith is that of the Reformed church, of which Mrs. Goetz is likewise a devoted member, while both are prominent in the social life of the community.

On the 12th of September, 1893, Mr. Goetz was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Shanafelt, who was born in Portage county, Ohio, being a daughter of Levi Shanafelt, an influential citizen of that county. The subject and his wife have a pleasant home in Hartville, and the same is a center of cordial and gracious hospitality.

DR. PERKINS WALLACE, son of George and Harriet Menough Wallace, was born at Burton, near the site of the present city of Cleveland, July 18, 1808. His father went from Acworth, New Hampshire, in 1795, to Youngstown, Ohio. Perkins Wallace was the youngest of four children. He moved with his parents to Cleveland in 1810, and from there to Brandywine Mills, Ohio, in 1814. Dr. Wallace attended the Cincinnati Medical College, studying under Dr. Gross, then Professor Gross, who became deeply interested in him then and remained a warm personal friend until his death, coming to Ohio twice to urge Dr. Wallace to enter into partnership with him in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Dr. Wallace was graduated from Cincinnati in the spring of 1834. On July 21 of this same year, at Canton, Ohio, he married Rebekah, daughter of William and Elizabeth Seabury Fisk Reynolds, in the Reynolds homestead, on South Market street. They resided for a time at Massillon, then Akron, but finally returned to Canton in October, 1847, and there Dr. Wallace passed away July 18, 1868, in the home where they were married.

In his medical practice in Canton Dr. Wallace was associated with Dr. Bonfield and later Dr. Matthews. He was thorough, exact, painstaking, careful, just and sympathetic, all of which are distinctive traits of the Wallace character. He excelled in diagnosis, and was quick to see and prompt to act. He was devotedly attached to his profession, was an enthusiast in it, and was readily acknowledged as one of the leading physicians of the state.

Dr. Wallace was eminently public spirited; he was active in the organization of the public schools and for years was a member of the board of directors. He was largely instrumental in securing thorough, college-bred teachers who gave to the school labor and ability which made for them a reputation they have since sustained. In every public effort both Dr. and Mrs. Wallace were active, earnest workers. As an old-line Whig and ardent Republican Dr. Wallace was an interested student of political history. With the intuitions of a statesman and the wisdom of a seer, he followed the events of the Civil war. He was a loyal citizen, an eminent physician, a man of learning and rare culture.

JOHN B. KAGEY is the second of four children born to Jacob and Sarah (Berlin) Kagey, natives of Ohio, the former born in Columbiana county and the latter in Stark county. Three of the four children are living, namely: William H., who is engaged in the grocery business at Louisville; John B., of this review, and Ira E., who is a farmer of Nimishillen township. John B. Kagey was born in Nimishillen township, Stark county, Ohio, July 14, 1871, and until seventeen years old lived with the parents, meanwhile acquiring a good education in the district schools. As a student he was studious and diligent and by close application made such advancement in his studies that at the above age he was able to pass successfully the required examination and secure a teacher's license. Young Kagey began his career as an educator in 1888, and during the ensuing five years taught in the schools of his native county, devoting the summer seasons to manual labor on the home farm. He achieved signal success as an instructor and had he seen fit to continue in the profession there is no doubt that in due time he would have become one of the distinguished educators of this part of the state. His ambition, however, to become an active factor in the world of affairs, led him to choose another than the educational field in which to rise, consequently in 1893 he abandoned the school room and, in partnership with his brother William H., bought the grocery store in Louisville owned by Joseph Lesh, going in debt for his share of the purchase price. It is needless to state that this enterprise proved successful, as the fact is patent to every inhabitant of the town and it is also mere repetition to say that it was the real beginning of the subject's remarkable career as an energetic, far-sighted business man. In 1897 Mr. Kagey was appointed postmaster of Louisville and is still the incumbent of that office. Shortly after entering upon the discharge of his official duties he sold his interest in the grocery business to his brother and a few months later opened a clothing store which in due time became one of the most thriving mercantile establishments in the county outside the cities of Canton and Massillon. By carefully studying the demands of the trade and catering to the popular taste in the matter of raiment he built up an extensive patronage and his familiarity with every detail of the business enabled him to buy and sell so as to realize profits which soon placed him on the high road to fortune. In 1900 he turned his attention to another field of endeavor by purchasing of John L. Warstler the Champion Tile Works at Louisville. A few months later he bought at public sale the plant of the Empire Clay Company and combining the two establishments found himself at the head of an industrial enterprise which in point of continued growth and rapid gain in public favor has few if any parallels in the history of the country's manufacturing interests. In fact, the series of successes which have marked the career of the business since Mr. Kagey took possession and assumed practical management has been little less than phenomenal, as it has risen from a comparatively modest beginning to a leading place among similar enterprises throughout the state. The high reputation achieved by the products of the establishment has caused it to become widely known in industrial circles, not only in Ohio but in a number of other states and to supply the constantly growing demand a large force of workmen is required. Mr. Kagey gives especial attention to the manufacture of hollow building block and other articles of similar character, their high order of excellence being the plant's most successful advertisement. For the making of these various products Mr. Kagey has not only one of the largest but in every respect one of the best equipped establishments of the kind in the United States, the different departments being as complete as the most advanced mechanical research can make them, while none but efficient and thoroughly reliable workmen are employed, the present force averaging thirty to forty for every working day in the year. In the management of the large business the proprietor exhibits a high order of executive talent, clear insight, mastery of detail and a ripeness of judgment on all matters connected with the plant locally and in relating to the public with which he deals. Contributing by his enterprise and progressive methods to the material and industrial growth of his town and county and occupying a prominent station among the successful manufacturers of the state, he is regarded as a representative citizen in every sense of the term and as a man whose influence has done more than that of any other individual of his age to give stability and tone to the thriving community with the history of which he has been so actively identified.

Mr. Kagey was married February 18, 1893, to Miss Leora Warstler, of Louisville, daughter of John L. and Harriet Warstler, the union being blessed with two children, Marion C. and Zola C. In politics Mr. Kagey is a Republican but the claims of his business has been such as to preclude a very active participation in political or public affairs. As a good citizen, however, he keeps in touch with the leading questions before the people, votes his principles intelligently and expresses his opinions as one who arrives at conclusions only after mature deliberation. Mr. Kagey's fraternal relations are represented by the Masonic order, Junior Order of United American Mechanics and Knights of the Maccabees, belonging to Juilliard Lodge No. 460, Louisville, Council No. 152 and Louisville Tent No. 182, of the three organizations, respectively.

FRANK E. SCHUMACHER was born on a farm in Marlboro township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 11th of March, 1857, being a son of Henry and Susan (Harvey) Schumacher, the former of whom is now deceased, passing away, in Portage county, in his forty-ninth year, while his widow, who is sixty-three years old, lives at Suffield, Portage county, Ohio. The father was born in Pennsylvania, of staunch German ancestry, and was a man of sterling character, devoting his life principally to agricultural pursuits, while both he and his wife were zealous members of the German Reform church. Of their six children the subject of this review is the eldest and of the number four are living at the present time. When Frank E. Schumacher was two years of age his parents removed from Marlboro township to Hartville, where they maintained their home until he was twelve years old, his preliminary educational discipline having been received in the schools of this village, and they then removed to Molluny township, Portage county, where our subject was reared to maturity on the farm and where he continued his studies, in a somewhat irregular way, in the district schools. There he continued to be identified with farming until he had attained the age of about twenty-seven years, when he came again to Hartville, Stark county, where he was engaged for several years in the lumber business, to which he devoted his attention until 1888, when he engaged in his present line of enterprise, in which he has met with excellent success, having excellent facilities for the prosecution of his manufacturing and turning out the highest class of work in the line of window and door screens, while he turns out many original and attractive designs, all work being done on honor, so that his patronage has shown a consecutive increase in scope. Mr. Schumacher is progressive in his methods, looking carefully after all details of his enterprise and being known as a capable and upright business man. In politics he exercises his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and both he and his wife are worthy and consistent members of the Reformed church.

