Basel, Switzerland, and March 7, 1817, in company with his family, he emigrated to America, landing at Philadelphia, July 25, 1817. The family went thence to Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. He was a man of energy and integrity and felt that in America he could secure better returns from his labors, and that his financial resources were at low ebb at the time of his emigration to the United States is evident from the fact that he was unable to pay for the passage of himself and his family, entering into an agreement to defray this expense by his labor after arriving in America, the requisite money being supplied by a friend. The family landed in the city of Philadelphia, after a long and weary voyage on a sailing vessel, and then proceeded to Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where Mr. Schaub entered the employ of Henry Baer, for whom he worked until he had paid the passage money advanced to him. About the year 1835 he came with his wife and two children to Canton, whither his daughter Maria, the wife of Adam Blinn, had preceded them. He soon afterward secured employment on the Shock farm, south of Canton, and later worked on the farm of John Trump, while finally he removed into Plain township, and there he passed the remainder of his life, passing away about 1843, while his wife whose maiden name was Maria, died about 1842. They became the parents of seven children, all of whom are now deceased.

Jacob Schaub, Jr., father of the subject of this review, was born in Switzerland, in 1804, and was thirteen years of age at the time when the family came to America. He had attended school in his native land and continued his studies in the common schools after coming to the United States. He was reared to farm work in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania; he served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, which he followed for a short time, after which he resumed farming, which continued to be his vocation throughout the remainder of his life. In Lancaster county was solemnized his marriage to Miss Eliza Nixdorf, who was born in that county, being a daughter of Henry and Catharine Nixdorf, both of whom were natives of the Keystone state. Jacob and Eliza Schaub became the parents of five children, three of the number dying in childhood, while the two living are the subject of this sketch and his sister Susan, who is the wife of Samuel Frankford, of Petersburg, Pennsylvania. The mother of the subject died when he was about eight years of age, and his father subsequently married Miss Anna Kinch, who preceded him into eternal rest. To the second union was born one child, Lizzie, the wife of John Burkhart, of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. The father died in Petersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1867.

Jacob N. Schaub, whose name introduces this sketch, was born in East Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 27th of June, 1829, and grew to maturity on the homestead farm, to whose work he early began to contribute his quota, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the district schools, which he attended during the winter terms and at such other times as his services were not demanded on the farm. He was fond of study and made excellent progress by studying at night, so that he laid a good foundation for that broad fund of knowledge which he has since gained in connection with the active duties and responsibilities of life. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Schaub married and he then initiated his independent career, laboring in any capacity which would render him an honest living. For a period of three years he lived in the home of a wagon-maker, in whose shop he learned the trade, to which he devoted his attention only a short time. He then returned to the old homestead farm, of which he continued in charge for the ensuing ten years, at the expiration of which, in 1864, he came to Canton, and forthwith began to look about for a farm to suit him.

Finally he became associated with his brother-in-law, Christian Singer, in the purchase of the Hull farm, in Canton township. He gave his attention to the cultivation of this place for two years, having in the meanwhile purchased Mr. Singer's interest in the same, and at the expiration of the time noted he sold the property to John Carnes, and then returned to Canton and purchased three acres of land, on which St. Mary's Catholic church now stands, on South Market street. He there resided for two years and then disposed of the property and purchased a portion of the Menzer farm, adjoining his old Hull place, in Canton township. This he sold three years later and purchased thirty-three acres of the Raynolds farm, in the same township, and here he erected good buildings and made one of the best farms in the county, his idea being that successful farming does not depend so much upon the number of acres owned as upon the methods brought to bear in securing the maximum productiveness, while his success amply justified his theory. He remained on this farm fifteen years and then sold the same to the Brillhart sisters, receiving three hundred dollars per acre, which fact indicates the high state of cultivation under which he had brought the place. He then bought fifty acres of the Long farm, in Plain township, and this continued to be his home for the following seven years. He sold the farm to George Heidenbrand at the expiration of this period and then came to Canton, where he lived retired for a few years, then purchasing the Blake flour mill, on Navarre street, which he operated successfully about four years, selling the property to his son Hiram, in the fall of 1902, since which time he has been retired from active business, and in his attractive home, at 1412 Logan avenue, he is enjoying the rewards of his many years of earnest toil and endeavor.

In politics Mr. Shaub is independent in his attitude, and he has always shown a deep interest in public affairs of a local nature. He served one term as trustee of Canton township, and he was for a number of years a member of the board of directors of the Stark County Agricultural Society, of which he was president for one year, while at other times he held the various other official positions on the board, doing much to further the interests of the society. For about twenty years he served as a member of the board of education of Canton township. He and his family are members of Trinity Reformed church.

On the 12th of December, 1850, Mr. Shaub was united in marriage to Miss Maria Kinch, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Jacob Kinch. Of this union have been born eleven children, concerning whom we enter record as follows: Amelia married Crysvillis Smith, now deceased; Hiram married Mary Meyers, of Indiana, and is engaged in milling in Canton; Ambrose married Lucretia Lloyd, and is engaged in milling in Louisville, Stark county; Ulysses G. married Polly Thomas, and lives in Canton; Calvin; Elizabeth married M. A. Weidler, who is in the harness business in Canton; Ella N. married Clyde Hayhurst, and they live in Canton; Addison, the eldest child, died December 25, 1893; Milton died, aged fifteen years, in Ohio; one son and one daughter died in infancy in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Shaub celebrated their golden wedding anniversary December 12, 1900.

PETER HOUSEL.—Among the early residents of Stark county who had much to do with the development of the country and the advancement of its material interests, the late Peter Housel, of Canton township, is worthy of especial notice. The Housel family had its origin in Holland and was first represented in the United States by the subject's grandfather, who sailed from his native land in a very early day and, with others of his countrymen, located in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania. Like his ancestors for many generations, he was a tiller of the soil and followed agricultural pursuits in the above county until his death, which occurred not long after the colony of Pennsylvania became a state of the Federal Union. Anthony Housel, father of Peter, was born and reared in the county of Northumberland and when a young man there married Miss Mary Murphy, whose parents were also among the pioneer settlers of that part of the state, her father moving to this country from the north of Ireland. In 1816, the year following the birth of their second child, the subject of this review, Anthony and Mary Housel moved to Ohio, making the journey on horseback, the mother carrying her infant son in her arms while the father looked after the stock and cared for the daughter, a little girl of about two or three years old. On reaching his destination Mr. Housel settled on a quarter section of wild land in what is now Plain township and immediately addressed himself to the tasks of improvement. In due time he improved a good farm, which he made his home to the end of his days, the meanwhile taking an active interest in the general development of the country and earning the reputation of an honorable, industrious man and an enterprising public-spirited citizen. When the First Presbyterian church of Canton was organized Mr. and Mrs. Housel became charter members and continued faithful communicants of the same as long as they lived, besides contributing liberally of their means to the material support of the congregation.

Anthony Housel was three times married, his first wife, as already stated, being Mary Murray, after whose death he formed a matrimonial alliance with Mary Hoover and still later with Mary Kerr. By his first marriage were born the following children: Peter, the immediate subject of this review; Charity, married John Werner, but both died at Louisville, this county; Thomas married Mary Neise and is now, at the age of eighty-seven years, living in Uniontown, this county; Mary became the wife of Anthony Spangler, and is now living near Columbia City, Indiana; Catharine became the wife of John Sunday; Hannah is the wife of Samuel Laird, of Plain township; Sarah became the wife of S. C. Shamers, and is now living at Bloomington, Indiana; Percilla married Jacob Snyder, of Plain township; John died at the age of eighteen years; Hiram H. married Alice Firestone, and is now living at Los Angeles, California; Amanda became the wife of J. H. Spangler, and is now living in Canton; Loucetta married H. C. Mentzer, and they live in Cherokee county, Kansas.

Peter Housel was born September 30, 1815, in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, and, as already stated, was about one year old when his parents took up their residence in Ohio. He was reared to agricultural pursuits on the home farm in Stark county, attended school as opportunities offered and made such advancement in his studies that before reaching the age of twenty he was qualified to teach, which line of work he followed a number of years with gratifying success. When a young man of twenty he went to Pennsylvania and for two years thereafter clerked in his uncle's store at Danville, returning home at the expiration of that time and again devoting his attention to educational work. In 1842 he married Miss Julia Ann Smith, and, renting a part of the home farm, continued to live in Plain township until 1847, when he purchased a place of his own near Hurfords Hill, in the township of Canton. After living several years on the latter farm, Mr. Housel sold it and in 1854 bought seventy-eight acres of land near the town of Canton, all of which is now included in the city limits, the present site of the place extending from the South Market street school southward to the creek and embracing a number of valuable lots and improvements. About two or three years after moving to his last purchase he platted an addition to the city, consisting of a number of fine building lots which soon found ready buyers; the city continuing to encroach upon his home, he frequently laid out other lots which were sold at liberal prices and in this way he disposed of the greater part of his land, realizing from the same a fortune which placed him and his family in independent circumstances. Mr. Housel was a successful farmer and a shrewd, far-sighted business man, as his various transactions abundantly attest. He was successful in the accumulation of wealth and wise in its expenditure for legitimate purposes, but, as indicated above, he laid by sufficient to insure a comfortable competence besides making liberal provisions for his children. In politics he was originally a Whig, but when the Republican party came into existence he gave his allegiance to the same and remained one of its zealous supporters as long as he lived. At the age of forty-four he united with the First Presbyterian church of Canton, later was elected an elder of the congregation and he served as such for a number of years, during which his course was ever that of an honorable, faithful Christian, zealous in upholding the cause of the Master and untiring in his efforts to benefit his fellow men. He lived a useful life, accomplished much good in his various relations and so impressed his individuality upon those with whom he came in contact as to win their confidence and lasting regard. As a neighbor he was obliging in all the term implies and ever ready to accommodate those who applied to him for favors; as a friend he was loyal and the soul of honor, and as a citizen he labored earnestly for the common good and hesitated not to lose sight of self and self interests in his endeavors to promote the welfare of those among whom his lot was cast. Mr. Housel departed this life at his home in Canton on the 19th day of June, 1885, and left to mourn his loss five children and a host of friends who had learned to appreciate him for his manly character and sterling worth. His wife, who had long been his faithful companion and true helpmate on life's journey, was called to her reward in the year 1889. She was a loving mother, a sincere Christian and a devoted friend, and, with a peace of mind prevailing her soul like the placid flow of a tranquil stream, she sank sweetly into her last quiet sleep and fearlessly entered the valley of shadows, assured of a Heavenly Father's welcome on the other side.

The following are the names of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Housel: Johana, who died in childhood; Malinda also died young; Mary Ann, deceased; Eva resides in Canton; Ella, the widow of H. W. Thomas, also makes her home in this city; Daniel, who died at the age of nine years, was the third person to be buried in Westlawn cemetery; Laura, who departed this life at the early age of eighteen months; Anthony, by profession an attorney, resides in Cincinnati; Cora, now Mrs. C. J. Everhart, of Canton; and Thomas, the youngest of the family.

HENRY W. THOMAS.—On the old homestead farm, in Pike township, Mr. Thomas was ushered into the world on the 9th of November, 1837, said homestead being located two miles north of the now thriving village of Sparta. There he was reared to maturity under the beneficent influences of farm life, while he received his early educational training in the district schools and supplemented the same by a course of study in Mount Union College, which has long held high rank among the educational institutions of this section of the Buckeye state, and there he made the best use of the opportunities afforded him. At the age of eighteen years he began teaching in the public schools of the county and continued successfully in the pedagogic profession two years, while he turned from the vocations of peace to face the stern duties involved in the defense of the Union when its perpetuation was threatened by armed rebellion. He was among the first to enlist from Stark county, having become a private in Company F, Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in 1861. His company was commanded by Captain James Wallace, and at the close of his term of enlistment Mr. Thomas gave further evidence of his intrinsic loyalty and patriotic devotion by veteranizing, still retaining membership in the same company and regiment, with which he served until the close of the war, the command having been attached to the Army of the Potomac during the greater part of the time and having participated in many of the notable engagements of the great fraternal conflict. During the term of his service he received one slight wound, but was not long incapacitated for service, and thereafter continued at the post of duty until victory crowned the Union arms. After the close of the war Mr. Thomas resumed his studies in Mount Union College, near Alliance, and later devoted his attention to teaching for a few years, after which he turned his attention to the trade of carpenter, to which he devoted his attention until the time of his marriage, which was solemnized on the 29th of December, 1868, when Miss Ella E. Housel became his wife. He then took up his residence on the Housel farm, which originally comprised one hundred and sixty acres and which is now subdivided into city lots in the southwest section of Canton. Here he continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits for the ensuing seven years, at the expiration of which he again became identified with the work of his trade, as a contractor and builder, gaining marked precedence through his efforts in this line and continuing to be thus engaged until the time of his death, which occurred on the 20th of July, 1900. He was a consistent and valued member of the Presbyterian church and was an elder in the Buckingham mission, an auxiliary of the church mentioned. In politics he gave an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party and was ever actively interested in public affairs, though he never manifested any ambition for public office. His life was an unblemished one and it was but natural that to him should have been accorded the fullest measure of public confidence and esteem, so that in the county in which he maintained his home from the time of his birth until he was summoned to the eternal life, his friends were in number as his acquaintances.

Mr. Thomas was a son of Nathaniel Thomas, who came to Stark county from Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, in the early days, entering one hundred and sixty acres of land in Pike township and there developing a good farm. In this county he married a Miss Welker, and they became the parents of ten children, namely: Henry W., Barnett, Harriet, Lewis, Mary, Ellen, John, Lizzie, William and Eliza. Of the number six are living at the present time. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas became the parents of seven children, of whom two died in infancy, while of the others we enter the following brief record: Charles died at the age of four years; Herbert, who is now a resident of the city of Columbus, Ohio, married Miss Agatha Hayes, and they are the parents of two children; Edgar, who is bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Canton, married Miss Carrie Sheaffer, and they have one child; Eva is the wife of Clifford Beaumont, and they reside in the attractive old homestead with her mother, on Deuber street, and have one child; Minnie is living at home with her mother.

Mr. Thomas became a successful and representative business man of Canton, and was concerned in the erection of many important buildings in the county, while in all the relations of life he held every trust inviolable and demanded the approval of conscience for every action.

He stood four square to every wind that blows, was loyal in his friendships, a devoted husband and father and a man whose memory remains as a benediction to those who were nearest and dearest to him.

HARRY E. FIFE.—The Fife Brothers Company, of which the subject of this sketch is secretary and treasurer, conduct an enterprise which in its line is tantamount in importance to any other of similar character in this section of the Buckeye state. The interested principals aside from the subject are his brothers, James A. and Frank R., the former of whom is president of the corporation and the latter vice-president, while all have gained distinctive recognition as energetic, progressive and reliable business men, while through their concerted efforts has been built up the extensive business now controlled in the line of plumbing and pipe-fitting; hot-air and hot-water heating; slate, tin, paper and gravel roofing; and in the handling of stoves, ranges, mantels and grates; natural-gas and builders' supplies and gas and electrical fixtures. The business was established in 1892, and the same was originally conducted under title of the Yost & Fife Company, of which the present corporation became the successor in 1898, the business being duly incorporated under the laws of the state. The offices and salesrooms of the company are located in a commodious and substantial two-story brick and stone structure at 212-216 East Third street, where an aggregate floor space of twelve thousand square feet is utilized.

Prior to his identifying himself with this enterprise, Harry E. Fife was employed with the plumbing concern of Theobald & Company in the capacity of bookkeeper, and eventually became a member of the firm, and of those at present identified with the plumbing business in Canton he holds priority over all other in point of continuous connection with the industry, though he is still a young man. Mr. Fife is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in the city of Allegheny on the 4th of January, 1864. When he was but six weeks of age his parents removed to Ohio and located in Canton, and here he was reared to manhood, securing his early educational discipline in the public schools and being graduated in the Canton high school as a member of the class of 1879. He then entered the Canton Business College, where he completed a thorough course in the commercial branches. Upon leaving this institution Mr. Fife secured employment in the office of George W. Dillon, one of the pioneer plumbers of Canton, and later he became identified with the firm of Theobald & Company, as has been previously noted, as have also the more salient points in his business career since that time. In politics Mr. Fife is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and his religious faith is indicated by his retaining membership in the First Presbyterian church, of which his wife also is a devoted adherent. Fraternally he is a member of Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons, and was one of the incorporators of what is now known as the Savings & Loan Company, one of the prominent financial institutions of Canton.

On the 2nd of September, 1891, Mr. Fife was united in marriage to Miss Anna Reed, who was born and reared in Canton, being a daughter of John P. and Eliza Reed, well known and honored residents of this city for many years.

James M. Fife, father of the subject, was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, being a representative of staunch pioneer stock, and he learned the trade of molder, to which he was devoting his attention in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, at the time of our subject's birth. After coming to Canton he was employed for some time in the molding department of the works of the C. Aultman Company, and thereafter represented the company as a traveling agent for the long period of twelve years, within which time he visited the most diverse sections of the Union as well as various European countries, in the interests of this important concern. In 1896 he established himself in the fire-insurance business in Canton, and has since been successfully identified with this line of enterprise, conducting the business under the name of the J. M. Fife Insurance Agency. The Fife family is of pure Scottish lineage. The maiden name of our subject's mother was Elizabeth McClure, and she was born in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, of Scotch-Irish descent. She and her husband are prominent and valued members of the First Presbyterian church, and the latter is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a radical Republican in his political proclivities. Of the children of James M. and Elizabeth Fife we may say that they have four sons and three daughters, namely: Harry E., Frank R., James A., Arthur G., Clara J., Grace and May P. Grace is now the wife of Otto Giessen, of Canton.

HENRY HAAG was born in Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, in March, 1833, being one of the six children born to Christopher and Marilla Haag, of which number two survive at the present time, namely: Philip, who resides in Punxsutawney, Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, and Mary, who is the widow of Moses Ireley and resides in the state of Texas. The parents were both born in Germany, where three of their children were born, and in 1832 they emigrated to America, one of their children dying en route and being buried at sea. On their arrival in the United States they proceeded to Ebensburg, Cambria county, Pennsylvania, and there the father secured employment in connection with the construction of the first railroad which traversed that section of the state. A year later he removed to Jefferson county and located in the immediate vicinity of the present little city of Punxsutawney, where he became the owner of a farm of eighty acres, being numbered among the first settlers in the county, where but a few families had anticipated him in locating. In his native land he had learned the trade of wagon-maker, and to this he continued to devote his attention in connection with his farming operations, passing the remainder of his life in Jefferson county, where he died, his wife also passing away in that county, the other three of their children having been born after they took up their residence there.

Henry Haag, the immediate subject of this sketch, grew up on the homestead farm and early began to materially aid in its work, while he also learned the wagon-making trade under the direction of his father, his services in these lines being so insistent as to preclude his regular attendance at school, even had the advantages been greater than they were. He managed to attend the subscription school, three miles distant from his home, for brief intervals, and thus gained a knowledge of the more rudimentary branches. He continued to work as a wagon-maker with his father until 1865, when he came to Stark county, locating in Paris soon after his arrival here and there finding employment at his trade. He remained there about two years, and then, after passing a short time in Alliance, he went to Salem, Columbiana county, where he continued to follow his trade for a period of about five years. He then passed a year in Alliance, and at the expiration of this period came again to Canton, where he was consecutively engaged in the work of his trade up to 1889, having conducted his operations independently for a number of years. In the year mentioned he took up his abode on the present home farm, which he had purchased a year previously, the same being located in Osnaburg township, Stark county, and comprising one hundred and forty acres of exceptionally fertile and productive land, the place having substantial improvements of the best order, including an attractive residence. Mr. Haag was a Democrat in politics. During the major portion of his life he belonged to the Lutheran church, but in later life belonged to the Reformed church, of which his widow is a member. His death occurred January 14, 1903.

On the 29th of October, 1889, Mr. Haag was united in marriage to Miss Adaline Feudner, who was born in Lake township, this county, being a daughter of John and Dorothy (Househalter) Feudner, both of whom were born in Germany, whence the former emigrated to America in the early forties, when a young man, while the latter came to this country with her parents in 1838. Mr. and Mrs. Haag are the parents of three children, Richard, John and Dorothy, all at home. On the 1st of April, 1903, Mrs. Haag removed to Canton, where she still resides.

CHARLES R. ROTH.—Another of the native sons of Stark county who has here passed his entire life and who has gained prestige as an able and enterprising young business man, is Mr. Roth, who is the senior member of the firm of Roth & Hug, who conduct a well equipped drug store at No. 333 East Tuscarawas street, in the city of Canton, while they have received a gratifying and representative support from the public, which fact indicates their correct business methods and personal popularity. Mr. Roth was born in the attractive village of Navarre, this county, on the 16th of May, 1873, being a son of Beda and Elizabeth (Hug) Roth, both of whom were born in Switzerland, from which fair little republic they emigrated to America in 1871, being accompanied by their three children, while the other four of their children were born in Stark county. The parents of the subject came at once to this county after landing in New York, and took up their residence in the village of Navarre, where Mr. Roth engaged in business as a carpenter and contractor, there continuing operations in this line until 1875, when he came to Canton, where he and his wife have since maintained their home and where he continues to follow the trade as a cabinet maker and builder.

Charles R. Roth was but one year of age when his parents thus removed from his native town to Canton, and here he was reared to maturity, continuing his studies in the public schools until he had attained the age of sixteen years, when he secured a position in the drug store of the firm of Stinchcomb & Portman, and later continued in the same line of occupation, with C. A. Portman & Company and later with H. H. Ink, respective successors, gaining an excellent knowledge of the practical details of the business and devoting careful attention to pharmacy. In order to perfect his technical knowledge as a professional pharmacist, Mr. Roth was matriculated in the New York College of Pharmacy in the city of New York, in 1896, and there completed the prescribed course of study and was graduated as a member of the class of 1898, coming forth thoroughly fortified for the business and profession to which he has since so successfully devoted his attention. After his graduation he returned to Canton and was again in the employ of Mr. Ink about one year, at the expiration of which, in September, 1899, he established his present enterprise by entering into partnership with Casimir K. Hug, under the firm name of Roth & Hug, and they have by energy, enterprise and good management built up an excellent business, while their store is one of the metropolitan establishments of the sort in the city, being modern in equipment and carrying a comprehensive and well selected stock in all lines.

In his political adherency Mr. Roth was formerly identified with the Democratic party, but he now maintains an independent attitude and exercises his franchise in support of men and measures rather than following partisan dictates. He is a member of St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic, and fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

In Canton, on the 28th of November, 1900, Mr. Roth was united in marriage to Miss Lillian Harmony, who was born in Cairo, Ohio, being a daughter of Frank and Sadie Harmony. Mr. and Mrs. Roth have one child, Bernice, who was born on the 30th of September, 1901.

LORENZO M. KILLIAN.—One of the native sons of the city of Canton who has here gained a position of independence through his own efforts and who commands the confidence and respect of the community, is Mr. Killian, who represents the fifth ward in the city council and who has conducted a successful business in the city for a number of years, having a well equipped meat market, where he caters to a large and discriminating patronage. His great-grandparents in the paternal line emigrated from Germany to America and took up their abode in Pennsylvania in an early day, there passing the remainder of their lives, and the old Keystone state was likewise the residence place of the grandparents of the subject. His father, George Killian, was born in Pennsylvania, whence he came to Ohio when a young man, in the early 'fifties, and he was for a time employed at farm work, but soon took up his residence in Canton, where he was engaged in the butchering business until his death, which occurred in July, 1870, at his home, No. 1623 South Market street. He was the owner of two markets at the time of his death—one being located just east of the public square, on East Tuscarawas street, and the other on South Market street, immediately south of the Fort Wayne Railroad tracks. In the latter location there were then only two or three business places south of the railroad tracks, and the father of the subject acquired about twenty acres of land in the vicinity and eventually disposed of the same for business purposes, realizing a good profit. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and his religious faith was that of the German Reformed church, to whose support he contributed a due quota, being a man of sterling character and one whose life was one of consecutive industry. After locating in Stark county he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Immel, a daughter of Benjamin Immel, who was a pioneer farmer, located about twelve miles south of Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Killian became the parents of six children, namely: Emanuel, who was established in the meat market business in Canton for a term of years, died here in about 1893, having been twice married, first to Christina Fleisher, and after her death to her sister, Frances, who survives him; Jacob, a resident of Canton, married Miss Lorena Myers; Sarah is the wife of Michael Greminger, of this city; Joseph died, unmarried, at the age of thirty-four years; George married Miss Mary Barnes and died in Canton, at the age of thirty-two years; and Lorenzo M., the immediate subject of this review, is the youngest of the children. The mother of the subject eventually consummated a second marriage, becoming the wife of Anthony Smith, who died about 1894. She survived until July 26, 1901, her death occurring in the old family home, on South Market street. She likewise was a consistent member of the German Reformed church.

Lorenzo M. Killian was born in the homestead just mentioned, on the 11th of December, 1860, and his educational discipline was received in the public schools of this city. He was but ten years of age at the time of his father's death, and thereafter he became to a large degree dependent upon his own resources, having the self-reliance and common sense to not waste such opportunities as came to him, and never being afraid of honest labor. When but nine years of age he went to work in the butcher shop of his brothers, who were then associated in business, and continued in their employ until he was about eighteen, while the following four years were passed as an employe of the Aultman Company. For the ensuing four years he was associated with his brother, Jacob, in the conducting of a meat market on South Market street, the partnership being then dissolved, the subject becoming the sole owner and having ever since continued the enterprise, building up a satisfactory business through fair and honorable dealing and careful attention to all details of the business. From the time of attaining his majority he has maintained a lively interest in the work and cause of the Democratic party, and his zeal not less than his eligibility led to his being made the nominee of his party for representative of the fifth ward in the city council, in the spring of 1899. He was elected by a satisfactory majority and was honored with a re-election in the spring of 1901, so that he is in tenure of this office at the present time. He has served on important committees of the municipal body and has at all times aimed to conserve good government in all administrative departments, to further the progress of the city in all lines of civic advancement and to be a true representative of his constituency. Among the committees on which he has served may be mentioned that on claims, that on streets and alleys and the railroad committee, being assigned to the last named for both terms of office, while he has also held membership on minor committees. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Foresters and the American Union, and his religious views are in harmony with the tenets of the German Reformed church, under whose discipline he was reared.

In the city of Canton, on the 19th of June, 1881, Mr. Killian was united in marriage to Miss Anna Ware, and within the same year he erected his present attractive residence, at 1617 South Market street. The union has been blessed with six children, namely: Marie W., who is a graduate of the Canton high school; Norman L., who assists his father in the market; and Beulah M., Maurice L., Clifford J. and Lorenzo Donald, all of whom remain at the parental home, to which they lend cheer and brightness, the elder children being also under the home roof, so that the happy family circle is still intact.

ANDREW PONTIUS.—The subject of this sketch, better known as 'Squire Pontius, of Plain township, Stark county, is not a lawyer, but he has had much to do in legal matters for other people. He served for eighteen years as justice of the peace, and considers that the soundest piece of advice he ever gave a man in all that time was "avoid the law." Not content with preaching by precept, he instructed also by example, and showed the confidence he had in his own counsel by never having had, during the period of seventy-three years that he has lived, a law suit of his own. His paternal grandfather was Fredrick Pontius, who was born in Pennsylvania, July 4, 1772, just four years to a day before the promulgation of the Declaration of Independence, and his grandmother was Margaret (Reedy) Pontius, who was also a native of Pennsylvania, and a year or two younger than her husband. The battles of the Revolutionary war were fought and won during their childhood, the first president of the United States was inaugurated while they were school children, and the bells tolled for the first time for the death of the immortal Washington about the time they were entering upon the first years of their married life. Their son, Jacob Pontius, father of the subject, was born in Union county, Pennsylvania, in 1802, and spent the first fourteen years of his life there. In 1816 the parents moved to Stark county, Ohio, whence the lad accompanied them. They settled in Plain township, upon a farm, where they continued to reside until July 18, 1848, when Fredrick Pontius died, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife Margaret then went to Wayne county to reside with one of her children, where she lived until 1861, about the time of the breaking out of the Rebellion, when she died at the age of eighty-six years. In his new home in Stark county Jacob Pontius grew to manhood. He was united in marriage in February, 1827, to Miss Rebecca Essig, who was born in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, May 6, 1806. Her parents moved to Stark county, Ohio, in 1808, before the county was organized, and when she was but two years old. She was reared as were other girls of her time, their attention being occupied with far more work than pleasure. Her education was very practical as in those days the spinning wheel and the weaving loom occupied the place of honor in the household, though their place has since been usurped by the easel, the mandolin or the piano. The accomplishments of a young lady of that day were judged by the kind and amount of spinning that she was capable of doing, and, judged by this standard, Rebecca Essig was considered an accomplished belle. After marriage they settled down to the customary work of the farm. To Jacob and Rebecca Pontius three children were born, viz.: John, Andrew and Margaret. John died in Plain township, in December, 1890; Margaret is the widow of Jacob H. Bair, of North Canton, and Andrew is the subject of this sketch. The father died in the flower of manhood, in 1832, when but thirty years of age, while his wife died October 14, 1896, at the age of ninety years, five months and eight days.

Andrew Pontius was born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, August 22, 1829, and during all of the seventy-three years of his life he has been a resident of that township, farming and stockraising having been the business of his life. Forty or more years ago, when reaping machines first came in vogue, he traveled over the country a good deal as a representative of a manufacturing company. He did much to break down a certain prejudice which prevailed at the time against such machines and was accorded much credit by his employers, not only by the sales made by him, but for starting the purchasers off with the machines all right and because of the general satisfaction expressed by the people with whom he did business.

On May 22, 1851, Andrew Pontius was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Jane Correll, who was a native of Adams county, Pennsylvania, born March 31, 1828. Her parents were John and Elizabeth Correll, natives of Pennsylvania, who had emigrated to Stark county, Ohio, some years previous. After marriage the young couple established themselves upon a farm in Plain township and there they continued to reside since. To them seven children were born, viz.: Lorin W., who is a physician in Canton, Ohio; Jackson W., a business man of Canton; Glancy C., a farmer of Perry township; Lucy M., wife of Judge M. E. Aungst, of Canton; William J. and Charles A. are farmers and dairymen, operating the largest dairy in Stark county.

Since reaching man's estate, Andrew Pontius has been of a cool, deliberate, dispassionate temperament. Every situation that he encountered he weighed carefully and never acted until he was thoroughly convinced that he was right. It was possibly this disposition of deliberation that induced the people of Plain township to make him justice of the peace. He tried many law-suits and it is remarked by his neighbors that they were conducted with as much decorum as might have been expected from a higher court, but he never issued the preliminary papers in a case without strongly advising against the proceeding. So well did he discharge the duties of the position, that time after time he was re-elected, until he absolutely and positively refused to serve longer. In the whole course of his long and active life he never had a law-suit of his own, and no decision of his has ever been reversed on appeal, the impartiality and fairness of his judgment being generally recognized.

In politics Andrew Pontius has always been a Democrat and, while he has taken an active part in campaigns in the interest of his party, he has never aspired to public position or sought place at the hands of any party. Years ago he served his township as clerk, for which he received the munificent salary of fifteen dollars per year. He has also been elected and served a number of terms as township treasurer and was at one time placed in charge of the office of county treasurer, though never having been elected to the position, in which he served for two years. In church work he is very much interested and at this time is president of the board of trustees of the Lutheran church of Canton, of which he is a member. From any standpoint from which a person desires to view it, the life of Mr. Pontius has been a most successful one, even when looked upon from the financial side. He is the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of valuable land, besides a vast amount of personal property, enough to keep him in comfort and ease all the years of his life. Hence, in the midst of life-long friends, having long passed the patriarchal period of three score and ten years, he is enjoying the evening of a well spent life, happy in the love and respect of all.

received a good common-school education, while he learned the trade of stone mason in his native land, becoming a thoroughly skilled artisan in the line. About the year 1870 he emigrated to America, landing in New York city, whence he soon afterward came to Stark county and took up his residence in the village of Navarre, where he engaged in contracting in the line of his trade. There he was united in marriage to Miss Alice Portman, a sister of Dr. O. E. Portman, of Canton, in the sketch of whose life, appearing elsewhere in this work, is given genealogical data concerning the family. Four years after his marriage Mr. Hug came to Canton, in order to find a wider field of endeavor, and here he continued to follow contracting and building until his death, which occurred in the year 1889. His widow still resides in Canton, both having become communicants of St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic, soon after locating here, while in politics the father of our subject was a stanch Democrat. To him and his devoted wife were born seven children, all of whom are living except one, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Lena, Charles, Casimir, Emma, Annie (who died at the age of seventeen years), Clara and Alice.

Casimir Hug, Jr., was born in the family home, on Charles street, Canton, on the 10th of December, 1875, and here he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of sixteen years, when he secured a position as clerk in a drug store, continuing to be thus engaged for the following eight years, within which he prosecuted his study of the business so carefully and effectively that he became eligible for registration as a pharmacist upon examination before the state board of pharmacy. In 1889 he entered into partnership with Charles R. Roth, and the two young men have since conducted a very satisfactory drug business at No. 333 East Tuscarawas street, having a modern and attractive establishment and the best of facilities in all lines. Mr. Hug is a Democrat in politics, is a communicant of St. Peter's church, and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Columbus and the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

RAY F. HARBERT.—John Harbert, the great-grandfather of the subject, was a native of Bavaria, Germany, where he devoted his life to the vocation of milling, having been a man of no little prominence in his native place, where he reared his children to lives of usefulness and honor, even as had his father before him, the name having been identified with the history of that part of the great German empire for many generations. The grandfather of the subject likewise bore the name of John and was born in Bavaria, in 1810. There he was reared and educated and there he continued to reside until 1834, when he severed the ties which bound him to home and fatherland, and, like many another of his countrymen, emigrated to America, that he might avail himself of the superior advantages here afforded for attaining independence and prosperity through individual efforts. In the year mentioned, in company with his younger brother, Henry, he embarked, in the city of Bremen, on a sailing vessel, and one hundred and five days elapsed ere the weary young emigrants landed in the port of New York city, the vessel having drifted from its course and having thus been greatly delayed. From New York the brothers made their way to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where they separated, and the grandfather then came on to Ohio, his brother securing employment on one of the Ohio river boats, from which he fell overboard and was undoubtedly drowned, as nothing was ever heard from or of him after that time. John Harbert found employment in Tuscarawas county, where he remained until 1836, when he came to Canton, where he maintained his home for a short interval, but within this time he had assumed connubial responsibilities, having here been united in marriage to Miss Margaret Schario. After his marriage Mr. Harbert purchased a tract of land about six miles southeast of the town, where he turned his attention to farming and also engaged in mining coal upon a small scale. There he passed the remainder of his life, having made good improvements on his place, according to the standard of the time and locality, and having developed a valuable property before his demise, which occurred in 1881, his widow surviving until 1889. Both were devoted members of St. Peter's Catholic church, in Canton, and in politics Grandfather Harbert was an uncompromising Democrat. Of this union six children were born, namely: Margaret, who is the wife of John Holter, of Pike township, this county; John, a successful farmer of the same township, as is also Barnet; Mary, who is the wife of John Martin, of Canton township; Henry, the father of the subject of this review; and Andrew, of Pike township, all the children being married except the last mentioned.

Henry Harbert, father of the subject, was born on the old homestead farm, in Canton township, on the 4th of April, 1851, and his early educational training was such as was afforded in the district schools, which at that time were fairly well equipped for the work of instruction. He continued to assist in the work of the home farm until 1874, when he started out on his own responsibility. In 1874, in the city of Canton, he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Wertz, who was born here, on the 9th of September, 1852, being a daughter of George and Catherine (Thouvenin) Wertz, and after his marriage he continued to be identified with farming in Canton township for a number of years, becoming the owner of a good property. Then he was for a time engaged in the mercantile business at North Industry, this county, after which he returned to his farm, where he remained for the ensuing seven years, at the expiration of which, in 1895, he came to Canton and opened a grocery store at 2105 South Market street, where he has since been successfully established in business, being well known to the people of this section of the county and controlling a good trade, while he is animated by the highest principles of honor and integrity and commands unequivocal esteem in the community. Both he and his wife are consistent communicants of the Catholic church, being members of St. Mary's parish, and in politics he has ever been a staunch Democrat. He has held minor township offices, and was postmaster at North Industry for four years, under Cleveland's administration. A brief record concerning the children of George and Catherine (Wertz) Harbert is as follows: Ray W., the immediate subject of this sketch, is the eldest; Laura is the wife of Henry Larson, of Canton; and George A., Louis, Austin, Albert, Helen and Zelma still remain at the parental home.

Ray W. Harbert was born on the homestead farm, in Canton township, on the 25th of March, 1875, and he initiated his educational training at the age of five years, when he sturdily began to trudge to and from the district school, while he continued his studies during a portion of each year until he had attained the age of sixteen, so that he was well fortified in the knowledge essential to a successful career in connection with practical business. When a mere boy he began to assist in his father's store at North Industry, and this training proved of much value to him. He came to Canton with his parents in 1895, and has ever since been associated with his father in business. The grocery is well equipped in the matter of accessories and the stock is always of the highest standard, including both staple and fancy lines and the varied specialties which are now demanded in every first-class establishment of the sort.

The precedence which the subject has attained in a public or political way is much to his credit and honor, for his first presidential vote was cast in 1896, when he gave his support to Bryan, and he has taken an active interest in the cause of the Democratic party since that time, having been a member of the executive committee of the party contingent in Stark county, and also of the city committee. In the spring of 1900 he was made the nominee of his party for representative of the sixth ward in the city council, and was elected by a gratifying majority. He proved an active working member of the municipal body, ever aiming to use his best efforts in the furthering of the city's interests and so gaining the commendation of his constituents that he was chosen as his own successor in the spring of 1902. He is at the present time a member of committees on ordinances, garbage and street crossings, being chairman of the one first mentioned. He is a communicant of St. Mary's Catholic church, as is also his wife, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of St. John and the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, in the work of each of which he takes a lively interest.

On the 23d of July, 1901, Mr. Harbert was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Gape, of Canton, to which city her parents, Thomas and Mary (Gallagher) Gape, removed from Kittanning, Pennsylvania, in the autumn of 1894. Mr. and Mrs. Harbert have one child, Lawrence Raymond, who was born on the 11th of July, 1902.

JEROME J. KRIDER was born on a farm in Washington township, this county, on the 13th of October, 1871, and there he continued to have his home until he had attained the age of nineteen years. His preliminary educational training was received in the district schools in the vicinity and when twenty-four years of age he was matriculated in the Ohio Normal School at Ada, where he continued his studies for two years. Having thoroughly fortified himself for pedagogic work so far as technical preparation was involved, he began teaching at the age of nineteen years, and that he proved successful from the initiation of his efforts is evident from the fact that for five years he was retained as teacher in district No. 2, Washington township. He was thoroughly earnest and enthusiastic in his work, and this fact, no less than his ability, has conserved the exceptional success which he has won. In 1897 Mr. Krider came to Canton and effected the purchase of the Canton Business College, located in the Wernet block, and in August of the same year this college was consolidated with the Actual Business College, the title of the latter being retained under the new management. At the time of the merging of the two institutions the subject of this sketch was elected to his present dual position as secretary of the college and principal of the commercial department. Under the new regime the number of students in average attendance has practically increased threefold, and each department of the college is maintained under effective direction and with the best of facilities, so that its reputation is extending throughout a wide radius of country and attracting a fine class of students, who are fully appreciative of the advantages afforded. The future of the institution is one that can not fail to be cumulative in precedence and success. The headquarters of the school for the first three years after the consolidation were in the Young Men's Christian Association building, but in July, 1900, the present spacious and eligible quarters, in the Martin block, were secured. Mr. Krider enjoys marked popularity in the community and among his students, who realize his earnest efforts in their behalf. In politics he holds to the Republican faith, so far as basic principles are concerned, but in practical affairs of a public nature he is independent in attitude, supporting men and measures, rather than being guided along strict partisan lines. He and his wife attend the United Brethren church.

On the 24th of July, 1901, Mr. Krider was united in marriage to Miss Blanche Diver, of Deerfield, Portage county, Ohio, where she was born, being a daughter of O. L. and Julia (Hough) Diver, who still reside in Deerfield, her father being one of the prominent and influential men of that place.

Henry Krider, father of the subject, was born in Canton, and in his boyhood days his father owned the Harter property on North Market street, and that was his home until the family removed to a farm two miles northwest of the town of Minerva, this county, he having been twelve years of age at the time. There he was reared to maturity, aiding in the work of the farm and securing a good common-school education. As a young man he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Byers, who was born in this county and who resided near Minerva nearly all her life. After her death, about 1857, he married her sister, Rachel, and about two years subsequent to this second marriage Mr. Krider removed to the old home farm in Washington township, where he remained until 1894, when he purchased a farm of thirty-two acres, in the same township, where he has since maintained his home, having practically retired from active labor. His second wife, the mother of the subject, died in September, 1881, and later he married Miss Mary Ann Saffer, who has borne him one child, Florence, who remains at the parental home. Of the children of his first marriage brief record is entered as follows: John is a successful merchant at Malvern, this county; and Elmira is the wife of John V. Buck, of Carlton, Ohio. Of the second marriage were born the following children: Loretta, who is the wife of Daniel Logsdon, a resident of the state of Kansas; Alice, who is the wife of Frank Burgett, of Marlboro township, Stark county; Melissa, who is the wife of Eugene Rollins, of Chicago, Illinois; George, who is engaged in the grocery business in Canton, married Miss Ella Lower, of this county; Orella is the wife of William O. Brien, and they now reside in the city of Chicago; and Jerome J. is the immediate subject of this sketch. It may be stated in conclusion that the original ancestors of the Krider family in America were the grandparents of the subject, who emigrated hither from Switzerland about the year 1822, other children being born to them after their location in Ohio, where they passed the closing years of their earnest and useful lives, worthy of the honor so uniformly accorded them.

JACOB KUNEMAN. — The paternal grandfather of the subject was born in the province of Alsace, France, of German lineage, and there passed his entire life. There also was born, in 1803, his son, Theobold, the place of whose nativity was the village of Ramersmatt, located in the mountainous districts of the province. There he was reared to maturity, his life of toil beginning while he was a mere boy, and he was for some time employed in the mines of the locality. He was able through constant and assiduous labor, to provide a home for his family, having become the owner of a house and a few acres of ground. In his native town he was married to Miss Barbara Stucker, who was born in 1799, and they continued their residence in Alsace until 1846, in the autumn of which year Mr. Kuneman sold his house and, with scarcely more than sufficient money to pay for the transportation of the family to America, he emigrated to this country, embarking, at Havre, on the sailing vessel "Alabama," which did not drop anchor in the port of New York until after a voyage of more than forty days' duration. From the national metropolis Mr. Kuneman, with his wife and their eight children, proceeded westward, having gone by the Erie canal to Buffalo and thence, by steamboat, on Lake Erie, to Cleveland, Ohio, from which point they came by canal to Massillon, Stark county, and from that point overland to their destination in Canton. The father of the subject was an honest, industrious, upright man, and he was true to his duty and made the best of the meager opportunities which were his portion. He continued to work as a day laborer until called to that rest which is eternal, his death occurring in Canton, in the year 1887, while his devoted wife, who had been a true helpmeet, survived him by only two years. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife were members of the German Catholic church, in whose faith they reared their children.

Theobold and Barbara Kuneman became the parents of eight children, concerning whom the following is a brief record: John, who was born on the 24th of June, 1827, removed to the state of Mississippi, where he married, and he now resides in Yazoo county, that state; Johanna, born on the 31st of August, 1828, is the wife of Maurice Gilling, of Maximo, Stark county, Ohio; Barbara, born on the 3d of April, 1830, is the wife of F. X. Boesch, of Brooklyn, New York; Theresa, born June 9, 1832, never married, and her death occurred, in Canton, on the 1st of April, 1901; August, born on the 11th of November, 1836, died in October, 1873, in Canton; Ambrose, born March 28, 1838, lives at Ashland, Ohio; Jacob, the immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; and Benedict, born on the 16th of September, 1841, is a resident of Mansfield, having been a member of the Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry during the war of the Rebellion; he married Annie Dolan, and they have five children.

Jacob Kuneman, the subject of this sketch,

M. H. Hasler

Mrs. M. H. Hazler

was born in the old homestead in Alsace, France, on the 5th of April, 1840, and was but six years of age at the time of the family's removal to America. He was reared to maturity in Canton, receiving his early educational training in the public and parochial schools and in a local German school, while as a boy he began to assist in the support of himself and the other members of the family, having shown a willingness to work from his youth up and having ever maintained the highest appreciation of the dignity and honor of honest toil, in whatever sphere of action. On the 9th of October, 1861, when twenty-one years of age, he responded to the first call for volunteers to assist in putting down the rebellion, enlisting as a private in Company I, Sixty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was recruited from Canton and vicinity, T. C. Meyer being made captain of Company I, while the regiment went to the front under command of Colonel John Sherman, who later became so distinguished in the public affairs of the nation. The command began its active service under Colonel (later General) Hooker, and the subject participated in the battle of Shiloh, under Buell, while his command was with Rosecrans at Chickamauga and later with Sherman on the ever memorable march to the sea. At the battle of Franklin Mr. Kuneman received a severe wound, a musket bullet penetrating his back and coming out through his mouth. He was taken to the field hospital and later sent to the hospital in Louisville, Kentucky, where he remained until the expiration of his term of service, receiving his honorable discharge on the 3d of March, 1865.

After having made a record as a valiant and loyal soldier of the republic, Mr. Kuneman returned to his home in Canton, and here entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, under the effective direction of William J. Poyser. His natural predilection for mechanical work enabled him to make rapid progress in the technical and practical knowledge of his trade, and he soon became recognized as a skilled artisan. For a number of years he worked as a journeyman, and then, in 1869, began contracting and building on his own account, being progressive, energetic and painstaking, and thus gaining a distinctive precedence and a liberal support, for his word was ever inviolable and he was signally true to all promises and to the letter of every contract into which he entered. He continued to be actively engaged in business until 1892, when he retired, having gained a competency through his earnest and honorable efforts and being now in the full enjoyment of the fruits of his toil and endeavor. In 1876 he erected an attractive and commodious residence at 508 North Walnut street, and this has since been his home, being a center of generous hospitality and a favorite resort of a wide circle of warm and devoted friends. In addition to this, Mr. Kuneman is the owner of other valuable realty in the city, having made improvements on vacant properties and thus having a rental income of no inconsiderable amount. In politics he has ever given his allegiance to the Democratic party, and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic, of which he has long been a communicant. Mr. Kuneman is a bachelor.

MONTRÉVILLE HENRY HASLER was descended from an old and highly respectable German family that settled in Pennsylvania in an early period in the history of that commonwealth and later figured in the annals of Stark county, Ohio. Joseph Hasler, the subject's father, was a native of the former state and when a young man learned the blacksmith's trade. Coming to Stark county in early life, he was married in Canton, to Miss Catherine Baxter, and shortly thereafter opened a blacksmith shop in Canton. From there he moved to Franklin county, remaining a few years, and again returned to Canton, where he followed his trade until advanced age obliged him to retire from active life. He died in Canton in 1881, his wife preceding him to the other world a number of years prior to that date. Joseph and Catherine Hasler were the parents of children as follows: Isaac, deceased; William; Montreville H., of this review, and Albert, deceased.

Montreville Hasler was born in Franklin county, Ohio, on the 18th day of January, 1859. Owing to the limited financial circumstances of his parents, his early education was considerably curtailed and at the early age of eleven years he was obliged to go to work to support himself. His first position was in a confectionary store in Canton and so small was he at the time that he was obliged to stand on a stool to wait on the customers who patronized the establishment. Endowed with natural business ability, the son outgrew the above position and at the age of twelve he entered the employ of the Wrought Iron Bridge Company, of this city, where from an humble station he rapidly rose by regular gradation until in his seventeenth year he had the responsible post of superintendent of erection. This advancement is without parallel in the history of the company and perhaps no other manufacturing establishment in the country can point to as signally successful career on the part of an employe of the same age and in the same length of time. In the year 1878, in the capacity of superintendent, Mr. Hasler had charge of the Morris Company's works at Youngstown for a period of two years, meantime traveling over various parts of the state in the discharge of the duties incumbent upon him.

Severing his connection with the above company, Mr. Hasler accepted a similar position but at a largely increased salary, with the Dominion Bridge Company, of Canada, and after remaining with that concern some years resigned in order to engage in contracting for bridge and other iron work upon his own responsibility. In the latter capacity his success was marked, his mode of procedure being to take contracts, sublet to him by different companies, on all of which he realized very handsome profits.

About 1891 Mr. Hasler returned to Canton and continued contracting in that city as a basis of operations, until accepting the position of traveling salesman for the Canton Wrought Iron Bridge Company, later known as the American Bridge Company. As representative of this large and well-known enterprise, he traveled extensively over Ohio and many other states, greatly enlarging the scope of his employer's business and continually adding to his already well-established reputation as a master of the bridge and iron industries. He remained with the firm until ill health, superinduced by rheumatism, obliged him to retire for a while and seek the rest and recreation in which he stood in such pressing need; accordingly, in October, 1900, he resigned his position, but the renewed health for which he longed failed to meet his expectations. The following December there was a recurrence of his rheumatic trouble in aggravated form and in due time it developed into a severe case of pneumonia, which in the course of a few days, terminated in his death, this sad event occurring on the 8th of January, 1901.

Mr. Hasler was married, June 11, 1881, to Miss Mary Fischer, a native of Carroll county, Ohio, and daughter of Charles Fischer, who came to this country from Germany when a young man. The union was blessed with four children, namely: Jessie M. Clark, in the treasurer's office of Stark county; Chester, who died in infancy; Victoria C. and Montreville.

Mr. Hasler was an enterprising and successful man in all the term implies and made his presence felt as a forceful factor in business and industrial circles. Strong mental powers, sound judgment, keen discernment and executive ability of high order were among his more prominent characteristics, and to these may be added strict integrity, earnestness of purpose and a high sense of honor, which won for him not only the unbounded confidence of the large business enterprises which he represented, but the esteem of all with whom he had business or other relations as well. He was essentially the architect of his own success, beginning life's battles unaided by a finished education, destitute of worldly wealth, but well favored with the energetic and enterprising spirit that laughs at obstacles and hesitates at nothing short of the high position to which its possessor aspires. An intelligent and close observer, with quick perceptions and keen intellect, his judgment almost intuitively gave him the power to analyze character and motive, an attribute which contributed much to his remarkable rise and equally remarkable success as a broad minded business man. Generous and urbane, in private life and in the quiet atmosphere of the home circle he shone with a personality wholesome and elevating to the inmates and charmingly entertaining to the guests who partook of his open handed hospitality.

Mr. Hasler was a staunch Republican in politics and never hesitated to give expression to his well formed opinions in friendly discussion with those holding contrary views. As a member of the Odd Fellows and Pythian orders he exemplified their principles in his community at heart and controlled his actions with that object in view. On the 8th day of January, 1901, this successful man of business, the model husband and father, the honorable citizen and broad minded man of affairs lay down the burden of life at the early age of forty-two and passed away not forever, but to the resurrection of immortality that knows no death.

Mrs. Hasler was born in the town of Oneida, Carroll county, Ohio, and attended the public schools at that place until seventeen years of age, when her mother moved to the city of Akron. The maiden name of her mother was Victoria Slater. Both parents were natives of Germany and came to the United States shortly after the Civil war, settling in Ohio. The father was a farmer and followed that calling in Carroll county until his death, after which the family took up their residence in Akron, as stated above, the mother afterwards dying in that city.

Charles and Victoria Fischer reared eight children, Mrs. Hasler being the youngest of the girls, and the names of the others are as follows: Bennet, who lives near Hastings, Michigan; Louis, a resident of Rochester, Montana; Adolph, deceased; George, deceased; Angeline, wife of Martin Halter, of Stark county; Rosa, now Mrs. Fred Pfendler, of Canton, and Elizabeth, a single lady living in Akron.

MRS. CAROLINE TROUT.—As a representative of one of the most honored and distinguished pioneer families of Stark county and the city of Canton, and identified through her marriage with another prominent family early settled in this favored section of the state, it is eminently proper to here offer a brief review of the genealogical and personal history of Mrs. Trout, widow of the late Joseph Trout, and a highly esteemed resident of Canton, where she has passed her entire life, and in the connection will, of course, be incorporated a tribute to the memory of her honored husband.

Joseph Trout was likewise a native of Canton, having been born in the family homestead, which was located on the lot opposite the present McKinley Hotel, the date of his birth having been December 10, 1822. Here he was reared to manhood, securing his early educational training in the pioneer school of the little village in which he was born and which he lived to see developed into an attractive and flourishing city. One of his first teachers was Mr. Held, and another was Mr. Hyman, both of whom will be recalled by the few of the last generation who still live in the city. Mr. Hyman was the father of Mesdames William Dannemiller and Nicholas Bour, both of whom still have their homes in Canton. Joseph Trout was a man of exceptionally alert and vigorous mentality, and he was so persistent and receptive in his pursuit of knowledge that he secured a more liberal education than was common to the place and period. In his youth he learned the trade of carpenter, becoming an expert workman, and for many years he was one of the leading contractors and builders of his native city, thus contributing much to its material progress and substantial upbuilding, having erected many of the first large buildings in the town, a number of which are still standing, including the public school building on East Eighth street. His parents, Joseph and Mary Trout, were natives of Germany, where their marriage was solemnized. Within a few years after their marriage they emigrated to America, landing in the city of Baltimore, whence they came to Ohio and took up their residence in Canton, among its earliest pioneers, while theirs was the distinction of being the first persons of foreign birth to establish a home in the little town, which was then located in the midst of the primeval forests, which surrounded it on every side, the work of reclaiming the land for the purposes of cultivation being scarcely past the inceptive stages. Here they passed the remainder of their lives, Joseph Trout, Sr., having engaged in farming and also having followed the work of his trade, that of stone cutter.

The marriage of Joseph Trout, Jr., to Miss Caroline Meyer, the immediate subject of this sketch, was solemnized on the 15th of November, 1847, and the young couple forthwith established their Lares and Penates in a house located at the corner of Second and Market streets, a portion of the building being still used as a residence. They began their wedded life with modest ideas, and their little home, with its unpretentiousness and meager equipment, would seem altogether plain and unattractive to the average young couple of the present day. But they were secure in mutual trust and affection and willing to work together for that independence and success which eventually crowned their efforts, and they had no thought of complaining about conditions, having the courage to dare and to do and facing the responsibilities of life with brave hearts and willing hands. They later removed from their first house to one which was located next to the present home of J. S. Saxton, on West Tuscarawas street, Mr. Trout acquiring the ownership of the property and having erected a comfortable house on the lot. This continued to be their place of abode for a full decade, and in 1865 they removed to the substantial brick homestead which had been erected by Mr. Trout's father in 1838, at the corner of Cleveland avenue and Third street. Here they made their home until 1870, when Mr. Trout erected a residence on the lot contiguous on the north, and this is the present home of his widow, the place being doubly endeared and hallowed to her by the memories and associations of the past. Mr. Trout continued to be actively engaged in contracting and building up to within a year prior to his death, which occurred on the 27th of July, 1892, and he was known and honored as one of the public spirited and thoroughly representative business men of the city, his word having ever been inviolable and his integrity of the most exalted order, so that he commanded the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He ever took a deep interest in all that concerned the wellbeing of his native city and his influence and aid were ever extended in the furtherance of all worthy enterprises and projects tending to conserve the general good. In 1855 he was elected to the office of city clerk of Canton, and the fidelity of his administration of the office did not lack for popular appreciation, as is significantly evident when we revert to the fact that he continued in tenure of the position for eighteen consecutive years. He also served for many years as a member of the board of trustees, being incumbent of both of these offices simultaneously for a decade. In politics he originally gave his support to the Whig party, but later transferred his allegiance to the Democratic party, with which he continued to be identified until his death, having been an active worker in the cause of his party. He was a man who stood "four square to every wind that blows," and he left that most priceless of all heritages, an honored name, no shadow darkening any portion of his long and useful life, which was as an open scroll, inviting and challenging the closest scrutiny. He was reared in the Catholic church and ever kept the faith with all sincerity and devotion, having been a communicant of St. John's church and one of the liberal supporters of parochial and general church work. His widow is likewise a communicant of this church and has been one of the zealous and devoted workers in the same, ever striving to order her life in harmony with the teachings of the divine Master.

Joseph and Caroline (Meyer) Trout became the parents of eleven children, concerning whom we offer the following brief record: Ella is a sister of the order of St. Joseph, and is at the present time stationed in Washington, Georgia; Mary died at the age of two years; Rosa is the wife of James McGuire, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Joseph died at the age of two years; Mary (second) is the wife of Dennis Quinn, of Canton; Charlotte is the wife of Edward Biechele, of this city; Anne is the wife of Samuel Roberts, of Lexington, Kentucky; Eugenia is the wife of Howard McCorkle, also of Lexington; Frances died in childhood; Catherine is the wife of Robert Diebold, of Canton; and Daisy remains with her mother in the old homestead.

Caroline (Meyer) Trout, the immediate subject of this review, was born in the family residence, located on the site of the present Hanna building, on the 28th of May, 1828, and she received her education in a seminary here conducted in the early days by Rev. Andrew Goshorn, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church, continuing her studies until she had attained the age of seventeen years. When she was five years of age her father removed to his farm, located on the north side of what is now known as Meyer's lake, in Plain township, and here she grew to womanhood. Her grandfather is the agnatic line was Andrew Meyer, who was born in the picturesque city of Bonn, on the Rhine, and there he was reared to maturity. Thence, in company with two elder brothers, he emigrated to the United States in the year when its constitution was adopted, and the three located in Baltimore, where he was associated with his brother, Godfrey Meyer, in the conducting of a copper and brass foundry for many years, having learned the trade prior to his emigration to America. The family was one of distinction and prominence in Germany, the father of these three brothers having owned extensive vineyards on the Rhine. Col. Francis Meyer served under Napoleon, being present at the taking of the city of Moscow and also taking part in the ever memorable battle of Waterloo. For his distinguished services the Emperor, the great Napoleon, conferred upon him the cross of the Legion of Honor, the same being elaborately jeweled, as was also the sword which his chief also presented him, both of these valuable and historic trophies being still retained in the possession of the family. Concerning the family history more complete detail is found in the sketch or memoir of Andrew Meyer, grandfather of Mrs. Trout, appearing on other pages of this work, said tribute being accorded to one who stood as one of the most honored and influential pioneers of this section of the Buckeye state. Andrew Meyer was a soldier in the war of 1812, having assisted in the defense of Baltimore and having come to Ohio ere the war closed, his first visit to the state having been made in 1814, when he came to Stark county and here entered government land and also purchased other tracts until he was the owner of sixteen hundred acres, all lying in the vicinity of Canton. He then returned to Baltimore for his wife, whose maiden name was Cordelia Gross and who was at the time of her marriage to Mr. Meyer a widow, her first husband having been John Hlassafrass. He resided in Canton until 1818, when he removed to his large farm, having rapidly pushed the work of reclaiming and otherwise improving the estate, and in 1838 he erected the residence now owned by his grandson, Edward Meyer, near Meyer's lake, in Canton township, where he continued to make his home until his death, in June, 1848, at the venerable age of eighty-eight years, his wife having passed away in the preceding year. He amassed a fortune, having a large landed estate in this county and also owning valuable realty in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, to which he made yearly visits, at first by means of wagons and later by public stages. He was one of the organizers of St. John's Catholic church and prominent in its work, and his descendants have retained identification with the same. Andrew and Cordelia Meyer became the parents of five children, namely: Francis, father of Mrs. Trout; Andrew, who married Miss Eliza Hazlett, of Baltimore, and who died in Canton; Joseph, concerning whom individual mention is made on another page of this volume; Elizabeth, who became the wife of James Cassilly, and who died in Canton; and Alena, who became the wife of Thomas Patton, and who likewise died in Canton.

Francis Meyer, father of Mrs. Trout, was born in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, in 1795, and completed his education in the college at Emmettsburg, that state. He came with the family to Ohio in 1818, and here he became an assistant in the office of the clerk of Stark county. Later he engaged in the mercantile business at Mount Eaton, whence he removed to Bethlehem, this county, where he was engaged in the same line of enterprise until 1832, when he took up his abode on a portion of the old homestead, having in his possession a farm of five hundred acres. He was a valiant soldier in the Civil war, having enlisted first in the Thirty-second Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and later having become a member of Williams' Third Ohio Battery. He served until the close of the war, having participated in many of the most notable engagements, including the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Shiloh and Pittsburg Landing. After the close of the war he served as deputy paymaster, under Mullet, at the national capital and later in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He was a man of marked executive ability, guiding his life according to the highest principles of integrity and honor and ably upholding the standard of an unblemished family escutcheon. He died in February, 1879, at the home of his son, Joseph, on Cleveland avenue, Canton, and the community mourned the loss of a noble man and worthy citizen. He was a member of St. John's church and his life was ever in harmony with the faith which he so humbly and deeply professed. He was originally a Democrat in politics, having given his support to Andrew Jackson, but during the later years of his life he gave his allegiance to the Republican party. He was a man of fine intellectuality and forceful individuality and his influence was ever exerted in support of whatever is true and ennobling in life. About the year 1826 he married Miss Caroline Bogan, who was born in Frederick, Maryland, a daughter of Dr. Anthony Bogan, a distinguished physician of that state, and one who served as surgeon in the Continental army, under Washington, during the war of the Revolution. Mrs. Caroline Meyer, mother of the subject, died in 1878, at the age of eighty-six years, having been a woman of gentle refinement and noble attributes of character. Her five children were as follows: Mrs. Caroline Trout, whose name initiates this article; Joseph, who married Miss Caroline Bleck, of Canal Dover, Ohio, was for many years engaged in the mercantile business in Canton, where he died in 1886; Cordelia, who never married, died in 1875; Francis married Miss Catherine Wise, and they reside in Washington, D. C.; and Mary, the wife of Wilson Haines, is likewise a resident of the national capital.

ROBERT A. CASSIDY claims the old Keystone state as the place of his nativity, having been born in Blairsville, Indiana county, Pennsylvania, on the 20th of December, 1839, and there he passed his boyhood days, receiving his preliminary education in the public schools, though his final diploma was signed by that wise headmaster, Experience. He remained at the parental home until the spring of 1855, when, though but fifteen years of age, he went to the state of Iowa, which was then on the western frontier of civilization, and passed one year at Fort Des Moines, with Robert J. Clark, one of the principal engineers who located the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the celebrated Horse-shoe curve on that line having been an unprecedented piece of engineering work planned and carried out by him. After his return home Mr. Cassidy entered upon an apprenticeship at the printer's trade in his native town, and in the winter of 1856-57

he went to Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, where he secured a position in the office of the old Centre Democrat, where he was employed up to the time when he went forth in response to the call of higher duty, as the integrity and honor of the nation were menaced by armed rebellion. In the meanwhile, on the 24th of December, 1860, he was there united in marriage to Miss Caroline M. Johnson, a daughter of James M. Johnson, an influential citizen of Bellefonte. Scarcely had the young couple entered upon their happy married life when the subject withdrew himself from the ties which bound him to home and loved ones, for in August, 1862, he enlisted as a musician in Company H, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry (of which he became principal musician at the organization), which was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and with which he remained in active service until soon after the battle of Gettysburg, when he was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps, in which he served until the close of the war, having participated in many of the notable conflicts which marked the progress of the war. He received his honorable discharge at Elmira, New York, on the 20th of July, 1865, and on the 4th of the following August he came to Canton. He was so favorably impressed with the little city that he determined to locate here permanently, and was shortly afterward joined by his wife. Here he became a compositor in the office of the Stark County Republican, where he remained until the following autumn, when he took charge of the office of A. J. Allen, who was engaged in the manufacture of patent roofing, and in this position he continued until the autumn of 1867, when he assumed a clerical position in the office of E. Ball & Company, manufacturers of agricultural machinery, and his ability led to his being promoted to the position of business manager of this large concern, an incumbency which he retained for a full decade. In 1880

Mr. Cassidy again identified himself with the printing business, which invariably has a fascination for those who have been its devotees for any considerable period, and in 1885 he purchased a building and equipped the same with a modern printing plant, and from that time he has continuously devoted his attention to the "art preservative of all arts," having built up a very prosperous and gratifying business and having the best of facilities in all departments of his establishment.

Mr. Cassidy has served as a member of the board of education, the board of health, the humane society, as a member of the city council, and was elected mayor and served one term as such, giving a clean conservative and businesslike administration, though he undoubtedly antagonized certain pernicious forces and agencies in both municipal and civic affairs during his regime. He was a member of the city council at the time when the paving of the streets was first advocated, and he warmly supported the measures for compassing needed improvements along this line. He has always been a staunch supporter of the Republican party, but such is his popularity among the people of the city that his name has frequently appeared on the Democratic ticket. Fraternally he is a member of McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, of which he is past commander; of Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons; and of Nimisella Lodge No. 30, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed the various official chairs.

At Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, in March, 1857, Mr. Cassidy united with the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose spiritual and temporal work he has ever since been most actively concerned. For more than a quarter of a century he has been a local preacher of the First Methodist Episcopal church. He identified himself with the First church upon taking up his residence here and in its work he has been most zealous. He has been a teacher in its Sunday school since 1865, and prior to this had done similar service in Pennsylvania, his Christian faith being one of consecration and good works from the time he was led to the Divine Master. In the present Sunday school there are grandchildren of persons who were in his class when he initiated his work in the church here. During the more active years of his ministerial labors in Canton, Mr. Cassidy was called upon to officiate at more funerals than any other clergyman except the Rev. Peter Herbruck, of revered memory, and his words of faith and consolation have lightened the burdens resting on many a bereaved heart. He is a staunch advocate of the cause of temperance, and has spared no effort to further the same by all legitimate and consistent means. He is a versatile writer, full of appreciation of the best in literature, and has force and facility as a public speaker. His noble wife still remains at his side, having ever been a sympathetic companion and an able coadjutor in all good works. They have six children, and in conclusion of this brief tribute the following statements are entered concerning them: Wilbur is engaged in printing in Bellefonte, Pennsylvania; Grace is the wife of John Fosnaught; Margaret remains at the parental home; Martha is the wife of Leonard Betz; Lucy is the wife of Lowery Sober; and Carrie is the wife of James A. Welker, all of this city, so that the subject and his wife still have about them, in a comparative sense, all save one of their children.

PETER MELCHIOR was born in the province of Alsace, France, now a part of the German empire, the year of his nativity having been 1816. His father, Nicholas Melchior, was likewise born in Alsace, and was a soldier under Napoleon Bonaparte seven years, and had a splendid record for bravery. He was wounded severely several times and was made a commissioned officer, obtaining four medals for distinguished deeds of valor. He emigrated with his family to America when the subject of this sketch was a boy of fourteen years. Nicholas Melchior took up his abode in Canton when it was a mere hamlet in the midst of the primitive forests, but he eventually removed hence to Jasper, Dubois county, Indiana, where he established a brewery, which he continued to operate for a number of years, and there he passed the remainder of his life. His son Peter received his early educational training in the pioneer schools and in Canton he learned the trade of cooper, under the direction of an old gentleman named Fogel, one of the first to engage in that line of enterprise in this place. In the early 'thirties Peter Melchior became identified with the brewing business in Canton, having for a time rented the Neighman brewery, while later he purchased three acres of land, on a part of which the old homestead now stands, the same being located on South Market street. On this land was an old log cabin of one room, and he selected the site because of its elevation, which was sufficient to afford the necessary fall to carry away the water from the brewery. He continued to be actively engaged in business until his death, which occurred on the 3d of December, 1864, and his entire career was one which showed the highest principles and the most inflexible integrity. He eventually sold portions of his land for residence purposes, and the old brewery was long since razed, having been a familiar landmark for many years. His widow still resides on the old homestead, which occupies a portion of this site, as before noted. Mr. Melchior was a communicant of St. John's Catholic church, in the erection of whose edifice he rendered material and liberal assistance, while he was ever devoted to the faith in which he had been reared.

In the year 1837 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Melchior to Miss Elizabeth Trout, and of their children the following brief record is entered: Margaret, who became the wife of Joseph Frantz, died in Canton, in 1872; John is still a resident of this city, where he is engaged in the wholesale paper business; Joseph is a successful real estate dealer in the state of Washington; August is engaged as superintendent of the Joliet Manufacturing Company, in Joliet, Illinois; Mary is the wife of Jacob Smith, of Middle Branch, Ohio; Peter is located in the west; and Nicholas is a representative merchant of Canton.

Elizabeth (Trout) Melchior was born in a log cabin which was owned by John Shorb and which stood on the site of the present court house in Canton, the date of her nativity having been September 2, 1818, and, as previously stated, she has the distinction of being one of the oldest living natives of Canton, whose entire growth and development she has witnessed, while she has had the high regard of not only her contemporaries but also those of later generations, who may well listen with interest and appreciation to her reminiscences of the pioneer days. She is a daughter of Joseph Trout, who came to Canton about the year 1817, purchasing a tract of land adjoining on the north that of Mr. Shorb, of whom mention has been made. This land was largely within the present municipal limits, but was at that time but little improved, while it was reclaimed for farm purposes. Mrs. Melchior was not formally christened until she was about seven years of age, as no priest of the church had visited the town in the interim and none was accessible except at considerable distance. Her mother died when Elizabeth was still a child, and she was taken into the home of her sister Charlotte, who had learned the trade of milliner in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and who had opened an establishment opposite the Hotel Conrad, at the corner of North Market and Third streets, having been a pioneer in thus catering to the esthetic tastes of the ladies in the little town. Mrs. Melchior attended the school taught by Mr. Monks, but her early advantages in an educational way were necessarily limited, owing to the exigencies of the time and place. She remained with her sister until her marriage to Mr. Melchior, upon whose death she was left with a family of children, largely dependent upon her for maintenance. She bravely assumed the burden thus imposed, and her struggle was a heroic and noble one, which has had its reward in the filial love and solicitude of her children in the later years. She disposed of the brewery equipment and tore down the building, and in 1868 she erected her present home on the site, on South Market street. She equipped the house with a large dining room, and for many years provided for the family by taking boarders. She is well known to the people of Canton and has the affection of an exceptionally wide circle of devoted friends.

Joseph Trout, father of Mrs. Melchior, was born in Alsace, France, and as a mason was in the service of Napoleon for seven years, aiding in the construction of forts. He finally wearied of his association with polemic affairs, and about 1817 emigrated to America, in company with his wife and their three children. They landed in the city of Baltimore, and there Mr. Trout formed the acquaintance of Joseph Shorb, with whom he came to Canton, where he took up government land, as previously noted, paying one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre for the same. He was a devout member of the Catholic church and assisted in the organization of the congregation of St. John's and later in the erection of a church edifice. His first wife, whose maiden name was Mary Hafler, died in Canton, and he later married Catherine Bour, who survived him by several years, no children having been born of this union. Of the first marriage six children were born prior to the emigration to America, and three of the number died in Alsace, France. The three who accompanied the parents to America were as follows: Charlotte became the wife of Francis Buer, who, after her death, removed from Canton to California, accompanied by his children; Kate died at the age of seventeen years, unmarried; Mary married Anthony Piero and she died in Canton. Of the five children born after the emigration to Canton the following brief record is offered: Elizabeth is the widow of the subject of this memoir; Lena went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and thence to Kentucky, where she married John Steere, and where she passed the remainder of her life; Joseph, who married Caroline Myer, died in Canton; John left his home and went to California in 1849, prospered, became sheriff of a county, but disappeared one day, and it is supposed he was murdered as all trace of him was lost. The fifth child was Caroline, who married Anthony Conrad, and they now reside in Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Melchior is a devoted member of the Catholic church, and was active in the parish work of St. John's for many years, until the infirmities of advanced age demanded that she rest from her labors. In the golden evening of her life she is sustained and comforted by an abiding faith in the divine Master and by the love of her children and her many friends.

BENJAMIN F. SMITH was born on a farm in Lake township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 3d of August, 1838. His parents were George E. and Sarah (Christ) Smith, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania in 1799 and died in Canton township, this county, when eighty years old, and the latter born in Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1809 and died in Canton township at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. Their union was blessed by the birth of eight children, briefly mentioned as follows: Sarah is the wife of Israel Bixler; Susan is the widow of the late Christian Winegard; Christian, Andrew, Benjamin F., Joel, Alonzo and Philo.

The subject was reared under the parental roof in Lake township, where he remained until he had attained his majority. He was early taught the lessons of industry and frugality and, under his father's wise instructions, acquired a good practical knowledge of the mysteries of successful agriculture. In 1859 he accompanied his parents upon their removal to Canton township, where he resided about three years. Going then to Illinois, he remained in that state about three years, but returned to Stark county, realizing that here lay just as good opportunities for a man of energy and ambition as anywhere else. He was here employed at farm labor for other people until 1871, when he purchased ninety acres of land in Plain township, being the place upon which he now resides. He has also bought sixteen acres of good farming land in Canton township and has brought his property up to a high standard of excellence, erecting good buildings and otherwise improving the property. He is thoroughly practical and up-to-date in his methods and has made a notable success as an agriculturist.

On the 14th of March, 1871, Mr. Smith was united in the holy bonds of wedlock with Miss Harriet Smith, who was born in Canton township, this county, on the 28th of February, 1842. Her parents, John J. and Nancy (Shriver) Smith, both died in Canton township, the former when sixty years old and the latter at about the age of eighty-three. To the subject and his wife were born three children, as follows: George E. married Miss Elizabeth Royer; Jessie M.; Cora E. is the wife of William C. Martin. In politics Mr. Smith is affiliated with the Republican party and takes a keen interest in the trend of public events.

While active and influential in the interests of his party, he has no desire for the honors or emoluments of public office. Religiously he and his wife are identified with Trinity Reformed church and are faithful and consistent in the performance of their religious duties, giving liberally of their time and material substance in the support of the various interests of the church and lending their support to all movements having for their object the advancement of the highest interests of the community.

Before closing this brief sketch, it will be of undoubted interest to refer to the military career of the subject. In August, 1862, when the nation was in the midst of that greatest of all civil conflicts, Mr. Smith, feeling that his country needed his services, offered himself upon the altar of his flag and enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He participated in all the marches, campaigns, battles and skirmishes in which his regiment participated, and bravely bore his part of the hardships and privations incidental to the life of a soldier. Andrew H. Smith, brother of the subject, was also a volunteer in the Sixth Ohio Cavalry, serving nearly five years. He died on his farm in Perry township, this county, about 1885.

JOHN W. STIMMEL was born on a farm near the village of Paris, Stark county, Ohio, on the 1st of February, 1840, and his youthful days were passed in this county and the adjoining county of Carroll, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of fourteen years, having been up to that time reared in the home of his maternal grandfather. The Stimmel family is of German extraction, and the name has long been identified with the annals of the old Keystone state, where the original American ancestors took up their abode upon emigrating from the German fatherland. In Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, John Stimmel, grandfather of the subject, was born and reared, having been a stone-mason by trade and vocation. In the same county the father of the subject was likewise born, his name being Christopher, and as the family were in moderate circumstances and he was early compelled to depend upon his own resources, his educational advantages were very limited. He learned the trade of blacksmith in his native state and when a young man emigrated thence to Ohio, and thereafter lived in Carroll and Stark counties. In the former county was solemnized his marriage to Miss Rebecca Shults, daughter of Henry and Esther (Bachman) Shults, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, whither his parents emigrated from Germany. He died in Brown township, Carroll county, Ohio, in 1854, having been a prominent and influential farmer of that locality, and there also occurred the death of his devoted wife, whose parents were likewise pioneers of Carroll county, whither they came from Pennsylvania. After his marriage Christopher Stimmel located in Paris township, Carroll county, where he was for a short period engaged in farming, also continuing the work of his trade. From that locality he removed to Pekin village, where he engaged in the manufacture of axes by hand. Thereafter he was located for an interval near Malvern, in the same county, and also conducted a blacksmith shop at Middle Run for a time. He then located on the farm of his father-in-law and there engaged in farming, also having a shop on the place and finding a ready demand for his services as a blacksmith. After several years had elapsed he came to Stark county, and located in Mapleton, where he was successfully engaged in the work of his trade until his death, in the summer of 1860, at the age of forty-eight years. In politics he was a staunch Democrat and his religious faith was that of the Disciples church. He was an honest, industrious and unassuming man, a good citizen and one whose life was such as to gain him unqualified confidence and respect wherever he was known. His wife survived him many years, her death occurring in Mapleton, about 1882, at the age of sixty-five years, she likewise having been a devoted member of the Disciples church. Of their children brief record is entered at this juncture: John W. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Esther is the widow of George Penrose and resides in East Liverpool, Ohio; Martin removed to Kansas about 1870, locating on a farm and later removing to the town of Newton, where he successfully engaged in the blacksmith business, continuing operations for a number of years, while later he became undersheriff of the county and was incumbent of this office for eighteen years; he served with distinction during the war of the Rebellion, having been first a member of the Eighty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and later of the One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment, while it was his misfortune to have been taken prisoner on the 31st of August, 1864, during Wheeler's raid, but he was soon afterward paroled; he married Miss Linnie Ridinger and they are the parents of numerous children; Mary is the wife of John Stimmel, of Paris township, Carroll county; and Reuben is a successful clay miner near Malvern, that county.

John W. Stimmel, to whom this review is dedicated, remained in the home of his maternal grandparents until he had attained the age of fourteen years, as has already been noted, and he then joined his parents in Mapleton. In the spring of 1855 he hired out as a farm hand, entering the employ of John Shearer and receiving five dollars a month and board in recompense for his services, while while during the winter months he was enabled to continue his studies in the district schools. He remained in the employ of Mr. Shearer for a period of three years, and in the spring of 1859 he entered the employ of Zedakiah Ake, of Osnaburg township. The following spring Mr. Ake removed to Allen county, Indiana, and the subject drove his employer's team through to the new home, intending to remain, but he was not pleased with the outlook and consequently returned to Ohio. During a portion of the summer of 1860 he was employed in the McGregor brick yard, in the city of Canton, and in the autumn of the same year he here engaged in the blacksmith business, in which he was associated with Henry Stimmel. He was thus placed at the time when the great Civil war was precipitated upon a divided nation, and he showed his intrinsic loyalty and patriotism by tendering his services in defense of the Union upon the President's first call for volunteers. In the month of April, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company A, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Manderson and Colonel Beaty, and was eventually promoted to the position of color bearer. He enlisted for a term of ninety days and remained in service for four months, taking part in the battle of Rich Mountain, and after the close of his service he returned to his home, but he was not content to thus hold himself aloof when his country's integrity still hung in the balance, and he re-enlisted on the 20th of August, 1862, becoming a member of Company B, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under Colonel Lucy and Captain L. F. Hake. The regiment was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, becoming a part of the Twentieth Army Corps, under General Thomas, and Mr. Stimmel continued in active service until victory crowned the Union arms and peace was declared. He participated in many of the memorable conflicts of the war and was ever found faithful to duty, being a loyal and zealous son of the Republic and one who honored himself and his native state by his efficient services. He received his honorable discharge, in the city of Cleveland, on the 5th of July, 1865, and then returned to the work of his trade, being located in North Industry until September 16th of the following year, when he came to Canton and entered the employ of the Aultman Company, being thereafter employed in the blacksmith department of the works of this concern for twenty years, within which time he was advanced to a position of trust and responsibility. His health finally became so seriously impaired that he was compelled to seek a change of occupation, and he left the employ of the Aultman concern on the 25th of September, 1886. He passed the winter in Kansas, as the guest of his brother, and then engaged in the selling of nursery stock, to which he devoted his attention for one year, after which he was for a time associated with Charles Ite in the putting in of door and window screens on contract. During the following years Mr. Stimmel traveled through the south in the interest of the Sun Vapor Company, manufacturers of vapor lamps, and on Christmas day of the year 1894 he established himself in the grocery business in Canton, his original quarters being nearly opposite his present equipped establishment, which is located on South Market street. By his progressive methods, scrupulous care in catering to the demands of a discriminating patronage, and his thorough reliability, Mr. Stimmel has built up a very gratifying business and is numbered among the prosperous and honored merchants of the city, enjoying unequivocal confidence and esteem in the community. He has a commodious and attractive residence on Market street, the same having been erected by him in 1872. In politics he gives a stanch allegiance to the Republican party and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the South Market Street Reformed church, in which his wife likewise is a zealous worker. Fraternally Mr. Stimmel is an honored and valued member of McKinley

Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, of Canton; while in Freemasonry he has advanced through the degree of the ancient-craft body, and he is also identified with the Protective Home Circle, the Royal Arcanum, and U. S. Grant Council of the Senior Order of United American Mechanics.

At North Industry, Stark county, on the 7th of March, 1869, Mr. Stimmel was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Friend, who was born in this county, being a daughter of Leonard and Margaret Friend, the latter of whom died three weeks after the birth of her daughter, Mrs. Stimmel. Three other children were born of the union, namely: John, who is a resident of Williams county, Ohio; Henry, who is likewise a resident of that county; and Margaret, who became the wife of Abraham Haines, and who died in Montpelier, Williams county, in 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Stimmel have one child, Ethel M., who remains at the parental home and who is one of the popular young ladies of Canton, where she received her education in the public schools. She is a graduate of Canton high school in the class of 1899.

CHARLES ITE.—The subject of this review is known and honored as one of the representative and public-spirited citizens of Canton, has the distinction of being a veteran of the war of the Rebellion, and his life record is one that can not fail of lesson and incentive. He comes of staunch German stock and may well take pride in this fact, and he is himself a native of the great German empire, though he was an infant at the time when the family severed the ties which bound them to home and fatherland and set forth to establish a new home as strangers in a strange land. The subject early assumed the practical responsibilities of life and has attained a worthy success during the years which have developed his powers and made him a valuable factor in the community. In tracing the genealogy of Mr. Ite we must turn to the old city of Wittenberg, in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, in which section of the empire the family name was one of honor during all the long years as one generation followed another onto the stage of life's activities. Mrs. Ite's grandfather was a small farmer and huckster in Bavaria, where he passed his entire life an industrious man and one whose integrity and honor were beyond question. He lived to attain the age of eighty-four years, his death being the result of an accident. Moses Ite, father of the subject, was born in Wittenberg, in the year 1813, and was there reared and educated, having served six years as a soldier in the German army, while as a youth he learned the trade of carpenter, becoming a skilled workman. In his native province he was united in marriage to Miss Emerence Naval, and there they maintained their home until 1846, in which year the father of the subject came to America for the purpose of securing a location before bringing his family to the new home. He finally decided to establish himself near Waynesburg, Stark county, Ohio, and in the summer of the following year (1847) his wife, in company with her infant son, the subject of this sketch, who was but two and one-half years of age, set sail from the city of London and after a tempestuous and hazardous voyage of ninety days, finally dropped anchor in the port of New York. A terrific storm overtook the vessel, which was driven far out of its course and delayed for three weeks, and before it reached its destination the supply of food had become very low, so that the hardships of the voyage were further increased, the boat being badly crippled and making very slow progress. After the family was united the father located on the Whitney farm, in Sandy township, this county, where he remained two years, after which he rented other farms in the county for varying intervals up to the year 1858, when he located on the Reynolds farm, in Canton township, where he remained for the long period of thirteen years, working industriously and doing all in his power to provide a good home for his family. At the expiration of the period mentioned the family, with the exception of the subject, removed to Clark county, Illinois, where Moses Ite purchased a farm, near the town of Marshall, and there continued in agricultural pursuits until 1896, when he disposed of his farm, which had greatly appreciated in value and through whose improvement and cultivation he had been deservedly successful. He died there February 1, 1903, having attained the venerable age of eighty-five years. His devoted and cherished wife, who has been a true helpmeet to him during all the "changes and chances of this mortal life," died on the 5th of May, 1898, at the age of eighty-three years, having been a sincere and consistent member of the Catholic church, of which her husband also was a communicant. They became the parents of eight children, namely: John, who died in Germany, in infancy; Harriet died in Germany when young; Charles, the immediate subject of this sketch; Lucas, who died in Stark county, in infancy; Mary, who is the wife of Joseph Forbeck, of Marshall, Clark county, Illinois; William, who also is a resident of that place; Louisa, who died at the age of seven years, in Stark county; Sophia, who is the wife of Henry Bennett, of Terre Haute, Indiana; and Adeline, who is the wife of Lyman Davidson, of that city.

Charles Ite, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born in Wentzland, Wittenberg, Germany, on the 3d of January, 1845, and of his having been brought in infancy to America mention has already been made. He has passed practically his entire life in Stark county, excepting two and one-half years when he lived in Noble county, Indiana, where he was married. He grew up under the sturdy discipline of the farm, while his early educational advantages were such as were afforded by the district schools, which he attended in an irregular and intermittent way, as his home was at times far removed from any school. When seventeen years of age he came to Canton and entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the trade of wood turning, under the direction of Samuel Cavanagh. He was thus engaged at the time when the dark cloud of civil war cast its gruesome pall over the national horizon, and his patriotism was quickened to decisive action when, in the winter of 1864, at the age of nineteen years, he enlisted as a private in Company I, Sixty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and soon afterward they wanted to choose him lieutenant marshal of his company, but he would not accept. The regiment proceeded to the front, being assigned to Sherman's army, and the subject was an active participant in many important engagements, being constantly at the post of duty until the close of the war and making a valiant record as a faithful and loyal soldier of the Republic. In the battle of Rocky Face Ridge he was struck in the right thigh by a bullet, but a serious wound was averted through the ball having been diverted from its course by a knife in his pocket. He thereafter took part in the battles of Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree creek, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, besides numerous other engagements of minor importance. A number of the members of his regiment were captured at the battle of Franklin, but he succeeded in escaping this fate. In the summer of 1865, his regiment was sent to Texas, being attached to General Thomas' army, and there he continued on duty until January, 1866, when he was mustered out, at Victoria, Texas. He returned with his command to Ohio, and received his honorable discharge, at Columbus, on the 2d of January, 1866.

After thus having rendered yeoman service in behalf of the Union. Mr. Ite returned to Canton, where he resumed the work of his trade, but shortly afterward, in September, 1866, he went to Noble county, Indiana, and there, on the 14th of the following February, he honored good Saint Valentine by taking unto himself a wife, being united in marriage to Miss Carrie E. Nave, who was born on a farm four miles south of Crestline, Crawford county, Ohio, where she was reared to maturity. Her parents were Solomon and Susanna Nave, the latter of whom died when Mrs. Ite was but five years of age, and she was reared by her maternal grandparents. Mrs. Ite met with a tragic death, having been killed by a train on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad crossing at Market and Nevar streets, in the city of Canton, on the 14th of August, 1900. After his marriage Mr. Ite returned to Canton and secured work at his trade in what was known as the Willis Benson & Company shop, and about eighteen months later he entered the employ of the C. Russell Company. He was industrious and frugal and with his savings he established a lathe in a small stable at the rear of his dwelling and there he engaged in wood turning at night, utilizing foot power, while during this time he also continued his regular work in the Aultman shops. From this modest inception, however, he has built up a profitable and important business enterprise. His skill as a workman brought to him a good patronage in his little shop and eventually he resigned his position to devote his entire time to his own business. In 1887 he established a planing mill, which he equipped with steam power in 1888, and here he continued in business until the plant was destroyed by fire, on the 18th of March, 1902, the enterprise having grown to be one of wide scope and importance, while from his discriminating and well directed efforts he has attained marked success. Upon the site of his former mill he has erected a fine new plant, with the most modern mechanical equipment, and the establishment is now one of the best in its line in this section of the state, having facilities for turning out the best class of work with expedition, all kinds of builder's supplies in the way of wood finishings and dressed lumber being manufactured. This is one of the important industrial enterprises of the city and stands to the credit of the subject, whose success has been won by earnest and consecutive application and honorable methods. He is known as a progressive and capable business man and is held in the highest confidence and esteem in the community where he has so long lived and labored. In politics Mr. Ite was formerly identified with the Democracy, but he now maintains an independent attitude, exercising his franchise in support of those men and measures which meet the approval of his judgment, without regard to strict partisan lines. Fraternally he is a valued member of McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, and is also identified with both lodge and encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Canton Chapter No. 80, having passed the official chairs in both bodies of this fraternity, and his name is also entered on the membership roll of the Protective Home Circle.

Of the five children of Mr. Ite we enter the following brief record: Mary E. (Mrs. A. I. Henry), died in 1888; Alberta is the wife of Lewis C. Robin, of Canton; Charles Q., who is engaged in bricklaying in Canton, married Miss Mary Stinsacomb; Charity Ann is the wife of Adolph Pohl, of Cleveland; and Hattie M. remains with her father in the attractive home, which is located at 1819 South Market street. She married Christian U. Sommer. Mr. Ite many years ago became a member of the volunteer fire department of Canton, and was identified in this capacity for thirteen years, being eventually chosen captain.

MR. AND MRS. JOEL TREESH.

JOEL TREESH.—The name Treesh is of German origin. Christian Treesh, the subject's grandfather, was born in the old country, but some time in the eighteenth century came to America, and settled in Pennsylvania, where his death occurred many years ago. Among his immediate descendants was a son by the name of William, who was born in Pennsylvania, and he grew to maturity on a farm, marrying when a young man to Miss Catherine Berlin, whose parents were also early settlers of the Keystone state. About the year 1818 William Treesh and family moved to Stark county, Ohio, and located in what is now Jackson township, where he purchased and developed a farm and became a prosperous man. He accumulated quite a large estate, mostly in land, which subsequently increased greatly in value, and at the time of his death, in 1861, he was considered one of the most enterprising farmers and well-to-do men in the township of Jackson. In politics he was a Democrat, and for a number of years he held the office of justice of the peace, besides filling various minor public positions. The life of William Treesh is very closely identified with the pioneer history and material development of the township in which he settled, and he was also largely instrumental in introducing religion into this part of the county, having been a zealous member of the Lutheran church. Mrs. Treesh was also connected with that religious body, and, like her husband, was noted for piety and zeal. She was a woman of sterling Christian character and to the best of her ability brought up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, living long enough to see them profit by her instruction and faithful counsel. She preceded her husband to the other world, dying about the year 1833. Of the eleven children constituting the family of William and Christiana Treesh, but two are living at the present time, the subject of the review and William, who resides in Indiana. Joel Treesh was born on the 11th of February, 1823, in Jackson township, Stark county, Ohio, and grew to the full stature of well developed manhood in the parental homestead. When old enough, he bore his full share in clearing the farm and cultivating the same, and, as opportunities afforded, attended such schools as were common in this part of the state sixty and seventy years ago. While a youth he decided to become a farmer, and, after assisting his father a number of years, he began cultivating the soil upon his own responsibility, continuing the same until retiring from active life at a comparatively recent date. Many years ago Mr. Treesh won distinctive precedence as a successful farmer, and in due time became the possessor of several tracts of valuable real estate, the greater part of which was cleared and otherwise improved by the labor of his own hands. At one time he owned land to the amount of one hundred and ninety-five acres, but some years ago gave eighty-two acres to his daughter and eighty-one and one-half acres to his grandson, retaining for his own use the home place, which now includes an area of eighty-one and one-half acres.

The maiden name of Mrs. Treesh was Eliza Strohl. She was born in Pennsylvania, and her marriage with the subject, which was solemnized in the year 1845, resulted in the birth of four children, but one of whom, Mrs. Catherine Whitmeyer, is now living. For many years Mr. Treesh was a Democrat in politics, but of late years has given his support to the Prohibition party, having always been decided in his opposition to the liquor traffic. He has served his township and for many years was a member of the school board, in which capacity he did much to arouse an interest in the cause of education in this part of Stark county. Mr. Treesh is one of Stark county's oldest and most valued citizens, and he has always stood four square to every wind that blew—a man in all the term implies. He has worked hard and reaped abundantly from his labors, both in material wealth and in the consciousness of duty bravely and uncomplainingly done. His life has been an open book, known and read by his fellow men, and throughout a long, active and successful career his integrity has never been questioned, nor has any suspicion of wrong doing ever been urged against his character or good name. He and his faithful companion have traveled life's pathway hand in hand for over fifty-six years, and now, as the days wane and the shadows deepen, they proceed gently towards the journey's end with the love and veneration of a host of friends whose prayers are that the dear old couple may be spared many years in which to bless their kind.

WILLIAM H. MARTIN,—An enumeration of those men of the present generation who have won honor and public recognition for themselves, and at the same time have honored the locality to which they belong, would be incomplete were there failure to make mention of the one whose name forms the caption to this review. William H. Martin is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Canton township, Stark county, on the 21st of January, 1855. His father was the late Charles Martin, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume, and the subject is one of four children, the others being George R., who died in Canton township; Edward, who died in Plain township; and Mary C. William H. Martin was reared in Canton township, remaining with his parents until seventeen years old, at which time he accompanied them to Plain township, remaining with them until his marriage. In his youth Mr. Martin acquired a knowledge of the science of surveying and has pursued that calling during most of his life. He soon won a reputation for accuracy, care and painstaking effort and was honored by the electors of the county with the office of county surveyor, the duties of which he faithfully performed for three years, further demonstrating his ability and strengthening the confidence of the people in him. By request of the school board of Plain township, he drew up a map of that township, the work being accepted and a copy placed at the meeting place of the board in the Center school house. So accurate was this map considered that it was used by the publishers of the Stark County Atlas, published about 1895. He also gives a part of his attention to farming, being the possessor of sixty-four acres of splendid land, which he has improved in many ways and brought up to a high state of excellence. He is painstaking and methodical in his operations and makes a point of adopting the latest agricultural methods, having been the owner of the first grain reaper and binder used in the township, thus assuring himself of a reasonable profit in his transactions. He has surrounded himself with many of the comforts and conveniences of life and is prepared to enjoy it to the fullest extent possible. He takes a deep interest in the welfare of those about him and lends his support to all movements looking to the upbuilding of his community.

Mr. Martin has been twice married. On the 10th of October, 1878, he married Miss Mary E. Pontius, who was born in Plain township, Stark county, on the 10th of November, 1858, a daughter of the late John Pontius. To this union were born six children, namely: William J. C., Edith B. (deceased), George E. J., Mary B., Thoburn T. and Thomas T., the two last named being twins. Mrs. Mary Martin died in Plain township on the 17th of September, 1893, and Mr. Martin was again married, March 7, 1895, the lady of his choice being Mrs. Almira Pontius, the widow of Thomas J. Pontius and a daughter of the late

Michael J. Holtz. She was born in Plain township, this county, May 17, 1866, and received her education in the common schools of the county. This marriage has been blessed with two children, James H., deceased, and Charles C. In politics Mr. Martin has always been a Democrat and has taken an active part in the campaign work of his party. For twelve consecutive years he served as school director in Plain township and has done much effective service in advancing the cause of education. Religiously he is identified with the Trinity Lutheran church, and contributes liberally of his means to all movements looking to the advancement of the higher interests of the community. By his courteous manners, genial disposition and genuine worth he has won for himself a host of warm and loyal friends.

GEORGE HOLM.—The Holm family is of staunch German lineage, and the name has been identified with American history from the pre-Revolutionary epoch. Michael Holm, grandfather of the subject, was born in Hagerstown, Maryland, and was a successful farmer in that locality for a number of years. There he married Martha Hollinger, who was born in Washington county, that state, and there several of their children were born prior to the year 1812, when they emigrated thence to Ohio, and took up their abode in the sylvan wilds of Pike township, Stark county, this section of the country being at that time practically an unreclaimed wilderness. The trip was made from Maryland in one of the old-time wagons commonly employed for such purposes, and the journey was a long and weary one, many miles being traversed, as a matter of course, while the mere fact of distance was the most insignificant part of the labor involved. In crossing the mountains it was frequently necessary to attach logs at the back of the wagon, that in dragging they might prevent a too precipitous pace on the part of the primitive conveyance, while through the unbroken forests the way was made with great difficulty and with exasperating delay. At the time of the family's arrival in Pike township settlers were few and widely separated, and the little clearing about the primitive cabins represented the maximum improvement, though an occasional field was found under cultivation, with manifold stumps yet marking the original location of the forest monarchs. The grandfather of the subject entered a quarter section of government land, upon which not a single tree had been felled, the whole tract being a tangled forest wild. He made a little clearing and upon the same erected a log cabin, twenty by twenty-four feet in dimensions, and having but one room. In one end of the rude dwelling was the hugh fireplace, which was likewise constructed of logs and rudely plastered over so as to avoid destruction by the flames. In this the great sections of trees were burned, and the sight was more picturesque than was the comfort evident. The floor was of puncheon, light was supplied by two small windows, which were fitted with oiled paper in lieu of glass, while the doors swung on heavy hinges of leather. The grandfather of the subject had a large family, and he found it no easy task to supply the common necessities of life, but he held the faith that makes faithful, and ways were provided for the safeguarding and care of those near and dear to him. He succeeded in reclaiming his farm and placing the same under effective cultivation, and there he and his good wife continued to reside until the shadows of their lives began to lengthen in the glow of the golden evening and their steps grew feeble through the infirmities of age. Their reward for self-abnegation in the past was not denied them, however, for in the filial solicitude of their children was it granted, and they were tenderly cared for in their declining days by the father of the subject, in whose home they remained until the "everlasting doors" were opened wide to reveal to them the glories of the life eternal. He died in 1837, at the age of seventy-seven years, and his noble wife survived him by several years, passing away at a venerable age. They were consistent members of the Dunkard church, and in the early days signified their devotion by driving a distance of twenty miles, into Tuscarawas county, to attend the services of their church when there held. In politics he was an old-time Whig, giving a loyal support to the party cause. Of the children of this sterling pioneer couple the following is a brief record, all having been born in Stark county, and all being the offspring of the second marriage of the grandfather of the subject:

Michael removed to Whitley county, Indiana, where he passed the remainder of his life; Hannah, who became the wife of Michael Worley, died in Pike township, where she was born; Catherine, who became the wife of William Humbert, and she died in the state of Indiana; Sarah, the wife of John Stands, died in Canton; Lydia, wife of Henry Stands, died in Pike township, this county; Samuel, a blacksmith by trade, died in Canton, at the age of twenty-five years; Martha, the wife of Leonard Schroyer, died in Pike township. John Holm, father of the subject, was born in Maryland, and was a child of his father's second marriage.

John Holm, father of the subject, was born in Washington county, Maryland, in the year 1792. He was about twenty years of age when his father set forth for Ohio, and he was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm, his educational training having been only such as he had gained before coming to the wilds of the Buckeye state. He was a youth of twenty when the family located in Ohio, and here he soon took up a claim of a quarter section of heavily timbered land not far distant from that of his father, in Pike township, Stark county.

He was too poor to employ aid, and nearly his entire lifetime was devoted to reclaiming his farm, as he was able to make progress only by slow degrees. In this county was solemnized his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Shutt, who was likewise born in Washington county, Maryland, in the year 1796, and who was about sixteen years of age at the time when she accompanied her father to Ohio, her mother having died in Maryland. Her father, John Shutt, was likewise born in the same county of Maryland, where as a boy it was his privilege to have heard Otterbein, the founder of the United Brethren church, preach on several occasions. He entered a tract of wild land in Pike township, and there passed the residue of his life, his death occurring in 1862, in his ninety-seventh year. Elizabeth (Shutt) Holm died in 1825, and her husband subsequently married Miss Mary Coutts, who came to Stark county from Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, and she died on the old homestead, in Pike township, in 1865, having been a devoted member of the German Reformed church. The children of the first marriage were as follows: Susan, who became the wife of Simon Soliday, died in Pike township in 1868; George, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and Jacob, a resident of Canton township, married Miss Morley, who is now deceased. Of the second marriage one son was born, Jeremiah, who enlisted in the One Hundred and First Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under Colonel Myer, was wounded in the first day's battle at Gettysburg and died in the hospital there, his remains being brought home by the subject, and being laid to rest in the cemetery in Pike township.

George Holm, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born on the old homestead farm, in Pike township, on the 26th of October, 1820, and his early years were filled with earnest toil in connection of reclaiming the farm from the wilderness. He desired to learn a trade, but his father could not spare him from the farm. His first schooling was received in the home of Absalom Hines, on a neighboring farm, this instructor being a bachelor and a man of no little ability, though it was his misfortune to be cursed with an inordinate appetite for intoxicants, and his pay for his pedagogic efforts was no sooner received than he put it to immediate use, closing his school and indulging his convivial propensities until his cash was exhausted, when he would, perforce, go to work again. After the organization of the public schools the subject continued his studies under somewhat more favorable auspices, being diligent and appreciative and making the best possible use of such advantages as came to him. During the winter of 1842-3 he attended the academy in Canton, the institution having been conducted by Professor Cowles, an able educator. After school hours and during vacations Mr. Holm devoted his attention to the work of the farm, having plowed among the stumps and roots of the newly cleared fields at an age when he was barely able to steady the plow. At the age of twenty-three years he began teaching, his certificate having been signed by Messrs. E. P. Grant and A. McGregor, who constituted the board of examiners. He proved successful in his work as a teacher in the district schools of his native county, and continued to remain at the parental home the greater portion of his time until his marriage, in 1845. His father then removed to the farm which had been secured by the grandfather of the subject, and after the death of the former the subject inherited the old homestead, upon which he made excellent improvements, erecting new buildings and doing much to augment the value of the place. In 1866 he removed to his farm in Canton township and eventually disposed of the land which had been entered by his grandfather so many years previously. Mr. Holm remained but a short time on his farm, for within the same year, 1866, he took up his residence in the city of Canton and here accepted a position as traveling salesman for the great agricultural implement concern of C. Aultman & Company, of this place, and that his services did not fall short of the maximum results possible and did not lack for definite appreciation is evident from the fact that he continued in the employ of the concern for the long period of thirty years. His first home here was in South Canton, but in 1875 Mr. Holm effected an exchange of properties and became the owner of his present attractive home, at 840 North Market street. He has been known as a most progressive and public-spirited citizen, ever taking a lively interest in all that touches the welfare of his home city and county. In politics he was originally arrayed with the Whig party, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and has ever since been an advocate of its principles and policies. In 1850 he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which his wife likewise became a member, having originally been identified with the German Reformed church, of which she became a member when but fourteen years of age. About 1861 Mr. Holm was elected to the office of township trustee of Pike township, and of this office he continued incumbent for twelve years. In 1855 the Republicans of this district nominated the late Judge Underhill for the legislature, this being the first convention of the party in the district, and the subject was a delegate to the same.

On the 30th of March, 1845, Mr. Holm was united in marriage, in Bethlehem township, this county, to Miss Catherine Buchtel, the officiating clergyman being Rev. R. R. Salters, of the German Reformed church. Mrs. Holm was born in the same township, on the 18th of August, 1822, and here her education was received in the district schools of the pioneer epoch. Her father, John Buchtel, was born in Center county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared to manhood, and in 1811 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Stark county, Ohio, the family being numbered among the first settlers of Bethlehem township. Mr. Buchtel married Martha Sherman, who was a native of Franklin county, Pennsylvania. He entered a quarter section of wild land in the township mentioned and forthwith instituted the work of reclamation and improvement, and there he continued to make his home until his death, in 1868, at the age of seventy-four years, his wife surviving until 1877, when she passed away at the age of seventy-seven. Of the children of John and Martha Buchtel the following is a brief record: Catherine, wife of the subject; Reuben, a resident of this county; Joseph, who died in May, 1902, was a representative farmer of this county; Sarah is the widow of David Kriegbaum, and resides in Canton, where her son Charles is a leading attorney; Elizabeth is the wife of John Kriegbaum, of this county, where also resides Samuel, the youngest of the children. The great-grandfather of Mrs. Holm was John Buchtel, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, whence he emigrated to America and took up his residence in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, where he passed the residue of his life. His son John, grandfather of Mrs. Holm, was born in Franklin county, and one of his brothers was a soldier in the war of 1812, in which he undoubtedly sacrificed his life, all trace of him being lost from the early period of his service. He was the father of John Buchtel, who was the father of John R., the founder of Buchtel College, in Akron, Ohio. John Buchtel, grandfather of Mrs. Holm, was married, in his native country, to Miss Catherine Snyder, who was likewise born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, whither her parents emigrated from Holland. Upon coming to Stark county, John Buchtel (grandfather) entered claim to a half section of land in Bethlehem township, and there he died prior to the year 1822.

To Mr. and Mrs. Holm have been born six children, concerning whom the following is a brief record: Almira is the wife of William K. Gallagher, of Cleveland, Ohio; Elizabeth is the wife of William W. Pumphrey, of Canton; Sarah is the wife of Robert W. McGaughey, of Massillon, this county; Elmer remains at the parental home; Olive, who became the wife of Isaac W. Stauffer, of Canton, died in 1896, and Edith is the wife of Valentine L. Nye, of Canton. The family have a large circle of devoted friends in the city and county, where they are well known, and both Mr. and Mrs. Holm are honored representatives of sterling pioneer families, prominently identified with the founding and building of one of the most prosperous and attractive counties of the old Buckeye state.

GEORGE W. BUTLER is a native of the state of West Virginia, having been born in the town of Cameron, Marshall county, on the 22d of February, 1858. His father, Joseph R. Butler, was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and was a carpenter by trade and vocation. In the old Keystone state he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Shultz, a daughter of John Shultz, a representative farmer of Fayette county, that state. After his marriage Joseph R. Butler removed to Cameron, West Virginia, where he remained about two years, at the expiration of which he returned with his family to Pennsylvania, locating in Greene county, where he continued to follow his trade until 1873, in which year his cherished and devoted wife was summoned to the "land of the leal." Within the same year Mr. Butler removed with his children to Fayette county, Pennsylvania, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1899, at which time he was sixty-nine years of age. He was a son of Andrew Butler, who was born in Ireland, whence he emigrated to America when a young man, locating in Pennsylvania, where he married, and there he died when his son Joseph was eleven years of age, having been in the prime of life at the time of his demise. His children were five in number, namely: Andrew, Martin, Mary, Margaret and Joseph R.

George W. Butler, the immediate subject of this sketch, was two years of age at the time when his parents removed from West Virginia to Greene county, Pennsylvania, and there he received his early educational discipline in the public schools, his advantages in the line being somewhat limited. When but thirteen years of age he assumed the practical responsibilities of life, securing employment by the month on a farm and receiving in compensation for his services six dollars and thirty-three cents a month, while he contributed his wages to assisting in the support of his parents and the other members of the family. He continued to be identified with farm work until he had attained the age of eighteen years, and for two years thereafter he was employed as a weigher and tippler of coal at Bridgeport, Pennsylvania. In 1878 Mr. Butler came to Stark county, and for three years was employed at farm work in the vicinity of the city of Massillon. The associations into which he had been thrown in connection with the coal business had proved very repugnant to him, and he finally decided to seek another field of endeavor, with which end in view he came to Stark county, as noted. In the spring of 1881 Mr. Butler came to Canton and thereafter he was employed in the works of the Canton Bridge Company until 1892, when he established himself in the real estate business in which he has ever since continued, while by discrimination and well-directed energy he has succeeded in building up a gratifying business, his success being well merited, since it has been attained entirely through his own efforts, while he has so ordered his course as to gain and retain the high regard of those with whom he has come in contact. In politics Mr. Butler accords a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees, the Protective Home Circle and the American Insurance Union.

On the 26th of December, 1880, at Massillon, this county, Mr. Butler was united in marriage to Miss Clara E. Richards, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Swalley) Richards, the former of whom was born in Maryland, whence he came with his parents to Stark county when a lad of six years; he died in Canton at the age of seventy-nine years. His wife was summoned into eternal rest in 1891, at the age of sixty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Butler have one daughter, Anna, who was born on the 5th of October, 1882.

MELVILLE B. COX was a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Uniontown, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, on the 25th of October, 1845, and being the second in order of birth of the five children of Rev. William and Mary Ann (McNeeley) Cox, the former being of English and the latter of Scotch ancestry. Rev. William Cox was a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church and was prominent in its work for many years, having held important charges in both Pennsylvania and Ohio and having been for a number of years presiding elder of the Canton circuit, retaining his residence in the city of Canton for the greater portion of this time. He died at Beaver, Pennsylvania, in 1899, at the venerable age of eighty-two years, while his wife passed away at the age of seventy-two years. During his early youth the subject of this memoir lived in and about the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where his father was at the time engaged in pastoral work, and there he received the advantages of the public schools and in Pittsburg he learned the drug business, to which he continued to devote his attention until about 1868, when he came to Canton. Here he became secretary and treasurer of the E. Ball Company, manufacturers of agricultural machinery, being one of the stockholders of the concern until it suspended business, when he assumed the position of bookkeeper with the C. Aultman Company, later becoming treasurer of the same, while upon the reorganization of the company he became its secretary, retaining this incumbency until his death, which occurred on the 22d of January, 1901. In the building up of the munificent industry with which he was thus prominently identified, Mr. Cox played an important part, the positions which he held calling for great executive and administrative ability, which he possessed to a remarkable degree, while his inflexible integrity and genial personality gained to him the utmost confidence and esteem on the part of all with whom he came in contact.

In his political proclivities, though never an aspirant for office, Mr. Cox was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and ever loyal to its cause. He ever clung to the religious faith in which he had been carefully reared, and for many years he was a member of the board of trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton, in all departments of whose works he took a fervent and helpful interest. Fraternally he was identified with both the Masonic order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At the time of the establishment of the Canton public library Mr. Cox was made a member of its board of trustees and continued to serve in this capacity until he was summoned from the scene of his mortal labors, while all that pertained to the well-being of his home city and county lay close to his heart and he was ever loyal in all the duties of citizenship of the highest type.

The news of his death was deeply felt among his business associates and in the city in general there was evident a sense of personal bereavement, while his remains were laid to rest with every mark of esteem man can show to mortal man. He was a staunch friend, a loving and devoted father and husband, and standing in the light of a life and character so strong and so prolific in honorable deeds, his death, at the zenith of his usefulness, came with crushing significance, but it is believed that his exemplary life will long be remembered and serve as a type worthy of emulation.

In the city of Canton, on the 8th of December, 1870, Mr. Cox was united in marriage to Miss Ada C. Haas, who was born in this city, being a daughter of George Buckeye Haas, who was born in the state of Maryland, on the 27th of February, 1813, while his parents came to Stark county when he was a boy, being numbered among the early settlers in Canton, where he had established himself in business prior to the year 1830, devoting practically his entire business career to the cabinetmaking and undertaking business and becoming one of the representative citizens of Canton, where he died in 1878, at the age of sixty-five years. He served for many years as township trustee and was prominent in public affairs of a local nature, while he ever retained the high regard of all who knew him. He and his wife were both devoted members of the Lutheran church, of which his father, Rev. Frederick Haas, was a prominent clergyman, having come to Canton from West Virginia and having been one of the pioneer clergy of his church in this section of the Buckeye state. He died in Canton in 1834, and his wife Elizabeth died in Tiffin, Seneca county, this state, in 1868, at the age of seventy eight years. The original progenitors of the Haas family in America emigrated hither from Germany, the name being spelled as here given, while its pronunciation is indicated by the form "Hess." In Canton

George B. Haas was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Ely, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, whence she came to Canton in 1830, to join the family of her brother-in-law, John Black, who conducted what was known as Black's hotel, on the site of the present Central Savings Bank, her marriage to Mr. Haas having been solemnized in this hotel. She long survived her husband, her death occurring in Canton, in the month of January, 1902, at the age of eighty-two years. They became the parents of two children, the younger of whom was Ada C., the widow of the subject of this memoir. Her brother, Marshall E., was born in Canton, in 1843, and received his education in the public schools and a business college in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Upon the President's first call for volunteers to aid in suppressing the rebellion, he enlisted, in 1861, as a member of Company F, Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued in service for three years, having received a severe wound from a musket ball, which passed through his right arm. He was promoted to corporal and later to sergeant of his company, and after the close of the war he went to the west as an express messenger, later returning to Canton, where he died in the year 1876. At Centralia, Illinois, he married Miss Julia Marsh, who survives him, retaining her residence in the city of Spokane, Washington, as does also her daughter Ada. Her son Guy resides in San Jose, California, and her other son, George, is deceased. Mrs. Cox was reared and educated in Canton, taking a high school course, and her first teacher was a Miss Betsy Cowles. Mr. and Mrs. Cox became the parents of four children, concerning whom the following brief record is offered in conclusion of this sketch: Mary Elizabeth, who was for seven years a successful and popular teacher of German and English in the Canton high school; Marcia R. remains at the maternal home; Edna is the wife of Herbert D. Raff, of Ironton, this state; and Ada Beall likewise remains with her mother in the attractive family homestead.

ARTHUR S. BOYER was born in the city of Dayton, Ohio, on the 4th of February, 1867, where he attended the public schools until he had reached the age of fifteen years, when he entered Cooper Academy, at Dayton, Ohio, where he continued his studies until 1885. He was then matriculated in old Kenyon College, at Gambier, Ohio, where he remained two years, at the expiration of which he returned to his home in Dayton, where his presence was demanded by reason of the precarious health of his honored father. He continued his educational work at home until he had attained the age of twenty-two years, when he went to Dallas, Texas, where he became assistant manager of a large dry-goods and millinery house, retaining this incumbency until 1893. On the 21st of January, 1891, he was there united in marriage to Miss Mamie Hurst, daughter of Thomas W. and Mary (Kendall) Hurst, of that city, Mr. Hurst having been in charge of the circulating department of the Dallas Morning News. For one year Mr. Boyer was associated with his father-in-law in this department of newspaper work and he then became manager of the southeastern territory of the Plymouth Rock Pants Company, with headquarters at Chattanooga, Tennessee. In the spring of 1896 he returned to Dayton in company with his wife, where he devoted the greater part of the summer to study, while in the autumn he identified himself vigorously with the active work of the Young Men's Christian Association, going to Xenia, Ohio, where he contributed his services for about four months without remuneration, in order to place the local organization on a firm foundation, so that it might properly exercise its functions. He then became general secretary of the local organization at Salem, this state, where he remained until March, 1899, when he came to Canton to assume his present position, of which he has been continuously incumbent since that time. Mr. Boyer is a most earnest and indefatigable worker in his chosen field and he has done much to vitalize the work of the organization in Canton and to improve the facilities of the association, while his enthusiasm and zeal have proved inspiring and have brought about gratifying results. Mr. Boyer is also secretary and treasurer of the Canton Tabernacle Company, while both he and his wife are devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose Sunday school he is a valued and popular teacher. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, utilizing his franchise in support of those men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment, without regard to strict partisan lines. To Mr. and Mrs. Boyer have been born four children, namely: Thomas F., who died in Salem, Ohio, at the age of seventeen years, and Mitchell M., Dorothy Hurst and Elizabeth Carey. Mr. and Mrs. Boyer are well known in the city of Canton and are prominent in the best social life of the community.

John Frederick Boyer, the father of the subject, was born in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1828, and when he was but four years of age his parents removed thence to what is now the city of Dayton, Ohio, the place being at the time a mere village. He attended the typical log school house of the pioneer town and after leaving school learned the trade of copper-smith, while eventually he became a successful manufacturer of copper coils and other products in the line. His wife, whose maiden name was Lucretia Swain, is a daughter of the late Judge Charles W. Swain, who was a distinguished and honored pioneer of Dayton.

WILSON C. BERGER.—Among those who have stood as distinguished types of the world's workers and who have proved their value to the world through their labors and through inventions of great utility, stood the honored subject of this memoir, who was a man of exalted integrity, most kindly consideration in all the relations of life and one who ever placed a true estimate upon men and things, there being no obliquity in his vision and thus no deviation from the course which makes for true and noble and prolific manhood. He was the artificer of his own fortunes, was appreciative of the dignity of honest toil, for he had been himself a worker, and he attained high prestige as one of the representative business men and most loyal and valued citizens of Canton. A work of this character exercises its maximum function when it enters tribute to the life and labors of such a man.

The late Wilson Calvin Berger was a native of the old Keystone state and came of staunch German lineage on both the paternal and maternal sides. He was born in the town of Millersburg, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 6th of April, 1851, being a son of William and Angelina (Schmeltzer) Berger, the former of whom served faithfully in defense of the Union during the war of the Rebellion. The narrative of the conditions and circumstances of his early life constitutes the "short and simple annals of the poor," and the statement is in itself adequately significant, for it shows that his strong character was moulded in the stern school of experience. His educational opportunities were perforce limited, but to such natures a handicap of this order is not a matter of serious import in starting out in the race for the goal of definite success. Mr. Berger early manifested a decided predilection for mechanical pursuits, showing much genius in this line while still a boy, and it is pleasing to advert to the fact that it was through this same genius that he eventually attained distinction as an inventor and a position of independence and prosperity. When he was a lad his father took him to the city of Reading, Pennsylvania, with a view of securing him a position in the locomotive works in that city, in order that he might serve an apprenticeship at the business. He was unsuccessful in making the desired arrangements, and at the advice of an uncle of his mother, a Mr. Seaver, Mr. Berger entered upon an apprenticeship at the tinner's trade, in Millersburg. In 1870, at the age of nineteen years, having become a skilled mechanic in this line, he came to Canton and secured employment in the shops of Best & Martin, on South Market street. Later he entered the employ of the Biechele Brothers, with whom he remained for a period of fourteen years, after which he was employed in the shops conducted by Edward Rex and Charles Rex. During these years Mr. Berger was not content to merely follow out the duties assigned to him, but was also applying himself to mechanical study and invention during his evenings at home and at such other times as opportunity afforded. In Millersburg, Pennsylvania, on the 22d of May, 1872, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Myers, daughter of the late Reuben Myers, of Canton, a member of one of the representative pioneer families of Stark county. Mrs. Berger's home has been in Stark county from the time of her birth, but at the time of her marriage she was passing a year in the home of relatives in Millersburg, Pennsylvania, where she and her husband remained during the succeeding year, Mr. Berger being there associated with his brother John A., in conducting a tin shop. At the expiration of this interval he returned to Canton, taking up his residence on South McKinley avenue, but while in the employ of the Biechele Brothers he lived for six years in apartments over their establishment, and then built a home at 719 North Cherry street. In 1886, in partnership with his brother

John A., he began the manufacture of the malleable eave trough hanger which he had invented, their first shop being a small room in John Inglehart's establishment, on North Cherry street, from which location they later removed to a shop on Fifth street, between Walnut and Cherry streets, this establishment likewise being one of most modest order, so that they eventually found it expedient to secure larger quarters and located in Stephen Zooker's building, opposite the Tabernacle on South Rex street, Mr. Zooker being at the time admitted to partnership in the business, which was gradually increasing in scope and importance, as the superior value of the invention became known. A short time afterward Mr. Zooker sold his interest in the enterprise to Hiram Khlorer. As time passed, other valuable inventions patented by Mr. Berger were added to the list of articles manufactured, while other products were eventually turned out on a large scale, including sheet-metal roofing, siding and ceiling, eaves trough, conductor pipe, metal cornice, etc. Finally the firm, in order to provide adequate accommodations for their business, leased property on East Ninth street, between Cherry and Saxton streets, and there erected a well equipped plant, which proved sufficient for the exigencies of the enterprise until the large new plant in the Hurford addition to the city of Canton was erected, where the manufacturing was pushed forward under most favorable conditions. Mr. Berger had been superintendent of the works from the time of the organization of the firm, under the title of the Berger Manufacturing Company, which it still retains, and thus he came into close contact not only with his business associates and patrons, but also with the workmen of the plant, and a more beneficent tribute to his memory can scarcely be paid than to say that he held the highest respect and the loyal regard of those who labored under his direction. In the earlier years Mr. Berger did all drafting of designs for his inventions, though he never received the slightest instruction in this art. He continued to be actively concerned in the enterprise until the illness which finally terminated in his death, on the 2d of April, 1894. His loss was deeply felt in the community, for he had been honored as a business man and as a citizen of sterling worth of character, while to those more intimately associated with him in business the sense of personal bereavement was significantly poignant. All who came in contact with him honored him for his business rectitude and admired him for his keen sagacity and mature judgment in connection with practical affairs. He was a consistent member of Trinity Reformed church, to the support of whose spiritual work and collateral charities he was a liberal contributor, ever showing marked appreciation for the responsibilities that canopy life and living in harmony with the faith which he professed,—that faith which ever makes faithful. He and his brother John presented a beautiful memorial window to the church and also contributed largely to the building fund of the fine edifice. In politics he ever accorded a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party and, while taking a deep and intelligent interest in the questions and issues of the hour, he never desired official preferment of any order. A most appreciative estimate of the character of the man was made by his pastor, Rev. E. P. Herbruck, at his funeral services, on the afternoon of April 5, 1894, and it is consistent that a few excerpts be here made from his sermon: "It is not often that the death of a man produces such universal sorrow in a community as did the death of Mr. Berger. When the news spread throughout the city that he had passed away, there was deep and heartfelt regret expressed on every side and many an eye was dimmed with tears at the thought of the death of this excellent man. But as there is comfort in looking forward, so there is also in looking back over his life. The forty-three years he spent here were not vainly spent. He employed well the time, the little space of time, allotted to him on earth. He had many excellent qualities. One of these was his diligence in business. He was not above work, and did what his hands found to do with all his might. He knew what physical labor meant, not by observation but by actual experience. He came up from the humbler walks of life, cleaving his way by dint of ingenuity and hard work. Together with his brother, he slowly forged his way to the front, conquering the opposition and surmounting obstacles that beset his path. His lack of means and the difficulties that confronted him made him all the more earnest and persistent. He had just come to a competency and to comfort and had reached the stage in life when he might enjoy the fruits of his labor, when the dark-robed angel removed him from our midst. While he was highly esteemed by the firm to which he belonged, he was also in good repute with the employes. It is their unanimous testimony that he was a good master. His was a heart of flesh and not of steel. He sympathized with the men because he himself was a working man. He displayed all proper feeling and consideration for them and therefore they were not lacking in love and loyalty to him. The coldness and distance so common between employer and employe did not exist between them, and as a consequence there was an absence of the friction and dissatisfaction so common in that relation. I may further say that the deceased was a strictly honest man. He knew the difference between mine and thine. No one can rightfully accuse him of deception or double dealing. His hands are clean of ill gotten gains. This is saying a great deal in these days of fraud and questionably scheming. It is a eulogy in itself to say that a man is transparent in character and four square in all his transactions. The last thing we wish to say of the brother is the best, namely, he was a Christian. He was baptized in his infancy and has been a member of the Reformed church from childhood. For the past eighteen years he has been identified with Trinity church and has given his cordial and substantial support. His name is inscribed on one of these memorial windows, and there is no more honorable place to have it written. That inscription will be a perpetual witness to his interest in this congregation."

After the death of her honored husband, Mrs. Berger remained for a number of years in their home on Cherry street, but on November 15, 1900, she took up her abode in her present spacious and attractive residence, which she erected, the same being located at No. 2118 West Tuscarawas street and being one of the many beautiful homes of the city. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Berger brief record is entered in the following lines: Goldie Edith was born in Canton, on the 16th of November, 1876, and is an artist of marked talent, having done excellent work in oils, both in the line of landscapes and that of portraits. She is now the wife of Edward F. Weckel, who is a teacher of elocution in the public schools of Canton, his home having formerly been in Dayton, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Weckel have one child, Wilson Edward. William R., who was born in Canton, on the 13th of July, 1878, has attended the best musical schools in this country and Germany and is now a successful and popular teacher of the "divine art" in his home city. Albert Wilson was born in this city, on the 22d of April, 1886, and has inherited much of his father's mechanical genius, having invented a corn shredder and many other valuable devices.

Mrs. Berger was born in the village of Louisville, Stark county, Ohio, on the 27th of July, 1851, and was but thirteen years of age at the time of her mother's death, and her father soon afterward removed to Canton, where she was reared to womanhood, having assumed the major portion of the domestic duties of the household after the death of her mother. She is a daughter of Reuben and Mary A. (Pecher) Myers, the former of whom was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, December 25, 1820, while he was numbered among the sterling pioneers of Stark county, Ohio, where he died on the 21st of January, 1890. He rendered his country faithful military service during the war of the Rebellion. His wife was born April 12, 1825, also in Adams county, Pennsylvania, and her death occurred on the 11th of April, 1865. Of their children the following brief data is entered: Joseph R., who is now a resident of Canton, was a valiant soldier in the Civil war and was confined nearly two years in the notorious Libby prison; he married Miss Ada Hensel; Pius Matthew, who is engaged in the grocery business in Canton, married Miss Catherine Herbst, of New Philadelphia, this state; Amelia Ann died in childhood; Mary is the widow of the subject of this memoir; and Frank F., a resident of Canton, married Miss Celia Wingerter. Mrs. Berger has long been a zealous and devoted member of the Reformed church, is a woman of gracious presence and her home is a center of refined hospitality, while she has a wide circle of friends in the city where the major portion of her life has been passed and which is endeared to her by many grateful memories and associations.

LEWIS M. LIND.—The Lind family, of which the subject of this sketch is of the third generation, has resided in the county continuously since 1826. The family originally came from Germany, and in that country was called Funderlind. The progenitor of the family in America came to this country previous to the war of the Revolution and located in either Maryland or Pennsylvania, probably the latter, whence the name, divested of the first two syllables, spread over many of the eastern states.

John Lind, grandfather of the subject, was the first of the name to locate in Stark county, Ohio. He came in 1826, bringing with him his wife and children, among them Samuel Lind, then about eight years old, who became the father of Lewis M. Lind. The nativity of John Lind and his wife, Elizabeth (Hess) Lind, is not definitely known, but they were born in either Maryland or Pennsylvania, and from the former state, in 1826, they emigrated to Ohio. They located upon a farm in Plain township, built a home, prospered, reared their children and remained there until their deaths. He died in Plain township many years ago, at the age of seventy-two years, while she lived for nearly twenty years thereafter, dying at the age of eighty-nine years. Both are well remembered by the older residents of that part of the county, as being among the most industrious and thrifty of the early settlers. Samuel Lind, one of the children of the above mentioned couple and father of Lewis M. Lind, was born in Maryland in 1818. He was reared on his father's farm in Plain township, where he grew to maturity and married Miss Hannah Housel, daughter of Anthony Housel, an old resident of Plain township, who died there some years ago, at the age of eighty-nine years. There were thirteen children in the family of Samuel Lind and wife, all being reared to maturity and becoming useful and worthy citizens. Both parents died on the old homestead in Plain township.

Lewis M. Lind was born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, March 25, 1845. He was reared and grew to manhood in the township of his birth and has been a resident thereof most of the years of his life, his home having always been in Stark county. He attended the district school when available and so well did he employ his time and talents that while still a youth he was regularly licensed to teach, and conducted several very successful terms of school in the public schools of Stark county. Later he acquired a knowledge of the milling business and for about eight years operated a flouring mill. He was prudent and saving, carefully husbanding his earnings, which enabled him to make investments in real estate, so at this time he is the half owner of a nice farm of one hundred and sixty-seven acres, the land being well improved, fertile and valuable.

In November, 1869, Lewis M. Lind was united in marriage, in Tuscarawas township, to Miss Angeline Brown, a native of Iowa. She lived but three years to grace their home, dying in May, 1872, and leaving to her bereaved husband a little daughter, Clara E., as a pledge of her love. The child lived to the age of seven years, when she, too, followed her mother into eternity. On November 23, 1876, Lewis M. Lind again entered the married state, this time Miss Jennie M. Painter, a young lady of many accomplishments, becoming his bride. She was a native of Stark county, born in Pike township, October 26, 1856. Her parents were Jacob and Susan (Muckley) Painter, who were among Stark county's early residents. To the subject's second union eight children were born, viz.: Mary A., Kate E., Herman H., Henry E., Margaret, Dorothy J. and Lewis M., of whom the latter died in infancy.

In politics Mr. Lind is a Republican. He is quite active, especially in local affairs during election campaigns and is credited with wielding considerable influence in his section of the county. He is not an office seeker, but, having always interested himself in educational matters, he consented to serve upon the school board a number of terms from 1888 to 1902. He also served as school director in Canton township three years while he resided there. Mr. and Mrs. Lind are both members of the Lutheran Trinity church, in the Sunday school of which denomination Mr. Lind is an active worker. They have a comfortable, happy home on their fine productive farm, where, surrounded by their children, they realize day by day that the good may have a rich reward meted out to them even in this life.

SAMUEL RINGER, of Plain township, Stark county, the subject of this sketch, was born in Nimishillen township, Stark county, April 6, 1824, and at the time of his birth his parents, John and Catharine (Truby) Ringer, had been residents of Stark county for twenty-four years. They were natives of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, both families having been prominent among the inhabitants of their native county, and there they grew to maturity and were married. He was a man of learning and ability and soon after he attained his majority was called by his fellow townsmen to fill one of the county offices. He also was appointed to public place under the national government and it was while acting in this capacity he made his first trip to Stark county. He died on his farm in Nimishillen township when he was seventy-three years old, while his widow survived him many years, going to her reward when she was eighty-four years old. They were the parents of twelve children, ten of whom grew to maturity, the other two dying in infancy, and Samuel, the subject, was one of the younger members of the family.

In his native township of Nimishillen, Samuel Ringer grew to manhood. He embraced such limited opportunities for acquiring an education as the primitive conditions then prevailing on the frontier afforded, but few boys or girls brought up at that time and in that locality securing a very high reputation for learning. Far more time and attention were devoted to the development of the muscles in the clearing and on the farm than was afforded to the cultivation of the mind. Most of the lessons which the subject and other lads of his time learned were those of industry, the calling of an agriculturist being the only calling of which he acquired any knowledge, but he learned that thoroughly and well.

October 15, 1853, Samuel Ringer was united in marriage, in his native township, to Miss Mary Zendz, daughter of Adam Zendz, one of Clark county's very early settlers. Like her husband, she had been born and reared in Nimishillen township. They had known each other from babyhood and their life of unalloyed domestic happiness for a period of more than thirty-seven years shows how well they were suited to each other by nature and by training. Samuel Ringer met with the great bereavement of his life when, in December, 1890, his good and faithful wife, the mother of his thirteen children, departed this life. Two of their little ones died in infancy. The other children, all of whom grew to maturity, are Aaron, George A., Simon, Job, John, Edward, Levina, Barbara, Eva, Ida and Clara.

The farm owned and occupied by Samuel Ringer consists of one hundred and sixty-five acres of fertile, well improved land. It is a choice tract and splendidly improved with good, substantial and commodious buildings of all kinds. At one time he was the owner of four hundred and eighty acres, but he has disposed of it all except the farm upon which he resides. All his life he has been a zealous, earnest worker and now, in his declining years, he finds himself in a position to take life easy. He has always carried on general farming and stock raising and has met with gratifying success in each branch of the business. In religion* he has been for many years a member of the Trinity Lutheran church and the cause of charity, religion and education has always appealed to him strongly, he devoting much time and material substance to each. In his younger days he was quite active in politics, not only in township and county affairs, but on state and even national questions. He has always been a Democrat, but never aspired to public position on his own behalf, the only public place he ever filled being that of trustee of Plain township. He accepted that with many misgivings and was only too glad to relinquish the place into other hands at the close of his term. Intellectually as bright as in the morning of his manhood, physically a far better man than many twenty years younger, contented and happy, surrounded by myriads of his offspring, even unto the third generation, there seems to be no reason why Samuel Ringer should not round out the full period of a century of life.

LEVI A. COCKLIN was born on his father's farm in Lake township, Stark county, Ohio, August 11, 1837. His father was Adam Cocklin, who was a native of Pennsylvania, as was his mother also, and they were reared in Pennsylvania and married there. Soon thereafter they emigrated to Stark county, locating in Lake township about 1825, upon the farm where they lived many years. He died at the age of fifty-six years, while she long survived him, passing away in the seventieth year of her age. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom Levi A. was the seventh child. He was reared at the home of his parents in Lake township until he was seventeen years of age. In 1854 he located in Plain township and has been a resident of that municipality ever since. When old enough he became apprenticed to a blacksmith and learned that calling thoroughly, following it for nine years at Middlebranch, with marked success. From his earnings at the forge he saved sufficient to enable him to purchase a piece of land and devoted what time he could spare from the shop in improving it.

At Middlebranch on the 31st day of January, 1865, Mr. Cocklin was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Christ, who was born in Massillon, Ohio, March 20, 1843. Her parents were John and Hannah (Rhodes) Christ, who were among the early pioneers of that locality. Both are now dead, the father dying at his home in Massillon, many years ago, in the fifty-first year of his age, while his wife survived him many years, passing to her eternal rest in the sixty-sixth year of her age. To Mr. and Mrs. Levi A. Cocklin five children were born, viz: John J., Laura E., Adam A., Thomas J. and Phoebe J. It is an interesting, happy family, in a home where love reigns and kindness and courtesy between the members of the household are ruling features. Personally Mr. Cocklin is one of the most generous and public spirited citizens of the township. Every step in the direction of local improvement or for the public good always finds in him a warm supporter. Still he is prudent, careful and conservative, a man who never ventures into anything until he is fully satisfied as to its merit. He is a kind husband, an indulgent father and a model citizen.

ELI SMITH was born in Franklin county, Maryland, January 5, 1815. His parents were Daniel and Mary Ann (Lind) Smith, the former of whom was a native of Pennsylvania, but later moved to Maryland and resided there until after the birth of their sixth child, Eli, the subject. There they remained until 1825, when they came to Stark county, Ohio, they and their eleven children making the trip in a big wagon drawn by horses and being seventeen days on the way. They settled on the farm in Plain township, where the subject now resides, established a home and reared their family, and from there the eleven sons and daughters went out into the world seeking fame and fortune. The mother died when sixty-six years old, while Mr. Smith lived many years thereafter, dying when in the eighty-third year of his age.

When he came to Stark county, Eli Smith was but ten years old. Up to that time he had received little education and the boundless west then afforded few facilities for the enlightenment of its youth. He worked on the farm until old enough to engage in an avocation more to his taste, when he went to Greentown, Lake township, to learn from his brother the trade of tanner. For forty years, from 1834 to 1874, he worked at that calling, and in 1842 he began the operation of a tannery of his own at New Baltimore, doing a thriving business. In 1856 he purchased the old farm and moved thereon, superintending its cultivation in connection with the operation of the tannery. His farm consists of one hundred and fifty-nine acres, all well improved and in a fine state of cultivation.

At Greentown, Lake township, November 20, 1840, Eli Smith was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Kreighbaum, a native of Greentown, born in 1824. Her father was George Kreighbaum, one of the early pioneers and leading citizens of Stark county, having served as one of its early commissioners, while her mother's christian name was Catherine. For nearly forty-seven years Mr. and Mrs. Eli Smith lived happily together, she dying in Plain township, March 15, 1887. They were the parents of eleven children, nine of whom grew to maturity.

In politics Mr. Smith is a Democrat of the old school. He cast his first ballot for Martin Van Buren, the successor of Andrew Jackson, in 1836. He was old enough to take an active interest in politics when "Old Hickory" ran the last time in 1832, being in his eighteenth year, and was sorely disappointed that he was not old enough to cast his ballot for the grand old Democrat. In his time he has filled many of the local offices of the townships in which he lived. He was treasurer of Marlboro township several years, trustee of Plain township and was road supervisor and school director. In every post that he filled he gave entire satisfaction and always, of his own choice, relinquished the positions. He has been for many years a member of the English Lutheran church, of which his wife was also a member during her lifetime. Both joined when they were young, soon after the church was established in their part of the county.

The life of Eli Smith has been a long and useful one. He has reared a large family of sons and daughters and has seen them go out into the world and become useful, prosperous citizens. Of all of the friends of his early youth scarcely one remains. Each has passed to his reward and left him to still enjoy the blessings of life, not the least of which is the love and affection of the rising generations of grandchildren and great-grandchildren which crowd about him.

JOSEPH HAAK was born in Marlboro township, Stark county, Ohio, April 27, 1849. His parents were Jacob F. and Barbara (Zeigler) Haak, both natives of Germany, in which country they were reared and married, and came to America in the early 'thirties. Their voyage across the Atlantic in a sailing vessel, the best means of transportation at the time, was a long, tedious and disagreeable one. They came to Stark county and first settled in Plain township, about one mile east of New Berlin, but later they moved to Marlboro township, where they purchased a farm and where they continued to reside up to the time of their deaths. Both died comparatively young, she at the age of forty-two, he at the age of forty-eight. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom Joseph, the subject of this sketch, was the tenth child and youngest son. The first seven years of his life were spent in Marlboro township. Being left an orphan when quite young and dependent upon his own resources, he early learned the lessons of industry and self-reliance. Knowing well, by his own experience, the value of money, what he got he appreciated and by the providence which he practiced he was not long in accumulating enough to invest in a piece of land in Plain township, a nice productive tract, capable of being converted into a fine, fertile farm.

December 5, 1876, at Canton, Ohio, Joseph Haak was united in marriage to Miss Catharine Smith, also a native of Marlboro township, and a daughter of Eli and Sarah (Kreighbaum) Smith, natives of Frederick county, Maryland. They immediately moved into their own home on their farm in Plain township, where they have resided ever since. The farm is not large, but it would be difficult to find one better improved. The residence is large, handsome, beautifully finished and furnished in a manner which bespeaks the good taste and refinement of its occupants. There is a splendid, substantial barn upon the place and the stable, granaries and other buildings are all that could be desired. It is a home of which any man may well feel proud. Mr. and Mrs. Haak are the parents of one son, Ellis F., now in his twenty-fifth year.

In politics Joseph Haak is a Democrat, a firm believer in the fundamental principles of that party and labors earnestly in his own modest way for its success. At the present time he is serving as trustee of Plain township and has at different times held other local offices. He was township assessor and school director for many years and has always been active in anything which concerned the public, his influence and example being devoted to the improvement of the township. He is a progressive, public-spirited man, who never allows a little matter of expense to deter him from doing that which will result in good to the community. He and his wife have been for many years members of the English Lutheran church and at the present time he is one of its trustees. Honest, candid, conscientious and unselfish, he is a citizen whose power for good is potential and he has rarely failed to exercise his power in any worthy cause brought to his attention.

OTIS UPTON WALKER was born in the town of Ragersville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 9th of January, 1874, being a son of Edward S. and Willa (Neff) Walker, of whose three children he was the eldest, the others being Torry S., of whom more definite mention will be made in appending paragraphs; and Mamie F., who is the wife of Sherwood Austin, of New Baltimore, this county. Edward S. Walker was born in Tuscarawas county, November 18, 1849, being a son of Samuel P. Walker, who was one of the early settlers in that county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, becoming a man of influence in the community. At the time of the Civil war he served in the quartermaster's department, in which connection he journeyed over a wide range of country, securing horses for the army, and in this way he became well known throughout the most diverse sections of the state of Ohio. He accumulated a competence and was a man of inflexible integrity in all the relations of life. Of his fourteen children all are living except two. Edward S. Walker was reared to manhood in his native county, where he received a common-school education and where he learned the trade of harnessmaking. After his marriage, in the fall of 1870, he opened a harness shop and hardware store in Ragersville, whence he removed, in 1881, to Berlin, Holmes county, where he was engaged in business about two years. His health became much impaired at this time and he was thus led to remove to a farm, near Garrettsville, Portage county, where he continued to reside about four years, at the expiration of which he located in Marlboro, Stark county, where he opened a hotel, which he conducted until the death of his wife, in

O. U. WALKER.

April, 1902, when he retired from the hotel and has since given his attention to the harness business which he had previously conducted in the town, while simultaneously keeping the hotel. He is a staunch Republican in politics, but has never sought official preferment, and he is a worthy member of the Christian church, as was also his cherished and devoted wife. She was born in Tuscarawas county, in the year 1852, and her parents, Jacob and Christina Neff, died, of typhoid fever, when she was but an infant. She was reared in the home of a relative, Mrs. Abigail Kuntz, of her native county, and was a type of gracious womanhood. She died on the 4th of April, 1902, and was laid to rest on the anniversary of the death of her son Torrey. At the time of his tragic death she stated that she would follow him within a year, and though she was at the time in comparatively good health, she was summoned into eternal rest within two days of the close of the year, having grieved sorely over the loss of her young and noble son.

Otis U. Walker was about twelve years of age at the time when his parents took up their residence in Marlboro, and here he continued his educational discipline in the public schools, being graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1893. Even as a boy he manifested the distinctive spirit of independence and self-reliance which are his dominant characteristics today. At the age of thirteen years he had apprenticed himself to learn the barber trade, in which he became proficient, and through his work at the same he paid his own expenses while in the high school. In the summer of 1893, with the view to completing a course in Mount Union College, he came to the village of Mount Union and here opened a barber shop, and through conducting the same he acquired the funds with which to meet the expenses of his collegiate course, which he followed out while devoting himself to the work of his trade.

Notwithstanding the arduous nature of his labors in the shop he applied himself with such enthusiasm and assiduousness to his studies that he was able to complete the regular four years' scientific course in the college in a period of three years, and being graduated as a member of the class of 1896, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. His personality is such that he has always had the faculty of gaining and retaining warm friendships, and he was one of the popular students of the college, as is evident when we revert to the fact that he was chosen to various positions of responsibility in his alma mater,—positions demanding both executive and literary ability. Thus he was manager of the basket-ball and foot-ball teams, served as editor of the Dynamo, the college monthly, and also of the Unonian, the college annual, while he was also periodical reader in the annual society contests. He likewise held the office of captain in the college Republican Marching Club during the McKinley campaign and was an officer in the cadet corps. After his graduation Mr. Walker was employed as city editor of the Alliance Leader and also did special work for the Cleveland Leader and Columbus Press-Post, while he also passed about six weeks in the city of Pittsburgh, in the employ of the Pittsburg Times, his object being to gain certain practical information in regard to newspaper work which he could not secure in Alliance, where the scope of the journalistic enterprises was naturally circumscribed. With Mr. Walker there has always been a distinct appreciation of the value of time, and he has wasted little, as may be inferred. While he was actively engaged in newspaper work he devoted his attention to the reading of law, having as a preceptor William L. Hart, one of the representative members of the bar of Stark county and a resident of Alliance, and to these two lines of work he was giving his attention at the time when the federal government declared war against Spain, when he responded to the call of duty and patriotism by enlisting, in June, 1898, as a member of Company K, Eighth Ohio Volunteers, known as the "President's Own," with which he served in the ranks in the campaign of Santiago de Cuba. In the midst of the campaign, he was stricken with yellow fever, and for weeks his life hung in the balance, his being saved to years of further usefulness being accomplished largely through the great fraternal devotion of his brother Torry, as will be noted later in this context. After his regiment was mustered out and he had sufficiently recuperated his health, Mr. Walker again engaged in editorial work, identifying himself with the Alliance Review, and he was thus employed at the time of his nomination, in the spring of 1900, as the Republican candidate for the office of mayor of Alliance, and he was elected by a gratifying majority. He had cast his first presidential vote in support of McKinley only four years previously, in 1896, and in the campaign of that year was a member of the first voters' club organized in Alliance. Of Mr. Walker's initial administration as mayor another publication has spoken appreciatively as follows: "In the administration of the affairs of the city and in the performance of the duties of his office Mayor Walker gave such general satisfaction and won such general approval that the people, almost regardless of party affiliation, rallied to his support for his re-election, and in the spring of 1902 he was given a majority even greater than that when he was first elected to the office. At all times during the administration of Mayor Walker when his advice has been sought he has counseled for the best interests of Alliance and its people, that it might be known as the place of peace and harmony among all citizens, and in so doing he has won the respect and confidence of all citizens. As chief executive his aim has been to secure health and safety for his constituency, the first by rigid enforcement of the sanitary laws, and the second by establishing ample and up-to-date fire and police departments." In 1903 the new municipal code of Ohio came into effect which necessitated a new election of all executive municipal officers throughout the state. At this election Mr. Walker was again elected mayor of Alliance and is thus now serving his third term as chief executive of the city—at this election he received the largest vote ever given any candidate for any office at any election ever held in the city. With but one exception Mr. Walker is the youngest man ever elected to the mayoralty in Alliance, having been but twenty-six years of age at the time of his first election, as has been previously noted. In connection with his official work he is continuing his study of the law and his intention is to thoroughly prepare himself for the legal profession, for which he is well adapted by natural proclivities and mental powers. He is a young man of gracious and sincere personality and his popularity comes as a natural sequence. Of fine intellectuality and forceful individuality the future holds much in store for him. He is unwavering in his allegiance to the principles and policies of the Republican party and takes an active interest in its cause, while he keeps in intelligent touch with the questions and issues of the hour. He and his wife are valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is identified with Lone Rock Lodge No. 23, Knights of Pythias; Alliance Lodge No. 467, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity. He maintains a lively interest in his comrades of the late war and is captain of Clyde B. Crubaugh Command of the Spanish War Veterans.

On the 23d of April, 1902, Mayor Walker was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Matthews, one of the popular and accomplished young ladies of Alliance. She is the daughter of David and Mary A. Matthews, of this city, her father having been born in Wales and having come to America in his youth and her mother, being a native of Portland, Maine. Mr. Matthews is superintendent of the foundry department of the Morgan Engineering Works of Alliance, one of the leading industrial enterprises of the state.

In conclusion, there is eminent propriety in entering a slight tribute to the memory of the late Torry S. Walker, only brother of the subject of this sketch. Torry Slatin Walker was born in Ragersville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 15th of March, 1875, and he came to Alliance just after being mustered out with the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which regiment he served as private during the siege and surrender of Santiago, in the summer of 1898. He became a first-grade fireman in the well equipped fire department of Alliance, and was instantly killed by the explosion of a chemical engine, on April 6, 1901, being the first member of the department to sacrifice his life at the post of duty. His untimely and tragic death cast a pall over the entire city, and many were the devoted friends who felt a sense of deep personal bereavement, and it has been well said of him that he was "loved and respected by all his acquaintances." The blow to his only brother, Mayor Walker, was a most severe one, as they had ever been devoted to each other, there being but little more than a year's difference in their ages. In this connection we can not do better than to give the following appreciative estimate of his character, which appeared in the Alliance Daily Review of April 9, 1901: "As a soldier more than anywhere else did Torry show the sterling character which he possessed. When the boys were worn out and sick from hardships scarcely to be borne, it was to 'Tort' they looked for aid and comfort. He it was who could forage to purpose, and without doubt his brother, Mayor

O. U. Walker, would now be sleeping in the swamps of Cuba had it not been for the watchful care of the younger brother, who, with the heroism and devotion of a generous heart, carried his brother upon his back from the low ground where he had been left, by an overworked hospital corps, to higher ground and placed him beneath the shelter of a large tree, out of the broiling sun and treacherous damp. And again, when the boys were about to be sent home, Upton Walker would probably have been left behind had not Torry's strong shoulders borne him safely aboard ship. But not alone to his brother were his kind ministrations tendered. Any comrade who needed aid which he could render received it at once. His record as a soldier was second to none in the regiment. With the courage of the lion he had the tenderness and the fortitude of a woman."

JOHN CONRAD was born in Washington township, Stark county, March 31, 1855. His father was Joseph Conrad, a native of Alsace, France, who was brought to America by his parents when only one year old. His grandfather was Jacob Conrad, who, with his family, immigrated from Alsace to America about 1820. They located in Washington township, Stark county, upon a farm, where Jacob Conrad died many years ago, at the age of eighty-five years. His son Joseph, father of the subject, grew to manhood upon this farm, married Miss Catherine Krabille, also a native of France, and they became the parents of fifteen children, of whom John Conrad is the oldest. At the time of his death, some years ago, Joseph Conrad was seventy-three years old.

There was little in the life of John Conrad different from that of the average farmer boy of the time. He chopped wood, plowed land and sowed and reaped just the same as other youths of his time, and in the winter he attended the district school. He possessed an irrepressible disposition, and at times incurred the displeasure of his teacher, but amid it all, he managed to secure a fair education in all of the branches that were taught in the public school. Bright and intelligent, he appreciated the value of knowledge and embraced with avidity the opportunity to secure it. He remained at home working for the family until he was twenty years old, then went out working by the month, which he continued for a period of four years. He was provident and saving, and when the accumulations from his earnings were sufficient to justify it, he decided to establish a home of his own. Accordingly, as the first and most necessary step in this direction, on December 12, 1878, he was united in marriage to Miss Susan Miller, a young lady of good education and many desirable attainments. Her father was Christian Miller, now deceased, and she was born in Canton township, Stark county. To them seven children were born, viz: Martha, Joseph, Calvin, Orlando, Etta, Daniel and Mary. Each has received a good education and all give promise of making useful, enterprising citizens.

Immediately after their marriage John Conrad and wife settled on a farm in Canton township, where they remained for four years, steadily adding to their possessions. In 1882 he purchased their present farm of one hundred and twenty-nine acres, in Plain township, and on this the family has since resided, adding to its value year by year, by substantial improvements, and realizing a very satisfactory income from the products of the place. The subject has conducted general farming and stock raising and has given considerable attention to fruit.

Politically Mr. Conrad is a Democrat, and as such enjoys the confidence and respect not only of his own party but even of his political opponents. He was twice elected to the office of township trustee, and made a good record. He has always been interested in education and has served for seventeen years as a member of the school board. He is scrupulously conscientious and sincerely religious, and is a member of the Mennonite church and a firm believer in its teachings. His life is most exemplary and has had its influence not only upon the members of his own immediate family, but to a great extent upon other people in the community as well.

CLAYTON HOLL was born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, April 4, 1849. His father was Jacob Holl, who was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, but who in early life emigrated to Stark county, Ohio, and settled in Plain township, where he met Miss Rachel Sell, whom he later married, and who eventually became the mother of the subject. They located, after their marriage, on a farm in Plain township, prospered in material wealth and became the parents of three children, viz: Clayton, Alice and Myron L., of whom Alice died August 13, 1878, at the age of twenty-seven years, and Myron L. is a resident of New Berlin. The father died at the family home at the age of sixty-two years, and the mother still survives.

The early years of Clayton Holl were spent upon his father's farm, where he acquired a thorough knowledge of agriculture. Attendance upon the district school supplied him with a fair education in the branches there taught, and a fondness, which he has since cultivated, for literature has made him a well informed man. In his school days he was popular with the other pupils, and now, being naturally of a kind, genial disposition, he readily wins favor with those with whom he associates. Of his school days his teachers always spoke in the highest terms of praise of his conduct. While, in common with the other boys, he indulged in many a prank, there was nothing malicious in his actions, and when the time of reckoning came he was always manly, frank and honest in acknowledging the wrong. An old teacher once said, "The conduct of one such boy in a school room is worth more to a teacher in subduing the refractory than hundreds of lessons in discipline."

In Jackson township, Stark county, October 14, 1874, Clayton Holl was united in marriage to Miss Samantha Hess, a daughter of David and Lydia (Wirebaugh) Hess, old residents of Stark county. Mrs. Holl is a lady of splendid mental qualifications and fair education, and is a mother of whom any family might well be proud. Her children have been brought up with firmness, tempered with kindness, which has made of them worthy men and women, a credit to themselves, their parents and the community. Mrs. Holl was born in Bethlehem township, Stark county, July 7, 1854, and all the years of her life have been spent in this county. To Mr. and Mrs. Holl eight children have been born, viz: Jennie, Laura, Edgar, Minnetta, Luella, Homer, Elbert and Zelmer, of whom Jennie is the wife of Albert Miller and Laura is the wife of Joel Shutt. Each of the children has received a good education and all are intelligent and refined.

While most of his neighbors and acquaintances have identified themselves with one or the other of the two national political parties, Clayton Holl chooses to be known as a Prohibitionist. In his estimation, all of the issues between the parties dwindle into insignificance as compared with the issues involved in the liquor traffic. The open saloon is no menace to him. In espousing the cause no selfish motive actuated him. He has seen the ruin produced by the excessive use of intoxicants in some of the brightest minds and best hearts of his friends and acquaintances, and it imbued him with a desire to aid in cutting short the work of destruction by the power of the ballot.

He deplores the present political weakness of his party, but notes carefully a marked change in public sentiment on this question and has the utmost confidence in the ultimate triumph of prohibition principles. He takes a deep interest in all public affairs and may always be found firm in the advocacy of everything designed for public good. He owns a nice, well improved farm, cultivated in the highest type of the art and both comfort and prosperity have long abode in his household.

WILLIAM J. MATHIE was born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, January 31, 1841. His father was Peter Mathie, a native of France who emigrated to America in his youth and at an early date located in Plain township, Stark county, where he met and married Miss Susan Duck, a native of the latter county. They first settled in Plain township, where they remained a number of years, but later moved to Lawrence township, reared a family of nine children and resided there until their deaths. He died at the age of forty-six, while she survived him many years, dying at the age of sixty years.

The oldest child of the family was William J. Mathie, and in his native township, Plain, the first twelve years of his life were spent. The family then moved to Lawrence township, and there upon a farm he grew to manhood. He received a fair common school education, having mastered all the branches taught in the common schools of his time, and when entering manhood was well equipped to act his part in life. On October 8, 1865, he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza E. Hershey, who was born in Stark county, July 18, 1840, the daughter of John and Sabina Hershey, respected residents of Stark county. The young couple settled in Lawrence township, where they continued to reside nine years. In 1873 they purchased the fine farm of one hundred and eight acres in Plain township, later buying forty acres more, which they still own and on which they have erected some of the finest farm buildings to be found in the county. In 1862 Mr. Mathie began working with a threshing machine, being employed by William Hartgrove and Jacob Evans until 1894. He then entered into a partnership with his brother, L. D., and they operated together until 1869, when the latter sold his interest to George Stoner, with whom the subject worked until 1876. Mr. Mathie, upon a division of the equipment, took the separator, and joined forces with Hiram Bair, who owned an engine, this arrangement continuing four years. Mr. Mathie then obtained a new outfit and has since successfully followed the business, his total service in this line amounting to about thirty-six years.

To Mr. and Mrs. Mathie eight children have been born, four of whom have died. The others are: Enos, who married Nettie Shaffer; Clara is the wife of Calvin Shoub; Eva is the wife of Curtis Miller; Phoebe is the wife of John Holl, and they are the parents of one child, Velma. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Mathie that are dead are: Olivia, who died when ten years old, Jessie died when seven years of age, Emma died when three years old and Viola died at the age of one year.

Ever since he has been a voter Mr. Mathie has acted with the Democratic party. He is a man who has never sought public position of any kind, but his neighbors and friends have a number of times elected him to local offices. He has been township trustee, supervisor, assessor and school director, and in each instance he discharged the duties of the office to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He was brought up in the faith of the Lutheran church and at one time was quite active in the work of that denomination. The only fraternal organization to which he belongs is New Berlin Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. He is a charter member and treasurer of T. N. P.

A. No. 256, having held the office ever since the organization of the society, in March, 1901. He is a man of kind disposition, good habits and very popular wherever he is known. All who know him admit that the many blessings fortune has bestowed upon him are well deserved.

JOSEPH MILLER, JR., was born in Lake township, Stark county, March 23, 1843, the son of Joseph and Sarah (Zellers) Miller. The father was a native of Adams county, Pennsylvania, while the mother was born in Lake township, this county. To them were born six children, one of whom, a daughter, died in infancy. The others are: David, Benjamin, Franklin, Joseph and Emanuel. At the age of thirty-one the mother died in her native township of Lake, and the father married again, the lady being Esther Snyder, and they have resided in Lake township up to the time of his death, which occurred a few years ago, at the age of eighty-two years.

On his father's farm in Lake township Joseph Miller received his first lessons of usefulness in life. He secured a limited education in the schools of the township and when not so employed there was plenty of work for him to do on the farm. As he grew older he became interested in the manufacture of brick and followed that calling very profitably for about nine years. Through the savings of the first few years of his labor for himself he was enabled to purchase his present little farm, and from its productiveness he has been enabled to ornament it with fine improvements, buildings, fences, etc., with which it is supplied.

October 5, 1873, Joseph Miller was united in marriage to Miss Hannah M. Bechtel, a native of New Berlin, Plain township, who is the daughter of William and Sarah Bechtel. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller one son, Burton, has been born. Occupying one of the most comfortable homes in the county, with plenty of stock and well filled bins and granaries, it is quite apparent that the family of Joseph Miller are enjoying their full measure of prosperity, and that they are deserving of all the good things that have fallen to their lot is never questioned. Mr. Miller has won a competency in his field of labor wholly through his own exertions. In his case the reward of industry has been ample and it has fallen into the lap of one who has carefully husbanded it.

EMANUEL MILLER was born in Lake township, Stark county, Ohio, July 23, 1845. His parents were Joseph and Sarah (Zellers) Miller, the former a native of Adams county, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Lake township, Stark county. Sarah Miller passed her entire life of thirty-one years in her native township. After her death her husband married again, the lady of his choice being Esther Snyder. He lived to be eighty-two years of age before death claimed him. Of his first union there were born six children, viz: Daniel, Benjamin, Franklin, Joseph, Emanuel and one daughter, who died in infancy; and of the second union five children were born,—Mary E., Adam, Arameta, John H. and Peter W.

On the farm owned and occupied by his parents the early life of Emanuel Miller was passed. He attended the district schools and despite the brevity of the terms, the crude methods of instruction and the deficient appliances, he managed to acquire a fair education. Always of a studious, thoughtful temperament, in his brief school days he not only acquired a taste for learning, but also a fondness for books, through the means of which he has since added largely to his general knowledge. When not occupied with his books, the work of the farm demanded his attention. In the early days, before good roads became common, and when railroads were few and far between, building material of the substantial sort was not as plentiful as it is now. The abundance and splendid quality of clay in the vicinity of their home early attracted the attention of the Miller boys. The profitable product was in great demand throughout the country for manufactured brick, and these circumstances were not long in determining Emanuel Miller to engage in the manufacture. Accordingly, a yard was established, the necessary appliances procured and within a short time Mr. Miller and his brother Joseph were deeply interested in the business, they being assisted by their father and brothers. The enterprise prospered and was profitable from the start, and for nine years they continued in this vocation with very satisfactory results, eventually giving it up only to engage in the more congenial pursuit of agriculture.

On May 2, 1875, Emanuel Miller was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Cassler, a native of Plain township and daughter of the late Samuel and Catherine (Cornwell) Cassler. They were the parents of one child, Pearl F., who is the wife of Alfred E. Cashner, of Plain township, and to them has been born one child, Vernon E.

Politically Emanuel Miller is a Democrat, and has always acted with that party, but he has never sought political preferment. By reason of his services in that political organization, however, he was called upon to serve as assessor of New Berlin at one time, and in 1893 was elected president of the village board and for several years he served as a member of the board, and was instrumental in establishing the Mt. Pleasant school district No. 11, Lake township, and having a school building erected therefor. He and his family are members of the Reformed church of Cairo, are zealous workers in its behalf and contribute liberally to its support. He was a member of the building committee having charge of the erection of the Reformed church parsonage at New Berlin and supervised the erection of the Mt. Pleasant school. In all matters in which the public good is concerned, Mr. Miller has always been found a leading spirit, this being especially true of religious, charitable and educational work. All that he does is done solely for the benefit of a worthy cause and not through the hope of any personal reward or benefit. He is a true, consistent, worthy man, whose services are highly appreciated by his fellow citizens.

GEORGE F. KNIGHT.—At this juncture it is a privilege to make note of an important industry in connection with a review of the successful and honorable career of its founder, George F. Knight, who with his son, Charles H., is at the head of the well-established concern known as the Knight Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of sawmill, well-drilling and prospecting machinery. The well equipped plant of this company is located at 1718 South Market street, where the enterprise had its inception in the year 1892. Mr. Knight came to Canton in 1889 and became a stockholder in the Canton Saw Company, with which he continued to be thus identified until withdrawing his interests to found the present thriving enterprise of which he is the head. Mr. Knight was born on a farm in Wayne county, Ohio, on the 4th of July, 1848, being of the third generation of the family in the Buckeye state. The Knights are of English extraction and were early settled in the state of Pennsylvania, whence the grandfather of the subject came to Ohio in an early day, settling in Wayne county, where Benoni Knight, the father of the subject of this review, was born and reared, being a carpenter by trade and following this vocation in connection with agricultural pursuits. He died on his farm there when his son George was but four years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Eleanor Firestone, was a representative of a well-known pioneer family of Wayne county, where she passed her entire life, surviving her husband by a number of years and passing away in 1899, at the age of seventy-four years. Her husband, who died in 1852, was thirty-one years of age at the time.

George F. Knight was reared to the age of fifteen years on the homestead farm which was the place of his birth, and his educational privileges were such as were afforded in the district schools. At the age noted he set forth to become self supporting, and from that time forward he has been dependent upon his own resources. His first employment after leaving home was that of hauling coal at the Newman's Creek mine, in the western part of Stark county, his duties in the connection being to transfer the product to the canal for shipment, said watercourse having been at that time the chief means of transportation for all commodities brought into and shipped from this section of the state. At one time during the war of the Rebellion the miners in the district went out on a strike, and Mr. Knight was at the time one of five boys employed in hauling the coal from the mines and they determined that they also ought to secure a raise in wages, though this was not granted, but the operators of the mines after the strike was declared by the five boys, gave to them the desired increase from three to three and one-half dollars per day, making the concession after work had been stopped for a half day only. Knight continued to be employed at the mines for one year, at the expiration of which, in the autumn of 1864, he went to Defiance county, this state, where he identified himself with the sawmilling business, eventually engaging in the same on his own responsibility, and it was through this apparently accidental turning of his attention to this line of enterprise that he laid the foundation of the success which has rewarded his efforts in the later years. He remained in Defiance county until 1889, when he came to Canton, as before noted, and here identified himself with the Canton Saw Company. He secured his definite start on the road to prosperity through the accidental breaking of a saw, having invented and patented a machine for holding the logs on the carriage of the saw-mill, the same being known as the Knight dog, while the same is now very generally used in sawmills in all sections of the United States and is manufactured by the Knight Manufacturing Company. He gained his idea for the invention through the breaking of a saw by reason of the defective mechanism commonly in use at the time for holding the logs on the carriage, and while he considered the damage to his mill a loss and misfortune at the time, it really proved the forerunner of his prosperity in the world of business. The various machinery turned out by the Knight Manufacturing Company is of the highest order of excellence in matter of construction, material and finish, while the company also control valuable patents aside from the important one mentioned, so that there is a ready market demand for the various products of the establishment.

While he is essentially and primarily a business man and one whose days have been filled with persistent toil and endeavor from his boyhood up, Mr. Knight is ever loyal to the duties of citizenship and takes a lively interest in all that conserves the material prosperity and civic advancement of the city and county of his home. In politics he holds an independent position, giving his support to such men and measures as meet the approval of his judgment and not being dominated by a partisan spirit. He was formerly a member of the Disciples' church, but holds no regular church affiliation at the present time. Fraternally he is a member of Hicksville Lodge No. 478, Free and Accepted Masons. He is a man of marked business acumen and administrative ability, while he has at all times so ordered his course as to merit and receive the unqualified confidence and regard of those with whom he comes in contact in the varied relations of life.

On the 3d of December, 1868, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Knight to Miss Margaret Price, who was born June 1, 1851, in Defiance county, Ohio, where she was reared and educated, her father, John Price, having been engaged in farming in that county until the time of his death. To Mr. and Mrs. Knight have been born two children, Charles H., who is associated with his father in business and of whom individual mention is made on another page of this volume, and Cora B., who at the time of this writing is a student under the tuition of John Orth, a noted teacher of music, in the city of Boston, she being a young lady of gracious personality and many accomplishments and a favorite in the social circles of her home city.

HIRAM BAIR was born July 9, 1839, in Plain township, and that municipality was his home for more than sixty years. His parents were Jacob and Nancy (Rhodes) Bair, natives of Pennsylvania, who were among the old settlers of Ohio. In the early 'thirties they took up their residence in Plain township and remained among its inhabitants, doing their full share toward its development and improvement, up to the time of their deaths. He died when about sixty years of age, while his widow survived him many years, passing to her reward when she had attained the age of eighty-nine years.

On his father's farm the youth of Hiram Bair was passed, his first lessons being those of industry, lessons that were most useful to him during his after life. In his youthful days the educational facilities of Ohio were by no means what they are at present, so that the opportunities of acquiring an education at that time were quite limited. Nevertheless, through a persistence purely characteristic of the man,

Mr. Bair managed to secure a fair common school education, which he later supplemented by wide and judicious reading. Few men on the farm were better informed on any ordinary subject than he was and few were more capable of giving expression to an original thought than he. He was not only a wide reader and student, but a deep and logical thinker as well.

On the 14th day of December, 1869, Mr. Bair was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Cocklin, in the city of Canton, Ohio. She is a native of Lake township, born July 28, 1841, the daughter of Adam and Barbara (Gaerte) Cocklin, natives of Pennsylvania, but early settlers of Stark county. Her father died at the age of fifty years, while the mother lived to be seventy-five years old. They and their family were recognized as among the best and most influential of the early inhabitants of the county. To Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Bair nine children have been born, six of whom lived to maturity and five of them are still living. Those who grew to maturity are, Ervin, Elma, George H., Clara, James and Laura, Clara dying when twenty years of age. The others are intelligent, well educated men and women, each living a useful and prosperous life.

Mr. Bair was a member of the Cairo Reform church, with which Mrs. Bair still affiliates. She is especially interested in the work of that denomination and a liberal contributor to its support. She is a woman of firm purpose, much strength of will, yet kind, patient and generous withal. Possessed of excellent judgment, she has been a valuable assistant not only to her husband and family, but to the unfortunate and suffering who have been lucky enough to come within her sphere of observation. Mr. Bair was also generous and charitable and always abetted the liberal tendencies of his good wife. A happier or more congenial couple it would be difficult to find and of the good work they have accomplished, so silently has it been done, that but a little of it will ever be known, except to the beneficiaries. Politically Mr. Bair was always a Democrat. He passed to his final rest March 25, 1903, and in his death Plain township and the community at large lost one of its most valued and representative citizens.

JOHN H. SHEETS was born in Plain township, Stark county, September 15, 1864, the son of Samuel C. Sheets, a sketch of whose career will be found in another part of this volume, and his mother is Henrietta (Brillhart) Sheets. Both parents are still living, residing in a comfortable home in New Berlin, the father having accumulated a competency and retired from active business pursuits. Two children were born of this union, viz.: Ada, the oldest child, died when seven months old, and John H., the subject. On his father's farm in Plain township John H. Sheets was reared. His education was secured at the common schools, in the graded schools of New Berlin and he devoted one year at the Ohio Normal University, at Ada. Agriculture and stock raising has been his life work and in this pursuit and each branch of it he has been most successful. He breeds Holstein Friesian cattle and numerous handsome animals of this species may always be found on his premises.

On November 20, 1888, John H. Sheets was united in marriage to Miss Minnie A. Moore, who was born in Lake township, Stark county, September 3, 1869, the daughter of Joseph P. and Rebecca (York) Moore, old settlers of Stark county, where they continued to reside, respected and beloved, until the time of their deaths, some years ago. The young couple immediately took up their residence on the Sheets farm, one mile north of New Berlin, where they have continued to reside ever since. Two children have been born to them, Grace

M. and Guy M., who are intelligent, active and alert children and give promise of becoming worthy, useful citizens.

In politics John H. Sheets is a Republican and takes an active part in political affairs, especially in all that relates to local matters. He served quite a length of time as a member of the Republican county central committee, but has never sought or held public office. He is a member of William McKinley Lodge No. 431, Free and Accepted Masons; of Canton Tent No. 28, Knights of the Maccabees; Cornelius Aultman Council No. 161, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Greentown, and of New Berlin Grange No. 1408, Patrons of Husbandry. He and his family are highly respected in the community and possess the confidence and regard of all who know them.

SAMUEL C. SHEETS.—The subject of this sketch, who resides in New Berlin, Stark county, is one who not only has done his duty to the country, the community in which he lived and his family, but has placed himself and his faithful wife in a position where the storms of their latter life may pass unheeded by them. He is a retired farmer, living in quiet comfort in a beautiful, richly furnished home in the village of New Berlin.