In Portage county, this state, on the 24th of November, 1887, Mr. Schumacher was united in marriage to Miss Susan Warner, who was born and reared in that county, being a member of one of its honored pioneer families, and she was summoned into eternal rest, in Hartville, on the 1st of July, 1896. She is survived by her one son, George, who is bookkeeper in his father's establishment and who is known as not only a fine accountant but also as a young man of excellent business acumen, while he is one of the popular young men of the village, his friends being in number as his acquaintances. He received excellent educational advantages and through the proper use of the same has become well equipped for the active duties of a successful business career. He proves an able coadjutor to his father and through his efforts much has been done to insure the success of the enterprise of which mention has been made. On the 16th of July, 1892, the subject of this sketch consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Minnie Gilmore, who was born in this county, and of this union three children have been born, namely: Howard, Carl and Leonia.

FRANKLIN D. SMITH, M. D., is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Brimfield, Portage county, Ohio, on the 16th of December, 1853. He was reared on a farm and duly profited by the sturdy discipline involved, while he secured his early educational training in the public schools. He then entered the commercial department of Mount Union College, near Alliance, this county, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1872, after which he was matriculated in Buchtel College, at Akron, this state, where he continued his studies about four years. He then entered upon the technical work of preparing himself for his chosen profession, beginning the reading of medicine at Uniontown, Stark county, where he had as a preceptor Dr. G. F. Waldron, an able representative of his profession, and under these conditions he continued his studies for one year, and he was then matriculated in the medical department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he remained one year, after which he entered the Missouri Medical College, in the city of St. Louis, where he was graduated in the spring of 1880, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine and being well fortified for the work of his profession. He began the active practice of his profession in Commanche, Iowa, where he remained somewhat more than a year, after which he came to Hartville, Stark county, where he has built up a lucrative and representative practice, his professional novitiate here having been of brief duration, since he forthwith gained recognition as an able and discriminating physician and surgeon, one devoted to his work and ever ready to respond to the call of suffering and distress, regardless of personal comfort. Not only is he particularly sure in diagnosis and in anticipating the complications of disease, but he also is endowed with that deep human sympathy and grateful personality which have so important an influence in the clinical work of the profession. The Doctor is a constant and appreciative reader of the best standard and periodical literature pertaining to the two branches of his profession, and also finds a source of valuable information and inspiration through his membership in the Northeastern Ohio Medical Association, of which he is a popular and valued member. Politically the Doctor gives his allegiance to the Democratic party, and he has ever shown a lively interest in all that concerns the well-being of the community, though never an aspirant for official preferment of any sort. He has an attractive modern residence in the village, and the same is a center of gracious and unreserved hospitality, the family taking an active part in the social life of the town. Fraternally Dr. Smith is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, holding membership in Stark Lodge No. 513, in the city of Canton; and with the Knights of the Maccabees, in which he is affiliated with Hartville Tent No. 282.

In his native town of Brimfield, Portage county, on the 26th of October, 1881, Dr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Emma J. Wise, who was born in that county, being a daughter of John Wise, an honored citizen of that place, and of this union three children have been born, namely: Winifred, who died at the age of three and one-half years; and Howard J. and Roger C., who are attending the public schools. The Doctor and his wife are zealous and valued members of the Reformed church, in whose work they take an active part.

In conclusion we will advert briefly to the genealogy of Dr. Smith. He is a son of Charles E. and Abigail (Hawley) Smith, both of whom came of staunch New England ancestry, the respective families having been founded in that section of the Union in the colonial epoch of our national history. Charles E. Smith was born in Portage county, Ohio, in 1820, being a son of William Smith, who came to this state from Massachusetts in the early pioneer days and located in Portage county, where he passed the residue of his life, having reclaimed and improved a farm and become one of the influential citizens of the locality, in which he was one of the first settlers. There the father of our subject was reared and educated and there he also continued to be identified with the great basic art of agriculture during a long and useful career, and while success attended his efforts and he became recognized as one of the substantial farmers of the county, he left to posterity that greatest of all bequeathments, an honored name. He was summoned into eternal rest in August, 1901, at the venerable age of eighty-one years and secure in the esteem of all who knew him. His devoted wife preceded him into the life eternal, her death occurring in January, 1896, at which time she was in her seventy-second year. The father was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife consistent and earnest church members, their faith being ever exemplified in their daily walk and conversation. Of their five children our subject was the third in order of birth, and of the number four are living at the present time.

JACOB L. OBERLIN was a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 10th day of March, 1830. His father, Adam Oberlin, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in 1802, emigrated to Ohio in later years and died in Plain township in 1881, when upwards of seventy-nine years of age. Jacob L. Oberlin was reared under the parental roof in Plain township—in fact, he had never known any other home. He was born in the same yard that he died in, having seen three different houses in the same yard. He received a fair education in the common schools of the neighborhood and upon attaining a sufficient age decided to make farming his life vocation. He was a man of keen intellect and tireless.

energy and proved a marked success in his chosen calling. Few men in his township attained to a more enviable standing than did he and he was frequently consulted by his neighbors and acquaintances on matters of importance, his wise discrimination and sound judgment being generally recognized by all who knew him.

Mr. Oberlin was twice married. His first wife was in her maidenhood Miss Sarah Spangler, and by her he became the father of three children, namely: Josiah W. is a resident of Portage county, Ohio; Clara is the wife of John Rasor, of Trumbull county, this state; Laura is the wife of Rev. L. H. Burry, pastor of St. Paul's church of Massillon. Mrs. Sarah Oberlin died in 1862 and on the 22d day of May, 1864, Mr. Oberlin was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Poyser, a daughter of Joseph Poyser. She was born in Perry township, this county, May 17, 1839, and received a fair education in common schools of her township. This union of the subject has been blessed by the birth of eight children, viz: Otto W., Norman, Charles A., John H., Walter J., who died at the age of eighteen years, Edward, who died in childhood, Emma, who died in infancy, and Martha J. In politics Mr. Oberlin was a Republican and took a keen interest in the public affairs of his community. He was honored by election as a member of the school board and so efficient were his services on that board that he was retained in the position for seventeen consecutive years. Religiously he was long a faithful and consistent member of Trinity Lutheran church. He possessed excellent business qualifications and at the time of his death was the owner of one hundred and twenty acres of as fine land as could be found in Plain township. He was a devoted husband and a loving and indulgent father, but never spoiled his offspring by substituting fondness for what his common sense pointed out to him as being the necessary discipline to render them self-reliant and to prepare them for the stern realities of life and the struggles that life inevitably entails. But this discipline was mild as well as effective, and his memory will be cherished with love and affection by his widow and children as long as life with them is vouchsafed with the faculty of remembrance. The home farm is now under the care and management of his son, John H., who is carefully looking after the best interests of the property.

REV. G. H. SOUDER.—The Souder family in this country appears to have originated in Pennsylvania, of which state the subject's father, George Souder, was a native. George Souder was born in the year 1817, grew up a farmer and followed that calling in Pennsylvania until 1854 when he moved to Richland county, Ohio, purchasing a farm near the town of Shelby, upon which he spent the remainder of his days, dying there at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He was a man of excellent parts, pronounced in his allegiance to what he considered right and few men in his community enjoyed to as great degree the confidence and esteem of their fellow citizens. He was a God fearing man who carried religion into his every day concerns, and for over fifty-five years held the office of elder in the Reformed church, with which body he became identified in early youth. For many years he was an unswerving supporter of the Democratic party, but later in life became a staunch Prohibitionist and as such exerted a potent influence for the cause of temperance to the end of his days. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Wentz, was also a native of Pennsylvania, born in the year 1818. She came of an old and respected family of that commonwealth, and was a woman of many excellent qualities of head and heart, deeply religious and a most excellent wife and loving and devoted mother. She bore her husband six children, and entered into her eternal rest in 1886, aged sixty-eight years. Of these children four are living at the present time: Daniel W., of Ft. Wayne, Indiana; C. H. L., a physician and surgeon of Chicago, Illinois; Carrie, wife of Oliver Lybarger, of Richland county, Ohio, and George H., the subject of this sketch.

Rev. G. H. Souder was born in Richland county on the 2d day of April, 1857, and acquired his preliminary education in the district schools near the paternal homestead. The training thus received served merely as a foundation for a more thorough intellectual discipline, as he subsequently entered Oberlin College where he pursued his studies until the fall of 1875, when he became a student of Heidelberg College at Tiffin. Mr. Souder entered the latter institution for the purpose of preparing for the ministry of the Reformed church and after completing the prescribed course in 1880 began his theological studies in the seminary at the same place, graduating from the latter in 1882. Immediately thereafter he was ordained to the work of his holy office and given charge of the church at Greenville, Ohio, where he labored with much acceptance during the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which time he was transferred to the church at Swander's Crossing in Shelby county. He served as pastor of the latter congregation three years and four months, during which time the church was greatly strengthened materially and spiritually and his parishioners parted with his services very reluctantly when he left there to accept the pastorate of the large and more influential charge of Bellevue, Ohio, to which he ministered for a period of five years. During his labors at Bellevue Rev. Souder was instrumental in building up the church along all lines of activity, renovating and thoroughly refitting the house of worship, and inspiring the members to renewed zeal in the Master's service. Numerically the congregation was increased over fifty per cent and the deep spirit of devotion around bore eloquent testimony to his earnestness and success as a consecrated minister as well as to his leadership in planning and carrying to completion material improvements.

Severing his connection with the congregation at Bellevue, Rev. Souder went to Bluffton, Indiana, where his pastorate of four and a half years' duration was fruitful of large and far reaching results. He engineered the raising of funds for a general repairing of the temple of worship, costing several hundred dollars, and he was also instrumental in increasing the membership fully one-half, in addition to which his influence was felt as a potent spiritual force among other churches of the city and by the public in general. Leaving Bluffton, Rev. Souder became pastor of the church at Carrollton, Ohio, whither his reputation as an able pastor and wise leader had preceded him. There, as in his former fields of labor, his efforts were blessed with abundant success, not only in numerous accessions to the congregation but also in the matter of church improvements, as he renovated, repainted and recarpeted the building, thus adding very materially to its appearance and general comfort as a fit temple in which to worship the most high. After remaining three and a half years with the good people of that field and proving a blessing to them in many ways, he gave up the charge and in December, 1900, entered upon his duties as pastor of the church at Louisville, where he has since ministered to the spiritual wants of a congregation which has not been slow to recognize and appreciate his ability, zeal and consecrated service. During his short pastorate here the church has taken on new life and a general advance has been made along all lines of duty, the preacher's strong personal influence, as well as his power in the pulpit, contributing much to the spiritual life of the congregation.

Rev. Souder's sermons are clear, concise, logical and practical and when discussing some of the grand themes of revelation, or when persuading sinners to abandon the error of their ways and accept the proffered mercies of the crucified Redeemer, he frequently rises to the heights of eloquence, which not only captivates his hearers but so impresses their minds and hearts as to strengthen their faith or move them to repentance.

Rev. Souder, on the 30th day of May, 1888, was united in marriage with Miss Lulu M. Miller, of Shelbyville, Illinois, daughter of William and Sarah Miller, the father for many years a prosperous business man of that city, but now retired. Three children brighten the home of the subject, namely: Loye M., Ola S. and William H., a daughter by the name of Ruth dying a few years ago.

While devoting his time and talents primarily to the noble work in which he is engaged, Rev. Souder is by no means indifferent to the duties which every community expects of its citizens. He maintains an interest in the material as well as the moral and spiritual welfare of the town of his residence and to the extent of his ability encourages every means to this end. Fraternally Rev. Souder is a member of the National Union and the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically gives a hearty support to the party of Prohibition. He is and long has been a firm and unyielding foe of the liquor traffic, and believes the only effectual means of ridding the country of the curse to be in the direction of stern legislative coercions.

FREDERICK H. SNYDER. — Among Massillon's prominent citizens, few, if any, have had a more active and successful career than has Frederick H. Snyder, who is a native of the city, and who for thirty years has been closely identified with its manufacturing and financial interests. Mr. Snyder was born November 17, 1839, the son of Frederick and Anna (Schreiber) Snyder, both of whom were natives of Germany. Frederick, the father, was born in 1816, and came with his parents to the United States when a boy. He was a pioneer of Massillon, coming to this city in 1828. The mother was born in 1820, and was brought by her parents to America in about 1830. The family landed at Baltimore, Maryland, and after remaining a short time in that city started west overland. They made the entire trip from Baltimore, Maryland, to Massillon by wagon,—a large caravan,—drawn by six horses. The trip consumed three weeks and at the end the man who moved them had only three of his six horses left, the others having died on the way. It was a tedious and tiresome journey, especially over the mountains, but the family endured it with fortitude. The parents of the subject were married in Massillon and made their home here ever afterwards. Frederick, the father, was a contractor and operated a large planing mill. He planned and erected many of the principal buildings of Massillon, including the Conrad Hotel, of the present time. He was an enterprising and energetic man, a fine mechanic and possessed of business and executive ability in more than ordinary degree. He and his wife were members of the German Lutheran church. He died in 1858, his widow surviving until May, 1903, when she died at the age of eighty-three years. To them the following children were born: Frederick H.; Maria, deceased, was the wife of Jacob Wagoner; George M., of Massillon; Jacob F., of Massillon, member of Hess-Snyder Company; Henry died in 1901; Charles F., of Massillon, also a member of Hess-Snyder Company; John B., of Massillon; Benjamin, of Massillon.

Frederick H. Snyder attended the public schools of Massillon until he reached his seventeenth year, and then began an apprenticeship at the machinist's trade, first in Rochester, Ohio, and then at Wooster, Ohio. After finishing his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman until July, 1874, mostly in Massillon, at which time he and his brothers, Jacob F. and Charles F., engaged as partners in a general line of jobbing as machinists. This they continued until the spring of 1882, when they consolidated with J. F. Hess & Bros. under the firm name of Hess, Snyder & Company, with the subject as the head of the concern. In February, 1901, the company was incorporated as The Hess-Snyder Company, with the subject as president, J. F. Hess as vice-president, and F. H. Snyder, Jr., as secretary and treasurer. Besides Mr. Snyder's interest in the Hess-Snyder Company, which is one of the leading manufacturing plants of Stark county, he is interested in a number of other concerns of importance, among which are the following: The Dime Savings Bank of Massillon, of which he is president; the Merchants' National Bank, of which he is a director; the Independent Printing Company, of which he is president; the Brown Lumber Company, of which he is a director; the Massillon Iron and Steel Company; the Southern States Portland Cement Company, of Atlanta, Georgia. He is a trustee of the Massillon Free Library, an elder in St. Paul's Lutheran church, and a member of the publication board of the Lutheran Book Concern of Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Snyder has been identified with the Massillon Board of Trade since its organization; he has also been a member of the executive board of the same since its organization.