Samuel C. Sheets was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, February 10, 1834, the son of John and Mary (Cassler) Sheets, also natives of Lancaster county. In May, 1842, when their son Samuel was eight years of age, they emigrated to Ohio, and settled in Plain township, one mile north of the village of New Berlin. Here John Sheets engaged in agricultural pursuits, farming and stock raising, prosperity crowning his efforts until his death, which occurred some years ago, when in the seventy-eighth year of his age. His wife survived him several years, dying at the age of seventy-nine. They were the parents of five children, viz: Samuel C. is the subject of this sketch; Maria is the wife of John B. Roush, of Canton; Mattie and Leah are both dead, and Emanuel C.

The boyhood of Samuel C. Sheets was passed on the farm of his father in Plain township. He attended the district schools and secured a fair education in all of the branches therein taught. By precept and example, his father instructed him in lessons of thrift, economy and industry, which education he has found most valuable during the course of his long and busy life. In all of the work of the farm he became adept and made it a rule never to employ hired help to perform work that he had the time and ability to accomplish himself. While he worked hard and devoted many hours each day to the performance of his labors, he guarded carefully the strength with which nature had kindly blessed him, and by his regular habits and temperate, frugal life preserved his health.

January 15, 1860, Mr. Sheets was united in marriage to Miss Henrietta Brillhart, a lady of amiable disposition and good judgment, who was inured to habits of industry and economy, a fitting helpmate for a man possessed of as many signal virtues as is the subject of this sketch. She was a native of Stark county, born August 11, 1835, her father being Christian Brillhart, a native of York county, Pennsylvania, where he was a prosperous farmer. On a farm of one hundred and twenty-six acres owned by Mr. Sheets, he and his wife took up their residence and year by year achieved success and added to their material wealth. To them were born two children, Ada and John H., of whom Ada was the older and died in infancy.

In politics Samuel C. Sheets is a Republican, and during each campaign takes an active part in behalf of his party, but has never aspired to political preferment at any time. He was elected and served as trustee of Plain township one term, which was long enough to satisfy him that official positions were by no means to his liking. Being in comfortable circumstances, with ample means to supply every want, he retired from the active duties of the farm in 1887, and erected a large and comfortable home in New Berlin, where he and his family have since resided, enjoying in quiet and comfort the reward of their industry, thrift and frugality. There, surrounded with all the blessings of domestic happiness, he and his faithful wife are whiling away the evening of their well-spent life, proving to all of their numerous friends and acquaintances the truth of the saying that virtue is indeed its own reward.

MISS MARY KING.—Identified for a number of years with the educational interests of Canton, the subject of this sketch has achieved distinction in the line of her chosen calling and won for herself worthy prestige among the successful teachers of the state. Miss King's paternal ancestors were Swiss, her grandfather, Adolph King, having been born and reared in the capital of the little mountain republic which for centuries past played such an important part on the stage of European history. Adolph King was educated in his native city and became a learned and distinguished divine of the German Reformed church, dying in the land of his birth some time in the 'seventies. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Kupfer, was also a native of Berne and spent all her life in Switzerland. She bore her husband two sons and three daughters, one of the former being Ernest King, whose birth occurred in the city of Berne about the year 1839. He enjoyed superior educational advantages and after graduation entered a school of design and became a skillful artisan in all kinds of fine woodwork.

With the expectation of finding a favorable opening for the exercise of his talent in South America, he went to Brazil when a young man and opened a woodworking establishment in the city of St. Paulo. There he met the lady who subsequently became his wife, and after the birth of his daughter, the subject of this review, he left Brazil, on account of the climate, and came to the United States, locating about the year 1867 in Washington, D. C. After working at his trade in that city for a short time he changed his residence to Canton, Ohio, where for a period of twenty years he followed his chosen calling with fair pecuniary results. Subsequently he entered the employ of the Standard Oil Company at Canton, and since that time has served in the capacity of a salesman for that large corporation.

Ernest and Mrs. King are the parents of five children, of whom the subject of this review is the first born; the others are Rose, Sophia, William and Frederick, all still members of the home circle in Canton. Miss Mary King was only two years old when her parents left Brazil; consequently she has but a very dim recollection of the quaint city in which she first saw the light of day. Her sojourn in the city of Washington was also of limited duration and it was in Canton where she spent the years of her childhood and youth, entering as soon as old enough the public schools of this city. Miss King made a creditable record as a student and at the age of eighteen was graduated from the high school, immediately following which she took charge of a country school and taught a very successful term. The next year she secured a position in the city schools and was assigned work in the building on North Cherry street, where her services were highly satisfactory to her superiors and to the pupils under her care. Miss King had charge of various grades of work in different buildings until 1900, in the fall of which year she was appointed principal of the Crystal Park school, a position of great responsibility awarded her in recognition of faithful and efficient service. She continued in that capacity until 1901, when she was transferred to the Clarendon building, of which she has since been principal, and as manager of which she has added greatly to her already well-established reputation as one of the ablest of the city's successful corps of teachers. Miss King is a member of the Stark County Teachers' Association, and avails herself of every opportunity which these and other educational organizations afford to enlarge the area of her professional knowledge. She is keenly alive to the necessity of keeping in touch with the educational thought of the age, spares no pains in broadening and enriching her mind and by coming in contact with the leading educators of the day in national associations, has become familiar with the latest modern methods, the merits or demand which she has practically demonstrated in the work under her charge. As a member of the First Presbyterian church of Canton, Miss King is deeply interested in various lines of religious endeavor, having been a faithful teacher in the Sunday school for ten years, besides taking an active part in the work of the Buckingham mission. She has been an influential factor in moulding the model sentiment of the circle in which she moves and, hand in hand with intellectual instruction, she carries the higher work of character building without which educational training, however efficient and brilliant, fails in the accomplishment of its greatest and noblest purpose.

ADAM SHAFFER is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born in Washington township, on December 7, 1834, being one of thirteen children whose parents were Daniel and Elizabeth (Grace) Shaffer. The Shaffers are an old and highly respected Pennsylvania family, and it was in Schuylkill county, that state, that the subject's father was born in 1802. In 1814 the parents of Daniel Shaffer moved to Stark county and settled in what is now Washington township, the country at that time being on the frontier and but thinly populated. Daniel grew to maturity on the land of his father and on attaining his majority received eighty acres in section 10, which in due time he cleared and reduced to cultivation. Later he increased his real estate by the addition of twenty acres and with the exception of the two years immediately preceding his death he spent his life and acquired a competency on this place. He was a substantial citizen, bore no unimportant part in the material progress of the country and devoted his life exclusively to agricultural pursuits, in which his success was encouraging. Originally a Whig, he afterward became a stanch adherent of the Republican party and as such wielded a potent influence in the public affairs of his township and county, though never an office seeker. In early life he was a Lutheran, but in after years severed his connection with that communion and united with the United Brethren church, to which he remained faithful until called to the spiritual kingdom in the world beyond the river of death.

Daniel Shaffer's first wife, by whom he had two children, was a Miss Snyder and some time after her death he married Miss Elizabeth Grace, who survived him several years. Mary, one of the children of the former union, is still living, being the widow of the late Jacob Harper. The second marriage was blessed with thirteen offspring, of whom the following survive: Adam, of this review; John, Elizabeth, Delilah, Eli, Amanda and Ellen. The father died in 1877, at the age of seventy-four, leaving to his children an honored name and the memory of a well-spent life.

Reverting to the career of Adam Shaffer, the reader will find but little in his early life to attract the searcher after the strange or dramatic. He was reared in the country and while still a mere lad learned by practical experience that the farmer's bread must be earned by honest toil and strenuous endeavor. With the limited advantages which the indifferent public schools of the early days afforded, he managed to acquire a fair knowledge of the fundamental branches, his attendance being confined to three or four months of the winter seasons from about his seventh year until a youth in his 'teens. Reared under the wholesome discipline of the farm, young Adam's early physical development was all that could be desired, nor was he lacking in that sturdy mental growth which early prophesied the well-rounded, resourceful, self-reliant man which he ultimately became. He assisted his father with the varied work of the farm until reaching manhood's estate and in 1857, three years after attaining his majority, took to himself a wife in the person of Miss Catherine Unger, daughter of George and Catherine (Lower) Unger.

After his marriage Mr. Shaffer purchased a farm of forty-three acres in section 10, Washington township, and invested the proceeds in the farm of eighty acres which he has since made his home. As an agriculturist it is needless to speak of the subject except in a general way, as his life since beginning for himself has been quiet, uneventful and in the main successful. In early life he devoted considerable attention to threshing grain and it was while thus engaged that he introduced into this part of the county a motive power for separators. He ran a thresher for about twelve years and did quite a successful business, his engine giving him a decided advantage over the older and slower process of operating machinery by horse power.

Politically Mr. Shaffer has always been a staunch and unswerving Republican, though the honors and emoluments of office have never held any inducements for him. He has ever maintained an abiding interest in the onward march of progress and improvement, contributing of his means and influence for the upholding of the community in material things, nor has he been less conservative when the moral and social well being of his fellow men were concerned. Thrifty and provident, he has reaped abundantly from his toil and now, when the meridian of life has been passed and the afternoon comes on apace, he is blessed with abundant means for his declining years.

Personally, Mr. Shaffer is held in high esteem and it is not too much to claim for him a prominent standing among the worthy and popular citizens of the township in which his life of nearly three score and ten years has been spent.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer has been blessed with three children, the oldest of whom is Elvira, wife of Sylvanus Miller, of Alliance, and they have one son, Lanson A.; Celona, the second daughter, married Anthony Shaffer, of Washington township, and has one child, by the name of Mable, who is now the wife of Clinton Grimes. To Mr. and Mrs. Grimes have been born a son and a daughter, Eldon Dwight and Stella Gay, which brings the subject's family down to the third generation. The youngest of Mr. Shaffer's children is May, now Mrs. Florian Morris, who lives in the city of Alliance, and they have two children, Helen and Hazel.

ALBERT WARREN CLOUD.—Although among the younger medical men in Canton, the subject of this review has already attained no inconsiderable position in his profession and judging the future by the past it is eminently proper to predict for him a long and signally successful career. Dr. Cloud's paternal ancestors were English people and the genealogical history in the United States dates back as far as the year 1776. The progenitors of the American branch of the family settled originally in Virginia, but as that commonwealth increased in population and development, various representatives migrated westward, eventually spreading over several of what are now the middle and western states. Daniel Cloud, the Doctor's grandfather, moved to Illinois in an early day, settling in DeWitt county, where he lived to a very old age, departing this life there in 1882, in his ninety-third year. Among his sons was Albert Daniel Cloud, the Doctor's father, whose birth took place near Cincinnati, Ohio, about the year 1843. He was a farmer all his life, moved to DeWitt county, Illinois, with his parents when quite young and there married Miss Anna Hoffer, a native of Switzerland, whose father, John Hoffer, immigrated to the United States when she was a miss of six years. About the year 1895 the Hoffer family moved to Iowa and settled in Sac City, Sac county, near which place Mr. Hoffer has since been engaged in the breeding and raising of fine blooded horses and other kinds of high grade live stock. Albert D. Cloud was a man of varied intelligence and good social standing, honorable and upright in his dealings and very liberal in his political and religious views. His wife, a lady of excellent character and sterling worth, was a devoted member of the Disciple church and as such did much to promote the cause of religion in the community where she lived. Her children, eight in number, were named as follows: Elizabeth, who married Thomas Wampler, of Clinton, Illinois; Edward, a resident of Sac City, Iowa; John, head professor of physics in the Northern Indiana Normal University at Valparaiso; Nettie, now Mrs. John Hildreth, of Sac county, Iowa; Albert Warren, of this review; Hiram, Clarence and Theodore.

Dr. Albert Cloud was born May 20, 1873, in DeWitt county, Illinois, and until eighteen years old lived with his parents, contributing his full share to the family support. At the proper age he became a pupil in the district schools and from the first manifested a taste for books and a desire for study which enabled him to keep pace with the boys and girls much older than himself, so that in due time, at the age of eighteen, he completed the branches constituting the curriculum. While still a mere lad he determined if possible to become a scholar and make his mark in the world, and with these laudable objects in view he began at an early age to formulate plans for his future course of conduct.

Animated by a desire, first of all, to lay a substantial, intellectual foundation, without which success is but a doubtful acquisition, Mr. Cloud, about 1891, entered the Northern Indiana University and during the ensuing three years applied himself with such diligence to his studies that by 1894 he was able to graduate with an enviable record for scholarship. Subsequently, in 1899, he completed the scientific course, meanwhile devoting the greater part of five years to teaching in the public schools of his native state, a field of endeavor in which he attained a high standard of excellence as a capable and painstaking instructor. Among the schools of which he had charge at different times were the Hull school in DeWitt county, Illinois, the Indiana Point high school in the county of Menard, town of Petersburg, where he was principal for some time, and others, in all of which his work was of a high grade of excellence and eminently satisfactory.

Dr. Cloud entered the Still College of Osteopathy, at Des Moines, Iowa, in which he prosecuted his studies and researches until June, 1901, when he was graduated with a record for efficiency comparing favorably with that of the brightest members of his class. On the 8th day of July following, he opened an office in Canton and it was soon discovered that the thoroughness with which he appropriated medical knowledge while a student was equalled by his ability to apply it in the treatment of diseases. The cases submitted to his charge soon became numerous and he was not long in taking rank among the leading physicians and surgeons of the city, in addition to which his practice took a wide range in the county of Stark. He keeps pace with the advancement in all lines of his profession, but is not entirely controlled by the theories and influence of the others, being a logical reasoner and original investigator and relying largely upon his own judgment, which has been thoroughly disciplined by severe intellectual and professional training. He has a retentive memory and his mental faculties are cast in a capacious mould. Actuated by laudable ambition to excel, he spares no pains to enlarge the area of his professional knowledge, in which he is very materially assisted by the various medical societies with which he holds membership. Although but a limited period in the practice, he has steadily forged toward the front ranks of the city's successful healers and, with a determination to adhere closely to his chosen calling, there is every reason to believe that eventually and at no distant day he will win a conspicuous place among the state's most enterprising and successful medical men.

FRANZ ADRIAN is of pure French extraction in the paternal line, but the family gained its first representative in Germany through a direct ancestor who accompanied the great Napoleon into the German empire and there located. Michael Adrian, the father of the subject, was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, where he was reared and educated, entering the public service in the capacity of gendarme. At the time of the revolution of 1848 he joined the patriot forces and was captured by the government troops and put to death, being shot and thus forfeiting his life to the cause which he had espoused. His wife, whose maiden name was Katrina Martz, was a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, where she passed her entire life, having survived her husband by a number of years. This worthy couple became the parents of ten children, of whom only one is living at the present time, while four of the number emigrated to the United States, including him whose name introduces this article. His brothers Nicholas and Philip were active participants in the war of the Rebellion, in which they rendered valiant service in defense of the Union, and both died in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, as did also their sister Lena, who was the wife of a Mr. Kumpf.

Franz Adrian was born in the city of Mannheim, Germany, on the 21st of June, 1835, and was there reared and educated, attending the excellent schools until he had attained the age of fourteen, in accordance with the laws of the country. He then began an apprenticeship at the trade of baker, but was not satisfied with this vocation and accordingly learned the trade of cigar-making, with which he has since continued to be identified for the greater portion of the time. In accordance with governmental regulations he served for three years in the German army, and was proceeding to the front with his regiment in 1859, at the time of the Franco-Prussian war, but peace was declared while the command was enroute, and he then returned to his home. In his native city, on the 6th of January, 1859, he was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Marquay, who was born in the town of Roxheim, Rhenish Bavaria, in the year 1834, her father John Marquay, having been of pure French extraction, while her mother, whose maiden name was Catharine Graber, was of German lineage. In 1862 Mr. Adrian, in company with his wife and their one daughter, came to America, embarking at Bremen on a sailing vessel and arriving in New York city after a voyage of twenty-eight days' duration. In 1863 he located in the city of

MR. AND MRS. FRANZ ADRIAN.

Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he conducted a cigar manufacturing business until 1875, when he came to Canton and established himself in the same line of enterprise, near the passenger station of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. He thence removed to Mahoning street, erecting the first building for business purposes on that now attractive thoroughfare, while the first pavement on the street was put in by him. In 1886 Mr. Adrian purchased a portion of a tract of eight acres frontage on East Lake street and lying contiguous to Nimishillen park, and here also he laid the first pavement. The front of this tract is now laid out in attractive lots and is well built up with business blocks and good residences. Here he has continued his cigar manufacturing, turning out a fine quality of goods and controlling a satisfactory trade in both the wholesale and retail departments. In politics Mr. Adrian is a staunch Republican, and he and his wife are attendants of the United Brethren church. They are the parents of two children, Katie, who is the widow of Adam Eisenhauer, and who resides in Canton, a memoir of her husband appearing on other pages of this work, and Alexander, who is engaged as foreman in J. H. Eller's steel roofing plant in Canton. Mr. Adrian is a man of strong intellectuality, excellent business capacity and utmost integrity, and he is well known and highly honored in the community in which he has so long made his home.

JOHN G. A. RICHTER was born in the city of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, on the 30th of April, 1862, being a son of Nicholas Richter, who was born in the town of Gersfeld, near the city of Nuremberg, in the province of Bavaria, Germany, the date of his nativity having been November 14, 1825, while the family has for many generations been one of prominence in that section of the empire.

There he was reared and educated and there learned the trade of linen weaving, which he continued to follow until he had attained the age of twenty-six years, when, in 1851, he severed the ties which bound him to home and fatherland, and emigrated to the United States, where he felt better opportunities were afforded for the attaining of independence on the part of a young man dependent upon his own resources in fighting the battle of life. He landed in the city of New York, the vessel on which he took passage having made the trip in the shortest interval known in the annals of trans-Atlantic voyages at that time. From the national metropolis he made his way to the city of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, where he learned the trade of plastering, which he there continued to follow as a vocation until his death, which occurred in the year 1879. In that city, in the year 1857, he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Reutzel, who was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, town of Kefenrod, on the 13th of May, 1834, and there her parents passed their entire lives, while she came to the United States in 1855, being a young lady of about twenty-one years at the time. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 30th of July, 1877, both she and her husband having been devoted members of the Reformed church, in whose faith they reared their seven children, concerning whom we incorporate the following brief record: Henry, who married Miss Emma Probst, died in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, in February, 1889; Kate died when a child of about one year of age; John G. A. subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Kate (2d) died in infancy; Mary is the wife of George Keil, of Glenfield, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania; Sophia is the wife of Walter Schofield, of Canton, Stark county, Ohio; and Nicholas died in infancy.

John G. A. Richter remained in his native city of Allegheny until he had attained the age of nineteen years, while he pursued his studies in the public schools until eleven years of age, from which time he has been largely dependent upon his own resources. At the age noted he secured employment in a glass factory, where he received in compensation for his services two dollars and twenty-five cents a week. At the age of fourteen he began working at the baker's trade, to which he devoted his attention for two years, at the expiration of which he entered upon an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade, serving the customary three years and becoming a skilled artisan in the line. For three years thereafter he was employed at his trade in the Duquesne Wagon Works, in his native city, and on the 2d of July, 1881, a day rendered memorable as that upon which President Garfield fell a victim to the assassin's bullet, he arrived in the city of Canton, which has ever since been his home. Here he secured employment in the blacksmith shop of Elbel & Company, where he remained until August, 1896, when his health became so impaired as to necessitate the abandonment of this arduous type of work. About this time he was appointed to the office of assistant state secretary of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, under John A. Bliss, who he succeeded as state secretary in September, 1900, since which time he has remained incumbent of the office, whose affairs he had administered with masterly ability and discrimination, gaining the unqualified endorsement of the members of the order in Ohio and becoming a prominent figure in the fraternity at large. Mr. Richter was the organizer of the first council of the order in the city of Canton, on the 14th of January, 1888, the same being known as Washington Council No. 12, and in 1891 he was elected state counselor of the order in Ohio, giving a very successful administration. In 1894, at the meeting of the national council, in Asheville, North Carolina, Mr. Richter was elected national councilor, and upon his return to Canton the local members of the fraternity tendered him a reception and banquet at the Tabernacle, while he has ever been one of the most popular and honored representatives of this beneficent organization in the state, where he is well known in the circles of the order. He has been deeply interested in its work and has served on important committees in the national body. Mr. Richter has also advanced through the major portion of the degrees of York-rite Masonry, being affiliated with William McKinley Lodge No. 431, Free and Accepted Masons; Canton Chapter No. 84, Royal Arch Masons; and Canton Council No. 35, Royal and Select Masters, while he is also identified with Lillie Lodge No. 362, Knights of Pythias, and with Molly Pitcher Council No. 10, Daughters of America.

In politics Mr. Richter gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and on its ticket he was candidate for mayor of Canton in 1897, but was defeated through normal political exigencies, his opponent being James A. Rice, who was elected as his own successor. He and his wife are consistent and valued members of Trinity Reformed church, in whose work they take an active and helpful interest.

In the city of Canton, on the 26th of June, 1895, Mr. Richter was united in marriage to Miss Ella R. Weaver, who was born in this city, being a daughter of Lewis and Ellen (Keim) Weaver, the former of whom is now deceased, his widow still retaining her home in Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Richter have had four children, namely: Henry Clay; Anthony Wayne (who died in infancy), Grace Aleda, and Nathan Hale. Since January, 1895, Mr. Richter has resided at 415 Feather street and the pleasant family home is a center of gracious hospitality.

JOSEPH A. VOLZER is a native of Canton, which has been his home throughout life, while he is a son of Emanuel G. and Balbena (Schmidt) Volzer, the former of whom is the subject of a special memoir appearing elsewhere in this volume, while the latter still conducts the business established by her honored husband, both having ever commanded the unqualified esteem of the community. Joseph A. Volzer, who conducts a successful grocery business at 1511 South Market street and who is the owner of other valuable properties in the city, was born in the old family homestead at 78 Hensel street, Canton, on the 25th of July, 1870. He attended the parochial school of St. Peter's church until he had attained the age of fourteen years, when he became a student in the Canton Business College, where he completed a thorough commercial course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1887. He then became a clerk in his father's grocery store, on Charles street, continuing to be thus identified with the same until 1894 and having gained an excellent knowledge of the business in all its details. In the year mentioned he took a lease of his present place of business, his record having been such that he commanded good credit, though his financial resources were very limited. In November of the year mentioned he leased the store for one year, the same having remained closed for two months prior to that time, so that he faced the problem of practically building up a new business. In 1895 there came to him the opportunity to purchase the property, and he availed himself of the same and here he has built up a large and representative business in the line, having made many improvements on his store, augmenting its facilities and adding the finest lines of staple and fancy groceries, table delicacies, etc., and catering to a discriminating and appreciative patronage.

From his early youth Mr. Volzer has taken a deep interest in the Catholic church, of which he became a communicant at the age of twelve years, and he was prominently interested and concerned in the promotion of the building of St. Mary's church, having served on the parish building committee and as a member of the church council. He was secretary to Father Clement C. Treiber, now in charge of St. Joseph's church, in this city, and is acting in the same capacity for Father G. C. Schoenemann, who is installed as priest in charge of St. Mary's.

In politics Mr. Volzer is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and he is progressive and public-spirited in his attitude and is esteemed in local business circles. He served for one year as vice-president of the Grocers' Association of Canton, and his energy and application and correct business methods having gained to him the esteem and confidence of the business circles of the city. He began his individual operations with but little capitalistic reinforcement, and his courage and self-reliance were early shown in his effecting the purchase of his store and residence property, the house being in the rear of the store, and by good management he cleared himself from all indebtedness on this property within two years after its purchase. Since that time he has purchased numerous other pieces of real estate, and his investments have shown excellent judgment. He is the owner of a building utilized for business purposes on Garfield avenue, of several residence properties on South Market street, two on South Cleveland avenue and one on Stark avenue.

On the 24th of November, 1892, Mr. Volzer was united in marriage to Miss Clara S. Lung, of Massillon, her father, Andrew Lung, being a retired farmer of that city, where he died when ninety years of age, while his wife, whose maiden name was Catherine France, passed away at the age of sixty-five years. Mr. and Mrs. Volzer have an interesting family of five children, J. Melville, Esther M., Donald H., Eugene and Elmer.

GEORGE L. SICKAFOOSE.—The name Sickafoose is of German origin and it was from the fatherland that the remote ancestors of the subject came in an early day and settled in Pennsylvania. George Sickafoose, grandfather of George L., was born and reared in Westmoreland county, that state, and in about the year 1812, with his wife and older children, moved to Stark county, Ohio, entering a quarter section of land in what is now Sandy township. His wife before her marriage was a Miss Wagner; she was well fitted for pioneer life, full of determination and as skillful in handling the old fashioned flint-lock rifle as were her husband and sons. She was a sure shot, and in the early days when game was plentiful many wild animals and birds fell before her trusty aim. George Sickafoose entered the service of his country at the breaking out of the war of 1812 and took part in the campaign against the British and Indians on the Maumee river, in which, with other expeditions, he signalized himself by many acts of bravery and daring. When he came to Stark county the country was a wilderness and his experiences were similar to those encountered by all early settlers on the frontier. A rude round-log cabin of diminutive size afforded his family a place of shelter for several years, but later a comfortable hewed-log dwelling was erected in its stead. The latter house was subsequently weatherboarded and within its walls Mr. Sickafoose spent the remainder of his days, dying some time in the 'fifties, his widow surviving him several years. George Sickafoose reared a family of ten children, the oldest of whom was Christina, who married George Howenstein and departed this life some years ago in Pike township. Samuel, the second in order of birth, was reared to manhood in Stark county, married a Miss Pool and died in Whitley county, Indiana. George was for many years a well-known resident of Stark, but later moved to Freeport, Illinois, where his death afterwards occurred. He was twice married, the first time to a Miss Voglesong and subsequently, in Illinois, to Miss Jones, who bore him five children. Physically George Sickafoose was a man of heroic mould, a giant in stature and strength, in both of which respects he exceeded any other man of his day in the county of Stark. He excelled in all athletic feats and, although of a mild and peaceable disposition, no one cared to incur his anger. On one occasion he was attacked by a couple of bullies of whom the neighborhood stood in fear, but, seizing one with each hand, he brought their heads together with such terrific force as to render them insensible before they had time fully to realize what had happened. He followed mechanical pursuits in Canton previous to his removal to Illinois and is remembered as a skillful workman and a most worthy citizen. Michael, the fourth of the family, moved to Whitley county many years ago and died there in 1894. John, the father of the subject, was the next in order of succession, and after him came Andrew, who married a Miss McDaniel and departed this life in the state of Indiana. Benjamin, a farmer of Stark county, married Lavina Reed and finished his earthly course on the old family homestead in Sandy township. Isaac, also an agriculturist, married Mary A. Reed and died on his farm in the township of Pike. Mary Ann, wife of Barton Blythe, spent all of her life in the county of Stark, dying in Waynesburg. Margaret, the youngest of the family, married James Robertson, her son being the present mayor of Canton.

John Sickafoose, father of George L., was born on the home place January 10, 1819. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, obtained a limited knowledge of the elementary branches of learning in the subscription schools and when a young man developed great efficiency as a mechanic, having been equally skilled as a carpenter, blacksmith and cabinetmaker. In 1849 he was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Kimmel, daughter of David and Susan (Welker) Kimmel, both parents natives of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania. David Kimmel and his brother-in-law, Henry Welker, were among the pioneer settlers of Stark county, they locating in the township of Sandy about the same time the Sickafoose family moved to this part of the state. Mrs. Nancy Sickafoose was born in Sandy township in the year 1823 and up to her marriage knew no other place of residence. During the four years following his marriage John Sickafoose lived in Seneca county, this state, but at the expiration of that time returned to Stark to take charge of his father-in-law's farm, which he subsequently purchased. He spent the remainder of his life on the old Kimmel homestead, dying in 1895, his wife following him to the grave four years later. Seven children were born to John and Nancy Sickafoose, namely: Christopher C., a resident of Pike township; Isaac N., also a resident of Pike; Josephine, wife of Renne Hert, of Canton township; Charlotte, the wife of John Howenstein, of this county; Lydia, now Mrs. Isaac Caspar, lives in the city of Canton; Julius C., a farmer plying his vocation in Sandy township, and George L., whose name introduces this sketch.

George L. Sickafoose was born on the old Kimmel farmstead, Sandy township, Stark county, February 17, 1863. He acquired his preliminary education in the common schools, which he attended at intervals until his twentieth year and then entered the normal school at Sparta where he obtained a knowledge of the higher branches of learning. Later he taught and attended school alternately for several years, meantime becoming a student of the normal university at Ada, in which institution he made rapid progress in his literary studies, being especially proficient in mathematics. Later he completed a course of civil engineering in that school and in 1891 entered upon the practical duties of his profession and with little exception has followed the same with success and financial profit ever since. Mr. Sickafoose served as deputy under J. S. Hoover, county surveyor, and at the expiration of Mr. Hoover's term in 1901, was elected to the office on the Republican ticket, entering upon the discharge of his duties in September of the following year. Since becoming county surveyor he has made his home in Canton, but for several years prior to that time he lived in the city during the summer seasons, spending the winters at home while engaged in school work.

Mr. Sickafoose is a very competent civil engineer and has been intrusted with a great deal of important work in the line of his profession outside of his duties as official surveyor of the county. His aim has always been to excel in whatever he undertakes, and his record, officially and otherwise, shows that he has succeeded in this laudable ambition as his labors have been eminently satisfactory to all concerned and highly creditable to himself. Public spirited and progressive, he has taken a very active interest in the prosperity of his county and today occupies no small place in the public gaze. Ever since attaining his majority he has acted in harmony with the Republican party and at this time he is recognized as one of its strong local supporters, devoting much of his time in disseminating the political principles which have done so much to foster the nation's industrial growth and make permanent its free institutions. He has also been a potential factor in the city's social life, being popular with the people irrespective of political creed and as a neighbor and citizen, no one is held in higher personal esteem. On the 6th day of June, 1900, Miss Myrtle Sponhauser, daughter of Joseph Sponhauser, of Pike township, this county, became the wife of Mr. Sickafoose, and their marriage has been blessed with one child, a son by the name of George Russell. Fraternally Mr. Sickafoose holds membership with the Order of United American Mechanics, and religiously belongs to the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton, with which body his wife is also identified.

MOSES A. BACHTEL.—The specific and distinctive province of this publication is to enter record concerning those who have been the founders and builders of Stark county, and in the connection it becomes imperative that more than casual mention be made of the sterling family of which Moses A. Bachtel was a worthy representative. He attained the venerable age of more than four score years, and was one of the honored pioneers of Stark county, of which he was a native son. With great care and discrimination Mr. Bachtel compiled, in 1898, a genealogical record of his family, and, with slight metaphor and occasional omission of data not specifically germane to this work, we shall reproduce his able epitome of the family history in this volume, believing that the record will be under such conditions the more highly appreciated by present generations of the family and also by those who later come forward onto the stage of life.

My grandfather, John Jacob Bachtel, was born March 6, 1750, and his wife, Catharine (Letch) Bachtel, was born April 15, 1755, while their marriage was solemnized on the 16th of March, 1773. As nearly as can be ascertained, they lived for some time in Washington county, Maryland, and from that locality they are supposed to have removed to either Bedford or Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, where they must have lived for a long term of years, since a period of forty years intervened between the time of their marriage and their emigration to Ohio, in 1813, their youngest son having been fifteen years of age at the time of this removal. In the spring of 1813 John J. and Catharine Bachtel, with their son John and his family, their sons Daniel, Thomas and David, and their daughter Anna Mary, all single, came from Pennsylvania to Stark county, Ohio, and here Grandfather Bachtel purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Pike township, one and one-half miles south of the north line of the township. His son John purchased one hundred and sixty acres adjoining the south line of the same township and a short distance northwest of the present town of Sandyville, and there he passed the balance of his life. Grandfather Bachtel and his three unmarried sons began the work of literally hewing out a farm in the midst of the virgin forest, their first work being to make a clearing and to there erect their primitive log cabin home. After this came the task of grappling with the forest and making it give place to cultivated fields. Those of the present generation can have but slight comprehension of the labor thus involved or the deprivations and disadvantages to be contended with by these sturdy pioneers who constituted the advance guard of civilization in the middle west. In addition to clearing the land there was the even more weighty responsibility of providing clothing for the family, for, be it remembered, all apparel had to be manufactured by hand. It was necessary to raise the flax and then go through the various manœuvres requisite to make it ready for spinning, weaving, bleaching, etc., before it was in shape to be made into the honest homespun garments, and the noble and self-abnegating pioneer women had the greater portion of this work to do, in addition to the other and manifold duties devolving upon them, while it can not be doubted that such constant occupation did much to render the solitary and monotonous life in the wilderness more endurable. Our modern women would faint in the attempt of such responsibilities. Then turn to the manufacturing of woolen goods. The first requisite was to secure a few sheep, and to keep the same was no easy task in the new country, infested with wolves and other wild animals, having a distinct fondness for good mutton. Then followed the operations of shearing, picking the wool, sending it to the carding machine, then spinning, weaving, fulling and making it into clothing—all being done by hand. The reader may well stop to think that at that period in the history of this section one could not buy a ready-made shoe, hat or any article of apparel, all such articles being made to order, while the person was compelled to supply his own material.

John Jacob Bachtel lived less than two years after he came to Ohio, and he was buried in the old cemetery between Tenth and South streets, west of McKinley avenue, in what is now the city of Canton. He was between sixty-five and sixty-six years of age. It is supposed he was a member of the Lutheran church. He was certainly a very industrious, hard-working man, having to provide for a family of thirteen children in the time and under the conditions in which he lived. After the death of the grandfather my father, Daniel Bachtel, bought out the interests of the other heirs in the old farm and my grandmother lived in the same yard, but in her own house, with her daughter Mary, and here she remained until the first part of April, 1836. Concerning her later life further data will be entered hereafter. Of the children of John Jacob and Catherine (Lecht, Bachtel a summarized record is entered as follows:

The eldest son, John, was born February 10, 1774, and his wife, nee Mary Swank, was born March 26, 1770. They were married in 1799 and came to Stark county in the spring of 1813, as has been already noted. Their children were as follows: Catherine, who married a Mr. Fetters and became the mother of three children: Magdalene, who married a Mr. Heminger and died in the West, having had several children; Jacob, who died in Stark county, in the prime of life; John, who died at the age of five years; Mary, who married Samuel Burnhimer, and they had a number of children; they died in Indiana; Barbara married when of mature age and passed the remainder of her life in Stark county; Thomas, who married Sarah Shoe, lived on the old homestead for more than fifty years, and died there, being the last of the original family circle, he and his wife having had five children; Sarah married William Swaney and both are now deceased, being survived by two sons and two daughters.

George Bachtel, the second son of John Jacob and Catharine Bachtel, was born October 14, 1775, was a weaver by trade and followed this as a vocation until coming to Ohio. He married Catharine Pringle and their children were as follows: Mary, who became the wife of William Swift, and died a few years later; Catharine, who married John Paulis, a blacksmith, removed with him finally to Goshen, Indiana, where both died, having reared several children; Elizabeth married Matthias Shepler and they had three children; Susan married a Mr. Burton and died a year later; Barbara became the second wife of her brother-in-law, William Swift, and they had several children; Jane became the wife of James Carns and is now living with a daughter; Magdalene married Zachariah Hayden and became the mother of three children; Sarah married William Saint and died a few years ago, leaving three children; Anna married Seth Brant and died shortly afterward; and Daniel, the only son, died in Canton, where his widow still lives. George Bachtel came to Stark county about 1818 and settled in Pike township, where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives.

Magdalene, daughter of John Jacob and Catharine Bachtel, was born December 3, 1777, and became the wife of Jacob Flora, with whom she came from Pennsylvania to Stark county in an early day, the family settling in Pike township. This worthy couple became the parents of three sons and three daughters, and Mrs. Flora died in 1817 at the age of fifty-nine years.

Jacob Bachtel, the next son of John Jacob, was born

October 9, 1770, and married Mary Magdalene Beard, and they continued to reside in Washington county, Maryland, until their death, having reared a fine family of children. Jacob was eighty-one years of age when he died.

Martin Bachtel, the next in order of birth, was born October 26, 1783, and married a Miss Springer, while a large family of children were born to them, the home being in Washington county, Maryland. Three of the sons became clergymen of the Lutheran church, of which the entire family are said to have been devoted members. Martin and his wife died many years ago, having been worthy representatives of this numerous and honored family.

Barbara Bachtel was born October 5, 1786, and became the wife of John Brothers, and they came to Stark county, Ohio, in 1815, settling on a small farm near Sparta, where they reared their three sons and three daughters. Mr. Brothers later purchased another farm, adjoining Sparta on the southwest, and there his death occurred in 1848, while his widow died in Sparta July 30, 1867, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years.

Frederick Bachtel was born March 21, 1789, and married Elizabeth Wareham, with whom he came to Stark county from Pennsylvania in 1815, and here Mr. Bachtel cleared and improved a good farm, passing away in 1840 at the age of fifty-one years, while his wife died in Kosciusko county, Indiana, in 1871 at the age of seventy-nine years. They had eleven children.

Anna Mary Bachtel was born November 5, 1791, and accompanied her parents on their removal to Stark county in 1813. In 1833 she married Daniel Failor, and they lived thereafter on a small farm in Pike township, where Mrs. Failor died in 1872 at the age of eighty-one years, while her husband died in 1879.

Daniel Bachtel, father of the subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth of the children of John Jacob and Catharine Bachtel, and of him more detailed mention will be made later on in this article.

Thomas Bachtel, the next son, was born on the 17th of February, 1796, and accompanied his parents on their removal to Stark county. He learned the trade of carpenter and continued to follow the same as a vocation during the period of his residence in this county. He married Polly Banker, of Canton, and they became the parents of one daughter. He and his wife finally separated and all trace of both has been lost by the relatives in Stark county.

David Bachtel was born June 13, 1798, and came with his parents to Stark county. In 1823 he married Polly Failor, and he thereafter carried on a small farm, which he reclaimed, while he also transacted a profitable business as a cooper, particularly after the completion of the Ohio canal. He died in this county in 1838 at the age of forty years, while his wife thereafter kept the family together and educated her children, her death occurring in 1870, at which time she was sixty-seven years of age. Of their three sons two are living at the present time, while there are quite a number of their descendants in the state of Kansas.

Having here given a brief account of the family genealogy, we turn more particularly to a consideration of the personal career of the subject and to a record concerning his honored parents and their children. In giving an estimate of the life and labors of his parents we shall again draw upon the article prepared by Mr. Bachtel himself, believing this to be the most satisfactory course to pursue, even though there be an elimination of some words of commendation and appreciation.

Daniel Bachtel, son of John Jacob and Catharine (Letch) Bachtel, was born on the 28th of August, 1793, either in Maryland or Pennsylvania. He came with his parents to Ohio in the spring of 1813 and settled in Pike township. Here he was associated with his father and two brothers in erecting the little log cabin home in the midst of the forest wilds. Grandfather Bachtel died within less than two years after they came to Stark county, and this left the family's affairs in rather unfavorable condition. Daniel was compelled to purchase the farm and provide for the maintenance of his mother and sister. These circumstances induced him to seek a partner, so that on the 16th of May, 1816, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Sherman, who was born in Greencastle, Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on the 27th of September, 1798, and who came with her parents to Stark county about the same time as did the Bachtel family. Mr. and Mrs. Bachtel began housekeeping on the old homestead where the former first settled on coming to the county, and here all save one of their ten children were born. They continued to reside on this farm for a period of twenty years—until April, 1836—when they removed to Green township, then one in the northern tier of townships in this county, and later taken into Summit county. Here they continued to reside until the spring of 1842, their youngest child, Susan A., having been there born, on the 9th of November, 1839. Subsequently to 1842 the family removed from place to place until November, 1854, when Daniel Bachtel, with other members of the family, went to Huntington county, Indiana, and settled two miles west of the village of Roanoke, and there they passed the remainder of their lives. Daniel Bachtel there died on the 1st of April, 1860, at the age of sixty-six years, seven months and three days, and his remains were laid to rest in the Wesley Chapel cemetery. His widow survived until May 30, 1877, and her remains rest beside those of her husband, her age at the time of death having been seventy-three years. If ever there were two persons whose lives were filled with ceaseless toil and endeavor, they were such two. The father cleared up a farm and did a large amount of teaming to Pittsburg and Cleveland, while he also did his full share of log rolling, raising log houses and barns, mowing hay with a scythe and reaping grain with a sickle. My mother was an extraordinary woman for the opportunities which came to her portion. There was nothing save hard labor before her from the time I first remember her until she could labor no more, and upon her shoulders fell the responsibility of preparing clothing for her ten children and also caring for them in the manifold other ways which only a true and noble mother knows. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and died secure and happy in that abiding faith which ever makes for faithfulness. I might say much more about her labors, but the young would doubt whether any woman could endure so much. She took my sister's son at eighteen months of age and reared him to the age of twenty-two. He enlisted as a soldier in the Civil war and shortly after entering the service was severely wounded and was sent back to Madison, Indiana, where he died, with no friend or loved one by his side to soothe him in his last moments. He was one of the heroes whose lives were sacrificed on the altar of their country.

Samuel S. Bachtel, the eldest son of Daniel and Mary A. Bachtel, was born April 27, 1817, in Pike township, this county, and here he lived with his parents until April 1, 1836, when he accompanied the others of the family on their removal to Green township, and thereafter was with his parents on their various removals. When about twenty-two years of age he became afflicted with epileptic attacks, from which he failed to secure relief, though he had medical attention for many years, and he was finally compelled to abandon the work of his trade, that of carpenter. He was a natural genius in mechanical work, and save for his malady would have proved most successful in life. His mind finally became affected and he was thereafter unable to do any work, his death occurring in Huntington county, Indiana, on the 17th of August, 1856, when he was thirty-nine years of age, being a mental and physical wreck. He is buried in the same cemetery as were his parents.

Martha Bachtel, the second child, was born on the old homestead in Pike township on the 17th of April, 1810, and she remained at the parental home until November, 1839, when she was united in marriage to Samuel Failor, with whom she took up her residence on the old Failor homestead, in the same township. They became the parents of two sons—Harrison and Charles. Her life was one of toil and self-abnegation, and she finally found rest from her labors, her death occurring February 28, 1845, at the age of twenty-five years. Her son Harrison, who was about four years of age at the time of her death, was taken into the home of his uncle, Daniel Failor, by whom he was reared and whose property he eventually inherited. He married Melissa Hiple, and they became the parents of two sons and two daughters. Harrison was later married a second time and is now dead. The younger son, Charles Failor, was taken into the home of his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Mary A. Bachtel, as before noted, and he died as the result of wounds received in the war of the Rebellion.

Moses A. Bachtel, subject of this review, was the next child born to Daniel and Mary A. Bachtel, and an individual review of his career will be given in appending paragraphs.

Aaron Bachtel, third son of Daniel and Mary A. Bachtel, was born in Pike township February 21, 1824, and he remained at home until about twenty years of age. As a young man he married Miss Catharine Loop, and they became the parents of four sons and four daughters. Henry, Hiram and William are deceased, and John resides in Fort Wayne, Indiana. Anna Mary is deceased and the other three daughters are residents of Indiana. Aaron Bachtel was a carpenter by trade and was a sincere and hard-working man. He removed with his family to Huntington county, Indiana, in 1852, and thence went forth as a soldier in the Union army, coming back with broken health and he died May 31, 1873, at the age of forty-nine years, his wife surviving him by about two years. Both were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

John Henry Bachtel was born November 25, 1830, in Pike township, and he accompanied his parents on their removal to Huntington county, Indiana, where he remained until the summer of 1856, when he returned to his native county and entered the employ of C. Aultman & Company, of Canton. In 1861 he was married to Miss Elisabeth B. Welch. Their eldest son is now cashier of the Canton State Bank and is individually mentioned on another page of this work. His sister, Helen, is a stenographic teacher in the public schools of Canton. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Bachtel still reside in this city.

Jacob A. Bachtel was born in Pike township January 28, 1826, was afflicted with great bodily infirmities throughout his life, and he was released from his sufferings on the 25th of June, 1844, being eighteen years of age at the time of his death.

Catherine Bachtel was born July 29, 1828, in Pike township and she remained at the parental home until her marriage to David Secrist, to whom she bore two sons and two daughters. David Secrist died in 1857 and his widow subsequently became the wife of John Kuhn, but she is now dead.

Mary A. Bachtel was born September 18, 1833, in Pike township and in 1851 she married Isaac Miller, the issue of this union being ten children. Mr. Miller died in 1886 and his wife passed away on the 28th of June, 1890. Their home was in Wells county, Indiana.

Emmanuel Bachtel, the youngest son of Daniel and Mary A. Bachtel, was born in Pike township February 14, 1836, and he died in Huntington county, Indiana, at the parental home on the 4th of April, 1857, at the untimely age of twenty-one years.

Susan A. Bachtel, the youngest daughter, was born in Green township, Summit county, Ohio, November 9, 1838, and in 1859 she became the wife of Alfred P. Koontz. They have long resided in Roanoke, Huntington county, Indiana, where Mr. Koontz is now engaged in the furniture and undertaking business. They became the parents of five children, all of whom are living except one.

At this juncture we direct attention to the personal career of Moses A. Bachtel, the honored and venerable pioneer citizen of Canton whose name initiates this article. He was born on the old homestead farm, in Pike township, this county, on the 14th of June, 1821, and owing to the exigencies of time and place his early education privileges were necessarily limited. He attended the little log cabin school in a somewhat irregular way during the short winter terms, his services being required even during the winter seasons in threshing wheat by the use of horses, which tramped out the grain on the barn floor. On the first day of April, 1836, when he was about fifteen years of age, the family removed to Green township, in what is now Summit county, and he worked on the farm until he had attained the age of nineteen years, and during the summers of 1840-41 he was employed at the carpenter trade by Peter Buchtel, of Green township, while in the autumn of 1841 he took the contract to build a house in the village of Greentown. On the 29th of March, 1842, Mr. Bachtel left the parental home and went to Greentown, where he secured employment in the shop of W. M. Ball & Company, at a stipend of thirteen dollars a month. He eventually did all kinds of work, from moulding plow-points up to turning, fitting and drilling the various portions of the primitive reaping machines manufactured, while he also acted as fireman and engineer. He continued to work for this firm and its successors, at intervals, until the spring of 1846, when he purchased Daniel Smith's interest in a wagon shop and two lots and a house in Greentown. In 1849 he hired out to Michael Wise to work in his machine shop and manage his interests, receiving one dollar a day in compensation for his diversified services. He in the meanwhile sold his interest in the wagon shop to his partner, Henry Funk, and he continued in the employ of the firm of Wise & Ball, in Greentown, until November, 1851, when the business headquarters were transferred to the town of Canton, where Messrs. Ball and Aultman became associated in the erection and equipping of the Buckeye plant, for the manufacturing of agricultural implements and machinery on a wider scale. He continued in the employ of the company until November, 1854, when he removed with his family to Huntington county, Indiana, and settled on a farm near Roanoke, where he remained until February, 1856, when he returned to Canton and resumed work for Ball, Aultman & Company, and with this concern he continued to be engaged as an able and trusted employe until its business had grown to be one of magnificent scope and importance, severing his connection with the company, which had been reorganized from time to time, until the year 1884. In April of that year he traded property in Canton for a farm of sixty-four acres in Cuyahoga county, where he and his family resided twenty-eight months. Mr. Bachtel thereafter lived for a time in Akron and West Richfield, Ohio, and then in 1893, he returned to Canton and purchased the attractive home at 304 Blaine avenue, where he lived practically retired until his death, May 14, 1903, having through his indefatigable and well-directed efforts acquired a competency for the golden evening of his life. Mr. Bachtel was before his death the oldest living employe of the Aultman Company, having been for more than forty years retained in the capacity of pattern-maker. He returned to Canton in 1893, having been absent from the place for about a decade, and wishing to pass the declining years of his life in his native county, and in the city where he had so long lived and labored and where his friends were in number as his acquaintances.

In politics Mr. Bachtel was originally a Whig, but gave an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party from the time of its organization, ever maintaining a lively interest in the questions and issues of the hour. Mr. Bachtel was a zealous and devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church for more than sixty years, and held various official positions in the same, having been thus honored until the infirmities of advancing age rendered it expedient for him to relegate these duties to younger men. He was at the time of his death a revered patriarch of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal church in his home city.

On the 7th of October, 1847, Mr. Bachtel was united in marriage to Miss Lydia M. Welch, of Marlboro township, this county, where she was born on the 9th of January, 1826, being a daughter of Samuel and Marguerite Welch, one of the first settlers in that section. Of this union were born six children, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: Malissa Jane, who was born August 30, 1848, died on the 2d of April, 1851. Oliver S., who was born October 18, 1849, is a prominent clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church and is now serving his twelfth successive year as presiding elder of the Manchester district in the state of New Hampshire. Lewis M. is engaged in the lumber business in Canton. He was born February 5, 1851. Alonzo C. was born May 5, 1855, and is now a wholesale merchant in Akron, Ohio. Charles H. was born April 12, 1857, and he died in Greenville, Pennsylvania, on the 28th of Deember, 1894. Orlando H. was born November 9, 1858, and resides in Canton, being engaged in the lumber business. The devoted wife and mother was summoned into eternal rest on the 6th of March, 1861, having been a most faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and her remains rest in Westlawn cemetery, this having been the first interment of a mature person in that now beautiful "God's acre." On the 1st of April, 1862, Mr. Bachtel was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Nelson, who was born in Plain township, being a daughter of George and Barbara (Harry) Nelson, honored pioneers of Stark county, whither Mr. Nelson came from a point on the line between Pennsylvania and Maryland. Mrs. Bachtel was born on the 18th of February, 1836, and she bore her husband four children, namely: Mary Ellen, who was born on the 23d of June, 1863, and who is now the wife of Edward Rauch, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Jennie was born January 29, 1866, and still remains at the parental home, as does also Martha May, who was born May 1, 1867; Nelson K., who was born May 28, 1871, died on the 2d of the following September.

ARTHUR U. BORDNER, of Canton, is a descendant of two of the oldest families that came to Stark county in a very early day and for many years were actively identified with the history of the communities in which they settled. His paternal ancestors were Pennsylvanians, the first of the family to come to Stark county being his grandfather, Philip Bordner, who after living here for a number of years, removed to Dekalb county, Indiana, where his death occurred about 1854. David F. Bordner, son of Philip and father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Wayne county, Ohio, and was about sixteen years old when his parents moved to the county of Dekalb, Indiana. He grew to maturity on a farm, and, when a young man, married Miss Susan Younkman, whose antecedents, as already indicated, were among the early comers to this part of the state. The Younkman family is of German origin and its first representative in this country was Mrs. Bordner's grandfather, Jacob Younkman, who left the fatherland many years ago and came to Stark county, Ohio, in about 1809, and settled in Bethlehem township, where he spent the remainder of his life. Among his children was a son by the name of Daniel, who became a successful farmer and leading citizen of Bethlehem township. He married and reared a family and departed this life on the home place in Bethlehem in 1896, at the ripe old age of eighty-two years, leaving a widow, Nancy, who is still living, in her eighty-ninth year. Daniel and Nancy Younkman were the parents of Mrs. David F. Bordner, who with her husband is living on the homestead in Bethlehem township, the family being widely known and greatly respected by the people in that part of the county and elsewhere.

Arthur U. Bordner, son of David F. and Susan Bordner, was born July 12, 1865, in Bethlehem township, Stark county. He was the second of a family of five: Emma, who married John Hiple; subject; Ella married Ezra Albaugh; Frank; Clara, married John Zutavern. The subject spent his early years under the healthful discipline of the farm, attending meanwhile the public schools in which he received his elementary education. Later he pursued the higher branches of learning in select schools and in due time was sufficiently advanced to teach, which profession he followed of winter seasons for several years, devoting the summer months to study in various educational institutions, among which were the school at Sparta and the Ohio Normal University at Ada. Mr. Bordner took a full classical course in the latter institution, completing the same in 1896 and immediately thereafter entered the law department, from which he was graduated one year later. Mr. Bordner was twenty-seven years old when he left home to make his own way in the world and his age and experience enabled him to enter upon his life work with a full appreciation of its responsibilities and with well-grounded assurance of ultimate success. By thorough mental discipline and careful professional training he was well equipped for the law and after his admission to the bar in 1898 it was not long until his legal ability began to be recognized, as the lucrative practice which came to him within a few months abundantly attests. Opening an office in Canton and entering a field made famous by many eminent men in the past and by a formidable array of distinguished legal talent at the time, he freely realized the difficulties in his way and with an energy born of a determination to succeed set himself manfully to work to remove them and to gain if possible recognition as an aspirant for professional honors. From a modest beginning his practice has steadily grown in volume until he now has a lucrative business and his name has appeared in connection with many cases tried in the courts of Stark county since his admission to the bar. He easily ranks with the ablest of the younger and rising lawyers of Canton, being regarded as a safe, reliable counselor and he is thoroughly skilled in the devious arts of practice.

Politically Mr. Bordner is staunchly Democratic and he wields a strong influence for the party in local and state affairs and upon national issues. In matters religious, he subscribes to the creed of the United Brethren church, being a worthy member and liberal supporter of the congregation worshipping in the city of his residence. In the year 1898, Mr. Bordner and Miss Belle Parks, of Bethlehem township, this county, daughter of

James C. and Elizabeth (Evans) Parks, were united in the bonds of wedlock, the marriage being blessed with one child, a son who bears the name of Harold. Mr. and Mrs. Bordner have a pleasant home and are well known in the social circles of Canton.

THEODORE JOSEPH PHILLIPS was born in the family homestead, on Plum street (now North McKinley avenue) in the city of Canton, on the 2d of March, 1859, being a son of Adam Phillips, one of the honored pioneer farmers of the county, to whom individual reference is made on other pages of this work, so that a recapitulation of the family history is not required at this point. Dr. Phillips received his preliminary educational discipline in the parochial school of St. Peter's church, which he attended until he attained the age of twelve years, and he then entered the Canton high school, in which he was a student up to the age of eighteen years, having duly profited by the advantages afforded him. After leaving school he assisted his father in the work of the homestead farm, in Canton township, while he also lent his aid in connection with the operation of the coal bank, stone quarry and lime kiln owned by his father, this quarry and kiln having at one time supplied all the lime and cement used for building purposes in this locality. He remained with his father until he was twenty-three years of age, at which time he secured a position as shipping clerk in the wholesale grocery of B. Dannemiller & Sons, in Canton, and while thus engaged he began the study of dentistry under the direction of Dr. G. R. Ball, now deceased, with whom he remained two years, while he was later matriculated in the Ohio Dental College, at Cincinnati, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1873, coming forth eminently qualified for all portions of the work of his chosen profession. He initiated the active practice of his profession in the village of Minerva, this county, where he remained one year, at the expiration of which he came to Canton, in April, 1884, and opened an office at the corner of Walnut and East Tuscarawas streets, on the second floor of what is now the Globe clothing store, where he remained until April, 1885, when he removed to his present finely equipped offices at 130 East Tuscarawas street, where he has since been established in practice. For the past three years he has had as an assistant his brother Victor A., who has taken two courses of study in the technical line of dental surgery and laboratory work, one term having been passed in the dental department of the Western Reserve College, in the city of Cleveland, while he completed his second course in the Ohio Dental College, in the city of Cincinnati, where he will graduate as a member of the class of 1904.

In so far as state and national issues are involved, Dr. Phillips accords his support to the Democratic party, but in local affairs he maintains an independent attitude. He is a communicant of the Catholic church, as is also his wife, and he originally held membership in St. Peter's church, but transferred to St. John's parish, by reason of the fact that Mrs. Phillips is not familiar with the German language, which is utilized at St. Peter's. The Doctor is a member of the Lake Side Gun Club; the Knights of St. John, of which he was commander for three years; and the Knights of Columbus.

On the 24th of September, 1890, in the city of Cincinnati, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Phillips to Miss Mary Burke, who was born in Louisville, Kentucky, being a daughter of Thomas E. and Rosanna Burke, both of whom were born in Ireland, whence he came to the United States about the year 1842, and she in 1850. They now reside in the city of Cincinnati. To the subject and his wife have been born the following children: Edgar R., born March 18, 1892; Mary Augusta, born February 24, 1897, and Theodore J., Jr., born January 7, 1901.

JOHN S. WALLACE was born on the pioneer homestead in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 19th of March, 1821, being a son of William and Elizabeth (Mall) Wallace, of whose twelve children only four are living at the present time, namely: Rachel, who is the widow of Hiram Burns and who resides in Columbiana county; John S., who is the immediate subject of this review; Sarah A., who is the wife of Samuel Shehan, of Homesworth, Columbiana county; and Elizabeth, who is the wife of George Stroup, of Portage county, this state. William Wallace was a native of the state of New Jersey, where he was born about the year 1780, the original American ancestors having emigrated from England to this country in the colonial epoch, and the family having early been established in the old commonwealth of New Jersey. William Wallace was there reared to maturity and there learned the trade of wheelwright, while in that state was solemnized his marriage to Elizabeth Mall, who was likewise a member of one of the old and honored families of New Jersey. In the year 1812, after the birth of their first child, they emigrated to Ohio and took up their abode in the midst of the forest wilds of Butler township, Columbiana county, where Mr. Wallace effected a lease of a tract of heavily timbered land, on which he erected a primitive log cabin, in which were duly established his Lares and Penates, while he then set to himself the herculean task of reclaiming the land to the uses of cultivation. He remained in that county until 1840, and with the exception of an interval of about four years passed in the vicinity of Salem, that county, maintained his residence during the entire period in Butler township. In the year 1840 he came with his family to Stark county, the subject of this sketch being at the time about nineteen years of age, and in Washington township he purchased twenty acres of land, which he improved and made into a good home, and there he resided until his death, at the age of seventy-seven years, his loved and devoted wife having preceded him into the life eternal by several years, passing away at the age of fifty-six. He was a Democrat in his political adherency and both he and his wife held membership in the Baptist church, in harmony with whose faith they guided and governed their worthy and useful lives, whose annals were plain and simple and yet indicative of true strength and nobility of character, so that they left the priceless heritage ever implied in a good name.

John S. Wallace was reared under the influences and meager advantages of the old pioneer farm in Columbiana county, and such were the exigencies of time and place that he secured very limited educational privileges in his youth, though he waxed strong in mental and physical vigor under the discipline which came to his portion. As opportunity presented, he trudged his way to the little log school house, and ranged himself with other boys of the pioneer farmers on the rude slab benches which served as seats, while the rough floor was made of puncheons and light was secured through windows covered with oiled paper in lieu of glass. To be "graduated" in such an "institution of learning" would seem a most insignificant thing to the average boy and girl of to-day, but from these little schools issued some of the strongest and most brilliant characters our nation has known, for character force is ever centrifugal and it is mastery not advantages that make the man. Upon attaining his legal majority, the family having in the meanwhile come to Stark county, as noted, Mr. Wallace left the parental roof and initiated his independent career. His ambitions led him to no pretentious or impossible efforts and he was ready to make use of such opportunities as presented, and thus we find him employed in clearing land, chopping wood and making rails, while other work of similar order was taken in hand with equal vigor and fidelity. On the 9th of January, 1844, he assumed a new attitude toward the world by taking a course of action which he maintains is one which has been the source of his greatest happiness along the pathway of life and the conservator of such success as has fallen to his share in temporal affairs. On that date he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Towns, who was born in Washington township, whither her father came from Pennsylvania as one of the very earliest settlers in the township, so that the name of John Towns merits a place on the roll of Stark county's noble band of pioneers.

After his marriage Mr. Wallace purchased a tract of twenty acres of wild land one-half mile west of his present home, in Washington township, the same being still covered with its native growth of timber. He made a clearing and erected a little log cabin of the customary pioneer type, and then grappled with the forest primeval, as had his father done in Columbiana county many years previously. He continued to reside on this little farm until 1850, when he sold the property, upon which he had effected no few improvements during the intervening five years, which were filled with arduous and consecutive toil, and he then effected the purchase of forty acres, one-half mile south of the old place, the new farm being partially cleared and being at the time equipped with a log house. Ten years later he bought forty acres lying contiguous on the north, and after erecting a larger and more pretentious dwelling, a frame structure, on this place he removed to the same, while later he purchased another forty acres, thus making his farm one of one hundred and twenty acres, all in one body. Still later he purchased sixty-five acres on the opposite side of the road, and he still retains possession of the two places. With the flight of years he brought his land under most effective cultivation, made good improvements of a permanent order and earnestly and intelligently directed his farming operations, so that his success, won entirely by himself, was cumulative in character, as was manifest in his successive purchases of additional land, by which means he extended the scope of his operations. In 1891 he purchased eighteen and three-fourths acres of land where he now lives, on the New Franklin road, the little place being equipped with a commodious and attractive house and good barn, and he forthwith removed to this new home, leaving his son William in charge of the homestead place. He has since been retired from active labor, save as he employs himself about his fine gardens and lawns, and is enjoying the fruits of his many years of indefatigable toil and endeavor. He has had his full quota of the experiences of pioneer life and has witnessed and aided in the marvelous transitions which have been brought about in this now opulent and favored section of the Buckeye state, and he can look back with satisfaction on the labors and even the deprivations and hardships of the days that have dropped into the abyss of time, for the glamour of reminiscence rests gently over the past and he can well appreciate the manifold blessings which attend him and his loved companion as the golden shadows of their lives begin to lengthen out where the "sunset gates are open wide, far out in the crimson west." He and his wife are devoted members of the United Brethren church, with which they have been identified for many years, while he has been a staunch supporter of the Democratic party and was an uncompromising abolitionist during the crucial epoch leading up to the war of the Rebellion. He and his wife are today loved and revered as venerable pioneers, and the esteem and good will of the entire community is theirs. In a reminiscent way Mr. Wallace recalls the fact that the first pair of boots which he ever had became his prized treasure when he was twenty-one years of age, the same having been purchased with money which he had earned himself, while he also recalls the time when three days' work were required to earn the price of a bushel of wheat, while muslin sold for fifty cents per yard.

In conclusion we enter brief record concerning the eight children who have blessed the union of this honored couple: Hiram B. is a resident of Freeburg, Washington township, where he is engaged in farming; Lydia A. is the wife of Amos Byers, a successful farmer of this township; William has charge of the parental homestead, as previously noted; Albert and Alva are twins, and both are residents of the city of Alliance, this county, where they are engaged in mercantile business and a buggy shop, respectively; Ner is engaged in farming in Columbiana county; Mary Jane is the widow of Jackson Unkerfare, and resides in Washington township; Elizabeth is the wife of Frank Berea, who is engaged in the Pennsylvania freight house in the city of Canton; Elizabeth, wife of George Stroup, of Atwater, Ohio, and a farmer.

ADAM J. MERLEY.—One of the important industrial enterprises of Stark county is that conducted by the National Fire Proofing Company, at Osuaburg, and of the same the subject of this review holds the responsible position of superintendent, while he is known as one of the able and progressive young business men of his native county and as one thoroughly skilled in the management of the enterprise which is thus placed in his charge.

Adam J. Merley was born in the village of Louisville, Stark county, Ohio, on the 9th of April, 1874, and was there reared to the age-of twelve years, having received his early educational discipline in its public schools, and thereafter, the family removing to the city of Canton, he here continued his studies in the public schools until he had attained the age of fourteen years, when he assumed the practical responsibilities of life by identifying himself with the line of industry with which he has been actively concerned. He has been for fifteen years engaged in the operation of clay industries, being employed in various capacities and thus gaining an intimate and comprehensive knowledge of the details of the business. In 1899 he was called to his present position as superintendent of the plant of the National Fire Proofing Company at Osnaburg, this being one of the most extensive enterprises of the sort in the state, and he has since continued to give faithful and effective service in this office, while through his discriminating efforts the business of the company has been materially increased in scope and importance, having increased the business to more than treble the capacity of the plant in 1899.

In politics Mr. Merley has given a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party from the time of attaining his legal majority, having cast his first presidential vote in support of William J. Bryan, and he takes an active and intelligent interest in the party affairs. He was reared in the faith of the Catholic church, of which his parents, Nicholas and Mary Ann Merley, are communicants. They now reside in Canton.

On the 18th of July, 1899, Mr. Merley was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Heilman, daughter of Henry and Caroline Heilman, who are residents of Osnaburg, and the subject and his wife have a pleasant home in the village, where their friends are many.

GEORGE KNOLL.—This now venerable and most respected resident of Washington township, Stark county, Ohio, is a native of Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, and had his nativity August 14, 1828, and of the six children born to his parents he is the only survivor. John and Catherine (Brill) Knoll came from Pennsylvania where John, the father of the gentleman whose name opens this sketch, was reared a blacksmith, a trade which he followed until he became a farmer, which calling he found to be much more profitable and followed until his death, about 1846, in middle life, his widow surviving him about twelve years. In politics John Knoll had been a Whig.

George Knoll was educated in the frontier log school-house of his early youth, and at the death of his father began working out for the neighboring farmers, receiving the first year eight dollars per month as his compensation, the second year nine dollars, and then, for the following eighteen months, ten dollars and fifty cents per month, which he considered to be very good wages.

November 22, 1853, George Knoll married Miss Elizabeth Shearer, in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, and in April, 1854, brought his bride to Stark county, Ohio, and after a stay with a brother-in-law in Maximo until the fall following, he purchased a farm of forty acres, which but recently he sold to his son-in-law, Theodore Scott. Here Mr. Knoll increased the size of his farm to eighty acres, and after selling it purchased another of sixty-five acres, in Washington township, which he later sold to his son, Wesley, but occupied it himself until 1893 or 1894, when he erected his present mansion on a portion he had reserved for that purpose, and in 1902 sold the entire home place with the exception of twenty acres and his new dwelling.

To George and Elizabeth (Shearer) Knoll have been born five children, in the following order: Mary went as a missionary to South America and there passed away; Wesley, of whom a full life record will be found on another page of this volume; G. Lawrence, who resides in Homeworth, Columbiana county, Ohio; Earnest, of this township, and Minnie, wife of Theodore Scott, also of this township.

Mr. and Mrs. Knoll are members of the United Brethren church, in which Mr. Knoll is a class leader, and has filled the various church offices at different times for many years. In politics Mr. Knoll is a Republican and for a long time was a member of the school board, and for several years was township trustee.

George Knoll began life a poor boy, but by industry, frugality and the exercise of strict integrity, has succeeded in placing himself in affluent circumstances and in achieving for himself and family positions in the social circles of Washington township that are justly enviable, as they are such any family might be proud of.

About 1863 Mr. Knoll was drafted into the United States service from Washington township and was assigned to one of the active companies of the Civil war, but before going he met with a foreigner with whom he made arrangements and sent him as a substitute, he going through the war, being shot through the neck, causing him to nearly bleed to death and after several promotions with honors and at the close of the war he returned home and is now residing in the vicinity of Grantown, Ohio.

Mary Knoll, the oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Knoll, was from childhood a very devoted child and young woman, being ever devoted to the church, the bible and her family and for a greater cause, that of humanity. She, after completing her schooling, for a number of years taught in the schools of her vicinity and also took active part in all religious works of her church, and after corresponding with the bishop she finally decided to put into action her life's desire and become a missionary. She was duly appointed and bade farewell to her parents and friends, never to see them again, and took up this grand work in the South American republics, where she worked devotedly, defying the terrible diseases of that climate for about two years, but the Great Creator finally took her to her great reward. She was honored and loved by all. Having made friends with many, she still lives in their thoughts with a reverence unsurpassed. The following excerpts are from the Religious Telescope of June 27, 1888, and bear beautiful reference to Mary Knoll:

During the summer of 1885 a field opened, the flesh yielded, and Mary said: "Lord, here am I, send me." At first her parents thought they could not consent to it, for they feared that delicate nature of Mary's could not endure the strain upon her weak constitution. But they took it to the Lord and He settled it for them, whereupon preparation immediately began for going to South America, the chosen field. The great question of her life is settled; the unhappy days have gone; the struggle is over, and her feelings were thus expressed:

"The great transaction's done;
I am my Lord's, and He is mine."

Think of her trip for a moment. By the aid of Richard Grant, missionary treasurer of the Methodist Episcopal foreign work, she embarks from New York harbor on the American steamer "Acapulpo" for Aspinwall; thence by rail to Panama; thence on the British "Ilo" for Callao, and from there on the Spanish "Maipo" to Coquimbo, after that to Valparaiso, and then four hundred miles overland by railway to Concepcion, Chili, South America, where she arrived in January, 1886.

Before reaching Aspinwall she suffered severely from sea sickness. But she seems to have had the best of care, for she said: "The Lord has been more than a mother to me."

It is quite refreshing to catch a glimmering of the purposes of so pure a spirit and one so self-sacrificing as was hers. From three different letters I quote: "I have no time to look into the future and wonder what will become of me to-morrow." "I want to learn the language (the Spanish) and spend the rest of my working days at least in Chili." "I want to do good school work and do it all with such a loving spirit that Jesus will bless it to the conversion of many souls even after I am gone." From this it will be seen that life which seemed a divination had purposes which were and could only be born from heights supernal.

A year ago she wrote: "I have as yet had no longing for the home I left behind, but sometimes find a strange looking forward for my home beyond the seas. How much of happiness I always promised myself, and now I find it in a far-away, distant land. God tells me so in the strange drawing I have toward you. But 'soon we'll reach the shining river.' O, how happy we shall be when we get home to our Father's house." About the close of the year 1887 she said: "I think much more of heaven than I used to, for it seems nearer to us when our friends are far away." In one of her letters she gives this beautiful and expressive verse:

"I have flung myself recklessly out,
Like a chip on the stream of the Infinite Will;
I pass the rocks with a smile and a shout,
And I just let my God His purpose fulfill."

In a beautiful Protestant cemetery, just without Conception, on the 19th day of February, 1888, was deposited all that was mortal of Mary. Early the morning before Jesus had come and borne her spirit home. Though you cannot visit the grave, or plant a flower, or breathe a prayer, or drop a tear o'er the grave of Mary, yet weep not, for that loving, gentle, Christ-like spirit is at rest and all is well.

JOSEPH OYSTER.—In an analyzation of the character of Joseph Oyster are found the qualities of an upright manhood,—loyalty in citizenship, reliability in business, conscientiousness in the discharge of the duties of life, and inflexibility in integrity,—and these attributes naturally command to him the respect and confidence of all who know him.

Joseph Oyster is a native son of Ohio, having been born on a farm in Mahoning county, not far distant from the city of Alliance, Stark county, on the 13th of January, 1838, and being a son of Samuel and Barbara (Keller) Oyster. To this worthy couple were born eighteen children, and of the number only five are living at the present time, namely: Jacob, who is a resident of Alliance, this county; Cyrus, who likewise resides in that city, as does also Solomon; Joseph, the immediate subject of this review, and Michael, who resides in the village of Louisville, this county. Samuel Oyster was born in Pennsylvania, being of staunch German ancestry, and there he was reared to maturity, learning the trade of blacksmith in his youth. As a young man he came to Ohio and took up a tract of government land in Mahoning county, just east of the city of Alliance, which is located in Stark county, near the line which divides the two counties, and there he erected a log house and also a shop of similiar architectural pretentiousness, and there engaged in the work of his trade, finding a ready demand for his services, as he was a skilled artisan in the line. He continued to be actively engaged in this sturdy occupation until he had attained the age of sixty-three years, leaving the work of the farm largely to the care of his sons. He became the owner of about a thousand acres of land, a portion of this being in the state of Iowa, and he was known as one of the worthy and influential men of this section of Ohio, being honored by all who knew him. He died at the age of sixty-three years, on the old homestead where he located in the pioneer epoch. He devoted much attention to the raising of live stock, and was successful in his efforts, having the able assistance of his sons, who were eleven in number. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Whig party, and his religious faith was that of the Reformed church, of which his wife also was a devoted member, her death occurring about 1838, while he survived her by about eight years. After her death he consummated a second marriage, being united to a Mrs. Horn, no children being born of this union.

Joseph Oyster, the immediate subject of this sketch, was but a boy at the time of his father's death, and he was then taken into the home of his sister, Mrs. Polly Cobbs, where he was reared to the age of seventeen years, having grown up under the sturdy discipline of the farm and received such educational advantages as were afforded by the district schools. At the age noted he entered the employ of his brother Moses, who was engaged in farming near Alliance, and there he remained until he had attained his legal majority, which event he celebrated by taking unto himself a wife, and he then purchased a farm of ninety acres, just east of Alliance, in Mahoning county, and there he continued to reside for about a decade, working assiduously in the improvement and cultivation of his farm and meeting with a due measure of success. At the expiration of this period he disposed of his farm and came to Stark county, where he purchased his present fine farm of one hundred and ninety-three acres, in section 27, Nimishillen township, and here he has made the best of improvements and has developed one of the finest farm properties to be found in this section of the state. A portion of his farm lies within the corporate limits of the village of Louisville, and in the spring of 1901 he erected a residence on this portion of his place and is now living in the village, practically retired from the active labors of life and enjoying that repose and comfort to which he is justly entitled after his years of earnest toil and endeavor. He has attained a reputation as one of the model farmers of this section, and his farm gives every evidence of thrift and prosperity. In his political adherency Mr. Oyster is staunchly arrayed in support of the Republican party and its principles, and he takes a deep and intelligent interest in the issues and questions of the day, being a man of mature judgment and fine intellectual powers. He and his wife are both zealous members of the Reformed church.

On the 17th of June, 1855, Mr. Oyster was united in marriage to Miss Mary A. Aldiver, who was born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of John Aldiver, who came from the old Keystone state to Mahoning county, Ohio, about 1842, and here passed the majority of his life, later moving to Marshall county, Indiana, having been one of the successful and honored farmers of that section. Of the ten children of Mr. and Mrs. Oyster the following is a brief record: Harriet is the wife of John Longanecker, of Nimishillen township; Loretta is the wife of Jacob Stoner, of Indiana; Francis M. has charge of the old homestead farm; Isabella, who is deceased, was the wife of Louis Turner; Amos is a resident of Frieburg, Washington township; Isaiah resides in Harrisburg, this county; Jesse J. and Ulysses S. remain at the parental home; Fremont E. is engaged in farming in Nimishillen township, and Granville remains at the parental home.

JACOB KNOLL comes of staunch German ancestry in both the paternal and maternal lines, and the name has long been identified with the annals of American history, the original progenitor in the new world having been Abraham Knoll, the great-grandfather of the subject, who was born and reared in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, whence he emigrated to America and took up his residence in the state of Pennsylvania, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Jacob Knoll was born in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, on the 26th of February, 1847, being a son of Jacob B. and Eliza (Aldinger) Knoll, of whose six children five lived to years of maturity, while only three survive at the present time. Of the children we enter the following record: Catherine became the wife of David Powell and died in Marshall county, Indiana, in 1899; Henry died in 1879, at the age of thirty-seven years; Elizabeth is the wife of Lemuel Keys, of Atwater, Portage county, this state; Jacob is the immediate subject of this sketch; and Sarah is the wife of Stephen Schell, of Louisville, this county.

Jacob B. Knoll was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 12th of March, 1814, being a son of John and Catherine (Brill) Knoll, who removed to Dauphin county, that state, when he was but one year of age. He was there reared to maturity, and there in his youth learned the carpenter trade, to which he devoted his attention for about fifteen years in that county. On the 28th of December, 1837, he was united in marriage to Miss Louise Aldinger, who was born in Germany, whence her father, Christian Aldinger, came to America when she was about five years of age, the family locating in Pennsylvania, where she was reared and where her marriage was solemnized. She was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, on the 26th of July, 1812, and she and her husband walked side by side down the pathway of life for more than half a century, while in death they were not long divided, he having passed away on the 14th of October, 1892, while she died on the 15th of December of the following year. Of their early married life another publication has spoken pertinently in the following words: "They did not commence their married life with the many comforts which they enjoyed in their later years. During the first year after marriage they resided in an old double log cabin, one-half of which was occupied by another family, paying twelve dollars a month for their rude home. In the fall of 1838 he bought an old log house, with three acres of ground, for three hundred dollars, and had one-third of this sum raised by the next April, this amount being obtained by hard labor during the winter chopping cord-wood in the forest at twenty-five cents per cord, and boarding himself; although it was extremely cold at the time he never started a fire in the woods, but worked many a time when it was so cold he could not cut the bread prepared for his dinner, but was compelled to slice it off with the ax. During some six winters he cut about one thousand cords. About the time he was married the crops had been destroyed by grasshoppers, and for the first three bushels of wheat he purchased he was compelled to pay three dollars a bushel, and one dollar a bushel for corn. In after years he bought a stony little farm of sixty acres, in Dauphin county, which he occupied until he moved to Stark county, in 1853, when he purchased about one hundred and eleven acres of Jacob Kurtz, but later transferred all but forty acres of this farm to his son. He had a competency at the time of his death, but this he obtained by hard labor, receiving only seven hundred dollars from his father's estate." Jacob B. Knoll was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party and at different times he was incumbent of the offices of township trustee and supervisor.

Jacob Knoll, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared on the homestead farm and secured such educational discipline as was afforded in the district schools. In 1871 he was united in marriage to Miss Hannah E. Anderson, who was born in Knox, Columbiana county, being a daughter of Joshua and Mary Anderson, and after this important event in his life Mr. Knoll began farming the home place on shares, thus continuing for ten years, at the expiration of which he rented a farm in Knox township, Columbiana county, and there remained two years. He then returned to the home farm of which he purchased seventy acres from his father, and settled down on his own place. Here he continued to be successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1899, when he rented his farm and took an extended trip through the western states, for the benefit of his health, which had become much impaired, having during the intervening years made his farm one of the best in this section of the county. In May, 1902, Mr. Knoll purchased the W. C. Ammerman farm, of sixty acres, in section 25, Washington township, and in the following October took up his residence on the place, where he has since maintained his home, his son Hugh having charge of the old homestead, which our subject still retains in his possession. In politics he has ever accorded a staunch support to the principles and policies of the Democratic party, but he has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. He was for several years a member of the board of trustees of the Home Insurance Company and is at the present time a member of its directorate. He is a consistent and valued member of the United Evangelical church at Freeburg, and his wife belongs to the Presbyterian church of Alliance. Fraternally he is identified with Patrons of Husbandry, being a member of Fairmount Grange No. 1458.

Hannah E. (Anderson) Knoll, the wife of the subject's youth, was summoned into eternal rest on the 29th of October, 1890, being survived by her three sons, namely: George Herman, who is a member of the firm of Keys & Knoll, machinists in Homeworth, Columbiana county; Hugh W., who resides on the old homestead farm; and Emory E., who is a photographer in the city of Alliance, this county. On the 12th of October, 1892, Mr. Knoll consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Anna Fox, who was born in Washington township, a daughter of David and Jane (Cairns) Fox, the former of whom was born in Columbiana county, this state, and the latter in Scotland. Mr. Fox was for many years a prominent and influential farmer and stock-grower of Washington township, and did much to improve the grade of stock in this section, while it has been maintained, with slight possibility of dispute, that he was the first to become a breeder of Jersey cattle in Stark county. He died in this county January 5, 1896, and his wife is still living making her home in Akron, Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Knoll two children were born, but both died in infancy.

LEVI SMITH.—The American branch of the Smith family to which the subject belongs appears to have had its origin in Pennsylvania, as his great-grandfather, Joseph Smith, was born and reared there and figured conspicuously in the pioneer annals of Franklin county. Many years ago he came into possession of a tract of valuable land in Stark county, Ohio, but did not move to the same, having spent the greater part of his life in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, where his body now sleeps the sleep that knows no waking. The land in this county which he formerly held is now owned and occupied by his grandson, John Smith, one of the leading agriculturists of Lawrence township.

Among the children of Joseph Smith was a son by the name of Samuel, who came to Stark county when twenty-one years old and settled in the township of Lawrence, his arrival being about the year 1848. He became one of the leading farmers and large landholders in this part of the state, owning at one time six hundred acres of valuable real estate in Stark county and a tract of one hundred and sixty acres in Michigan. In connection with agricultural pursuits, he also dealt extensively in live stock, not only breeding and raising cattle, but buying and shipping large numbers, a business which returned him large profits. He has always been a successful business man and a money maker, and still owns in this county lands to the amount of four hundred and ten acres, besides large and valuable holdings in the state of Michigan. When a young man Samuel Smith married Miss Mary Ruch, a daughter of Michael Ruch, a native of Germany, and one of Stark county's early pioneers. Mr. Ruch was also successful in the accumulation of wealth and was widely and favorably known throughout the county, having been foremost in every enterprise for the material welfare of the county in which he lived. After a protracted and useful life, he passed away at Massillon at the advanced age of eighty-two years.

Samuel and Mary Smith were the parents of eight children, all of whom survive, the majority living in the county of Stark. The mother, a most excellent lady of beautiful moral character, departed this life in 1869.

Levi Smith, son of the above parents, was born February 9, 1853, in Lawrence township, Stark county, and spent his childhood and youthful years in the parental homestead, meanwhile acquiring a practical education in the district schools. He has always led the life of a successful tiller of the soil, and since attaining his majority has prosecuted his chosen calling in Lawrence township, where he now owns a small but finely improved and splendid appointed farm, on which are to be seen some of the best buildings in this part of the county. His dwelling is modern and well supplied with the conveniences and accessories conducive to comfort and content, while his home, representing a capital in excess of two thousand dollars, is one of the largest and best arranged structures in this neighborhood. Like his father the subject has also devoted considerable attention to the breeding and raising of fine live stock. His cattle and horses being unexcelled by those of any other man in the township of Lawrence.

Mr. Smith is a gentleman of fine presence and pleasing address and deports himself in such manner as to win and retain the high esteem of his neighbors and fellow citizens. His business abilities are far above the average, and the various enterprises in which he has been engaged have invariably inured to his pecuniary advantage, as his independent financial circumstances abundantly attest. He is a member of the Grange or Patrons of Husbandry, and through his efforts the local lodge to which he belongs has become a potential factor of loyal good in the community. Mr. Smith is a single man, having never seen fit to enter the marriage relation.

Charles Smith, a young brother of Levi, and, like the latter, one of the leading farmers of Lawrence township and also an extensive stock dealer and successful speculator, was born in Stark county, Ohio, February 7, 1866. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and ever since attaining his majority has carried on farming with a large measure of success, being at this time one of the enterprising and financially well-to-do men of the township in which he resides. Generously endowed with the attributes of mind that never fail to carry to successful conclusion any business undertaking, he has prospered in all of his enterprises, being especially fortunate in the matter of fine live stock, from the sale of which he adds very materially to the already comfortable fortune in his possession. Like his brother Levi, he is a Republican, but has little time to devote to political affairs, making every other consideration subordinate to his large and steadily increasing business interests. In the year 1893 Charles Smith took to himself a wife and helpmate in the person of Miss Mary Miller, of Summit county, Ohio, who has borne him four children—Lottie, Harry, Marion and Case.

John Smith, another of the sons of Samuel and Mary Smith, and one of the representative men of Lawrence township, was born not far from his present place of residence on the 20th of October, 1864. His early life, in close touch with nature, was conducive to the development of strong mental and physical powers, and, inheriting from sturdy ancestry the sterling qualities which win success, his life thus far has been fruitful of such results. He chose agriculture for a vocation and has pursued the same with diligence and method, reducing his labors to a system which has gone far towards making farming what it should be—a science. Mr. Smith is a resourceful man and prosecutes his every undertaking with a well defined purpose in view. In his political belief he is a Republican and maintains the correctness of his opinions by careful study of the leading questions and issues of the day. The marriage of Mr. John Smith and Miss Ida Braucher, of Stark county, was solemnized in the year 1892, and their home has been brightened by the advent of six children, whose names in the order of their birth are as follows: Florence, Marie, Sylvia, Russell, Arvine and Martha.

WILLIAM FRANKHAM.—The subject of this review is one of the progressive and popular business men of the city of Canton, where he conducts an important and somewhat unique enterprise, being proprietor of the Frankham brass foundry. He came to Canton in the year 1891 to assume charge of the J. H. McLain brass works, being identified with this concern one and one-half years, at the expiration of which he engaged in business on his own responsibility, opening a modest establishment in the old flouring mill which stood on the site of the present power house of the Canton Light, Heat & Power Company, on Seventh street. There he continued operations for eight years, and his ability and good management made his success one of constantly increasing order. At the expiration of the period noted he erected his present well equipped plant, at 1001 East Seventh street, installing his business in these quarters as soon as the building was completed.

Mr. Frankham was born in the far-famed manufacturing city of Birmingham, England, the date of his nativity being January 5, 1854. He is a son of Moses and Harriet (Bishop) Frankham, both of whom passed their entire lives in England, coming of stanch old English stock. Moses Frankham was a brass worker by trade and vocation and died in Birmingham, where he had long held responsible position, while his father, Samuel, was likewise engaged in the same line of occupation during his active business career, as has been previously intimated in this sketch. Our subject received his educational discipline in the public and private schools of his native city, though he was but nine years of age when he assumed individual responsibilities in connection with active duties of life, then entering upon his apprenticeship at metal-pattern work, under the direction of his father. Thereafter he continued his studies in night schools and at intervals in day schools, thus gaining a good practical education, while he also gained an expert technical knowledge in regard to the branch of mechanic art to which he has ever since devoted his attention. He remained with his father until he had attained the age of twenty-one years, when he came to America, believing that the rewards for his labors in his chosen vocation would be greater here and that he might thus the sooner attain a position of independence. It is needless to say that his confidence in his own ability and in the opportunities afforded has been amply justified. He sailed from Liverpool in October, 1871, and in due time arrived in New York city, whence he proceeded directly to the city of Chicago, which was still smouldering in the ashes of its great fire of September of that year. The next day after his arrival in the future metropolis of the west he secured work at his trade, and within the ensuing three weeks he was made foreman of a factory there. Since that time he has never done a day's work as a journeyman, which fact indicates his ability and the energy which he has thrown into his work, for not many young men from foreign lands secure so definite preferment within a month after their arrival. In 1882 Mr. Frankham went to the city of Philadelphia, where he was placed in charge of the William S. Cooper Brass Works, one of the leading concerns of the sort in the Union. There he continued to be thus engaged until 1891, when he came to Canton, where he has since maintained his home, his business career here having been already outlined in a preceding paragraph. In politics he is liberal in his views but where national issues are involved he gives his support to the Republican party, of whose generic principles he is a stanch advocate. He was reared in the Church of England, of which he became a member, though he is not a communicant. Fraternally he is identified with the Sons of St. George and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In the city of Chicago, on the 26th of November, 1880, Mr. Frankham was united in marriage to Miss Flora Gleason, who was born in the state of Connecticut, in 1852, being the only child of Charles Gleason, who was killed while in service as a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion. Mrs. Frankham died, after a very brief illness, on the 26th of November, 1902, and is survived by her only child, Harry, who was born on the 23d of September, 1881, and who is associated with the business of his father.

DAVID E. GERBER was born on his present homestead, in Canton township, on the 6th of July, 1834, being a son of Elias and Maria (Richard) Gerber, the former of whom was a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Switzerland, whence she accompanied her parents to America when she was a mere child. Elias Gerber was a son of Christian Gerber, who likewise was a native of the old Keystone state, to which locality the original American progenitor emigrated from Germany, in the pre-Revolutionary epoch. As early as 1810 Christian Gerber removed with his family from Pennsylvania to Stark county, Ohio, where he took up a tract of heavily timbered land in Canton township, the same being about five miles from the present city of the same name, and here he reclaimed a farm and gave his attention to its cultivation during the remainder of his active career. He died in this township at the venerable age of eighty-four years. His son Elias, father of the subject, was reared on this pioneer homestead, receiving such educational advantages as were accorded the average farmer youth of the locality and period and contributing to the work of clearing and improving the home place. In this township was solemnized his marriage, and he then assumed the practical responsibilities of life, locating on the farm now owned by our subject and eventually becoming one of the substantial farmers of the county, known as a man of impregnable integrity and as a man of excellent business judgment, while through his well directed efforts he attained a success which was worthy the name. He was summoned from the scene of his earthly labors in the very prime of his manhood, being but thirty-nine years of age at the time of his death, which occurred in 1847. His wife survived him by many years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1892, when eighty-four years of age. The father was a Democrat in politics, and both he and his wife held the faith of the Amish church. They became the parents of six children, concerning whom we offer brief record as follows: David E., who is the immediate subject of this review; Margaret, who is the wife of Abraham Gerber, of Indiana; George, who was killed in the army; Adeline, who is the wife of Jonathan Byler; Christian, who lives in Canton, and Solomon, who lives in Perry township.

David E. Gerber, whose name introduces this article, was reared on his present homestead, whose every field and pasture and wooded glen have thus been familiar to him from the time of his earliest recollection, while in his youth this familiarity was doubly emphasized by the labors which fell to his portion in connection with the work in these same fields and meadows, but he waxed strong in mind and body under the strenuous and invigorating discipline and has never abated by one jot or tittle his allegiance to the noble art of husbandry, to which his entire life has been devoted, and that with a due measure of attendant success. His finely improved farm comprises one hundred and thirty-one acres, and is under most effective cultivation, while the buildings are of the best order, including a commodious and attractive residence, which is a favorite resort for the family's wide circle of friends.

In politics Mr. Gerber has given his support to the Democratic party from the time of attaining his majority, and he has ever shown a consistent interest in public affairs of a local nature, lending his influence and aid in support of all legitimate undertakings for the promotion of the material progress and general welfare of his home township and county. He and his wife have long been zealous and active members of the German Baptist church, contributing to the advancement of its spiritual and temporal affairs, while they are well known pioneer citizens and have the highest esteem of all who know them, ever ordering their lives on a high plain of rectitude and integrity and being true and sincere in all the relations of intercourse with their fellow men.

In the city of Canton, on the 14th of October, 1858, Mr. Gerber was united in marriage to Miss Emeline King, who was born in Pennsylvania, whence, as a child, she accompanied her parents on their removal to Stark county, where her father was engaged in farming until his death. She was reared and educated in Canton township and is, like her husband, a representative of one of the county's honored pioneer families. Mr. and Mrs. Gerber became the parents of twelve children, of whom nine lived to attain years of maturity, namely: Clara became the wife of John Shanower and died, in Perry township, when twenty-four years of age; Melissa is the wife of William Shanower, of Massillon; George lives in Massillon; Kate is the wife of Amos Yutze, of Pike township; John lives in Canton; Edward is at home; Nellie is the wife of Charles Miller, of Perry township; Elva is the wife of Homer Riley, of Canton; and Jennie remains at the parental home.

PETER C. WISE was born in Stark county, Ohio, August 27, 1846, his parents being George and Susanna (Christ) Wise. The father was a native of Ohio, but had moved to Stark county with his parents when quite young. The mother was a native of Stark county, having been born in Lake township. Soon after their marriage they located in Holmes county, where they resided for two years, but later they returned to Stark county and settled in Lake township, where they continued to reside on the Christ farm until their deaths. George Wise was born July 6, 1810, and died January 21, 1893. The date of his wife's birth is January 5, 1824, and she died May 7, 1898. They were the parents of seven children, viz: Christian, Peter C., Adam, Loretta, Basil E., Harriet E. and Sadie.

In Lake township, on the farm occupied by his parents, Peter C. Wise was reared and grew to manhood. He attended the public schools and through them received a fair common school education, continuing under the parental roof until he was twenty-two years old. He then entered a flouring-mill in Canton for the purpose of learning the trade and remained there until he became thoroughly conversant with the business in every detail, since when he has made that business his life work. In the early 'seventies he took upon himself the management of the Middlebranch flouring mills, later became its owner and has continuously operated it since. As stated before, the mill was built, equipped and first operated by Daniel Wise, the grandfather of the present owner of the structure.

On the 4th day of July, 1878, Peter C. Wise was united in marriage, in Canton, Ohio, to Miss Louisa Minser, a native of Stark county, born June 28, 1855. She was the daughter of Daniel and Martha (Leetors) Minser, who were early residents of the county. They settled in Oval City, Plain township, where they have since continued to reside. To them three children were born, only one of whom, Loretta, still survives, both the other children dying when quite young.

In politics Mr. Wise is identified with the Democratic party and has always taken an active interest in political matters, especially those pertaining to local affairs, though he has never had any craving whatever for political preferment. He and his wife are members of the Progressive Brethren church and are always interested in religious and charitable affairs. He has a good business, which is both profitable and prosperous, and enjoys the confidence and esteem, not only of his patrons, but of all those with whom he comes in contact.

WILLIAM H. WISE was born on the farm where he now lives in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, July 10, 1859. His father was Alexander M. Wise, a native of Washington county, Pennsylvania, born in 1834, while his mother was Phoebe C. Wise, born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, in 1837. They were married in the city of Canton, Ohio, and settled on the farm now owned and occupied by their son, William H., which was their home during all of the years of their married life. Five children were born to their union, viz: Edgar S., now a resident of Auburn, Indiana; William H., the subject of this sketch; Emma J., wife of George Wheatley, resides at Cleveland; Bertha A., wife of Joseph Lawrence, of West Richfield, Ohio; Calvin A., who is a resident of Cleveland, Ohio. The mother died on the old home place in 1873, at the age of thirty-six years, while her husband survived her some twenty-three years, dying at Greensburg, Ohio, December 26, 1896, when in the sixty-second year of his age.

William H. Wise was born, reared and grew to manhood on the farm where he now lives and where he has spent the greater part of his life. He received a good common school education and, being naturally a student and fond of reading, has thereby added much to his store of knowledge. He is a thorough farmer and the first years of his manhood were devoted to agricultural pursuits. Later he became a government employe and spent fifteen years of his life in the service, carrying the mail from Oval City to Middlebranch. Deliberate and steady in disposition, temperate in his habits and ever cautious and watchful, no employe of the federal government could have performed his duties more faithfully. While by no means parsimonious, he is not a lavish spender. What he makes is either expended for something useful or laid by for a time of need. William H. Wise is one of those fortunate few who rarely find themselves hard up. Their tastes are simple and easily gratified and so the surplus in the treasury is never depleted.

February 22, 1882, William H. Wise was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Essig, a daughter of Solomon and Catharine (Warstler) Essig, old and highly respected residents of Stark county, she having been born on her father's farm in Plain township, August 14, 1861. There she was reared and grew to womanhood, receiving a good education and learning many lessons of usefulness and profit. Both of Mrs. Wise's parents died on the old homestead, the mother at the age of fifty-eight years, the father in the sixty-seventh year of his age. To Mr. and Mrs. William H. Wise three children have been born, Ruth C., Harry A. and Raymond S.

In politics William H. Wise is a Democrat and, while broad and liberal in his views, he is, nevertheless, active and zealous in the interests of his party. He is neither an office-seeker nor an office-holder and has no desire to become either. His individual interests occupy enough of his time to drown any ambition that might spring up in that direction and his income from his splendidly cultivated one-hundred-acre farm in Plain township and other property which he owns is such as to allay any craving he might have for the perquisites which flow from the public crib. He is a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. Mr. and Mrs. Wise have been for many years members of the Brethren church, and both are deeply interested in the cause of religion and charity, their contributions to each being both regular and generous. Their domestic relations are all that could be desired. They have a comfortable home, sumptuously furnished and well supplied with every need.

BASIL E. WISE, merchant and postmaster of Oval City, Stark county, the subject of this sketch, was born in Lake township, May 11, 1856. His parents were George and Susanna (Christ) Wise, the former born in Plain township, July 6, 1810, while the latter was born in Lake township, January 5, 1823. They were married July 18, 1842, in Lake township, and soon thereafter moved to Holmes county, where they resided for two years. They then returned to Stark county, and took up their residence upon the old homestead where they lived up to the time of their deaths, he dying January 21, 1893, while her death occurred May 7, 1898. To Mr. and Mrs. George Wise nine children were born, two of whom died in infancy. The others are, Christian, who is a farmer in Plain township; Peter C., proprietor of the Middle Branch Flouring Mills; Adam, who is a farmer of Plain township; Loretta, who is the wife of John Lilly, of Canton; Basil E., the subject of this sketch; Harriet E., who is the wife of George W. Geib and resides in Lake township; Sarah E., who is the wife of A. B. Winnett, of Cleveland, Ohio.

On the farm of his father, in Lake township, Basil E. Wise was reared and grew to manhood. The advantages of a good education were afforded him and, like the thoughtful, persevering youth that he was, he profited by his opportunities. He attended the public schools of Stark county until he was conversant with all of the branches therein taught, and then took the regular course at Mt. Union College. For two years he was employed as a clerk in a mercantile establishment in Canton, at the end of which time he felt that he was amply qualified to branch out in business for himself. In 1881 he put in a stock of general merchandise in the little town of Middlebranch and from the very first was gratifyingly successful. In 1883 he erected a large business house in Middlebranch and stocked it with a full supply of the very latest articles in the dry goods line. For twenty-one years he conducted his business in Middlebranch, drawing trade from a wide scope of country and year by year adding to his numerous customers. On the night of April 2, 1902, he met his first great financial disaster. His splendid dry-goods store, together with the great part of its valuable stock and many adjoining buildings, were totally destroyed by fire. After the fire Mr. Wise took a trip to the Pacific coast, traveling particularly through California, Oregon and Washington. While in the west several business propositions were made him, and after returning home he determined to investigate some of these propositions, and with this purpose in view he went to Sunnyside, Washington, where he remained over three months. Learning of the great productiveness of the soil in the Yakima valley, he made large investments in real estate there, including a business block. A few months after the fire which destroyed his Ohio property, his wife, Mary J. Wise, was appointed postmistress at Oval City, Ohio, which position she still retains. She is a very bright and intelligent lady and has taken a deep interest in political matters, especially during the McKinley campaigns. She has also taken an active part in church matters and was elected by the national conference to several state positions and has frequently been sent as delegate to state conferences of her church. Mr. Wise has now under construction at Oval City a large department store and expects to again engage in the general mercantile business.

Although an acknowledged member of the Democratic party, for twelve years Basil E. Wise was postmaster of Oval City, where he also engaged in business and where his efficient and impartial administration of the duties of his office won the sanction and approval of nearly every patron of the place.

On March 25, 1883, Basil E. Wise was united in marriage to Miss Mary Fry, a lady of many accomplishments and splendid intellect and a daughter of William S. and Anna Elizabeth (Sandoe) Fry, all natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. The father died in Canton, January 6, 1900, when in his sixty-third year. Mr. Fry was the father of eight children, viz: Mary, Isaac J., Anna C., Sarah, John, Adam, Ada and Lettie. All grew to maturity, are good citizens and worthy members of society. Mr. and Mrs. Basil E. Wise are the parents of one son, Hugo Paul, who is a youth well worthy of the honorable parentage from when he springs.

The real estate holdings of Mr. Wise are not large, but they are valuable. He is the owner of some fifty very desirable town lots and a tract of land comprising some fifty acres adjacent to the city. In connection with his other duties he has for some seventeen years dealt profitably in grain, at Middlebranch. He is the owner of the Middlebranch elevator, a structure that has for years past taken care of more grain than many elevators three times its size. The people of the vicinity have come to learn that, after all, much more depends upon the enterprise of the dealer than upon the size of his elevator.

He and his good wife are active members and liberal supporters of the Progressive

Brethren church and are regular attendants upon its services. They are a most exemplary couple, with enviable domestic relations, each possessed of many noble traits of character which commend them to the respect and esteem of all who know them. In church work he has held various offices, and also as teacher and superintendent of the Brethren Sunday school.

MRS. ELIZABETH SPEELMAN.—As one of the most venerable citizens which Stark county can claim, and as a representative of one of the earliest pioneer families of the county where she was born, this aged and revered lady merits a tribute in this work. She was born on the farm where she now lives, in Plain township, on the 27th of August, 1810, so that on the same relative date in 1903 she will have attained the very advanced age of ninety-three years. She is a daughter of John and Margaret (Swinehart) Palmer, who were natives of Pennsylvania, to which state they returned soon after the birth of the subject of this sketch, but her father died shortly afterward, and her mother then returned to Stark county, where she remained for a long term, passing the closing days of her life in Crawford county, Ohio.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Palmer) Speelman was thus reared in Stark county, where she grew up in the home of her paternal grandfather, Christopher Palmer, receiving such educational advantages as were afforded in the primitive schools of the pioneer epoch in this section. With the exception of a period of a few years she has consecutively retained her residence in Plain township. On the 27th of March, 1834, was solemnized her marriage to George Speelman, who was born in the state of Pennsylvania, on the 28th of December, 1809, and who was a member of one of the pioneer families of Stark county, Ohio, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, in Plain township, up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 18th of March, 1873. Of this union were born eight children, two of whom died in infancy, while the remaining six lived to attain years of maturity, their names being here entered in the order of their birth: Margaret, Catherine, Valentine, Mary Ann, Sarah and Elizabeth. Five of the children are living at the present time. Mrs. Speelman has been a woman of industrious habits and earnest and noble character, and from her youth up has been, since May, 1826, a consistent member of the Lutheran church. In the community where she has passed the greater portion of her exceptionally long life she is honored and revered by all who know her, while she is signally well preserved for one of her venerable age.

JEFFERSON C. ETLING is a native of Ohio, born in Chippewa township, Wayne county, on the 4th of April, 1844. His father, William Etling, was born in 1815 in Pennsylvania, and his mother, who bore the maiden name of Abbie Myers, was born in Washington county, that state, in the year 1821. When about two years old William Etling was taken to Wayne county, Ohio, by his parents, John and Catherine (Basinger) Etling, who settled in the township of Chippewa as early as 1817, the family being among the first pioneers in that part of the state. William was reared amid the rugged scenes of pioneer life and when old enough engaged in agricultural pursuits for himself and continued the same to the end of his days. He accumulated a handsome property, including a fine farm of one hundred and sixty-one acres, and became a man of considerable consequence in his community, serving for a number of years as township trustee, besides taking an active and prominent part in public affairs in general. He was a Democrat of the old Jacksonian school and to some extent a local leader of his party, having been a man of broad intelligence, whose judgment in politics as well as business affairs always commanded the respect of his fellow citizens. He lived a long and useful life and at its close, in October, 1893, was deeply lamented by the people among whom his lot for so many years had been cast. Mrs. Etling survived her husband a little over ten months, departing this life in February, 1893, honored and respected by all who knew her. William and Abbie Etling reared a family of eight children, all living and the majority of them well settled in life.

The childhood and youth of Jefferson C. Etling were spent on the home farm in the country. He was early taught those lessons of industry and frugality which tend to develop strong character and a high order of citizenship. After attending the district schools at intervals during his minority he learned the trade of brick-laying, which with the pursuit of agriculture he has since made his life work. Mr. Etling became an efficient workman and his skill as a brick mason is to be seen in the number of buildings which he erected in his own county and throughout the county of Stark. For a number of years he has taken large contracts in various parts of the country and has reaped abundant pecuniary rewards from his labors, being now one of the well-to-do men of the township and county in which he lives.

Mr. Etling came to Stark county in 1882 and at this time owns a fine farm of one hundred and ten acres in Lawrence township, his home being one of the neatest and most attractive rural residences in this part of the country. As an agriculturist he is fully up to date, as the fine condition of his well cultivated fields and the general appearance of everything upon the premises abundantly attest. His place bespeaks the home of a man of progressive ideas, the buildings, fences and other improvements being in first class order, while the general neatness characteristic of the farm shows the proprietor a man of good taste as well as of an enterprising spirit.

In July, 1862, Mr. Etling enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Twentieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, but in September following he was transferred to Company G, with which he served with an honorable record for a period of three years. Not long after entering the service his regiment was sent to the front and he experienced all of the realities of war in some of the most noted campaigns of the Rebellion, taking part in a number of battles, among which were Chickasaw Heights, December 26, 1862, Arkansas Post, January 11, 1863, Thompson's Hill, May 1, 1863, Black River, May 17 of the same year, the siege of Vicksburg, where he was under fire almost continuously for forty-seven days, and the siege of Jackson, where eleven days of hard fighting were required to reduce the enemy's works and capture the city. While on board the steamer "City Bell," which plied the Red river, in 1864, Mr. Etling, with others of his command, was captured and for thirteen months thereafter languished in various Confederate prisons, suffering all the privations and hardships which such a condition imposed. He was paroled at Columbus July 7, 1865, and in due time received his discharge, after which he returned home and resumed his trade, which, in connection with farming, he still carries on. Mr. Etling's record as a soldier is one of which any loyal defender of the flag might well feel proud. He discharged his every duty as became a true patriot, never shrank from a danger, and is now cheered by the consciousness of helping crush the greatest rebellion in the history of the world and bearing no little part in reuniting the country in bonds of permanent union.

Mr. Etling's first wife, to whom he was married in December, 1867, was Miss Reinohl, who bore him children as follows: Mettie, Della and Nellie. Some time after her death he entered the marriage relation with Mary Guidelsperger, of Wayne county, Ohio, a union blessed with one son and one daughter, Frank and Anna. Mr. Etling is a Republican in politics and takes an active interest in the leading questions of the day, on all of which he has well formed and intelligent opinions. Fraternally he belongs to H. Bevard Post No. 540, Grand Army of the Republic, and is also identified with the Masonic order, holding membership with Elliott Lodge at Canal Fulton. He is a firm believer in revealed religion, being a faithful and zealous communicant of the Presbyterian church at Canal Fulton, to which congregation his wife and family also belong. Mr. Etling is an affable gentleman, pleasing in person and address and is held in high esteem by his neighbors and fellow citizens. His moral influence in the community is strong and marked and he has long been a potential factor in the social as well as the public affairs of his township.

FREDERICK THOMAS ISLER was born in the picturesque canton of Bern, Switzerland, on the 13th of December, 1851, being a son of August and Adeline (Gennot) Isler, who were likewise born in that fair little republic, being of old Franco-Swiss stock. Christian Isler, the grandfather of the subject, was likewise born in Switzerland, as was also his wife, and there he was engaged in farming and in the work of his trade, that of shoemaker. He there died in 1859, his wife having preceded him into eternal rest. They became the parents of one son and two daughters, namely: August, father of the subject; Adeline, who was born in 1814, is still living in Switzerland and is eighty-nine years of age; and Mary, who was born in 1816, is deceased. August Isler was born in the year 1810, in the little village of Asuel, on the border line between the western portion of canton Bern and Germany, and there he was engaged in agricultural pursuits up to the time of his emigration to America. In Bern, in the year 1842, was solemnized his marriage to Adeline Gennot, who was a representative of an old Swiss family of high standing in the community, and both he and his wife became zealous members of the Lutheran Reformed church. The children of this union were as follows, all having been born in Bern: Adeline, who was born in 1843, died in Canton, Ohio, in 1886, having been the wife of Fritz Shopart; Marie died in early life, before the emigration of the family to the United States; August, who was born in 1848, is a successful farmer of Perry township, Stark county; Frederick T. is the immediate subject of this memoir; Henry, who was born in 1853, is now a resident of Canton; Charles, who was born in 1855, is a resident of Cleveland, this state; Bertha, who was born in 1860, is the wife of George Scott, of Perry township, this county; and Arthur, who was born in 1865, resides in Plain township.

In the year 1872 August Isler emigrated to the United States, being accompanied by his wife and such of their children as had not previously come to America, the latter of whom they joined in Stark county. He and his sons farmed on shares in the vicinity of Canton for a number of years, and later he purchased a farm in Perry township, where he made his home until his death, in 1883, while his devoted wife survived until 1897, both being laid to rest in Westlawn cemetery, in Canton.

Frederick T. Isler, the immediate subject of this tribute, came to America in 1870 and settled in Canton with his brother and sister who had previously located here. For the first three years he was employed in the Smith brick yard, and later, with other members of the family, he secured a farm near the city and they operated the same on shares for a period of two years. He then came to Canton and secured employment in a restaurant conducted by David Oberly, with whom he remained for nine years, gaining a thorough knowledge of the business in all its departments. In 1883 he purchased the restaurant of Martin Engelhart, on Fifth street, where he continued the enterprise for three years, at the expiration of which he purchased a brick building at the southwest corner of Cherry and Fourth streets, remodeling the same and fitting the same up for his restaurant business, and in these attractive and eligible quarters he continued to devote his attention to catering to the demands of a representative and appreciative patronage until within a short interval before his death, which occurred on the 22d of September, 1902, while his mortal remains repose in the beautiful cemetery of Westlawn. He was a man of strong mentality and his convictions were ever ably fortified. His political support was given to the Democratic party, of whose principles he was an ardent advocate, and fraternally he was identified with the French Mutual Aid Society, and other organizations. Prior to his death he had acquired much valuable real estate in Canton, and was known as one of the city's able and honorable business men, while he had a veritable host of friends in Stark county, being well known to its citizens.

In the city of Canton, on the 3d of October, 1876, Mr. Isler was united in marriage to Miss Selecta Richards, who was born in Perry township, Stark county, being a daughter of Adam and Mary Ann (Ryden) Richards, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, of German ancestry, and who came from the old Keystone state to Stark county, where Mr. Richards became an influential farmer of Perry township. Both he and his wife are deceased and their remains rest in the cemetery of St. John's Catholic church, in Canton, both having been communicants of this church, as is also their daughter, Mrs. Isler. Mrs. Isler survives her honored husband and still resides in the attractive family homestead, on the southwest corner of North Cherry and Fourth streets. Mr. and Mrs. Isler became the parents of three sons, William H. and Charles W., who are successfully conducting the restaurant business established by their father, while they are fully maintaining the high standard of catering service which the establishment gained under his able management, and Joseph, who died February 23, 1885, aged four months.

William H. Isler was born in Canton, on the 23d of November, 1878, and was here reared and educated. On the 23d of November, 1899, he was united in marriage to Miss Ida White, of this city, a daughter of B. C. White, a well-known citizen of Massillon and of English ancestry, and they have one son, Howard.

Charles W. Isler was born in Canton, on the 18th of October, 1881, and is associated with his brother in business, as before noted, while both are recognized as progressive and energetic young business men and enjoy marked popularity in the city which has ever been their home. On the 22d of July, 1902, Charles W. Isler was united in marriage to Miss Lillian Dorothy Heisig, daughter of Christian and Catherine (Lung) Heisig, of this city. Both brothers give their allegiance to the Democratic party and their religious faith is that of St. John's church.

H. W. LYTLE.—The name Lytle is a link in the chain that connects the present day with a time long past, as it has been well and favorably known in Stark county ever since this part of the state was looked upon as the western verge of civilization. As early as the year 1817 the subject's grandfather, Andrew Lytle, a native of Pennsylvania, penetrated the wilderness of eastern Ohio and entered land in what is now Lawrence township, Stark county, where in due time he laid the foundation of what afterwards proved to be a substantial home. He was one of the rugged, strong-armed, firm-willed pioneers of the old time, bore his part in clearing and developing the country and became one of the prosperous farmers and enterprising citizens of the community which he assisted to establish. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Preston, was also of Pennsylvania birth and several of his children were likewise born in that state. Andrew and Jane Lytle reared their sons and daughters to manhood and womanhood and finished their earthly labors many years ago, the former dying where the family originally settled and the latter in Lee county, Illinois. They had eleven children, four sons serving with distinction in the late Rebellion, one of them being killed in the battle of Lookout Mountain, Tennessee. Among their children was a son who also went by the name of Andrew. He was born in Pennsylvania, accompanied his parents to Stark county when young and here grew to maturity. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, but later devoted his attention principally to agricultural pursuits and stock raising. He became possessor of a good farm in this county on which he lived and prospered for a number of years, deriving the greater part of his income from the sale of sheep and wool, having been one of the largest sheep raisers in this part of the country. At one time he moved to Illinois, but did not long remain in that state, soon returning to his home in Stark county, where his death occurred in 1894 at the age of seventy-nine years. He was an active worker in the old Whig party in early life, but later became a staunch Republican and as such continued to the end of his days. He was a good neighbor, a loyal friend and a most reputable citizen and enjoyed in a marked degree the confidence and esteem of the people of his community. Before her marriage the wife of Andrew Lytle, Jr., was Miss Elizabeth Richey, a native of Stark county. Her parents, John and Nellie (Mickson) Richey, were born, reared and married in Pennsylvania, but about the year 1817 left that state and journeyed westward as far as Stark county, Ohio, settling in what is now Lawrence township, with the pioneer history of which they were prominently identified. Mrs. Lytle bore her husband four children and departed this life on the 9th of April, 1889. Two of the sons of Andrew and Elizabeth Lytle are living, viz: Lee H., a sketch of whom appears in this review, and H. W., under whose name this article is written; the deceased members of the family are Frank L. and Mabel, both of whom died in this county.

H. W. Lytle, the direct subject of this sketch, was born in Lawrence township, Stark county, Ohio, July 19, 1859, and spent his early life at home assisting his father to cultivate the farm. During the winter seasons he attended the district schools and by making the most of his opportunities became a fairly good scholar, and although he is not educated in the sense the term is usually understood, he is nevertheless intelligent and well informed, possessing a valuable practical knowledge obtained by coming in contact with the world in various business capacities. He is also quite a reader and a close observer and always takes pains to keep himself thoroughly posted relative to the leading public questions and political issues of the day, especially those bearing on state and national legislation. Mr. Lytle remained with his parents until their death, when he started out for himself, choosing the pursuit of agriculture as his life work. He has followed farming with success and profit to the present time, owning a beautiful little place of sixty-five acres in Lawrence township, which he has greatly improved and brought to a successful state of cultivation. His farm is admirably situated for general agricultural purposes and he has spared neither pains nor expense in making it attractive and in surrounding himself and family with the comforts and conveniences of life.

Mr. Lytle is a progressive farmer and prosecutes his work with due reference to method, using the latest and most approved implements and labor-saving devices. He is also a capable manager, as is attested by the fact of his deriving a much larger income from his small place than others receive from farms many times its area. By energy and well-directed industry and thrift he has amassed a comfortable competence, being among the well-to-do agriculturists of his township, as he is also one of its enterprising men and representative citizens. Mr. Lytle has always stood for progress and any movement with this object in view is sure to enlist his influence and hearty co-operation. He is essentially a man of the people and, as a true American with the good of his fellow men at heart, he discharges the duties of citizenship with an eye single to the best interests of the community, the state and the nation. He affiliates with the Republican party and labors earnestly for its success, notwithstanding which he is popular with the people, irrespective of political ties, many of his warmest personal friends holding opinions directly opposite those he advocates.

Mr. Lytle has been greatly blessed in his home life and to see him at his best is to meet him in the midst of the family circle, where, shut in from the cares of the world, he greets his friends with a hospitality of peculiar charm. He is eminently sociable and all who come within the range of his influence bear testimony to his wholesouled companionship and hearty good cheer. Believing that life was given man to enjoy, he endeavors to get from the world all the comforts and happiness obtainable and to this end he not only provides well for himself, but is liberal in caring for the welfare of those dependent upon him. In the year 1893 was solemnized the ceremony by which Mr. Lytle and Miss Jennie Keeffer, of Wayne county, Ohio, were united in the bonds of holy wedlock. This union, a most fortunate and happy one, has been blessed with two bright children, Walter B. and Godie.

Lee H. Lytle, an older brother of H. W. Lytle, and, like the latter, one of the well-known and highly esteemed citizens of Lawrence township, was born in Stark county, Ohio, on the 1st day of November, 1857. Reared amid the bracing airs of the country, he early developed strength of body and definiteness of purpose which enabled him while still a mere youth to lay plans for his subsequent course of life. His educational training embraced a knowledge of the branches constituting the common school course, and, like the majority of country boys, he assisted his father with the varied duties of the farm until old enough to engage in some kind of business for himself. With a natural taste for tilling the soil, he first turned his attention to farming, but later embarked in business at Canal Fulton, handling agricultural implements, which line of trade he pursued with liberal results for several years, meanwhile looking after his farming interest in Lawrence township. Mr. Lytle now devotes his attention largely to the farm, which consists of eighty-five acres of fertile and finely improved land situated in one of the most highly favored sections of Stark county. On this place are a comfortable dwelling, well supplied with modern conveniences, good barns and other outbuildings, while the fences and fine conditions of the fields, together with the many other evidences of prosperity, bespeak the careful attention and progressive spirit of the proprietor. Mr. Lytle is a model farmer, as his place abundantly attests, and his present independent financial condition bears testimony to the industry and good management with which he has pursued his vocation. As a citizen he is recognized as one of the influential as well as one of the useful and resourceful men of his community, taking an active interest in whatever tends to benefit the country and develop its resources and supporting liberally ever measure looking to the social and moral welfare of the people of his neighborhood. He enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellow men and as an earnest supporter of the Republican party has long been a potent factor in local politics. Mr. Lytle has never been an office-seeker, notwithstanding which he was elected assessor of his township, the duties of which position he discharged in a straightforward, business-like manner, highly creditable to himself and satisfactory to the public which he served.

In the year 1882 Mr. Lytle was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Campbell, of Stark county, the union resulting in the birth of four children, namely: Claude H., Grace M., Margaret M. and Reed R., all living. Mr. and Mrs. Lytle are highly esteemed members of the Presbyterian church, being among the most active workers and liberal supporters of the local congregation to which they belong. They are also widely known socially and their popularity is by no means confined to the community in which they live, having numerous acquaintances throughout the county of Stark.

WILLIAM WARSHELER.—One of the oldest and most highly esteemed residents of Stark county, Ohio, is a lady, now in her ninety-second year, who still resides in Plain township, where she was born, April 11, 1811. Her name is Elizabeth (Essig) Warsheler and she is the mother of William Warsheler, of Plain township, the subject of this sketch. During all the years of her life she has lived in Stark county. She was a babe during the first administration of the fourth President of the United States, James Madison, and has lived during the administration of twenty-one other Presidents. She was a child at the beginning of our second war with England, a girl of four years when Waterloo was fought and Napoleon was exiled to St. Helena and her age was ten when he died. She was a woman of twenty-six years when Queen Victoria ascended the throne of England, was thirty-five years old when the battles of the Mexican war were won, and during all of the years of the greatness of Clay and Webster she was old enough to know and appreciate the renown they were winning as statesmen. Her long and useful life covers the greater part of the greatest century the world has ever known.

William Warsheler, of Plain township, Stark county, son of the lady above mentioned, was born on the farm where he now lives, October 15, 1835. His father was Samuel Warsheler, who was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1805, and came to Stark county, with his parents, in 1807. His father was George Warsheler, a native of Maryland, who died in Stark county, Ohio, in 1838. Elizabeth Essig, born in 1811, was united in marriage to Samuel Warsheler in April, 1828. Her father was John Essig, a native of Pennsylvania who located in Stark county during the first years of the last century. Samuel Warsheler died in 1877, while his wife, Elizabeth, now in her ninety-second year, still survives in comparatively good health and possessed of far greater mental vigor than would commonly be attributed to one of her great age. She is the mother of six children, four of whom grew to maturity, namely: Mary, who was the wife of Abram Candle, died when sixty years of age, in Plain township; Susan was the wife of William Candle and died in Canton township when sixty-seven years old; Simon died in infancy; William is the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, who was the wife of Jacob Prough, died in Missouri when about thirty-eight years of age; Sarah died in childhood. It will be seen that of the entire family, William and his venerable mother only survive.

William Warsheler was reared and grew to manhood on the farm whereon he has resided all the days of his life. The only avocation he has ever followed has been that of agriculture. In his boyhood, schools were not numerous, and his education was therefore limited, but had he been blessed with the opportunities of the boys of today his ambition would have stopped little short of a finished education. As it was he secured a fair knowledge of all the common school branches then taught, which knowledge he has since supplemented by extensive reading, so that today there are very few men in his locality better informed.

On July 2, 1857, William Warsheler was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Jane Dine, a young lady who was possessed of most of the accomplishments and all of the virtues of the age in which she lived. She was a native of Franklin county, Pennsylvania, born March 6, 1833, her parents being David and Susanna Dine, natives of Franklin county, Pennsylvania, who located in Pike township, Stark county, about 1825. Both have now been dead many years, the mother having been eighty-five years of age at the time of her demise. They are well remembered by old residents as being among the most thrifty and progressive inhabitants of the county in the early days. To Mr. and Mrs. William Warsheler nine children have been born, only four of whom are still living, namely, William B., Sarah, Charles and Cora. Sarah is the wife of Nicholas Dickens and Cora is Mrs. Charles Lantz. All of the children who have passed away died in infancy.

A most pleasant home, upon a splendid farm of seventy-two acres, is that which is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Warsheler and family. He carries on general farming and stock raising and in this calling, the only one he has ever followed, he has been quite successful. In politics he is a Democrat, has always acted with that party and is always sufficiently interested in the result of the elections to take an active part in the campaign. Outside of one or two local offices, he has never held or aspired to a political place. He served as trustee of Plain township three years and has been a school director for seventeen years. In all of the affairs of his township and county he has taken an active part and is invariably identified with every progressive movement. Strong and vigorous mentally and physically, the weight of his sixty-seven years sits lightly upon his shoulders, he being one of those, like his venerable mother, with whom time deals gently. Everything indicates that Mrs. Warsheler may have full confidence in being able to round out the full measure of a century of life, and that her worthy son eventually may fully equal her in longevity.

HENRY W. HOSSLER was born on a farm in Nimishillen township, this county, on the 30th of November, 1843, being a son of George Hossler, who was born in York county, Pennsylvania, on the 20th of February, 1815, being of sturdy German stock and a representative of that element which has proved of so signal value in fostering material progress and prosperity wherever found in our great American republic. He was a son of Frederick Hossler, who was born near Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, September 8, 1783, and who came to Stark county, Ohio, in 1821, and located in Osnaburg township as one of its early settlers, where he resided only a few years, and then removed to Marlboro township, where he passed the residue of his life, his death occurring in Marlboro township, in 1843. George Hossler, father of the subject, came to Stark county with his parents and was here reared to manhood, and in Canton township he learned the trade of wagonmaking, to which he continued to devote his attention for the long period of thirty-five years, being a man of marked industry and upright character. Within this period he resided for varying intervals of time in Canton, Marlboro, Nimi-shillen and Plain townships, and in connection with his trade also carried on agricultural pursuits. He died on his farm in Plain township, December 9, 1890, when well advanced in years. On the 4th of December, 1842, in Nimishillen township, George Hossler was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Hershey, who was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on the 18th of February, 1816, being a daughter of John Hershey, who removed from the old Keystone state to Stark county, Ohio, when she was about sixteen years of age, and here she passed the remainder of her life, her death occurring on the 31st of May, 1899. George and Elizabeth (Hershey) Hossler became the parents of seven children, namely: Henry W., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Eliza and John, who both died in childhood; Mary, who is the wife of David Warstler, of Canton township; Ephraim, who is a resident of the state of Kansas; Elizabeth, and Aaron, who reside in the city of Canton this county.

Henry W. Hossler lived in Nimishillen and Marlboro townships during his earlier boyhood, and when he was eight years of age his parents removed to Plain township, where he was reared to maturity and where he has since maintained his home. He secured such educational advantages as were afforded by the district schools of the middle pioneer days and as a youth he learned the wagonmaking trade under the direction of his father, the business being one which has been followed by many members of the family, since the subject's grandfather was a skilled workman in this line and taught the trade to each of his sons. For a period of about twelve years the subject continued to be engaged in the work of his trade, but since 1875 he has devoted the greater portion of his time to the settling up of estates and other public business, having been elected justice of the peace of Plain township in 1871, while in 1889 he was appointed a notary public, in which office he has ever since continued to serve. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party and has taken an active part in public affairs of a local nature, being well fortified in his convictions and ever ready to defend the same, while he has at all times commanded the unqualified confidence and esteem of the community. A distinctive evidence of this confidence is that implied in the fact that he has served as administrator, executor, assignee, etc., of seventy-six different estates, while the volume of his business is such as to render it expedient for him to maintain an office in the city of Canton. He served as justice of the peace for eighteen years, and his rulings were ever fair and impartial and were but twice reversed by higher courts, while holding said office, his aim being ever to adopt pacific measures and to avoid strained relations among his neighbors who came before him for an adjudication of their differences. He is also a stockholder and was one of the incorporators of the Central Savings Bank of Canton and has served as one of the directors of said bank ever since its organization in May, 1887. Mr. Hossler has a well improved farm of about forty acres and on the same has erected an attractive and commodious residence and other good buildings. He is a man of fine intellectual powers, and through personal application and intimate association with the practical affairs of life has effectively supplemented the somewhat meager educational training of his youthful days.

In the city of Canton, on the 5th of November, 1885, Mr. Hossler was united in marriage to Miss Sarah DeWeese, who was born in Osnaburg township, this county, being a daughter of the late Thomas DeWeese, who was one of the pioneers of that section of the county and a man who was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. To Mr. and Mrs. Hossler five children have been born, the eldest of whom, Howard H., died at the age of three months, while the other four remain at the parental home, their names, in order of birth, being as follows: Helen D., Raymond R., Nellie R. and Henry L.

DANIEL HARMON is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born in the township where he now lives on the 3d day of September, 1844. His father, Frederick Harmon, was a native of Holland, as was also his mother, who bore the maiden name of Cynthia List. These parents came to the United States in 1836, locating first in New York city, and from there one year later moved to Cleveland, Ohio, where they continued to reside until changing their residence to Stark county, in 1838. By occupation Frederick Harmon was a blacksmith. He worked at the trade in Canal Fulton for a number of years, and was fairly successful in business matters, accumulating a sufficiency of this world's goods to place him in very comfortable circumstances. Until the year 1860 he was a Democrat, but when the great Civil war broke out he withdrew from his party and from that time until his death was an unswerving Republican. Religiously he subscribed to the creed of the Lutheran Reformed church and throughout a long and active career made his life correspond as nearly as possible to the plain simple teachings of Holy Writ. Mr. and Mrs. Harmon were the parents of eight children, two of whom died in infancy, the others growing to manhood and womanhood and becoming well settled in life. The death of Mr. Harmon occurred in 1883, at the age of seventy-seven, his wife surviving him until 1899, when she too was called to her eternal rest, at the age of ninety years.

Of the early life and youthful experience of Daniel Harmon little need be said, as they were in most respects similar to those of the majority of boys born and reared in country towns. He enjoyed the advantages of the public schools of Canal Fulton, and it was while a student in the high schools that he laid aside his books for the purpose of taking up arms to assist in quelling the great Rebellion. On the 4th of November, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, First Battalion, Eighteenth United States Infantry, with which he served throughout the war and after the cessation of hostilities continued with his command until February 15, 1867. Mr. Harmon participated in all the battles in which the Army of the Cumberland took part and was one of the few of the ill-fated garrison of Ft. Phil Kearney that escaped death in the horrible massacre of December 22, 1866, one of the foulest blots on the pages of American history. He never shirked a responsibility, was ever ready to go where duty called and against his record as a brave and fearless soldier no breath of suspicion was ever uttered. After his discharge he returned to Stark county and for some time thereafter worked at coal mining, subsequently engaging in the milling business at Canal Fulton, which he carried on for several years with fair pecuniary results. He also devoted considerable attention to farming, in which he still maintains an interest, and of late years has been engaged in the ice business, from which source he derives a liberal income. Mr. Harmon has long been an active worker in the Democratic party, and as such has been elected to various official positions, the first being that of constable, in which he served his township faithfully for twelve years. In 1886 he was made a member of the school board of Canal Fulton, which position he held nine years, and subsequently for a period of ten years served as township assessor. In 1902 he was elected to the more responsible office of township trustee, and thus far his record has fully met the expectation of his friends and proven highly satisfactory to the public in general. Mr. Harmon is a member of the Odd Fellows' fraternity, belonging to Lawrence Lodge No. 297, at Canal Fulton, in addition to which he is also identified with Bevard Post, Grand Army of the Republic, and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In the year 1872 he was united in marriage with Miss Lovina Buchtel, whose birth occurred in Summit county, Ohio, on the 25th day of May, 1844. Mrs. Harmon is one of seven children born to John A. and Julia A. (Tritt) Buchtel, of Summit county, the father dying in 1885 and the mother in 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Harmon have had four children, namely: Alda, Esther, Percy and Lloyd, the last named deceased.

The life of Mr. Harmon furnishes a commendable example of the successful self-made man. He early began making his own way in the world and had little to encourage him in his battles with adverse circumstances. The meager assistance rendered him, and his determined efforts to develop the better man within, were in due time crowned with abundant rewards, as he succeeded by industry and thrift in making for himself a name which all who know him respect, while his honor and integrity in every relation of life are eminently worthy of emulation.

REV. JOSEPH F. FAHS.—The Fahs family is of staunch German lineage, and in the immediate line the original ancestor in America was Joseph Fahs, who emigrated from the fatherland to this country in the colonial epoch, taking up his abode in York, Pennsylvania, where he passed the residue of his life, being a man of exalted integrity of character and one whose strength was as his days. He was accompanied to America by his wife and several children, and other children were born after he established his home in the new world, one of the number being Joseph Fahs, who was born in York, York county, Pennsylvania, and who figures as the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. Joseph Fahs was a soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, and thus aided in the founding of the greatest republic the world has ever known. After the war he returned to his native town, where the balance of his life was passed, his vocation having been that of carpetweaver. His son, Samuel, father of the subject, was born in York about 1800, and was there reared to maturity, learning the trade of cabinetmaking, and continuing to follow the same during his entire career in business. His noble and devoted wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Myers, was likewise born in York, and there they lived until they responded to the inexorable summons of death, both having been members of the Moravian church and persons of distinctive worth of character. Of their children brief data is as follows: Rachel, who became the wife of George Wantz, died in York; the second child died in infancy; Oliver died in York, at the age of thirty-five years; Joseph Frederick, the immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; David is still a resident of York, Pennsylvania; Samuel died in boyhood; Barbara, who became the wife of Ernst Wagner, died at York; Catherine died at the age of twenty-eight years; Louisa is the wife of Charles Stubbins, of York, and there also is the home of Sarah, the wife of J. L. Getz.

Joseph Frederick Fahs, whose name initiates this article, was born in the old homestead in York, Pennsylvania, on the 18th of January, 1825, so that he has now attained the age of nearly four score years, though it must not be implied that this fact militates against his activity, energy and devotion to his responsible duties, for his is the vigor begotten of right living, and he expects to be a worker until he is called to the sphere of the eternal life. He received his early educational discipline in his native town, having there attended an academy conducted by Professor Blech, an able educator. At the age of fourteen Mr. Fahs went to the Moravian town of Lititz, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he was employed as clerk in a mercantile establishment for a period of four years, and while there he devoted as much time as possible to the study of theological subjects, under the direction of clergymen of the Moravian church. At the age of eighteen he returned to York, where he was employed as clerk in a general merchandise store for about two years. In the meanwhile he had been canvassing ways and means that he might continue his educational training, his desire being to fit himself for a wider sphere of endeavor, and at the age of twenty years he had so thoroughly improved his time by personal study and application that he became eligible for pedagogic work, since he then accepted the position of teacher of English branches in Nazareth Hall, a Moravian college, in Northampton county, Pennsylvania. He was thus engaged for one year, and during that succeeding was a teacher in the York County Academy, in his native town, the institution being one which at that time had a high standing and which was a source of great pride to the people of the county. While thus teaching at York, Mr. Fahs continued his own studies, having given special attention to the study of languages, under the direction of Prof. Williams, a man of erudition and a fine linguist, who was then an instructor in the same academy. Mr. Fahs had also been a careful and appreciative student of music, in which line he had marked native talent, and for the ensuing year he gave his attention principally to the teaching of the "divine art," his efforts being mainly in the line of ensemble work, in training mixed choruses and giving concerts under Sunday school auspices. About this time the subject came in contact with Rev. Dr. Joseph Seiss, of Cumberland, Maryland, with whose devoted zeal and eloquence he became so captivated that he expressed to the Doctor a wish to remain with him for a season, for the purpose of studying theology and pulpit oratory. His desire was realized, and he acknowledges a lasting debt of gratitude to this noble Christian gentleman with whom he remained for a period of three years,—years fraught with the best possible results, for the subject received the most beneficent counsel, his training was systematic and the influence one which tended to exaltation of the spiritual life, and he was thus led to devote his life to the ministry, following humbly and reverently in the steps of the lowly Nazarene through whom came the supreme revelation of divine love and mercy. In the autumn of 1852 Mr. Fahs was ordained to the ministry of the Lutheran church, at Cumberland, Maryland, and his first pastoral assignment was to the church in Hancock, that state, where he remained three years, having charge of three congregations in that parish. His health finally became so seriously impaired that he was compelled to resign his charge and to avoid all active work for the ensuing eight months. He then, though far from well, accepted a call to the church at Newton, Pennsylvania, where he labored zealously for fourteen months, but the tension proved too severe and he was again compelled to tender a resignation, and for nearly a year he was unable to continue his ministerial work. Having partially recuperated his energies, in 1853 he accepted the pastorate of the church at Jersey Shore, Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, the town being located in the mountains, and here the change of climate proved of marked benefit to him, and after serving the little church for a period of four months he felt justified in accepting a most insistent call which came from the church at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, where he labored with much success for a period of five years, and the hold he had upon the affection of his people was significantly manifested in the spring of 1902, when the congregation of this church sent him an urgent invitation to visit his former parish and participate in the golden jubilee of the church, an invitation which he accepted, and which resulted in a season of marked gratification to him and his wife, in that they were thus permitted to greet many old friends and to note the noble work which the church was carrying forward. His next call was to the pastorate of St. John's church, in Allentown, Pennsylvania, and his pastorate there covered a full decade, blessed with abundant fruit, and while he and his wife were in Williamsport, in 1902, as noted, the people of St. John's church made such pressing overtures for them to also visit this parish that they could not but respond favorably, and their visit to the two parishes was one which marks a most grateful spot in their life history. From Allentown Mr. Fahs went to Trinity Lutheran church, in Akron, Ohio, and after a decade of zealous and effective labor in that field he came to Canton, in 1883, and for the following fourteen years he served congregations in various towns in this section, accessible from the city and without regular pastoral incumbents, while he also officiated in churches of various other denominations, in Canton and elsewhere, and continues to do so at the present time when demands are made upon his services in this way, for he has ever stood ready to answer the call of duty and to aid in every possible way the cause of the Master whom he serves. In 1896, largely persuaded by the members of the clergy of the different churches in Canton, Mr. Fahs consented to accept his present appointment as chaplain of the county infirmary and work house, and here his ministrations have not fallen short of appreciation on the part of those unfortunate wards of the county to whom he brings words of cheer and hope. Mr. Fahs has been a most zealous and effective advocate of the cause of temperance, and his efforts in this direction have been potent. He is a persuasive and logical speaker and his every word bears the impress of unswerving faith and utmost sincerity, so that he has ever been able to gain a hold on the hearts of those to whom he has been teacher, counselor, pastor and friend. In politics he holds to the principles of the Republican party, but has never been a strict partisan, supporting such men and measures as have met the approval of his judgment.

At Hancock, Maryland, on the 9th of May, 1854, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Fahs to Miss C. Anna Miller, daughter of Rev. Henry S. Miller, a clergyman of the Lutheran church, and she has been to him a true companion and helpmeet during their signally happy married life, which has extended over a period of nearly half a century. Mrs. Fahs having been born in 1833. Of the children of this union the following is a record: Lillian remains at the parental home; Catherine has for the past eight years engaged in missionary work in India, under the auspices of the Lutheran church; Henry died at the age of nineteen years; and Clemence remains at the parental home.

ANDREW MEYER.—The Meyer family is of stanch German extraction, and is one of prominence and distinction in the German fatherland, the original representatives of the same in the new world being three brothers who came hither in the early or middle part of the eighteenth century, one of the number being the grandfather of the subject of this brief sketch. So prominent has been the name in this section of the Buckeye state that exceptional interest attaches to a review of the genealogical and personal history of that honored citizen of Canton whose name introduces this article and who here passed practically his entire life. He bore the full patronymic of his father, Andrew Meyer, who was born in the town of Bonn, in Bingen, archbishopric of Cologne, Germany, one of the most fair and picturesque sections of the beautiful Rhine country, the date of his nativity having been 1760. He was there reared, receiving his education in the excellent schools of his native place, and at the usual age he entered the military service of Austria, in accord with the laws and customs of the nation. In this connection he was in active service in the conflict with the Turkish government, and later he was for some time in the French army, having been impressed into service under the rule of the great Napoleon. He emigrated to America within the closing years of the eighteenth century and took up his abode in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, where, during the war of 1812, he gave his government valuable assistance in the furnishing of brass and copper supplies for ships, and he made no demand for payment until peace was restored and the government expenses were reduced to a more nearly normal standpoint. He was also in active service as a soldier in this second conflict with England, having taken part in the spirited engagement at Bladensburg, Maryland, where he was one of the few who stood their ground until deserted by all their fellow comrades. He had learned the trade of coppersmith in his native land, and continued to be identified with the same in Baltimore for a number of years, having been associated with his brother, Godfrey, in the establishment of a copper manufactory in Baltimore, where he had made investments in real estate and slaves, the brothers having been well fortified financially at the time of their emigration. Subsequently he came to Ohio, becoming one of the early settlers of Canton, which was then a mere hamlet in the midst of the primeval forests, and here he became a prominent and influential citizen, being a man of marked intellectuality and one with great initiative powers, so that he was well fitted for leadership in thought and action. He was the third in order of birth in a family of five children, an elder brother, Ignatius, having accompanied him from the fatherland to America, all settling in Baltimore. Their sister, Cordelia, who was a young woman of great beauty and culture, died in Germany. The father of these children was a man of wealth and influence in Germany, where he was the owner of extensive vineyards on the banks of the Rhine. Francis Meyer, the eldest of the four brothers, was a colonel in Napoleon's army and was present at the taking of Moscow, and while in the service he was captured by the enemy and held in prison for some time. He also took part in the historic battle of Waterloo. Napoleon conferred upon him the cross of the Legion of Honor on the field of battle, this valued insignia of honor and gallantry being set with diamonds, and in addition to this his great chief also conferred upon him an added distinction in recognition of his services, presenting him with a beautiful sword, likewise, set with fine diamonds, and these two valued trophies are still retained in the possession of the family as treasured souvenirs. Ignatius, the other brother, was a man of recondite knowledge, being a fine scholar and an accomplished linguist, and he was a successful teacher in Germany, as was he also in Baltimore, and later in Canton. Colonel Francis Meyer died in Baltimore, at a very advanced age, having remained a bachelor. Ignatius married, in Germany, a lady of culture and refinement, and they reared a number of children. In the beautiful old Maryland city was also consummated the marriage of Andrew Meyer, father of the subject, the maiden name of his wife having been Eliza Hazlett, the widow of John Hassafrass. She was born in Alsace, France, whence she came to America with her parents. Of her first marriage were born three children, namely: Margaret and George, both of whom died in Baltimore, unmarried; and John, who married Sally Hamilton, and who likewise died in Baltimore.

Andrew Meyer came to Ohio in company with Joseph Shorb and here, by entry and purchase, they became the owners of sixteen hundred acres of land, Mr. Meyer's farm being located in Stark county and being known as Sweet Spring farm. After establishing a home in the Buckeye state Mr. Meyer returned to Maryland for his wife, and upon his coming again to Ohio he took up his residence in the little village of Canton, here opening a dry-goods store on the site of the present establishment of the firm of McKenzie & Bell. He also accumulated considerable real estate in and about the city, in addition to his original farm property. After a residence of two years in Canton his wife's health became seriously impaired and they accordingly returned to Baltimore, where they remained for the ensuing two years, after which they again took up their residence in Canton. The journeys to and fro were made with the old-time Conestoga wagons, and Mr. Meyer provided a guard of twelve men to afford protection from robbers and unfriendly Indians, the Alleghany mountains at that time being infested with bands of desperate outlaws and bandits. Andrew Meyer brought from Steubenville the lumber with which to erect his house, which was the finest in this section of the state, being commodious and attractive in appearance and being equipped with many accessories and embellishments unusual to the pioneers of this section. The residence was built of the best material and in the most substantial manner, while the eaves and spouts were all of copper. Subsequently he retired from the mercantile business, which he turned over to his son, the subject of this memoir. Andrew Meyer, Sr., then retired to his farm, one of the finest places in this section of the state, his landed estate comprising twenty-two hundred acres at the time of his death, in 1848. The land was immediately contiguous to the town of Canton, and eventually the city limits were extended to include a considerable portion of the same, which section was platted into city lots and placed on the market after his death, being now built up with a desirable class of dwellings. The subject of this memoir inherited a portion of the old homestead and for many years gave his personal supervision to its cultivation, and he erected the residence now owned by Cook Walker, on Tuscarawas street, and there he continued to reside until his death. The heirs of Joseph Meyer, one of his sons, donated twenty acres of the old homestead as a site for the erection of the plant of the Deuber-Hampden Watch Works, one of the important industrial concerns of Canton and of the state. The parents were devoted members of St. John's Catholic church, in whose organization they were instrumental. In politics the father was an old-line Whig. He was a man of progressive ideas, an excellent financier, and one who wielded a wide and beneficent influence in the community, while such was his integrity in all the relations of life that he ever commanded the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. Of his children we enter the following brief record: Francis, who was a colonel in the war of the Rebellion, married and became the father of five children,—Caroline, Joseph, Francis, Cordelia and Mary, the parents being now deceased; Elizabeth, who became the wife of James Casselly, died in Canton; Andrew is the immediate subject of this memoir; Joseph died in 1869, in Canton, being survived by his wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Meyer, and of him individual mention is made on another page of this work; Alena, who became the wife of Thomas Patton, died in Canton in 1871.

Andrew Meyer, Jr., to whom this tribute is dedicated, was born in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, in 1813, and was a mere child at the time of his parents' removal to Canton, where he was reared and educated and where he passed his long and useful life, a worthy scion of an honored father. He received such educational advantages as were afforded in the local schools, and later became a student in Emmettsburg College, in Maryland, where he completed his specific education. He then returned to Canton, where he assisted his father in his business operations, and where he eventually succeeded the latter in the mercantile enterprise here established so many years before. He continued this enterprise for somewhat more than a decade and then removed to what is known as the Duck farm, at the head of Meyer lake, giving his attention to its cultivation for about eight years. After the death of his father he removed to a cottage near the old homestead, and here his first wife died in 1848. Somewhat later he erected what is now the Cook Walker residence, on West Tuscarawas street, and there he continued to make his home until he was summoned from the scene of life's activities, on the 15th of March, 1875, at the age of sixty-two years. His entire life was characterized by the loftiest integrity and honor; he was kindly, gracious and unostentatious and no man in the community could claim a larger number of appreciative and cherished friends. He always maintained a lively interest in the welfare of the city whose development he had witnessed from the pioneer days, and he was essentially broad-minded and public-spirited in his attitude in regard to matters of public policy. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared, while he was a liberal supporter of St. John's church, of which he was a communicant.

In the city of Baltimore, Maryland, Andrew Meyer was united in marriage to Miss

Eliza Hazlett, a daughter of Major Robert Hazlett, who was born in the city of Dublin, Ireland, whence he emigrated to America when a young man, taking up his residence in Baltimore, where he engaged in the manufacture of ammunition. He was in active service as a soldier in the war of 1812, holding the office of major. The maiden name of his wife was Dorothy Parkinson, and she was a sister of Sir Edward Parkinson, of England, who was a very wealthy man and whose property reverted to the crown at the time of his death. Both Robert and Dorothy Hazlett died in Baltimore, having reared a large family of children. Mrs. Eliza (Hazlett) Meyer died in 1848, as has already been noted, and in 1851 Mr. Meyer consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Elizabeth Gross, a daughter of Judge John I. Gross, of Baltimore, a member of the supreme court of Maryland. Mrs. Meyer survived her husband two years, her death occurring in 1877. Of the children of the first marriage the following is a brief record: Andrew, Jr., enlisted in Toledo as a member of an Ohio regiment of volunteers, under General Babcock, and served throughout the Civil war, after which he was married, in Tennessee, to Miss Carrie Johnson, a southern girl, and they now reside on a farm at the foot of Lookout mountain, in Tennessee; Emily died at the age of twenty-seven years; Joseph, who married Miss Mary Cowl, of Massillon, Ohio, is now a resident of Boone county, Iowa; Louisa C. resides at the old home in Canton, having never married; William, who resides in Canton, and who is one of the influential farmers of the county, married Miss Margaret Wielandt, and they have nine children; Isabella is the wife of Andrew Wielandt, of this city; and Margaret is the wife of George Wolfe, also of Canton. Only one child was born of the second marriage of the subject.—John, who resides with his sister, Miss Louisa C. Meyer, of Canton.

JOHN O. KREIGHBAUM, ex-commissioner of Stark county, now residing at New Berlin, was born in Lake township, Stark county, July 21, 1854. His father was William Kreighbaum, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, January 17, 1813, while his grandfather, George Kreighbaum, also a native of Pennsylvania, was born about 1788, the year of the inauguration of the first President of the United States, the immortal Washington. The genealogy of the Kreighbaum family has not been traced back farther than the paternal grandfather, but it is quite likely that the latter's parents were natives of Germany, who emigrated to America about the time of or before the war of the Revolution and settled in Pennsylvania with numerous other emigrants from the fatherland. George Kreighbaum, the grandfather, moved his family to Stark county, Ohio, and located in Lake township, one mile east of where Greentown now stands. He was a farmer and followed that calling up to the time of his death, which occurred in the year 1848. He was elected county commissioner in 1838, and qualified and served for a number of years, as is shown by the old records of Stark county. Almost constantly from the time of his settlement in the county the task of filling some one of the township positions was exacted of him. He was a worthy man, who had seen much of the world, and all of his neighbors had implicit confidence in his integrity and ability. William Kreighbaum, the father of the subject, was only four years old when his parents moved to Stark county, and here he grew to manhood, receiving such limited education as the country schools afforded at that time. However, he was a man of strong mental powers and much natural capacity, which caused his neighbors to look upon him as a man of far more learning than he really had. Almost before he had attained his maturity he had met and married Miss Sarah Hane, also a native of Pennsylvania. Like most of the young people of the west at that time, they settled upon a farm and devoted themselves to agricultural pursuits, there being little else in those days for young people to do to gain a livelihood. They located in Lake township, and by their industry and thrift made a fine farm, built a comfortable home and occupied it until their deaths. He died April 7, 1869, while her death occurred in November, 1882. To William and Sarah Kreighbaum fourteen children were born, the youngest of whom is John O., the subject of this sketch. They are named Uriac, Henry, Matilda, George, William, Amanda, Edwin, Ellen, Mahala, Hiram, Clinton, Frances and John C. All were given the best advantages to secure an education which the country then afforded, and upon attaining maturity they went out into the world to do for themselves, settled in different localities, married and prospered.

At the time of the death of William Kreighbaum, in 1869, John O. was little more than fourteen years old. He had attended school during the winter months most of the years of his boyhood and worked upon the farm during the summer. There was little change in his life after the sad event which rendered him fatherless. His mother supervised and his elder brothers executed the work of the farm until he became old enough and strong enough to take the place of the latter, and he remained at home, working for his mother, until he was twenty-one years of age. The first three years thereafter he resided in Jackson, and then in Plain township. He then moved to New Berlin and engaged in the business of dealing in live stock and wool, in which business he has been very prosperous. In 1884 he was elected a member of the New Berlin school board, and has served continuously ever since. In 1889 he was elected county commissioner, and so well did he guard the public interests that he was twice afterward returned to the same position. Even before he attained his majority and had the right of the elective franchise conferred upon him, he took an active part in political affairs. He is a firm believer in the principles of the Democratic party, and is always zealously interested in the success of its candidates. He and his family are members of the English Reformed church, and are liberal contributors to its support. He is a member of the Knights of the Maccabees, and of the Stark county Grange.

In the county in which he has lived so long and where he is so well known, Mr. Kreighbaum has always been a leader in every public enterprise, and in every popular movement calculated to benefit the community his influence and support are eagerly sought, he being frequently able to accomplish more by personal solicitation than others can with the courts of law at their back. One instance is all that need be given. When arrangements were being made for the building of the Canton & Akron Railroad, some discussion arose as to the best manner in which to secure the right of way. The legal process known as "condemnation proceedings" was advocated by most of those interested as the surest and speediest way. Mr. Kreighbaum, being opposed to this process unless it was found absolutely necessary, personally offered to undertake the task of soliciting the desired right of way, if afforded a little time before beginning condemnation proceedings, and before the time had expired laid in the hands of the company fifty-two warranty deeds to the right of way, thus obviating the necessity of resorting to any legal proceedings whatever. The people had confidence in the man who did the soliciting, believed implicitly what he told them, and as a personal favor granted all that could possibly have been secured by means of a law suit. He also obtained the right of way from Navarre to New Philadelphia, securing one hundred and forty deeds. Those who know Mr.

Kreighbaum best predict that there is a far wider field for the exercise of his talents in the future than he has had in the past. Age is not a matter of years, but of conditions, and his condition bespeaks him still a young man. Even his years are by no means against him. Many of the noted men of history accomplished their life work after they had passed the fiftieth milestone.

JOSEPH A. PIERSON is a native son of Stark county, having been born in the village of New Berlin, on the 24th of November, 1850. His paternal grandparents, Peter and Catharine Pierson, were born in the Haute Rhine province of France, whence they emigrated to America in the year 1828, coming to Stark county and taking up their abode in Jackson township. Among the children who accompanied them on their removal to the United States was John Peter Pierson, the father of the subject of this sketch. He was but ten years of age at the time, having been born in the upper Rhine district of France, in July, 1818. He received his early education in the common schools of Stark county and displayed such a thirst for learning and fondness for books that he was only too glad to embrace an opportunity to read law, becoming a student in one of the pioneer law offices of Canton. He was regularly admitted to the bar of the state and while considering a suitable place in which to open an office and duly engage in the practice of his profession, he yielded to the importunities of his brother, Joseph, and with him became associated in business, believing it expedient to add to his financial resources before taking up his professional work, in which his success would be thereby conserved. In the section of France in which the Pierson brothers were born the brewing of ale, porter and beer was a line of enterprise carried on with no little success.

Breweries had not as yet been established in Ohio, and malt liquors of all kinds were practically unknown in this section of the Union. Accordingly the two brothers decided that a promising field of enterprise was offered through manufacturing this line of products, and they erected a small brewery, which was the first built in this section. There was no doubt as to the genuineness and potency of the products of the brewery, but the early settler had become wedded to the exhilarating effects of rye and bourbon whiskey and could not be persuaded to consider the lighter and more wholesome beverages. To make the brewery a success a taste for its products had to be cultivated, and as their resources were not adequate to justify them in waiting for such a change, John Peter withdrew and the business was carried on by Joseph for some years thereafter. Evidently it had been undertaken prematurely by half a century.

John Peter Pierson was married in the year 1847 and immediately afterward located in the village of New Berlin, where he established himself in the mercantile business. The venture was prospered from the time of its inception. Year after year the patrons increased in numbers and the enterprise expanded in scope and importance, and Mr. Pierson continued to be actively engaged in this line of business in New Berlin during the remainder of his long, honorable and signally useful life, his death occurring on the 9th of July, 1899. During his entire business career he commanded almost unlimited credit, not so much by reason of the property which he owned and his ability to pay as on account of the promptitude with which all indebtedness was liquidated by him. He was a man who was scrupulously conscientious and honest in all his dealings. His counsel and advice were so highly prized that persons in difficulty or anticipating trouble came long distances to consult him.

In the year 1847 John Peter Pierson was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Donze, who was likewise born in France, being a daughter of Dennis Donze, who became numbered among the early pioneer settlers of Stark county. Though he was of venerable age at the time of the war of the Rebellion, in November, 1861, he manifested his loyalty to his adopted country by enlisting in Company G, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until nearly the expiration of his term, when he received an honorable discharge, returning to his home in Stark county, where he passed the residue of his life. The captain of his company was James Speakman, while the regiment was commanded by Colonel Curly Smith. He died while on a visit to France. Louis Donze, the only son of Dennis, also served during the Rebellion, having been a member of Company K, Third Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, in which he enlisted on the 1st of March, 1862, and he died while in the service, on the 15th of August, 1863, at Huntsville, Alabama. At the time of this writing (March, 1903) the mother of the subject is still living, being seventy-one years of age and being specially well preserved in mind and body, while she retains her home in New Berlin.

In his native town of New Berlin Joseph A. Pierson, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared to maturity, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools he supplemented this discipline by a course of study in a business college in the city of St. Louis, Missouri. Thereafter he held, for varying intervals, several responsible positions, which he filled with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his employers. He was for a time incumbent of a clerkship in a general store in Illinois, and at Bluemount, that state, he did effective service as general clerk for the Hatfield Company, owners and operators of large grain elevators, remaining with this firm for a period of two years. He then engaged in freighting on the frontier, driving a four-horse team which he had purchased for the purpose and having his headquarters at a point in southwestern Kansas, sixty miles distant from a railroad. He did quite an extensive business, transporting settlers and freight to various portions of the great west and meeting with many exciting experiences. He had to deal with all sorts and conditions of men, while the Indians were a constant menace to life and property, as they still infested the plains and frequently went forth on the war path and manifested their enmity toward the white settlers who were so nobly and courageously striving to open the way for civilization, many of them sacrificing their lives in the attempt. In his freighting enterprise Mr. Pierson visited divers sections of the new and undeveloped west, and his reminiscences of life on the frontier are interesting in the extreme.

In the year 1874 Mr. Pierson returned to the east, having disposed of his freighting equipment, and immediately after his return to Ohio he was appointed to a position in the state asylum for the insane, at Newburg, retaining this incumbency two years and then accepting a similar office in Longview Asylum, in the city of Cincinnati, where for many months he held the office of supervisor of the institution. He resigned this position for the purpose of engaging in business on his own responsibility. He returned to New Berlin in 1880 and here became associated with his father in the lumber business, under the firm name of Peter Pierson & Son. In 1886 the firm name was changed to Joseph A. Pierson and under this title the enterprise has since been successfully carried forward. The plant of the concern is finely equipped, two acres of ground being utilized and excellent and modern buildings having been erected specially for the accommodation of the business. The yard is near the line of the Cleveland Terminal &

Valley Railroad, affording every facility for the handling of lumber at the minimum expense and with the utmost rapidity, and thus he is enabled to carry on a business whose magnitude would do credit to a much larger town. There are four large and substantial buildings, one thirty-six by sixty feet, and two stories in height; one twenty-four by seventy-two feet, and likewise two stories in height; a lumber shed forty by sixty feet in dimensions; and an office building eighteen by thirty feet. Mr. Pierson embarked in the lumber business in 1880 and his present extensive operations in the line indicate what is possible of accomplishment on the part of one who will bend his energies to the work in hand, whose life is animated by absolute integrity of purpose and who spares no pains to meet the demands of his patrons. Honesty and careful and progressive methods have been the conservators of his success. His trade is of representative order, his bills of lading being large, while he receives orders from all parts of the country, and especially from the farmers of this immediate vicinity, who manifest marked satisfaction with the fair dealing and effective service accorded them. Mr. Pierson stands high as a citizen and business man and is well and favorably known throughout his native county. In addition to his lumbering business Mr. Pierson is the owner of a fine farm, of one hundred and sixty acres, two and one-half miles northeast of New Berlin, and in the village his modern and finely appointed residence stands as one of the most attractive homes in this section.

In politics Mr. Pierson has always been identified with the Democratic party, and while he gives a staunch support to its principles and policies he has never been known as an "offensive partisan," being too liberal and broad-minded in his views to be classified as such in any particular. During the last administration of President Cleveland Mr. Pierson served four years as postmaster of New Berlin and discharged the duties of the office to the eminent satisfaction of all its patrons, the choice meeting with uniform approval and endorsement in the community, without reference to partisan affiliations. He was commissioned a notary public for the county of Stark on the 18th of June, 1889, and has continuously been incumbant of this office since that time. He is thoroughly public-spirited, and all worthy objects for the promotion of the general welfare of the community receive his support and encouragement, while he has so ordered his life as to gain and retain the unequivocal confidence and regard of those with whom he has come in contact in business or social lines.

On the 27th of October, 1885, Mr. Pierson was united in marriage to Miss Flora Dumont, a young woman of gracious presence and many accomplishments. She was born in Perry township, this county, on the 29th of June, 1852, and received her educational discipline in the public schools. She is a devout Christian, being a member of the Presbyterian church, and her gentle and gracious character has endeared her to all with whom she has come in contact in the various relations of life. She has been a true companion and helpmeet to her husband, a devoted mother and a genuine friend, and through her influence the home life has been of idyllic type. She has ever been an extensive and careful reader and keeps well informed on the current topics of the day, being an interesting conversationalist and ever extending the hospitality of her beautiful home to her wide circle of friends. Her father, the late John J. L. Dumont, was for many years one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Stark county. He was born near the city of Paris, France, on the 25th of July, 1816. Mr. Dumont loved his adopted country and its institutions and was an honest, upright citizen and kindly gentleman, one whose friendly and unassuming ways and genial hospitality at his home, near the city of Massillon, did much to brighten and to cheer the circles of social intercourse. To Mr. and Mrs. Pierson were born three children, one son and two daughters, both of the daughters dying in infancy. Raymond J., the only surviving child, was born on the 27th of January, 1889, and is a bright and intelligent boy and one whose life is most promising. He is an appreciative reader and student, finding more satisfaction in his books than in the outdoor sports with his young companions, while he is also showing excellent musical taste, pursuing his studies in this line under the effective direction of Miss Huber, of the city of Canton. Although he was only thirteen years of age at the time, the following estimate concerning Raymond J. Pierson was published in Volume 113 of the Phrenological Journal, in March, 1902, the same being issued by the Fowler & Wells Company, of New York city: "The world can not go too fast for the subject whose portrait we have now before us. He takes pleasure in a driving business, trade or profession that requires hustle. He is a first-rate observer and will not let anyone else beat him in what he sees, observes or takes into account. His features are strongly represented, especially his nose, which corresponds with his mental executive power. His method, sense of order and system help him to evolve ideas in a thoroughly practical and up-to-date fashion. He will make a good buyer of stock and will make no mistakes; in fact, persons can take his judgment on the material that he handles. He is quick to take a hint and hates a long-drawn-out explanation, that fails to touch him as does one of a short and concise order. His eye is keen and goes right through one, or through any material when he is looking at it. He will make money fast, and if he marries a prudent, economical wife he will be able to lay up riches."

LEVI A. STONER.—The subject of this sketch, Levi A. Stoner, of Plain township, Stark county, is a fair instance of heredity. His father is John L. Stoner, of whom a sketch will be found in another part of this volume. The leading, dominant trait of character possessed by the father is a persistent zeal in any cause which he espouses. He is a believer in prohibition and has an abhorrence of the liquor traffic little less intense than that of John Brown on the question of slavery. Levi A. Stoner has inherited much of the warmth of his father's nature, particularly upon the temperance question. All of his politics and much of his religion is embodied in the one question of prohibition.

Levi A. Stoner was born in the village of New Berlin, Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, January 22, 1854. All of the days of his youth were spent in his native township and beneath his father's roof, his education being received at the common schools of his township, at the high school at Smithville and at Mt. Union College. On February 20, 1879, he was united in marriage, at Canton, Ohio, to Miss Catharine Krumroy, a native of Green township, Summit county, Ohio, and a daughter of Francis and Mary Krumroy. She was reared and educated in her native township. The young couple established themselves at housekeeping on a farm one mile south of New Berlin, in Plain township, and there they have resided ever since. They own this farm, which consists of one hundred and twenty-two acres, and on it they have erected a large brick residence. The place is splendidly improved and thoroughly cultivated, and they carry on general farming and stock raising, meeting with the most gratifying success in all they have undertaken.

Mr. and Mrs. Stoner are the parents of four children, one of whom, Eddie, died in infancy; the others are: Mary E., John W. and Chester K., each of whom has received the advantages of a good common school education. In religion Mr. Stoner is a member of the German Reformed church and one of its elders, having also for nine consecutive terms served as Sunday school superintendent. In all church work he is quite active, and every movement on behalf of temperance receives his warm approval and hearty support. He is a member of the Patrons of Husbandry, is deeply interested in the cause of education and has been a member of the school board a number of terms. He is a man of firm convictions, candid in the expression of them and zealous in the advocacy of any cause which he espouses. The son of so worthy a father, cradled and educated under such commendable influences, it is a matter of no surprise to those who know the family that Levi A. Stoner is the frank, sincere and persistent man that he is.

JOHN H. KRALL was born in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, May 23, 1857. His father, Henry Krall, now deceased, was born in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, while his mother, Catherine (Ringer) Krall, was a native of Stark county, Ohio. The paternal grandfather of the subject was Tobias Krall, one of the early pioneers of Stark county, who came here when his son Henry was but two years old, and resided here until his death. Henry grew to manhood, married, reared a large family in Plain township, and in 1870 moved to Nimishillen township, where he resided until his death, at the age of seventy years. His wife was also about seventy years of age at the time of her death, which did not occur until some years after the death of her husband, she dying in May, 1900. Ten children were born to Henry Krall and his wife Catharine, the fourth of whom was John H., the subject of this sketch. The first thirteen years of his life were spent in Plain township, going thence into Nimishillen township with his parents, where he grew to manhood. He rented and cultivated the old home farm for sixteen years, when, in 1901, he purchased a farm of his own, the one on which he now lives, which was formerly the William Lesh place, to which he moved in the spring of 1902. It consists of one hundred and eleven acres, and is fertile and well improved, but much more valuable improvements are now contemplated by Mr. Krall.

On the 19th day of November, 1885, John H. Krall was united in marriage to Miss Melinda Anstine, of Plain township. She is a native of Pennsylvania, but was only two years of age when she came with her parents to Stark county. Her father was the late John Anstine, of Plain township, her mother's maiden name having been Landis. To Mr. and Mrs. John H. Krall two children were born, Jesse and Orra F., of whom the former is deceased, having passed away at the age of two years.

Close application and incessant industry have made John H. Krall what he is, a man very comfortably situated in life. He has always been an agriculturist and every portion of his success has been reaped from the soil. His domestic relations are most happy. Possessed of a comfortable home, with abundance to supply it, and enjoying the confidence of all his neighbors and acquaintances, it must be acknowledged that his life has been most successful.

WILLIAM C. STEELE, M. D.—The world has little use for the misanthrope. The universal brotherhood is widely recognized, as is also the truth that he serves God best who serves his fellow men. No profession calls for greater self-sacrifice or more devoted attention than does the medical profession, and the most successful physician is he who through love of his fellow men gives his time and earnest attention to the relief of human suffering.

The successful physician is bound to make friends wherever he is known and will retain the respect and esteem of all classes of people. In this respect the village of New Berlin, Stark county, and all of the country for miles around, is especially blessed in having a most able practitioner in the person of Dr. William C. Steele, of New Berlin. He was born at Mogadore, Summit county, Ohio, November 27, 1851, and was reared and grew to manhood in that village, receiving his education in the common schools, after which he engaged in clerking in a general store, about the same time being elected justice of the peace. In discharging the duties of his office and attending to the business of the store five years of his life were spent. Every moment of his leisure time during this period he devoted to the improvement of his mind by the perusal of useful books. At that time there were very few young people in the locality as well informed on all important subjects of interest as he was. About this time he determined to take up the study of medicine, and, entering the office of Dr. J. C. Ferguson, of Mogadore, he applied himself most assiduously to the study of medicine and surgery. Later he entered Wooster University, at Cleveland, taking the course in the medical department and graduating from that institution in the class of 1881. He immediately repaired to New Berlin, opened an office and entered upon the practice of his profession. In that field of labor he has remained ever since, steadily extending his practice until at this time it is much more than he is physically able to attend.

Dr. Steele is a member of the Canton Medical Society, and president of the Stark County Medical Society, belonging also to the North-eastern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He is a member of Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons, of Lodge No. 460, Knights of Pythias, of

New Berlin, and Tent No. 28, Knights of the Maccabees. Of the latter body Dr. Steele has been the examining physician for more than fifteen years. Its membership is over one hundred, and during all those years but one death has occurred among the members, thus testifying to the ability of the examining physician and the conscientious manner in which the duties of the position are performed by him.

On May 20, 1877, at Mogadore, Summit county, Ohio, Dr. William C. Steele was united in marriage to Miss Louise M. Myers, a native of the village wherein she was married, a daughter of Hon. F. W. Myers, and a lady of education, talent and refinement. They are the parents of five children, three of whom are living, viz: May E., Grace L. and William W. Homer died in New Berlin, in 1881, when less than two years old, and John E. died in the same place, in 1888, at the age of eight months.

The family owns and occupies one of the handsomest and most comfortable homes in New Berlin. The Doctor also owns a small farm convenient to the town, it being well tilled and the operation of which is carefully superintended by him. His large practice, however, gives him little time for the gratification of his tastes in agriculture. Dr. Steele is rated by his patrons and the public generally as among the first of his profession, and personally he is very popular. During all the years of his practice he has had many difficult and what were then considered hopeless cases, both in medicine and surgery, in most of which he has been successful, so that there are today many men and women in New Berlin and the country around who probably owe their lives to the skill and care of Dr. Steele. Minor favors men and women may be ingrates enough to forget, but the favor of a life granted them, when death seemed a certainty, seldom fails to stir the warmest impulses of gratitude in the human heart. It is because of such favors as these, and because of his uniform kindness, courtesy and consideration for the feelings of humanity generally, that Dr. Steele has won such a warm place in the hearts of his fellow citizens. There are few men who deserve more than he does at the hands of a community, and there are few communities more gratefully ready to acknowledge the obligation than is that which inhabits New Berlin and the country about it.

JOHN CUMMINS is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, on the 6th of February, 1853, and being a son of Patrick and Mary (Quinn) Cummins, both of whom were born and reared in the Emerald Isle, being of fine old Irish ancestry. They were married in their native land and shortly afterward, in 1848, they emigrated to America and took up their abode in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where the father followed the trade of brick molder until about the year 1860, when he came to Canton, where he has since maintained his home, being one of the highly respected citizens of the place. His loved and devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest in 1895, at the age of sixty-five years, having been a sincere and devout communicant of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, of which her husband likewise is a communicant and honored member. They became the parents of eight children, namely: Mary, who resides in Canton with her father; John, the immediate subject of this review; Katy and Margaret, who are twins; Edward, who resides in Canton, where he is engaged in the butcher business; William Alexander, who is engaged in teaming in Canton; Frank, who resides in Oregon, where he is engaged in the bridge business; and Catherine, who resides in Canton.

John Cummins, subject of this sketch, was seven years of age at the time of the family removal to Canton, and here he was reared to maturity, his educational advantages being somewhat limited, as he was able to attend only through the winter months. He was employed on a farm from his twelfth year and attended the Buck Hill district school, in Canton township, where he devoted his attention to the common English branches of study, his discipline in the connection being adequate to form a solid basis for the practical and well rounded education he later received in connection with the active associations and duties of life. He continued to be identified with farm work until he had attained the age of twenty years, for a time conducting a farm on shares. About the year 1873 he returned to the city of Canton and engaged in teaming, in the employ of the Dannemiller Company, while in 1876 he was appointed a member of the police force of the city, in which capacity he rendered effective service for a period of five years, while in 1884 he engaged in the draying and moving business on his own responsibility and proved successful in his efforts along this line, while the eventual outcome was the establishment of his present flourishing enterprise. In 1898 he enlarged the scope of his business by providing a storage warehouse, and in 1900 he secured the present excellent facilities in this line by purchasing the Harvey mill property, on East Ninth street, which substantial building he utilizes for storage purposes, the structure being provided with ample protection from loss by fire, while the utmost care is exercised in keeping all goods intact from damage of any sort. Mr. Cummins has built up a large and representative business in the various departments of his enterprise, and his methods have been such as to commend him to the unequivocal confidence and esteem of the people of the community, so that his business is constantly increasing in extent and importance, while he has the best of facilities in all lines, including moving vans of modern style and a fine line of drays, etc., so that he is prepared to meet promptly and effectively all demands placed upon him. His business policy has been a progressive one and one of the utmost integrity, and none can begrudge him a success so worthily achieved by personal effort, while he is honored as one of the able and representative business men of his home city. In politics Mr. Cummins accords a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he has been incumbent of offices of public trust and responsibility, being at the present time a member of the board of equalization, while for four years he represented his ward in the city council, where he lent his influence in the support of good municipal government and in furthering the best interests of the city. Mr. Cummins and his wife are communicants of St. John's Catholic church, while fraternally he holds membership in the Knights of St. John, the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association and the Knights of Columbus.

On the 13th of May, 1880, Mr. Cummins was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Monnin, a daughter of Charles and Josephine (Schobard) Monnin, both of whom were born in France, whence they came to America many years ago, while they finally located in Canton, where both died. The subject and his wife have one child, Norbert, aged twenty-two years, engaged in business with his father.

CHARLES A. BOETTTLER.—Among the most worthy of Plain township's early settlers were the Boettler family, of whom Charles A., the subject of this sketch, is a worthy representative.

Charles A. Boettler, of Plain township, Stark county, was born at Uniontown, Summit county, Ohio, March 14, 1862. His father was Christian Boettler, who was born in Lake township, Stark county, in 1835, resided the greater part of his life in the county of his birth and died at Kent, Portage county, Ohio, February 25, 1898, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. His wife and the mother of the subject of this sketch was Anna M. Pontius, a native of Plain township, born April 16, 1835. She is still living, at the age of sixty-seven years, and makes her residence in Louisville. The only child born to Christian and Anna Boettler was Charles A., the subject. A portion of his youth was passed in each of the counties of Summit, Stark and Portage, most of the time engaged in farm labor, the remainder in attendance upon the schools of that day. November 19, 1885, he was united in marriage to Miss Nettie Firestone, at the home of the bride's parents, in Plain township. She was a lady of refinement, good attainments and of an excellent family, born January 10, 1862, the daughter of Hiram and Margaret (McDowell) Firestone, old residents of Stark county. Her father died August, 1881, her mother, November 20, 1888. Mrs. Charles Boettler had one sister, Mary E., who is the wife of Edward S. Correll, and one brother, Henry N. Firestone, a brief review of whose career will be found elsewhere in this volume. To Mr. and Mrs. Boettler four children were born, viz: Birdella F., Floyd E., Lorin W. D. and Christian G., all of whom are bright and intelligent, worthy descendants of such an honorable ancestry.

The first three years of the married life of Charles A. Boettler and his young wife were spent at Kent, Portage county, Ohio, after which they settled on the farm where they now reside. It was known at the time as the Hiram Wise place, and consists of two hundred and seven acres of fertile, well improved land. It is well fenced, well ditched and the farm buildings thereon are far superior to the average buildings to be found in this section of Ohio, which is a very high compliment, as no section of the state possesses better improvements than this. It is a splendid piece of land and the manner in which it is cared for and cultivated reflects credit upon the owner. The domestic relations of Mr. Boettler are most happy. Possessing a comfortable home, with all the means necessary to supply every want, with a kind wife and obedient, intelligent children, he certainly has every reason for contentment and satisfaction.

JEREMIAH W. HESS.—Since his birth, October 23, 1839, a period of sixty-three years, Mr. Hess has been a resident of Stark county. He is well known in the township of his residence, and many of those adjoining, and it is a common expression among his friends and acquaintances that his word is as good as his note or his bond.

Jeremiah W. Hess was born in Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, the son of David Hess, a native of Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania. His mother was Lidia Wierbach, who was born in Canton township, Stark county, but who died at the age of forty-eight years, her husband passing away at the age of eighty-one. Of a family of nine children Jeremiah, the subject of this sketch, was the eldest. He was reared in Bethlehem township, Stark county, and resided there until 1869, when he was thirty years of age, having in the meantime secured the benefits of a good common school education. He was thrifty and industrious, and by that time had accumulated sufficient of this world's goods to imbue him with an ambition to have a home of his own. March 12, 1869, in St. Joseph county, Michigan, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Schleiff, a native of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, born September 12, 1843, and they established themselves on a farm in Jackson township, where they resided for seven years, steadily prospering year by year. From there they moved to New Berlin and later into Lake township, and again later back to the village of New Berlin, where they have since resided. He is the owner of a splendid, well-improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres, besides considerable personal property, which affords him a very comfortable income, sufficient to supply every want.

Mr. and Mrs. Hess are the parents of seven children, three of whom are dead, viz: Robert C. died when six months old; Homer D. was two years old at the time of his death; and Charles E. died in Plain township August 6, 1890, his death having been caused by a kick from a horse. The living children are Artilissa, Burton W., Ellen and Ruby. Artilissa is the wife of A. Fullmer. The parents of Mrs. Jeremiah W. Hess were Jacob and Elizabeth (Christman) Schleiff. Her father was a native of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and died in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, at the age of seventy-two years, while her mother was Elizabeth Christman, born in Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, and who died in Tuscarawas county at the age of fifty-three years. Both were most praiseworthy, estimable citizens, highly respected, not only in the place of their nativity, but in the various localities in which they lived, and in Tuscarawas county, where they died. Of this family of six children, Mrs. Hess was the youngest.

In politics Mr. Hess is a Democrat, and is always actively interested in behalf of his party. While never seeking public position, local offices have been thrust upon him in nearly every township in which he has lived. He served two terms as trustee of Jackson township, two terms as trustee of Lake township, and was for a number of years a school director in the latter township. He and his wife are members of the Reform church, interested in its work and liberal in their support of it and every meritorious cause. Personally Mr. Hess is a man of much force of character, there being very few subjects upon which he has not formed an opinion, and he always has the courage of his convictions, candor, frankness and sincerity characterizing every word and act of his life. He believes language was made for the expression of thoughts, not as the French wit, Tallyrand, asserted, for the purpose of concealing them, and a forceful thought always finds a forceful expression from him.

REV. JOHN CHANEY HANLEY.—

The family from which Rev. John Chaney Hanley is descended had its origin in England many years ago, the town of Hanley, in Staffordshire, being so named in honor of the subject's ancestors. Of the remote history of the Hanleys but little can be learned, but from what is known the family appears to have been eminently respectable and that the name was of much more than ordinary consequence is attested by the fact of its having been given the place referred to above. In an early day representatives of the family crossed over to Ireland, of which country Charles Hanley, grandfather of the subject, was a native. Charles Hanley was born and reared in Belfast, and spent his entire life in that city, dying a number of years ago. One of his sons, Charles by name, also a native of Belfast, was born on the 22d day of August, 1838. By reason of his parents' somewhat straitened pecuniary circumstances, he received but limited educational training, and while still a youth took up the carpenter's trade, at which in due time he became an efficient workman. About the year 1856 he bade farewell to the land of his birth, and, like many of his countrymen, sought a new home and a new destiny in the great country beyond the sea, of which he had read much and heard many encouraging reports. Susan Curby, who became the wife of Charles Hanley, was born in East Liverpool, Ohio, August

2, 1838, her parents, Pierce and ——— (Jenkins) Curby, having been among the pioneer settlers of Columbiana county. After his marriage Mr. Hanley continued to work at his trade in East Liverpool until the breaking out of the great Rebellion, when he enlisted and served until the close of the war. At the expiration of his period of enlistment he returned to Columbiana county and resumed his carpentry work, in connection with which he also labored for some time in a planing mill in East Liverpool. Several years ago he became superintendent of buildings for certain pottery companies, and to this line of carpentry he is still devoting his attention, his home at the present time being in East Liverpool. He served his ward for ten years in the common council, after East Liverpool was incorporated as a city, and in many other ways he has been interested in public affairs as an intelligent and enterprising citizen. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian church and as devoted Christians they spared no pains in bringing up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The good seed appears to have fallen upon fertile soil as their sons and daughters, ten in all, have grown to the full stature of symmetrically developed manhood and womanhood, a credit to their parents and blessings to the communities in which they live.

Rev. James Chaney Hanley was born May 13, 1870, in East Liverpool, Columbiana county, Ohio, and attended the public schools of his native place until his fourteenth year. He then, in 1884, entered the office of the Evening Review, a daily paper published in that city, served his apprenticeship and worked at the trade of compositor until 1890, when he withdrew to become a student of Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1897. While pursuing his studies in the above institution Mr. Hanley spent a part of two years in the Mission College of the United Presbyterian church, at Norfolk, Virginia, and after finishing his literary education entered in 1897 the seminary at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, where he completed his theological course three years later. Immediately following his graduation Mr. Hanley accepted the pastorate of the United Presbyterian church at Fresno, California, spending one year in that field, at the expiration of which time he took charge of his present work in Canton. He entered upon his duties with the church in this city January 1, 1902, and has steadily grown in the affections of his people and in the esteem of the public, his labors thus far being blessed with a large measure of success. Although a young man, Mr. Hanley has developed fine powers as a minister and bids fair to rise to a position of distinguished usefulness in the noble calling to which his life is being devoted. His natural abilities, moulded and strengthened by thorough intellectual discipline and theological training, peculiarly fit him for the work of the ministry. He is a pleasing speaker, clear and logical in the presentation of the words of divine truth and eloquent in impressing upon the minds and hearts of his hearers the claims of the gospel. The congregation to which he breaks the bread of life is steadily progressing in spiritual things and under his wise leadership and faithful guidance the work is destined to increase in magnitude until the church becomes one of the most aggressive body of worshippers in the city of Canton.

ELI MILLER.—The Miller family is of staunch German extraction, Samuel Miller, the great-great-grandfather of the subject, having passed his entire life in that fatherland which has contributed so valuable an element to American civilization, progress and stable prosperity. His son, Jacob, great-grandfather of him whose name introduces this article, was born in Germany, about the year 1750, and in 1775 he emigrated to America, settling near Morrison's Cove, Pennsylvania, where his son Jacob, through whom the direct line is traced to the subject, was born on the 18th of January, 1780, and there he was reared to manhood. In the year 1802 he was there united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Smith, and they became the parents of two sons, John and David. The former was the father of the subject, and the latter was for many years proprietor of the Talbert Hotel, at New Philadelphia, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, where he died, having been twice married. The maiden name of his first wife was Salina Davis, and that of his second was a Mrs. Talbert. In 1807 Jacob Miller removed with his family to Ohio, settling near the present town of Cadiz, in Harrison county, where his devoted wife died in 1810. About two years later Mr. Miller married Miss Susanna Castater, and they became the parents of twelve children. Their grandchildren number ninety-eight, great-grandchildren one hundred and eighty-six, great-great-grandchildren one hundred and twenty-six, and great-great-great-grandchildren two, bringing the total of their descendants up to the aggregate of four hundred and twenty-six. Finally Jacob Miller and his family took up their abode on a farm in Pike township, Stark county, and here he lived in peace and contentment, surrounded by his numerous children, until his death, on the 26th of December, 1853, at the age of seventy-three years, while his cherished and devoted wife long survived him, passing away on the 18th of December, 1880, at the venerable age of eighty-five years. Both rest side by side in the old churchyard of Asbury chapel, which is located on their old homestead farm. Both were zealous and honored members of the Methodist Episcopal church and did more for the upbuilding and sustaining of its work in the locality in which they resided than did any other family, Mr. Miller having been classleader and recording steward for many years.

It is but consistent that we offer more detailed information in regard to the early career of Jacob Miller in Ohio. Upon locating in Harrison county he took up a tract of government land, which was heavily timbered. He instituted the arduous work of reclaiming the land and placing it under cultivation, and there he continued to reside for a number of years as one of the pioneers of the county, enduring all the trials and vicissitudes involved in the conditions and exigencies of place and period. From that locality the family finally removed to a farm on Tinker's creek, south of the city of Cleveland, in Cuyahoga county, and Grandfather Miller now turned his attention to a new and important line of enterprise, that of freighting between Ohio points and the cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore, transportation at this time being had entirely by the overland route, save as the canals and natural water courses could be utilized, and the facilities of this sort were few and inadequate. He equipped two six-horse wagons, one of which he drove in person, while the father of our subject "tooled" the other, as the modern coaching expression terms it, though one may readily conjecture that there was a vast difference in the labor involved in the early toil and the latter-day recreation. Starting from Ohio, the wagons would be loaded with flour, bacon and other products of the new state, and on the return would be brought dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes and other commodities demanded, the trip being made by way of Pittsburgh, Wheeling and other points. At Wheeling, West Virginia, there was but one ferry across the Ohio river, and its operator demanded an extortionate fee for the transferring of the wagon and horses. Grandfather Miller refused to accede to his demands and stated that unless the ferryman would accept a reasonable recompense he would swim the horses across with the loads. The man remained obdurate, and Mr. Miller carried out his plan, floating the wagons by taking off the stay chains and with them attaching buoys to the axletrees of the wagons. The crossing was made in safety, and to the evident discomfiture of the ferryman, who thereafter proved amenable to reason. While thus engaged in the freighting business Jacob Miller also conducted a hotel,—or tavern, as the caravan-series were then commonly designated,—on Tinker's creek, and here on one occasion he effected the capture of a horse thief through a bit of wise manoeuvring. The man came along on the back of a fine horse, which was evidently jaded from long and hard riding. He asked for accommodations for the night and Mr. Miller agreed to provide the same, though his suspicions had been aroused from the start. The horse was stabled and the family and guests went to bed. About one o'clock in the night the man in question arose and endeavored to leave without arousing the household. Mr. Miller, who was a man of courage and determination, was now fully convinced that the man was a malfactor, and he ordered him to return to his bed, and when a refusal came he overpowered the thief and strapped him down to await the daylight. In the early morning his pursuers came to the hotel and were overjoyed in being able to apprehend their man, enthusiastically commending Mr. Miller for his discernment and effective action in the case.

Jacob Miller came to Pike township, Stark county, and here he effected the purchase of a large tract of land, which he to a large extent reclaimed and placed under cultivation, and there, as already noted, he passed the remainder of his long, honorable and signally useful life, being a man of genial, frank and kindly nature and having the love and esteem of all who knew him. In addition to almost individually defraying the expense of erecting the Asbury chapel, situated on one corner of his farm, he contributed seven hundred dollars to the erection of what was undoubtedly the first brick church edifice in Pike township, while to the same cause his son John, father of the subject, contributed five hundred dollars. In politics he was a Whig, and he served as township treasurer of Pike township for many years, his word being held as good as any bond ever recorded or indemnified.

John Miller, father of the subject, was born near Morrison's Cove, Pennsylvania, in the year 1805 and was about three years of age when his father came to Ohio. He was reared in Harrison county and on the homestead near Cleveland, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the primitive schools of the period. He assisted his father in his freighting operations until he had attained the age of twenty-two years, and about that time he signalized his independence and self-reliance by assuming connubial responsibilities, being united in marriage to Miss Eliza Cox, who was born in Venango county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Samuel Cox, who was a furnace man in the early days. Samuel Cox came with his family to North Industry, Stark county, where he was engaged in the furnace business for somewhat more than a decade, after which he returned to Venango county, Pennsylvania, where both he and his wife passed the rest of their lives. He was a man of fine physique and herculean strength, weighing two hundred and twenty pounds, and he gained a wide reputation for his physical prowess, defeating many a bully in fisticuff encounters, though he never provoked these. On one occasion a man of this character, living at Portsmouth, in the extreme southwestern part of the state, came all the way to Stark county on horseback in order to pit himself against Mr. Cox. On learning that this individual had come to whip him, Mr. Cox advised him to go to bed and rest from his long journey, arranging a meeting for the morning. Suffice it to say that the result of the encounter was that Grandfather Cox had to put his antagonist in bed and that nine days elapsed ere the discomfited victim was able to start for his home. Mr. Cox was born in northern Scotland and came to the United States when a boy. He was about eighty years of age at the time of his death, his wife surviving him by ten years. He was a man of upright character, kindly in his intercourse with his fellow men, but when imposed upon he was ever ready to mete out the merited punishment.

After his marriage John Miller purchased a farm adjoining that of his father, in Pike township, and there he continued to reside until the death of his wife, in 1862, when he came to Canton, which continued to be his home until the end of his long and useful life, his death here occurring on the 2d of November, 1891. He and his wife early became devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church and ever exemplified their faith in their daily walk and conversation. In politics he supported the Whig party up to the time of the organization of the Republican party, when he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward remained a stalwart advocate of its principles. Though not a seeker of political preferment, he was elected constable of Pike township and remained incumbent of this office for the long period of twenty years.

John and Eliza (Cox) Miller became the parents of eight children, concerning whom we offer the following brief data: David, who died in Canton, in 1900, married Amanda Longabach, who survives him; Eli, subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Dine, died in Pike township, in 1898; Hannah, widow of Jacob Dine, resides in Canton; Mary A., who became the wife of Eli Yant, died in Huntington county, Indiana; Susan is the wife of William Dines, of Centerville, Iowa; Martha Ann, who became the wife of Sathael Hines, died in Canton; and Catherine, the wife of James K. Exline, died in Pike township.

Eli Miller, the immediate subject of this resume, was born on the old homestead farm, in Pike township, this county, on the 30th of May, 1831, and was there reared to maturity, early beginning to contribute his quota to the work of the farm, while his preliminary educational discipline was received in the little log schoolhouse of the district, his attendance being confined to the winter terms, as his services were demanded on the farm during the summer seasons. His first teacher was Absalom Hines and his next was Joseph Medill, who attained so marked distinction and honor as the founder and long-time editor of the Chicago Tribune. He and our subject continued to be warm friends until Mr. Medill was summoned into eternal rest, a few years ago, at his home in Chicago, where Mr. Miller had often been entertained. The subject remained on the paternal homestead until he had attained the age of twenty-two years, after which he operated a rented farm, in Pike township, about five years.

In 1858 Mr. Miller came to Canton, and for the ensuing thirty years he was engaged as a commercial traveling salesman, his trade territory within this time having included twenty-seven states of the Union. He has made Canton his home continuously save from 1891 to 1894, during which three years he resided in Chicago. He then returned to Canton, where, in 1896, he associated himself with his daughter, Mrs. L. A. Clewell, in the real-estate business, to which he has since devoted his attention, the firm controlling a large and constantly increasing business. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he has been a local preacher for nearly half a century, having done effective work as a preacher and temperance lecturer during all the years when he was traveling into diverse sections of the Union, and ever aiming to exert a helpful influence in all the relations of life, with its manifold changes and chances. In politics he is a Republican so far as national issues are involved, but in local affairs he maintains an independent attitude.

In Pike township, this county, on the 8th of January, 1853, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Miller to Miss Hannah Chestnutwood, who was born in that township, on the 14th of February, 1833, being a daughter of Samuel and Nancy (Younkman) Chestnutwood, who came to this county as pioneers from New England. Here Mr. Chestnutwood died, and his widow is still living, and celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday on the 17th of September, 1903. She resides in Bethlehem township, and it is interesting to record the fact that her twin sister, Mrs. Anthony Wise, of Marysville, Union county, Ohio, lived until April of the present year (1903). Mr. Miller's cherished and devoted wife, who has been a true helpmeet to him, is still by his side, and on January 4, 1904, it will be their privilege to celebrate their golden wedding anniversary, an event to which their wide circle of friends are looking forward with marked pleasure and gratification. This happy union, which has been ideal in its mutual sympathy and helpfulness, has been blessed with five children, and no more fitting conclusion to this sketch can be given than a brief record concerning them: Narcissus C. is the wife of Prof. Lawrence A. Clewell, and is associated with our subject in business; Nannie is the wife of Henry Fickenbiner, of Wabash county, Indiana; Ollie is the wife of Orville D. Cotton, of Detroit, Michigan; Charles B., who is located at Denver, Colorado, and is considered one of the finest machinists and mechanical engineers in America; and Hannah L. is a resident of Chicago, where she is in charge of the typewriting force in the mammoth publishing house of Ginn & Company, of that city, and also has charge of the sale of their publications in certain states.

WILLIAM H. MCFARLAND.—Professor McFarland has gained a reputation as an able educator and his services as principal of the South Market Street school in Canton were such as to entitle him to consideration in the publication, though he now resides in the capital city of the state.

Robert McFarland, the great-great-grandfather of the subject, was born and reared in the north of Ireland, but came to America in 1740, at the age of sixty-five years, and died where Philadelphia now stands. His son Robert was also reared to maturity in Ireland, and shortly after attaining his majority he set forth to seek his fortunes in America, finally locating in Kentucky. Through his son Robert the lineage is traced to Professor McFarland. When the subject's ancestors landed at Philadelphia they bought land from the Penns, and an uncle, Thomas S. McFarland, of Cable, Ohio, has a copy of the original deed, which contains, among other uncommon features, the privilege "to hunt hawk, fish and burn brush." Robert McFarland was born in Rockbridge county, Virginia, March 7, 1782, and owing to the exigencies of time and place his educational advantages were most meager. He learned the trade of harnessmaking, and as a young man came to Ohio in October, 1806, having worked for a time at his trade in Springfield. On the 12th of April, 1812, he made his advent in what is now Champaign county, Ohio, and located on the old farm where he died. His financial resources at the time of his last removal were represented in the sum of two dollars and fifty cents, two dollars of which he paid out for assistance in the matter of removing his small stock of household goods. He erected a log cabin in the midst of the virgin forest, and was one of the pioneers of the county, where he entered a large tract of government land. He was thrice married, and became the father of nineteen children, and that he and five other of the sturdy pioneers of that immediate neighborhood would have gained the approval of President Roosevelt had they been contemporaries is evident when it is stated that the aggregate number of children of these six men was one hundred and forty-nine. Robert McFarland passed the residue of his life on his farm in Champaign county, having reclaimed a large amount of land and contributed materially to the development and progress of that section of the old Buckeye state. He died on the 28th of December, 1863, at the venerable age of eighty-one years. He saw General William Henry Harrison as he passed through McFarland's farm on his way to the battle of Tippecanoe, and said, "General Harrison, if I ever have a son I will name him after you," and in honor of this distinguished patriot he named his son, William Harrison, who was born shortly after the close of the war. The subject received his name William from this uncle. The McFarland family has been known from the early days to exemplify the most exalted integrity, the strictest habits of temperance and the utmost loyalty and patriotism, while the majority of its representatives have been identified with the Methodist Episcopal church. Robert McFarland, grandfather of the subject, donated land for a site for the church and cemetery of the locality in which he lived, and in which he was ever held in the highest confidence and esteem. At the family re-union held at St. Paris, Champaign county, Ohio, in 1894, ten of the children of Robert McFarland were present, and their combined ages reached the notable aggregate of seven hundred and fifteen years.

John Maley McFarland, father of the subject, was born on the old homestead in Champaign county, Ohio, on the 18th of February, 1824, and was there reared and educated, becoming a man of fine scholastic attainments and devoting his attention to teaching for many years, while he was also a successful farmer, giving his allegiance to the great basic art of agriculture during his entire life at such times as he was not engaged in pedagogic labors. On the 19th of May, 1846, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Gibbs, who was one of the first children born in what is now the city of Urbana, Ohio, the date of her nativity having been April 26, 1825, while her death occurred on the 14th of July, 1884. John M. McFarland survived his devoted wife by about a decade, his death occurring on the 11th of May, 1895. They became the parents of five children, concerning whom the following is data: Olivet Alona died in infancy; Robert Irvin, who married Miss Agnes Baker, resides on the old homestead farm in Champaign county; William H. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Elizabeth is the wife of Luther Myers, and they now reside in Logan county, Ohio, on a farm; and Harrison Lincoln, who is a resident of Chattanooga, Tennessee, married Miss Kate Evans, of Cynthia, Kentucky.

William H. McFarland was born on the homestead farm, in Concord township, Champaign county, Ohio, on the 21st of January, 1853, and early manifested a distinctive predilection for study, so that his father gave him all possible encouragement and assistance in carrying forward his scholastic work, his early training being secured in the public schools of his native county. That his powers of absorption and assimilation were somewhat exceptional is evident when the fact is noted that his initial efforts as a teacher were made when he was but fifteen years of age, and such was his breadth of knowledge and his maturity of judgment that he was successful in his efforts from the very start, while he continued to follow the profession of teaching for the long period of twenty-eight years, gaining marked prestige and doing a work whose value will be cumulative for all time in its influence upon those who have received instruction under his direction, for it is certain that the angle of personal influence is ever widening, being beneficent or baneful, while within its diverging lines come constantly new numbers to be aided or retarded. In this sense none can doubt the great responsibility that canopies every human life, and to be honored is he who makes his influence even tend in the direction of the true and good. For three years Professor McFarland was in charge of a ward in Sidney, Shelby county; was for two years superintendent of the public schools of Quincy, Logan county, and later served as superintendent of schools in the following named places in Ohio: Worthington, Aberdeen, Groveport, Sabina, Jeffersonville and Yellow Springs, while later he was principal of the high school at New Carlisle and principal of a large ward school in Springfield for four years. In Columbus he was for five years principal of a large ward school and simultaneously held a similar incumbency in a night school, his labors during this period being indefatigable and perforce exacting. Seven hundred and ninety-two pupils were enrolled in his day school and three hundred and forty-three in the night school, and it is interesting to note the fact that one of his ambitious pupils in the latter was a negro woman seventy-two years of age. She was in the youngest class and learned to read and write under the instruction of the subject. In 1895-6 Professor McFarland, with his family, resided in Washington, D. C., he being the subscription manager of the Pathfinder, a weekly paper, of which he is still a stockholder. He has been connected with subscription for more than twenty years.

In September, 1900, Professor McFarland came to Canton and forthwith entered upon his duties as principal of the South Market Street school, retaining this incumbency until June 20, 1902, since which time he has devoted his attention to buying lots and building houses in the city of Columbus. He owns a large number of first-class houses with all modern improvements, the rental of which brings him a greater income than he ever received from teaching. He says he does not care to teach any more. Professor McFarland has long been a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose faith he was reared, and has been active in its work, especially that of the Sunday school. From the time of attaining his legal majority he has accorded an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, his first presidential vote having been cast in support of Rutherford B. Hayes. He is a member of Champion Lodge No. 581, Knights of Pythias, in Columbus. On the 15th of June, 1902, on the occasion of the memorial services of the Knights of Pythias in West Lawn cemetery, at Canton, Professor McFarland was chosen to place a wreath of flowers upon the casket of the lamented President McKinley, and on this occasion he delivered an eulogy upon the life and services of the martyred President which called forth the highest encomiums by reason of its appreciation and eloquence, and he received a vote of thanks for his earnest and effective address. He is also identified with the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with Columbus Lodge No. 30, Free and Accepted Masons, at Columbus, Ohio; and Canton Chapter No. 1, Washington Fraternal Union, of which last organization he is a member of the board of trustees.

At Conover, Miami county, Ohio, on the 6th of September, 1874, was solemnized the marriage of Professor McFarland to Miss Clara Jane Wilgus, who was his pupil while he was teaching in that vicinity. She was born in that county, being a daughter of James and Susan (LeFetre) Wilgus, well known and honored citizens of that section of the state. Professor and Mrs. McFarland have two children, Ellen Maud, who was born on the 27th of May, 1875, was married, on the 31st of July, 1898, to Ralph Coons, and they now reside at 106 North Twenty-first street, in Columbus, Ohio. On April 10, 1903, Good Friday morning, a daughter called Alice Lucille was born to Mr. and Mrs. Coons, and "Foxy Grandpa," as he is now familiarly called, is the happiest man in Ohio. Horace Maley, who was born October 6, 1880, is now a mining engineer at Birmingham, Alabama. He graduated from the Ohio State University June 18, 1902, from the mining engineering department. He is now located with the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, the largest corporation in the south, and Professor McFarland is very proud of his son, and he is entitled to this, for the young man is rising rapidly and will evidently make his mark in the world. The subject is a man of recondite knowledge and forceful individuality, while his genial and kindly nature has gained to him the affectionate regard of the many students to whom he has imparted instruction, and he may well look with pride and satisfaction upon the work which he has accomplished during the nearly three decades of service in the educational field. The subject has never smoked a cigar, cigarette or pipe, never chewed tobacco nor drank a glass of beer, being a teetotaler. He would readily pass for a man not over thirty-five years of age.

PROFESSOR BENJAMIN FRANKLIN FAUST was born on the Waynesburgh road, near the crossing of Belden avenue (now in the city limits), September 20, 1851, where he lived until five years of age, when, with his parents, he moved east of the city, on the

Georgetown road, where his mother still resides. From his childhood he manifested a very decided inclination to study, and when about six years old entered the district schools, where his progress was such as soon to place him at the head of all his classes. Not content with pursuing his studies during school hours, he would frequently devote the evenings to his books, being encouraged by his parents, which proved a great stimulus to the young student in the acquisition of knowledge. Often on his return from the district school he would go to his father's blacksmith shop, where he helped in forging horse-shoes from old wagon tires, using the sledge hammer, which afforded him manual training of the true and strenuous kind. At other times he would take his rifle and go to the near-by woods and in an hour or so shoot squirrels enough for next day's dinner. He continued his common school work through the winter seasons until his seventeenth year, when, finding himself sufficiently advanced to pass the teacher's examination, he secured a certificate and, taking charge of a school a few miles east of Louisville, taught a winter term, which established his reputation as an able instructor and judicious disciplinarian. So well pleased were his pupils and patrons with his first attempt at educational work that he was retained his own successor during the ensuing two years, and at the close of the third term he was employed to teach in his home district (Mt. Pleasant), where he labored continuously during the five years following. He attended Mt. Union College and the Smithville Normal School. Meantime he had become skilled at carpentry and when not teaching he worked at that trade, dividing his time between the two callings for a period of eight years, being as successful with tools as he was as an educator. Impressed with a desire to make the legal profession his life work, Mr. Faust, about the year 1877, took up the study of law in the office of Hon. C. T. Meyer, of Canton, and two years later was admitted to the bar and began the practice in this city. During the three years following he built up a lucrative business, meantime being elected justice of the peace in 1881, the duties of which position furnished him a fund of practical information, peculiarly valuable in his practice. While serving as justice of the peace, during his leisure moments he took up the study of phonography and typewriting, in which, by the end of his term of three years, he became quite proficient, and was frequently called to report some very difficult court cases, one case in particular being unique: Attorneys, judge and witnesses were all Germans, and the case was tried in the German language, he making his own translation while reporting the testimony. Prof. Faust became unusually skilled in shorthand, and his ability as a writer and instructor being recognized and appreciated, he was induced, in 1884, to take charge of the shorthand department connected with the Canton Business College, which he successfully conducted until 1897, when the college changed hands. During 1897-98 he taught commercial branches in a local business college, and in 1889 accepted the position he now holds as professor of shorthand and typewriting, teaching in addition commercial arithmetic, commercial geography and commercial law in the commercial department of the Canton high school, the duties of which he has discharged in an able and eminently satisfactory manner to the present time. Prof. Faust occupies a prominent place among the successful teachers of the state and has few equals and no superiors in his lines of educational work. He is a natural instructor, but he has never been content to rely upon native ability for success; on the contrary, he has availed himself of every opportunity to add to his professional knowledge, at the same time developing peculiar tact in imparting instruction until, as already stated, he has risen to an honorable standing in educational circles, and won a reputation such as few attain. Before his classes he is noted for tact and self-possession, believing "that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well." His thorough training and exhaustive knowledge, combined with a personal power as rare as it is admirable, make him complete master of the situation. Not only as a teacher has Prof. Faust come prominently before the public, but in various other capacities he has attracted the attention of the people of his city. From 1893 to 1897 inclusive he was a member of the city council, and during his four years incumbency in that body proved a safe and judicious legislator, having served on many important committees besides introducing a number of ordinances which had a decided beneficial influence in furthering the interests of the municipality. During his last year as councilman he was president of the council, proving an able and judicious executive, making every other consideration subordinate to the one desire of curtailing public expenditures and giving the city an economic and business-like administration. He is a member of the Bi-County Teachers' Association and takes an active interest in the deliberations of the same, participating in the various discussions of that body and not infrequently giving expression to his opinions upon educational topics in carefully prepared addresses which always command the most careful attention. The Pythian order represents his fraternal relations, having joined Buckeye Lodge No. 11, of Canton, in 1882, taking an active part in the upbuilding of the order. The members encouraged him in his efforts by electing him to all the offices, and now he holds the position of past chancellor and master of work. In politics the Professor is a Democrat. Formerly he was a very active worker in the party, but of recent years has been more conservative, though still a man of profound convictions and well posted on the great questions and issues of the times. He has made a careful study of political economy, sociology, the labor problem and kindred subjects, his wide knowledge of which has been of great value in his educational labors. A believer in the religion of the Bible from his youth up, he makes his faith and works go hand in hand, which, according to the Apostle James, is the true test of discipleship. During his youth he attended the German Reformed Sunday school and church, where he learned to read the German language, which he uses at the present time. He was confirmed in this church and was a member for many years, but later became an attendant at the Trinity Reformed church.

The Faust genealogy no doubt originated from the German, but the first of which the subject has any information was that Philip Faust was killed in the Revolutionary war and his son, John Philip Faust, was born October 4, 1775, in Middletown, Berks county, Pennsylvania. John Philip was the father of Rev. Benjamin Faust, also born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, January 1, 1798, emigrating to Ohio in 1806 and locating in Canfield township, Trumbull county. Rev. Benjamin Faust was the father of Cornelius, Mary, Sarah and Elias, all of whom are dead except Mrs. Sarah Kline, of Massillon, Ohio. Elias, father of Benjamin F. Faust, was born October 16, 1829, and died January 25, 1868. Elenora Sell, wife of Elias, was born November 7, 1827, and is still hale and hearty.

On the 15th day of May, 1884, Prof. Faust was united in marriage with Miss Viola Wolf, of Canton, daughter of the late Peter Wolf, of Stark county, this union resulting in the birth of three children, namely: Benjamin Webster, Catherine and Elenenia, the two older being students of the city high school. Viola was born November 24, 1882.

CHRISTIAN VOLZER.—The subject of this review is an American by adoption, but none the less a loyal citizen of the government under which he lives, as was demonstrated by his efficient service in its behalf during the dark days of the late Civil war. Tracing the family history, it is learned that his grandfather, Conrad Volzer, was born and reared in Wurtemberg, Germany, the paternal ancestors for many generations having lived in that kingdom. John George Volzer, the subject's father, also a native of Wurtemberg, was born in the year 1812 and served eight years in the German army. Subsequently he was employed as night watchman in his home town and it was there that he married Miss Magdalene Roos, who was born in the village of Medelspach, Wurtemberg, about the year 1813. He continued in the above capacity as long as he was able to attend to his duties and earned the reputation of an honest and upright man, though always quiet and unobtrusive in demeanor. He died in the year 1853, leaving a widow and seven children, six of whom came to the United States at different times, one still living in the country of his birth. Mrs. Volzer also came to America, joining her son Christian in 1867 and dying in Canton about the year 1889. The following are the names of the children born to John G. and Magdalene Volzer: Gottlieb, who accompanied his mother and a younger brother to the new world in 1867 and who afterwards died in Stark county, Ohio, his widow and children now residing in Canton; John also came to the United States in the above year, married Lizzie Ney and lives in Canton at the present time; Christian, the subject of this review, is the third in succession; Charles, the next in order of birth, became a citizen of this country some time in the 'seventies, married Kate Ney and died in Stark county in 1901; Conrad, who never left Germany, is a successful sub-contractor in the city of Tuttlingen, Wurtemburg; William is a well-known resident of Canton who came to America in 1864 and married in this county a lady by the name of Anna Speace; August, who also lives in Canton, is a man of a family, his wife being formerly Miss Augusta Speck; the youngest of the family was a son by the name of Alfred, who died in infancy.

Christian Volzer was born in the village of Weiler, Wurtemberg, on the 15th day of February, 1838. After attending school until about fourteen years of age, he engaged with certain parties to tend a herd of cattle in the mountain three hundred miles from home, receiving for his services three dollars per year, board and clothing. He followed this lonely way of earning a livelihood about three years, but, becoming exceedingly tired of it, finally gave up the place with the object in view of going to America, where an uncle by the name of George Roos was then living. This relative's home was in Duncannon, Perry county, Pennsylvania, and thither young Volzer determined if possible to make his way. Receiving from Mr. Roos sufficient money to pay his passage, he set sail from Havre, France, in April, 1857, and on the first day of the month following landed at the harbor of New York, a stranger in a strange land. Proceeding direct to Pennsylvania, he spent the following year on his uncle's farm, repaying by his labor the money his relative had so kindly advanced him. In the spring of 1858 Mr. Volzer made his first visit to Canton, Ohio, and during the ensuing two years he was employed by Mr. John Roth, a prosperous farmer of Stark county. From here he went to Paris, Ohio, near which place he worked for a farmer by the name of John Emerick until June, 1861, when he returned to the home of his uncle in Pennsylvania. There he met some of his former companions and associates, through whose influence he was induced to enlist, as the war was then in progress and his friends were preparing to go to the front. He entered the service as a member of Company A, Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry, enlisting for three years, and in due time his command was sent south to bear its part in putting down the rebellion. Mr. Volzer saw much active service during his military experience, taking part in a number of battles and minor engagements, the more noted of the former being the actions at Fort Donelson, Stone River, Franklin and Perryville. Before the expiration of his period of enlistment he was taken quite sick with a chronic complaint quite prevalent in the army, the result being his discharge on the ground of disability after two years and three months of service.

Leaving the army, Mr. Volzer spent a short time in Canton, and then went back to Pennsylvania, where he recuperated his health for a while in the home of his uncle. Returning to Canton after a limited period, he was married in this city, October 27, 1864, to Miss Mary Ann Wielandt, a native of Wheeling, West Virginia, and daughter of Jacob and Ida (Stayer) Wielandt, both parents born in Germany. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Volzer entered the employ of C. Aultman & Company, in which capacity he continued eight years, at the expiration of that time accepting a position with the Russell Manufacturing Company. After remaining with the latter firm four years, he was made janitor of the South Market Street school building, which position he held three years and during the twelve years following he had charge of the high school building, discharging his duties with commendable fidelity. It was while thus employed that Mr. Volzer met with a distressing accident which made him a cripple for his life. Taking a day off, he joined an excursion to Wheeling, West Virginia, and while en route the train stopped for a while at Wells-ville, Ohio. While standing with a number of others on the railway platform at that place, the structure suddenly gave away, throwing him upon the track between two cars while a train was in motion, the wheels of one of the cars passing over his left arm just below the elbow, completely severing that member. His injury proved a serious drawback in his janitor work, although he retained the place as long as he desired, resigning in 1891 to accept an easier and more remunerative position with the Robinson Terminal Bath Company, of Toledo, Ohio. After spending three years as agent for that concern he engaged to sell building lots for the Arlington Land Company, in which capacity he continued one year, meeting with encouraging success the meanwhile. Severing his connection with the above company, he spent one winter firing at the central engine house and in the fall of 1898 was appointed city weighmaster, which position he still holds.

Mr. Holzer is an enthusiastic member of Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, at Canton and for a number of years past his name has adorned the records of the Union Veteran Legion. He takes a lively interest in all matters pertaining to the old soldiers and finds much satisfaction when talking with his comrades of the bloody days and recalling with them the scenes through which they passed during the iron days of their endeavor. Formerly he was a Republican in politics, but of recent years he has been a supporter of the Democratic party. He was born and reared a Catholic and has ever remained true to the faith of his fathers, belonging at the present time to the German Catholic church on South Market street, this city.

Mr. Volzer's life has been an active and to a considerable extent an eventful one. He came to this country poor in purse and with but little to encourage him, but by honest industry he has succeeded well and by a strict observance of the ethics of life he has won an honorable place in the esteem of his fellow citizens. His good name has been a passport to the confidence of the people with whom he mingles and his integrity is of that sterling character which always commands the highest respect of the public. Few German-American citizens of Canton are as well known as Mr. Volzer and none have shown themselves more worthy of the esteem in which they are held.

Mr. and Mrs. Volzer have been blessed with children as follows: George J., Christian, Marv, Elizabeth, wife of Jesse Taylor, Andrew, Harry, Monica, wife of Jacob Ballinger, and Minnie, all doing for themselves but the last named, who is still a member of the home circle. Two of the sons, Andrew and Harry, are heads of households, the former marrying a Miss Miller, the latter Miss Hasler.

IMPERTUS MARTIN is a representative of a sterling pioneer family, has himself contributed to the material progress and industrial advancement of the county and city and it is most consonant that he be accorded a place of distinction in a work of the province assigned to this publication. The orthography of the name was originally Matty, and the original progenitors in America emigrated hither from Switzerland, in the pre-Revolutionary epoch, having come from the canton of Basel, where the family had been established from a time when the "memory of man runneth not to the contrary." From a collateral branch of the family was descended Jacob Martin (born, 1725; died, 1790), a recondite scholar and profound philosopher, whose remains lie interred in an ancient cemetery in Ephrata, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he died about the year 1790. He, with his brother, Jacob Martin, came to America between 1730 and 1740, accompanied by his wife and children, and they settled in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he became a pioneer farmer, and was the great-grandfather of the subject of this review. It is not definitely established as to whether or not his son John, grandfather of the subject, was born in Switzerland or after the removal to Lancaster county, where he was reared to maturity and where the residue of his life was passed, his attention having been consecutively given to agricultural pursuits. There was solemnized his marriage to Miss Sarah Cline, whose parents were born in one of the divisions of Great Britain, and soon after arriving in America her father was captured by the Indians, who doubtless put him to death, as no trace of him was ever discovered by his bereaved family, who were strangers in a strange land, Mrs. Martin having been born after her father was thus captured, and having been reared under the direction of the sisters of the Moravian church, at Ephrata, Pennsylvania. She died in Stark county, Ohio, and was buried one mile south of Osnaburg. Concerning their children the following data is found available: George came to Ohio and his death occurred in the vicinity of Canal Fulton, this state; Jacob died in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania; John, father of the subject, was the next in order of birth, and died in Stark county, Ohio; Sarah was twice married, her second husband having been Frederick Albright, and she died in Osnaburg, Ohio; Anna became the wife of John Krumloff, after whose death she resided in the home of her son John, in Michigan, until her death, her son returning to Stark county, Ohio, where he still resides and is the father of John Krumloff; Elizabeth became the wife of a Mr. De-weese, and her death occurred in Osnaburg, this county, and her grandson, Dr. John De-weese, is now a prominent dentist of Canton.

John Martin, father of the subject, was born on a farm sixteen miles northeast of the city of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, in the year 1786, and there he was reared to manhood, receiving a common-school education. He learned the trade of mason and to the same devoted his attention through practically his entire business career. In his native county he married Miss Catherine Lutz, who was there born and reared, being the eldest of the six children of Adam Lutz, who was one of the first settlers of Lancaster county, where he bought a farm for each of his four sons, all in the immediate vicinity of that upon which he had first settled, the four tracts being contiguous, and he raised the funds to pay for the extra land through the sale of wheat raised on his original tract. He threshed out a load of the wheat each week by the use of horses and cleaned up the product with a primitive fanning mill, whose crank our subject's mother had the privilege of turning, often to the weariness and mortification of the flesh. The wheat was eventually taken to the mill and thence to the city of Philadelphia, where he sold the same for three hundred dollars a load, twenty barrels comprising a four-horse load, which enabled him to purchase the land for his sons. He and his sons were stanch Whigs in politics, and the son John attained no little prominence in the political affairs of his native county. At the time of the war of 1812 the father of the subject organized a company and started for the seat of war, but was not in any battles, and later received an honorable discharge.

John Martin continued his residence in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, until 1829, when he sold his property and, in company with his oldest son and daughter and the subject of this sketch, emigrated to Ohio, four of his daughters remaining in Pennsylvania with the mother. She, fearing that Indians still infested the route and that they might more successfully elude them if they did not take the trip. John Martin bought a tract of land in Paris township, Stark county, from the Indians, the same comprising eighty acres, all of which had been cleared except ten acres, and the family abiding place was a house of hewed logs. Though the land had been cleared, it was far from being eligible for effective cultivation, many stumps and roots still remaining, while the place was infested with poisonous snakes, including masasaugas, hundreds of which were found and killed each season for several years. Mr. Martin succeeded in placing his farm under cultivation and making it one of the best in that section, and after there remaining until the infirmities of advanced age necessitated his retirement from active labor, he passed the declining years of his life in the home of his sister, Mrs. Krumloff, of Osnaburg township, this county, where he died in November, 1840. His wife survived him several years, her death occurring near Magadore, Summit county. Her religious faith was that of the River Brethren church, and in politics her husband was a stanch Whig of the old line. Of their children the following record is offered: Mary, who became the wife of Nicholas Wean, died in Bourbon, Indiana; John L., who was married, in Stark county, to Rebecca Caskey, was one of the California argonauts of 1849, making the long and perilous overland trip in company with a party of Canton men, one of whom, Samuel Kauffman, was killed by the Indians while en route, while George B. Platt, father of the first wife of the subject, was a member of the same party and was taken ill and died on the route, being buried on the banks of the Platte river; John L. Martin eventually returned to Ohio, and about 1859, accompanied by his family, he again made the journey westward, settling on the north fork of the Platte river, in Nebraska, where he became a prominent and influential citizen, having been admitted to the bar of that state and having served as justice of the peace, judge of probate and in other offices of trust and responsibility; a daughter of his first wife married a Mr. Vienig Berrick, the wealthiest citizen of that locality, and the five children of his second marriage still reside on the homestead farm, where he died about 1893, at a venerable age; Sarah, next in order of birth of the children of John and Catherine (Lutz) Martin, became the wife of George Beckenhaupt, and she died in Paris township, Stark county, in 1869; Catherine, who became the wife of Samuel Johnson, died in New Franklin, this county, in 1893, her son, John W., having been a soldier in the Civil war and now a resident of Canton; Imperatus, the immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Elizabeth, who first married Henry Hohn, after his death became the wife of Jacob Holwick and she now resides in New Franklin; Martha, wife of James Stier, died in Paris township; Adam E., the only child born in the Buckeye state, removed to Brown county, Illinois, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying in 1891. He was for many years the only Republican in that section and for a number of years he held the office of postmaster at Ripley, where his death occurred.

In the old stone house erected entirely through the efforts of his honored father, on a small tract of land in Cocolico township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, Impertus Martin, subject of this sketch, was born on the 24th of February, 1821, and there he began his educational discipline, which was limited in extent, as he was but eight years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Stark county, Ohio. Here the primitive school house of the pioneer days was far distant from the home of the family, and thus his attendance was of a desultory character. He has a distinct remembrance of the long and weary trip to Ohio from the old Keystone state, and yet the boyish enthusiasm made the trip one of pleasure and never failing interest to him, though they were delayed a few days by his illness, since he suffered an attack of varioloid while en route. The journey was made in a large Conestoga wagon, drawn by two horses, and was accompanied by much discomfort and hard labor. Two years after the arrival of the family in Ohio the home was broken up, and thus, at the age of ten years, the subject was thrown on his own resources. He secured a position in Greentown, where his duties were arduous, for he engaged in digging coal and limestone and in the burning of lime, working fourteen hours a day and receiving the princely stipend of four dollars a month and board. Later he went to live with a Mr. Swigart, and here he assisted in feeding stock and in other duties about the farm. It is now known as the Infirmary farm. He attended school during a portion of the time, having the prescience to appreciate the advantages thus afforded him for continuing his educational work. His employer had charge of the county farm at that time and while the subject was there the present county infirmary was in process of construction.

In April, 1837, Mr. Martin came to Canton and secured a position as clerk in the general store of Andrew Meyer, Jr., with whom he remained two years, while for the ensuing four years he was employed in a similar capacity in the store of M. & J. Laird. He then succeeded John Danner as clerk in the store of Martin Wikidal, for whom he clerked in all nearly ten years, in the meanwhile gaining a high reputation for energy, fidelity and ability, while the experience proved of great practical value to him. Later he was for a time engaged in the manufacture and sale of fanning mills at New Franklin. While there his first marriage occurred, and about the year 1859 he engaged in the grocery and produce business in Canton, on the site of the present Eagle block drug store. A few years later Mr. Martin purchased the Trump block, where he continued in the same line of enterprise for a short time, when he sold the block to its former owner and removed to the southern part of the city, where he established a wagon factory, the venture having proved unsatisfactory through unfortunate outside speculations of disastrous nature, so that he finally sold his business to Eli Miller, receiving in exchange the latter's interest in a general store at Sparta, Stark county, Ohio, where the subject entered into partnership with B. Lauffer, with whom he continued in the business several years. Then he retired from the firm and purchased an interest in the Alliance Fire Clay Company, at Alliance, being one of the charter members to which city he removed, being made secretary and treasurer of the company. While there located he also entered into a partnership association with his brother-in-law, Joseph W. Hostetter, in the dry-goods business, the alliance continuing one year, at the expiration of which the partnership was dissolved and the stock divided. Mr. Martin again associated himself with Mr. Lauffer, shipping his portion of the goods to Sandyville, where they continued in business for three years. Mr. Martin did not, however, take up his residence there, but in 1869 returned to Canton, where he formed a limited partnership with Martin L. Best, in the plumbing, steam and gas fitting and galvanized-iron business, under the firm name of Best & Martin. The subject retired at the end of three years and then purchased a furniture and undertaking business, later disposing of the furniture business, but continuing in the undertaking line for some time. Within this period he was elected superintendent of the Ohio State Camp-meeting Association, which is now located at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and retained the incumbency for a consecutive term of eighteen years, gaining a wide acquaintanceship throughout the state. In 1878 Mr. Martin purchased a farm in Osnaburg township and there maintained his residence until 1881, when he traded the same for a larger farm near the village of Waco, Canton township. This was his home for about four years and he then sold the property and purchased ten acres of land in the village mentioned, erecting buildings on the same, and selling the property to Howard Van Horn, a few years later, when he once more returned to Canton. During his residence on the farm he engaged in the manufacture, sale and renting of awnings and tents, many of which were in requisition in connection with the annual camp-meetings of the association previously mentioned, as well as others, and in this line of business he continued up to 1900, the enterprise having been a profitable one. In 1888 Mr. Martin purchased an interest in a farm of one hundred and thirty acres in Paris township, and also an adjoining tract of forty acres, the investment proving an unfortunate one owing to the financial panic which followed a few years later, the property, which had been placed at a valuation of one hundred dollars an acre, selling for only forty-five. He has made various investments in real estate during the years past, and has been known as a progressive, earnest worker, in whatever field of endeavor he was placed, while his lofty integrity has ever commanded unequivocal confidence and esteem. Early in January, 1841, Mr. Martin became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and his is now the distinction of being the patriarch of the church in Canton. He is the eldest member of the Simpson church and the only living member of its original board of trustees and the oldest Methodist in Canton. He was brought into the fold of the divine Master and Shepherd through the influence of his eldest brother, and his life has since been consecrated to the work which has been given him to do and to which he has ever striven to be faithful in every particular, while he holds the esteem and affection of the church people, who revere him for his godly life and worthy services during more than three score years. It was through his influence that the edifice of the First Methodist Episcopal church was established in its present eligible location, since he was opposed by all the officary of the church with the exception of the pastor, Rev. Thomas McCleary, and the late Colonel Ball, but the wisdom of the choice is now recognized by all. In politics Mr. Martin was originally a Whig, having been a student of political questions and issues even before attaining his majority, and having been thus led to exercise his right of franchise in the support of Henry Clay for the presidency, in 1844, this being his first presidential vote. His first vote was cast in support of the honored Thomas Corwin for governor of the state. He has lived through all of the presidential administrations of the republic, excepting four and part of the fifth, and his mind, still vigorous and alert, bears the impress of many days, while his reminiscences are very timely and interesting. He became identified with the Republican party at the time of its organization and has ever since advocated its principles.

On the 22d of April, 1847, Mr. Martin was united in marriage to Miss Mary Jane Platt, who was a noble Christian woman and a true helpmeet to him. She was born in Southbridge, Massachusetts, in the year 1823, being a daughter of George and Margaret (Dawson) Platt, honored pioneers of Stark county, and she survived her marriage by only four years, her death occurring on the 12th of May, 1851. About eight years later, on the 16th of August, 1859, Mr. Martin married Miss Eliza Anna Hostetter, daughter of Esquire Joseph Hostetter, likewise a pioneer of the county and a man of prominence and influence in the early days. Mrs. Martin still survives, having been a devoted companion and counselor to her husband during the long years of their married life, while she has ever seconded him in his earnest work as a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. The subject's children are briefly noted as follows: William Bramwell, born of the first union, is now a resident of Fremont county, Idaho; George Elba, also of the first union, died in the third year of his age; of the second marriage, John W. was a teacher for twenty years in Stark county; Charles Lincoln, now in New York city; Ida Belle and Ada May, twins, the latter married to Frank L. Grener, and living in Chicago, and Ida B., at home, who has for a number of years been clerking in Canton in the store of William R. Zollinger & Company, and later in the flower store of L. L. Lamborn.

DAVID GEHMAN was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the date of this important event being March 20, 1841. His parents were Benjamin and Fannie (Sechrist) Gehman and they had born to them nine children, of whom four survive. The subject was reared upon the home farm and was early inured to the hard labor of the farm. He was given little opportunity for acquiring an education, as his father died when the subject was but fifteen years old and he was thus compelled at that early age to rely upon his own resources. He commenced working out at farm labor for various neighboring farmers, continuing in this way until his marriage, at which time he settled down to farming on his own account, renting a farm in Nimishillen township for one year. He then rented a farm of one hundred and seventy-two acres in Osnaburg township, and in 1866 purchased his present farm, comprising one hundred and a half acres of excellent land, removing to his own home on this farm the following year. He was prospered here and was later enabled to purchase another farm of forty-five and a half acres a half mile north of Osnaburg. With the exception of five years passed upon this last purchase, he has since made his home upon the larger tract and there has successfully followed his calling.

In 1863 David Gehman was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Wingert, a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, her family having come to Stark county, Ohio, about 1846. Her parents were Samuel and Susan (Boucher) Wingert. By this marriage the subject became the father of three children, two of whom survive, Rufus and Ida, the wife of John Rouh, of Osnaburg township. Mrs. Gehman died in 1886 and two years later Mr. Gehman again married, this time to Mrs. John Betts, whose maiden name was Sarah Royer. She also was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania; and is the daughter of David and Nancy (Longanecker) Royer, who came to Stark county about 1852, settling in Nimi-shillen township. In later years they removed to Nebraska, where they both died. The subject has given to his children splendid practical educations and has fitted them in every way possible for successful lives, having also divided between them about twenty thousand dollars. Politically Mr. Gehman is a staunch and uncompromising Republican and takes a keen and intelligent interest in the success of his party. Religiously he is a member of the German Baptist church and is in hearty sympathy with all movements looking to the advancement of the best interests of the community. He is a man of keen discernment and remarkably clear judgment on all matters pertaining to agriculture and the stock business. He has seldom erred in any of his transactions and the excellent farm which he now owns, together with other valuable property in his possession, is the direct result of well-directed industry and judicious investments. He keeps himself well informed on current events and entertains pronounced views relative to all the great public and political questions of the day, which he has the courage to express when necessary. He and his wife are highly respected by their neighbors and occupy a prominent place among the best people of Osnaburg township.

JOHN KRAUSE was born in the village of Mohlhhausen, province of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, on the 7th of February, 1837, being a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Nauman) Krause, who were likewise natives of the same province and representatives of fine old German stock. The father of the subject served the prescribed term as a soldier in the German army and in the fatherland he gave his attention to agricultural pursuits up to the time of his death, in 1840, when the subject was but three years of age, and the mother subsequently married Justius Nauman, who was likewise a farmer by vocation. In 1845 he emigrated with his family to America, embarking at Bremen on the schooner "John Detmar," which consumed forty-two days in making the voyage, the little family landing in the city of New York, whence they proceeded to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in a suburban district of which they took up their abode, there remaining until 1858. The subject had initiated his educational work in the excellent schools of his fatherland, and after coming to the United States he continued his studies in the public schools of Aetna, where the family first had their home, and he completed his scholastic discipline by attending night school, his devotion in this line clearly denoting his appreciation of the value of theoretical knowledge as a preparation for the active and practical duties of life. He was particularly favored in his final course of study, which was prosecuted under the direction of Rev. Conrad Kuhn, an able scholar and a clergyman of the Lutheran church. Soon after the family established a home in Aetna, Pennsylvania, the subject of this review began the active duties of life, securing employment as a helper in the furnace department of a local rolling mill, the capacity in which the boy was thus employed being commonly designated in the parlance of the shops as "pull-up." His step-father secured employment as laborer in the same factory in Aetna, and there passed the residue of his life, his death occurring on the 26th of December, 1883, while his wife, the devoted and honored mother of the subject, did not long survive her husband, passing away on the 18th of January of the following year.

John Krause, whose name initiates this review, has been a resident of Canton, Ohio, for nearly half a century, and here he has not only gained recognition as a representative business man, but his well ordered life has made him an object of uniform confidence and esteem. In 1856 he came to this city, where he was shortly afterward married, and then returned to Aetna, Pennsylvania, where he continued to reside for eighteen months, at the expiration of which, in 1858, he came once more to Canton, and on the 20th of April of that year he began work in the employ of the Aultman Company, his duties being the setting up of mowing machines, and he thereafter continued to be employed in the works of this concern, which eventually grew to be one of the most gigantic manufacturing institutions of the sort in the Union, for the long period of forty years, save for a short interval, in 1888, when he was in the employ of John Danner. In 1898 Mr. Krause left the employ of the Aultman Company and accepted a position in the manufactory of J. H. Eller, where he held a responsible place, being a trusted employe and one whose long identification with local manufacturing has been such as to give him a place among the veteran sons of industry in the city of Canton, where he is well known and highly esteemed, being a man of inflexible integrity and one whose life has been one of consecutive toil and endeavor. Such men exemplify the dignity of honest toil and their lives offer both lesson and incentive. In 1882 Mr. Krause erected his present attractive and commodious residence, at 1806 East Tuscarawas street, and the same indicates in a degree the care with which he has conserved his resources, for he has made good use of the fruits of his industry and is to-day in independent circumstances. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious views are in harmony with the tenets of the Lutheran church, in which he was reared. Mr. Krause was one of the first three trustees of the Hartford poor fund, his associates having been Messrs. John W. Walser and Charles Herzer. They laid out the landed estate and platted a portion of the same into city lots, and our subject's home is located on this land. He is at the present time a member of the board of trustees which has in charge the erection of the new Auditorium. On April 6, 1903, Mr. Krause was elected a member of the newly created board of public service of the city of Canton, his colleagues being John Buchman and Uriah Reinhold. Mr. Krause is entitled to be considered one of the pioneers of Canton, which at the time of his locating here was a village of about eight thousand population, and he has witnessed its development into a fair and prosperous city of about forty-five thousand people, while he recalls that all of the present church edifices of the city have been erected during his residence here, while in the east and south ends, where are now many large factories and innumerable residences, in the early days were to be found the open grain fields of an agricultural district. He is a capable musician and was one of the original members of the G. A. R. Band, while he was a member of a local band as early as 1858 and continued to be actively identified with band work until 1869, and only one member of the first band with which he was connected is now in service in that line, that being John Stuerhof. Mr. Krause is a man of fine physique, standing six feet in height and weighing two hundred and ten pounds. He is genial and kindly and during his long residence in Canton has retained the confidence of all with whom he has come in contact, while his circle of friends coincides with that of his acquaintances. Reverting to his genealogy, we may say that Mr. Krause was the only child of his mother by the first marriage, while by her second marriage she had one son, George Nauman, who is a successful merchant of Canton and who married Miss Mary Shull.

On the 28th of September, 1856, Mr. Krause was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Bonn, who was born and reared in Canton, where she has passed her entire life, with the exception of the eighteen months passed in Aetna, Pennsylvania, immediately after her marriage. She was born on the 1st of January, 1838, being a daughter of Conrad and Mary (Nauman) Bonn, natives of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, whence they came to America about 1832, locating in Pennsylvania, where they remained until 1834, when they came to Canton, where Mr. Bonn engaged in the work of his trade, that of shoemaking. He died in this city in 1884 and his wife passed away in 1891. To Mr. and Mrs. Krause have been born eight children, concerning whom we incorporate brief record, as follows: Carrie is the wife of William McKenzie, of Canton; John, who married Annie Porter, served as paymaster in the Spanish-American war, and while stationed in Florida contracted a fever which resulted in his death, which occurred on the 30th of May, 1900, in the city of Washington, where he was buried; Libbie is the wife of John Whitehead, of New Brighton, Pennsylvania; Norman, who is a resident of the city of Chicago, married Mary Murphy; Emerson, of Canton, is not married; Homer, who married Jennie Taft, is a resident of Canton; Clara is the wife of Frank Skeels, of Canton; and Ruth died in 1892, at the age of eleven years.

CHARLES A. ARMSTRONG.—Alexander Armstrong, the grandfather of the subject in the agnatic line, was reared in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and was a man of broad information and mature judgment, having wielded no little influence as the editor and publisher of the Western Telegraph, in the old Keystone state of the Union. Alexander Armstrong eventually resigned his interests in Pennsylvania and removed to Wheeling, West Virginia, where he engaged in the manufacturing of paper, continuing in this line of enterprise until his death, about 1870. He was of English and Irish descent and the family was founded in America in the colonial epoch, the original progenitors in the new world having taken up their residence in Pennsylvania, with whose history the name was long identified.

John H. Armstrong, father of the subject, was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, and there he received his preliminary educational discipline, which was effectively supplemented by a course of study in Bethany College, at Bethany, that state, while he had the additional advantages of being reared in a cultured and refined home. At an early age he entered his father's paper mill, acquiring an intimate knowledge of the business in all its details, and for a time was associated with his father in partnership relations. In 1860 he was married to Amelia Lublin at Jacksonville, a native of that place, where she was born in the year 1830, being a member of one of the pioneer families of that section of the state and a daughter of Charles F. and Susan (Bedillion) Laiblin, the former of whom was of German extraction, the original American ancestors having located here in the pre-Revolutionary days, while the Bedillion family was of the historic Holland stock in New York. After their marriage the parents of the subject resided for a time in Wheeling, West Virginia, whence they removed to Missouri, where Mr. Armstrong devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until 1868, when he returned to Ohio and located in Zanesville, where for several years he was engaged in the mercantile business. In 1872 he came to Stark county, where he lived on a farm, in Pike township, and again turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, in which he was engaged until the time of his death, which occurred at Buffalo, Illinois. He was taken ill on the train while en route to his home and was removed to a hospital in Buffalo, Illinois, where he died about the month of October, 1876, his remains being brought to Canton for interment. His widow survived until 1880, her death occurring in Canton, and they rest side by side in Westlawn cemetery. Mr. Armstrong was a devoted member of the Presbyterian church, and Mrs. Armstrong of the Methodist Episcopal church, and they were folks of sterling integrity of character, esteemed by all who came within the sphere of their gracious influence. Alexander Armstrong identified himself with the Republican party at the time of its organization and ever afterward remained a staunch supporter of its cause. Of his children the following is a brief record: Leander A. is a resident of Buffalo, New York, where he is engaged as a painting contractor; Charles A. is the immediate subject of this review; Lucy C. is the wife of John Butcher, of Canton, and Cora E. is a teacher in the public schools of this city.

Charles A. Armstrong was born in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, on the 20th of February, 1865, and when he was about two years of age his parents removed to Illinois, thence to Missouri and finally, in 1868, located in Zanesville, Ohio, where the subject secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools. In 1872, when he was seven years of age, the family removed to Stark county, and located on a farm in Pike township, six and one-half miles south of the city of Canton. In the vicinity of his home he continued to attend the district schools until he had attained the age of twelve years, when he came to Canton to continue his studies in the public schools, attending the local high school until his sixteenth year. His parents having died about this time, Mr. Armstrong was thrown upon his own resources, and he secured a position in the factory of the Canton Cutlery Company, later being engaged in a clerical capacity in the office of the Peerless Reaper Company, while for three years he was an employe of the Campbell Sash & Door Factory. Thereafter he was employed during the summer months at farm work for a period of three years, while during the winters he devoted his attention to teaching in the district schools, his success in the line and his natural predilection for the work leading him to eventually adopt the profession as a vocation. His ambition was quickened by his experience and his thorough interest in his work, and he determined to further fortify himself for the profession of teaching, having in the meanwhile been carrying forward his studies. In 1889 he was matriculated in Mount Union College, at Alliance, where he completed the classical course and where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1893, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Within this period he also completed a course of study in the commercial department of the same institution, being graduated in 1891, while he defrayed his expenses through teaching and other work, so that it is evident that determinate purpose and sturdy self-reliance are dominating elements in his nature. In 1892-3 Mr. Armstrong did effective work as principal of the public schools of Wingo, Graves county, Kentucky, and in September of the latter year he accepted the position of principal of the Woodland avenue school in Canton, his efforts in this connection being so prolific in results that he was transferred, at the expiration of his second year, to the high school, where he assumed charge of the department of mathematics and English, while in 1901 he was elected to his present responsible office as principal of the high school, in which he has significantly added to his laurels as an able, discriminating and enthusiastic educator, being thoroughly en rapport with his profession and having distinctive facility in imparting instruction and in engendering a cumulative interest and enthusiasm on the part of his pupils, while in the administrative functions of his office he has shown equal discretion and power. In June, 1895, he received from the Ohio state board of school examiners a life certificate, and in December of the same year a high-school life certificate was likewise conferred upon him by the same executive body. He holds membership in the Ohio Academy of Sciences and the Ohio State Teachers' Association, while fraternally he is identified with the time-honored order of Freemasonry, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college society and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In politics Prof. Armstrong gives his allegiance to the Republican party and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the First Methodist church of Canton. He is a gentleman of genial and gracious presence, kindly in his intercourse with his fellow men, and his circle of friends is coincident with that of his acquaintances. His career shows the practical value to be placed upon clearly defined purpose and unwavering integrity and honor, and there can be no doubt of his continuous and consecutive advancement in his important and exacting profession.

In the city of Canton, on the 16th of July, 1893, Mr. Armstrong was united in marriage to Miss Alice E. Hershey, who was born in this city, being a daughter of William H. and Mary Hershey, and of this union have been born three children, William Leander, Alice Amelia and Charles John, first two of whom are attending the public schools. The subject and his wife are prominent in the social activities of Canton, and their home is a center of cultured and gracious hospitality.

REV. AMOS EVANS.—As the name implies, the agnatic lineage of the subject traces back to Welsh origin, and the family was established on American soil in the colonial epoch, the name having ever stood exponent of sterling integrity and worthy citizenship. In the maternal line the genealogy is of German extraction. The original progenitor of the Evans family in America took up his residence in Virginia, with whose annals the name has been identified for several generations, and in the old Dominion state of the Union Peter Evans, grandfather of the subject, passed his long and useful life, being eighty-six years of age at the time of his death. Henry Evans was born in Hampshire county, Virginia, in the year 1810, and was there reared to maturity, his early educational advantages having been very limited in scope. However, he was a man of alert and vigorous mentality, and through his personal reading and study he gained a wide fund of knowledge, receiving his diploma from that wise headmaster, experience, and effectively supplementing through his own efforts the advantages that had been denied him in a specific sense. At the age of twenty-four years, with no money to fortify himself for the stern battle of life, he left his home and started valiantly forth to make his own way in the world, and he walked the entire distance from Virginia to Lincoln county, Ohio. Upon his arrival in the Buckeye state he secured employment on a farm, though he had previously learned the milling trade. By rigid economy he managed to save a small amount of money from the meager wages received as a farm hand, and his self-reliance and courage were such that he felt justified in assuming connubial responsibilities, as is evident from the fact that within a few months after coming to Ohio he was united in marriage to Miss Julia Carter, who was a native of the same county in Virginia as he, having been born in 1812, and having been a mere child at the time of her parents' emigration to Lincoln county, Ohio, her father, Havila Carter, having been one of the honored pioneers of that section of the state, where both he and his wife died. Soon after his marriage the father of the subject removed to Hancock county, where he took up a claim of one hundred acres of government land, the greater portion of which was covered with a dense growth of native timber, and after securing his claim he returned to Lincoln county for his wife, who soon afterward accompanied him back to the forest wilds in which he proposed reclaiming a farm. He erected a primitive log house on his land, and the conditions under which he began his labors were those common to the pioneer epoch. No roads had been constructed, settlers were few and usually far distant from each other, and it required fortitude and great self-denial to face the problem of the lonely life and the arduous toil. Mr. Evans and his devoted wife found themselves equal to the task, being sustained by mutual affection and sympathy and finding a relief from care in the constant labor which fell to the portion of each. Gradually the farm began to change from a forest into well cultivated fields; the little home was brightened by the presence of children and prosperity smiled upon the noble parents. Mr. Evans continued to reside on his farm until the children had attained years of maturity, and after the death of his loved companion and helpmeet, in 1886, he went to live in the home of his daughter Lucinda, on a neighboring farm, and there he passed the evening of his long and useful life, his death occurring in October, 1896. He and his wife were devoted and zealous members of the Evangelical Association, and ever exemplified their Christian faith in their daily walk, and teaching valuable lessons to their children through both precept and example. Mr. Evans was a stanch Democrat in his political proclivities, and he was called upon to serve in various local offices of trust and responsibility, ever holding the implicit confidence and unequivocal regard of all who knew him.

Henry and Julia (Carter) Evans became the parents of five children, namely: Ransom H., who is a successful farmer of Mercer county, Ohio; Almeda, who is the wife of Noel Fellows, of Benton, this state; Amos, the immediate subject of this review; Lucinda, who is the wife of Irving Powell, of Hancock county; and Simon Carter, who died at the age of thirty-four years.

Amos Evans, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born on the old homestead farm in Hancock county, on the 4th of June, 1845, and to him were accorded such limited educational advantages as were afforded by the primitive district schools of the locality and period, while he early became familiar with the work of the farm, to whose improvement and cultivation he contributed his quota, as he waxed strong in mind and body under the invigorating life of the old homestead. His first teacher was a Scotchman, whom he recalls as an interesting and original character, and his early scholastic discipline was of an irregular and desultory nature, owing to the exigencies of time and place, for much of the time he was unable to attend school by reason of his services, being required in connection with the work of the farm.

He also worked at felling timber, hauling the logs to the mill, assisting in the operation of the saw mill and kindred duties, and it may readily be inferred that his early life was one into which entered little recreation, little study and much work, and that of an arduous sort. He, however, laid the foundation of a good English education, even under these un auspicious conditions, and, being favored with an alert and signally receptive mentality, he managed to advance his knowledge in a very material way as the years sped by. When twenty-eight years of age, ambitious to enlarge his scholastic knowledge, Mr. Evans, through his own efforts, was enabled to take a year's course of study in the Northwestern University, at Naperville, Illinois, one of the beautiful suburbs of the city of Chicago. This was after he had decided to prepare himself for the ministry, and it is needless to say that he wasted no time while attending the University. In 1876, after careful and conscientious theological study and due preparation in other ways, he received from the Ohio conference of the Evangelical Association a license to preach, and his first pastoral charge was at Fremont, Sandusky county, where he remained one year. The following two years were devoted to earnest and effective work throughout Pickaway county, and thereafter he was pastor of the church at Westerville for three years, the ensuing three years at Ashland, two years at Marshallville, and then passed three years in pastoral work in his home town of Findlay. From that place he went to Baltimore, Fairfield county, where he remained two years, at the expiration of which period a division occurred in the church organization, resulting in the formation of what is now known as the United Evangelical church, with which body he became identified at the time of its organization, and he was elected to the office of presiding elder of the entire conference. The conference at that time composed only one presiding elder district. He was one of five clergymen of the original Evangelical Association in the Ohio conference who thus became identified with the new church organization, and he has been one of its most honored and successful ministers in the state. After two years' service as presiding elder, Mr. Evans remained for an equal period as pastor of the Baltimore church, and the following two years he held the charge at Cary, Wyandot county. From that place, in October, 1899, he came to Canton and has ever since remained in pastoral charge of the church here, his able and devoted efforts having been signally effective in infusing vitality into both the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church, while he is known as a forceful, earnest and convincing speaker and as one whose every utterance bears the marks of sincerity and definite conviction. Mr. Evans holds a warm place in the hearts of his people, and is highly esteemed by the community at large. In politics he is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Prohibition party, but when his party has no candidates in the field he gives his support to those men whom he considers best qualified for office, through ability and upright character, and in such cases he gives no heed to partisan lines.

In Fremont, Ohio, on the 8th of April, 1878, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Evans to Miss Lillie Ernst, who was born and reared in Mobile, Alabama, where her mother died, and after the Civil war she accompanied her father, John G. Ernst, on his removal to the north, establishing a home in Fremont, this state, where her father passed the residue of his life, his death occurring on or about 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have three children, namely: Ernst, who is a student in the Canton high school, as is also Florence Mabel; while the youngest child, Lee Orlando Vincent, a lad of thirteen years, is attending the city schools.

REV. PEARL HOWARD WELSHIMER is a native of Ohio and of German descent. The first of the father's family to come to this country were three brothers who left the fatherland many years ago and found homes in the state of Pennsylvania. They were honest and industrious tillers of the soil, and did much to promote the material prosperity of the communities in which they lived and earned the reputation of intelligent and enterprising citizens, demonstrating their loyalty to the country of their adoption by earnest God-fearing lives and a strict observance of the laws of the land. The subject's great-grandfather, a descendant of one of these brothers, was born in Pennsylvania, but in an early day migrated to Fairfield county, Ohio, where he followed the pursuit of agriculture until his death. His son, Samuel Welshimer, the subject's grandfather, was born and reared in the county of Fairfield and also adopted agriculture for his life work. Later in life he moved to Union county, this state, and there followed farming with gratifying success until the end of his days, also winning the confidence and esteem of all with whom he mingled. His wife before her marriage was Anna Griffith, a native of Fairfield county, born of parents whose lineage was Scotch and Irish respectively. Among the children of Samuel and Ann Welshimer was a son by the name of Samuel, whose birth occurred in the county of Fairfield on the 25th day of April, 1851. In his youth Samuel Welshimer acquired an elementary education in the public schools of his native place and later accompanied his parents to Union county, where in young manhood he was united in marriage to Miss Louisa

Wilson, whose birth occurred in the town of Somerville, Ohio, January 27, 1849. Mrs. Welshimer was the daughter of Archibald and Margaret (Thompson) Wilson, natives of Virginia, the mother descended from a very wealthy planter and a large slaveholder of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson came to Ohio in an early day and for a number of years taught in the public schools of Union and Logan counties, both earning enviable reputations as educators. They lived useful lives and finished their earthly sojourn in the county of Logan, where their bodies now sleep the sleep from which they will only be awakened by the angel of the resurrection. After completing the common school course Mrs. Welshimer attended the Northwood Normal School, where she fitted herself for the profession of teaching. She taught successfully in her own and other counties for a period of eight years, and after marriage she and her husband settled on a farm near the town of York, Union county, where they lived until removing to West Mansfield, a short time afterwards. Mr. Welshimer engaged in the lumber business at West Mansfield and still follows the same with gratifying financial results. He is a gentleman of intelligence and excellent character, a devout member of the Christian church and in every respect a progressive and representative citizen. Politically an ardent Republican, he is not a partisan in the sense of aspiring to public distinction, preferring a business life to any office within the power of the people to bestow. Mrs. Welshimer is a lady of unusual intelligence and culture, possesses a beautiful Christian character and her activity in religious work has been of great benefit to the Disciple congregation with which she is identified. To this excellent couple have been born three children, of whom the subject of this review is the oldest; the others are Herbert Wilton, who married Miss Lena Hathaway and is engaged in merchandising at

Rev. Pearl Howard Welshimer was born near the town of York, Union county, Ohio, on the 6th day of April, 1873. It is recognized as an incontrovertible fact that a man's life is largely influenced by his early environment, as that is the formative period and the "child becomes father to the man." Young Welshimer was signally favored in his early surroundings, having had the care and attention of devoted and loving parents and the influences of a refined Christian home. He comes of a family noted for pure and simple piety and devotion to the cause of religion, while there has ever been fostered a regard for the deepest charity and a leniency of judgment, concerning the shortcomings of humanity. From his father he inherited that sturdiness of character and love for the right which has ever marked his public career, while from his mother come the gentle graces and loving solicitude for others, that have added so much to his success in his holy office. Mr. Welshimer attended the public schools of his native county and those of West Mansfield until the age of eighteen, graduating from the high school at the latter place in April, 1891. Meanwhile he taught one term and after completing the high school course devoted about the same length of time to educational work, meeting with encouraging success as an instructor. From his twelfth to his seventeenth year he spent his vacation as clerk in a mercantile house at West Mansfield and in that capacity acquired a practical knowledge of business and an acquaintance with the world, which every man in any profession should have. The better to prepare himself for the noble calling to which he had decided to devote his talents, Mr. Welshimer, in 1892, entered the college at Ada, where he prosecuted his literary studies until his graduation, two years later, after which he became a student at Hiram College, taking the ministerial course. While pursuing his theological studies in the latter institution he did much ministerial work as pastor of the Christian church at Champion, Trumbull county, and after his graduation in 1897 he took charge of the church at Millersburg, where he labored with great acceptance until 1902. In January of the latter year, Mr. Welshimer accepted a call to the First Christian church at Canton, a large, flourishing and influential congregation, to which he has since ministered with much success, growing constantly in the love and esteem of his people and winning the confidence and good will of the people of the city, irrespective of creed or belief.

As a speaker Mr. Welshimer is clear, forceful and eloquent and his every utterance rings with sincerity and honest conviction. A master of the art of public discourse, he is enabled to present the claims of the gospel in such a way as to entertain as well as instruct his audiences and his earnest and impassioned words reveal the deep fervor with which he is imbued in discussing divine truths, which are thus made to appeal more strongly to those to whom addressed. His mind is carefully disciplined, analytical and of broad grasp, which, with his keen perception and quick, lively sympathy, makes him a power in his chosen field of labor. It is seldom that one of his years has attained so great prominence in the ministry, but his abilities are widely recognized and his genuine worth, both in the pulpit and without, has placed him among the foremost of those engaged in preaching the pure, simple gospel of Christ according to the teachings and practices of the primitive church. Mr. Welshimer's labors have been greatly blessed in winning souls to the better life and since taking pastoral charge of the Canton church many accessions have been made to the congregation through his instrumentality. The organization is prosperous in all of its lines of work and never in its history have its affairs been in better condition than during the short pastorate beginning in 1902.

On the 15th of May, 1900, Mr. Welshimer was united in marriage with Miss Clara Hornig, of Vermillion, Ohio, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Baldwick) Hornig, the union resulting in one child, Helen Louise. Mrs. Welshimer has proved a true helpmeet to her husband in his holy office, her sympathetic and generous nature having won the love and confidence of all coming within the sphere of her gracious influence and pleasing personality. While deeply interested in the noble work to which he has been called and in which he has been such a potent factor for good, Mr. Welshimer keeps in touch with the great world of secular affairs, which every true American citizen should do. He reads much, is remarkably well informed upon the leading questions and issues of the day and, as a Prohibitionist, votes his sentiments without fear or favor, though taking little part in party matters.

REV. GEORGE M. SCHMUCKER.—A full meed of honor and affectionate regard is accorded to the subject of this review, who is pastor of the Martin Luther church in the city of Canton, and whose life has been consecrated to exalted aims,—that of devoted service in the vineyard of the divine Master, and in the uplifting of his fellow men. It is interesting to note the fact that both his father and grandfather were clergymen of the Lutheran church, in whose ministry have also served numerous other members of the family in past generations. As touching the genealogy of Mr. Schmucker it is consistent to quote, somewhat at length, from an article prepared for a history of the Ohio synod of the Lutheran church. The sketch is initiated with particular reference to the father of the subject and in the following words: "Rev. George Schmucker, whose life's labors were spent among the West Virginia mountains, was a son of Rev. John Nicholas Schmucker, who immigrated to this country in 1785, from Michaelstadt, county of Erbach, Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany. The records of the church at Michaelstadt trace the family genealogy back to the early part of the eighteenth century. Prior to that time they came from Switzerland. The sons of this sturdy German immigrant were John Ferdinand, John George, John Nicholas, John Jacob and John Peter. Upon their arrival here they located in Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, and after a short stay there removed to Manheim, Pennsylvania, and thence to Woodstock, Virginia. Of the five sons three were preachers. * * * John Nicholas (grandfather of the subject), born September 24, 1779, was licensed by the Pennsylvania ministerium and served congregations in and around Woodstock, Virginia. He was one of the founders and the first president of the Virginia synod, which was organized in his own church at Woodstock, on the 10th of August, 1829. He served various congregations in the Shenandoah valley of Virginia, for more than forty years. He died February 9, 1855, and is buried in the old Mallow cemetery in Pendleton county, West Virginia. His son, Rev. George Schmucker, was born February 16, 1807, near Woodstock, Virginia, and in his early infancy was baptized by his father in the Zion church, on Stony creek, Virginia. In this same church he was also catechised and confirmed by his father. In his youth the desire seized him to become a minister of the gospel, and though his father opposed this noble desire he could not be induced to relinquish the same. Accordingly he began his studies in a school organized by Rev. S. S. Schmucker (his cousin), at Newmarket, Virginia, in 1823, and which was three years later removed to Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, in 1826, and incorporated as the Pennsylvania Theological Seminary. In 1835 George Schmucker finished his course at Gettysburg and was licensed the same year by the synod of Virginia. He took charge of some of the congregations of his father and served them until 1841. At this time his father made a visit to Pendleton and Hardy counties (now West Virginia), and on his return home reported so great need of some one to break the bread of life in that locality that the son was impelled to resign his charges and move to Pendleton county the same year." Of his work farther mention is made, drawing from the same source of information, but resorting to condensation and metaphor, as in harmony with the limitations of this publication.

Rev. George Schmucker gave his service to six different congregations, and was compelled to traverse an extreme distance of forty-five miles, over rough and hilly roads, in thus ministering to those over whom he assumed spiritual guidance. He thus traveled back and forth on horseback and continued his labors for the long period of forty years. As has been appreciatively said, "God's blessing rested upon his labors." Many of his congregations grew very large for that country, where people are so sparsely settled. The great Civil war almost paralyzed his work. Two of the congregations were scattered on account of sectional factions, and one of the church buildings was burned. After the war the fragments of the flocks were gathered up and are today earnest and faithful congregations. Father Schmucker was well known and highly respected throughout Pendleton, Highland and Hardy counties, and in many instances he ministered to families even to the third generation. Persons came to him for temporal as well as spiritual advice. He fell asleep in Jesus on the 10th day of August, 1886, and his remains now rest beside those of his father, in the old family burying ground.

In 1839 was solemnized his marriage to Miss Sarah Hahn, who was born in Shenandoah, being a daughter of Jacob Hahn, and she was summoned into eternal rest on the 4th of September, 1900, at the age of eighty-three years, having been an earnest and self-abnegating supporter of her husband in his arduous labors and having also been a devoted mother to her children, who may well rise up and call her blessed. Of this union were born four sons and four daughters, namely: Henrietta Jane, Mary Elizabeth, Samuel Luther, William Mosheim, Martha, Jacob Nicholas, Hanna Priscilla and George Melancthon.

Rev. George M. Schmucker, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born in Upper Tract, Pendleton county, West Virginia, on the 19th of August, 1857, and he passed his boyhood days on the farm there owned by his father, while among his early duties he devoted much of his time to tramping over the mountains tending cattle, the agricultural resources of that section being very limited. When about six years of age he began his scholastic discipline by attending the poorly equipped district school, which was located a considerable distance from his home, which fact, together with that of his services being demanded in connection with the work of the homestead, caused his attendance to be somewhat irregular and desultory. When but eight years of age, while playing about the sugar-cane mills of his father, he met with a most unfortunate accident, his left hand being drawn into the machine and so crushed as to render necessary its amputation at the wrist. In 1873 he entered the Polytechnic College at Newmarket, Virginia, where he completed the prescribed curriculum and was graduated as a member of the class of 1877, and during the ensuing year he was successfully engaged in teaching school in his native county. His experience in choosing a vocation in life was somewhat differentiated from that of his father, who, it will be recalled, was discouraged from entering the ministry by his sire, but persisted in his aim, while the subject early manifested a desire to prepare himself for the profession of the law, but it was his portion to have his honored and revered father urge him rather to become a clergyman of the church in which he himself has so long and faithfully served. Ever mindful of the wishes of his father and relying strongly upon his advice and counsel, the subject was finally lead to follow his earnest admonition and entreaty in this connection and thus determined to prepare himself for the ministry of the church in which he had been reared. In view of the marked spiritual and temporal success which has attended his efforts in his holy calling, as well as in consideration of the maximum satisfaction and joy which have come to him as a follower in the steps of the lowly Nazarene, there can be none to doubt the wisdom of his choice. In 1877 Mr. Schmucker was matriculated in the Capital University, in the city of Columbus, Ohio, where he was enabled to enter the junior class at this time, and here he was duly graduated as a member of the class of 1880, having completed the classical course in the regular literary department. He then entered the theological seminary of the same institution, which is conducted under the auspices of the Lutheran church, and was graduated in 1883, being at this time ordained and instituted as a minister of the Evangelical Lutheran church, while on the 1st of April of that year he was installed as pastor of the church at Carrollton, Carroll vounty, retaining this charge until January 1, 1888, and doing much to advance the work of the church and to vitalize all departments of its service, spiritual, benevolent and temporal. He was then assigned to the pastorate of the church at Waynesburg, Stark county, and also assumed charge of various missionary organizations under its auspices and in the vicinity, and here he continued to labor until the 1st of April, 1893. Then in response to a call from the mission board of his church, he came to Canton and here organized the first church of the Evangelical Lutheran denomination, the organization of the society having been effected on the 16th of June of that year, in the school building of the German Lutheran church, on East Tuscarawas street, whose members kindly encouraged and aided in the movement. At the inception the membership of the church included only one hundred and thirty persons, and in evidence of the devoted and indefatigable efforts of Mr. Schmucker stands the gratifying condition of the church today, the membership roll now including four hundred and seventy-five names, while the congregation worship in a well equipped edifice erected in 1893. Mr. Schmucker is a forceful and convincing speaker and his every utterance bears the impress of sincerity and earnestness, while he is equally potent in the pastoral and administrative functions of his office, as is shown in the rapid building up of the church organization under his direction.

Politically the subject maintains an independent attitude, though warm in his defense of the principles of prohibition. He takes an active interest also in educational work, and for three years he served as a member of the board of school examiners of Carroll county, while he has been called upon to lecture before the students of various colleges, and for the past ten years has been a valued member of the board of trustees of Lima College, at Lima, Ohio.

On the 19th of June, 1886, in Carrollton, Carroll county, Ohio, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Schmucker to Miss Mary Byder, who was born in that town on the 7th of January, 1867, and there reared and educated, being a daughter of John G. and Margaret (Buck) Byder, the latter of whom is now deof St. Joseph when Dorsey, one of the most noted anti-slavery agitators of Kansas and Missouri, was arrested and imprisoned. He was also an eye witness of Dorsey's release by John Brown and his companion, who in the night pried up the corner of the jail, so as to let the prisoner escape. This was in 1858, during Mr. Schott's third western trip, the other two, aside from long, tiresome wanderings over a wild and sparsely settled country, having been devoid of incident or adventure of especial note.

Joseph Whitt

On his return from his third trip, Mr. Schott was married, in Waynesburg, Ohio, to Miss Caroline Brinkle, who after several years of happy wedded life died in the city of Canton. Subsequently he entered the marriage relation with Miss Rosanna Kessler, of Stark county, a union terminated by the death of the wife, after which he chose for his third companion Miss Magdalene Markle, of Canton, who still survives. Meanwhile Mr. Schott continued to work at his trade and by careful management succeeded in acquiring some means, which he concluded to invest in western real estate. Accordingly he made another journey to the west, this time to Texas, taking the trip at the instance of the Texas Central Railroad, then in process of construction. Writing to the management of this enterprise concerning its lands, he received a favorable reply, with a free pass to Texas and return. In company with four companions, he made an extensive tour of the state with the object of investment in view, visiting, in the course of his travels, Dennison, Ft. Worth and many other important points. During the great part of the time the little company rode on horseback, over a wild, unsettled country, camping wherever night overtook them and not infrequently meeting with dangers which upon more than one occasion came very nearly resulting in the death of the five intrepid travelers. At that time the Comanche Indians were on the war path and without realizing their proximity to the savages Mr. Schott and his companions rode into the hostile country. When they fully appreciated their danger it required the utmost care and vigilance to keep a safe distance between them and the lurking foes. Upon one occasion, when about going into camp for the night, Mr. Schott suggested that they should sleep on a high bluff near by instead of in the valley, where several other parties had already pitched their tents. After some persuasion he succeeded in carrying his point and the sequel demonstrated the wisdom of his argument. During the night the Indians stealthily crept upon those who encamped below and the next morning nothing but mangled bodies remained to tell the tale of their horrible massacre.

While in Texas Mr. Schott borrowed of a friend sufficient money to purchase four hundred acres of land in Grayson county, for which he paid the sum of one thousand dollars. He also bought one hundred and sixty acres within the present corporate limits of Dennison, which he afterwards sold at a large profit, also realizing three thousand dollars from the former tract, which he disposed of a few years after making the purchase. In 1877 Mr. Schott made still another western trip, during which he speculated quite extensively in lands, never failing to realize liberally upon his investments. He owns at this time four hundred and fifty acres of fine land in Grayson county, Texas, upon which he settled three of his children, thus furnishing them comfortable homes, besides in other ways assisting them to get a start in life. In addition to his western real estate, he has valuable farm lands to the amount of four hundred and ten acres in Ash-tabula county, Ohio, besides fine city property, both residence and business, which returns him every year a large part of his income. Mr. Schott purchased the lot in Canton now occupied by the Mechanics block when there was nothing but an old log cabin to mark the site, and, in partnership with two other parties, built the handsome business structure which now adorns the ground. When he erected his present home on Cherry street there were no other buildings near, but, realizing that the city would soon grow in that direction, he made the investment and time has demonstrated his good judgment and rare foresight. He has greatly improved his property by planting trees, constructing walks, grading the street, thus adding materially to its value as well as increasing its attractiveness as one of the most desirable residence portions of the city.

Mr. Schott, in partnership with F. Herbruck and John Werner, organized the National Wringer Company and within a short time the present buildings were erected and the establishment put into successful operation. Mr. Schott was elected treasurer of the concern and under his able management it has become one of the substantial industries of Canton, the manufactured product having a large sale in every state of the Union. It is operated at full capacity to meet the demands of the trade and it is a matter of easy prophecy to predict an enlargement at no distant day. In addition to his manufacturing enterprises and real estate interests, Mr. Schott for several years was quite extensively engaged in the ice business. He built large houses on Fitzgerald lake, from which he shipped immense quantities to Cleveland where he carried on a lucrative trade until the spring of 1902, when he turned the business over to his son-in-law, by whom it is now successfully managed. Mr. Schott has been an enterprising and indefatigable worker, and from his youth to the present time his career has been characterized by an energy and determination which never left success a matter of doubt.

Mr. Schott is a companionable gentleman and has many warm personal friends in the city of Canton and elsewhere. Public spirited, he has ever manifested an active interest in the material prosperity of the city of his residence and in the furtherance of the moral status his influence has also been a potential factor. Politically he is a Democrat and as such has twice served in the city council from a ward which is normally Republican by a reliable majority, thus demonstrating his popularity as a safe and reliable municipal legislator irrespective of party. Religiously he was born and reared a Catholic and has ever remained unswervingly loyal to the mother church, in the faith of which his children have been dutifully instructed. Himself and family belong to St. John's church in this city, to the support of which he has for many years been a liberal contributor.

By his first wife Mr. Schott is the father of three children, Sylvanus, a farmer and stock raiser of Grayson county, Texas, where he owns four large farms; William, also a cattle dealer of that state, who has four thousand acres of land adjacent to the "Staked Plains;" and Ella, wife of Sylvester Halter, of Cleveland, Ohio. The second marriage resulted in one son and one daughter, namely: Albert, who died at the age of twenty-two, and Addie, who married John Hunter and lives on a two-thousand-acre farm in Texas. Mr. Schott's present wife has borne him two children, Sadie, who lives with her parents, and Emma, wife of William Fitzgerald, a resident of Canton.

REV. FREDERICK C. NAU, pastor of the German Reformed church of Canton, Ohio, inherits the sterling characteristics of French and German ancestry, the paternal side of the family being traceable to the former nationality. His grandfather, Louis Nau, was a native of Germany, born in the province of Hesse, where he spent the greater part of his life. Later he joined his son, Henry, in the United States, and settled at Mt. Eaton, Wayne county, Ohio, where he lived the remainder of his days, dying a number of years ago esteemed and honored for his sturdy honesty and genuine worth. Henry Nau, father of the subject of this review, was born in the little town of Homberg, Hesse, but grew to maturity principally in the city of Cassel. After attending the public school until the age of fourteen he entered the teachers' seminary in Cassel, where he prepared himself for teaching, which profession he followed for several years in Bremen, earning an enviable reputation as an able and accomplished educator. Thinking to influence his financial condition in the United States, of which country he had read much, and which he believed to abound in better opportunities for young men than his native land, he bade adieu to Germany in 1864 and sailed for the new world. For several years following his arrival he taught in the parochial schools at Galion, Ohio, and later became principal of the German schools in the city of Columbus, the state capital. Mr. Nau had been reared in a Christian home and through the influence of pious parents he was early led to give his heart to God and to devote his life to the Master's service. Believing that duty pointed in the direction of the public ministry, he entered that holy calling in 1875, his first charge being the German Reformed church in the city of Bucyrus. Subsequently he served, at different times, the congregations at Bellaire, Mt. Eaton, New Bavaria and Sandusky, besides preaching at intervals at various other places. Rev. Nau was not only a clear, forcible and popular preacher, but a profound theologian as well, and in due time he took high rank among the clergy of his church. After his pastorate at Sandusky he was made editor of the German juvenile periodical of the German Reformed church. While holding this responsible position he lived in Cleveland, where the publishing house of the church is located, moving to that city in 1890 and maintaining a residence there until resigning the editorial chair, eleven years later. As a preacher he displays much talent and education, and as a writer his articles have always been characterized by versatility, elegance of diction, clearness and beauty of thought. He has been one of the scholarly and useful men in his denomination and, although living the quiet, contented life of a farmer in Huron county at the present time, still keeps in touch with current religious thought and frequently fills pulpits near his home and elsewhere, besides taking an active interest in the public affairs of the church. Henry Nau was married, in Galion, Ohio, to Miss Catherine Lanius, a native of that city and daughter of the late Peter Lanius, a union which resulted in ten children, the subject of this sketch being the second in order of birth.

Rev. Frederick C. Nau is a native of Columbus, Ohio, and dates his birth from the 2d day of December, 1871. After attending the public schools of the various cities and towns in which his father preached, he entered, at the age of sixteen, Calvin College, at Cleveland, where he pursued his studies until completing a full classical course, graduating in 1893 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, meantime having decided to make the ministry his life work. He began his theological studies in the seminary of Heidelberg College, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1896, and shortly thereafter was appointed to his present charge, the First Reformed church of Canton.

Rev. Nau has more than met the high expectations of his friends, and among his parishioners he is held in profound esteem for his ability as an able and eloquent expounder of the word of truth, and for the substantial growth the church has enjoyed under his pastorate. When he took charge of the work in this city the membership of the congregation numbered about five hundred and seventy-five, but through his instrumentality it has since been increased until the records now show eleven hundred now belonging, a gain of about seventy per cent in a little over six years. Not the least evidence of his enterprising spirit is the present fine condition of the temple of worship, a large and beautiful structure which he had thoroughly remodeled and rededicated in 1898 at an expenditure of fifteen thousand dollars.

Rev. Nau, like every good and patriotic citizen, manifests considerable interest in public affairs, and votes his sentiments fearlessly, also keeps himself well informed relative to the great political, economic and industrial questions now before the American people. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias, belonging to the canton degree in the latter organization. Rev. Nau's marriage was solemnized at Lima, in 1896, with Miss Angelina Cantieny, a resident of that city and a descendant of an old family that lived for many generations near the border of Italy, in the south part of Switzerland. She has borne her husband two children, whose names are Catherine and Dorothy.

PHILIP SHERER was born in the province of Alsace, France, which is now a portion of the German empire, the date of his nativity having been February 20, 1832, while he was a son of Peter and Barbara (Smith) Sherer, both of whom were born and reared in that same province, where the father was engaged in agricultural pursuits up to the time of his emigration to America. In his family were eight children, of whom the following named five are living at the present time: Peter and George, who are identified with farming in Carroll county, this state; Christ, who is a resident of the city of Canton, Stark county; Christena, who is the wife of John Berger, of Sandy township, this county; and Frederick, who is a resident of St. Joseph county, Indiana. In 1847 the family emigrated to the United States and, coming to Stark county, located in

Pike township, where the father of our subject purchased a farm of eighty acres, where he continued to make his home for several years, after which he disposed of the property and purchased a tract of one hundred and three acres in the southern part of Canton township, where he and his devoted wife passed the remainder of their lives, being honest, industrious and God-fearing persons and commanding unqualified confidence and regard in the community. The father had accumulated a competency in his native land and had converted his property into cash at the time of his emigration to America, but the greater portion of his money was stolen on shipboard while the family were en route, so that he was handicapped to a greater degree than he had anticipated when he established his new home. By energy and good management, however, he retrieved his fortunes, in a comparative sense, before he was called from the scene of life's activities. Peter Sherer and his wife were devoted members of the Reformed church, being identified with the church in Canton whose pastor was the late and honored Dr. Herbruck. In politics Mr. Sherer was a staunch adherent of the Whig party. Four of his sons were valiant and faithful soldiers in the war of the Rebellion, Philip, the immediate subject of this memoir, and George, Frederick and Peter.

Philip Sherer received his early educational discipline in his native province of Alsace, and was fifteen years of age at the time of the family's emigration to America. He had been educated in a German school and upon coming to Stark county he entered the district school in the vicinity of his home, but his schoolmates so ridiculed him on account of his not knowing the English language and making undoubtedly laughable mistakes, that he refused to continue in the school, and the year after coming to Stark county he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of shoemaking, becoming a skilled workman and devoting his attention to this vocation until he had attained the age of twenty-seven years. He then purchased a farm of eighty acres, in Sandy township, and in connection with the cultivation of the same he also engaged in the butchering business, in which he continued until 1879, while for two years of this interval he conducted a meat market in Canton, being associated with a partner, whose poor management entailed failure to the enterprise, and the business was closed out, Mr. Sherer meeting with heavy financial loss in the connection. In 1875 he disposed of his farm and purchased the present fine homestead of the family, in Osnaburg township, the same comprising two hundred and ninety-three acres and being one of the most valuable and well improved landed estates in this portion of the county. Mr. Sherer was a man of insistent activity and enterprise, was endowed with broad business capacity and mature judgment, and was prospered in his earnest and indefatigable efforts. He was a natural mechanic, and after coming to this homestead he was not content to confine his efforts solely to his agricultural operations, but erected on his farm large mills,—a saw and planing mill, cane mill, cider press and apple-butter factory, in which lines he transacted an extensive business for many years, while he also operated a gristmill and a well equipped threshing outfit. This mere statement indicates his progressive spirit and the great capacity he had for the handling of affairs of wide scope and importance, while he was honored as one of the representative and influential citizens of the county and as one upon whose entire career could be found no shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil. In November, 1890, his original mill buildings were destroyed by fire, and shortly afterward he erected the present finely equipped plant which is now owned and operated by his son Edwin and which betokens one of the most important industrial enterprises in this section of the county. In 1888 Mr. Sherer erected a commodious and substantial residence, of modern architectural design, and the same is most attractively situated on a rise of ground, commanding a fine view of the surrounding country and being one of the conspicuous landmarks of the township. In politics he gave an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, though he was entirely without personal ambition for official preferment. He was originally a member of the Reformed church, but later in life identified himself with the Evangelical Association, as there was no church organization of the former denomination in the vicinity of his home. He was liberal in his support of church work, and took an active interest in all that tended to conserve the progress and material wellbeing of the community, while to him was ever accorded the uniform confidence and esteem of all who knew him, and thus when he was summoned into eternal rest, on the 23d of January, 1898, the entire community felt a deep sense of personal loss and bereavement, while to those to whom he was nearest and dearest will ever remain the utmost appreciation of all that was signified in the life of this noble and true man.

On the 11th of September, 1853, Mr. Sherer was united in marriage to Miss Christina Kinwright, who was born in Sandy township, this county, being a daughter of Michael and Margaret (Casper) Kinwright, the former of whom was born in the state of Maryland and the latter in the province of Alsace, France, both having come to Stark county in the pioneer days and their marriage having been here solemnized. They are now deceased, the father having been one of the influential farmers of the county, while both were valued members of the New Lutheran church. Mrs. Sherer still resides on the old homestead, so endeared to her by the memories and associations of the past, and having the solace which comes from the filial solicitude of her children, of whom we offer brief record as follows:

Ida E., Mrs. Calvin Hershberger, has three children, Harry R., Arlan R. and Verda M., and one, Vera E., died in infancy; Henry E., who runs the mill, married Ella Shorey, and has two sons, Harold R. and Arthur N.; Jennie A. married David B. Wilson, of Waco, Ohio, and they have one son, Howard E.

SIMON REINER was born on a farm near Magnolia, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 19th of June, 1847, being one of the ten children of Adam and Maria (Oaks) Reiner, while of the number only four are living at the present time, namely: William, who is a resident of Louisville, this county; Albert, of Canton; John E., of Nimishillen township; and Simon, of this sketch. Adam Reiner was born in Germany, about the year 1822, and was but five years of age when his parents bade adieu to the fatherland and emigrated to America. It is interesting to record the fact that they originally located in Stark county in the early pioneer days, though they remained but a few years, having resided in Osnaburg township, whence they subsequently removed to Carroll county, where the grandparents passed the residue of their lives. The father of the subject was reared to maturity in that county, being associated with the great basic art of agriculture from his boyhood up, and after his marriage he established his home on a farm in that county, where he remained until 1854, when he came again to Stark county, settling in Paris township, where he continued to be engaged in farming until 1867, when he came to the farm now owned and occupied by our subject, on section 14, Osnaburg township. He continued to reside on this farm until about 1876, when he turned the management of the place over to the subject of this review and removed to another farm, north of the village of Louisville, where he continued to be actively engaged in farming until 1900, when he returned to the homestead, where he is now living practically retired, at the venerable age of eighty-one years, receiving the utmost filial solicitude on the part of the subject and his wife, in whose home he is thus pleasantly established. In politics he has ever given his support to the Democracy, and he has held various minor offices, including that of school director, of which he was incumbent for several years. His religious faith is that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared, and his entire life has been one of invincible integrity and honor, so that in the golden evening of his day he enjoys to the full the confidence and esteem of all who know him. His loved and cherished wife died some years ago in Nimishillen township.

Simon Reiner was a lad of about seven years at the time of his parents' removal from Carroll to Stark county, and he grew to maturity under the beneficent and sturdy discipline of the farm, while his educational privileges were such as were enjoyed by the average farmer boy of the locality and period, being confined to a somewhat irregular attendance in the district schools. In 1877 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Diehl, who was born in Paris township, this county, a daughter of Jacob Diehl, a sterling pioneer farmer of the county. One year prior to his marriage he had assumed charge of the home farm, as has been already mentioned in this context, and he continued to rent the farm from his father until 1880, when he purchased the property, and has since given his undivided attention to its cultivation and to the raising of high-grade live stock, though this feature of his enterprise is subordinate to that of agriculture. In 1892 Mr. Reiner erected one of the handsomest farm residences in this section of the county, the building being spacious and of modern architectural design and equipment, while it should further be stated that it is a center of genial and gracious hospitality and a favorite rendezvous of the wide circle of friends whom the family have gained during the past years. The farm has the best of improvements and comprises eighty-six acres of as fertile and productive land as is to be found within the county. The marriage of the subject and his estimable wife has been blessed with four children, of whom one died in infancy, while the other three are still beneath the home roof, their names, in order of birth, being: Anthony L., Emma R. and Ollie E. In politics Mr. Reiner is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and while he takes a deep and intelligent interest in the issues of the day and in the material and civic welfare of his home county and state, he has never exhibited any political ambition in a personal way, having no desire for the honors or emoluments of office of any character. He is a communicant of the Catholic church, as is also his wife, and they are identified with St. Louis parish, at Louisville.

DR. E. L. METZGER is a native of Stark county, and the youngest of four children born to J. W. and Frances (Pierson) Metzger, a notice of whom will be found on another page of this volume. The Doctor was born August 3, 1872, in Nimishillen township, and spent his early years on the home farm, attending during his minority the public schools of Louisville. At the age of twenty-one he acquired an interest in the Canton and Osnaburg Brick and Tile Company, with which he was identified about four years, during which time he also ran a barber shop in Louisville, receiving from the two sources a very satisfactory income. Severing his connection with the above company and with no desire to continue the barber business, Mr. Metzger, in 1898, took up the study of veterinary surgery, fully satisfied that the profession afforded a very favorable opening for a young man of talent and sufficient energy to push the matter to successful issue. After a course of private reading Mr. Metzger, in the fall of the above year, entered the veterinary department of the Ohio State University at Columbus, where he prosecuted his studies under the direction of some of the ablest professors of the day, and in the spring of 1901 he was graduated with one of the best records of his class. On receiving his degree he opened an office in Louisville and while his practice has covered no great length of time, he has acquired a large and lucrative patronage, which gives every promise of increasing many fold with each succeeding year. As is well known, the farmers of Nimishillen township have long prided themselves on the high grade of their live stock, especially horses, than which there are none better in any other part of the state. Realizing the value of fine, healthy animals, they have spared no expense in looking after their ailments, which fact has made the presence of a skillful and successful veterinary surgeon almost as great a necessity as that of a regular physician. Dr. Metzger was heartily welcomed in Louisville and the success that has thus far attended his treatment has given him much more than mere local repute. Many of his patrons came long distances to secure the benefit of his professional services and with but trifling exception his treatment has been followed by the most satisfactory results. He now has about all the business he can properly attend to and his success has more than realized his most sanguine expectations when he contemplated making the profession his life work.

On February 19, 1901, Dr. Metzger was happily married to Miss Vida McClard, of Osnaburg, daughter of James and Ellen (Baker) McClard, parents formerly of Stark county, but now living in Adairsville, Kentucky. In politics the Doctor is an unswerving adherent of the Democratic party and for four years served on the county central committee from Nimishillen township. He has been an aggressive worker, and his influence and leadership have contributed not a little to the party's strength in the campaigns of recent years. The Doctor's religious creed is represented by the Catholic church, in which he was born and reared and of which he has ever been an earnest and faithful member.

JOHN L. FREY was born on the old homestead farm, in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 23d of October, 1850, being the younger of the two children of John and Caroline (Sluss) Frey, the other child being Frances, who is the wife of Reason A. Smuck, a prominent farmer of Osnaburg township. His father was likewise a native of Stark county, having been born in Paris township, where his parents took up their abode in the early pioneer epoch, having emigrated hither from Pennsylvania. John Frey was reared on the pioneer homestead, his father having passed away when he was a child, and after his marriage he settled on a farm in Osnaburg township, where he became the owner of one hundred and seventy-three acres, and there he continued to make his home until his death, which occurred in 1890, at which time he had attained the age of sixty-seven years. He was a stanch Democrat in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Reformed church, the latter having been born in Osnaburg township, in 1829, while her death there occurred about 1878.

John L. Frey, the immediate subject of this sketch, grew to maturity on the old homestead where he was born, and his education was secured in the public schools of the township. At the age of seventeen years he left the parental roof, and for the following five years followed various occupations, after which he returned to his home and there continued to be associated in the operation of the farm up to the time of his marriage, in 1879. He then removed to his present fine farm, which is located in Nimi-shillen township, and which comprises one hundred and eighteen acres. He purchased this farm from his mother-in-law, and it is known as one of the model farms of the township, being under a high state of cultivation and equipped with the best of improvements, including a commodious and attractive residence. In 1888 Mr. Frey rented the farm and removed to the village of Louisville, this county, where he remained for the ensuing ten years, living practically retired and enjoying the fruits of his former toil and endeavor. In 1898 he sold his town property and returned to the farm, where he was again located until the spring of 1903 and now supervises the same, being one of the progressive and scientific farmers of the county and thus securing the maximum returns from his labors. He and his wife have passed two summers in Colorado, in 1889 and 1890. In politics Mr. Frey gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, and he and his wife are prominent and zealous members of the Reformed church.

On the 9th of October, 1879, Mr. Frey was united in marriage to Miss Harriet Hershey, who was born in Nimishillen township, being a daughter of the late Jacob Hershey, who was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and numbered among the pioneers of Stark county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Frey have one child, Nellie J., who is one of the popular young ladies of the community and who still remains at the parental home.

ADAM NIMON was born in Hessen Darmstadt, Germany, on the 2d of February, 1833, the son of John and Anna Catherine (Moulin) Nimon, who were the parents of but two children, the other being a son, John, now a resident of Columbiana county, Ohio. The subject's father was also a native of Hessen Darmstadt, his birth occurring in 1804. He was reared in his native country and early learned the trade of wood working, being employed while in his native country at the manufacture of spinning wheels. In 1833, realizing that in the new world lay wider opportunities for a man of energy and ambition, he emigrated with his family, landing at Baltimore after an ocean voyage of forty-two days. At that time the father was eighty dollars in debt, having had their passage money advanced by two cousins who also made the voyage. They at once came to the Buckeye state, locating at Letonia, Columbiana county, where they lived one year. Later they removed five miles southwest of Letonia to a fifteen-acre farm which he had there purchased and there lived until the spring of 1852, when they removed to Stark county and purchased the farm of seventy acres now owned by Abraham Creighton, at Osnaburg. After a year's residence upon this place he gave the farm to his son John and purchased the eighty-acre tract upon which the subject now resides. Upon this farm the parents resided until their deaths. Upon first arriving in Letonia the father learned the trade of wagon-making and for a few years following worked at this business during the winter months, while during the warmer months he was employed at carpentering and building. He was a natural-born mechanic and successfully handled all kinds of tools. At the time he erected his first house he was practically without experience, but fulfilled his contract to the entire satisfaction of his customer, receiving in payment therefor fifteen acres of land. The house is still standing and is in a fair state of preservation. From this beginning Mr. Nimon felt encouraged to continue at that occupation and pursued for a number of years with marked success and profit. Politically he was a Democrat and took a keen and intelligent interest in the trend of public events. His religious principles were those embodied in the creed of the Lutheran church, of which he was long a faithful and consistent member. His death occurred in 1882 in his seventy-eighth year, while his wife passed away the year previously at the advanced age of eighty-four. They were well known and highly esteemed by all who knew them and their deaths was a distinct loss to the community in which they had resided.

Adam Nimon was reared under the parental roof and acquired his education in the pioneer schools of the period and the locality. The educational facilities at that time were necessarily limited, but Mr. Nimon was ambitious to obtain an education and made faithful use of such means as were at his command, at length acquiring a fair knowledge of the common English branches. This he has since liberally supplemented by a wide course of reading and a close observation of men and events. At the age of twenty years he removed to the farm on which he now resides and, his father not having a practical knowledge of farming, the subject took active charge of the place, running it for his father's benefit until the latter's death, since which time he has remained in possession, it having reverted to him at that time. He has made a decided success of his vocation and has achieved an enviable reputation as one of the intelligent and progressive agriculturists of his township. His time is almost entirely given to his farming interests and the excellent condition of his fields and farm buildings indicates his care and supervision. He is both practical and progressive in his methods and to his energy and perseverance is attributed the gratifying success which has attended his efforts.

In 1868 the subject was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Miss Elizabeth Scheffer, a native of Osnaburg township and a daughter of John Scheffer, also a native of the same township. The latter's father, Henry Scheffer, was a native of Pennsylvania, but came to Ohio in the early pioneer days, at a time when Indians and wild game were plentiful. To the subject and his wife have been born seven children, of whom six survive, as follows: Harvey, of Canton, Ohio; George, also of Canton; Frances, Levi, Anna and Clara, all at home. In politics the subject is nominally a Democrat, voting in harmony with that party on all national questions, but in local matters he deems the fitness of the candidate for the office sought the most important consideration. He was at one time nominated against his wishes for the office of township trustee, but refused to make a canvass and at the election was defeated by three or four votes. Religiously he is identified with the Reformed church and gives his earnest support to all measures having for their object the advancement of the moral or material interests of the community. All in all, he is a citizen of whom any community might be proud.

JACOB KAGEY was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 13th of October, 1842, being a son of Abraham and Hannah (Snyder) Kagey and now the only survivor of their five children. Abraham Kagey was born in Shenandoah county, Virginia, in January, 1818, a son of John and Catherine (Coughnour) Kagey. The name has long been identified with the annals of American history and has stood for the highest type of citizenship and the most exalted patriotism. The original American ancestor was John Kagey, who emigrated hither from Switzerland, prior to the middle of the seventeenth century, taking up his abode in Virginia, and a number of the family were patriot soldiers in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, while many of the name have been prominent in the public life of the nation, representatives being now found in the most diverse sections of the Union, though the Old Dominion still claims a number of the family as residents. When the father of the subject was a child his parents removed from Virginia to Trumbull county, Ohio, being numbered among the pioneers of that section of the Buckeye state. There his father died when Abraham was but seven years of age, and he then became an inmate of the home of his uncle, Henry Kagey, who soon afterward removed to Columbiana county, Ohio, where the father of the subject was reared to manhood on a farm, receiving such educational advantages as the pioneer locality afforded. As a young man he came to Stark county for a visit, and while here he met Miss Hannah Snyder, with whom he successfully pressed his suit, as is shown in the fact that they were shortly afterward married. They passed the first two years of their married life in Columbiana county, and then came to Stark county, in 1843, the year after the birth of the subject, their eldest child, and here the father purchased a farm of eighty acres in Osburg township, where he continued to make his home until 1854, when he sold the property and purchased the farm now owned by the subject, on section 35, Nimishillen township, the same comprising one hundred and eighteen acres of as fine land as can be found in the county. Here he resided until the time of his death, which occurred on the 21st of June, 1873, his demise being the direct result of injuries received by being thrown from a horse about a score of years previously, his health having been much impaired ever after this accident. In his earlier life he was a Democrat in politics, but upon the organization of the Republican party he espoused its cause and ever afterward continued its stalwart adherent. He was a prominent member of the German Baptist church, in which he held the office of deacon for a number of years. In 1879 his widow consummated a second marriage, becoming the wife of Christian Sollenberger, and she died about five years later, in 1884, having likewise been a devoted member of the German Baptist church.

Jacob Kagey was reared on the homestead

farm, in this county, being about twelve years of age at the time when his parents removed from Osnaburg township to his present farm. Being the eldest child he was early called upon to assume much of the practical work of the farm, his father's accident having disqualified him for active labor, and thus the subject's educational advantages were very limited in scope, being confined to a somewhat desultory attendance in the district schools. In 1864 Mr. Kagey was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Berlin, who was born in Nimishillen township, being a daughter of the late Isaac Berlin, one of the honored pioneers of the county, whither he came from Pennsylvania, a state which has contributed largely to the personnel of Stark county's citizenship. The maiden name of his wife was Margaret Trump, and both died in this county. After his marriage the subject left the home farm and for about nine years following he was engaged in farming on his own responsibility and also operated a threshing machine. In 1873 he effected the purchase of the homestead farm and here continued to reside until the spring of 1902, when he purchased the John Warstler farm, near the village of Louisville, where he is now residing, the place being under a high state of cultivation and equipped with the best of permanent improvements, including a commodious residence, of attractive design. Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kagey, three survive, namely: William H., who is engaged in the grocery business in Louisville, this county; John B., who is a prominent merchant and manufacturer of that village and also incumbent of the office of postmaster, and Ira E., who is associated with his father in the management of the home farm.

Mr. Kagey is a man of unswerving integrity and honor and has been a prominent and influential citizen of Nimishillen township for many years, having the unequivocal confidence and regard of all who know him. After his father's death he effected the settlement of the estate without recourse to court proceedings, and so marked was his skill and probity in the handling of the same that he was afterward called upon to act as administrator of several important estates, having had four on his hands at one time, while the utmost confidence has invariably been shown in his judgment and fairness. Mr. Kagey was for two years a member of the directorate of the Stark County Fair Association and for twelve successive years he was treasurer of the Home Insurance Company of Nimishillen and Osnaburg townships, retiring from the office only upon his positive declination to remain longer its incumbent, though he served three years as a director of the company. He is now secretary of the Union Cemetery Association, in which office he is serving his second term, while for many years he was a member of the school board of his district and has been one of the most valued citizens of this section of the county. In politics he accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and though not formally identified with any church organization he is a liberal contributor to religious work, regardless of denomination.

RUFUS W. GEHMAN was born on a farm in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 10th of September, 1867, being a son of David and Nancy (Wright) Gehman, of whose three children he is the younger of the two surviving, his sister Ida being the wife of John Rauch, who is likewise a successful farmer of Osnaburg township. The subject was reared under the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm and is indebted to the public schools of the locality for his early educational privileges, of which he duly availed himself. On the 19th of August, 1888, Mr. Gehman was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Shepley, who was likewise born in this township, being a daughter of Jacob Shepley, who was born in Germany, whence he emigrated to America as a young man, taking up his residence in Stark county, where he married Miss Rachel Kimmel, and where he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, being one of the sterling citizens of this township. He passed away at the age of seventy-six years and his wife still survives him, being aged seventy-five years. After his marriage Mr. Gehman located on a small farm, of forty-five acres, just north of the village of Osnaburg, having purchased the property in the preceding spring, and to the improvement and cultivation of this farm he continued to give his attention for the ensuing five years, after which he applied the same in part payment for the old home farm of one hundred acres, which is most eligibly located just to the east of the village of Osnaburg, this being the old homestead on which he was born, and at the time the exchange was effected his father removed to the smaller farm which the subject had previously owned. Mr. Gehman here continued his active and effective labors for a period of four years, when his father and step-mother manifested a desire to return to the homestead, and he thus sold the place to his father, after which he purchased a farm of seventy-eight acres near Maximo, in Ninisillen township, where he remained for two years, after which he returned to Osnaburg township and purchased his present home farm, which comprises eighty-one and one-half acres of excellent land, in section 5. The productivity of the farm has been maintained at the highest standard and the permanent improvements are of substantial and attractive character. In the various localities where he has thus lived Mr. Gehman has held a high reputation as a model farmer, knowing thoroughly well the best methods to be employed in securing the maximum returns from the lands of this locality, from the fact that he has here been closely identified with the great fundamental industry of agriculture from his boyhood up and has also been a close student of these methods and has shown marked resourcefulness and discrimination in the application of his energies. In connection with his general farming he makes a specialty of raising a high grade of live stock, and in this line utilizes the products of his farm, with the exception of his wheat crop.

In his political proclivities Mr. Gehman is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and takes a lively interest in all that concerns the progress and material prosperity of his home county. He and his wife are both consistent members of the Reformed church, and have the unqualified esteem of all who know them. They became the parents of two children, Clarence, who died in infancy, and Charles C., who was born on the 25th of April, 1891.

JACOB SHUMAKER.—In the attractive village of Minerva, Paris township, is located the fine home of Mr. Shumaker, one of the progressive and influential business men of this section of the state and an honored and representative citizen of Stark county, where he is identified with industrial and financial interests of broad scope and importance. Mr. Shumaker comes of staunch German lineage and is himself a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born on a farm in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on the 21st of April, 1850. He is one of the nine children born to John and Polly (Bortz) Shumaker, and aside from himself only one other of the children survives, his brother Alexander, who is a resident of the city of Akron, Ohio. John Shumaker, father of the subject, was born in Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, and was there reared to manhood. As a young man he removed to Mercer county, that state, where he married and where he passed the residue of his life in agricultural pursuits, having accumulated a good property and having ever been known as a man of industrious habits and sterling integrity of character. He died on his farm, at the age of seventy-six years, honored by all who knew him. His wife survived him a number of years, retaining her home on the old farm, so hallowed to her by the memories and associations of the past, until her death, at the venerable age of eighty-three years, both having been active and devoted members of the Lutheran church, while the father was a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, though never an aspirant for political preferment.

Jacob Shumaker, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared in a home of beneficent influences, and continued to be associated in the work of the old farmstead until he had attained the age of twenty-three years, his services having thus been in such requisition during his youthful days that his early educational privileges were somewhat limited in scope, being confined to a somewhat irregular attendance in the district schools. On the 25th of November, 1875, Mr. Shumaker was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Smith, who likewise was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Henry Smith, a prominent farmer of that section. After his marriage Mr. Shumaker rented land and gave his attention to its cultivation for one year, after which he purchased a farm of forty acres, in Mercer county, where he continued in agricultural pursuits about six years. Directly after his marriage he began buying timber, and in this line of enterprise he continued operations on a modest scale in connection with his farming, showing marked tact and ability in the handling of this department of his business, which eventually began to render him excellent returns. Upon leaving his farm, in 1881, he took up his residence in Sheakleyville, Mercer county, and turned his entire attention to his lumbering business, which by this time had grown to no inconsiderable magnitude. About one year later he came to Carroll county, Ohio, and located at Watheys, where he continued in the same line of enterprise for a year and then removed to Amsterdam, Jefferson county, where he likewise lived for one year, at the expiration of which he came to his present place of residence, in Minerva, Stark county, which has since been his home and business headquarters. His lumbering operations have grown to extensive proportions and for a number of years he operated several saw mills, but in recent years he has had his work done by contract, finding a market for his lumber to a large extent with certain railroad companies. In 1899 he erected his present commodious modern residence in Minerva, the same being the finest in the town and of most attractive architectural design. He is a stockholder and director, as well as a member of the financial committee, of the Bank of Minerva; is a stockholder of the American Consolidated Mining Company, which owns valuable mining interests in New Mexico; and he also has valuable mining interests in Pennsylvania. Thus it may be seen that Mr. Shumaker is distinctively a man of affairs, and his success is the more gratifying to note, from the fact that it has been attained through his own efforts, so that he is well deserving of the proud American title of self-made man. He is the owner of two hundred and thirteen acres of fine farming land in Carroll county, Ohio, and is one of the leading business men and influential citizens of this section of the Buckeye state. In politics Mr. Shumaker accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and while free from all personal ambition in the matter of public office, he was called upon to serve as a member of the village council of Minerva, of which office he was incumbent for four years. Fraternally Mr. Shumaker is an appreciative member of the Masonic order, being identified with Tubal

Lodge No. 551, Free and Accepted Masons, of Minerva; Chapter No. 123, Royal Arch Masons, at Canton, and Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar, while he is also identified with the popular social auxiliary, the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, having been conducted across the burning sands of the desert under the auspices of Al Koran Temple, in the city of Cleveland. He also holds membership in Custer Lodge No. 469, Knights of Pythias, at Greenville, Pennsylvania. His wife is a member of the Disciple church. They have one daughter, Letha, who remains beneath the parental roof and who is one of the popular young ladies in the social life of the community.

SAMUEL SEFONG, SR., is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, on the 3d of August, 1825, and being a son of George O. and Elizabeth (Biddinger) Sefong, of whose nine children he is one of the two surviving at the present time, his younger brother, Jacob, being a well-known resident of Nimishillen township, this county. The father of the subject was born in the province of Wurtemberg, Germany, whence he came to America when fifteen years of age, in order to escape service in the German army, and he joined his brother in the state of Pennsylvania, where he was reared to maturity and where his marriage was solemnized. About the year 1834 he came to Stark county, Ohio, and first located in the village of Osnaburg, whence, shortly afterward, he removed to a tract of fifteen acres which he had purchased in Nimishillen township. There he continued to reside until he was well advanced in years, when he removed to Frieburg, Washington township, where he continued to make his home until the death of his second wife, when, being in his ninetieth year, his children brought him to the home of his son Jacob, where he died three weeks later. His first wife, the mother of the subject, died in 1834, as a result of an attack of cholera, this being only a short time after the removal of the family to Stark county. She was born in Germany and as a girl was in indigent circumstances, being bound out to pay her passage on coming to America. After her marriage to Mr. Sefong they located in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, where they maintained their home for a number of years and whence they came to Stark county, Ohio. The father married as his second wife Miss Elizabeth Moon and they became the parents of two children, both of whom are now deceased. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and his religious faith was that of the Reformed church, of which he was a worthy and consistent member, exemplifying his faith in his daily walk and conversation. In his youth he learned the tailor's trade, in the city of Philadelphia, and to this vocation he devoted his attention until he was no longer able to do active work, by reason of advanced age, and thereafter he was cared for with true filial solicitude by his sons.

Samuel Sefong, the immediate subject of this review, grew up in the paternal home, and received limited educational advantages, since at the age of twelve years he secured employment in Wertz Brothers' woolen and saw-mill, at Belford, where he remained nine years, his wages being turned over to his father. Having then attained his legal majority, he practically began his independent career, continuing in the employ of the same concern, and after a short time he and John Wertz assumed charge of the carding and fulling in the woolen-mill and he received a share of the profits from his labors. There Mr. Sefong remained until the year 1851, when he removed to his present fine farm, in section 3, Osnaburg township, the land being covered with the native timber at the time when he came into possession of the same.

He cleared and improved the farm, which comprises eighty-five acres, and in view of its present thrifty and highly cultivated condition it is interesting to revert to the fact that Mr. Sefong personally reclaimed the entire tract with the exception of fifteen acres, while he directed his efforts with that energy and discrimination which enabled him to attain a high degree of prosperity. He continued to make his home on the farm until 1891, when he placed the same in charge of his son Joseph and removed to the village of Belfort, but his wife died one year later and he then disposed of his village property and returned to the farm, where he has since made his home with his son Joseph, who still retains the active management of the place. In politics Mr. Sefong is a stanch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and he has long been a devoted member of the Reformed church, as was also his loved wife.

On the 10th of March, 1849, Mr. Sefong was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Moul, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, a daughter of John Moul, who came to Stark county when she was a child of two years, and here she was reared and educated and here passed the remainder of her life, being a woman of noble character and retaining the affectionate regard of all who came within the sphere of her gracious influence. She was a true companion and helpmeet to her husband and their happy wedded life continued during the long period of more than two score of years, when the veil of eternal life was lifted and she passed forward to the "land of the leal" on the 24th of January, 1892, at the age of sixty-six years and twenty-nine days. Of this union were born six sons and three daughters, and of the number four of the sons and one of the daughters are yet living, namely: Edward, who is a successful farmer of Nimishillen township; Henry H., who is a resident of the city of Canton; Joseph H., who has charge of the homestead farm; Samuel, Jr., who resides in the city of Canton, and Ellen, who is the wife of William Clapper, of Osnaburg township, where he is a prosperous farmer. The family is held in the highest esteem in the county and represents the best element of the sturdy pioneer stock which brought about the initial development of this favored section of the Old Buckeye state.

MICHAEL GEHMAN.—To the personnel of Stark's county population in the epoch of its earlier settlement it is clear beyond peradventure that no state in the Union contributed a more numerous or more valuable element than did Pennsylvania, and Mr. Gehman is a member of one of the families who came then to the county in the first half of the nineteenth century and assisted in the development and opulent progress of this section. He is himself a native of the Keystone state, having been born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 1st of April, 1839, a son of Benjamin and Fannie (Sechrist) Gehman, of whose eight children four are living at the present time, namely: Michael, who is the individual subject of this sketch; David, who is a resident of Osnaburg township, this county; Cyrus, who resides in Eaton county, Michigan; and Lydia, who is the widow of Jacob Gibe and resides in the village of Louisville, Stark county. Benjamin Gehman was reared in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, receiving a common-school education and having the discipline involved in the growing up on a farm, while to agriculture he continued to devote his attention in his native county until 1848, when he removed with his wife and children to Stark county, Ohio, locating first in the village of Greenville, where he remained for a short interval and then purchased a quarter section of land in Osnaburg township, where he continued in agricultural pursuits until the close of his useful and worthy life, passing away at the comparatively early age of forty-two years, in the year 1856, his death resulting from an attack of typhoid fever. His wife, who was likewise born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, survived him a number of years, her death occurring in 1877. The father of the subject was a stalwart Whig of the old line, and took an active interest in the questions and issues of the hour, being a man of strong intellect and excellent judgment. Both he and his wife were zealous and consistent members of the Mennonite church.

Michael Gehman, subject of this sketch, was seventeen years of age at the time of his father's death, and his educational opportunities were such as had been afforded by the district schools. After the death of his father he worked by the month on neighboring farms for about five years, and on the 13th of January, 1861, he was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Young, who was born in this county, being a daughter of Jacob and Miss (Graybill) Young, and of this happy union four children were born, namely: Celestia, who is the wife of Reuben Eby and resides near Greentown, this county; Alice, who is the wife of Simon Ringer, of Plain township; Fietta, who is the wife of George Carper, of Nimishillen township; and Sarah, who is residing in Gallipolis, Ohio, being unmarried.

After his marriage Mr. Gehman rented land in Osnaburg township and under these conditions continued operations as a farmer for the ensuing five years, at the expiration of which he purchased thirty-three and one-half acres, two miles east of Louisville, in Nimishillen township, to which he later added, making a farm of one hundred and seventeen acres. There he continued to reside for sixteen years, within which period his wife died, February 27, 1880, and on the 1st of January, 1882, he consummated a second marriage, being united to Mrs. Sarah (Keiser) Markley, widow of

Andrew Markley, and the following spring he removed to a farm owned by his wife, there remaining two years, at the expiration of which he purchased one hundred and seventeen and eleven-hundredths acres on section 7, Nimishillen township, known as the Kittering farm, and during the following seventeen years he continued to devote his attention to its cultivation, also making valuable improvements on the place. Prosperity attended his zealous and indefatigable efforts and he finally felt justified in retiring from the active and arduous labors which had so long engrossed his time and thought, and in 1900 he rented his farm and purchased of Mrs. Eliza Linerode his present fine home, in Nimishillen township, where he has twenty acres of land and one of the most spacious and attractive modern residences to be found in any of the rural districts of the county, while the various other buildings on the place are in harmony with the pretentious dwelling, and the grounds made attractive through effective shade trees, shrubbery, etc., the whole making an ideal home, and here he is enjoying the just reward of his years of earnest toil and endeavor. No children have been born of the second marriage. In his political views Mr. Gehman is a staunch and uncompromising Republican, and both he and his wife are prominent and honored members of the German Baptist church, in which he is a deacon, taking an active interest in all portions of the church work, while he and his wife enjoy the high regard of all who know them.

HENRY D. KEIM comes of staunch German extraction and was himself born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 13th of October, 1856, being a son of Adam and Maria (Schrock) Keim, of whose ten children the following six are still living: Sarah, who is the wife of George Hand, of Canton township;

Elizabeth, who is the wife of John H. Miller, of Nimishillen township; Nancy, who is the wife of Henry Sell, also of that township; Albert, who is engaged in farming in Nimishillen township; Jacob, who is a farmer of Marlboro township, and Henry D., the immediate subject of this sketch. The father of these children was born in the state of Maryland, in the year 1832, being a son of Solomon and Elizabeth Keim, with whom he came to Tuscarawas county, Ohio, when he was a boy, and being there reared to maturity on a farm. After his marriage he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits in that county until 1866, all of his children having been born there, and in the year mentioned he removed with his family to Stark county and here purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Nimishillen township, the place now being owned by Adam Reunier. Here he continued to actively follow farming until about 1884, when he disposed of the property and forthwith purchased a small home place near Center Church, that township, where he lived retired until his death, which occurred in the year 1888. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and his religious faith was that of the German Baptist church, of which his wife also was a devoted adherent. He was a half-brother of the father of John Keim, of whom individual mention is made elsewhere in this volume. The mother of the subject was born in Tuscarawas county, in 1831, and she died in 1863, at the early age of thirty-two years, and later Mr. Keim consummated a second marriage, being united to Mrs. Rebecca Snyder, who was the widow of David Snyder and whose maiden name was Reisley, there being no children born of this marriage.

Henry D. Keim, the immediate subject of this review, was reared under the sturdy discipline of the home farm and in the public schools of the period received his early educational training. He remained at home until he had attained his legal majority, when he returned to Tuscarawas county, where he was born, and there worked as a farm hand for one year, after which he came back to Stark county and for the following sixteen months was employed as a clerk in the hardware establishment of Keim & Sons, in the village of Louisville. While thus engaged, on Christmas day of the year 1879, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Huffman, who was born in Plain township, this county, being a daughter of John Huffman, who was a prominent and influential farmer of that township, where he died in 1888. The spring following his marriage Mr. Keim gave up his position in the hardware store and took charge of his father-in-law's farm, which he continued to operate for the ensuing two years, after which, in 1882, he removed to the farm now owned by William Warstler, the same having been at the time likewise a portion of Mr. Huffman's estate. Here he remained successfully engaged in farming until 1888, when he purchased and removed to his present home farm of sixty acres, in section 6, Osnaburg township, and this he has developed into one of the best farms in this section of the county. He has been a scientific agriculturist and that he has had the ability to apply his knowledge in a practical way is evident when the fact is noted that when he took possession of his present place it was badly run down and the fertility of the original soil much impaired from lack of proper attention. Though a comparatively small place it is now one of unexcelled fertility and productiveness and from it the subject secures as large returns as do many others from farms of much greater area. He has one of the finest herds of Jersey cows in the county, and in the year 1891 he produced from this source nearly a ton and a half of butter, which commanded top-notch prices in the market. For the past four years he has been agent for the DeLaval cream separator, and in 1901 he made the second highest record of sales in the line in the state, while with the close of the present year his record of business stands double that of previous years. He is progressive and public-spirited to a degree and is not only known as one of the model farmers and dairyman of the county, but is also fortunate in having so ordered his course as to retain the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who know him. In politics Mr. Keim maintains an independent attitude, and he is at the present time a member of the school board of his district. He and his wife hold membership in the River Brethren church. The home circle is brightened by the presence of their two daughters, Lettie and Bessie, and the family is prominent in the social life of the community.

JACOB KLOTZ is a native of the province of Alsace, Germany, which was still a portion of the French empire at the time of his birth, which occurred on the 5th of January, 1831. He is a son of Jacob and Christina (Gutbub) Klotz, of whose ten children the following named seven are yet living: Christina, who is the widow of Charles Newmaster, of Aetna, Pennsylvania; Mary, who is the wife of Jacob Real, of Carroll county, Ohio; Clara, who is the widow of Daniel Griner, of Fairhaven, Pennsylvania; Louis, who resides in the city of Cleveland, Ohio; John, who is a resident of Carroll county; George, who resides in Malvern, that county, and Jacob, the immediate subject of this sketch. The father was born in Alsace, France, April 17, 1804, and was there reared and educated and there learned the trade of shoemaking. In 1836 he emigrated with his family to America, the subject of this review being at the time a lad of about five years. The family took up their residence in what is now the village of Magnolia, on the line between Stark and Carroll counties, Ohio, and in 1850 the father bought the farm of one hundred and thirty-three acres, in Brown township, Carroll county, which is now jointly owned by his son and daughter, John and Mary. He continued to reside on the farm for a number of years and then removed to Malvern, where he continued to reside until his death, at the age of more than four score years, while he continued to devote considerable attention to his trade, in connection with his farming operations, during the major portion of his active career. His wife passed away at the age of about sixty-two years, both having been unassuming, industrious persons whose lives were marked by the utmost integrity and honor, so that they held as their own the respect and good will of all who knew them.

Jacob Klotz, the immediate subject of this sketch, grew to maturity at the parental home, and learned the shoemaker's trade under the direction of his honored father, who was a skilled workman, and he continued to work at the bench from the age of ten years until he had attained the age of nineteen, but he found the business uncongenial and after his father purchased the farm he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, while he assisted in the reclamation of the home farm, one-half of which was covered with the native timber at the time when his father purchased the property. On the 19th of February, 1857, Mr. Klotz was united in marriage to Miss Eva Mutschler, who was born in Jackson township, Stark county, being a daughter of Gottfried Mutschler, who was born in Alsace, France, and who was numbered among the pioneer settlers in Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. After his marriage the subject assumed charge of the farm of his father-in-law and continued to devote his attention to its cultivation for a period of about ten years, when Mr. Mutschler died and the subject then rented an adjoining farm, where he remained for the ensuing three years, after which he passed one year on a rented farm in Canton township and six months in Perry township, and then effected the purchase of a farm of one hundred acres in Nimishillen township, where he made his home for three years, at the expiration of which he sold the property and purchased his present valuable and highly improved farm of one hundred and forty-one acres, in section 6, Osnaburg township. On this estate Mr. Klotz has erected some of the finest farm buildings to be found in this section, including a commodious and attractive residence. In connection with his regular farming he has conducted a dairy business for more than a quarter of a century, having shown marked discrimination and carefulness in this department of his enterprise and having realized excellent profits from the same, so that today he is known as one of the most prosperous and influential farmers of the township, while he has always maintained a public-spirited attitude and has been ready to encourage and foster all legitimate enterprises and projects tending to conserve the general welfare. In politics he is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, but he has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. He and his wife are worthy members of the Lutheran church, in whose work they take a deep interest. Of their twelve children eight are living at the present time, namely: Louis Melancthon, who resides in the city of Canton; Sarah Christina, who is the wife of James Rhodes, of that city; George Albert, who remains at the parental home; John Edward, who is engaged in farming in Osnaburg township; Clara Magdalena, who is the wife of Alfred Fry, of Canton township; William Emanuel, who is engaged in the lumber business in that township; Bertha Eve, who remains with her parents, and Samuel Jacob, who resides in the village of Osnaburg.

REASON A. SCHMUCK was born on a farm in Franklin township, Wayne county, Ohio, on the 5th of January, 1844, being a son of Jacob and Catherine (Reimer) Schmuck, of whose six children he is the eldest of the four surviving, the others being as follows: Solomon H., who is engaged in the insurance business in the city of Cleveland, this state; Linnie, who is the widow of David V. Landis, and resides in Wooster, Ohio; and Jacob F., who is also a resident of that city, where he is associated with his sister, Mrs. Landis, in the furniture and undertaking business. The father of the subject was born in Manheim, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1818, being a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Haymiller) Schmuck, both of whom were likewise natives of Pennsylvania and of staunch German lineage, the respective families having been early established in the old Keystone state of the Union. In the year 1833 the grandfather of the subject, accompanied by his son Jacob, who was then a lad of fifteen years, came to Ohio, passing through Osnaburg township and other portions of Stark county on horseback, their trip being made for the purpose of selecting land for a home. They passed a night en route in the old-time brick tavern in the village of Osnaburg, the landlord assuming charge of the saddle bags, in which the money of the two travelers was placed. Grandfather Schmuck feared that the funds might not be in safe keeping, and he made an excuse that he wished to secure from the saddle bags some necessary articles for the night, and in this way secured and took the bags to bed with him. They passed on to Wayne county and in Wooster made enquiries of John Horn, who was formerly from Pennsylvania, and through him learned of an eighty-acre farm near the hamlet of Millbrook, that county, and upon due investigation they purchased the property, for which they paid in cash which they had brought with them. They forthwith took up their abode on the new farm and soon afterward sent back to Pennsylvania for the remainder of the family, in which there were seven other children, and it is interesting to revert to the fact that each of the eight children became a well-to-do and prominent resident of Wayne county. Samuel Schmuck, one of the sons, became one of the most successful and influential farmers of that section and also a prominent breeder of and dealer in live stock, his fine farm property adjoining what is known as the state experiment farm, while others of the family also became known as model farmers of the county.

The father of the subject was thus reared to manhood under the influences of the pioneer days, aiding in the work of the new farm and having such educational advantages as fell to the lot of the average farmer boy of the locality and period. After his marriage he located on the farm of his father-in-law, George Reiner, the same comprising two hundred and ten acres, while this tract likewise lies contiguous to what is now the state experiment farm. Some years later he purchased the property, which he developed into one of the finest rural estates in Wayne county. In 1868 he took up his residence in the city of Wooster, where he built one of the finest residences in the city and thereafter lived a retired life up to the time of his death, which occurred in January, 1899, at which time he was eighty-one years of age. He was a man of excellent business ability and lived a life of signal integrity and honor. He was very successful in temporal affairs and in addition to his valuable farm was also owner of a considerable amount of excellent property in Wooster. His first wife, the mother of the subject, died in August, 1856, and he subsequently consummated a second marriage, being united to Miss Rebecca Moon, who died in 1896, and who bore him two children, Wallace and Millie, both of whom still reside in Wooster. Jacob Schmuck was an uncompromising Republican in his political adherency, and in his religion he was originally a member of the Evangelical Association, but later became identified with the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he was a prominent figure for many years, zealous in support of its cause, while he was one of the leading spirits in bringing about the erection of a church edifice on his farm.

The mother of the subject was born on the farm which later became the property of her husband, the date of her nativity having been in August, 1820. Her father, George Reiner, was numbered among the early settlers of Wayne county, whither he removed from Pennsylvania, and he was originally a devoted member of the Lutheran church, but when a division in the same was effected he was one of three persons who established the English Lutheran church in the city of Wooster and assisted materially in the erection of the church edifice, which continued in use for many years. He was veritably one of the pillars of the church and one of its most liberal supporters and earnest workers. He lived for many years on the site of the present city hall in Wooster, and there his death occurred when he was well advanced in years. The mother of the subject entered into eternal life in 1856, at the comparatively early age of thirty-six years.

Reason A. Schmuck, whose name initiates this review, was reared on the old homestead farm, contributing a due quota to its work from his boyhood up, while he secured a common-school education. In 1868, when his father removed to Wooster, he assumed charge of the farm and his sisters remained to preside over the domestic economies of the household. In 1872 he was married and thereafter he continued to remain on the homestead farm until 1883, when he came to Stark county, where his wife was born and reared, and located on his present farm of one hundred and seventy-two acres, in Osnaburg township, having purchased the same from his father-in-law in the preceding year, and having operated the farm in connection with his father's homestead during the summer prior to his removal. For a number of years Mr. Schmuck was quite extensively engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock, principally hogs, and was very successful in this department of his business enterprise, and at the present time he gives special attention to the growing of a high grade of live stock and thus utilizes the major portion of the products of his farm. At the time when he took up his abode on his present farm it was equipped with very inferior buildings, and he has since replaced the same with some of the most substantial and admirably designed farm buildings to be found in the county, including a modern residence of attractive architectural design, while it is safe to say that there are few rural estates in this section that can show better improvements or more distinctive evidences of thrift and prosperity.

In his attitude Mr. Schmuck is essentially progressive and public-spirited, and his co-operation in all legitimate movements for the furtherance of the general welfare is invariably assured. In politics his convictions have led him to depart from the faith of his father, and he is a staunch supporter of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, in whose cause he has been an active worker in a local way. In 1870 he was elected township trustee of Franklin township, Wayne county, of which he remained incumbent for a period of six years, while in 1876 he was elected justice of the peace and continued in tenure of this position until his removal to Stark county. In 1896 Mr. Schmuck was chosen a member of the directorate of the Home Insurance Company, of Osnaburg and Nimishillen townships, and four years later was elected treasurer of the company. This important office he has since retained and he has given a most capable and satisfactory administration of its fiscal affairs. In 1890 he was appointed administrator of the estate of the late John G. Sheffer, while about three years ago he was made executor of his father's estate. Previously, while residing in Wayne county, he had charge of the settling of three or more other estates, all of these preferments showing in no unmistakable way the hold he has ever retained on public confidence and esteem. For the past sixteen years he has been trustee, treasurer and superintendent of the Ohio State Camp Meeting Association, disbursing from three to four thousand dollars annually. He is a zealous and devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose work he has for many years taken a prominent part, having been for twenty years superintendent of the Sunday school.

On the 20th of June, 1872, Mr. Schmuck was united in marriage to Miss Frances Frey, who was born in Osnaburg township, this county, being a daughter of John and Caroline (Sluss) Frey, both of whom were likewise born in the same township, where both families were established in the early pioneer days, having come hither from the state of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Schmuck, like her husband, is a devoted member of the Methodist church. They have two children, namely: E. Pearl, who remains beneath the parental roof and who has been a successful and popular teacher in the public schools since attaining her sixteenth year, while she also teaches music, in which art she has much talent, and J. Quinn, who married Miss Eva Coy and assists in the management of his father's farming enterprise. The family is one of prominence in the best social life of the community and the attractive home is one in which the refined amenities and a cordial hospitality are ever in distinct evidence.

MARION O. SHERER was born in Hardin county, Ohio, August 18, 1853. His father, Christian Sherer, a native of Germany, was born in the city of Berlin, Germany, in the year 1828, and at the age of twelve was brought to the United States by his parents, who settled on a farm in Stark county, a short distance south of Canton. Peter Sherer, father of Christian, was an honest, industrious tiller of the soil and early impressed upon the mind of his son the lessons of frugality and thrift for which the latter afterwards became noted. Christian grew to young manhood on the farm his father originally purchased and after his marriage he removed to Hardin county, where he engaged in the pursuit of agriculture in that part of the state until 1870, when he returned to the county of Stark and bought a hundred acres of land about four miles south of Canton, where he made his home until retiring from active life in 1893. In that year he took up his residence in Canton, where he still lives, and is now passing his declining years in the enjoyment of the fruits of his many years of toil. His good wife, who bore him four children, was called to her eternal rest in the year 1864. The following are the names of the children of Christian and Angeline Sherer now living: Sylvanus S., a resident of Canton; Sarah E., who married James M. Mowls, and Marion O., of this review. Some time after the death of his first wife Mr. Sherer entered the marriage relation with her younger sister, Miss Mary Burgett, a union without issue.

The youthful life of Marion O. Sherer was spent on the home farm and while still young he became accustomed to the various phases of agricultural labor. The common schools afforded him the means of a fair educational discipline, but by far the greater part of his education consists of that intensely practical kind obtained by contact with the world in the stern but effective school of experience. After completing a business course in the Normal University at Ada, Ohio, Mr. Sherer, in 1888, opened a grocery and provision store in Canton, but one year later disposed of his stock and engaged in the livery business. With the object in view of ultimately embarking in the dry goods trade he entered the Boston dry goods store in Canton, for the purpose of familiarizing himself with the business. By close study and careful attention he soon mastered the details of trade, but after several months in doors he found, much to his regret, that confinement was not agreeing with his health. Acting upon the advice of his physician, he resigned his position and decided to turn his attention to a pursuit requiring more outdoor exercise; accordingly, in 1891, he established, in partnership with A. L. Bair, his present lumber business at Louisville. The firm of Sherer & Bair began operations under most favorable auspices and it was not long until their business assumed large proportions, the names of the two partners becoming widely and favorably known among the leading lumber dealers of eastern Ohio. After remaining together until 1893, Mr. Sherer purchased the entire interest in the enterprise and from that time to the present has been sole proprietor. Under his able management the business has greatly increased in volume until his patronage is now much larger than that of any other man in the county similarly engaged, while his high standing in commercial circles has given him an honorable and wide-spread reputation throughout the northern and eastern counties of the state. In connection with buying and selling lumber Mr. Sherer operates a large planing-mill in which the rough product is converted into all kinds of building material, in addition to which he also handles upon an extensive scale every description of lumber demanded by the local and general trade. As a business man Mr. Sherer carefully considers the end from the beginning and when he once addresses himself to an undertaking seldom if ever fails to carry it to successful conclusion. His sound judgment, practical experience and keen discrimination enable him to engage in large enterprises with no doubt as to the final issue, while his superior executive ability leads him to venture with the greatest of assurance where men of less energy and foresight would hesitate or fail. The credit of building up the mammoth business which he now owns and controls is due entirely to his own wisdom, energy and well-directed efforts and he is in the true sense of the term a self-made man. He began life with little financial encouragement, but by industry, indomitable will and honorable dealing has steadily advanced step by step until he now occupies a commanding position among the most enterprising and financially successful men of the county in which he lives.

On the 25th day of December, 1888, Mr. Sherer and Miss Laura Starkey, daughter of John Starkey, late a prominent farmer of Stark county, were united in the bonds of wedlock, the union resulting in the birth of five children, whose names are Burdette B., Mildred M., Ruth E., Ray L. and Lowell E. In politics Mr. Sherer is pronounced in his allegiance to the Democratic party, but he has never been a partisan or office seeker. He has, however, been honored with several official positions, one of which was that of councilman. As member of the municipal legislative body of Louisville, he was instrumental in passing a number of valuable ordinances and during his two years' incumbency proved a safe and reliable public servant, standing for progress and improvement, but being conservative in the matter of expenditures. In 1893 he was elected a member of the local school board and as such has been untiring in his efforts to build up the educational system of Louisville. He has held this important but onerous position since the above year and for eight years was its president. At the earnest solicitation of his many friends of both political parties, Mr. Sherer, in 1896, permitted himself to be nominated for mayor of Louisville. At the ensuing election he entered the office by the largest vote ever given a candidate for the position in the history of the town, a fact which spoke louder than words of his popularity with the people irrespective of party ties. His election was for a term of two years. He proved a model executive, as is attested by his straightforward business administration, which met the hearty approval of all parties concerned. At the end of this term he was again elected, without opposition, and retained by both parties in this official position until 1900.

Mr. Sherer is identified with a number of benevolent and fraternal organizations, in all of which he is a zealous worker and in some a leader. He is a Mason of high standing, belonging to Julliard Lodge No. 460 at Louisville and Commandery No. 38 at Canton, also Emmith Lodge of Perfection at Canton. His name adorns the records of Council No. 12, Junior Order United American Mechanics, at Canton, and for some years past he has been an active member of Tent No. 182, Knights of the Maccabees, in his home town. In addition to the above, he is also connected with the Reform Club of Louisville and for recreation and genuine amusements he attends the session of the "Hoo Hoos," a society whose objects are to foster a fraternal spirit, with whole-souled innocent pleasure as a basis. In the social affairs of life Mr. Sherer has long maintained a lively interest, being the embodiment of genuine hospitality and open-hearted companionship. He is liberal in the expenditure of his means for the encouragement of laudable enterprises, and no friend in need ever appeals to him in vain. It is not too much to say that he is one of the most popular men in the town of his residence.

WILLIAM OVERHOLT BAKER, M. D.—Like many of Ohio's successful men, Dr. Baker hails from the grand old commonwealth of Pennsylvania, having been born in Northampton county on the 12th of December, 1827. His father was Jacob H. Baker, also a native of that state, who was born in the county of Montgomery about the year 1793, the son of George Baker, whose grandparents came to America from Germany prior to the war for independence. The Bakers are a very old and highly respected family and the branch from which the subject is descended figured quite actively in the affairs of the above and several other Pennsylvania counties, the name subsequently appearing in connection with the early settlement of various parts of Ohio.

Jacob H. Baker, the Doctor's father, was reared in his native county and state and when a youth learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed continuously for over fifty years. When a young man he changed his abode to Northampton county, where he met and married Miss Anna Overholt (originally Overholtzer), who was born in Bucks county. He continued to reside in Northampton county until his removal, in 1836, to Medina county and there spent the remainder of his life, dying at his home in the township of Wadsworth about the year 1889 at the remarkable age of ninety-six years, five months and fifteen days. His wife, whose birth occurred on the 12th of June, 1792, was the daughter of William Overholtzer, a native of Pennsylvania and for many years a prominent minister of the Mennonite church. She bore her husband three children and departed this life when about seventy-two years old.

Dr. William O. Baker was a lad of nine years when his parents moved to Ohio, he spent his youthful years in the county of Medina, received his preliminary education in such schools as were common at that time, and later pursued his studies under private tutors and in the Wadsworth Academy. That he made commendable progress as a student is evident from the fact that in his nineteenth year he took charge of a school and earned the reputation of a capable and popular teacher. He continued educational work for several years, spending the summer seasons at farm labor and with money earned from these sources was subsequently enabled to take up the study of medicine, which he had long contemplated making his life work. The Doctor began a course of reading under the direction of his uncle, Dr. John Overholt, a well-known physician and surgeon of Wooster, Ohio, and in 1852 entered Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, where he prosecuted his researches and investigations during the year following. At the expiration of the term he came to Stark county and began the practice of his profession in Nimishillen township, but after remaining there until 1858 changed his location to Louisville, where he has resided ever since. The beginning of Dr. Baker's professional career was by no means assuring and it required considerable time and a corresponding amount of energy and perseverance to establish a paying business. His country practice proved anything but lucrative and, like the majority of young physicians, he was obliged to encounter opposition not only on the part of professional brethren but by reason of the unreasoning prejudice which many people have against youth and experience. When he opened an office in the town, however, his prospects gradually began to brighten and as his abilities became recognized his services were in greater demand. In due time his practice took a wider range and in the course of a few years his name and fame went abroad throughout the country as one of the rising physicians and surgeons in this part of the county. Patients began flocking to his office and the continued success which attended his efforts won him not only a large measure of professional renown but also financial prosperity, which in the course of time placed him in independent circumstances. Determined to leave nothing undone in the way of increasing his knowledge and improving his practice, the Doctor, in 1873, entered the medical department of Wooster University, from which institution he afterwards received his degree, his previous practical experience enabling him to finish the course with high honors. He has always been a close, painstaking student and although past the age when the majority of physicians cease reading and investigating, he still keeps up with the increasing demands of the age, prosecutes his researches in the domain of medical science with the ardor of his younger days and pursues eagerly the standard literature pertaining to the healing art. During a practice in Louisville covering a period of forty-five years, he has won a deep and abiding place in the hearts of the people and his name is a familiar household word in every home in the town and throughout a large area of surrounding territory.

Dr. Baker's wife, who has been a help and inspiration to him for so many years, was formerly Miss Rebecca Utt, of Northampton county, Pennsylvania. She was born about a half mile from his own birth place and the two were playmates and warm friends in youth as they have been mutually helpful to each other as husband and wife in their riper years. Their union has been blessed with four children, in the rearing and education of whom the Doctor has spared neither pains nor expense. An ardent friend of higher intellectual training, he procured for each of them the best advantages obtainable and that they have profited by this interest in their behalf is attested by the correct lives they have led and the honorable positions they now hold in the world. Anna, the oldest of the children, is a highly educated and accomplished lady living in the city of Boston, Massachusetts; she was graduated from Ashland College and later married Prof. Hiram Hixson, who for a number of years was president of that institution. Mrs. Hixson is now a widow, her husband having died some years ago. Amanda, the second in order of birth, was also educated at Ashland, and at the present time lives with her parents; she is an unmarried lady, moves in the best social circles of her town and is active in all good work tending to elevate the moral condition of the community. Mary E. is a graduate of Shepardson College, Granville, Ohio, and at this time he holds the position of assistant teacher in the high school at Stevens Point, Wisconsin. Charles W., the fourth of the family, is also well educated and is now a prosperous business man of Elyria, this state. The Doctor's children are certainly a credit to him and he is held in the highest esteem and veneration by them. The family reunions are most joyful occasions and when all together a more ideal circle would be difficult to find.

Dr. Baker is a profound believer in revealed religion and for over twenty years has been an able minister of the church known as the Brethren in Christ, having served as pastor of the Louisville congregation since about 1894. His is a deeply spiritual nature and his daily life and conversation are in perfect harmony with the deep and abiding faith from which his actions emanate. He is a clear, logical speaker, an able expounder of the word of God and an eloquent advocate when presenting the claims of the Gospel to a sinful world. Dr. Baker believes that politics and religion, if of the proper stamp, will easily assimilate, hence he supports the party which in his opinion most nearly represents man's highest duty to society and the state. A most determined and uncompromising foe of the liquor traffic, which he considers the crying evil of the day, and only to be effectually suppressed by legislation, he is a pronounced champion of prohibition, being one of the leaders of the party in this section of the state. All in all, Dr. Baker is a man of broad, comprehensive views, possesses high intellectuality and as physician, minister and citizen, his life has been fraught with great and lasting good to humanity.

JOHN KEIM.—The subject of this sketch has been conspicuously identified with the industrial, business and civic life of the village of Louisville, Stark county, from his youth to the present time,—representing a period of more than three decades,—while his genealogy betokens that he is a scion of a family whose association with the annals of American history has been intimate and honorable from the middle period of the eighteenth century. In this connection it seems proper to make copious excerpts from an appreciative article recently published concerning this well-known and honored family of Stark county, making such metaphor as may seem expedient.

In its chief home activities Louisville has the Louisville Deposit Bank, John Keim, president, and proprietor of the Keim block, the Louisville Brick and Tile Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer, and of the Keim hardware store, which virtually controls the business in this line throughout this section. In fact, "Keim" is a trademark of energy, enterprise, progress and integrity, not only in Louisville but also in Stark county and all the region round about. The record involved has very much the appearance of history in the east repeating itself in the west. In the town of Reading, Pennsylvania, contemporaneously with its birth and since that time, the name of Keim has been associated conspicuously with the foundation of business, industrial, financial, railroad, charitable, church, borough, municipal and other interests. It began when the frontier settlement, nearly a century and a half ago, had but two hundred and thirty-eight purchasers of lots, Nicholas Keim, of Oley, Berks county, son of the founder, being on the list. John Keim, of Louisville, banker, hardware merchant, manufacturer and leading citizen, stands in the same position as his name cousins from the same ancestral founder in Reading, Pennsylvania, for more than one hundred years. Moses Keim, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, on the 10th day of May, 1810, being a son of Nicholas and Fanny (Hostetter) Keim. At the age of twelve years he went to live with an uncle, named Deahl, in Maryland, and there he resided until 1833, when he came to Holmes county, Ohio, where, one year later, he married Lydia Domer. In 1845 Moses Keim moved to a farm near Bolivar, Tuscarawas county, where he resided until 1853, when he came to Osnaburg township, Stark county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for nearly seventeen years. In the spring of 1869 he came to Louisville, where he established himself in the hardware business, more for the purpose of affording his sons John and Jonas an opportunity to secure a start in independent business careers than from a desire to personally devote his attention to merchandising. In 1873 his two sons were admitted to partnership under the firm name of Keim & Sons, and the present Keim block was erected for the accommodation of the rapidly growing enterprise. In 1881 the Louisville Deposit Bank was established by the firm, the auxiliary business being conducted in the store of the firm until it had increased so materially in extent and importance as to justify a removal to more spacious and individual quarters, and in 1884 the present eligible and well equipped counting rooms were first utilized by the bank. On the 24th of November of that year the honored father passed to his reward, after a happy married life of a half century, leaving to his descendants the priceless heritage of a good name, and after that time his sons, Jonas and John, continued to be associated in the conducting of both the bank and the hardware business until the spring of 1892, when Jonas M. retired and John secured his interests in both enterprises, which he has since continued individually. Moses Keim was a member of the Progressive Brethren church and was honored for his high integrity, business enterprise and Christian manhood. His wife, whose maiden name was Lydia Domer, was born in Holmes county, Ohio on the 26th day of May, 1810, and her death occurred on the 28th of May, 1898, about fourteen years after the demise of her honored husband. She was the eldest daughter of George Domer, who was one of the pioneer settlers of Holmes county, Ohio, and she was one of the first white children born within its borders. She remembered many Indian neighbors and never knew them to disturb the peace of the family, by reason of the kindness shown them by her father, and the first fruit she remembered eating was grown by the Indians. Her mother was of German descent and was said to be of royal blood. Of the children of Moses and Lydia (Domer) Keim the following is a brief record: Josiah is a clergyman of the Progressive Brethren church and for a number of years was a member of the board of trustees of Ashland University, at Ashland, Ohio, while he is now living retired in the village of Louisville; George died at the age of six years; Catherine is the wife of Jacob A. Lutz, of Louisville; Jonas M., who was a loyal soldier in the war of the Rebellion and who was long associated with his brother John in business in Louisville, is now living retired in this place; Jacob is a resident of Wyandotte, near the city of Detroit, Michigan, and John is the immediate subject of this review.

John Keim was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 28th of September, 1851, and in April of the following year his parents removed to Osnaburg township, Stark county, where he was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm. During the war of the Rebellion, in the absence of his older brothers and when farm laborers were difficult to secure, he was pressed into an unusual amount of hard work to assume the more onerous cares of agricultural life. In 1869, as before noted, he came to Louisville with his parents, and, having received only such educational advantages as were afforded in the district schools, he deemed it expedient to secure farther and more definite training for the business life which he was to be inducted through the generous action of his father. He accordingly proceeded to the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he took a thorough commercial course in the Iron City Commercial College. On his return to Louisville he was for a few years employed in his father's hardware store and was then admitted to partnership, due mention having already been made of the later progress of this enterprise.

From this point only incidental recourse will be had to the article from which the foregoing paragraphs have to a large extent been drawn. It may be said that from the inauguration of his business career Mr. Keim manifested marked acumen and discrimination in all matters appertaining thereto, and he has gained high prestige as one of the able and influential business men of Stark county, having brought to bear in all his operations a far-sighted and progressive policy, while his methods have been such as to bear the closest scrutiny, so that he has gained and retained a firm hold on public confidence and esteem,—elements absolutely essential to definite success in any line of industrial or commercial enterprise. In 1875 the present Keim block was erected by the original firm, and in the same both the hardware store and the bank are located. The business controlled by the former is exceptionally large and extends far beyond the confines naturally determined as tributary to the town, while the banking institution is known as one of the solid and well-conducted monetary concerns of the county, transacting a general banking business and retaining a representative support. Mr. Keim has through his individual enterprises done much to further the general welfare, and he is essentially public-spirited, ever ready to encourage worthy industrial undertakings and to aid in furthering all projects tending to conserve the advancement and the material prosperity and moral welfare of the community. In 1893 he became identified with the manufacturing of hollow brick and tile, for building purposes, the business being conducted under the title of the Louisville Brick and Tile Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer. The company controls valuable deposits of fire clay in this vicinity and their plant is one of the largest and best equipped in this section of the state, so that the industry has already become one of the important enterprises in the county. In 1899 Mr. Keim erected his present beautiful residence in Louisville, the same being one of the finest homes in the county, of attractive modern architecture and best of accessories and conveniences, spacious and substantial—in short such a mansion as is rarely seen in a town of Louisville's population. It is also most gratifying to note that his home is a veritable center of the social life of the community, and that a gracious hospitality is there dispensed to the hosts of friends which the family retain in their pleasant home city.

In politics Mr. Keim has ever given an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and his was the distinction of having been the first Republican ever elected treasurer of Nimishillen township, an office in which he served for several terms. He is one of the prominent and valued members of the Progressive Brethren church, in whose affairs he has manifested a deep and exceptionally helpful interest, being at the present time a member of the board of trustees of the local church of this denomination, while he is also a member of the board of trustees of Ashland University, a church institution, at Ashland, Ohio, and secretary of its finance committee. About a decade since the work of the institution was badly crippled by an indebtedness of about twenty thousand dollars, and largely through his instrumentality and indefatigable efforts this incumbrance was entirely removed, and the college now has an endowment of twenty-five thousand dollars.

On the 3d of April, 1873, Mr. Keim was united in marriage to Miss Sophia Klingaman, who was born in Nimishillen township, this county, being a daughter of William and Maria (Gloss) Klingaman, who now reside in the village of Magnolia, this county, Mr. Klingaman having been one of the influential farmers of this section for many years and having now retired from active business. To Mr. and Mrs. Keim have been born two children, Mahlon J. and Arthur L. The former was born in Louisville, on the 29th of June, 1874, and for the past ten years he has been the efficient cashier of the Louisville Deposit Bank, of which he and his father are proprietors. In 1896 he was united in marriage to Miss Clara Manze, daughter of Godfrid Manze, of Massillon, this county. Arthur L. was born December 28, 1883, and is now teller in the bank. Both sons are able and courteous young business men, enjoying marked popularity in their native town, and they are well fitted to uphold the prestige of the honored name which they bear.

CLARKSON W. METZGER was born on the paternal homestead, in Perry township, November 5, 1868, and is the son of Adam and Artie (Martin) Metzger, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio respectively. The American branch of the Metzger family appears to have had its origin in Pennsylvania, in which state the subject's grandfather, Henry Metzger, was born and reared, his ancestors having been among the early settlers of the old historic county of Lancaster. Henry Metzger married, in his native county, Miss Mary Geib, and about the year 1856 moved his family to Stark county, Ohio, and in about 1872 settled in Lake township, where he is still living at an advanced age, his wife having died in 1875. Adam

Metzger, the subject's father, was a young man when his family moved to Ohio, and early in 1868 he was united in marriage to Miss Artie Martin, whose parents, John and Elizabeth (Hoch) Martin, were pioneers of Perry township. He served three years in the late Civil war as a member of the Seventh Independent Company of Ohio Sharpshooters, and at the expiration of his period of enlistment he engaged in carpentry work which he followed until 1883, since which time he has been in the mercantile business in Richville, this county. Adam and Artie Metzger are the parents of six children, the oldest of whom is C. W., of this review; after him in order of birth are Mrs. L. H. VanHorn, of Canton; Charles, deceased; Stanley, who is in the postal service at Canton; Homer and Clyde, the last two under the parental roof.

C. W. Metzger spent the years of his childhood and early youth in the village of Richville, and acquired his preliminary educational training in the public schools of that place. An apt student, with a thirst for knowledge, he was not content with such mental discipline as the village supplied, consequently he decided to pursue his studies in an institution of a higher grade. Animated by this laudable desire, he entered the North American Normal at Fostoria, and later took a course in the Ohio University, at Ada, where he prosecuted his studies with the object in view of devoting his life to teaching. Mr. Metzger began his career as an educator in the year 1887, and during the twelve years following gave his time and energies to school work, meanwhile earning an honorable reputation as a capable teacher and successful disciplinarian. While other matters have engaged his attention, he is still interested in the cause of education and his activity and success in this field of endeavor have done much to bring him to the favorable notice of the public as an influential factor in the domain of party politics. From an early age Mr. Metzger has been a close student of political questions, and since old enough to exercise the rights of citizenship he has given an earnest and loyal support to the Republican party. His efforts to promote the interests of the cause he had so much at heart attracted the attention of party leaders and it was not long until his services as a campaigner were recognized. In due time he was made a member of the county central committee, where his judicious counsel and tact as a planner made him especially valuable, and he served four years in that capacity to the satisfaction of all concerned. In 1899 Mr. Metzger was the choice of his party for representative, and at the ensuing election defeated his competitor by a handsome majority. His career as a law-maker fully justified his constituents in his nomination, as he has represented the county with ability and dignity, winning honors in the committee room and upon the floor and being recognized as one of the leading Republican members of the house. He was re-elected his own successor in 1891, and is now serving his second term. He has been an active participant in all the deliberations of the assembly, besides introducing a number of bills which have become laws, and his name appears in connection with the most important legislation effected during his incumbency. His course has met the unqualified approval of his constituency and the distinction he has already achieved as a public servant is indication of still greater honors that the future has in store. Mr. Metzger is a man of strong mentality, largely endowed with inclinations for doing good, in whatever sphere he may be called to act, full of the vigor of manly purpose and characterized by the most courageous and conscientious convictions of right. He has performed his whole duty regardless of fear or favor, and while not coveting the glare of preferment or conspicuous situation, yet when promoted to stations of honor his trustworthiness has been exemplary in all the term implies. He has been a student and thinker all his life, from the first experience in living until to the present time. Accepting labor as the motive, duty and destiny of man, he has not shrunk from its mandate or refused to respect its sacred injunction.

Mr. Metzger has been twice married, the first time in 1892, to Miss Ora Martin, of Massillon, who died the year following, leaving one child, Earl. His second marriage was solemnized December 14, 1899, with Miss Hattie E. Yost, daughter of Oliver and Clara (Chapman) Yost, the mother a daughter of Thomas W. Chapinan, of Massillon, the distinguished member of the state senate, who is now in his eighty-eighth year. To this union have been born two children, Thomas Henry, born September 14, 1900, and Nellie Yost, born April 6, 1903.