In 1863 Mr. Snyder was married to Barbara Moure, who was born in Germany. Her parents died when she was quite young. To Mr. and Mrs. Snyder the following children have been born: Frank H., secretary and treasurer of the Hess-Snyder Company; Albert L. and Edward H., both connected with the Hess-Snyder Company; Hattie E. married Edward Janson, who is engaged in the drug business in Canton, Ohio.

Mr. Snyder is considered as one of Massillon's leading citizens and men of affairs. His long business career has been uniformly successful, and besides building up one of the important manufacturing enterprises of Stark county, he has assisted in the promotion and success of half a dozen others, each one of which has contributed to the building up of Massillon. He is recognized as a man of more than ordinary business and financial ability, and one of unimpeachable integrity. He is progressive, enterprising and public-spirited, and always is to be found on the side of any movement looking to the improvement of the community and its institutions.

JOHN E. MONNOT, secretary of the Canton Board of Trade, and a well-known member of the Stark county bar, was born November 30, 1865, at Louisville, Stark county, Ohio, the son of Peter J. and Mary (Moffatt) Monnot. Peter J. was born in France and in the early 'forties, when in his thirteenth year, emigrated with his parents to America. The great-grandfather of the subject began the voyage with the family, but died on the way and was buried at sea. The paternal grandfather of the subject, Peter M., after reaching this country, settled with his family in Nimishillen township, Stark county, where he followed farming. He died at Louisville in 1882. Peter J. was a blacksmith by trade, and conducted a shop in Louisville for many years. He is still living. The mother of the subject died when he was about two years of age. He was reared in Louisville and received his education in the public and parochial schools. At the age of fourteen years he began to learn the carpenter's trade, at which he worked several years. He then entered the furniture store of J. B. McCrea, in Canton, with whom he worked for two years. He then became traveling salesman for the Berger Manufacturing Company of Canton, being the first man sent out on the road by that concern. He continued to travel for the Berger people for several years, taking up the study of law during that time. In March, 1887, he was admitted to the bar, and that same fall was elected to the Ohio legislature on the Democratic ticket and in 1889 he was re-elected. In 1894 he was appointed postmaster at Canton, holding that office for four years. Since 1891 he has been secretary of the Board of Trade and for seven years he was chairman of the committee on statistics of that organization.

In 1893 Mr. Monnot married Laura M. Barlet, daughter of the late Peter Barlet, who for many years was one of Canton's most prominent merchants.

JOHN SHEARER was ushered into the world in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, the date of his nativity having been October 29, 1824, while he is the sole survivor of the three children born to Henry and Dorothy (Grimm) Shearer. The father of the subject was born in York county, Pennsylvania, on the 16th of November, 1791, being a son of Jacob Shearer, who was likewise born in the old Keystone state, where he was reared to maturity and where his marriage was solemnized. In the year 1813 Jacob Shearer came to Stark county, Ohio, reaching his destination in May of that year, and he forthwith located on the farm in section 27, Osnaburg township, and being one of the first settlers in this section of the county, where he acquired three-fourths of a section of wild land, for which he had exchanged his farm in Washington county, Pennsylvania. He was accompanied by his wife and two of his children,—Henry, father of the subject, and Catherine, neither of whom were married at the time, and later his three other sons, John, Jacob and Adam, joined him in this county and settled on the land adjoining the home farm of their father. The entire tract was covered with the native timber, and the father and sons set to themselves the arduous task of reclaiming the same to cultivation, thus aiding materially in the development of this now opulent and signally favored section of the Buckeye state. Here the honored grandfather of the subject passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in the year 1823, at which time he was seventy-nine years of age, while his faithful wife followed him into eternal rest two years later, at the age of seventy-four years. In 1815 the father of the subject returned to Pennsylvania, where was solemnized his marriage to Miss Dorothy Grimm, and with his bride he forthwith came to the Stark county home, having acquired the eighty acres of land upon which his father had located upon coming to the county and which is now the home of the subject of this review. Here he developed a good farm, making excellent improvements on the place, and applying himself with that energy and good judgment through which a due measure of prosperity in temporal affairs is certain to come. He here made his home until he was called from the scene of life's labors, the golden evening of his day having passed in the home of his son John, of this sketch, who had purchased the old homestead. Henry Shearer was a man of mature judgment and strong mentality, though he had but meager educational advantages in his youth, having received but sixteen days of definite schooling in his youth. He took an active interest in public affairs of a local nature and was well informed on the questions and issues of the day. In politics he originally was arrayed in the ranks of the Whig party, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward continued a staunch advocate of its principles. He and his devoted wife were consistent and valued members of the Lutheran church, and he aided materially in the erection of the first church building of this denomination in this portion of the county. He was steadfast and true in all the relations of life, and he died in 1878, in the fullness of years and honors, having attained the venerable age of eighty-seven years. His wife, who was likewise a native of Pennsylvania, was summoned to the land of the leal February 3, 1845, at the age of forty-nine years.

John Shearer, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared to maturity on the pioneer homestead, and he early became inured to the strenuous work involved in its reclamation and cultivation, while his educational training was limited to a somewhat desultory attendance in the primitive log school house, with its rude equipment of puncheon floor and slab benches,—an institution of the type from which have gone forth some of the strongest characters in the history of our nation. On the 13th of March, 1845, Mr. Shearer was united in marriage to Miss Susanna Schaeffer, who was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, whence her parents removed to Carroll county, Ohio, when she was a child of two years, while later they came thence into Stark county, where they passed the balance of their lives, being numbered among the sterling pioneers of this section of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Shearer became the parents of nine children, and it has been the pitiable lot of our honored subject to see one after another of his sons and daughters pass across the "great divide" into the eternal life, until none are left to comfort and sustain him in his declining years, while his loved and devoted wife also has passed forward to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns."

About the year 1850 Mr. Shearer purchased the homestead farm from his father, and here he continued to be successfully engaged in general farming, though he relegates the active labors to others, while maintaining a general supervision of the place and bringing to bear his thorough and practical knowledge of the best methods to be followed in the connection. He is well preserved and gives slight evidence of the more than three score and ten years which have passed over his head. In politics he has ever accorded an unqualified support to the Republican party, with which he identified himself at the time of its organization, but he has invariably refused to permit the consideration of his name in connection with any public office. He is a worthy and devoted member of the Lutheran church, in which he was an officer, in various capacities, for more than forty-five years, and in whose work he has taken an active and zealous part, as did also his wife, who entered into eternal rest on the 7th of January, 1892, at the age of sixty-nine years. She was a woman of noble attributes of character, and won the affectionate regard of all who came within the sphere of her kindly and gracious influence, while the life immortal gained a new glory when death set its seal upon her mortal lips.

LOUIS A. LOICHOT.—Among the younger class of prominent citizens of Canton, few, if any, hold a more commanding position in financial circles or are better or more favorably known throughout Stark county than Louis A. Loichot, ex-auditor of Stark county, and vice-president and manager of the First National Bank. Mr. Loichot is a native of Stark county, having been born in the village of Harrisburg, March 12, 1861, and is the son of Louis and Catharine (Simon) Loichot), the former a native of France, the latter of Switzerland. They both came to America when young, and in 1857 were married in this county. After their marriage the parents removed to Minnesota, in which state they resided for several years. Returning to Stark county, they took up their residence in Harrisburg, where the father became postmaster. He also served as assessor of Canton for some time.

Louis A. Loichot received his education in the common schools of Toledo and Canton. He also took a commercial course at Saunders' Business College. Leaving school, he took a clerkship in a dry goods store in Canton, which position he held for one year, and then entered the employ of Isaac Harter & Sons Banking House as collector and teller. He remained with this house for thirteen years continuously, leaving it to enter upon the duties of county auditor. In 1885 Mr. Loichot was elected to the Canton city council, in which body he served for a period of four years, three years of which he was president of the council. In 1889 he was nominated by the Democratic party for the office of auditor of Stark county, and was successful at the ensuing election, taking charge of the office in September, 1890. So satisfactory to the people of the entire county was his administration of the office that at the expiration of his first term he was re-elected, thus serving as county auditor two full terms. Upon leaving the auditor's office, Mr. Loichot entered the First National Bank as cashier, and five years later he was elected vice-president and manager. He is also a director in the Dime Savings Bank of Canton.