JOHN S. HOWENSTINE was born on the old homestead farm, in Pike township, this county, on the 8th of March, 1829, and in the Greenridge school house he received his early educational discipline, attending the same during the winter terms, while during the summer months he contributed his quota to the work of clearing and cultivating the home farm. He continued to work on the farm until he had attained the age of twenty-one years, and at the expiration of this period he came to Canton, where he served an apprenticeship of two years at the carpenter trade, under the direction of Samuel Bard. He and his brother William then engaged in contracting and building on their own responsibility, being thus associated for two years and erecting a number of the pioneer buildings in Canton and other sections of the county, including the original building of the county infirmary. About 1845 the two brothers removed to Lagro, Indiana, a town on the Wabash river, about twenty miles west of Huntington, and there became concerned in the erection of packing houses and also of a sawmill. In 1848 Mr. Howenstine returned to Canton, and here he continued in the work of his trade, as a contractor, until 1860, when he took a position in the employ of the Aultman Company, manufacturer of threshing machines and other agricultural machinery here. Finally, when the cloud of civil war threw its gruesome pall over the country he responded to the call to higher duty, enlisting, on the 13th of August, 1862, as a member of Company B, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He continued in the service of the Union until the close of the war. For the first year he was stationed in Cincinnati, as a member of the provost guard, and thereafter was assigned to similar duty at Covington, Kentucky, for one winter, and within that same winter was ordered to Maysville, that state, on skirmish duty. After quiet was restored in that locality he returned to Covington, from which place he was later sent with his regiment to Murfreesboro, Tennessee, where he assisted in the building of block houses and in the guarding of the city. While thus engaged, when at a point about eight miles west of the city, he and the posse with which he was on duty were all captured by Confederate forces under command of General Joseph Wheeler, and were taken to Nashville, Tennessee, but he was released one month later and ordered to report at Murfreesboro, where he remained until he was ordered home to receive his honorable discharge, at the close of the war, said discharge being granted him in the city of Cleveland, in the fall of 1865. On the 27th of April, 1864, for meritorious service, Mr. Howenstine was promoted to the office of corporal of his company.

Returning to Canton after the close of his loyal service as a Union soldier, Mr. Howenstine re-entered the employ of the Aultman Company, his duties in and about the factory being of varied order, while finally he became a traveling representative of the company, in which capacity he made extensive tours and became one of the most trusted and valued attaches of the concern. For a number of years, while traveling in the United States, he had charge of various agencies throughout the country, while he has also traveled widely in foreign lands as the representative of this great manufacturing concern. He thus represented the company in Ireland, Scotland, England, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, Russia, Italy, northern Africa, Algeria, etc., having thus traveled abroad for three years and returning to America about two years prior to the death of Jacob Miller, an honored member of the company in whose employ he had so long remained. After his return Mr. Howenstine went to the city of New Orleans, where he remained as representative of the same company about five years, at the expiration of which he returned to Canton, remaining in the employ of the Aultman Company until 1898, when he felt that the weight of increasing years entitled him to retire from active business and he has since maintained his residence here, having an attractive home at 1238 Market street, and being surrounded by hosts of warm friends. In politics Mr. Howenstine is an independent Republican, and he has ever taken a deep interest in the questions and issues of the hour and has been at all times able to give a reason for the faith that is his in a political way. He has been identified with the Masonic fraternity for the past fifty-eight years, and has completed the circle of the York rite, being a member of the blue lodge, chapter, council and commandery. He was formerly identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, but allowed his active membership to lapse, on account of his traveling so constantly as to make it impossible for him to attend the various meetings of his old comrades. He and his family hold membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church, in whose work they take an active part.

On the 7th of September, 1854, at New Philadelphia, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, Mr. Howenstine was united in marriage to Miss Julia Sanford, who was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, being a daughter of Wheeler and Sarah (Ferris) Sanford, both representatives of old Connecticut families. To Mr. and Mrs. Howenstine have been born five children: Mary C., who was born on the 25th of June, 1855, died on the 19th of November, 1873; Sarah Elizabeth was born August 9, 1858; James Keeler, May 4, 1860; Elmer, February 15, 1862; and George W., June 26, 1874. Mrs. Howenstine is of Plymouth, England, extraction, and her ancestors were numbered among the colonists of New England.

Adverting to the genealogy of the subject, we may say that the original representative in the United States was his great-great-grandfather Howenstine, who emigrated hither in the colonial epoch, coming from Germany and taking up his residence in Pennsylvania, where he passed the remainder of his life. George Howenstine, father of the subject, was born in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1809, and his death occurred on the 29th of November, 1895. He was united in marriage to Miss Christina Sickafoose, whose parents were numbered among the early settlers of Pike township, this county, whither they came from Pennsylvania, and in said township was solemnized her marriage to Mr. Howenstine, who came to the county as a young man, becoming one of the representative farmers and most honored citizens of Pike township, where Howenstine Station was named in his honor. He was justice of the peace for twenty years and for a number of years filled the office of county commissioner, being a man of influence in the community and one who commanded uniform confidence and esteem. The timber from which the original county infirmary was constructed was secured from his farm. His devoted wife preceded him into eternal rest, her death having occurred in 1887. Of their children we incorporate the following brief record: William, who was born in 1818, died in 1895; John S. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Margaret, who was born in 1821, became the wife of Christian Henry, and she died in 1887; Catherine, who became the wife of Jess Hisssem, was born in 1822, and they now reside at South Whitley, Indiana; George Lyman, who was born in 1823, is a resident of Canton; Samuel, who was born in 1824, is a leading farmer of Pike township; and Marion, who was born in 1825, resides on the old homestead farm, in Pike township.

EMANUEL GOTTLIEB VOLZER was born at Waiblingen, near the city of Stuttgart, kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, on the 31st of May, 1835, being a son of George Volzer, who passed his entire life in the fatherland, having died when the subject of this tribute was about thirteen years of age. The family was a large one and it became necessary for Emanuel G. to leave his school work at an early age and to begin to assume the practical responsibilities of life. At the age of twelve years he secured employment in a mill at Memmingen, and he was away from home at the time of his father's death and unable to reach the bedside of his honored father. He was the eldest of the children and thus it may be seen that a heavy burden of responsibility was laid upon the widow for he himself was but thirteen years of age at the time when this bereavement and loss came. After leaving the mill he was for some time engaged in railroad work in Germany, and there he continued to reside until 1867, when he determined to seek a new field of endeavor in the United States, where he believed better opportunities were afforded for the attaining of success through personal effort. He landed in New York city with but little money, but fortified with energy and determination. He came to Canton shortly after his arrival in America and here joined his brother Christian, who had preceded him. Here he first secured employment in the shops of the Aultman Company and later in the works of the Ball Company. He was married here in 1869, and after he left the employ of the Ball Company he and his wife removed to Petersburg, now a part of Canton, and in that locality he was engaged in farm work for some time. In 1884 he traded two properties which he had acquired on Housel street to his brother William, securing in exchange a piece of property on Charles street.

Here he opened a grocery and built up a satisfactory and prosperous business, continuing to conduct this enterprise until his death, which occurred on the 21st of October, 1897. He was the soul of integrity and honor and ever commanded the respect and confidence of all who knew him. He was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party and was a consistent communicant of St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic, of which his wife likewise is a communicant. Since his death she has successfully continued the business which he established, showing marked discrimination in the handling of business affairs and having the high regard of all who know her. She sold the business in July, 1903, to her son F. N.

On the 21st of September, 1869, in the city of Canton, Mr. Volzer was united in marriage to Miss Balbena Schmidt, who was born in Germany, on the 2d of October, 1848, being a daughter of Dominick and Mary (Anefor) Schmidt, both of whom were born in that section of Germany, where they passed their entire lives. The father was by trade a maker of horse-shoe nails and also owned a small farm, which was carried on by his children, Mrs. Volzer having assisted in the work prior to her immigration to America, whither she courageously came alone when but eighteen years of age, sailing from Bremen on the ship "William Penn" and arriving in New York on the 3d of June, 1868. She came directly to Cleveland, Ohio, where she was employed four weeks, at the expiration of which she came to Canton, having but twenty-five cents in her possession at the time of her arrival here. Here she found employment at housework in the home of Adam Shorb, and among her duties was that of milking the cows and other lines of work which the average girl of the present day would consider beneath her dignity. Mrs. Volzer had, however, been taught that honest toil and endeavor is ever dignified and she was ready to put forth her best efforts. She was still in the employ of Mr. Shorb at the time of her marriage, the ceremony being performed in his home. Mr. and Mrs. Volzer became the parents of eleven children, namely: Joseph A., who is individually considered on other pages of this work; August, who died in infancy; Augustave, who is a resident of the city of Chicago; Peter and Frank, who were twins, the latter dying in infancy, while the former still resides in Canton; Annie Frances, who is the wife of Eugene Hinder, of Massillon, this county; Frank N., who resides in Canton and who married Miss Augusta Andes; and Grace, Otto, Leo and Cletus, who remain at the maternal home.

HENRY KETTERING was a native son of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, on the 13th of April, 1850, and being a son of Jacob and Nancy (Barnett) Kettering. He was reared in his native state, and there received his early educational discipline in the public schools. In 1868 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Stark county, Ohio, and they took up their abode on a farm in Nimishillen township, where the subject of this memoir was reared to maturity. He continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits for a number of years and then entered the employ of the Aultman Company, the extensive manufacturers of farm machinery in Canton, and after his marriage, in the year 1884, he located in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, as the representative of the Aultman Company, in whose employ he there continued for a period of five years, at the expiration of which he returned to Stark county and took up his residence in Jackson township, where he remained one year and then established his home in East Canton, where he engaged in business as a dealer in harvesting machinery and farming implements, building up a large and flourishing business, in which he continued until his death, which was the result of a boiler explosion at his residence, on the 27th of July, 1896. He met almost an instantaneous death, and the shock was one which completely prostrated his devoted and cherished wife, while the community as a whole deplored the loss of one who had been signally faithful and loyal in all the relations of life. He was a man of broad mentality and marked business and executive ability, and he ever held the confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact, for his word was inviolable and his integrity of the most inflexible order. His was a gracious and kindly personality, and he had in a marked degree the power of winning and retaining friends, while in the sacred precincts of his home the ideality of his nature found its most perfect exemplification. Such a pure and noble character must be cumulative in its influence even after death has set its seal upon the mortal lips, and to those nearest and dearest to the subject of this memoir must ever remain a measure of consolation in the memory of the tender associations of the past.

H. Kettering

In politics Mr. Kettering accorded a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, but he was essentially a business man and took no active part in political affairs, though he was never unmindful of the duties of citizenship and was ever ready to lend his influence in support of all measures projected for the general good. Although not formally identified with any religious body, he had the deepest reverence for spiritual things and for the cause of Christianity, and he took an active part in church work and in the support of its collateral benevolences. He was a good judge of man and had a wholesome detestation of hypocrisy and dissimulation in any form, while in his own person he demanded the approval of conscience for every thought and action. He was reared in the religious faith of the River Brethren, with which denomination his parents were identified. Mr. Kettering erected a spacious and attractive residence in East Canton, and there his widow still maintains her home, the place being hallowed to her through the memories and associations of the past.

At Newport, Perry county, Pennsylvania, on the 21st of February, 1884, Mr. Kettering was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Alice Bressler, who was born near that place, on the 7th of April, 1851, being a daughter of Charles and Sarah (Burnett) Bressler, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, being representatives of sterling old families of that state, where the father still maintains his residence, his devoted wife having passed to the "land of the leal" on the 25th of December, 1896, at Newport, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Kettering was thus called upon to bear a double burden of bereavement within that year, as her husband's sudden death had anticipated that of her mother by less than six months. Mrs. Kettering was the second in order of birth in a family of six children. She was reared in Perry county, Pennsylvania, and received an excellent education in the public schools, being a lady of gracious presence and gentle refinement, and having won a host of friends in Canton, while her home is a center of unreserved hospitality. She is a member of Trinity Reformed church and takes an active part in its work. Her home is brightened by the presence of her two fine sons, Charles R., who was born on the 19th of June, 1887, and Earl B., who was born on the 10th of December, 1890.

FREDERICK JACOB LINDEMANN is a native of the great empire of Germany, which has contributed so valuable an element to our American citizenship, having been born in canton of Waldmohr, Bavaria, on the 27th of March, 1830. His father, Philip Lindemann, was born in Minbach, of the same canton, on the 12th of April, 1787, and the mother of the subject was born in Kastle, that canton, on the 2d of July, 1796, her maiden name having been Catherine Margaret Buler. The marriage of this worthy couple was solemnized in 1823, and they became the parents of seven sons and one daughter, while of the number only three are now living, namely: Catherine Elizabeth, who was born July 29, 1824, and who resides in Canton, being the widow of John Blum; Christian, who was born on the 19th of April, 1826, and who is now a resident of Nebraska; and Frederick J., who figures as the immediate subject of this review. The names of the deceased children are as follows: Daniel, Peter, John, Jacob and Adam.

In 1833, when the subject was a child of less than three years, his parents severed the ties which bound them to home and fatherland and came to the United States, landing in New York city, whence they soon afterward came to Canton, where Mr. Lindemann was one of the pioneer wood turners of the city, which was then a mere village in the midst of the forest. In addition to manufacturing the spinning wheels which were then in so great demand in the pioneer community, he also did other work in the line of his trade and followed such other honorable labor as came to hand, being a man of energy and ability, while his inflexible integrity of character commended him to the confidence and good will of all. He continued to maintain his home here until his death, which occurred in September, 1876, while his loved wife survived him by about five years, passing away in 1880. They were earnest, God-fearing persons and their lives were noble and worthy in all respects, though they betokened but the "short and simple annals of the poor." They were members of the Lutheran church.

Frederick J. Lindemann received his rudimentary education in a private school which was conducted in a small building near the family home, on Third street, in the village of Canton, and it may be consistently recorded that his father paid the incidental tuition by sawing wood. He attended this school during the three months' winter terms, and thereafter he continued his studies in the public schools of the place and period, his privileges in this line being confined to the winter terms and to a period of five years, and thus was completed his school work, though he has effectively rounded out his education by personal application and by active association with the practical affairs of life. As a boy, when not attending school, Mr. Lindemann found employment at whatever honest occupation offered itself, within his capacity to perform. He was thus engaged for a time in turning a wheel for the manufacturing of rope and twine, this continuing to be his vocation for an interval of five years, while later he found employment hauling sand. At the age of seventeen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of harnessmaking, becoming a skilled artisan, and he successfully continued to be identified with this line of enterprise until the spring of 1870, when he turned his attention to farming, securing a good place in Plain township, where he remained for the ensuing five years. In 1875 he removed to a farm in Jackson township, where he improved a valuable property and where he was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1897, when he returned to the city of Canton, where he has since lived retired, in his attractive residence, at 1272 Woodland avenue. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Democratic party and he and his wife are members of the Reformed church, in whose work they have taken an active part for many years.

On the 1st of February, 1851, Mr. Lindemann was united in marriage to Miss Mary Bruchie, daughter of Sofarat and Mary (Otfalder) Bruchie, who were natives of Switzerland, whence they emigrated to the United States in 1842, settling in Canton, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Lindemann was born in Switzerland, on the 15th of May, 1836, and was thus a child of about six years at the time of the emigration of the family to America. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Lindemann we incorporate brief record, as follows: William, who was born in 1852, married Miss Sarah Billiad, and they now reside in Canton, being the parents of four children.—Lloyd, Leo, Hazel and Homer; Mary Alvina, who was born in 1854, died at the age of two years; Emma, who was born in 1856, is the wife of Charles Sailor, and they reside on a farm in Jackson township, being the parents of six children, namely: Frederick, Mary, Wallace, Lester, Clarence and Marvin; and Laura, who died July 15, 1876, aged thirteen years.

CHARLES RENNER was born in Lawrence township, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 2d of November, 1845, being a son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Koontz) Renner, both of whom were born in the Rhine district of Bavaria, Germany, where they were reared and where their marriage was solemnized. He served in the German army for the period required by government regulation, and shortly after his marriage he and his wife came to America, landing in New York city, where they remained a short interval and then came to Zoar, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, near which place he engaged in farming, and in that locality he passed the remainder of his long and useful life, his death occurring on the 12th of April, 1898, while his devoted wife passed away four year previously, both having been members of the German Reformed church. They became the parents of nine children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the first born, while eight of the number are still living.

Charles Renner, the subject of this review, was reared in Tuscarawas and Stark counties, and as a child he was taken into the home of David Yant, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church, for whom he worked on a farm in Bethlehem township, Stark county, until he had attained the age of fourteen years, having in the meanwhile attended the district schools during the winter terms, giving his attention to the work of the farm during the summer seasons. After leaving the home of Mr. Yant our subject went to work for John Jacoby, on what is now known as the Roush farm, near Richville, Stark county, and in 1861 he went to Massillon, where he served an apprenticeship at the butcher's trade, with the firm of Deemer & Wittenberg, continuing with them for eleven years, at the expiration of which he entered into partnership with William Hershey and opened a market on Mills street, in the same city, later being associated in the enterprise with Frank Stroebel. In the great financial panic of 1873 the firm suspended business and Mr. Renner then went to Virginia City, Nevada, where he worked at his trade for the ensuing three years, receiving sixty dollars per month for his services. He then joined his wife at Bolivar, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and was there engaged in the butchering business for the following six years. On the 1st of May, 1888, he came to Canton and located in the Dantz building, on West Tuscarawas street, where he was engaged in the same line of business for some time, after which he established himself in the Fulton market, in East Tuscarawas street, which continued to be his business headquarters for several years. He then turned the business over to his two sons and again located in a small shop in West Tuscarawas street, the same being owned by Dr. Frankenfeldt, while somewhat later he purchased the lot and erected thereon his present building. During the panic of 1893 he rented his shop for a time, and after again operating the same himself for a brief interval he engaged in the buying of walnut timber, and while thus engaged in South Carolina and Georgia, he discovered in the former state an excellent gold-quartz prospect, bringing specimens back to Canton with him and here becoming associated with others in the organization of the Enreka Mining Company, for the purpose of developing the property. He was elected general manager and returned to South Carolina and opened the mines, but lack of capital compelled the company to cease operations and it finally lapsed in organization. Mr. Renner, however, held on to the mining properties, which are now owned by him, in conjunction with his sons, Charles and F. W., and his two nephews, Jacob H. and Laise Renner. They have been offered a good price for the properties and the negotiations for the transfer are still pending at the time of this writing. In 1900 Mr. Renner and his son Charles again started in the butchering business at the old stand, on West Tuscarawas street, where they conduct a very satisfactory business, having a well equipped market and catering to a representative trade. Mr. Renner was at one time second lieutenant of Company F, Eighth Ohio Militia, and was in command of his company at the funeral of the late President Garfield. In politics he gives an uncompromising support to the Democratic party, and fraternally holds membership in the Masonic order and the Knights of Pythias. He was reared in the faith of the German Lutheran church and his wife is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

At Bolivar, Tuscarawas county, on the 1st of November, 1866, Mr. Renner was united in marriage to Miss Mary Sophia Albright, who was born in that county, being a daughter of J. M. Albright. Of this union have been born eleven children, two of whom died in infancy, while those surviving are as follows: Frederick W., who is engaged in butchering in Canton; Lizzie, who is the wife of Amos Fate, of this city; Clara, who is the wife of Thomas Jones, of Canton; Charles J., who is associated with his father in business; Julia, who is the wife of Paul Zellers, of Canton; Edward, who is engaged in butchering in the city of Cleveland; and Lena, Martha and Marie, who remain at the parental home.

JAMES F. T. WALKER.—The Savings & Loan Company, which was organized in 1887 and which now controls a large and important business, has exercised most beneficent functions and proved a valuable acquisition to the community, its assigned province being for the "promotion of systematic saving of money and to assist its members in the procurement of homes." Of this organization Mr. Walker has been secretary from the time of its inception, and his fine executive and administrative talent has proved an important factor in the upbuilding of the magnificent financial enterprise. The company now occupies its own building, erected for its use, at 206 West Tuscarawas street, the same being one of the most substantial and attractive business structures in the city and being valued at upward of twenty-eight thousand dollars and so estimated as an asset. From the thirty-second semi-annual statement of the company, issued April 1, 1903, the loans of the concern are shown to be $501,312.50; office building, $28,678.30; real estate, $4-953.46; and cash with treasurer, $32,297.82. Shares of the company are issued at one hundred dollars each, payable in weekly installments of twenty-five cents, and certificates of paid-up stock are issued in sums of ten dollars or multiples thereof.

The Savings & Loan Company, of Canton, was organized in the city hall of Canton, in April, 1887, at which time the following officers were elected: H. C. Fogle, president; H. S. Moses, vice-president; Isaac Harter, treasurer; Julius Whiting, Jr., attorney; and James F. T. Walker, secretary. Of this executive corps all yet remain in office as noted with the exception of the president and vice-president, of which the respective incumbents are William H. Clark and Joseph Dick, while the directorate includes, in addition to the executives, the following named gentlemen: H. A. Cavanaugh, H. S. Moses, Joseph H. Dumoulin and W. L. Alexander. The company declares a semi-annual dividend, and the character and financial standing of those who have its affairs in charge well accounts for the fine business which has been built up, implying the implicit confidence and esteem of the public. For a time the company had its headquarters in the city building, later occupied offices on West Eighth street, thence removed to the Davis building, in Cleveland avenue, and in February, 1899, assumed the occupancy of its present fine home building.

James F. T. Walker is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in the city of Cincinnati, on the 5th of December, 1858, and being a son of James Walker, who was born in Falkirk, Stirlingshire, Scotland, in 1832, being there reared and educated, his father having been employed as a patternmaker in an extensive stove foundry in that city. James Walker came to the United States in his early youth, having no financial reinforcement and being dependent upon his own resources in the matter of winning a livelihood in a strange land. He was, however, endowed with the sterling attributes so characteristic of the true type of Scotsmen, and his energy and self-reliance stood him well in hand. He located in the city of Cincinnati, where he passed the remainder of his life, having at one time been well established in business but having met with financial reverses through normal exigencies. He there married Miss Susan Fraser, who was of Scotch lineage, and each died at the age of fifty-eight years, having become the parents of three children, namely: Marion, who is a resident of Wyoming, Ohio; James F. T., the immediate subject of this sketch; and Grant, who is likewise a resident of Wyoming, Ohio.

James F. T. Walker secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Cincinnati, and, owing to the reverses which overtook his father, he was early thrown upon his own resources. When seventeen years of age he secured a clerkship in a wholesale grocery establishment in Cincinnati, and later was appointed to fill a clerical vacancy in the offices of the Phoenix Fire Insurance Company in that city, where he was employed until 1882, when he came to Canton and here became identified with the insurance agency of W. L. Alexander, in the capacity of bookkeeper. Later he returned to Cincinnati, where he remained about two years as secretary of the Monitor Insurance Company. He then returned to Canton and became identified with the W. L. Alexander Insurance Agency, and while thus engaged he became associated with others in the organization of the Savings and Loan Company, as already noted, and he has been consecutively its secretary from the time of its incorporation, while he also continued in the office of the insurance business of W. L. Alexander until the duties of his executive position with the Savings & Loan Company had so increased in scope as to cause him to resign the former. Mr. Walker is a member of the directorate of the Dime Savings Bank, of Canton, and also of that of the Ohio Millers' Fire Insurance Company. While in no sense a politician, he gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, being an active member of the Canton Republican Club and having been a member of the committee in charge of the McKinley birthday banquet, tendered to the late lamented President and honored citizen of Canton. Fraternally he is identified with the Free and Accepted Masons and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

At Vevay, Switzerland county, Indiana, in December, 1898, Mr. Walker was united in marriage to Mrs. Justine A. Cook, who was born in Kentucky. Their beautiful home, located on a slightly eminence on West Tuscarawas street, is one of the most attractive in the city, and there a sincere and gracious hospitality is ever in evidence, and is enjoyed by the wide circle of friends whom Mr. and Mrs. Walker have gathered about them from the representative social contingent of the city.

JOSEPH H. McCONNELL, assistant cashier of the Alliance Bank, and ex-city clerk, is a son of John and Mary J. McConnell, and was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, on the 18th day of October, 1862. For a review of his genealogy the reader is respectfully referred to the biography of his brother, John L. McConnell, on another page of this work, in which the history of the family is briefly outlined. Young McConnell grew up under the fostering influences of the parental home and after acquiring a good education in the public schools of Alliance, to which place the family removed when he was small, began his business career under the tutorship of his father in the latter's grocery store in this city. Being apt to learn and ambitious to carve for himself an honorable future, he soon mastered the underlying principles of commercial life and the valuable experience gained while in his father's business establishment prepared him to assume with the consciousness of mastery the greater responsibilities that came to him in the course of his independent career a little later. During the father's illness Joseph H. and his brother John L. managed the business very successfully and when the elder McConnell died, in 1889, the two succeeded him and continued in partnership until 1896, making in all fifteen years which the subject devoted to one line of merchandising.

In the spring of the latter year Mr. McConnell was appointed city clerk, in consequence of which he sold out his interest in the grocery business, and from that time forward devoted his attention exclusively to the duties of the office. He was first made clerk to fill out the unexpired term caused by the resignation of Mr. Casselman, and after the expiration of this partial term he was appointed his own successor, and upon the expiration of this term he was reappointed his own successor a third time in 1899, and again in 1901, and, with all due deference to his several predecessors, it can be truthfully said that a more competent or popular official has never been connected with any branch of the city government since it was established. In the spring of 1901 Mr. McConnell was a candidate for nomination for the office of county auditor and was defeated by a very small number of votes. He continued as city clerk until August, 1901, on the first day of which month, greatly to the regret of the public, he resigned the office to accept the more lucrative and agreeable position of assistant cashier of the Alliance Bank, a post he filled with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of everybody connected with the institution, as was evidenced by the fact that upon the resignation of M. S. Milbourn on January 1, 1903, he was made cashier.

Mr. McConnell, in the year 1887, entered the marriage relations with Miss Jessie Day, daughter of the late John M. Day, for many years a prominent business man of Alliance and for three terms mayor of the city, the union being blessed with one child, a son by the name of Harry. As already indicated, Mr. McConnell is a Republican and ever since attaining his majority he has been an ardent supporter of his party and an influential factor in its councils. He has devoted considerable time and energy to political work and the value of his services and the extent of his personal popularity are attested by his long retention in an important public position. He is a man of firmness and positive convictions but so manifestly honest and sincere in the maintenance and expression of his sentiments that those who differ from him most widely are often his warmest and most intimate friends and associates. He is identified with several secret fraternal organizations, belonging to Lone Rock Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Alliance Lodge No. 467, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Vivian Council, Royal Arcanum, holding the position of regent in the last named society at the present time. A firm believer in revealed religion, his life is a practical illustration of a deep and profound religious faith; the Methodist discipline represents his creed and the church of that denomination in Alliance numbers him and his excellent wife among its most faithful, zealous and consistent communicants.

ALEXANDER B. LOVE, member of the firm of Love & Casselman, dealers in stoves, tinware, hardware, steam heating, etc., is a native of Mahoning county, Ohio, born in the village of Poland on the 16th day of March, 1845. His grandfather, Thomas Love, a native of Donegal, Ireland, came to the United States when a young man of nineteen and settled in Ohio where he spent the remainder of his life, dying a number of years ago in the county of Mahoning. John Love, son of the above Thomas and father of Alexander B., first saw the light of day in Mahoning county, grew to maturity at or near Poland and when a young man engaged in the pursuit of agriculture, to which vocation he devoted the active years of his life. With the exception of a brief residence in Brookville, Trumbull county, he lived in the county of Mahoning until 1870, at which time he removed to Alliance where he spent the closing years of his life, dying in 1896, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven. John Love was a man of influence in his community and a most excellent and praiseworthy citizen. A staunch Republican and a local leader of his party, he never aspired to official preference, notwithstanding which he was frequently called to public position, having at different times held the various township offices within the gift of the people. He was reared according to the rather strict discipline of the Presbyterian creed and remained a zealous and consistent member of that church all his life, contributing liberally to the support of the congregation to which he belonged, besides freely donating to the spread of the gospel in other places. The maiden name of Mrs. John Love was Mary P. McMillan; she became the mother of six children, all living but one, their names being as follows: Alzera, in the railroad service at Youngstown; Thomas, a tinner working at his trade and carrying on business in Ravenna; Alexander B., the subject of this sketch, and Edwin, who is engaged in the hardware and tin trade at Bradford, Pennsylvania.

Alexander B. Love was brought up on the home farm in his native county and there, in close touch with nature in wood and field, learned the lessons of industry and thrift which subsequently had such a potent influence in shaping his character and establishing his reputation in the avenues of business life. During his youthful years he attended the public schools and acquired a good practical education and when the Civil war broke out he tendered his services to the government, enlisting in 1862, when a lad of sixteen, in Company F, of the Eighty-eighth Ohio Infantry. Young Love joined the army for only six months and at the expiration of that period he returned home and soon afterwards entered upon an apprenticeship in the city of Youngstown, to learn the tinner's trade. After spending some time there in close application, he finished his apprenticeship at Alliance and during the twenty years following worked at his chosen calling as a journeyman, spending the greater part of that period at various places in the states of Ohio and Kentucky.

In 1885 Mr. Love abandoned journeyman work and engaged in business for himself, purchasing an interest in the firm of Williams & Oby, at Alliance, dealers in the same line of goods the present firm handle, succeeding Mr. Williams in the enterprise and changing the name to that of Oby & Love. Later Mr. Williams re-entered the firm as successor to Mr. Oby, after which the business was carried on under the style of A. B. Love & Company, until Mr. Casselman bought the interest of Williams and became the subject's partner, thus constituting the firm of Love & Casselman, the largest enterprise of the kind in the city and one of the most successful in the eastern part of the state.

Mr. Love is not only a skillful mechanic in every branch of the trade to which he devoted so many of his active years, but is also an accomplished, farseeing business man, of ripe experience, sound judgment and high commercial rating. By excellent management and correct methods he has greatly enlarged the scope of the business of which he is now the head, and, as already indicated, he leads the trade in his various lines in this part of the country with a large and constantly increasing patronage. His influence in commercial and industrial circles has won him a place in the front ranks of the city's enterprising and progressive men, a position which his fellow citizens have not been slow to realize and appreciate.

In the year 1888 Mr. Love was united in marriage with Miss Jennie McMichael, of Alliance, the union being without issue. In the public affairs of Alliance Mr. Love has long been an active factor and as a member of the city council for twelve years he was instrumental in bringing about much important municipal legislation. While in that body he stood for improvement, but as a custodian of the people's interest he was careful to conservatism in the matter of public expenditure. He served his ward faithfully and well, attended to his every duty as a punctilious and judicious public servant. In politics he is pronounced in his support of the Republican party, but he has ever labored for the interests of his friends rather than pave his own way to official station, having no ambition in that direction. Mr. Love is a zealous Mason and has risen high in that ancient and honorable order, the principles and precepts of which have had no little influence on his daily life and business career. He belongs to Alliance Lodge No. 271, Alliance Chapter No. 83, Royal Arch Masons, the council which meets in this city, and to Salem Commandery No. 42, Knights Templar, at Salem. He is also identified with Alliance Lodge No. 266, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and for some years past has been an active worker in the Pythian brotherhood, holding membership with Lone Rock Lodge No. 23. Religiously he is a Presbyterian and with his wife belongs to the First church of that denomination in Alliance, being a member of its board of trustees.

MAJ. E. E. SCRANTON is a native of Portage county, Ohio, and one of a family of ten children whose parents were Ralph and Elizabeth Scranton. Jared Scranton, the subject's grandfather, a native of Connecticut, was one of the original settlers of the Western Reserve and his name is intimately associated with the pioneer history of Portage county, having moved to that part of the state soon after the county was opened for settlement and it is a matter of record that he helped clear the site on which the town of Atwater now stands. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, later participated in the struggle with the Indians and he assisted in capturing the savage that shot "Diver" of Deerfield, a circumstance familiar in the local annals of Portage county. His father and uncle served in the war of the Revolution and from that remote period to the present time the family has been noted for patriotism and military valor.

Ralph Scranton, son of the above Jared, was born in Portage county in the year 1812 and in early life learned cabinetmaking, which trade he carried on at Deerfield for a period of ten years. In 1845 he came to Stark county and, locating on a farm in Lexington township, devoted the remainder of his days to the peaceful pursuit of agriculture, departing this life in the spring of 1868. Ralph Scranton was a man of mark in his community and early became interested in political matters, first as a Whig, later as a Free-soiler and finally as a zealous and unwavering supporter of the Republican party. He was a great admirer of Abraham Lincoln and while the campaign of 1860 was in progress he made a trip to the west, one of the most pleasant experiences of which was his visit to the "Rail-Splitter" at the latter's home in Springfield, Illinois. A strong anti-slavery man, he hated human bondage with all the intensity of his nature and by his outspoken sentiments in favor of the abolition of the system he incurred not a little enmity on the part of his Democratic neighbors and some distrust from the more conservative of his political friends. He was a man of profound religious convictions and for many years belonged to the Wesleyan church, which in the early days was the dominant Protestant body in northeastern Ohio. Ralph Scranton married, in his native county, Elizabeth Pickering, whose father, Joseph Pickering, came from England in 1830 and spent six weeks on the ocean before seeing the shores of the new world. He came west via the Erie Canal and the lakes to northern Ohio, thence by wagon to Deerfield, Portage county, near which place he settled and improved a farm. On his journey to his new home in the Western Reserve Mr. Pickering rode the entire length of one of the first railroads built in the United States (about thirty miles in New York) and he ever afterward referred to the fact as a pleasing reminiscence. As stated in a preceding paragraph, the family of Ralph and Elizabeth Scranton originally consisted of ten children, five of whom are living at the present time, namely: Lavina (Leonard), Maj. E. E., Harrison, Albert and Aldean.

Maj. E. E. Scranton was born in the town of Deerfield, Portage county, March 2, 1840, and he grew to the full stature of manhood under the parental roof, the meanwhile acquiring a preliminary education in the public schools. The training thus received enabled him to receive a teacher's license, after which he taught for some time in the district schools, and in this way earned sufficient money to pay his expenses while pursuing a course in Mt. Union College. While attending that institution the great Civil war broke out and no sooner had hostilities begun than with true patriotic fervor he laid aside his books and, with other young men equally as loyal as himself, tendered his services to the government in its time of need. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Sixty-fifth Ohio Infantry, and in due time he was with his command at the front sharing with his comrades all the terrible realities of war. After spending two and a half years in the ranks, he was made a non-commissioned officer, subsequently was promoted adjutant of the regiment and during the latter part of his service commanded his company, having been made captain of the same for meritorious conduct. The Sixty-fifth is classed by Fox, the historian, as one of the Fighting Regiments, being numbered with others that lost over ten per cent. of their men in battle. Maj. Scranton was with his command in all its varied experience of campaign and conflict and his record shows him to have taken part in about twenty battles, among which were the following: Shiloh, Stone River, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, in one of which, Chickamauga, he received a slight wound, his escape from death upon many occasions being little less than miraculous.

At the close of the war Mr. Scranton returned home and shortly thereafter was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Wood, daughter of Robert Wood, the father being a prominent farmer and influential citizen of Lexington and an uncle of Rev. Dr. Morgan Wood, who at this time is one of the leading divines in the city of Cleveland. The winter following the return of the Major from the army he set up his first domestic establishment on a farm near Lexington and during the ensuing two years devoted his attention to agriculture, teaching one term of school in the interim. In 1868 he came to Alliance and engaged in railroading, which branch of business claimed his attention during the thirty-two years following. While in this line of service he was employed in various capacities, first in the freight and ticket offices of the Pennsylvania road, and on severing his connection with that company he accepted the position of chief clerk to the general superintendent of the Alliance & Lake Erie, also became acting freight and passenger agent at the same time. Mr. Scranton discharged the duties of his dual position for a period of four years, at the expiration of which time the road was changed to the Lake Erie, Alliance & Southern and he was made general superintendent. Five years later that part of the road between Alliance and Phalanx went into the hands of a receiver and was sold, and the name changed to the Alliance & Northern on the north end, the southern part remaining as before, the Lake Erie, Alliance & Southern, Mr. Scranton being made general manager of both lines, which responsible position he held until the purchase of the roads by the Morris-Garfield syndicate in September, 1901, when he was succeeded by Col. R. G. Butler.

Maj. Scranton spent fifteen active years as manager of the different lines referred to above, and his administration from the beginning to the end was eminently satisfactory to everybody concerned. When he entered upon his duties conditions were decidedly adverse, but in due time he succeeded in reducing matters to a correct system, setting off all outstanding indebtedness and making the road pay a dividend before severing his connection with the service.

In March, 1902, Maj. Scranton assisted to organize the Standard Bolt & Manufacturing Company of Alliance and was actively identified with the enterprise as secretary and treasurer until June, 1903, when he sold his stock and severed his connection. His previous experience in business concerns of large magnitude enabled him to engage in the new undertaking with every assurance of pushing it to successful completion and that this was done is abundantly attested by the present high rating of the company and the conspicuous place it occupies among the industrial enterprises of the city. Maj. Scranton is a stockholder of the First National Bank of Alliance and a director of the same and for eight years past he has been treasurer of Mt. Union College. He is public spirited in his relations to every enterprise for the material prosperity of Alliance and is equally active in promoting the intellectual and moral advancement of the city, also manifests an abiding interest in its social life and as a friend of churches and benevolent organizations and like institutions he has done as much perhaps as any other man for the general welfare of the community.

Mr. Scranton is a member of John C. Fremont Post No. 729, Grand Army of the Republic, belongs to the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, composed of officers who served in the great Rebellion, and he is also identified with the Royal Arcanum. In religion he adheres to the Methodist faith and at the present time is a member of the official board of the church of that denomination in Alliance. Politically he is one of the Republican leaders in Stark county and as such wields a strong influence for his party both in its councils and as an aggressive worker and successful campaigner. He has served a number of terms in the city council and has repeatedly been chosen to a place on the board of education, his services in both capacities being signally useful and greatly appreciated by the people. Financially the Major's business interests have been most fortunate and he is now one of the safe and reliable men of Alliance with an ample fortune at his command, consisting in part of valuable real estate in this city and elsewhere. He owns a half interest in the Fording & Scranton block, one of the finest modern office buildings in the city, and his three older sons own the Scranton, a building of the same character and use as the former, both structures being ornaments to the town and reflecting great credit upon the proprietors.

Major and Mrs. Scranton have six children, the oldest of whom, R. Melville, is a member of the firm of Scranton & Cole, real estate agents and proprietors of a large job printing establishment. Clarence O., the second son, was for fifteen years in the employ of the Lake Erie, Alliance & Southern Railroad and afterwards and until recently he was general freight and passenger agent of the Lake Erie, Alliance & Western. Since leaving the railway service he is in business in Oklahoma. Laurin B., the next in order of birth, is in the railway mail service, running on the Pennsylvania line. Edison E., a graduate of Annapolis, is an ensign in the U. S. navy on the gunboat "Ranger"; Homer G., the youngest member of the family, is attending Mt. Union College, has an honorable record as a student and is one of the star players in the Mt. Union basket ball team, the champion team of the state. Evalina is still with her parents. She is one of the most accomplished musicians in Alliance and for some time past has been the efficient and popular organist of the first Methodist Episcopal church of this city.

LEVI W. JOHNSON is a native son of the old Buckeye state, having been born in the village of Atwater, Portage county, on the 12th of September, 1856. He is a son of William and Elizabeth (Burden) Johnson, of whose three children he is the elder of the two surviving, his brother, Hiram E., being likewise a resident of Alliance. William Johnson was born in Connecticut, in the year 1829, and was there reared and educated, while he learned the trade of shoemaking under the direction of his father. The family came to Ohio in an early day, and located in Portage county, where William and his father worked together at their trade, the latter's death occurring in that place in 1863, while the son's death occurred on the following day, being but little more than thirty years of age at the time. At the time of his father's death the subject of this sketch was but six years of age, and he then went to the home of his maternal grandfather, David Burden, a prominent resident of Mahoning county, where he served for many years as justice of the peace, having an excellent knowledge of the law and arguing many cases in the courts at the instance of his neighbors. He died when the subject was but fourteen years of age, and for the following two years the latter resided in the home of his uncle, William Cline, in Mahoning county, in the meanwhile attending the common schools as opportunity presented. At the age of sixteen years he came to Alliance, whither his widowed mother had preceded him, and he became the chief support of the family, having secured employment in the steel-rolling mills. He was thus engaged during two summers, continuing his studies in the Alliance schools during the intervening winters, and he then secured a clerkship in the grocery of Marchand & Warren, while later he was similarly employed in the establishments of Col. Oswald Colestock and James I. Rickard. While in the employ of the last mentioned he was elected to the office of trustee of Lexington township, and at the expiration of his first term he was shown still further evidence of public confidence and esteem, being then elected county commissioner, in which capacity he rendered most capable service, being chosen as his own successor at the expiration of his first term and thus serving for six years consecutively. In politics he has ever given a stanch allegiance to the Republican party and has been active in its local ranks. He is a member of the Disciples' church, and fraternally is identified with Lone Rock Lodge No. 23, Knights of Pythias, and Alliance Lodge No. 12, Knights of the Maccabees, while he is also a member of the Uniformed rank of the former.

In November, 1901, Mr. Johnson engaged in the shoe business in Alliance, and he has a finely stocked and equipped establishment at 460 Main street, where he has built up a large and representative trade, his correct methods and personal popularity having conserved his success, while he is now one of the leading merchants in the line in the city.

On the 23d of December, 1877, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage to Miss Cynthia Knowles, of Alliance, and they became the parents of one child, Vella, who is now the wife of Frank DeWolf, who is a clerk in the subject's store. Mrs. Johnson was summoned into the life eternal in 1884, and on the 1st of November, 1888, the subject wedded Mrs. Clarinda Johnson, widow of Charles Johnson and a daughter of Matthew Wood, of Alliance. No children have been born of this union.

MARTIN WIKIDAL.—Ignatius Wikidal, father of Martin, was born in the city of Dietz, Moravia, Austria, and there passed his entire life, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Magdalene Polarscheck. He devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, being a man of sterling character and a worthy type of the sturdy yeomanry who ever conserve the prosperity of any community or nation. In the town above mentioned was born Martin Wikidal, the date of his nativity being October 8, 1800, and as the loving mother bent over the modest cradle of her son she could little conjecture that in a far land he would in his mature years win honor and distinction and achieve a success of no indefinite quality. His father was killed by French soldiers in the memorable and historic battle of Austerlitz, in 1800, so that the subject never knew a father's care and guidance, as he was a child at the time this disaster came to the family. Martin received his education in his native land, learning both the German and French languages, which were in common use in that section. As a boy he went to the city of Vienna, where he learned the trade of mantua-making, to which he continued to devote his attention until 1817, when, at the age of seventeen years, he went to the home of his sister, in France, in order to escape military duty, which was enforced by government regulations. In making this trip he traveled eleven hundred miles on foot and finally arrived at his destination, the town of Lure, France, where he resided in the home of his sister Antoinette from 1819 until 1833. In the meanwhile he was employed in the mercantile establishment of his brother-in-law and received excellent business training. Through acquaintances and reading of the newspapers of the day he learned much concerning the advantages offered in the United States, and became imbued with the desire to seek his fortunes in the new world. Accordingly, on the 23d of March, 1833, he set sail for America, being forty days en route and disembarking in the port of New York city. He brought with him eight trunks filled with dry goods, which had been given to him by his brother-in-law, in order that he might have a definite basis upon which to start in business in such place as he should decide to locate in the land of his adoption. He came forthwith to Canton, arriving in the village, which then had about eight hundred population, on the 15th of June, 1833, his choice of location having been made by reason of the fact that a large number of French people had here established homes, and it will be noted at the present time that numerous towns and localities in Stark county bear French names, while there are to be found many representative citizens who are descended from the pioneer French stock in the county. He opened business in a modest building which stood on the site of the present Durbin & Wright drug store, on Market street, while his residence was on the site of the present Zollinger store. He later purchased and removed to a building in the center of the court-house block, where he continued operations until 1848, when such success had attended his efforts that he was enabled to erect a three-story brick building on the same site, this being one of the largest and most pretentious structures in the business district for many years, while it is a pleasure to refer in this connection to the description of this building appearing in the section of this publication devoted to old landmarks of the county. In this structure Mr. Wikidal continued to be engaged in the mercantile business until the time of the Civil war, becoming one of the most prosperous business men and influential citizens of the county. After retiring from the mercantile enterprise Mr. Wikidal became interested in the banking business, in which he was associated with the late Julius Whiting, Sr., of whom specific mention is made elsewhere in this volume, while another interested principal were Isaac Harter, Sr. In 1868 Mr. Wikidal retired from active business life, though he continued to give his attention to the supervision of his various interests, and he thereafter lived in dignified repose until his death, which occurred on the 17th of December, 1893, at which time he had attained the patriarchal age of ninety-three years, while he was revered as one of the noble pioneers of the county and as one who had ever proved worthy of all trust and confidence. He was distinctively a man of affairs, and his energies and abilities were never dissipated in the slightest degree, though he had to do with manifold interests of important nature. He was a member of the directorate of the Canton City Bank, of which he was president for several years, and was a stockholder in the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad and the Connotton Valley Railroad. In politics he was originally arrayed as a supporter of the Whig party, but transferred his allegiance to the Republican party at the time of its organization and thereafter remained a staunch advocate of its principles. He was reared in the faith of the Catholic church, while his wife was a member of the Lutheran church. Though never an aspirant for public office Mr. Wikidal served efficiently as a member of the city council, and his aid and influence could always be counted upon in connection with legitimate enterprises and undertakings projected for the benefit of his home city, county and state.

On the 23d of August, 1834, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Wikidal to Miss Fredericka Schaefer, who was born in Barenthal, France (now Germany), near the famed old city of Strassburg, in the province of Alsace-Lorraine, the date of her nativity being September 13, 1813. She was a daughter of Philip Schaefer, who emigrated from France to America about 1820, becoming one of the pioneers and representative citizens of Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was born March 24, 1779, and he died in Mapleton, this county, on the 2d of October, 1855. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Lehr, was born August 11, 1777, and died on the 10th of January, 1842. Mrs. Wikidal was reared in the province of Alsace-Lorraine, on the border between France and Germany, and thus she was educated in the languages of both countries, as was her husband. She had three brothers; Jacob died in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Philip, Jr., died in South Bend, Indiana, July 11, 1870; and Louis died in Canton, on the 12th of November, 1889, at the age of seventy-three years. The happy married life of Mr. and Mrs. Wikidal was prolonged over the period of nearly sixty years, and the gracious ties which had so long bound them were severed by her death, which occurred on the 11th of January, 1890, at the family home in Canton. Of their children we enter the following record: Louis, who died in Topeka, Kansas, on the 17th of May, 1883; William, who was in the quartermaster's department of the One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry during the Rebellion, died in the city of Boston, Massachusetts, on the 27th of February, 1887; Edward died in Canton, on the 9th of December, 1897; Charles died in this city, on the 18th of March, 1875; Emma is the widow of John R. Bucher, of Canton; Clara A. is the wife of Robert S. Shields, of Canton; she has one daughter, Clara, who is the wife of C. Rudolph Shultz, of Murray Hill, New Jersey; Julia A. is the wife of Frederick K. Huxthal, and they now reside in Redlands, California.

WILLIAM LINCOLN HART, senior member of the well-known law firm of Hart & Koehler, of the city of Alliance, has won distinctive prestige at the bar and is known as one of the able and representative members of his profession in Stark county. Mr. Hart claims Ohio as the state of his nativity, having been born in the Scottish village of Inverness, Columbiana county, on the 5th of February, 1867, being a son of Benjamin F. and Ariel S. (Dreghorn) Hart, and the eldest of their children, all of whom survive, namely: William L., subject of this sketch; John D., who is engaged in the grocery business in Alliance; Winnie P., who is the wife of Frank Bricker, of Lisbon, Columbiana county; Charles G., who resides near Salineville, that county; Margaret M., who is a teacher in the public schools of Salineville; and Sarah E., Harriet A., Fred A. G., Bertha A. and Raymond F., all of whom remain beneath the parental roof. The father of the subject was likewise born near Inverness, Columbiana county, and is a son of John Swift Hart and Prudence Hart, who were honored pioneers of that county. John S. Hart, the grandfather of William L. Hart, was born in Geneva, New York, and became the father of seventeen children.

It should be noted in this connection that the patriotism of the family has been exemplified in a significant way. Of the seventeen children mentioned, seven of the eight sons were valiant soldiers in the war of the Rebellion, the father of this sketch being a member of the Twenty-sixth Ohio Veteran Volunteer Battery. Most of the seven sons were in the three-years service, and all survived the war. Adverting further to the military history of the family, we find that the grandfather, John S. Hart, was a veteran of the war of 1812, while his father, Silas Hart, was a patriot soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, which fact indicates that the name has been long and honorably identified with the annals of American history.

Of the seventeen children of John S. Hart, all but two lived to attain years of maturity, and six of the number are living at the present time. The Hart family comes of old Puritan stock, of English extraction, while the Dreghorn family is of Scotch origin, John Dreghorn, grandfather of our subject, having been born in Kilmarnock, Scotland. Benjamin F. Hart was born in the year 1843, and was reared on the old homestead farm in Columbiana county. The old brick house in which he was born is still standing and is in an excellent state of preservation, although erected as the first of its kind in that section in the year 1836. After his marriage he located on a farm adjoining the homestead on which he was born and reared, and still resides in the same place, and is one of the highly esteemed and influential citizens of his native county, with whose development and upbuilding the name has been linked from the early pioneer epoch. In politics he is a Republican, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln for President, and both he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

William L. Hart, whose name initiates this review, was reared on the homestead farm and secured his early educational training in the public schools, while later he was a student for four years in Mount Union College, in Alliance. At the age of eighteen years he began teaching school in his home district, and later he taught in the schools of Madison and Butler townships, Columbiana county, and in Paris township, Stark county, having been successfully engaged in pedagogic work for seven years, within which time he also pursued his collegiate course, defraying the expenses of the same through his efforts as a teacher.

In 1893 Mr. Hart became city editor of the Alliance Daily Critic, now known as the Alliance Daily Leader, and during his connection with this paper he made an enviable record as a forceful and effective writer and a most untiring worker. Indeed his position was no sinecure, since he was not only the sole city editor and reporter for the paper, but also read his proof sheets, thus practically doing the work of two men, and many in the local field still frequently make mention of his indefatigable and well-directed labors in this line of work.

In the autumn of 1895 Mr. Hart was matriculated in the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1897, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws, while during his senior year he had the distinction of being president of his class, a fact which indicates his personal popularity among his fellow students. On the 10th day of June, of the same year, Mr. Hart appeared for examination for admission to the bar of Ohio, and in the same stood third in a class of ninety applicants. On the first of the following October he opened a law office in Alliance, and on the first of March, 1898, he entered into a professional partnership with Dennis E. Rogers, which partnership continued until the death of Mr. Rogers, which occurred on the 15th of January, 1903. Upon the death of Mr. Rogers Mr. Hart became associated in the practice of law with Hugo C. Koehler, under the firm name of Hart & Koehler, which firm has since continued the practice at Alliance, retaining a representative clientage and having to do with much important litigation in the courts of the county and state. Mr. Hart is known as an able advocate and counsellor, and such is his appreciative recognition of the ethical code of his profession that he has the good will and esteem of his compeers at the bar.

Politically, Mr. Hart is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and while he has never been an aspirant for official preferment, by appointment of Mayor Walker, he is serving as a member of the board of sinking fund commissioners for Alliance. He has always taken an active part in party councils and is now a member of the Stark county Republican executive committee. He and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Alliance, and he is also serving on its board of trustees. He is identified with the Alpha Tau Omega Greek-letter college fraternity, Lone Rock Lodge No. 23, Knights of Pythias, and the Independent Order of Foresters, while he is also a member of the Alliance social club known as the Duodecenvirate.

On the 15th of September, 1897, Mr. Hart was united in marriage to Miss Ida B. Caskey, of Alliance, a daughter of Bertha and Nathan Caskey. She is a young woman of gracious presence and high accomplishments, having been a student in Mount Union College at the same time as was her husband, and there completing a course in literature, while she was also graduated from the stenographical department of the college. Mr. and Mrs. Hart have one child, Julian Bruce, who was born on the 28th of December, 1899.

WILLIAM CHARLES MANCHES-TER, M. D., is a native of the state of West Virginia, having been born in Clifton, Mason county, on the 30th of April, 1872, and being the eldest son of Rev. Charles E. Manchester, D. D., now presiding elder of the Steubenville district of the Ohio conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. Dr. Manchester was born in Litchfield county, Connecticut, in 1844, and about nine years later accompanied his parents on their removal to Ohio, the family locating in Lorain county, where his early youth was passed, and where his preliminary educational discipline was received. When the dark cloud of civil war obscured the national horizon he enlisted in the Twenty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the famous organization which enrolled among its members ex-Presidents Hayes and McKinley, Stanley Matthews and J. M. Camley. After a service of more than three years as a valiant soldier of the republic, he returned to Ohio and entered the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, where he took a special course preparatory to entering the ministry. Thereafter he traveled for twelve years in the state of West Virginia, and it was within this period that the subject of this sketch was born. Rev. Dr. Manchester is a lineal descendant of Commodore Oliver H. Perry, the hero of the battle of Lake Erie, and is of Revolutionary stock on both the paternal and maternal sides. He is of the sixth generation in descent from Benjamin Mills, who was sergeant of a company from New Hartford, Connecticut, in the battle of Lexington, and later first lieutenant of a company of the New Hartford Fifth Continental Regiment, which was commanded by Colonel Burg and was in the brigade commanded by General Wadsworth. He is a great-grandson of John Manchester, who was in the artillery service on the Rhode Island coast during the Revolution, and is also a great-great-grandson of Abner Case, who was a member of Captain Brown's company, which participated in the battles about New York in the early period of the war for independence. In the maternal line the family record is as closely allied to Revolutionary history, but the exact data in the connection is not accessible at the time of this writing. His forbears on both sides came from England about the year 1700. Dr. Manchester returned to Ohio in 1880 and later became pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church at Canton, of which the late lamented President McKinley and his loved and devoted mother and wife were members, and it was his sad privilege to deliver the address at the funeral of both the President and his mother, while he and his wife had been members of the President's party at the inauguration on the 4th of March, 1896. He left Canton in 1901 and went to the Steubenville district, of which he was made presiding elder, and he and his wife now reside in the city of Steubenville, while he continues incumbent of the dignified office mentioned. For many years Dr. Manchester was very prominent in the Grand Army of the Republic, and is at present department chaplain. He has given many addresses on topics touching the great Civil war. He is a man of marked erudition and forceful individuality and is a power in the church in which he has so long and effectively labored, consecrating his life to service in the vineyard of the divine Master. His wife, whose maiden name was Emma Case, is a daughter of Deacon John S. Case, of Wellington, Ohio, and her mother, whose maiden name was Diantha Blair, was a resident of Rootstown, Portage county, at the time of her marriage, and was an aunt of the late ex-Governor Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, who was at one time commander of the National Grand Army of the Republic. Her brother, Frank S. Case, was captain of a company in the Second Ohio Cavalry, during the Civil war and later became treasurer of Logan county, Ohio. Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Manchester became the parents of several children, of whom only two are now living, William C., the immediate subject of this sketch, and Frank S., who is a successful dentist in Canton, Ohio.

Dr. William C. Manchester, whose name initiates this sketch, received his early educational training principally in the public schools of Wheeling and Parkersburg, West Virginia, and Cleveland, Ohio, while he completed his high-school course in Barnesville, Belmont county, this state. He then entered the preparatory department of his father's alma mater, the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, and in 1890 he was matriculated in Adelbert College, at Cleveland, Ohio, where he completed the course in modern languages and other concomitant studies. He then entered the medical department of the Western Reserve University, at Cleveland, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1898, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. He thereafter passed two years as interne in the United States marine hospital in the city of Cleveland, gaining most valuable clinical experience, and for more than a year he was first assistant physician in the state hospital at Massillon, Stark county. He is an enthusiast in his profession and has been successfully established in practice in Alliance since August, 1901, gaining prestige through his thorough knowledge of the sciences of medicine and surgery, his skill in diagnosis and his ready power of applying his technical knowledge, as well as through his genial presence and unfailing courtesy to all. While not a specialist, Dr. Manchester is fond of microscopical work and research, and brings the microscope into much requisition in connection with diagnosis. He is also greatly interested in the treatment of nervous diseases, to which he has given close and discriminating study, and he ranks well in his profession. The Doctor is a member of the Stark County Academy of Medicine and the Canton Medical Society, and is examining physician for a number of the leading life-insurance companies, as well as court physician for Alliance Court, Independent Order of Foresters, of which he is a member, and medical examiner for Vivian Council No. 349, Royal Arcanum, with which he is likewise affiliated. He also holds membership in the Alpha Tau Omega college fraternity; Desmond Lodge No. 710, Knights of Pythias; and the Duodecinvirate, a local social club. He is one of the popular young men and rising physicians of the city, where he commands unequivocal confidence and esteem. In politics he gives a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, taking an active interest in its cause. The Doctor and his wife are both zealous members of the First Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 15th of August, 1901, Dr. Manchester was united in marriage to Miss Ida Austin, daughter of Samuel Austin, a prominent contractor and builder of Cleveland. She is a graduate of the woman's college of the Western Reserve University, and is a young woman of gracious refinement and many accomplishments. To this union one child, Winnifred, has been born. Dr. and Mrs. Manchester have a pleasant home at 328 Market street, the house having formerly been the residence of Dr. M. J. Lichty, now of Cleveland.

JOHN L. McCONNELL.—The family of which John L. McConnell is a worthy representative had its origin in Ireland, his grandfather, James McConnell, having been for many years a successful farmer and prominent citizen of county Donegal. John McConnell, son of the above James and father of the subject, was born in that county in 1827. He remained on the paternal estate until a young man of twenty, when he came to the United States, reaching this country some time during the year 1847 and locating at Washington, Pennsylvania, where he apprenticed himself to learn the miller's trade. Becoming efficient in his chosen vocation, he worked for some years as a journeyman miller and about 1856 removed to Rock Island, Illinois, where, one year later, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Culbertson, a native of Ohio. In 1861 he abandoned his trade and purchasing a farm near the city of Rock Island settled down to the quiet life of an agriculturist, which pursuit he followed until 1864, when he disposed of his landed interests in Illinois and moved to Belmont county, Ohio. After a residence of about three years in that part of the state, during which time he tilled the soil for a livelihood, Mr. McConnell changed his abode to Alliance and for some years thereafter devoted his attention to merchandising, becoming in due time one of the leading grocers and enterprising business men of the city. With the exception of one year spent in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, he followed this line of trade until his death, in 1889, his sons, John L. and Joseph H., assisting him towards the latter part of his career, the condition of his health for some time precluding active participation in business affairs. Mr. McConnell was a man of strong mentality and sound common sense, intensely practical in business and in the main successful in all his undertakings. Intelligent beyond the average and widely informed, he exercised considerable influence among those with whom he associated and while never an office seeker or aspirant for leadership, he took an active interest in politics and public matters and for a number of years represented his ward in the common council of Alliance, besides serving at different times on the city school board. In early life he was an ardent old-time Whig, but later became a zealous supporter of the Republican party and as such continued to the end of his days. He was also deeply religious and, subscribing to the Methodist faith, proved a valuable member of the church at the different places where he lived, having been especially zealous in the congregation at Alliance, which honored him with various responsible public positions. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow and his memory is cherished by the lodge in Alliance as that of a man who at all times and under all circumstances lived according to the beautiful and sublime precepts of the order.

Mr. McConnell's first wife, to whom reference is made in a preceding paragraph, was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, in the year 1837, and departed this life at Alliance in 1881, having borne her husband two children, the subject of this sketch and Joseph H., whose biography appears elsewhere in these pages. Some time after the death of the mother of these sons, the father contracted a matrimonial alliance with Mrs. Lizzie Templin (nee Owington), of Mahoning county, Ohio, this marriage being without issue.

The birth of John L. McConnell, whose career is briefly outlined in the following paragraphs, occurred on the 18th of July, 1860, in Belmont county, Ohio, and he spent the years of his childhood and youth under the parental roof, receiving the meanwhile a good education, principally in the public schools of Alliance. When a mere lad he became acquainted with the practical affairs of life in his father's store and while there developed universal business capacity and tact as an efficient and obliging salesman. Under his father's direction he gained much valuable knowledge and made such rapid advancement that within a few years he was able to assume a great part of the responsibility of the business, the success of which in later years fell very largely upon his shoulders.

In 1879 Mr. McConnell severed his connection with the store to accept a clerical position with the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he continued with this company during the ensuing eight years, meantime, by the efficient discharge of his duties and general meritorious service, rising to higher and more responsible stations than the one with which he started. In 1881 Mr. McConnell, on account of his father's ill health, resigned his position and with his brother took charge of the grocery, the two conducting the business in the father's interest until the latter's death in 1889. They then succeeded to the business and ran the same jointly until 1896, when they disposed of the stock, the subject the same year becoming a member of the Alliance Wholesale Grocery Company, of which he was made president and with which he continued identified until disposing of his interest in the concern, in July, 1902. Since that year he has been dealing in real estate and he now commands a large and far-reaching business, operating extensively in Alliance and Stark county, besides handling a great deal of property in many other counties of Ohio to say nothing of his lucrative patronage in other states of the Union.

As a business man Mr. McConnell is careful and discreet, possessing much more than ordinary ability and judgment and the several enterprises in which he has been engaged have redounded greatly to his financial advantage, so that he is now in independent circumstances, with a comfortable fortune laid up against the possible day of adversity or for the declining years in which man is supposed to cease from his strenuous efforts and enjoy the fruits of his labors. Politically Mr. McConnell has long been an important factor in the Republican party and for a number of years his influence in local affairs has been duly appreciated by his fellow citizens of Alliance who recognize in him those elements which enter largely into the make-up of the successful leader of men. He has been especially active in municipal matters and in 1900 was elected to represent the second ward in the city council, was re-elected in 1902 and upon the organization of the body that year was made its president, which position he still holds. In the language of another, "He presides over the deliberations of the council with dignity, and his rulings being manifestly fair, he has the respect and confidence of the members, each of whom, regardless of politics, looks upon him as a friend." As president, Mr. McConnell takes an active interest in all improvements looking to the welfare of the people. He is conservative, but liberal in the expenditure of public funds, his one consideration being that the people shall receive full return for all money expended.

Like many other intelligent, broad minded, enterprising men, Mr. McConnell is an ardent member of that oldest and noblest of fraternal societies, the Masonic brotherhood, believing thoroughly in its principles, respecting its splendid history and time-honored traditions and exemplifying in his relations with his fellow men its beautiful and sublime precepts. He belongs to Conrad Lodge No. 271, Free and Accepted Masons, at Alliance, Alliance Chapter No. 84, Royal Arch Masons, Omega Council No. 104, at Salem, Salem Commandery No. 42, Knights Templar, Lake Erie Consistory, at Cleveland, and Al Koran Temple, Mystic Shrine, which holds its sessions in the city last named. He stands prominent in these various branches of the order, manifests an abiding interest in their deliberations and at different times he has been honored with important official positions, the duties of which he discharged in a manner befitting their dignity and his high standing as a Mason with the greatest good of the brotherhood at heart. He is also an Odd Fellow of high degree, holding membership with Lodge No. 266 at Alliance, besides being one of the leading spirits to the Alliance Encampment No. 144. In matters religious he has deep and profound convictions and he still subscribes to the doctrines of the Methodist church, in which he was born and reared and to which his loyalty has always been much more than a sentiment or mere intellectual assent to a stated form of belief. Mr. McConnell's domestic life began in 1898, when he was united in the bonds of wedlock with Miss Luella Fillmore, of Ravenna, Ohio, a lady of many virtues and excellent traits of character and a member of one of the highly esteemed families of the city in which she formerly lived.

DAVID L. TSCHANTZ.—As proprietor of a flourishing and important business, conducted under the title of the Canton Buggy Company, the subject of this review is numbered among the representative business men of Stark county and his honorable and successful career well entitles him to definite recognition in this compilation. Mr. Tschantz established his present enterprise on the 4th of February, 1898, beginning his operations in an old frame building which stood on the site of his present commodious and well equipped quarters, at 1522-28 East Tuscarawas street, where he has a substantial building eighty feet square, three stories in height in addition to the basement. Here he conducts an extensive business in the manufacturing of carriages and buggies, keeping in stock an average of two hundred and fifty finished vehicles, while the extent of the output of the factory may be understood when we state that at the time the data for this sketch was secured there were five hundred and fifty vehicles in course of construction in the establishment, employment being given to twenty-two skilled workmen, while the products are recognized for their superior excellence.

Mr. Tschantz, as the name implies, comes of stanch German lineage, and he is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born on a farm in Sugar Creek township, Wayne county, Ohio, on the 3d of March, 1867, and when he was about three years of age his parents took up their abode on a farm in the immediate vicinity of Orrville, that county. The subject was reared under the sturdy discipline of the farm and received his early educational training in the public schools. The original ancestor of the family in the United States was born and reared in Switzerland, and was the grandfather of him whose name initiates this sketch. He came from his native land to the United States in the year 1811, and soon afterward took up his residence in Wayne county, Ohio, where he took up a large tract of government land and became one of the influential citizens of his section. He was a skilled mechanic and manufactured the first wagons ever constructed in Wayne county, while in addition to conducting this enterprise in connection with his farming, he also manufactured pumps, having invented a device in this line that was long in common use in that section of the state, where he passed the remainder of his life, attaining a venerable age. Peter Tschantz, father of the subject, succeeded to the manufacturing business, which he expanded in scope, engaging in the manufacture of buggies and surreys, which were the finest to be had in that locality in his day. He was reared on the homestead farm and learned his trade under the effective direction of his father, and it is interesting to note that three generations of the family have now attained high reputation in connection with this line of enterprise in the state of Ohio. Upon attaining maturity Peter Tschantz was united in marriage to Miss Annie Hostetter, who was likewise born and reared in Wayne county, being a daughter of Nicholas Hostetter, who assisted in the construction of the canal through to Massillon, Stark county, this having been the principal means of transportation in the early days and being considered an improvement of great importance, as, indeed, it was, since the highways were few and almost impenetrable and railroads were unknown. The parents of the subject still reside in Wayne county, and there the father is still actively engaged in business. He is a Democrat in politics and both he and his wife are members of the Mennonite church, while they retain the unqualified confidence and regard of all who know them, being folk of sterling worth of character. They became the parents of three children, of whom all are living at the present time.

Maggie Tschantz.

D. G. Schantz

While a mere boy David L. Tschantz, the immediate subject of this sketch, began an apprenticeship at the trade of wagon and carriage-making in his father's establishment, having worked in the shop and fired the engine in the same when but six years of age, while he began to work at the anvil when so young that he was compelled to stand on a box in order to deliver the requisite blows. He attended school during the winter months and continued to work in the shop during the summers until he had attained the age of eleven years, when he began working in the painting department of the establishment, where he was employed until he had reached the age of fifteen years, while it may be stated that he gained special facility as a painter, since in the summer of his fifteenth year he painted one hundred vehicles, and thereafter he worked in the various departments of the business and continued to remain at the parental home until he was twenty-two years of age, when he initiated his essentially independent career, being employed on a farm for a period of nine months and then passing the ensuing winter in his father's shops. In the spring he joined his uncle, who was likewise a farmer and wagon-maker, residing near Lattasburg, Wayne county, and there he was employed on the farm and in the shop for a period of three years, after which he returned to his home and purchased a small farm adjoining the old homestead, and this tract of twenty acres he placed under effective cultivation and also assisted in the work of his father's shop, for the ensuing two years. Mr. Tschantz next removed to Allen county, Ohio, where he joined another uncle, and in that locality he made his initial venture in an independent business, opening a small shop, to which he gave his attention for some time, while for a portion of each of three years he was a traveling salesman for the Ney Manufacturing Company, of Canton, manufacturers of hay tools. About this time he invented and patented a new and improved sling carrier, from the sale of which device he realized a sufficient sum to enable him to secure a start in the manufacturing line. He entered into an agreement, however, to make a business trip for Harvey M. Miller, of Canton, for whom he sold two car loads of buggies within a trip of eighteen days' duration.

At Bluffton, Allen county, Ohio, on the 30th of August, 1896, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Tschantz to Miss Maggie Amstutz, daughter of John S. Amstutz, of that place, and they thereafter made a trip of eleven thousand miles through the western states, while he combined both business and pleasure during his itinerary. Upon his return from this interesting journey Mr. Tschantz located in Canton and established himself in business as a manufacturer, as has been noted in a former paragraph of this article. His thorough knowledge of all details of the business in which he is engaged, his energy, progressive methods and honorable dealings, as coupled with the manifest superiority of his products, have enabled him to build up a large and prosperous business and to gain a high place in popular esteem. He has been in a significant sense the architect of his own fortune, and on this score his success and prestige are the more gratifying to contemplate. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, supporting the men and measures which meet the approval of his judgment, while both he and his wife are members of the Mennonite church, in whose faith they were reared. They have no children.

KING FAMILY.—Jonathan King was born in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, January 5, 1804. His father, George King, was a native of the same state, and married Sarah Sylvis, by whom he had a family of seven children, viz: Jonathan, the subject of this sketch; Christina (Frankfort), deceased; Elizabeth, deceased; Mary (McCulloch), deceased; Henry, deceased; Anna (Wahl) and Phebe (Ramsdell), both of whom are residents of Indiana. At the age of fifteen Jonathan King was apprenticed to a potter. He served a full apprenticeship, but was dismissed without receiving the customary "apprentice" suit of clothes. During the following winter he went with his uncle, John Wile, on a raft of saw logs to Pittsburg to trade for flour for his mother. Failing to get flour sufficient in exchange for the saw logs to last till harvest, and having no money, he returned home. But not discouraged he started with several others with a four-horse team for the west, stopping in Springfield township, Mahoning county (then Columbiana county), Ohio, where he engaged to work during the summer for wheat, which was paid in advance, and sent back to his mother with the persons with whom he came. In the fall of the same year he returned to Pennsylvania and removed his mother, brothers and sisters to Springfield township. In 1852 he was married to Lydia Keck, and in April, 1826, removed to Berlin township, Mahoning county (then Trumbull), Ohio, where he had purchased a farm the fall previous. He settled upon his farm and devoted himself with diligence to the work of building up a home. His busy days and years of toil bore fruit, and by strict integrity and economy Mr. King acquired considerable property, though starting in life with nothing but nature's endowments. Before the days of railroads he was a noted teamster and made frequent trips from Pittsburg to Cleveland and from Cleveland to the mouth of the Huron river, usually driving six horses. At one time he made a trip from Pittsburgh to Erie, Pennsylvania, for which he received seventy-five dollars. But such was the condition of the roads at that time that the entire amount except two dollars and sixty cents was required to pay necessary expenses of the journey. The life of a teamster in those days was one of hardships, and none but the most vigorous could long endure it. In 1842 Mr. King was elected a captain of the militia, and held the office until the company disbanded.

Jonathan King was the father of ten children, four of whom died in infancy and youth. The remaining six are as follows: David, who married Miss Mary Smith and resides in Berlin; Catherine, married George Kail, moved to Michigan, where she died; Joseph married Miss Lucinda Greenmayer, and resides in Berlin on the farm upon which his father first settled; Susannah married J. B. Shively, and resides in Berlin; Sarah married R. B. Engle; Hannah married the late J. B. Hughes (who served two terms as auditor of Mahoning county), and resides in Youngstown. Mrs. King was born August 13, 1806, in Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, and moved with her parents to Springfield township, Mahoning county, Ohio, in 1808. She died February 22, 1875. Mr. King departing this life in 1896 at the age of ninety-two.

In religion, Mr. King was a firm adherent to the Protestant faith and of deep conviction, zealous in good works and liberal in his contributions to the cause of Christ, he and his wife being lifelong members of the Evangelical Lutheran church. Politically he stood with the Democratic party until the abolitionists put a ticket in the field, when he changed his allegiance to that party, voting for John P. Hall for President. After the organization of the Republican party, he voted with it until 1881, when his strong temperance principles compelled him to cast his ballot for the Prohibition candidates. Mr. King was one of the most social and agreeable of men. His cheerful disposition and his sterling worth made him a favorite among the old and young and his death was deeply lamented by a large circle of friends.

The King family possesses considerable native ingenuity and skill in the use of tools. Jonathan King was quite proficient in blacksmithing, carpentry, etc. The manufacturers of threshing machines are indebted to David King for many timely suggestions and improvements in grain separators and clover hullers. Joseph King has also been the proprietor of a threshing machine for a number of years, operating one at the present time, with steam as the motive power. David and his son, Mervin W., are the proprietors of a steam saw-mill, which is doing an extensive business. David also owned a half interest in a planing-mill in the eastern part of the township, known as the Kimmel & King mill, which also had a large and lucrative patronage. Honesty and sobriety characterize the entire family, and all of them have been noted for industry and energy displayed in their respective vocations.

DAVID KING, oldest son of Jonathan King, was born at Springfield, Mahoning county, Ohio, in the year 1825. He remained at home until reaching the years of young manhood and in his youth learned blacksmithing under his father, who was a skilled mechanic. On attaining his majority he turned his attention to agriculture, which, in connection with his trade, he followed until retiring from active life at a comparatively recent date. In early life he purchased a threshing outfit which he operated quite successfully, and he followed this line of work altogether about fifty-seven years, being the oldest thresher in the state when he discontinued the business, some years ago. By strict attention to his several vocations and successful management, Mr. King acquired considerable property, both real and personal, and after accumulating a competence for his declining years, he removed to Damascus, where he is now living in honorable retirement, greatly beloved by his relatives and friends and highly esteemed by all who know him. The maiden name of Mrs. David King was Mary Smith; she was born in Ohio and was the mother of six children, of whom the following are living: Mervin W., a mill owner at Berlin Center; Frank M., a practicing physician of Damascus; Ida, who married Clarence Cover and lives at Berlin Center, and Dr. George L. King, of Alliance. The political faith of Mr. King is represented by the Republican party, and since early manhood he has manifested a lively interest in public affairs, voting his principles at all times, defending the soundness of his opinions without fear or favor, but never asking for office nor aspiring to leadership.

GEORGE LINCOLN KING, PH. M., M. D. —The name of George L. King is not only familiar to the people of Alliance, but by reason of his eminence as a specialist it is also well known in medical circles throughout the state. No other man in eastern Ohio has advanced more rapidly toward the goal of success, nor have any contributed in a greater degree to honor and dignify the calling to which his well developed intellectual powers and critical professional training are being devoted. Dr. King is a native of Mahoning county, Ohio, and the son of David and Mary King. He was born March 27, 1865, in Berlin Center, and received his preliminary education in the public schools of that town, subsequently pursuing his studies in Mt. Union College, from which institution he was graduated in the philosophical course with the class of 1890. Meantime at the age of nineteen he began teaching in the schools of his native county and followed this line of work for several years, thus paying his way through college with money earned during his vacations.

In 1892 he entered Cleveland Medical College, where he prosecuted his professional studies with earnestness until completing the prescribed course in 1895, being a special student under Prof. B. B. Viets, making the eye and ear a specialty and having practical charge of the clinical work on those organs during his last year's attendance. Dr. King's experience as a medical student was characterized by close study and critical research. He was far more anxious to acquire knowledge than to display the same and availed himself of every opportunity to acquire proficiency in the special branches of the profession which were ultimately to gain him distinction. In addition to his high standing as a student, he also achieved the reputation of being one of the most skilled operators in the college during the period of his attendance and few if any excelled his record.

On receiving his degree the Doctor located in Alliance and found himself at the beginning of his career with no competition in his special line of treatment. His skill as an eye and ear specialist soon won him recognition and it was not long until his name became widely known throughout this part of the country and his cases rapidly multiplied. Soon after beginning a successful practice, during which the necessity for more thorough professional training impressed itself upon his mind, the Doctor in 1895 took a post-graduate course in the Post-Graduate School for the Eye and Ear in New York city, and two years later took a second course in the same institution, thus leaving nothing undone in the way of thorough preparation for his life work. Dr. King has a large and lucrative practice and with no opposition worthy of mention, his advancement, as already indicated, has been encouraging and he is now recognized as the leading specialist in

While primarily devoted to his profession, the Doctor has also been a participant in public affairs, being at this time president of the city school board. In this capacity he has been especially active in his efforts to provide the public with a new library, to which end he made a motion before the school board to the effect that a committee of six be appointed to secure, if possible, Andrew Carnegie's financial support for the enterprise. In due time this was accomplished, Mr. Carnegie agreeing to donate twenty-five thousand dollars on the condition that the city enter into an obligation to maintain the library by an annual expenditure of two thousand five hundred dollars. Dr. King is an active and enthusiastic member of the Alliance board of trade.

In politics Dr. King is a zealous supporter of the Republican party, and in religion subscribes to the Methodist creed, being a consistent communicant of the church of that denomination in Alliance and a member of its board of trustees. His fraternal relations are represented by the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, a social and literary organization under the auspices of Mt. Union College, composed of students and ex-students of that institution.

Dr. King married, on December 30, 1895, Myra Mitchell Stone, daughter of Levi and Phoebe Stone, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio. Of this union there are two children living, George Lincoln, Jr., born March 23, 1900, and Phoebe Mitchell, born May 9, 1902. It is worthy of mention in this connection that in all critical or delicate operations Mrs. King is the Doctor's active and able assistant, she has developed marvelous skill in this direction and Dr. King depends on no one else for assistance when the operation is of sufficient moment. They have a very beautiful home on Alliance's best residence street, at 749 South Union avenue.

BENJAMIN A. ESTEP.—One of the well known and highly honored citizens of Stark county, where he passed practically his entire life, was the late Benjamin Anderson Estep, who died on the 7th of August, 1882. He was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, being a son of Henry and Abigail (Anderson) Estep, the latter of whom was a native of Ireland, whence she came to America when young, being accompanied by two sisters, one of whom died en route and was buried at sea. Henry Estep was engaged in the tanning business for a number of years, and his son Benjamin learned the trade under his direction, having received a common-school education in New Franklin, Stark county, and Winchester, Columbiana county, Ohio, in each of which places his parents had resided, having taken up their abode in this section of the Buckeye state in the pioneer epoch and having here passed the remainder of their lives. Later in his career Benjamin A. Estep was employed as a carriage painter, by his brother Isaiah, who conducted a carriage shop in the village of Paris, this county, and who died in California in the year 1900. Another brother, Ephraim J., was a prominent attorney of the city of Cleveland for many years, being also well known in Canton and vicinity, and he likewise died in California, about five years ago.

About the year 1860 Benjamin A. Estep entered the employ of his father-in-law, Rudolphus Martin, who was engaged in the dry goods business at Paris, Stark county, and with him he continued to be associated for a number of years, after which he assumed the position of traveling salesman for the Martin Bros. (his brothers-in-law), and later on purchased the business, devoting his attention to this line of work until his death, which occurred on the 7th of August, 1882, as has been already noted. In politics he gave a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and fraternally he was identified with the Free and Accepted Masons, having originally affiliated with Brown Lodge, in Minerva, this county, and later becoming a member of Eagle Lodge, in Canton. Though never imbued with political ambition in a personal way, he yielded to the importunities of his party friends and became candidate for the office of clerk of Paris township, being elected and serving with marked ability and discrimination.

On the 6th of January, 1857, Mr. Estep was united in marriage to Miss Amanda H. Martin, who was born in Navarre, Stark county, Ohio, and who was reared and educated in the village of Paris, this county, being a daughter of Rudolphus Martin, who was one of the honored pioneers and representative business men of that place, where his death occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Estep became the parents of five children, concerning whom we enter brief record, as follows: Maude E. is the wife of Arbine C. Heiner, of Canton, and they have two sons, Ernest, who married Miss Marie Gloddy, and James M. Blanche, who became the wife of Julian King, of Canton, died in this city in 1895, leaving one child, Bernice, who is now the wife of Walter A. Albaugh, of Canton. Mabel died in infancy. William died in 1898, in Canton, at the age of thirty years. George Dwight still retains his residence in Canton.

OLIVER F. TRANSUE, general manager of one of the leading industrial enterprises of the city of Alliance,—that conducted under the corporate title of the Transue & Williams Company, is a native of the city in which he now maintains his home, having been born on the 10th of December, 1865, and being the second in order of birth of the four children of Frank and Amanda (Aultman) Transue, the other three children being as follows: Minnie, who is the wife of Frank Kingsbury, an employe of the company mentioned above; Charles R., who is foreman in the establishment of this company; and William, who is a skilled mechanic in the same.

Frank Transue was born in North Benton, Mahoning county, Ohio, on the 17th of June, 1842, being of French and German lineage. When he was a boy his parents removed to Alliance, and here he was reared to manhood, learning the trade of machinist in the Nixon works, and later entering the shops of the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio Railroad at Kent, Ohio, where he was employed for some time, after which he was employed for a period in Oil City, Pennsylvania, in the center of the oil regions of that state. He then returned to Alliance, where his marriage was solemnized shortly afterward, and here he engaged in business on his own responsibility, associating himself with Jonathan Craft, under the firm name of Craft & Company. They engaged in the manufacture of threshing-machine teeth, and Mr. Transue was general manager of the business. Later Mr. Craft disposed of his interest in the enterprise, being succeeded by Dr. Armstrong, while the firm title was now changed to Transue & Armstrong. Shortly after the new alliance was formed the firm augmented the scope of the enterprise, doing a general drop-forging business, which continued to increase in extent and importance under the effective management brought to bear. In 1889 the firm sold the business to the Whitman-Barnes Company, of Canton, and for a number of years thereafter the father of our subject lived practically retired from active business, finally identifying himself with the company of which the subject of this sketch is general manager and being at the present time president of the company. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party and he and his wife are communicants of the Methodist church, in which faith they reared their children.

Oliver F. Transue was reared to maturity in his native city of Alliance, where he received his educational discipline in the public schools, completing a course in the local high school. At the age of sixteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship as a machinist in the shops of the firm of which his father was a member, and there he learned the business in all its details, becoming an expert workman and also gaining a comprehensive knowledge of the executive functions of the enterprise. In 1886 he was tendered a position in the shops of the Whitman-Barnes Company, of Canton, as general superintendent, and this offer he accepted. He was incumbent of this responsible office in the autumn of 1893, at which time the company removed its business to Akron, Ohio, whither he went in the same capacity as before, and he there remained as general superintendent of the new plant until the latter part of the year 1895, when he resigned his office and came to Alliance, where he entered into partnership with Silas J. Williams and engaged in the business of drop forging, under the firm name of Transue & Williams. The technical ability, energy and progressive methods brought to bear made the enterprise a success from the start and the increase in the business led to the formation of a stock company, which was incorporated in 1897, under the title of The Transue & Williams Company, and with the following executive corps: Frank Transue, president; Silas J. Williams, vice-president, and Oliver F. Transue, general manager. The industry has shown an almost phenomenal expansion and the business is established upon the firm basis of commercial integrity and most able management, so that is certain to continue cumulative in returns under normal conditions of trade. The works have been kept in operation night and day for many months in order to meet the demands placed upon the same, and the concern now represents one of the important industrial enterprises of the Buckeye state. Mr. Transue gives his entire attention to the business and is known as one of the alert and capable young business men of his native city, while he is popular in both business and social circles. In politics he gives an unequivocal support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes an active interest, though he has never sought public office of any description.

On the 19th of July, 1886, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Transue to Miss Grace Fisher, of Alliance, a daughter of Charles Fisher, and of this union have been born two children, Ruth E. and Margaret.

ALBERT F. ELLETT was born in the house in which he now resides, in section 23, Lexington township, on the 17th of February, 1857, being a son of Elias and Elmira (Sarish) Ellett, of whose thirteen children nine are still living, namely: Mary, who is the widow of Rev. James L. Philips and who resides in the city of Cleveland; William K., who is a prominent citizen of Alliance, this county; Catherine, who is the wife of William M. Santee, of Snode Station, Mahoning county; Sarah, who is the wife of Rev. Homer Eddy, of Johnsonsburg, Pennsylvania; Adoniram J., who is a resident of the city of Alliance; Jennie, who is the wife of Charles Parkinson, of Rushsylvania, Logan county, Ohio; Samuel P., who resides in Alliance; Elias J., who resides in Berlin Center, Mahoning county, and Albert F., who is the immediate subject of this sketch. The Ellett family is one whose history has long been identified with American annals, the original progenitors in the new world having come from Germany and settled in New Jersey in the pre-Revolutionary epoch. Elias Ellett, father of the subject, was born in Salem county, that state, on the 20th of January, 1812, the place of his nativity having been in the immediate vicinity of the historic Alloway creek. His father, James Ellett, was likewise born in New Jersey, and he became a promiment farmer and gardener of Salem county, where he died when his son Elias was but twelve years of age. He left a family of ten children and the exigencies of the case demanded that some of them become dependent on their own resources, in order to provide for the maintenance of the other members of the family, including the widowed mother, and thus it became the portion of Elias to enter the employ of a gardener in the locality, and he received in recompense for his services eight dollars per month, while he contributed his earnings to the support of the family, continuing to be thus employed until he had attained his nineteenth year, while his educational privileges were such as were afforded by a somewhat desultory attendance in the common schools of the locality and period. In 1834 occurred his marriage, and in 1838, in company with his wife and two children, he emigrated to Mahoning county, Ohio, locating near the village of Bunker Hill, where he purchased a small tract of land, upon which he continued to reside about two years at the expiration of which he disposed of the property and came to Stark county, where he purchased the farm now owned and occupied by his son Albert, of this sketch. The place comprised ninety acres and a portion of the land had been cleared, though much of the native timber was still standing intact, while manifold stumps still decorated much of the cleared section, so that it was evident that no sybaritic task was involved in bringing the tract under effective cultivation. A small log house of the primitive type had been built on the farm, and this continued to be the family home for a number of years. In connection with his farm work Mr. Ellett also engaged in the meat business, and he ran the first meat wagon ever utilized in catering to the demands of the residents of the present city of Alliance, the same having been then a small village known by the name of Williamsport, while he thus devoted his attention to the butchering business during the summer months. He was a man of progressive spirit and initiative power, and was quick to grasp opportunities and to secure the maximum returns from the same. Thus he early began to purchase horses throughout this section of the state, and drove them over the mountains to New Jersey, where he found usually a very profitable market for the same. During the winter months he followed this line of enterprise until 1879, and with the advent of the railroad he utilized the same in the shipping of his horses. In 1870 he left the farm in charge of his son Adoniram and removed to Alliance, where he gave his entire attention to his butchering business for the ensuing three years, establishing there a well equipped market. In 1873 he was elected street commissioner of Alliance, in which capacity he served two years, at the expiration of which he returned to the farm, which thereafter continued to be his home until he was called from the scene of life's endeavors, on New Year's day of the year 1895, being at the time nearly eighty-three years of age and having the unequivocal esteem of all who knew him, for he had ordered his life on a high plane of integrity and honor and had labored to goodly ends. He was an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of its formation until his death, and was incumbent of the various township offices of trust and responsibility. He was a devoted and zealous member of the Baptist church, in which he served as deacon for many years, his wife likewise having been a member of the church and prominently concerned in its work up to the time of her demise, which occurred on the 31st of December, 1859. Subsequently he consummated a second marriage, being united to Mrs. Rebecca J. Fogg, whose maiden name was Barnes, and they became the parents of one son, Henry B., who is now a resident of the city of Danville, Illinois.

Albert F. Ellett was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm on which he was born and which is now his place of residence, while his educational privileges were those offered by the public schools of the locality and period. On his twenty-first birthday anniversary he departed with his father for New Jersey, with a carload of horses, and upon arriving in the state in which his ancestors had settled so many years ago, he hired out to a farmer of Salem county and there remained one year, at the expiration of which he returned to his home in Stark county, and shortly afterward again returned to the east with another carload of horses, his father accompanying him, while this was the last shipment ever made by the latter. After his return home the subject remained on the home farm for one season, and thereafter was employed for six months on the construction of the East-end division of the Pittsburg & Fort Wayne Railroad. He then became associated with his brother Samuel in the meat-market business in the city of Alliance, being identified with this enterprise about two years, while for a short period thereafter he was in the employ of W. M. Reed, a dealer in agricultural implements in that city.

On the 19th of October, 1882, Mr. Ellett was united in marriage to Miss Clara H. Santee, who was born in Mahoning county, Ohio, being a daughter of William M. Santee, a prominent farmer near Snode Station, that county, and shortly after this important event in his career Mr. Ellett removed to the old home farm, of which he had the practical supervision up to the time of his father's death, after which he rented the property from the administrators for two years and then purchased the place. Here he has since been most successfully engaged in general agricultural pursuits and the raising of a considerable amount of excellent live-stock, while he is recognized as one of the progressive and scientific farmers of the county and as a man whose word is as good as his bond, while no citizen in the community is accorded a greater measure of popular confidence and regard. In politics he has ever been a radical Republican and has taken a deep interest in the party cause. In 1897 he was elected township trustee, of which office he was incumbent for three years, while his name has been prominently mentioned in connection with the office of county commissioner, in which his interposition could not prove other than of value to local interests. He and his wife hold membership in the Baptist church, and fraternally he is identified with the Royal Arcanum, holding membership in Vivian Council No. 349, at Alliance. To Mr. and Mrs. Ellett were born four children, and the three surviving still remain at the parental home. The names of the children are here entered in the order of their birth: Lucius G., Ralph E. (deceased), Glenn W. and Olive R.

JESSE W. TEETERS.—Elisha Teeters, father of Jesse W., and for many years a leading business man, successful financier and prominent citizen of Alliance, was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, in the year 1814, the son of John and Mary (Cook) Teeters. He grew up on the home farm and in addition to tilling the soil assisted, when a young man, to run a coal bank which his father owned and operated. He followed the latter line of work for a number of years, and it fell to him to market the greater part of the output of the mine, which he did by means of wagons and oxen, frequently driving as many as five yoke of oxen to each load of coal. In 1835 Elisha Teeters married Miss Eliza Webb, and a little later moved to a quarter section of land in Lexington township, Stark county, which was purchased by his father from the government in 1826. When Mr. Teeters set up his domestic establishment on this place there was but one acre of the one hundred and sixty cleared, and he immediately bent all of his energies to the improvements of the rest, a task which was accomplished in due time, after much hard work and the expenditure of a great deal of physical force. Meanwhile he purchased additional land to the amount of thirty-two acres and by industry, thrift and good management became one of the leading farmers of his township, which reputation he sustained as long as he gave personal attention to agricultural pursuits. After living on the original homestead until 1866, he removed to a place of eighty-four acres adjoining the limits of Alliance on the north, where he lived for a number of years, finally changing his residence to the brick dwelling east of the cemetery, which he made his home until his death, on the 17th day of June, 1899. Elisha Teeters was the real founder of Alliance, as it was by him that the original plat of the city was made in 1851 on part of an eighty-acre tract of land south of the Pennsylvania & Fort Wayne Railroad, and extending from what is now Union avenue to Liberty street. Through his influence and material aid a number of improvements were inaugurated and carried to successful completion, and he also took a prominent part in establishing and maintaining several public institutions, including among others the First National Bank, in which he was a heavy stockholder and director and with which he continued identified until his death. It is needless to dwell at large upon the active business life of Elisha Teeters or to attempt to estimate his influence upon the material prosperity of the city and community, in which he was for so many years a potential factor, as the limits of an article of this character forbid more than a passing reference. At one time Mr. Teeters met with severe business reverses, but later he recovered from his financial embarrassment, retrieved his fortune and died a wealthy man. For a number of years he served as trustee of the Fairmount Children's Home, having been one of the first men appointed to that important position, and he held it as long as he lived, discharging his duties ably and conscientiously and proving one of the best friends and most useful officials the institution ever had. The family of Elisha and Eliza Teeters consisted of ten children, the following of whom are living: Jesse W., of this review; Rachael, widow of James Amerman, of Alliance; Isaac, a resident of Oakley, Kansas; Rosa J., wife of C. C. Edson, of Kansas City, Missouri; Charles R., of Goodland, Kansas; Laura E., now Mrs. W. K. Fogg, of Alliance; and Elisha P., who lives in the city of Cleveland.

Jesse W. Teeters was born on the old homestead in Lexington township, Stark county, Ohio, June 5, 1836, and he spent his early life like the majority of country lads, working in the fields during the spring, summer and early fall months and attending the public schools of winter seasons. He was a youth of sixteen when his father moved to Alliance to look after business interests there, and from that time until his thirtieth year the management of the farm fell to him, and right nobly did he assume the responsibility and discharge his varied duties. He soon demonstrated unusual capacity as an agriculturist, adopted the most approved methods of tilling the soil, and achieved not only an enviable reputation as an enterprising, progressive man, but continually added to his material means until becoming the possessor of a fortune sufficiently ample to render him financially independent.

On June 28, 1866, Mr. Teeters and Miss Addie Brosius, of Washington township, Stark county, daughter of the late Amos and Esther Brosius, were united in the bonds of wedlock, and shortly thereafter the subject purchased the old Teeters homestead in Lexington township, where he lived and prospered until 1901. In October of the latter year he sold the farm and removed to Alliance, where he owns a beautiful home, in which he is living a life of retirement, having accumulated a sufficiency of this world's goods to make the remainder of his days free from the care and anxiety which beset the lot of individuals less fortunate. Mr. and Mrs. Teeters are the parents of one child, a daughter by the name of Mabel, who is now the wife of Loka L. Lamborn, a newspaper man of Alliance, holding the position of manager of the Alliance Leader Publishing Company.

Mr. Teeters' interest in the public affairs of his city and county has been long and marked and at different times he has been called to positions of honor and trust, in all of which he demonstrated not only resourceful business capacity, but a conscientious fidelity to duty that won the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. He served several terms as assessor of Lexington township, and for a number of years was a member of the agricultural board of Stark county, a position to which he was but recently re-elected, and for which his long and successful experience peculiarly fit him. Like all good citizens with the best interest of the community, state and nation at heart, Mr. Teeters is a politician, not in the narrow, restricted sense in which the term is generally understood, but in the large sense of discharging his obligations to the body politic as an intelligent member thereof. He is a Democrat, in all the word implies, and while warm and enthusiastic for his party's success and an able adviser in its councils and a zealous worker, he is not bitterly partisan nor offensive in his political methods. In the fall of 1902 he was nominated for the office of county commissioner, but by reason of the overwhelming majority of the opposition in the district failed of election, though running two thousand votes ahead of his ticket. On the death of his father Mr. Teeters was appointed to fill the latter's unexpired term on the board of trustees of the Fairmount Children's Home, and he still holds the position to the satisfaction of all concerned. He is a heavy stockholder in the City Savings Bank of Alliance, and his wife sustains the same relation to the First National Bank, considerable of the surplus means of the family being invested on these institutions. Mr. Teeters, with his faithful wife, belongs to the Christian church, in which he now holds the position of deacon, and he gives liberally of his means to support the congregation in Alliance, also contributes to the spread of the gospel in other parts of the country and in lands beyond the seas.

WILLIAM MORGAN REED, cashier of the First National Bank of Alliance, and one of the best known and most influential financiers in this section of the state, is a native of Columbiana county, Ohio, and the seventh in a family of seven children, whose parents were William and Rhoda (Barton) Reed. William Reed was born in New Jersey in 1797, the son of Noah Reed, whose ancestors were among the old and highly respected families of that commonwealth. Early in the nineteenth century, about the year 1805, Noah Reed migrated to eastern Ohio and purchased land near the present site of Salem, Columbiana county, from which in due season he developed a farm. He experienced the usual vicissitudes and hardships of the pioneer period, spent his life as an honest, industrious tiller of the soil, reared a family and died many years ago where he originally settled, leaving to his descendants an honorable name, which they have since worthily upheld. William Reed was a lad of eight years when his parents took up their residence in Ohio. He was reared on the homestead near Salem, and in early life served an apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade, which vocation he followed during the greater part of his active years, and he died in Columbiana county in 1865. By his first wife, Rhoda Barton, who died in 1847, he had seven children, five of whom are living, namely: Ruth, who married Joseph McCauley, of Lima; Rebecca, now Mrs. C. K. Greiner, of Alliance; Aveline also lives in this city; Mary, wife of D. Runnells, whose home is in Alliance; and William M., the subject of this review. Some time after the death of the mother of these children Mr. Reed married Margaret Sharpnack, who survived him several years, the union being without issue. In his early life William Reed was a zealous Democrat, and he continued his allegiance to that political party until the birth of the Free-Soil party, when he gave his support to the latter organization. Still later he became a pronounced Republican, and continued as such the remainder of his days, always manifesting a lively interest in political affairs, but never aspiring to office. In religion he was a devout member of the Methodist church, and as a neighbor and citizen his life was singularly upright and just.

William Morgan Reed was born on the family homestead near Salem, Columbiana county, January 6, 1836, and there remained until his sixteenth year, meantime enjoying the advantages of a public school education. When only thirteen years old he entered the employ of a dry-goods merchant at Salem, and after spending three years in that town resigned his place to accept a similar position in a mercantile establishment at North Benton, where he remained during the ensuing two and a half years.

In 1855 Mr. Reed, with two other parties, engaged in the mercantile business at Belvidere, Mahoning county, the firm thus constituted being known as M. W. Reed & Company, and it lasted until 1858, when the subject disposed of his interest and, returning to Benton, formed a partnership with Mr. Greiner, his former employer, under the style of Greiner & Reed. This relationship continued until 1866, at which time Mr. Reed sold out and went to Philadelphia, where he became associated with Mr. Caldwell in the general provision business, in connection with which the firm also conducted a fish market, which, like the other line of trade, commanded a large patronage. In the spring of the following year Mr. Reed severed his connection with the firm of Reed, Caldwell & Company, and, winding up his business in Philadelphia, came to Alliance, Ohio, where, in January, 1868, he purchased an interest in a warehouse which had previously been operated by Messrs. Nixin and Pettit, succeeding the former gentleman. After doing a successful grain business until the summer of 1869, the firm of Pettit & Reed ceased to exist, the latter buying out his partner and admitting his brother, Charles Reed, thus forming the firm of Reed Brothers, which lasted about six months. At the expiration of that time Mr. Pettit again became a member of the company which, under the name of Reed, Pettit & Reed, not only did a large and flourishing grain business, but also engaged quite extensively in the wholesale grocery trade. Charles Reed dying in March, 1870, the style of the company was again changed to Pettit & Reed, and as such continued until the fall of that year, when Mr. Pettit withdrew, leaving the subject sole proprietor. With this change terminated the wholesale branch of the business and during the seventeen years following Mr. Reed devoted his attention exclusively to the interests of the warehouse, building up one of the largest and most successful grain trades in this part of the state. Upon the organization of the First National Bank of Alliance, in 1887, Mr. Reed was made a director of the institution, and in August following, when Leroy D. Brown resigned as cashier, he succeeded to the latter position and has discharged the responsible and exacting duties of the same to the present time.

Mr. Reed is familiar with every detail of banking, and is recognized as one of the ablest financiers in eastern Ohio, being regarded as an authority upon all matters coming within his province. His career throughout has been eminently successful, and his influence in monetary and commercial circles has had much to do in shaping and controlling business policies in Alliance and giving the city its present high financial standing among the leading trade centers of the state.

Mr. Reed's domestic relations are of the most pleasant and agreeable nature, being a married man and the father of two children, whose names are Mabel and Rhoda, both still members of the home circle. Mrs. Reed was formerly Miss Sarah A. Hartzell, the daughter of the late James Hartzell, of North Benton.

WILLIAM W. GILSON.—The Gilson family is an old one, its history in this country dating from the early annals of Pennsylvania and Ohio, in both of which commonwealths the name appears in connection with events and experiences of much more than ordinary import. Among the earliest pioneers of Columbiana county, this state, was a man by the name of Gilson, who came from Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, and entered a section of land in what is now Knox township, for which he subsequently received a patent, bearing the signature of James Madison, fourth President of the United States. Later he divided this land among his four sons, one of whom was Major Gilson, a gallant soldier of the war of 1812 and a commissioned officer, as the title indicates. The Major took possession of his share of the land, improved it and bore an active part in the development of his locality, having been a man of considerable prominence and to no small degree a leader among his neighbors and fellow citizens. To him belongs the credit of erecting one of the first frame buildings in the county of Columbiana, and the structure attracted such wide attention that people came long distances to gaze upon the wonderful modern innovation. Major Gilson married and reared a family, among his children being a son of the name of Joseph, who was born on the original homestead in Knox township in the year 1816. Reared amid the spare settlements of what was then the frontier, he grew up a strong, rugged man, with a capacity for much hard work and an independence of mind that made him not only resourceful, but in the main successful in all of his undertakings. He was strictly an agriculturist, and took little part in public affairs further than to vote for the Democratic party, of which he was a staunch supporter, and to lead his influence to all worthy enterprises for the general welfare of his township and county. His father, the Major, was a zealous member of the Presbyterian church, the old church at the village of Homeworth having been established through his agency, and of this church Joseph afterwards became a leading member, serving it for many years in an official capacity.

In his young manhood Joseph Gilson married Miss Mary A. McLaughlin, whose Scotch-Irish ancestors came to America in the time of the colonies and settled in Pennsylvania. Several of the McLaughlins served with distinction in colonial struggles for independence and Mrs. Gilson's grandfather was subsequently killed while fighting the Indians near his home in Pennsylvania. Some time after his father's death Joseph Gilson purchased the old homestead of the heirs and spent the remainder of his life on the same. Of the children that originally constituted the family of Joseph and Mary A. Gilson only two survive, namely: The subject of this review and Jennie G., now the wife of W. A. Curry, of Columbiana county.

William W. Gilson was born November 16, 1844, in Columbiana county, and there grew to the years of manhood on the home farm, enjoying meanwhile the advantages of the public schools. Finishing the common branches, he entered Mt. Union College, and after taking a course in that excellent institution he began his business career as a traveling salesman for agricultural implements for the firm of Coates, Gray & Company, which he represented for several years on the road. Later he severed his connection with the above and accepted a similar position with D. M. Osborn & Company, manufacturers of agricultural machinery, remaining in the employ of the two firms for something like fifteen years, during which time he traveled extensively over the United States, commanded a large trade and established a worthy reputation as salesman and enterprising business man.

Becoming weary of the road, Mr. Gilson abandoned that line of business and engaged in contracting at Alliance. On the organization of the City Savings Bank, in 1892, he was elected its cashier, and he has since filled the position with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of everybody connected with the institution, the meanwhile establishing a distinguished reputation as a business man and financier. Mr. Gilson's career as a financier has been a continued success, and he is today not only one of the best known bankers of eastern Ohio, but his influence in monetary circles has made him an authority upon all matters relating thereto.

Mr. Gilson is a married man and the father of four children, only one of whom survives,—Nita, now the wife of Harold C. Stratton, of Alliance. Mrs. Gilson, formerly Miss Mary McLeran, of Mt. Union, is a lady of beautiful character and refined tastes, popular in the social circles of the city and a faithful member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Gilson also subscribes to the same religious creed, and since 1870 has been an elder in the church at Alliance. He is active in all lines of work under the auspices of the church, is also a liberal contributor to charitable institutions, religious and secular, and lends his influence to all agencies for the social and moral advancement of the community. In politics he is pronounced in his allegiance to the Democratic party, but he has never aspired to official position, preferring the active business life he leads and the title of private citizens to any honors within the power of the people to bestow.

All enterprises looking to the material improvement of the city of his residence find in Mr. Gilson an earnest advocate and influential patron. He has been active in public affairs and at the present time is president of the board of water works trustees. His life has been busy, if not eventful, and his honorable career in the institution with which he is now identified constitutes a high tribute to his character for integrity and financial responsibility.

EDWIN MORGAN, the fifth in order of birth of the six living children of the late and highly honored citizen of Alliance, Thomas R. Morgan, Sr., founder of the great industry of the Morgan Engineering Company, was born in the city of Alliance, Stark county, Ohio, on the 30th of March, 1872, and his educational discipline was secured in the public schools of his native city, the Peekskill Military Academy, at Peekskill, New York, and the University of Liege, Belgium. At the age of sixteen years he became identified with the works of the Morgan Engineering Company, in which he passed a portion of his time for the ensuing two years, while thereafter he devoted his entire attention to acting as assistant to his father, and he continued in this capacity until the time of the latter's death, in 1897. Two years later the subject severed his active connection with the company, though he retains a financial interest in the great corporation whose magnificent success is due to the efforts of his talented and distinguished father. He is one of the prominent and popular young men of Alliance, and takes a deep interest in all that tends to conserve its welfare, having served as a member of the city council, in which connection he rendered most effective service, and he is also president of the board of public safety. In politics he accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, in whose local contingent he is known as an active and zealous worker, and is now a member of the county executive committee. He is an admirer of good horses, and has a carriage team which holds a matinee record of 2:20. Fraternally Mr. Morgan is identified with Alliance Lodge No. 467, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Lone Rock Lodge No. 23, Knights of Pythias, while he is also a member of the Uniformed rank of the latter order, being affiliated with Yellow Cross Commandery No. 85. He further extends his fraternal relations by holding membership in Court of Alliance No. 1516, Independent Order of Foresters. He is captain and commissary of the Eighth Regiment, Ohio National Guard, being a member of Col. Edward Vallrath's staff, and he is also adjutant of the Eighth Regiment, Uniformed Rank Knights of Pythias, on the staff of Colonel Shew.

On the 9th of September, 1893, Mr. Morgan was united in marriage to Miss Flora Knowles, a daughter of Oliver H. and Margaret (Battershell) Knowles, of Alliance, her father being a prominent carriage manufacturer of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have one child, Oliver K., who was born on the 25th of August, 1894.

HENRY W. WERTS.—As the name indicates, the subject was of German descent, but at what period the family was first represented in America is not known, though it must have been at quite an early period, in the time of the colonies. From the most reliable information at hand, his ancestors, on coming to this country, appear to have settled in Pennsylvania, in various parts of which state the name Werts is still familiar, all bearing it having undoubtedly sprung from the same parental stock. Jacob Werts, father of Henry W., was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, and, like his ancestors for several generations, obtained a livelihood by tilling the soil. He married in his native state Miss Mary Wagner, and a number of years ago moved his family to Wadsworth, Ohio, where he spent the remainder of his days, his wife dying shortly after his demise, in Bronson, Michigan.

Henry W. Werts was born March 29, 1832, in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, and when a boy removed with his parents to Wadsworth, Ohio, near which place he lived on a farm until a youth of eighteen. Leaving home, he went to Akron, where he learned carriage making with C. A. Collins, a well-known manufacturer of that city, and after becoming an efficient workman followed his trade at different places until his removal to Canton, in the year 1859. On coming to this city he established a shop of his own, and in due time achieved an enviable reputation as a manufacturer of the well-known carriages that bore his name, the Werts vehicles in a few years taking precedence of any other make on the markets of eastern Ohio. Later they became widely known throughout this and other states, and the demand for them grew to such an extent that Mr. Werts was obliged to enlarge the capacity of his establishment and greatly increase his force of workmen in order to meet the same. By reason of the high grade of his vehicles his financial success was most encouraging and within a comparatively few years his sales had so augmented as to make him financially independent. He continued to operate his works, however, until 1884, when he disposed of the business and with an ample fortune retired to private life to spend the remainder of his days in the enjoyment of the fruits of his toil and thrift. As a manufacturer Mr. Werts easily ranked with the most enterprising and progressive of his contemporaries, and to him as much as to any one man is due the credit of establishing for Canton the high reputation it has since sustained as an important industrial center.

Mr. Werts, on the 6th day of December, 1859, was married, in the city of Akron, to Miss Frank A. Mason, whose father, Elijah Mason, a native of Lebanon, Connecticut, came west when a young man and settled at Hudson, Ohio, where he established a newspaper of which, for a number of years, he was editor and proprietor. Subsequently he removed to Akron (then Middleburg) and became prominently identified with the city's interests, taking an active part in its material development and serving a series of years as justice of the peace and postmaster, besides filling other positions of trust and profit. The maiden name of Mrs. Elijah Mason was Charlotte Gillett, a native of Wolcottville, Connecticut, of which city her uncle was the original settler and founder. The Gilletts were among the oldest families of Connecticut, the name appearing in the early annals of the colony, and for many years after the war for independence it was a household word in many parts of the state, many bearing it having risen to important public status in their respective locations. Col. James Mason, father of Elijah, was a native of England; he came to America in the time of the colonies, settled in New England, and when the Revolutionary war broke out joined the American army and bore a distinguished part in the struggle until independence was achieved, having held a colonel's commission in a Connecticut regiment.

Of the domestic life of Mr. and Mrs. Werts little need be said, for fear of trespassing upon sacred ground, but suffice it to say that their relations were ever mutually agreeable and that their pleasant home, at No. 112 North Market street, was the abode of a free-handed, open-hearted hospitality which made it a favorite resort for the best society circles of the city. Mr. Werts was essentially the architect of his own fortunes, and few men of his day were as widely known and as sincerely respected, and in his death, which occurred at the family residence on the 5th day of May, 1891, the city lost one of its most enterprising and public-spirited citizens, and to those who knew him a friend whose loyalty was never questioned, whose character stood above reproach and whose life, measured by the true standard of excellence, was fraught with substantial good and large benefits to his kind.

JOHN C. ALLEN.—The death of the subject of this memoir, on the 8th of October, 1890, deprived the city of Canton of one of its representative and honored citizens and able and progressive business men,—one of distinctive individuality and gracious personality and one who made his life a power for good, ever standing "four square to every wind that blows." Mr. Allen was born on the old homestead farm of his maternal grandfather, in Jackson township, this county, and on the Fulton road, the date of his nativity having been December 23, 1848, while he was a son of Ira M. and Ella O. (Graham) Allen, the former of whom was born in the state of New York and the latter in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, her father having been one of the early pioneers of Stark county. Ira M. Allen was a man of fine scholastic attainments and was for many years a successful teacher in the public schools of Stark county, having been principal of the Canton schools at the time of the birth of the subject. He died in the city of Canton in 1897, and his widow still maintains her home here, having attained the venerable age of ninety-seven years. They became the parents of five children, of whom two are living at the present time.

John C. Allen received his early educational discipline in the public schools of Massillon, this county. At the age of sixteen years he secured a position in the manufactory of the Russell Company, in Massillon, becoming their salesman in Des Moines, Iowa. After about a year he returned and became their shipping clerk and bookkeeper, and he there remained until his father was elected county treasurer, when he became his clerk. He then became a student in the law office of the firm of Lynch & Day, in Canton, continuing his technical reading one year and in the meanwhile deciding that a business career could be more to his liking than that involved in the practice of the law. He accordingly purchased an interest in the Canton Wrought Iron Bridge Company, in whose interests he served as traveling representative until 1876, in August of which year was solemnized his marriage. After withdrawing from the bridge company he became interested in coal-mining enterprises and also established himself in the insurance business in Canton, representing the Equitable Life and other important and leading life and fire insurance companies, while he became one of the most successful and prominent underwriters in this section of the state, building up a large and important business, while he also had various capitalistic interests, being a stockholder in the Kenton and Warwick stone quarries. These varied associations placed full demands upon his time and attention until his death, in 1890, and he gained prestige as one of the able, alert and progressive business men of the county, having indefatigable energy and marked initiative powers. He was a man of magnetic personality, was widely read and a vigorous and original thinker, having definite opinions and convictions and being ever ready to defend the same, while he was a pleasing and entertaining conversationalist and possessed of the most attractive social qualities, his friends being drawn to him by inviolable ties. In politics he accorded an unfaltering allegiance to the Republican party and his religious views were most liberal, his stand in this line being practically agnostic, though he was ever tolerant of the belief and faith of others and had a deep reverence for the true spiritual verities. Fraternally he was identified with the Masonic order, in which he rose to the Knight Templar degree.

On the 2d of August, 1876, Mr. Allen was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Feather, who was born in Stark county, this state, being a daughter of Uriah R. Feather, a native of the old Keystone state, his birth having occurred near the city of Philadelphia, on the 7th of August, 1821. His father was a part owner of a school for boys near the city and was one of the well-known and able educators of Pennsylvania. He removed to Ohio when his son Uriah was a child and located on a farm near Canton, whence he later removed to another farm in Stark county, where he passed the residue of his life. Uriah R. Feather received excellent educational advantages and became a man of fine erudition, while he was for many years a successful and popular teacher in the schools of Stark county. He finally accepted a clerkship in a dry-goods store in Canton. He then formed a partnership with Charles R. Glasser, they having stores in Canton and Uniontown, and later he became associated with his cousin, Levi Schaefer, in the establishing of a dry-goods store in this city, while they also maintained several branch stores in various parts of the county. Mr. Feather withdrew from this line of enterprise when he was elected county treasurer, and he was thereafter chosen as his own successor on two occasions, thus serving three terms and giving a most able and acceptable administration of the fiscal affairs of the county. He was distinctively one of the representative citizens and successful and public-spirited business men of the city of Canton. He was one of the principal stockholders in the City National Bank, having been one of its organizers, while he had valuable real-estate holdings in Canton and elsewhere in the county, having laid out three additions to the city and thus having contributed materially to its substantial growth and upbuilding. His attractive old homestead is still standing, being located at the corner of Cleveland avenue and Feather street, the latter thoroughfare having been named in his honor. The present brick building replaced the original frame dwelling, which was of the colonial style of architecture, with massive Doric pillars ornamenting its facade. Mr. Feather was a staunch Republican in his political proclivities from the time of the organization of the party, and he wielded marked influence in local affairs of a public nature. He married Miss Elizabeth Holl, a daughter of Daniel Holl, concerning whom more specific mention is made in the sketch of his son, John H., appearing on other pages of this work. Mr. Feather was summoned into eternal rest on the 8th of February, 1888, having been an earnest and zealous member of the Lutheran church. His wife survived him by a number of years, her death occurring in August, 1896, at the age of sixty-nine years. She was a woman of noble and gracious character, gentle and kindly in all the relations of life and ever seeking to be helpful to others, making no discrimination in the matter of social precedence or mere temporal success, and thus having sincere affection and regard of rich and poor alike, for in her daily walk and conversation she exemplified her deep Christian faith,—a faith that made faithful in thought, word and deed. She was an active and zealous worker in the Lutheran church and her life was one of distinct spirituality and consecration. She was the mother of three children, namely: John, who died in infancy; Frances R., of Canton, and Mary E., widow of the subject of this memoir. John Feather, grandfather of Mrs.

Allen, was a colonel of a regiment of militia during the war of the Revolution, and he died at the home of his adopted daughter, Mrs. Harriet Harter, in Plain township, Stark county, Ohio. Mrs. Allen resides in the city of Canton, and is surrounded by a wide circle of devoted friends, taking a prominent part in the social life of the community, while she is a devoted and active member of the Lutheran church, but her religious views are broader than the tenets of any one church. Of her two children it may be said that John F. is engaged in business in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, while Stuart I. is at the time of this writing a student in Canton, Ohio. John F. was educated at the University of Cleveland, Ohio. After leaving there he went to California and entered Belmont Military Academy, but about a year after he was admitted to this institution he met with the misfortune to have his left arm shattered by the accidental discharge of his gun, necessitating amputation. The heroism and self-possession displayed by the young man on this occasion was remarked upon by one of the famous surgeons of America, who performed the amputation, as being the most marvelous ever witnessed by him during his thirty-three years experience as a surgeon. This misfortune, together with other occurrences, changed the plans he had formed as to a course at Harvard University and he returned home and read law for a period and is now connected with the legal department of the Fidelity Title and Trust Company of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

ROBERT S. ELLISON was born in the town of Philippi, West Virginia, on the 29th of November, 1831, this being prior to the separation of that state from the Old Dominion, and his death occurred in the city of Canton on the 1st of May, 1898. He was a son of Zachariah Ellison, who was a direct descendant of Gideon Ellison, one of the members of the William Penn colony of Friends, or Quakers, who came to America from England in 1680 and who settled in New Kent county, Virginia. The descendants, many of whom remain today members of the Society of Friends, are now found widely disseminated through the middle and western states. The parents of our subject settled on a farm near Philippi, Barbour county, West Virginia, the family homestead being located on a high hill overlooking the town and commanding a fine view of the surrounding country. In later years the spot being historically notable as being the exact place, during the early part of the war of the Rebellion, where the Union forces planted their cannon to shell the town. Zachariah Ellison became seriously opposed to the institution of human slavery as existing in the Old Dominion, and this led to his leaving that section in the year 1832 and removing to Portage county, Ohio. His wife carried the subject of this memoir in her arms, he being an infant of about one year at the time, and she rode on horseback during the long and weary overland journey, there being no roads then constructed for the accommodation of vehicles. They located on a tract of wild land in Portage county, where the father improved a good farm, and there he and his wife passed the residue of their lives, honored by all who knew them and being consistent members of that noble organization with which they were identified by birthright, the Society of Friends. They became the parents of ten children, of whom Robert S. was the ninth in order of birth, and of the number two are living at the present time.

Robert S. Ellison was reared under the sturdy discipline of the pioneer farm and his early educational privileges were such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality. At the age of nineteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade, in which line he became an expert workman. He continued to follow the same for a few years in Ohio and then returned to his birthplace, at Philippi, West Virginia, where he engaged in the manufacturing of boots and shoes. There, on the 9th of April, 1861, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Sarah H. Cool, daughter of William and Catherine Cool, of that place, where she was born and reared, the date of her birth having been November 10, 1838. After the close of the Civil war Mr. Ellison again came to Portage county, Ohio, locating in the village of Atwater, on the western reserve, where he opened a shoe store, remaining in business there eighteen years. Afterward he came to Canton, Stark county, where he devoted several years to his trade and to the perfecting of his patent iron shoe lasts, which are now in use not only throughout the United States and Canada, but also in the West Indies and other foreign countries. The well equipped factory is being conducted for the estate by his two sons, who are numbered among the reliable and able business men of the city and who are fully maintaining the high prestige of the honored name which they bear. Mrs. Ellison survives her husband, as do also the one son and one daughter. The latter, Mrs. Ola E. Caldwell, is the wife of William D. Caldwell, of Canton; Claude C. has charge of the business; Wylie D. died July 16, 1903.

Mr. Ellison was a typical Virginian, very tall in stature and genial and kindly in his intercourse with his fellow men, while his name is known to shoe dealers in every state in the Union, standing as a synonym of the most exalted integrity and honor. He greatly lightened the labors of those engaged in the manufacture and repairing of shoes through the invention of his useful and valuable devices, and it is gratifying to know that his success in temporal affairs was of pronounced order. He was public-spirited and benevolent, but was altogether unassuming, taking men at their real valuation and being tolerant in his judgment. He was a member of the Society of Friends by birthright, his widow being a member of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton. In politics Mr. Ellison gave his allegiance to the Democratic party from the time of attaining his majority until he was called from the scenes of life's labors, and fraternally he was identified with the Knights of the Maccabees. His home life was ideal and to those who were nearest and dearest to him in the sacred precincts of the home must remain a measure of compensation for his love in the memory of his noble and kindly life.

FRANK C. FARWICK, of the West End Notion Company, Canton, hails from far-away Germany, where his birth occurred on the 17th day of August, 1871, being the son of Frank and Lizzie (Schriever) Farwick. He was brought to the United States when a mere child and grew to mature years in Newport, Kentucky, in which city his parents located after reaching this country, and in the public schools of which he received his educational training. On quitting school young Frank Farwick found employment in the Deuber watch case works at Newport, and when the company, in 1888, moved its plant from that city to Canton, Ohio, he was given the position of inspector, the duties of which he discharged until 1897. During the period of great business depression, when the factory was running but three or four days a week, Mr. Farwick peddled odds and ends from house to house, and his success in this kind of business finally led him to form a partnership with J. J. Aurdrum in the general notion trade. They began business by investing a modest sum of money in notions, and each with his pack would take a street and sell from house to house, in this way making a thorough canvass of the residence portions of the city. They purchased their stock from the wholesale house of W. A. McCrea and prosecuted their sales with such energy and success that by February, 1897, they were able to locate a stand of their own, selecting for the same a small room, fourteen by twenty-seven feet in size, on West Tuscarawas street, just opposite their present place of business. Borrowing about five hundred dollars with which to purchase goods, they stocked their room with a fine line of notions, but the success of the enterprise proved so encouraging that within the short space of three months they found it necessary to seek more commodious quarters in which to conduct their large and constantly growing business. Accordingly, they removed at the end of the above time to No. 1221 West Tuscarawas street and took possession of a room twenty-seven by sixty feet in area, which they have since occupied under the name of the West End Notion Company. Laying in a largely increased stock of all kinds of notions, these energetic young men gave new life and impetus to the business, and from that time to the present it has continually grown in magnitude and importance until their store is now the leading establishment of the kind of the city. Meanwhile they added the store-room next door, which was connected with the main apartment by an open passage in the rear, and subsequently at the end of the third year it was necessary to enlarge the capacity of their quarters, which they did by the addition of a third room. The business continuing to increase until the three rooms were insufficient, an addition fifty by thirty feet was afterwards made to the rear of the building, thus affording ample space for the immense stock of notions, dry goods and hardware which the firm handles, the last three lines having recently been added to the business. The growth of this enterprise from such an humble beginning, and that too in so short a space of time, bespeaks for the proprietors energy, judgment and business qualifications of a very high order, and such as few young men of their ages possess. To Mr. Farwick's untiring industry, progressive spirit and fine executive ability is due a large measure of the success which has attended the business from its inception. He is highly esteemed in commercial circles, is well regarded by the public and it is a compliment worthily bestowed to claim for him a place in the front ranks of Canton's most enterprising and successful young business men.

Mr. Farwick was married, May 17, 1893, in Canton, to Miss Laura M. Boeshart, a native of Stark county, the union being blessed with children as follows: Nobert L., eight years old; Arthur, aged seven; Gerald, deceased; Margaret, a miss of three years; and Mildred, a young lady whose earthly experience at this writing covers a period of six months. Mr. Farwick is a Republican in politics, but is much more of a business man than a politician. He is Catholic in religion, and with his family belongs to St. John's church, Canton.

THOMAS F. SNYDER, mechanic, educator and at the present time editor of the Craftsman, one of the leading papers of eastern Ohio, devoted to the subject of organized labor, is a native of Stark county, born in the city of Canton, where he now lives, on the 11th day of February, 1871. John C. Snyder, his father, was born in Germany and at the age of twenty-six came to the United States and settled in Alliance, where he worked for a number of years as a wagon-maker. Catherine Neiberd, wife of John C. Snyder and mother of the subject, was born and reared near Salem, Ohio, and at this time is living at Canton, her husband having died in the year 1891.

After attending the public schools of his native city until the age of thirteen, Thomas F. Snyder learned the moulder's trade and followed the same in Canton and elsewhere until his twenty-fifth year. Having always been a reader and thinker, he became interested in educational matters, and feeling the need of more thorough mental discipline than was afforded by his limited experience in the common schools, he entered, in 1898, Dennison University, where he pursued the higher branches of learning for a period of one year. Leaving college, he took up the study of medicine, but not finding the profession to his taste he abandoned it after a few months and engaged in the work of the university extension. In this capacity he traveled over a large part of the eastern states, lecturing and organizing circles, and the years which he devoted to this movement were among the most pleasant and profitable of his life. The work brought him in contact with the best class of people, such as students, teachers and men and women of much more than ordinary culture, and the experience proved highly educational to him in many ways. Resigning this position after three years' faithful service, he returned home and entered the employ of the Aultman Manufacturing Company, with which he remained the three years following.

From an early age Mr. Snyder has been greatly interested in the labor movement, and he has studied the subject in its every relation most carefully and critically. A warm friend and earnest advocate of organized labor, he decided while in the employ of the Aultman Company to establish a paper which should be an exponent of its principles and through the medium of which the thoughts of the best writers on sociological and kindred subjects might be given publicity. Meeting with hearty encouragement on the part of his friends and co-workers, he finally launched the enterprise and in due time the first number of the Craftsman made its appearance, its reception by laboring men and by the public in general being very flattering. For some months he issued the Craftsman while attending to his other duties, but the patronage continuing to increase, he finally, in October, 1902, resigned his position and since that time has devoted his entire attention to the paper, which under his able management has become not only a reflex of the thought of organized labor in Canton, but to all appearances a permanent fixture in the domain of state journalism. Mr. Snyder is a clear, concise writer, and his familiarity with the labor movement in its every phase and bearing enables him to speak in relation to the matter as one having authority. The Craftsman is a neat, well-edited sheet, filling a long-felt want in this city and, judging from the hearty reception of the first number and its continued growth in public favor, the indications are that it will prove quite successful as a business enterprise, to say nothing of its influence and helpfulness as an educational force among the classes it is especially designed to benefit.

In addition to his duties as editor Mr. Snyder is accredited business agent for about forty labor unions in Canton alone, and his ability and marked influence in those organizations is said to have successfully averted many strikes and adjusted all difficulties resulting therefrom in a manner eminently satisfying to all parties concerned. Mr. Snyder's popularity extends beyond the sphere to which his specific work is confined, and his every relation with the people is that of a man whose aims have always been correct and whose integrity has ever been above adverse criticism. In politics he supports measures and principles which in his judgment best conserve the public good, and he casts the ballot regardless of party ties, being in the most liberal sense of the term an independent. He believes in religion and recognizes in the church a powerful agency for the good of society and the state, but has little use for the cold, dead formalism characteristic of many creeds and thinks the numerous lines of partition which now separate God's people should be swallowed up in a more liberal and a more universal faith. Formerly he was a member of the First Baptist church of Canton, but at the present time he is not identified with any congregation, though contributing liberally to religious and charitable institutions and using his best endeavors to promote the universal brotherhood of man upon one common plane of opportunity.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MILLER, director of the Stark county infirmary and holding an important clerical position with one of the leading business houses of Canton, is a native of this city, born at the family home, 729 South Market street, on June 21, 1865. His father, Joseph Miller, was a Pennsylvanian, grew to maturity in his native state, received a good education in the public schools of the same and until coming to Ohio followed agriculture for a livelihood. About the year 1848 he changed his residence to Stark county, and for sometime thereafter was employed in the shops of C. Aultman & Company, where finally he rose to the responsible position of superintendent. He was an energetic, capable business man of fine executive ability, enjoyed the confidence of the large and wealthy firm and stood high in the esteem of the people of his adopted city. He married, in Canton, Miss Elizabeth Eckert, a native of Pennsylvania who came to this city in childhood with her father, John Eckert, the union resulting in the birth of nine children, namely: Ada, deceased wife of Conrad Shade; Mrs. Rena Richardson, of Canton; George F., of New York city; Charles, Henry and Kate died in their infancy; Thomas J., of this review, and Joseph H., assistant superintendent of the Bucher & Gibbs Plow Works, Canton. Joseph Miller died in this city in 1869, at the age of forty-five; his wife survived him a considerable length of time, departing this life when about seventy-two years old.

The early life of Thomas Miller was spent in Canton and after attending the public schools until his sixteenth year he secured employment in the C. Aultman & Company shops, where he held a position during the ensuing nine years, the meanwhile completing a full business course by attending of nights the Canton Commercial College. At the expiration of the time noted he severed his connection with the Aultman Company and engaged with Charles Rumpf, proprietor of the Globe Clothing House of this city, but after remaining a short time behind the counter he resigned his clerkship to accept a position with Charles N. Vicary, in whose employ he continued about one year. In 1898 Mr. Miller accepted a position in the clothing store of W. E. Homer, where he has since remained, his line of duty being very important, much of the responsibility of the business resting upon him. He has discharged his every obligation faithfully and well, and possessing keen perception, mature judgment and business ability of a high order, has made his services indispensable to his employer, whose interests he guards as carefully as if they were his own. From 1894 to 1900 inclusive Mr. Miller served as trustee of Canton township and in 1902 he was elected director of the Stark county infirmary, which responsible trust he still holds, his term of office expiring in the year 1904. In his political adherence Mr. Miller is a Republican, and of recent years he has manifested quite an active interest in local and state affairs, having rendered his party valuable service in a number of campaigns. Religiously he was reared in the Methodist church, to which faith he still subscribes, being with his wife a regular attendant of the First Methodist church of Canton.

Mr. Miller belongs to several secret and fraternal organizations and is an active and enthusiastic worker in the same; he holds membership with McKinley Lodge No. 431, Free and Accepted Masons; Lodge No. 11, Knights of Pythias, and Washington Council, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, in all of which he has been honored with important official station.

Referring to the domestic life of Mr. Miller it is learned that he was happily married on October 22, 1890, to Miss Lizzie Stocke, the daughter of Lawrence and Mary Ann (Wayner) Stocke, the father an employe in the Diebold Safe Works of Canton. Two children have been born to this union, a daughter by the name of Gladys Catherine and a son, Edgar Ebert.

THOMAS J. BIDWELL was born in Bolivar, on the 19th of January, 1862, being a son of Matthew and Elizabeth (Lenhart) Bidwell. Matthew Bidwell was born in the village of Trenton, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in the year 1820, his parents having been numbered among the pioneers of that section of the state. As a boy he began driving the melancholy mules on the tow-path of the canals, and eventually he was given charge of a canal boat, and he followed this line of work until his death, which occurred in 1864, when our subject was but two years of age. Elizabeth (Lenhart) Bidwell was likewise born in Tuscarawas county, the place of her nativity having been the town of Canal Dover, and she is still living at Bolivar. They became the parents of four children, namely, Sadie, who is the wife of Benjamin Rennels, of Bolivar; John W., who is a resident of Mineral City, Tuscarawas county, this state; Joseph, who resides on a farm near Toledo, and Thomas, the immediate subject of this sketch.

As before stated, Thomas Bidwell was a mere infant at the time of his father's death, and owing to the exigencies of the case the family became separated. As a child the subject was reared by his mother in the town of Bolivar, Tuscarawas county, and there it was his privilege to attend the public schools until he had attained the age of sixteen years, after which he engaged in teaching in the district schools, successfully following the pedagogic profession for a period of five years and in the meanwhile devoting his attention to continuing his own studies, by which means he rounded out his education in a practical way. He then became associated with his brother John W. in the establishing of a confectionery business in the village of Bolivar, Tuscarawas county, and continued to be identified with this enterprise until 1886, when he came to the city of Canton, where for four years he was engaged in the commission business, under the firm name of F. J. Bidwell & Company. He then withdrew from this line of trade and engaged in the insurance business here, and eventually was appointed to his present position as district manager for the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Connecticut, his jurisdiction including Stark county, and he has shown marked energy and discrimination in handling the work assigned to him, securing the co-operation of able subordinate agents and greatly expanding the scope of the company's underwriting in this section of the state.

In politics Mr. Bidwell has ever accorded an uncompromising allegiance to the principles and policies of the Republican party and has taken an active interest in its cause. He served two terms as assessor of his ward, and for six years he was incumbent of the office of trustee of Canton township, while in 1903 he was nominated and elected to the office of city treasurer of Canton. He and his wife are valued members of Trinity Reformed church, and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics.

On the 7th of January, 1883, Mr. Bidwell was united in marriage to Miss Minerva Burgert, who was born in Holmes county, this state, but who was a resident of Coshocton, Ohio, at the time of her marriage. She is a daughter of Tobias and Lydia Burgert, who came to Ohio in the pioneer days. He is now dead, while the mother lives in Holmes county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Bidwell have two children: Florence, who was born in Bolivar on the 4th of September, 1885, and who is a member of the class of 1904 in the Canton high school; and Raymond, who was born in Canton, on the 23d of April, 1884, and who is likewise a student in the high school, as a member of the class of 1905.

HENRY N. FIRESTONE, although young in years, is a worthy member of his family, and is of the fourth generation of the family in this county. He was born in Plain township, December 15, 1866, on the farm on which he now lives and which is owned by him. His father was Hiram Firestone, who was also born on the same farm and lived upon it up to the time of his death, in August, 1881, at the early age of forty-two years. His wife, the mother of the subject, was in her maidenhood Maggie McDowell, sister of H. C. McDowell, an accomplished business man, capitalist and extensive agriculturist of Plain township, a sketch of whose career will be found in another part of this volume. One of the sisters of the subject was Nettie Firestone, now Mrs. C. A. Boettler and another was Mary E. Firestone, now Mrs. Edwin S. Correll. Mrs. Maggie (McDowell) Firestone died on the old home farm in November, 1889, at the age of fifty-two years. The Firestones, McDowells, Boettlers and Corrells were among the early settlers and pioneers of the county, and are noted for their enterprise, thrift and probity. The paternal grandfather of Henry N. Firestone was Henry Firestone, a native of Columbiana county, Ohio, who, some seventy years ago, located upon the farm now owned and occupied by his grandson. He cleared and improved the place and cultivated it up to the time of his death, being fifty-six years of age when he died. Those who knew him describe him as an intellectual, honest, sagacious man, who took special pride in his family and never wearied of doing all in his power to advance the interests of the community of which he was an important part.

Henry N. Firestone was reared upon the ancestral homestead, which he now owns and occupies. His early life differed little from that of other boys of the period, except, perhaps, that he was much more studious and ambitious than the average of his age. He was especially solicitous regarding the cultivation and development of his mind and was earnest in all of his studies. He attended the public schools and mastered all of the branches taught in those institutions of learning before he had attained the age of sixteen years. He then attended the Dennison University at Granville, Ohio, for two years and later took a business course at the Capital City Commercial College of Columbus, Ohio. So well did he improve his time and talents in each of these institutions that his preceptors admitted that few youths had passed under their care better equipped to engage in the battle of life than Henry N. Firestone.

On January 28, 1892, Mr. Firestone was united in marriage, at the home of the bride's parents in Plain township, to Miss Cora Smith, one of the most worthy, estimable and accomplished young ladies in that part of Stark county. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Smith, who have resided in Stark county a number of years, though Mrs. Firestone is a native of Bethalta, Illinois. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Firestone established themselves at housekeeping on the old home place. They are the parents of three children, viz: Leto M., Hiram H. N. and Maxine M., who are all handsome, well formed, intelligent children and give promise of adding new luster to the worthy name they bear.

Politically Mr. Firestone is a Republican, active and energetic in the interests of the party. His zeal is due not to any personal ambition to become an official, but because he believes in good government and considers a Republican administration more conducive to it than any other. The only taste of official life he ever had was one term in the office of township assessor. He is a member of Middlebranch Tent No. 383, Knights of the Maccabees, and of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics.

One does not expect to find anything particularly noteworthy in the career of a young man, thirty-six years of age, who was born on a farm and has resided upon the same place all his life: but the exemplary life led by the subject of this sketch from his birth to the present time, the active, progressive career of his father and his grandfather, the prominence of the family and of the families to which he is related, entitle him to definite consideration in a work of this kind. Aside from this, his own native virtues commend him to public notice. An obedient son to his parents during their life time, he is now a true husband, an indulgent parent, an enterprising citizen and a man of real manly merit in every walk of life. Mr. Firestone has acquired a splendid reputation as a dairyman, his butter being considered the ne plus ultra in that line. He has had many noted patrons, having furnished butter to William McKinley while the latter was governor of Ohio and also during his residence in the White House at Washington. Among Mr. Firestone's present patrons are Mrs. McKinley, Justice Day and many other prominent citizens of Canton and vicinity.

MATTHEW CALDWELL was born in the family home in James street, in the city of Dublin, Ireland, in December, 1826, being a son of John and Catherine Caldwell. John Caldwell was born in county Roscommon, Ireland, and learned the trade of shoemaker and also that of tailor. After his marriage he removed to the city of Dublin, where he continued to follow his trade until his death, which occurred about the year 1847, his wife also passing away in that city. Both were devoted communicants of the Roman Catholic church, in whose faith they carefully reared their children, the mother having entered into eternal rest while the subject of this sketch was an infant. They were the parents of four children, and of the number the subject is now the only survivor. His sister Ann, the wife of William Brown, came with her husband and our subject to America, and Mr. and Mrs. Brown passed the remainder of their lives in Troy, New York. Two of their sons, David, who died in the city of Albany, New York, and another one, who resides in Amsterdam, that state, became priests of the Catholic church.

The subject of this sketch received his educational discipline in the parochial and city schools of Dublin, and there he learned the shoemaking trade, in which he served the seven years' apprenticeship which was then customary, becoming a thoroughly skilled workman. He continued to follow his trade in his native city until 1849, when, in company with his sister and her husband, he embarked in Dublin, on the 10th of August, on the sailing ship "Catherine," which did not drop anchor in the port of New York city until thirty-three days later. On the voyage cholera broke out on board the vessel, and thirty-three persons succumbed to its ravages, one entire family being thus wiped out. After his arrival in New York city Mr. Caldwell accompanied his sister and her husband to Troy, that state where he worked at his trade for one year, within which time he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Brown. About this time V. R. Kimball, a tanner and shoemaker in Canton, advertised for three bootmakers, and Mr. Caldwell learned of this opening through a former employer in Troy, and this led to his coming to Canton, where he remained in the employ of Mr. Kimball for about eight years, after which he continued in the employ of Thomas Murray, a former foreman of Mr. Kimball, for about the same length of time, and thereafter he worked for Joseph Richards. About the year 1852 Mr. Caldwell purchased a plat of land, sixty-six by two hundred feet in dimensions, extending from Cleveland avenue back to Court street, and here he established a small shop, fronting on the former thoroughfare, where he began business on his own responsibility. He later moved the shop back on to Court street, and here he has ever since continued to be engaged in the work of his trade, except for a brief interval during the panic of 1873, when he was employed in the Cleveland shops of the firm of Savage & Stearns, of Cleveland. Mr. Caldwell has controlled a representative patronage from the start, and he is known and honored by the leading people of Canton, many of whom have been his patrons for years, while he is known as a man of unimpeachable integrity and marked intellectual acumen. Though advanced in years he retains remarkable physical and mental vigor and his genial and kindly face is greeted with distinctive pleasure by his hosts of friends in the city and county in which he has made his home for so many years. About 1888 he erected his present comfortable and attractive residence on the lot purchased in 1852, the building facing Cleveland avenue and being most eligibly located. In politics Mr. Caldwell is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, in whose support he has been arrayed from the time of becoming a naturalized citizen, having cast his first presidential vote for Stephen A. Douglas. He is a zealous and valued member of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, as is also his cherished and devoted wife, who has been to him a true companion and helpmeet. To them have been born six children, namely: Arthur, who is now a resident of the state of Texas; Johanna, who remains at the parental home, as does also Katy; William D., who is a representative business man of Canton, where he is engaged in the dry-goods business, and who married Miss Ola E. Ellison; and Annie, who remains with her parents.

HERMAN F. RENZ was born in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, on the 6th of November, 1867, the name which he bears having been identified with the history of that section of the empire for many generations. His parents, Louis and Caroline (Sitzler) Renz, were both born and reared in Wurtemberg, where their marriage was solemnized and where nine of their children were born. The father served in the German army during the period prescribed by governmental regulations. Becoming convinced that in the United States better opportunities would be afforded his children for the attaining of success in life, in 1872 he and his devoted wife severed the ties which bound them to home and fatherland and emigrated to America, whither had previously come their daughter Caroline, in company with her husband, Joseph Meyers. The family arrived in due course of time in the city of New York and thence came westward to Ohio, locating in the city of Cleveland, where the father of our subject secured employment at his trade, that of carriage blacksmith, and in the Forest City of Ohio he continued to reside until his death, which occurred on the 1st of May, 1872, at which time he was fifty-six years of age. His wife entered into eternal rest on the 2d of March, 1887, at the age of sixty-six years. Of their ten children, eight are living at the present time and all are well established in life. In politics Mr. Renz was a staunch Republican from the time of becoming a naturalized citizen, and both he and his wife were devoted members of the Baptist church, being folk of sterling worth and unassuming character and making the best possible provision for their children, though, as the family was a large one and the income small in proportion, the sons were early compelled to assume individual responsibilities, self-reliance and definite effort being thus quickened into being, so that the discipline proved rather an impetus than a handicap.

Herman F. Renz was a child of but four years at the time of his parents' emigration to America, and his boyhood days were passed in the city of Cleveland, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of twelve years, since which time he has been self-supporting. At the age noted he secured employment, in an humble capacity, in the works of the Upson Nut Company, of Cleveland, his object being to learn the trade of machinist. He served a thorough apprenticeship and early manifested a distinctive aptitude for mechanics, so that his advancement has become the natural result of his ability and fidelity. That his efforts were appreciated is best shown in the fact that he remained continuously in the employ of this concern for the long period of fourteen years, within which he became known as a thoroughly skilled mechanic, having charge of the forging department of the institution during the latter portion of his connection therewith. In September, 1893, Mr. Renz came to Canton and assumed his present position as superintendent of the works of the Canton Saw Company, of which he later became a stockholder, and he has done much to further the success of the enterprise through his technical and executive ability, while he has the confidence and good will of both the officers and employes of the company. Mr. Renz is essentially a business man and permits no division of interests, though he is loyal to the duties of citizenship at all times and takes a proper interest in all that concerns the general welfare. Until within the past few years he gave his support to the Democratic party, but his study and observation of the trend of public affairs led him to differ with the organization in the matter of its financial policy, and with the courage of his convictions he transferred his allegiance to the Republican party, of which he has since remained a supporter.

In the city of Cleveland, on the 25th of September, 1889, Mr. Renz was united in marriage to Miss Anna Angel, who was born and reared in that city, being a daughter of Henry and Katy (Lentz) Angel, both of whom are now deceased, her father having been at one time a member of the board of police commissioners of Cleveland. The subject and his wife have one child, Harry Angel, who was born on the 28th of July, 1892.

ALBERT T. BOWMAN, V. S., is the son of George M. and Lucy (Thomas) Bowman, the father a gallant soldier of the great Rebellion and at the present living in Columbus, this state. George M. Bowman was born and reared in Paris township, Stark county, and at the youthful age of fourteen years entered the service of his country as a member of an artillery company with which he shared the fortunes and vicissitudes of war until the star of rebellion went down at Appomattox. For some years after the war he followed painting and later came to Canton, where for a quarter of a century he labored as a machinist in the Wrought Iron Bridge Works of this city. In 1892 he was appointed guard at the Ohio state penitentiary, Columbus, in which capacity he continued for a period of six years and at the expiration of that time returned to Canton, where he resided during the two years following. He was then made captain of the Ohio penitentiary hospital, which important position he still holds. Mrs. Lucy Bowman bore her husband two children and departed this life at Canton in the year 1890. Eva, wife of Charles Herman, of Canton, is the older of the two children, the subject of this sketch being the second in order of birth. Subsequently, 1893, Mr. Bowman entered the marriage relation with Miss Jennie Henderson, of this county, a union without issue. George M. Bowman is a staunch Republican in politics and as such has long been a factor of no inconsiderable influence in the councils of his party. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Maccabees and the Grand Army of the Republic and in religion is a member of the Christian (or Disciple) church. His father, Albert Bowman, was born and raised in the county of Stark and spent his life within its borders as an honest, industrious tiller of the soil. He died a number of years ago, as did also his wife, who before her marriage bore the family name of Rash, both being descendants of early pioneers.

Dr. Albert T. Bowman was born March 18, 1874, in Canton and received his elementary education in the city schools. The training thus acquired was afterwards supplemented by a special course in a private institution of learning, after which he took up the study of veterinary medicine and surgery with Dr. L. D. Blanchard, of Canton, under whose able instructions he continued for a period of two years. Actuated by a commendable desire to enlarge his professional knowledge, he subsequently became a student in the celebrated Ontario Veterinary College at Toronto, Canada, one of the largest and most thorough institutions of the kind on the American continent, and there he prosecuted his studies and prac-

On receiving his degree Dr. Bowman began the practice of his profession at Canton in partnership with his former preceptor, Dr. Blanchard, the firm thus constituted continuing during the eight years following. On the first of November, 1899, the subject opened an office of his own and since that time has built up a large business, as successful pecuniarily as it has been professionally. As a veterinarian Dr. Bowman stands in the front rank, with few equals and no superiors. He brought to his chosen calling a mind thoroughly disciplined by rigid professional training and large practical experience under the direction of some of the ablest professors of the day, and it would indeed have been strange had his career been otherwise than successful. He has studied with the greatest care every authority bearing upon veterinary practice, which with his own researches and investigations has enabled him to make progress such as the ordinary veterinarian knows little about. He has reduced his treatment to a splendid science, and by reason of the success that has attended his efforts, as well as on account of the remedies which he has discovered, his reputation has spread far beyond the confines of the city in which he lives. When the Spanish-American war broke out Dr. Bowman was one of the first young men in Canton to tender his services to the government, enlisting April 26, 1898, in Company I, Eighth Ohio Volunteers. He accompanied his command to Cuba, took part in the Santiago campaign and after the surrender of that stronghold was appointed veterinary surgeon of the quartermaster's department, with orders to proceed at once to Tampa, Florida. He took charge of the several corralls at that place and discharged his duties scientifically and satisfactorily until November, 1898. Receiving an honorable discharge at the close of the war, he returned home and resumed his practice, which, as already stated, has steadily increased in volume and importance to the present time. The Doctor is a member of the Santiago and Spanish-American War Veteran Societies and takes an active interest in their deliberations. He is also identified with the Free and Accepted Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks fraternities, in all of which he has been honored with high official stations. Politically he is a Republican of the most orthodox type, and devotes much of his time to the party's interests both as an adviser in its councils and as a worker with the rank and file.

On the 3d of July, 1895, in the city of Canton, was solemnized the ceremony which united in the bonds of holy wedlock Dr. Bowman and Miss Elsie Haines, daughter of J. M. H. and Mary (Vant) Haines. Dr. and Mrs. Bowman are respected members of the Trinity Reformed church of this city and are well known and popular in the best social circles of the community. They have many warm friends and their pleasant home is the abode of a generous hospitality which is freely dispensed to all who see fit to share it. The Doctor is a young man in the vigor of his physical and mental powers and bids fair to rise not only in the profession to which his life is being devoted but also as an enterprising citizen deeply interested in all that concerns the material development and moral welfare of his city and county.

CHARLES KRICHBAUM.—The original progenitor of the Krichbaum family in the new world was Johannes Adam Krichbaum, who was born in Bavaria, Germany. The first record concerning the Krichbaum immigration to Pennsylvania is found in the records of that state. On the 14th of September, 1727, the provincial council of Pennsylvania adopted the following resolutions:

"The masters of vessels importing Germans and others from the continent of Europe shall examine them whether they have leave granted them to masters of vessels by the court of Great Britain for the importation of these foreigners, and that a list be taken of all these people, their several occupations and places from whence they come, and shall be further examined touching their intentions in coming hither; and that a writing be drawn up for them to sign, declaring their allegiance and subjection to the king of Great Britain and fidelity to the proprietary of this province, and that they demean themselves peaceably toward all his majesty's subjects and observe and conform to the laws of England and the government of Pennsylvania." All male persons above the age of sixteen did repeat and subscribe their names or their marks to the following declaration: "We subscribers, natives and late inhabitants of the Palatinate upon the Rhine and places adjacent, having transported ourselves and families into this province of Pennsylvania, a colony subject to the crown of Great Britain, in hopes and expectation of finding a retreat and peaceable settlement therein, do solemnly promise and engage that we will be faithful and bear true allegiance to his present majesty, King George II, and his successors, kings of Great Britain, and will be faithful to the proprietors of this province, and that we will demean ourselves peaceably to all his said subjects and strictly observe and conform to laws of England and this province, to the utmost of our power." Thirty thousand names, mostly Germans, were subscribed to the foregoing declaration between 1727 and 1776, and this record of the provincial council is the only one extant concerning German immigration to Pennsylvania. On the 20th day of September, 1749, the ship "Albany," with Robert Brown as master, arrived at Philadelphia. Among the passengers on this ship were Hans Philip Kreighbaum (as the name was originally spelled), Johan Wilhelm Kreighbaum and Johannes Adam Kriehbaum, and on the ship "Brothers," William McWair, master, which dropped anchor in Philadelphia September 22, 1752, arrived Johannes Conrad Kreighbaum, while the ship "Neptune," which arrived in the same city September 30, 1754, had as a passenger Ebehart Kreighbaum. The passengers for this place were from Alsace-Lorraine, Darmstadt and Zweibrucken. J. Adam Kreighbaum arrived on the ship "St. Andrew," on September 14, 1851, James Abercromby having been master of the vessel. On this ship were eight Roman Catholics, ten Mennonites and the remainder Calvinists. It is to be noted that not one of the Kreighbaums above mentioned was unable to sign his name, in accordance with the provisions made in taking the oath of allegiance, and thus each came with an education fitting him to take part in the government of his adopted country and to assist in laying the foundations of our great republic.

Johannes Adams Krichbaum, the original ancestor, settled on Tolpehocken creek in Berks county, Pennsylvania, before the Revolution, where he became the father of five sons and three daughters. The eldest of his sons, Adam, remained in Pennsylvania, as did also his son John, who occupied the old Pennsylvania homestead. The daughters also remained in Pennsylvania. The remaining sons, namely, Peter, John and William, came to Stark county, as near as can be ascertained, about the year 1811. From these three ancestors have sprung most of the Krichbaums in Stark county, and were the pioneers of the family in Ohio. Peter and William settled in the northern part of the county, and John in the southern part. Peter had three sons and one daughter, namely: Peter, John, Leonard and Motlena. William had two sons and three daughters, namely: John, George, Christina, Barbara and Katie. The eldest of whose sons, George, was commissioner of Stark county in 1837 and for a number of years thereafter. He married Katharine Schutt, and has a large number of descendants in the county. John figures as the paternal ancestor of the subject of this sketch. He settled in southern Stark county, and was married to Elizabeth Emmet, a lady of Scotch-Irish descent, and they were the great-grandparents of the subject of this review. This ancestor, together with John Sherman, founded and built a Union church in southern Stark county known as the Sherman church, John Krichbaum being the head of the Lutheran church and John Sherman being the head of the Reformed church. John Krichbaum, the eldest son of this ancestor, married Hanna Traul, a daughter of Thomas Traul, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary army and fought under the command of Washington and Lafayette; their eldest son, David Krichbaum, was the father of the subject; he helped his father clear up the lands now known as the Krichbaum homestead. Subsequently by his own efforts he became a school teacher, attended school at Mt. Union College when the same was still a seminary, and for a number of years taught school. He became later in life a very fine mechanic and had a thriving business as a maker of guns and fire-arms, when he was killed accidentally on the South Market street crossing in the city of Canton on the 9th day of January, 1866. He was a man of large influence in the southern part of the county, and was a man widely read and cognizant with all great public questions. He was married to Sarah Buchtel; three children were born from their marriage, George, Charles, the immediate subject of this sketch, and Allen.

The mother gave herself assiduously to the education of her children, all three of whom were graduated from Wooster University.

George has been a teacher in the city of Canton for over twelve years. Allan is a Presbyterian minister; a graduate of the Western Theological Seminary and was for many years the pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Barnesville, Belmont county, Ohio. He is now preaching at Morenci, Arizona, whither he has been compelled to go on account of failing health. The widow of David Krichbaum is still living in the southern part of Stark county. David Krichbaum was a Democrat and a great friend of Archibald McGregor; he was a Douglas Democrat; was a man of the highest integrity, and one who held the confidence and esteem of all classes of people in the county.

Upon his graduation the subject received the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After leaving college Mr. Krichbaum was employed as a teacher of English in the Pennsylvania State Normal School, at Indiana, Pennsylvania, where he remained for one year. Subsequently he was for two years principal of the South Plum street school in Canton, Ohio. It was but natural that one so self-reliant and ambitious should early formulate definite plans for his future life work, and in 1885 Mr. Krichbaum began reading law in the office of Judge William R. Day and Austin Lynch, and later he was graduated from the Cincinnati Law School as a member of the class of 1887, and was duly admitted to the bar of the state in that year. He then returned to Canton where he became associated in the practice of his profession with Henry W. Harter, under the firm name of Harter & Krichbaum, and this alliance continued until the elevation of Mr. Harter to the bench of the Stark county common pleas, the law firm of Harter & Krichbaum having gained distinctive prestige and the highest reputation for integrity and efficiency. Of Mr. Krichbaum one who has noted him well speaks as follows: "Mr. Krichbaum has shown himself a careful and painstaking lawyer, and has had large experience in state and United States courts. Aside from being a good lawyer, he is well read in the constitutional and political history of the United States and is excelled by few men in scholarly attainments."

Mr. Krichbaum has always been an uncompromising Democrat and has been a leader in his party. He was president of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Canton during the agitation of the tariff question, and has been an effective and valued campaign speaker and worker. In 1890 he was the candidate of his party for the office of prosecuting attorney of Stark county, and was defeated by only a slight majority, this being during the McKinley-Warwick campaign. He has ever retained a deep interest in the cause of education; he served two years as a member of the board of education in Canton, and is frequently called upon to address teachers' institutes in the county. He is widely and favorably known as an eloquent and forceful speaker on a wide range of subjects, historical, literary and political. He is at the present time a member of the board of trustees of his alma mater, Wooster University, having been elected to that position by the alumni of the institution. He is a member of the Reformed church.

Mr. Krichbaum was married, on August 20, 1890, to Elizabeth Scott Gans, a graduate of Hiram College and the youngest daughter of the late Dr. D. L. Gans, of Sparta, this county. Mr. Krichbaum is a man of strong and forceful individuality, is an able advocate and counsellor, being thoroughly read in the science of jurisprudence and in addition is a man of fine literary attainments, and his character is one which has begotten the highest confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. He was a warm admirer of the lamented President McKinley, Canton's distinguished and loved citizen, and on Saturday, September 28, 1901, he read before the Stark County Bar Association a most beautiful and appreciative memorial address in verse concerning the martyred President, the tribute being written in chaste and perfect diction.

JOHN L. STONER—Whatever else may be said of the cause of prohibition, no one can justly criticise the disinterested sincerity of the greater part of its advocates, their motives in espousing the cause being seldom either personal or selfish. Their abhorrence of liquor and desire to prohibit its manufacture and sale is in nearly every instance the result of patriotic and humanitarian motives and purposes. As in every worthy cause, there may be many unworthy advocates, but there is so little incentive to insincerity or hypocrisy in either the cause or its advocacy, that only those who have a motive in doing so, charge them with either. The subject of this sketch, John L. Stoner, of Plain township, Stark county, is one of the most uncompromising and ardent advocates of the prohibition cause. He considers it the leading issue of the day, of the nation and of the race. In his opinion there is no subject in either politics, religion or law that in any degree whatever compares with it.

John L. Stoner was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, May 21, 1831, and was only about one year old when his parents brought him to Stark county, Ohio. In this county he was reared and educated and he has since continuously resided here. In early life he learned the trade of a tanner and for some years followed that vocation, but soon turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, in which calling he has been most successful. He has seen Stark county from his early childhood and witnessed its wonderful growth and development, has witnessed the gradual change of the face of the county from a dense forest into fields of waving grain and green pastures and has done as much as any man now living in the county to make it what it is.

JOHN L. STONER GROUP.

The parents of John L. Stoner were Jacob and Elizabeth (Lieb) Stoner, natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and among the very earliest settlers of Stark county, Ohio, having settled here in 1832, more than seventy years ago. They were the parents of a large family of children, most of whom grew to mature years, each receiving a fair school education. The greater part of their lives was devoted to clearing, cultivating and improving their land. They were intellectual, moral, duty-loving people, whose lives were ever worthy example to the young generally, but to their own sons and daughters particularly. Jacob Stoner, through the use of strong liquors, did not make a decided success in life. Liquor was used in the field, and in fact in all works, causing considerable drunkenness. His children, seeing what the liquor habit had cost their father, they from childhood up have fought the liquor curse and have been strong advocates of prohibition. About fifty-five years ago he joined the Sons of Temperance and lived close to its teachings for five years, when through the urgent solicitations of an acquaintance, he broke the bonds and thereafter was a frequent imbibor of strong drink, having but little means at the time of his death. He died in the eightieth year of his age, while his wife had preceded him into eternity some years.

Of the land in Jackson and Plain townships John L. Stoner is, with his sons, the owner of some seven hundred acres, and it was by close application to the cause of temperance that they have been able to accumulate so large a tract of land, neither Mr. Stoner nor either of his sons have ever used tobacco or intoxicating liquors since growing to maturity. The greater part of this land is well improved and under cultivation, and the farm buildings are large, substantial and conveniently arranged. Agriculture and live-stock raising is and has been Mr. Stoner's calling through life and he has been very successful in both branches of business, the thrift and intelligence he brings to bear upon his business being well exemplified in the arrangements which prevail on all parts of his place and in the condition of his stock. He is an up-to-date, progressive farmer who makes use of every discovery made in the interest of agriculture or stock raising, the result being that he has accumulated a very comfortable competency for himself and family.

On October 17, 1852, John L. Stoner was united in marriage to Miss Sally Essig, a native of Plain township, a lady of refinement, intelligence and judgment, whose many sterling qualities have commended her to her relatives, friends and acquaintances. They are the parents of three sons, one of whom, Addison, died in childhood; the others are Levi A. and Aaron J., each of whom is well educated, thrifty and prosperous.

In religion, Mr. Stoner is a member of the Lutheran church, but makes adherence to the precepts of the Golden Rule the guide of his conduct in life. He believes in an active religion, one that permeates, governs and rules every thought, action and aspiration in life, that is something more than mere attendance upon church services, prayer and psalm singing, supplemented by a contribution box and a deep and abiding interest in its contents. In the opinion of Mr. Stoner, the one great question now before the people of this country of every faith and of no faith, religious, skeptical or atheistic, is that of prohibition. He believes that, compared with the evils of the liquor traffic of the present day, those of slavery were slight and trivial, and it is a surprise to him that so crying an evil can exist without arousing the slumbering conscience of the better element of the American people. He is confident that there will be an awakening upon this subject and he is not only patiently waiting the approach of that happy day, but doing everything that lies in his power to hasten its coming. He is known far and wide for his zeal in the cause, and his neighbors, even those who are most strenuously opposed to his views, not only respect his sincerity, but his sentiments. He feels that ever good cause must have its martyrs, as has been time and again proven in the history of the past. In modern times martyrs are rarely called upon to die for opinion's sake, but if they were, many would be found just as willing to do so now as formerly. Death, however, is not the true test of martyrdom. In the cause of abolition John Brown was not the only martyr, and doubtless before the real battle of the present issue is fought and won there will be others; but throughout the entire land, no more earnest, sincere and consistent worker in the cause can be found than John L. Stoner.

VALENTINE L. NEY was born in the city of Canton, Ohio, on the 11th of October, 1854, being a son of Valentine and Elizabeth Ney, both of whom were born and reared in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, where their marriage was solemnized. The former was born in the year 1803 and his wife in 1807. In 1840 they severed the ties which bound them to home and fatherland and emigrated to America, landing in New York city, whence they made their way by railroad to Pittsburg and then onward by wagon to New Baltimore, Stark county, Ohio, in which vicinity Mr. Ney was engaged in farming for a period of ten years, and then, after residing for a short interval in the city of Canton, he removed to a farm four miles south of the city, in Canton township, where he remained until 1888, when he retired from active business and again took up his residence in Canton, where he died in the year 1890, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years, his wife having passed away in 1891, at the age of eighty-two years, both having been consistent and devoted members of the German Reformed church, while Mr. Ney was a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Democratic party. Of the children of this union we incorporate the following record: Frederick is a resident of Whitley county, Indiana, and is at the present time incumbent of the office of county commissioner; Catherine is the wife of Charles Volzer, of Canton; Louisa is the wife of Alexander Howenstine, of this city; Jacob also is a resident of Canton, as is Caroline, the wife of John Frey; Sarah is the wife of John Stucker, of Canton township; Elizabeth is the wife of John Volzer, of Canton; and Valentine L. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

When Valentine L. Ney was a mere child his parents removed from Canton to the farm four miles south of the city, and there he attended the district schools during the winter terms until he had attained the age of seventeen years, while during the summer seasons he assisted in the work of the farm. At the age of sixteen he entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, having early manifested a distinct mechanical genius, and he soon became an expert artisan in the line, and for a long term of years devoted his attention to work as a journeyman and a contracting builder, having erected several hundred houses in this section of the state, principally in Stark county, where he attained a high reputation as an able and trustworthy contractor. In the meanwhile he became the inventor of several useful devices in a mechanical line, and in attempting to secure patents on the same was involved in litigation, which was carried on for about four years, he finally winning out. In 1892 he formed a co-partnership with Robert Ostermeier, they engaging in business as architects in Canton, as the firm of Ney & Ostermeier, continuing for two years. In 1893 Mr. Ney organized the V. L. Ney Manufacturing Company, for the manufacture of his inventions, he becoming treasurer of the company and continuing so to the present and it is largely due to his able efforts that the concern has attained so great a success, its products now finding a ready demand in the most diverse sections of the Union. Mr. Ney is also largely interested in city real estate in the north end, which he is rapidly improving. When the improvements are completed he will have one of the finest properties in Canton.

In politics Mr. Ney has ever been stanchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, though he has never desired the honors or emoluments of political office. His first vote was cast for William Allen for governor of Ohio, at the time of his nomination for a second term. He united with the Reformed church when fourteen years of age, while his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 28th of October, 1890, Mr. Ney was united in marriage to Miss Edith Holm, daughter of George and Catherine (Buchtel) Holm, of Canton, and of this union two children have been born, Wendell, who is eight years of age, and Valeda, aged five years at the time of this writing.

MAHLON G. MARSHALL.—The original progenitors of the Marshall family in this line came from England in the early part of the eighteenth century, where they made settlement on the Delaware coast and in the state of Virginia. On the coast of the Old Dominion thus located Aaron Marshall, great-grandfather of him whose name initiates this review, and there he passed the remainder of his life, becoming an influential citizen of that state, which has figured as the cradle of so much of our national history. His son Joseph, grandfather of the subject, was born in Virginia, and was there reared and educated. As a young man he emigrated thence to Ohio and became one of the early pioneers of Carroll county, having made the long trip over the mountains with teams and wagons. He entered a tract of land in that county, near the present village of Carrollton, and later removed to a pioneer farm near New Somerset, Jefferson county, where he developed a good property and gained a position of prominence and honor in the community. There he passed the residue of his long and useful life, entering into eternal rest in 1864, at the age of about seventy-two years. In the crucial epoch leading up to and culminating in the Civil war he was an uncompromising abolitionist and fearless in the expression of his sentiments in regard to the abhorrent institution of human slavery, and he assisted materially in the operations of the famous "underground railway," through the means of which many a poor slave was assisted to freedom. To the humane work noted he contributed liberally both of money and personal service, his greatest desire being to witness the abolition of the institution of slavery in his native land, while his patriotism was of the loftiest order. At the time of his death two of his sons, Daniel and Silas, were rendering active service as members of the Ohio Volunteer Infantry in the Rebellion, so that it is evident that the sentiments of the father found insistent assertion in the minds and services of the sons. The paternal grandmother of the subject was of Scotch nativity, her maiden name having been Mary Welch, and she accompanied her parents on their emigration to America when a child. She survived her husband by a few years, passing away about 1869. Both were members of the Christian church. Grandfather Marshall was originally a Whig in politics, but transferred his allegiance to the Republican party at the time of its organization, as the avowed opponent of further extension of slavery.

Daniel Marshall, father of the subject of this sketch, was born on the homestead farm near Carrollton, Carroll county, Ohio, February 2, 1824, and his educational advantages were such as were commonly afforded the farmer boys of the pioneer days in this state. He was a boy at the time of his parents' removal to Jefferson county, and there he was reared to manhood. There also was solemnized his marriage to Miss Susan Billman, who was born in that county, in 1824, being a daughter of John Billman, one of the sterling pioneers of that county. Daniel Marshall became the owner of a valuable farm near Hammondsville, Jefferson county, and there continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits and dealing in stock of all kinds until he entered the army to fight for his country. In 1865 he moved to Bayard, Columbiana county, and a few years later located on a farm near the same place. In 1891 he removed to Minerva, Stark county, where he resided until his death, which occurred on the 11th of February, 1901. He was a man of fine mentality and inflexible integrity of character and ever commanded uniform confidence and esteem. He identified himself with the Republican party at the time of its organization and ever afterward continued a stalwart advocate of its cause. His religious faith was that of the Disciples church, in whose work he was active and zealous, and of the same his widow has long been a devoted member. She now resides in the city of Cleveland, and is a type of the noble pioneer women of the old Buckeye state. As before noted, Daniel Marshall served as a soldier during the Rebellion. Of the children of Daniel and Susan (Billman) Marshall we incorporate an epitomized record at this juncture: Samantha is the wife of Jacob Alman, of Ravenna, Ohio; Clara was first married to George H. Billman, after whose death she became the wife of Harrison Close, and they now reside in Hammondsville; Margaret J. is the widow of John H. Keith and resides in Cleveland, Ohio; Malcolm B., who resides in Canton, where he is engaged in the grocery business, married Miss Celia Thomas; Elizabeth is the wife of Newton J. Randall, of Cleveland;

Mahlon G., the immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; Alvin C., who is engaged in the railroad business at Canal Dover, Ohio, married Miss Nora Hines; Anna L. is the wife of Thomas J. Thomas, of Cleveland; Albert S., who is engaged in the railroad business at Canal Dover, Ohio, married Miss Jennie Roberts; and John D., who married Miss Caddie Hughes, died in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in January, 1899.

Mahlon G. Marshall was born on the old homestead farm near Wellsville, Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 11th of February, 1857, and when he was seven years of age he accompanied his parents on their removal to Bayard, Columbiana county, where he was reared to maturity on the home farm. His preliminary educational discipline was received in the district school near the place of his birth, and was continued in the high school at Minerva, Stark county. He initiated his pedagogic career in 1879, when he began teaching in the public schools of Mechanicstown, Carroll county, where he remained two years, after which he became a student in what was known as the Mechanicstown Academy, at Mechanicstown, where he also taught during a portion of the time he was there prosecuting his studies. He was then engaged in teaching for one year in the Hostetter district, in Paris township, Stark county, thereafter taught for one term in the Malvern schools, after which he was for two years principal of the public schools at Magitolia, this county. He then was matriculated in the National Pen Art Hall & Business College, at Oberlin, Ohio, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated in the autumn of 1884, after which he was for one year employed in the freight and ticket office of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Bayard, his home town, and the next year he was engaged in teaching in the schools of that place. He then returned to Stark county and for the ensuing four years rendered most effective service as a teacher in the high school at Minerva, where he had been engaged for still another year, but secured a release from his contract in order to accept the position, in September, 1890, as director of writing and drawing in the Canton public schools, in which capacity he was retained for the long period of eight years, his efforts meeting with distinctive appreciation. He then accepted his present position as director of the commercial department of the high school, where his able and discriminating service has been even more prolific in value to his students. He has the power of imparting knowledge with facility and in creating enthusiasm among his pupils, while he retains at all times their respect and confidence. Thus his success in educational work has been a natural result of his ability in his line coupled with erudition and systematic methods. He is thoroughly en rapport with his work and keeps in touch with the advances made in his profession, while he holds membership in the Ohio State Teachers' Association. Fraternally he is identified with the camp of Sons of Veterans at Minerva, and in politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, while both he and his wife hold membership in the Disciples' church, in whose work they take an active part, he being an elder in the same, and superintendent of the Sunday school.

On the 24th of December, 1884, Mr. Marshall was united in marriage to Miss Laura B. Smith, of Moultrie, Columbiana county, where she was born and reared. She is the daughter of Henry W. and Hannah (McCoy) Smith, the former having been engaged in farming during his active career. The latter was a daughter of Captain Lewis McCoy, who was captain of a company of the One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, during the war of the Rebellion, and who was a man of marked influence in and about Moultrie in his day. Four of his sons were in this regiment during the war, one having been a lieutenant, and all served until the close of the great fratricidal conflict which determined the integrity of the Union. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have one child, Helen May, who was born on the 11th of January, 1893.