In 1889 Mr. Loichot married Miss Minnie R., daughter of F. I. Piero, one of Canton's oldest and most respected pioneer citizens, who is still living. To this marriage two sons have been born: Louis P., who died at the age of ten years, and Raymond. Mr. Loichot is a member of the Knights of Columbus, Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, the Elks and St. John's Catholic church.

LOUIS J. MIDAY.—Felix Miday, father of the subject, was born in the vicinity of the city of Paris, France, where he was reared to maturity. He had the distinction of being a soldier under Napoleon, being attached to the cavalry arm of the service and taking part in several campaigns. As a young man, he came to America, landing at Baltimore, whence he soon afterward came to Stark county, locating in the village of Louisville. He had learned the trade of carpenter in his native land and was a skilled workman when he came to America. In Louisville he established himself in business as a contractor and builder, and in the early days his services were in demand in all sections of the country, many substantial buildings which are still standing having been erected by him. In 1844 Mr. Miday was united in marriage to Miss Cesarea Dodane, who was likewise born in France, whence she accompanied her parents on their removal to the United States, the family being numbered among the early settlers in the town of Louisville, this county. Felix Miday continued to be actively engaged in business for a long term of years, and finally retired to his farm, in the immediate vicinity of Louisville, where he made his home until his death, in 1880, at the venerable age of eighty-four years, his widow there residing until she, too, was summoned into eternal rest, in 1896, at the age of seventy-eight years. Both were communicants of the Catholic church, and were prominent and active members of St. Louis' parish, in Louisville. They became the parents of four children, namely: Frank, who is a successful farmer near Louisville, this county; Louis J., the immediate subject of this memoir; Joseph and John, who are likewise engaged in farming near Louisville.

Louis J. Miday was born on the parental homestead near Louisville, Stark county, Ohio, on the 24th of July, 1848, and after securing his preliminary educational training in the parochial school of that village he continued his studies in Louisville College, while later he was afforded the advantages of a course in Notre Dame University, at South Bend, Indiana. Upon leaving the university he came to Canton, and for the ensuing two years he was employed in the wholesale grocery house of Carl Bechele, in this city. At the expiration of this interval, he entered the commercial department of Mount Union College, where he continued his studies until he had completed a thorough course. He then re-entered the employ of Mr. Biechele, with whom he remained for five years, and upon his withdrawal from this concern he purchased the grocery of George Fessler, on North Market street, where he managed a successful retail business for two years, when he sold out and established himself in the wholesale wine and liquor business, on North Market street, and disposing of the same at the end of twelve years. He then became associated with John Melbourne in the manufacture of paving brick at Malvern. Mr. Miday withdrew from the firm after about five years and then turned his attention to the street paving business, in which he did contracting upon a very extensive scale. He was interested in this line of enterprise until the time of his death, which occurred at his home in Canton, on the 4th of February, 1898. He acquired a large amount of valuable real estate. He purchased the American hotel and remodeled the building for business purposes, and was the owner of other property on Market street, in the business center of the city. Fraternally he was identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and his religious faith was that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared. He was a communicant of St. John's church, as is also his widow.

On the 7th of May, 1874, at St. Peter's church, in Canton, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Miday to Miss Tillie T. Wernet, who was born in this city, being a daughter of John B. Wernet, an honored pioneer of the city, having been a native of Germany, where he was born on the 12th of December, 1820, his parents passing their lives in the fatherland, where they died after he had come to the United States. Mr. Wernet emigrated to America in 1839, when nineteen years of age, being accompanied by his brother, Dr. Joseph Wernet, and landing in the city of Baltimore they thence came at once to Canton. Dr. Wernet died in 1859, having been an able physician and surgeon. John B. Wernet had learned the latter's trade in his native land, and he followed the same for several years after his arrival in Canton, and then engaged in the grocery business on the site of the present Hotel Yohe, where he remained twelve years, after which he purchased lots on South Market street and there erected a store and dwelling. There he continued in business until 1877, when he sold out and soon afterward took up his residence on his farm, in Plain township, where he lived five years, after which he returned to Canton and passed the remainder of his life in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Miday, his death occurring on the 14th of October, 1896. In 1849, in Canton, Mr. Wernet was united in marriage to Miss Theresa Tyler, a daughter of Joseph Tyler, concerning whom specific mention is made elsewhere in this volume, and she died at the home on South Market street, on the 27th of April, 1865. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Tillie T., widow of the subject; Emma, who is a sister in the Ursuline convent in Youngstown, this state; Louis J., who married Miss Laura Biechele and who resides in Canton; Otto, who married Miss Cecilia Wackerly and who is living on the old homestead farm in Plain township; William, who married Miss Olivia Biechele and who is now a resident of the state of Colorado; Minnie, who is the wife of Joseph Berg, of Canton; and Mary, who died at the age of twenty-five years.

Mrs. Miday was born in the family home, on the site of the present Yohe Hotel, in Canton, and after pursuing her rudimentary studies in the parochial schools of this city, she entered the Ursuline convent in Cleveland, where she received the best advantages. She has three daughters, namely: Enna T. and Matilde, who remain at the home with their mother, both having completed their education in the Villa Angela convent, in the city of Cleveland; and Cesarea, who is a graduate of the Canton high school, and is now the wife of George W. Belden, of New York city.

GEORGE LOUIS ALBRECHT, one of Massillon's prominent citizens and leading business men, was born in that city on December 24, 1848, and is the son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Daum) Albrecht. Frederick, the father, was a native of Oberhauser, Rhine Falls, Bavaria, where he was born September 18, 1818, and was the son of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Engle) Albrecht, both natives of Bavaria. The children of Nicholas Albrecht and wife were as follows, all born in Bavaria: Adam, George, Nicholas, Charles, Frederick, John and Catherine. Frederick, father of our subject, learned the trade of a shoemaker in his native town. He emigrated to America in 1838, landing at New Orleans. The following spring, 1839, he came to Massillon, and there worked for two years at his trade as a journeyman. In 1843 he engaged in business upon his own responsibility, having accumulated sufficient capital to establish a shop and to this he soon afterward added a retail grocery store. With him as a partner for six years in the grocery store was his brother Michael. Purchasing his brother's interest at the expiration of that time, Frederick conducted the business until 1875, when he retired from active life, being succeeded in business by his son, G. Louis, who had been associated with him for some years previously. In 1847 he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Daum, who was born in 1828 in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, and is the daughter of John Daum, who also emigrated from Germany to America in 1841. To this union children were born as follows: G. Louis, the immediate subject; Mary married H. C. Dielhenn, of Massillon; Sophia died aged nineteen years; Mina; Frederick, a merchant of Akron, Ohio, operates five retail grocery houses, a drug store and a wholesale barber supply house; Emma; Edward, of L. L. McLain & Company, of Massillon; John died in infancy. Frederick Albrecht died June 29, 1887, aged sixty-eight years and nine months. His was a useful and most successful life. From a small and insignificant beginning he became one of the substantial men of Massillon, and at his death left his family a handsome fortune. He was a Republican in politics, and a member of the Lutheran church. His widow and six children survive him.

G. Louis Albrecht was educated in the public schools of Massillon. Upon leaving school he entered the grocery store of his father and there learned the business of which he has since made so great a success. In 1869 his father made him his partner in the business, and in 1875, upon the retirement of the old gentleman, the subject became his successor. After conducting this business for a period of ten years he sold it to his brother Frederick, and became one of the organizers of the firm of C. L. McLain, & Company, wholesale grocers, which firm was established at that time by Mr. McLain and Mr. Albrecht as equal partners. Subsequently other gentlemen entered the company, and today it is one of the largest commercial houses in northern Ohio. Mr. Albrecht is president of the South Massillon Coal Company, is a

Mr. Albrecht married Amelia Dielhenn, a daughter of Peter Dielhenn, one of the prominent pioneer business men of Massillon. To this union one daughter has been born, Evelyn, who married Dr. R. B. Diamond, of Hot Springs, Arkansas. Mr. Albrecht is a member of the Episcopal church.

JOHN B. DEWEES, D. D. S.—The DeWees family, as the name indicates, is unmistakably of pure French extraction, and it is established beyond peradventure that the original progenitor in the United States was one of that noble band of Huguenots who fled from France to escape the persecutions incidental to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. This was the great-great-grandfather of Dr. DeWees and he emigrated first to Holland, as did so many others of his countrymen of the Protestant faith, and thence came to America, where he arrived about the year 1730. He married Miss Margaret Richard, a native of England, and they became numbered among the first settlers in either Montgomery, Berks or Bucks county, Pennsylvania. They became the parents of five sons and one daughter, and from the eldest son, William, the line is traced directly to the subject of this review, of whom he was the great-grandfather. William DeWees was born in Pennsylvania, prior to the middle of the eighteenth century, as is evident from the fact that about 1770 he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Dehart. They became the parents of one son, William, Jr., grandfather of Dr. DeWees of this sketch. The senior William DeWees died at the early age of thirty-five years, having started for an ocean voyage, for the benefit of his health, but having passed away before embarking, his remains being interred in New Jersey. His son William was but nine years of age at the time, and the mother subsequently became the wife of John Wilson, and they resided in Amity township, Berks county, Pennsylvania, two children being born of the second marriage.

William DeWees, Jr., grandfather of the subject, was born in Amity township, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 9th of December, 1779, and his death occurred in Osnaburg, Stark county, Ohio, on the 8th of March, 1862, at the venerable age of eighty-two years. As a young man he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Martin, who was born in Cocalico township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 11th of May, 1779, and who died in Womelsdorf, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 13th of July, 1849. Of this marriage three sons were born, Jacob, John and George M. William DeWees served an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, becoming an excellent artisan, and about seven years after his marriage he located in Reamstown, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and five years later he purchased a farm in the adjoining county of Berks, where he lived five years, eventually losing the property through a long litigation regarding the title to the same. His attorneys were James Buchanan and Judge Hopkins, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania. He later accumulated other property, becoming the owner of a hotel or tavern at Newmanstown, Lebanon county. He remained in the old Keystone state until after the removal of his son George M. to Stark county, Ohio, eventually joining him here and here passing the residue of his honorable and useful life.

George Martin DeWees, father of the Doctor, was born in Cocalico township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 23d of March, 1809, and was reared in the old Keystone state, assisting his father in his various operations as a carpenter and securing such advantages in an educational way as were afforded in the common schools of the locality and period. On the 1st of January, 1832, at

Reading, Pennsylvania, he was united in marriage to Miss Susan Brown, who was born in Exeter township, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of March, 1808, and who died on the 17th of October, 1863, her remains being laid to rest in the cemetery at Osnaburg, Stark county, Ohio. Subsequently Mr. DeWees married Miss Susan Delap, who died on the 22d of January, 1875, only a few months prior to the demise of her husband. Of the children of George M. and Susan (Brown) DeWees we enter the following brief record: Archibald, who was born at Sinking Spring, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of July, 1832, died there on the 22d of November, 1834; Ambrose, born April 1, 1833, in Cumru township, that county, died in Washington, D. C., on the 11th of February, 1902, having been twice married; he served in the United States army in 1856, and was in the three months' service during the Civil war, as a member of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; also served in the three years service and was mustered out at the end of the war; Elizabeth, who was born in Cumru township, Berks county, on the 27th of March, 1835, is the wife of Hiram Wepner and resides at Osnaburg, Stark county, Ohio; Cordelia, who was born in the same place in Pennsylvania, on the 7th of March, 1837, died on August 11th of the following year; William B., who was born in the same township, on the 6th of October, 1839, married Miss Lizzie Lape, and they reside in Canton, Ohio, he being a retired merchant; John B., the youngest son, is the immediate subject of this review; Mary, who was born in Womelsdorf, Berks county, Pennsylvania, May 1, 1844, died in Osnaburg, Stark county, Ohio, on the 4th of March, 1864. Of the marriage of George M. and Susan (Delap) DeWees two children were born, namely: George D., who was born in Osnaburg, Stark county, Ohio, on the 16th of July, 1866, is now a resident of Chicago, Illinois, and Emma, who was born in Osnaburg, township, on the 15th of July, 1868, who is now deceased and is buried at Osnaburg.

George Martin DeWees, the father of the subject, was a man of many and varied attainments and fine intellectuality. He was proficient in the carving of wood, in engraving on metals and in painting in both oils and water colors and various other pigments. His specific scholastic discipline was received in the country schools of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, as before noted, but the education of such a man is not time-limited by curriculum of school or college but extends throughout life,—so long as there remains the possibility of leading out the alert mind into new fields of thought and endeavor, thus justifying the generic use of the term education, which means a leading out or drawing forth. In initiating his active business career Mr. DeWees became a clerk in a dry-goods establishment at Sinking Springs, Pennsylvania, and there his first marriage was solemnized. Through the sedentary occupation he was following, his health became impaired, and he found it necessary to seek employment less confining. He accordingly engaged in the huckstering business in the village mentioned. He had visited Stark county and other portions of Ohio prior to his marriage, having done a profitable business in the cutting of profiles or silhouettes, a form of art portraiture which was then in high favor. He finally withdrew from business in Sinking Spring and removed to Womelsdorf, Berks county, Pennsylvania, where he turned his attention to work at the gunsmith trade and to the manufacturing of shoe lasts, while also kept a stock of shoe findings. This resented but one phase of his endeavors, was a man of marked versatility, as has been stated. Thus he devoted the portion of his time in that place to sign and specimens of his art in this line the highways and byways throughout the county. From Womelsdorf he rem-point near Newmanstown, Lebanon county, where he erected a shop and became associated with his father in chair-making, last-making and general wood-turning, in the meanwhile continuing to devote much attention to his sign-painting, in which line his services were in almost constant requisition. At the time of the building of the Lebanon Valley Railroad he moved into the town last mentioned, his father having there purchased a hotel property. For several years following he was engaged in conducting this hotel, or tavern, as such caravan-series were commonly known in those days.

In the year 1860, accompanied by his wife and children, George M. DeWees came from Pennsylvania to Stark county, Ohio, locating in the hamlet of Osnaburg, where he purchased property and engaged in the hotel business, conducting what was known as the Union Hotel. Later he opened a general merchandise store, and in this line of enterprise he continued until his death, which occurred very suddenly, on the 27th of September, 1875. He served as postmaster of Osnaburg for several years and also as township clerk, and no man in the community has ever enjoyed a higher degree of popularity, confidence and esteem. He was the soul of honor, was ever animated by the deepest sympathy and charity, tolerant in his judgment but hating equivocation and dissimulation with all the strength of his frank, sincere and upright nature. He was a man who stood "Four square to every wind that blows," and in his death the community suffered the loss of a valued citizen and manifested an unmistakable sense of personal bereavement. He was devoted to his home and family and in the sacred precincts of that home the true nobility of his character shown forth most luminously. He was naturally of a somewhat tempestuous temperament, but he made every effort to control his passions, though he would brook no insult. He scorned all contumacy, no sign of weakness ever manifested in his own personality. He demanded the approval of conscience for every thought, word and deed, and lived a life which served both as lesson and inspiration. As another has written of him, "He loved his country and he was a citizen of sterling character and worth; and his death was lamented by all who knew him." In politics he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith was that of the Universalist church, but he was not a member of any church.