THOMAS McCALL was born in that portion of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, which was subsequently erected into the county of Fayette, the date of his nativity having been March 28, 1809. The original American progenitor in the agnatic line was his grandfather, Barnabas McCall, who was born in Ireland, whence he emigrated to America about the year 1750, having been a young man at the time. He settled in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and there he married Miss Mary Newell, a native of Maryland, and they passed the residue of their lives in the old Keystone state. The maternal grandfather of the subject was William Robertson, who was a native of Scotland and who came as a boy to America, in the colonial epoch. Here he grew to manhood and he married Miss Sarah Hurst, a native of Virginia, while both thereafter resided until death in what is now Fayette county, Pennsylvania. Robert McCall, father of the subject, was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of July, 1776, three days after the signing of that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence. There he was reared to maturity and there he learned the trade of millwright, becoming a skilled artisan. As early as 1808 he came to Ohio and here erected a number of mills, in Columbiana and Stark counties and elsewhere, the same being among the first established in this section of the state. He then returned to Pennsylvania, where he remained until 1818, when, with teams and wagons, he came again to Stark county, for the purpose of making a permanent location. The journey was a long and weary one, as the distance traversed in a day did not exceed five miles in the average case, but the family arrived at their destination on the 17th of March of that year, locating on a tract of wild land in Sandy township, this county, where they took up their abode in a log house of the type common to the place and period. Mr. McCall did not, however, engage in farming to any extent, finding it more profitable to devote his personal attention to the work of his trade. His home was the northeast quarter of section 22, adjoining the present village of Waynesburg, whose population at that time consisted of four families. Mr. McCall became a prominent and influential citizen of the pioneer community, and was the first man ever elected from Sandy township to membership in the legislature of the state, in which he served with signal efficiency, being a man of distinctive ability. His death occurred on the old homestead, about the year 1831. His wife, whose maiden name was Agnes Robertson, was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and she died on the homestead farm in the autumn of 1858. Of the children of this union we enter the following record: John died at the age of twenty years; Eleanor became the wife of Samuel Cameron and died in Cedar Falls, Iowa; Mary Ann remained a spinster until her death, when more than four score years of age; Thomas, subject of this memoir, was the next in order of birth; Robert II., who died in Canton, was treasurer of the county in the early 'forties, and he married Margaret I———, a native of Dublin, Ireland; Andrew died in Smithland, Woodbury county, Iowa, having married Margaret Hewitt, of Waynesburg, Stark county.

Thomas McCall, to whom this tribute is dedicated, was born in Bridgeport, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth having previously been recorded. He secured his early educational training in the schools of his native place, and was a lad of about nine years at the time of the family's removal to Stark county. He was of a studious nature and as a boy spared no pains to avail himself of such educational opportunities as were to be had, and after coming to this county he walked back and forth to the little log school-house which was fully three miles distant from his home, making the trip through the forest, in which wolves, bear and other wild animals were still abundant. He gained an excellent rudimentary education, becoming a particularly fine penman, and in the later years of his life, by personal application and by rare powers of absorption, he effectively supplemented the somewhat meagre opportunities of his youth. He early began an apprenticeship at the trade of millwright, assisting his father in his work until the death of the latter, when he assumed the management of the homestead farm, where he continued to make his residence until 1846, when he moved to a farm four miles north of Waynesburg, where he remained until 1850, when he came to Canton to enter upon the discharge of his duties as county auditor, to which office he had been elected as the candidate of the Democratic party, of whose principles he had been a staunch advocate from the time of attaining his legal majority. His term of office expired in 1861, his administration having been a particularly able and discriminating one, and he then returned to his farm, to whose cultivation he thereafter gave his attention until 1872, when he again became a resident of Canton. He had also served most acceptably as land assessor of Canton, Osnaburg, Pike, Paris and Sandy townships, and his public labors were ever discharged with utmost fidelity and ability, gaining him the confidence of the people of the county.

On the 13th of November, 1833, Mr. McCall was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Brothers, a native of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and she died on the 22d of February, 1855, having become the mother of the following named children: Thomas, who died in Boulder county, Colorado; Harriet E., who became the wife of a Mr. Prouse and who died in Missouri, in 1882; Theodore remains on the old homestead farm; John S. died April 12, 1902, in the Aultman hospital, in Canton; George D. is a representative farmer of Sandy township; Mary Ann died at the age of nineteen; Robert B. died at the age of twenty-five, and Ellen at the age of twenty-six. On the 26th of June, 1863, Mr. McCall consummated a second marriage, being then united to Mrs. Harriet M. Harrold (nee Reed), and of this union one child was born, May M. She was born on the homestead in Sandy township, May 12, 1864, and after pursuing her studies in the district schools she became a student in the city schools of Canton, and was graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1882. On the 31st of December, 1890, she was united in marriage to Herbert Cleveland Smart, who was born near Vienna, Kennebec county, Maine, on the 1st of February, 1860, and who came to Ohio at the age of twenty-one, engaging in the work of his trade in the city of Columbus, whence he finally came to Canton, where he entered the employ of the Deuber-Hampden Company. He signalized his patriotism at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, by enlisting, on the 8th of May, 1898, as a private in the Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He accompanied his command to Cuba, where he remained in active service for several months, when he was stricken with the prevailing malarial fever and incapacitated, being sent home on the transport "Mohawk," and coming to his home in Canton, where he died on the 18th of December, 1899, sacrificing his life for his country. He left two children, Robert McCall Smart and Francis Marion Smart.

Mrs. Harriet M. (Reed) McCall, widow of the subject of this memoir, was born in a dwelling which stood at the corner of Fifth and Market streets, in the city of Canton, on the 4th of March, 1824, so that it becomes evident that she is a member of one of the pioneer families of this city and county. Her first teacher was Mary Cross, familiarly known as "Auntie" Cross, who taught in a little log cabin which stood on the site of the present Mahaffey block. Here Mrs. McCall learned to sew and knit and also to spell and read in a somewhat indifferent way, and later she had such advantages as were afforded in the schools of the town, which was beginning to increase in population and facilities. On the 30th of March, 1843, she was united in marriage to John C. Harrold, of Holmes county, this state, and a few years later, in the memorable days of 1849, he joined the hégira of gold-seekers who were making their way to the new Eldorado of California, and he died near Nevada City, Nevada county, that state, in 1860. Of this union three children were born, namely: Mary B., who became the wife of A. C. Fry, died in Holmes county, Ohio; Susan died in childhood; and William N. died at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, on the 31st of July, 1864, while in service as a soldier in the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The father of Mrs. McCall was John Reed, who was born in Frederick county, Maryland, on the 6th of March, 1708, and thence his parents removed to Stark county, Ohio, in 1813, settling near the present village of Justus, Sugar Creek township, where his father, Jacob Reed, entered claim to one hundred and sixty acres of government land, which was covered with a heavy growth of timber. On the old homestead John Reed was reared to maturity, and on the 13th of April, 1815, when about seventeen years of age, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Payser, daughter of John Payser, another honored pioneer of the county, and after his marriage John Reed came to Canton, taking up his residence at the corner of Ninth and Market streets, whence he subsequently removed to the southeast corner of Market and Fifth streets, where he for many years was engaged in the work of his trade, that of saddler and harnessmaker, utilizing the large front room of his house as a shop. His wife died December 31, 1868, and he passed away on the 24th of September, 1871. Their children were as follows: Eliza, who became the wife of Jacob Lautzenheiser, died in Chelsea, Iowa; Catherine, who married Henry Bockius, died in Canton, in April, 1901; John P. died February 2, 1877, in Canton; Mary, the wife of John P. Rex, died in this city; Harriet, widow of the subject, was the next in order of birth; Susan is dead; William died in Canton, March 20, 1901; Joseph died in this city, November 20, 1888; and Margaret is the wife of Amos Bidden, of Canton.

Jacob Reed, grandfather of Mrs. McCall, married Ann Maria Mowrie, both having been born near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He was sixteen years of age at the time of the war of the Revolution, and did not bear arms in the great struggle, though he did his part by carrying provisions to the soldiers. His father, Jacob Reed, was, however, a lieutenant colonel under Washington. He was of German descent, and the name was originally spelled Rieth. He died in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Mrs. McCall resides in the old homestead in Canton, where in her venerable age she is surrounded by a host of friends to whom she has endeared herself by her gracious and noble womanhood.

EDWIN S. CORRELL.—Teaching is not classed among the learned professions, and "more the pity." To properly conduct the studies and recitations in a school room the preceptor must be possessed of far more learning, knowledge of human nature and ability to govern, direct and control than is ordinarily displayed by the average lawyer, minister of the gospel or a medical practitioner. The person who has devoted seven years of his life to the education of the young in a school room and who has been successful in that capacity has not only accomplished much for the race, but has disclosed the earnest patience there is in his nature. The subject of this sketch, Edwin S. Correll, is such a person. The first years of his early manhood was devoted to teaching and he met with such gratifying success that he continued in the business for seven years.

Edwin S. Correll was born December 14, 1865, in Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, on a farm situated about two miles west of the city of Canton. His father was Josiah Correll, a sketch of whose career will be found in another part of this volume, and his mother was Mary Mentzer. Both were natives of Plain township, and were the parents of five children, Charles G., Edwin S., Minnie M., Nettie J. and Lillie L., Nettie dying in the twenty-seventh year of her age. Each of the survivors has received a good education, is prosperous and comfortably settled in life. From childhood Edwin S. Correll has been a resident of Plain township, and it was there that he received his early education in the common schools, becoming proficient in all the branches there taught. Later he attended the university at Ada, Ohio, and qualified himself for the calling of a teacher, which business he followed in his native county for a period of seven years. His work in this line was most satisfactory to pupils and patrons, but, like many others, he found the business most irksome and by no means as remunerative as it should be.

April 4, 1894, Mr. Correll was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Firestone at the residence of the bride's parents in Plain township. Her parents were Hiram and Margaret (McDowell) Firestone, old and highly respected residents of Plain township, both now deceased. Mrs. Correll is a native of Plain township, born March 31, 1864, and is a lady of good education and many accomplishments. Two children have been born to this union, Wilbur D. and Harrold F., both bright, intelligent lads and giving fair promise of growing to manhood and becoming worthy, useful citizens.

The farm owned by Edwin S. Correll and upon which he and his family reside comprises one hundred and thirty acres of fertile, well improved land. He is a farmer and stock raiser, and, managing his business according to modern methods and with the aid of all the late improvements in machinery, he has been most successful. Mrs. Correll is deeply interested in church work, is a member of the Progressive Brethren church and a liberal supporter of that denomination and every other worthy cause. The home life of the Correll family is all that could be desired. The evidences of happiness and prosperity everywhere abound and the visitor to the home cannot fail to be impressed with the affectionate regard each member displays toward the others. Still young in years, with ample means to supply every want, there is no good reason why the career of Edwin S. Correll should not be even more illustrious than that of any of his ancestors.

JOHN RAEHER, deceased, was a native of the fair and distant little republic of Switzerland, and his character partook of the rugged characteristics of a section where the "mountains still are free; they hurl oppression back and keep the boon of liberty."

He was born in the village of Niederbepp, canton of Bern, on the 5th of July, 1821, being son of Oswald and Elizabeth (Liest) Raeber, the former of who for many years conducted a general store in the little town mentioned. The subject received his early education in the excellent schools of his native canton, in one of the German provinces of Switzerland, attending school from the age of six to that of seventeen, and being then confirmed in the German Reformed church, whose faith he has ever held inviolate, guiding and guarding his life through its gracious and beneficent influence. In April, 1840, Mr. Raeber severed the tender ties which bound him to home and fatherland and proceeded to the city of Havre, France, where he embarked on a sailing vessel whose destination was New York city. Arriving in the American metropolis he remained one week, after which he came westward to Belmont county, Ohio, where lived a former citizen of his native town. This friend was at the time located in the village of Captina, on the Ohio river. Mr. Raeber found work in the harvest fields during that autumn, and after the season was over he went to Licking county, where he passed the winter with some old schoolmates, who had previously come to America and established their home in that locality. In 1841, in company with a fellow countryman, he went by boat down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to St. Louis, Missouri. They were unsuccessful in finding work there and continued their journey, going up the Missouri river and through Iowa. At intervals the subject paid his fare on the river boats by working as a deck hand, and he also found work for short intervals on various farms. In their travels the two friends encountered numerous camps of Indians, but had no trouble in the connection. Finding no work of satisfactory nature they returned eastward as far as Cairo, Illinois, where they embarked on a boat destined up the Ohio, their funds being at this time entirely exhausted. While the vessel was en route its boilers exploded, and twenty or more persons were killed outright, while the boat was entirely wrecked. Mr. Raeber and his companion chanced to be at the stern of the boat at the time of this explosion, and escaped almost by miracle. They jumped into one of the small boats attached to the vessel and with this managed to make their way to the shore in safety. They next traveled on foot through the state of Indiana, often losing their way and enduring many discomforts and hardships. One night, to escape attack from the wolves, they secreted themselves in the trunk of a large sycamore tree, where they remained till morning. In the summer of 1841 the two comrades continued their journey eastward, our subject giving his watch to pay his fare to the city of Pittsburgh, while his companion worked his passage to Wheeling, West Virginia, the two becoming separated at this time. In Pittsburgh Mr. Raeber secured a position in a printing office, where he served an apprenticeship of about three years, gaining a practical knowledge which served him well in his later career. He remained in that city until the great fire of 1845, when he lost all of his possessions save the clothing which he wore. He then returned to Ohio and for a time remained with an old schoolmate in Bremen, Fairfield county. In the fall of the same year he went to Detroit, Michigan, where he associated himself with a Mr. Kaminsky in establishing the first German paper ever published in that city, the enterprise enlisting his attention about two years. He then secured employment in translating the annual message of Governor Chase into the German language, being well paid for this work. He then went to the city of Chicago in search of employment, the place at that time giving slight evidence of ever becoming the magnificent metropolis which it stands today. He failed to find work and continued his journey to a point near Joliet, Illinois, where he took up forty acres of land, the purchase price being two dollars and fifty cents an acre. He was accompanied by another young man and they took up their abode in a log hut and began the work of clearing and breaking the land, succeeding in putting in a crop. Mr. Raeber remained on his embryonic farm for a period of two years, when he grew weary of attempting to ward off the ceaseless attacks of ague, and abandoned his farm and returned to Chicago, where he secured employment in the printing department of the Chicago Times, receiving the princely stipend of fifty cents per week and board. After a short interval he secured work on a German paper, and he remained in Chicago for some time, and then receiving a small sum of money from home, and as he still continued to suffer from "fever and ague," he determined to leave that section, and accordingly came by boat to Toledo, Ohio, whence he proceeded by canal to Cincinnati, where he was employed one year in the office of the Volksblatt. He then took a position in the office of a German religious paper in Circleville, this state, where he remained two and one half years. Within this interval occurred an important event in his life, for he was there married to Miss Wilhelmina Wagner, who proved to him a true helpmeet from the initiation of their happy wedded life. From Circleville Mr. and Mrs. Raeber went by wagon to Millersburg, Holmes county, Ohio, and there he established a German paper, which, associated with a partner, he continued for nine months. He then removed to Wanesburg, in the same county, where the citizens of the town and vicinity held a meeting and organized a stock company for the purpose of establishing a German paper, the locality having a very large percentage of German population. Mr. Raeber was placed in charge of the paper, the Deutsche en Holmes, the office being equipped with a new press and other accessories required, and for nearly a decade he conducted the paper and printing business with marked success, a liberal support being accorded and the subscription list running up to fully fifteen hundred. Mrs. Raeber assisted her husband in the press work and other details and no two persons could have been more faithful and industrious, for they worked night and day, one in hope and purpose, and strong in mutual sympathy and helpfulness.

In August, 1858, Mr. Raeber removed his printing office to Canton and here resumed business by establishing Der Deutsche in Ohio, in whose publication and in handling of job work he achieved marked success, securing much of the county printing and being known as an able writer and as one who was true to every contract and to his word at all times and under all conditions. In 1862 he sold his plant and business to Peter Kauffman, and lived practically a retired life until his death. In February, 1862, he returned to Switzerland to visit his father, who was venerable in years and in precarious health, but he was denied the privilege of once more greeting his loved sire, who died while our subject was en route, the ocean voyage having consumed twenty-one days, the steamer having been delayed by severe storms. Mr. Raeber remained about eighteen months amid the scenes of his childhood, returning to Canton in the fall of 1863. About two years later he was appointed deputy in the office of County Treasurer Steele, during whose administration he continued in this capacity, as did he later under Treasurers Fessler and Sullivan, his entire period of service thus covering nine years. He then established himself in the insurance business and became agent for twelve Atlantic steamship lines and was also commissioned as notary public, an office which he held at the time of his death. The great loss and bereavement of the subject's life was that which came on the 26th of January, 1897, when his loved and devoted wife, his companion and helpmeet for so many years, was summoned into eternal rest, passing forward to the "land of the leal" after a life of self-abnegation and signal beauty in all its relations. The loss to the subject was the more severe from the fact that no children were born to their union, and his wife was all in all to him and he to her as they walked side by side in mutual respect, love and sympathy. In politics Mr. Raeber always gave a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and both through his editorial utterances and his personal influence has done much to further its cause. He was a member of the German Reformed church, as previously noted, and his wife likewise was a devoted and consistent member of the same. He died March 6, 1903.

WILLIAM J. POYSER was born in the parental homestead, at 716 South Cleveland avenue, in the city of Canton, on the 27th of November, 1856, and to the public schools of his native city he is indebted for the excellent educational privileges which fell to his portion as a boy, while later he supplemented this discipline by a course of study in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, one of the most important educational institutions in the Union, and was graduated as a member of the class of 1880. He then established himself in the practice of his profession in Canton, successfully continuing operations in the line for a period of two years, at the expiration of which events so conspired as to make it seem expedient for him to withdraw from professional work, and accordingly, in 1882, he became associated with his father in the wholesale and retail lumber business in Canton, under the firm name of John R. Poyser & Son. This enterprise was conducted under these auspices until 1891, when the firm disposed of the business and purchased stock in the Bucher & Gibbs Plow Company, of which John R. Poyser was made vice-president and the subject of this sketch secretary, of which office he has since remained in tenure. He is known as a progressive young business man and as a public-spirited citizen, ever maintaining a lively interest in all that touches the welfare and advancement of the city of his nativity. In politics he accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and he was a member of the finance committee of the birthday anniversary memorial held in Canton on the 27th of January, 1903. He is a communicant of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, and fraternally is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of the Maccabees and the United Commercial Travelers. In addition to his association with the plow manufacturing business he is also a stockholder and director of the Canton Foundry & Machine Company and a member of the directorate of the Dime Savings Bank of Canton.

On the 13th of September, 1882, Mr. Poyser was united in marriage to Miss Helene Bucher, who was born and reared in Canton, being a daughter of John R. Bucher, who was the founder of the business which eventually developed into the Bucher & Gibbs Plow Company, with whose interests he continued to be actively identified until his death, having been one of Canton's most honored and influential citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Poyser are the parents of three children, Edna L., Helene E. and John R.

AUGUST SCHUFFENECKER is a native of the province of Alsace, France, which is now part of the German empire, and was born on the 5th of April, 1860, being a son of Martin and Walburga (Ehret) Schuffenecker, both of whom passed their entire lives in the province mentioned, being people of sterling character and devout members of the Catholic church. The father was a shoemaker by trade, and this constituted his vocation during the years of his active business career. Of their children our subject is the only one in the United States, and in his native land reside his three sisters and one brother.

The subject of this sketch attended school in his native place in a somewhat irregular way until he had reached the age of twelve years.

He worked in a tannery until he had attained the age of twenty years and then served an apprenticeship at the butchering business. In 1883, at the age of twenty-three years, he bade adieu to home and native land and set forth to seek his fortunes in America. He landed in New York city on the 22d of July of that year, and thence came directly to Canton, where he worked at his trade for various firms and individual proprietors of meat markets until 1892, on April 4th of which year he entered into business on his own responsibility, by opening his present well equipped market, at 829-831 South Market street. His thorough knowledge of the business and his discrimination in catering to the demands of his customers soon made the venture a very successful one, and two years after inaugurating the same he was enabled to purchase the business block in which the market is located, while in March, 1903, he effected the purchase of the Mary Cook residence, on South Market street, where he has a pleasant and attractive home. He has labored indefatigably and is well deserving of the success which has resulted, while he has so ordered his course as to retain the confidence and respect of all with whom he has come in contact. In politics he gives his support to the Democratic party and fraternally he is identified with the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association and the Order of Eagles. Both he and his wife are communicants of St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic.

On the 29th of May, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Schuffenecker to Miss Katherine Nist, who was born in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, on the 27th of September, 1865, a daughter of Frank and Katherine (Steel) Nist, the father having been a farmer in the fatherland. In 1882 he emigrated to America with his family, two of his sons having preceded him hither, and he took up his residence in Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in Canton, on the 8th of March, 1892, at which time he was sixty-two years of age. His widow still resides here and is seventy-two years of age at the time of this writing. Mr. and Mrs. Schuffenecker have two children, Mary K. and Victoria R. W., both of whom are attending school.

ADAM PHILLIPS.—The paternal grandfather of the subject was a resident of the village of Gunstadt, in the province of Alsace, France, now a portion of the German empire. There he passed practically his entire life, and in his family were four sons and at least two daughters, three of the sons having been soldiers in the army of Napoleon, one of these being the father of the subject, who was the only one to return to his home. He, likewise, bore the name of Adam, and was born in Gunstadt, France, in 1792. There he was reared to maturity, learning the trade of shoemaker under the direction of his father. During the various campaigns in which he participated while in the army he suffered great hardships, and on one occasion, having been taken prisoner, he and a number of his comrades passed a period of nine days without food of any sort. They finally made their escape, and in their famished condition had recourse to eating the body of a dead horse which they found on their way and which was in the last stages of decomposition. Several of the party ate so ravenously of this decayed matter as to cause their death, their sufferings having been such as to render them quite incapable of judgment according to the normal standard. Adam Phillips finally returned to his home. In Gunstadt he married Miss Magdalena Spiel, and in 1838 they emigrated with their five children to the United States, embarking at Havre, France, on a sailing vessel, which did not drop anchor in the harbor of New York until thirty-one days had elapsed. They came westward to the city of Buffalo and thence by lake Erie to Cleveland, Ohio, from which point they made their way to Massillon, Stark county, by canal, and finally from that point overland to Canton, so that it will be seen that our subject is, indeed, a representative of one of the county's pioneer families. After passing a few months in Canton the family took up their abode on a small tract of land, on the Bolivar road, in Canton township, where the father devoted his attention to the work of his trade as opportunity offered, while for a period of six years he was employed on various farms in the locality. He then returned to Canton and opened a shoe shop on South Cherry street, between Ninth and Tenth streets, where he followed his trade for a time and then traded the property for a tract of five acres adjoining the town on the southeast, and there he maintained his home until his death, which occurred in 1858. His wife survived him by many years, being summoned into eternal rest in 1880, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. Both were communicants of the Catholic church and were people of the most unwavering integrity, while in politics the father gave his allegiance to the Democratic party. Of their six children all save the youngest were born in France, and of them we enter brief record, as follows: Joseph, who married Agnes Pecher, died in the state of Indiana; Adam, Jr., is the immediate subject of this review; Frances is the wife of George Gonder, of Canton; Mary, who became the wife of Lawrence Bechel, died in Canton, in 1899; George, who married Mary Herdt, is a successful farmer residing south of the city of Canton; and Magdalena, who was born in this county, is the wife of Frederick Seikel, of this city.

Adam Phillips, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born in the village of Gunstadt, Alsace, France, on the 26th of February, 1827, and there he attended school until the emigration of the family to America, at which time he was a lad of about eleven years. He here continued his studies in the somewhat primitive schools of the day, but early began to depend to a large extent on his own resources. From the age of twelve until he attained his legal majority, he worked during the summer seasons for various farmers in this vicinity, and when twenty-one years of age he entered upon an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, under the direction of Charles Mesmer, at New Berlin, this county, becoming a skilled mechanic in the line and devoting his attention to the work of his trade for a period of twenty-three years, within which time he was located for varying intervals in Canton and Tiffin, Ohio; Moline, Illinois, and other points. In 1868 he purchased thirty-one acres of land, the tract being now a portion of Westlawn cemetery, and on the land which he thus owned has been selected the site for the erection of the national monument to the memory of the lamented and honored President, William McKinley, Canton's loved citizen. Mr. Phillips cleared the greater portion of his farm of its native timber and on the same erected a comfortable residence, which he removed to his present farm on disposing of the original place, and he has since made excellent improvements on the building, which is now a commodious and attractive residence. He took up his abode on his farm in 1870, and there, in connection with his agricultural operations, he conducted a lime kiln and a coal bank on the place, his efforts being attended with a due measure of success. In 1879 he sold the property to the Westlawn Cemetery Association and purchased a tract of forty-eight acres on the opposite side of Harrison avenue, to which place he removed his dwelling, as has already been noted. At the time he came into possession of his present property the farm was in bad condition, but by continuous and well directed effort he has improved and developed the same until it is now one of the valuable farm properties of the county, and, though seventy-six years of age, our honored subject still continues in the active management of his farm, while he also has a blacksmith shop on the place and personally does all needed repair work in the line in connection with the farm, and also shoes his own horses. In politics, though ever free from personal ambition for office, he has shown a lively interest in the questions and issues of the day and has ever given an intelligent and unequivocal support to the principles and policies of the Democratic party, while he and his family are communicants of the Catholic church, being members of St. Peter's parish in Canton.

On the 21st of June, 1855, Mr. Phillips was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Austin, who was born in Wayne county, Ohio, on the 4th of December, 1837. When she was a child her parents removed to Tiffin, Seneca county, and later to a farm ten miles west of that city, where she remained until she had attained the age of sixteen years, her educational training having been received in the public and parochial schools. From the age of sixteen until her marriage she resided in Tiffin, and she is a woman of broad information, having been a close observer and a constant reader and having gained much by absorption during the long years of her mature life. She is a daughter of John G. and Agnes (Stein) Austin, the former of whom was born in the village of Hesse Cassel, Germany, in the year 1801, while the latter was born in the province of Bavaria in 1803 or 1804, their marriage having been solemnized in their fatherland, where Mr. Austin had learned the blacksmith trade. They emigrated to the United States with their family about the year 1838-40, landing in New York and thence coming forthwith to Ohio, locating on a small tract of land near Canal Fulton, Wayne county, where Mr. Austin continued the work of his trade, later passing a year in Tiffin, Seneca county. While in Wayne county he had entered a tract of eighty acres of land five miles distant from Fostoria, Seneca county, and to this he finally removed, reclaiming the land from the forest and making good improvements on the same. Later he purchased and removed to another farm, of one hundred and sixty acres, located in the immediate vicinity of the city of Tiffin, that county, and there he passed the residue of his life, his death occurring in 1888, at the age of eighty-seven, having been a man of remarkable energy and having continued his active labors up to within about two years prior to his demise. His wife passed away on the 10th of June, 1853, both having been consistent members of the Catholic church. Of their children we give brief record, as follows: Catherine, the wife of John Unser, died in Tiffin, in April, 1900; Mary, born in 1828, died in that city in 1853; George and William also are deceased; John met his death as a Union soldier, being killed in the battle of Bull Run; Elizabeth is the wife of the subject of this sketch; and Jacob, who served three years in the Civil war, as a member of the Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, is now dead.

To Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have been born six children, namely: Theodore Joseph, now a resident of Canton, married Mary Burk, of Cincinnati, and they have three children, Edgar R., Mary A. and Theodore J., Jr.; George E., a resident of Canton, married Mary Stucker, and they have two children, Paul Adam and Agnes E.; Flora E. is the wife of Henry Striff, of Wheeling, West Virginia, and they have had three children, Theodore F. (deceased), Cecilia and Irene; William A., of Canton, married Antoinette Dannemiller, and they have two children, Eugene William and John Ferdinand; Henry Augustus, of Weston, West Virginia, married Lulu Miller, one child, Virginia Pearl, having been born of the union; and Victor A. is preparing himself for the profession of dentistry.

JONATHAN RENICK came of German lineage, the name having originally been spelled Renewick. He was born on a farm near Darbyville, Pickaway county, Ohio, on the 6th of January, 1823, and there received his early educational training in the district schools of the pioneer epoch, his parents having been numbered among the early settlers in that section of the state. His father, Thomas Renick, was a representative of one of the sterling families of the Old Dominion state of Virginia, where Thomas was born and reared, and whence as a young man he emigrated to Pickaway county, Ohio, where he developed a farm in the midst of the primitive wilds and there passed the remainder of his life, his wife, whose maiden name was Tabitha Radcliffe, having been a native of Kentucky. Both died in Pickaway county, having become the parents of fourteen children, of whom eleven lived to attain years of maturity. After leaving the district schools Jonathan Renick continued to assist in the work of the homestead farm, and finally he entered a college in the state of Pennsylvania, where he was duly graduated, and thereafter he took up the study of law and eventually entered a law school in the city of Dayton, Ohio, where likewise he was graduated, being admitted to the bar at Circleville, the county seat of his native county. He was a man of fine intellectual gifts and marked talent in his profession, in which he attained prestige as one of the able members of the bar of the state, engaging in the active practice of his profession in Circleville and having there served as prosecuting attorney of Pickaway county. Such was his forceful individuality and such his character that he would have undoubtedly been called to positions of distinctive trust and responsibility had his life been spared. He was originally a Know-Nothing in politics, but identified himself with the Republican party at the time of its organization, having been one of the most uncompromising advocates of the policy of federal government in refusing to permit the further encroachment of human slavery and the secession of the southern states. At the outbreak of the war he tendered his services in defense of the Union, but was requested to take a position as a recruiting officer, which he consented to do instead of going to the front in accord with his personal desires. He rendered most valuable service in the capacity noted, being unremitting in his application to the securing the recruits, otherwise upholding the hands of the administration, and while he was thus engaged he contracted a severe cold from exposure, and the same became attended with complications which resulted in his death, which occurred on the 20th of September, 1862, at Circleville. He was a man of gracious and kindly personality and possessed of a fine physique, being six feet in height and weighing two hundred and seventy-five pounds. He commanded the unmeasured respect of all who knew him, and his death was deeply deplored in the community in which practically his entire life was passed.

At Mt. Airy, in the year 1847, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Renick to Miss Lavinia Graham. After the death of her honored husband Mrs. Renick removed from Circleville to Massillon, Stark county, where she resided for eight years, and since that time she has maintained her home in Canton, where she is cared for in her venerable years by her daughter, Mrs. Alexander, who accords her the deepest filial solicitude. Mrs. Renick is a representative of one of the early pioneer families of Stark county, and her memory links in an indissoluble chain the trend of events from the time when this section was a primitive wild up to the present epoch of peace and prosperity as the twentieth century swings into the cycle of ages. She was born on the old homestead farm, in Jackson township, this county, on the 17th of January, 1826, and completed her educational training in the seminary conducted in Canton by Mr. Goshorn, one of the prominent pioneer educators of the county. She has long been a devoted member of the Presbyterian church, and is revered and cherished by a wide circle of friends and honored as one of the noble pioneer women of the community. She has ever remained faithful to the memory of the husband of her youth, and her widowhood has now covered a period of more than forty years. Of their six children we enter the following brief record: Emma died in infancy; Caroline is the wife of West L. Alexander, of Canton, concerning whom individual mention is made elsewhere in this volume; Mary, who became the wife of Thomas B. Albert, died in Canton in 1876; Matilda died in her twenty-third year. Thomas at the age of twenty-nine and Edward at the age of eighteen.

WILLIAM P. MARTIN.—Jacob Martin, grandfather of the subject, was a native of Hagerstown, Maryland, where he was reared and educated and where he retained his residence until 1821, when he located in Loudon, Mercer county, Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in business for a number of years. In 1834 he removed with his family to Stark county, Ohio, and took up his abode in the village of Navarre, and of this section of the state he continued to be a resident until his death, which occurred in the village of Paris, this county, in 1850. His son Rudolphus, father of the subject of this memoir, was born in Hagerstown, Maryland, and was a child at the time of his parents' removal to Loudon, Pennsylvania, where he grew to manhood, and where he learned the trade of harnessmaking, becoming a particularly skillful workman and having the distinction of manufacturing the first five-ring harness ever produced in the United States, while he was also the first to manufacture the famous Loudon whips, which are still manufactured on a large scale. In 1834 he came to Navarre, Stark county, where he entered into partnership with John Chapman and established a general store. They disposed of the business at the expiration of about two years and purchased a sawmill a few miles to the east of the village of Louisville, this county, operating the same about four years. Mr. Martin then opened a general store in Paris, this county, while Ezra Smith later became associated with him in the enterprise. In 1847 Mr. Smith withdrew from the firm and the original owner thereafter continued the business individually until 1868, in which year he practically retired, being succeeded by his sons James M. and William P., who conducted the enterprise successfully until 1877, when they disposed of the same.

In Loudon, Pennsylvania, Rudolphus Martin was united in marriage to Miss Ruhama Uncles, who was born in that state. After his retirement from business he continued to make his home in Paris until his death, which occurred on the 6th of April, 1882, while his loved and devoted wife did not long survive him, for she was summoned into eternal rest on the 6th of the following July. Mr. Martin was converted in the Methodist Episcopal church, but in later years became very liberal in his views, though he ever retained a deep reverence for the spiritual verities, aside from creed or dogma, and was kindly and tolerant in his judgment, observing the very letter of the golden rule. His wife remained a member of the church until her death. In politics he was originally a stanch Democrat, but united with the Free-soil party at the time of its organization and was thus naturally led to espouse the cause of the Republican party at the time of its inception. Rudolphus and Ruhama Martin became the parents of five children, namely: Amanda, who is the widow of Benjamin Estep and resides in Canton; Thomas Benton, who died in 1857; Anna E., who resides in Canton; James M., of whom specific mention is made on other pages of this work; and William P., who is the subject of this memorial tribute.

William P. Martin was born in the village of Paris, this county, on the 26th of May, 1848, and he attended the public schools of his native village until he had attained the age of seventeen years, thus laying an excellent foundation for the signally active and successful business career which was to be his. As a youth he began to assist in the general store conducted by his father, and in order that he might more thoroughly fortify himself for practical business life his father sent him to the city of Pittsburg after he left the public schools, and there he entered the Iron City Business College, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1866. He then returned to Paris and soon afterward he and his brother James acquired control of the business which had been conducted by their father, as noted in a preceding paragraph, the concern representing one of the most extensive general stores in this section of the state. While still residing in Paris Mr. Martin also became interested in the dry-goods business in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, being associated with a partner and continuing his connection with the enterprise several years. In 1877 he and his brother disposed of the business in Paris, having been very successful in the conduct of the same, while in the meanwhile the subject of this memoir had given evidence of his distinctive business acumen and prescience by making judicious investments in various sections of the Union, having become the owner of valuable property in and about Bismarck, North Dakota. He took up his residence in the city of Canton in 1888, and for several years thereafter he traveling extensively, speculating successfully in improved and unimproved property. In the city of Duluth, Minnesota, he and his brother James acquired a valuable dock property, the same having greatly appreciated in value with the growth and development of the city. His business affairs were ever held well in hand; he was systematic and methodical, never violated an agreement or failed to meet an engagement, while he was a stickler for promptitude and exactness in all things. He left a large estate and all of his investments were properly looked after and so classified as to render the management of his affairs the more facile for his devoted wife, who assumed control after his death. No man was ever more appreciative of home and friends, and none ever had a more kindly disposition. He died on the 18th of December, 1901, there having been no premonitions that he was thus to be called from the scene of life's activities in the prime of his noble and useful manhood. He had been at his office attending to his business affairs and while on the street was attacked with a severe fainting or dizziness, and soon returned to his home, and his death occurred six days later. Mr. Martin was public-spirited and his influence and tangible aid could always be counted upon in the promotion of all worthy objects for the general good of the community. In politics he was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, but he never sought official preferment of any description, and such was his strength of intellect that he studied deeply and appreciatively throughout life, being a wide reader and taking particular pleasure in reading to the members of the family circle.

In the city of Canton, on the 1st of August, 1886, he was united in marriage to Miss Kate A. Blake, daughter of the late Patrick Blake, who was born in the city of Cork, Ireland, and who was brought by his parents to America when an infant. He was for many years a railroad contractor, with headquarters in the city of Alliance, Stark county, and met his death as the result of an accident. One year after his marriage Mr. Martin built an attractive residence at 1905 North Market street, and there his death occurred, his wife still retaining her home so thoughtfully provided. Of this marriage one son was born, Brooke, who is thirteen years of age at the time of this writing and who is a solace and comfort to his widowed mother.

PHILIP J. BERNOWER.—Mr. Bernower was born in the village of Canal Fulton, Lawrence township, this county, on the 31st of July, 1857, and was there reared to the age of nineteen years, his educational privileges having been such as were afforded in the public and parochial schools, while as a mere boy he assumed individual responsibilities, having become a clerk in the grocery of Timothy Sullivan when but twelve years of age, while his school discipline under that line was of irregular order. At the age of sixteen years he was placed in practical charge of the grocery establishment of John Barnes, in his native town, and he retained this incumbency until he had attained the age of nineteen years, when he came to Canton and secured a position as traveling salesman for the wholesale notion house of W. A. McCrea & Company, with which concern he remained two and one-half years, while later he was a commercial salesman for representative firms in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and Cleveland, Ohio. In 1885 he gave up traveling, having determined to establish himself in a permanent business upon his own responsibility, and in that year he began his operations in Canton as a lumber dealer, as a member of the firm of D. Holwick & Company. In 1893 he established his present lumber business in his own name. Through discriminating management and fair dealing he has built up a prosperous enterprise, having a well equipped plant and adequate storage yards on the corner of Cleveland avenue and Navarre street and controlling a representative trade throughout the territory normally tributary to Canton. Mr. Bernower has labored consecutively to attain the goal of success, and has not been denied a due reward for his well directed efforts, while incidentally he has invariably commanded the confidence and esteem of those with whom he has come in contact. Though never an aspirant for public office he has ever given a staunch support to the principles and policies of the Democratic party and takes a loyal interest in local affairs. His interest in public affairs is demonstrated by the fact that he served efficiently as a member of the Canton board of elections for a period of six years. He and his wife are communicants of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, and fraternally he is identified with the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association and the Knights of Columbus.

On the 21st of November, 1888, in the city of Findlay, Ohio, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Bernower to Miss Mary E. Julien, a daughter of Augustus Sylvester and Sarah Gillespie Julien, of that place.

Regarding the genealogy of the subject, we may say that he comes of staunch German lineage. His father, Godfrey Bernower, was born in the grand duchy of Baden, Germany, on the 29th of September, 1819, and he was there reared to the age of eighteen years, receiving his educational training in the excellent schools of the fatherland. As a youth, dependent entirely upon his own resources, he emigrated to America, making his way from New York to Ohio and locating at Canal Fulton, Stark county, where he worked as a bookkeeper for a number of years. He served as postmaster of the town for several years, and was a candidate for county treasurer in 1861, having been a man of ability and inflexible integrity and having commanded unqualified confidence and esteem in the community in which he so long lived and labored. He was a stalwart Democrat in politics and both he and his wife were communicants of the Catholic church. He died on the 22d of February, 1862, an honored pioneer of the county. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Houk, was likewise a native of Germany, whence she came to America with her parents when a girl, and she died in Canton October 8, 1887, at the age of sixty-eight years. Of this union were born seven children, concerning whom we offer brief record, as follows: Charles W. died in 1875, at the age of thirty-three years; he was a member of Company A, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the age of nineteen years; Harriet is the wife of William Mullally, of Canton; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Patrick O'Brien, died in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia; Isabelle, who married Daniel Holwick, died in Canton, Ohio, in March, 1899; Margaret is the wife of Christian Fishley, of Canton; Philip J., subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and John A., who married Josephine Haines, of Fostoria, Ohio, and resides in Canton, is associated with Philip J. in the lumber business, the firm name of which is the Canton Lumber Company, with yards on East North street.

ASA WHITCOMB BALLARD was a native of the old Bay state, having been born in the town of Pepperell, Middlesex county, Massachusetts, on the 15th of December, 1823, and there he was reared to maturity, receiving excellent educational advantages for the day, while in his youth he learned the machinist's trade, in which line he became an expert artisan. It is altogether probable that his discipline in this line was received under the effective direction of his father, who was one of the best machinists in that section of the Union, and who attained marked prestige in his chosen vocation. He accompanied his parents on their removal to the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in the work of his trade for a number of years, and where his marriage was solemnized in the year 1856. He thereafter continued to reside in that city until 1858. Prior to this, before the completion of the Ephraim Ball manufacturing plant in Canton, Ohio, Mr. Ballard was importuned to come to this city and assume the foremanship of one of the departments in the factory, but his wife's parents were in advanced years and needed her attention, so that he was most reluctant to leave them, and Mr. Ballard thus declined the proffered position and sent his brother Martin to assume the place, the latter soon afterward being united in marriage to Sophia, a daughter of his employer, Mr. Ball. In the year 1866, Mrs. Ballard's parents, having in the meantime been summoned into eternal rest, our subject removed to Canton to accept the foremanship vacated by his brother, who became superintendent of the concern at this time, and he thereafter continued in the employ of the B. Ball Company until the reorganization of the business, under the name of the C. Aultman Company, and with the new concern he remained in active service for a number of years, until 1884, when he received a stroke of paralysis, which rendered him partly helpless. So greatly were his services needed and appreciated, however, that when he had sufficiently recovered to be able to move about, though with difficulty, Mr. Miller, one of the interested principals in the great concern by which he had been employed, came to Mr. Ballard and urged upon her the propriety of her husband's continuing in the management of his department, since this would distract his mind from his infirmities and prove more in harmony with his wishes, and the consideration kindly proposed on the company was accepted, and thereafter Mr. Ballard was carried to and from the shops each day for a number of years, and until such time as he became so entangled as to render service impossible. Thus after years of faithful and able service Mr. Ballard finally was compelled to lay aside his active duties and he thereafter remained quietly in his home, receiving the most tender and solicitous care from his devoted wife until his death, which occurred on the 17th of January, 1887, at which time he was sixty-six years of age, while thus was realized his wish that he might be called to the life eternal before the summer came to his beloved wife. He was the faith that made faithful, and he was signally true in all the relations of life, commanding the unqualified confidence and high regard of all who knew him. In politics he originally gave his support to the Whig party, but upon the organization of the Republican party transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward remained a staunch advocate of its principles. He was interested in all that tended to promote the best interests of the community, and served for a number of years as a member of the board of education. He was one of the zealous and consistent members of the First Presbyterian church, in which he served as deacon for a long term of years, and of which his widow has long been a devoted member.

On the 7th of October, 1856, in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Mr. Ballard was united in marriage to Mrs. Margaret Irwin, who was born in the family homestead, on Smithville street, that city, on the 12th of February, 1822, being a daughter of John and Anna (White) Irwin, both of whom were born in County Tyrone, Ireland, where they were reared and educated, and where their marriage was solemnized. After the birth of their first child they emigrated from the Emerald Isle to America, landing in the city of New York, whence they proceeded to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, near which city resided Mrs. Mary Sampson, a sister of Mr. Irwin. Shortly after ward he acquired property in Pittsburg and there took up his residence. Prior to his emigration to the United States he had been engaged in the mercantile business in his native land, and after locating in Pittsburg he there opened a store and continued to be there identified with mercantile interests until his death. Of his six children we enter brief record, as follows: Jane, who was born in England, became the wife of John Ray, and she died in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Taggart, in Wooster, Ohio, her remains being taken to the old home in Pittsburg for interment; Eliza, who became the wife of Samuel Alinder, died in Pittsburg; Mary became the wife of William Alinder, and she likewise died in the city of Pittsburg; Margaret is the widow of the subject of this memoir; and Matilda, who became the wife of William Whitney, died in Pittsburg, so that Mrs. Ballard is now the only survivor of the immediate family.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Ballard we incorporate the following brief record, all of the children having been born in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania: John Irwin, who was born on the 1st of December, 1852, and who was graduated in a leading college of dentistry in Philadelphia, was foreman in one of the departments of the penitentiary in Columbus, Ohio, at the time of his death, which occurred on December 31, 1881; he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Inne, who survives him, as does their child. Luther Whitecomb, who was born on the 26th of April, 1854, was first married to Miss Grace Greenwood, and after her death to Miss Irene Arbuckle, three children being born of the first union and one of the second. He is now engaged in the practice of dentistry in the city of Alliance, this county. Theodore R., who was born on the 28th of December, 1856, was about eighteen months of age at the time of his parents' removal from Pittsburg to Canton, and in the latter city he received his early education in the public schools, which he attended until he had attained the age of nineteen years, while he learned the art of telegraphy but never followed the same as a vocation. As a young man he served a number of years as clerk in the office of the mayor of Canton, and was also incumbent of the office of township clerk, while for three years he held the position of deputy recorder, during the regime of Dr. J. E. Dougherty. In 1891 he engaged in the coal business in his present location, at the corner of South Market and Navarre streets, where he now controls a flourishing business, being numbered among the representative and progressive business men of the city and holding the uniform esteem of the community in which practically his entire life has been passed. In his home city, on the 7th of October, 1889, Mr. Ballard was united in marriage to Miss Anna Park, who was born in Sewickley, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, on the 6th of January, 1852, being a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Park. Mr. Ballard is a staunch Republican in politics, and both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, while maternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, being a member of Holmes Council No. 41. The widow of the subject maintains her residence in the old home, which is so hallowed and endeared to her by the memories and associations of the past.

REGINALD H. BULLLEY was born in New Brighton, England, on the 3d of June, 1855, and was there reared and educated, while he early secured technical training which well prepared him for the vocation to which he is now devoting his attention. He is a son of S. Marshall and Mary M. (Raffles) Bulley, both of whom passed their entire lives in England. In 1877 the subject of this sketch came to the United States and soon afterward arrived in Canton and assumed the position of chemist in the works of Bolton, Myers & Company, who had here established business in 1875, the concern constituting the nucleus from which has been built up the present Canton Steel Company. Later the firm became Bolton, Bulley & Company, and subsequently a reorganization took place and the business was incorporated under the laws of Ohio, the title of the Bolton Steel Company being then adopted, while the next distinctive change was that involved in the incorporation of the concern under the laws of Pennsylvania, with the title of the Bolton Iron & Steel Company, this being the immediate predecessor of the Canton Steel Company, the only change being in the name. Mr. Bulley has been consecutively identified with the enterprise during the several changes and has retained a capitalistic interest throughout. The works originally utilized were erected by a malleable iron company, and later were changed to a steel plant under the title of the Aultman Steel Company, but they had ceased to be maintained in operation some time prior to the securing of the plant by Bolton, Myers & Company, while Mr. Aultman continued to be an interested principal for several years after the organization of the new operating firm. The original plant was equipped with a twelve-inch rolling mill and a few crucible melting holes and one or two hammers, while an open-hearth furnace was installed by the Bolton & Myers Company soon after they secured control of the plant, this having been among the first furnaces of this class built in the United States. The plant has been continuously enlarged, to meet the demands placed upon it, and at the time of this writing its equipment includes three melting furnaces, three mills and an adequate battery of the best type of steam hammers. The output is comprised entirely of high-tempered steel, and a large quantity of steel and mining drills are annually shipped to the most diverse sections of the United States, Canada and Mexico, while the balance of the product is utilized almost entirely for the manufacturing of springs for railway cars and various lines of vehicles, a large percentage of the carriages and other conveyances made in the United States being equipped with springs manufactured from the steel produced in the works of the Canton Steel Company. At the time of the inception of the enterprise the practical supervision of the works was placed in charge of Ogden Bolton, who continued to exercise such functions until 1884, when he disposed of his interests to Colonel J. J. Young, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, who continued in the active supervision of the works until his death, in 1893, since which time Mr. Bulley has been the general manager, while William E. Young, a cousin of Colonel Young, has held the office of superintendent since 1885.

JOHN SYLVESTER KIDDEY is the son of Charles Kiddey, who was born and reared in Columbiana county, Ohio, and there learned the trade of boilermaking. Charles Kiddey worked at his chosen calling for a number of years in Wellsville, and it was in that city that he met with an accidental death in the year 1881. The maiden name of the subject's mother was Mariah J. Close; she was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, and departed this life in the month of March, 1903. Her son, the subject of this review, first saw the light of day in East Liverpool, Ohio, the event dating from May 11, 1869. When he was quite young his parents removed to Wellsville, and it was in that city that he received his limited scholastic education and grew to maturity. The death of his father, which occurred when John S. was in his twelfth year, left the family of seven children dependent upon the widowed mother, and for some time thereafter hard work and the most frugal economy on the part of all were required to keep the hungry wolf from the door. By reason of his services being needed to assist in the general support of the family, the subject was obliged to quit school, and from his twelfth to his fourteenth year he worked in different pottery shops, earning but meager wages, which he generously contributed to the common fund. At the age of fourteen he entered the boiler works of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad, at Wellsville, for the purpose of learning boiler making, and after remaining some years at that place finished the trade at the Fulton Boiler Works, of the same place, before reaching his twentieth year. The master of a handicraft upon which he could rely with the assurance of a comfortable livelihood and something more, Mr. Kiddey then engaged with the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad, in the Wellsville shops, and there remained until 1897, the meanwhile developing efficiency and skill at his trade besides obtaining an insight into various lines of mechanical work with the object in view of ultimately engaging in business for himself. In November, 1898, he came to Canton and accepted a position in the boiler works of the Cleveland, Canton & Southern Railroad Company, in which capacity he continued until 1901, when he resigned and carried out a desire of long standing by establishing a shop of his own, the beginning of which dates from October of that year.

Mr. Kiddey began operations on a modest scale in a small building which stood at the rear of the Artificial Ice Company's plant, and meeting with a liberal patronage was soon obliged to increase his force of laborers and enlarge his works. In less than two years after establishing his business it had so grown in magnitude and importance as to render a building of still greater capacity necessary; accordingly, in January, 1903, he erected his present plant at No. 1150 Marion street, where he now has a large and fully equipped shop in which all kinds of boiler work is done with neatness and dispatch, the establishment ranking with the foremost in this part of the state. A skilled artisan himself, and appreciating the value of first-class workmanship, Mr. Kiddey employs none but efficient and thoroughly reliable men and the high grade of the products of his shops has won him a reputation for excellence such as few of his calling attain. Since coming to Canton he has been constantly before the people in his industrial capacity, and the intervening years have steadily added to his high repute as a business man and to his enviable standing as a citizen in every relation of life. He possesses good judgment, excellent character and habits, is a hard worker and successful manager, careful and conservative in his dealings and progressive in all matters in which the public welfare is concerned. His early years of rugged practical experience, by developing a spirit of self-reliance, thoroughly fitted him for leadership in industrial enterprises, and he engaged in his present undertaking with a full realization of its difficulties and responsibilities, but with well grounded faith in the splendid success by which his efforts have been crowned.

In the year 1889, in the city of Wellsville, Ohio, Mr. Kiddey was united in marriage to Miss Lillie M. Wilson, who has since presided over his home with dignity and true wifely devotion, besides presenting him with four bright, interesting children, whose names, in order of birth, are as follows: Beulah, Lester, Clark S. and Stuart D. Politically Mr. Kiddey exercises the greatest amount of independence compatible with good citizenship, declining to obey the behests of any party, and relying upon his own judgment as to the principles he espouses and the candidates to whom he gives support. He was reared in the Methodist Protestant church, but has profound regard for religion regardless of creed and assists generously in the support of different organizations, not forgetting to encourage unto his influence and material means the notable work of charity and benevolence of whatever name or order.

RICHARD A. CHRISTIAN is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, on the 25th of August, 1857, and being a son of Robert and Margaret (Jackson) Christian, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of West Virginia. The father of the subject was a butcher by trade and vocation, and he died in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1873, at the age of thirty-nine years. His wife was reared in Pennsylvania, where her father, Robert Jackson, passed the later years of his life, and she now maintains her home in Canton. She is a member of the United Brethren church, as was also her husband. The latter was a son of Robert Christian, Sr., who was born in Ireland, whence he came with his wife and five children to America, locating in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, where two other children were born to them, and of the number three are living at the present time. The subject of this sketch was the eldest in order of birth in a family of nine children, of whom three are living.

Richard A. Christian attended the public schools of his native city until he had attained the age of sixteen years, and then he began an apprenticeship at the moulder's trade in the works of the Crawford Malleable Iron Company, of Allegheny City, and after becoming thoroughly skilled in his trade he continued to be employed at the same in his home city until November, 1886, when he came to Canton, where he was employed in the works of the Elbel Company until 1892, when he became foreman of the works of the Canton Malleable Iron Company, serving with such discrimination and effectiveness that in 1896 he was made superintendent of the plant, and he has since remained in tenure of this office, holding the confidence and good will of those employed under his supervision and also of the members of the company which has granted him the preferment. In politics Mr. Christian is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but he has never been afflicted with office-seeking proclivities. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the United Brethren church, of which he served as trustee for four years, while for five years he was superintendent of the Sunday school, and assistant superintendent for four years, taking an active interest in all departments of the church work.

In Allegheny City, on the 18th of August, 1880, Mr. Christian was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Porter, who was born in Marietta, Ohio, being a daughter of Ezekiel Porter, and they are the parents of ten children, namely: Elsie (wife of Henry L. Baird, of Canton), Lillie, Charles, Pearl, Ella, Richard, Ruth, James, Esther and Paul.

OTTO THEOBALD GIESSEN. — Among Stark county's leading business men of the past, none were more closely identified with its material growth and best interests than the late Otto Theobald Giessen, of Canton, who for many years was an honored resident of the city and a leader in its industrial life. Throughout this long period he became widely known for his sterling qualities, his fearless loyalty to his honest convictions, his sturdy support of the sound principles that underlie true democracy, and for his discrimination and tact as an inaugurator and manager of large and important enterprises. His career as an intelligent, broad-minded citizen of large heart and generous impulses was one of signal usefulness and honor, and during his active years he not only achieved business success, but gave some of the best efforts of his life to the building up of the city's social interests and to the elevations of things relating to the moral welfare of the community. The representative of an old, intelligent and highly respected family, he not only maintained the high standard of an honored ancestral name, but by a character above reproach and a course of conduct singularly free from adverse criticism continually added to it new luster, and made it stand for upright manhood and sterling citizenship. A self-made man, he stamped the impression of his vigorous personality, not only upon the city, in which his most eminent success was achieved, but upon the county and business circles of the state, and his death, a few years ago, removed from Canton one of its characters whose influence and leadership, during a career of remarkable endeavor, was as instrumental as that of any other man in fixing the business status of the city and giving it its present high reputation among the leading industrial circles of the commonwealth.

Otto Theobald Giessen was born July 14, 1848, in Kusel, an industrious, thriving little town of Rhine Plats, in the western part of Bavaria, Germany, being the sixth child of Henry Julius and Elizabeth (Ritter) Giessen, both natives of the Bavarian Palatinate, as were their respective ancestors for several preceding generations. The father was a man of intelligence and marked influence, a graduate of the universities of Eslinger and Heidelberg, and for a number of years held the office of notary public, a position of far greater importance in Germany than is the office of the same name in the United States. To be a notary public in Bavaria requires not only sound judgment and good social standing, but also rigid intellectual discipline and thorough professional training, one of the essential qualifications required of a candidate of the office being a university degree. Henry Julius Giessen discharged the duties of his office in an able manner and was highly esteemed by the people of his jurisdiction, having been a man of profound learning, wide experience and superior professional ability. The subject's maternal grandfather was also a man of much more than local repute, as is attested by the fact of his having been honored with a number of high public positions, notably among which was that of postmaster of his province. During his incumbency, which was before the days of railroads, the mail was carried on horseback or in coaches, and the many routes over which he exercised jurisdiction and the large number of offices under his control show him to have possessed business and executive ability of a high order, as merit alone is the pre-requisite to official station in all parts of Germany. Both the Giessens and Ritters were of superior birth, being among the first families of Bavaria, and they were also connected by nature and the ties of marriage with a number of the leading people of the Empire. When the subject was about eight years old, his parents removed to Kirchheimer, a beautiful town of northeastern Bavaria, on the Mount Donesburg, where he first attended the public schools, later entering the lower classes of the Latin schools at the same place, which course of study he pursued until a youth in his early teens. When a lad of nine years, Mr. Giessen suffered the loss of his father, who died in the above town, and from that event until old enough to look after his own affairs he remained under the tender care and faithful guidance of his mother, a woman, as already indicated, of beautiful character, varied culture and marked piety; also spending considerable time with his grandparents. Being an ardent admirer of nature and a great lover of outdoor life, he was given ample opportunity to exercise these tastes while living with his grandfather, the latter, as already stated, being postmaster, with a great many horses at his command. Young Giessen rode over a number of mail routes, and in this way laid the foundation of the superb physical health which he subsequently enjoyed, also increased his admiration for the beautiful and romantic in nature, which was afterwards one of his most pronounced characteristics. At the age of fourteen he entered the Kaiserslantern, a fine technical school for boys, where he prosecuted his studies the greater part of the ensuing two years, making rapid progress while in that institution.

In 1865, when but sixteen years old, Mr. Giessen bid farewell to the fatherland, and emigrated to America, where brighter prospects for advancement in life appealed to his restless energy than obtained in the country of his birth. Locating in Cleveland, Ohio, where his brother-in-law, Carl Schmidt, was then living, he took a full business course in one of the commercial colleges of that city, after which he learned, under the direction of his relative, the brewer's trade. Some months previous to coming to this country he made a careful study of the art of making vinegar, and becoming efficient in the manufacture of that article, fully intended following it as a business. After settling in Cleveland, however, he decided to turn his attention to a pursuit which promised more liberal financial reward, accordingly, as already stated, he entered his brother-in-law's brewery, and in due time became familiar with every detail of the business.

In 1870 Mr. Giessen went to Akron, where he formed a partnership with another party for the manufacture of beer, the firm thus constituted lasting until about 1872, when he disposed of his interest in the concern and came to Canton. Always alert for opportunities, he saw a fine business prospect in the old Graber brewery, about two miles southwest of the city, and purchased the same, conducting it with encouraging success until the year 1883, when the property was destroyed by fire, entailing upon him a very heavy and embarrassing loss. With his characteristic energy, he at once set about to retrieve his broken fortune, and in due time built up the brewery on Cherry and East Fourth streets, which, after operating with liberal financial results until 1880, he sold and which since that year has been known as the Canton Brewing Company.

Mr. Giessen in 1885 organized the Crystal Springs Ice Company, of which he was made secretary and treasurer, and some time later helped establish and incorporate the Canton Buggy Company, being the largest stockholder in the enterprise, and for several years served in the dual capacity of secretary and treasurer. In 1891 he was a leading spirit in organizing and incorporating the Royal Brick Company, of which he was also elected secretary and treasurer, and these two offices, together with that of general manager, he held until his death, suffering several serious losses the meanwhile by the destructive agency of fire. From an appropriate obituary published immediately after his death, the following paragraph, pertinent in the connection, is quoted:

Mr. Giessen was an indefatigable worker, and by perseverance and energy he mounted the ladder of success, despite the innumerable reverses that at times threatened to obliterate the results of his years of toil. The all-devouring element of fire proved a destructive agent during his career. His first great loss was the brewery that he had spent large sums of money in improving. Later the ice houses, constructed near the brewery, were consumed, and then the Royal brick plant went up in smoke. More recently the Canton Buggy Company and the Gear Company's manufactory, in which he held large interests, were completely destroyed. Through all these disasters, however, he maintained the even tenor of his way and surmounted the difficulties with the ease born of a resolute will.

Mr. Giessen was married in Akron, Ohio, February 15, 1871, to Miss Julia Angne, a native of that city, but born of German parentage, her father and mother coming from the old world some years prior to her birth. The uncle of Mrs. Giessen served as colonel of an Ohio regiment in the late Civil war, and left the army at the close of the struggle with a distinguished record. Seven children have resulted from the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Giessen, six of whom are living, namely: Frederick, born July 23, 1873; Otto, April 13, 1874; Karl, December 13, 1876; Homer, February 8, 1879; Kurt, October 28, 1881, and Henry, who was born on October 25, 1886. Elsie, the deceased member of the family, was born October 3, 1882, and departed this life February 2, 1884.

In 1871 Mr. Giessen returned to the land of his birth, and spent some time revisiting the scenes of his childhood, and renewing acquaintances with friends whom he had not seen since bidding them good-bye so many years ago. He was always deeply interested in matters pertaining to his German-American fellow citizens, was identified with several of their organized societies, and in 1891 assisted with the Northeastern Ohio Saengerfest, which he served for sometime as secretary. It is needless to state in this connection that he was prosperous in his business affairs, his connection with the many large and important enterprises already alluded to being sufficient evidence of the fact. By diligent attention and superior management, he succeeded in accumulating a handsome fortune, and was also liberal in his contributions to every worthy object, having been charitable in all the term implies, and a leader in a number of private and organized benevolences.

In 1893 Mr. Giessen purchased Hartford Heights, a beautiful and imposing residence property situated in the eastern part of Canton, on the highest point of land in Stark county, which he greatly improved and beautified, and which he made his home the remainder of his days. Here, surrounded by many features which appealed to his love of nature, and with everything calculated to minister to his comfort, he spent the remaining years of his life in almost ideal enjoyment, his family and many friends appearing to vie with each other in contributing to his happiness. Mr. Giessen was a member of several secret fraternal organizations, but, with the exception of the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, manifested little interest in them during his latter years. He was a charter member of the Pythian lodge of Canton, and for twenty years one of its zealous workers, and was also identified with the United Commercial Travelers' Association. He united with the Elks lodge about six years previous to his death, and when he passed to his final reward that organization officiated at his obsequies, passed appropriate resolutions concerning his life, and different members spoke eloquently and feelingly of his character and virtues as a worthy brother and honorable citizen. Karl Claussen, of Cleveland, conducted the services, after which Past Exalted Ruler Thomas F. Turner, of Canton, in behalf of the Elks, rendered the following beautiful tribute to the memory of the deceased:

My friends, among the first acquaintances which I made upon coming to this city, a little more than ten years ago, was that which I formed with him at whose bier we have gathered this afternoon. It was my good fortune that the acquaintance thus early formed was destined to ripen into a warm and lasting friendship. I soon learned to know him as a man who scorned the mean and petty things of life; who never spoke ill of, nor did an act of wrong toward any man; whose given word was sacred as his written bond; who held above all other things respect of virtue, and the love of wife and home and friend. No loftier tribute can be paid to any man than to have it said: "He lived an upright and honest life." Too often the living hear words of censure only, while praise is reserved for the dead, which, "Like flowers on coffins laid, imparts no sweetness to departed days." It was the good fortune of him who lies before us, however, that during his lifetime those who knew him best were frequent and willing witnesses to his sterling worth. I recall that some years ago one of Canton's most prominent and influential citizens, in speaking of this thing which we call moral worth, said: "There are in this city two men who have been successful in life whom I know to be absolutely honest, upright men." The man who spoke these words has already "answered to the dread summons and joined the innumerable caravan which moves to the mysterious realms," while one of those of whom they were spoken has just solved the great mystery, and lies before us, cold in death. It is scarcely two years since Otto Giessen became a member of the brotherhood of Elks. In his life were exemplified the great principles upon which the order was erected. Justice, impartial; charity, unlimited; brotherly love, unrestrained; fidelity, unwavering—these were the guiding and controlling influences of his life, which, like great golden strands, were woven into the warp and woof of his very existence. But, my friends and brothers, words upon an occasion such as this are but empty nothings—silence, silence alone, is truly eloquent. Let us emulate the lofty and noble purposes of his life, let us "write his faults upon the sands, his virtues upon the tablets of our love and memory."

In November, 1896, Mr. Giessen contracted a severe cold, which with frequent relapses, finally developed in a typhoid condition, from which he suffered until the 21st day of the following February, when his spirit gently passed into the great beyond, leaving behind him a memory fragrant with good deeds and noble endeavor, and a name whose luster is destined to grow brighter with each succeeding year.

SAMUEL O. LAUGHLIN.—Canton has gained a wide reputation through the great industrial concerns which are here located, and her manufactured products go forth into all quarters of the civilized world. Two of the extensive and important manufacturing enterprises of the city are those conducted by the Cleveland-Canton Spring Company and the Cleveland Axle Manufacturing Company, of both of which the subject of this sketch is treasurer.

The Cleveland Axle Manufacturing Company is the outgrowth of the Kritch & Crane Manufacturing Company, which was established in the city of Cleveland more than half a century ago, for the manufacture of wagons and carriage axles. In 1875 the business was incorporated and the title of the concern changed to the Cleveland Axle Company, and in 1887 the subject of this sketch became associated with his brothers, George A. and William H., in the purchase of the business and plant, the latter having at that time been located opposite the establishment of the Standard Oil Company, on Broadway, in the city of Cleveland. In the autumn of 1892 the Canton plant was established, and the output has since that time increased threefold, the enterprise being one of the largest of the sort in the Union, while its facilities are unexcelled, representing a large capitalistic outlay and enlisting the best of skill and experience, as is also true of the Cleveland-Canton Spring Company in whose plant are manufactured carriage wagon and truck springs of the highest type of excellence. The latter plant was erected, adjacent to that of the axle company, in 1901, and the three brothers are likewise interested principles in this large and prosperous industrial enterprise. The official corps of the Cleveland Axle Manufacturing Company is as follows: George A. Laughlin, president; Samuel O. Laughlin, treasurer; Gordon M. Mather, secretary; and John G. Obermier, superintendent, while that of the Cleveland-Canton Spring Company is as follows: George A. Laughlin, president; William H. Laughlin, vice-president; Samuel O. Laughlin, treasurer; Gordon M. Mather, secretary; John G. Obermier, general manager. The employees of the two companies enjoy the privileges of a fine club house, which was erected for their use by the two concerns, the same being conveniently located between the two plants, and being equipped with baths, banquet room, library, ball room, gymnasium, etc.

The three Laughlin brothers are all natives of the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, and in the public schools of that place Samuel O. received his early educational training, while later he continued his studies in the Washington & Jefferson College, at Washington, Pennsylvania. The brothers were engaged in the steel and nail manufacturing business at Mingo Junction, Jefferson county, Ohio, prior to becoming identified with their present lines of enterprise.

JOHN H. LIND.—Occupying the responsible position of postal clerk on the line of the Cleveland & Marietta Railroad, and maintaining his home in Canton, Mr. Lind is well known to the people of Stark county, where he was born, and where the major portion of his life has been passed, while he is a representative of the third generation of the family in the county. Mr. Lind was born on the old homestead farm, in Plain township, three miles north of Canton, on the 30th of June, 1841, and is a son of Samuel and Hannah (Housel) Lind. His paternal grandparents were John and Elizabeth (Hess) Lind, or Funderlund, as the name was originally spelled, the former of whom was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, coming of a stanch old German family early established in the Keystone state, while his wife was born in the same state, near the Maryland line. In 1806, when their son Samuel, father of the subject, was a lad of eight years, they left the old home in Pennsylvania and came through to Stark county, where Grandfather Lind secured a tract of wild land, in Plain township, there developing a good farm and becoming one of the worthy pioneers of the county. Both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives on the old homestead, and each attained a venerable age. Samuel Lind was reared to manhood on the old homestead, which he purchased after the death of his father, the same comprising one hundred and sixty acres, and eventually he disposed of this property and purchased a smaller farm a short distance west of the old place, and there he lived until he was called from the scene of life's activities.

He was four times married, and became the father of thirteen children, all of whom are living at the present time, the subject of this review being the eldest of five sons born of the first marriage. His mother was a daughter of Anthony Housel, another of the sterling pioneers of Stark county, and one of whom more specific mention is made in the sketch of the life of his son Peter, on another page of this work. Hannah (Housel) Lind died in 1851, and her husband was thrice married thereafter, first to Mary Holm, next to Kate Stover, and finally to Amanda Flohr, the last named having survived him until 1901. Samuel Lind was a man of inflexible integrity, was successful as a farmer and commanded the respect of all who knew him.

John H. Lind, the immediate subject of this sketch, continued to assist in the work of the home farm until he had attained the age of eighteen years, his educational advantages in the meanwhile having been such as were afforded in the common schools in the vicinity of his home. At the age noted he came to Canton, where he learned the trade of harness-making, under the direction of C. C. Snyder, and after learning the trade he worked at the same for one year in Massillon, where he was residing at the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion. On the 5th of August, 1862, he manifested his loyalty as a true son of the republic by tendering his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in Company E, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was commanded by Colonel James Riley. Mr. Lind continued in active service until July, 1865, when he received his honorable discharge in the city of Cleveland. He participated in all the battles of the ever memorable Atlanta campaign and those of Franklin and Nashville, as well as all the engagements in North Carolina leading up to and culminating in the final victory for the Union armies. After the close of the war, in which his record was that of a valiant and faithful soldier, Mr. Lind returned to Canton, where he engaged in the harness business, in company with Charles Hane, and later he conducted an individual enterprise in the same line at Beach City, this county, continuing the same until 1883, when he entered the railway mail service, being a postal clerk on the line of the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad for eleven years and then being transferred to his present run. He has proved a most efficient officer and has the confidence and good will of all with whom he has come in contact, in a business or social way. He exercises his franchise in support of the Republican party, fraternally is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, and both he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian church of Canton.

On the 25th of October, 1866, Mr. Lind was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca J. Shriver, of Canton, she being a daughter of Jacob Shriver, one of the pioneers of the county. Of this union have been born four children, namely: Veronica, who is the wife of John Stidger, of Cleveland; Mary, who is still under the paternal roof; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Calvin A. Wise, of Cleveland; and Florence M., who also remains at home.

PROF. JOHN W. KIRK is one of Ohio's native sons, having been born March 9, 1854, in the county of Stark. In an early day his grandfather, John Kirk, a native of Pennsylvania, moved to Holmes county, Ohio, where he purchased land and engaged in agricultural pursuits. A little later he changed his abode to Lawrence township, Stark county, where he also followed farming for a livelihood, and he there spent the remainder of his days, meantime accumulating a comfortable competence and becoming a man of considerable note in the community. The maiden name of Mrs. John Kirk was Eliza Clark. She also was of

Pennsylvanian birth, and bore her husband three sons and four daughters, only two of whom are living at the present time. In politics John Kirk was an old-line Whig and appears to have been an active party worker. He and his wife were zealous Presbyterians and are remembered as a pious, God-fearing couple, whose lives were in harmony with their religious professions and who early impressed upon the minds and hearts of their children the strict precepts for which their church has long been distinguished. Among their sons was one by the name of J. Fox Kirk, whose birth occurred at Beech Creek, Pennsylvania, in the year 1826. He was quite young when his parents moved to Ohio, and his early years were spent in Stark county, where he received his educational training in the common schools. Reared on a farm, he engaged in agricultural pursuits for himself when a young man and later carried on the livery business in addition to tilling the soil, running an establishment for some years in the town of Canal Fulton. J. Fox Kirk was a gentleman of excellent parts, and all with whom he had business or other relations respected him for his sterling qualities of head and heart. He served for several years as township trustee and was also a member of the school board of Canal Fulton, in which capacity he did much to awaken an interest in the cause of education and promote the efficiency of the local system. He owned a fine farm of ninety acres in Lawrence township and as an agriculturist ranked with the enterprising and progressive men of his neighborhood, enjoying distinctive prestige as a citizen and intelligent man of affairs. Politically he was a Democrat, but not an active party worker, notwithstanding which he was honored with various official positions, in all of which he deported himself in an able and praiseworthy manner. When a young man J. Fox Kirk was married to Miss Lavina Caskey, daughter of John Caskey, who was born in Pennsylvania, near Lancaster, and was at one time sheriff of Stark county. He was a carpenter by trade, and worked at same until death. Mr. Kirk died on the 1st day of May, 1880, and left his descendants the memory of a spotless reputation which they prize more than the richest bequest of gold or houses and lands. His widow is still living, making her home at this time in Oberlin, Ohio. To J. F. and Lavina Kirk were born the following children: Mary J., John W., of this review, Ada, Flora and Lovie, all living but the last named.

The early years of Prof. Kirk were marked by no event of especial note, having been spent amid the quiet scenes and gentle influences of rural life, the farm affording him ample means for the development of his physical powers, while his mental growth received its first stimulus in the public schools of Canal Fulton, which he entered at the proper age. After completing the common school course he was desirous of further increasing his scholastic knowledge; accordingly he became a student of Oberlin College, where he prosecuted his studies for several years with the object in view of entering the teacher's profession. The better to prepare himself for educational work, he took a special normal course at Oberlin, meantime entering upon his career as a teacher at the early age of sixteen years.

Prof. Kirk's first experience as an educator was in the country, and that he succeeded with the school of which he took charge is attested by the fact of his retention for several successive years in or near the same neighborhood. After teaching in the rural districts for six years, and establishing an honorable reputation as an instructor and disciplinarian, he was employed by the school board of Canal Fulton, and from that time to the present day this thriving town has been his field of labor. Thus far twenty-two of his twenty-eight years of active educational work have been devoted to the youth of the village, during which long tenure of service he has come to the front as an efficient instructor, and today there are few teachers in the county as widely and favorably known. He has always been a growing man, putting forth every effort within his power to keep pace with the progress of modern educational thought and availing himself of every opportunity to add to his scholarship and increase his efficiency in matters of method. In point of continuous service he is one of the oldest teachers in the county, and judged by results his success has been second to that of none of his contemporaries.

Aside from his profession, Prof. Kirk has long been an influential factor in the public affairs of the community, having served nine years as town clerk and two years as township treasurer. He is now holding the office of township clerk, a position which his abilities well qualify him to fill. Like all good citizens, he manifests a lively interest in politics, being an earnest supporter of the Republican party, and as such he was elected to the various positions with which he has been honored. His fraternal relations are represented by the order of Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to Elliott Lodge No. 514, at Canal Fulton, in which he now holds the office of recording secretary, and was worshipful master of the lodge four years.

On June 25, 1896, Prof. Kirk was happily married to Miss Emma Moke, daughter of John Moke, a well-known citizen of Canal Fulton, a most fortunate union in that Mrs. Kirk is in every respect well qualified to be the wife and companion of such a husband, co-operating with him in all of his aspirations and presiding over his home with dignity and grace. Prof. and Mrs. Kirk are highly esteemed in the best social circles of the town and as members of the Presbyterian church take no small part in religious and charitable work, doing with their might what their hands find to do in the way of ministering to the suffering, relieving the distressed and laboring for the intellectual and moral advancement of the community. Prof. Kirk is also deeply interested in the Sunday school connected with his church, and for a number of years has been a teacher and an official in the same, and at the present time he holds the position of superintendent, being also treasurer of the church.

DAVID N. OWEN is the present incumbent of the office of councilman at large in the city of Canton, and is a scion of the third generation of the family in this city, where his paternal grandfather took up his abode fully eighty years ago. He is likewise of the third generation to be represented in the business of bricklaying and contracting.

Mr. Owen was born in the family homestead, on South Cherry street, Canton, on the 8th of April, 1858, and is a son of Peter and Hannah (Fielding) Owen. Peter Owen was likewise a native son of Canton, where he was born in the year 1821, and here he passed his entire life, having learned the brickmason's trade under the direction of his father, and he became one of the prominent and successful contractors and builders of the county, continuing to be identified with this line of enterprise until his death. He was a man of fine character and much ability, and was esteemed by all who knew him. In politics he was a Republican, having identified himself with the party at the time of its organization, and both he and his wife were prominent and zealous members of the First Christian church. The subject's mother was born in the city of Leeds, England, in 1823. Her father, John Fielding, died in England, and when she was about twelve years of age she accompanied her widowed mother to America. They first located in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, but soon afterward came to Canton, where she was reared to maturity and where her marriage was solemnized. Robert Owen, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to the United States from Wales, in company with his wife, and he was engaged in contracting in Canton at the time of his death, having been a brickmason by trade, as previously intimated.

David N. Owen was reared and educated in Canton, which has been his home during his entire life, and here he has well maintained the prestige of the family name, both in the matter of loyal citizenship and in the trade and business to which he has devoted his attention,—the same followed by both his father and grandfather. He attended the public schools until he had attained the age of nineteen years, and then became associated with his father, who was at the time a leading contractor, and under his careful instruction our subject became a skilled brickmason, and he has ever since followed this vocation as a contractor, having erected many fine public and business buildings in the county and doing a large and important business. He and his family are members of the First Christian church, in which he served as deacon for about fifteen years, taking a deep interest in all departments of the church work. In politics Mr. Owen accords an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, and in 1902 he was elected to represent the fourth ward in the city council, while on the 6th of April, 1903, under the new municipal code, he was elected councilman at large. He was the second Republican candidate ever elected from the fourth ward, and his services in the council have been such as to commend him to the confidence and good will of his colleagues and to gain him a gratifying public endorsement. Fraternally he is identified with both the senior and junior Orders of United American Mechanics.

In March, 1881, Mr. Owen was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Neidlinger, who was born in Canal Dover, Ohio, being a daughter of Philip and Elizabeth Neidlinger, and their happy union has been blessed with three children, Helen Marie, Ruth H. and Mildred.

JOHN E. YARGER is a native son of the Buckeye state and a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families. He was for three years superintendent of the Stark county work house, and in his administration of this important office he showed marked discrimination and ability and well justified the selection made when he was inducted into the office. He is a man of intrepid personal courage, calm and self-contained in the face of extreme emergency or hazard, and his forceful individuality makes him peculiarly eligible for such a position, in caring for the unfortunate wards of the county. He is honored for his sterling integrity of character and for the worthy efforts which have conserved his success in life, for he has been dependent upon his own resources from his boyhood days.

The Yarger family is of stanch German lineage, and the name has been identified with the annals of American history for several generations, the original ancestors in the new world having taken up their abode in Pennsylvania, presumably in the pre-Revolutionary epoch.

John E. Yarger is a son of Adam and Mary A. Yarger, and was born in Sandyville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 14th of July, 1858, and was there reared to the age of ten years, his father having died and left him to the care of his widowed mother when he was but five years of age. He secured a good common school education, having completed his schooling in Waynesburg, at the age of seventeen years, his mother having removed to that place about five years after the death of her husband. He early began to assist his mother and to provide for his own maintenance, having been employed at farm work in the vicinity of Waynesburg until 1876, and having eventually engaged in the conducting of a meat market in that town, continuing the enterprise for a period of seven years and being successful in his endeavors. Later he followed various occupations, having been village marshal of Waynesburg for a period of eighteen years and having gained a high reputation as a fearless and able officer. On the 1st of January, 1900, Mr. Yarger was appointed to the superintendency of the Stark county work house, in which capacity he served until January 1, 1903, and gave a most efficient administration, having the confidence and good will of those under his charge and having secured the unequivocal endorsement and approval of the people of the county. In politics he is a stanch supporter of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of the Maccabees.

In September, 1882, in Waynesburg, this county, Mr. Yarger was united in marriage to Miss Cora Klotz, daughter of Louis and Sarah (Van Meter) Klotz, of that place, and her death occurred on the 18th of July, in the following year. On the 6th of September, 1884, our subject consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Caroline Winters, of Sandy township, this county, she being a daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Storm) Winters, and to them have been born six children, namely: Maggie M., Ralph E., Walter W., Vesta L. Wilbur W. and Mamie K.

FRANKLIN PIERCE CALHOUN, M. D., is a son of Thomas and Harriet (Maple) Calhoun, and was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, March 15, 1853. He was reared on a farm and early became familiar with the varied labors pertaining thereto and of winter seasons attended the district schools until his seventeenth year. Meantime he clerked for a while in his brother's store at Wellsville, and later spent some time canvassing for various articles in different parts of the country, in this way earning money to pay his way through college, having decided while a mere boy to devote his life to the medical profession. His father tried to make a farmer of him and used his utmost endeavors to induce the lad to change his mind, but in vain. Realizing the value of intellectual training as a preparatory step to the medical profession, the Doctor, when but seventeen years old, entered Richmond College, at Richmond, Ohio, where he pursued his studies at intervals for about three years, spending his vacations canvassing to earn means to meet his tuition and other expenses. At the age of twenty he secured a teacher's license and took charge of a country school, but the work being repugnant to him, he soon resigned the position and turned his attention to other means of earning money.

At that time the oil excitement in Pennsylvania was at its height and young Calhoun was led to believe that he might do well in that field. As soon as he could arrange his affairs and get together sufficient money to pay his way he went to Pennsylvania, where he soon found remunerative employment as a tool dresser in a machine shop. After working thus for about nine months he became agent for a publishing house to sell various papers and magazines throughout the oil country, and in this capacity he canvassed several counties, spending about two years as an agent and meeting with an encouraging success.

With his finances in much better condition than formerly the young man was now enabled to carry into effect his desire to become a physician, and he accordingly entered the office of his older brother, Dr. William Calhoun, who was then practicing at Mechanicstown, this state, and after remaining under his instruction one and a half years became a student at the Western Reserve University at Cleveland. He was graduated from the medical department of that institution in 1885 and at once opened an office in Salineville, Columbiana county, where he practiced with professional and financial success until his removal to Canton, in 1891.

Dr. Calhoun's success as a physician and surgeon has been marked, and since locating in Canton he has rapidly risen to a prominent position among the leading medical men of the city. By strict attention to the duties of his profession he has won a conspicuous place in public esteem, the result being an extensive practice and an ample competence. His intercourse with his fellow men has been such as to merit the high regard of all and as a citizen, fully alive to whatever concerns the best interests of the community, he discharges his every duty as becomes a true and loyal member of the body politic.

Dr. Calhoun was married on the 30th of May, 1888, to Miss Ariel Caroline Gilson, who was born near Salineville, Ohio, June 19, 1863, the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Grafton) Gilson. Mrs. Calhoun was educated in the public schools and Mt. Union College and is a lady of refinement and culture, eminently fitted in every respect to be the companion and helpmeet of the husband with whose life her own is intertwined. Her father and mother, both natives of Columbiana county, were born in the year 1817 and 1823, respectively, Mrs. Calhoun being their only child. Dr. Calhoun and wife have one son, Thomas Austin, a bright and promising lad of eleven years, who is now a pupil in the city schools. The Doctor belongs to the Canton Medical Society, the Medical Society of Northeastern Ohio, the Stark County and Ohio State Medical Societies, and avails himself of every means which these and other organizations afford of advancing him in his noble calling. In politics he is an uncompromising Democrat of the old school and while active in behalf of his party's interests has no aspirations in the way of honors or public distinction. Religiously he was reared a Presbyterian, but he entertains broad and catholic views in matters of faith, giving to all churches due credit for their work in influence in leading mankind to a higher plane of living. Dr. Calhoun is now in the prime of manhood, courteous and genial in manner and his position as a physician, neighbor and citizen rests upon a substantial foundation.

MISS LEILA S. ROPER.—The ancestral history of the subject of this sketch dates from the earliest settlement of New England, the paternal line being directly traceable to the Puritans of Massachusetts who came over in the "Mayflower." The Ropers were actively identified with the pioneer period of that commonwealth, as were also the Richardsons, between whom and the former a marriage relation was consummated many years later. Ephraim Roper, the subject's grandfather, was born near Worcester, Massachusetts, September 17, 1799, in which part of the state his ancestors had long been quite prominent in public life. On the 9th day of July, 1821, he was united in marriage to Miss Eunice Richardson, whose birth occurred in the neighborhood of the above town May 9, 1799. She was also descended from one of the first Puritan settlers of Massachusetts and came of a family distinguished for devotion to religion and for a high order of musical talent. Several of the Richardsons became prominent clergymen of the Congregational and Unitarian churches, while others achieved eminent distinction as singers. Ephraim and Eunice Roper spent their lives in their native state and had children as follows: Daniel, born March 15, 1822, died in infancy; Charles E., father of the subject; Roswell David, born May 11, 1826, has been in the employ of the United States government for over a half century and at the present time is connected with the armory at Springfield, Massachusetts; Foster Harris, born April 17, 1829, was graduated from an eastern college when a young man, afterwards went west and is now living a retired life on a farm in Napa, California, his daughter, Belle, being the wife of Hon. Frank Combs, a congressman from that state; Mary Augusta, born October 21, 1832, was graduated from Mt. Holyoke College, Massachusetts, and married Rev. Lyman Taft, but is now a widow; Sarah Swan, the seventh of the family, was born December 1, 1834, and died in childhood; James S., born May 28, 1838, also died in childhood; and Eunice E., the youngest of the children, was born on the 19th day of July, 1841. She was also graduated from Mt. Holyoke College.

Charles Ephraim Roper, the father of Miss Leila S., was born October 27, 1823, at Sterling, Massachusetts, and, like the rest of his family, was given the best educational advantages the times afforded. After completing the public school course he attended college at Northampton and later became a skilled artisan at various kinds of handicraft. At a very early age he developed unusual efficiency in all kinds of delicate mechanism besides displaying inventive genius, which in due time won him a national reputation. When but fourteen years old he invented a pump which afterwards came into general use throughout New England and other parts of the Union and later his name was associated with a number of inventions which have been adopted in the United States and several European countries. In many respects he was much more than an ordinary man, as will be seen from the following obituary published in the Canton Repository on the 24th of March, 1901, a few days after his death, and written by Robert A. Cassady, one of the office force of Col. Ephraim Ball:

Of the many exceptionally skilled mechanics who from time to time have contributed to the material advancement of Canton and aided in its almost world-wide reputation as an industrial center the late Charles

E. Roper held a deservedly conspicuous place. He was born and reared on a farm, amidst the rugged environments characteristic of western Massachusetts, and after completing a collegiate course in one of the best institutions of New England, entered one of the leading industrial establishments which have distinguished his native state in the production of high-grade machinery, especially that employed in the manufacture of other forms of machinery. After a complete course of practical instruction from forge to finish, including a very thorough mastery of mechanical drawing, and through all the departments of labor-saving mechanical devices, he passed into the higher realm of invention, as well as the mechanic arts.

During the Civil war his talents were largely employed in the invention, improvement and manufacture of firearms of various descriptions at Philadelphia and other places and his services proved a great value to the government. Among the most notable products of his genius and handiwork, perhaps, was the well-known Gatling gun, which was perfected about the close of the war. Mr. Roper, with his own hands and with the aid of other skilled artisans under his supervision, produced the first practical sample of the present rapid-firing artillery, the most successful because the most destructive agency of modern warfare. This has given his name an international reputation and for it alone he will always be remembered as one of the greatest of American inventors.

Mr. Roper came to Canton about 1866 for the purpose of aiding Colonel Ephraim Ball in the development and perfecting of the renowned World reaping and mowing machinery. The manufacture of these machines required the invention and construction of labor-saving devices of the highest order, and to him we are indebted for the conception and development of some of the finest mechanical ideas ever used in our industries. His machines for the cutting of the gearing of the World mower and reaper are marvels of mechanism, particularly the cutter, by means of which bevel gearing is produced with absolute accuracy, entirely automatically, and at a cost much below that which attended the performance of the same work by previously known method. Mr. Roper was a genius as well as a thorough mechanic and by his death Canton lost one of its most highly esteemed and valuable citizens. During his later days, enfeebled by age and bending under the weight of heavy physical infirmities, he retired from the public gaze and therefore was little known by the present active generation; but his old associates in the field of mechanics will long cherish the memory of this distinguished inventor and sterling friend and co-laborer.

Charles Roper was twice married, the first time to Miss Lucy Brooks, who died after a brief wedded life of eight months; four years later Mr. Roper moved from Massachusetts to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he became superintendent of a large manufacturing establishment operated by H. H. Ryan and it was while serving in that capacity that he married, in 1854, a niece of his employer by the name of Mary Coombs. Miss Coombs was born July 15, 1830, in Loudoun county, Virginia, the daughter of Presley Coombs, whose father achieved distinction as one of the bravest American generals in the Revolutionary struggle and in the war of 1812. Gen. Coombs' name occupies a conspicuous place in American history, ranking with those of other prominent men who devoted their all to the cause of liberty and independence. He was twice married, became the father of twenty-two children and died at the almost unprecedented age of one hundred and nine years. The wife of Presley Coombs was Ann Rhein, a member of an old and highly respected German family, representatives of which came to this country in an early day and settled in Pennsylvania. In the course of years the name was Anglicised to Ryan and as such it has since been known.

As already stated, Mr. Roper was connected for many years with the industrial interests of Canton, and after his health began to fail he resigned his position and from that time until his death looked after his farm near the city. He died at his home on Cleveland avenue, March 11, 1901. Shortly after moving to this city he united with the First Methodist Episcopal church, in which he was a faithful and active worker to the end of his days. In politics he was an unswerving Republican and always kept himself well informed relative to the great questions and issues upon which parties were divided.

The following are the names of the children born to Charles and Mary Roper: Howard Harris; Charles Presley, an artist and portrait painter who was killed in a railroad accident in the year 1887; Leila S., whose name heads this sketch; Walter Ephraim, of Canton; George A., of Steubenville, this state, who formerly studied law under Judge Fawcett, of Canton, but is now a traveling salesman for a large wholesale house. He married Jean Kinsey, of New Philadelphia, and is the father of two children, George and Kenyon; Lyman Taft, the next in order of birth, is a resident of Canton, as is also Frank F., the youngest of the family.

Miss Leila S. Roper was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and was quite young when her parents moved from that city to Canton. Here she spent the years of her childhood and youth and at the proper age entered upon her educational career as a pupil in the public schools. Hers was a studious nature and her progress was in every way commendable. She made a creditable record in the high school, from which she was graduated with the class of 1876, and the better to fit herself for teaching she subsequently took special courses in mathematics, history, literature and the languages in Chautauqua College, New York. Miss Roper's career as an educator began in the fall of 1877, when she took charge of a room in the South McKinley Avenue school and from that time forward she taught various grades in the different buildings until promoted, in 1896, to the high school, where she has taught English literature and history to the present time. Of her abilities as an instructor much may be said, but the high character of her work speaks much louder in her praise than any eulogy from tongue or pen. Actuated by a laudable ambition to excel, she has devoted her splendid talents to this end, and that she has realized, at least partially, her ideal of what a true teacher should be is attested by her long period of service in a city where only the highest order of intellectual and professional attainment is recognized. Miss Roper is highly esteemed by her professional associates and by reason of her own personal worth as well as on the account of the social standing her family has long enjoyed, occupies a prominent position in the society circles of Canton.

CHARLES C. LOYD.—The parents of the subject were H. P. and Cynthia J. (Crawford) Loyd, the former a native of Maryland and the latter of Carroll county, Ohio. Grandfather Loyd, who was descended from one of the old and well-known families of Maryland, was also a native of that state. When a young man H. P. Loyd removed from Maryland to Carroll county, Ohio, where for some time he followed his trades, those of shoemaker and harnessmaker. Subsequently he engaged in the mercantile business at Magnolia and Bowerstown and met with good success in his enterprises. He retired from active business life in 1901 and now makes his home in Jefferson, Harrison county, this state. His wife's death occurred in 1887. They were the parents of six children, three sons and three daughters.

Charles C. Loyd was born at Bowerston, Harrison county, Ohio, on the 18th of November, 1860, and was reared at that place and at Perrysville, this state. His boyhood days were spent upon his father's farm, and in the meantime he faithfully attended the common schools of his neighborhood, acquiring a fair education. Indeed, so proficient had he become in his studies that at the age of eighteen years he was granted a license to teach school. After being thus occupied a short time, Mr. Loyd learned the carpenter's trade and worked at it for four years. At this time he was elected clerk of his township and at the same time he accepted a position in his father's store. Two years later he was elected justice of the peace, and performed the duties of the office to the perfect satisfaction of the public generally. In 1887 Mr. Loyd removed to Canton, where for a time he was employed at his trade. Subsequently he engaged in newspaper work, in a reportorial capacity, and served as court-house reporter for The Repository. By reason of his pronounced ability and indomitable energy he had earned for himself the unbounded confidence of the leaders of his party and other influential people in Canton and on April 15, 1891, he was elected to the responsible position of city clerk, and is still filling that office. During the more than a decade in which he has been retained in this position he has demonstrated his eminent fitness for his post and has thus justified the wisdom of his selection by the electors of Canton. He has for a number of years been influential in the councils of the Republican party and has been active, aggressive and effective in advancing the interests of the party. For the past ten years he has represented his ward as a delegate in all the important party conventions and has taken an important part in directing the local policy and outlining the city and county campaigns.

Fraternally Mr. Loyd has been a member of the Knights of Pythias since 1885 and takes a deep interest in the welfare of the order, having served as a representative from his lodge to the grand lodge.

In 1882 Charles C. Loyd was united in marriage with Miss Jennie B. Wears, the daughter of Cyrus C. Wears, of Sherodsville, Carroll county, this state. This union has been a most happy and congenial one and has resulted in the birth of one child, Ross E.

The qualities which have made Mr. Loyd one of the prominent and successful men of Canton have also brought him the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens, for his career from the beginning has been one of well-directed energy, strong determination and honorable methods. Endowed by nature with strong powers of mind and possessing the energy to direct his faculties in the proper channels, he early became a man of resourceful capacity, as the able administration of his important official position abundantly testifies. Socially he is a most agreeable gentleman, always genial and pleasant in manner and possessing the happy faculty not only of making friends, but of binding them to him by his good qualities of heart and head.

HARRY W. HAINES, who is superintendent of the yards and shipping department of the Canton Bridge Company, one of the important industrial concerns of the city of Canton, is a native of the state of New Jersey, having been born near the city of Camden, on the 13th of August, 1847, and he remained on the homestead farm until he had attained the age of fourteen years, having in the meanwhile attended the township school. At the age noted he secured employment in a window-glass manufactory in Winslow, where he continued to work until February 2, 1865, when he enlisted as a member of Company B, Second New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, in which he continued to serve until the close of the war of the Rebellion. In March, 1867, Mr. Haines came to Ohio and located in the town of Salem, where he engaged in the blacksmithing business, having previously served an apprenticeship of fifteen months at this trade. He remained in Salem until the autumn of 1867, when he came to Canton, where he was employed for five years as a blacksmith in the shops of the C. Aultman Company, while for more than a year thereafter he was in the employ of the Chromatic Printing Press Company, of this city. He then entered the employ of the Russell Company, with whom he remained until August 10, 1874, when he took a position in the blacksmith department of the Wrought Iron Bridge Company, being placed at the head of said department in 1880 and continuing in this position until 1891, when, upon the organization of the Canton Bridge Company, he was made superintendent of the works, retaining this incumbency until the autumn of the succeeding year, when he assumed his present position as superintendent of the yards and shipping department of the business, in which capacity he has continuously served from that time, being one of the popular and highly esteemed employes of the company and being known as a capable and discriminating official. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party, and his religious views are in harmony with the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose faith he was reared. Fraternally he is identified with George D. Harter Post No. 555, Grand Army of the Republic; Nimisilla Lodge No. 39, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Lodge No. 26, Protected Home Circle. While he has not been an aspirant for official preferment he served one term as a member of the city council, representing the second ward.

In Salem, Ohio, on the 19th of August, 1868, Mr. Haines was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Bilger, of that place, she being a daughter of Daniel Bilger, now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Haines became the parents of seven children, of whom only one is living, H. Nelson, who is in the employ of the Canton Bridge Company, of Canton.

EDWARD E. EARLY, the efficient electrician of the Canton Bridge Company, was born April 6, 1870, in Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and is the son of John and Ella (Strong) Early. The father died when the subject was a boy and the mother, who subsequently married a man by the name of Johnson, departed this life a number of years later in the city of Chicago. Edward E. Early spent the first eight years of his life in his native city and then was taken by his parents to Jamestown, New York, later removing to Chicago, Illinois, where he grew to maturity. He received his literary education in the schools of Jamestown and Chicago, subsequently took a special course in mechanical and electrical engineering in the International Correspondence School and after completing the same was employed as machinist in the latter city until 1891. In that year he came to Canton and accepted a position with the Canton Supply Company, which he held for several years, the meanwhile engaging in business for himself at his residence, which he still carries on in connection with his other duties.

In August, 1902, Mr. Early engaged with the Canton Bridge Company as head electrician, and the same year installed the first plant in this city, since which time he has assisted in establishing other plants in various parts of the country. He is an accomplished electrician, is also familiar with the most advanced mechanical work of the day and as a thorough master of his profession fills the responsible position he now holds, with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the firm with which he is identified. Mr. Early is a close, critical student and avails himself of every possible opportunity to add to his technical knowledge and to increase his efficiency in reducing the same to practice. He is an up-to-date man, with progressive ideas, enterprising in all he undertakes and any work to which he addresses himself is sure to be pushed to successful completion with the least possible delay. Thoroughly devoted to his profession and a business man in all the terms implies, he also manifests a lively interest in public affairs and is not unmindful of his duty as a citizen. Politically he yields allegiance to no political party, being independent in the matter of voting, and he usually casts his ballot as his judgment or conscience dictates, regardless of partisan leadership. In his religious faith he is a Lutheran, to which church his wife also belongs, both being esteemed members of the congregation worshipping in Canton.

Mr. Early, in the year 1893, was united in marriage with Miss Alice Jones, of Canton, the union resulting in the birth of four children whose names are as follows: Robert, Edith, Genevieve and Kramer.

ULRICH HUBER.—The subject of this sketch is a native of Switzerland, having been born in that country October 15, 1838. In 1852, when fourteen years of age, he came to America, unattended by any relative, his parents having preceded him some time. They had located in Sullivan county, New York, and thither the youth went. He attended school and readily acquired a fair knowledge of the English language and applied himself to such work as he found to do until after the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion.

In the spring of 1864, when the cause of the Union was in most dire straits and Federal troops were badly needed, Ulrich Huber enlisted, became a soldier in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-Fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. He was with Sherman in his march through Georgia to the sea, participated in a number of warm engagements during his term of service and was one of that magnificent army which was the feature of the grand review in the city of Washington, in June, 1865.

On receiving his discharge, Mr. Huber returned to his parents, who by that time had moved to Luzerne county, Pennsylvania. He then entered the employ of the Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad Company, at Scranton, as a helper in the department of blacksmithing. In 1866 he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth K. Cook, a native of the city of New York, born November 25, 1847. For two years after their marriage they continued to reside in Scranton, then moved to Stark county, Ohio, settling in Plain township, where they have lived ever since. They are the parents of two children, Julia M., the wife of George White, and Nettie M., the wife of Horace G. McDowell. Each has received a good common school education and is a worthy, amiable matron.

For a number of years after coming to Ohio Mr. Huber was in the employ of the Aultman Manufacturing Company, though latterly he has been engaged in farming. He is the owner of a well-kept, well-tilled and fertile little farm of ten acres in Plain township, and on it is a nice residence, a good barn and outbuildings, the whole constituting an ideal little home. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and was a member of the school board a number of times, being in politics a Republican. As did many other natives of a foreign land, he proved his loyalty to the land of his adoption by risking his life in its behalf.

The Huber family has been for generations one of the foremost families in Switzerland. Many of them became geologists of prominence, one became an eminent divine, noted throughout his country, and many others have become noted in their respective professions.

HOWARD W. YANT comes of stanch German ancestry in the agnatic line, the family having early been established in Pennsylvania, while from the old Keystone state have gone forth worthy representatives into the most diverse sections of the Union. Philip Yant, Jr., his paternal grandfather, was reared and educated in Northampton county, Pennsylvania, and there was solemnized his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Scroyer. They became pioneers of Stark county, having come hither from Pennsylvania about the year 1820 and taken up their abode on a tract of heavily timbered land in Pike township, where they passed the remainder of their lives, the grandfather eventually succeeding in reclaiming a considerable portion of his farm, which is now one of the valuable and well improved places of that township. He died in 1867 at the age of seventy-six years, and his wife passed away in 1851, at the age of forty-nine years. They became the parents of eight children, of whom two are living at the present time. Eli Yant, father of the subject, was born on the old homestead farm, in Pike township, on the 11th of December, 1836, and he was reared under the environments and influences of the pioneer epoch, early beginning to lend his aid in the work of clearing and cultivating the farm, while his scholastic privileges were such as were afforded in the primitive log school houses of the locality and period. He devoted the major portion of his life to agricultural pursuits, having been for a few years employed as a mechanic in the shops of the Col. Ball Plow Company, in the city of Canton. In 1859 he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Miller, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of the late John Miller, one of the sterling pioneers of Pike township, and a sister of Eli Miller, who is one of the representative citizens of Canton. In the spring of 1882 Eli Yant removed with his family to Huntington county, Indiana, where he continued to be engaged in farming until 1895, since which time he has lived retired, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Emley, in the city of Huntington, this county. His devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest in 1893, both she and her husband having originally been members of the Methodist Episcopal church, while later they identified themselves with the German Baptist church, in whose faith they ever remained firm and unwavering. Eli Yant was formerly a Republican in politics, but in late years, in harmony with his uncompromising opposition to the liquor traffic, he has exercised his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Prohibition party. He is a man whose life is unshadowed by wrong or suspicion of evil, and he has ever commanded the unequivocal confidence and regard of all who have known him. Of his six children we enter the following brief record: Clara is the wife of Anthony A. Weber, of Huntington, Indiana; Olive F. is the wife of John Mapes, of Wabash county, Indiana; Albert C. is a resident of Centerville, Iowa; Cora M. is the wife of Anthony C. Emley, of Huntington, Indiana; David M. M. is a resident of Chicago, Illinois; and Howard W. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Howard W. Yant was born on the homestead farm in Pike township, Stark county, on the 16th of April, 1877, and here he gave an inceptive glance into the rudiments of scholasticism, having here begun his primary education in the district school. He was but five years of age at the time of the family removal to Huntington county, Indiana, and there he continued his studies in the district schools and completed the curriculum of the township high school, in the city of Huntington. Later he was a student for several years in a private normal school in that place, and he was early led to take up the profession of teaching, for which he manifested a natural predilection. At the age of nineteen years he began teaching in the public schools of Huntington county, where he was thus engaged for two years, and he then came to his native county and after teaching one year in the district schools of Pike township he took up his residence in the city of Canton, where he has since made his home, though for two years he was the able and popular instructor in the grammar school at Navarre. In January, 1903, Mr. Yant resigned his position as teacher and accepted a position in the freight department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in which he is now serving. In politics Mr. Yant is a staunch Republican, keeping well informed in regard to the questions and issues of the hour, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, his membership being maintained in the Simpson church, in the city of Canton. He enjoys marked popularity in educational and social circles and is a young man for whom a bright future may confidently be predicted.

CHARLES F. HAINES.—The subject of this review is a representative of a family which has been identified with the annals of American history from the pre-Revolutionary epoch, his great-grandfather in the paternal line having been a native of England and having been a patriot soldier in the Continental army during the war of the Revolution. William D. Haines, the father of the subject, was a native of New Jersey, where he was engaged in farming for the major portion of his life, coming to Canton, Ohio, in 1899, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying on the 8th of June, 1901, at which time he was eighty-one years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Salome King, was born in the province of Alsace, France, whence she came to America in her youth, and she died in Canton, on the 4th of January, 1900, in her seventy-seventh year. This worthy couple became the parents of seven children, of whom four are living at the present time. The parents were devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and in politics the father gave his allegiance to the Republican party from the time of its organization.

Charles F. Haines was born on a farm near the city of Camden, New Jersey, on the 20th of June, 1855, and he was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the subscription and public schools of the locality. He remained on the old homestead until he had attained the age of twenty years, and thereafter was employed for some time in a saw-mill. He continued to reside in New Jersey until 1881, when he came to Canton, where he was in the employ of the Wrought Iron Bridge Company until 1892, when he engaged with the recently organized Canton Bridge Company, in whose employ he since remained, working in the forging department and commanding the respect and esteem of all who know him. In politics he is a stalwart Republican and has ever taken a lively interest in the party cause. In the spring of 1901 Mr. Haines was elected a member of the city council, as a representative of the second ward, and in this body he served most efficiently for two years, while he is known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen. Fraternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and the Knights of the Maccabees.

In Camden county, New Jersey, on the 19th of January, 1876, Mr. Haines was united in marriage to Miss Keziah Beebe, who was born and reared in that state, and of their six children three are living, namely: Anna, Grace and Benjamin H.

WILLIAM W. MARSHALL was born on a farm in the immediate vicinity of Harmarville, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, on the 3d of March, 1867. His great-grandfather, Samuel Marshall, settled in Pennsylvania in an early day, while the original American progenitor emigrated hither from Scotland in the colonial epoch of our national history. Samuel Marshall was the father of seven children, viz: William, James, Hugh, Alexander, Samuel, George and Elizabeth, of whom James, the grandfather of the subject, was next to the eldest. He devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, as have the majority of his descendants, and in the old Keystone state are to yet be found numerous representatives of this stanch old pioneer family. James Marshall was born in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, and after he and his brother William had attained maturity they purchased adjoining tracts of land in Allegheny county, and their father simultaneously secured an adjacent property, each of them becoming the owner of a quarter section. He married Jane McCool, and both died in the county last mentioned, having become the parents of seven children, namely: Mary is the widow of Thomas McLaughlin and lives in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania; John was the father of the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth married James Griffith, and she lives in Detroit, Michigan; Martha is the wife of John Ibbotson, of Canton, Ohio; Samuel resides on the old homestead farm in Pennsylvania; Harriet is the widow of Thomas McPhillamy; and Margaret is the wife of Charles Engle, of Allegheny county, Pennsylvania.

John Marshall, father of the subject, was born on the old home farm in Indiana township, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, about the year 1842, and his early educational advantages were such as were enjoyed by the average farmer boy of the locality and period, being confined to a somewhat irregular attendance in the district school in the vicinity of his home. He continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits in his native county until 1870, when he removed with his family to the city of Pittsburg, where he secured employment in the rolling mill of one of the extensive steel works of that place, and he continued to be thus employed for the greater portion of his time until his death, which there occurred in October, 1881. While residing on the farm he took an active part in local affairs of a public nature, having been a zealous worker in the cause of the Republican party. He and his wife were both consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church and were folk of sterling character, ever holding the esteem of all who knew them. The subject's mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Griffith and she was a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Griffith. The Griffith family is of Irish extraction, and in the Emerald Isle Joseph Griffith was born and reared. After his marriage he emigrated to America and took up his residence in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, where the mother of the subject was born, and eventually he purchased a fine farm in that county, where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their days. The mother of the subject passed away in 1901, at the age of sixty years.

William Marshall, the immediate subject of this review, was reared to the age of twelve years on the old homestead farm in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, being the third in order of birth in a family of nine children, concerning the others of whom we offer the following brief record: Joseph died in 1881, aged about nineteen years; Lydia is the wife of Albert McKeleby, of Butler county, Pennsylvania; Robert resides in New Kensington, Pennsylvania; Hugh died in 1881, at the age of ten years; Charles is a resident of Natrona, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. Harry and John both died in 1881, making four of the children who passed away within the one year; and Irene is the wife of a Mr. Mason, of Carnegie, Pennsylvania. The subject attended the district school until he had attained the age of eleven years, assisting in the work of the farm during the summer months. At the age of eleven years he left the parental roof and began the battle of life on his own responsibility. He secured employment on a farm for the first year, and for the following two years he was employed by George L. Walters, who was engaged in the lumber business in the town of Sharpsburg, Pennsylvania. At the age of fifteen he began work in a steel rolling mill in Pittsburg, under the direction of his uncle, Mr. Ibbotson, with whom he came to Canton in 1885. Here he was employed for fifteen years in the works of the Canton Steel Company, working in the capacity of hammer man, and for the following year he was an employe of the Canton Crucible Steel Company. In June, 1902, he established himself in the retail liquor business and cafe at 204 East Tuscarawas street, where he has since conducted a successful enterprise, having a well equipped establishment.

In this city, on the 23d of November, 1898, Mr. Marshall was united in marriage to Mrs. Jennie Miller, who was born in Canton, being a daughter of Robert and Alice Larmar, and of this union one child has been born, Lydia. Mrs. Marshall died in Canton, on the 19th of November, 1902, mourned by all who knew her.

Mr. Marshall cast his first presidential vote in support of the Hon. James G. Blaine and he has since continued to give a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, having been an active and zealous worker in its local ranks. In the spring of 1900 he was elected to represent the seventh ward in the city council, and in 1902 was elected as his own successor, a fact that indicates that his services had met with the approval and endorsement of his constituency. Fraternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and is a charter member of the local aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is well known in the city and enjoys marked popularity within a wide circle of acquaintances.

FREDERICK H. SIGRIST.—The fair little republic of Switzerland figures as the place of Mr. Sigrist's nativity and he comes of one of the ancient and prominent families of that land. His father, Frederick Sigrist, was born in 1824, and his mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Neifenegger, was born in 1830. Their marriage was solemnized in 1852, and Frederick H., the subject of this review, was their only child. The father came to the United States in 1867, and in 1870 his wife and Frederick made the voyage across the Atlantic and joined him in Massillon. Here he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring on the 26th of March, 1887. His widow still survives and maintains her home in the city of Duluth, Minnesota. She is a member of the German Reformed church, as was also her husband.

Frederick Henry Sigrist was born in Interlachen, canton Bern, Switzerland, on the 14th of February, 1857, and there his early educational discipline was received. He completed a course in a normal school in his native town and was graduated therein, though he was but thirteen years of age at the time of his coming to America with his mother. After the family located in Canton he continued his studies for three years in the local high school, after which he was matriculated in Mount Union College, near Alliance, this county, in 1878, completing the philosophical course in this institution and being graduated as a member of the class of 1878, with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. He then returned to Canton, where he held a clerical position in the offices of the C. Aultman Company for the ensuing three years, after which he was a traveling salesman for two years. At the expiration of this period he entered the employ of Stone, Odean & Company, wholesale grocers, of Duluth, Minnesota, having charge of the city trade of the house, while he eventually became an interested principal in the same. He disposed of his interest in the business in 1893 and engaged in the commission brokerage business in Duluth, following this line of enterprise about seven years. He returned to Canton in 1900 and identified himself with the Knight Manufacturing Company, in the capacity of confidential clerk, and of this position he still remains incumbent, being known as a business man of distinctive executive ability and good judgment and holding prestige in connection with the industrial interests of the city. In politics he is an independent Republican, advocating the generic principles of the party, but reserving to himself the privilege of supporting men and measures which meet the approval of his judgment, regardless of the closely defined partisan lines.

In Canton, on the 25th of May, 1882, Mr. Sigrist was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Elizabeth Howenstein, daughter of John and Julia (Sanford) Howenstein, of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Sigrist have three children, Mary Helen, who was born August 11, 1884; Flora Elma, who was born March 25, 1891, and Robert J., who was born July 18, 1898.

CHARLES L. WORRALL, M. D., was born in the village of Chester Hill, Morgan county, Ohio, on the 27th of April, 1872, being the only child of Edward P. and Ruth (Smith) Worrall. His father was born in the same village, on the 23d of January, 1846, being the youngest of the twelve children of Zebulon and Martha R. (Radcliff) Worrall, the former of whom was born in Germantown, Pennsylvania, in 1798, and the latter in the city of Richmond, Virginia, in 1803, both being of English lineage and of old Quaker stock, being birthright members of the Society of Friends. Both accompanied their respective parents on their removal to Mount Pleasant, Jefferson county, Ohio, in the early pioneer epoch, and there their marriage was solemnized. Shortly afterward they removed to Morgan county, Ohio, where they passed the remainder of their lives, folk of intelligence and sterling worth of character. As members of the Society of Friends the Worrall family were, both by discipline and conscientious conviction, opposed to warfare, and during the progress of the war of 1812 they were sore pressed and heavily fined because of their refusal to take part in the conflict. During the crucial epoch leading up to the war of the Rebellion the members of the family in Ohio assisted many a poor slave to freedom, the home of Grandfather Worrall having been a station on the famous "underground railroad," through which so many slaves were transferred from one point to another until they gained their liberty. Zebulon Worrall was a tailor by trade, and to the same he devoted his attention during the major portion of his active business career, but in the later years he engaged in the nursery business, in which he met with marked success.

Edward P. Worrall was reared beneath the parental roof and was thoroughly trained in the nursery business under the direction of his father, who was conducting a prosperous business during the years of his boyhood, while he had such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools of the period. He succeeded his father in the nursery business, in which line of enterprise he was actively engaged until about 1884, while during the intervening years he had put his distinctive artistic talent to effective use, painting many pictures of a high order of merit and disposing of the same to advantage. The nursery business proved uncongenial to him, and about 1884 he withdrew from the same and turned his attention to photography, in which line of art production he has since been engaged, having a well equipped studio in the town of Chester Hill, Morgan county. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and, though reared in the Quaker faith, he is now a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, having been quite active in its work for a number of years past. The mother of the subject was born in Chester Hill, Ohio, on the 1st of January, 1852, being a daughter of Joseph and Mary (Fawcett) Smith, both of English ancestry and of the old Quaker stock early established in America, Dr. Worrall having in his possession a complete record of the Smith family from the first emigrant ancestor who came over with William Penn's original colony, as a part of the first expedition organized by that honored man. The Smith family also took a prominent part in the conducting of the underground railroad in the ante-Rebellion days, as well as during the progress of the war. The mother of the Doctor died nine days after his birth, and later his father married Miss Lucy Snowden, daughter of Professor James F. Snowden, who was for many years principal of the city schools at Wheeling, West Virginia. One child was born of this union, James S., who is a printer by vocation and who is now a resident of Amesville, Athens county, Ohio. After the death of his second wife the father of the Doctor married Miss Rebecca Worthington, of Chester Hill, and they are the parents of three children, Paul, Edith and Mary, all of whom still remain beneath the home roof-tree.

Doctor Worrall was reared in his native town, and received a mother's care from his father's second wife, while his early educational discipline was secured in the public schools, including a thorough course in the Chester Hill high school, under Professor J. A. Stone, a most able educator and one who has attained a high reputation in his chosen profession. This school has sent more students to the State University of Ohio than any other high school, with the same average attendance, in the state. The Doctor gave particular attention to the study of civil engineering, with the intention of adopting this profession as a vocation, and he also was preparing to enter the state university after his graduation in the high school. However, he started on a trip down the Ohio river with his parents, and this cost him dearly since he contracted malarial fever and did not recover from the same for two years, his health being seriously impaired during this period. He was thus disappointed in taking up his university course and, rather by accident than design, drifted into the photographing business, which he had learned in his father's studio. He traveled into various sections of the Union, taking views and placing the same on sale to interested persons, and while he was thus engaged he visited Bartlett, Ohio, where he formed the acquaintance of Miss Gertrude Jewell, who two years later, on the 11th of May, 1893, became his wife. She was born in Ironton, being a daughter of William G. and Margaret (Barrows) Jewell, who now reside in Marietta, Ohio, where Mr. Jewell is engaged in the real-estate business. When but thirteen years of age Mr. Jewell enlisted as a drummer boy in a regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, and when but fifteen years of age he was incumbent of the position of drum major, serving during the entire period of the Rebellion. He played the long roll for the opening of the battle of Stone River, and later was captured at Chickamauga and confined in the famous Libby prison, at Richmond, Virginia. At the time of his capture he smashed his drum over a stump to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy, and upon his being exchanged and rejoining his regiment its members presented him with a handsome new drum, which he still retains and which he naturally prizes most highly. The union of Dr. and Mrs. Worrall has been blessed by the birth of a daughter, Ruth Anna, born May 17, 1896.

After his marriage Dr. Worrall engaged in the nursery business at Chester Hill and applied himself assiduously to the same for the ensuing three years. In the spring of 1895 he began reading medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. O. A. Lambert, then of Chester Hill, but now a practicing physician of Marietta, Ohio, of which city he is mayor at the time of this writing, and in the autumn of the following year our subject was matriculated in the Ohio Medical University, at Columbus, where he was graduated in both medicine and pharmacy, in the spring of 1900, receiving the degrees of Doctor of Medicine and Graduate in Pharmacy. He was particularly ambitious and earnest in his technical study and investigation, as is evident in his having simultaneously carried forward the two courses, and upon leaving the college he was thoroughly well equipped for the active work of his profession. While he was prosecuting his medical course his finances reached a low ebb, and he had recourse to his knowledge of photography, through which he supplied the requisite funds to complete his course, averaging more than fifty dollars a month through this source, and finding his devoted wife an able helpmeet and coadjutor, since he exposed and developed the negatives, giving his attention to the latter portion of the work in the evenings, while Mrs. Worrall assumed charge of the printing and finishing of the photographs.

In the same spring in which he was graduated Dr. Worrall came to Magnolia and established himself in the active practice of his profession, and it may well be said that his novitiate was very brief, for his unmistakable ability and gracious personality soon gained him a representative support and he has already built up a most successful and gratifying practice. He is a member of the Ohio State Medical Society and is a constant and earnest student, so that he keeps in close touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery and is a skilled and discriminating member of the profession. He is medical examiner for several life insurance companies and for Magnolia Lodge No. 105, Ancient Order of United Workman, of which he is a valued member, while he is also identified with Chester Hill Lodge No. 757, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Waynesburg Tent No. 20, Knights of the Maccabees.

The maternal grandmother of Mrs. Worrall bore the maiden name of Susan Hayes, and she was a first cousin of the late President Rutherford B. Hayes. Her paternal grandfather, William Jewell, was of Scotch ancestry and came to Ohio from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in an early day, having for a number of years been engaged in the shoe business, while in later years he devoted his attention to farming. He served in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion. Her maternal grandfather, Henry Barrows who was a grandson of Captain Barrows, of the Revolution, was a miller by vocation. In politics the Doctor gives his allegiance to the Republican party. They have a pleasant home in Magnolia and take a prominent part in the social life of the community, in which their friends are in number as their acquaintances.

PETER H. BARR is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and the youngest in a family of five children, whose parents were Joseph and Elizabeth (Dollerer) Barr, the father born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the mother in Adams county, the same state. Joseph Barr became a resident of Stark county, Ohio, as early as 1832, settling at Paris, where he purchased land and engaged in farming, which location he continued to the end of his days. In connection with agriculture, he also conducted an undertaking establishment at Paris for a number of years and met with fair success in his business affairs, having been a man of intelligence, energy and sound judgment. He died in 1891, his wife surviving him a number of years, departing this life at the advanced age of ninety-three. The following are the names of their children, Henry, John, Eliza, Andrew and Peter H., all of whom spent the greater part of their lives in Stark county.

Peter H. Barr was born on the family homestead, near Paris, September 3, 1836, and there spent the early years as a farmer's boy, laboring in the fields in the summer time and of winter seasons attending the village school. He remained at home until about twenty years of age, and then started out to make his own way, leaving his native place on March 4, 1856, the day of President Buchanan's inauguration, and going to South Bend, Indiana, where he shortly afterwards secured a position in the office of the Studebaker Manufacturing Company. The mammoth establishment into which this enterprise has since grown, being now the largest wagon and vehicle factory in the world, was then a small concern and so delighted were the proprietors with the ability and gentlemanly demeanor of their new clerk, that they urged upon him to continue with them permanently and take an interest in the business. One of Mr. Barr's early acquaintances in South Bend was Schuyler Colfax, afterwards congressman and vice-president of the United States, between whom and himself a warm friendship sprang up, which continued unbroken as long as that gentleman lived. Much to the regret of the Studebakers, Mr. Barr, after two years of efficient and faithful service, during a part of which time he was traveling auditor for the company, resigned his position and, returning to Stark county, engaged in the drug trade at Canton, purchasing an interest in the oldest establishment of the kind in the city. The drug business to which he succeeded was established as early as 1845 or 1846, by a German by the name of Witting, after whose death, about 1850, it passed into the hands of Dr. Conrad J. Geiger, with whom the subject effected a copartnership, as above noted, which lasted until 1862. In the latter year Mr. Barr opened a drug house in Alliance, where he conducted a very successful business until 1876, when he returned to Canton and bought the establishment with which he had formerly been connected, his old partner, Dr. Geiger, having died on January 6th of the preceding year. He has managed the house very successfully ever since, and is now not only the pioneer druggist of Canton, but also one of the city's oldest and most highly esteemed business men. The establishment, which he personally manages, has had a continuous existence for considerably more than a half century, during which time it has kept prominently to the front and is to-day one of the solid, reliable and popular houses of the kind in this part of the state, commanding a full share of patronage and enjoying a reputation which has always been honorable and a credit to the city.

In addition to the drug business, Mr. Barr has been identified at different times with other enterprises, notably among which is the City National Bank of Canton, an institution he assisted in organizing and which he served for a number of years as president, having been the first man elected to that position. Later he took an active interest in establishing the Central Savings Bank, of which he was also made president and to the success of which he contributed greatly by his influence, correct business methods and superior executive ability. For many years he was a director of the Fairmount Orphans' Home of Alliance, in the management of which excellent institution he still manifests a lively interest and of which he is at the present time a director.

Mr. Barr, in the year 1859, contracted a matrimonial alliance with Miss Ada Franklin Geiger, daughter of Dr. Conrad J. Geiger, his old business associate and at one time a prominent physician of Canton. Dr. Geiger was born about 1810 in Eppingen, duchy of Baden, Germany, came to the United States with his parents, when a boy, and was reared on Indian Run, where his father took up land and engaged in farming, the family being one of the earliest in that locality. Dr. Geiger studied medicine at Massillon, this county, under Dr. Bowen, became in due time one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Canton, and, as already stated, conducted a successful drug business for some years, in connection with his profession. He married Miss Lydia Ann Adams, a near relative of President John Quincy Adams, and reared several children, who became useful members of society and honorable in their respective spheres of life. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Barr seven children have been born, namely: Minnie L., Winnie G., wife of George P. Pettitt, United States consul at Dusseldorf, Germany; Daisy D., now Mrs. U. S. Johnson, who lives in Canton; Fannie, also a resident of this city, is the wife of C. W. Keplinger; Bessie married George Kimbark and lives in the city of her birth; Fred, teller of the Central Savings Bank, married Clara Wikidal, the youngest of the family being Marie E., who is unmarried and still lives with her parents.

In 1899 Mr. Barr and wife made an extensive tour of Europe, during which they traveled over a number of countries and visited many places of interest, among them being the old home of his father-in-law in the kingdom of Baden. The trip was not only interesting, but to a gentleman of Mr. Barr's intelligence and wide reading exceedingly instructive, both he and his wife having greatly enjoyed the outing and returning from it much refreshed in body and mind.

Mr. Barr has been an honored member of the Masonic brotherhood for many years, and now holds the title of past-master of Canton Lodge, having also served as eminent commander of the commandery, Knights Templar. Religiously he was reared in the Evangelical Lutheran faith and is still a faithful and consistent member of the church, as is also his wife, both being active in all lines of work under the auspices of the congregation with which they are identified. In politics he is a Republican, having cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, since which time he has never wavered in his allegiance to his party.

WILLIAM HASSOLDT.—This gentleman, for many years a prominent business man of Canton, but now deceased, was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, on April 21, 1821. His father, Conrad Hassoldt, also a native of that country, spent all of his life in the fatherland, as did also the mother, both of whom now sleep in the old cemetery in which is mingled the dust of several generations of their ancestors. As soon as old enough the subject entered the schools of his native place, and, being designed for the ministry, subsequently prosecuted his studies in one of the colleges of Darmstadt, receiving in due time a finished education. For some reason he decided not to take holy orders, but instead applied himself to the tailor's trade and soon became efficient thereat, after which he worked at various places in his native land, finally making his way to Switzerland, where he followed his chosen calling for a number of years. Not long after his arrival in the latter country Mr. Hassoldt formed the acquaintance of an estimable young lady by the name of Sophie Richard, who was born in the city of Neuchâtel, June 29, 1824, and between whom and himself a tender attachment soon sprang up, which eventually led to their marriage. After working at his trade in Switzerland until 1847, Mr. Hassoldt decided to go to America, accordingly, on May 22d of that year, in company with his wife and others, he took passage at Antwerp, on the sailing ship "Juniata," Captain Shields, of Boston, commanding, and after a voyage of eight weeks duration landed at the harbor of New York. After seven months in that city, he came to Stark county and settled in Canton township, about four miles south of Canton, where he taught a German school for a short time, then entered the employ of a tailor in Canton by the name of Nichols Bour, in whose establishment he continued for some time, later engaging with Absalom Kitt. Being a fine workman, his reputation soon attracted a large number of customers to the shops where he was employed, many people coming long distances to have him cut and make their garments. In due time he started a tailoring establishment of his own, which from the beginning was liberally patronized, although during the first few years he was obliged, by reason of the great scarcity of money, to take produce and different articles of trade as pay for his work. In 1856 he moved his family to the city, and during the ensuing three years lived on East Tuscarawas street, at the end of that time changing his abode to a small frame building which stood on the present site of the St. Edward's Hotel. After spending three years at the latter location, he moved into a brick building on South Market street, which he subsequently purchased and remodeled with extensive alterations and additional improvements, not only converting it into a beautiful and imposing dwelling, but adding greatly to its value also. Mr. Hassoldt's business continuing to grow, he was soon able to start a merchant tailoring establishment, and, with the timely assistance of his good wife, this in due time became one of the leading places of the kind in the city. He built up a large and lucrative trade, which, by reason of the excellence of his workmanship and the high grade of his goods, grew in magnitude and importance as the years went by until in the course of years he found himself the possessor of a handsome fortune and able to retire from active work. Mr. Hassoldt made a number of judicious investments in Canton real estate, which subsequently became quite valuable and in this way no small portion of his wealth was acquired. He erected next to his residence a fine brick block, which has since been known as the Hassoldt block, in addition to which he also put up a number of tenement houses in other parts of the city, the rental from the different properties returning him a handsome income.

When a youth, Mr. Hassoldt united with the Evangelical church and, as already indicated, was educated with the object in view of entering the ministry. Although giving up that profession, he remained ever afterwards a true and devoted Christian, and after becoming a resident of Canton joined the Reformed church, of which Rev. Herbruck was for so many years the beloved pastor. He was a member of the choir of this congregation for seventeen years, assisted in getting up many public entertainments for the different churches of Canton, both Protestant and Catholic, and, being a fine vocalist, his services were in almost constant demand. He was deeply and fervently religious, and demonstrated his piety in his relations with his fellow men, his character having been above reproach and his honor and integrity unquestioned. In politics he was staunchly Democratic, but he never entered the arena of partisan affairs nor asked any official position at the hands of his fellow citizens. Fraternally he was a prominent Mason, and a charter member of the German Odd Fellows order.

Mr. and Mrs. Hassoldt reared a family of five children, the oldest of whom, a son by the name of William, married Miss Lelia Anderson, and lives in Canton; they have three children, viz: Bertha, Carrie and Lucy; Pauline, who also resides in this city, is the wife of Thomas Tomer and they have two children, Stella and Elsie; Emma married Frank Jay, of Canton, and Lina is the wife of Edmund Groetzinger, and the mother of three children, viz: Alice, now Mrs. Harry Hiles, Emma and Gretchen. The youngest of the family was Bertha, wife of Thomas Keefer, of Canton, both she and her husband being deceased. They were the parents of two children, Ruby and Sophie, who make their home with Mrs. Jay.

The parents of Mrs. Hassoldt came to the United States in 1850 for the purpose of joining their daughter, but the father, receiving a fatal injury aboard the ship in which they took passage, died in a New York hospital shortly after landing. His wife, whose maiden name was Marie Raunseir, survived him many years, dying at the home of one of her sons in Bethlehem township, Stark county, at the advanced age of ninety-one. Mr. Hassoldt lived to be sixty-six years old, and departed this life on April 21, 1888, honored and esteemed by all who knew him, his loss being deeply deplored in Canton and throughout the county of Stark.

EDWIN D. STREB, farmer and merchant, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born on the paternal homestead in Canton township, October 8, 1859. Peter Streb, his father, a native of Germany, came to the United States at the age of twenty and located at New Berlin, Stark county, where he worked for a number of years at the blacksmith trade. He was a skillful mechanic and in addition to his regular line of work made all kinds of farming tools and implements, and it is stated that the first buggy springs ever used in Canton were manufactured in his shop. Peter Streb was twice married, the first time at New Berlin, and after the death of this lady he chose for a companion and helpmeet Miss Mary Frantz, who bore him children as follows: Frances, now Mrs. Frederick Kemery, of Findlay, this state; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Henry Martin, of Mapleton, and died at that place; Josephine, wife of William Thouvenin, of Stark county; Edwin D., of this review; Joseph, a resident of Canton, and Nettie, an unmarried lady, living in this county. After spending a number of years in New Berlin and acquiring a comfortable competence from his trade, Mr. Streb purchased a farm south of Buck Hill, in Canton township, to which he removed shortly after his second marriage and in which the remainder of his life was spent, dying there in 1880. He was a quiet, law-abiding citizen, a Democrat in politics, a member of St. Peter's Catholic church and in every relation of life a most excellent and praiseworthy man. His widow, also a devout Catholic, and a lady of excellent standing, now resides in the city of Canton.

Edwin D. Streb was blessed with excellent parental training, added to which the wholesome and invigorating discipline of the farm had much to do in forming his character and shaping his future course of life. At the proper age he entered the Buck Hill school, near his home, where he enjoyed for some time the instruction of Miss Sarah Staver, his first teacher, and later continued his studies at the same place until eighteen years of age, making substantial progress the meanwhile. Quitting school he assisted with the farm work until the death of his father, at which time, when about twenty-one years old, he entered the old Buck Hill Mill to learn the trade of flour making. After serving the full time with the Rank Brothers, proprietors of the above establishment, he followed his chosen calling at different places during the ensuing six years, and at the expiration of that time bought twelve acres of fine land, south of the Aultman Hospital, and engaged in market gardening, to which line of work he devoted his attention very profitably until 1900.

Disposing of his gardens at a good figure in that year, Mr. Streb purchased the Maxwell farm, consisting of thirty-six acres lying between Navarre and Massillon streets, Canton, which he cultivated with liberal financial results until the summer of 1902, when he erected a combined dwelling and business house on the corner of Navarre and Garfield avenues, where he has since carried on merchandising in connection with agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Streb is not alone in business, having a partner by the name of Herman Goodman, who looks mainly after the interests of the large general store which they own, the subject devoting the greater part of his attention to the farm. The latter is being successfully conducted and yields every year a liberal income, the store also proving a fortunate venture, having a large and lucrative patronage, which is steadily growing in magnitude. Mr. Streb is a man of great energy and his well-directed industry has placed him in a situation of comparative independence. He exercises good judgment in his business affairs, his dealings with his customers and with the trade in general are upright and honorable, and the position he now occupies in commercial circles has given him a reputation in every respect eminently worthy. Personally he is quite popular, having a large acquaintance in the city and throughout the county, all with whom he has business or other relations speaking in complimentary terms of his many estimable qualities and characteristics. Politically Mr. Streb votes the Republican ticket, but being more of a business man than a politician, his ambitions have never been aroused by a desire for office or public station. Born a Catholic and reared in that faith, he has always remained loyal to the mother church, at this time being a member of St. Mary's parish and a regular attendant of its stated services. Mr. Streb is a married man, his wife having formerly been Miss Mary Monnot, of Louisville, Ohio, daughter of L. V. Monnot, a well known and much respected resident of the city. The union, which was solemnized in the year 1882, although without issue, has been a very happy one, both husband and wife moving in respectable circles and being very highly esteemed by a large number of friends and acquaintances in the city of their residence and elsewhere. Mr. Streb is a member of the Protected Home Circle.

WALTER ANDREWS.—Catering to a large and representative patronage and standing exponent of a line of industry of marked importance in any populous community, the Andrews Baking Company, of Canton, has attained a high degree of success and prestige under the able management of Walter Andrews, who is the head of the concern and one of the well known and honored business men of the city of Canton. In the year 1890 Mr. Andrews engaged in the baking business on Cherry street, his operations at the start being conducted upon a modest scale, but by careful business methods and the outputting of a superior class of goods he soon built up a good trade, which has ever shown a cumulative tendency. In 1892, to accommodate his increasing business, Mr. Andrews purchased his present eligible and well equipped quarters at 210 South Market street, providing the same with the requisite accessories for the facile carrying on of the business. He purchased the property at sheriff's sale, and it is somewhat singular that he later sold the property and repurchased it again under similar conditions, retaining it for a time and then repeating the operation when the sheriff again placed it upon the market, it thus seeming evident that his interposition has been demanded to make the business a success. He has attained prosperity through his individual efforts, having been indefatigable in his efforts and progressive in his policy. He manufactures all lines of bakery goods and caters to both the wholesale and retail trade, operating from six to ten wagons during the year, while his corps of employes has at times reached an aggregate of twenty-eight individuals, from which statements may be gained an idea of the proportions of the trade which the establishment controls. In the process of manufacture an average of one hundred barrels of flour is utilized each week.

Mr. Andrews is a native of England, having been born in Essex county, on the 8th of January, 1843, and having there passed his boyhood days, receiving a common-school education. He then went to the city of London, having previously served an apprenticeship of three years at the baker's trade, receiving no wages during this interval but laying the foundation for his future success by acquiring an intimate and thorough knowledge of the business in all its details, while it was the custom at the time for a definite sum to be paid an employer for thus carrying an apprentice through a trade, the mother of our subject having paid twenty pounds for his instruction in the line.

At the age of eighteen years Mr. Andrews, relying upon his own resources and being without financial reinforcement, decided to seek his fortunes in America. He embarked in the city of Liverpool and in due time reached his destination in the city of New York, where he found himself veritably a "stranger in a strange land," but the self-reliance, energy and industrious habits which he brought to bear proved efficacious from the start, as have they throughout the entire course of his career, which has not been without the reverses usually attending the man of business, but which has been one of consecutive and successful application as a whole. Since coming to America Mr. Andrews has made fifteen trips to his native land. During the war of the Rebellion he was signally loyal to the land of his adoption, serving as steward on a government transport. After the close of the war he went to Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in the bakery business on his own account, later coming to Akron, Ohio, where he was similarly engaged in business for the long period of eighteen years. In 1889 Mr. Andrews came to Canton, where he has since been consecutively engaged in business with the exception of a short interval. His parents, Robert and Elizabeth (Reeve) Andrews, both passed their lives in England, where his father was engaged in the grain business during the major portion of his active career, and both he and his wife were members of the Episcopal church. They became the parents of eight children, of whom four are living at the present time. The subject is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but has never been an aspirant for office, and his religious views are in harmony with the tenets of the Episcopal church, in whose faith he was reared.

In Wadsworth, this state, on the 29th of December, 1887, Mr. Andrews was united in marriage to Miss Rosetta Bird, and they have two children, Bessie and Rose.

SEWELL L. HODGDON.—It may be said, in an initiative way that the subject comes of staunch old New England ancestry, the original ancestors in the agnatic line having disembarked in the Plymouth colony only a short time, relatively, after the Pilgrim fathers had landed from the "Mayflower" at Plymouth Rock; again, we find that by members of the family was valiant service rendered in the war which determined the independence of the colonies from the British crown, while in both the war of 1812 and that with Mexico were representatives of the line found defending their country's righteous cause, while to the Union armies in the greatest civil war in the annals of history the family contributed its quota, among the number being the honored subject of this sketch, who thoroughly proved his loyalty and intrinsic patriotism and adds new laurels to an honored name.

Mr. Hodgdon is a native son of the old Pine Tree state, having been born on the parental homestead farm, in the immediate vicinity of the town of Trenton, Hancock county, Maine, on the 25th of September, 1837, and having remained on the farm until he had attained the age of sixteen years, his incidental educational discipline having been received in the village schools, in which he laid an ample foundation for the broad fund of knowledge which he has gained in the great school of experience, whose headmaster is a wise and discriminating one. His father, Stephen Hodgdon, was born in Portsmouth, Rockingham county, New Hampshire, in the year 1799, and after attaining years of maturity he took unto himself a wife, in the person of Miss Sarah R. Coolidge, who was born in Trenton, Maine, in 1801. Silas Coolidge, her maternal grandfather, served as a valiant soldier in the Continental line during seven and one-half years in the war of the Revolution, having been a participant in the battle of Bunker Hill and having been with Washington's forces at Valley Forge during the memorable winter in which so fearful hardships were endured by the brave and loyal yeomen who were battling in freedom's holy cause, striving to hurl oppression back and keep the boon of liberty. Mr. Coolidge was wounded in a skirmish with the Indians, but during his long term of service escaped further injury of a serious nature, while he was mustered out with the rank of first sergeant, having been a member of a Maine regiment. His son Silas was a soldier in the war of 1812, in which he maintained the military prestige of the family name. The original ancestors of the Coolidge line came from England with the Pilgrim Fathers and identified themselves with the Plymouth colony, the lineage being of pure English extraction. In the Mexican war a Mr. Watson, a relative of the subject, went forth as a member of a Massachusetts regiment raised by Caleb Cushman, who was in command of the same.

Stephen Hodgdon devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits and was one of the sterling and highly honored citizens of Hancock county, Maine, his death occurring in the village of Trenton, that county, in 1867, at which time he was sixty-eight years of age, while his widow survived him by several years, passing away in 1873, at the age of seventy-two, both being laid to rest in the old cemetery in the town where so many years of their lives had been passed. Both were devoted members of the Baptist church, and theirs was the "faith that makes faithful," a faith that justifies humanity in the face of the eternal. In politics Mr. Hodgdon was originally an old-line Whig, but he espoused the cause of the Republican party at the time of its inception and ever afterward remained a staunch supporter of the same.

At the age of sixteen years Sewell L. Hodgdon, the immediate subject of this sketch, shipped on the sailing vessel "Henrietta," plying between Trenton and Boston and later in the West India trade, his services being rendered in the capacity of cook on his initial voyage, while he continued to follow a seafaring life until he had attained his legal majority, having in the meanwhile risen to the position of second officer on the sailing vessel "A. Blanchard," of Boston, while in his various voyages he encountered many hardships and also had many interesting experiences. On his last voyage he suffered an attack of yellow fever, at the port of Santiago de Cuba, and was kept on board his ship, being attended by Captain Clark, of a New York ship and being incapacitated for duty for only three weeks. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Hodgdon went to Waltham, Massachusetts, where he entered upon an apprenticeship to the machinist trade, being thus engaged at the time when came the clarion call to arms, as the integrity of the nation was placed in jeopardy through armed rebellion. Inherent and intrinsic loyalty prompted a ready response on his part, and on the 19th of April, 1861, Mr. Hodgdon enlisted as a private in Company H, Sixteenth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, the captain of his company being Gardiner Banks, a brother of General Banks, while the colonel of the regiment was Powell T. Wyman. He proceeded to the front with his command and continued in active service until May 3, 1863, when he received a severe wound in the left shoulder, which was penetrated by a musket ball, incapacitating him for further work in the field. He was sent to Washington, D. C., and thence to the Mower hospital, on Chestnut Hill, in the city of Philadelphia, where he remained until June, 1864, when he received his honorable discharge, his term of enlistment having expired. He was present at the capture of Norfolk, Virginia, in April, 1862; participated in the entire Peninsula campaign, with its memorable and sanguinary battles, from in front of Richmond to Harrison's Landing; was in action in the second battle of Bull Run; was in the battle of Fredericksburg, under Burnside; was present at Chantilly when General Kearney fell, and then took part in the battle of Chancellorsville, where he was wounded, as already noted. He was discharged with the rank of first sergeant and his record was that of a faithful and loyal soldier of the republic.

After recovering his health Mr. Hodgdon finished learning his trade at Waltham, at which he was engaged as an employe of the Tremont Watch Company, in Boston, Massachusetts, and later in Providence, Rhode Island, and he then entered the employ of the New York Watch Company, on the 6th of November, 1867, and with this concern and its successors he has ever since been identified,—a period of more than thirty-five years. This fact is adequately significant to render further remark unnecessary in the connection. The name of the company was later changed to the Hampden Watch Company and finally to the Dueber-Hampden Company, under which name the magnificent business in the city of Canton is conducted at the present time, while the products of the establishment have gained a world-wide reputation. The company established its factories in Canton in the year 1888, at which time Mr. Hodgdon came here in its employ, having long held a responsible position with the concern and being one of its oldest and most trusted employes, while he has gained a wide circle of friends in Canton and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

In politics Mr. Hodgdon has ever given an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he has lent his influence and active support. While he was employed by the New York Watch Company in their former works in the city of Springfield, Massachusetts, he served three terms as a member of the city council, while for two years he was a member of the board of education in Canton, being its president for one year. Fraternally he manifests his abiding interests in his old comrades in arms by retaining membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, whose ranks are being so rapidly decimated by the one invincible foe, death, and his affiliation is with McKinley Post No. 25. He is also a member of Hampden Lodge No. 27, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in Springfield, Massachusetts, and of U. S. Grant Council No. 35, Senior Order of United American Mechanics, in Canton. In this city he was one of the organizers of the Maine Club, whose object is the proper commemoration of the destruction of the battleship of the name, while he was also a member of the committee having in charge the birthday memorial to the late President McKinley, in his home city of Canton, on the 27th of January, 1903.

In the village of Flushing, Long Island, on the 15th of January, 1866, Mr. Hodgdon was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Young, who was born in that place, a representative of a prominent old family of New York. She died in Springfield, Massachusetts, on the 26th of August, 1889, and while Mr. Hodgdon was thus called upon to face the great loss and bereavement of his life, there comes the consolation of the memory of her beautiful and self-abnegating character,—a memory that rests "like the benediction that follows after prayer." She was a devoted and consistent member of the Episcopal church, of which the subject has also been a member for the past forty years. Of the children of this union we enter the following brief record, as a proper conclusion of this brief sketch: Wilson R. is assistant teller in the Chicopee National Bank, at Springfield, Massachusetts, and Arthur E. is an employe of the Dueber-Hampden Watch Company, in Canton.

ARTHUR T. HILLES, to whom this particular sketch is dedicated, is one of the representative farmers and citizens of Washington township and is one of Ohio's native sons who rendered valiant service in that greatest of all internecine conflicts, the war of the Rebellion, so there are many points of a salient order which render him eligible for biographic orders in a compilation of the province assigned to this. He was born in the village of Albany, Mahoning county, Ohio, on the 12th of January, 1842, being a son of Enos and Mary A. (Harris) Hilles, whose five children are all living, Arthur T., of this sketch, being the eldest, while of the other four we enter brief data as follows: Jennie is the wife of Johnson Grant, of Washington township; Howard is a prominent member of the bar of the state of Kansas, being engaged in the practice of his profession in its capital city of Topeka; Charles H. is a successful farmer of Washington township and is individually mentioned on another page of this volume; and Ella is the wife of Dr. Byron Douds, of Canton, this county. Enos Hilles was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1816, being a son of Robert and Jane (Lee) Hilles, the former of whom was a prominent and influential farmer of that county and a leading agitator in favor of abolition of slavery in the early days. He was a son of David and Dinah (Milhouse) Hilles, the former of whom was a son of Hugh and Ann Hilles, who emigrated from Ireland to America prior to 1750 and took up their residence in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, whence they removed to Chester county, in 1756, David being the youngest of their four children, and from this worthy couple has sprung a numerous family, their descendants being now found in the most diverse sections of the Union. Jane (Lee) Hilles, the paternal grandmother of the subject of this sketch, was a daughter of Isaac and Mary Lee, of Berks county, Pennsylvania, and both the Lee and Hilles families were prominent in the Society of Friends in the early history of the Keystone state. Both the grandfather and grandmother lived to about the age of eighty years, and the latter was related in a collateral way to General Robert E. Lee, the distinguished officer of the Confederate army during the Rebellion. Robert Hilles removed with his family to Mahoning county, Ohio, in 1832, settling near the town of Salem, and about 1844 he came to Stark county and purchased about sixty acres of land in section 14, Washington township. Though they subsequently made one or more changes of abode, they continued to reside in this township until the time of their death and were honored pioneers of this section.

Enos Hilles was reared to the age of sixteen years in his native county in Pennsylvania, and then accompanied his parents on their removal to Mahoning county, Ohio, and later to Stark county, where he personally purchased a small farm, of about twenty acres, in section 14, Washington township. In 1853 he purchased a farm in section 1, this township, and forthwith removed to the same, the property being now owned by his son, the subject of this sketch. He resided on this homestead until within a few years of his death, when he took up his home with our subject. Enos Hilles was a man of exceptional intellectual ability and mature judgment, a close student of the questions of the hour and able in dialectics and in debate, while as a public speaker he proved himself forceful and convincing. He was one of the wheel-horses of the Republican party in his section and did effective campaign work on various occasions, while he was called upon to serve in a number of the township offices. He was an ardent advocate of the established gold standard in connection with the government's financial policy, and through the papers in the city of Alliance he carried on a vigorous discussion with Charles Bonsel and others on the money question, being one of the first to thus strenuously advocate the gold standard, while in the connection he gained a high reputation for his masterful handling of the problem, though his exertions in the line undoubtedly hastened his death, as he had been for a number of years quite seriously afflicted with heart disease. He was reared in the faith of the Quaker church, and while in later years he was not formally identified with any religious body he never wavered in his faith in the all-wise Providence and was an earnest Christian, exemplifying his belief in his daily life, which was exemplary in all its relations. His death occurred about the 18th of December, 1890, and his cherished and devoted wife entered into eternal rest on the 22d of February, 1894, so that in death they were not long divided.

Arthur T. Hilles, whose name initiates this sketch, was reared on the homestead farm and was afforded the advantages of the public schools of the locality and period, after which, in 1861, he was matriculated in Mount Union College, near Alliance, this county, but a few months later he withdrew to assume the responsibilities and hardships involved in the call to higher duty to which he thus harkened as a loyal son of the Republic. At this time the dark cloud of civil war obscured the national horizon, and on the 2d of February, 1862, Mr.

Hilles enlisted as a private in Company K, Seventy-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, his company being recruited at Canton, and with this command he continued in active service until the close of the war, participating in a number of the most notable conflicts incidental to the great struggle, including the battles of Fort Donelson, Pittsburg Landing, Memphis, siege of Vicksburg, Chattanooga, the Atlanta campaign and thence with Sherman on the ever memorable march to the sea, after which his command proceeded through the Carolinas and Virginia to Washington, and, Lee having in the meanwhile surrendered and the war been declared closed, he participated in the grand review of the victorious armies in the national capital, and received his honorable discharge on the 25th of July, 1865. He was never in the hospital and never rode a mile in an ambulance during his entire period of service, being ever found at the post of duty and making the record of a valiant and faithful soldier.

After receiving his discharge from the service Mr. Hilles returned to his home, and after his marriage, about two years later, he purchased thirty acres of land lying across the road from his father's homestead, and he retained possession of this place about two years and then purchased his present homestead farm, where he has ever since maintained his home. In this farm are included one hundred acres, and he still owns the old homestead, comprising thirty-seven acres. Mr. Hilles gives his attention to diversified farming and every portion of his farm gives evidence of scrupulous care and wise management, while the improvements of permanent order are of substantial and attractive order. Mr. Hilles is public-spirited and progressive and has the uniform confidence and regard of the community. He has given a stalwart allegiance to the Republican party, and has been called to various local offices of trust and responsibility, having served several terms as township trustee and also as justice of the peace. In connection with his agricultural industry he has for several years devoted special attention to the feeding of cattle and placing the same on the market, and in this way utilizes the major portion of the products of his farm. Fraternally he vitalizes the more gracious memories of his army life and keeps in touch with his old comrades in arms by holding membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, being identified with John C. Fremont Post No. 242, in the city of Alliance.

On the 11th of September, 1867, Mr. Hilles was united in marriage to Miss Phoebe A. Lilley, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of the late Ellis N. Lilley, who was numbered among the pioneers of Washington county, Pennsylvania, where his death occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Hilles became the parents of three children, namely: Frank E., who is a successful farmer of Washington township; Lilly M., who became the wife of Victor Guittard, and died in June, 1902, being survived by one child, Arthur J.; and Elizabeth, who remains at the parental home. While Mr. and Mrs. Hilles are not members of any church, they nevertheless identify themselves with Christian principles and carry the regard and esteem of the community at large.

WASHINGTON R. REEVES was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, on the 11th of May, 1817. As a mere boy he began to depend upon his own efforts for a maintenance, and his natural mechanical ability was turned to use in divers directions, since he learned several trades, though he devoted the major portion of his active life to work as a carpenter and machinist. As a mason he set the stone in the locks of the Ohio canal at New Philadelphia. On the 7th of April, 1839, in Canton, Ohio, whither he came as a young man, he was united in marriage to Miss Ann Baxter, a sister of the late William Baxter, who was one of the early sheriffs of Stark county, she having been born in Canton, on the 7th of May, 1822. After his marriage Mr. Reeves continued to reside for some time in Canton, where his eldest child was born, and then he removed to Salem, this state, while later he resided again in Canton, as well as in Bethlehem (now Navarre), this county. During his residence there he built one of the first steam engines ever constructed in this section of the country, the same continuing in use for a period of forty years. He was for some time employed in Laird's foundry and machine shops in Canton, and while thus engaged he invented the tubular-arch bridge, a great improvement over the various types then in use. For a time after his marriage he also resided in the city of Columbus, where he owned an interest in a sawmill. He later associated himself with David Hammond in the manufacture of bridges, under the firm name of Hammond & Reeves and with headquarters in Canton. Later on a stock company was formed, under the title of the Wrought Iron Bridge Company, and Mr. Reeves sold his interest in the enterprise about the time of the organization of this company, while from that period until his death he lived practically retired from active business. Mr. Reeves was for forty-five years identified with the Masonic fraternity, having been initiated in Bethlehem Lodge, from which he was later dimitted to the lodge in Canton. He was a Democrat in his political adherency until the organization of the Republican party, when he identified himself therewith and ever afterward remained a staunch advocate of its principles.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Reeves we incorporate brief record, as follows: William G. enlisted as a member of Company F, Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, and he died at Harrison's Landing, while in the service, at the age of twenty-one years; Catherine E. became the wife of Michael Adler, and after his death married George Moyer, and they now reside in Uniontown, Ohio; Sarah Jane is the wife of John Blum, of Canton; James L. is deceased; John Wesley, deceased; Mary Josephine is the wife of E. W. Nichols, of Lachine, Canada; Ann Eliza, deceased; Harriet Ellen is the wife of Edward Adler, of Canton; Charles W., deceased; Francis B., deceased; Homer A., deceased; Charles, deceased; and Ulysses Sherman, who resides in the city of Canton. The parents were consistent and zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal church and were numbered among the sterling pioneers of Stark county. The father of the subject was William Reeves, who was born in Pennsylvania on the 1st of December, 1777, and he died at Uniontown, that state, on the 10th of June, 1822.

Ulysses S. Reeves was born in the city of Canton, on the 5th of November, 1865, and his educational training was secured in the public schools of his native city. At the age of sixteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of machinist, serving four years and becoming an expert artisan in the line, while he has since continued to be employed as a journeyman, save for short intervals. He has been prominently identified with the erection of the best type of modern bridges, and for nine months he was assistant superintendent of the building of the dry dock at Esquimalt, British Columbia, while for twelve years he held the important preferment as chief engineer and master mechanic for the Wrought Iron Bridge Company, of Canton. He then accepted the position of mechanical superintendent of the Dominion Bridge Company, of Montreal, Canada, which position he filled until June, 1903.

Mr. Reeves was united in marriage at New Philadelphia, Ohio, August 21, 1888, the lady of his choice being Miss Nettie Warner, and to this union have been born four children, William, Ethel, Charles and a daughter not yet named.

HARVEY H. SLUSSER, internal revenue inspector for the district composed of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and the sixth division of Kentucky, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and the son of Daniel and Lydia (Holwick) Slusser, both parents still living at their old home in the town of Louisville. Harvey H. was born at that place on June 25, 1862, and there spent his childhood and youth, attending, meanwhile, the village schools, and later prosecuting his studies for some time in Otterbein University. The training thus received was later supplemented by a full commercial course in Mt. Union College, where he finished his education at the age of twenty, after which he came to Canton and engaged in the mercantile business, opening a grocery store on the corner of Tuscarawas street and Cleveland avenue. After devoting two years to this line of trade he disposed of his establishment and in 1889 entered the United States revenue service as sugar inspector of the Louisiana and Texas district, with headquarters at New Orleans.

Mr. Slusser proved a very energetic and capable official, but after two years of efficient service in the field noted, resigned his office, and returning to Canton was soon afterward appointed deputy sheriff under Hiram Doll, the duties of which exacting position he discharged in an able and satisfactory manner until the expiration of his superior's term. Later he re-entered the revenue service, receiving his appointment under the McKinley administration, July 1, 1897, and holding the same to date. In the discharge of his official functions Mr. Slusser has met with many interesting experiences, thrilling adventures, and not a few dangers, his duty frequently calling him to localities where the revenue laws are flagrantly violated and the authority of the government set at defiance with impunity. In and about the city of New York he assisted in locating and suppressing twenty-three illicit distilleries and from thirty-five to forty places where the makers of cigars were evading the law, the stock of the latter being confiscated and their appliances destroyed.

The most thrilling of Mr. Slusser's many adventures occurred in the mountain region of Kentucky, where, as is well known, the manufacture of illicit whiskey has been carried on for years, despite all the efforts of the government to suppress it, many revenue officers having lost their lives in their attempt to run down the moonshiners and locate their stills. With several deputies, he once made a thorough search of a large area of the mountain region known to be infested by moonshiners, but ere he succeeded in ridding the country of their presence and putting an effectual stop to the business three of their men were killed, all meeting their deaths in one day. On another occasion in the same district, two of their deputies were shot and at one time while trying to locate a distillery in a particularly dangerous locality, he and his men were obliged to take refuge in a cave to escape the fury of the moonshiners. The officers after remaining in hiding for a considerable time, finally saw their opportunity; making a sudden dash and running for their lives, they succeeded in effecting their escape, though not without a number of shots coming in close proximity to their persons. Mr. Slusser has been the target for moonshiners' bullets on many occasions, but thus far he has escaped with no injury save now and then a missile through his clothing.

Mr. Slusser's physical courage makes him an absolute stranger to the feeling of fear, but being exceedingly cautious, he never exposes himself to danger if it can be avoided. When necessary, however, he faces the most trying situations unflinchingly, and in the line of duty hesitates at no obstacles or dangers, making his life a secondary consideration to the accomplishments of his purposes. He is considered one of the most capable and faithful officials in the revenue service, his record being without a stain and his reputation such as any man might feel proud to achieve. In private life Mr. Slusser is also highly esteemed, being respected as a friend and neighbor, and as a public spirited citizen, manifesting an active interest in all that makes for the good of the community and the welfare of his fellow men. He was reared a Republican and has ever remained loyal to his political faith, being a staunch supporter of the party and one of its most zealous workers in the county of Stark. Religiously he was brought up in the United Brethren church, and still inclines to the belief of that denomination, though liberal in his views and recognizing good wherever he sees it and under whatever name it may be known.

Mr. Slusser was married, at Downingtown, Pennsylvania, June 9, 1886, to Miss Mary Bromback, a native of that place, the union being blessed with two offspring, a son by the name of Holland B. and a daughter, Ruth M.

ADAM KNOBLOCH comes of stanch old German stock, and the great empire of Germany claims him as a native son, he having been born in the province of Prussia, on the 1st of March, 1843, being a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Doetsch) Knobloch, both of whom are deceased, the mother dying in 1891 and the father in 1903. The subject was but three years of age at the time of his parents' removal from the fatherland to America, and they came forthwith to Stark county, and Adam received his preliminary educational training in the public schools of the village of Richville, while he has ample reason to recall his first teacher, Levi Stump, for this master believed implicitly in the old maxim, "Spare the rod and spoil the child," and he faithfully manifested this belief in a practical way, bringing into frequent and often indiscriminate requisition his hickory rods, to the physical discomfiture of his pupils. At the age of fourteen years the subject began clerking in his father's grocery, at Massillon, and later he attended the German school in that city, while he also took a three months' course in the Iron City Business College, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he well fortified himself for the practical work of business. He continued to assist his father in the conducting of his grocery store until the year 1872, when he became similarly engaged in the grocery conducted by his father-in-law, in the city of Massillon, where he remained until 1875, and during the fall of the same year he came to Canton, where he became the owner of the Union brewery, which he continued to operate until 1889, after which he was for three years in the employ of the Canton Buggy & Gear Company. The business then changed hands, and six months later Mr. Knobloch entered into partnership with Conrad Schaeffer and engaged in the manufacturing of wagons of various styles, while they also devoted a department of their well-equipped plant to repairing, painting, trimming, etc., and through energy, good management and correct methods the firm has built up a flourishing business, the concern now representing one of the industrial enterprises of the city, while the interested principles command the unqualified confidence and good will of the community and of all with whom they have had dealings.

Mr. Knobloch takes a public-spirited interest in all that concerns the progress and material prosperity of his home city and county, and in his political proclivities he has ever given a staunch support to the Republican party, his first presidential vote having been cast for Abraham Lincoln.

Henry Knobloch, father of the subject, who was one of the most venerable pioneer citizens of Canton, was born in the village of Brohl, province of Prussia, in the Rhine district of Germany, on the 20th of December, 1814, being a son of Jacob and Margaret (Weaver) Knobloch, the former of whom was a farmer by vocation. He entered Napoleon's army in 1805 and took part in the campaigns in Portugal and Spain. He died at his home in Germany at the age of fifty-three years, while his wife survived him several years, her death occurring in the fatherland after the emigration of her son Henry, to America. Henry Knobloch was the last survivor of a family of ten children, of whom he was the eldest. He secured his education in the excellent government schools of his native land and as a young man served for three and one-half years in the Prussian army. In 1842 he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Doetsch, who was born in the village of Polch, in 1805, and in 1848 they embarked, at Havre, France, on the sailing vessel "Albany," on which they made the voyage to America, landing in New York forty-two days after embarking. They came forthwith to Stark county, and here Mr. Knobloch purchased twenty-eight acres of land near the village of New Berlin, where he was engaged in farming for a time, then disposing of the property and removing to a fifty-acre farm near the village of Richville, this county, while later he took up his residence in the city of Massillon, where he was engaged in the grocery business for a period of seventeen years, being one of the representative and successful business men of the place. He was thereafter engaged in the malting business until 1875, when he came to Canton, where he afterward resided until his death, his devoted wife having passed away twelve years previous.

Of their three children, Adam, the subject of this sketch, is the only one who grew to maturity. Henry Knobloch was the possessor of a medal which he prizes very highly, the same having been conferred upon him by King Wilhelm, of Prussia, in recognition of his bravery in saving a man from drowning, and with the medal he also received the sum of forty dollars.

On the 5th of December, 1868, Adam Knobloch, the immediate subject of this sketch, was united in marriage, in the city of Massillon, this county, to Miss Ellen F. Oberlin, a daughter of Conrad and Nancy (McDowell) Oberlin, the father having been a leading grocer and influential citizen of Massillon, near which place he was born, his parents having located in this county in an early day, coming hither from the state of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Knobloch have two children, namely: Harry C., who is deputy county treasurer and who married Miss Harriet Kintz, one child having been born of this union, Donald; and Nellie, who remains at the parental home, being a stenographer in the employ of the McKinley Memorial Fund Association.

WALTER W. PATTERSON.—The Actual Business College Company, of which the subject of this sketch is vice-president, proves a valuable complement to the public schools of the city and also offers great inducements to those who have been denied the full advantages of the latter. The subject is a young man of marked administrative ability, has gained prestige as an able educator and is well deserving of specific mention in a work which has to do with the representative citizens of Stark county.

The Patterson family is of staunch Scotch-Irish lineage. The great-grandfather of the subject was the first representative in the United States, whither he emigrated from the north of Ireland in the colonial epoch. He took up his abode in what was then Mercer county, Pennsylvania, in that portion which later formed a part of Lawrence county. There he reclaimed a good farm, upon which he passed the residue of his life. There he reared his children, one of whom was Samuel Patterson, the grandfather of the subject, and he, too, passed his entire life in that section of the old Keystone state.

Robert D. Patterson, father of the subject, was of the third generation of his family in Pennsylvania, having been born on the parental homestead in Mercer county, and was there reared to manhood. He received excellent educational advantages and became a man of mature judgment and marked influence in the community where he lived and labored to so goodly ends, having been a prominent and successful farmer. He served for many years as justice of the peace and was also incumbent of various other offices of local trust and responsibility. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary M. Pinkerton, was born in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of James Pinkerton, who was a stone mason by trade and who was one of the influential farmers of Lawrence county, where he died. The father of the subject died on the old Pinkerton homestead, in that county, in 1889, at the age of sixty-six years, and his cherished and devoted wife survives him, residing in New Castle, Pennsylvania, and having attained the venerable age of seventy-two years. Of the children of this union we enter brief record as follows: James L. is a resident of New Castle, Pennsylvania; Estella, who has never married, remains at home with her widowed mother; Samuel is a prominent contractor of New Castle; Robert F. is a resident of Canton, Ohio; John W. is a merchant in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Judson S. is head salesman in a leading mercantile house in that city, and Walter W. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Walter W. Patterson was born on the old ancestral homestead in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on the 8th of August, 1868, and he attended the public schools of that locality until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when he was matriculated in Grove City College, at Grove City, Pennsylvania, where he continued his studies for one year, taking a normal course and preparing himself for teaching. He initiated his pedagogic career when eighteen years of age, teaching in the district schools of his native county for about a year, while in the following year, to still further fortify himself for his chosen work, he took a course of study in the normal department of Westminster College, at New Wilmington, Pennsylvania. During the ensuing three years he was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of Mercer and Lawrence counties and the following year he had charge of a mercantile establishment at New Castle, Pennsylvania.

In the spring of 1892 Mr. Patterson came to Canton and here effected the purchase of an interest in the Actual Business College, on the 20th of September, 1893. He at once actively identified himself with the practical work of the institution, and through his efforts its standard was greatly raised. In 1897 the institution was consolidated with the Canton Business College, the name of the former being retained, and at the time of the attending re-organization Mr. Patterson was elected vice-president and treasurer of the institution, in which dual office he has since continued to serve, while, in addition to his more purely administrative duties, he is also the efficient principal of the short-hand department of the school. The institution has gained a high reputation and its support has been cumulative, while its usefulness can not be overestimated. The subject is a member of the National Teachers' Association, of the Ohio Commercial and Special Teachers' Association and of the Gregg Association of America. In politics he exercises his franchise in the support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in Calvary Presbyterian church.

In the city of Canton, on the 25th of August, 1897, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Patterson to Miss Helen Reid, who was born in Ireland, where she was reared to the age of sixteen years, when she accompanied her parents, Robert M. and Margaret (Moody) Reid, on their removal to America, the family taking up their abode in Canton, where Mr. Reid died in 1901, his widow still maintaining her home in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have two children, Margaret Teresa, who was born on the 25th of June, 1898, and Mary Evaldeen, whose birth occurred October 6, 1902.

ALVIN T. DENNIS, dealer in real estate and insurance and commanding a lucrative patronage in both lines of business, is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, where his birth occurred on September 21, 1865. Paternally Mr. Dennis is descended from Irish ancestors, who came to the United States at a very early date, the family later settling in Carroll county, Ohio, where the subject's grandparents, Cyrus and Mary (Hart) Dennis are still living, both being over ninety years of age. It is a fact worthy of note that there has never been a death in the immediate family, all of their eight children being alive at the time of this writing, the majority of them well advanced in years. William Dennis, father of the subject, was born in Carroll county and is still an honored resident of the same, being a farmer by occupation, and well-to-do in point of material wealth. His wife, Caroline Taylor, is a native of Columbiana county, and the daughter of Jacob and Mary Taylor, who were pioneers of that part of the state, and among the most highly esteemed people of the community in which they lived.

Alvin T. Dennis was reared on a farm, early became acquainted with the duties of agriculture and enjoyed the best educational advantages his neighborhood afforded, attending school the greater part of the time until his twentieth year. He remained at home until the age of twenty-two, when he purchased a farm and engaged in the pursuit of agriculture upon his own responsibility until 1893, at which time he disposed of his real estate and accepted the position of traveling salesman for a commercial fertilizing company of Boston, Massachusetts. While representing the interests of this concern on the road, he worked insurance as a side issue, and finding the latter more profitable than his regular business, he abandoned the former at the expiration of about six years and in the summer of 1899 opened an insurance and real estate office in the city of Canton. Since that year his patronage has steadily increased until he is now regarded as one of the leading men in his line in this part of the state, his real estate business being large, far reaching and lucrative, his sales running far up into the thousands every month. Mr. Dennis represents the Equitable Life Insurance Company of Des Moines, Iowa, and his honorable business methods, together with his prompt and satisfactory adjustment of losses, have attracted to him a large number of patrons, his energy and honorable dealings as a real estate man also prompting many people of the city and throughout the county to place their property in his hands for disposal. He has a fine suite of offices in the Folwell building and his encouraging success, since engaging in business only a short time ago, leads his friends to predict for him a still larger patronage and continued prosperity in years to come.

Mr. Dennis has taken an active interest in public and political affairs ever since old enough to read and think intelligently, and as an earnest and enthusiastic Democrat he has been an influential factor in his party, contributing not a little to its success in Canton and Stark county. In 1903 he was nominated for the office of sheriff and at this writing is making an energetic and thorough canvass of the county, with every prospect of greatly reducing the formidable strength of the opposition if not being successful in the ensuing election. Mr. Dennis subscribes to the Methodist faith and holds membership with the church of that denomination at Minerva, this county, of which his wife was also a member. His fraternal relations are represented by the Odd Fellows order, in which he enjoys a high personal standing and in which he has also been honored with different official positions. Mr. Dennis is an intelligent, wide-awake, enterprising gentleman, who numbers his friends by the score and who is highly esteemed in social as well as in business circles. As a citizen he discharges his duty to the best of his ability, and in whatever relation considered, his life and conduct have been honorable and singularly free from fault, and in the main eminently worthy of emulation. His wife, whose maiden name was Ella Brogan, was untimely called away, her death, which was mourned by all who knew her, occurring January 18, 1902. She was a daughter of Morris and Mary Brogan, and bore her husband three children, Ethel, Floyd L. and Bessie, of whom the first named is deceased.

HENRY F. ROTH is a son of Peter F. and Elizabeth (Shriver) Roth, both of whom were likewise natives of Stark county, the former having been born on the 29th of December, 1820, while the latter was born on the 16th of March, 1824. The great-grandfather of the subject on the paternal side was a native of Germany, whence he emigrated to the United States when a young man, and became one of the pioneer farmers of Canton township, Stark county, where both he and his wife died. The Shriver family is of English extraction and was early established in the state of Virginia, whence representatives of the name have gone forth into divers sections of the Union. Peter F. Roth was reared to manhood in this county and became a successful farmer of Canton township, his place being located a few miles south of Canton. About 1858 he removed to Pana, Christian county, Illinois, and later he resided for varying intervals at various points in the state of Missouri. At the time of the Civil war, however, he was a resident of Pana, Illinois, and on the 30th of September, 1862, he tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in Company H, One Hundred and Sixteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front, rendering valiant service for one year and sacrificing his life on the altar of his country, his death resulting from an attack of fever. He passed away at Memphis, Tennessee, on the 7th of November, 1863, and his remains were taken back to Pana, Illinois, where they were interred with military honors. He was a man of spotless reputation and held the esteem of all who know him. His marriage to Elizabeth Shriver was solemnized, in Canton, on the 13th of October, 1842, and of their seven children, two of whom attained maturity, the subject of this sketch is now the only survivor, having been the fifth in order of birth. The names of the others are here entered according to precedence in nativity: Mary Magdalene, Franklin, Hiram, Christian, Sarah, and George Washington. The devoted wife and mother was summoned into eternal rest on the 27th of December, 1854, and her remains are interred in the Rowland cemetery, in Canton. Both she and her husband were zealous members of the German Reformed church, and the former was a staunch supporter of the Republican party from the time of its organization until his death.