John Brown DeWees, the immediate subject of this review, was born at Womelsdorf, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 9th of November, 1841, and his early educational advantages were such as were afforded by a somewhat desultory attendance in the district schools of the old Keystone state, where he was reared to maturity, having been nineteen years of age at the time of the family removal to Stark county, Ohio. He was a valiant soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and while in camp, under difficulties which may well be imagined, he devoted himself assiduously to study when his military duties permitted. In 1860 he came with his parents to Ohio, and in the following year he returned to Newmanstown, Pennsylvania, where he had been promised a clerkship in a store. While there, however, his patriotism and loyalty led him to join a number of his chums and playmates of former days in tendering his services in defense of the Union, whose integrity was in jeopardy through armed rebellion. On the 12th of October, 1861, he was mustered in as a private in Company F, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and of his military career we make a summary as follows: On the 22d of October, 1864, he was promoted to the office of sergeant major; was commissioned adjutant, with the rank of first lieutenant, on the 4th of March, 1865; and he was mustered out with his regiment, on the 27th of June, 1865, having thus served during practically the entire period of the war. The regiment proceeded to the front shortly after its organization was completed, being assigned to the Army of the Potomac. On the 19th of December, 1864, in the battle of Winchester, Mr. DeWees received a flesh wound in the right leg, but save for this he escaped more than nominal injuries during his term of service, having been in General Sheridan's command at the battle mentioned. He took part in many of the notable engagements of the great internecine conflict, and among the most important may be mentioned the following: Williamsburg, Virginia; Fair Oaks, or Seven Pines; the seven-days fight from Richmond to Harrison's Landing, on the James river; Antietam; the battle of the Wilderness, Gettysburg and the fights up to Pittsburg; and Sailor's creek. His regiment was ordered forward to reinforce the troops in the second battle of Bull Run, but arrived too late to participate in the action at that point. He was always found at the post of duty and did all that was required of him without complaint, while he endured a full share of the hardships which made the great Civil war one of the most memorable in the annals of history.

At the close of the war Dr. DeWees rejoined his parents in Osnaburg, this county, and soon afterward removed to the city of Chicago, Illinois, where he entered into partnership with M. Rice and engaged in the restaurant business at the corner of State and Jackson streets, in what is now the very center of the finest retail district of the great western metropolis. The partnership was dissolved after an interval of six months, and the subject then came again to Stark county, and entered the office of Dr. J. S. Keagle, in the Commercial block, Canton, where he devoted his attention to the study and practical work of dentistry for the ensuing year, becoming specially proficient in his profession, which is both a science and a mechanical art. He then established himself in practice in Osnaburg, where he continued business for several years. In the meanwhile he had been tendered a position in the men's furnishing store conducted by his brother William B., in Canton, and in 1868 he became identified with this enterprise, and when his brother sold the business, in 1870, to Henry Meyers, the Doctor remained with the new proprietor, and was thus engaged for several years.

In 1879, with a view to re-entering the practice of his profession and imbued with a desire to attain a technical knowledge which would place him on a parity with the leading representatives of the profession, in which notable advances had been made in methods and systems, the Doctor entered the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery, at Philadelphia, where he completed a thorough course of study and practical work and was duly graduated as a member of the class of 1880. He then returned to Canton, opening an office and here he has ever since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, in which he has attained marked prestige, receiving a representative support. His finely equipped offices are located in the Gibbs block, and here he has the best provisions for the handling of all classes of dental work, both operative and laboratory, while he is known as one of the most skillful and discriminating of workmen and as one fully informed as to the best methods of procedure in the surgical branch of the profession. He is secretary and treasurer of the Canton Dental Association, and is held in the highest esteem by his professional confreres, as well as by all others with whom he is thrown in contact in business or social circles. Externally the Doctor is a member of McKim Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In politics he gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, with which he has been identified from the time of entering his legal majority, his first pr vote having been cast in support of Lincoln. In his religious views, while having a reverence for the spiritual verities, he is liberal.

In Paris township, this county, in 1871, Dr. DeWees was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Emrich, who was born in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of John Emrich, a native of Germany. Of the children of Dr. and Mrs. DeWees we incorporate the following data: Howard E., who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Malvern, Carroll county, Ohio, married Miss Ora McGregor, a daughter of Judge Malcolm McGregor, of Carthage, Missouri; Gertrude E., who is the wife of George W. Howenstine, of Canton; and Harry E. and Herbert E., who are twins, the former being entry clerk in the office of the Bucher-Gibbs Company, of Canton, while the latter is a traveling salesman for the Canton Hardware Company.

MICHAEL J. HOLTZ.—Of the neighboring states, Pennsylvania contributed most to the population of Ohio, and in its early settlement Stark county was especially fortunate in securing from the sturdy farming community of the Keystone state the progenitors of some of the best and most progressive families in the county today. Among these the Holtz family is entitled to special mention. The late Michael J. Holtz, of Plain township, the subject of this sketch, was a representative offspring of the family.

Michael J. Holtz was born on his father's farm in Plain township, Stark county, January 1826, the son of John Holtz, a native of Pennsylvania, born December 9, 1790. The father of John was Michael Holtz, a native of Germany, who came to America about the close of the Revolutionary war and settled in Pennsylvania. The mother of Michael J. Holtz, the subject of this sketch, was Mary Holtz, a native of Maryland, but who had married to Stark county with her parents about 1818. Here she met her future husband, John Holtz, and later they were married. They located on a farm, built a home and reared a family. Mary Holtz died when about sixty-nine years of age, while her husband, John Holtz, lived to the age of eighty-four years, his death occurring in 1874.

Mr. Holtz's father was a soldier in the war of 1812, serving about six months. Mrs. Holtz's father was under Colonel Raine in the same regiment as was Mr. Holtz, but they never met until after their children had married and it was then learned that they were both in the same war and same regiment together, both getting their discharge from the same colonel. Shortly after the settlement of Mrs. Holtz's parents here her father would yoke his oxen and make trips to Cleveland and get salt in sacks that were carried over the yoke, and his route was designated by blazed trees. The salt was distributed among his neighbors. Gillman Folsom, brother of Mrs. Holtz, was the first to build a three-story building in the city of Cleveland, this being only a frame structure, and he was also the first man in Cleveland to buy wool. Her maternal grandfather Thornton was drowned in the Connecticut river when he was engaged in ferrying stone across for building purposes. The river was a mile across and when about half way over the boat capsized and he was drowned.

Upon his father's farm in Plain township, M. J. Holtz was reared, and while the opportunity of securing a good education was not afforded him, he was, nevertheless, neither ignorant nor illiterate. He acquired a fair knowledge of all of the elementary branches of education and was well informed, having also studied the French language. He was a thorough farmer, having devoted the greater part of his life to agricultural pursuits.

September 7, 1851, Michael J. Holtz was united in marriage to Miss Emily H. Folsom, who was born in Ashtabula, Ohio, October 23, 1829, and who was possessed of all the skill, accomplishments, attainments and virtues of her sex. Her father was David Folsom, born in 1784, in Essex county, Vermont, where he was educated, coming to Ohio when a young man and several years later married, settling in the woods, where by his industry he cleared a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, with his father, who had come to Ohio with him. They were surrounded by Indians, who were savage, doing a great deal of damage at times. In the later years of his life her father retired from farming, taking up the hotel business, which he conducted for some years, later retiring from active business except when he would help his sons, who were contracting in Canton. He died in Corunna, Indiana, in 1862. His wife was Phoebe Thornton, who was a native of Hartford, Connecticut, born in 1794. Her parents were married in Ashtabula county, Ohio, in 1813, where they stayed for many years, she dying July 5, 1844, in Loudonville, Richland county. Mrs. Phoebe (Thornton) Folsom died in the fiftieth year of her age, having been born about 1794. Ten children were born to them, of whom Mrs. Michael J. Holtz was the eighth. The Folsoms and the Thorntons were evidently originally of English extraction.