Henry F. Roth, the immediate subject of this review, was born in the city of Canton, this county, on the 1st of September, 1848, and thus was only six years of age at the time of his mother's death. He received his early education in the public schools of Canton, and in 1858, when ten years of age, accompanied his father on his removal to Pana, Illinois, while one year later he was with his father at Jefferson City and other points in the state of Missouri. In 1860 he entered the home of his uncle, Samuel Tillet, of Versailles, Morgan county, that state, whom he assisted in the work of the farm. In November, 1861, he returned to Canton, where he made his home with his aunt, Mrs. Elizabeth Shriver, until August 1, 1870, at which time he removed to his present home, at No. 1703 North Cleveland avenue, his marriage having been solemnized on the date noted. After returning to Canton he had served an apprenticeship at the painter's trade, under the direction of George Hass, and he has consecutively followed his trade, as one of the leading contractors in the line in the city, for the long period of thirty years, while he is well known throughout his native county and has so ordered his life in all its relations as to command the unequivocal confidence and regard of all who knew him. In politics he is staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, which has held his allegiance from the time when he attained his legal majority, and his religious faith is indicated in his membership in the First Baptist church, in which he held the office of deacon for four years, his wife being a member of the Christian Scientist church. Fraternally he is identified with the Canton Lodge No. 589, Knights of Pythias, and with North Star Lodge No. 18, Royal Arcanum, while for fourteen years he held the office of secretary of the Royal Arcanum.

On the 4th of August, 1870, Mr. Roth was united in marriage to Miss Ada Smith, of Canton, who was born in this county, being a daughter of Daniel H. and Susan (Minich) Smith, natives respectively of Plain and Canton townships, Stark county, Ohio, and both now deceased. Her father was for many years engaged in the agricultural business in Plain township. Mr. and Mrs. Roth have two children: Elizabeth Ann, who was born on the 23d of July, 1874, is the wife of Marshall F. Clay, and they reside in Barberton, Summit county, Ohio, where Mr. Clay is engaged in the bakery and confectionery business; Arthur Henry, who was born on the 23d of January, 1878, is secretary of the Cedar Rapids Supply Company, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in which city, on the 1st of October, 1902, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Ida E. Gardner.

ROBERT F. BARNETT claims the old Keystone state as the place of his nativity, having been born in the town of Rehrersburg, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 26th of July, 1864, and being a son of John B. and Hannah (Tryon) Barnett. His father was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, the family having been early established in that state, whence the original American ancestors came. John B. Barnett was reared to manhood in his native state and for the long term of twenty-four years was engaged in the mercantile business in Rehrersburg, where he was also incumbent of the office of postmaster for nearly an equal interval, holding this position at the time of his death, which occurred in 1899, when his wife succeeded to the office, of which she has since been in tenure, retaining her residence in the old homestead, which is endeared to her by the memories and associations of many years. She was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Jacob and Sabilla (Seyler) Tryon, her father having been a successful physician and having lived to attain the patriarchal age of ninety years, while his wife passed away at the age of eighty-nine, the original progenitors of both the Tryon and Seyler families having emigrated to Pennsylvania from Germany. The father of our subject was a Republican in his political proclivities, and both he and his wife early became members of the Lutheran church.

Robert F. Barnett was reared in his native town, where he received his educational training in the public schools, and as a boy he began to assist in the work of his father's store, having taken charge of his delivery wagon at the age of twelve years and having given excellent service in this capacity for a number of years. He remained at the parental home until he was about eighteen years of age, and then set forth to work out his independent career. For one summer he had the eminent satisfaction of driving mules on the towpath of the Schuylkill & Raritan and the Erie canals, and he thus grew duly familiar with the gracious natures of these beasts of elongated ears and "dejected havior of the visage." Thereafter he was employed on steam packet-boats on the canal for a part of one season, and he then turned his attention to the raising of tobacco in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. In 1881 he returned home and planted four acres of land to tobacco, with a view to engaging in the business on his own responsibility, but the venture proved a failure. He then again became a clerk in his father's store, where he continued to be employed until 1886, when he came to Canton, and here he opened a photograph gallery at North Market street, disposing of the same about six months later. He then engaged in operating a pop delivery wagon for Henry Vogelgesang, in whose employ he continued for a period of nine years. At the expiration of this time, on the 10th of January, 1898, he purchased the interest of Edward Wonderly, junior member of the firm of Whitmer & Wonderly, manufacturers of all kinds of soft drinks, and at this time the firm name became Whitmer & Barnett. The firm have built up a profitable business and control an excellent trade throughout the city and in neighboring towns, while the business policy which has been maintained has been such as to elicit the highest degree of confidence and esteem.

In politics Mr. Barnett has ever given an unequivocal support to the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for the "plumed knight," the late James G. Blaine. In April, 1902, Mr. Barnett was elected to the city council, as a representative of the fifth ward, the preferment coming to him without solicitation on his part, and he has spared no pains to properly and satisfactorily meet the wishes of his constituency and further the interests of effective municipal government, and it may well be said that he has amply justified the choice of the people who honored him with the office. In 1903 he was elected to the council from the fourth ward, which comprises what was, under the old division, part of the fourth and fifth wards. He and his wife are worthy and valued members of the Lutheran church.

In his native town of Rehrersburg, Pennsylvania, on the 26th of July, 1889, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Barnett to Miss Anna L. Miller, who was born in that place, on the 12th of April, 1866, being a daughter of Jacob Miller, an honored citizen of the town. Mr. and Mrs. Barnett are the parents of four children, Herbert, Florence, Marie and Helen.

WILLIAM F. SCHUMACHER.—As the name indicates, the subject comes of German stock, and the name is one which has ever stood for integrity and honor in all the relations of life, while incidentally mention may well be made of the fact that in our great republic, with its cosmopolitan makeup, there has been no element of greater value than that supplied by the empire of Germany. The Schumacher family is one which for many generations has been one of prominence in the province of Baden, Germany, and there Frederick Martin Schumacher, grandfather of our subject, was born and reared, while he prepared himself for the active responsibilities of life by learning the trade of stone mason, to which he devoted his attention throughout his business career. In his native province he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Weiler, and there they reared their children to lives of usefulness and honor. They continued to reside in the fatherland until 1871, when they came to America to pass their declining days with their son Frederick, father of our subject. From New York they came directly to Canton, and here they were provided for with true filial solicitude until they were called from the scene of life's activities, Mrs. Schumacher entering into eternal rest in 1881, at the age of seventy-three years, while her husband survived until December, 1899, when he passed away at the venerable age of eighty-seven. They were folk of sterling character and were consistent members of the Lutheran church, in whose faith they reared their children, of whom three are living at the present time.

Frederick Schumacher, father of the subject, was born in Baden, Germany, in the year 1814, and was there reared to maturity, receiving the advantages afforded in the unexcelled schools of the fatherland and early beginning an apprenticeship at the trade of stone mason, under the effective direction of his honored father. In accordance with the custom of the land he served three years in the German army, as had also his father. In the year 1868, in his native province he was united in marriage to Miss Aurelia Weiler, and shortly afterward, in 1868, they set forth for America, severing the ties which bound them to friends and fatherland that they might establish a home in a country offering better advantages for advancement through individual effort. Landing in New York city, they tarried but a few days in the metropolis, whence they came directly to Canton, where Mr. Schumacher readily found employment at his trade, being a skilled and careful workman, and he continued to follow the same, eventually engaging in contract work on his own responsibility, until 1894, when he retired from active business, and he has been enjoying the rewards of his years of earnest toil and endeavor, having a pleasant home in Canton and having acquired a competence sufficient for the needs of himself and his cherished and devoted companion, who has been his worthy helpmeet. In politics he has given a staunch support to the Democratic party from the time of attaining the right of franchise, and both he and his wife are worthy members of the German Lutheran church. Their six children, all of whom are residents of the United States, are as follows: William F., the immediate subject of this sketch; Andrew, who is a painter by trade in Canton; Gustave, who is a traveling representative of the East Ohio Gas Company of this city; Leo, who is employed in the Case chair works of Canton; and Rose and Emma, who remain at the parental home.

In what was known as the old Mock homestead, located at the southwest corner of Cherry and Third streets, William F. Schumacher, subject of this review, was born on the 20th of January, 1869. He attended the public schools until he had attained the age of fourteen years and then began the active duties of life, securing a position in the malleable iron works of the Gilliam Company, where he remained for a short interval, after which he began to learn the trade of stone mason with his father, continuing to follow this as a vocation until the age of nineteen, when he found a less prosaic occupation, becoming a member of the band connected with the Great Northwestern circus, with which he traveled for two years, gaining much experience and surfeiting himself sufficiently with the roving life, so that he was not reluctant to turn his attention to other line of endeavor. It may be noted in the connection that he early manifested marked native talent as a musician, and he has always manifested a deep interest in the art, being particularly skilled in band work. After his career with the circus Mr. Schumacher entered the employ of the Diebold Safe Company, of Canton, with which he remained two and one-half years, and in 1891 he became first lieutenant at Station No. 2, of the local fire department, where he rendered most efficient service for the ensuing five years, resigning the position to engage in the restaurant business, in which he has since continued, having an attractive and well equipped establishment at 1027 East Tuscarawas street and catering to a large and appreciative patronage. He has recently associated himself with the Stark Brewing Company, and is now holding the position of collector.

In politics Mr. Schumacher has been a stalwart Democrat from the time of attaining his legal majority, and about 1890 he began to take an active part in local political affairs, becoming a vigorous and enthusiastic worker in the party cause. In April, 1902, in recognition of his zeal and unmistakable eligibility, he was elected to his present office as a member of the city council, as the Democratic candidate from the third ward, and an evidence of his personal popularity was given in the gratifying majority which he received over the Republican candidate, who was up for a second term. He is a member of four committees in the municipal body, namely: The committees on fire, water, public lights and sidewalks. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Red Men, and he also holds membership in the Firemen's Aid Association and the Baden Aid Society, while he is an honorary member of the

G. A. R. Band of Canton. On June 2, 1903, he became a member of the Canton Eyrie of Eagles.

In his home city, on the 12th of August, 1892, Mr. Schumacher was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Kerlein, who was born in Germany, whence she was brought by her parents to America in early childhood. The subject and his wife have two sons, William and Charles.

A. HURRAW & SON.—Albert Hurraw is a native son of Stark county, having been born in the village of Wilmot on the 27th of July, 1845, a son of John and Elizabeth (McClintock) Hurraw, the former of whom was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, and the latter in Holmes county, Ohio, whence she accompanied her parents, James and Mary (Clark) McClintock, on their removal to Sugar Creek township, Stark county, in the year 1832, her father entering a claim of one hundred and sixty acres of heavily timbered land near the present village of Wilmot, where he reclaimed a good farm and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, being numbered among the honored pioneers of this section. Mr. McClintock was originally a Whig in politics, but espoused the cause of the Republican party at the time of its organization and took a prominent part in furthering its interests in a local way, while for many years he served as justice of the peace. He died in 1865 at the age of seventy-two years, and his wife lived to attain the age of sixty-nine years. John Hurraw came to Stark county from Pennsylvania when a young man, and here was solemnized his marriage to Elizabeth McClintock. He located in Wilmot, and here was employed for many years in the foundry of Putnam, Johnson & Company, and after his retirement he here continued to make his home until his death, which occurred on the 5th of October, 1897, at the age of eighty-two years. He was a Republican in politics and his religious faith was that of the Disciples church, of which his venerable widow, who has now attained the age of eighty-two years, is likewise a devoted member, while she still resides in Wilmot, having passed her entire life in Stark county. John Hurraw was a man who lived a life of signal industry and usefulness, and his sterling integrity and honor gained and retained to him the unqualified confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact.

Albert Hurraw was reared and educated in the village in which he now maintains his home and after he attained years of maturity he engaged in the slate roofing business, in which he continued for the long period of twenty-six years, having held and filled many important contracts throughout the county and in other sections of the state. At the expiration of more than a quarter of a century he retired from this line of enterprise, selling the business to the firm of Mullet & Keefer, and in January, 1902, in company with his son, John P., he established his present business, in which they are building up a satisfactory trade, while he personally may well be regarded at the present time as one of the pioneer business men of the town. In politics Mr. Hurraw has ever given a staunch support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, with whose aims he was strongly in sympathy at the time when the party stood as the exponent of an undivided Union during the crucial epoch of the Civil war. At this time Mr. Hurraw manifested his intrinsic loyalty by enlisting, in January, 1865, as a private in Company C. One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until victory had crowned the Union arms, when he received his honorable discharge, the regiment having been attached to the Army of the Cumberland and having served principally in the state of Tennessee.

On the 29th of December, 1871, Albert Hurraw was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Fogle, who was born in Massillon, Ohio, being a daughter of George Fogle, who was here engaged in molding for many years, and who is now dead. Mr. and Mrs. Hurraw have only one child, John P., who is associated with his father in business, as has already been noted.

John P. Hurraw was born in Wilmot, this county, on the 8th of October, 1878, and here he received his educational training in the excellent graded schools, in which he was graduated at the age of eighteen years, after which he assisted his father in his business operations until the time when he was admitted to the present firm of A. Hurraw & Son, and he has proved himself a progressive and discriminating young business man and, like his father, enjoys unequivocal confidence and esteem in the community where both have passed their lives. He likewise pins his political faith to the Republican party and takes a public-spirited interest in local affairs of a public nature.

On the 28th of December, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of John P. Hurraw to Miss Millie Bash, who was born in Stark county, being a daughter of John Bash, a well known citizen of Sugar Creek township.

MAJOR A. VIGNOS.—The father of the subject, Joseph Vignos, though of French origin, has resided in this country since early boyhood, having reached our hospitable shores when eighteen years of age. He was of a steady and industrious disposition and early learned the trade of a carpenter and joiner. Upon reaching years of maturity he was united in marriage with Miss Thresa Frontz, who accompanied her parents to the United States at the age of sixteen years. Her family came from New York city to Ohio, but she remained awhile in New York. She later lived for a time in Cleveland, Ohio, but eventually came to Canton. She was of a deeply religious nature and wandered about, looking for a place in which to worship, at length finding the object of her search, which was the old Catholic Mission church, then standing at the corner of Fulton and Second streets. Mr. Frontz, her father, first went to Nimishillen township, Stark county, and there entered a quarter section of land near Harrisburg. He here built a house of logs in the midst of the wilderness and commenced to clear and improve his tract of land. From this place the family were compelled to go to Canton afoot for their groceries and other household necessities. There were no roads and it was necessary to "blaze" trees in order to find their way home. Joseph Vignos, after his marriage, removed directly to Canton in 1833. He went at once into the tavern business at Louisville, at first occupying an old log house. He prospered and was subsequently enabled to build a substantial brick structure, and was there engaged in the hotel business a number of years, or until the subject and his brother enlisted for service in the war of the Rebellion, when he retired from active business, his death occurring about six months later. His wife survived him a number of years, dying at the age of seventy-three years. They were the parents of three children, briefly mentioned as follows: Joseph, who served in the Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry for four years during the Civil war, died at Louisville, this county, in 1899; the subject is next in order of birth; Catherine is the wife of Charles D. Monnot, of Canton.

The subject was born in Louisville, Stark county, Ohio, on the 16th of September, 1838. In his youth his opportunities for obtaining an education were meager, but he faithfully attended the country schools whenever possible, and by persistent application and subsequent close observation of men and events has become a well informed man. In his boyhood he was employed in various ways about his father's hotel until about the time of the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion. Imbued with a deep spirit of patriotism and love of country. Mr. Vignos watched closely the signs of the impending conflict between the North and the South, and when it became evident that a determined and persistent effort was to be made to shatter the union of states he promptly volunteered his services in behalf of the perpetuity and integrity of the nation. In September, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company I, Nineteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served faithfully with this command until the following May, having in the meantime taken part in the sanguinary conflict at Shiloh. He was detailed on recruiting duty and succeeded in organizing Company H, One Hundred and Seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which he was elected captain. He served in this capacity one year as captain, and with his command participated in the bloody battle of Chancellorsville, May 2, 1863, and the terrible and decisive conflict at Gettysburg. During the first day of the last named engagement Captain Vignos had his right arm shot off by a cannon ball and lay in the hospital three days before the wound was properly attended to and the arm amputated. He was then sent home and by the early part of the following October had so far recovered as to rejoin his regiment, which was then stationed at Fort Island, South Carolina. His wound was not entirely healed and on the way to the front he stopped off at Washington, District of Columbia, to secure transportation, but the surgeon there said he ought to give him transportation back home instead of to the front. But the subject insisted on going forward and after much difficulty obtained the desired passage. Shortly after reaching the front he was promoted to the rank of major and assigned to his old regiment, the One Hundred and Seventh Ohio. The colonelcy and lieutenant-colonelcy of this regiment were both vacant, and the command thus devolved upon Major Vignos, who faithfully led the regiment through much active service for ten months. During all this time his old wound gave him considerable trouble, and it at length compelled him, in October, 1864, to resign his command and return home. Major Vignos participated in some of the most arduous campaigns and hard-fought battles of the Civil war, and at the battle of Gettysburg the loss of the regiment was fifty per cent., and at Chancellorsville the command was in the thickest of the fight and suffered a terrible loss of men.

Upon his return from military service Major Vignos accepted Horace Greeley's advice, "Go west, young man," and invested his savings in a number of business ventures, which, however, proved unsuccessful and he lost all he had invested, returning home practically penniless. He was not entirely discouraged, however, and was willing to accept anything in the way of honorable employment. He was first employed as a night watchman in a lumber yard and later took the position of janitor at the court house. He was at this time incumbered with a debt of about two thousand dollars, and his every energy was devoted to the extinguishment of this debt. He did all kinds of odd jobs, exercising the most rigid economy, and at length was enabled to cancel his obligation. He received the appointment as postmaster of Canton, in which position he served faithfully and efficiently for eight years, under the administrations of Presidents Hayes, Garfield and Arthur, but was removed from office by President Cleveland. In 1886, in company with one of his former mail carriers, Major Vignos commenced the manufacture of transparent pocket knives under the firm name of the Novelty Cutlery Company. The business was successful from the start, and in 1892 the subject was enabled to purchase the interest of his partner and has since conducted the business alone. Considering the modest beginning, the business has assumed wonderful proportions. At first but six or eight persons were employed, but now there is an average of eighty employes. The present main building was erected in the fall of 1887, and to this two additions have been made. By careful management, keen discrimination and sound judgment Major Vignos has been enabled to reach a high position on the ladder of success and has acquired not only a goodly share of material wealth, but has earned for himself a splendid reputation as a careful, conservative and yet progressive and enterprising business man. He owns a beautiful and commodious home on West Tuscarawas street and also owns much real estate. All in all, the subject's success is most commendable and has been richly earned.

In February, 1866, at Louisville, this county, Major Vignos was united in marriage to Miss Phoebe L. Devinny, a daughter of Henry Devinny. Her father was a native of Ireland and died at Louisville at the age of ninety years. To the subject and his wife have been born eight children, as follows: Henry died at the age of nineteen years; Loretta died when thirteen years old; Charles, who is at present the active manager of his father's business, married Catharine Moek; Blanche is a music teacher and lives at home, having formerly studied music for three years in Liepsic, Germany; Alice is at home; Alfred, who resides in this city, married Clair McGowan; Helen and Frank are at home, all employed in the cutlery works.

Mr. Vignos has been an extensive traveler and made a number of interesting and profitable sight-seeing excursions. In 1895 he and his wife made a trip to Europe, with the object in view of accompanying their daughter home. While abroad they visited England, Holland, Prussia, Austria, Bohemia, Italy, Switzerland and France. In 1896 they made an extensive trip through the western states, and in the winter and spring of 1898 he went alone to old Mexico. While at Oaxaca they first received news of the destruction of the "Maine," and remember that at that time there was intense excitement among the Spaniards. In January, 1899, Major Vignos sailed again from New York for a trip through the southern seas. He visited the West Indies and the Leeward islands, stopping at Martinique, the scene of the recent seismic disturbances, and also spending some time at Havana. In 1900 the Major, with his wife and daughter, visited the Paris Exposition, where he was honored by being made a juror in the awards on cutlery. In 1902 the Major and his wife started on the steamer "Moetk," sailing from New York to the Madeira islands, thence to Gibraltar, then to Granada, Spain, visiting Valgambra, thence to Algeria, Malta, Athens, Greece; Constantinople, Smyrna, and then to Haffia, where they took train for Jerusalem, visiting the Dead sea and Bethlehem. They then came back to Haffia, where they boarded the steamer for Alexandria, Egypt, then to Cairo. Returning to Alexandria, they sailed for Naples, visited Pompeii and Rome, and back to Naples. From there they went to Nice, France, then to Paris, and then back to New York, one of the most agreeable and educational trips ever made. They traveled under the direction of the Thomas Cook & Sons' excursions, going first-class in all respects.

Politically the subject was originally a Democrat, but from the firing of the first shot on Fort Sumter he has been a staunch adherent of the Republican party. He keeps alive his old army associations through membership in McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, and is also a member of the Loyal Legion, Ohio Commandery. Religiously he is a Catholic, being a faithful and consistent member of St. John's church, Canton.

In many respects Major Vignos has earned a standing among the leading men of his city and has achieved a most encouraging success. He aims to be progressive in what he does, is always in sympathy with enterprises having for their object the common good, and his influence is ever exerted on the right side of every moral issue. Like all men of positive character and independence of mind, he is outspoken in defense of what he considers right. His private life has been exemplary and because of his genial disposition and genuine worth he holds the high regard of all who know him.

The Major having come to Canton about the same time as the late President McKinley and soon making his acquaintance, they from that on became fast friends in politics, in society and otherwise, this friendship lasting throughout life. The first appointment McKinley made after going to the White House was to appoint Major Vignos postmaster of Canton.

GEORGE DEUBLE.—The Deuble family is of staunch German lineage, the kingdom of Baden having been the ancestral residence for many generations. The first representatives of the name in Canton were Henry Deuble and his sister, who located here about 1830, the father of the subject having been their brother. The sister subsequently became the wife of John Piering, who was a tombstone cutter by trade and who became eventually a prominent merchant in Canton, in the early days. Henry Deuble established himself in the meat market business in this place and here passed the residue of his life, a man of integrity and sterling worth. He was born in Germany, as was also his sister, of whom mention has just been made. George M. Deuble, the father of our subject, was born in Baden, Germany, where he was reared and educated, there learning the trade of watch and clock making. In 1825, when about twenty-five years of age, he emigrated to America and for a time resided in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, later locating near Reading, that state, whence he came to Ohio in 1833, taking up his abode in Canton. In Philadelphia he was united in marriage to Miss Susanna Smith, who likewise was a native of Baden, Germany. Upon coming to Canton he established himself in business in a modest way in the work of his trade as a clock maker, and he eventually built up an excellent enterprise as a jeweler and watchmaker. His first shop was located on the east side of Market street, between Second and Third streets, and later he secured finely appointed quarters at North Market street, where he continued to conduct a profitable business until 1851, when he turned the enterprise over to his sons, Martin and George, the latter being the subject of this review. The father thereafter lived retired until his death in 1860, at the age of sixty-two years, his wife passing away in 1866 at the age of sixty-six years. They became the parents of four sons and two daughters, of whom one survives at the present time. George M. Deuble and his wife were devoted members of the Reformed church, ever retaining the confidence and esteem of the community in which so many years of their lives were passed.

George Deuble, whose name initiates this article, was born near the city of Reading, Pennsylvania, on the 4th of October, 1832, and within the following year his parents removed to Canton, Ohio, becoming pioneers of the town, which was scarcely more than a frontier village at that time. The journey of the family of the old Keystone state was made by means of a one-horse wagon and was a long and weary one. In crossing the mountains they were compelled to tie saplings back of the wagon so that the same might act as a brake and avoid a too precipitous speed in going down the mountain sides. The early educational discipline of our subject was secured in a German school taught in Canton by George

Held, and later he continued his studies in the public schools of the town, the same being still of a primitive order at that time. At the age of fifteen he assumed the practical responsibilities of life by entering his father's establishment for the purpose of learning the jewelry and watchmaking trade, and he continued to be thus associated with his honored father until he had become an expert workman, taking an active part in the conducting of the business, of which he became part owner at the time of his father's retirement in 1851. At that time he associated himself in a partnership with his elder brother, Martin, and they removed their establishment to the Wikidal block, where they remained for a period of ten years, at the expiration of which, in 1861, the business was established in its present location at 130 South Market street, the original building having been replaced by the present attractive structure in 1892. The enterprise was conducted under the firm name of Deuble Brothers until the death of Martin Deuble, the senior member, in 1872, at which time our subject purchased his interests and has ever since remained in sole control of the business. He carries a large and select stock, has one of the most finely appointed establishments of the sort in the city and caters to a representative and discriminating patronage, while he holds the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who know him and is regarded as one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of Canton, which has been his home from his childhood days. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, preferring to give his support to men and measures rather than to follow strict partisan dictates. He and his wife are both consistent and prominent members of Trinity Reformed church. Fraternally Mr. Deuble is an appreciative member of the time-honored order of Freemasons, in which he has advanced to the Knight Templar degree, holding membership in Canton Commandery No. 60.

In the city of Canton, in 1857, Mr. Deuble was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Herbruck, daughter of Rev. Peter and Sarah Herbruck, the former of whom was a highly revered clergyman of the Reformed church. To the subject and his wife have been born six children, namely: Laura, who is at home; Alice, who also is at home; Norman, who died at the age of twenty-eight years; Walter H., a jeweler of Canton, and Horace E. and Homer, who are in the store with their father.

CHARLES F. LANG is a native of Stark county, Ohio, but traces his family history to Alsace, France, now a part of the German empire, which province was for many generations the home of his ancestors. Jacob Lang, the subject's father, was born in Schirrhoffen, Alsace, June 21, 1818, and there married in his young manhood Miss Madeline Baechel, a native of the same place. Jacob Lang received his preliminary education in the land of his birth and afterward became quite a noted scholar, graduating with an honorable record from the University of Strasburg. Shortly after the birth of his first son, which occurred in 1838, Jacob Lang came to the United States and located in Canton, Ohio, where, as soon as circumstances would admit, his wife and family joined him. Soon after coming to this city he opened a private school in a room next door to his dwelling, his scholarship and superior professional attainments soon attracting to him quite a number of pupils from the best families, especially those speaking the German language. Among his students were several who afterwards became prominent in local and public affairs, while all who enjoyed the benefit of his instruction attributed to him much of the success which they subsequently achieved. After teaching a private school for several years Mr. Lang became teacher of the German languages and literature in the Canton high school, later accepting the principalship of St. Peter's parochial school in Canton. He held the latter position until failing health compelled him to forego further educational work, and upon his resignation his son Augustus succeeded to the place. Jacob Lang died on the 19th day of October, 1861, deeply lamented by all who knew him. He was a man of profound learning and varied culture, deeply read upon all great subjects, and widely informed relative to the leading events of his day. In religion he was a Roman Catholic and throughout his life he made every other consideration subordinate to his duties to the church and the cause for which it stood. By his first wife, whose name is given in a preceding paragraph, he was the father of six children, whose names are as follows: Augustus, who succeeded him as principal of the St. Peter's school, and whose death occurred in Canton in 1896, after twenty-five years of service as an able and conscientious educator; John B., a resident of Cleveland; Edward, who lives in Canton; Aemelius J., of Fort Wayne, Indiana; Charles F., whose name introduces this article, and Mrs. Rosa C. Klorer, of Canton. The second marriage of Mr. Lang resulted in the birth of one daughter, Emma, who is now the wife of Michael Baechel, of this city.

Charles F. Lang was born on Plum street, now McKinley street, Canton, and spent the greater part of his youth and early manhood in the city of Cleveland, where he remained until his twenty-second year. After acquiring a thorough scholastic training in the schools of that city, he studied abroad, spending several years in Europe, where he made a specialty of music, receiving instruction from some of the greatest masters of the art in Germany and other countries. Returning to the United States, he went upon the operatic stage and followed that profession for a period of twenty-one years, during which time he was connected with various troupes, traveling extensively over nearly every state of the Union. He achieved honorable distinction as a musician and while on the stage enjoyed the reputation of one of the most skillful artists before the public.

Mr. Lang's operatic career terminated in 1896, at which time he retired from the stage and, returning to Canton, accepted, at the suggestion of his friend, Mr. Klorer, a position with the Berger Manufacturing Company. Three years later he was elected vice-president of this enterprise and has continued in that capacity ever since, demonstrating ability of a high order in the discharge of his official functions. The Langs have long been noted as a musical family, not a few of the name achieving much more than local distinction, several, including the subject, attaining national repute.

Mr. Lang is a gentleman of strong mentality and refined tastes, a reader and thinker, and in his specialty--music--standing in the front ranks as an artist. Deeply interested in the city's industrial growth and general material prosperity, he encourages all enterprises to these ends, and as a wide-awake, progressive man of the times, he occupies a prominent place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens.

DAVID B. SHAFFER, of Washington township, has long enjoyed worthy prestige as a farmer, stock raiser and public spirited man and his life presents many lessons that should appeal with force to the young and rising generation. His ancestral history is alluded to in the biography of Joseph Shaffer, the family of which he is a representative being one of the oldest and most widely known in this section of the state. William Shaffer, father of the subject, was born in Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, in 1808, and when a small boy was brought to Stark county by his parents, William and Sophia Shaffer, who settled in Washington township as early as 1816, the father purchasing land from the government. William, Jr., grew up at home with limited educational advantages and after his marriage with Miss Sarah Berger began farming the paternal homestead. A short time afterwards he moved to an eighty-acre tract which had been entered for him by his father, and on this he erected a small log cabin and addressed himself to the formidable task of removing the virgin forest with which the land was covered. Subsequently the primitive cabin was replaced by a more comfortable and commodious hewed-log structure and in due season the land was cleared and brought to a successful state of cultivation. As the years went by he added to his possessions and became one of the prosperous farmers of his township, also took an active interest in the general development of the country, besides using his influence at all times for the moral improvement of the community. Mr. Shaffer was a man of strong personality, honorable and upright in all of his dealings, honest to a fault, and his relations with his fellow men were characterized by a conscientious regard for the principles of rectitude which won him the unbounded friendship and confidence of his fellow citizens. He stood firm for the right under all circumstances and his scruples were so exact that it has been stated he would have suffered martyrdom rather than knowingly commit the slightest wrong or defraud one of his fellows to the value of a penny. In the early days he was one of the leading Whigs in his township, but when that old party fulfilled its mission and ceased to exist he became just as ardent and active in his support of Republican principles. Mrs. Shaffer died in 1848, from which time until his death in June, 1902, at the advanced age of ninety-four years, two months and seven days, Mr. Shaffer remained a widower, his daughter Lovina keeping his house and otherwise ministering to his comfort and happiness. In 1882

he left his old home and, with his daughter, moved to another farm in the same neighborhood and it was on the latter that he spent the last twenty years of his long and useful life. Mr. Shaffer grew old gracefully and experienced few of the weaknesses and infirmities incident to advanced age. At the time of his death he was in full possession of his strong mental faculties and until his last illness he retained to a remarkable degree the vigorous physical powers for which he was always noted. To the end of his life he kept in close touch with the times, maintained a lively interest in political issues and public questions and at the advanced age of ninety-three cast his last presidential ballot for his friend and fellow citizen, the late William McKinley. Although not identified with any church, he was a profound believer of the sacred scriptures, the precepts of which he ever made his rule of life. For many years he attended the United Brethren church in his neighborhood, an organization which profited much by his liberal financial support.

Mrs. Sarah Shaffer was the daughter of Rev. Christian Berger, one of the first ministers of the United Brethren church to proclaim the gospel in eastern Ohio. He was a member of the first general conference held in the United States and appears to have been influential in ecclesiastical circles, as his name is frequently mentioned in the early official records of the church in this and other states. Mrs. Shaffer was born in 1811 in Pennsylvania, bore her husband six children and died in 1848 in the thirty-seventh year of her age. Her life was a beautiful example of true piety, having been reared by godly parents, and from childhood until death she was a faithful and self-denying member of the United Brethren church. Of the six children who originally constituted the family of William and Sarah Shaffer only two are living at the present time. Lovina, a maiden lady, residing in Washington township, and the subject of this review.

David B. Shaffer was born January 19, 1836, in Washington township, Stark county, and from that time to the present day he has lived within a short distance of his birthplace. His early experience on the farm taught him the valuable lesson of self-reliance, and there also were fostered and developed the strong traits of character that subsequently rendered him an influential factor in the material affairs and public concerns of his township and county. He was well reared and in the public schools acquired an intellectual training which, supplemented by several years' attendance at Mt. Union College, made him one of the well educated young men of his community.

When about twenty years old Mr. Shaffer began his labors as an educator, intending to make it his life work, but after teaching two terms he decided to withdraw from the profession and devote his attention to husbandry. In 1858 he was united in marriage with Miss Ruth A. Keller, daughter of the late John Keller, for many years a prominent farmer of Washington township, and during the two years following cultivated the home place for a share of the proceeds. At the expiration of that time he purchased a small farm of eighteen acres, on which he lived until about 1861, when he sold the place and bought his present home in Washington township, which originally consisted of twenty-seven and a half acres. By subsequent purchases the farm now embraces an area of fifty-five acres of fine tillable land, the improvements on which rank with the best in the township. Mr. Shaffer takes worthy precedence as a farmer and stock raiser and since attaining to the years of manhood has been one of the most enterprising and progressive citizens of Washington. He has been especially active in organized efforts for the promotion of agriculture, being one of the leading members of Fairmount Grange, and his influence in this direction has been largely instrumental in unifying the farming interests in this part of the country. He has labored earnestly with others to effect a systematic cooperation among the agriculturists of the county, and that these efforts have not been altogether fruitless is attested by the rapid strides farming has made since the various organizations were established. Like all good citizens Mr. Shaffer is a politician, not in the sense of seeking office or aspiring to leadership, but to the end that the laws be properly enforced and good local government be maintained. He is an unyielding supporter of the Republican party and ever since old enough to discharge the duties of citizenship has been a power in local politics. He attends the various nominating conventions, and his opinions carry weight and conviction, not only in these bodies, but in the more influential personal work while campaigns are in progress. In 1861 he was elected assessor of his township and subsequently held the office at various times, besides filling for seven consecutive terms the position of township clerk. These marks of public favor were not self-sought, but were rather thrust upon Mr. Shaffer by reason of his intelligence, judgment and peculiar fitness to discharge their functions. He has shown himself worthy the confidence reposed in him by attending strictly to his duties in a straightforward, business-like manner, his official record meeting with the unqualified approval of the people of all parties. Personally he is held in high esteem and to say that he is one of the strong-minded, public-spirited, enterprising and influential citizens of the county is to state what all who know him cheerfully testify. Himself and wife move in the best social circles in the community and are alive to all good work for the general welfare of their kind, taking an active part in all moral and social reforms and dispensing their charities with liberal hands.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer are the parents of six children, four living, namely: Jesse, a resident of Trumbull county, this state; Thomas, who lives in Charleston, West Virginia; Ira, a farmer of Washington township, and Cora, who married Henry Youtz, of Stark county. Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer are earnest and consistent members of the United Brethren church, both becoming members about 1857 and have devoted a great deal of time and money to the cause of the church. He has held practically all of the offices of the church, but at the present time is not holding any official positions.

THOMAS POWELL was born on a farm near New Lisbon, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 2d of November, 1820, being a son of Thomas and Mary M. (Sell) Powell, of whose eleven children he is the elder of the only two survivors, the other being his sister Anna, who is the widow of Joseph Wallace, and resides in Washington township, being now seventy-nine years of age. Thomas Powell, Sr., was a native of the state of Maryland, where he was born in the year following that memorable one in which was signed the Declaration of Independence, and thus his childish couch was watched and guarded in the midst of alarms and the stern conflict of grim-visaged war. He was reared and educated in his native state, and there learned the blacksmith trade, but the vocation did not suit him and he there turned his attention to farming. He was married in Maryland and there five of his children were born. In the year 1811 he emigrated to Ohio, which was at that time considered as being on the veritable frontier of civilization, and he located on a tract of land near New Lisbon, Columbiana county, securing the same on an improvement lease, which involved the clearing of the land and placing it under cultivation. There he continued to reside until 1830, when he came with his family to Stark county and located on the southeast quarter of section 13, Washington township, the property being owned by his older sister, Elizabeth Hahn. He took a life lease of the property, and here continued to make his home until his death, which occurred on the 1st of October, 1846, prior to which time he had effected the reclamation of a considerable portion of the farm. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, but had no ambition for public office of any sort. He was in his early life a member of what was commonly designated as the old "blue stocking" Lutheran church, but shortly prior to his demise he became a member of the Freewill Baptist church, with which his wife also was identified. She was born in Maryland in 1782, and her death occurred in 1863 at the venerable age of eighty-one years.

William Powell, the paternal grandfather of the subject, was a native of England, where he was reared and where he learned the trade of cooper, and as a youth he took passage on a sailing vessel bound for America, being bound out in Baltimore to pay his passage, in accordance with a previous agreement. He eventually took up his residence in Maryland, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Thomas Powell, whose name introduces this sketch, was ten years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Stark county, and there fell to his portion such limited educational advantages as were afforded in the pioneer schools of Columbiana and Stark counties, and he became familiar with the privations and hardships necessarily incidental to pioneer life, while his youth was filled with incessant and arduous toil and endeavor, for he early began to render material contribution to the work of reclaiming and otherwise improving the home farm. He was twenty-six years of age at the time of his father's death, and his mother retaining a life lease on the farm, he assumed charge of the same for her, and in 1858 he became associated with his brother

Levi in the purchase of the place, whereupon he built for himself a separate residence on the northern side of the farm, having been married in 1847. He continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits for a long term of years and developed one of the valuable farms of the township. In 1884 his son-in-law secured the ownership of the half interest formerly held by the subject's brother, and in 1895 Mr. Powell disposed of his own interest to the same son-in-law, Hiram Conrad, with whom he has since made his home, and in his venerable age he is living retired and in the enjoyment of the comforts and blessings which constitute the fitting crown of a well spent life. He is a Democrat in politics and has always taken a lively and intelligent interest in the party cause, though he has never been imbued with the slightest desire for official preferment. He has long been a devoted and consistent member of the Evangelical Association, and he is today revered and honored as one of the sterling pioneers of the county, retaining the high esteem of the people of the community in which practically his entire life has been passed.

On the 9th of March, 1847, Mr. Powell was united in marriage to Miss Elsie A. Wallace, who was born in Butler township, Columbiana county, being a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Mall) Wallace, concerning whom more specific mention is made in the sketch of their son, John S. Wallace, appearing on another page of this volume. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 21st of September, 1862, and of her six children four are still living, namely: Emily, who is the widow of Emanuel Miller and resides at Mount Union, this county; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Hiram Conrad and with whom her father now makes his home; Calvin, who is a successful farmer of Columbiana county; and Mary A., who is the wife of James Maxwell, of Jefferson county. On the 28th of November, 1867, Mr.

Powell consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Lucinda Cameron, who was born in Columbiana county, being a daughter of Absalom Cameron, who resided in that county for a number of years but who eventually returned to his native state of Pennsylvania, where he died. Mr. and Mrs. Powell have three children, namely: Margie, who is the wife of Jerome Sanor, of Columbiana county; Homer, who is an oil distiller in Kentucky; and Dallas, who remains with his parents.

Hiram Conrad, who is now the owner of the old homestead farm, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, being a son of David and Sally (Doup) Conrad, pioneers of that section. He was born on the 1st of October, 1849, and was there reared and educated, growing up under the sturdy discipline of the farm. On the 19th of February, 1869, he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Powell, daughter of the subject, and they have ever since lived on the homestead which he now owns, and he is known as one of the progressive and reliable farmers of the county and as a man of undebatable integrity in all the relations of life. He is independent in politics, voting for whom he thinks best qualified for office, and he and his wife hold membership in the Evangelical Association. They have eight children, concerning whom we offer the following brief record: Ida is the wife of Rankin Wolf, of Washington township; Elsie E. is the wife of Emanuel Roose, of the same township; Ralph remains at the parental home; Grace is the wife of George McCannon, of Atwater, Portage county; and Clyde, Craig, Frank and Howard still remain beneath the parental roof.

WESLEY KNOLL.—This native-born citizen of Washington township, Stark county, Ohio, had his nativity July 7, 1857, and is a son of George Knoll, a full history of whose life is given on another page of this volume. Wesley Knoll secured a very good common school education at Mount Union, and was later graduated from the commercial department of Mount Union College when about eighteen years of age. At nineteen he began to teach in the district schools and followed the vocation for four winters. In 1882 Mr. Knoll accepted the position of head farmer at the Fairmount Children's Home, of which he retained charge for one year.

February 2, 1883. Mr. Knoll was first joined in marriage with Miss Nora J. Guthrie, and after marriage he immediately purchased his present farm from his mother. To the union of Wesley and Nora J. (Guthrie) Knoll were born two children, the elder of whom, Zella E., is a student in the high school, and the younger, Elsie, is a pupil at the Mount Union grammar school. But little more than a decade had passed when the conjugal bliss of Mr. Knoll was destroyed by the invasion of his household by death, who, on the 30th of March, 1894, bore away the soul of Mrs. Nora Knoll. After a lapse of over a year and a half of loneliness, Mr. Knoll found a second help-mate in the person of Miss Carrie A. Buck, whom he married October 22, 1896. This amiable lady is a native of Alliance, Ohio, and a daughter of the eminent Dr. Henry Buck, who for two or more terms served as mayor of Alliance, where he had enjoyed also a most remunerative practice, but is now residing in Versailles, Missouri, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Robert Buck, father of Dr. Henry Buck, was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, was a pioneer of Ohio and one of the first settlers of Columbiana county, where he entered a farm in Knox township, and had a large share in opening the country to the progress of civilization. The family of Wesley and Carrie A. (Buck) Knoll consists of two children, who are named George Henry and Charles Merrill. Mr. Knoll carries on miscellaneous farming, raising the crops indigenous to the soil and climate, and also breeds choice or graded live stock. In conjunction with general farming, Mr. Knoll keeps a number of Jersey cows, the product of which he disposes to the creamery of his neighborhood.

In politics Mr. Knoll is a strong Prohibitionist in his proclivities, but has voted with the Republican party, inasmuch as it is recognized as one of the two general political bodies of the land, and under the auspices of this party he has served as township clerk for seven years. Fraternally Mr. Knoll is a member of Fairmount Grange No. 1459, Patrons of Husbandry. His religion is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he holds the office of steward and the teachings of which he and family implicitly follow.

JOSIAH CORRELL, of Plain township, Stark county, Ohio, the subject of this sketch, is not a remarkably aged man either mentally, physically or in the number of years during which he has lived, and yet his father, John Correll, was born a few months previous to the inauguration of Washington as President. Josiah Correll was born in Stark county, Ohio, November 19, 1836. His father was John Correll, born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, January 5, 1788, and his mother was Elizabeth Lind, a native of Carroll county, Maryland, born in August, 1794. In their native county they grew to maturity, were married and became the parents of children, and in May, 1834, they moved to Stark county, Ohio, and settled in Plain township on a farm. There two other children were born to them, of whom Josiah, the subject, is the youngest. The father died at his home in Plain township, April 15, 1859, in the seventy-second year of his age, while his wife survived him many years, dying

MR. AND MRS. JOSIAH CORRELL.

March 1, 1875, when within a few months of being eighty-two years old.

In his native township of Plain, Josiah Correll was reared and educated and there he has resided continuously since, with the exception of about three years which he spent in Canton township. He has always followed agricultural pursuits and at present is the owner of one hundred and seventeen acres in three tracts. They are well improved, fenced, ditched, and the buildings are substantial and commodiously arranged.

On March 20, 1862, Josiah Correll was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Mentzer, a native of Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, born March 9, 1838. She is a daughter of David and Christena (Hull) Mentzer, her father being a native of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, while her mother was a native of Canton township, Stark county. His death occurred in Canton township, hers in the city of Canton. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Correll, viz: Charles Grant, Edwin Sherman, Minnie May, Nettie J. and Lillie. Nettie is dead, having passed into eternity in her twenty-seventh year. Of the eleven brothers and sisters of the subject, but three are now living. They are Sarah J., who is the wife of Andrew Pontius, a sketch of whose career will be found in another part of this volume; Jeremiah, who is now a resident of Bucyrus, Ohio; Margaret, who is the wife of William Miller, of Perry township, Stark county. Those who have departed this life are Maria, Jacob N., John, Fanny, Nancy, Catherine F., Samuel and Eliza. Nancy was the wife of Isaac Ruthrautt, Catherine became the wife of Reuben Flohr, and Anna Eliza was the wife of William Essig.

In politics, Mr. Correll is a Republican, earnest and energetic in his advocacy of the principles of that party and a firm believer in the policy of the present administration and that which preceded it. However, he has never sought political preferment at the hands of his party and has only filled such local positions as his friends insisted upon his accepting. He served as school director nine years and was a number of times a road supervisor. He is a member of Canton Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons, of Canton Chapter and of Canton Commandery No. 38. Personally, he is genial and companionable, unselfish almost to a fault, kind and sympathetic to the unfortunate and suffering and charitable even beyond his means. There is no question that Plain township and Stark county have been greatly benefited by his residence of sixty-six years within its boundaries.

HENRY STAHL.—The old Keystone state of the Union has contributed materially to the citizenship of Stark county, Ohio, from the early pioneer era when here was instituted that arduous labor of subduing the wilderness and ushering in the march of civilization, and among the many who thus crossed over the Ohio river into the newer state where a large number of the sturdy German stock which had played so important a part in the pioneer annals of the older state. Among this number gained from Pennsylvania by Stark county is the honored subject of this review, who has here made his home since his boyhood days and who is now one of the representative members of the community in Washington township, one of the most prosperous and favored sections of the county. He resides near the village of Homeworth, near the line of Columbiana county, and is the owner of a finely improved farm in Washington township, Stark county, and for many years was a leading carpenter and builder in this section, while he is at the present time engaged in the undertaking business. He is one of the prominent and representative citizens of the community and his standing is such as to demand for him consistent consideration in this publication, which has to do with those who have been the founders and conservators of the county's prosperity.

Henry Stahl is a native of Adams county, Pennsylvania, having been born in the immediate vicinity of the historic city of Gettysburg, on the 13th of December, 1824, and being a son of Samuel and Jane (Hurst) Stahl, the former of German and the latter of Irish ancestry. They became the parents of six children and of the number the subject of this sketch is the eldest of the four surviving, the others being as follows: William, who is a resident of Cleveland, this state; Mary A., who is the wife of Zadock Hoiles, of Alliance, this county, and Sarah, who is the wife of Jesse Ruff, of Washington township. Samuel Stahl was born in York county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated and where, as a young man, he learned the tailor's trade. He removed to Adams county, this state, where he maintained his home a number of years, and on the 3d of May, 1838, he arrived in Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, where he remained less than a year and then came to Stark county and settled in Washington township, where he continued to work at his trade during the residue of his active career, his death here occurring on the 2d of March, 1871, at the age of sixty-eight years, four months and fifteen days. The paternal grandfather of the subject emigrated to the United States from Germany, while his maternal grandfather came from Ireland. Samuel Stahl was a Republican in his political adherency, though previously voting with the Democracy, and his religious views were those represented in the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which his wife also was a devoted member. She entered into eternal rest on the 21st of March, 1886, at the age of nearly eighty-two years.

Henry Stahl, the immediate subject of this review, was about fourteen years of age at the time when his parents removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and his early educational discipline was secured in the public schools of the two states, while he soon began to be a distinctive wage-earner after coming to Stark county, being a vigorous and sturdy youth and doing much heavy work in the way of clearing land, chopping and log-rolling. At the age of twenty-one years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, becoming a thoroughly skilled artisan in the line, and for thirty-three years he continued to follow his trade as a vocation, becoming one of the leading contractors and builders of this locality, while there are still standing many buildings which bear evidence of his ability and careful workmanship. In 1844 he purchased his present home farm, in section twenty-five, Washington township, the tract at the time being covered with its dense growth of native timber, and the first house erected was a primitive log cabin, which was put up by his father, with the assistance of his neighbors, for mutual aid was the order of the day in the pioneer days, and practically every man's neighbor—and they were usually far removed—was his friend; confidence and esteem were freely accorded, and from the doors of the little cabins the latch-string hung hospitably out, so that even the "houseless stranger" need not lack for welcome. Though toil was incessant and arduous in the old days, and deprivations and hardships many, there was much in sentiment and association that may well be recalled with pleasure and appreciation by those whose memory touches that epoch and who are now living under conditions radically different. In 1872 Mr. Stahl established himself in the undertaking business in Homeworth, and for the past twenty-seven years he has devoted his entire attention to this enterprise, having provided the best of equipments and accessories for the work of a funeral director, while his timely and delicate sympathy in the handling of the same has won to him the high esteem and regard of the people of the community. His son is associated with him in the business, which is conducted under the firm name of H. Stahl & Son, the junior member of the firm being a capable and progressive young business man and proving an able coadjutor to his father. In politics Mr. Stahl is a Republican, but has never sought office in the gift of the party, though he has ever manifested a deep interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community. For several years he served as a member of the school board, and for two years he was a member of the directorate of the Home Insurance Company of Washington and Paris townships. He has been a prominent figure in Washington Grange No. 1167, Patrons of Husbandry, of which he served as master for four years. For an equal period he was president of the Western Reserve Undertakers' Association. He is a prominent and valued member of the Presbyterian church, in which he is incumbent of the office of deacon, and his wife likewise is an earnest and devoted member of the church.

On the 30th of March, 1848, Mr. Stahl was united in marriage to Miss Serena Burns, who was born in Butler township, Columbiana county, Ohio, being a daughter of Hugh and Sabina (McFall) Burns, her father being one of the sterling pioneers of Columbiana county, and of this union one child has been born, Dennis, who married Miss Amanda J. Ickes, of West township, Columbiana county, Ohio, who has borne him one son, Ross. Dennis Stahl is associated with his father in business, as has been already noted.

ADAM SHORB.—The Shorb family has long been established on American soil, and according to well authenticated family tradition the genealogy touches the Hohenzollern line,—that of the present reigning house of the empire of Germany. Concerning the family an article appeared in the Washington Post (D. C.), of March 23, 1902, and it will be apropos to reproduce the same in part at this point: "Johann (or Jacob) Shorb, so the family tradition goes, married a daughter of the royal line of the Hohenzollerns and brought her to America, settling in what was then upper Maryland. He was a man of considerable wealth and the owner of a large fleet of trading vessels, all the fittings of which were marked with the royal coat of arms. A few of these belongings are still preserved as heirlooms among the family, as well as a number of pieces of silver plate and china, bearing the same markings. A large tract of land was purchased by this Johann (or Jacob) Shorb, and a comfortable home established, where for years he dwelt in peace with his royal wife and brought up a good-sized family of children. Of the most of these little record can be found, the aforesaid family tradition dealing with a few of the children only,—the ones probably who took most interest in genealogy. Two sons are mentioned, John and Jacob, and two daughters, one of whom probably married a Fink and the other a Sneeringer, these two names being connected with the royal branch in the story."

Andrew Shorb, grandfather of the subject, was born in the province of Alsace, France, which is now a portion of the German empire, and he thence emigrated to America when a young man, landing in the city of Baltimore, where he passed the remainder of his life. His son John, father of the subject of this memoir, was born in the city of Baltimore, in 1760, and there married Catherine Gross, a sister of the wife of Andrew Meyer, who was another of the prominent and influential pioneer citizens of Stark county. In the year 1805 John Shorb came to Ohio with his family and located in Steubenville, Jefferson county, while two years later he came to Stark county and became later associated with a Mr. Wells in laying out the original plat of what is now the city of Canton. He entered a considerable tract of government land and received patent to the same in 1809, the document having been signed, in February of that year, by Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States, and James Madison, secretary of state. Mr. Shorb was an honorable and hard-working pioneer and contributed his quota toward the upbuilding of Stark county. The ax with which he "blazed" his trail from Steubenville to Canton is still retained in the possession of the family. In 1809 he built a homestead on his farm, and a portion of this building is still standing, the same having been remodeled and standing just north of the present Shorb home, at 416 Shorb street, in the city of Canton. John Shorb met his death in the year 1824, as the result of an accident. He was assisting in the erection of the first building of St. John's church, Roman Catholic, and a rafter fell in such a way as to break his back, his death occurring the following day. Up to this time the church services had been held in his house. He had been actively engaged in farming up to the time of his death and lived up to the full tension of life on the frontier, with its strenuous though isolated activity. It was a firm and robust epoch and yet it was not lacking in the soft touches of idealism, else not ours would be the many tales of romantic interest which have fallen from the lips of those who here established their homes in the midst of the forest primeval. The wife of John Shorb bore the maiden name of Catharine Gross, and she survived him by many years, passing away in 1841. Of their five children brief record is entered as follows: John, who married Miss Harriet Stidger, died in Canton, in 1856, having been a miller and banker and having been concerned in the organization of one of the first banking institutions in Canton, the same having been located at the corner of Cleveland avenue and West Tuscarawas street; Mary became the wife of Dr. Andrew Rappe, one of Canton's pioneer physicians, and she died in this city in 1851; Adam, the next in order of birth, is the subject of this memoir; Betsy became the wife of Henry Barnes, and she died in Canton in 1831; and Joseph died in Sandusky, Ohio, where he was long engaged in the mercantile business.

Adam Shorb was born in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, in 1796, and was a mere child at the time when his parents came to the wilds of Ohio, though he had attended school in Emmitsburg, Maryland, prior to the emigration to Ohio, where his further educational advantages were such as were afforded in the district schools of Jefferson and Stark counties. He was reared under the environments and influences of pioneer life and contributed his due quota to the reclaiming and cultivation of the old homestead farm, where he was reared to maturity. In the city of Canton, on the 20th of February, 1827, he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Smith, who was born in Hagerstown, Maryland, and who accompanied her parents on their removal to Stark county, Ohio, in 1825. Adam Shorb purchased the home farm after the death of his father, and for a time he resided in a house at the corner of Fifth and Wells streets, while later he removed to the old homestead, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death there occurring on the 4th of October, 1866, at which time he was seventy years of age. His wife survived him by more than a score of years, passing away on the 12th of November, 1892, at the age of eighty-seven years. Mrs. Shorb was a Lutheran and Mr. Shorb a Catholic, while in politics the latter gave an unqualified support to the Democratic party. He was a man of inflexible integrity and was held in the highest confidence and esteem by all who knew him. Of his children brief record is incorporated as follows: Mary died at the age of thirty-nine years; Catherine, the wife of James Rider, died in Canton, in 1864; Elizabeth and Joseph died in childhood; Harriet resides in the old homestead; Frances, the wife of Peter Barlet, died in Canton, in 1887; Evana died in childhood; Andrew married Harriet Knowling, and his death occurred in Canton, in 1892; and Ella E. was the wife of John A. Moore, of Baltimore, Maryland, and since his decease in 1899 has returned to Canton to reside. Of Miss Harriet Shorb, daughter of this honored pioneer, we may say that she was born in the home on Fifth and Wells streets, and in the Union school she secured her early education, her teacher having been Miss Betsey Cowles. She has always resided in Canton, where she has a wide circle of devoted friends. She is a communicant of St. John's church.

WILLIAM D. DAVIS, M. D., is a native of Mayville, Knox county, Tennessee, where he was born on the 19th of October, 1868, being the youngest of the three children of William J. and Sarah E. (Slaughter) Davis, the others being Samuel J., of Jellico, Tennessee, and Jacob W., of Knoxville, that state. The father was likewise a native of Tennessee, where he was born in the year 1835, being reared on a farm and continued to follow agricultural pursuits during his brief life, his death occurring when he was but thirty-four years of age, as the result of exposures and hardships endured while serving in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion, his father likewise having been a Union soldier, while one of his brothers, who bore the name of George Washington, was a lieutenant in the Confederate service, these family divisions signifying one of the most pitiable features of that greatest internecine war in the annals of history. William J. Davis entered into eternal rest in 1869, having been a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, while his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was a consistent member. His wife had been previously married to George Snyder, and of this union four children were born, of whom three survive, namely: Rev. George L., who is a clergyman of the Methodist church and a resident of the state of Washington; Mary, who is the wife of William R. Morgan, of Robbinsville, North Carolina, and Josephine, who is the wife of John Blair, of Blunt county, Tennessee. After the death of her second husband Mrs. Davis consummated a third marriage, being then united to Joel H. Cathran, who is yet living, one child having been born of this union, Andrew Jackson, who is a resident of Jellico, Tennessee. The mother of the Doctor passed away on the 20th of June, 1902, and the memory of her gracious and gentle character remains as a benediction to her children.

Dr. Davis was reared in the parental home, receiving his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools and supplementing the same by a course of study in Maryville College, at Maryville, Tennessee, after which he put his scholastic acquirements to practical test by engaging in pedagogic work, being successfully engaged in teaching in the public schools of his native state for a period of two years, after which, in 1890, he was matriculated in the Tennessee Medical College, at Knoxville, where he was graduated in the spring of 1893, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and receiving the fourth honors in a class of thirty-five members. Within his last year in college, on the 10th of November, 1892, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Rosa Vernier, widow of George Vernier, of Canton, Ohio, where she was born, being a daughter of George Fultz, and in the spring following his graduation the Doctor and his wife came to Stark county, locating in the village of Osna-burg, where he entered upon the practice of his profession, his novitiate being of brief duration, for his ability soon became recognized, while his personality is such as to readily attract strong friendships. He has succeeded in building up a large and representative practice in this locality, his services being in requisition throughout a wide radius of country. Mrs. Davis has one child by her previous marriage, Miss Hazel Vernier, no children having been born of the present marriage.

In politics Dr. Davis is one of the leading members of the Republican party in this township, being at the present time incumbent of the office of township clerk, while for the past three years he has been a member of the Republican central committee of the county and a zealous worker in the party cause. He is identified with the Canton Medical Society; with Osnaburg Lodge No. 507, Knights of Pythias; Liberty Council No. 70, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and Mollie Pitcher Council No. 10, Daughters of America. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which both he and Mrs. Davis are devoted members, while he is at the present time serving as a member of the board of trustees of the church in Osnaburg.

JOHN L. STEIN.—The subject's father, John Stein, was born near Berlin, Germany, and upon reaching the years of maturity chose farming for his occupation. However, in accordance with the national custom of that country, he served a term of three years in the army. He married Christina Rupp, also a native of Berlin. In 1870 John Stein came to the United States with his family and located at once at Canton, Ohio. He obtained employment at the moulding trade, principally with C. Aultman & Company, and for about twenty-seven years has been thus employed. He is a faithful member of St. Peter's Catholic church and enjoys a splendid reputation among those who know him. To him and his wife have been born the following children: Lizzie has been twice married, first to Al. Baxter and, second, to Rudolph Witter, of Cleveland; John L. is the subject; Katy is the wife of L. W. Brown, of Cleveland; Fred is a cigar maker and lives in Canton; Amelia is unmarried; Joseph, of Canton; August is employed at the Dueber-Hampden works at Canton; Henry; Jacob, of Cleveland; William, of Canton, and Alosius.

John L. Stein first saw the light of day near Berlin, Germany, on the 14th of April, 1867. At the age of three years he was brought to America by his parents and as soon as old enough began attendance at the Catholic parochial schools and later attended the public schools of the city. Upon completing the common schools he spent two years in the high school, but not being in very good financial circumstances, was compelled, at the age of fifteen years, to quit school. His first occupation was as clerk in the store of Henry Piero, after which for nearly three years he was in the employ of Elbel Gillam Company. Leaving this firm, he learned the trade of a barber with Phil Heidrick and remained with him for eight years. He then conducted a shop at the Yohe hotel for one year and afterward ran a shop of his own at 430 East Tuscarawas street for six years. Mr. Simmonds was at that time running the Hotel Barnet and offered the subject inducements to open up and run a barber shop in the hotel. He accepted the offer, refitted the shop and opened it up for business on the 7th of January, 1900, and on October 1, 1902, opened a shop in the McKinley Hotel. Of genial disposition and courteous manners, he has won for himself a host of warm personal friends and is the recipient of a full share of the public patronage.

Mr. Stein has all his life taken a keen interest in political affairs, but his first active participation aside from the casting of his ballot was in 1899, when, in response to the wish of his friends, he ran for the nomination for city council. He was defeated, but the following year was nominated for the office by acclamation and at the ensuing election was elected to represent the fourth ward, receiving a majority of thirty-seven. His political principles are embodied in the platform of the Democratic party, of which he is a firm and uncompromising adherent. Religiously he is a faithful member of St. Peter's Catholic church, while in his social relations he is affiliated with the C. M. B. A., the C. O. F. and the P. H. C.

Mr. Stein has been twice married. His first wife, whom he married in Canton, was in her maidenhood Miss Lizzie Grosenklaus, and to this union came one child, Robert. Mrs Stein was removed by the hand of death five years after their marriage, and for his second wife Mr. Stein chose Miss Hattie Huffman, of Peoria, Illinois. To this marriage have been born two children, Ethel and Millard.

MISS GRACE POYSER.—Miss Poyser is a representative of two of the early families of Stark county, both widely and favorably known by reason of their respectable social standing and wholesome moral influence. The name she bears has long been synonymous for all that constitutes sterling womanhood and not the less so is the name of her ancestors on the maternal side. William F. Poyser, the subject's father, was born February 16, 1828, in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, and grew to maturity on a farm, attending at intervals during his minority the district school near the family homestead. When a young man, he came to Canton with his brother and took up the carpenter's trade, at which he soon became a very efficient workman. For some years he was in the employ of the Russell Machine Company, of this city, as traveling salesman, but after resigning that position he resumed mechanical pursuits, devoting special attention to cabinetmaking, in which he acquired great efficiency and skill. Mr. Poyser ran a shop of his own and in addition to general cabinetmaking frequently worked for John Danner, manufacturing the latter's celebrated revolving book-cases. He was an honest, industrious man, provided well for those dependent upon him and lived an honorable life in the sight of men and in the reverent fear of his maker. On the 9th day of June, 1853, in the city of Canton, was solemnized the ceremony by which Mr. Poyser and Miss Catherine A. Little were united in the bonds of wedlock. Mrs. Poyser's father was Elias Little, a member of one of Stark county's oldest and most highly esteemed families, his antecedents having moved to this part of the state when the country was little more than an untrodden wilderness. The birth of Mrs. Poyser occurred in Canton and her education was such as the public schools could impart. Among her teachers was the late Mr. McGregor, one of the oldest school men in the county, whose death in Canton was of recent occurrence.

The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Poyser covered a period of a little over twenty-six years, when it was terminated by the death of the husband, which event occurred on the 11th day of October, 1879. Their union was blessed with four children, namely: Helen L., wife of F. H. Smith, of Akron; Mary F., deceased; Charles W., who married a Miss Likes, of Cambridge, this state; Miss Grace, whose name furnishes the caption of this review, and who lives in Canton. Mr. Poyser was a zealous Christian whose daily life harmonized with the precepts of the religion he professed. He was an active member of the First Baptist church of Canton and for many years labored earnestly in the Sunday school, having held various official positions in that organization. In politics he was a pronounced Republican and as such did much in a quiet way to promote the interests of his party. He had profound convictions on many things, was honorable and just in all his dealings and endeavored to realize in himself his high ideal of manhood and citizenship. Mrs. Poyser survives her husband and still lives in Canton, where she is popular with a large circle of friends. She is a lady of excellent character and respectable social status, a sincere Christian, and to her in a very large measure is due the success which her children have thus far achieved.

Miss Grace Poyser was born at her present home in the city of Canton on the 27th of November, 1870. Blessed with godly parents and proper home training, her mind early responded to these influences and while still a mere child she developed an aptness for study and a taste for the true and beautiful, which portended well for her future course of life. Her admission to the public schools at the age of six years marked the beginning of an educational career which as a pupil terminated with her graduation in 1890; but which as a teacher is still in progress. Miss Poyser made not only a creditable but a brilliant record as a student, as is evident from her having completed the high school course when but little past eighteen years of age. Two years after her graduation she accepted a position in the city schools, taking charge of the second and third grades in the Liberty street building, where she demonstrated abilities which soon brought her to the favorable notice of her superiors and to her patrons. During the ensuing four years she taught in the building on East Fourth street and at the expiration of that period was promoted to her present position in the North Cherry street school, where she has charge of the sixth grade, which is considered one of the most important year's work in the entire course. As a teacher Miss Poyser is exceedingly careful and painstaking and possesses not only the ability to instruct well, but also that nameless and undefinable tact which enables one to direct and control pupils with little appreciable effort. Indeed, she is a born teacher, and the apparent ease with which she manages those under her charge, while leading them along the devious pathways of knowledge, at the same time bringing out the better elements of their natures, demonstrates a peculiar fitness for the work which the majority of instructors do not possess. Thus far her labors have been eminently satisfactory to all concerned, and the firm hold which she has on the affections of her pupils and the high esteem in which she is held by the superintendent and official board is proof that her tenure of service is destined to continue as long as she deems fit to remain in the educational field. Miss Poyser is as popular socially as she is professionally, and few ladies in Canton are more widely and favorably known. While thoroughly devoted to the noble work in which she is engaged, she does not permit it to dwarf or narrow her nature, as too many teachers do, finding rest and recreation from its exactions in the society of kindred spirits, whose companionship is mutually helpful in arousing that peculiar intellectual and social animation which gives to life so much of its charm. In every relation of life her work has been well done and judging by what she has already accomplished her many friends are justified in predicting for her a future of distinguished usefulness.

DANIEL BOUGHMAN is a native of Pennsylvania, which state has contributed so valuable an element to the citizenship of Stark county, having been born on a farm in Cumberland county, on the 14th of August, 1826, and being a son of Joseph and Barbara (Walters) Boughman, the former of whom was likewise a native of the Keystone state, while the latter was born in Virginia, both families having been founded in America in the colonial days. The paternal grandfather of the subject likewise bore the name of Joseph, and he passed his entire life in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, where he died at the advanced age of eighty-five years, while his wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Cleaver, passed away at the age of eighty years. John and Mary Walters, the maternal grandparents of the subject of this review, both died in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, the former having reached the patriarchal age of ninety-five years, while his wife was ninety years of age at the time of her death. From these simple statements it is evident that the subject comes of stanch and long-lived stock in both the paternal and maternal lines, and in his own person he exemplified the sturdy vigor which ever implies longevity.

In 1833 the father of the subject removed with his family from Pennsylvania to Stark county, Ohio, locating on a tract of land in Sugar Creek township, and it is interesting to advert to the fact that this pioneer homestead has ever since remained in the possession of the family, being now in charge of the two sons of the honored subject of this sketch. Joseph Boughman lived only a few years after coming to Ohio, his death occurring in 1839, as the result of an accident, while he was but fifty-seven years of age when his life was thus summarily closed. His devoted wife ever remained faithful to his memory and her widowhood continued for the long period of thirty-seven years, her death occurring on the old homestead in 1866, at which time she was seventy-eight years of age. Both were devoted members of the Evangelical or Albright church, and the father was a stanch supporter of the Democratic party, taking an active and intelligent interest in the questions of the day and being known as a man of high principles and strong intellect. He became the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land in Stark county and would have undoubtedly proved one of the wealthy men of this section had his life been spared, as the property became valuable through its reclamation and improvement and enabled his family to live in comfort and independence, though hard work was the portion of all its members in the early days. The father of the subject owned forty acres of land in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, and there started out his married life under the most modest circumstances, having to depend entirely on his own resources for a livelihood. In the family were six sons and six daughters, and of the number one of the sons and one of the daughters are living at the present time, the subject of this review having been the tenth in order of birth.

Daniel Boughman, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was about seven years of age at the time of the family removal to Stark county, and he was reared to maturity on the old homestead, to the work of which he early began to contribute his due quota, his father being not long spared to supervise the reclaiming of the land, so that each of the sons assumed his proper share of the work. Daniel received his early educational discipline in the district schools, and he gained no little prestige in mathematics, while it is evident that he duly profited by the privileges afforded him, since he became eligible for pedagogic work, and successfully taught one term of district school. He however did not find it expedient to continue in this field of endeavor, and as a young man he learned the trade of carpenter, and for many years he devoted his attention to work along this line, becoming one of the prominent contractors and builders of this section of the county, and having erected many houses and barns, as well as a number of church edifices. He became the owner of two hundred and twenty acres of land, and one hundred and sixty acres of this he has given to his two sons, who are enterprising and honored farmers of Sugar Creek township, their land being a portion of the old homestead secured by their paternal grandfather upon coming to the county. The subject still retains the sixty acres. He has secured the property through his own efforts, having inherited from the estate only forty-seven acres, while the remainder has been secured by purchase. Not only did he to a large extent reclaim his land from the virgin forest, but as the years passed and prosperity attended his well directed efforts he continued to make the best of improvements on the same, and the farm which he thus owned became one of the valuable properties of the sort in the county. He has a commodious and pleasant home and there he has since lived practically retired. In politics Mr. Boughman formerly gave his support to the Democratic party, but so zealous an advocate has he been of the cause of temperance that in 1883 he decided to exercise his franchise in harmony with his convictions, and has since been stanchly arrayed in support of the Prohibition party. For the past thirty-six years he has been a zealous and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and within this time he has held all the important offices in the same, his first wife having likewise been a devoted member of the church, as is also the present Mrs. Boughman.

On the 3d of October, 1850, Mr. Boughman was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Gallatin, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in 1827, being a daughter of Jacob Gallatin, and she died on the 19th of September, 1875, at the age of forty-eight years. Of this union were born three sons, namely: Franklin A., who died at the age of seven weeks, and Melancthon A. and Homer L., who are prominent farmers of Stark county, as has been previously intimated in this context. On the 7th of March, 1878, Mr. Boughman consummated a second marriage, being then united to Mrs. Jane E. (Galehouse) Blocker, widow of Samuel Blocker. She was born in Wayne county, Ohio, and is a daughter of Daniel and Mary Galehouse, both of whom died in Wayne county, Ohio. Of this second union no children have been born.

REV. E. E. ESSELBURNE is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born in the city of Appleton, on the 29th of November, 1869. His elementary educational training was inaugurated in his native town, but he was a lad only seven years old at the time of his parents' removal to Cleveland, where he continued his studies in the public schools, attending the high school for two years, at the expiration of which he entered the academic department of the Western Reserve University, at Hudson, Ohio, where he completed his preparatory course, after which he was duly matriculated in the collegiate department. Shortly afterwards he entered Williams College, at Williamstown, Massachusetts, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1888, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Finally he was led to the determination of consecrating his life to the work of the Divine Master, and with this end in view he entered Bexley Hall, the divinity school of Kenyon College, that magnificent old institution so long conducted under church auspices, in Gambier, Ohio, and there he completed a thorough course of technical study and was graduated in 1896. In June of that year he received deacon's orders, and in May of the following year, in Trinity cathedral, in the city of Cleveland, he was ordained to the priesthood, under the apostolic offices of Rt. Rev. W. A. Leonard, bishop of the diocese of Ohio. The subject initiated the work of his ministry as rector of St. Paul's church, in East Cleveland, where he remained in pastoral charge for four years. In March, 1901, he was appointed to his present position as rector of St. Paul's church, in Canton, where he has labored with devoted zeal.

BENJAMIN F. REYNOLDS.—The industrial activities of the city of Canton enlist the services of many worthy and honored citizens, and among the number is the subject of this review, who has here maintained his home for more than three decades. The name which he bears is one that has been identified with the annals of American history from the early colonial epoch, the original ancestors in the new world having immigrated thither from England and taken up their abode in New England. Mr. Reynolds rendered honorable service in defense of the Union when its integrity was menaced by armed rebellion, and in all the relations of life he has ever been found true to duty and has pursued the even tenor of his way with a due sense of responsibility and with a wholesome appreciation of the dignity of honest toil, in whatever sphere of action.

The Reynolds family was established in New Haven, Connecticut, about the year 1880, and there Benjamin Reynolds, father of the subject, passed practically his entire life, his death there occurring, as did also that of his wife, whose maiden name was Moore. There they reared their children, one of whom was Benjamin Reynolds, the present subject.

Benjamin F. Reynolds was born in the city of New Haven, Connecticut, on the 5th of September, 1839, and there his early educational training was secured in the public schools. He was there residing at the time when the dark clouds of civil war obscured the national horizon, and the loyalty and patriotism of his nature led him to tender his aid in behalf of the Union. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, with which he was in active service for three years, his command having been attached to the Army of the Potomac for the greater portion of this period and having participated in many of the notable battles of the great internecine conflict, while the subject endured his full quota of the hardships which are invariably the fortunes of warfare.

At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge and was duly mustered out, after which he returned to New Haven, where he resumed the work of learning the trade of machinist, to which he had given his attention prior to going forth as a soldier of the republic. In that city, in 1869, he was united in marriage to Miss Martha Lancaster, a native of New Haven, where she was born on the 6th of May, 1850, being a daughter of Henry and Sarah (Kimball) Lancaster, the former of whom was born in the state of Vermont, where his ancestors were numbered among the first settlers, the family being of English lineage. Henry Lancaster eventually removed to New Haven, being then a young man, and there he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives.

In September, 1871, Mr. Reynolds came from New Haven to Canton, being accompanied by his wife and their one child, then about a year old. Mr. Reynolds came to this city to enter the employ of P. P. Bush, who was here engaged in the manufacture of novelty iron goods, and he continued to hold the position of foreman in this establishment until the enterprise ceased to exist, after which he worked for various concerns until 1888, when he took a position in the great works of the Aultman Company, and has here been employed as a machinist from that time to the present, being known as a skilled artisan and as one ever faithful to the duties devolving upon him. In politics Mr. Reynolds has ever given a stalwart allegiance to the Republican party. Mr. Reynolds' religious faith is that of the Protestant Episcopal church, of which he and the daughters are communicants. Fraternally Mr. Reynolds is identified with George D. Harter Post No. 555, Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds have two children. Jessie Edith was born in New Haven, Connecticut, and was a mere infant at the time of her parents' removal from that city to Canton. Here in due course of time she entered the public schools, and when seventeen years of age she was graduated in the Canton high school, and in the following year entered upon a peculiarly successful career as a teacher in the city schools, first becoming the instructor in the third grade of the Deuber school, and later being promoted to the fifth and finally to the sixth grade, in which she is now teaching. She is known as one of the popular, enthusiastic and progressive teachers of the city and state, being a devoted student and ever keeping abreast of the advances made in her profession. She holds membership in both the Stark County and the Bi-County Teachers' Associations, and at all times takes a deep interest in the same. The younger daughter, Ruth Phillips, was born in Canton, and here completed her education in the high school, where she was graduated as a member of the class of 1897. In October of the following year she began her pedagogic career as teacher of the second grade in the North Cherry Street school, and she is now teaching the fifth grade, while she is a member of the same professional associations as is her elder sister and for the past year she has been a teacher in the Sunday school of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church, of which the family are members. Both daughters are prominent in the best social life of the city and are young ladies of distinctive culture and refinements.

PROF. FRANK JONES.—The paternal ancestry of Prof. Jones is traced back to his great-great-grandfather, who was a native of Wales. His son, David Jones, the subject's great-grandfather, was born in the same country in 1781, his mother giving up her life at the birth of her son. Being thus bereft of a mother's care, he was taken in charge by two aunts, by whom he was reared. In 1798, when about eighteen years old, he emigrated to America and for a time located in Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he met and married

Sarah Mace. She was a native of Chester county, though of Irish descent, her father, Robert Mace, having been born on the Emerald Isle. After his marriage David Jones resided for a time in Chester county, but in 1835 came to Ohio, locating in Columbiana county. The long and tiresome journey was made in "Conestoga" wagons, and during the trip all of their children were sick. Reaching his destination Mr. Jones purchased a tract of land in West township, which he proceeded to clear up and improve. Their first home was built of rough round logs and consisted of but one room, twenty by twenty feet in size, one end of the room being occupied by an old-fashioned fire place, in which enormous fire logs were burned. With the assistance of his sons, Mr. Jones brought his farm up to a splendid condition, and he resided upon this place until his death, in July, 1846. His widow survived him several years, dying in 1862, at the age of seventy-six years. Politically Mr. Jones was an old-line Whig, and he and his wife were both members of the Methodist Episcopal church. They were the parents of the following children: (1) John, who was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, remained there upon the old home farm and there died. For a life companion he chose Miss Sydney Seeds. (2) Joseph was the grandfather of the subject. (3) Sarah, who became the wife of Wesley Craig, died in Minerva, Stark county, Ohio. (4) Anna, Mrs. Jeremiah Hassler, makes her home with a son in Hamlin township, Eaton county, Michigan. (5) Margaret, who married Daniel F. Hassler, died on the home farm in West township, Columbiana county. (6) Theophilus died in 1845 in Columbiana county. (7) Mary, born in Pennsylvania, died in that state in infancy. (8) Daniel died in infancy.

The subject's grandfather, Joseph Jones, was born on the home farm in Chester county, Pennsylvania, on the 16th of November, 1806, and in 1835 accompanied his parents upon their removal to Ohio. He received a fair education in his native state. In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 18, 1828, he was united in marriage with Miss Ann Robinson, a native of Bridgeton, Cumberland county, New Jersey, born March 1, 1807. Her father was William Robinson and the maiden name of her mother was Nancy Moncrieff. The latter was born in France but accompanied her parents to America where they became exiles from their native land because of their identification with the Bonapartes. A member of this noted royal family married Miss Patterson, of Baltimore, Maryland, and the Moncrieffs lived with them for a time at Bordentown, New Jersey, later removing to Bridgeton, that state. Upon his arrival in Ohio Joseph Jones settled on sixty acres of land in West township, Columbiana county, and made this his home during the remainder of his life. His death occurred there in 1890 and his wife died September 7, 1874. In politics he was first a Whig, and later a Republican and was elected and served for many years as trustee of his township. He and his wife were members of the Disciples church. Mr. Jones had but one law suit during his entire life, and in that instance the jury accepted his own evidence as sufficient without the necessity of corroborating witnesses. To Joseph Jones and his wife were born children who accompanied their parents upon their migration to Ohio and four children were born in the latter state. Their names are as follows: John, father of the subject; Thomas, who died in February, 1902, in Missouri, married Miss Julia Trilligarl. He plastered the house at St. Joe, Missouri, in which Jesse James was shot, and he afterwards picked out a bullet which had been imbedded in the wall; Sarah became the wife of John Myers, but died in West township, Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1866; Elizabeth was born in West township in August, 1841. She received her primary education in the district schools, supplementing this by attendance for two terms at Mount Union College. Subsequently she engaged in teaching, which occupation she followed five years. She married John Foulks, of Columbiana county, who was born in West township, that county, June 5, 1840. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, Mr. Foulks enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as a private and served for eleven months as such. He was then made a special orderly to the general commanding and was in Washington, D. C., until February 11, 1865, when he went back to Newbern, North Carolina, and was engaged in the fight with Bragg at Kingston. He received an honorable discharge at Charlotte, North Carolina, June 29, 1865, and returned home. He remained upon his farm in West township until the spring of 1901, and then removed to New Franklin, Stark county. Mr. and Mrs. Foulks have one child, Anna, who is the wife of D. W. Bates, of West township. The sixth child of Joseph Jones is Hosea R., a contractor of Canton, who married Sarah Walters. Margaret is the wife of Calvin Foulks, of Springport, Michigan. Theophilus died in infancy.

John Jones, father of the subject, was born March 1, 1820, at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania. He was about six years old at the time of his parents' removal to this state and he was reared to manhood on the home farm in West township, Columbiana county. He acquired his education in the old log school house of that day, but, despite the disadvantages and drawbacks, he became possessed of a good knowledge of the common branches. Upon reaching manhood's years he learned the trade of a stone mason and followed that occupation until his removal to Missouri in 1880. On the 27th of April, 1856, in West township, Columbiana county, Ohio, he was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Geiselman. She was born April 23, 1837, the daughter of Jacob and Nancy (Pancake) Geisleman, both born near Beaver, Pennsylvania. From the latter place they came to Ohio, locating near New London, Stark county, where Mr. Geisleman followed the pottery business. He subsequently purchased a farm just over the line in Columbiana county and lived there until his death in 1879. He was twice married, his second wife having been Mrs. Ann Crowl.

After his marriage John Jones lived the greater part of his time until 1880 in Paris township, Stark county. In the years mentioned he removed to Galt, Grundy county, Missouri, where he purchased a farm and followed agriculture for some time, but is now retired. Politically he is a Republican, while religiously he and his wife are both consistent members of the Disciples church. They are the parents of the following children: Winfield S., born April 12, 1857, married Ellen McLaughlin and resides at West Liberty, Logan county, Ohio; Mary, born May 8, 1858, married Lewis Edwards and lives in Iowa; Frank, the subject, is the next in order of birth; Lawson, born October 6, 1860, married Ethelinda Snowden and resides at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Olive, born February 15, 1865; William, born April 25, 1863, married Alverta Myers, and now resides at Minerva, Ohio; John, born October 30, 1864, married Effie Webster and resides at Galt, Missouri; Emma, born November 25, 1868, became the wife of Isaac Vandegrift, of New Franklin, this state; Joseph, born January 13, 1871, died October 4, 1876; Nancy, born March 7, 1873, married William Seamon, and died at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, September 29, 1901; Warren, born May 3, 1875, unmarried; Webster G., born March 31, 1877, unmarried, and David, who died in infancy.

Frank Jones was born on the parental homestead in Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 1st day of June, 1859. At the age of five years he commenced attending the district schools, his first teacher being James Huston. As a boy Mr. Jones was fond of hunting and trapping, acquiring this fondness from association with his father, who was an expert hunter. He continued his attendance at school until his eighteenth year, though during the summer vacations he and his brothers were employed in the work of the farm, and were also hired out to neighboring farmers. In 1877 Mr. Jones, having decided upon teaching as a life work, attended the normal department of Ada University, and the following summer taught a term of school in what was known as the Fox district, Washington township. The following summer he taught at Paris and the next three years in the town schools of New Franklin. Having a desire to further improve himself in scholastic knowledge, he then entered Ada University and was graduated therefrom in 1885. During his entire college period his expenses were paid for through his own efforts. After leaving the university Mr. Jones taught one term of select school at Moultrie, Ohio, after which he taught one winter term in his old home school. In 1886 he was employed as a teacher in the grammar school of Louisville, holding that position two years, and was then elected and served as superintendent of the same school for four years. In 1880 he attended a meeting of the state board of school examiners and was granted a teacher's life certificate. In November, 1892, Mr. Jones resigned his position in the schools of Louisville and accepted that of bookkeeper and manager for the Beatty Fire Plate Company. He shortly afterward gave up this position in order that he might take a course in chemistry, in pursuance of this plan attending Mt. Union College. Two months later he was offered the principalship of the South Market Street school at Canton, which he accepted and efficiently filled this post for six years. At the end of that time he went to Charlotte, Michigan, and engaged in the newspaper business, but shortly afterward went to St. Marys, Ohio, where for eighteen months he was engaged in the same line of work. He was then offered and accepted the principalship of the Fourth Street schools, Canton, and is still serving in that capacity.

On the 17th of August, 1886, Frank Jones was united in marriage with Miss Menie Raedel. She was born March 29, 1864, at New Franklin, and is the daughter of David Raedel. Her father was born at Isna, Wurtemberg, Germany, January 21, 1824, and came to the United States in 1849, landing at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. From there he went to Steubenville, Ohio, thence to Canton, and from there to New Chambersburg. He married, in Paris township, Lydia Conrad, and to them has been born one child, Anna M., whose birth occurred in Louisville, Ohio, May 23, 1892.

Politically Professor Jones has all his life been a stanch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, while religiously he and his wife are faithful and consistent members of the Trinity Reformed church, taking an active interest in the work of that society. Professor Jones is also a member of the Stark County Teachers' Institute and of the Bi-County Teachers' Association. Fraternally he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Professor Jones is a well educated, symmetrically developed man, his record as an educator having brought him prominently to the notice of the public, the result of which is a demand for his services where a high standard of professional excellence is required. He is a gentleman of scholarly tastes and studious habits, keeps abreast the times in advanced educational methods and his general knowledge is broad and comprehensive. Because of his courteous manners, genial disposition and genuine worth he has gained a host of warm personal friends in the city of Canton and elsewhere.

MARY J. PRINCE.—Among the efficient, well-known and popular educators of Canton is Miss Mary J. Prince, who has long been engaged in the city schools and who because of her many fine personal qualities and her peculiar fitness for her chosen vocation has won for herself a warm place in the hearts of all with whom she has formed an acquaintance. The subject's family name was originally "Printz," but by the last several generations of the family the name has been used in its present form. Miss Prince's great-grandfather, George Printz, was a native of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, and was reared about as were other farmers' sons of the period, his father being a wealthy land owner. He came to America with his father when eight years of age, in 1749, this being at a period antedating the American war for independence. Upon their arrival in this country they proceeded at once to Pennsylvania, and the father later entered a tract of land situated among the Blue Ridge mountains in Virginia. He married a Miss Shaffer, and by her had two sons, Reuben and Joseph. In an early day George Printz made a trip to Ohio and there entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in what is now Canton township, Stark county, the tract being now known as the Rohrer farm. Returning to his home in Virginia, he subsequently divided this Ohio property equally between his two sons, who had expressed their willingness to settle upon it. George Printz was very prosperous and was a large land owner. He and his wife both died in Virginia.

Reuben Prince, one of the sons just mentioned, and the grandfather of the subject, was born on the parental homestead in Virginia, and was reared and educated in his native state. Upon reaching years of maturity he married Miss Anna Judd, a native of the same state, though of English extraction. In 1826, with his wife and children, he came to Ohio, making the journey in "Conestoga" wagons, and at once located on the eighty acres of land which had been given to him by his father. It was located in the midst of a dense wilderness, but he built a rude log cabin for the protection of the family and at once entered upon the task of clearing the land and making it fit for cultivation. He remained upon that place until the death of his wife, in 1834, when he removed to Canton, remaining there during the remainder of his life. He was again married after coming to Canton, his second wife's maiden name being Dolly Souers. His children, all born to the first union, were as follows: William, who married Christina Rex, died in Canton; George is the father of the subject; Frances is the wife of Isaac Douber and resides near Fort Wayne, Indiana; Absalom left Canton for the west many years ago and has not since been heard from; John, who was a veteran of the Civil war, married Miss Jane Poole and his death took place at Minerva, this county; Christina was the wife of William Double, but died some years ago in Indiana; Daniel, who died in Canton, was twice married, first to Elizabeth Yant, whose death occurred in Canton; Henry, who also died in Canton, married Elizabeth Moos-hower; Rebecca became the wife of Henry Bemenderfer.

George Prince was born on the home farm of Page county, Virginia, November 18, 1818, and received but little schooling in his native state. At the age of eight years he came to Stark county, Ohio, and here completed his education, first attending what was known as the old Brenner school in Canton township and later attending what was known as the "Old Salt Box." When fifteen years old he came to Canton and was apprenticed to a Mr. White to learn the trade of shoemaking, making his home with his employer. He successfully followed this trade about thirty years and then entered the employ of the Bucher-Gibbs Plow Works, remaining there until about 1883, since which time he has lived retired. In 1854 he was united in marriage with Miss Martha J. Kille, who was born in Paris, Stark county, in 1830, the daughter of Thomas C. and Jane (Hines) Kille.

The Hines family were among the pioneers who settled along the Juniata river in Pennsylvania, the emigrant ancestors of the family being John and Henry Hines, who came to America from Hanover, Germany, in 1767. John, who settled at a place then called Standing Rock, was the great-great-grandfather of Mary J. Prince. He entered land there and during the Revolutionary war took an active part on the side of the colonists. The Indians attacked the settlers in that section and they were compelled to flee for safety. The members of the Hines family all escaped except one son, who was killed. They had been living in a stone building that at one time had served as a fort, but upon the outbreak of hostilities they fled to the eastern part of the state. John Hines was a prominent and well-known man, noted for intelligence and as a man of considerable means, his brother and he acquiring large tracts of land at Standing Rock. They were getting along nicely when, one night in 1776, some settlers stopped at their place and told them that the Iroquois and Mohawk Indians were on the war path, killing and molesting all the settlers in the valley. The brothers started at once in search of their horses, but became separated. John found two horses and, hastily hitching them to a wagon, put into it the members of the family and started for a place of safety. His son John, the subject's great-grandfather, was among the children, being then but two years old. They started down the river, and though diligent inquiry was made, no news was ever afterward received of the missing brother. John Hines, with his family, succeeded in eluding the savages and located in Delaware county, Pennsylvania. But he had escaped the savages only to come in contact with the British General

Howe and his Hessian soldiers, so he soon afterward cast his fortune with the army of patriots under General Washington. He fought bravely for the cause of independence and in the battle received a sabre cut at the hands of a Hessian soldier, being thus crippled for life. It is related that once a party of Hessian soldiers came to the Hines place, just after Mrs. Hines had finished baking. The soldiers immediately proceeded to clean the place of all kinds of eatables, thus placing the family in an embarrassing situation. Upon the close of the war John Hines found himself ruined in health and in finance, and in the hope of recouping his fortune he removed to Lancaster county, the same state. In this new home the son John was reared to manhood and eventually married Miss Mary McKnight, after which they made their home on an island in the Susquehanna river. Here Jane Hines, grandmother of the subject, was born June 4, 1800. John Hines remained in Lancaster county until 1806, when he removed to Winchester county, Virginia, and from there, in 1808, went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. In 1816 or 1824 he came to Stark county, Ohio, locating in Paris township.

The McKnight family came originally from Ulster county, Ireland, and it is a matter of record that Mary, wife of John Hines, had a sister Margory, who became the wife of an uncle of President James Buchanan. In 1811 Jane Hines witnessed the launching of the first steamboat on the Ohio river.

The Kille family, from whom the subject is descended on the maternal side, had its origin in the Highlands of Scotland, coming from the town of Kille Cran-kee, northwest of Loch Lomond, the latter place the scene of two noted events. One was the burning of Kille Christ church, by the Macdonalds, at a time when the church was filled with women, of whom not one escaped. The second noted event was the battle of Kille Cronks, between the armies of King William of England and King James of Scotland. Robert Burns made reference to the family name in several of his poems, referring in one instance to "The high-born dames of Kille." Upon their emigration to the new world the ancestors of the Kille family first settled at Salem, New Jersey, their location there antedating the landing of William Penn. Great-grandfather Kille was a Quaker in his religious belief, and his wife was an out-and-out Tory, taking especial delight in abusing George Washington. Grandfather Thomas Kille was born at Salem, New Jersey, December 8, 1785. At the age of fourteen years he went to Philadelphia, remaining there about ten years. He did not inherit the Tory proclivities of his mother, being neither Quaker nor Tory, and during the war of 1812 he volunteered to fight against the British, for which he was condemned by the Quakers and he subsequently joined the Methodist Episcopal church. For his services during the war of 1812, the government granted to his wife a warrant to land near Paris, Stark county. The Penns, Claytons, Gaskells and Killes intermarried and several members of the families attained to positions of marked prominence and influence. Thomas Kille's first wife was a Miss Chandler, of Mayflower stock.

The mother of the subject died in September, 1873, and George Prince, on June 18, 1876, married Miss Mary Risher, whose death occurred in 1883. To the first union were born the following children: Charles O., of Canton, married Minnie Cowley; Mary J. is the subject; William R., of Canton; Thomas C. maintains his residence in Canton, but is now stationed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he fills the position of quartermaster in the United States navy, holding the rank of major; Anna died in infancy.

Mary J. Prince, whose name appears at the head of this sketch, was born on the 22d of August, 1856, in a house that stood on the site of her present home, East Tuscarawas street, Canton, Ohio. Her education was obtained in the public schools of the city of Canton, her attendance there ending, however, when she was about sixteen years old. She had been a faithful and conscientious student, and at the age of nineteen years was granted a license to teach her first school, it being what is now known as the Liberty Street school. After four years' successful service here she was transferred to the East Fifth Street school for one year and then to the East Eighth Street school, where she remained four years. She then returned to the Liberty Street school for four years. Her close confinement to her school duties caused her health to fail in a measure, and for a year or more she was compelled to give up teaching, but when able to resume her pedagogical labors she was assigned to duty at the East Eighth Street school, where she has since maintained a deep and abiding interest in her profession, realizing the responsibility resting upon her as a guardian over the minds and hearts of those committed to her charge. She keeps closely in touch with the most advanced and up-to-date methods in teaching and maintains an active membership in the Stark County Teachers' Institute. Religiously she is a member of the First Methodist church. Popular alike with school patrons and pupils, ambitious at all times to excel in her work and ever courteous and companionable, she has long held a warm place in the hearts of all with whom she has formed acquaintance.

CHARLES FREDERICK STOKEY, A. M.—From the most reliable information obtainable it appears that the original ancestors of the Stokey family were of Anglo-Saxon blood, but many centuries ago some of them went to Switzerland, in which country the name, with different spellings, has been familiar to the present day. Prof. Stokey's paternal great-grandfather, Henry Stokey, was a native of Switzerland, and, when a young man, changed his residence to France. His son Frederick, with his family, including his son Charles, came to the United States in 1827, locating for a while in New Jersey. He was a skilled mechanic, working at various places in this country, finally locating at Syracuse, New York, where his death occurred a number of years ago. His wife, Susan (LeClair) Stokey, survived him some years, dying at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fercist, in Wood county, Ohio, aged about ninety years.

Charles Stokey was born in the department of the Doubs, France, about six miles from the Swiss border, in the year 1811. With the exception of private instruction he had comparatively few educational advantages, notwithstanding which he early became proficient in German and French, besides acquiring by private reading a wide general knowledge. Under his father's instruction he became a skilled artisan, and the two worked together in their native country until the family immigrated to the United States, Charles being sixteen years old at the time. For some time after coming to this country Charles Stokey worked in an establishment in New York city where surgeon's instruments were manufactured, and while there met Mr. Hassler, superintendent of the coast survey, by whom he was employed to go to Washington City and undertake, under Joseph Saxton, uncle of Joseph S. Saxton, of Canton, the work of making a full set of standard weights and measures to be used throughout the United States, a task requiring great skill and the utmost scientific accuracy. Mr. Stokey was well fitted to do this work, and in due time the set for the general government was in readiness, after which he was required to make a similar set for each state in the Union. These standards of weight and measure may be seen today at the different state capitals, the ones at the national capital being kept securely locked in a certain room of the treasury department. The measures are made of brass and, like everything else in the possession of the government, are kept in the best possible condition, being so brilliantly polished that the slightest touch of the finger will leave a tarnish upon the bright surface. During the Civil war Prof. Stokey was stationed near Washington city, and desiring to see these specimens of his father's handiwork, he visited the patent office, where they were then kept. Later, in 1876, in the presence of professors and students of Mt. Union College, he was permitted to lay his hand upon the bright bushel measure. No sooner had he done this than the custodian began rubbing the spot touched with a piece of chamois skin, until its original brilliancy was restored. Mr. Stokey always considered these standard weights and measures his masterpieces of workmanship, as they are mechanically as perfect and scientifically as accurate as human skill could make them. Charles Stokey spent four years of close, hard work on these devices, and resided in the national capital from 1837 to 1841. In the latter year he abandoned mechanical pursuits and moved to the woods of Wayne county, Ohio, where he cleared and developed a farm, on which he lived for a period of about twenty-one years. Disposing of his farm in 1862, he came to Canton, and for some time thereafter worked for Ephraim Ball & Company, of this city, continuing in their employ until failing health obliged him to retire from active life. He died in the year 1872, deeply lamented by all who knew him. Mr. Stokey was married at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1837, to Miss Mary Eicher, who was born in France in the year 1813. She accompanied her parents to the United States in 1828, and died at Canton in 1891. Originally Charles Stokey was a Huguenot in his religion, but after coming to Canton united with the Methodist Episcopal church, to the teachings of which he continued faithful to the end of his days. Mrs. Stokey was also a member of the church to which her husband belonged, and like him exemplified her faith by a life singularly upright and pure.

Charles Frederick Stokey was born in Milton township, Wayne county, Ohio, January 20, 1845. At the proper age he entered the district schools of his native place and there pursued his studies until his parents moved to Stark county, when he became a pupil in the Canton schools. After spending two years in the city high school he entered Allegheny College, at Meadville, Pennsylvania, and in due time completed the prescribed course of that institution, graduating in the year 1872. Meantime, in 1867, Prof. Stokey began teaching in the public schools of Stark county and after finishing his collegiate course taught one year in the state of Pennsylvania. His next educational work was in a military school at Poughkeepsie, New York. In 1874 he was elected principal of the high school at East Liverpool, Ohio. Severing his connection with the schools of that city, Prof. Stokey accepted the chair of modern languages (French and German) in Mt. Union College, and after holding the position two years he came to Canton in 1877 to take charge of the special department of the public schools. While here he was elected superintendent of schools at Chagrin Falls, where he served one year. While at Chagrin Falls he was elected teacher of German in the Canton schools, where he served three years, when he was transferred back to the special school, then to the high school, as assistant, and finally he was made principal of the Crystal Park schools.

Possessing marked ability as a teacher and manager of schools, an indefatigable worker and thoroughly in love with his profession, it follows as a natural sequence that Prof. Stokey should become an important factor not only in connection with the educational work of his prescribed province, but in a field far transcending local limitations. His distinctive intellectuality and high attainments give him prestige among the leading educators of Canton and Stark county, and his efficiency is shown in a most pronounced way by his work since becoming identified with the city school system. The Professor is a member of the Stark County Teachers' Institute and the author of the present constitution of that body. He has been a potential factor in the deliberations of this and other educational assemblies, taking a leading part in their public discussions and frequently addressing his fellow teachers or reading before them carefully prepared papers noted for scholarship and erudition. In addition to his professional duties Professor Stokey is now employed by the national weather bureau as special rain-fall and the corn and wheat region observer. He also has a military record, having served during the last year of the Civil war, in the One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Ohio Infantry, which was stationed during the greater part of that time in the Shenandoah valley and then in Washington, D. C. He discharged his duties as a brave and faithful soldier, but did not experience any very trying service, owing to the lateness of his enlistment. He had enlisted in 1862, under Lieut. Thaddeus K. Cock, of the Seventy-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Capt. Muhlenberg, of the Thirteenth United States Army, refused to muster him into the service, because he was only seventeen.

In his fraternal relations Prof. Stokey is identified with the Royal Arcanum and the Grand Army of the Republic, having served five years as quartermaster of McKinley Post No. 25 and two years as adjutant. Politically he is an unswerving supporter of the Republican party, and as such has wielded a strong influence in its behalf, although he is by no means narrow or intolerant in his views. Personally he is a most companionable gentleman, a favorite in social circles and courteous in his demeanor to all with whom he comes in contact. His long residence in Canton has made him well acquainted with the people of the city and county, and wherever known he is honored for his inflexible integrity in thought, word and deed.

On the 23d day of December, 1874, in the city of Pittsburg, was solemnized the marriage of Prof. Stokey and Miss Margaret Grace Provines, of Washington county, Pennsylvania, daughter of John and Jane (Gracey) Provines, both of Scotch-Irish descent. This union has resulted in the birth of five children, the oldest of whom is William Provines, first lieutenant in the engineer corps of the United States army, stationed at Washington, D. C. He was graduated from West Point in 1900, and is a young man of exceptional abilities, with a bright and promising future before him. Alvin Gracey, the second in order of birth, is a student at Oberlin College; Fred Eicher is a machinist in the employ of the Hampden Watch Works. Laura Euphemia, who is still a member of the home circle, attended the Deaconess School in Washington, D. C., and is now a nurse in the Aultman hospital in this city. Evelyn Christine, the youngest of the family, is a senior in the Canton high school, with a fine record as a student.

PROF. WALTER S. RUFF.—Prof. Ruff is descended on the father's side from an old German family whose representatives came to America in colonial times and settled in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania. Several of his ancestors did distinguished service in the war for independence and in the early annals of the above county the name frequently appears in connection with civil as well as with military affairs. Daniel Ruff, the subject's grandfather, was a native of Westmoreland county, but as long ago as 1816 migrated to Columbiana county, Ohio, settling in the wilderness of what is now West township. He was a true type of the sturdy pioneer of the early day and performed well his part in clearing the land, in developing the resources of what has since become one of the most enterprising and enlightened sections of the Buckeye state. He married, in the county of Columbiana, Barbara Bair, and the two lived long and happily together on a farm near the town of New Chambersburg, the wife dying in 1880, aged seventy-six, the husband in 1892, in his eighty-fifth year.

Among the children of Daniel and Barbara Ruff was a son by the name of Albert, who was born in Columbiana county on the 14th day of September, 1839. He was reared as a tiller of the soil and has spent all of his life in that honorable vocation, being still a resident of the township and county of his birth. When the late Civil war broke out he enlisted at New Chambersburg in the Eighty-sixth Infantry, with which he served three months, at the expiration of which time he joined the One Hundred and Ninety-first Ohio Volunteers. He accompanied the latter command to the front and saw considerable active service, but received his discharge one year later, having enlisted for only that length of time. Albert Ruff was married, in 1873, to Miss Malinda Summer, daughter of Noah Summer, of Columbiana county; Mrs. Ruff was born at East Rochester, Ohio, in the year 1849, and is still living in West township, where she and her husband set up their domestic establishment immediately after the celebration of their marriage. She is the mother of three children, the subject of this review being the eldest; the other two are Carrie and Agnes, both living in their native county.

Prof. Walter S. Ruff was born on the family homestead near New Chambersburg, Columbiana county, Ohio, January 4, 1874, and until the age of sixteen remained with his parents, assisting as soon as old enough with the varied labors of the farm. At the proper age he entered the district school near his home, and his progress may be inferred from the fact that when but sixteen years old he secured a teacher's license and entered upon his career as an educator. Mr. Ruff taught his first term in the village of New Alexander in the summer of 1890, and the winter following attended school in order to fit himself for more efficient service as an instructor. The next year he took charge of his home school, known as the Bunker Hill district, and after a very successful term there was elected during the ensuing three or four years to teach near the village of Minerva. Appreciating the demand of the age for teachers of professional training, as well as intellectual qualifications, he spent his vacations attending the Normal University at Ada, where, in addition to a critical review of the common and higher branches, he took a thorough course in pedagogy. In this way he prepared himself for greater efficiency in his chosen field of endeavor, bringing to his work a well-disciplined mind and a full appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon him, not only as an instructor but as a builder of character.

From 1897 to 1900, inclusive, Prof. Ruff taught at New Waterford, and while there was united in marriage, on the 23d of November, 1898, to Miss Loretta Sanor, who had formerly been his pupil at New Alexander. In August, 1900, Prof. Ruff accepted the principalship of the Clarendon Avenue school, Canton, and after filling the position one year was made principal of the larger building on East Eighth street, where he now labors. Prof. Ruff's continued success as a teacher convinces him that his sphere of usefulness lies in the educational field, consequently he proposes making it his life work. He is essentially a self-made man, and has risen to his present responsible station by his own efforts. Fortune cast no glittering favors in his pathway, but instead he was obliged to surmount discouraging obstacles, and it was only by sheer force of will, backed by a laudable ambition to rise, that he was eventually able to reach the goal of success. Like all progressive educators, he has become identified with several teachers' organizations of the city and county, being a member of the Bi-county Teachers' Institute. He also belongs to the Masonic lodge in Canton, and in politics is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. In matters religious he is a Presbyterian, belonging, with his wife, to the First church of that denomination in this city. Prof. and Mrs. Ruff have a neat and attractive home on Woodland avenue, where they dispense with a spirit that sweetens the welcome a generous hospitality to their many friends and acquaintances.

DAVID S. SOMMER.—Joseph Sommer, father of the subject, was born near the famed old city of Strassburg, in the province of Alsace, France, now a part of Germany, the year of his nativity having been 1817. There he was reared and educated and there he learned the miller's trade. As a young man, and dependent entirely upon his own resources in fighting the stern battle of life, he proceeded to Harve, France, whence he set sail for America, landing in New York city and thence making his way directly to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he had acquaintances. In that city he secured employment in a brewery, later was engaged in farm work and eventually entered the employ of Joseph Augspurger, who was engaged in the distilling business in Butler county, this state. There, in the year 1844, he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Augspurger, a daughter of his employer, and shortly afterward he came with his bride to Stark county, where he rented a farm near the village of Paris, in the township of the same name. He continued in agricultural pursuits on rented land until, by industry and good management, he had accumulated sufficient funds to justify him in the purchase of a farm of his own. In 1849 he bought a tract of one hundred and sixty acres, in Perry township, and there remained until 1869, having made good improvements on the place and brought it under effective cultivation. In the year mentioned he disposed of the property and purchased the flouring-mills at Plain Center, three miles north of Canton, in Plain township, and continued to successfully operate the same, being a thoroughly competent and practical miller, until about 1878, when he retired in favor of his sons, Joseph, John and Henry, who have since carried the enterprise successfully forward, having been thoroughly trained by their father. Joseph Sommer finally came to Canton, where he passed his declining days in the home of his son John, on South McKinley avenue, where he died in 1891, honored by all who knew him and known as a man of ability and inflexible integrity. In politics he accorded a staunch adherence to the Democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Mennonite church, of which his wife likewise was a consistent member, her death having occurred in the year 1876. They became the parents of seven children, concerning whom brief record is as follows: Joseph died in Canton, on the 18th of March, 1897, a bachelor; Henry remains at the old home in Plain township, operating the mills to which reference has been made, and he married Mary Kropf; John, who is engaged in the grocery business in Canton, married Fannie Kropf; Jacob died near Eaton, Ohio, in May, 1902; Catherine is the wife of Christian Auspurger, of Berne, Indiana; David S. is the immediate subject of this sketch, and Lizzie is the wife of Charles Beard, of Plain township.

David S. Sommer was born on his father's farm, in Perry township, this county, on the 29th of February, 1860, and thus he has theoretically a birthday anniversary only once in four years, as February can claim twenty-nine days only in the leap years. He grew up under the sturdy discipline of the farm, and from the age of fourteen contributed his quota to its work during the summer seasons, while he attended the district schools during the winter months, his first teacher having been Miss Sarah Rohrer. He continued to work on the farm and in his father's mill until he had attained the age of eighteen years, after which he continued his studies for two years in the normal school at Lebanon, this state, where he rounded out a good practical education. After leaving school he was for eight years employed as clerk in Hamilton county and for one year was similarly engaged in a mercantile establishment in Canton. The following year he acted as collector for his brothers, in connection with the milling business. In 1888 he was married, and shortly afterward established his home at 906 East Second street, Canton, and here he engaged in the freight hauling or transfer business, in which he continued for eleven years, building up a successful enterprise in the line and gaining a wide circle of acquaintances in the city. In 1899 he was elected to his present responsible office as street commissioner, as the candidate on the Democratic ticket, and that his handling of the work assigned to his control has been satisfactorily handled needs no further voucher than the fact that he has been continued in the office consecutively to the present time. He has shown marked discrimination and judgment in his office, and through his excellent executive ability has not only done much to bring about needed improvements but also has conserved economy in this department of the municipal service. Mr. Sommer has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, his first presidential vote having been cast in support of Grover Cleveland, at the time of his first nomination, and he has taken an active interest in the party work. He and his wife are zealous members of the Mennonite church, of which he became a member in 1878 and she in 1883.

On the 16th of February, 1888, Mr. Sommer was united in marriage, in Canton, to Miss Anna Kropf, a sister of the wives of his brothers Henry and John. She was born near Paris, this county, on the 12th of October, 1867, being a daughter of Christian and Barbara (Keese) Kropf, who are now residents of Canton. They removed from Paris township to New Berlin, Plain township, when she was an infant, and there she was reared to maturity, receiving her education in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Sommer have four children, namely: Walter J., who was born in Canton, on the 20th of April, 1889; Homer D., who was born in this city on the 26th of December, 1891; Marie C., who was born on the 18th of September, 1894, and Helen B., who is likewise a native of Canton, where she was born December 31, 1896.

ELMER E. SCHEU.—Among the able and popular representatives of educational interests in the city of Canton is the subject of this sketch, who is incumbent of the responsible position of principal of the Hartford Street school. He is a native son of the Buckeye state, and thus the more interest attaches to a consideration of his life history in the compilation. He is a son of Henry Schen, who was born in the picturesque and historic old university city of Heidelberg, Germany, in the year 1822. There he attended school until he had attained the age of fourteen years, after which he was identified with agricultural pursuits in that section of the great German empire until 1843, when, at the age of twenty-one years, he severed the ties that bound him to home and fatherland and set forth to seek his fortunes in America, where so many of his countrymen have found homes and attained success and independence, the German element in our complex social fabric being one of the most valuable in the entire composite makeup. He landed in New York city, whence he came directly to Ohio and located in the town of Ragersville, Tuscarawas county, where he for a time gave his attention to agricultural pursuits, but eventually engaged in the dry-goods business in that town, continuing in this line of enterprise during the remainder of his active career. He began operations in a modest way and succeeded in building up a large business becoming one of the leading and most influential citizens of the town and being honored for his sterling integrity and his honorable life. About two years after locating in Ragersville he was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Steiner, who was born in Switzerland, about the year 1836, and who was there reared and educated, being about twenty-one years of age when she accompanied her parents on their emigration to the United States, the family locating in Tuscarawas county, where her parents passed the residue of their lives. She died in Ragersville, in 1882, and her husband passed away in 1887, both having been devoted members of the German Reformed church, while he was a staunch Democrat in his political proclivities. Of their children the following is a brief record: Charlotte is the wife of Fred Zimmerman, of Tuscarawas county; Lizzie is the wife of Christian Beller, of that county; Caroline is the wife of John Kline, of Midvale, that county; Henry is deceased, as is also Charles; Mary is the wife of William Canada, of Cleveland, Ohio, in which city also resides Louisa, the next in order of birth; Susan, the wife of Thomas Walker, is deceased; Rose, the wife of Frank Garver, of Ragersville, is deceased; McClelland is a farmer near Osunaburg, Stark county; Lewis resides in Ragersville; Elmer E. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Phoebe is the wife of Daniel Rice, of Canal Dover, and Robert is a resident of the state of Washington.

Elmer E. Scheu was born in Ragersville, Tuscarawas county, on the 21st of November, 1868, and there his early educational discipline was received in the public schools, his boyhood days being passed on a farm, which was in close proximity to the village, and when not in school he assisted in the work of the homestead. At the age of eighteen years, in 1887, he was matriculated in Smithville Normal School, in Wayne county, this state, where he continued his studies for three terms, after which he completed a special course in penmanship at Bixler's Pen Art School, at Wooster, Ohio. In 1888 he entered the Ohio Normal University, at Ada, where he continued as a student for two and a half years, while in the winter vacations he engaged in teaching, having determined to devote his attention to pedagogic work, for which he had a natural predilection and in preparing for which he spared no pains or application. After leaving the university he continued to teach for six winters in the district schools, and for eight years he was principal of the Second Street school at Canal Dover, Tuscarawas county. In the spring of 1902 he accepted his present position as principal of the Hartford Street school, in Canton, entering upon his duties at the opening of the autumn term, in the following September. His reputation through previous pedagogic work stands as a voucher for the value which will attach to his services in his present position, and he is proving a valuable acquisition in connection with the work of the public schools of Canton. He is a member of the Ohio Teachers' Association, and fraternally is identified with the Masonic order, the Protective Home Circle and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, though manifesting a deep interest in the questions of the day and being staunchly fortified in his convictions as to matters of public polity.

On the 31st of March, 1894, at Canal Dover, Tuscarawas county, Mr. Scheu was united in marriage to Miss Irene Peters, of Ragersville, where she was born, being a daughter of Dr. Herman J. Peters, of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Scheu have a winsome little daughter, Florence Belle, who was born at Canal Dover, on the 5th of April, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Scheu are active members of the Trinity Reformed church of Canton, Ohio.

MARTIN DEUBLE.—The life history of him whose name initiates this paragraph most pertinently illustrates what may be attained by faithful and continued effort in carrying out an honest purpose. His career was manly, his actions sincere, his manner unaffected, and his speech from his heart. He was a worthy representative of one of the sterling pioneer families of Canton, where he was himself a pioneer business man and where he continued to make his home until his death, in the fullness of years and honored by all who knew him, for his was a simple but noble life, true to itself and to the dictates of conscience. He well merits a tribute and memorial in this volume.

The Deuble family is of stanch German origin, and in the town of Treschlingen, Groszhertzogthum, Baden, Germany, George Michael Deuble, father of the subject, was born, while there also was born his wife, whose maiden name was Susanna Schmitt, their marriage being solemnized in the fatherland. About 1825 they emigrated to America and located in the city of Philadelphia, where they remained for a short time, during which Mr. Deuble undoubtedly followed his trade, that of weaver, in which he was an expert artisan, weaving counterpanes and other articles of that order. During the residence of the family in the "City of Brotherly Love" Martin Deuble, subject of this memoir, was born, the date of his nativity being April 16, 1827. Shortly after his birth his parents settled at the foot of the Blue mountains, in Pennsylvania, and there his father began the manufacturing of clocks, being associated with a partner, and they peddled their products throughout the surrounding country. While following this line of enterprise he had three different partners, each of whom betrayed his confidence and defrauded him of all his stock, but his valiant spirit did not quail beneath these discouragements, and he determined to conquer adversity and to attain a position of independence, if these aims were to be accomplished by honest and indefatigable effort. He finally decided to come to Ohio, leaving his family for the time being in Pennsylvania. His funds were reduced to a low ebb, and he left the major portion for the use of his family and then bravely set forth on foot to make the long and weary journey to Canton, Ohio, where his brother Henry and half-brother, John Deuble, were engaged in business as butchers, their shop being located on North Walnut street, near Third street. The father of the subject was a week in making the trip, and a goodly portion of his meals while en route were secured from apple orchards along the way. He finally arrived in Canton, in the year 1834, and, after consulting with his brothers, determined to make a permanent location here. He began work in his brothers' shop and after a time his family joined him in the new home, taking up their abode in a brick house located on a part of lots 11 and 12, on North Market street. Mr. Deuble worked earnestly and constantly to provide for his family, and about the year 1836 he fitted up a watch-making and repairing shop in his home, having become a good workman in this line, in which he had served an apprenticeship, while he was endowed by nature with exceptional mechanical ability. He was also an accomplished musician, and in a room adjoining his shop he placed a piano, which he used in connection with his work of teaching vocal music, while he also became organist and choir-master of the German Reformed church, with which the family have all been identified as consistent and zealous members. As time passed, his business increased in scope and importance, and he continued the same up to within a few years of his death, having in the meanwhile put in a good line of jewelry, watches, clocks, etc. After his retirement his sons Martin and George continued the business, moving the same to the Wikidal home, which was located on the site of the present Folwell block. Concerning the business and the family history further mention is made in the sketch of the life of the subject's brother George, appearing elsewhere in this volume. In politics the father was a staunch Democrat, and both he and his wife were devoted members of the Reformed church. He died in 1860, and his widow passed away in September, 1866. Their two children were Martin, subject of this memoir, and George, who continues the jewelry business in Canton, as is duly noted in his personal sketch on another page of this work.

Martin Deuble was born in Philadelphia, as has been already noted, and he was a mere boy at the time when his mother and younger brother came to Canton to join their father. He learned the trade of watch-maker and jeweler in his father's establishment, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the pioneer schools of Canton. Soon after his father's retirement from business he and his brother opened a store in the corner room of the Wikidal house, as before noted, and there they remained until 1861, when they purchased the Rev. East property on the east side of the public square, near the corner of South Market and East Seventh streets. Into this they removed their stock, which they greatly enlarged in the new and more pretentious quarters, and later they remodeled the building, rendering it more eligible for their use. There they continued to be associated in business until the death of the subject, which occurred on the 11th of August, 1875, and within this time they had built up a prosperous enterprise, having gained the highest reputation for fair and honorable dealing and being known as able and conservative business men.

In his political proclivities, though never an aspirant for official preferment, he was a staunch Democrat, taking an active and intelligent interest in the party cause. He was a member of the Reformed church, and his faith was exemplified in his daily life. He was for many years a member of the choir, and at times acted as organist, being ever ready to do his part in all portions of the church work.

In Canton, on the 6th of October, 1857, Mr. Deuble was united in marriage to Miss Susanna Herbruck, a sister of Rev. Peter Herbruck, a pioneer clergyman of the German Reformed church in this county and one to whom specific reference is made elsewhere in this compilation. She was born in Grosse-Steinhausen, in the kingdom of Baieren, Germany, on the 8th of February, 1832, being a daughter of Philip and Barbara (Schlenmer) Herbruck, and she attended school in her native town until she had attained the age of fourteen years, when she accompanied her parents on their emigration to America, the family taking up their residence in Stark county, where her parents passed the rest of their lives. She still resides in this city, her pleasant home, so hallowed and endeared to her by the associations and memories of the past, having been erected by her husband in 1868. Of the six children born to Martin and Susanna (Herbruck) Deuble the following data is entered: Emma, who was born on the 13th of October, 1858, died on the 31st of March, 1863; Charles G., who was born October 9, 1860, secured his education in the public schools of Canton, being fourteen years of age at the time of his father's death, and after learning the jeweler's trade under the direction of his uncle, George Deuble, he eventually engaged in business for himself, and now has a well equipped store in this city; he married Miss Laura Lewton, of Malvern, Carroll county; Elten H., who was born on the 29th of April, 1864, married Miss Ella M. Muncaster and they reside in Canton, where he is engaged in F. Herbruck's dry goods store; Clara E., who was born June 19, 1866, is the widow of Rev. Louis M. Weiss, who was an able young clergyman of the Reformed church, and she now makes her home in Canton; Louis E., who was born July 12, 1871, married Miss Pina A. Fohl, and they reside in Canton, where he is engaged in the Canton water works; and Bertha E., who was born September 23, 1873, remains with her mother in the attractive home, which is located at 424 North Market street.

THADDEUS C. NIGHMAN.—George Nighman, the subject's grandfather, was an early settler of the Western Reserve, locating many years ago about four miles northwest of Kent in the county of Portage. His son George was born near the above town and grew to young manhood amid the environments of pioneer life, attending at intervals during his youth such schools as were then common in the Western Reserve. On leaving home he went to York, Pennsylvania, where he lived for some time with an uncle by the name of David Hahn, and while there met Miss Lydia Kellen, who became his wife on the 26th of August, 1821. Mr. Nighman worked for some time in his uncle's brewery and distillery, but after his marriage he loaded his few household goods on a wagon and with an ox team returned to Ohio, settling on Nini-shillen creek, Stark county. Meantime, his uncle had built a small distillery on the above creek and it was for the purpose of assisting in its operation that he left a comfortable home in Pennsylvania and moved into what was then an almost unbroken wilderness. After running the distillery until becoming convinced that his relative was not treating him right in a business way, Mr. Nighman withdrew from the concern and at the instance of George Dewalt, who backed him financially, bought a lot on the corner of North Market and Second streets, Canton, on which he erected a brick building, thirty-three by seventy-five feet in size, for brewing purposes. The enterprise proved successful from the beginning and, as rapidly as circumstances would admit, the indebtedness was reduced until the establishment stood free from incumbrance. Mr. Nighman fitted up five rooms in the west end of the brewery building for a dwelling, and continued to live there in peace and comfort to the end of his days. He was an honest, industrious man and no doubt hastened his death by the immense amount of labor he performed. Beginning the brewery business heavily in debt, he persevered until every dollar was honestly paid, after which he labored just as diligently to provide comfortably for his family. During the great cholera plague which broke out in 1832 Mrs. Nighman was taken sick with the disease, but owing to skillful nursing and assiduous care she recovered, only to lose her husband the following year. Mr. Nighman departed this life on the 17th of March, 1833, and in his death Canton lost one of its most estimable and enterprising citizens. After his death his widow took charge of the brewery and distilling and carried on the business very successfully for several years, accumulating a handsome competence. She married a second time, and died on the 10th of July, 1880, honored and esteemed by a large circle of friends in this city and elsewhere. She bore her first husband two sons and one daughter, namely: George, who died in infancy; Anna-

bella E., born August 10, 1828, married George W. Heil, and died August 11, 1902; and Thaddeus C., whose name furnishes the caption to this article, was born in this city on the 2d day of February, 1831. He first saw the light of day in the old brewery homestead, which stood on the lot now occupied by the Schlitz Music Hall, and it is a fact worthy of note that his life has been spent within the block in which he was born. His early experience was similiar in most respects to that of the majority of city lads, the only exception, if any, being an excessive tendency to sport and athletic exercises. When a mere boy he developed unusual physical powers, and being full of animal spirits, his strength frequently led him to engage in fistic encounters with his playmates and companions until he became noted as one of the young champions of the town. At the proper age he entered school, but here as elsewhere his love of sport predominated and as a consequence his studies were for a time sadly neglected. One of his early teachers was Archibald McGregor, between whom and himself a life long friendship has existed. During the late Civil war Mr. McGregor published in Canton a Democratic paper, which aroused the animosity of the ultra-Union party of the city. By reason of certain treasonable sentiments which appeared in the columns of the sheet from time to time, the loyal men of the city decided to destroy the office and drive the editor from the place. Accordingly a mob was raised for the purpose and when about to carry their design into execution Mr. Nighman, at that time city marshal, appeared upon the scene and effectually put a stop to their acts of violence, thus saving the property and perhaps the life of his friend.

Owing to the death of his father, which occurred when he was a child, young Nighman grew up practically unrestrained, missing that gentle home influence which every boy should feel in order to bring out the better part of his nature. In view of this fact it is no wonder that he became a leader among the wild boys of the city and proved a trouble to his teachers and a source of annoyance to those who had him in charge. But back of his exuberant spirits was good, sound material, of which strong characters are made, and under proper influence it began in due time to manifest itself. At the age of thirteen he hired to a farmer by the name of Shriver and after working for him for seven months, accepted a position with a wholesale drug firm in Massillon. He went to that city in answer to an advertisement he saw in a paper for a general utility boy in a drug store, and the proprietors of the house, being pleased with his appearance, at once took him into their employ. He entered upon his duties with fixed purpose of learning the business, and but few months elapsed before he had a general knowledge of buying and selling besides a practical acquaintance with the nature of drugs. He was quick to learn and absolutely reliable and during the two years he remained with the firm he was considered one of the most trustworthy and valuable employes in the establishment. Resigning his position with Messrs. Bigger & Baldwin, the proprietors of the drug store, Mr. Nighman returned to Canton and engaged with Bicking & Melchoir, brewers, the former his uncle, and worked for these parties during the two years following. In the fall of 1848 he took charge of the brewery and did a very satisfactory business during the ensuing twelve years, meantime, on the 12th of May, 1850, being united in marriage with Miss Emeline Bitler, of near Navarre. In 1860 Mr. Nighman suspended the brewery business and two years later (in the spring of 1862) he was elected city marshal, the duties of which office he discharged in an able and satisfactory manner for one term, refusing a renomination by his party. The same year in which he was elected city marshal he was appointed by Capt. John F. Oliver deputy provost marshal for the eighteenth district and as such served until the close of the war, proving in this, as in his other official capacity, a faithful, reliable and popular public servant. In 1867 or '68 Mr. Nighman sold his brewery and for some time thereafter was not actively engaged in any vocation, devoting his time to his private interests. His next venture was in the transfer business, which he followed for several years with success and profit. He ran a number of teams in this city and was never without a liberal patronage, as the public had long before learned that whatever he engaged to do would be prosecuted with satisfaction and dispatch. Discontinuing teaming, he opened a large boarding stable and to this line of business he has since devoted his attention, meeting with most encouraging success, as his place is patronized by the best people of the city and those in the county having fine horses to be cared for.

It will be seen from the foregoing brief outline that the career of Mr. Nighman has been one of great activity, and that he has been more than ordinarily fortunate in a financial way is attested by the ample competence now in his possession. His life has been one of constant advancement and that, too, in the face of discouraging obstacles, as the reader may infer from his youthful environments. While allowed to follow his own inclinations when young, it is much to his credit that he never formed a bad habit and his life has been entirely free from the vices which the majority of people contract to a greater or less degree. He is, and always has been, strictly temperate, in the matter of intoxicants and tobacco, never having used the latter in any of its forms and in the former carrying his dislike to the extent of eliminating coffee from his bill of fare. His character is open and free, his actions in the main have been above criticism and as a citizen his honor and integrity are unassailable.

Mr. Nighman's first wife, to whom reference is made in a preceding paragraph, died in the year 1880, after bearing him four sons and one daughter, namely: Thaddens C.; Frank W. and Charles A., of Jersey City, New Jersey; George W., of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and Ruella, who holds a position with the natural gas company of Canton. In 1883 Mr. Nighman married his present wife, Mrs. Elizabeth De Peyster, of Kent, Ohio, a union without issue.

WILLIAM JENNINGS MELCHER was born on the old homestead farm, near Zanesville, Muskingum county, Ohio, on the 6th of October, 1841, being a son of Conrad and Catherine Elizabeth (Joy) Melcher. His father was born in the province of Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, being a son of John Melcher, who was there engaged in farming, as had been his ancestors for many generations. He there acquired a competency and had a comfortable home, but he was led to emigrate to America in order that his sons might escape military duty in the German army, while he was also convinced that in the new world, free from the restrictions and limitations of monarchical rule, his children could secure better opportunities for personal advancement and definite success. Thus, about the year 1827, in company with his family, he bade adieu to the fatherland and set sail for the United States, the father, of the subject being at the time about seventeen years of age. The family remained a short time in York, Pennsylvania, and then came to Ohio and located on a farm near Zanesville, Muskingum county, where the grandfather of the subject devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits, becoming one of the successful and influential men of that locality, where he acquired a large amount of land. The homestead farm eventually came into the possession of his eldest son, Casper, while he also provided his son Conrad, father of the subject, with a farm in that county. His youngest son, Henry, became a cabinet maker and located in Adamsville, this state, where he was engaged in business in this line for many years.

Conrad Melcher remained on his farm in Muskingum county until about 1843, when he removed to Hocking county, where he purchased a farm in Laurel township, which continued to be his home until the death of his loved and devoted wife, who passed away at the age of nearly ninety years, and he then came to the home of his son William J., the subject, and his death here occurred only twenty-one days after the decease of his wife, as the result of injuries received from a fall. He died in Canton, on the 15th of January, 1898, at the age of eighty-seven years. Both were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the father was a staunch supporter of the Republican party. They were folk of sterling character and held the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who knew them. Of their eleven children only two are living, the subject and his elder brother, Henry, who is a resident of Akron, Plymouth county, Iowa. Henry Melcher was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, where he was reared, and at the time of the Civil war he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war, after which he returned to his family in Hocking county. The farm which he there owned he later sold to his father and then removed to Van Wert county, Ohio, where he purchased a farm about seven miles from Van Wert. From that place he removed to Iowa, where he continued to make his home for a period of about fourteen years, after which he located in South Dakota, where he resided until 1899, when he returned to Iowa and took up his abode in the village of Akron, where he has since resided, being one of the influential and honored citizens of the place.

William J. Melcher, the immediate subject of this review, was but three years of age at the time of his parents' removal from Muskingum county to the farm in Laurel township, Hocking county, where he was reared to maturity and where he received such educational advantages as were to be had in the public schools of the locality and period. With the thundering of rebel guns against the ramparts of old Fort Sumter, his intrinsic patriotism was roused to responsive protest, and on the 21st of October, 1861, only fifteen days after his twentieth birthday anniversary, he enlisted as a private in Company K, Fifty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, Charles Parker being captain of the company, while the regiment was commanded by Colonel Bousenwein. After serving for a period of ten months Mr. Melcher was discharged on account of physical disability, and he returned to his home, where he remained about seventeen months, within which time he recuperated his health, and at the expiration of this period he re-enlisted in his old regiment, with which he continued in active service until the close of the war, receiving his honorable discharge on the 25th of September, 1865, at Camp Chase, in the city of Columbus, Ohio. During his first term of service he participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and after his re-enlistment he took part in no general battles, but was engaged in many skirmishes. After the close of the war he returned home, with greatly impaired health, and there he remained until the spring of 1866, when he removed to Van Wert, this state, where he purchased a small farm and also became the owner of real estate in the city. He remained there one year and five months and then, on the 2d of June, 1867, took up his residence in the city of Canton, Stark county, purchasing property on Liberty street and there erecting a comfortable residence, while for the ensuing six and one-half years he continued in the employ of the Aultman Company. He then purchased his present property, on Navarre street, the original tract comprising six acres, a portion of which he later sold for building lots. Here he has a spacious and attractive residence and is living practically retired from active business, enjoying the rewards of his former toil and endeavor. For nearly a quarter of a century after attaining his legal majority Mr. Melcher gave an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, and for several years since he has exercised his franchise for the advancement of the cause of the Prohibition party. He has never formally identified himself with any religious organization, though he has a deep reverence for the spiritual verities and has given his support to church work, his wife having been a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church from her youth.

In the city of Canton, on the 19th of November, 1869, Mr. Melcher was united in marriage to Miss Alice Stover, who was born in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of the late Christian Stover, who, when Mrs. Melcher was about two years of age, removed to Canton, Ohio, and for thirty-five years was engaged with the Aultman Manufacturing Company. To Mr. and Mrs. Melcher were born six children, namely: Minnie May, who died on the 5th of February, 1877, at the age of eight years; John Henry, who is engaged with the Cleveland Axle Works, in Canton; Flora B., who remains at the parental home; Ida E., who is the wife of Samuel C. Smith, of this city; Charles W., who is in the employ of the J. H. McLain works, in Canton, and Pearl, who remains with her parents.

MAURICE SMITH, M. D., was born in West Brookfield, Stark county, Ohio, on the 28th of December, 1864, being a son of John and Harriet (Wagner) Smith, the former of whom was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and the latter in Stark county, Ohio. The father of the Doctor was a successful teacher in the public schools of the western part of Stark county for the long period of forty-two years, being a man of fine intellectual attainments. During the war of the Rebellion he served on the staff of General Sherman, in the capacity of secretary, he having enlisted in 1863 in the One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Regiment and served nine months. He was born April 1, 1824, and was brought to Ohio in 1835. He died June 28, 1894. His widow, Harriet, was born in Stark county, Ohio, about one and one-half miles east of Massillon, the daughter of Christian Wagner, a pioneer.

Dr. Smith received his early educational discipline in the public schools of West Brookfield, Stark county, and at the age of twenty years he began teaching in the schools of the county, continuing to follow this profession at intervals for a period of eight years, and by this means earning the funds with which to defray the expenses of his course in medicine. In 1892 he was matriculated in the medical department of the Western Reserve University, at Cleveland, and was there graduated on the 22d of May, 1895, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He soon afterwards came to Massillon and established himself in practice, his professional novitiate being of short duration, since his professional talent and devotion to his work soon gained to him a representative support, and he is now recognized as one of the leading members of the medical fraternity in this city. That he has been successful in his work from a temporal standpoint is shown in the fact that he has erected a fine modern residence at the corner of Main and Henry streets, and there also he has his office. He has that equable temperament and gracious personality which are so potent factors in the makeup of a successful physician, and his popularity in his home city is of the most unqualified order, while he holds the confidence and esteem of all who know him. In politics the Doctor gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Free and Accepted Masons, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of the Maccabees, the Protective Home Circle, the Knights of Pythias, and the Royal Arcanum.

On the 31st of May, 1886, Dr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Belle Patterson, who was born and reared in West Brookfield, this county, being a daughter of Thomas and Maria (Peasly) Patterson, the former of whom was born in the Western Reserve of Ohio and the latter in New England. Dr. and Mrs. Smith became the parents of three children, namely: Blanch, Florence and John Maurice, the last mentioned having died at the age of twenty-three months.

PETER SCHARLES.—In tracing the subject's genealogy it is learned that his grandfather, Matthias Scharles, was a native of Germany and that he lived and died at or near the place of his birth; his wife was Annie M. Landis, daughter of Peter and Susanna (Ruht) Landis, both representatives of a very old family of the empire. Among the children of Matthias and Annie M. Scharles was a son by the name of Valentine, who married in his native country Elizabeth Helm, both dying in Germany many years ago, leaving descendants who have since represented the family there and in the United States. Peter Scharles, a son of Valentine and Elizabeth, married in the old country Miss Catherine Albrecht, and about the year 1857 came to America, settling near the city of Massillon, Ohio, on the farm which the subject of this sketch now owns. Mr. Scharles was a tiller of the soil, as were many of his ancestors before him, and spent the remainder of his life in Tuscarawas township, dying February 19, 1893, at the age of seventy-eight, his wife following him to the grave the next December, when sixty-nine years old.

Nicholas Albrecht, father of Mrs. Peter Scharles, was a native of Bavaria, born and reared in Seele, near the river of Rhine. His wife was Christina Engel, also a native of Bavaria, as were her ancestors for many preceding generations.

Peter Scharles, Jr., to a brief review of whose career the remainder of this article is devoted, was born May 2, 1846, in Gangreweirler, Germany, and when about eleven years of age accompanied his father to the United States, since which time he has been a worthy resident of Stark county. In the schools of his native land he obtained a fair knowledge of the fundamental branches of learning and for a few years after coming to America, he attended the public schools of Tuscarawas township, in this way mastering the English language and acquiring much more than a superficial acquaintance with the prescribed course of study.

Mr. Scharles was a mere youth when the war of the Rebellion broke out, but with true patriotic fervor he tendered his services to his adopted country, which he had already learned to love as if he were one of its native sons. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Infantry, and in due time was at the front sharing with his comrades all the terrible realities of war in some of the bloodiest battles and noted campaigns in which the army took part. With the exception of the battle of Nashville he participated in all the actions in which his regiment was engaged, and would have been present there had he not previously received, at Franklin, a painful wound which necessitated his removal to the hospital at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, where he remained until his recovery. Mr. Scharles' military experience was replete with duty bravely and faithfully performed and his record as a soldier is without spot or stain. At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge and, returning home, engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he has since followed with encouraging success. When but thirty-three years old he was made superintendent of the Warrick farms, in Tuscarawas township, and in that capacity displayed ability and ripeness of judgment rare in one so young. He discharged the duties of the position to the satisfaction of his employers and after resigning the place began farming upon his own responsibility, taking charge of the paternal homestead, a fine little place situated near the corporate limits of Massillon. Here he has since lived and prospered and while not carrying on husbandry quite so extensively as do some of his neighbors, he has made it remunerative, as is attested by the fine condition of his farm and improvements and the comfortable competence which he has accumulated.

Mr. Scharles has always manifested a lively interest in the material development of his adopted county and is justly entitled to the appellation of a public-spirited man. Ranking with progressive agriculturists of Tuscarawas and enjoying the reputation of being careful and judicious in matters of business, he also lends his influence to all measures for the common welfare and supports every laudable enterprise whereby the community may be benefited.

April 27, 1866, Mr. Scharles was united in marriage to Miss Sophia Albrecht, daughter of John Albrecht, a representative of Perry township, whose life history will be found elsewhere in these pages. This union has been blessed with four children, the oldest of whom is Clara, a wife of Jacob Rippel; Mr. and Mrs. Rippel have one son by the name of Andrew J.; Amelia, the second daughter, married John Walter and is the mother of one child, Elmer; Lewis, the third in order of birth, married Miss Annie Schuler, the union resulting in the birth of a daughter, named Inez; Hattie, the youngest of the family, is unmarried and lives with her parents.

In politics Mr. Scharles is independent, considering it inconsistent with true manhood to obey the behest of any party or to come and go at the beck and call of partisan leaders. Nevertheless he reads much concerning political issues, keeps himself well posted on the great questions of the day and exercises the rights of citizenship as his judgment dictates. He was served as a member of the school board, has always taken great interest in the cause of education and is a friend of all organizations having for their object the intellectual and moral well being of the community. Fraternally he belongs to Hart Post No. 134, Grand Army of the Republic, and in religion subscribes to the Evangelical creed, being identified with St. John's Evangelical church in Massillon. Mrs. Scharles is also a member of the same congregation and, like her husband, is an active worker in disseminating the truths of Christianity.

GOTLIEB CONRAD ROESLE.—The life of the late Gotlieb C. Roesle was like an open book, read and understood by the people of Canton, among whom he dwelt. He was a native of Germany, born in the town of Illingen, near Stuttgart, August 4, 1826, and at an early age was left an orphan by the death of his father. After attending school until his fourteenth year, he served an apprenticeship at the tailor's trade and becoming an efficient workman, followed his chosen calling in Germany until locating in the city of New York. After spending several years in that city, he set out for Zoar, Ohio, where certain relatives were then living, traveling the greater part of the way on foot, riding only when invited to do so by farmers and others driving along the highway. While crossing the Ohio river with a companion who had joined him en route, an attempt was made by a gang of foot-pads to rob the two just as they reached the opposite shore. Young Roesle succeeded in breaking away from the robbers and, climbing the steep bank, ran into the thicket, where he remained concealed until he could stealthily creep into the woods near by. This reached, he ran at full speed until completely exhausted, when he lay down to rest and, falling asleep, spent the night alone in the heart of the deep forest. In the morning he resumed the journey, footsore and alone and after experiencing many hardships and vicissitudes finally reached the home of his relations where he was received with open arms. After remaining a while at Zoar with his friends, Mr. Roesle proceeded on his journey until reaching Canton and here he began working at his trade and in due time built a large and lucrative business. A few years after his arrival at Canton he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Prince, who lived but a short time thereafter. Having established himself in a well-paying business Mr. Roesle, in 1860, returned to Germany for the purpose of bringing his mother to the United States. The great Civil war breaking out soon after he reached the old country, his mother, being fearful of the conditions resulting therefrom, could not be induced to leave home, in consequence of which he decided to remain across the water until the strife should cease. During the ensuing five years he acted as a local minister in Germany and at the end of that time, in company with his mother, he returned to Canton, Ohio, where he again opened a shop and resumed the tailoring business.

Mr. Roesle married for his second wife a widow by the name of Mrs. Hoover, but their wedded life was also of short duration, being terminated by the death of Mrs. Roesle a few years later. Subsequently, October 3, 1876, he entered the marriage relation with Miss Mary Miller, who bore him one child, Edwin George, who lives with his widowed mother in Canton at the present time. Mr. Roesle succeeded well in his business as long as he was physically able to prosecute it, and in the course of years reaped the results of his industry and good management in a comfortable competence, including, besides a liberal share of personal property, a fine home on the corner of Third and Orchard streets, which he built in 1886. He was a potential factor among his German fellow citizens of Canton and always maintained a lively interest in whatever concerned their welfare. He also stood high in the esteem of the people irrespective of nationality and all who came within the range of his influence were profuse in their praise of his many sterling qualities and upright, manly conduct. He was reared according to the faith of the German Lutheran church and for a number of years was one of the leaders of the congregation worshipping in Canton, serving as superintendent of the Sunday school besides holding other official positions in the organization. In politics he generally voted the Democratic ticket, but in city and county affairs paid little attention to party ties. Mr. Roesle was a gentleman of quiet demeanor and made his presence felt by a correct life, rather than by a display of words. He was the soul of honor in business transactions and in social circles impressed all with whom he came in contact by his integrity and upright Christian character. He died, deeply lamented by his immediate family and the public generally, on the 3rd day of May, 1899.

Mrs. Mary Roesle, who is still living, was born March 8, 1841, in Germany and three weeks after her birth her parents set sail for the United States, embarking at the city of Bremen. While on the sea, the child was taken dangerously ill and despite all that could be done for her she gradually grew worse until the physician gave her up to die. To all appearances she did pass away and preparations were made to consign the little body to the waves. While matters were being arranged for the sad ceremony of sliding the remains overboard, the physician fortunately discovered signs of life and with all haste possible went to work to restore animation. After much labor he finally succeeded in resuscitating the child, who at once began to improve and from that time until the end of the voyage she daily grew in strength and vitality. But for the physician's timely discovery the body would have been consigned to the deep, the escape from death bordering almost upon the miraculous.

Mrs. Roesle's parents landed at New York and from that city proceeded via Buffalo and Cleveland to Massillon, Ohio, making their way to the latter place by canal. Her father, Mr. Miller, located at Massillon and there spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1875 at the age of eighty-five years; his widow survived until 1878 when she, too, entered into rest, aged seventy-nine. Of their three children, Mrs. Roesle was the youngest, the other two being William, a business man of Massillon, and Augustus, also a resident of that city.

Mrs. Roesle was reared and educated in Massillon and until marriage spent the greater part of her life at that place. She is a lady of many admirable traits of character, a sincere Christian and is highly esteemed in the social circles in which she moves. Her son, Edwin George Roesle, was born in Canton, August 6, 1877, received his preliminary education in the public schools and was graduated from the city high school in 1896, at the age of nineteen. From his early boyhood he manifested a great liking and decided skill in the way of fine mechanical work and while still a mere boy could take apart and put together with the utmost nicety the most delicate watch. On leaving school he spent one year in a drug store and at the end of that time took up watchmaking and the jeweler's trade in the establishment of Walter Deuber, of this city. He is still in that gentleman's employ and has steadily advanced in workmanship until he is now considered one of the most skilled artisans in the establishment. He is a young man of good habits and excellent social standing and has before him a bright and promising future.

JOHN REX BUCHER was born in the old family homestead, which stood on the site of the present Barnett hotel, at the corner of East Tuscarawas and Cherry streets, the date of his birth being August 29, 1827. He was a son of Jacob and Christina (Rex) Bucher, who were natives of Pennsylvania. Jacob Bucher was of German lineage and was reared to maturity in the Keystone state, whence he came to Canton in the early pioneer epoch, securing large tracts of land in the county and becoming an influential citizen, both he and his wife dying in Canton. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom three are living at the present time, namely: Harriet married a Mr. Doxie, of Massillon; Amelia married a Mr. Haffleigh, of Philadelphia; Catharine is unmarried.

John R. Bucher was early called upon to assume individual responsibilities and contributed his full share to the cultivation and improvement of the farm land owned by his father. As a youth the subject of this memoir was fond of study, having a very receptive mind, and thus he availed himself of such opportunities as presented for attending the common schools of the place and period, while his appreciative application in all the later years of his life made him a man of broad and comprehensive information. At the age of seventeen years Mr. Bucher engaged in the clothing business, in which he was associated with John Danner, they establishing a business on a small scale at Carrollton, in the adjoining county of Carroll. Subsequently he disposed of his interest in this enterprise and entered the employ of Charles Rawson, a pioneer merchant of Massillon. After remaining a number of years in that city, which was then a small village, he returned to Canton and here established himself in the mercantile business on the south side of the public square, his headquarters being in a building which stood on the present site of Ream's grocery, while later he removed to the Eagle block, on West Tuscarawa's street, near Market street. Subsequently Mr. Bucher and John Danner again became associated in business, their enterprise at this time taking a more pretentious form, since they engaged in the manufacture of stoves, the venture proving successful under their energetic and careful management. In 1864 Mr. Bucher and the late Lewis Gibbs entered into partnership under the title of the Bucher & Gibbs Plow Company. Of his connection with this industry it has been said, "He completely consecrated himself to his work. It took earnest and constant effort to make a success of the enterprise, and twenty years of persistent labor and executive application were required to place the company upon the high and enduring plane which it now occupies. The business was conducted under the firm name of Bucher, Gibbs & Company until 1886, when Mr. Gibbs' interests were acquired by John R. Poyser, and the enterprise was then incorporated under the laws of the state, with a capital stock of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, Mr. Bucher being elected to the presidency of the new company at the time of its organization and continuing to hold this office until the time of his death, while the title of the concern has been retained as the Bucher & Gibbs Plow Company to the present time." The industry has become one of the most important of the manufacturing enterprises of Canton, its products being shipped to all parts of the Union and to many foreign countries, while its capital stock has been increased and also its facilities, the plant being one of the noteworthy ones of the city, while the great enterprise will stand as a perpetual monument to the ability and effective labors of Mr. Bucher.

At this point we quote from a previously published estimate of the life and services of the honored subject, whose grasp of business affairs of wide scope was ever masterful and whose life was unassuming and kindly in all its relations: "Mr. Bucher was a hard worker in his earlier life, but with advancing years he laid aside some of his business cares, as his earlier efforts had brought him prosperity. For a number of years his health had been impaired, since he was a sufferer from heart disease, but he bore all without complaining, desiring to avoid causing anxiety to those nearest and dearest to him. Several times he approached the portals of death, but rallied from the attacks. At last, however, the man who had successfully combated with hardships and with many obstacles in the business and financial world, was called upon to obey the inexorable summons of death, and he entered into eternal rest on the 29th of February, 1892, secure in the esteem of all who had known him. Mr. Bucher was deeply and sincerely mourned. His generous nature endeared him to his employes, who felt for him the tenderest regard, and those who were associated with him in business speak of him in the highest terms of praise, having had the utmost confidence in him. His aim in life was ever to uplift and benefit, and his record tells the story of manifold good deeds, through which he won the affection of all classes. His excellencies of character were many and 'even his failings leaned to virtue's side.' As a prudent man of affairs he was a model of rare excellence. As a successful captain of industrial development his place was in the front rank. As a social companion he was peerless; as a citizen he was without reproach. As a husband and father he was the type and embodiment of whatever is truest and kindest and best in human conception. His home was to him the dearest spot on earth and he could not do too much to enhance the happiness of his family." These are the words endorsed by those who knew the man long and well, and what more need be said to indicate to future generations that he was all in all a type of noble and symmetrical manhood? In politics Mr. Bucher was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and ever took a deep and intelligent interest in the questions and issues of the hour, while he was signally loyal to all that tended to conserve the best interests of his home city. He was reared in the Lutheran church and his views were ever in harmony with its faith, while he was a regular attendant and liberal supporter of Trinity church up to the time of his death.

In Canton, on the 11th of September, 1856, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Bucher to Miss Emma Wikidal, who was born here, being a daughter of the late Martin Wikidal, who was one of the prominent and honored pioneer merchants and bankers of Canton, an individual tribute to his memory appearing on other pages of this work, so that a recapitulation of the family and personal history is not demanded at this point. Mrs. Bucher was born in the old Wikidal homestead, which stood on the site of the present Folwell building, in Canton, and in her girlhood she attended the Canton Female Seminary, conducted by the Goshorns, while later she continued her studies in an excellent Moravian seminary at Lititz, Pennsylvania, where she completed her education. She recalls that during her childhood days Canton was a small village, and that the site of the present home of Mrs. George D. Harter, on North Market street, was considered to be in the country. Mrs. Bucher still resides in her beautiful home, at 822 North Market street, the same being doubly dear to her through the grateful memories and associations of the past, and in the days of her widowhood she is solaced and comforted by the love of her children and exceptionally wide circle of friends, having long taken a prominent part in the social life of Canton, which has ever been her home. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Bucher we enter the following data in conclusion of this sketch: Helen is the wife of William J. Poyser, secretary of the Bucher & Gibbs Plow Company; Martin W., who married Miss Catherine Cobaugh; and Clara, the wife of Willis H. Shanafelt, of Canton.

PROF. J. M. WYMAN.—For many years the subject of this sketch has been engaged in teaching in the public schools of Canton and elsewhere and is well entitled to representation in the biographical history of Stark county. His ancestors were among the earliest settlers on the New England coast and it is a well-authenticated fact that his genealogy is directly traceable to one of the Puritan immigrants who came over in the Mayflower. The name Wyman has been familiar in various parts of Massachusetts from the earliest history of the state and from the frequency with which it appears those bearing it in olden times must have been people of no inconsiderable importance. Without attempting a closely connected family history in this connection, suffice it to state that George Wyman, the subject's grandfather and a lineal descendant of the original Puritan referred to, was born in Massachusetts, and when a young man went to Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, where he married a lady by the name of Polly Frye. Subsequently he and his family migrated to Stark county, Ohio, and settled in the woods near the present site of Minerva, Mr. Wyman having some time previously entered eighty acres of land in that section, and on this he built his small cabin home and began life in the manner of the pioneers. With the assistance of his sons, some of whom were strong men at the time, he developed a farm on which he spent the remainder of his life, dying at the age of sixty years. His widow survived him a number of years, being ninety-four when called from the scenes of her earthly labors and trials. George Wyman was twice married, Polly

Fry being his second wife. By a former marriage he had several children, one of whom, George, lived the greater part of his life in the county of Stark, dying here a number of years ago. The second marriage resulted in the birth of two sons, Jacob, who died in Kosciusko county, Indiana, and Abraham, the father of the subject of this review.

Abraham Wyman was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, July 1, 1822, and was three years old when his parents moved to Ohio. He grew to mature years amid the stirring scenes of the pioneer period and in a rude cabin on the banks of Still Fork was taught those homely virtues and manly principles which made him a useful citizen in after life. With the exception of nine months' attendance at a poor subscription school, he had no educational advantages, but by poring over such books as he could procure he subsequently became quite proficient in several branches of study. When a youth of sixteen he hired out to a farmer by the name of Messimore, between whose daughter, Julia Ann, and himself a warm attachment soon sprang up, which led to marriage six years later, the ceremony being solemnized on the 7th day of November, 1844. Mrs. Wyman was born at New Chambersburg, Columbiana county, Ohio, August 21, 1825, the daughter of Henry and Sarah Messimore, of Massachusetts. Mr. Messimore in an early day emigrated to Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, thence, about 1820, to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he lived the life of a farmer.

Shortly after his marriage Abraham Wyman took up the trade of stonemasonry and worked at the same for a number of years in the county of Columbiana and other parts of eastern Ohio. Later he purchased, in Paris township, Stark county, what is locally known as the Shepard farm, on which formerly stood one of the oldest fulling-mills in this part of the state, and from that time on he devoted all of his attention to the pursuit of agriculture. Subsequently, in 1892, he sold ninety of the one hundred and sixty acres which the place contained and in 1898 disposed of the remainder, meanwhile, from 1885 to the present time, making his home with his son, the subject of this sketch, his wife having died in 1866. The following are the names of the children born to Abraham and Julia Ann Wyman: Rachel married Philip Harsh and died at the age of thirty-nine; Frank is a farmer living near Ouida, Ohio; J. M., of this review; Smith is a telegraph operator and station agent in the employ of a railroad in Idaho; Lavina died in childhood and Alpheus also departed this life when quite young. Mr. Wyman has lived to a ripe old age, and has always been a good citizen and useful member of society. Years ago he and wife united with the German Baptist church, in the faith of which the latter quietly passed to her eternal rest and in the hope of which the devoted husband, true to her memory, is proceeding calmly onward to the twilight and the journey's end.

Prof. J. M. Wyman was born on the old homestead in Paris township, Stark county, August 6, 1857. When nine years old he lost that best of all earthly friends, his mother, after which his early training was only too sadly neglected. Without the firm but gentle influence which none but a mother can exercise, he was permitted largely to follow his own inclinations, the result being the development of an independent and rather wayward disposition which his father and afterwards his teachers found it difficult to curb. The father's absence from home while working at his trade left the lad to follow his own sweet will and being thrown in the company of others as full of life and vigor as himself, he soon became exceedingly impatient of any kind of restraint. Until his eighth year he never saw the interior of a school house as a pupil and he was fully aware that he could not distinguish one letter from another. When he finally entered school it was to cause his teacher, Miss Mollie Rouch, no end of trouble, and to suppress the animal spirits of the little rebel, she was obliged frequently to test the efficacy of a handful of tough willows. Miss Rouch's experience was about the same as of several of her successors and it was not until about his fourteenth year that the wayward boy opened his eyes to the advantages and real necessity of educational training. Finally a teacher by the name of John Hart took charge of the school and to him young Wyman yielded a rather reluctant obedience. Taking advice from his better judgment, the boy at last resolved to make the most of his opportunities and, applying himself diligently to his studies, soon made such advancement as to place himself at the head of nearly all of his classes. From now on his progress was rapid and in every way commendable, and in a few years he had so mastered the common branches as to pass successfully the required examination for a teacher's license. Mr. Wyman received his first certificate when eighteen years old, but did not begin teaching until the year following, when he took charge of the Oneida district at a compensation of one dollar and forty cents per day. His first term proved eminently satisfactory and such was the reputation he achieved in managing what was considered a difficult school that the patrons of adjoining districts made a liberal offer for his services the following year. Accepting their proposition, he not only taught the ensuing year in their district, but continued there for eight successive terms, meantime spending his vacations attending school with the object in view of fitting himself for greater efficiency as an instructor. To this end he spent the spring and summer seasons from 1879 to 1881 inclusive in Ada College, and during the spring and fall of 1882-83 pursued his studies in Mt. Union College. Following this, he taught the Pleasant Valley school four years and later spent the same length of time with the Ouida school, after which he taught one term in the Robertsville district. He then took charge of the schools of Pekin, Carroll county, where he taught five terms, and at the expiration of his period of service there he accepted, in 1892, the principalship of the North Cherry Street school, Canton. After filling this position two years Prof. Wyman was transferred to the East Fourth Street building, where he remained during the ensuing six years, at the end of which time he was returned to the North Cherry Street school, his present place of labor.

Prof. Wyman is identified with the Stark County Teachers' Institute and the Ohio State Teachers' Association, being a regular attendant at their sessions and an active participant in their deliberations. As a teacher he has few equals in Stark county and his name is widely known in the educational circles of the state. He is a fine scholar, a polished gentleman and possesses in a marked degree those traits of character which insure success in his chosen calling and popularity in the domain of citizenship. His career as an educator presents a series of continued advancements and his present responsible position has been won by merit alone. Prof. Wyman is not entirely tied down by the claims of his profession, but is a public-spirited man, deeply interested in whatever concerns the material and moral good of the city and county of his residence. He is a member of the Masonic lodge in this city and for a number of years has been a zealous worker in the First Presbyterian church of Canton, in which he now holds the office of elder. Before moving to Canton he was for six years elder of the Bethlehem church, served three years as superintendent of the Sunday school of that organization, besides holding for the same length of time the superintendency of the Sunday school with which he is at present connected. Prof. Wyman is a liberal in politics, but in state and national affairs generally supports the Democratic party. He reads much, keeps himself well informed upon current events and national issues and has no hesitancy in expressing his opinions. He discharges the duties of citizenship as becomes an intelligent, broad-minded American and in every relation of life endeavors to live up to the right as he sees and understands the right.

Prof. Wyman was married on the 16th of February, 1882, to Miss Althea M. Crowl, whose birth occurred near Minerva, this county, May 28, 1861. Mrs. Wyman is the daughter of George W. and Caroline (McNamara) Crowl, the father deceased, the mother still living. Prof. and Mrs. Wyman are the parents of four children, namely: Myrtle J., born March 8, 1883; Victor G., born July 8, 1892; Wilbur F., born July 2, 1895, and Wilma Caroline, who was born on the 25th of August, 1901; the two older were born in the town of Minerva, the other two in the city of Canton.

GEORGE H. WALLACE was secretary of New Mexico at the time of his sudden passing away, which carried bereavement to a large circle of friends throughout the United States and in various parts of the world. Of Scotch-Irish ancestry, the sturdy traits of the Scot found an able exponent in him who bore the name so dear to those who trace their lineage to "Old Scotland." From childhood he was known to all who came in contact with him as "a true Wallace." His grandfather, George Wallace, with his brother Robert, sons of James Wallace, went from New Hampshire to Youngstown, Ohio, in 1795, where they engaged in surveying. They afterwards located on the site of the present city of Cleveland, and were largely interested and instrumental in the development of that section in the early part of the last century. Dr. Perkins Wallace, father of the deceased, was educated at Cincinnati, and in 1834 was married at Canton, Ohio, to Rebekah, daughter of William and Elizabeth Seabury Fisk Reynolds, in the homestead on South Market street, by the Rev. Timothy Hopkins, the Presbyterian minister. Captain Fisk, a retired wealthy sea-captain, went to Canton in 1810 and invested in a large tract of land, taking with him from Rhode Island his motherless and only child, Betsy. In 1811 she became the wife of William Reynolds, recorder of the United States land office, whose father, Major William Reynolds, removed from Virginia to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1802. The son William settled in Stark county in 1808. An active business man, he established a sawmill, large flour and woolen mills. He died at the early age of thirty-seven years.

Dr. and Mrs. Wallace lived at Massillon; later they resided for a time at Akron, where, on December 26, 1842, their son, George H. Wallace, was born. They removed to Massillon, where the residence built by Dr. Wallace is still standing. In 1847 they returned to Canton, to reside permanently in the old homestead built by Captain Fisk for his daughter, the mother of Mrs. Wallace, and where she, Mrs. Reynolds, died in 1853. Of the seven children born to Dr. and Mrs. Wallace, only one, the youngest, Cora Bell Wallace—Mrs. W. R. Farrand, of Detroit—survives.

Mr. Wallace was educated in the public schools of Canton, in the organization of which his father had taken a most active part. He became a favorite pupil of Miss Betsy Cowles, who was a graduate from Oberlin and a well-known educator in northern Ohio. His warm attachment and grateful appreciation of her thorough teaching were often manifested in later life. At this early stage he developed a special aptitude for mathematics. His interest in public affairs, in national questions, may be directly traced to the influence and early teaching of his father, one of the ablest physicians in northern Ohio, who was for several years an invalid, suffering from asthma, which resulted from the fatigue and exposure incident to a large practice in that early day. Rarely is the influence and teaching of the parent more marked, and the attachment between parent and child stronger, than in the case of Dr. Wallace and his son—"My dear son," as he was always called by the father in his letters or in his diaries, so carefully and methodically kept. The boy read much aloud in those stirring times, when conditions were leading on to the Civil war; and the father spared no time, no pains, to give clearly, and in detail, correct knowledge and thorough understanding of all he read—a gift he possessed in rare degree, and which also developed in the son. Many, both children and adults, have admired the accurate and lucid explanations of obscure points so aptly and readily given by Mr. Wallace. His uncle, General W. F. Reynolds, of the engineer corps in the regular army, was placed in command of an expedition for the exploration of the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers in May, 1859. His nephew, but little more than sixteen years of age, was made a member of it. His duty was to make astronomical observations, and to calculate latitude and longitude, which proved congenial work, as he inherited from his mother a liking for mathematics. It was hoped that roughing it in the mountains might materially aid in strengthening a delicate constitution. That hope was realized. From a slender lad of scarce more than one hundred pounds he returned, at the end of eighteen months, weighing one hundred and sixty pounds, and the father's joy was expressed in the greeting, "Thank God, he is big!"

The mountain experience proved a never-failing source of pleasure and interest, not only to himself but to others, by reason of his gift of vivid portrayal of scene and incident. His naturally keen powers of observation were quickened and developed, his love of nature was cultivated, and his knowledge of men and life was extended. It was an education of a rare and beneficial kind, under exceptionally favorable conditions and guidance. The white man for the first time saw the smoke of the Yellowstone Geysers, and looked down into the wonderful section since made the National Park. Professor Hayden, of the Smithsonian Institution, was a member of the party, as was also Colonel James Stevenson, afterwards a famous collector for the Smithsonian, then learning his first lessons with Professor Hayden. The collection of birds made by the expedition was classified, arranged and described by Dr. Elliott Coues, whose book on "The Birds of the Northwest," among the earliest of his works, is still the recognized authority on that subject. The last two summers of the life of this eminent and lamented scientist, a warm personal friend of Mr. Wallace, were spent in Santa Fe in study and research. The association thus made possible was a source of much pleasure to both. The government report of this important and interesting expedition was lost sight of in the exciting events of the Civil war. Mr. Wallace was not permitted, on account of his physical constitution, either to pursue a collegiate education or to enter upon the confining duties of a professional life, which seemed most unfortunate, as he was possessed of an eminently legal mind.

When the Civil war began he was pursuing a special course of study in an institution at Cleveland, Ohio. He gave himself at once to his country's defence, and the first duty to which he was assigned was the hospital service. Afterwards, as division superintendent of military telegraphs, he served in the Army of the Cumberland, but always where he could be readily released if summons came from his invalid father. After the war he engaged in commercial life, upon which he entered first at Wilmington, Delaware, then at Omaha, Nebraska. But not until 1868 did the final message come which summoned him home. It was a source of lifelong sorrow and regret that he was unable, on account of distance from the railway, to return in time for his father's blessing. With his sister, he tenderly nursed his mother in her last painful illness in 1870. On March 14, 1871, he was married at Wilmington, Delaware, to Miss Eliza Bradley Jones, who died of consumption on the 31st of the same month. He was at Omaha through that most interesting time in its history, the building of the Union Pacific Railway. Later, connected with a manufacturing firm at Canton, he travelled extensively throughout the states. Always active in church work, he aided materially, while at Canton, in keeping up the services in St. Paul's Episcopal church, acting as lay reader under Bishop Bedell. On October 14, 1875, he was married at Massillon, Ohio, to Miss Catharine A. Patten, niece and ward of Thomas McCullough. Most of the centennial year was spent at Philadelphia.

In the spring of 1877, seeking the benefit of an outdoor life, he bought a plantation in Howard county, Missouri, one of the oldest-settled and most conservative sections of the state, the home of many of the most eminent Missouri statesmen and officials, where he engaged in sheep-raising and wool-growing. With his strong Republican principles and patriotic temperament he soon entered upon his political duties and organized the county and district, and had Republican tickets out for each election. He was chairman of the congressional committee, and for ten years a member of the state central committee. In 1888 he declined the nomination for congress, and, although the convention had adjourned, they met again and re-nominated him. The following day, most unexpectedly to him, he was nominated by acclamation, in the state convention, for lieutenant-governor. Then followed one of the most exciting, vigorous campaigns ever conducted in Missouri. At the election Mr. Wallace ran several thousand ahead of the ticket. As a result of the wearing campaign, bronchial trouble and asthma developed, necessitating a change. For months his life seemed to hang by a thread. Under the care and skillful treatment of Dr. Biggar, of Cleveland, the bronchial affection was healed and the asthmatic conditions relieved, though not entirely overcome.

While residing on his plantation, which was four miles from Fayette, the county seat, he acted as lay reader under Bishop Robertson in the little parish of St. Mary, one of the oldest in the diocese of Missouri, taking the services one Sunday in each month for some years, during the ministration of the venerable father, Rev. J. L. Gay. When the time came to leave this section, the expressions of regret, of appreciation and of kindly good-will, came from all, of whatever creed or political faith.

An ardent protectionist, and believing that "the wool tariff is the keystone of the arch of protection," Mr. Wallace, working always in the interest of the farmer, the producer, gave careful study to the question of the tariff on wool. As president of the Missouri Wool-Growers' Association, his energy and ability made that organization one of the most active in the country. Through his efforts in enlisting the interest of the citizens of St. Louis, and the members of the Cotton and Wool Exchange, the Wool-Growers' First National Convention and Sheep-Shearing was held in that city in 1886, with Hon. Columbus Delano, ex-secretary of the interior, as president, and General Sherman one of the speakers. Delegates were attendance from New England, the northern states, the west and southwest, and from Old Mexico. A large sum of money, contributed in St. Louis, was paid as premiums in the competitive sheep-shearing.

As secretary of the National Wool-Growers' Association he spent the winter of 1889-90 in Washington, working with Hon. Columbus Delano and Judge Lawrence in the formation of schedule "K" of the McKinley tariff bill. His appointment as consul-general to Melbourne was delayed till the bill had passed the lower house of the national congress in the last week of May. After he had left Washington in preparation for the journey abroad he was called back to work for its passage in the senate, and did not sail from San Francisco till three months later. His appointment as consul-general to Australasia was not made as a local one credited to Missouri, but, as President Harrison stated, it was a national one, asked for and urged by the wool interests from Boston to California, from Oregon to Texas. In August, 1890, he sailed for Melbourne. During his residence in that city, while the present governor-general of the federated colonies, the Earl of Hopetoun, a true and loyal Scotchman, was governor of Victoria, he won the confidence and esteem of all. Before he completed his term of office he visited each of the five colonies of Australia, also Tasmania and New Zealand, thus gaining personal knowledge of the various consulates, and was the first United States representative to visit, officially, the ports of West Australia. He travelled as the guest of the government, and every courtesy, official and social, was shown him. When by reason of the change in our national administration, he returned to the United States, universal regret was expressed. It may well be doubted if any representative of the United States government to Australia equalled him, from a social as well as a commercial standpoint, in kindling warm and kindly feelings toward the United States. The thorough study he gave to the wool industry of Australasia resulted in an exhaustive special consular report which has proved invaluable to the wool interests in our country. The better part of a year was occupied in making the journey back to the United States by the perilous passage along the coast of Queensland; passing Thursday Island; through the Arafura and Flores seas to Java; through the straits of Sunda to "India's utmost isle," "heavenly Ceylon," which he loved so well; spending several weeks in India, followed by a month in Egypt; across the Mediterranean to Italy, over the Alps, through Switzerland to Paris and London, thence to New York; thus completing the circuit of the globe.

Attracted by the favorable climatic conditions of New Mexico, the winter of 1895-96 was spent at Las Vegas, and the following winter at Santa Fe. Mr. Wallace organized the New Mexico Wool-Growers' Association, of which he was made an honorary member, and, as ever, was at work with his pen to further the cause of protection and the sheep industry. In April, 1897, he was called to Washington by Judge Lawrence, to a meeting of the National Association, to assist in securing protection for the wool-growers in the formulation of the Dingley tariff bill. Early in June he was appointed by President McKinley secretary of the territory of New Mexico. He remained at Washington a month after, working in the interest of the wool-growers, confident he could thus better serve the people of New Mexico than by at once assuming the duties of his office. His interest in this subject never flagged. Notwithstanding the many demands on his time and strength, he responded liberally to the constant solicitations from the press for wool-tariff propaganda. Official duties prevented his attendance at the meeting of the National Association of Wool-Growers at Salt Lake City in January, 1901; however, he prepared the program, and, by request, furnished two of the papers read in that convention.

The fondness for travel developed in early life was never lost. Aside from the physical benefit, no opportunity thus afforded for enriching his fund of information escaped so keen an observer as Mr. Wallace; and, being thorough and practical, he lost no detail. His resignation had been in the hands of the President for several months, and plans were being made for rest and foreign travel when the duties of the office, necessarily confining, should be given over, when the final end came. His life had been varied and eventful, his talents versatile, and his attainments only limited by physical infirmities. He was a man of indomitable energy and perseverance, sterling integrity, unswerving loyalty and devotion to duty, with marvelous patience and cheerfulness and Christlike forbearance. In all his physical suffering no complaint was ever heard. Of a delicately-sensitive organization, sympathetic, tenderhearted as a child, he was always ready with a kind word, a cheering smile and a helping hand to brighten the lives and lighten the cares and sorrows of others. The precious memory of the beautiful life, so lovingly unselfish, so tenderly gentle, so patiently cheerful, so firmly upright, lingers—lives to bless, to strengthen, to sweeten many lives. It seems eminently fitting that the passing of the spirit came quietly, without a pain or struggle. At the dawn of the early morning the gates of Life were opened, and the patient spirit entered in. His death occurred on April 13, 1901, at Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Many tributes have been given to Mr. Wallace's ability and worth, among them the following being noteworthy:

People who have met Mr. Wallace, the United States consul-general to Australia, will regret that the system of political patronage that prevails in America necessitates a change of consuls with a change of government. A typical American in face, manner and speech, the retiring representative of the government at Washington has made for himself scores—nay hundreds—of good, sound friends in this country, who will not soon forget him. He is a capital public speaker. His oration at the Columbus Centenary celebration last year was a model.—Melbourne Argus, August, 1893.

The retirement of Mr. G. H. Wallace from the American consulship in Melbourne is, naturally, a subject for regret. At the mayor's luncheon, yesterday, Mr. Wallace was good enough to say that the consul-general to Victoria has not been recalled, as he would always be a permanent resident in the colony, although represented by different individuals. But that is a matter which calls for regret. The position is unchanged, but the men are different. But with no feeling of disrespect to Mr. Wallace's unknown successor, it may still be pointed out that the former's continuance in official position would be exceptionally pleasing to Melbourne citizens. It must be of some concern to the country interested to have its affairs looked up by a gentleman who enjoys the respect and confidence of all circles. This was the position occupied by Mr. Wallace; consequently, it is a pity that circumstances do not permit of the extension of his stay in Victoria.—Melbourne Evening Standard, August 10, 1893.

To George H. Wallace, Esq., United States Consul-General to Australasia at Melbourne:

Dear Sir:

We learn that, by reason of the change in administration, you are soon to return to the United States, and we desire to express our appreciation of the valuable services you have rendered during your residence among us as consul-general to Australasia, and to bear testimony to the prompt attention and courtesy you have extended to all having business connected with the consulate, to the patience and readiness with which you have furnished valuable information, to your interest in and study of the development of our industries, with a view to facilitate and increase trade relations between the United States and Australia.

The uniform urbanity and manly patriotism with which you have discharged your duties—business, official and social, have not only gained for you the esteem and regard of the entire community, but endeared you to them personally, and we trust the pleasant, interested association you have had with us may help to draw the people and interests of the two great countries, America and Australia, into closer relationship.

In expressing our regret at the severance of the pleasant relations which for the past three years have existed, we desire to add the hope that health and prosperity may attend you, and that you will cherish pleasant memories of Australia and her people.

We are, dear sir, yours, very truly,

SIR JAMES B. PATTERSON, Premier of Victoria.

Some men die, and their passing away makes scarcely a noticeable impression on the community. Others die, and everybody stops and wonders, and is sad. Even little children are made unhappy. The death of Secretary Wallace was a shock to Santa Fe. He had so identified himself with the community's life and welfare that his loss was like a personal bereavement. It will be a long time before Santa Fe can forget his genial personality, his devotion to her best interests, his work as a citizen and officer, and his steadfastness as a friend.

Mr. Wallace took up his work as Secretary of the Territory comparatively unknown to the rank and file of its citizens. He at once evinced such capacity for the duties of his office, and such integrity and fidelity, as won for him the esteem and confidence of our best public men. This esteem and confidence he held until he died. Indeed, I have heard it said repeatedly by well-informed men that no one has ever occupied official position in New Mexico who was better equipped by business ability and culture and unswerving honesty than Secretary Wallace. This is high tribute, and well deserved. It is all the more notable when one reflects upon the general reputation of public men in this oppressed territory, and when one considers the opportunities for dishonesty and the chances of escaping detection. To lose such an officer as Secretary Wallace is a public calamity, and especially so at this time, when men of strong character are needed to save New Mexico from the greed of irresponsible officialism.

No man had the interests of the territory more profoundly at heart. He believed in the territory's resources and possibilities, and was stirred by a strong desire to promote her best development. He was anxious to do something to overcome the difficulties that have so long retarded her progress, and that ought never to have been in her way. I have talked with him again and again on public affairs, and I know that New Mexico had no stauncher friend. He had large faith in the capacity of the native people, and always spoke in deep interest of them. He condemned indignantly the shameless instances in which the personal greed of the American had robbed them of their rights, and he saw that nothing but honorable dealing with our Mexican population would win them to good government and bring the territory to fitness for larger responsibilities. If New Mexico had always been governed by men of his convictions and capacity, she would have been long ago in her place among the sisterhood of states.

It has been worth while that Secretary Wallace came among us, even for so few years. His manly life, his straightforward public career, his fine example everywhere, will not soon fade from memory. He has left a record to be emulated by our boys and young men. On moral questions, his position was wise and strong. He lent his influence to every public good. He encouraged every progressive enterprise. He was a religious man, but not narrow. His friends were in all denominations. A thorough Protestant, he numbered among his closest associates many excellent Catholics. His gentle tolerance and kindly spirit made him beloved by all creeds.

One other thought. His home was the synonym for hospitality. How many have been at his table and enjoyed his sincere friendliness! His devoted wife was his happy counterpart. They were among the first to welcome me and my family to Santa Fe, and the warmth of their welcome is still a pleasant recollection. To say that these good people are missed seems little; but what words can more strongly express their worth and the vacancy they have left in many hearts? They are sadly missed. Another Wallace made the old Palace famous by his Ben-Hur. This Wallace and his lovely wife have made it famous by their hospitality. Long may the memory of their residence spread its fragrance among us!

The foregoing paragraphs are in the main quoted from a memorial sketch prepared for circulation among friends of the deceased.

JOHN E. RABER.—Among the prosperous industries which contribute to the prestige of the city and county is that conducted under the title of the Columbia Iron & Wire Works, of which the subject of this review is proprietor, being recognized as one of the energetic and representative business men of Canton. The concern has a large and well equipped plant and the same is given over to the manufacture of builders' iron, wire and brass goods of divers descriptions, including architectural iron work, wire and brass work of every sort, wire window guards, elevator cabs and enclosures, bank and office railings, and iron stairs, fencing, fire escapes and other specialties. The plant is located at Union street and in juxtaposition to the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, thus controlling excellent shipping facilities.

John E. Raber was born on a farm sixteen miles south of the city of Fort Wayne, Indiana, on the 31st of October, 1864, being a son of Emanuel and Harriet (Myers) Raber, the former of whom is a native of Stark county and representative of one of its pioneer families, having been born in Greentown, and having been a resident of Canton for more than thirty years. His wife was born in Millheim, Summit county, this state, her father having removed there from Pennsylvania and was an early pioneer farmer. She died in Uniontown, this county, in 1873, and her husband later married Mrs. Mary Damm, who is still living. When the subject of this sketch was four years of age his parents removed to Uniontown, this county, and he passed his boyhood days in that village and Greentown, while his first educational advantages were comprised in attending two winter terms in the country schools and two in the public schools of Canton, while later he was a student in the high school and continued his studies for one term in Oberlin College, after which he effectively supplemented this discipline by taking a three years' course in the Ohio Normal University, at Ada. He then returned to Canton, his funds being entirely exhausted at the time of reaching his home city, and he walked from this place to Akron, having no money with which to pay railroad fare, and there he took the teachers' examination, having just enough money left to buy a simple luncheon after thus proving that his mental resources were not at so low an ebb as his financial. He then returned on foot to Canton and was employed in the harvest field during that summer, also selling implements for the handling of hay. In the autumn he was matriculated in the Indiana Normal School & Business University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, where he continued his studies for two years, working on a farm in Stark county during his vacation. Thereafter he was successfully engaged in teaching school in Summit county for the ensuing four years, principally at Lake View, in the mining district, and his experience with the somewhat incorrigible children of the miners taxed both his mental and physical powers. This school was also taught previously by his father, who there had his first pedagogic experience. In 1888 he was married in that county, and shortly afterward he removed to Detroit, Michigan, where he entered the employ of J. E. Bolles & Company, manufacturers of iron and wire goods, remaining with this concern four years and gaining an intimate knowledge of the business in its various details. In 1893 he returned to Canton and engaged in the same line of enterprises on his own account, and here he has succeeded in building up a large and profitable business under the title of the Columbia Iron & Wire Works.

In Summit county, Ohio, on the 5th of April, 1888, Mr. Raber was united in marriage to Miss Emma Moss, who was born in that county, being a daughter of William and Anna (Littlewood) Moss, her father being superintendent of mines at Lake View, that county. Mr. and Mrs. Raber have four children, Irene May, aged fourteen (1903); Ethel Edna, aged thirteen; Grace, aged nine; and Florence Erveta, aged two years. Mr. and Mrs. Raber are members of the First Methodist Episcopal church in Canton, politically he is a Republican, and fraternally a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

HENRY M. WATTS is a native of the state of New Jersey, having been born in the town of Washington, on the 12th of August, 1864, and being a son of William H. and Rachel F. (Fries) Watts, the former of whom now resides in Indianapolis, Indiana, being a tinner by trade and vocation, while the latter, who was for many years prominently engaged in the milliner business in Canton, died in this city in 1886. Our subject was reared to the age of eleven years in his native place, where he received his early educational training, and he then came with his parents to Canton, where he continued his studies in the public schools until he had attained the age of seventeen years. He began his identification with the "art preservative" by assuming the dignified and independent position of "devil" in the job-printing establishment of Charles Thompson, of Canton, and after becoming a skilled workman he was for five years employed at his trade in Indianapolis, Indiana. In 1896 he returned to Canton, and was here employed by the Gibbs Manufacturing Company until the year 1900, having had charge of the book department of their printing and publishing business. In January, 1900, Mr. Watts laid the foundation of the important business of which he is now the manager, by establishing a small job-printing office in a room of his residence, and May 7, 1901, he effected the organization of the Watts Printing Company, which is a stock concern and incorporated under the laws of the state. Concerning the establishment we can not do better than to quote from two articles which appeared in the News-Democrat of Canton: "The growth of the Watts Printing Company during the past year has been remarkable. It is attracting attention everywhere. The business was started one year ago last April, by H. M. Watts, with one small job press, and employed but one boy and occupied two hundred and sixteen feet of floor space. At that time they were able to print only calling cards and other job work of that kind. The business has been steadily developing until it now has eighteen hundred and eighty feet of floor space, employs twenty-eight persons and has nine first-class job presses. The presses and type are all new and modern, making this the model printing plant of the city. The company can now print anything from a calling card to a catalogue, and they have all the latest improved machinery of a supplemental nature, such as machines for punching, perforating, numbering, cutting, etc., and an important feature of the enterprise is that only first-class union men are employed. Commercial printing is the specialty of the concern. The building utilized was remodeled specially for the purpose and is occupied exclusively by this concern. The rapid growth of the business indicates that the excellent work turned out is appreciated by the business community of Canton."

In politics Mr. Watts is a staunch Republican, taking a public-spirited interest in the affairs of the day, and fraternally he holds membership in the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and the Woodmen of the World. As a business man he is energetic and progressive, as is clearly evident in the light of the fine enterprise which he has built up, and he is held in high esteem in the community.

In this city, on the 11th of August, 1888, Mr. Watts was united in marriage to Miss Nellie A. Miller, who was reared in Stark county, being a daughter of Louis and Jennie Miller, who now reside in Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Watts have one child, Vivian M.

LEON P. W. STIEHL.—Among those who have accomplished notable results in connection with the establishing and maintenance of the highest grade of commercial and business colleges is Mr. Stiehl, who has an able coadjutor in his wife, a thoroughly skilled and capable teacher. Mr. Stiehl's operations in the educational field have been of wide scope and importance, as is evident when we refer to the fact that he has been the founder of the business colleges which bear his name in Canton and Uhrichsville, Ohio; San Francisco, California; Charleston, South Carolina; Raleigh, North Carolina; Lynchburg, Virginia; and Salt Lake City, Utah. He is at the present time owner of the Ohio schools mentioned and remains a stockholder of several other of the institutions which owe their organization to him.

Mr. Stiehl comes of staunch old Revolutionary stock in both the paternal and maternal lines, and is a native of the state of West Virginia, having been born in Monroe county, on the 23d of September, 1854, and being a son of M. G. and Malinda (Blanton) Stiehl, the former of whom was born in the state of Virginia and the latter in Kentucky. The subject received his early educational training in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Ohio and thereafter continued his studies in various institutions, making it his special aim to thoroughly fortify himself for the successful handling of practical educational work. Thus it may be said that he was a student in the National Normal School, at Lebanon, Ohio; the Spencerian Commercial and Shorthand School, at Cleveland, Ohio; Packard's Business College, New York city; the Graham Shorthand School, New York city; the Pitman Phonographic Institute, Cincinnati, Ohio; and the San Francisco Business College, in the city of the same name, while both he and his wife have the most flattering endorsements and credentials from many of the leading educators in the business line from all sections of the Union. It is not incompatible at this point to enter a list of the colleges and celebrated authors from whom Mr. and Mrs. Stiehl have received diplomas or certificates: Spencerian Commercial and Shorthand School, Cleveland; San Francisco Business College, L. C. Ellis and N. S. Phelps, founders, and also authors and publishers of the Ellis System of Business Practice and Practical Bookkeeping; Phonographic Institute, Cincinnati, Benn Pitman and Jerome B. Howard, founders and conductors, and also authors and publishers of American Pitman Shorthand, etc.; Andrew J. Graham, author and publisher of Standard Phonography, New York city; S. H. Goodyear, associate author and publisher of the Goodyear-Marshall Systems of Bookkeeping and Business Practice, and also president of the company; George W. Davis, principal shorthand department of the Bryant & Stratton Business College, Buffalo, New York, and author of Shorthand Simplified, exemplifying the Graham system; Isaac S. Dement, author, publisher and champion stenographer of the world; National Associations of Accountants and Bookkeepers, of which Mr. Stiehl is a member; H. M. Rowe, associate conductor of Sadler's Bryant & Stratton Business College, Baltimore, Maryland, and author of Sadler-Rowe publications. The Stiehls are also authors and publishers of works on various branches of the work to which they have given their attention for the past twenty years or more, and it is needless to say that Canton is fortunate in having secured the establishment of one of their colleges within its confines. Their institution here was founded in September, 1902, and has met with a gratifying support, while its business is certain to be cumulative as its superior advantages in all departments become more widely known. The school at Uhrichsville, Ohio, was established in 1896, and both are under the immediate control and supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Stiehl, the latter being principal of the school at Uhrichsville.

Mr. Stiehl is a man of fine executive ability, as is evident from the success that has attended his various educational enterprises, and the corps of assistants retained in his colleges is selected with special reference to the ability of each individual as pertaining to the special work assigned. In politics Mr. Stiehl accords allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Order of Red Men, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has gained the confidence and esteem of the business men and general public in Canton, and his college is here maintained under most favorable auspices.

In the city of San Francisco, on the 9th of October, 1890, Mr. Stiehl consummated a marriage, being united to Miss Lula Vincent, a daughter of Thomas Vincent, and a lady of fine attainments, and she has proved a most enthusiastic and capable coadjutor of her husband in his chosen field of endeavor. He has one son, Harry Garfield Stiehl, who is identified with him in his chosen work and gives promise of carrying on the work in due course of time.

THEODORE PARKER PAXSON.—

Holding the important position of cashier of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Canton and enjoying distinctive prestige not only in railway circles but as an accomplished business man and public-spirited citizen, the subject of this review is entitled to specific mention with the representative men of Stark county. Mr. Paxson is of English descent and his paternal ancestors were among the early settlers of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Rev. Joseph Paxson, for many years a well known clergyman of the United Brethren church, was born near the city of Harrisburg and in early life moved to Columbiana county, Ohio, where in addition to the duties of the ministry he gave considerable attention to mechanical pursuits. In an early day he had charge of a number of churches scattered over a large territory and in order to reach them was obliged to ride his extensive circuit on horseback, being frequently absent weeks at a time in the discharge of his pastoral functions. He lived to the remarkable old age of ninety-two years, dying in 1892. His children were Josiah, Jesse, Milton, Jane, Hannah, and John, the father of the subject of this sketch.

Theodore Parker Paxson was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 23d of September, 1854, and spent the first fourteen years of his life in that county. During his boyhood he attended the public schools in his native town, and after his parents removed, in 1868, to Stark county, he prosecuted his studies for a period of four years at Mt. Union, subsequently spending one year in the Canton high school. Mr. Paxson accompanied his parents to Canton and later accepted a clerkship in a grocery at Alliance, in which capacity he continued until 1881, when he resigned his position and returned to the former city. Shortly after his return to Canton he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad company as clerk in the office at this place. In 1892 he was promoted cashier of the freight department, which position he still holds. Mr. Paxson's business career has been one of success, the result of industry, integrity and faithfulness to duty, and he has the confidence not only of his superiors in the railway service, but of his fellow citizens. His official functions have not interfered with his duties to the community as a citizen, as he maintains a deep interest in the welfare of the city of his residence. In the spring of 1902 he was elected to represent the first ward in the common council and as a member of that body he has been given places on some of the most prominent committees, notably among which, being the fire department, ways and means and city offices. He has been active in promoting much important municipal legislation and spares no pains in proving himself worthy of confidence as a faithful, judicious and conscientious public servant. Politically he votes the Republican ticket, but in local affairs is more interested in getting the right kind of men into office than he is in strictly upholding party principles. Fraternally he holds membership with the Masonic and Odd Fellows orders, in which he is in good standing. Mr. Paxson was married, at Alliance, Ohio, in 1880, the lady of his choice being Miss Emma Clappsaddle, daughter of Samuel Clappsaddle, of that city, the union resulting in the birth of one child, Rachel Beatta.

GEORGE NAGLE WEBB is one of the highly respected citizens of Canton, where he was born on the 4th of August, 1832, and where he has passed the greater portion of his long and useful life. He is a son of George N. and Eliza (Cake) Webb, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, and the latter in Hagerstown, Maryland, of German extraction, while they became numbered among the pioneer settlers of Stark county, where they continued to reside until their death. The subject of this brief sketch secured his rudimentary education in the primitive schools of the pioneer days, attending the same during the winter terms, and when fifteen years of age he entered the newly organized union schools in Canton, where he continued his studies until he had attained the age of nineteen years. He then entered upon an apprenticeship in a carriage manufactory in his native town, serving two years and three months and becoming a skilled workman. After learning his trade he went to Salem, Ohio, in order to gain a broader experience and perfect himself in all details of his trade. He there entered the employ of the Sheets Carriage Company, and remained about one year and three months, returning to Canton in 1855 and there securing employment in the shops of C. Aultman & Company, manufacturers of agricultural machinery. He was employed in the wood-working department and later identified with the construction of the wooden portions of various machines manufactured, and he has been consecutively in the employ of this concern for nearly half a century, having seen the industry develop from a modest enterprise into one of the most extensive of the sort in the Union, while he has ever retained the confidence of the company as is evidenced by his long service during the various changes in executive control of the management. He was until the first of April, 1903, engaged with the great shops of the company and was one of the oldest and most trusted employes, though he was compelled to resign on account of ill health. He was liked by both employer and employes and is held in the highest esteem in the city which has been his home for so many years. In politics he was a Democrat up to the time of the Civil war, when he arrayed himself in support of the Republican party, and in later years he has been affiliated with the Prohibition party. He was for two years a member of the board of education of Canton, and from his youth he has been an earnest and consistent member of the First Methodist Episcopal church, of which he has been a trustee for a number of years and also assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, taking an active interest in all departments of church work and ever striving to follow in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene and to aid in the uplifting of his fellow men. He was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, but has permitted his active affiliation to lapse.

On the 30th of March, 1858, Mr. Webb was united in marriage to Miss Susan Miller, who was born on a farm in Sandy township, this county, on the 28th of April, 1831, being a daughter of Samuel and Esther Miller, one of the sterling pioneers of the county. She was summoned into the life eternal on the 27th of April, 1902, having been the devoted companion and helpmeet of her husband for more than two score years, and having been a valued member of the First Methodist Episcopal church for the greater portion of her life. Her remains rest in the beautiful cemetery of Westlawn and the spot is sacred to the large circle of friends who loved her in life. Of the children of this union we enter the following epitomized record: Harry N., who was born in 1859, is cashier for C. Aultman & Company, of Canton; Charles Lee, who was born in 1861, is a resident of Canton, where he is connected with the Best Street Light Company; Etha Esther, who was born in 1865, is the wife of Varian S. Corey, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume; and Clara Ann, who was born in 1872, is now the wife of Finley T. Fisher, and resides in Canton.

SAMUEL BECHERER.—The subject of this brief sketch is one of the old and honored citizens of Canton, a native of Stark county and a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families of the stanch old German stock. He was for a number of years turnkey of the city prison and was a faithful public servant and as one merited the confidence and esteem in which he was so uniformly held.

Mr. Becherer was born on the old homestead farm in Plain township, this county, on the 27th of January, 1838, at which time was but a village. He is a son of Constantine Becherer, who was born in Baden, Germany, where he was reared to maturity, being a laborer by occupation and ready to turn his hand to any honest occupation. He emigrated from the fatherland to the United States in the year 1834, landing in the city of New York, whence he soon afterward came to Stark county, where he purchased of Peter P. Trump a tract of fifteen acres of land, in Plain township. In the following year he returned to Germany, where he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Langenbach, and he shortly afterward came again to Stark county with the bride whom he had made so long a journey to wed. They took up their abode on the little farm, where he continued to reside until about 1878, when he disposed of the property. In 1866 the house on the farm was set afire by some miscreant who imagined the family had money which might be secured during the excitement, and though both the father and mother of our subject were ill at the time, the former managed to carry his wife from the burning building to the home of a neighbor, where she was kindly cared for, but she died only a few months later. After disposing of his little farm, in 1878, Constantine Becherer came to Canton and passed the remainder of his life in the home of his son, the subject of this sketch. He died in 1881, at the age of seventy-three years, while his wife was sixty-nine years of age at the time of her death, in 1866. Both were devoted communicants of St. Peter's church, Roman Catholic, in Canton, and were conscientious and worthy persons, hard-working and God-fearing. Mr. Becherer assisted to the best of his ability in effecting the erection of St. Peter's church, and he also aided in building old St. John's church. This worthy couple became the parents of nine children, John, Samuel, Catherine, Mary, Emma, Constantine, William, Elizabeth and Louisa, the latter two dying when quite young, the balance reaching the age of maturity.

Samuel Becherer, the immediate subject of this review, was reared under the conditions of the pioneer epoch in the county, and as a boy began to assist in the work of the home farm, while he attended the little school in the Mexico district of Plain township for the three-months' winter terms, the institution being of the primitive type implied in the log school house, with its puncheon floor and slab seats and benches. At the age of twelve years he came to Canton and secured a position as porter in the old Franklin hotel, which stood on the site of the present Hurford house. He was employed there for six years, at the expiration of which he became an employe of the American hotel, and he had charge of this hotel during the illness of the proprietor, John D. Snyder, and for one year after the death of the latter, whose widow came into control of the property at the time. Mr. Becherer then learned the trade of carpenter under the direction of Joseph Weaver and George Geiger, receiving forty dollars for his services the first year, fifty the second and seventy-five the third year of his apprenticeship. He thereafter continued to work at his trade as a journeyman until there came to him the call of higher duty, when the war of the Rebellion was inaugurated. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in Company E, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the same being commanded by Colonel Lucey, while the captain of the company was Joseph Harter. He continued in the service until the close of the war, his command having been in turn attached to the Twelfth and Twentieth Army Corps, and he assisted in the building of block houses along the line of the Chattanooga & Nashville Railroad, a body of troops being detailed for this purpose, in order that the line might be protected and communication afforded with the troops at the front. Mr. Becherer held the rank of sergeant over the men thus engaged in the construction of the block houses. During Hood's raid out of seven of these block houses the only one not destroyed was that in command of Lieutenant Glosser and the subject, who defended the same with but thirty-two men, and they received a letter of commendation and thanks from Major General Thomas for the gallant defense which they made on this occasion. Mr. Becherer received his honorable discharge in Cleveland, Ohio, in July, 1865, having rendered the valiant service of a loyal son of the republic. He has suffered more or less ever since from a partially disabled leg, from the effect of erysipelas contracted while in service. He returned to Canton, where he was engaged in the work of his trade for the ensuing eight years, after which he engaged in the restaurant business and still later opened a grocery at the corner of North Market and Second streets. He conducted the latter enterprise for six years, and soon afterward was made a member of the Canton police force, under the administration of Mayor John F. Blake, and he served as policeman and city marshal for the long period of fifteen years, gaining a high reputation for his faithful and capable discharge of his official duties. In 1897 he was appointed turnkey at the city prison, and remained an incumbent of that position until July, 1903. He is well known to all classes of citizens and is held in high esteem as a man and officer.

He is a member of McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, and is a communicant of St. Mary's church, Roman Catholic, having served on the building committee of the same at the time of the erection of the present edifice. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, in whose cause he has ever taken an active interest.

On the 28th of October, 1865, Mr. Becherer was united in marriage to Miss Mary Walter, of Canton, she being a daughter of Anthony and Elizabeth Walter, natives of Germany, whence they came to Stark county in the early days. Mrs. Becherer was summoned into eternal rest on the 21st of October, 1881, having become the mother of six children, Laura A., Henry J., Minnie I., Clara O. (deceased), Charles A., Victor F.

ARMSTRONG ASHBROOK is the present efficient and popular city auditor of Canton, to which responsible office he was elected in April, 1903, by a majority of one hundred and fifteen votes, as the candidate on the Republican ticket. He was born on a farm in Augusta township, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 8th of April, 1861, being a son of William and Susan (Turnipseed) Ashbrook, the former of whom was born in Little Washington, Washington county, Pennsylvania, whence he came to Carroll county, Ohio, with his parents when a boy, being there reared and educated. He learned the trade of blacksmithing and followed that vocation for many years. He still resides in Augusta, that county, and has attained the ripe old age of seventy-five years, while his wife, who is a native of Carroll county, Ohio, is now seventy-four years of age. Mr. Ashbrook is a Republican in his political proclivities and both he and his wife have long been zealous members of the Disciples church. They became the parents of four children, of whom three are living at the present time. The ancestry in the paternal line is of blended Scotch, Irish and Dutch extraction. Henry Turnipseed came from West Virginia to Ohio, and his father had been a slaveholder in Virginia and a man of prominence in the Old Dominion before the segregation of West Virginia.

Armstrong Ashbrook, whose name initiates this article, was reared to maturity on the old homestead, while his early education was received in the common and select schools of the locality. He continued his educational work until he had attained the age of twenty-two years, but at the early age of fourteen he had initiated his business career, securing at that time a position as clerk in a general store, and he was thus employed during the school vacations for a number of years. He finally accepted a clerkship in a dry-goods establishment at Augusta, Ohio, where he was employed for some time, when he secured a position as traveling salesman for an eastern house, selling carpets and other lines and continuing to be thus engaged for four years. He then came to Canton and became a salesman in the dry-goods establishment of Haldeman, Kiplinger & Company, with whom he remained for a number of years, while later he was in the employ of other local concerns for varying intervals, while for the two years prior to his election to the office of city treasurer he was with the firm of Kenny Brothers, who are here engaged in the dry-goods business. He thus gained a wide acquaintanceship in Canton and the county, and his popularity in the city is indicated in the official preferment which has come to him and in which he is making a most excellent record. He has been a radical advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining his majority, and has taken an active part in forwarding the cause of the same in a local way. He and his wife are members of the First Baptist church, of Canton, and fraternally he is affiliated with McKinley Lodge No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons; Fleetfoot Tribe No. 139, Improved Order of Red Men, and the Home Guards of America.

In Carrollton, Ohio, on the 28th of March, 1885, Mr. Ashbrook was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Scott, daughter of Dr. George Scott, of that place.

WILBUR C. ANDERSON.—The career of the subject of this sketch has been one of varied experience, characterized throughout by a devotion to principle and loyalty to duty, which have gained for him a position of no small influence and importance in the business world. Wilbur C. Anderson is descended from an old Pennsylvania family, the history of which in this country dates from the time of the colonies. His paternal great-grandfather served as an artilleryman in the war of the Revolution, and at the close of the struggle settled at Canonsburg, Washington county, Pennsylvania, where the family continued to reside until some time in the 'sixties, when they removed to the state of Delaware. Subsequently they returned to the former state and located in Huntingdon county, of which the subject's parents, Stephen and Alice (Wilson) Anderson, are still honored residents.

Wilbur C. Anderson was born November 12, 1869, in Mill Creek township, Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, and remained under the parental roof until a youth of fourteen, enjoying meanwhile the advantages of a common school education. From fourteen to seventeen he attended an academy at Cassville and on leaving that institution engaged as clerk with the Rockhill Iron and Coal Company at Orbisonia, in which capacity he continued until 1889, when he resigned to accept a position with the Thompson-Houston Electric Company of Philadelphia. Shortly after entering the employ of the latter firm he was assigned to duty in the plant at Hoboken, New Jersey, and later he was made collector for the company, the duties of which responsible post he discharged until his promotion in 1893 to the position of assistant superintendent. Mr. Anderson continued in the latter capacity until 1899, when he severed his connection with the firm to become secretary of the North River Light, Heat and Power Company at Hoboken, and after holding the position one year he engaged as office manager with the Rider, Errierson Engine Company of New York city. His period of service with that enterprise terminated in 1901, at which time he was employed by the Electric Company of America to take charge of the light, heat and power plant in the city of Canton, which honorable and responsible position he still holds. As already stated, Mr. Anderson's business career has been a very active one and from the beginning it has been marked by a series of continued advancements, which demonstrate his ability to fill worthily important positions and to manage faithfully and well enterprises requiring a high order of business talent. In every post to which called he has enjoyed the unbounded confidence of his employers and his relations with the public have been such as to gain him the confidence and esteem of all classes of people in his different fields of labor. Thoroughly conversant with his duties, a skillful accountant and possessing fine executive ability, he devotes his attention closely to the important trust now in his charge and the excellent condition of everything connected therewith and the satisfactory manner in which he discharges his functions indicate a supervision which none but a safe and reliable manager could exercise.

In the year 1894, at Newark, New Jersey, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage with Miss Emma A. Eno, daughter of Joseph and Annie (Bovingdon) Eno, the father a prominent inventor of that city, the mother a native of London, England. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have a pleasant home and their domestic circle in addition to themselves includes two bright and interesting children, whose names are Harriet J. and Wilbur C. In politics Mr. Anderson gives an unwavering support to the Republican party and his fraternal relations are represented by the Masonic brotherhood and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

MILTON BALL.—The Balls were among the early settlers of Stark county, the subject's father, the late Colonel E. Ball, having been one of the pioneer manufacturers of Canton and a man of high standing and commanding influence in the city's social and business circles. He married in this county a Miss Lavina Babb, and reared a family of several children, the oldest being Milton of this review, whose birth occurred at Greentown on July 23, 1835.

Milton Ball spent his early life in his native village, and after receiving a good education in the public schools and under the direction of private tutors, took up the trade of molding in the shops of Ball, Aultman & Company, at Canton, coming to this city in 1850, when fourteen years of age. After becoming an efficient workman he was employed by the above company and continued with the same until his father, who was a partner in the business, withdrew from the concern and resigned his position to become superintendent of the reaper works, which the latter established. As long as the elder Ball continued in the manufacturing business his son Milton served as superintendent of the works and right loyally did he discharge his duties in that responsible and exacting position, his efforts as manager contributing greatly to the success of the enterprise, which, as all know, became one of Canton's most important industries. When the father sold out and retired the subject resigned and, in partnership with a gentleman by the name of Kuhn, purchased a shop at Uniontown, Ohio, which was removed to Canton with every prospect of doing a large and lucrative business, withdrew from the concern and resigned expectations were not to be realized, for while transferring the establishment he contracted a severe cold, which, developing into tuberculosis, finally resulted in his death, the event taking place on the 16th of May, 1869. Mr. Ball's business career was creditable in every respect and it demonstrated his capacity as a resourceful man and capable manager of important trusts. He mastered thoroughly everything committed to his care, possessed sound judgment, keen perception and rare foresight; as superintendent he did much to promote the success of the enterprise with which he was connected and had he lived he would doubtless have become a leader in the city's industrial circles. Socially Mr. Ball was a most agreeable gentleman, always genial and pleasant in manner, a loyal friend and an excellent neighbor and as a citizen interested in every laudable movement for the general good of the community, he ranked with the best of his compeers. A Republican in politics, he was never misled by political aspirations to the neglect of his business interests and with no ambition to gratify in the way of public distinction, he prosecuted his affairs with diligence and dispatch, satisfied with the legitimate gains accruing therefrom and contented with his lot as a common man of the people.

The married life of Mr. Ball began in 1860, on September 4th of which year he entered into a matrimonial alliance with Miss Susan Swisher, of Canton. She is a native of Wayne county, Ohio, where her birth occurred May 22, 1838, and is a daughter of Abraham and Hannah (Tate) Swisher, a union blessed with one child, a son by the name of Charles M. Ball, who was born July 2, 1861, in the city of Canton.

Charles M. Ball was educated in the public schools and in a private institution of learning conducted under the efficient management of Professor Avery, one of Ohio's most successful teachers, and the training thus received was afterwards supplemented by a business course in a commercial college at Poughkeepsie, New York. Mr. Ball's first experience in the practical affairs of life was as clerk in the old St. Cloud Hotel, then kept by Mr. Barnett. He was later employed in the office of T. C. Snyder, manufacturer of steel roofing, and after spending two years in that gentleman's employ he resigned his position to become clerk of the Burford Hotel in Canton. He remained twelve years with this house, became widely acquainted and deservedly popular with the traveling public, and by his courteous and obliging demeanor won a large number of warm, devoted friends and made himself indispensable to his employer. He married in this city Miss Flora Bockins and lived the life of an upright, exemplary citizen, making his influence felt for good in all of his relations and gained a large share of public esteem. Endowed by nature with good mental powers and possessing the energy to direct his faculties into proper channels, he rose to a respectable position in the business world and his death, which occurred on March 30, 1897, was felt as a keen personal loss by his many friends in Canton and throughout Ohio and other states.

JAMES A. BROOKS is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Allegheny county on the 31st of January, 1848, the original ancestors in the paternal line having settled in that section of the state many generations ago, having emigrated to America from Germany. James Brooks, father of our subject, passed his entire life in Pennsylvania, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Rachel Scott. They became the parents of fourteen children, of whom four are living at the present time.

James A. Brooks was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, continuing to assist in its work and to prosecute his studies in the local schools until he had reached the age of nineteen years. He then entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of carpenter at Sewickley, to which he there continued to devote his attention for some time. He came to Stark county, Ohio, in 1870 and was united in marriage at Mount Union on the 29th of September of the same year to Miss Maria Painter, daughter of James and Sarah Painter, pioneers of the county. Soon after his marriage he returned with his bride to Pennsylvania, where he remained until July, 1879, when he brought his family to Canton, where he was engaged independently in the work of his trade until the autumn of 1880, when he entered the employ of the John Danner Manufacturing Company, makers of desks and fine cabinet work of other descriptions, and he has ever since been identified with this firm in a responsible position, being a skilled mechanic and having excellent executive ability.

Mr. Brooks has ever accorded a staunch support to the Republican party and its principles, and while he has not been imbued with office-seeking proclivities, he was made the candidate of his party for member of the council from the sixth ward in the election of April, 1903, and was accorded a gratifying majority at the polls and entering upon the discharge of his official duties on the 4th of the following May. His first presidential vote was cast for General Grant at his second candidacy, and from that time forward he has been known as a zealous advocate of the cause of the "grand old party." He and his wife hold membership in the Simpson Methodist Episcopal church and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Brooks we enter the following brief record: William Edgar, who is a druggist in Canton, married Miss Vinnie Crowl; Sarah L. is the wife of Charles Bevington, of Canton; James R., who is a machinist at the Hamdon works in this city, married Miss Grace Guest, and Nettie and Dora May remain at the parental home.

ARTHUR C. OBERLIN is the son of Joseph Oberlin, whose life story will be found at some length on another page. On the 8th of July, 1864, in Tuscarawas township, where he now resides, the subject first saw the light of day, and since that time his life has been spent at or very near the place of his birth. His childhood and youth on the farm tended to the development of a well-rounded character and his physical growth amid such favorable environments was all that bracing air, active exercise and sound health could possibly produce. For some years during his minority, his time was divided between labor and study, and until about twenty-four years old he remained under the parental roof, doing all within his power to assist his father, the meanwhile formulating plans for the guidance of his future course of action.

Mr. Oberlin made a wise choice when he decided to devote his life to husbandry, as the series of continued successes that have attended his efforts bear witness. He began farming upon his own responsibility in 1880, and has pursued the vocation ever since with marked results, owning at this time one hundred and forty-nine acres of fertile and well-improved land in Tuscarawas township, besides various interests in other enterprises. For a number of years he has been quite actively engaged as a coal driller in Stark county and other parts of Ohio, his efficiency in this line of work having long since brought him to the favorable notice of some of the leading coal operators in the eastern part of the state. He has a full and complete equipment for successful effort in this line, understands every detail in the business, and his work has resulted in the great financial advantage of the different men and firms by whom, from time to time, he has been employed. Another line of activity to which Mr. Oberlin gives considerable time and attention is that of threshing grain, having followed the same with handsome profits during the past seven years. In this he is also well equipped, owning a complete threshing outfit of the latest and most approved pattern, which is in great demand throughout the county during the seasons when it can be utilized. He is a member of the Threshers' National Protective Association, and as such has been untiring in his efforts to make the organization meet the purposes for which intended, taking an active interest in its sessions and doing all within his power to reduce such important work as threshing to something more than the mere semblance of a system.

Mr. Oberlin is a man of much more than ordinary energy and personal force, possesses fine business and executive abilities, and seldom fails in any of his undertakings. He foresees with remarkable clearness the possible outcome of future action and, ganging his efforts in harmony therewith, is rarely mistaken in his conclusions. He wields an influence for the Democratic party, but is not a politician in the sense the word is generally accepted, taking no very active part in public affairs and having no political ambitions to gratify. Mr. Oberlin believes in a strict enforcement of the law of the land, and has little sympathy with the class that habitually violates or sets them at defiance. Such a man cannot be indifferent to the claims of the Christian religion and a number of years ago he joined the Reform church and began a course of life which he has since very closely followed, a life of faith and active service bearing rich fruitage in his own character and in making his presence a blessing to the world.

Mr. Oberlin chose for a life companion an estimable lady who formerly bore the name of Jennie Christman and to whom he has united in the bonds of matrimony on the 4th of October, 1888. She is the daughter of William and Lavana (Felder) Christman, both natives of Pennsylvania and now residing in the township of Tuscarawas, throughout which they have been known and respected by reason of exemplary lives and upright conduct. Mr. and Mrs. Oberlin have one child, a daughter, Zella Grace, who was born April 28, 1892. Mrs. Oberlin is a faithful member of the church to which her husband belongs, and, like him, is deeply interested in its various lines of Christian work.

CAPTAIN THOMAS WILSON was born in Monroe county, Ohio, on the 12th of December, 1836, being a son of William and Mary (Hupp) Wilson, of whose ten children six are living at the present time. The father is still residing on his fine farm estate in Monroe county and has attained the patriarchal age of ninety years, and this old homestead is the one on which his father also lived and labored, having been one of the early pioneers of the county. His paternal grandfather served under General Washington for seven years during the war of the Revolution, while the father of his wife, Henry Hupp, was a lieutenant in the war of 1812 and commanded his company during much of its active service. The paternal grandfather of our subject's mother also won an enviable military record as a scout and Indian fighter, having been for twenty years in the employ of the government in the protection of the frontier and having been a contemporary of Boone and Kenton, in many of whose scouting expeditions he participated. He was in Crawford county, Ohio, at the time when Colonel Crawford was burned at the stake by the Indians and had been in conversation with this martyr shortly before his death. This stalwart and patriotic ancestor of Captain Wilson was an inveterate and implacable foe of the Indians, and it is not strange that such was the case, for his mother, a brother and a little sister and his stepfather were all massacred by the bloodthirsty red men. For his distinguished services during the war of the Revolution the government gave him a large grant of land in Florida, and in later years the mother of our subject released all claim to her share in this valuable heritage for the diminutive consideration of one hundred dollars. Captain Wilson's great-grandmother in the agnatic line lived to attain the age of one hundred and five years. She was present at the siege of Wheeling during the Revolution and personally saw the intrepid heroine, Betty Zane, when she left the fort and, in the face of the firing of the Indians, carried back a quantity of powder to the beleaguered garrison.

The father of the subject has devoted his entire life to the great basic art of agriculture, and notwithstanding his great age he personally supervises the work of his fine farm of about four hundred acres, while he individually continues his physical labors with as much energy as many a man thirty years his junior. He is remarkably well preserved, his intellectual faculties being unimpaired, while he is revered as one of the patriarchs and sterling pioneers of the Buckeye state. He voted for William Henry Harrison at the time of his first election to the presidency, and thereafter gave his support to every Whig candidate up to the time of the organization of the Republican party, for whose every presidential candidate likewise he has cast his ballot, being a staunch advocate of the principles of the "grand old party," whose age is far less than his own, and keeping well informed in regard to the questions and issues of the hour. His devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest in 1891 at the age of seventy-seven years, having been a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church, as is also her husband, who has for many years been active in church work.

Captain Thomas Wilson, whose name initiates this resume, was reared on the old homestead farm, assisting in its work and receiving his early educational discipline in the common schools of the locality, while he has ever continued to be an extensive reader and careful student of events, and thus, as coupled with the valuable lessons learned under the direction of the wise head-master, experience, have made him a man of broad information and mature judgment. As a young man he became identified with the development of the Macksburg oil fields, in Washington county, and was a successful operator in this line of industry at the time of the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion. His inherent and intrinsic patriotism was forthwith stirred to responsive protest, and he laid aside his business affairs without regard to the sacrifice involved, and turned his attention to doing his part in preserving the Union, whose integrity was in dire jeopardy. Under a military commission he recruited Company D of the Twenty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry in June and July, 1861. He was placed on detached duty and did not serve with this company. In August, 1862, he enlisted and was commissioned captain of Company K, Ninety-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, having likewise recruited this company, and he proceeded with his command to the front, the regiment being assigned to the Army of West Virginia. He continued in active service until July, 1864, when he was mustered out on account of physical disability, receiving his honorable discharge at Tullahoma. He recruited and sent to the front fully three hundred men, and his service in all capacities was that of a loyal and fervent patriot.

After the close of his military career Captain Wilson returned to his native county, where he became extensively engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock, retaining his residence in Monroe county, where he was the owner of a valuable landed estate of two hundred and twenty acres, and he continued to be most successfully identified with this industry until 1888, when he came to Alliance in order to afford his children the advantages of Mount Union College. In the following year he was elected to the city council of Alliance, and he served four years as president of the body and two years as vice-president, while he continued to be a member of the council for a full decade, his continuous tenure of this office being longer than that of any other man who has ever served in this capacity, while his efforts were such as to gain to him the heartiest endorsement and such as to conserve the best municipal government. In Monroe county he was for eighteen years incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, his commission having been signed by Rutherford B. Hayes, then governor of the state. He is at the present time serving his fourth year as a member of the county board of elections and he is one of the stalwart advocates of the cause of the Republican party, in which he has been an active worker from the time of its inception. Fraternally he vitalizes his interest in and association with his old comrades in arms through his affiliation with John C. Fremont Post No. 780, Grand Army of the Republic, in Alliance, of which he is a valued and popular member, while he holds the confidence and regard of all who know him and is one of the representative men of the city of his home. He and his wife are devoted members of the Union Avenue Methodist Episcopal church and are active in its work.

On the 30th of April, 1858, was solemnized the marriage of Captain Wilson to Miss Rachel Hannah, who was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, being a daughter of John and Elizabeth Hannah, while her paternal grandfather was a soldier in the war of 1812 and her great-grandfather, Judge Charles Hannah, was an influential citizen of Center county, Pennsylvania, and the founder of the town of Hannah, that county, which was named in his honor. Captain and Mrs. Wilson became the parents of nine children, of whom seven are living, and these seven, all but the two elder, received the privileges of Mount Union College. Of them we enter record as follows: Oscar P. is a successful farmer of Washington township, this county; Alston G. is engaged in farming and stock raising in the same township; Thomas E. is engaged in banking in Mineral City, Ohio; John W. is postmaster at Del Norte, Colorado; Rev. Albert H. is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church; Charles F. is identified with mining operations at Cripple Creek, Colorado; and Irene J. is the wife of Clarence Egan, who is likewise engaged in the same line of enterprise at Cripple Creek.

PERRY W. WELKER, M. D.—Conspicuous among the men who have given dignity and prestige to the medical profession in eastern Ohio is the distinguished physician and surgeon of Alliance whose name furnishes the caption of this sketch. By no means an old man, Dr. Welker has already had a life full of worthy labor, crowned with signal professional success and he stands today in the front ranks of those who devote their energies and abilities to the noble work of alleviating human suffering. Paternally the Doctor comes of sturdy German stock, the history of the family in this country dating from the early settlement of Pennsylvania. Many years ago his grandfather, Philip Welker, moved from the state to the wilds of eastern Ohio, settling in Mahoning county, of which he was one of the first pioneers. He entered land, improved a farm, reared a family, and spent the remainder of his life in that county, dying a number of years ago where he originally settled, after reaching an advanced age. The Welkers have long been noted for longevity, eight of the nine children of the above Philip having lived beyond four score years, a record perhaps unparalleled in the history of any family in the state of Ohio. David Welker, son of Philip and father of the subject, was born in Mahoning county, in the year 1812, and grew to manhood amid the stirring scenes and varied experiences of the pioneer period. In his youth he learned the carpenter's trade but devoted the greater part of his life to agriculture, having cleared and improved a farm adjoining the old homestead while he was still a young man. David Welker was a successful farmer and a most excellent public-spirited citizen. In early life he was a stanch Whig, but later became a Republican and as such exerted considerable influence for the party in his community. For many years he divided his time between agriculture and carpentry and many monuments of his skill as a builder are still standing in various parts of Mahoning county, as his services appear to have been in great demand throughout a large area of that section of the state. Elizabeth Davis, wife of David Welker, was born in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, in 1822 bore her husband three children and departed this life in the year 1898, at the age of seventy-six. Mr. Welker preceded his wife to the other world by about four years, dying some time in 1894. Of their three children, two are living at the present time, William, of Mahoning county, and the subject of this review.

Perry W. Welker, a native of Mahoning county, Ohio, and was born on the old homestead December 22, 1852. Here he was brought up, sharing all the hardships and pleasures incident to farm life until his seventeenth year, his education the meantime consisting of the best the country schools afforded, his attendance being alternated with work in the fields. The intellectual discipline thus derived was supplemented by a course in the Poland Seminary, after which, when only seventeen years old, he began teaching in the public schools of his native country, which line of work he followed of winter seasons for three years with a creditable record as an instructor. Having decided to devote his life to the medical profession, Mr. Welker began a preliminary course of reading under Dr. S. S. Schiller, of Youngstown, and after pursuing his studies there until 1872, entered the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, from which he was graduated three years later.

Immediately after receiving his degree the Doctor opened an office at Petersburg, Mahoning county, and during the ensuing four years practiced in the town and surrounding country, building up a large patronage which was satisfactory both professionally and financially. Desiring a larger field wherein to exercise his talents, he wound up his affairs in Petersburg and in 1879 removed to Alliance where he has since steadily grown in favor as a successful physician and skillful surgeon, his practice taking a wide range and earning him a reputation second to that of none of his compeers. While combining many of the essential qualifications of the ideal family physician and meeting with distinguished success in the general practice, the Doctor is especially efficient as a surgeon, a branch of the profession in which he has few equals in this part of the state. He has attended many critical cases in his own city and elsewhere and his services are frequently called into requisition by his associates when delicate operations, requiring a high degree of skill, are to be performed. He has availed himself of every opportunity to keep in touch with modern medical thought and the most approved methods of practice, devotes himself assiduously to his laborious duties, and as a consequence has built up one of the largest practices in the city, to say nothing of the lucrative patronage that comes to him from places at a distance. His popularity, which is steadily growing, is in the main attributable to his efficiency as a healer, but not a little of it is due to his genial nature as well as to his tact in winning the confidence of patients and their friends, characteristics which enter largely into the make-up of the enterprising, successful practitioner. The Doctor is a member of the various local medical societies of Alliance and Stark county and he also belongs to the National Medical Association and the State Medical Association of Ohio. For the past fifteen years he has served the city as health officer, and since 1882, with the exception of President Cleveland's administration, he has been a member of the Stark county board of pension examiners.

Dr. Welker is a Republican in politics and since coming to Alliance has been active in behalf of his party's interest, local, state and national. While a zealous partisan and a man whose advice is always looked for and of much weight in party councils, he has ever sought to advance the interest of others, rather than to pave his own way to public preferment. He is an enthusiastic member of several fraternal organizations and a leading spirit in the affairs of the various lodges to which he belongs. He is identified with the Knights of Pythias, being a member of the Uniform rank, belongs to Lodge No. 467, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, which meets in Alliance, and also stands high in Masonic circles, holding membership with the blue lodge in this city and with the Al Korān Temple, Mystic Shrine, in Cleveland.

Dr. Welker was first married, in April, 1875, to Miss Bina Heisy, of Columbiana county, who died after a brief but happy wedded life of only six months' duration. Subsequently, 1879, he contracted a matrimonial alliance with his present companion, Miss Jennie C. Swisher, of Petersburg, Mahoning county, the union resulting in the birth of a son, Paul R., who died in childhood.

CHARLES O. SILVER is a native of Pennsylvania and the only child of Amos C. and Sarah A. Silver, both parents born in Ohio. Amos C. Silver first saw the light of day September 3, 1838, in Columbiana county, and was one of three children whose parents were James and Nancy (Tharp) Silver. He received a liberal education at New Lisbon school and Damascus Academy, taught school for several winters and in 1861 entered the Union service as a builder and repairer of telegraphs. By reason of an injury in 1865, he was obliged to leave the service and after his return home the following year he engaged with the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago and Cleveland & Pittsburg railroads to keep their telegraph lines in repair, continuing in that capacity until 1878. At the latter date he embarked in the boot and shoe business in Alliance and was prominently identified with the city's commercial interests until his death, in the year 1892. January 11, 1866, he married Sarah A. Keltly, who, like himself, was a native of Columbiana county and who is still living in the city of Alliance.

Charles O. Silver was born July 6, 1869, in Rochester, Beaver county, Pennsylvania, and received his education in the public schools, supplemented by a commercial course in Mt. Union College. When quite young he entered his father's store, where he obtained his first practical instruction in business and during his school years he spent his vacations behind the counter, in this way developing early not only a liking for business life but also great efficiency as a salesman. He continued as his father's clerk until the latter's death in 1892, when he took up painting and paper hanging, which trades he followed until entering the employ of the American Express Company four years later. His position with this company was that of chief clerk to the general agent in the main office in Cleveland, a responsible post, requiring a high degree of clerical ability, and he held the same for a period of two years, discharging his duties in such a manner as to gain the confidence and elicit the praise of his superior. Resigning his position in 1897, Mr. Silver resumed painting and paper hanging at Alliance and was thus engaged until his appointment as journal clerk of the house of representatives of the seventy-third general assembly, which position he filled with an honorable record. During the years 1900-2 he was secretary of the state board of equalization and after his duties in that capacity ceased he served for some time as assistant clerk of the lower house of the state legislature. Mr. Silver, on July 21, 1902, was appointed city clerk of Alliance to fill out the unexpired term of J. H. McConnell, which position he has since held with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the public, his previous business and clerical training peculiarly fitting him for the office. Careful, methodical, thoroughly competent and with the good of the public at heart, he discharges his duties efficiently, as his record thus far attests, and his relations with all having business to transact in his office have been as courteous and agreeable as to win for him a measure of popularity such as few of his predecessors enjoyed. May 4, 1903, Mr. Silver was, by a large majority, elected city auditor.

Mr. Silver is a Republican of the most orthodox type and for a number of years past has been one of the standard bearers of his party in Alliance. He has rendered valued service as a member of the Lexington township central committee and as an effective campaigner is perhaps without a superior among the aggressive and influential young Republicans of Stark county. He is a member of Line Rock Lodge No. 23, Knights of Pythias, Blaine Tent No. 220, Knights of the Macca-bees, and Alliance Lodge No. 467, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and in religion is a Methodist, belonging to the First church of that denomination in Alliance. He was married, on the 14th day of February, 1901, to Miss Lotta Craft, of North Benton, Mahoning county, the accomplished daughter of Eli Craft, formerly of North Benton, but now a resident of Alliance. Mr. and Mrs. Silver have no children. They are popular in social and religious circles, are identified with much good work in the city of their residence and their home is a congenial resort where hospitality and refined good cheer are dispensed with a liberality and bountifulness bespeaking an earnest effort to make pleasant the lives of those with whom they associate.

GEORGE F. S. MELBOURNE.—In the sketch of the life of William E. Melbourne, brother and business associate of our subject, appearing on another page of this publication, is given an outline of the genealogy of the family, so that recourse needs not be had to the data in the preparation of the present article, since ready reference may be made to the one mentioned. George Frederick Sawyer Melbourne was born at Mount Rath, Queens county, Ireland, on the 6th of December, 1869, being a son of Henry and Jane (Sawyer) Melbourne, both of whom represented the French Huguenot stock. He attended the public and private schools of his native land until he had reached the age of sixteen years, when he went to Australia to join his brother Frank, who was engaged in the real-estate business in Brisbane, the capital city of Queensland. The subject had been greatly interested in the turf from his boyhood and had been connected with racing prior to his removal to Australia, and there he became identified with two of the most celebrated racing stables in that section of the world, riding in the steeplechase races for said stables during the season for nearly four years and gaining an enviable reputation as a rider. While thus engaged he visited India, the Fiji islands, New Zealand, Egypt and Port Said, thus gaining a valuable and interesting experience and becoming familiar with the life of the people in the various countries which he visited. Finally his eyesight became quite seriously impaired and he was compelled to return to his home in Ireland, and after he had recovered from the optical disorder he engaged in dealing in horses in his native land, continuing in this line of enterprise until 1894, when he came to the United States and joined his brothers John and William in Canton, and under the contract held by them he was foreman of the work of erecting the west part of the court house, continuing to be engaged in this capacity until the completion of the building. His health failed and he again returned to his home in the Emerald Isle, where he remained until 1900, when he again came to the United States, adding another large span to his extensive travels, and after his arrival he made a tour through various western states, having been in Galveston, Texas, the day after the terrible flood which so nearly destroyed that city, and having been one of the first strangers to enter the city after the lamentable cataclysm which cause so great a loss of life and property. Finally he returned to Canton, in February, 1901, and here he was given charge of the brickyard of his brother John, at Malvern, where he remained until September, his brother having been ill during this interval. In the month last mentioned he entered into partnership with his brother William in the contracting business, in which they have since successfully continued, under the firm name of Melbourne Brothers.

In politics Mr. Melbourne is a staunch Republican, and he holds membership in the First Presbyterian church, while fraternally he is identified with William McKinley Lodge No. 431, Free and Accepted Masons. Notwithstanding his wide travels and knowledge of the charms of the fair sex in the most diverse quarters of the world, Mr. Melbourne has not as yet succumbed to the sway of the god Hymen.

LESTER L. NAVE.—Among those successfully laboring in connection with the educational interests of the city of Canton, and Stark county, is Prof. Nave, who is incumbent of the responsible position of principal of the Garfield Avenue school and who has attained gratifying prestige in his chosen profession, to which his devotion has been earnest and unflagging. As a native of Indiana and a representative of one of Ohio's honored pioneer families, as well as by reason of his prominent identification with the public-school work of Canton and Stark county, he is well entitled to consideration in this compilation.

In the agnatic line Mr. Nave is of staunch German ancestry, but the name has been identified with the annals of American history for several generations, the original American progenitor having established a home in eastern Pennsylvania, in the colonial epoch. In that section of the Keystone state occurred the birth of Michael Nave, grandfather of the subject, and there he was reared to maturity. As a young man he came to Ohio, in the early 'twenties, locating near the present town of Richville, Stark county, as one of its early pioneers. There he secured a tract of wild land, which he reclaimed from the native forest, and eventually he developed a good farm and was rewarded with a due measure of prosperity as the result of his earnest efforts. He there continued to make his home until his death, as an octogenarian, in 1863. He married in Pennsylvania and reared a family of three sons and two daughters, the youngest son, William, being the father of the subject of this sketch. After the death of his first wife Michael Nave consummated a second marriage, and his second wife survived him by a number of years.

William Nave was born on the pioneer homestead mentioned, the date of his nativity having been July 5, 1828, and when a mere boy he began to assist his father in the reclamation and cultivation of the farm, while his educational advantages were such as were common to the place and period, though he was enabled to avail himself of somewhat more advanced discipline than the average youth similarly placed, for he continued his studies in Twinsburg Academy and also attended school in Massillon, Stark county, where his instructor was Lorin Andrews, who was one of the first Ohio men to tender his services in defense of the Union at the time of the outbreak of the Rebellion. William Nave made good use of his scholastic opportunities, as is evident from the fact that he became eligible for pedagogic honors and proved a capable instructor. He taught his first term of school in what was known as the Stump district, near Richville, but after teaching for several terms he decided that he could make his efforts more prolific in some other field of endeavor. In 1851 he was united in marriage to Miss Frances Wimerd, of Canton, and one year later they removed to Huntington county, Indiana, where Mr. Nave was later elected to the office of county surveyor, in which capacity he rendered most efficient service, retaining the incumbency for some time. In the interim he had become the owner of a farm of eighty acres in that county, and to this he gave his attention until 1855, when he disposed of the property and took up his residence in the village of Roanoke, in the same county, where he engaged in the general merchandise business, and there his wife died, in February, 1856. About one year later he removed to the city of Fort Wayne, where he resided six years, giving his attention to carpentering and railroad work. At the expiration of the period noted, in 1862, he returned to the homestead, near Richville, to care for his venerable parents, who were in feeble health, and in that locality he followed the carpenter trade until 1867, having in the preceding year consummated a second marriage, Miss Lucinda Hisner becoming his wife. In 1867 he came to Canton, where he worked as a carpenter and millwright and where he made his home until 1895, when he removed to the city of Cleveland, where he has since resided. The subject of this sketch is the only child of the first marriage.

Lester L. Nave was born in the town of Roanoke, Huntington county, Indiana, on the 21st of August, 1853, and was a mere child at the time of his father's removal to Fort Wayne, that state, where he attended the public schools until 1862, when he accompanied his father to Richville, Ohio, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of fourteen years, when the family came to Canton. Here he was employed for two and one-half years in the steel works of the Canton Steel Company, after which he secured employment on a farm in Pike township, in the meanwhile attending the district schools. In the autumn of 1872 he came to Perry township and went to work on the farm of John P. Floom, and here also he was enabled to attend district school during the winter months of two years. His ambition to further round up his education was one of decisive action, and through his own efforts he earned the funds with which to defray the expenses of a course of study in Smithville Academy, in Wayne county, this state, where he amply fortified himself for the vocation in which his efforts have been attended with so marked and gratifying success. In February, 1874, he became a teacher in the Halter district, Jackson township, Stark county, and thereafter he continued to teach in the district and village schools of the county until 1889, when he accepted a position as instructor in the public schools of Massillon, this county, where the best evidence of the satisfactory character of his services is afforded by the fact that he was retained in the schools of that city for the period of thirteen years, within which time he advanced to the position of principal. In June, 1902, he was elected principal of the South McKinley Avenue school in Canton, and in June, 1903, was elected to the principalship of his present school. In politics Prof. Nave gives his allegiance to the Republican party, though liberal in his political views. His religious faith is that of the Baptist church, and fraternally he is identified with the time-honored order of Free and Accepted Masons, affiliating with Clinton Lodge No. 47, at Massillon, and serving as eminent commander of Massillon Commandery No. 4, Knights Templar, in 1901.

On the 19th of March, 1878, Prof. Nave was united in marriage to Miss Arletta Freeman, a daughter of John and Mary (Scott) Freeman, of Perry township, this county, both of whom are now deceased. Prof. and Mrs. Nave have one child, Letha, who is the wife of Fred H. Lehman, a popular young business man of Canton.

ANTON KOPP was born in Augsburg, Bavaria, on the 15th of September, 1840, being a son of Joseph Anton and Ursula (Strahli) Kopp, both of whom passed their entire lives in the kingdom of Bavaria, the latter having died when the subject of this review was but two weeks old. One brother of Anton Kopp was a priest of the Catholic church in Dillingenaunder Donau, Germany, and another studied for a priest, but died before completing his course, and two of his sisters were Mother Superiors in a convent at Maria Mietingen, while another brother attained prominence in the office designated in Germany as that of judge. One of his cousins became an archbishop and is at the present time a cardinal in the Romish church. Anton Kopp was reared and educated in his native city, where he learned the brewer's trade, becoming an expert in all details of the business. He remained in the fatherland until he was about twenty-eight years of age, when he emigrated to the United States, and first located in Newark, New Jersey, where he secured employment at his trade, while later he was similarly engaged in Philadelphia and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Youngstown and Warren, Ohio; Chicago, Illinois; and Cleveland, Ohio, remaining for a number of years in the last mentioned city.

While residing in Youngstown, Ohio, Mr. Kopp was united in marriage to Miss Katharina Smith, who died in Massillon, Stark county, in 1898. Two children were born of this union, Sophia and Otto, the former being now a resident of Massillon. On the 7th of January, 1899, Mr. Kopp consummated a second marriage, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, being then united to Miss Regina Nist, who was born in Steinfeld, Rheinfalz, Germany, October 3, 1865, and who came to the United States at the age of twenty-three years, becoming a resident of Canton on her arrival in this country. Of this marriage was born one daughter, Marie Antoinette, the date of whose birth was May 27, 1900.

Mr. Kopp became a resident of Canton in the year 1888, and soon after his arrival became foreman in the Canton brewery, in which he later became a stockholder, but subsequently sold his interests in this institution and purchased a brewery at Massillon, which he continued to operate until 1898, after which he retired from active business. His death occurred on the 5th of February, 1903. He was held in high regard by his business associates and by all who knew him in connection with business and social life, being a man of genial presence and one whose kindness was proverbial. He was a communicant of St. Joseph's church, Roman Catholic, and ever deeply interested in its work, his wife, likewise, being a communicant in the same parish, and his political support was given to the Democratic party. Mr. Kopp attained success through his own efforts and was worthy of the high esteem in which he was so uniformly held.

Johannes Nist, the father of Mrs. Kopp, was a successful farmer of Rheinfalz, Germany, where he passed his entire life, his death having occurred on the 8th of December, 1901. His wife, whose maiden name was Katharina Aprill, died on the 7th of April, 1898. They became the parents of four children, namely: Franz, who still resides in Germany; Annie Mary, who is the wife of Andreas Hilgert, of Canton; Regina, the widow of the subject of this memoir, and Katharina, who still resides in the German fatherland. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Kopp was Lorenz Nist, and he died in Germany at the age of sixty-eight years, his wife, whose maiden name was Barbara Fritz, having passed away at the age of about sixty-five years. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Kopp were Joseph and Elizabeth (Ott) Aprill, both of whom resided in the fatherland throughout their lives, the former passing away in 1877, at the age of seventy-seven years, while the latter died at the age of fifty-four.

ALICE M. MONTGOMERY holds the responsible position of superintendent of that noble Canton institution, the Aultman Hospital, having been incumbent of this office since 1897, and she has shown not only an enthusiastic interest in her work and a marked capacity for the handling of details, but has also proven herself possessed of exceptional executive and administrative ability, and through her influence the service and facilities of the hospital have been greatly improved. She comes of staunch old Welch lineage, but the family name has long been identified with the annals of the fair Emerald Isle, whither her ancestors removed from Wales in 1646. In the north of Ireland her grandfather, John Montgomery, passed his entire life, and there her father, Joseph Montgomery, was born and reared, receiving excellent educational advantages. At the age of twenty years he emigrated to America and located in the city of Toronto, Canada, whence he eventually removed to a farm in Pickering township, province of Ontario, where he resided until about 1883, when he removed to the town of Whitby, where he now resides. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Hyfield, was born in that province and there she has passed her entire life. Joseph and Jane Montgomery became the parents of eight children, of whom four are living, the subject of this review having been next to the youngest in order of birth.

Alice Mand Montgomery was born on the homestead farm, at Pickering, province of Ontario, Canada, and after securing her preliminary educational discipline in the public schools she was matriculated in the Whitby Collegiate Institute, where she was graduated as a member of the class of 1888. For the ensuing four years she was engaged in pedagogic work in her native province, and then came to Ohio and began the work of preparing herself for a trained nurse, entering the Jewish hospital in the city of Cincinnati, where she secured the most thorough discipline and experience in the line of her chosen profession, being graduated in 1895 from the training school of that institution. She thereafter continued her work in that hospital for a period of two years, during which she held the office of assistant superintendent, and then, in 1897, came to Canton to accept her present position, in which her services have been of inestimable value, gaining to her the hearty endorsement of all concerned. Within Miss Montgomery's regime, the well equipped ward for children has been provided in the hospital, the same having been furnished through the generosity of the ladies of the Junior Assembly, of Canton, while other benefactions have been made which greatly augment the usefulness and facilities of the hospital. The third floor of the building is utilized by the nurses, and this was fitted up at the expense of Mrs. George Harter, of this city, while Mrs. William Sherlock contributed the furnishings for a private room and the hospital workers provided for the equipment of another private room. The attractive reception room owes its conveniences and accessories to the generosity of the Hebrew Ladies' Aid Society of Canton. All of these improvements have been made since Miss Montgomery assumed charge of the institution, and various other changes have been made for the better, under her direction, while her gracious and sympathetic nature has endeared her to all with whom she has come in contact. She realized the necessity of discipline and maintains the same with utmost vigor but unvarying kindness, thus insuring the best possible service without creating antagonism from any source. She is a member of the alumni association of the Jewish Hospital, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and her religious faith is that of the Wesleyan Methodist church.

J. FRANK KAHLER, M. D.—The subject of this sketch is one of the more recent arrivals in Canton, having come here in 1899, yet he has already taken a leading position among the city's representative men, besides winning prominence in the line of his profession. Dr. J. Frank Kahler is descended from an old German family, whose ancestors lived for many generations in the kingdom of Wurtemberg and whose history in the United States dates from 1835. The subject's grandfather, John Kahler, a native of Wurtemberg, was a farmer and followed that calling in the fatherland until his immigration to America in the year referred to above. He married a Miss Buller and was the father of two sons and one daughter, all of whom accompanied him to the new world, and in after years became well known and useful citizens of Ohio. Landing at New York city after a tedious and somewhat prolonged voyage, John Kahler at once moved westward as far as Bolivar, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, near which place he purchased a farm and engaged in the pursuit of agriculture. After living there for about one and a half years he disposed of his place and bought a farm a little less than two miles north of Bolivar, in Bethlehem township, Stark county, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1857 at the age of fifty-eight; his wife survived about thirty years, departing this life in 1885. Their two sons and one daughter were: Conrad, who died in the county of Stark; John, father of the subject of this review, and Christina, a resident of the county of Tuscarawas.

John Kahler was born in Germany June 10, 1827, and was a lad of eight years when the family immigrated to the United States. He grew up to the full requirement of sturdy manhood on the farm in Tuscarawas county and after completing the public school course acquired a knowledge of the higher branches of learning under private tutors and in an educational institution at the town of Canal Dover. He became a fine scholar and for two years taught successfully in the public schools, after which he devoted his attention exclusively to agriculture until within a year of his death, when he retired from active life. He was twice married, the first time to Miss Hannah Duper, who bore him children as follows: Hannah, wife of Simon Longenecker, of Columbiana county, Ohio; Mary, now Mrs. George Schroyer, of Michigan; Christina, who married John Stands and resides in the state of Kansas, and Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Krichbaum, of Canton. Some time after the death of the mother of these children Mr. Kahler was united in marriage with Catherine Kramer, whose birth occurred in Germany in the year 1835. When she was six years old her parents came to the United States and settled at Navarre, Ohio, near which place the father, Charles Kramer, purchased a farm and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits.

After his second marriage Mr. Kahler resided on a farm in Bethlehem township, this county, until 1897, when he retired to the town of Magnolia, where his death occurred the following year. He was a man of excellent character and good social standing, an active member of the Lutheran church and liberal in his political views. He enjoyed the esteem of all who knew him and in his death the county lost one of its intelligent and most enterprising citizens. His widow is still living, her home at the present time being with one of her daughters. She is the mother of six children, of whom the subject of this review is first in order of birth; the others are: Ella, wife of George Koehler, of Bolivar; May, wife of Newton Casper, of Magnolia, this state; Henry, late physician and surgeon, a graduate of the Western Reserve Medical College, of Cleveland, and a man of high attainments and eminent professional success; he married Miss Della Siffert and died in Shelby county, Ohio, in the year 1898; Cora, the next in succession, became the wife of Curtis Casper and lives in the town of Magnolia; Charles, the youngest of the family, is a well known and popular resident of Canton.

Dr. J. Frank Kahler was born on his father's farm in Bethlehem township, Stark county, March 16, 1861, and, like the majority of country lads, was early taught the valuable lesson that man should earn his daily bread by honorable endeavor. When old enough to be of practical service he became his father's assistant in the varied duties of agriculture and by coming in close touch with nature in healthful outdoor exercise he developed a strength of body and independence of mind which had much to do in shaping his character and directing his life in proper channels. His elementary education embraced the common school branches, and after prosecuting these studies until his nineteenth year he entered the normal school at Ada. He attended the summer terms of that institution for three years, devoting the winter seasons to teaching in the public schools of Stark county, during which time he earned the reputation of a very capable educator. During the last year and a half of his school experience he devoted his leisure time to the study of medicine under the direction of Dr. Conklin, of Canton, and then entered the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati, from which he was graduated with the class of 1891. Immediately after receiving his degree Dr. Kahler began the practice of his profession at Quaker City, Guernsey county, Ohio, and remained there with encouraging success until his removal, in 1899, to Canton. Since locating in the latter city his career has been a series of advancements, until he is now recognized as one of the ablest and most successful physicians and surgeons in a section of the state which has long been distinguished for a high standard of medical talent. He possesses a strong yet sympathetic nature and by conscientious fidelity to duty has won the confidence of those who depend upon his professional services for aid, possessing many of the essential qualities of the ideal family physician. Relying entirely upon his own energies and resources, his position to-day as a successful dispenser of remedies to suffering humanity reflects the highest credit upon him, being not only a representative in his chosen calling, but also a citizen who commands the respect of the entire community.

Like all true healers who keep pace with the advancement of modern thought, the Doctor is a close and careful student, also belonging to the various medical societies with which the leading medical men of his part of the state are identified. Among these are the American Medical Association, the Union Medical Association of Northern Ohio, the State Medical Society, Stark County Academy of Medicine and the Medical Society of Canton. He is a member of the surgical staff of the Aultman Hospital in this city, in which capacity his services have been valuable. He is also medical referee for one of the largest life insurance companies of this country. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the beautiful principles of which he endeavors to exemplify in his relations with his fellow men.

Dr. Kahler has never stepped aside from his chosen field of endeavor to mingle much in public and political affairs, although adhering firmly to his convictions and in no uncertain way encouraging all enterprises for the community's welfare. His domestic circle includes, besides himself, a wife and one daughter, and his home is most pleasant and harmonious in all of its relations and appointments. His marriage was solemnized on the 13th of October, 1886, with Miss Dora Snively, daughter of Levi and Elizabeth Snively, well known residents of the city. Mrs. Kahler's birth occurred in Canton township, Stark county, in the year 1866, and the daughter whom she has borne her husband answers to the name Lucille.

JACOB J. HEXAMER was born in Hesse, Hamburg vor der Hobe, Germany, August 24, 1818, being the son of George and Catherine (Grim) Hexamer, both parents descended from old families that for generations were tillers of the soil. He received a good education in the schools of his native place, grew to maturity on the paternal estate and followed agricultural pursuits as his chief occupation until 1842, when he bade farewell to the land of his birth and came to the United States. For a few months after his arrival in this country Mr. Hexamer worked in New York and Pennsylvania, and at the expiration of that time came to Canton, Ohio, making the trip to this place via Buffalo to Cleveland, and thence down the canal to Massillon, from which place he reached his final destination on foot. Shortly after his arrival he entered the employ of George Reigler, the proprietor of a meat market, with whom he remained three years, during which time he became not only an expert butcher, but also acquired familiarity with everything relating to the meat business. Severing his connections with his employer, Mr. Hexamer opened a market of his own, which, in connection with the buying and selling of cattle, he operated for a period of forty-six years, his place during that time being by far the oldest as well as the most successful establishment of the kind in the city. While thus engaged he attended closely to his business, built up an extensive trade, which he held as long as his market was in operation, and by good management and thrift accumulated a sufficiency of worldly wealth to enable him to retire from business and spend the remainder of his life in the quiet and comfortable manner which he now enjoys.

During his active years Mr. Hexamer traveled over a great portion of this section of the state, and became widely acquainted, his business of stock buying having brought him into personal contact with many farmers throughout the country. His dealings were always honorable, in consequence of which his name for many years was synonymous with honesty and integrity and among all classes of people he has ever been regarded with much favor and esteem.

On March 11, 1847, Mr. Hexamer contracted a matrimonial alliance with Miss Lydia Holben, whose parents, Daniel and Catherine (Loutzenheiser) Holben, were natives of Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, the father being a son of Lawrence H. and Catherine Holben, descendants of old German families that settled in Pennsylvania at an early period in the time of the colonies. Daniel and Catherine Holben came to Stark county many years ago and after marriage settled on a farm about ten miles north of Canton, where they spent the remainder of their lives. They reared a large family of children, of whom the following survive: Lydia, wife of Mr. Hexamer; Solomon lives in Indiana; Jacob, Joseph, Benjamin and William are residents of Michigan, and Catherine, whose home is at Middlebranch, Stark county.

Mrs. Lydia Hexamer was born July 11, 1827. She has presented her husband with twelve children, whose names are as follows: Catherine, deceased; George, deceased; Lizzie married John Miller and lives in Michigan; Julie, deceased; Louis, a resident of Canton; Caroline, deceased; Jacob, of Canton; Emma, wife of Peter Hahn, of Canton; Edward lives in Canton; Louisa is the wife of Philip Wilde, of this city; Joseph, deceased, and Charles, who at the present time lives in Texas.

Mr. Hexamer and wife, although well stricken in years, are still remarkably active, both retaining to an unusual degree the possession of their physical and mental powers. Eminently social and hospitable, they have many warm friends in Canton, who vie with each other in showing them favors, and it is doubtful if there is another as popular and highly esteemed old couple to be found in the city. Mr. Hexamer has kept in close touch with the trend of events and still manifests a keen and abiding interest in all affairs relating to the well being of Canton and Stark county. While in business he made a number of judicious investments in real estate, one of which was the purchase of five acres of land on Lippert street within the city limits, which has since become very valuable. On this large lot are two commodious dwellings which he rents to good advantage. In politics Mr. Hexamer has always voted the Democratic ticket, and notwithstanding his advanced age, he still lends his influence to the party and labors earnestly in its behalf. Many years ago he united with the German Reformed church and began the earnest Christian life which has characterized his life to the present day, his conduct the meanwhile being above reproach and his character all the most critical and exacting could reasonably desire in a follower of the Nazarene. He has long been a leading member of the First Reformed church of Canton, his wife also belonging to the same congregation.

ANTHONY FRANCIS comes of staunch Alsacian French lineage, the name having been originally spelled Francois, and the present Anglicized orthography was adopted by his father after his removal to the United States. Stephen Francis, father of the subject, was born in the province of Alsace, France, where he was educated, being a man of fine intellectual attainments and having there been a successful teacher for a number of years. There was solemnized his marriage to Miss Marie Therese Marchand, who was also born in the province of Alsace, and in that province were born six of their children. In 1827 the family came to America, sailing from Havre, and in due time landing in the city of New York, where they remained for a short time and then came to Stark county, Ohio, being accompanied by a sister of Mrs. Francis, with her husband and children, who had previously resided for some time in the national metropolis. The trip was made by way of the great lakes to Cleveland and thence by the old Ohio canal to Massillon, this county, from which point the two families came overland to Canton. Stephen Francis purchased twenty-one acres of land west of Nimishillen creek and on what is now East Tuscarawas street, the tract at the present time being divided into city lots and well built up. On this little farm was a primitive log cabin, in which the family took up their abode. The father was engaged in the cultivation of his farm until 1852, having in the meanwhile erected a commodious building on the place and there conducted a successful hotel business, the house being on the road between Massillon and Canton and thus gaining a good patronage from the farmers who passed through on their way to the former place with their wheat and other produce, nearly all of which was taken to Massillon for shipment by way of the canal, this being prior to the advent of railroads in this section. In the series of articles by Mr. John Danner, appearing in this work, reference is made to this tavern as one of the old landmarks of the county, while incidentally reference is made also to the precedence which Massillon then enjoyed as the "Wheat City." In the year mentioned Mr. Francis sold this property to George Trump, and he then removed with his wife, the subject and the girls of the family to Lucas county, Ohio, purchasing eighty acres of land a short distance west of the present city of Toledo. His wife died on this farm, in 1856, and he soon afterward sold the property and removed into the city of Toledo, where he passed the remainder of his life in the home of one of his daughters, dying at the age of eighty-six years. He was first a Whig and later a Republican in politics and both he and his wife were devoted communicants of the Catholic church. Of their children we offer a brief record as follows: Therese, who became the wife of Joseph Glardon, died in Lawrenceville, Indiana; Sebastian died in St. Augustine, Texas; Frances, the wife of Edward McCleary, died in Toledo, in 1895; Catherine died in Canton, at the age of eighteen years; Mary Jane, who is the wife of Conrad Nicolette, resides in the city of Toledo; Filicite, the wife of Herman Henning, died in Toledo, all the above mentioned having been born in Alsace, France, while the following named were born in the United States: Stephen died in California; Anthony is the immediate subject of this review; Mary Ann is the wife of Peter Schwalm, of Joliet, Illinois; Alexis is a resident of California; and Elizabeth is the wife of Joseph Heinel, of Jacksonville, Illinois.

Anthony Francis, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born in the little log cabin on the homestead farm, on East Tuscarawas street, Canton, on the 22d of May, 1832, and when he was eight years old his father built there the brick tavern to which reference has been made, and thus much of his boyhood was passed in this hotel, his reminiscences in regard to the early days being most graphic, as he well recalls how the farmers from this and adjoining counties passed through to Massillon with their wagon loads of wheat, frequently ten or more wagons passing along together, while the roadside taverns furnished accommodations for men and horses. His initial educational training was received in the pioneer school house, under the direction of Hon. Benjamin F. Leiter, who was his first teacher and who later represented this district in congress, and his school discipline ceased when he was fifteen years of age. As a boy he began work on the home farm and he followed this vocation until he had attained the age of twenty-three years, when he left home and set forth on his independent career. It had long been his desire to learn the trade of blacksmith, but his father had objected to the plan, and thus upon leaving the parental roof he secured a position as striker in the blacksmith shops of the works of the C. Aultman Company, in Canton, where he learned the blacksmith trade, being employed in the Aultman shops as a journeyman for a period of seven years, after which he was identified with the grocery business for one year. He then became a clerk in the hardware store of C. C. Snyder, and was thus employed for the ensuing eight years, after which he was, for somewhat more than one year, foreman in the shops of the Wrought Iron Bridge Company, of Canton, thereafter devoting about eight years to representing this concern as a traveling salesman, while later he was similarly engaged with the Massillon Bridge Company about the same length of time, at the expiration of which, in the autumn of 1892, he retired from active business life, still retaining his residence in Canton, where he has an attractive home, at 600 North Walnut street. In politics he renders allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Honor. He is not formally identified with any religious organization, but his wife is a zealous member of the German Reformed church.

In Canton, on the 14th of October, 1862, Mr. Francis was united in marriage to Miss Mary Shoof, a daughter of Andrew and Catherine (Ulrich) Shoof, and of this union have been born five children, namely: Helen, who is the wife of Charles Lind, of Canton; Augustus, who remains at the parental home; Stephen, who is a dealer in sewing and washing machines in Canton; and Emma and Minnie, who still remain beneath the home roof.

JOSEPH OBERLIN, retired farmer and private citizen of Tuscarawas township, was born in Stark county, Ohio, July 5, 1826, the son of Peter and Susan (Cramer) Oberlin. Peter Oberlin was a native of Pennsylvania, and as early as the year 1813 accompanied his father to Stark county, Ohio, the latter entering a tract of government land in what is now the township of Tuscarawas. The name of the subject's grandfather was Adam Oberlin; he was one of the early settlers of the county, and a man well fitted for the strenuous work which the pioneers were obliged to do in order to establish homes in the dense wilderness which originally covered this part of the state. He faithfully performed his allotted task of laying the foundation of the community, finished his labors many years ago, and by the side of his good wife now sleeps the sleep that knows no waking. Peter Oberlin was reared a farmer and followed that pursuit all his life, acquiring a fine estate of one hundred and ninety-five acres in the county, beside a smaller place in the county of Wayne. He was a man of great industry, thoroughly reliable in all his dealings and achieved honorable repute as a neighbor and citizen. In his younger days he joined the United Brethren church, and it was in his dwelling in Tuscarawas township that religious services were held at stated intervals during the early settlement of the county. A number of years later he withdrew from that communion and united with the Reform church, to the precepts of which he remained loyal to the end of his days. His wife was also a member of the church, and is remembered as a woman of sterling worth and beautiful moral character, and an earnest Christian, and, in her latter days, was looked upon by her friends and neighbors as a veritable mother in Israel. Peter Oberlin finished his life work and entered unto rest in the year 1856, his wife dying subsequently. They were the parents of a large family, eleven children in all, of whom the subject is the only living representative.

Of the early life of Joseph Oberlin little need be said, as his experience on the farm in the summer time and in such schools as his neighborhood afforded in the winter time was similar in most respects to that of the majority of boys born and reared in the rural districts. When old enough to assume his share of the farm labor and after completing the branches constituting the district school course, he pursued his studies in the Union school at Massillon. Later he taught several terms of school in his native township, and in February, 1853, joined the tide of emigration westward to the gold fields of California, making the long, tiresome journey to that remote part of the continent in the face of many thrilling experiences and dangers not a few. Mr. Oberlin remained on the Pacific coast a little over four years and was a participant in many of the thrilling episodes and daring adventures which characterized the early times in the far west. In June, 1857, he returned to Stark county and engaged in farming in the township of Tuscarawas, where he has since lived and prospered, meanwhile, by diligence and well directed industry, accumulating a handsome property, including a fine farm of one hundred acres which is well improved and successfully cultivated.

Mr. Oberlin has not been unmindful of his duty as a citizen, as is attested by the deep interest he has always maintained in public and political affairs. A prominent supporter of the Democratic party, he has been long prominent in its local councils and an active worker in its ranks, and at one time was honored by being nominated for the legislature of his state, but failed of election by reason of the overwhelming strength of the opposition. He has been a delegate to a number of county conventions, and, being a clear, forcible and logical speaker, it has fallen to him on divers occasions to present the names of candidates for nomination. His services have been especially valuable in campaign times and his leadership in his own township has contributed much to the strength and success of the ticket in a number of elections. Mr. Oberlin possesses a strong personality which, with his sterling character and invincible integrity, makes him an influential factor in any public work or private enterprise to which he addresses himself.

On December 20, 1860, occurred the marriage of Mr. Oberlin and Miss Mary A. Christman, the latter born in the county of Stark, in the year 1838, on the farm where her husband now lives. Mrs. Oberlin was the daughter of John and Margaret Christman, who came to this county from Pennsylvania about the year 1834, and spent the remainder of their lives in Tuscarawas township. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Oberlin. Mrs. Oberlin died on the 9th of January, 1879. In his religious belief Mr. Oberlin subscribes to the Reformed church, and for over twenty-three years he has been superintendent of the Sunday school classes under the auspices of the congregation with which he is identified. Mrs. Oberlin is also an active church worker, and, like her husband, has strong religious convictions which she exemplifies in her daily walk and conversation. The reader of the foregoing brief review need not be informed that Mr. Oberlin is a man of great energy, public spirit and a high order of business talent. His good fortune in temporal things has not come to him by accident, but through perseverance, industry, undeviating integrity and correct dealings with his fellow men. He is also greatly indebted for much of his success in life to his frank and manly demeanor and great kindness of heart.

JOHN B. ZETTLER, proprietor and manager of the Zettler nurseries and green houses at 405 Clarence avenue, Canton, also an inventor of considerable renown, was born in Sandusky, Erie county, Ohio, February 16, 1855, being the son of John and Chrisantha (Keiffer) Zettler, both parents natives of Germany. The father came to the United States in early life and settled in Erie county, Ohio, where he followed agricultural pursuits until his removal to Canton in the year 1867. On coming to this city he entered the employ of C. Aultman & Company and remained with that firm until his death, which occurred in 1886, his widow being still a resident of Canton.

John B. Zettler spent the first twelve years of his life in the county of his birth and there received his early educational discipline in the public schools. He attended one term after coming to Canton in 1867, and when a youth in his 'teens took up the carpenter's trade, which he followed with fair success until engaging in floriculture and the nursery business in 1883, purchasing that year the grounds on which now stand the Zettler nurseries on Clarence avenue. Since beginning this enterprise, Mr. Zettler has built and extended from time to time the area of his nurseries and added many new features, the increase of patronage the meanwhile justifying him in the expenditures necessary to carry on this series of improvements. He now has one of the largest and most thoroughly equipped establishments of the kind in the eastern part of the state, keeping on hand at all times a complete stock of trees and plants, including many varieties of rare and valuable flowers and fruits, and he spares neither pains nor expense in supplying the constantly growing demands of his numerous customers. Mr. Zettler has devoted much time and study to the fascinating pursuit in which he is now engaged, and the knowledge thus derived has amply repaid him in the large business he now commands and the liberal income of which he is the recipient.

Mr. Zettler, as indicated in a preceding paragraph, possesses mechanical talent of a high order, and his skill has been turned to good account in the various devices which he has invented and given to the world. Among his best known and most practical inventions is a revolving book case which by simply removing the shelves can be transformed into a wardrobe, with every convenience found in those made especially for the latter purpose. Another of his inventions, the butted glass sash bars, a labor-saving device of great utility, designed to replace putty in fastening of glass windows and the replacing of broken glass, has been warmly commended wherever tried, and ere long will doubtless come into general use by manufacturers of sash picture frames and all articles of like character, also by builders who find the old process not only laborious but expensive. At the present time he is perfecting a new steam and water boiler which is greatly superior to those now in use and which when completed gives every promise of being generally adopted.

In September, 1891, Mr. Zettler met with a serious financial disaster, in the destruction of his place of business by fire, the loss to buildings, stock, tools, etc., aggregating considerably in excess of three thousand dollars, only a small part of which was covered by insurance. With his characteristic energy, however, he at once set about to retrieve if possible his broken fortune, and in due time new and much better buildings than the original were erected, the stock was fully replenished and since the fire his business has more than regained its former magnitude, with the promise of still greater prosperity in the future.

On January 14, 1879, Mr. Zettler contracted a marriage with Miss Rosa Deyille, daughter of Nicholas and Mary (Bour) Deyille, to which union the following children have been born: Ferdinand, born May 7, 1880, was graduated from the Canton high school, and is now living in the city of Cleveland; Lester J., whose birth occurred February 15, 1884, was educated in the city schools and in the Canton Business College; William N., his father's business associate, was born February 10, 1886; Vincent V., born September 26, 1888, is a graduate of the city high school and a youth of intelligence and much promise; Effie C., who is now pursuing her studies in the public schools, was born on the 2d day of October, 1890; Ralph Leo was born June 14, 1892; May A. was born June 6, 1894; Margaret A. was born October 6, 1897, and died January 22, 1899; and Elizabeth, whose birth occurred July 9, 1901.

Mr. Zettler generally votes the Democratic ticket, but is liberal in his political views, caring little for party ties; in religion he is a Catholic, belonging with his family to St. Joseph's church, to the support of which he is a liberal contributor. He is a man of wide general intelligence, a reader of the world's best literature, and has a large and carefully selected library, in which nearly all of his leisure time is spent. Thrown upon his own resources when a youth in his early teens, with no friends to whom he could apply for assistance or encouragement, his life for many years was beset with vicissitudes and hardships. Not easily cast down, he addressed himself manfully to honest toil, saved his surplus earnings with scrupulous care, until he found himself the possessor of sufficient capital to begin business of his own in a modest way. Since then his course has been steadily onward and upward, and by energy and well-directed thrift he is now in independent circumstances, with a competence laid up against the possible day of adversity and for his declining years. An incident in the life of Mr. Zettler worthy of note occurred on the night of October 27, 1899, when the family residence was broken into by burglars. Sitting in his office at the time, he did not hear them enter, but being informed of their presence by his wife through a speaking tube, he at once rushed to the scene and succeeded in affecting their capture. On the way to the police station with his prisoners, they showed fight and attempted to break away and in the struggle that followed four revolver shots were fired, one of which passed through Mr. Zettler's groin, inflicting a painful and dangerous wound from which he has ever since been a sufferer.

JACOB KLOSS, JR.—The subject of this review is a native of Stark county, Ohio, and the second in a family of six children, whose parents, Jacob and Phoebe Kloss, came from Germany. The father was seventeen years old when he left the land of his birth, and after coming to America spent two years in New York, thence came to Canton, Ohio, where he engaged in the transfer business, being one of the first men in the city to run a public dray. Later he followed teaming until becoming disabled, since which time he has been living in retirement at his home on South Cherry street, having reached the age of seventy-four, in full possession of his mental faculties, but, as indicated, being somewhat enfeebled physically. Phoebe Uhland, who became the wife of Jacob Kloss, Sr., came to the United States at the age of fourteen with her step-father, and grew to womanhood in Canton, in which city she first met the gentleman whom she subsequently married. She is now a well-preserved woman of sixty-six years, and the mother of children as follows: Henry, a resident of Canton; Jacob, of this review; Amelia, who died when twenty years old; Pauline, Laura and Flora.

Jacob Kloss, Jr., was born at the family home on South Cherry street, Canton, November 5, 1864, and received his early education in the parochial school of the German Reform church, subsequently attending until his eleventh year the public schools of the city. By reason of his services being required at home, he was compelled to lay aside his studies at that age and turn his attention to some pursuit from which an income could be derived, accordingly, when only eleven years old, he began working in a brick yard for fifty cents per day. After devoting about seven summers to this kind of labor, spending the winter seasons the meanwhile in a grocery store, he engaged with a Mr. Winner, in 1883, to learn the meat business. In due time he became an expert butcher, and in 1885 opened a meat market of his own on South Cherry street, which he conducted for a period of three years with gratifying success, disposing of the establishment at the expiration of that time, after which he worked for other parties until 1891, spending the greater part of the interval in the employ of Houser & Buchwalter. In the latter year Mr. Kloss again embarked in business upon his own responsibility, establishing himself at his present stand at No. 1252 South Market street, where he has built up an extensive trade, his market at the present time being one of the largest establishments of the kind in the city, also one of the most liberally patronized and popular. Mr. Kloss is an energetic, wide-awake, progressive business man, who attends closely to his duties, and by industry and wisely directed thrift he has become the possessor of a fortune of no small magnitude. He is an expert in his line, deals fairly with his customers, and stands high in the esteem of the people. Among his German-American fellow citizens he is regarded with peculiar favor, having always been interested in their welfare, and for a number of years he has been an influential factor not only in their business affairs, but also in their social, educational and religious life.

Mr. Kloss, on the 29th day of March, 1885, entered the marriage relation with Miss Margaret E. Lichtenwalter, whose parents, Michael and Mary Ann (Howenstein) Lichtenwalter, lived for a number of years on a farm in Pike township, Stark county. During the eighteen years preceding his death the father lived a retired life in Canton, the mother being still an honored resident of this city. Mrs. Kloss was born and reared in Stark county, and her marriage has been blessed with six children, namely: Alonzo H., who is engaged with his father in the meat business; Mary May died at the age of two years; Pauline; William Henry; Gladys died in infancy, and Earl Ralph.

Politically, Mr. Kloss votes the Democratic ticket, and, as an intelligent, enterprising citizen, keeps well informed relative to current events and the great public questions of the day. Religiously he is a member of the German Reformed church of Canton.

WILLIAM M. GLASS, proprietor of a large blacksmith shop at No. 403 East Fourth street, Canton, and one of the leading craftsmen of the kind in the city, is a native of Pennsylvania, and was born in Rosstown, York county, on the 7th day of December, 1834. His father, William Glass, was born and reared in the same county and for a long time worked at the blacksmith trade in Rosstown, where his death occurred a number of years ago. The Glasses came originally from England, and the family was represented in Pennsylvania in an early day, and from that commonwealth descendants moved to different parts of the Union and the name has since become familiar in a number of states. William Glass, Sr., married, in Pennsylvania, Miss Elizabeth Myers, who was born in York county, the daughter of Peter Myers, whose ancestors came to this country in an early day, settled in the state noted and become well known in the respective localities where they lived.

The early life of William M. Glass was controlled by conditions which, much to his regret, deprived him of advantages and privileges which fall to the lot of the majority of lads, including among others the inability to acquire any but the most limited education, the sum total of his schooling covering a period of only six months. He was almost literally reared in a blacksmith shop, and when but ten years old hired to his older brother, James, who took charge of his father's establishment in Rosstown, receiving for his services the munificent sum of fifteen cents per day. In due time he became an efficient workman and after following the trade for some years in his native state, came, in 1854, to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he started a shop of his own, which he conducted with encouraging success at the place he originally located for a period of three years. Mr. Glass continued his chosen calling in the towns of Smithfield and Mt. Pleasant in the above county until 1892, in which year he came to Canton, and from that date to the present has operated establishments in this city, with a large and constantly increasing patronage. In 1895 he moved to his present location, No. 403 East Fourth street, where he has a large and well equipped shop, and does all kinds of work in his line with neatness and despatch, being assisted by a number of efficient workmen.

Mr. Glass was married, in Jefferson county, Ohio, in the year 1852, to Miss Ruth Ann Hussey, a lady of strong mental powers, intense religious convictions and for some years a noted evangelist in the Society of Friends, with which religious body he is also identified. She bore him three children, all deceased, and departed this life in 1865, deeply lamented not only by her husband and near relatives and friends, but by the church throughout Ohio, in which she had long exercised such a potent and beneficial influence. Mr. Glass's second marriage was solemnized in 1866, with Mary Samantha Talbott, also a representative of an old and highly respected Quaker family, the union being blessed with three children, William K., Caroline and Mary E. Mrs. Glass is a daughter of Kinsey and Caroline E. (Lawrence) Talbott, the latter of whom was the noted Quaker evangelist who gained such a wide reputation throughout the United States and England, for her temperance and Christian principles. Mr. Glass still hold membership with the old Friends church at Mt. Pleasant and has always been true to his religious convictions, upholding at all times the simple but beautiful teachings of the creed to which he subscribes and demonstrating by a life devoid of offense to God and man the reality and exceeding great value of Christianity when practically applied. He was reared in the political school of Democracy, and in the main has supported the party of that name, though of recent years he has been practically independent, being at the present time favorably inclined to the principles of prohibition. A strong advocate of temperance and himself a commendable example of the doctrines he advocates, he lends his influence to every laudable means for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and of late has become convinced that the most effective agency to rid the country of the evil is prohibition, fearlessly enacted and strictly enforced. Mr. Glass, though rather quiet and somewhat conservative in his relations with his fellow men and the public, is enterprising and progressive, entertains broad and liberal ideas and recognizes and encourages good, under whatever name it may appear.

CHARLES E. NORRIS is a native son of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in the historic city of Gettysburg, on the 27th of December, 1868, and being a son of Basil H. and Elizabeth (Miller) Norris, both of whom were likewise born in Pennsylvania, whence they removed to Canton, Stark county, Ohio, in the early 'seventies, and here the father engaged in the work of his trade as a carpenter and cabinetmaker, to which he still devotes his attention, while his wife is still living also and both are honored residents of this city. They are the parents of four children, namely: Charles E., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; William, who married Miss Emma Miller and who is engaged in the telephone business in Canton; Frank, who married Miss Bessie Blanchard and who resides also in Canton, where he is engaged with the Canton Bridge Company; and Ida M., who is the wife of Dr. Charles M. Crane, of this city.

Charles E. Norris attended the public schools of his native city about one year, and was about six years of age at the time when his parents removed to Canton, where he continued to attend the city schools until he had attained the age of fifteen years. At the age of ten years he assumed personal responsibilities in connection with the practical affairs of life, becoming a newsboy in Canton and proving energetic and discriminating in the handling of the business assigned to his charge, while the experience proved of no little value to him in the formative period of his character, begetting that self-reliance and initiative power which have conserved his success in later years. He left school at the age of fifteen years, and thereafter was employed in a clerical capacity and also worked for the News Exchange until he had reached his legal majority. Thereafter he was employed by the Dueber-Hampden Company, the extensive manufacturers of watches, in his home city, until 1897, and within this period, in order to further reinforce himself for the active responsibilities of life, he completed a course of study as a member of the night classes in the Canton Business College. In the year last mentioned he withdrew from the employ of the Dueber-Hampden Company to accept a position as collector for the Central Telephone Union, and such was his fidelity and capable discharge of the duties devolving upon him that two years later he was promoted to the position of cashier in the Canton office. In January, 1901, Mr. Norris was sent to Fremont, Ohio, as local manager for this company, and there he remained until May, 1902, when he was transferred to the Canton office, in the same capacity, and has since remained incumbent of this responsible position, while he has shown distinctive executive ability and discrimination in handling the affairs of this office, which is the most important maintained by the company by which he is employed. The preferment has come to him through recognition of his ability and marked fidelity, and he has the confidence and esteem of his employers and of the general public, being one of the popular and representative young business men of Canton. In politics he is a staunch supporter of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and he and his wife are valued members of the Lutheran church.

In the city of Canton, on the 8th of November, 1888, Mr. Norris was united in marriage to Miss Clara T. Webb, a daughter of John Webb, who was formerly city marshal of Canton and who is now employed in the secret-service department of the government, in the state of Nebraska. The maiden name of her mother was Cordelia Harding, who died in 1887. Mr. Webb subsequently married again and resides in the city of Omaha, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Norris have two children, Carl E. and Bernice Fay, both of whom are in the public schools of Canton.

CAPT. PETER R. KAUFMAN was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 26th of June, 1829. He was a son of Peter and Catherine (Wiltz) Kaufman, both of whom were of staunch German lineage, and they came from Pennsylvania to Canton in the early pioneer epoch and here passed the remainder of their lives. The father of the subject was a printer by trade, and it is undoubtedly the fact that he was the first to establish a German printing office in Canton. His son, Peter, owing to the exigencies of time and place, received meager educational advantages in his youth, but his was a signally receptive mind and studious nature, and thus he effectively supplemented the rudimentary training received in the schools of the pioneer town. As a boy he entered his father's printing office, and the discipline thus received was one of great value, for it has been well said that the training of a printing office is equal to a liberal education. He became a skilled workman at his trade, having marked facility as a compositor in both English and German. After leaving his father's establishment he went to the city of Cleveland, where he became an employe in the office of the Cleveland Herald, in the meanwhile having been in service as a private in the Mexican war. Unfortunately definite information as to this period of his career is not attainable, and it must thus be noted with but a cursory glance.

He was still in Cleveland at the time when the dark cloud of civil war began to spread portentously across the national horizon, and the intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of his nature at once manifested itself in decisive action. He responded to the call for volunteers and effected the organization of Company E, Fifty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, recruited from Canton and vicinity and from Cleveland districts. His enthusiasm was contagious and in the regiment were found many of his personal friends, who had been through his influence induced to enlist. The regiment went into camp at Columbus, and after a short term of training proceeded to the front, being assigned to the Army of the Cumberland. Mr. Kaufman was made second lieutenant of his company at the time of its organization, and later was promoted to the office of first lieutenant, and he was an active participant in many of the important engagements incidental to the early period of the war, having taken part in the campaign in and about Vicksburg. After a service of eleven months he returned home on a furlough, and upon rejoining his regiment he was elected to the captaincy of the company in whose organization he had been so largely instrumental. Of the details of the battle in which he met his death and of the way in which his noble and valiant soul was released from its mortal tenement, we can not, perhaps, offer a more touching and pertinent record than by entering in full the letter to his widow by the orderly sergeant of his company within a few days after his death, which occurred on the 29th of December, 1863. The letter is as follows:

January 7, 1863.

Mrs. Ida Kaufman, Canton, Ohio:

Madam—I regret to write the following statement to you in regard to your husband and our most beloved and esteemed commander and friend. I believe he had written you from Helena, Arkansas, about an expedition which was going down the river with the intention to take Vicksburg, Mississippi. We went down with eighty-nine transports, all loaded with troops, and arrived at Johnson's Landing, on the Yazoo river, on the 26th of December (1862). We departed the same day for Fort Morgan and arrived on the 27th. In the afternoon our regiment was sent out to employ the rebel skirmishers. We found them and drove them about one mile, with the loss of our captain and four privates killed. We were relieved at dark by another regiment. The next morning we were employed in supporting batteries and in the afternoon we were engaged in keeping rebel sharpshooters from our lines, but we had no loss this day. The next day, December 29th, was the day fixed to take the fort by storm. Blair's brigade was ordered up to do it. It consisted of the Thirteenth Illinois, Twenty-ninth Missouri, Thirty-first Missouri and Fifty-eighth Ohio Regiments—altogether about 2,500 men.

At about 11 o'clock A. M. we were ordered to fix bayonets, and in a double-quick, with hurrah after hurrah, we commenced the fearful struggle. Yes, it was murder by wholesale, privileged by law! We had hardly reached the edge of the woods where we could see the fortifications, when the rebels commenced to throw shell after shell into our ranks. We could hear nothing but whizzing of balls and cracking of shells. To have an imagination of the thus fearful struggle you only need to look at our loss. We lost, in about an hour's time, thirteen hundred of our brigade, and your husband shared their fate. He died a soldier's death, on the dark and bloody battlefield. He received a slight wound in the right arm first, and we begged him to go back, but he would not do it, but urged us to go on. Then we lost sight of him. The battle was over, and we could not find our beloved Peter. We looked everywhere—on every hospital boat and hospital—but we could not find him. The next day we tried, with a flag of truce, to go on the battlefield and look for our wounded, but the rebels would not let us. At last, on the 31st, they agreed to let us bury our dead, and then it was we found your husband's body. He was stripped of everything valuable—woolen clothing, sword, revolver and money; even his boots had been pulled off. He had received a wound in his right breast from a piece of shell. He looked as natural as in life. We buried him not far from the battlefield, and on his grave we placed a board with his name engraved thereon. Your husband's trunk will be forwarded as soon as practicable. If you want any other information I am always at your service.

Hoping this calamity will find you well prepared, I remain, your obedient servant,

ROBERT SPECHT.

Orderly Sergeant Co. E, Fifty-eighth O. V. I.

Captain Kaufman was not a member of any orthodox church, but was a firm believer in God. His was a symmetrical, honorable and useful life, and though it was cut short it was filled with more and worthier effort than falls to the lot of the average man, his name meriting a place on the roll of the nation's noble patriots, while the story of his career is full of both lesson and incentive. His was a buoyant, genial nature, and he won and retained firm friendships, his word ever being inviolable and his integrity beyond question.

In 1851 Captain Kaufman was united in marriage, in Paris, Ohio, to Miss Ida Jeanneret, who was born in La Chaud de Fond, Switzerland, on the 18th of January, 1831, and who was brought by her father to America when about eighteen years of age. Her father, Ulysses Jeanneret, here engaged in the jewelry business. Captain Kaufman's widow is still living. When the cruel war robbed her children of a father, she played the part of both father and mother to her boy and girls, and taught them to be honest, self-reliant citizens of the Republic, whose integrity cost her husband his life. Of her children we enter the following record; Louis K. is engaged in farming in Canton; Kate E. is the wife of James Baxter, of this city; Maria L. is individually mentioned in an appending paragraph; Lillie remains at the old home in Canton, as does also the youngest daughter, Flora J.

Maria L. Kaufman was born in Canton and has here passed her entire life, being now incumbent of the position of teacher in the first-grade department of the North Cherry Street school. She received her educational training in the public schools of Canton, having been graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1876. Her pedagogic career has covered a period of more than a quarter of a century of consecutive work in the same school and same grade in which her services are now given. She began teaching in the North Cherry Street school in September, 1876, and, as before stated, has been retained in charge of the first grade year after year to the present time. She is a consistent member of the First Baptist church.

CHARLES H. HILLES was born on the parental homestead, in Washington township, this county, on the 3d of August, 1848, being the fourth in order of birth of the five children of Enos and Mary A. (Harris) Hilles. Of the other four children we record that Arthur T., a successful farmer of this township, is mentioned on other pages of this work; Jennie is the wife of Johnson Grant, of this township; Howard is engaged in the practice of law in the city of Topeka, Kansas; and Ella is the wife of Dr. Byron Douds, of Canton, this county. Enos Hilles was a native of Chester county, Pennsylvania, where he was born in the year 1816, a son of Robert and Jane (Lee) Hilles, the former of whom was an influential farmer of that county and prominent in anti-slavery agitation during the crucial epoch leading up to and culminating in the war of the Rebellion. He was a son of David and Dinah (Millhouse) Hilles, the former of whom was a son of Hugh and Ann Hilles, the original progenitors in America, whither they immigrated from Ireland prior to the middle of the eighteenth century and took up their abode in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, whence they removed to Chester county in 1856, and there passed the residue of their lives, David being the youngest of their four children. They were worthy members of the Society of Friends, and members of succeeding generations have to a greater or less degree held to the simple and noble faith of this organization. Robert Hilles removed with his family to Mahoning county, Ohio, in 1832, settling in the vicinity of the village of Salem, as a pioneer farmer, and thence, in 1844, he came to Stark county and purchased about sixty acres of land, in Washington township, where both he and his wife lived until their death, each attaining the age of about eighty-six years. The latter was a daughter of Isaac and Mary Lee, of Berks county, Pennsylvania, where she was born, and from a collateral branch of the family came General Robert E. Lee, the distinguished Confederate officer.

Enos Hilles was about sixteen years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Mahoning county, Ohio, and he later accompanied them on their removal to Stark county, where he individually purchased twenty acres in section 14, Washington township, near the homestead of his father. In 1853 he bought and removed to a farm in section 1, same township, and this place is now owned by his son Arthur T. During the closing year of their lives he and his wife made their home with their children. Enos Hilles was a man of alert mentality and forceful individuality, and was naturally equipped for leadership in thought and action. He read widely and with discrimination and was particularly well informed on the questions and issues of the hour, in which he ever maintained a deep interest, while he was a potent factor in advocacy of the cause of the Republican party, being an able public speaker and logical and concise writer on political topics and having been an effective worker in various campaigns. He was a zealous advocate of a sound financial system in governmental affairs, and was one of the first to maintain that a change from the gold or international standard would be fatuous in the extreme, and in connection he entered into a series of newspaper discussions in defense of his convictions, gaining a high reputation through his masterful handling of the problem through the local press. His life was one dominated by the highest principles of honor and integrity, and his faith in the verities of the Christian religion was unwavering. He died on the 18th of December, 1890, while his wife passed forward to the "land of the leal," on the 22d of February, 1894.

The boyhood days of Charles H. Hilles were, in their surroundings and incidental duties and pleasures, not radically different from those of the average farmer boy of the place and period, and to the public schools he was indebted for his early educational advantages. In 1872 he was married and shortly afterward he purchased a tract of thirty acres lying contiguous to the old homestead farm, and for the ensuing four years he had charge of both places. In 1876 he traded his farm for his present fine homestead, in section 12, which has thus continued to be his home and field of endeavor for more than a quarter of a century. He has erected modern and substantial buildings and made his farm one of the model places of the township. In 1881 he acquired a farm of fifty-five acres in section 16, and in 1890 he still farther added to his landed estate by the purchase of a farm of two hundred acres in Marshall county, Indiana, a property which he still retains. On his home farm he gives his attention more particularly to the dairy business, while his Indiana farm is principally devoted to the raising of fat cattle for the Chicago market, a line of enterprise in which his well directed efforts have been attended with a full measure of success, since he raises nothing but the highest grade of stock, having of late directed his attention almost entirely to the raising of the Durham type of cattle and Poland-China swine.

In politics, though never an aspirant for public office, Mr. Hilles has given his unequivocal support to the principles and policies of the Republican party, and he is recognized as one of the wide-awake and thoroughly progressive men of this section and as one eminently entitled to the unqualified esteem in which he is held. He is identified with the Patrons of Husbandry, being a member of Fairmount Grange No. 242.

On the 14th of August, 1872, Mr. Hilles was married to Miss Martha J. Phillips, a lady of refinement and gracious personality. She was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Ellis and Phoebe (Lilley) Phillips, the former coming of staunch old Quaker stock, of Welsh extraction, two brothers of the name having come from Wales to America in the early colonial epoch and established homes in Pennsylvania, whence their descendants have become disseminated through the most diverse sections of the Union. The Lilley family is of Irish lineage. Mrs. Hilles was reared and educated in Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and her parents are now both deceased, her father passing away in 1879, at the age of eighty-one years, while her mother entered into eternal rest in 1850, at the age of forty-two years, both having been devoted members of the Quaker church. The eight children born to them are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Hiles have three children, namely: Jennie, who is the wife of Dr. Charles E. Cook, a prominent dentist of Crestline, Ohio, and who have two children, Winifred and Loyd; Howard, of Washington township, married Miss Sadie A. Croade, and they have two children, Marian and Martha Lillian; and Harry E., the youngest child, remains at the parental home, assisting his father in the management of his business affairs.

EDWARD L. HAYMAKER. — Too careful or too frequent references can not be made in the pages of history concerning those who have figured as the founders and builders of a great commonwealth, and in connection with this brief review of the personal history of Mr. Haymaker it is a privilege to touch incidentally and specifically upon interesting data in regard to the sterling pioneer pioneer family of which he is a representative and which has been identified with the annals of Ohio from practically the time when it was admitted to statehood. Frederick Haymaker, the great-grandfather of the subject, was born in Germany, where he was reared to manhood and where he was married. A number of years later, accompanied by his wife and children, he emigrated to America, probably about the middle of the eighteenth century, and settled in Franklin county, Pennsylvania. He was a man of means, and in the old Keystone state he established a shipyard and engaged in the building of vessels for maritime use, conducting an extensive business for the day. At the outbreak of the Revolution he signalized his loyalty to the land of his adoption by tendering his services as a soldier in the Continental army, in which he became an officer and which he rendered effective service, having been trained in military tactics and manoeuvres in his native land. After victory had crowned the colonial arms and independence established at so great cost and sacrifice, he returned to his home in Pennsylvania, where he passed the residue of his life. His son Frederick, grandfather of him whose name initiates this article, was likewise born in Germany and was a young man at the time of the immigration to America. He became a man of prominence and influence in Pennsylvania, having owned much valuable property and having shown much discrimination in his real-estate transactions. About the time of the Revolution, or shortly afterward, he located in the city of Pittsburg, where he became an extensive speculator in real estate. Through misrepresentations he was led to espouse the cause of Aaron Burr, to whom he furnished large amounts of money, while he also loaned large sums to the state of Virginia. He was thrice married, and became the father of twenty children. In the year 1804 this able and progressive citizen determined to seek a new field of endeavor and came to Ohio with his family, taking up a large tract of land in Portage county, on a portion of which is situated the present thriving little city of Kent. At the time when he there located the section was a veritable wilderness, the primeval forest still remaining untouched by the inconoclastic hand of man, while the white settlers were compelled to dispute dominion with the beasts of the forest and the aboriginal inhabitants, who were a constant menace. He erected a log house of the primitive type, though of larger proportions than the average, in order to accommodate his numerous family, and one of his grandchildren was the first white child born in Franklin township, that county. Frederick Haymaker and his sons reclaimed much land in that section and there the grandfather continued to reside for many years, finally removing thence to Newton Falls, Mahoning (now Trumbull) county, where he continued in agricultural pursuits for a time and then took up his residence in Leavittsburg, that county, where, in company with sons of his third wife, he established a flouring mill, one of the first in that section, and thereafter continued in business in this line until his death, in 1853.

Andrew Haymaker, father of the subject, was one of the seven children of his father's first marriage. He was born on the old pioneer homestead, in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, on the 18th of January, 1801, and came with his parents to Portage county, Ohio. He was reared to maturity there, aiding in reclaiming the homestead farm and, owing to the exigencies of time and place, his educational advantages were very limited. He learned the trade of a mason, and to the same devoted his attention, to a greater or less extent, for a number of years. At the age of twenty-nine years he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Loomis, who was born in Hartford, Connecticut, in 1811, a daughter of Asa Loomis, who made the long overland trip from Connecticut to Ohio in 1818, the means of transportation being an ox team and Conestoga wagon, while the journey covered a period of thirty-three days. Mr. Loomis entered land in the locality where the town of Charlestown now stands, and there he reclaimed a farm and passed the remainder of his life, his wife also dying at the old homestead. After his marriage Andrew Haymaker located on a small farm near Charlestown, Portage county, where he continued the work of his trade and also placed his land under cultivation. There he continued to reside until the death of his wife, in 1876, when he came to Canton. He was summoned into eternal rest in 1878, his declining days having been passed in the home of the subject of this sketch, who accorded to him the utmost filial solicitude. Both parents were consistent members of the Presbyterian church and were folk of sterling character, honored by all who knew them. In politics Andrew Haymaker was originally arrayed with the Whig party, but upon the organization of the Republican party he identified himself therewith and ever afterward was a staunch advocate of its principles.

Edward L. Haymaker was born on the paternal homestead in Charlestown, Portage county, Ohio, on the 25th of August, 1844, and as he personally gives the statement: "As a boy I attended school a little and worked on the farm much." The school house of the district was located on the home farm and this fact militated rather against than aided in securing to him the educational advantages which could have been desired, since he was really accessible in case of any special duty to be discharged about the farm, and his services were so frequently in demand in this way that his schooling was of intermittent and desultory nature during his boyhood days. He remained at home until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when, like many another loyal young son of the republic, he abandoned the plow to take up the sword in defense of the nation, whose integrity was in jeopardy through armed rebellion. Scarcely had the smoke of rebel guns lifted from the ramparts of old Fort Sumter ere he responded to the call of volunteers, and in August, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Battery A, First Ohio Light Artillery, under Captain C. F. Cotter. Of all the troops that went from the state of Ohio, this battery had the distinction of firing the first shot in defense of the Union. This opportunity came at Gallipolis, across the Ohio river, where the battery engaged with a party of Confederates who were in advance of their main army. The battery was assigned to the western army, or Army of the Tennessee, and participated in every battle in which this army took part from Shiloh to Nashville. At Stone River Mr. Haymaker was captured, but was immediately afterward rescued by the Union forces. He continued in active service until the expiration of his term, when, in 1863, he veteranized, being granted a thirty-days' furlough, which he passed at his home, after which he rejoined his company at Nashville and continued in active duty until victory perched triumphant on the falchions of the northern armies and the perpetuity of the Union was insured. Mr. Haymaker returned with his command to the city of Cleveland, where he received his honorable discharge in August, 1865, having served through the entire period of the great fratricidal conflict and having shown himself possessed of true soldierly qualities.

After receiving his discharge the subject returned to his home in Portage county, where he continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits until 1877. At Randolph, that county, on the 23d of August, 1868, he was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Loomis, who was born in Atwater township, that county, her father having been one of the pioneers and honored farmers of that section. In 1877 Mr. Haymaker came to Canton and for the following three years he was engaged in the 'bus business, after which he associated himself with

W. S. Shertzer, in the establishing of livery and sales stables, at the corner of Seventh and Court streets, the enterprise being conducted under the firm name of Shertzer & Haymaker. The building was destroyed by fire in 1883, but the firm immediately erected another on the same site, and the partnership continued until 1885, when a dissolution took place and Mr. Haymaker then formed a partnership with Henry Miller in the coach and livery business, utilizing the same quarters. Two years later they sold the real estate and purchased property on Court street, between Ninth and Tenth, and at this time Captain H. H. Housel succeeded Henry Miller in the firm, which they continued in the same line of enterprise until 1891, under the firm name of Haymaker & Housel. In 1893 Mr. Haymaker purchased his present premises, at the corner of Tenth and Court streets, where he erected a fine brick stable, seventy-five by one hundred and eighteen feet in dimensions and two stories in height, and here he has ever since continued in the livery business, having a finely equipped establishment and catering to a large and discriminating patronage.

In politics the subject has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, though he has had no ambition for official preferment. He was a member of the famous McKinley Escort Troop, which attended the lamented President in 1896 and continued its organization until 1899. His interest in his old comrades in arms is signalized in his retaining membership in McKinley Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, and he is also identified with the Knights of Honor.

Mrs. Rebecca (Loomis) Haymaker died on the 7th of January, 1890, being survived by three sons, namely: Elden, who married Miss Cora Robinson and who resides at Canton; Everett, who married Miss Emma Vogelgesang, is a ship architect and is in the employ of the government, at Washington, D. C.; and Harry Adelbert was married October 16, 1902, to Miss Clara Sliker, of Canton, Ohio, and he is a member of the firm of Haymaker & Son. In October, 1893, Mr. Haymaker married Miss Ella Cobbs, of Damascus, Columbiana county, and of this union two sons have been born, George and Lyman.

LEONARD R. TRESSEL, who was for a number of years freight and ticket agent for the Conotton Valley Railroad in the city of Canton and who was thereafter engaged in business here until his death, was a native son of the old Buckeye state and a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families. He was born on a farm in the vicinity of Harrisburg, Carroll county, Ohio, on the 3d of September, 1839, being the youngest of the ten children of Mathias and Catharine (Harsh) Tressel, the former of whom was a native of Pennsylvania and of staunch German lineage, having been one of the early settlers in Carroll county, Ohio, where he reclaimed a farm and devoted the residue of his life to agricultural pursuits. The subject of this sketch was reared on the farm and received a good common school education in his boyhood days, later supplementing the same by study and discipline which he was able to gain through his own efforts. He continued his studies for a time in a select school at Malvern, and later was a student for a short interval in Mount Union College, while after his return from the war, wasted in strength and vigor, he went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he further equipped himself for the practical duties of life by a course of study in a business or commercial college of high order.

The subject was a mere boy at the time of his father's death and his widowed mother thereafter took up her residence in the village of Malvern, Carroll county, where the family home was established at the time of the outbreak of the Rebellion, Mr. Tressel being then about twenty-two years of age. In Malvern was recruited Company A of the Eightieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and in October of that year Mr. Tressel enlisted as a private in this company for a term of three years. He proceeded to the front with his regiment, with which he participated in many of the notable engagements of the great internecine conflict. He was in the battle at Iuka, Mississippi, and in the five days' fight at Corinth, and thereafter took part in the many skirmishes incidental to moving forward to a position in the rear of the army at Vicksburg, where he was again in action, as was he also at Fort Gibson, Raymond and Jackson. In the engagement at the last mentioned place sixteen of his company were wounded, his fortune being to receive a very serious wound on this occasion, a ball passing through his left foot. He fell back and was captured by the Confederates, by whom he was held about a fortnight in Jackson and then sent to the famous Libby prison, of odious memory, in Richmond, Virginia, where he endured great suffering from his wound, which was not properly treated, causing him to endure a continuous fever, while food was poor and insufficient in quantity and the conditions otherwise almost unendurable. He was held there for a period of three months, being then released on parole and sent to the hospital at Annapolis, Maryland, and thence, six weeks later, to Indianapolis, Indiana, where he was assigned to detached duty, in which service he continued until October, 1864, when he received his honorable discharge, having made the record of a brave and loyal son of the republic. After his course of study in Pittsburg, Mr. Tressel returned to Malvern, Carroll county, where he engaged in the dry-goods business and also became local agent for the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad. He eventually withdrew from the mercantile business and was for a time agent for the Conotton Valley Railroad and the Cleveland & Pacific Railroad, at Oneida, whence, in May, 1880, he came to Canton in the capacity of freight and ticket agent for the former of the two railroads mentioned and also for the Wheeling & Lake Erie, giving faithful and effective service until his retirement, at the expiration of five years, having been in the railroad business for about fourteen years. He then established himself in the coal business in this city and continued in this line of enterprise until his death, which occurred on the 28th of April, 1895. He was a man of genial and gracious presence and had the capacity of winning and retaining friends, so that his death was deeply deplored in this community, as was it also in others where he had lived and labored. His political allegiance was given to the Republican party and his religious views were in harmony with the teachings of the Presbyterian church, in whose faith he was reared. Fraternally he was an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Masonic order, in which latter he had advanced to the degree of Knight Templar.

On the 24th of March, 1868, Mr. Tressel was united in marriage to Miss Agnes Fishel, and they became the parents of four children, namely: Mary Charlotte, who remains with her widowed mother; Anna June, who is married and has one child, Anna Helen; Margaret C. and Roberta L., who likewise remain with their mother. Mrs. Tressel was born in Carroll county, Ohio, on the 18th of August, 1843, and was there reared and educated, attending the district school and later continuing her studies in the seminary at Malvern. She is a daughter of Henry and Margaret (McClurg) Fishel, the former of whom was born in Carroll county, whither his parents removed from Pennsylvania, being numbered among the very early settlers in Carroll county. He was a shoemaker and millwright by trade and vocation, and both he and his wife passed their entire lives in Carroll county, the original ancestors of the McClurg family in America having come hither from the north of Ireland. These were John McClurg (grandfather of Mrs. Tressel) and his brother, the latter of whom eventually returned to Ireland, where he attained an eminent position in the British army. John located in Pennsylvania, where he married, and he came to Ohio in the pioneer days and here followed farming for the remainder of his life. Mrs. Tressel has a pleasant home in Canton, where her friends are in number as her acquaintances, and she is a devoted member of the Presbyterian church. While deprived of one who was ever devoted to her and to the home, one whose true nobility of character she more than all other most fully appreciated, she finds a measure of consolation in the memories of the past and the hallowed associations, though she may no more "feel the touch of a vanished hand nor the sound of a voice that is still."

JOHN H. HOLL.—The Holl family is one which has been identified with the annals of American history from the colonial epoch, the original progenitors in the new world having established themselves in the state of Pennsylvania, whence representatives have been disseminated through the most diverse sections of the Union, while the name has ever stood sponsor for sturdy integrity of character and prolific usefulness in the sphere of citizenship. Stark county, Ohio, gained representatives from this family in the pioneer epoch of its history, and here the descendants are numerous at the present day, one of the number being he whose name initiates this review and who is an honored citizen of Canton. As to the early history of the family in America excerpt is made from a history concerning the descendants of Ephraim Holl, published in 1891 and compiled by Henry C. Holl, of Canton, an uncle of the subject: "Family traditions say that Johannes (the German for John) Holl and his young wife, severing many ties of affection and friendship, left their home among the snow-clad mountains of Switzerland and emigrated to America about the year 1730. Johannes Holl settled near what is now New Holland, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania." In tracing the lineage to the subject it is found that the next in order of descent from Johan Peter was through his eldest son, Ephraim. Ephraim Holl was born July 5, 1772, and married Magdalena, daughter of Hans (more properly Johan) Royer, whose paternal grandfather came to America as early as 1718. Ephraim and Magdalena Holl became the parents of three children,—Daniel, Samuel and Catherine,—the line of descent to the Holls of Stark county coming through the second son, Samuel. Ephraim Holl resided in a stone house not far from Lititz, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where he died on the 29th of June, 1808, at the age of thirty-six years, lacking six days.

Samuel Holl, son of Ephraim and Magdalena Holl, was the grandfather of him whose name initiates this review. He was born in Warwick township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 11th of March, 1798, and remained with his mother until her second marriage, about the year 1812, after which he resided in the home of his uncle, Peter Holl, in the same neighborhood, for the greater portion of the time until he had attained years of maturity.

The following brief sketch of his life is from the work to which recourse has already been had: "He was brought up to speak the Pennsylvania Dutch dialect, but received his education in English. He afterward mastered the German language through his own exertions. In 1817 Samuel and his brother Daniel went to Canada to see after some land belonging to their grandfather, Johan Peter Holl. On the 15th of August, 1819, in company with two of his associates, he started from Petersburg, Pennsylvania, where his brother resided, and made a horseback trip to Brookville, Indiana. They passed through Harrisburg, Greensburg and Pittsburg, in Pennsylvania; Xenia, Steubenville, Zanesville, Chillicothe and Cincinnati, Ohio, having ridden one thousand two hundred and thirty-nine miles. This was a remarkable trip for that time. On the 15th of February, 1820, he married Mary, daughter of Ephraim and Magdalena (Kemper) Royer. The first year of their married life they resided with his mother. In the spring of 1821 he commenced farming on a farm one mile south of Lititz, Pennsylvania, and while residing on this farm he carried on a distillery for nine years. Having made several trips to Stark county, Ohio, where his brother Daniel and his brother-in-law, Samuel Schrantz, had preceded him, he sold his farm and, in April, 1836, started for Ohio. They arrived at their new home, in Lake township, Stark county, the second week in May, 1836. In the fall of the same year they removed to an adjoining farm, afterward known as the David Leib farm. In the spring of 1837 they removed to a farm near New Berlin, and a few years later Mr. Holl exchanged his Lake township land for a tract in Jackson township, belonging to Michael Heldebrand. In 1849 he bought a farm north of New Berlin, on section 7, Plain township. The north half of this land he sold in 1850. In April, 1851, Mr. Holl left his farm in charge of his son Mannassa and removed to New Berlin. In 1855 he entered into partnership with Peter Kaufman in the purchase of the Wissler mill property. They repaired the mill and changed the name to the Empire mills. In 1859 Mr. Holl sold his interest in the mill to Mr. Kaufman, for five thousand dollars. About this time he sold his Jackson township farm to Godfrey Roush. In 1863 he bought a farm one mile south of New Berlin, of one John Calback. "During the dark days of the great Rebellion Mr. Holl was what might be called a liberal Democrat, for he voted the regular Democratic ticket, but, contrary to the teaching of his leaders, he was ever ready to procure means to raise the required number of volunteers. The Union soldiers always found him a 'friend in need.' During the autumn of 1865 he had a severe attack of bronchitis. As the cold weather increased he grew worse and was confined to his house. In the second week of February, 1866, his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Carter, died, and this affected him so much that he grew worse and sank rapidly. On Sunday morning, February 25, 1866, he was in such a condition that his family physician was summoned, but it was apparent that the end was near at hand. He was sitting in an easy chair, and after being removed to bed he expired almost immediately. For many years Mr. Holl had made the Bible his chief study and was so well versed in the New Testament that he could tell where any verse was found if it was only partly repeated. He became a member of the German Baptist church in 1835, and in 1863 he connected himself with the Disciples church at New Berlin. He had a confiding disposition but was very slow to forgive when his confidence was abused. He was ever ready to take an interest in any measure advanced for the public welfare. He was really the original projector and one of the founders of the Plain & Jackson Township Fire Insurance Company."

Of the nine children of Samuel and Mary (Royer) Holl the following brief record is entered: Ephraim, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, September 15, 1820, married Ann Sprankel, of Stark county, Ohio, and he died on the 21st of February, 1848, at his home near New Berlin, this county; Magdalena, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, July 2, 1822, married Daniel Bomberger, of that county, and after his death became the wife of Jacob Sprankel, now deceased, and she resides in Canton at the present time; Reuben, born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, November 15, 1823, married Eliza

Roush, and now resides in Jackson township, Stark county; he is the father of the subject of this sketch and further mention will be made of him in appending paragraphs; Catherine, born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, August 20, 1825, married Samuel Hower, and they now reside in Sangamon county, Illinois; Mannassa, born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, December 28, 1828, married Sarah Reemsnyder, and is now living retired in Stark county; Elizabeth, born in the same county of the old Keystone state, September 18, 1830, became the wife of Israel Carpenter, and she died in Stark county, in 1866; Sophia, born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1833, married Samuel Walter, and she now resides in New Berlin, this county; Samuel, Jr., born near New Berlin, Stark county, Ohio, November 23, 1839, married Catherine Zerbey, and is now a resident of Canton township; Henry C., born near New Berlin, this county, May 22, 1844, married Isabella Hossler, and is now a resident of New Berlin.

Reuben Holl, father of the subject, was born in Warwick township, Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, on the 15th of November, 1823, and was about twelve years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Stark county. In his native county he received his early educational discipline, and was known as an apt student. After coming to Ohio he continued his studies in the common schools until December, 1844, when he entered a private school in Canton, the same being conducted by Archibald McGregor, who will be well remembered by the living pioneers of the county. On the 9th of March, 1848, he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Roush, who was born in Jackson township, this county, on the 28th of December, 1826, where her father, Godfrey Roush, had located three years previously. She died on the 18th of August, 1890, having been a devoted member of the Lutheran church and a woman of gentle and noble character. For two years after his marriage Reuben Holl devoted his attention to teaching, and in the spring of 1850 he removed to a farm on section 13, Jackson township, and in connection with his agricultural operations he also devoted no little attention to surveying, in which work he was very proficient. He was elected to the office of township clerk, and in 1857 was elected justice of the peace, in which office he served nine terms, being succeeded by his son, John H., in 1876. In 1888 he retired from farming in an active way, taking up his residence in a house on the west end of his farm, where he has since maintained his home. He has been zealous in the promotion of the general welfare through all legitimate means, and is honored as one of the sterling pioneers of the county. In politics he has ever given his allegiance to the Democratic party, and in his religious views he is liberal, ever showing a deep reverence for the spiritual verities and guiding his life according to the golden rule. He died March 11, 1901. Of his children is here incorporated the following data: William P., born in New Berlin, this county, March 10, 1849, married Alice A. Clay and now resides in Jackson township; John H. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Daniel W., born in Jackson township, June 29, 1854, is a bachelor and resides on the homestead farm, in Jackson township; Mary E., born in Jackson township, July 2, 1856, married Josiah J. Zerbe, and they now reside in Canton; Oliver W., born in Jackson township, March 13, 1858, married Alice Essig, and they reside in Alliance; Benjamin Franklin, born in Jackson township, July 1, 1861, is an artist by profession and resides in the city of Brooklyn, the maiden name of his wife having been Ida J. Van Horn.

John H. Holl, to whom this sketch is dedicated, was born in Jackson township, this county, on the 12th of September, 1850, and was reared under the influences of the farm, while his early education discipline was secured in the district schools. Later he continued his studies in select schools at Canton and Springfield, Ohio, thus rounding out a good academic education, while he became specially proficient in mathematics, having devoted special attention to the study of surveying and civil engineering. During the winters of the years 1872 and 1875 he was engaged in teaching school, being very successful in his efforts, and in 1876 he was elected to the office of the county surveyor of Stark county, while in the same year he served as justice of the peace in Jackson township, giving most able administrations in each of these offices. In 1877 he took up his residence in the city of Canton, and here he was incumbent of the office of city engineer from 1878 to 1889, his long retention in the position indicating the appreciative estimate placed upon his services. Since his retirement from this office Mr. Holl has been engaged in engineering and engineering work, with an office at 130 East Tuscarawas street. He is well known and highly honored in the county, being a worthy representative of one of the old and prominent families of this section of the Buckeye state. His pleasant home is located at 730 North Clarendon avenue. In politics Mr. Holl has ever accorded a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he has kept in touch with the questions and issues of the day, being a man of broad information and a high order of intellectuality. He and his wife are consistent members of the Evangelical Lutheran church.

On the 3rd of May, 1881, Mr. Holl was united in marriage to Miss Clara A. Essig, who was born in Plain township, this county, on the 6th of May, 1859, being a daughter of William A. and Ann E. (Correll) Essig, who removed to Canton township when she was eight years of age. She received excellent educational advantages and is a talented musician, having been a popular teacher of the "divine art" prior to her marriage. Mr. and

Mrs. Holl are the parents of three children, namely: Carrie B., who was born on the 6th of March, 1882, and who is now attending school; Alfred T., who was born on the 4th of September, 1883, and is now engaged in attending the Ohio State University, at Columbus; and Wilber E., who was born April 16, 1886, and is now a student in the Canton high school.

JAMES F. CURRIE, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Currie, of Canton, was for years a reporter on the Canton Daily Repository, which, as the Ohio Repository, was the first newspaper to be published in Stark county. In the capacity noted Mr. Currie formed a very large circle of acquaintances among persons of business, professional and social standing in Canton. In the summer of each year during his connection with the Repository he was sent by his paper to distant points to report national gatherings and other matters of importance, thus making a number of long transcontinental tours. Among the first was his trip to Chicago to report the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, in whose line of march were one hundred and fifty Canton veterans. This encampment was held during the strike on the new five-million-dollar post-office in Chicago, and it was said that it was by reason of said strike that the late President McKinley considered it inexpedient to attend the encampment. In the summers of 1901 and 1902 Mr. Currie made two trips for his paper from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts. In the latter year his trip was one of seven thousand five hundred miles through the west, via Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Yellowstone Park and St. Paul. From these and numerous other points in the far west he sent home a record of the names and positions of fully two hundred persons formerly residents of Stark county who had risen to positions of trust in the west. On this trip Mr. Currie rode a bicycle a distance of one hundred and fifty miles over the mountain roads of Yellowstone Park, making this distance in two and one-half days, while the same circuit is made by the park stages in five and one-half days, so that the ambitious newspaper man made a record on this occasion.

The desire of Mr. Currie to travel became manifest while he was still in his teens, at which period in his life he and one of his young friends indulged in prolonged pedestrian tours over the hills and plains of Stark county, covering from twenty-five to forty miles on such occasions. His predilection for newspaper work early disclosed itself. Of the twenty boys, from a class of forty, promoted from the Dueber school to the high school he was the only one to complete the course in the latter. He was the assistant editor of the High School Record, and his first published article in the daily press had Canton as its subject, the article in question having been spoken of at the time by Judge W. R. Day, now of the United States supreme court, as the "Best description of Canton I ever read." Mr. Currie has comments on his illustrated history of "The Eighth Ohio Regiment, the President's Own," of the Spanish-American war, from the lamented President McKinley, Colonel C. V. Hard and General Charles F. Dick. He has written a large amount of valuable matter in regard to Canton and Stark county. This is historical and descriptive in character, and of the same he has a mounted collection of upward of two hundred and fifty thousand words. At one time he registered his name in the capital city, Columbus, to take up the reading of law, with a view of preparing himself for admission to the bar of the state, and for a time he continued his technical studies along this line under the directions of ex-Mayor James A. Rice, of Canton. He, however, could not resist the fascination of newspaper work and later turned his attention to journalism. He has been employed at different times on all the dailies and weeklies of Canton, and for a time was incumbent of a position on a paper in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. In March, 1903, Mr. Currie retired from newspaper work, and then entered the West Virginia oil fields, at Smithfield, where he represents the interests of J. E. Carnahan, the millionaire oil, iron and steel operator of Canton. He is still incumbent of this important position.

JOHN C. DEVINE is a native of Ireland, though the ancestors on the paternal side were of French origin. At a remote period the progenitor on the paternal side of the family joined a French expedition to assist the people of Ireland to regain their independence, but, like many similar efforts, the attempt proved futile, the vessel in which he embarked having been wrecked upon the coast of Ireland. He succeeded, however, in reaching the shore in safety, and later settled in Galway, where he afterwards married and reared a family and became quite prominent in the affairs of his neighborhood. From this ancestor have sprung many descendants, one of whom was Mark Devine, the subject's father, who was born and reared in county of Galway.

Mark Devine married in his native land Miss Mary Cunningham, daughter of Stephen and Mary (Mullin) Cunningham, who were natives of Ireland, where they remained until their deaths, though they were represented in the United States by four of their children, three of whom were pioneers of Iowa, while the other made his home in Kentucky. To Mark and Mary Devine were born a family of nine children, six of whom survive, namely: Michael, who lives in Ireland; Jeremiah, a resident of New Jersey; John C., of this review; Mary, who makes her home in Brooklyn, New York; Ellen and Margaret, the last two still at the old home in the Emerald Isle.

John C. Devine was born September 24, 1855, in county Galway, Ireland, and there remained until a youth of fifteen, in the meantime receiving an academic education which served as a foundation for the courses he subsequently took in science and civil engineering. A brother and a sister having come to the United States he finally decided to join them. Accordingly in 1870 he set sail and in due time arriving at his destination, settling in Sussex county, New Jersey, where his brother Jeremiah, a contractor and builder, was then residing. He lived with his brother for some years and under him served an apprenticeship in the building lines, in addition to which he took a special course in engineering, availing himself while thus engaged of every means to add to his knowledge so as to become a master of his calling. After finishing his apprenticeship and becoming an efficient mechanic he found ample opportunity for the exercise of his skill, working first in New Jersey and afterwards in New York city, where his operations were seriously interrupted by the panic of 1873. In 1874 Mr. Devine went to Somerset, Kentucky, where he, in partnership with others, took a number of contracts and it was while pushing these contracts to completion that he became interested in railroad construction, taking charge of certain work on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, at that time in course of building through Kentucky and Tennessee. During the ensuing three years he devoted his attention almost exclusively to railroad building in those two states, but in the fall of 1877 left that part of the country and went to Marble Head, Ohio, near which place he was engaged for the two following years in the construction of the Sault Ste Marie canal. In 1879 he came to Alliance, Ohio, his first work in this city being the stone work of the Catholic church, after which he took various other contracts here and elsewhere, building up a good business. Among the more notable of his early works after coming to this section of the country were the Catholic church edifice at Letonia and the construction of a section of the Nickel Plate Railroad east of Erie, and later, he contracted for all the masonry work on the Rochester & Pittsburg line between the towns of Ridgeway and Punxsutawney.

Subsequently Mr. Devine became associated with Page, Carey & Company, contractors, in construction work on the Salem Railroad, but the former gentleman becoming involved in difficulties which caused him to leave the country, and the latter being accidentally drowned, the responsibility of the undertaking fell to the subject and in due time he completed it according to contract. Meanwhile Mr. Devine continued his general contracting and building, in course of which he erected a number of large public edifices, including among others the Methodist Episcopal and United Presbyterian churches at Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, the United Presbyterian church at New Lisbon, Ohio, the Roman Catholic church at Niles, this state, and at the present time he has under way a large and imposing Catholic temple of worship and parsonage in the city of Warren, Trumbull county. In addition to these he has built a number of private residences, notable among which is the elegant modern stone dwelling in Salem belonging to the late J. T. Brooks and he also erected the Reeves boiler works, the bolt and nut works and the greater part of the steel works in Alliance, besides doing much of the building for the Buckeye works in Salem, to say nothing of his numerous lesser contracts in different parts of Ohio and other states. Mr. Devine makes a specialty of large contracts and is so situated as to push them to completion with the least possible delay, his resources of all kinds being such as to cause him no hesitancy, however extensive the undertaking.

In other than business relations Mr. Devine has come to the favorable notice of the public, having long been an influential force in the affairs of the city of his residence, and a leader in the various enterprises having for their object its material growth and development. He served two terms in the city council and resigned from that body to take charge of the postoffice, to which he was appointed by President Cleveland in 1893. He proved a capable and obliging official and held the office to the satisfaction of all concerned for a period of four years, retiring therefrom in 1897 with the good will of the people regardless of political ties. A firm and uncompromising Democrat, he has been for years prominent in the party in Alliance and Stark county and his labors and influence in its behalf have contributed greatly to the strengthening of the cause in this section of the state. Since residing here Mr. Devine was appointed to a position in the railway mail service and he discharged his duties as postal clerk with the same energy and ability that he displays in his regular business, his standard of efficiency while thus engaged averaging ninety-nine and six-tenths per cent. At the present time he is identified with several important industrial enterprises in Alliance, being a stockholder and director in the Standard Bolt & Manufacturing Company, also a director in the City Savings Bank, and he owns the brick plant at Garfield, the monumental works at Salem, besides having large lumber interests at the latter place. In addition to the above he is a member of the Alliance Board of Trade and an active participant in its deliberations; is also connected with the Land Company of Alliance and lends his influence to many other undertakings tending to the advancement of the city and affecting the vital interests of the people. In the matter of material improvement Mr. Devine has perhaps done more for Alliance than any other man, having graded and paved its principal streets, erected many of its most sightly and imposing public buildings and private residences, besides investing his own means in property. The cities of Niles and Warren have also greatly profited by his work as he laid over two miles of streets in those places in addition to the churches, private dwellings and other buildings erected by him at different times. He now has under contract at home and elsewhere a number of notable structures, one of which, the Reeves residence in Alliance, will be, when completed, the largest and finest of modern dwellings in the city and one of the most beautiful and expensive buildings of the kind in this part of the state.

On August 13, 1883, Mr. Devine entered the marriage relations with Miss Mary Madden, of Alliance, the union resulting in the birth of two children, Clement L. and Mary Grace. The former, after completing his literary education at Mt. Union College, attended the Case School of Applied Science, at Cleveland, where is preparing himself for a useful career as a civil engineer. The daughter is also liberally educated and is a young lady of character and varied culture and a favorite in the social circles in which she moves.

Mr. Devine was born a Catholic and reared according to the tenets of that faith. He has been a true son of the church and at the present time with his family belongs to the St. Joseph Parish, Alliance, being one of its most devoted members and a liberal contributor to all of its good works and practical benevolences. He stands high among his coreligionists, holding membership with the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, the Knights of St. John and the Knights of Columbus and he is also connected with the secular benevolent order of Foresters.

GEORGE A. KELLEY, M. D.—The Kelley family is of Irish origin. The Doctor's grandfather, Walter Kelley, was a native of West Meath, Ireland, and a civil engineer, by profession. He came to the United States a number of years ago and followed his chosen calling in Ohio, where he earned the reputation of a skillful engineer. He married in this state Susan Elson, the daughter of Samuel Kaemmerer, a native of Pennsylvania, one of the earliest Lutheran ministers of Ohio and a man of considerable repute in his day. The maiden name of Mrs. Kaemmerer was Catherine Border. Rev. Kaemmerer preached at many places in Ohio, established a number of churches of his faith and departed this life at Zanesville at the age of seventy-two, his wife dying when seventy years old. While prosecuting his work as an engineer Walter Kelley, the grandfather, contracted a cold which, running into pneumonia, terminated in his death, the event taking place in the county of Muskingum. Among his children was a son, also Walter by name, whose birth occurred in Muskingum county, Ohio, November 16, 1826. Walter Kelley, Jr., learned the shoemaker's trade and followed that vocation the greater part of his life. He was a man of strong mentality and considerable education, a skillful workman and provided well for those dependent upon him. He served in the late war in the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Ohio Infantry and spent the last few years of his life in Burns, Marion county, Kansas, dying in that town in December, 1891. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Selina C. Kaemmerer, was born in Ohio and departed this life in the city of Cleveland, in January, 1900. She bore her husband children as follows: Kate M. died May 14, 1876, at the age of twenty-three. Dr. Samuel W., a practicing physician of Cleveland, at this time filling a chair in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in that city. Dr. George A., of this review, and Anna J., who resides in Cleveland.

George A. Kelley is a native of Muskingum county, Ohio, and dates his birth from the 27th of January, 1858. His first educational experience was in the schools of Zanesville and later, about 1866, he was taken by his parents to St. Joseph, Michigan, where he continued his elementary studies until entering the high school of Wooster, Ohio, and later at Alliance, Ohio. After completing the course in the latter institution young Kelley began the study of medicine at Wooster with Dr. R. N. Warren, under whose instruction he continued from 1876 until 1880, completing his course of study and lectures at the Cleveland Homeopathic Hospital College during that period, and graduating from the college in the class of '80.

Finishing his professional course, Dr. Kelley entered into partnership with his former preceptor at Wooster and after practicing there one year removed to Burns, Kansas, where he soon built up a lucrative business and took high rank with the leading physicians of the place. He remained in the west until January, 1895, when he returned to his native state and finally selected the city of Canton as the most favorable field in which to exercise his talents as a representative of the homeopathic school. Dr. Kelley has studied much and his success has been commensurate with the energy and devotion displayed in his practice. His professional career has fully met the expectations of his friends and, as already stated, he stands today among the most successful physicians of his school in eastern Ohio. In his personality he realizes in a large measure the ideal of a successful family physician and surgeon, adding to a quick apprehension and thorough professional knowledge the gentle manner, and sympathetic heart of a true healer. In every relation of life with his fellow men he has borne well his part and he enjoys to a marked degree the confidence and respect of his associates in the profession and the high esteem of his fellow citizens of every vocation.

Dr. Kelley is a Republican, but while well informed upon party issues he cannot be called a politician, his time being fully occupied in attending to the wants of his patients and otherwise looking after the interests of his profession. He is a member of the Northeastern Ohio Homeopathic Medical Society, the Canton Medical Society, the Stark County Medical Society and the Ohio Medical Society, in the deliberations of which he takes a leading part. Being an original thinker, a clear and logical writer, he has made known his investigations before these bodies from time to time in essays bearing the stamp of scholarship and deep professional research. He is identified with several fraternal organizations, notably among which are the Knights of Pythias, Foresters, Modern Woodmen and Royal Neighbors, and in matters religious he subscribes to the Methodist Episcopal creed, belonging with his wife to the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton.

Beside himself and wife, the Doctor's home circle includes two children, Roger B. and Martha. Mrs. Kelley was formerly Miss Mellicie S. Barrett, the youngest daughter of William D. and Maria (Morris) Barrett, of Wooster, Ohio, and her marriage with the Doctor was solemnized in that city on the 14th day of April, 1886.

ANDREW J. LASH.—In the early pioneer epoch in Stark county there settled on a tract of land in Bethlehem township Andrew Lash, who was the father of the subject of this review, and the latter thus merits consideration as a member of one of the honored old families of the county, while such has been his personal career and such is his standing as one of the representative business men of the city of Canton, where he is successfully established in the hardware business, that specific mention of him in this volume becomes still more consistent. Andrew Lash, the father of the subject, was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, in 1809, and was a mere boy at the time when the family removed thence to Stark county, and here he was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm, aiding materially in reclaiming the same and in its cultivation, while his educational privileges were such as were afforded in the public schools of the day, and the facilities were of primitive order, implying the little log school-house with its puncheon floors, slab benches, etc. As a young man he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Younkman, who was born in Stark county after her parents' emigration from the fatherland to America. The father of the subject continued to reside on the old homestead until his death, in 1859, at the age of fifty years. His wife survived him by many years, passing away in 1895, at the age of eighty years. In politics Andrew Lash was a stanch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party and he served in various township offices of trust and responsibility, while both he and his wife were devoted and consistent members of the Lutheran church, exemplifying their faith in their daily walk and conversation and ever retaining the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who knew them. Of their children we incorporate the following brief record: Catherine is the wife of James Martin, of Lawrence, Kansas; Jacob, who is engaged in farming in Bethlehem township, this county, married Miss Lydia Baker; Mary is the wife of John Parks, of Bethlehem; Levi, who is a representative farmer of Bethlehem township, this county, married Miss Christina Mase; Teresa is the wife of John F. Reiger, of Stark county; William, who married Miss Priscilla Shrefler, resides in Bolivar, Tuscarawas county; Caroline, a maiden lady, resides in Canton; John O., who married Miss Caroline Smith, resides in Bolivar, Tuscarawas county; Andrew J., the subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Daniel F., a resident of Bolivar, married Miss Flora E. Carnes; David M., a resident of the city of Canton, married Katy Parker; Benjamin F. died at the age of four years; and the two other children died in infancy.

Andrew J. Lash, whose name initiates this review, was born on the old homestead farm, in Bethlehem township, this country, on the 23d of February, 1853, and there he was reared, while, as he succinctly states the case, he received most of his early educational training in the lime-stone quarries, his technical scholastic discipline being confined to an attendance in the district schools up to his eighteenth year. When but eleven years of age he left home and started out to face the battle of life on his own responsibility. He secured work as a farm hand, receiving five dollars a month and his board in compensation for his services, while he managed to attend school for brief intervals during the winter months, and that he duly profited by the advantages thus gained is evident when we revert to the fact that he then proved himself eligible for pedagogic labors, and for the long period of nineteen years he was a successful and popular teacher in the district schools, while for one year he taught in the village school at North Industry. During the summer vacations he continued to devote his attention to farming, and for nine years of the period noted he had charge of the homestead farm. After giving up his work as a teacher, having carefully conserved his financial resources, Mr. Lash, in 1892, came to Canton, and here he invested his savings in a hardware stock, beginning business in eligible quarters at 823 South Market street, having purchased the original stock from Christian Wilde, administrator, and having since greatly increased the same, in order to cater to the demands of a constantly increasing patronage, while he has remained in the original location to the present time, having a finely equipped establishment and having been successful in building up a most gratifying business. In politics Mr. Lash has ever accorded a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party, and he has been incumbent of various township offices. His religious faith is that of the United Brethren church, and in the same he has been an officer for many years, being at the present time a trustee of the church in Canton and superintendent of its Sunday school, while both he and his wife are zealous and earnest workers in the church. Fraternally Mr. Lash is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and the Protective Home Circle.

On the 22d of October, 1882, Mr. Lash was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Newhouse, who was born in Sparta, this county, being a daughter of John and Nancy (Williams) Newhouse, honored pioneers of the county, and the subject and his wife became the parents of three children, namely: Zelma C., who remains at the parental home, as does also Carl E., whose twin brother, Paul E., died in infancy.

ISAAC HARTER, SR.—The distinguished biographer of the lord chancellors of England, in his sketch of Lord Eldon, speaks as follows: "We biographers generally make it equally redound to the credit of our hero whether he be of illustrious or humble parentage, saying with the same complacency that he was the worthy descendant of a long line of noble ancestors, or that he raised himself by his talents, being the first of his name ever known to fame." There is certainly an element of truth in this statement and yet this is not an element of specific inconsistency, for honor should ever be accorded where honor is due. But we of America, where the greatest number of self-made men are to be found, find particular satisfaction in reviewing the life history of one who, without influence or aid of adventitious circumstances, has risen through his own efforts from a lowly position to one of prominence in any of the spheres of human endeavor, for in the potentialities thus implied lies the glory of our republic. Thus it is not in the least incongruous that greater credit is commonly awarded to him who has risen from poverty and obscurity, through stern adversity, to a position of definite success and to high honor among his fellow men. It is a matter of daily observation that an experience of this sort is an element of popular strength in a candidate for public office, and this fact indicates the popular estimate aside from such incidental prominence, while there is no injustice in thus holding in high regard this potent antecedent. A man who made for himself a place in connection with the honors and activities of life, who successfully surmounted obstacles and who gained high recognition for intrinsic worth of character was Isaac Harter, Sr., than whom no citizen of Canton has ever been held in higher regard and esteem, while the record of his life is essentially coincident with the history of this now opulent and attractive city. A man of distinctive and forceful individuality, he left an indelible impress upon the industrial and civic life of the city and county in which he so long lived and labored, while there was no shadow of wrong or injustice to mar any portion of his career. True biography has a more noble purpose than mere fulsome eulogy. The historic spirit, faithful to the record; the discerning judgment, unmoved by prejudice and uncolored by enthusiasm, are as essential in giving the life of the individual as in writing the history of a people, for the individual is the national unit, and if the unit be justly estimated the complex organism will become correspondingly intelligible. He whose name initiates this memoir was distinctively the artificer of his own fortunes, was true in every relation of life, faithful to every trust and stood as a symmetrical type of that sterling American manhood which our nation delights to honor. Though Mr. Harter was a man of affairs and wielded a wide influence his life was one of subjective modesty and unpretentiousness, and it would be palpably incongruous in this connection to indulge in an adulation from which he would have shrunk during his lifetime, and yet it is but just that a proper estimate of his life and character as pronounced by those who knew him best be incorporated in this work as a due tribute to his memory. In offering such an estimate we can not do better than to quote at length, with occasional metaphrase, from an appreciative review of his career previously published and prepared by one familiar with the man and with his works:

It is doubtful whether there has ever been a resident of Stark county more generally known throughout its province, personally and by reputation, than Isaac Harter. No one has been longer engaged in a business which brought him into contact with all classes of people, nor has any one been more frequently quoted, in the character of boy and man, as an example for others. His father, Michael Harter, came to this country from Wurtemberg, Germany, when twenty-three years of age. He married in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and soon afterward emigrated to Knox county, Ohio, where he purchased a quarter section of government land, upon which he settled. As the country developed and travel increased, he was induced to enlarge the dimensions of his log cabin and open a tavern, and this in time became a popular stopping place. He had four children, one daughter and three sons, of whom Isaac, the youngest, was born on the 14th of June, 1811. The father died at the age of fifty-three years, leaving the family in straightened circumstances. The sister, Christina, had previously married George Dewalt and they had taken up their residence in Canton, and it was mainly through her instrumentality that Isaac was brought to this place, with whose progress and civic life he was destined to become so prominently identified. This Mrs. Dewalt was the grandmother of Mrs. William McKinley. At the age of eleven years he was indentured to William Christmas, a merchant, to serve him until he had attained his legal majority. The compensation of an apprentice at that time was his board and clothes, including a freedom suit to be given upon the expiration of his service, together with an undefined amount of education, this provision being rarely complied with. It is certain that Mr. Harter's opportunities in that direction were extremely limited. The major part of the instruction he received from professional teachers was that secured in night schools. Isaac served his master and mistress faithfully; there was no menial service about the house and store that he was not required to do, and he was never known to grumble or be insubordinate. So useful did he make himself that it was not long before he became an important adjunct of the store. He had the qualities which make a young man a successful and popular salesman, patience, industry and integrity. At that period the stock of the average store in this new section comprised a general assortment of dry goods, hardware, queensware, groceries, liquors, etc. All kinds of country produce were taken in exchange for goods, and the salesman was required not only to handle lard and beef and hides, pile up boards and shingles, etc., but also to measure tar and fish oil and do other work that many young men of the present day would consider beneath their dignity. During Mr. Harter's apprenticeship he never received a cent in money as compensation for his services, and in his latter years he often remarked, when alluding to the comparatively easy times enjoyed by the young men of today, "I was so situated that I never had the opportunity to earn a dollar for myself until I was twenty-one." After he had attained his majority, Mr. Christmas made him a partner in the store, allowing him for his services an interest in the profits. The firm was then Christmas, Harter & Company, the silent partner being a Mr. Hogg, of Brownsville, Pennsylvania. Mr. Christmas died in 1836, when it became necessary to settle up the estate and the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Harter then commenced alone and he continued in the mercantile business until 1860, when he sold out and engaged in banking, in which occupation he continued until his death, which occurred on the 27th of February, 1876.

There is in the life of Mr. Harter much to encourage the young man dependent upon his own resources, much that is worthy of imitation. He was emphatically a self-made man. To his sterling integrity, his indomitable energy, his courteous and obliging disposition, his kind and unostentatious generosity, did he owe his success. In his business relations, in his daily intercourse with his fellowmen, his real worth was best known and most highly appreciated. He was the zealous friend of the laboring and industrious classes and always ready to help those who manifested a disposition to help themselves. He was of a social disposition and enjoyed society, but above all other that of his family. A more kind, affectionate and devoted husband and father never occupied that sacred relation. As a professed Christian, having been confirmed as a member of the Lutheran church when thirty-six years of age, while not demonstrative, he was confiding and hopeful. Though strongly attached to his own church and always ready to lend a helping hand in time of need, he was tolerant and liberal in his attitude toward other denominations, while he was always interested in movements designed to promote the prosperity of the town and was liberal in his contributions to that end. His largest losses in business were the result of an effort to assist some local enterprise. He had great energy and to his last days was as active as a man of twenty years his junior. Although frequently urged by his family to retire from business and to take the world more easily, as he had accumulated an abundance, his invariable answer was, "I would not be contented doing nothing." He was not envious of others, but rejoiced in their prosperity. He was strong in his convictions, but not intolerant, was always firm in defense of the right, but had no room in his heart for revenge. Compassion and pity dwelt in him as constant guests. Flattery could not cajole him into compromise nor power awe him into silence. In his manners he was affable, courteous, social and dignified. He was quick in temper, but ready to forgive and never harbored ill will. He believed in early training boys to business and was in the habit of imposing responsible duties, involving heavy pecuniary trusts, upon his own sons when they were yet young, believing the way to train up successful business men was to trust them when young, that they might be inspired with confidence in themselves.

The Savings Deposit Bank was founded by Mr. Harter in the year 1854, and under his able direction, with his associates, Julius Whiting, Martin Wikidal and Peter P. Trump, it developed into one of the leading and most substantial monetary institutions in the state, the enterprise being still conducted under the title of Isaac Harter & Sons. He had many other important capitalistic interests and was distinctively a man of affairs, alert, broad-minded, and progressive, while a more public-spirited and loyal citizen Canton has never claimed. Standing in the pure white light of a life and character like that of Isaac Harter, we are moved to a feeling of respect and veneration, and his name merits a high place on the roll of Stark county's noble pioneers.

On the 7th of August, 1838, Mr. Harter was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Z. Moore, who was born in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, and she survived him by several years, being summoned into eternal rest on the 23d of January, 1895, at the venerable age of seventy-nine years. They became the parents of nine children, of whom one son and one daughter died in infancy, while of the seven who attained years of maturity we incorporate the following brief record: Joseph S., who was graduated in Kenyon College, at Gambier, Ohio, was engaged in the study of law at the time when came the clarion call to arms that the integrity of the Union might be preserved, and he was one of the first to tender his services, enlisting as a private in the Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for a term of three months, and he rose to the office of lieutenant, receiving his honorable discharge as such. He soon afterward re-enlisted, becoming a member of the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteers, in which he was made captain of his company, and he was accidentally shot while in the barracks at Cincinnati, expiring a few hours later, on the 26th of August, 1863. George D., who was one of the representative bankers and citizens of Canton, is the subject of an individual memoir appearing on other pages of this work. Michael D. was a resident of Mansfield, Ohio, where he was prominently engaged in manufacturing and represented his district in the fifty-second and fifty-third congresses, and was the first man who advocated the gold standard, and it was largely through his instrumentality that the famous Bland bill was defeated. Isaac succeeded his father in the control of the Savings Deposit Bank, and is one of Canton's influential citizens. Henry W., who was graduated in Pennsylvania College, is a representative member of the bar of Canton. Christiana A. is now a resident of Duluth, and Eliza L. is the wife of Albert L. Ordean, president of the First National Bank of Duluth.

ALBERT S. HILLHOUSE.—The genealogy of Mr. Hillhouse is of English and Welsh derivation, and the name is one which has long been identified with the annals of American history. He is a native of the beautiful little city of Kalamazoo, Michigan, which was long celebrated as being the largest community maintained under village government in the United States, and there he was born on the 14th of November, 1867, being a son of Frank S. and Lizzie (Dunning) Hillhouse, natives respectively of Alabama and New York. Both still survive. Mr. Hillhouse at present living in retirement at Kalamazoo, Michigan, where for thirty-eight years he carried on the wholesale book and drug business under the firm name of Roberts & Hillhouse, being at time of withdrawal from business the oldest firm in the city. He secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of Kalamazoo, and thereafter was matriculated in the Baptist College in that city, where he continued his studies until he had attained the age of nineteen years. He then entered the employ of the Michigan Telephone Company as messenger boy in connection with the Kalamazoo office, receiving for his services a stipend of twelve dollars per month. Nine months later he was promoted to the position of night operator, in which capacity he likewise served nine months, being then appointed telephone inspector, his duties in the line being confined to Kalamazoo county. He was in tenure of this position for five months, at the expiration of which, in November, 1887, he was made local manager of the American District Telephone Company in his native city. In February of the following year Mr. Hillhouse was sent by this company to the city of Grand Rapids, Michigan, where he remained as inspector and switch-board man until August 23, 1889, when he returned to Kalamazoo to accept the position of superintendent of the Kalamazoo Electric Company. On the 15th of October, 1890, the plant changed hands, and Mr. Hillhouse then returned to the employ of the Michigan Telephone Company, in the capacity of traffic agent, while on the 13th of February of the following year, still in the employ of the same company, he was stationed in Muskegon, Michigan, as inspector and switch-board man, while on the 21st of the following May he was promoted to the office of manager of The Michigan Telephone Company at Big Rapids, and on the 24th of June, 1894, became the manager of the plant in the city of Jackson, Michigan, where he remained until the 15th of the following September, when he was called to a position in the traffic department of the same company, in connection with the Detroit office, while on the 11th of February, 1895, he was installed in a similar capacity in the Grand Rapids office, where he remained until the 17th of the following September, when he returned to his home in Kalamazoo, where he assisted his venerable father in his business during the following winter. On the 15th of February, 1896, Mr. Hillhouse again entered the employ of the Michigan Telephone Company, by which he was sent to the upper peninsula of the state to superintend the construction of lines and the installation of exchanges and toll lines, and this work demanded his attention until the 23d of March, 1897, when he again resumed work in the traffic department of the company in connection with the Detroit office, traveling throughout the lower peninsula of the state. On the 14th of September, 1897, Mr. Hillhouse went to the city of Chicago and there accepted a position in the right-of-way department of the Central Union Telephone Company, while on the 18th of the following November he was appointed manager of the office of this company at Washington Court House, Fayette county, Ohio. On the 10th of April, 1899, he was appointed assistant state superintendent of construction for the state of Ohio, with headquarters in Columbus, the capital city of the state, while on the 1st of May of the following year the Central Union Telephone promoted him to the office of district manager at Champaign, Illinois. On the 26th of November, 1901, Mr. Hillhouse accepted his present position as general manager of the Stark County Telephone Company, with headquarters in the city of Canton. He is thoroughly informed in regard to all technical points in the line of his vocation and through his efforts and capable management the utmost efficiency of service is insured, while the confidence in which he has been held in the work of his profession is amply exemplified in the responsible and important positions of which he has been incumbent. As has been previously intimated in this context, Mr. Hillhouse has shown a marked predilection for electrical work from his boyhood days, he having been associated with other boys in his native city in installing telephone lines between their respective homes, while he and his chum also entered independently into business in the installing of electrical call bells, in which line they realized a profit of eleven dollars for their first day's work. Later they also engaged in putting in wires for electric-lighting purposes, in which connection they secured the contract for wiring the court house of Kalamazoo county, their work being done after school hours, while they conducted their business under the firm name of Clarage & Hillhouse. At the Michigan state fair, held in Kalamazoo, in 1884, the young men secured the first prize for the finest electrical exhibit. During the winter which he passed at home, for the purpose of assisting his father, he was also for three months superintendent of the electrical plant in the Michigan asylum for the insane in Kalamazoo. During the two years of his residence in Big Rapids, Michigan, he also held the office of deputy city marshal. He holds membership in the Presbyterian church in his home city of Kalamazoo, having become identified with the same when but ten years of age, and in politics he has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party.

On the 4th of October, 1899, in Washington Court House, Fayette county, Ohio, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hillhouse to Miss Minnie L. Snyder, who was born in that place, being a daughter of Clarence S. and Mary Elizabeth (Bowles) Snyder, both of whom still maintain their home there. The maternal grandfather of the latter was George Cady, who was a valiant soldier in the war of 1812, being at the time a resident of the Western Reserve, Ohio. Clarence F., the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Hillhouse, was born on the 21st of June, 1900, and died on the 8th of the following March.

JOHN SHOOF was born in Canton July 23, 1835, and is a son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Ulrich) Shoof, both of whom were natives of Germany, where they were reared and educated. The father was born in the year 1798, and in his native province he learned the trade of stone cutting, to which he there devoted his attention until 1833, when he set forth to seek his fortunes in America, his future wife taking passage on the same sailing vessel, which consumed fifty-four days in making the voyage to New York city. They went thence to Hanover, Pennsylvania, where their marriage was solemnized, and in the following year they came to Canton, Ohio, where Mr. Shoof engaged in contracting and building in the line of his trade, having erected many of the substantial old buildings in this city and vicinity and having been known as a man of ability and sterling integrity. He continued in this vocation until his death, which occurred at his home, on East Second street, at the age of fifty-six years. His wife survived him and lived to attain the age of seventy-seven years. Both were devoted and consistent members of the German Reformed church and were prominent in the the early church work in Canton. Of their children we incorporate the following brief data: John is the immediate subject of this sketch; Caroline is the wife of George Grunlauf, of Canton; Mary is the wife of Anthony Francis, of Canton; Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Stuerhoff, died in this city; Eliza, the wife of Hiram Grant, also died in Canton: Amanda is the wife of William Smith, of this county; and William, who is a contractor of Canton.

The subject has passed practically his entire life in Canton, and here he received his early educational training in a log building, which is still standing, on East Fourth street, the same being known as the Orchard school house, while his first teacher was Mr. Geise, who will be remembered by many of our old citizens. He also attended German school several summers, completing his educational discipline at the age of nineteen years. At the age of fifteen years he had begun to learn the trade of brick and stone mason, under the effective direction of his father, serving a full apprenticeship and becoming a skilled artisan, that upon attaining his legal majority he was well qualified to engage in business for himself as a contractor. He has thus been consecutively identified with contracting and building here for nearly a half century, and it is needless to say that in the county are to be found many substantial and enduring monuments to his skill and fidelity in his chosen vocation. He has erected some of the largest buildings in the city of Canton, and among the number may be mentioned the following: The court house which was in use until the erection of the present building; the Eagle block, the fine residences of Mrs. Elizabeth Harter and Mrs. Cornelius Aultman, the school houses on North Cherry street, South Market street and McKinley avenue, respectively; the plant of the Bonnot Manufacturing Company and the most of the present buildings of the Aultman plant, one of the largest in this section of the state. In politics he was originally identified with the Democracy, but about fifteen years ago transferred his allegiance to the Republican party, of whose cause he has since been a staunch advocate. He is known as a public-spirited citizen, an able and progressive business man and his inflexible integrity and sincerity in all the relations of life have retained to him unqualified confidence and esteem in the city which has been his home from the time of his birth to the present. He is a prominent and valued member of the German Reformed church, in whose work he takes an active part, while his wife holds membership with the First Baptist church of Canton, with which she is prominently identified.

In Canton, on the 24th of March, 1857, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Shoof to Miss Elizabeth Houtz, who was born in this county, being a daughter of the late Henry and Elizabeth (Young) Houtz. Their children are as follows: Ida, who remains at the parental home; Charles, who is a resident of Newton Falls, this state; Austin, Homer and Percy, all of whom reside in Canton; Dora, who died at the age of eighteen years; and Emma, Stellite and Elsie, who are at the parental home.

JAMES M. MARTIN.—Rudolphus Martin, father of the subject, was born in Hagerstown, Maryland, and was a child at the time of his parents' removal to London, Pennsylvania, where he was reared to maturity and married, being there engaged in harness making until 1834, when he came to Ohio and located in Navarre, Stark county, where he entered into partnership with John Chapman and established a general store. They continued the enterprise about two years, at the expiration of which they disposed of the business and purchased a saw-mill a few miles east of the village of Louisville, this county, operating the same about four years. Mr. Martin then opened a general merchandise store in Paris, this county, eventually admitting Ezra Smith to a partnership interest. In 1847 Mr. Smith withdrew from the firm and the original owner thereafter continued the business individually until 1868, in which year he practically retired, being succeeded by his two sons, James

-M., of this sketch, and William P., who there continued the enterprise successfully until 1883, when they sold out. While living in London, Pennsylvania, Rudolphus Martin learned the trade of harness making, becoming a particularly skillful workman, and he is was who had the distinction of making the first five-ring halter ever manufactured in the United States, while he was also the first to manufacture the famous London whips, which are still in active demand and manufactured on a large scale. In Pennsylvania he was united in marriage, about 1832, to Miss Rahamah Uncles, who was born in that state. After his retirement from business Mr. Martin continued to make his home in Paris, this county, until the close of his long and useful life, his death there occurring on the 6th of April, 1882, while death did not long separate him from her who had been his cherished and devoted companion, for she followed him to the grave on the 6th of the following July, an interval of three months. Mr. Martin was converted in the Methodist Episcopal church, being ever kindly and tolerant in his judgment and ordering his life according to the golden rule. In politics he was for many years a stanch Democrat, but upon the organization of the Free-soil party he espoused its cause and was thus naturally led into the Republican ranks at the time of the organization of that party. Rudolphus and Rahamah (Uncles) Martin became the parents of five children, namely: Amanda, who is the wife of Benjamin Estep, of Canton; Thomas Benton, who died in 1857, at the age of nineteen years; Anna E., who resides in Canton; James M., the immediate subject of this sketch; and William P., who died in Canton, in December, 1901, at the age of fifty-three years.