At the time of their marriage Mrs. and Mr. Michael J. Holtz were possessed of very little property, though in that respect they were neither better nor worse off than their neighbors, a condition which is very conducive to contentment. They settled on the farm in Stark county, and devoted themselves to the usual farm work. They prospered and became the parents of four daughters, of whom they reared three and educated them and in time they became useful women. The children are Elista A., Frances M., Ermina E., who died at the age of twenty-one months, and Almira P. Elista is the wife of J. Murray Spangler, of Canton, and Almira P. is the wife of William H. Martin. In June, 1901, when seventy-five years old, Michael J. Holtz passed to his eternal life. Few more conscientious men ever surrendered life. To say that he was a good man only mildly expresses it. A faithful, affectionate husband to his wife and a kind father to his children, he was kind and indulgent and his neighbors and friends had many reasons for respecting him in life and revering his memory in death. As one of them has very graphically expressed it, "During his entire life, he lived at peace with all the world."

Since the death of Michael J. Holtz his affairs have been taken in charge by his good and faithful wife, who has managed them with prudence and good judgment. The farm, consisting of one hundred and thirty acres, is conducted under her direct supervision and there are few better managed farms in Stark county. Mrs. Holtz is a lady of much energy, possessed of great force of character and a will and determination in what she believes to be right which makes it impossible to sway or divert her from executing her purposes. Despite this, she has been a most patient and gentle mother to her daughters and a model wife to her lamented husband. She is a modest, devout member of the Lutheran church, to which church her husband also belonged and in which faith he died. Her life and his are most creditable to their worthy ancestry and their posterity will look back with pleasure upon the careers of such worthy parents. The children are also members of the same church and are constant attendants.

HON. JAMES WEEKS UNDERHILL.
—Few of the citizens of Stark county entitled to be ranked among its public men have been in the public eye for so long a period, or have been as favorably known, or more generally esteemed, than the subject of this sketch. The branch of the Underhill family to which he belongs traces its ancestry to Captain John

Underhill, who came from England and settled in Massachusetts about ten years after the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth. Being a man of strong character, he took a conspicuous part in the religious and political interests of the colony, and history mentions him as one of the supporters of Ann Hutchinson in her controversy with the governor. By 1637, however, he seems to have become reconciled with the ruling powers, for he accepted a commission under the colony and was placed in command of the forces contributed by Massachusetts for the Pequod war, and, with one Captain Mason, in joint command of a small band of seventy Englishmen, carried an Indian fortress by storm near what is now Stonington, Connecticut, wreaking a terrible vengeance upon the savages, for it is recorded that out of seven hundred but five escaped.

Tradition says that the family in England were of Quaker stock, and it is well known that many of Captain John Underhill's descendants were members of the Society of Friends. Certainly the Captain himself, if a Friend, was a "fighting Quaker." A branch of the family settled in eastern New York, and from this the Ohio family had its origin.

Nathaniel Underhill and his wife, Anna (Weber), lived near the banks of the Hudson river in Greene county and there James W. was born, October 6, 1818. The family removed to Ohio in 1827, completing their long trip by the Erie canal and lake and Ohio canal as far as Akron, by team to the little settlement of Kendall, then an independent village but afterwards absorbed by the more ambitious and growing town of Massillon.

Losing his father at an early age, Mr. Underhill was sent back to New York where he remained with an uncle, Dr. Abraham K. Underhill, at Charlton, Saratoga county, attending school until 1837; then returning to Ohio, he completed his education so far as he derived it from schools, meanwhile supporting himself by teaching, and at the same time reading law, under Samuel Pease, then a prominent member of the Stark county bar and uncle of the late Judge Anson Pease. He was admitted to the bar in 1842, and manifested his confidence in his prospects by marrying, in the same year, Henrietta Widgeon, the daughter of one of the prominent pioneer families of Massillon and vicinity. Having been a diligent student, possessing an intuitive knowledge of human nature and marked by earnestness of manner and force of character, he became a strong advocate before the juries of the county, and commanded a fine position in the practice. In 1855 he was elected to the state legislature as a member of the house of representatives, and served for one term of two years. He was elected to the office of probate judge in 1860, and upon taking office, in February, 1861, he moved with his family to Canton, the county seat, where he has since lived. In the discharge of his duties in this office his course was so satisfactory to the people that he held office for four successive terms, making twelve years in all, during that period no one caring to contest with him the honor of the position, and at the end he declined a re-nomination. As a probate judge he stands without a superior in the county. Well grounded in general legal principles, with a strong natural sense of equity, he was guided in his judicial duties less by technical rules than a strong sense of even-handed justice. Having supervision over the administration of the estates of deceased persons, he was pre-eminently the judge of the widow and the orphan, and among the varied interests that fell within the jurisdiction of his court, the rights of the weak and desolate ones were always safely guarded and protected. After the termination of his judicial career he returned to the practice of law for a time, and for a number of years was associated with the late John Lahm as a partner in practice.

Meanwhile Judge Underhill acquired some interests in business matters outside of the strict lines of professional work, and became interested, with the late H. B. Dennis, of Cleveland, in the construction of a railroad from Cleveland to Coshocton by way of Canton, and they had the work between Canton and Coshocton well advanced when they disposed of it. It is now an important branch of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad. He also took some interests in manufacturing enterprises, making an investment in the Diebold Safe & Lock Company. He became a stockholder and officer of the Canton Car Company, and, parting with that interest, acquired one in the Canton Electric Lighting Company, taking a very active part in the extension of its system, and when he sold his holdings in 1901 it was the sole electric lighting company in the city and supplied light and power throughout the corporation. In 1890 he acquired a large interest in the Canton Street Railway, including the line to Meyer's Lake, and in 1892 he and his associates laid out and built the inter-urban line to Massillon and the system in the city of Massillon, which was afterwards extended to Navarre. These interests he retained, and took an active part in managing, until he disposed of them in 1901, when he wound up his active part in business affairs, feeling that the time had come for him to lay down the duties and responsibilities of such investments.

of Trade and in many ways devoted his active services to the civic and business interests of the community.

Having been separated at an early day from the immediate influences of his Quaker family, and having married "out of meeting," Judge Underhill never was a member of the Society of Friends, but always maintained a high regard for the Quakers and their peculiarly spiritual views of religion. These impressions, formed early in life, probably served to turn his attention, in his advancing years to the claims of modern spiritualism, and he became a firm believer in the possibility of communication between the spirits of the departed and those still on earth. Recently he has devoted a considerable sum to the benefit of an association for the study of this and kindred questions.

Judge Underhill's family were Whigs, and he became identified with that party at an early age, continuing in strict relation to it until the formation of the Republican party, excepting that in 1848 he voted the Free Soil ticket because of his advanced views upon the subject of African slavery. Upon the formation of the Republican party he joined it, supporting it in all its great contests, upon the stump, with power and effect until his advancing years compelled him to turn over that work to younger men. At an early age he conceived a warm interest in Masonry, attracted in part by the poetical beauty of its teachings and ritual, and doubtless in part by the social aspects of the institution. He became grand high priest of the grand chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of the state, and for many years was eminent commander of Massillon Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, and he is now the oldest Mason in Canton. Within a few years he became a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.