James M. Martin, whose name initiates this sketch, was born in the village of Paris, Stark county, Ohio, on the 26th of October, 1845, and there he received his early educational discipline in the public schools, laying the foundation for that broad and exact knowledge which he has gained in the practical school of life, where the diplomas are signed by the wise headmaster, Experience. He began his business career as a clerk in his father's store, and after being thus engaged for one year, he and his brother were admitted to partnership, practically assuming control of the business, though continuing to consult with and abide by the decisions of their honored and able father, who was a careful and capable business man. In the autumn of 1877 they disposed of the business to the firm of King & Company, of Alliance, who withdrew from the establishment in 1881, whereupon the Martin Brothers resumed business at the old quarters and continued the enterprise until 1883, when they again sold out, neither of them again entering mercantile business. In 1885 the subject of this sketch removed to Kansas, where he remained two years, passing the succeeding year in the city of Chicago, and the next in Canton, after which he returned to Chicago, which continued to be his home for the succeeding five years, within which period he made many judicious investments in local real estate, and through his operations in this line realized large profits. He then returned to Canton, where he has since continued to operate successfully in the same line of enterprise, having made many investments and having done much to improve many of the properties which have come under his control, so that the result has been of marked value to the city and county. In 1895 he instituted the erection of the fine modern business block, known as the Martin, at the corner of Third and Market streets, this being one of the most important and attractive business buildings in the city. Besides a large amount of city realty Mr. Martin has interests in much valuable farm property in the county, and also in the Dakotas, while he is also the owner of valuable dock interests in the city of Duluth, Minnesota. He has shown marked discrimination and judgment in his real-estate investments, and is known as a liberal, progressive and energetic business man, while through his well directed efforts he has gained prestige as one of the substantial capitalists of Stark county and as one who is an able financier, with a distinctive facility in handling matters of wide scope and importance. In politics, though entirely without official ambition, Mr. Martin accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, keeping well informed on the questions and issues of the hour and being thoroughly fortified in his convictions in regard to matters of public import and polity.

On the 21st of August, 1884, at Topeka, Kansas, Mr. Martin was united in marriage to Miss Eleanor Redmond, of Marysville, Missouri, and she died in 1893. In 1898 he was married to Miss Emily Benson, of Des Moines, Iowa, who presides with gracious dignity over their beautiful home, which is a center of refined hospitality. Mr. Martin has no children.

HENRY COOK was born in the town of Weingarten, Baden, Germany, on the 27th of October, 1818, being the youngest of the thirteen children of Jacob Cook, who passed his entire life there, engaged in agricultural pursuits. He died in 1823, when the subject of this memoir was a mere child, his wife having passed away a few years previously. Henry was taken into the home of one of his elder sisters, who accorded him a mother's care and guidance, while he received the usual seven years of educational training in the excellent schools of his fatherland. After leaving school he served a thorough apprenticeship at the shoemaking trade, to which he there continued to devote his attention until he had attained the age of about twenty years, when, about 1838, he proceeded to Havre, France, where he embarked for America, landing in New York city in due course of time and there continuing to follow his trade for a number of years. There, on the 6th of May, 1841, he was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Janson, and about ten years later they removed to a farm in Sullivan county, New York, four children having been born to them prior to leaving the national metropolis. On this farm they continued to make their home for a term of about fifteen years, Mr. Cook being successful in his efforts and becoming one of the influential men of the community, where he served for eight years in the office of tax collector. This homestead figured as the birthplace of the other six children in the family. In 1866 Mr. Cook came with his family to Stark county, Ohio, and here he effected the purchase of the Good Intent Tavern, situated on North Cleveland avenue, one mile north of the city limits, while the property comprised seven acres of land. Mr. Cook built an addition to the hotel and otherwise improved the property, and here he conducted a very successful hotel business, the stages all stopping at the place and leaving mail and passengers, while it was the favorite stopping place for travelers from towns for miles around. Mr. Cook was of genial and kindly disposition, and his guests always found a hearty welcome and were afforded the best possible entertainment, the old tavern being one around which cluster many pleasing memories of the days long fled. He continued to occupy the house until his death, which occurred on the 24th of January, 1882, and the property is still retained by his venerable widow, who there makes her home, though the house has long been closed as a place of public entertainment. He was a worthy member of the First German Reformed church in Canton, and his wife also took a deep interest in its work, being a devoted member of the same and resigning her active labors in the church only when compelled so to do by the infirmities of advancing age, though she still retains notable mental and physical vigor and enjoys the companionship of her wide circle of friends in the community. In politics Mr. Cook ever gave a staunch support to the Democratic party.

Of the ten children of Henry and Barbara Cook we enter the following brief record: Henry, Jr., who is engaged with a street railway in Canton, married Malinda Munn and they have three children. He was born in New York city in 1842. Augustus, who was born in New York city, on the 22d of September, 1843, accompanied his parents on their removal to Sullivan county, New York, where he attended school. In 1864 he joined his maternal grandfather, Anthony Janson, in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, with whom he made his home for a number of years, in the meanwhile learning the shoemaking trade, which he followed in Canton until shortly after his marriage. He then accepted a position as carpet layer with a Canton firm, and continued to follow this line of work with different concerns, finally entering the employ of the J. O. Palmer Company, and remaining at the head of their carpet-laying department for eighteen years. He died at his home in Canton, on the 29th of April, 1900. He married Mary A. Robin, who survives him, as does their child. Charles, who was born in New York city, in 1845, at the time of the Civil war, though scarcely more than a boy, enlisted from Sullivan county as a member of a regiment of mounted rifles, with which he went to the front as a private. In a charge at the battle of Petersburg, Virginia, his horse was shot from under him, but he immediately sprung on to the back of another and soon afterward received a terrible cut across the left shoulder with a saber, and was sent to the field hospital, where his mother went to care for him as soon as she could reach his side. She remained in the field hospital for ten days and then took her wounded young hero to his home, where he died shortly afterward, sacrificing his life on the altar of his country. Elizabeth is the wife of Ulrich Huber, a successful farmer of Plain township, this county. George died at the home in Canton, at the age of fifty-one years. John remains with his mother at the old home. Constantine died at the age of five years. Julia is the wife of Thomas W. Leahy, a prosperous coal operator of Plain township. Adam died in childhood, and William F. remains at the maternal home.

Mrs. Barbara Cook, the widow of the honored subject of this memoir, was born in the town of Wendelsheim, Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, on the 19th of May, 1820, and was there reared to the age of seventeen years, when she accompanied her parents on their emigration to America, the family locating in New York city, where they resided at the time of the memorable cholera epidemic, in the thirties. She is one of the six children born to Anthony and Elizabeth (Althouse) Janson, and of the number four are living at the present time. Her father died in Van Wert, Ohio, in 1862, and his wife passed away in Canton, in 1869, both having been lifelong members of the German Reformed church.

SAMUEL F. LONAS is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born in Smoketown, Bethlehem township, on the 18th day of October, 1846. His parents John W. and Catherine (Hans) Lonas, were born, reared and married in Shenandoah county, Virginia, and about the year 1835 moved to Stark county, where the father subsequently became a large landowner and successful agriculturist. He purchased several tracts of real estate which greatly increased in value while he held them, and at one time owned three hundred and fifty acres, nearly all in cultivation. He accumulated his property by his own efforts and was a conspicuous example of the successful, self-made man of his day. He lived an honorable life, reared a large family of thirteen children and died at his home in August, 1869, his good wife preceding him to the grave two years before. For a number of years he served as justice of the peace, and by reason of his sound judgment and good common sense was frequently called upon to settle estates and attend to various other business matters for his neighbors. In early life he taught school in Virginia, and he bore the reputation of being one of the best educators and most thoroughly informed men of the community in which he lived. Religiously, he was a member of the German Reformed church, and for many years served as elder of the congregation to which he belonged, his wife also being connected with the same church. In politics he was a Democrat of the old school, and as such proved an influential factor in local affairs, doing much in a quiet way to promote the success of his party. Of the thirteen children born to John W. and Leah Lonas, five only are living, the subject of this review being the fifth of the family.

Reverting to the personal history of Samuel F. Lonas, it may be stated that he received first practical training in life on the family homestead in Bethlehem township, and that his early years were devoted to honorable toil, assisting his father and brothers to run the farm. After the crops were gathered, he attended the public schools of the neighborhood and this he kept up during the winter seasons until young manhood, meanwhile taking commendable progress in the various branches which then constituted the regular course of study. To those early years, under the tutelage of parents, whose earnest desire was to impress upon the minds and hearts of his children such principles as would insure lives of usefulness and honor, Mr. Lonas is largely indebted for the integrity of character and laudable ambition that have since marked his life and conduct. The world is full of such examples and the student of biography will experience little difficulty in recalling instances of where farm life left its impress upon some of the most noted characters known to history. In early years when the mind is taking its bent and when youthful ambitions are shaping themselves for manhood's achievements, no influence has ever been found more potent for good than that which the farm affords. Reared under such influences, it is not at all surprising that Mr. Lonas grew to the full stature of well-rounded manhood with a proper conception of life and its responsibilities, and with a well-formed purpose of making the most of his opportunities. Arriving at an age when it became necessary for him to leave home and start for himself he decided to devote his life to farming and this honorable vocation he has since pursued with success such as only comes to favored few. Without narrating in detail the various steps in his career as a progressive tiller of the soil suffice it to state that his course has been a series of continued advancements until he is now one of the largest land owners as well as one of the most enterprising agriculturists in the township in which he lives. At this time Mr. Lonas owns about four hundred acres of valuable real estate, to say nothing of the land he has recently given his children. His home place is one of the best improved and most highly cultivated farms in the county. In addition to farming, Mr. Lonas has made considerable money from his mineral property, owning at one time a mine valued at eight thousand dollars, and there are now on his place over sixty acres of valuable coal lands from which he derives a liberal income.

Mr. Lonas's life has been exceedingly active and his income as a farmer and man of affairs is without a stain. He is a Democrat in politics and an aggressive worker for his party, believing in its principles as the party for the people and ever ready to maintain the soundness of his opinions. He is now a member of the school board, in which capacity he has been mitiring in his efforts to advance the cause of education in his township, believing that knowledge universally disseminated to be the best safe guard of a free and enlightened people.

Mr. Lonas is pre-eminently a farmer and for a number of years he has labored earnestly to promote agriculture, being a prominent member of the Patrons of Husbandry and one of the leaders of the grange with which he is identified. He is also a friend of the church and an earnest advocate and liberal patron of all the movements having for their object the social and moral advancement of the community, standing firm for good government and an impartial enforcement of the law to this end. Religiously he subscribes to the creed of the German Reformed church, belonging with his wife to the congregation worshipping in Myers.

Mr. Lonas was married April 9, 1868, to Miss Frona Stoner, daughter of Jacob and Mary Stoner, of Tuscarawas township, the father a wealthy farmer and influential citizen. Eight children have been born of this union, namely: Jacob W.; Ollie L., wife of William Baughman; Ira J., Charles M., Frederick W., Samuel F. and Lillie M., and one that died in infancy unnamed. The children who have severed home ties are well settled in life, the sons being well-to-do and highly respected farmers, all but one living in the county of Stark.

CHARLES C. UPHAM.—The name borne by the subject of this review, who is a representative member of the bar of Stark county, is one which has been identified conspicuously with the history of the nation from the early epoch when the Pilgrim Fathers established their colonies in Massachusetts while the annals of the nation show that many bearing the name have become distinguished in the public and civic life of the nation, not the least of these having been the grandfather and father of the subject.

It is established that John Upham was the first to bear the name in America, and he was the progenitor of all claiming title to the same within the confines of the Union. He was a native of England and was born in Somersetshire. He came to America with what was known as the Hull colony, the same having been organized by Rev. Joseph Hull, a clergyman of the established church of England. In company with his little band of devoted followers, this worthy man set sail, on the 20th of March, 1635, from Weymouth, in old Dorset, England, for the Massachusetts Bay Colony. The company comprised twenty-one families—one hundred and five individuals,—and the little vessel arrived at its destination on the 6th of the following May. They settled at Wessagusset, which name, in memory of the port in Dorset from which they had sailed, they changed to Weymouth. John Upham was accompanied by his family, including his wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Webb; his sister Sarah and his three children. He was born in 1600 and was thus thirty-five years of age at the time of his emigration to America. On the 2d of September, 1635, he was admitted a freeman at Weymouth, which was the second colony founded after Plymouth, and he was given an allotment of land. In 1636 he was elected a representative to the general court, held in Boston, and filled this office several terms. In 1642 he was one of the six who treated with the Indians for the lawful extinguishment of their title to the lands at Weymouth, and in the following year he was elected selectman. About 1648 he removed to Malden, and was one of its original settlers, and there became a man of marked prominence and influence, having been elected selectman and held other offices. After the death of his first wife he married Katherine, widow of Angell Hollard, but all of his children were born of the first marriage. He was a deacon in a church and was a man to whose life and character his remote descendants may well look back upon with pride and satisfaction. From him the lineage is traced in direct line to the subject through the following heads of the several generations: Phineas, John, Samuel, Samuel (2d), Samuel (3d), William and William Keyes.

Samuel Upham (3d), the great-grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in Leicester, Massachusetts, in 1762, and married Patty Livermore, who was born in 1768, a daughter of Jonas Livermore, of Leicester. She was the mother of his four children, and after her death he married again, the maiden name of his second wife having been Pike. He removed to Washington county, Vermont, when the region was almost a wilderness, this being in the year 1802, and his home was one of the first in the present city of Montpelier. He served as a patriot soldier in the war of the Revolution, during which he held the rank of captain, a title by which he was afterward known. He died in West Randolph, Vermont, May 12, 1848. Of his four children the eldest was William, the grandfather of the subject.

Hon. William Upham, of Montpelier, Vermont, will stand in history as one of the distinguished and gifted sons of the nation. His was a spotless reputation and he was a leader in thought and action, his influence transcending local limitations and permeating the life of the nation. Of recondite knowledge, positive and powerful individuality, he left his impress upon his times and upon the annals of the republic. He was born in Leicester, Massachusetts, on the 5th of August, 1792. In 1814 he married Sarah Keyes, of Ashford, Connecticut, who died May 8, 1856. He was one of the foremost members of the bar of Vermont, which state he represented in the United States senate from 1841 until his death, on the 14th of January, 1853, his remains being interred in the Congressional cemetery, in Washington, where his death occurred. Washburn's History of Leicester, Massachusetts, has the following sketch:

"His father moved to Montpelier, Vermont, in 1802. William studied law with Judge Samuel Prentiss, and was admitted to the bar about 1811. He was a prominent lawyer and was elected to the United States senate in 1841, re-elected in 1847, and died at Washington, January 14, 1853. When a boy William crushed his hand in a cider mill; it was trimmed with a hatchet. Being unfitted for manual labor, it was determined to educate him. He studied at the academy in 1799 and 1800. After his admission to the bar he became a partner of Judge Prentiss. He attained high rank in his profession, being particularly successful as a jury advocate. He possessed a great share of wit and humor, and occasionally indulged in sarcasm with telling effect. He was a social, pleasant and agreeable companion, and had acquired such a degree of popular favor and confidence that when his partner was appointed district judge of the United States court Mr. Upham became his successor in the United States senate. He did not often speak in the senate, but whenever he did, it was with much force, directness and effect. He was staunch in his political opinions and commanded attention as an independent thinker and outspoken representative of New England sentiment."

Another sketch speaks as follows: "In his professional career, to which the main energies of his life were devoted, he became widely known as one of the best advocates in the state. He was one of the most successful jury lawyers to be found in any country. Never hesitating for a word, and fluent beyond example, the style of his speaking was rapid, thoroughly earnest and often highly impassioned, and so magnetic was that earnestness and seeming confidence in his case, and so skillfully wrought were his arguments, that had, indeed, must have been his side of the question if he did not command the sympathies and convictions of a good part, if not all, of the jury." At the time of his death Senator Seward said of him: "William Upham was of Vermont,—a consistent exponent of her institutions. He was a man of strong and vigorous judgment, which acted always by a process of sound, inductive reasoning, and his compeers here (in the senate) will bear witness that he was equal to the varied and vast responsibilities of the senatorial trust. He was a plain, unassuming, unostentatious man. He never spoke for display, but always for conviction. He was an honest and just man. He had gotten nothing by fraud or guilt, and so he lived without any fear of losing whatever of fortune or position he had attained. No gate was so strong, no locks so fast and firm as the watch he kept against the approach of corruption, or even undue influence or persuasion. His natural policy was the increase of industry, the cultivation of peace and the patronage of improvement. He adopted his opinions without regard to their popularity and never stifled his convictions of the truth nor suppressed their utterance through and fear or favor of faction; but he was, on the contrary, consistent and constant 'as pilot well expert in perilous wave, that to a steadfast starre his course hath bent.' " Of Mrs. Upham it is said that after her husband's death, "though of a buoyant disposition, and striving hard to bear her loss with Christian resignation, she soon began visibly to droop, and on the 8th of May, 1856, followed him to the grave." They became the parents of three sons and two daughters, of whom the eldest was William Keyes Upham, so honored in Canton and Stark county.

William Keyes Upham was born in Montpelier, Vermont, on the 3d of April, 1817, and he died in Canfield, Mahoning county, Ohio, on the 22d of March, 1865, at the age of forty-eight. He completed his literary education in the University of Vermont, at Burlington, where among his classmates were Luke P. Poland, Mat. Carpenter, Stephen A. Douglas and Thaddeus Stevens, all of whom were Vermonters and studied law in Montpelier, remaining his lifelong friends. He studied law in the office of his father, in Montpelier, and was admitted to the bar soon after attaining his majority, after which he remained in practice in his native state for several years. In April, 1845, Mr. Upham removed to New Lisbon, Ohio, where he remained until 1858, in which year he came to Canton, where he gained a large and lucrative practice, ultimately rising to the head of his profession in the state. Those who knew Mr. Upham best have ever maintained that he inherited in a large degree the talents and genius of his father. His was a valiant and loyal soul, and to such, success is a natural prerogative. He was well versed in the law and was an eloquent advocate, and was at all times kind and considerate in his dealings with the younger members of his profession. He died in Canfield, Mahoning county, while attending court at that place, and at the time the Steubenville Herald paid the following appreciative tribute to his memory: "William K. Upham, was a native of Vermont and a son of the late United States Senator Upham, of that state. He was a gentleman of fine family, education and presence, and as an attorney stood at the head of his profession in this state, ranking with Chase, Stanton, Corwin, Vinton, John A. Bingham and others. He had many noble traits,—was social, magnanimous and generous to a fault. As a man of talents he claimed our special admiration."

In Westlawn cemetery, near the city of Canton, the members of the Stark county bar erected a monument in memory of the well-rounded, symmetrical character and a name that merits a high place on the roll of distinguished dead who have lent dignity and honor to the bar of the sovereign state of Ohio.

In June, 1844, William K. Upham was united in marriage to Miss Maria Elizabeth Weeks, who was born in Stanstead, Vermont, on the 7th of March, 1822, being a daughter of William and Lucy Weeks, representatives of sterling old New England families, and who died November 5, 1894. They became the parents of five children, concerning whom we enter brief record, as follows: Sarah M., who was born in 1845, married Wallace H. Ballou and her death occurred in Kansas City, Missouri, January 26, 1882; Mattie P., born in 1848, married George Rex and died in Canton, February 3, 1888, leaving one son, Harry R. Rex, who is engaged in the practice of law at Canton, Ohio; William Keyes, Jr., is a traveling salesman, living in Cleveland, Ohio; Charles C. is the immediate subject of this review; and Mary Annette, born in 1859, is the widow of Bion L. Meredith, of Van Wert, Ohio, who died April 16, 1902.

Charles Carroll Upham, whose name introduces this brief sketch, is a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born in New Lisbon, Columbiana county, on the 1st of August, 1854. He received his early educational discipline in the public schools of Canton, being a child of about four years at the time when his parents removed hither from New Lisbon. He completed his literary education in the academy at Montpelier, Vermont, and at the age of nineteen began the study of law under the direction of Hon. George E. Baldwin, at Canton, Ohio, completing his technical discipline in 1875, at Canton, and was admitted to the bar of Ohio the same year. Since that time he has lived in Canton and continued the practice of law.

miliar with all branches of the industry. During this period he applied much of his time to study at home and also attended night school, and through his efforts gained a wide and practical knowledge, and he may well be said to be self-educated, even as he is the architect of his own fortune. At the age of sixteen years he became a member of the Fourth Battalion, Lanarkshire Rifle Volunteers, resigning from the same in the second year of his service and, deciding that his mother country was too small for all her sons, he sailed for Canada, on the 29th of May, 1873. After a short stay in that dominion he came to Stark county, Ohio, locating in the city of Massillon in June of the same year.

On Christmas day of the year 1877 Mr. Currie was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Forrest, daughter of William and Sarah (Stevenson) Forrest, who had come to America from Scotland many years before. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Currie was solemnized in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, and they forthwith came to Stark county, where he had previously established his home, as before noted. Of this union three children were born, namely: James F., who was born April 24, 1879, near Massillon, this county; William G., who was born December 11, 1881, at Newman, this county, where also was born the only daughter, Sadie M., the date of her nativity being April 17, 1884. James F. Currie has been for the past three years a reporter on the Canton Daily Repository. William Forrest, the father of Mrs. Currie, recently died at his home near Massillon, and he was at that time one of the two surviving members in this county of the old Twenty-third Ohio Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, in which the late lamented President McKinley served during the Civil war. The other survivor was the Rev. C. L. Manchester, who was pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton until 1901. The regiment was recruited through counties north of Stark, and on its membership roll were a few volunteers from this county. Dr. Manchester, as pastor of the church mentioned, there officiated at the funeral of Canton's distinguished and loved citizen, President McKinley, in September, 1901. When the late President visited his home in Canton Mr. Forrest called occasionally at his cottage to exchange greetings and to live over again the days of their military service, the President ever accorded him a most cordial welcome. The Twenty-third Ohio had within its ranks two men who later served in the chief executive office of the nation,—Hayes and McKinley. Among other members who afterward became distinguished were Hon. Stanley Matthews, once a prominent jurist of Cincinnati; General Rosecrans and Russell Hastings, all prominent among Ohio's sons. Mr. Forrest served four years in the Civil war and was wounded in the battle of Winchester, Virginia, a piece of shell, weighing exactly sixteen ounces, passing through his thigh. He enlisted with a Pennsylvania regiment and later went out with the Ohio regiment mentioned. He participated in the sanguinary conflicts of Antietam and Gettysburg and many others of the memorable battles of the great internecine war. He was six feet in height, with powerful physique, and he was seventy-four years of age at the time of his death. His remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Newman, this county.

THOMAS H. CURRIE was born in Gartsherrie, Lanarkshire, Scotland, on the 4th of June, 1855, being the youngest son of James and Janet (Henderson) Currie. He entered school at the age of five years, but owing to the exigencies and conditions which compassed his youth he left school at an early age, and for twenty years he followed mining, becoming fa-

Thomas H. Currie was made a citizen of the United States, at New Philadelphia, Ohio. He served several terms as township trustee and again as school director of Lawrence township, Stark county, and for years he was superintendent of the Sunday school at Newman, this county. Fifteen years ago he came to Canton and opened a grocery store in the west end of the city, and later he was employed at the watch factory, in the vicinity of which he became interested in real estate, acquiring a considerable amount of valuable property, his first work at the watch factory being in connection with the construction of the plant, as has been previously stated in this context. After the plant was put in operation he was employed in various capacities and was finally promoted to the position of foreman of the gold and silver refining department, having previously had laboratory experience in metallurgy with the Glasgow & Fort Washington Iron & Coal Company, in Tuscarawas county, as prospector, upon which experience he enlarged in such a way as to enable him to become a successful assayer and refiner. In the years he has been with the watch company he has assayed and refined several million dollars' worth of precious metals, including some material from the United States mints. He has taken an active interest in the time honored fraternity of Freemasons, and in the same has received the Knight Templar degrees. He was the first presiding officer of Canton Home No. 43, Home Guards of America, which has a membership of two hundred and fifty. For years he has been an officer in the First Presbyterian church. He has taken no active part in politics since coming to Canton, although his friends have repeatedly urged him to do so. Scotland, his native land, and the "bonny blue bell" are not forgotten, and when the scattered Scots come together on Caledonia days to re-sing "Auld Lang Syne" he is aye there, and the "cannie chiefs" of the Canton Burns Club have him as "keeper o' their siller" (treasurer).

DAVID HINTON claims the old Keystone state as the place of his nativity, having been born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, on the 23d of December, 1851, and being a son of James and Sarah (Barnett) Hinton, of whose nine children six are living at the time of this writing, namely: Louisa, who is the wife of Daniel Willaman, of New Berlin, this county; David, who figures as the subject of this sketch; Samuel, who resides at Middle Branch, this county; Alfred, who makes his home in the city of Cleveland; and Charles, who is a farmer of Nimishillen township. James Hinton was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated and where he learned the carpenter's trade in his youth, becoming an expert artisan in the line, and continuing to follow the same at intervals until the closing years of his life. His wife was likewise a native of Pennsylvania, being a daughter of James Barnett, who was a tailor by trade and vocation and who passed the closing years of his life in Stark county. In 1853, when our subject was but four years of age, his father removed from Bedford county, Pennsylvania, to Stark county, locating in Nimishillen township, where the family maintained their home for several years, after which they removed to Plain township, where the father purchased a farm of fifty-six acres, upon which he passed the residue of his useful and honorable life, passing away in 1900, at the venerable age of seventy-seven years, secure in the esteem of all who knew him. In politics he was a staunch supporter of the Republican party, with which he identified himself at the time of its organization, and he was a devoted member of the Church of God, as was also his cherished wife, who was summoned into eternal rest in 1895, at the age of sixty-eight years.

Under the home roof David Hinton was reared to maturity, receiving the advantages afforded by the common schools of the day and early beginning to work at the carpenter's trade under the effective direction of his honored father, who gave him most careful instruction and encouragement, so that he could claim the distinction of being a master carpenter when only seventeen years of age. Mr. Hinton was united in marriage to Miss Lucinda Stauffer, who was born in Canton township, this county, being a daughter of Jacob Stauffer, whose father was numbered among the early settlers of Stark county, with whose annals the name has been prominently and honorably identified from the pioneer epoch to the present day. To them have been born four children, of whom two survive, namely: George, who is a carpenter by vocation and a resident of Nimishillen township; and Laura, who remains at the parental home.

After his marriage Mr. Hinton purchased his present home farm, in which are comprised one hundred acres of very fertile and productive land, while upon the place he has made the best of improvements, his ability as a carpenter and builder giving assurance that no imperfect workmanship would be tolerated in the erecting of the various buildings, including the commodious and pleasant residence. Mr. Hinton still continues to work at his trade at varying intervals, his services being in requisition by many of the residents of this section, who appreciate his technical ability, his sterling integrity and his fidelity to the terms of every contract. In the matter of politics he exercises his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, of which he has been a stalwart adherent from the time of attaining his majority, though he has never sought the honors or emoluments of official preferment. He takes a lively interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community, being progressive and public-spirited at all times, and recognizing his marked eligibility, the people of the district have continuously retained him in office as school director for the past twelve years.

WILLIAM BLANK is a native of West Virginia, and the son of John and Elizabeth (Engleman) Blank, both parents born in Germany, but since 1857 residents of the United States. On coming to this country, John Blank settled in West Virginia, but after a comparatively short residence there moved to Indiana, thence, after a short time, to Stark county, Ohio, locating at Canal Fulton, with the business interests of which he has since been connected. At the present time he is engaged in the manufacture of cereal coffee and baking powder, being a large stockholder and practical manager of the French Cereal Manufacturing Company, which he assisted to organize and in the affairs of which he has since been a leading spirit. During President Cleveland's second administration he was postmaster at Canal Fulton, having been appointed to the office in recognition of his active and faithful party service, having been a pronounced Democrat ever since becoming an American citizen.

William Blank was born on the 6th day of August, 1861, and, with the exception of a few years, has spent his life in Canal Fulton, having been quite young when his parents moved to the town. After receiving a good practical education in the public schools, he decided to devote his life to business pursuits. Accordingly, when a young man, he effected a co-partnership with his brother, John P. Blank, in the grocery trade, the firm thus constituted lasting about twelve years. The Blank brothers secured a large and lucrative patronage and became the leading grocers of Canal Fulton, their prestige as active, wide-awake and eminently successful business men earning for them a reputation by no means confined to the precincts of the town in which their establishment was situated. At the expiration of the above period the partnership was dissolved, the subject engaging in general merchandising upon his own responsibility, and to this he has since devoted his time and attention with large financial gains. Mr. Blank is an accomplished business man and by successful management and fair dealing has built up a large trade, which is constantly growing in magnitude and importance. Not a little of his patronage is due to his amiable qualities and gentlemanly demeanor, characteristics which have much to do in winning friends and gaining public confidence. In addition to his mercantile business, he is interested in various other enterprises, among which is the French Cereal Manufacturing Company, of which he is now president. As already stated, Mr. Blank has held several official positions, having served four years as town clerk, and at the present is discharging the duties of treasurer of Canal Fulton. He also held the important position of treasurer of the Street Fair Association, in which, as in other offices referred to, he displayed ability of a high order and discharged worthily every duty incumbent upon him. At this time Mr. Blank is secretary of the Catholic Mutual Benevolent Association, with which organization he has been identified for several years in various other capacities; he is an active and influential factor in the social, fraternal and business interests of the place of his residence. In politics he is an uncompromising supporter of the Democratic party and has contributed much to its success not only in municipal and county affairs, but in state and national campaigns as well.

Mr. Blank was married, in 1883, to Miss Hattie Pfffer, who was born in Canal Fulton in 1866, the daughter of August and Julia Pfffer, natives of Germany. The father was for a number of years proprietor of a hotel in Canal Fulton, where his death took place in 1898. To Mr. and Mrs. Blank have been born two children: Bertha, a bright young lady of fifteen, to whom is accorded the honor of being the youngest person ever graduated from the Canal Fulton high school, and Arnold, who is now pursuing his studies in the same institution. Mr. Blank and family are devoted members of the Catholic church, being among the leading workers and liberal supporters of the congregation at Canal Fulton.

WALLACE S. FOULKS.—The history of the Foulks family in the United States dates from the colonial period and the name appears in connection with the great struggle which resulted in American independence. According to the most authentic information obtainable the Doctor's great-great-grandfather on the paternal side was William, a native of Germany. He came to America prior to the war of the Revolution and when the colonists revolted espoused their cause and bore a distinguished part until the Briton was driven from our shores. He also proved his loyalty to his adopted country by fighting her hereditary foe from 1812 to 1815, having served in a Pennsylvania regiment during that war. He is supposed to have first settled in Massachusetts, moving thence to New York and later to Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, where he followed the life of a farmer until his death, which occurred about the year 1835. The subject's great-great-grandfather was William, a native of Philadelphia, born June 10, 1770, married Elizabeth Morgan, born September 8, 1771. William died September 3, 1833, and his wife June 6, 1845. The issue of their union was as follows: Nancy, who married a Mr. Fisher, born October 22, 1791, died May 16, 1858; John, born June 10, 1793, at Darlington, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania; Sallie, born February 12, 1796, died January 1, 1856; Charles, born July 26, 1798, died April 4, 1872; William, born June 27, 1800, died June 3, 1879; Elizabeth, born August 25, 1802; Jessie, born June 27, 1804; Mary, born July 18, 1806, died April 28, 1845; Matilda, born September 20, 1808, died August 25, 1852; Jacob, born June 19, 1810, died March 20, 1811; Minnie, born December 20, 1818, married a Mr. Stephenson, of near Mansfield, Ohio, and they have four children. John Foulks, the subject's great-grandfather, was born in Westmoreland county, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1793, and, like his father, devoted his life to the pursuit of agriculture. When a young man he came to eastern Ohio, settling at Moultrie, Columbiana county, where shortly after his arrival he married a widow of the name of Mary Hassler, daughter of William Sleutz, who was also a native of Pennsylvania. John Foulks entered a section of land on which he built a small log cabin and lived the life of a pioneer, sharing in all the hardships and vicissitudes of the early times. He developed a fine farm, accumulated a large estate and became one of the enterprising men of the community in which he lived. He died in 1878, where he originally settled, his wife preceding him to the grave in 1869. The following are the names of the children born to John and Mary Foulks: Lafayette, of whom a more extended notice will be found in another paragraph; Mrs. Minerva Vink, born August 7, 1834; William, born May 8, 1836, died in 1893, a soldier of the late Civil war; his widow, formerly Miss Angeline Nunermaker, resides at New Franklin; Milton, born August 25, 1838, also a veteran of the Rebellion, died at Dunkirk, Indiana, in 1901; John M., born June 5, 1840, served in the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteers in the Civil war, married Elizabeth Jones and now lives at New Franklin, Ohio; Theodore Shannon, born March 29, 1842, was likewise a soldier, and at this time lives at Butte, Montana, a single man; Calvin, born April 15, 1845, a member of the One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Infantry in the Civil war, married Maggie Jones and makes his home at Albion, Michigan.

Lafayette Foulks, the oldest of the above children, was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, December 24, 1832. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, attended at intervals when a boy the old fashioned schools of the times and made farming his life work. In 1851 he married Miss Nancy Whiteleather, who was born in Columbiana county in the year 1836, the daughter of David and Elizabeth (Firestone) Whiteleather, natives respectively of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, and Wooster, Ohio. David Whiteleather came to this state in an early day and died in New Chambersburg, Ohio, about the year 1877. The Firestones moved to Ohio from Wayne county, Pennsylvania.

After his marriage Lafayette Foulks moved to a farm in the vicinity of Moultrie, Columbiana county, and there lived and prospered until his death, in 1889. Like his brothers, he too responded to the country's call in the dark days of the Rebellion, enlisting in Company D, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Infantry, of which he was made second lieutenant at Columbus and later, for brave and meritorious conduct, was promoted first lieutenant. He acted in the latter capacity until the close of the war and returned home after spending three and a half years in the service of his country. In politics he was originally a Whig, but afterwards became a Republican, of which party all the male members of the Foulks family have been earnest supporters. He was a zealous communicant of the Methodist church, as was also his wife, and as a man and citizen he commanded the esteem and confidence of the community in which nearly all of his life was spent. Lafayette and Nancy Foulks reared the following children: Marion C., M. D.; David W., born December 15, 1859, resides in Indianapolis, Indiana, married Frances Harrison, now deceased; William L., born March 30, 1866, died September 29, 1900, married Alpha Shively; Elizabeth, born March 29, 1862, married D. E. Lower, of Columbiana county, Ohio.

Marion C. Foulks, M. D., was born May 15, 1852, in Columbiana county, Ohio, and spent his early years on his father's farm, meanwhile, as opportunities afforded, attending the common schools. He was an apt pupil, as may be inferred from the fact of his having successfully passed the required examination for a teacher's license when but thirteen years of age, perhaps the youngest person in the state to receive such an instrument. Mr. Foulks taught school for seven successive years, but in 1873 abandoned educational work for the purpose of reading medicine, entering the office of Drs.

Firestone and Carey at Salem, Ohio. Subsequently he became a student of the medical department of Wooster University, from which institution he was graduated in 1876, and immediately thereafter began the practice of his profession at North Georgetown, Columbiana county, where he remained during the ensuing ten years. Dr. Foulks built up an extensive practice in and around North Georgetown and in due time became one of the leading physicians and surgeons in that section of the state.

In 1886 he opened an office in Canton, and since that time has practiced in this city and adjacent country with a large measure of professional and financial success. His career has been one of uninterrupted prosperity, and today he occupies a commanding position among the medical men of eastern Ohio. He is now the consulting physician of the Aultman Hospital, and as a member of the Stark County Academy of Medicine, Canton Medical Society, North eastern Ohio Medical Society, and the State Medical Association, he has done much to advance the standard of professional efficiency in this part of the country. Fraternally Dr. Marion C. Foulks is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and an active worker in the Improved Order of Red Men. He is a pronounced Republican in politics, yet he has never held political office nor aspired to public distinction, although active in promoting the interests of his party and ever ready to maintain the soundness of his opinions. Religiously he was reared a Methodist, but in matters of faith entertains liberal views, believing all churches to be potent instrumentalities for good if properly conducted. The Doctor was married, at New Alexander, Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1873, to Miss Frances A. Lower, whose birth occurred in that town on the 4th day of July, 1856. Mrs. Foulks is the daughter of Michael and Nancy (Smith) Lower, both natives of the county of Columbiana, their respective ancestors having moved to that part of the state from central Pennsylvania. Dr. and Mrs. Foulks have two children, namely: Anna M., educated in Canton public schools, graduated from the high school and from the Canton Business College; Wallace, S., M. D.

Dr. Wallace S. Foulks, to a brief review of whose life and professional career the reader's attention is herewith respectively invited, was born June 1, 1875, in Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio. When he was an infant his parents moved to North Georgetown and there he lived until about fourteen years of age, meanwhile beginning his education as a pupil in the village schools. He continued his studies at the above place until the family came to Canton, after which he attended the city schools until his nineteenth year and then entered his father's office to begin his preliminary preparation for the medical profession. In due time under his father's able direction he was ready to enter upon a more thorough course of instruction, and accordingly he became, in 1894, a student of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and after attending that celebrated institution the greater part of three years was graduated in 1897 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

In October of the latter year Dr. Foulks began practicing at his present quarters in Canton and since that time has made rapid advancement, enjoying today worthy prestige among the successful professional men of the city and county. He prepared himself for his life work under some of the ablest medical talent on the continent, and, availing himself of every opportunity for advancement, has gradually forged to the front, gaining an honorable distinction and a liberal share of patronage. He is a young man of fine intellectual and professional attainments, a student and a thinker, and thus far his laudable ambition to excel has been crowned with most encouraging success. In common with the enterprising and progressive members of the profession everywhere he seeks the association of those similarly engaged, and accordingly his name is found in the records of the Canton Medical Society, the Stark County Academy of Medicine, and other medical organizations, whose object is the advancement of a higher standard of excellence among those whose lives and energies are being devoted to the alleviation of human suffering. Realizing that to political parties are entrusted the government of the state and nation, he gives his support to the party which in his judgment best meets the requirements of the people and that most nearly subserves their interests, and believing the Republican party best calculated to meet these ends he has been pronounced in his allegiance thereto since old enough to read and investigate intelligently, and he is now one of its younger leaders in the city of Canton. The Doctor is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal church of this city and in his fraternal relations belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Eagles, Knights of Honor, Home Guards, Royal Templars and Woodmen of the World. He is a married man and has a pleasant home in Canton, presided over by a lady of culture and refinement who became his wife in this city on the 29th day of June, 1899. The maiden name of Mrs. Foulks was Florence M. Rockhill and she is the daughter of Samuel H. and Margaret (Smith) Rockhill. To them has been born a son, Raymond, born March 6, 1903.

JOSEPH L. REED, M. D.—In the veins of Dr. Reed is mingled the blood of the sturdy Irish and Scotch races, blood that has contributed as much if not more than any other to the strength and firmness of our composite national life. His grandfather, William F. Reed, a native of North Ireland, came to the United States a number of years ago, a single man, and settled in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, where he met a young lady by the name of Susan Wyandt, who afterwards became his wife. Her parents migrated to Stark county, Ohio, when there was but a single log cabin on the present site of Canton, and entered a tract of land in what is now the township of Sugar Creek. They were joined a little later by another family of Wyandts, accompanied by William F. Reed, the little company making their way from Pennsylvania to what was then the far west in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen. Mr. Reed went to work as a farm hand, assisting his future father-in-law and others in clearing and preparing their lands for cultivation. After his marriage with Susan Wyandt he also settled in Sugar Creek township, cleared a farm and lived on the same until his death, at the age of fifty-six years. His wife survived him for some time, departing this life when about seventy-eight years old.

Henry Reed, son of William F. and Susan Reed, was born on the old farmstead in the township of Sugar Creek, October 2, 1846, spent his early days beneath the parental roof and at the early age of seventeen joined an Ohio regiment to fight for the preservation of the Union. He entered the service of the country in 1862, and at the expiration of his period of enlistment veteranized in the Nineteenth Ohio Regiment of Infantry, and remained in the army until the close of the Rebellion. After the war, he resumed agricultural pursuits in his native township and in 1867 was united in marriage to Miss Mary Shunk, whose birth occurred in Stark county, Ohio, on the 25th of December, 1848. Michael Shunk, father of Mrs. Reed, was a native of Pennsylvania, as was also his wife, who bore the maiden name of Christiana Putman, both coming from the county of Westmoreland. The grandfather of Mrs. Shunk, Gabriel Putman, is said to have been the first permanent white settler in the southern part of Stark county, taking up there three hundred and sixty acres of land and locating on the same where the country was an unbroken wilderness. He became a well-to-do man and worthy citizen, accumulated a large estate and died in 1888 at the advanced age of ninety years. At the time of his death he had two brothers and a sister, the youngest being eighty-two years old.

Not long after Henry Reed's marriage he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in what is now known as the "Rocks" and continued to live there and prosper until 1870, when he disposed of his place and formed a partnership with D. W. Rush in the manufacture of furniture at the then town of Milton, now Wilmore. Two years later their shop was destroyed by fire, but they immediately rebuilt and continued the business under the firm name of Rush & Reed, until September, 1882, when the latter withdrew, but did not dispose of his entire interest until three years later. In 1885 Mr. Reed purchased the old Gilbert farm in Sugar Creek township and disposing of a part of the land for the purpose of erecting buildings made the place one of the finest and most valuable of its area in that part of the county. He still makes his home on this farm and is deservedly classed among the most successful agriculturists as well as one of the most intelligent and enterprising citizens of the community in which he resides. He and his good wife are now practically retired and enjoying the well-earned fruits of their many years of toil and honorable endeavor. In politics Henry Reed is a staunch Republican and as such has been elected to several local offices, including that of township trustee, in which he is now serving his second term. He was a member of the local school board for a period of fourteen years, during which time he did much to promote the educational interests of his township. Fraternally he is an active member of Wilmore

Post No. 384, Grand Army of the Republic, and religiously belongs to the Protestant Methodist church, as does also his wife.

Dr. Joseph L. Reed, the only child of his parents, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, June 25, 1868, and when he was two years old his parents removed to the town of Wilmot, Stark county. His early advantages were similar to those enjoyed by the majority of country and village lads, and the public schools afforded him the means of acquiring a good education. He was graduated from the Wilmot high school in 1885 and immediately thereafter began teaching, in which profession he made a reputation second to that of few of his fellow educators in the county of Stark. He entered this field of endeavor at the age of seventeen and from that time forward relied entirely upon his own resources not only for a livelihood but for carrying to successful issue the plans for his future course of action. While teaching he spent his vacations at Mt. Union College and in this way succeeded in working his way through that institution, graduating in 1891 with the degree of Bachelor of Science.

During the three years following the completion of his collegiate course Dr. Reed served as superintendent of the Navarre public schools, meantime, on the 8th day of January, 1892, being united in marriage to Miss Mildred Shorb, daughter of James and Adelaide Shorb, of Canton. Although well qualified by nature and intellectual training for school work, Dr. Reed did not see fit to spend his life in the educational field, but had he done so there is no doubt that he would have achieved marked success both as a teacher and manager of schools. In 1894 he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, not as an end, but as a means to an end, as he had long contemplated preparing himself for another calling more in harmony with his tastes and much more remunerative from a financial point of view,— the medical profession. Yielding to this desire, he entered in the fall of 1894 the Ohio Medical University, at Columbus, and there prosecuted his studies with great assiduity until 1897, on April 17th of which year he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Unlike many young physicians who choose for their first location some small village or remote country town, Dr. Reed at once selected a larger field, opening an office in May, 1897, at No. 430 South Market street, Canton. His reputation as a capable physician and surgeon soon became known and almost from the beginning his practice has been large and lucrative. He now ranks with the able medical men of the city, stands high in the estimation of the public and spares no pains to keep in touch with the trend of modern thought in all matters relating to his chosen calling. For two years he served as physician for the county infirmary and discharged the duties of the position in a manner highly creditable to himself and satisfactory to all concerned. He is identified with the Stark County Medical Society and the Canton Medical Society, and is regarded by older physicians as one of the promising medical men of the future.

Dr. Reed belongs to several benevolent and fraternal societies, among which are Clinton Lodge No. 47, Free and Accepted Masons, at Massillon; Garfield Lodge, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and Lodge No. 26, Protected Home Circle, the last two in Canton. He is keenly alive to the great public questions of the day, national and international, and as a stanch supporter of the Republican party takes an active interest in political matters, but not as an aspirant for official honors.

WILLIAM G. MYERS was a native son of the Buckeye state, having been born June 7, 1820, in Chippewa township, Wayne county, the son of Peter and Sarah (Miller) Myers.

His father was born in Rensselaer county, New York, while his mother was a native of Cumberland county, Pennsylvania. They both removed to Ohio, were married and located on the farm where the subject was born. William G. Myers is indebted to the common schools of Summit and Stark counties, Ohio, for his mental discipline and made good use of such opportunities as were afforded him, acquiring a good practical education. At the early age of sixteen years he was bound out to a cabinet maker and carpenter and learned those trades. Upon attaining his majority he commenced business on his own account, erecting houses and barns and doing such other jobs as came to him. He was a good workman and generally found plenty of work awaiting him. His proficiency in the branches of learning then taught in the common schools had secured for him a license to teach and while still occupied at the trade of carpenter he put in his winters in the school room. His time was thus occupied until about the time of his marriage, in 1823, when he gave up the carpenter trade and commenced farming, continuing as before to teach school during the winter months. While engaged in his pedagogical labors he had been associated with several literary societies and took quite an active part in the debates and discussions of these societies, religious, scientific and political topics, engaging their attention. He acquired considerable skill as a debater and gained a reputation as a man who possessed definite and well founded ideas on questions affecting public interests and who was able to defend his convictions when opportunity offered. He was among the earliest anti-slavery, temperance and female suffrage advocates in his section of the country, and to his discussion at that time of the great questions which then confronted the nation he ascribed his taste for the study of law, to which he subsequently applied himself. He commenced, in 1848, the reading of the underlying principles of law, and after due examination was admitted to practice at the bar, which profession he successfully followed for fifty years. He continued his farming interests until 1871, when he removed to Canal Fulton, Stark county, and continued the practice of his profession until in February, 1902, when he received the appointment as postmaster of Canal Fulton, and is now performing the duties of that office. By the exercise of sound judgment, good business methods and a uniform courtesy to all the patrons of the office, he won the firm confidence and strengthened himself in the good will of all, regardless of political lines.

Mr. Myers had a creditable military record, having enlisted, in September, 1862, in Company G. One Hundred Twentieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which company he was commissioned captain. The regiment was first encamped at Mansfield and from there was sent to Vicksburg. They took part in the most arduous campaigns and marches of the Civil war and participated in several sanguinary conflicts, in all of which the subject nobly bore his part of the hardships and privations incident to the life of a soldier. Politically he was a Republican from the organization of the party in 1856 and took an active part in all the campaigns of the party for thirty years, having stumped the counties of Wayne, Stark, Medina, Summit and Holmes, and doing much other effective work in a political way. He was a forceful yet pleasing speaker and his words always carried conviction to the minds of his hearers. He kept alive his old army associations through his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, and was at one time commander of his post. Religiously he was identified with the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he was an active and consistent member for sixty years.

William G. Myers was united in marriage in Lawrence township, Stark county, Ohio, to Miss Sarah J. Hardgrove, the daughter of a well known and prominent farmer of that township. The union was a most felicitous one and was blessed with six children, four sons and two daughters, namely: John W., William N., George W., Richard F., Mary M. and Rosa. They also have eighteen grandchildren. Mr. Myers, by a life of right living and strenuous endeavor, earned a warm place in the hearts of all who knew him. He was a devout lover of the pure, true and good, and was ever ready to encourage that which is worthy and to support that which is best. All found in him a friend and helper, and many were the expressions of sorrow and sincere regret when he died, the sad event occurring on the 14th of January, 1903.

LEWIS D. BLANCHARD, D. V. S.—Daniel August Blanchard, father of the Doctor, was born in Switzerland, where he was reared and educated, the date of his nativity having been 1825. As a young man he severed the home ties and set forth to seek his fortunes in America, arriving in due course of time in the city of New York, whence he made his way directly to Ohio, locating at Mount Eaton, Wayne county, where he entered a claim to a tract of wild land, which he reclaimed from the forest and which he eventually developed into one of the many fine rural estates of that section of the commonwealth. He was progressive, energetic and ambitious, had faith in the final outcome of his efforts, and in view of his present position none can doubt the wisdom of his course nor the consistency of his early confidence in what the future had in store in connection with the agricultural resources of the Buckeye state. In Wayne county, he was united in marriage to Miss Julia Dodez, a daughter of Louis Dodez, an early and honored settler of that section. The parents of the subject still reside on the old homestead, which is doubly endeared to them by the memories and associations of the past, and both are zealous and devoted members of the French Reformed church, with which they have been prominently identified for many years. In politics Daniel A. Blanchard formerly gave his support to the Democratic party, but since the organization of the Prohibition party, with whose principles his ideas are in thorough harmony, he has exercised his franchise in favor of the same. To him and his devoted and cherished wife were born four children, namely: Ellen, who is the wife of R. V. B. Pinkerton, of Canton; Lewis D., who figures as the subject of this review; Alli E., who is associated with the subject in business; and Flora, who died, at the parental home, in 1883, at the age of nineteen years.

Lewis D. Blanchard was born on the old homestead farm, in Wayne county, Ohio, on the 7th of September, 1858, and he was reared to manhood under the invigorating discipline of the great basic art of agriculture,—an influence which makes for both mental and physical vigor, as the history of the American Republic has demonstrated in a most significant way. He attended the district school in the vicinity of his home until he had attained the age of eighteen years, and thereafter was for two terms a student in the high school at Wooster, after which he resumed his labors on the home farm. At the age of twenty-one he went to Toronto, Canada, where he was matriculated in the Ontario Veterinary College, where he completed the prescribed course—a most thorough and exacting one—and where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1882, receiving his degree as Doctor of Veterinary Surgery. Immediately after his graduation Dr. Blanchard returned to Ohio, and in May of the same year located in Canton, at his present headquarters, where he established himself in the active practice of his profession. He soon secured a representative patronage, his skill and thorough scientific knowledge insuring his definite precedence from the start, and he is recognized as one of the most able veterinarians in the state. He is a great lover of that noble animal, the horse, and thus takes marked satisfaction in this feature of his work. He was for a time located, for varying intervals, at other points in the city, but returned to his original quarters in 1887, and here he has since remained. In that year he entered into a partnership with his brother and George W. Heldenbrand, in the livery, undertaking and transfer business, under the firm name of Miller, Blanchard & Company, and this association has since continued, while the business has grown to be one of the most important of the sort in the city, the firm having modern and complete facilities and equipments and being able to handle all work in the various departments to the satisfaction of their patrons. The business has so increased in scope and importance as to place a demand upon the subject for the major portion of his time and attention, and he has to a large degree abandoned the practice of his profession, though his interposition in this line is frequently in requisition in consultation and in critical cases.

In politics Dr. Blanchard gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, in whose cause he has been an active and efficient worker, having served as delegate to the various conventions of the party in the county and congressional district, and having frequently been also a delegate-at-large to state conventions. He has never sought official preferment, but his interest in the work of education, and his marked eligibility, led to his being twice elected a member of the board of education of Canton, in which capacity he served for two full terms, proving a valuable member of the body, while he received a large majority on the occasion of each election. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, in the former of which he is past exalted ruler of Canton Lodge No. 68, of Canton, which he represented as a delegate to the meeting of the national grand lodge of the order in Cincinnati (1896) and Minneapolis (1897). His religious faith is that of the French Reformed church, and he holds membership in the church at Mount Eaton, near his birthplace.

In the city of Canton, on the 26th of March, 1891, Dr. Blanchard was united in marriage to Miss Laura B. Milhoff, daughter of Frank Milhoff, of this city, where she was born and reared. Dr. and Mrs. Blanchard have two children, Florence, who was born on the 4th of May, 1893, and Donald L., born in April, 1903. Their home is a center of generous and refined hospitality and they are prominent in the social life of their home city.

JOHN F. FARBER was born in Pike township, Stark county, on the 22d of November, 1834, and there his youthful days were passed on the parental homestead, while it is needless to say that he early became familiar with the manifold details which entered into the reclamation and cultivation of a pioneer farm, this formative period in his life being one which has had its influence upon his entire subsequent career, since he then learned the value of consecutive endeavor and to appreciate the sturdy self-reliance and independence which are ever begotten under such circumstances and environments. His initial scholastic discipline was received in the little district school, and he continued his efforts in this line until he had acquired a good common-school education. But ere proceeding farther with a consideration of his personal career, we may well revert to the ancestral history. His father, the late James Farber, was likewise a native son of Ohio, and his was the distinction of having been the first white child born in Sandy township, Tuscarawas county, where he was ushered into the world on the 1st of March, 1808, being a son of John Farber, who emigrated to Ohio in 1806. He located in Tuscarawas county, where he took up a tract of land in the midst of the dense forest, there instituting the work of reclamation and thus contributing his quota as one of the founders and builders of a great commonwealth. He there passed the remainder of his life, and thence, as a young man, his son James, father of the subject, came to Stark county, becoming one of the first settlers in Pike township, where he had the opportunity of repeating the pioneer experiences of his earlier years, though with the added responsibilities implied in becoming the head of a family and dependent upon his own resources. He married Miss Caroline A. Weaver, who was born in the old Empire state of New York, on the 17th of July, 1815. They continued to make their home in Pike township until their deaths, and in their later years were permitted to enjoy the comforts and the rest which are the fitting crown of years of earnest and indefatigable endeavor. On the 21st of February, 1890, death set its seal upon the mortal lips of this noble woman, and her loved companion did not long survive her loss, his death occurring on the 2d of the following June, at the age of nearly eighty-three years, while she was in her seventy-sixth year at the time of her death. This worthy couple became the parents of seven children, namely: John F., the immediate subject of this sketch; Isabella, who became the wife of John Kiefer and who died in Carroll county, this state; Emma, who died at the age of about two years; Oliver, who is a farmer in Osnaburg township; Philip, who is individually mentioned elsewhere in this work; Abigail, who is the wife of Franklin Neuhouse, of Pike township; and Betsey, living in Sandy township. In politics the father of these children was a Democrat, and both he and his wife were members of the United Brethren church.

John F. Farber, the immediate subject of this sketch, continued to assist in the work of the homestead farm until he had attained the age of twenty-seven years, when he removed from his native township to Rose township, Carroll county, where he made his home from 1863 until 1890, having been one of the successful farmers of that county. He then returned to Pike township and purchased his present fine homestead, which includes one hundred and sixty-eight acres, with the best of permanent improvements and maintained under effective cultivation. In addition to carrying on diversified farming Mr. Farber also devotes no little attention to the raising of live stock of high grade. He is progressive and methodical, and thus has ever been able to secure the best returns from his labors, while his sterling integrity of character and his genial personality have gained to him the esteem and good will of all with whom he has come in contact in the various relations of life. In politics he accords allegiance to the Democratic party, and he has never been unmindful of the duties of citizenship, but has shown a proper interest in local affairs of a public nature, though he has never been imbued with a desire for official preferment. His interest in the cause of education, however, led to his election to the office of school director, of which he has been incumbent for several years. He is a consistent member of the United Brethren church at Magnolia, of which his wife likewise was a member, exemplifying her deep Christian faith in the daily walks of a life that was one of intrinsic purity and beauty.

In Pike township, on the 15th of April, 1860, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Farber to Miss Harriet Flora, who was born in this township, on the 31st of January, 1839, being a daughter of the late George and Hannah (Bowman) Flora, honored pioneers of this county, where the death of both occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Farber became the parents of three children, namely: Emma E., who is the wife of Franklin Seaman, of Carroll county; Franklin F., who married Laura Wadsworth and who is now engaged in stock dealing in Carroll county; and Philip F., who married Mary E. Crooks and who is now devoting his attention to farming in Sandy township, Tuscarawas county. The great loss and sorrow in the life of the honored subject was that entailed by the death of his cherished wife, who passed away, at the present homestead, on the 6th of February, 1897. Hers was a noble and gracious womanhood, and her kindness and unvarying sympathy for those in any way afflicted, in mind, body or estate, gained to her the love of all who came within the sphere of her personal influence, while to those who were of the immediate family and who represented her dominating interest, remains the greatest appreciation of her beautiful character, while in this memory is found the measure of consolation which robs death of its sting. In the cemetery near his farm Mr. Farber has erected a beautiful mausoleum, and here the remains of the loved wife and mother are laid to rest, safeguarded until the glorious resurrection is again typified.

CHARLES THEODORE CARLSON is a native of Sweden, having been born in the town of Carlsborg, on the 3d of March, 1863, and being a son of Carl Abraham Stong, who is a tailor by vocation and who still resides in Sweden, the name of our subject being Carlson, in accordance with the custom of his native land, which gives to the sons the surname from the father's Christian name. The mother of the subject is also still living, her maiden name having been Anna Caisa Peterson. This worthy couple became the parents of five children, of whom three are living, while of the number two are residents of the United States. Charles T. Carlson was educated in the schools of his native land, where he remained until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when he severed the home ties and emigrated to America, landing in New York city, a stranger in a strange land and with no knowledge of the language of the country, while his financial resources were very limited. The problem was one which would have daunted a less valiant soul, but Mr. Carlson had the self-reliant spirit which begets success, while he stood ready to turn his hand to any honest work which offered. Owing to his youthful appearance he could find no work in the national metropolis, and he then went up the Hudson river and secured employment on a farm, remaining one month, at the expiration of which he returned to the city for the purpose of seeking other work. There he met John D. Locke, a manufacturer of tinware, and this gentleman gave him employment about his residence, and about five months later his employer suggested he enter his establishment and learn the tinner's trade. Mr. Carlson gladly accepted the proposition so kindly made, and in Mr. Locke's factory, at White-stone, Long Island, he served an apprenticeship of four years at the trade, and then served an additional period of fourteen months at the plumber's trade, while during this time he attended night school at College Point, Long Island, being anxious to properly learn the English language and to otherwise supplement his educational training, in order that he might be the better prepared to face the battle of life in the land of his adoption. In the institution mentioned he secured a diploma in mechanical drawing, becoming specially skilled in this line. After leaving the Locke establishment Mr. Carlson was placed in charge of the metal department of the shops of the Long Island Railroad Company, where he remained two years, after which he went to Memphis, Tennessee, where he secured the position of foreman in the shops of the H. Wetter Manufacturing Company, in which connection he so thoroughly proved his ability and fidelity that at the expiration of two years he was made superintendent of the factory, which incumbency he retained sixteen years, at the expiration of which, in July, 1901, he came to Canton and accepted his present position, in which his discriminating and efficient efforts have met with appreciation and have done much to conserve the best interests of the concern with which he is identified. In politics Mr. Carlson exercises his franchise in support of the principles of the Republican party, and his religious faith is indicated in his holding membership in the First Presbyterian church, of which his wife also is a member. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Royal Arcanum, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men.

On the 16th of January, 1902, Mr. Carlson was united in marriage to Miss Mary Althouse, a daughter of George W. and Susan (Baum) Althouse, of Canton.

JOSEPH A. MEYER was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, being a son of Col. Frank Meyer, who was an official in the service of the government and whose wife at the time of her marriage to Colonel Meyer was a widow. After the death of her second husband she came to Canton and here established her home and passed the remainder of her life. In the public schools the subject of this memoir received his early educational discipline, and in preparing for the active responsibilities of life he served an apprenticeship at the jeweler's trade under the direction of a man named Fry, the pioneer jeweler of Canton. When Mr. Fry finally removed from Canton Mr. Meyer succeeded to his business, his original location having been on the site of the present Folwell block. There he continued to conduct a very profitable business for a long term of years, becoming one of the prominent merchants and influential citizens of Canton, and eventually he provided more commodious and attractive quarters for his establishment, by erecting an attractive and substantial brick building, with front of Berea stone, just to the north of his former location. Here he continued to carry forward the enterprise, which was the most important of the sort in the city, until he finally retired from active business, having by good management and scrupulous integrity and fair dealing attained a competence. He was the owner of one hundred and thirteen acres of the original Meyer's estate, at Meyer's lake, this county, and this greatly appreciated in value under his control. His death occurred on the 7th of June, 1887. He was a man of generous and kindly nature, had marked sagacity in business and was essentially public-spirited, taking a deep interest in all that conserved the welfare and progress of the city which was his home for so many years and in which he held the implicit confidence of all who knew him. In politics he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, and his religious faith was that of the Episcopalian church.

Mr. Meyer was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Bleck, who was born in Pennsylvania and who died about 1885. Of this union were born the following named children: Frank C., who died in Canton, at the age of about forty years; Joseph A., who died at Bagdad, Turkey, was a graduate of the Boston School of Technology, and was engaged in the work of his profession at the time of his death; Winifred, who was a teacher in a school for the deaf; John M. is a dentist, residing in Tacoma, Washington; and Carrie is the wife of Otto Ryan, of New York. On the 1st of September, 1886, Mr. Meyer consummated a second marriage, being then united to Mrs.

Frances C. Cross, widow of Samuel F. Cross, and of this second marriage no children were born. Mrs. Meyer survives her honored husband and, as has been already stated, resides in Canton. She was born in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 1st of June, 1838, and her parents died while she was an infant. She was taken into the home of the Rev. Thomas Childress and was accorded the devoted care that would have been given by her own parents. Rev. Childress' wife, Phoebe, nee Perry, was a lineal descendant of Commodore Perry and was a noble Christian woman. Mrs. Meyer was thus favored in being reared in a home of marked culture and refinement, and at the time she was taken by these worthy folk they were residing in Butler county, Ohio, Rev. Childress being a clergyman of the Baptist church. After a few years they removed to Preble county, and Mr. Childress assumed pastoral charge of the church at Winchester, where Mrs. Meyer received her early educational training in the public schools, being graduated in the high school. Her foster parents were very kind and devoted and afforded her every advantage in their power to provide, and she holds their memories in the deepest affection and veneration. Mr. Childress gave a full half century to the work of the Christian ministry, and in the early days he traveled from place to place on horseback, looking after the spiritual welfare of the pioneer settlers in the isolated sections of the state. He enjoyed great popularity in southwestern Ohio and was an ever welcome guest in all the best homes of that section. He died at Winchester, Preble county, about the beginning of the Civil war, passing away in the fullness of years and well earned honors. His wife passed most of the remainder of her life in the home of her foster child, Mrs. Meyer, her death occurring in Canton in 1872.

Mrs. Meyer has been thrice married. In 1854, at Winchester, Ohio, she became the wife of Henry Clawson, who was born in that town, being the son of Randolph and Nancy (Weaver) Clawson, the latter of whom was a daughter of Judge Weaver, one of the honored pioneers of the southwestern part of the state. He was a young man of sterling character. He died at the age of twenty-three years, leaving his young widow with one child, Leonard E., who was born in Winchester, on the 8th of December, 1855 and who is now a successful business man of San Francisco, California, where his mother has visited him on four different occasions, so that she has made eight trans-continental trips. In Winchester, on the 16th of July, 1858, Mrs. Meyer was a second time married, becoming the wife of Samuel F. Cross, who was born near Oneida, Carroll county, Ohio, and who was engaged in the hardware business at Winchester at the time of his marriage, and there he remained until the spring of 1861, when with his wife and little daughter he came to Canton, where he maintained his home until his death, on the 23d of February, 1874, having been for many years a traveling salesman. In politics Mr. Cross was a staunch Republican and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mrs. Meyer has long been a devoted member. By her second marriage she became the mother of two children, Mary Luella, who was born in Winchester, Preble county, on the 16th of April, 1859, and who is now the wife of James B. Robinson, of San Francisco, California; and Joseph Cameron Cross, who was born in Canton, September 19, 1862, is now a resident of Columbus, Ohio. He married Miss Bertha Dunning and they have two sons, Frederick H. and Joseph Cameron.

Mrs. Meyer's home is located at 403 East Eighth street. She is a devoted and active member of the First Methodist Episcopal church and is prominent in the work of the Ladies' Aid Society and the Foreign Missionary Society of the church, as well as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, while her life is brightened by the kindly attentions and affections of an exceptionally wide circle of friends.

JOSEPH SCHILLIG was born in Nini-shillen township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 18th of April, 1841, being a son of Joseph and Sophia (Cupper) Schilling, of whose ten children eight are living at the time of this writing, namely: Joseph, the immediate subject of this sketch; Catherine, who is the wife of John Berg, of Maximo, this township; Mary A., who is the widow of Alexander Findlay and resides in the city of Canton; Magdalene, who is the wife of Anthony Gerardot, of Maximo; Josephine, who is the wife of Louis Gerardot, of Marlboro township; John, who is likewise a resident of that township, as is also Adam; and Emaline, who is the wife of Joseph Gerardot, of Washington township. The father was born in the province of Alsace, France (now Germany), in the year 1812, being a son of George Schillig, who came to the United States with his family in 1824, making his way from the eastern seaboard to Ohio and taking up his abode in Columbiana county. There the father of the subject secured employment in the tavern at New Garden, that county, doing the chopping of wood for five stoves by means of which the hostelry was heated and made comfortable for its guests and other inmates. He also looked after the horses and was a general utility boy, finding little time for diversion. Later he went to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was employed for a period of about twelve years, within which time he was married. One year after this eventful episode in his career he returned to Ohio, and came to Stark county, where he purchased a farm of one hundred and six acres, in Nimishillen township, the same having been partially improved, though much of the native timber was yet remaining. He thereafter devoted his attention to the clearing and otherwise improving of his farm, bringing the same under effective cultivation, and here he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in the year 1863. His wife survived him a number of years, her death occurring in 1886.

The subject of this sketch was born on the old homestead above mentioned, and as a boy he began to contribute his quota to its work, while he received such advantages in a scholastic way as were afforded in the public schools of the locality. He was about twenty-two years of age at the time of his father's death, after which he took charge of the farm and operated the same for his mother. In 1868 he was united in marriage to Miss Louise Menegay, who was likewise born in Nini-shillen township, being a daughter of John B. Menegay, who was born in France, whence he emigrated to America when a young man, becoming one of the first settlers in this division of Stark county, where he passed the remainder of his life. The year after his marriage Mr. Schillig purchased and removed to his present home farm, which comprises eighty acres, and within the intervening years he has improved the place and made it one of the valuable farms of the county. In 1897 Mr. Schillig erected on his farm a large and attractive house of modern architectural design and equipment, and in the same years was also completed his large and well arranged bank barn, while all other buildings about the place are in harmony. After the death of his mother, in 1886, Mr. Schillig purchased the old homestead which his father had secured so many years ago, the same still comprising the original one hundred and six acres and being a valuable property. The subject still owns the homestead and personally superintends its cultivation. To Mr. and Mrs. Schillig have been born four children, one of whom died in infancy, while those surviving are John M., who is a successful teacher in the city of Cleveland; Mary J., who is the wife of Robert Martlet, of Canton, this county; and Charles E., who remains at home, being a popular teacher in the schools of this locality.

Mr. Schillig is known as a man of marked public spirit, taking a deep interest in all that touches the progress and material prosperity of the community, while in politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party. He served three years as assessor of Nimishillen township and for the past nine years has been incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, in which he has given admirable service. The cause of education has been one in which he also manifested deep concern, doing much to advance the same in a local way, while for twelve years he did efficient service as director of the school board of his district. He is a communicant of the Catholic church, as is also his wife, they holding membership in St. Louis' church, at Louisville.

ALFRED L. RIZER, M. D.—Back to the cradle of our national history must the genealogist go in tracing the history of the Rizer family on this side of the Atlantic, since its paternal ancestors settled as early as 1776 in Maryland, and in that state his grandfather, Martin Rizer, was born about the year 1798. The first of the Rizers to come to this country were three brothers, natives of Germany, one of them being the father of the above Martin. This ancestor was born and reared in Allegany county, Maryland, and spent his life there, dying about 1882. His wife was a Miss Close, whose antecedents were also pioneers of the above state, in certain localities of which the name is still familiar. Three sons of Martin Rizer, Solomon, Simon and Levi, were soldiers in the Union army during the great rebellion and did effective service in some of the most noted campaigns and bloodiest battles of the war. Like many of the German Americans, the Rizers were Lutherans and as such were noted for piety, allegiance to the church, and for true moral worth as citizens.

Jesse Rizer, the Doctor's father, was born in Allegany county, Maryland, in February, 1820, and grew to maturity there, learning while young the trade of blacksmithing. His brothers also appear to have been natural mechanics, as they all adopted the same trade as the subject and became skilled workmen. After working in iron for a number of years, Jesse Rizer took up coopering and in due time acquired as much efficiency in that vocation as he had developed as a blacksmith. He married, in his native state, Miss Sophia Miller, a lady much his senior, as her birth occurred about the year 1810. She was a native of Germany and accompanied her parents to the United States, the family settling in the county of Allegany. Some time after his marriage Mr. Rizer loaded his household effects on an old-fashioned, two-horse emigrant wagon and moved to Ohio, locating at Mt. Vernon, Knox county, where some of his wife's relatives were then living. After spending a few years in that locality he changed his abode to the town of Danville, in the same county, where he made barrels and other articles of cooperage, until advancing age compelled him to discontinue manual labor. Mrs. Rizer departed this life at Danville, about the year 1888 and later Mr. Rizer took a second wife, who still survives.

Dr. Alfred L. Rizer is the only child by his father's first marriage. He was born in Allegany county, Maryland, December 14, 1844, and when about four years old was brought to Ohio by his parents, of which state he has since been an honored resident. After completing the common school course he entered the normal school at Danville, where he prepared himself for college, but owing to circumstances over which he had no control, was not permitted to carry into effect his plans to acquire a finished education. It is proper to state that one of the reasons that materially interfered with this purpose was the lack of means, in consequence of which he was compelled to discontinue his studies and make his own livelihood besides contributing his earnings to the support of his parents. While a student he made rapid strides in mastering the branches constituting the curriculum of the normal school and at the early age of sixteen he was sufficiently advanced to pass the required examination and receive a teacher's license. He taught his first term in the little village of Brownsville, Knox county, under rather peculiar circumstances, as two-thirds of the pupils were much older and larger than himself, quite a number of them being full grown men and women. He succeeded most admirably both as an instructor and a disciplinarian and finished the school with little or no difficulty, winning the high esteem of pupils and patrons and earning a reputation such as few older teachers achieve. He continued in the educational field for a number of years, dividing his time between working at various kinds of manual labor in the summer and teaching during the winter seasons. Not desiring to devote his life to a calling so poorly remembered as school work, Mr. Rizer decided to adopt medicine for his profession, accordingly, in 1868 he began a preliminary course of study at Gambier, Knox county, with Dr. Sapp, a well known physician of that place, under whose direction he continued for about four years. He applied himself very assiduously to investigation and research, accompanied his preceptor on his professional rounds and by close observation and practical experience made rapid advancement in the theory and practice of medicine. The better to prepare himself for efficiency in his chosen calling he entered, in March, 1870, the Detroit Medical College, Detroit, Michigan, from which he was graduated two years later and immediately thereafter began the practice of his profession at Aurora, Portage county, Ohio. At the beginning of his career Dr. Rizer experienced the difficulties that usually beset the pathway of young physicians, but it was not long until he overcame these and grew in public favor. That he succeeded in Aurora is abundantly verified by the twenty-three years of practice there, during which he more than realized professionally and financially the bright hopes of his youthful days. In December, 1894, the Doctor transferred his extensive business to other hands and changed his location to the city of Canton, from which time to the present his record has been a series of continual successes in a field where many of the state's eminent physicians have practiced.

Dr. Rizer's ambition to excel in his chosen calling has grown with his progress and as a physician and surgeon he now has few superiors in northwestern Ohio. He makes diagnoses readily, has had long and valuable experience in the treatment of nearly every disease to which humanity is heir and possesses a thorough knowledge of materia medica and pathology, with the ability to reduce the same to practice. Dr. Rizer has employed every means at hand to keep pace with modern theories and methods, but in the end he relies chiefly upon his own judgment and skill, backed as they are by long years of practical experience. By coming in contact with men of high professional attainments in the medical society with which he is identified and by mutual interchange of opinions, he has greatly enlarged the area of his general knowledge and heightened the technical scholarship which has been such a potent factor in his field of endeavor. He belongs to the Northeastern Ohio Homeopathic Medical Society and since becoming connected therewith he has been an active participant in its deliberations.

Dr. Rizer is a Republican in politics but has never stepped aside from his profession to take a very active interest in party affairs, although a man with the courage of his convictions and well informed upon the leading questions before the American people. In matters religious he also has decided views, being an earnest believer in the fundamental truths of Christianity and a zealous member of the Lutheran church of Canton. While pronounced in his allegiance to his creed, he is not narrow in matters of faith but looks upon all churches and religious organizations as influential factors in promoting the well being of society and winning mankind to a high and noble destiny.

The Doctor was happily married, in April, 1895, to Miss Carrie Parsons, a most estimable and cultured lady of Aurora, the union being without issue.

CHARLES W. REAM was born on the old homestead farm, in Plain township, this county, on the 3d of October, 1867, and his rudimentary education was secured in the district schools, this training being later supplemented by a course of study in the Canton Business College, at Canton, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1884. As a boy he contributed his quota to the work of the home farm, and when eighteen years of age he came to Canton and took a clerkship in the grocery of McCloud & Young, where he gained his initial experience in the line of enterprise in which he is now successfully engaged on his own responsibility. He continued to be employed as a clerk for a number of years, and on the 5th of July, 1892, he associated himself with William H. Leonhart, under the firm name of Ream & Leonhart, and opened the present grocery of the subject, on the east side of the public square, Mr. Ream having purchased his partner's interest in the business on the 18th of September, 1893, since which time he has continued the same independently, having been energetic and progressive in his methods and courteous and liberal in his dealings with his patrons, so that he has built up a prosperous and representative trade, having a well equipped and thoroughly modern store and catering to a discriminating patronage.

Henry Ream, father of the subject, was born on the homestead farm in Canton township, on the 28th of September, 1823, being a son of Philip and Mary (Aultman) Ream, who were natives of Pennsylvania. His grandparents were natives of Germany, whence they emigrated to America, having bound themselves out to pay their passage. After they had arrived in the new world, and after this obligation was discharged they were married and settled in Pennsylvania, where they afterward resided until their deaths. Philip and Mary (Aultman) Ream were married in their native state, and in 1806 emigrated to Columbiana county, Ohio, and one year later to Stark county, where they entered land in Canton township, and developed a valuable farm, and there passed the greater part of their lives, though about two years previous to their deaths they went to live with one of their daughters in Nimishillen township, where their deaths occurred, the mother in January, 1851, and the father in October of the same year, he being in his eighty-fourth year and she in her seventy-second. They became the parents of fourteen children, of whom the father of the subject is the youngest and the only survivor.

Henry Ream is one of the representative and highly honored farmers of Plain township, where he has maintained his home for more than half a century, having taken up his residence on his present farm in 1852. He was for a time engaged in the butchering business in connection with his farming industry, while for many years he has maintained throughout this section of Ohio a very high reputation as an auctioneer, in which line he has disposed of more goods at public vendue than has any other person in the county, having followed this business fifty years. The first sale he ever took charge of was in 1849, and the last one in 1899, and during this period auctioneered over fifteen hundred sales. He has also been in control of an excellent business in the operation of a threshing outfit, and it may consistently be said that few men in the county are better known or held in more unqualified esteem.

On the 1st of January, 1846, Henry Ream was united in marriage to Miss Anna Oberlin, who was born in Plain township, this county, October 7, 1827, being a daughter of Adam and Elizabeth (Albright) Oberlin, who were pioneer settlers in that township, the farm on which they located being contiguous to the city of Canton, a portion of which is located on the same. Soon after Henry Ream's marriage he settled on his father's old home farm where he resided three years, then moved on his father-in-law's farm and lived there three years, then purchased and settled on his present farm, where he has since resided. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ream are earnest and consistent members of the Reformed church, and in politics Mr. Ream was a Whig until the organization of the Republican party, since which time he has ever been arrayed in support of its principles. Of the ten children of this marriage five are living at the present time, namely: Josiah W., who is a resident of Muncie, Indiana; Ellen A., who is the wife of Edward E. Carnes, of Canton; Edwin L., who is likewise a resident of this city; Emma C., who is the wife of Frank J. Bordner, of Perry township and Charles W., the immediate subject of this sketch. Charles W. Ream was united in marriage at Canton, December 27, 1891, the lady of his choice being Miss Emma Hosler, a native of this county, born May 19, 1865, and a daughter of Samuel and Nettie Hosler, who are now residents of North Industry, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Ream have two children, Annetta Marie and Henry H.

JOHN T. SCHROYER.—The ancestral members of the Schroyer family were natives of Germany, the later generations having resided at Baden Baden. The great-grandfather of the subject, George Schroyer, came with his wife to the United States in 1764, settling somewhere in the eastern states. His son, the subject's grandfather, came to Ohio early in the pioneer period and located in Stark county. He died while comparatively young, and his widow afterward married Jacob Minnick, to which union were born six children, three sons and three daughters. To her first union but one child was born, George W., the father of the subject, his birth taking place in Canton in 1833. His father died while George was a babe of but two years, and at the age of eight years he left the maternal roof and went to live with the family of Jacob Myers. As soon as old enough he was set to work at farm labor, thus early becoming inured to hard and consecutive toil. He was subsequently apprenticed to learn the trade of a carpenter with George Schlabach, which trade he followed, working for various concerns until 1891, when he entered the employ of his son, the subject.

George W. Schroyer was married in Canton to Miss Sarah Fogle, the daughter of William Fogle, one of the early pioneers of Stark county. Her death occurred on the 11th of July, 1896. They were both faithful and consistent members of the First Baptist church of Canton and were held in high esteem by all who knew them. They were the parents of the following children: Charles, of Chicago; Anna, at home; Emma, Mrs. Jacob Reigner, of Canton; John T., the subject; Nettie, Mrs. Elmer Ball, of Canton; Carrie, Mrs. Charles E. Ruskin, of Cleveland, Ohio; George, of Canton, and Fanny, who died at the age of eight years.

John T. Schroyer is a native of Canton, having been born at the old homestead on South Cleveland avenue on the 8th of April, 1860. As soon as old enough he commenced attending school, in which he remained until he was nine years old. At that early age he took up the work of gardening and was also engaged in herding cattle for John Spangler. In this way he was employed during the summers and attended school during the winters until he was eighteen years of age. Then he attended two winter terms in the W. H. Avery Academy at Canton. The winters of 1876 and 1877 he went to Indiana and was employed as a chore boy on the farm belonging to his uncle, attending school at the same time. He was ambitious to take up the legal profession as his life work, and with this end in view went to South Bend, Indiana, and entered a law school, here he continued his studies for two years. However, becoming convinced that for a young man to succeed in establishing himself in a practice it was necessary that he should have some backing, which he had not, he reluctantly gave up the law and returned to Canton. Here he entered the employ of C. Aultman & Company, being engaged in the work of settling up old accounts. He worked along this line about two years and was then called into the home office and put in charge of the shipping department. His faithfulness and close attention to the interests of his employers soon won for him their confidence but the close confinement proved detrimental to his health and he was forced to seek other employment. In 1889, having managed to save a part of his earnings, he invested it in the laundry business. His success was gratifying from the start and he has continued this business ever since. Possessed of sound business principles, good judgment and absolute integrity, he has long commanded the confidence and good will of the public, which has accorded to him a full share of its patronage. The plant is equipped with the latest and most improved machinery and is constantly run at its fullest capacity.

Since attaining his majority the subject has taken an active part in advancing the interests of the Democratic party and has contributed very materially to the success of that party in local, state and national campaigns. He was nominated by the Democratic party for member of the Canton city council in the seventh ward, a ward which is nominally Republican by three hundred majority. However, such was the hold he had upon the public confidence that in the following election (1899) he carried the ward by a majority of thirty-six, and two years later was selected to succeed himself by the remarkable majority of two hundred and thirty-five. Upon taking his seat in the council he at once assumed a prominent place in its deliberations and was accorded a high standing on several of its most important committees. During his first term he served as chairman of the judiciary and the ways and means committees, and was retained in these positions the second year. As chairman of the last-named committee, it became his pleasure to report the largest surplus in the treasury during the entire history of the city of Canton. He is also a member of the board of Auditorium trustees. He is a strong advocate of the best sanitary measures and has repeatedly urged the adoption by the city of a municipal garbage plant.

Fraternally Mr. Schroyer is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Royal Arcanum, Patrick Henry Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is president of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. In matters religious the subject is identified with the First Baptist church and is a member of the William Carey Bible class.

On the 8th of July, 1883, Mr. Schroyer was united in marriage with Miss Lillie Jack, of Canton. This union has been a most happy and congenial one and has resulted in the birth of two children, Muriel and Dorothy.

HENRY W. FAULK, M. D.—This well-known physician and surgeon is numbered among Stark county's native sons and is an honored representative of one of its early pioneer families. Both his father and his mother's people lived in this locality when it was a frontier settlement and their names are closely interwoven with the history of the communities in which they originally located. Andrew Faulk, the Doctor's grandfather, was a native of Germany. He came to the United States about the beginning of the last century, and settled in New Jersey, where he worked for some years at the blacksmith trade. He was a married man when he came to America, and his children were all born in New Jersey. In the year 1815 he came with his family to Stark county, Ohio, and entered a quarter section of land about two and a half miles north of Waynesburg, the country at that time being as nature had made it. He hastily constructed a rude log cabin, which answered the purpose of a dwelling until a building more in keeping with the needs of his growing family could be erected. His second dwelling, a two-story hewed-log cabin, was among the first structures of the kind in the township in which he settled. Andrew Faulk was a true type of the strong, determined pioneer of his day, and experienced in full measure the trials and vicissitudes of life in the backwoods. By long and continued toil, he developed a good farm and as years went by became one of the leading agriculturists and prominent citizens of his part of the county. After a long and useful life he died on the place where he originally settled, honored and respected by all who knew him, his death occurring in 1850, when he was eighty years old.

Among the children of Andrew Faulk was a son, also Andrew by name, whose birth occurred in New Jersey in 1806. Andrew, Jr., was nine years old when his parents moved to Ohio, and from that time until his death he made his home in the county of Stark. He grew up amid the stirring scenes of the pioneer period, contributed his share to the clearing and cultivating of the home farm and when old enough to begin life for himself chose agriculture as a vocation. In 1833 he married Miss Susan Welker, who was born in the southeastern part of Stark county in 1816, her parents moving here several years prior to that date. Mrs. Faulk was early left an orphan and grew to young womanhood in the wilderness, living the meanwhile with different parties who looked after her interests. Mr. Faulk inherited the greater part of his father's estate and, like the latter, also became a leading farmer and enterprising citizen, departing this life in 1885 in his eightieth year. In politics he was originally a Whig, but later became a Republican, and as such took an active part in the public affairs of his township and county. He was a man of profound religious convictions and for a number of years was a leading member of the local Methodist Episcopal church, his wife being also a member of that denomination. Mrs. Faulk preceded her husband to the other world, dying about the year 1872.

Andrew and Susan Faulk reared a family of ten children, whose names are as follows: Matilda married Richard Wilson and died near the old homestead in May, 1901; Osee Ann married Daniel Bronson, deceased; James, a farmer of Canton township, married for his first wife Martha Silvers, after whose death he chose for a companion Hannah Yohe; Sophia, the third in order of birth, is the wife of Luther Baxter and lives in this county; Albert, who lives in Carroll county, Missouri, married Lizzie Neill; Sarah, wife of William Shearer, died some years ago in this county;

Thomas, a soldier of the late Civil war, died at Natchez, Mississippi, while in the service of his country; Henry W., of this review, is the eighth in order of succession; Lemmon R. died in the year 1872; William, the youngest, who runs the home farm, married Miss Malissa Rogers, of Stark county.

Dr. Henry W. Faulk was born on the old homestead in Stark county, May 20, 1851. Under the parental roof he grew to young manhood and as soon as old enough learned by practical experience the true meaning of honest toil as required in the cultivation of a farm. In the winter seasons he attended the district schools and in this way prosecuted his studies until the age of sixteen, when he entered Mt. Union College. After spending some time in that institution he turned his attention to teaching and was thus engaged for about seven years, devoting his vacations the meantime to his collegiate work at Mt. Union. At the age of twenty-three he began the study of medicine with Dr. A. B. Walker, of Canton, and after continuing under that gentleman's instructions about three years entered the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati.

Dr. Faulk was graduated from that institution in 1878 and in September of the same year was united in wedlock to Miss Isabelle A. Shaffer, of Carroll county, Ohio. Being well prepared for the active duties of his profession, the Doctor immediately after his marriage opened an office in the town of Osnaburg, Stark county, where he soon built up a large practice, which continued with success and financial profit during the fifteen years following. In June, 1893, he wound up his business at Osnaburg and in August following located at Canton, where he has since practiced with a large measure of professional and financial success. Dr. Faulk has always had a laudable ambition to stand high in the medical world, not so much from a desire for the honor which such a station would bring, but rather to become a true benefactor of mankind in alleviating suffering. That he has to an eminent degree realized this ambition is attested by the success that has crowned his efforts and by the high esteem in which he is held by the public and by his professional associates. Politically the Doctor is a Republican, has ever been true to his convictions, and while not a partisan, labors earnestly for the success of his party, as every good citizen should. He served one term as physician of the county infirmary and as a member of the board of control of that institution did much to make it answer the purposes for which intended. Fraternally he holds membership with the Knights of Pythias and religiously subscribes to the Methodist Episcopal doctrine. For several years he served with the late President McKinley and others as trustee of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton, and holds the same position at the present. Dr. and Mrs. Faulk have two children, Dora and Hugh, aged twenty-three and nineteen years respectively. The Doctor is a member of the Stark County Medical Society, the Ohio State Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association.

WILLIAM M. BLECKER comes of German ancestry in the agnatic line and of Swedish in the maternal, while he is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in the city of Philadelphia, on the 30th of May, 1869, and being a son of Lorenzo and Mary (Landes) Blecker, who are now residents of Meyerstown, Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, where the former is engaged in the contracting business. The subject received his early education in the public schools and in his boyhood began to contribute to his own support, the family being in moderate circumstances. Through his own exertions he was enabled to complete a college course of a technical order, entering the Coleman Institute, at Lebanon,

He soon manifested his superior ability in the work of his chosen vocation, and his progress has been consecutive from the initiation of his efforts in the line. He was for a number of years engaged in the work pertaining to his profession, including pattern-making, and thoroughness and fidelity have characterized his entire course during his entire career. He became foreman of the Leechburg Foundry & Machine Company at Leechburg, Pennsylvania, and eventually became a stockholder in the company. Later he became associated with Hitzfelds in the purchase of the plant of the Avonmore Foundry & Machine Company's plant, at Avonmore, Pennsylvania, and then effected the organization of the West Pennsylvania Foundry & Machine Company, of which he was made president, the plant being successfully operated during his regime, which terminated when he disposed of his interests in the concern. He then became identified with the Vulcan Foundry & Machine Company, at Newcastle, Pennsylvania, from which place he came to Canton, where he became interested in the construction of the plant of the Canton Roll & Machine Company, which was completed and put into operation, Mr. Blecker being made vice-president of the company. He and J. E. Carnahan finally purchased the interests of all other stockholders, and six months later they sold the plant and business to Pittsburg men. In 1898 Messrs. Carnahan and Blecker began the construction and equipment of the plant of the Carnahan Tin Plate & Sheet Mill, and the same was placed in operation the following year. Our subject is secretary and treasurer of the company, and the business now takes rank among the prosperous and important industries of Canton. Mr. Blecker is also first vice-president of the Carnahan Stamping and Enamel-

ing Company, which is a successful institution of Canton, and is treasurer of the United Steel Company, whose fine plant is in course of construction in Canton at the time of this writing. He is also treasurer of the Carnahan Land & Improvement Company, which has valuable interests here, and has other financial interests in outside concerns. From these statements it will be seen that Mr. Blecker is a man of marked administrative ability and that he has directed his efforts in the promotion of enterprises which work for the general good, offering employment to many persons and constituting the most practical form of productive and legitimate philanthropy. He is loyal to the interests of his home city and his public spirit leads him to give a ready support to all measures advanced for the general welfare and for the furthering of the upbuilding and material and civic prosperity of the city. In politics he allies himself to no particular party or faction, being independent in his views and lending his influence and exercising his franchise in support of men and measures, rather than submitting to the partisan lash. He and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Canton and take an abiding interest in its work.

Mr. Blecker was united in marriage in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to Miss Ida Schell, who was born in Parker, Armstrong county, that state, being a daughter of George Schell, a representative of one of the sterling old English families of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Blecker have two children, Mildred and Harold.

CAPT. MARCUS A. FISHER was born in Womelsdorf, Berks county, Pennsylvania, on the 26th of May, 1863. There he initiated his educational discipline in the public schools, which he continued until he had attained the age of eleven years, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Miamisburg, Montgomery county, Ohio, where he was reared to maturity and where he attended the public schools until he had completed the high school course, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1880, having been also employed in a local drug store during his last year in school and giving his attention to the study of pharmacy. He continued to be thus employed in Miamisburg until the month of August, 1882, when he went to Cincinnati, where he secured a clerical position in a drug establishment, and at the same time attending night school, where he made a special study of chemistry, both organically and in the line of practical quantitative analysis. About that time the state law providing for the registration of pharmacists was enacted, and those were granted licenses who were able to successfully pass the required examination before the state board of pharmacy. So well and so faithfully had he applied himself to his studies and to the practical work in the drug store that he was able to duly qualify and was granted his license or certificate. Shortly afterward he returned to Miamisburg and re-entered the employ of M. G. Bohn, under whose direction he had secured his preliminary training in the technical work of his profession, and there he remained for a period of nine years.

On the 1st of April, 1891, Mr. Fisher came to Canton and here established himself in the drug business on his own responsibility, his original location having been the store now occupied by J. L. Maunder & Company. There he continued a successful business until August, 1894, when he sold out to Edward Young and effected the purchase of his present place of business, which is eligibly located at the corner of Cherry and East Tuscarawas streets. His original quarters here became inadequate for the accommodation of his rapidly increasing business, and in 1899 he secured the room adjoining on the east, so that his establishment now figures as an essentially metropolitan one, the stock carried being large and select in all lines while the store is attractive in all its equipments.

On June 20, 1893, Mr. Fisher became identified with the Eighth Regiment of the Ohio National Guard, in Canton, in the capacity of hospital steward, and as such he served until the latter part of the following year, when he was elected second lieutenant of Company L, of the same regiment, being later advanced to the office of first lieutenant, in which he served until 1897, having had command of his company during the greater portion of the year 1896. On the 8th of January, 1897, he was elected captain of the same company, and as such was in command of the same during its valiant service in the Spanish-American war, the regiment having given prompt evidence of its intrinsic loyalty and patriotism by tendering its services to the government. The regiment was assigned to the Fifth Army Corps, under General Shafter, and in May, 1898, having been duly mustered in, proceeded to Cuba, where it took an active part in the Santiago campaign, assisting materially in winning the decisive victories for the American arms. Captain Fisher proved an able commander, having the company under effective discipline and sparing no pains or care in providing for the necessities and comforts of his men to the best of his power. The regiment returned to Montauk Point in August, 1898, and its members received their honorable discharge from the United States service on the 20th of the following November, being given an enthusiastic and gratifying welcome by the people of Canton and vicinity upon their return to their home city. Captain Fisher still continues his identification with the National Guard and is commissary of the Second Brigade with the rank of major.

In politics Mr. Fisher has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he has been an active worker, and in April, 1899, he was elected to the office of treasurer of Canton township, of which he is still in tenure, having given a most able and satisfactory administration of the fiscal affairs of the township, which is the most populous and wealthy in the county. His religious views are in harmony with the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he was reared, and fraternally he holds membership in the Spanish War Veterans' Association, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and the Masonic order, in which last he is a member of Canton Commandery No. 38, Knights Templar, while he has also attained the fourteenth degree in the Scottish Rite bodies, being affiliated with the consistory at Canton, Ohio.

By his first wife, whose maiden name was Lizzie Brown, and to whom he was married in 1886, Captain Fisher has one son, Robert, who remains at the paternal home. This lady died March 3, 1888, and on the 13th of November, 1896, he chose for a companion Miss Elizabeth Overton, of Massillon, this county, a daughter of William Overton, who is now a resident of Little Falls, in the state of Wisconsin. To Mr. Fisher's second union one daughter has been born, Ruth.

CHARLES B. FREDERICK, V. S.—In the veins of the subject of this sketch flows the blood of a long line of American and Scotch ancestors and he combines in his physical and mental make up many sturdy attributes of both nationalities. On the paternal side he traces his genealogy back to an early period in the history of eastern Ohio, his grandfather, John Frederick, having been born in Columbiana county on June 21, 1800. When a young man John Frederick entered eighty acres of land in Washington township, Stark county, and shortly after moving to the same increased his possessions by an additional tract of the same number of acres, nearly all of which he reduced to a state of tillage. In the year 1826 he was married in his native county to Miss Charlotte Aultman and the same year moved to his original purchase in the county of Stark referred to above. After the death of his wife, which occurred in her sixty-sixth year, he disposed of his real estate to his children and lived among them the remainder of his days, dying at Salem Center, Indiana, at the home of his son David, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven years. He was the father of children as follows: John died in Stark county; George is a resident of Hudson, Indiana; Michael also resides in the town of Hudson; Joseph G. is the father of the subject, and Mary, wife of Henry Shaffer, a farmer of Washington township, Stark county.

Joseph G. Frederick was born on the old homestead in Washington township, June 11, 1840, and received his educational advantages in the common schools of the county. In his young manhood he took a course in veterinary medicine and surgery and for a period of forty years he practiced his profession, meeting with a large measure of success in treating diseases peculiar to man's best and noblest friend, the horse. He followed his chosen calling in Stark county until 1896, when he moved to Hudson, Indiana, and since then has practiced at that place with most encouraging professional and financial results. Mary A. Little, who became the wife of Joseph G. Frederick, was born near the town of Bayard, Columbiana county, Ohio, in the year 1843, her family having been among the early settlers of that part of the state. John Little, Mrs. Frederick's father, was born near Edinburg, Scotland, and when a boy was a companion and schoolmate of the poet Burns, between whom and himself a warm personal friendship existed as long as the former lived. Immediately after their marriage, which was solemnized in the early 'thirties, Mr. Little came to the United States and settled first in Washington township, Stark county, a few years later removing to a farm in the county of Columbiana, where he still lives, his wife having died in the fall of 1897. John and Mrs. Little reared a family of seven children, namely: Mrs. Mary Frederick; Maggie, wife of Herman Hart; Mrs. Reuben Hawkins; John, James Robert and George. The children born to Joseph G. and Mary Frederick are as follows: John, who lives in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Dr. Charles B., of this review; Alice, wife of C. M. Unyer, of Cleveland; Elsworth, a farmer of Washington township, this county, and Ollie, who married Joseph Reese, of Canton.

Dr. Charles B. Frederick was born December 29, 1868, on the family homestead in Washington township and it is a fact worthy of note that both he and his father first saw the light of day in the old dwelling, which still stands on the place. In the district schools which he attended until a youth in his teens he acquired his preliminary educational training and later pursued higher branches of learning in Mt. Union College, adopting the profession of veterinary medicine and surgery. Mr. Frederick, in 1893, entered the Ontario Veterinary College at Toronto, from which he was graduated in due season, after which he began the practice at Louisville, Ohio, where he remained until 1897. Determined to leave nothing undone in the way of familiarizing himself with his calling, he took a post-graduate course in the veterinary department of the Ohio State University in 1898 and the same year accepted a position as assistant professor in that institution, holding the same during the four years following. In the fall of 1901 Dr. Frederick came to Canton and opened an office at No. 433 North Cherry street and since that time has been actively engaged in professional work in this city and surrounding country.

The Doctor has spared no pains in posting himself and today stands admittedly at the head of his profession in this section of the state. A close and critical student, he has become familiar with every known authority upon diseases of the horse, in addition to which he has prosecuted original investigations and made discoveries in the matters of treatment and remedies hitherto unknown to the professional world.

Dr. Frederick was happily married on the 20th day of June, 1900, to Miss Frances E. Houser, a native of Nimishillen township, this county, and daughter of Martin and Mary (Auer) Houser, both parents deceased. Aside from the claims of his calling the Doctor finds time to devote to the duties of citizenship, being an enterprising man and greatly interested in the welfare of the city and county in which he lives. He cast his first presidential ballot for Benjamin Harrison and from that time to the present day has been a supporter of the Republican party, though not a partisan in the sense of aspiring to leadership or seeking official honors. He holds membership with Lodge No. 499, Free and Accepted Masons, and endeavors to square his life in harmony with the principles of this ancient and honorable fraternity. Personally he is widely and favorably known, his relations with his fellow men being of the most agreeable character and he is well deserving of specific mention as one of the intelligent and progressive men of the county of Stark.

PHILIP FARBER.—The name borne by the subject of this sketch is one which has been identified with the annals of Ohio from an early epoch, for it is to be recorded that his father, the late and honored James Farber, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, on the 1st of March, 1808, so that the latter's parents were numbered among the earliest settlers in that section, James himself having been the first white child born in Sandy township, that county. He was a son of John Farber, who is supposed to have been a native of Pennsylvania, whence he set forth to establish his home in Ohio shortly after, possibly before, it was admitted to the sisterhood of states, here passing the residue of his life.

James Farber was reared to maturity amidst the primitive surroundings of a pioneer farm of Tuscarawas county, and it is hardly necessary to state that his early educational privileges, in a specific sense, must have been exceedingly limited in scope. His, however, was a mind too alert to be seriously handicapped by the mere accident of time and place, and experience proved to him a kindly master, and the school was one in which he developed strong native talents, making his life one of signal usefulness and honor. It was his good fortune as a young man to choose as a companion and helpmeet on the journey of life a woman whose nobility and gentleness of character ably complemented the strength and vigor of his. He married Miss Caroline A. Weaver, who was born in the state of New York, on the 17th of July, 1815, and who came to Ohio with her parents when a mere child. Her marriage to James Farber was solemnized in Tuscarawas county, whence they soon afterward came to Stark county and took up their abode on a farm in Pike township, where they again repeated the experiences of pioneer life, in the reclaiming of the land and making it available for cultivation. They lived to see their children grow up to lives of honor and usefulness, and passed their declining days in the locality in which they took up their residence upon coming to the county, while in death they were not long divided, the mother of the subject being summoned into eternal rest, in Pike township, on the 21st of February, 1890, while her loved husband passed away on the second of the following June, being nearly eighty-three years of age at the time of his death, while she was in her seventy-sixth year. They became the parents of seven children, namely: John F., of whom individual mention is made on another page of this work; Isabella, who became the wife of John Kiefer and who died in Carroll county; Emma, who died as a child of about two years; Oliver, a resident of Osnaburg township; Philip, the immediate subject of this sketch; Abigail, who is the wife of Franklin Neuhouse, of Pike township; and Betsey, who lives in Sandy township.

Philip Farber, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born on the old homestead in Pike township, on the 3d of January, 1841, and here he was reared to manhood and has always maintained his home, devoting his attention to agricultural pursuits from his youth up and being now known as one of the successful and influential farmers of his native county. He received his educational training in the common schools, while his mentality, no less than his physical vigor, felt the beneficent influence of the experience of those who cling to the noble art of husbandry. Mr. Farber is the owner of three hundred and forty-three acres of very fertile land, the major portion of which is under cultivation, and upon the place are the evidences of thrift and prosperity in the way of substantial and attractive buildings, improved machinery, good fences, high-grade stock, etc., making this one of the model estates of Pike township and of the county. In politics he has given a stalwart allegiance to the Republican party, and though he has never sought public office he has rendered most efficient service as a school director of his district. In May, 1864, he showed the loyalty and patriotism of a true son of the republic by tendering his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in Company F, One Hundred and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he was in active service for a period of four months, at the expiration of which he received an honorable discharge. He is a member of Steiner Post No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, at Sparta.

On the 19th of December, 1872, in Tuscarawas county, Mr. Farber was united in marriage to Miss Mary L. Souders, a daughter of the late Blazius Souders, who met his death in the battle of Gettysburg. Mrs. Farber was born in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, on the 4th of May, 1851, and was but four years of age when she accompanied her parents on their emigration to America, the family locating in Tuscarawas county, this state, where she was reared and educated. To our subject and his estimable wife have been born three children, namely: Jay, who married Miss Alice Kemp and who is engaged in farming in Pike township; May, who is the wife of Frank A. Esterly, of Pike township; and Elta, who is the wife of Charles Crist, of Tuscarawas county.

CHARLES F. LAIBLIN.—The Laiblin family is of staunch German lineage, and the following is the paternal line of descent: The subject's great-great-grandfather, Charles Frederick, born in 1690, died in 1742; great-grandfather, Frederick Lewis, city clerk of Pullinger, born in 1712, died in 1758; grandfather, Charles Frederick, an officer of customs at Winnenden, Wurtemberg, born November 18, 1752, died in 1817; father, Charles Frederick, Sr. The first representative in America was the father of the subject, Charles F. Laiblin, who was born in the city of Stuttgart, Wurtemberg, Germany, in the year 1797, and there he was reared and educated, receiving good advantages in the matter of early scholastic training, as his parents were in good circumstances. In his native city he served a partial apprenticeship at the brewing business, and when he was eighteen years of age he was drafted for service in the German army, but was not desirous of entering military life, and determined to escape the service by emigrating to America. He accordingly made his way to a seaport town, where he embarked on a sailing vessel bound for the port of New York city, where he arrived after a voyage of fifty-nine days' duration, the vessel having sprung a leak while en route, so that it became necessary to keep the pumps in action day and night to keep the boat afloat. He was employed for a time in New York and then went to Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he secured employment on a farm. While thus engaged he married Miss Susan Bedillion, who was born in that county, her father being Abraham Bedillion, the owner of the farm on which Mr. Laiblin was employed. The Bedillion family is undoubtedly of French extraction and was early founded in America. After his marriage the father of the subject came with his bride to Steubenville, Jefferson county, Ohio, where he established a brewery and built up a successful business, having shipped his products down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to various points, including the city of New Orleans. After forty years of successful operations as a brewer Mr. Laiblin also engaged in the malting business, in which line also he conducted a prosperous and quite extensive business. In 1869 he came to Stark county and purchased a farm in Pike township, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in June, 1871, while his cherished and devoted wife survived him by only a few years, her death occurring at the home of her daughter Amelia, Mrs. Armstrong, in Canton, in 1878, at which time she was eighty-one years of age. She was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and to the support of the same her husband contributed liberally, though he was never formally identified with the organization. In politics Mr. Laiblin was arrayed in the ranks of the Democratic party until the time of the nomination of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he gave his support, while his sympathies were enlisted in favor of the Union during the war of the Rebellion, and he gave every possible aid he could in supporting the cause.

Of the children of Charles F. and Susan Laiblin we incorporate the following brief record: Catherine died in childhood; Abraham, who married Clementine Miller, died on his farm in Pike township, this county, at the age of fifty-four years; Elizabeth is the wife of John Starr, of Zanesville, Ohio; Mary Ann, who became the wife of Thomas Huscroft, died in Steubenville, Jefferson county, in 1856; Amelia is the wife of John Armstrong, of Canton; Martha, who became the wife of John Gosset, died in Steubenville; Charles F., Jr., the immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Lewis, now deceased, was a resident of the state of Montana; and Thomas died in childhood.

Charles F. Laiblin was born in Steubenville, Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 11th of November, 1833, and his early educational discipline was such as he gained through a somewhat desultory attendance in the public schools. Alert and observing, he was not fond of the constraints of the school room, and as his father was absent from home much of the time, the subject was not as regular in his school attendance as he might otherwise have been, and he left school entirely when fifteen years of age. At the age of seventeen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of brick-laying, becoming a skilled workman in the line. In 1855 he went to Kansas, and there he worked at his trade, in the employ of the government, assisting in the erection of buildings at Fort Leavenworth, being in that section during the crucial epoch when the border ruffians were in such distinctive evidence, and when Kansas was the controversial ground upon which was fought the further encroachment of slavery, gaining to the state the familiar title of "bleeding Kansas." While not engaged in the work of his trade Mr. Laiblin devoted his attention to the freighting of government supplies into Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Nebraska and other sections of the frontier west, a portion of the time serving in the capacity of wagon master. In this connection he met with many exciting experiences, the wagon trains being frequently menaced and attacked by the bands of Indians and border outlaws, having made his first freight trip in 1856. In 1860 he transported commissary supplies to Fort Union and to Santa Fe, and he was in that section of the west during the stirring times of the Civil war, and thus his reminiscences of the early period in the pioneer west are interesting in the extreme, for he was in various portions of that section at the time when civilization had gained only a precarious foothold, while he remained in the employ of the government during the entire progress of the Rebellion. On the 25th of May, 1855, at Kickapoo, Kansas, Mr. Laiblin was united in marriage to Miss Lydia Wigginton, who was born in Steubenville, Ohio, and who accompanied her uncle, David Hottle, to the Sunflower state in the same year in which her husband located there. In 1866 Mr. Laiblin returned with his wife to Ohio, and located in his native town of Steubenville, where he erected a residence and a store building, and there he was successfully engaged in the grocery business until 1868, his wife having there died in 1867. She is survived by one daughter, Anna, who is now the wife of Jacob Hilcher, of Canton, who is engaged in the Canton Bridge Works. In 1868 Mr. Laiblin disposed of his interests in Steubenville and came to Stark county, where he remained for a short time with his father on the homestead farm, in Pike township. In 1869 he came to Canton, where he engaged in the grocery business for about a year, and then became engaged in the business of buying and shipping hogs, cattle and sheep, shipping principally to the cities of Pittsburg, Philadelphia and New York, and simultaneously he conducted a meat market, on East Tuscarawas street. His business increased greatly in scope and importance with the passing years, and eventually he extended his operations by purchasing live stock in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, and bringing the same into Stark county, where the stock was placed on various farms to be fattened for the market. He continued successfully in this line of enterprise for many years, and became one of the leading live-stock dealers in this section of the state. In 1882 Mr. Laiblin turned his attention to the real estate business, and in this important field he has continued operations to a greater or less extent to the present time, having shown marked discrimination in his operations and having handled many valuable properties. He, with his sons, has laid out three additions to the city of Canton. In 1893 he became a stockholder in the Canton Bridge Company, and was chosen a member of the directorate of this important corporation, and in 1898 he was elected to the presidency of the same, of which position he has since remained incumbent, bringing to bear his fine executive and administrative abilities in furthering the interests of the concern, which represents one of the important industrial enterprises of the city, and which has controlled a business extending into divers parts of the Union. He is also a stockholder and director in the People's Savings Bank, while for ten years he was also a member of the directorate of the City National Bank. Mr. Laiblin is a man of fine business ability and impregnable honor, has gained distinctive success through his own efforts, and is accorded the utmost confidence and regard in the city and county in which he has so long maintained his home, and of which he is recognized as a representative citizen.

Mr. Laiblin has been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of its organization, having voted for its first presidential candidate, General Fremont, and his interest in the cause has been an active one in a local way, while he has served in various offices of public trust and responsibility. He was a member of the board of county commissioners of Stark county for one term of three years, served for an equal period as a member of the board of education of the city of Canton, and for eight years served on the poor fund of the Hartford trustees. He has been a member of the board of park commissioners of Canton for eight years. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the First Christian church, of whose board of trustees he was a member for the past fourteen years, taking a zealous interest in all departments of the church work. Mr. Laiblin is an appreciative member of the time-honored Masonic fraternity, in which he was initiated in the autumn of 1855, at Kickapoo, Kansas, and he is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

In February, 1870, Mr. Laiblin consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Nancy P. Kinney, who was born in Canton township, this county, being a daughter of the late William Kinney, one of the honored pioneers of the county. Of this union have been born six children, of whom two are deceased; those living are William C., who married Miss Edith Archer, and who is now secretary and treasurer of the Canton Bridge Company; Abraham, who is an artist in New York; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Rev. Frederick Kuder, a clergyman of the Presbyterian church, and having a pastoral charge in the village of Holly, Michigan, at the time of this writing; and Garfield, who married Rose Gallagher, of Columbus, Ohio, and is connected with the Canton Bridge Company.

SYLVANUS SUMMERS was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 2d of November, 1852, being a son of John B. and Barbara (Snyder) Summers, of whose eight children five are yet living, namely: Josiah and John, both of whom are likewise successful farmers of Nimishillen township; Sylvanus, the immediate subject of this sketch; Levi, who is engaged in farming in Plain township, and Barbara, who is the wife of John Gehman, of Nimishillen township. John B. Summers, the honored father of our subject, was likewise born in Columbiana county, the date of his nativity having been January 5, 1823. He was a son of John and Elizabeth (Stuckey) Summers, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, the former being a son of John Summers, Sr., who was the original representative of the family in America, whither he emigrated from Switzerland, taking up his residence in Pennsylvania, from which state he came to Ohio with his family in 1812, taking up his residence in Columbiana county, where he passed the remainder of his life. He became the father of twenty-five children, all of whom lived to attain years of maturity, and from this honored ancestor Ohio has gained many sterling citizens in the succeeding generations. From the above statement it will be seen that the subject of this review is of the fifth generation of the family in the Buckeye state. John B. Summers was reared on the pioneer farm in Columbiana county, and his educational privileges were such as were afforded by the little log school-house of the locality and period and by personal application. In 1845 was solemnized his marriage to Miss Barbara Snyder, and he then purchased a farm of one hundred and thirty-five acres, in his native county, where he continued to maintain his home until 1865, when he came to Stark county and purchased the farm of one hundred and eighty acres where he died September 6, 1902, in Nimishillen township, being one of the venerable and highly esteemed citizens and substantial farmers of the county. In his earlier life he was a Democrat in his political proclivities, but in 1852 he voted the Whig ticket, and later identified himself with the Republican party in whose support he has ever since continued to exercise his franchise. He is a worthy member of the German Baptist church, as was also his devoted wife, whose death occurred in the year 1893. She was born in Stark county, on a farm three miles southeast of the village of Louisville, the date of her nativity having been in October, 1822. She was a daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Shively) Snyder, who came from Pennsylvania and became numbered among the early settlers in Stark county, where they passed the remainder of their lives.

Sylvanus Summers, with whom this article has more specifically to do, was about thirteen years of age at the time when his parents removed from Columbiana county to the new homestead in Stark county, and he was reared to maturity in Nimishillen township, assisting in the work of the farm and attending the public schools of the county, where he laid the foundations for the excellent practical education which he may now consistently claim as his own. At the age of twenty years Mr. Summers entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, at which he served the customary three years, becoming a skilled workman, and during the subsequent years he has continued to devote more or less attention to the work of his trade in connection with his farming operations.

On the 11th of December, 1875, Mr. Summers was united in marriage to Miss Angeline Brumbaugh, who was born in Portage county, Ohio, being a daughter of Andrew and Abigail (Pontious) Brumbaugh, both of whom died in Portage county. After his marriage Mr. Summers settled on a portion of his father's farm, renting the land for four years and then, in 1879, purchasing the property, which comprises forty acres, and here he has ever since maintained his home, having his land under most effective cultivation, while the place is equipped with substantial modern buildings, including a commodious and attractive residence. Within the year 1902 Mr. Summers also acquired three residence properties in the attractive Crystal Park addition to the city of Canton. In connection with his farm work Mr. Summers has also been employed at intervals in various other lines of enterprise, including brick-laying, plastering and painting, while he has given considerable attention for the past sixteen years to the raising and butchering of stock, finding a ready market for his products in the city of Canton, since it is recognized that he supplies nothing but the best, his reputation for reliability and absolute integrity being unassailable, while he enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him. In connection with his butchering business he furnishes a regular supply of meat to a list of representative customers, not being compelled to sell to the markets of the city. In politics Mr. Summers gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party and both he and his wife are zealous members of the Brethren church, in which he holds the office of deacon. To them have been born six children, namely: Melvin, who is in the employ of the government signal service department, being weather observer at Columbia, Missouri; Elsie, who is the wife of Elmer Mock, of Nimishillen township; Zilpha, who remains at the parental home; Ray, who died in infancy; and Clinton and Inez, who are at home.

REV. J. F. KUEBLER, the beloved pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic church, Massillon, and one of the able and scholarly divines of the diocese in which he labors, is a native of Ohio, born on the 21st of June, 1849, in Tiffin, Seneca county, being the second of thirteen children, whose parents were Anthony and Francis (Schabacher) Kuebler. As the names indicate, the families of which Father Kuebler is a representative were German, the father being a native of Bavaria. By occupation Anthony Kuebler was a shoemaker. He learned his trade in his native land and remained there until 1832, when he came to the United States, located at Tiffin, Ohio, where he followed his chosen calling for a number of years. The following are the names of the children born to Anthony and Frances Kuebler: Frances, James F., Joseph, Lewis, William, Charles, Alphonsus, Herman, Rose, Anna, John, Emma, and J. F.

Father Kuebler's preliminary education was acquired in the schools of Tiffin, which he attended from his fifth to his sixteenth year. Meanwhile he entered a printing office in that city and in due time became an expert type setter, which trade he followed until beginning his literary studies in Mt. St. Mary's Seminary, Cincinnati, with the object in view of taking holy orders. He attended that institution from 1866 to 1871, and in September of the latter year became a student of St. Mary's Seminary at Cleveland, where he pursued his theological studies until ordained to the priesthood on the 4th day of July, 1875. Father Kuebler's first pastoral charge was with the churches of St. Mary and St. Patrick, Rockport, Ohio, which at that time consisted of a membership of forty-two and thirty-five families respectively. He labored very acceptably with these charges until the 22d day of February, 1891, when he was transferred to the Sts. Phillip and James church, at Canal Fulton, a congregation consisting of about ninety-one families, but which under his zealous and efficient ministrations was soon greatly augmented both in members and influence. In addition to this charge he also looked after four mission churches at Barberton, Orrsville, Marshall and Burton City, the numerical strength of these points representing something like seventy families in all. The church at Canal Fulton is one of the largest Catholic congregations in the county of Stark and to look after its varied interests and attend to his duties at the missions entailed upon Mr. Kuebler an amount of work which none but a most energetic and zealous pastor could successfully accomplish.

After laboring with great acceptance in the above field until 1898, Father Kuebler took charge of the St. Joseph Catholic church at Massillon, entering upon his duties June 26 of that year. Since coming to this city his congregation has made commendable progress in both material and spiritual things, among the former being a general improvement of the beautiful temple of worship, including the frescoing of its interior and the purchase of a large pipe organ, one of the finest and most expensive instruments of the kind in this part of the state. Under his direction the school building connected with the church has been entirely remodeled, at a cost of nearly a thousand dollars, and refitted throughout with the latest modern educational appliances.

Father Kuebler has greatly endeared himself to his people, all of whom hold him in the highest respect and veneration, and by his exemplary Christian character and manly conduct he has also won the esteem of the people of Massillon irrespective of church or creed. He is a power in the pulpit as a sound, practical preacher and able exponent of the faith of the holy church in matters of history, doctrine and dogma. His broad scholarship and general culture, together with his powers of oratory, enable him to preach so as to be understood and appreciated by the most critical and exacting, while his metaphors and illustrations are so plainly drawn and described that the simplest hearer need not err in understanding their application. Father Kuebler's sermons appeal to the heart and understanding rather than to the fancy, although he is not lacking in imagination, as his frequent bursts of oratory abundantly attest. Personally he is modest and unassuming, a most courteous and polished gentleman. His labors in his different fields have been abundantly blessed in the extension of the heavenly Father's kingdom, and he looks forward to the accomplishment of still greater results in years to be.

CHARLES BROWN is a typical representative of the sturdy Scandinavian element in our national life, and exhibits in his physical and mental manhood the praiseworthy elements which for ages have distinguished that strong and fearless race. He was born October 7, 1848, near Warburg, Sweden, near which place his father, Eric Lawson, owned a large estate and farmed upon quite an extensive scale. According to national usage which for centuries has been a custom among the Scandinavian people, boys from the age of eighteen to twenty-five are named through the military training schools, our subject being given the name of Braon (in English Brown), and by such he has since been distinguished from the other members of his family.

As already stated, Mr. Lawson, the father, was a large land holder, at one time owning over a thousand acres on which he carried on agriculture and stock raising for a number of years and accumulated a handsome fortune. The homestead, a large log structure, weather-boarded and roofed with tile, and the commodious barn and other outbuildings near by, together with the tastefully arranged grounds surrounding, betokened the residence of a man of successful business ability and high social standing. On this estate were some ten or twelve tenants, each of which, with his wife and such boys as were old enough to be of practical service, worked for the proprietor a certain number of days in the year to pay the rental of the houses and grounds which they occupied and tilled. The products of the Lawson farm were disposed of at Warburg, the nearest seaport, while the linen fabrics, chiefly table cloths, manufactured during the long winter seasons by different members of the family found a ready market, not only at home but in England, to which country many of them were sold at high prices. The subject's childhood was spent amid the inspiring natural scenery of his native valley and at the early age of ten years he was given charge of a team of and, taking his place behind the plow, was enabled even while that young to do a man's work in the field. His educational training was acquired under the peculiar system in vogue in the rural districts of Sweden in those days, and in addition thereto the children were regularly instructed in the doctrines of the government church (Lutheran), under the supervision of the ministers in charge of the parish. Like other of his companions and playmates, young Brown was obliged to study very hard early and late in order to commit to memory the required number of verses and chapters of Holy Writ, besides becoming familiar with the catechism, a knowledge of which was considered absolutely essential to good citizenship. While he submitted with the best grace possible to this form of ecclesiastical education and made the required advancement, young Brown was early led to question its utility, in that it failed almost entirely to fit a young man for the practical duties of life. He thought time might better be spent upon those branches of general knowledge which every successful man sooner or later must to some extent know, rather than wasted in cramming the mind with stipertated statements of faith and doctrines of church and creed. Being a dutiful son, however, he submitted to the will of his God-fearing parents and in due time passed successfully the required examinations, was admitted to holy communion and to all intents and purposes became a loyal citizen of the Fatherland.

Mr. Brown remained on the home farm until the death of his mother, after which the family was broken up, the three sons and one daughter finding homes elsewhere. At that time the subject was a young man of eighteen, strong and rugged in body, independent of mind and well calculated by nature and training to grapple with the rugged battles of life. The first year after leaving home he worked for a neighboring farmer, receiving as a remuneration fifty dollars in money and the use of a certain plat of ground in which to raise a few potatoes, on which he was not allowed to plant more than two bushels of seed. At the end of the year he had saved thirty dollars of his wages (equivalent to about fourteen dollars of American money), which with the price of his potatoes and money saved from the sale of the honey from his fifty bee hives, amounted to the snug sum of five hundred dollars. His young brother, L. E. Ericsson, who left home when the family circle ceased to exist, began life as a grocer's clerk, but a few years later embarked in the mercantile business in a modest way and soon became a prosperous tradesman. As the years went by he gradually enlarged his stock, rose to an eminent position in the mercantile world and at this time his wealth is estimated at considerable in excess of one million dollars. He is still a resident of Sweden and one of the distinguished business men of Slatter, the city in which he lives.

Thinking to better his condition in the United States, whither a number of his friends had already gone, Mr. Brown, in 1872, took a vessel at Warburg for Gattenburg; thence by steamer to Hull, England, from which place he went by rail to Liverpool. At the latter place he took passage on one of the Anchor Line vessels and ten days thereafter landed at Castle Garden, New York. From New York city he proceeded to Titusville, Pennsylvania, where his friends were living, and after spending a short time with them, he started out in quest of a situation of some kind as his stock of money was getting quite low. After traveling about from place to place during the ensuing winter and well nigh exhausting his funds, he secured, in the summer of 1873, employment on a railroad at Warren, Ohio, at two dollars per day. After working for the company until there was something like one hundred dollars due him, having drawn barely sufficient of his wages to meet his living expenses, the paymaster absconded with the funds, leaving all the workmen losers, as the company, a small affair, could not make good the deficit. Considerably discouraged but by no means disheartened by this unfortunate experience, Mr. Brown at once looked around for other employment, which he soon found with the Valley railroad, then in process of construction between Akron and Cleveland. After working about one month he was taken down with a severe attack of fever and ague which kept him in bed nearly two months, to his great pecuniary embarrassment. When sufficiently recovered he went to New Castle, Pennsylvania, but not finding employment there, returned to Ohio and resumed work on the Valley road between Canton and Akron, taking his wages in script worth about seventy-five cents on the dollar. After laboring for a few months under such discouraging circumstances he gave up his job and went to New Berlin, but not finding any way of earning a livelihood there he returned to the employ of the Valley road at the same depreciated pay as he had formerly received. Later he went to Greenville to work on another road, but finding the branch there about finished and no more hands needed, he hired to a farmer to chop wood at fifty cents a cord. In this way he put in the time until the spring of 1874, when, with the sum of five dollars in his pocket, he walked to Canton, determined if possible to find something else to do besides digging on a railroad at starvation wages or chopping wood at fifty cents a cord.

On reaching this city Mr. Brown secured quarters at a hotel, after which he started out on his quest for any kind of honest employment he could find to do. When all but fifty cents of his money was gone and nothing had been found, he very honestly explained his situation to the landlord, telling that gentleman that he would be obliged to leave his house and look elsewhere for something to do. In this instance the landlord proved a friend indeed as well as a friend in need. After listening to the young fellow's story, being impressed with his straightforward, manly appearance, he interested himself in his behalf by sending him to the home of Mr. McKinley, who happened to be in need of a good, reliable hand. When Mr. Brown presented himself at the latter's home he was met by Mrs. McKinley, who referred him to her husband. He immediately proceeded to the latter's office and after a few preliminaries relative to the matter of wages and board had been arranged, he entered upon what proved to be a ten-year term of service with Mr. McKinley, during which time a warm and abiding friendship sprang up between the two. Mr. Brown proved faithful to every trust reposed in him and spared no pains to advance his employer's interests. He was one of the future President's household and was consulted upon matters pertaining to the place and his advice always had its weight and influence. During Mr. McKinley's administration in congress the homestead was taken in charge by his father-in-law, James A. Saxton, and the Barber family, though the subject remained there during this period and was treated with the same courtesy by them as by the McKinleys. He saved his wages with the greatest care and at the expiration of ten years found himself the possessor of sufficient means to make what he and his employer at the time thought and what has since proved a most fortunate investment. This was the purchase of the corner lot on which his home now stands, and the erection of a greenhouse, for which there was then a most opportune opening.

Mr. Brown engaged in business as a florist while in Mr. McKinley's service, intrusting the management of the concern to a friend in whose ability and honor he placed utmost reliance. After two years this friend proved unfaithful, as he left the city suddenly, taking with him all earnings of the business in his possession. Following this Mr. Brown resigned his position with his employer in order to give personal attention to his own affairs, which had already begun to assume respectable proportions. Purchasing the balance of the square on which his greenhouse stood, he greatly enlarged the capacity of his buildings and soon took rank as the leading florist in the city. His business has been very successful from the beginning and from an income of five hundred dollars the first year it now returns him, clear of all expenses, over seven thousand dollars annually. In addition to this, his real estate has advanced greatly in value, and from other investments which he has made from time to time his earnings are also quite large. In connection with his regular business, Mr. Brown also deals in real estate. Actuated by a commendable public spirit, he has done much to advance the material interests of Canton and beautify the city by erecting on his different lots a number of buildings for business and residence purposes. Among the more noted of these edifices is the Brown conservatory building, a large four-story structure of pressed brick, the ground floor of which he uses for his business and residence, the whole being surrounded by magnificent conservatories, the like of which is not to be seen in this or any other city in the state. He has erected in Canton over one hundred tenement houses, all of which are kept in fine repair so that the occupants find no fault with their landlord, but on the contrary, are ever ready to praise him for his broad humanitarian principles.

Mr. Brown came to Canton in May, 1874, poor, friendless and alone, with barely enough money in his possession to pay a week's board at the modest hotel. His advancement since that time is perhaps without a parallel in the career of any other resident of the city or county. This phenomenal success has resulted from his own inherent energy, wise foresight and superior business methods, every dollar in his possession coming to him through these channels. Mr. Brown stands high in other relations of life as he does in the realm of business, being recognized as a large-hearted, broad-minded citizen whose aim is to subserve the public good by every legitimate means at his command. He is a member of the White Cross Scandinavian Society, in addition to which he belongs to the Masonic order, having risen to the degree of Sir Knight; he is also identified with the Knights of Pythias and the order of Maccabees, and in politics is a staunch and uncompromising supporter of the Republican party.

Mr. Brown was married in the city of Canton, March 1, 1888, to Miss Florence Gilmore, daughter of Nathaniel and Anna (Dougan) Gilmore, of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, a notice of whom will be found in the sketch of Dr. Pontius, on another page of this work.

DAVID H. ROHRER is a native son of Stark county, and he was born on a farm in Canton township, on the 3d of July, 1852, being the only child of David and Elizabeth (Hoffman) Rohrer, both of whom came of staunch German lineage. His father was born in the state of Pennsylvania, and as a young man he accompanied his parents, Isaac and Mary (Rohrer) Rohrer, on their removal from the old Keystone state to Stark county, the family taking up their abode on a farm in Canton township in the early pioneer days. In that township the parents of our subject were married, after which his father engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own responsibility, but he lived only a short time after his marriage, passing away in the flower of his young manhood, since he was but twenty-four years of age at the time of his death, while he left his young wife with an infant son only three days old at the time. That son was he of whom this sketch is written. His mother subsequently became the wife of Peter Stauffer, to whom she bore four children, of whom three survive, namely: Priscilla, who is the wife of Amos Sollenberger, of Denver, Colorado; Henry, who is a resident of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and Emma, who is unmarried and resides in the city of Chicago, Illinois. The devoted mother passed away in 1869, at the age of forty-six years.

David H. Rohrer remained with his mother until he had attained the age of sixteen years, having received a common-school education, and he then started out in life on his own responsibility by securing employment on a farm, this being in harmony with his earlier training. On the 16th of December, 1873, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Myers, who was at the time a resident of the city of Canton. She was born in the state of Pennsylvania, whence she accompanied her father, John B. Myers, on his removal to Stark county, where he became a pioneer farmer in Canton township, finally retiring from active business and passing the closing years of his life near Canton. One year after his marriage Mr. Rohrer purchased fifty-two acres of land in Nimishillen township and began farming on his own responsibility, meeting with a due measure of success, since he was industrious and brought to bear the full strength of his forceful energy and excellent business judgment. In 1880 he sold this farm to John Vivland and purchased his present home farm of one hundred and sixty acres, on section 19, in the same township, and here he has since made many improvements and has placed the land under most effective cultivation, so that his returns are such as to justify the zealous efforts put forth. In politics he maintains an independent attitude and his religious faith is that of the Brethren of Christ, of which organization his wife also is a devoted member. They are the parents of eleven children, namely: Clifford, who is a resident of Canton township; Elizabeth, who remains at the parental home; Bertha, who is the wife of Harvey Warstler, who has charge of the operation of a portion of our subject's farm; Albert, Mary and Eugene, who remain at the parental home; John, who resides in Canton township; and Harry, Martin, Nettie and Ellen, who are still beneath the home roof-tree.

MARTIN BRUBAKER is a native of the grand old commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and the son of Daniel and Harriet (Martin) Brubaker, both parents born in that state, the father in Juniata county, the mother in the county of Lancaster. In the year 1869 Daniel Brubaker moved his family to Wayne county, Ohio, where he lived until quite old, when he changed his abode to Stark county. He spent his last days in Tuscarawas township, dying here on the 1st of April, 1888, and on the 20th day of December following his faithful wife joined him in the land where loving hearts are nevermore severed by the ruthless hand of death. Daniel and Harriet Brubaker reared a family of three sons and two daughters, viz: David, Martin, Daniel, Nancy and Fannie, all living, well settled in life and highly esteemed in their respective communities. Daniel is a minister of the German Baptist church and lives in Illinois; David, a leading member of the Amish denomination, a religious body resembling in many respects the Dunkards or German Baptists, makes his home in Wayne county, Ohio; Nancy is the wife of Christian Miller and lives in Oklahoma, and Fannie, who married Jacob Martin, resides in Wayne county.

Martin Brubaker was born in Juniata county, Pennsylvania, on the 20th day of May, 1843. Hampered by a rather discouraging environment during his youth his advantages for obtaining an education were of necessity considerably limited, the greater part of his time, as soon as he was old enough, being required to develop the home farm and look after its cultivation. He remained in his native state until a young man of twenty-three, meanwhile assisting the father by every means within his power and in many ways demonstrating his usefulness as a faithful and loyal son who made every other consideration subordinate to his parents' interests.

In 1866 Mr. Brubaker came to Stark county and for several years thereafter labored as a farm hand at monthly wages, in this way earning in due time sufficient means to purchase land of his own in the county of Wayne. He went to the latter county about 1866 and invested what capital he had in a farm of seventy-seven acres, paying at the rate of seventy dollars per acre. After living there until about 1883 he disposed of his place at eighty-five dollars per acre and with the proceeds bought the farm in Tuscarawas township on which he has since lived and which he has converted into one of the finest farms of its size in the county of Stark. The place consists of one hundred and sixty acres and is admirably situated for general agricultural purposes and stock raising besides containing a fine coal bank, which in addition to furnishing fuel for home consumption is the source of considerable income to the owner. Mr. Brubaker is an enterprising agriculturist and that he has made his vocation remunerative is abundantly demonstrated by the fine condition of his home and the handsome competence he has earned. He is one of the progressive men of his community, standing for public improvements when properly inaugurated and conducted and his influence has ever been used to good and worthy ends. He has served his township as supervisor, aside from which minor office he has held no public position nor aspired to any kind of public honor. In religion he subscribes to the doctrines of the Menonite church, of which he has been for a number of years an humble and consecrated member.

Mr. Brubaker became a married man in 1870, on February 18 of which year he was united in the bonds of matrimony with Miss Magdalena, daughter of Jonas and Elizabeth Horst, of Tuscarawas township, the union resulting in the birth of six children: Jonas, the oldest of the family, married Lizzie White, and is the father of three children, Ida, Curtis, deceased, and one that died in infancy; Daniel, the second son, married Nancy Winger and has a daughter by the name of Myrl; Mary and Ezron are still with their parents and bear their respective shares of the work required to run the farm and manage the household; Henry and Enos, the fifth and sixth in order of birth, are deceased.

CHARLES ALLISON SHAW.—The father of the subject, Thomas S. Shaw, was born in Chatham, Massachusetts, and in that state was reared. Upon attaining mature years he married and shortly afterwards came to Ohio, making the trip on horseback. With money which his wife brought with her they purchased a farm in Medina county and there for some years he engaged in the pursuit of agriculture. He also engaged in the hardware business at Medina, in which he was quite successful. He was an ardent Republican in politics, stood high in the councils of his party and for many years served as recorder of Medina county. He was a warm personal friend of William McKinley and frequently entertained the eminent statesman at his home. In his native state Thomas S. Shaw was united in marriage with Miss Polly Hamlin, who came of a wealthy and prominent family of the Old Bay state and who prior to her marriage was engaged in teaching. To their union were born three children, as follows: Ella became the wife of J. M. Templeton, of Medina, Ohio; Charles A. is the subject, and Flora, who is the wife of Dr. J. N. Sipher, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Charles Allison Shaw was born on the parental farmstead in Chatham township, Medina county, Ohio, on the 16th of September, 1858. He there grew to manhood and received a good education. When the subject was about six years old his father was elected to the office of county recorder, which necessitated his removal to the city of Medina. The subject entered the schools of that place and was graduated therefrom at the age of sixteen years. He possessed the power of close application and invariably stood at the head of his classes; but while he was a close student, he did not neglect his physical culture and took a hearty interest in all athletic and outdoor sports. Entering the Western Reserve College (now called Adelbert College), then situated at Hudson, Ohio, he pursued the full course of study and was graduated in the class of 1881, taking the highest honors of his class. Because of his steady application to his studies in college, he was compelled to suspend his studies for one year, during which time he learned the tinner's trade. Shortly after his graduation from college, Mr. Shaw accepted the position of electrician with the Brush Electric Company, at Cleveland. He was of a mechanical turn of mind and devoted much of his leisure time to the study of physics and chemistry, becoming well versed in these sciences. After coming to Canton he was engaged in making the electrical apparatus and the laboratory supplies for the high school of that city, in this way saving to the board of education a considerable expense. Accepting the position of assistant principal in the high school he served for one year to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned and when, at the close of the first year, Dr. Marchand, the principal, resigned for the purpose of studying medicine, Mr. Shaw was at once chosen as his successor, a position which he filled up to the time of his death, March 31, 1892, a period of about eight years. In this exacting position Mr. Shaw soon attained distinction, being recognized as one of the most successful educators of the county. A well educated, symmetrically developed man, his work as an educator brought him prominently to the notice of the public, which was prompt in recognizing his high standard of professional excellence. He was a gentleman of scholarly tastes and studious habits, kept abreast of the times in advanced educational methods and his general knowledge was at once broad and comprehensive. Full of tender sympathy, he kept in close touch with his pupils, and, whether at work or recreation, they always felt that they had in him a true friend and a loyal companion.

Mr. Shaw's religious principles were in harmony with those embodied in the creed of the Congregational church and from childhood he was a member of the local congregation at Medina, retaining his affiliation therewith until his death. Of a deeply religious nature, he was ever faithful and consistent in his efforts to follow in the footsteps of the man of Nazareth. He took an active interest in the Young Men's Christian Association and did much to advance the interests of that beneficent organization. In politics he was a firm advocate of Republican principles, but never aspired to the honors or emoluments of public office.

On the 2d of January, 1883, Mr. Shaw was united in marriage with Miss Lola Riker, of

Painesville, Ohio, a union which was blessed by the birth of two children, Marjorie R. and Donald M., both now attending school. Mrs. Shaw was born in Painesville, Lake county, Ohio, January 25, 1860. Her paternal grandparents were Henry and Deborah Riker, the former of Holland Dutch extraction and the latter of an old and prominent Quaker family of Long Island. Henry Riker came with his family to Lake county, Ohio, in an early day and entered land in the neighborhood of Painesville. Here he lived the remainder of his days, dying there a number of years ago of old age, his wife having preceded him to the better land some years. She was noted as an exceptionally intelligent woman, possessed of large capacities for business. One of her brothers acquired considerable note as a writer and published several well-known books, possessing much literary merit. Mrs. Shaw's father, Leander B. Riker, was born in 1836, on Long Island, New York, or on a little island close by, called Riker's Island. He was but a child when brought by his parents to Ohio, and grew up amid the rude surroundings of his pioneer home in Lake county. Upon attaining to years of maturity he established himself in business at Painesville, where he was fairly successful. During the war of the Rebellion he performed active and efficient service in the commissary department of the United States army, retiring with a creditable record. In politics he was a firm and uncompromising Republican and in religion was a faithful and consistent member of the Congregational church. His death occurred at Painesville in August, 1895; his wife still survives at the age of sixty-two years. Their union was blessed by the birth of the following children: Lola, Mrs. Shaw; Henry, who resides in Akron, this state; Jennie became the wife of E. C. Rodman, of Binghamton, New York; Eva Louise is the wife of J. W. Hamlin, of Seattle, Washington; Walter S., of Willoughby, Ohio; Alma E. and

Ethel M. are still at home. Mrs. Shaw was educated in the public schools of Painesville and at a seminary at Hudson, Ohio. Upon completing her education she began teaching in the schools of Columbus, where she was employed for nearly three years, after which she taught for one year in the schools of Lincoln, Illinois. After the death of her husband she resumed teaching in the schools of Canton, and has since that time been continuously engaged as such. She is a member of the First Presbyterian church of Canton and stands high in the esteem of all who know her.

ISRAEL BIXLER was born in Lake township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 19th of July, 1828, being a son of David and Catherine (Reichard) Bixler, of whose thirteen children seven are living at the time of this writing, namely: Israel, who is the subject; David, who is a resident of Indiana; Benjamin, who resides at Springfield Lake, Summit county, Ohio; Henry, who is superintendent of the Stark county infirmary; William, who also resides at Springfield Lake; Louis, who is a resident of the city of Cleveland, and Rev. Andrew J., who is located in Rice county, Kansas. The father, David Bixler, was a native of the state of Maryland, where he was born on the 6th of May, 1796. His parents died when he was a mere child, and he was taken into the home of Daniel Markley, with whom he came to Ohio when he was ten years of age, in 1806. The family located in Lake township, Stark county, where David Bixler was reared to maturity. In 1817 he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Markley, a daughter of his foster-father, and the five children of this union are now all deceased. After the death of his first wife Mr. Bixler married Miss Catherine Reichard, who was born in the state of Pennsylvania, on the 2d of June, 1806, and who was the mother of the subject. After his first marriage David Bixler settled on a farm in Marlboro township, this county, where he continued to reside for a number of years and then sold this farm, comprising eighty acres, and purchased a quarter-section in Lake township, where he took up his abode and began the work of improving and cultivating the land. He later purchased also an adjoining eighty-acre tract, and as the same was equipped with better buildings he removed to the same and there made his home until his death, in his sixty-eighth year, having been industrious and energetic and having been duly successful in his endeavors, while he held the unlimited confidence and regard of the community. He was a member of the German Baptist church and took a deep interest in its work. His second wife entered into the life eternal and they rest side by side in the cemetery at Hartwell, Lake township.

Israel Bixler was reared under the conditions and influences of the pioneer epoch, early becoming inured to the arduous work of the farm, while the educational privileges afforded him were such as were to be had in the pioneer log school-house, with its puncheon floor, slab benches and other primitive equipments. At the age of eighteen years Mr. Bixler went to Miami county, Indiana, where he was employed in a nursery for a period of two years, and with the discovery of gold in California he became seriously attracted with the prevailing "fever" and was one of the argonauts of the memorable year, 1849, having started forth in January of that year and made the trip by the way of the Isthmus of Panama, from which locality he made the remainder of the voyage to San Francisco on board of an old sailing vessel, whose every trip was attended with additional hazard, so unseaworthy had the boat become through years of battling with the elements. Mr. Bixler remained in the Golden state about four years, working in the placer mines during a portion of this period, while during the balance of his stay he owned and operated a pack train of mules, by means of which he transported provisions and supplies to the different mining camps which were inaccessible to wagons. Eventually the Indians killed most of his mules and he then purchased a saw-mill, which he operated for a short time, and in 1853 he returned to Stark county, on this occasion making the trip by the way of the Nicaragua route. Upon reaching home he decided to supplement the somewhat meagre educational training of his more youthful days, and with this end in view entered the high school in the village of Marlboro, where he continued his studies with marked zeal and earnestness for two terms.

On the 8th of January, 1854, shortly after leaving school, Mr. Bixler was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Smith, who was born in Lake township, being a daughter of George E. Smith, who was one of the early settlers in that township. After his marriage he located on the farm where he now resides, and here he has continued to make his home for nearly a half century, within which he has metamorphosed the place from a heavily timbered tract, with little in the way of improvements, into one of the fine farms of the county and one equipped with excellent buildings and other evidences of thrift and prosperity. For a time he operated the place on shares, later rented the same in a direct way and finally, in 1866, purchased the property, which comprises one hundred and sixty-one acres of exceptionally fertile land, the integrity of the soil having been maintained during all these years by means of proper handling of the same in the way of rotation of crops, proper fertilizing, etc. To Mr. and Mrs. Bixler have been born ten children, concerning whom we offer a brief record, as follows: Orlando has charge of the old homestead; Leona is the wife of David Huffman, of this township; Martha remains at the parental home; Sarah is the wife of John C. Powell, of Washington township; Byron is a successful farmer of Marlboro township; Cora is the wife of David Holben, of Homer, Michigan; Loretta is the wife of William Lower, of Deerfield, Portage county, Ohio; and Elmer and Ellsworth are twins, the former residing in the city of Buffalo, New York, while the latter remains at the parental home.

In politics Mr. Bixler was arrayed in support of the Democratic party prior to 1860, since which time he has been a zealous supporter of the Republican party. He served seven years as township trustee and has ever taken a deep interest in all that has concerned the progress and material prosperity of his home township and county. He and his wife are members of the Evangelical church.

ISAAC GOSHORN.—Today among the prominent and successful men of Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, stands the gentleman whose name appears at the beginning of this paragraph. The qualities of keen discrimination, sound judgment and executive ability enter very largely into his makeup and have been contributing elements to the material success which has come to him.

Isaac Goshorn is a native son of the Buckeye state, having first seen the light of day on his father's farm in Bethlehem township, Stark county, on the 23d of May, 1837. His parents were Samuel and Eliza (Reed) Goshorn, the former a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and the latter of Ohio. Their marriage occurred in Stark county, this state, and here they spent the remainder of their lives. Their deaths occurred in Pike township, he at the age of forty-four years and she aged about thirty-seven years. They were the parents of seven children, of whom the subject was the first born.

Isaac Goshorn was reared chiefly in Pike township and there has passed the greater part of his life. He is indebted to the common schools for his education, though that has in subsequent years been supplemented by that wide and practical knowledge gained by contact with the world and a close and discriminating observation of men and events. Upon attaining mature years Mr. Goshorn learned the trade of a carpenter, which occupation he followed for about eight years, meeting with a fair degree of success. Aside from this farming has been his principal occupation throughout life and that he thoroughly understands his vocation is well attested by the condition of his property and the abundant harvests which are returned to him for the care and labor he bestows upon his fields. He is well versed in the most modern and up-to-date methods of husbandry and keeps a careful oversight of the details of his business. He owns sixty-one acres of fine land and by a proper rotation of crops and the wise use of fertilizers has succeeded in bringing the soil up to a high standard of excellence. Because of the intelligence and sound judgment displayed in his operations, he has achieved a substantial success as a farmer and has won a splendid reputation among his fellow agriculturists of the township in which he lives.

Mr. Goshorn has been twice married. On the 13th of November, 1859, in Pike township, Stark county, Ohio, he was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Worley, a daughter of the late Michael Worley. She was born and reared in Pike township, Stark county, and in the schools of that locality received her education. Her death occurred on the 11th of December, 1893, and on the 2d of February, 1896, he was united in wedlock with Miss Mary A. Peters, a daughter of the late Daniel and Ann (Hanna) Peters. She was born in Pike township and was reared in this county. The first union was blessed by the birth of four children, briefly mentioned as follows: William died at the age of one year;

ISAAC GOSHORN.

Mary I. is the wife of James J. Carns; Nancy E. died when but eighteen months old and a daughter died in infancy.

Politically Mr. Goshorn has all his life been an active and enthusiastic Republican and has taken an effective part in many campaigns of his party. In recognition of his valuable services in the party ranks and of his eminent personal ability he was nominated by his party for the office of trustee of his township and at the ensuing election was chosen by a safe majority. So efficient and satisfactory were his services in this position that he was chosen to succeed himself in the office, retiring at the end of his second term with the commendation of all his constituents, regardless of party affiliations. Religiously he is a member of the United Brethren church, having identified himself with that society in 1867. In the spring of 1864, when the country was still engaged in that greatest of internecine conflicts, the war of the Rebellion, Mr. Goshorn volunteered his services to aid in its suppression, enlisting in Company F, One Hundred Sixty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Though his term of service was for but four months, he participated with his regiment in much arduous service and returned home with a creditable military record. Mr. Goshorn is held in high esteem by all who know him; he discharges the duties of citizenship intelligently, has proven true to every confidence reposed in him and has always endeavored to live so as to merit the respect of his many friends and neighbors.

REV. GEORGE W. BROWN.—The Brown family is of stanch German origin, and it is a tradition in the family that the original progenitor in America came here as a lad of seven years, being bound out to pay his passage across the Atlantic. It is certain that he came to America in the early colonial epoch, and tradition further states that the great-grandfather of our subject was a soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution. The paternal grandfather of the subject was Daniel Brown and the maiden name of his wife was Houser. They became the parents of twenty-one children, and the family was one of the first to settle in Nimishillen township, Stark county, the grandfather taking up a tract of heavily timbered government land, which is now known as the Stoner farm, and it is a matter of record that two of his children wandered away from the little log-cabin home in the early days and were lost in the surrounding wilderness, the searching party not being able to find them until the third day after their disappearance. The Brown family was thus prominently identified with the early development of this favored section of the Buckeye state.

Rev. George W. Brown is a native of Seneca county, Ohio, having been born in the village of Bascom, on the 13th of December, 1840, and being a son of Jacob C. and Sarah (Price) Brown, both of whom were born in Stark county, where the former was born about the year 1814 and the latter about 1817. Jacob C. Brown passed his early life on the old pioneer homestead in this county and here, as a youth, he learned the trade of brick and stone mason and plasterer. It is probable that he moved to Seneca county shortly after his marriage, since two of his children who were older than our subject were likewise born in that county. Finally the health of our subject's mother became seriously impaired and his father found it difficult to provide for his family. Under these conditions George W. and his youngest brother, Alvin M., aged respectively seven and four years at the time, then went to live with a farmer, Daniel Tombaugh, who resided near West Independence, Hancock county, Ohio, their mother dying shortly afterward. This worthy foster-father proved most kind and generous to the two boys whom he thus reared, and his interest in them was a deep and earnest one, as he had no children of his own. He was desirous that the boys should receive the best possible educational advantages, and it was also his wish that our subject should become a clergyman and the younger brother a physician. When the subject of this sketch was fifteen years of age, in 1855, Mr. Tombaugh disposed of his property in Hancock county and came to Stark county and purchased a farm three-fourths of a mile distant from the village of Louisville, and during a portion of the time the subject thereafter prosecuted his studies in the district schools and the remainder of the time in the schools of the village mentioned, thus receiving an excellent foundation upon which to rear the superstructure of broad and exact knowledge which he later acquired through active personal application and study and through intimate association with men and affairs. About 1858 he went to Greensburg, this state, with a view to entering upon the work of preparing himself for the ministry of the Evangelical Association, with which he had identified himself when sixteen years of age. In 1860 and 1861 Mr. Brown was engaged in teaching school, and in 1861 he went to Bryan, Williams county, this state, to visit his sister, Mrs. Eliza Green, and while he was there the tocsin of war sounded, for the President issued his first call for volunteers to aid in suppressing the rebellion and maintaining the integrity of the Union. Mr. Brown's ardor and intrinsic patriotism were roused to definite action and as soon as opportunity afforded he entered the ranks of the brave boys in blue. On the 20th of April, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered in at Cleveland, where the regiment remained a few weeks. Of the valiant and honorable military record of Mr. Brown we can not do better than to reproduce a previously published article pertaining thereto: "From Cleveland the regiment went to West Virginia, and Mr. Brown was first under fire at Phillippi, under Colonel Steadman, who afterwards became a general. The next engagement was at Bealington, under General Milroy, and they followed the Confederates without their usual supply of clothing and provisions, and for their supper at night had nothing except a piece of hardtack each. Our subject succeeded in getting a rubber overcoat which partly covered his body, for it rained all night. They started after the Confederates the next morning without breakfast and overtook them at Carrick's Ford, where, after a hard-fought battle, the enemy was overpowered. They captured the rebel supplies, but got nothing to eat until noon the next day. Returning to Bealington, our subject suffered more with hunger than he did during any subsequent time he was in service. Soon after the company returned home, at the expiration of the term of enlistment, the subject went to Williams county, where he remained four weeks. He then re-enlisted, for three years, in Company K, Sixty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and went into camp at Camp Latta, at Napoleon, Ohio. Later he was at Camp Chase, in Columbus, Ohio, and thence proceeded with his command to Fort Donelson, where he suffered intensely with cold. Once he built a fire, but was ordered to put it out and did so. However, as soon as the officer had passed on, he built enough to keep his feet warm. His next engagement was at Shiloh, and he was in General Lew Wallace's brigade, which assisted General Grant's army at that battle. After this our subject was at Bolivar and Matamoras, and at the latter place saw his first shell from the enemy. Like many others, he dodged it, and afterward found that it was a quarter of a mile away from him. He participated in the entire siege of Vicksburg, and assisted in breaking the levee to turn the water into Louisiana. He was in the battle of Thompson's Hill, where they charged the enemy just at nightfall and drove them out. He was under General Logan at the battle of Raymond, and afterward at Jackson, Champion Hills and Black River. At Vicksburg Mr. Brown re-enlisted as a veteran, went across the Mississippi and took part in the battle at Baker's creek. Returning to Vicksburg, he obtained a veteran furlough for thirty days and went home, passing his time partly in Stark and partly in Williams county. Returning to his command, Mr. Brown was at the front in the engagement at Big Shanty, and soon afterward he had the opportunity of watching a battle without being engaged in it, and was so situated that he could watch the approach of both armies. After this he was in many skirmishes until the army reached Atlanta, where he was out as a skirmisher and unconsciously saved his life by stepping back just as a bullet passed along his vest. He was chased by the enemy but managed to escape by hiding. He had still another narrow escape from injury at Atlanta, a ball passing through one of his stockings. Mr. Brown was with General Sherman in his march to the sea, and from Savannah went to South Carolina, where he was appointed to take charge of a forage detail, having command of the same for five months, or until the close of the war. He had many narrow escapes but was ever ready for duty. After the cessation of hostilities Mr. Brown took part in the Grand Review at Washington, and was mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky, receiving his honorable discharge on the 16th of July, 1865. He enlisted as a private, but just before reaching Atlanta he was promoted to the rank of sergeant."

Having proved himself a real and loyal son of the republic and having followed the old flag on many a sanguinary battle field, Mr. Brown returned to Stark county and forthwith resumed his work of preparing to battle effectively as a leader in the ranks of the church militant. Through a course of private reading of theology he prepared himself for the active work of the ministry of the Evangelical Association, and in January, 1867, he was married, and the following March entered the conference and was assigned to a charge at Dempseytown, Venango county, Pennsylvania, where he remained two years. Thereafter he passed one year in Oil City and two years in Linesville, that state, and was then assigned to the Stark circuit of Stark county, Ohio, where he labored effectively for one year, at the expiration of which time he was given a pastorate at Southington, Trumbull county, where he remained two years, and his assignments subsequently to this may be briefly noted as follows: East Liberty, Summit county, three years, within which he was sent as a delegate two years in succession to the general board of missions; then on the Venango circuit, in Clarion county, Pennsylvania, two years, and within this time he was a delegate to the general conference in Chicago. Later he accepted a pastorate in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, where he remained one year, when his health became seriously impaired through rheumatism, and finally his friends sent him to Hot Springs, Arkansas, where his improvement was immediate. Upon returning to his charge his difficulty soon grew worse again, and he thus returned to his home in Stark county, where he gradually recuperated his health, and he finally went to Shenango, Mercer county, Pennsylvania, where he filled a pastorate for three years, going thence to South Fork, in the Alleghany mountains, where he was practically cured of his rheumatic troubles. While there he was near the dam above Johnstown at the time when it broke and resulted in the terrible calamity known in the annals of history as the Johnstown flood. Mr. Brown wrote a spirited and interesting description of the scene, of which he was an eye-witness. His wife and daughter had returned from the valley only a few moments before the terrible disaster, having been there to urge some friends to move to a place of safety. Mr. Brown's only son, Frank D., a young man of twenty years, went to work in Johnstown immediately after the flood had subsided, doing all possible for the relief of the suffering and the disposing of the unfortunate victims of the deluge, and he there contracted typhoid fever, which resulted in his death, thus sacrificing his life on the altar of humanity.

The subject remained at South Fork for two years after this ever memorable catastrophe, and the period was one of devoted labor and one of sympathetic work for many who had been bereaved in the community through this cataclysm. He was thereafter for one year pastor of the Fulton Street Evangelical church, in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and while there was appointed delegate to the general conference, held in Philadelphia. In 1890 he was appointed a member of a committee of three to which was assigned the duty of bringing suit against the head of the Evangelical Publishing Company in the city of Cleveland, and the first decision was in favor of the complainants. In the following year he was re-appointed a member of the committee on litigation, by the general conference, and the difficulty was finally adjusted by the conference purchasing the stock of the publishing company, and the paper published has since been continued as the official organ of the church. Mr. Brown had taken a prominent part in the litigation, and has written a number of articles pertinent thereto, while he also became a stockholder and director in the Evangelical Publishing Company, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. As a result of the litigation mentioned a dissension occurred in the church, resulting in its division and the material weakening of its work, so that Mr. Brown found it impossible to longer properly maintain himself and his family through his ministerial labors, and he decided to turn his attention to other fields of endeavor, and thus located in the village of Fairhope, Stark county, where he has since maintained his home. His foster-father and benefactor, Mr. Tombaugh, died on the 5th of August, 1891, making Mr. Brown his sole heir, and the estate was sufficient to relieve him of further financial worriments. In 1892 he was appointed postmaster of Fairhope, under the administration of President Harrison, and he has ever since remained incumbent of this office, while in connection with the duties of this position he has also conducted a successful grocery business since 1897. In 1895 Mr. Brown established and equipped an excellent greenhouse and gave special attention to the propagation of a fine order of plants, and he has succeeded in building up a large mail-order business, shipping his products into the most diverse sections of the Union. This floriculture department of his business is now in the active charge of his son-in-law, Mr. Hershey. In politics Mr. Brown is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and in 1899 he was the candidate of his party for representative in the state legislature, while in 1901 he was the candidate for the state senate on the same ticket, but his pronounced opposition to the liquor traffic led to such active work on the part of those favoring the same that he was defeated on each occasion, though he carried every precinct where he was known, securing the almost unanimous endorsement of Nimishillen township and a strong support in other sections of the county where his sterling worth and ability were recognized.

On the 27th of January, 1867, Mr. Brown was united in marriage to Miss Sophia J. Grant, whose paternal grandfather was a second cousin of the father of the late General U. S. Grant. She was born in Stark county, near the city of Alliance, on the 14th of January, 1845, being a daughter of Stacy and Mary (Schaffer) Grant. Mr. and Mrs. Brown became the parents of two children, namely: Frank D., who was born at Dempseytown, Pennsylvania, on the 12th of December, 1868, and who was in the very bloom of his noble young manhood when his life was cut short by death, on the 29th of October, 1889, under conditions already noted in this context; and Iva E. is the wife of Harley L. Hershey, of Fairhope, and they have two children, Ethel F. and Herbert Bennett. Mr. Brown is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, being a valued comrade of McKinley Post No. 25, at Canton. The eldest sister of the subject, Mrs. Martha Hallis, is a widow and resides in Iowa; his sister Eliza is the widow of James E. Green, and resides in Little Rock, Arkansas; William H., his next youngest brother, served three years during the Civil war and is now a resident of Springvale, Oklahoma, being a bachelor; and the youngest brother, Alvin M., who was likewise reared and educated by Daniel Tombaugh, enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and met his death in a charge at Chancellorsville.

CLARENCE E. EXLINE, M. D., is proud to claim Ohio as the state of his nativity and this pride is in no wise diminished but rather heightened by the fact of his having been born and reared in the old historic county of Stark. His natal month was August, the year, 1871, and the locality where he first saw the light of day, the village of Battleburg, in Pike township. The Doctor's youthful experience included the usual seasons of work and recreation which, from three to four months during the winter seasons, furnished the basis of his intellectual training. Early in life he was thrown upon his own resources and it was only by hard work that he was enabled to prosecute his studies further than the public school course could take him. When about eighteen years old he entered Mt. Union College, paying his tuition there with money earned by working on a brick yard at Waynesburg. After attending that institution one year and finding it impossible to finish the course desired, he again secured employment on the brick yard with the object in view of carrying out a long standing desire to prepare himself for the medical profession. When he had acquired sufficient means to pay the tuition and meet the necessary living expenses, he entered, in 1894, the Ohio Medical University at Columbus, and after prosecuting his studies there about three years was graduated on the 6th of April, 1897, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

The same month that witnessed his graduation marked the beginning of Dr. Exline's career as a physician, as he at once opened an office in Canton and began the practice of his profession under favorable auspices. Anxious to solve the mysteries of medical science, he has done all in his power to perfect himself in his chosen calling and as a result now enjoys distinctive prestige among his professional associates, besides having a large and lucrative business in Canton and adjacent country. A student and a thinker, his course has been in keeping with the progress of modern medical thought and with his past success as a criterion his many friends predict for him still greater progress with the passing years. Dr. Exline is identified with the Canton Medical Society, the Stark County Academy of Medicine, Northeastern Ohio Medical Society, and the American Medical Association, keeping in close touch with the deliberations of these different bodies.

Dr. Exline is a firm believer in revealed religion and looks upon the visible churches as an influential factor for the promotion of Christ's kingdom in the world. He is a member of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal church of Canton and holds several official positions in the same, including the chairmanship of the music committee and the trusteeship. He belongs to the Pythian order, Ben Hur fraternity, Foresters, Modern Woodmen of the World and the Order of Eagles, all but the first named being based upon the principle of life insurance. In politics the Doctor is a Republican of the most orthodox stamp and since his twenty-first year has maintained a lively interest in the success of the party. Personally he is a gentleman of pleasing presence, easily approachable and his quiet dignity and courteous demeanor have won him many friends in the best social circles of the community. Dr. Exline's marriage with Miss Lenora Hester Miller, of Columbus, Ohio, was solemnized on the 7th day of April, 1897, the same month and year in which he entered upon his professional career in the city of Canton.

SAMUEL F. DEVAUX was born in the village of Harrisburg, Nimishillen township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 1st of August, 1859, being one of the fourteen children of Peter and Christena (Snyder) DeVaux, and of his family ten survive, namely: Justy J., who is a resident of the city of Toledo, this state; Rev. Peter F., who is a clergyman of the Evangelical church and resides in Baltimore, Ohio; Rev. Martin, who is a clergyman of the same church and a resident of Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania; Samuel F., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; William, who is a painter and contractor in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, and who was for two years president of the Trades & Labor Union of America; Jacob, who is assistant ticket agent of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad in New York city; Ida, who is the wife of Thomas Fredericks, of that city; Leoda, who is the wife of Charles Giblin, who is likewise a resident of the national metropolis; Bessie, who is the wife of Thomas O'Brien, of New York city; and Ella, who is the wife of David H. Overbaugh, of Elmira, New York. Peter DeVaux, father of the subject, was born in France, in the year 1826, and when he was a boy he accompanied his parents on their emigration to America, the family taking up their residence in the village of Robertsville, Paris township, Stark county, Ohio, where were located many citizens of French extraction. There Peter DeVaux was reared to maturity, and there he learned the trade of shoemaking, to which he devoted his attention for many years, while he also found his services in much requisition as an auctioneer. He received but little education in a technical sense, but could speak with great fluency the English, French and German languages and was a man of very alert mentality and marked business acumen. He lived for varying intervals, after his marriage, in Robertsville, Paris, Harrisburg, Louisville and Fairhope, this county, and was a resident of the last named place at the time of his death, which occurred in 1876; he was killed by a train while crossing the railroad track in that village. In politics he was a staunch Democrat and his religious faith was that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared. The mother of the subject was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, about 1832, being of German ancestry, and she now lives in New York city with her youngest son, Jacob. She is a member of the Evangelical church and reared her children in the Protestant faith.

Samuel F. DeVaux remained beneath the parental roof until he had attained the age of eighteen years, his educational discipline having been received in the public schools of his native county. At the age noted he gave inception to his independent career by securing work on a farm, and to this line of occupation he devoted his attention for about five years, while later he was engaged in shoemaking, as a workman in brick yards, as an employe in the steel mills at Canton and for a short time at carpenter work in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, while he was for a few months employed on the Pittsburg & Fort Wayne Railroad. Finally he engaged in the house-painting business in the village of Louisville, this county, and after his marriage, in 1883, he continued in this line of enterprise until 1885, when he was elected marshal of the village mentioned, serving in this capacity until 1889, when he here established himself in the livery business. For a time he was compelled to continue his work as a house painter, as he had three competitors in the livery business and thus had some difficulty in placing his enterprise on a profitable basis. By strict attention to business and courteous treatment of his patrons, however, he finally gained the absolute control of the livery business in the town and today has one of the model stables of the county and is enjoying a large and representative patronage. Mr. DeVaux is an excellent judge of horses, and in connection with his livery enterprise he conducts a profitable business in the buying and selling of horses, in which line his judgment as to values is uniformly held as ultimate. In politics Mr. DeVaux is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party. He and his wife hold membership in the Reformed church.

On the 21st of August, 1883, Mr. DeVaux was united in marriage to Miss Amelia Cunin, who was born in Marlboro township, this county, being a daughter of John B. Cunin, an honored pioneer of the county, where his death occurred a number of years ago. Mr. and Mrs. DeVaux have one son, Lloyd J., who remains at the parental home.

J. F. ARNOLD, as chief promoter and general manager of one of Massillon's leading manufacturing establishments, has won a prominent place among the city's successful business men. Mr. Arnold is the son of Lorenz and Elizabeth (Souwvine) Arnold, both natives of Finkenbach, Germany, the mother dying there in 1878, aged forty, the father still living at the age of sixty-seven and at the present time on a visit to his son in the city of Massillon. When a young man Lorenz Arnold was one of the twelve hundred of his countrymen from whom one thousand men were conscripted for service in the German army, but as fortune would have it the full quota was drawn before his name was reached, consequently he escaped military duty. He early turned his attention to mechanical pursuits and after working at his chosen trade for a number of years, became a manufacturer upon his own responsibility. He built up a large and lucrative practice in his native country and continued the same until acquiring a competence of sufficient magnitude to enable him to spend the remainder of his life in honorable retirement.

J. F. Arnold was born in the town of Finkenbach, Germany, on the 9th of June, 1868, and spent seven years in the public schools of that place. Possessing natural mechanical ability, he decided to fit himself for high grade work in that line; accordingly, with this object in view, he entered a polytechnic school where he took a full course under the direction of skillful instructors, graduating from the institution in 1886. Shortly after completing his technical education young Arnold came to the United States, locating first at Canal Dover, Ohio, where he secured the position of draughtsman and wood carver with the firm of Dice, Bissman & Kurtz, manufacturers of furniture. Here his abilities soon won him recognition as an expert in his lines of work and he remained with the house nineteen months, during which time the numerous articles made after his original designs added to his well-established reputation. Severing his connection with the above firm, he accepted a similar position with the Wramblemeyer Furniture Company of Louisville, Kentucky, but after spending five months in that city resigned to become superintendent of the wood carving and cabinet department of the Southern Indiana Furniture Works at New Albany. He remained four years with that latter establishment, meanwhile developing a high degree of efficiency as a skillful designer and artistic carver, his work continually adding to his reputation as a master of his calling. Mr. Arnold's next position was with the large mantel manufacturing house of Widdicomb at Grand Rapids, Michigan, where he served as designer and carver for a little over a year, resigning in the fall of 1893 for the purpose of engaging in the undertaking business in the same city. While conducting the latter enterprise he did considerable fine work for the Grand Rapids Book-Case Company and his services were also in frequent demand by other firms when especially artistic designs were required. At the end of the second year he disposed of his undertaking establishment and going to Niles, Ohio, took a position with the firm of Arnold Brothers, undertakers and embalmers, which entire business he purchased two years later. After running the business with fair success for eight months, he sold out and in 1899 organized the Ohio Table Company at Massillon, with which enterprise he has since been actively identified and of which he now holds the important position of general manager.

The company was organized with a capital stock of thirty thousand, which has since been increased to fifty thousand, and from the beginning the business has steadily augmented until it is now one of the leading industrial enterprises of the city. Mr. Arnold brought to the management of this concern not only his superior artistic skill as a designer and carver but a mind enriched by many years of practical experience in every department of the furniture industry. His executive ability has enabled him greatly to extend the volume of business and place the company upon a firm financial basis, while the high grade of workmanship turned out easily distances all competition in the special line of articles manufactured. The works of the company are models of their kind, being supplied with the latest and most approved machinery and nothing but the best material is used in the manufactured product. From a somewhat modest beginning the business has advanced until the sales now amount to about one hundred thousand dollars annually, the output being shipped to various parts of the United States and Canada, besides supplying a large and constantly increasing local demand. The establishment is taxed to its utmost capacity to meet these demands and, judging by its past success and present prosperity, it is reasonably safe to predict a considerable enlargement of the works in the no distant future in order to keep pace with the high reputation the goods have achieved in the various markets where they are sold. Realizing that every dollar invested in the Ohio Table Company is as safe and much more remunerative than the same amount of money put into a bank, Mr. Arnold has gradually purchased the shares of different stockholders, until he now owns a one-fourth interest in the concern. He has been fortunate in realizing on his investment and is now in comfortable circumstances, owning, in addition to his interest in the company, valuable property in the city, including a beautiful and attractive residence which is an ornament to the street on which situated.

Mr. Arnold began life a poor boy but, possessing energy and a laudable ambition to succeed, together with strict integrity and honorable motives, his success was never for a moment a matter of doubt. While relying upon his own industry, well defined purposes and consecutive efforts for advancement, he is free to acknowledge his indebtedness to a warm personal friend, who at various times gave him not only wise counsel but financial backing in some of his most important undertakings. This friend, colaborer and fellow helper was Mr. Hartzell, president of the Ohio Table Company, a man of high business standing and commanding social prestige. He took a lively interest in young Arnold when the latter first came to Massillon and was equally interested with him in organizing the company, which through their joint efforts has since achieved such marked success. Between the two a warm friendship sprang up which has become intensified with the passing years.

While a business man in all the term implies, Mr. Arnold manifests an abiding interest in the general affairs of the city of his residence, and has implicit faith in its future. He finds time from the pressing demands of his business affairs to devote to the social amenities of life and to this end has become identified with various fraternal organizations, prominent among which are the Masonic order and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Personally he is a courteous and companionable gentleman of quiet demeanor, exceedingly popular with a large class of friends and is held in high esteem by all with whom he has business dealings or social relations. Mr. Arnold's temperament is decidedly optimistic and he has ever been accustomed to look upon the bright side of life. He possesses artistic tastes, is a great admirer of the beautiful and frequently gives outward expression to his thoughts in skillful workmanship in wood and on paper. His home, which is a dwelling place of refinement as well as hospitality, is presided over by a lady of culture to whom he was united in the bonds of wedlock in the year 1895. Her maiden name was Eleanor M. Vogt and she is the daughter of Peter and Carrie (Beyer) Vogt, of Grand Rapids, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold are well known in the social circles of Massillon and as members of the Lutheran church of this city, their lives have been in harmony with their religious profession.

MARTIN SENGER.—The Senger family in America appears to have been first represented in the old county of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and the name evidently indicates Germanic origin. The subject's father was Cyrus Senger, of Lancaster county, who married Lydia Gehman, a native of the county of Berks, where her ancestors probably settled in pre-Revolutionary times. Her parents were Christian and Barbara (Kurtz) Gehman, both born in Berks county, of German lineage, and is was in that part of the state that their respective deaths occurred many years ago. John Senger, father of Cyrus, was a native of Lancaster county, as was also his wife, who before her marriage bore the name of Sarah Bender. Like the Sengers, the Benders were also an old family, as the name frequently appears in the early official records of Lancaster, which leads to the belief that their antecedents were among the first permanent settlers.

Cyrus Senger was reared to manhood in his native county and followed carpentry and farming as means for obtaining a livelihood. He became widely known as a successful contractor and builder and also enjoyed the reputation of an honorable man and enterprising, public-spirited citizen. He lived to an advanced age, dying in 1892, his wife preceding him to the other world by ten years. In politics he was originally a Whig, later a Republican, and in religion a leading member of what is known as the Mennonite church. Mrs. Senger was also identified with the same religious body and lived a life of faith and good works. Eight children were born to this excellent couple and, what is somewhat remarkable, all are living, although the majority of them have long since passed the average age of man.

Martin Senger was born October 18, 1838, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and spent the years of his childhood and youth in the paternal homestead. His early education was obtained in the country schools of the neighborhood which he attended of winter seasons from his fifth to about his nineteenth year. At best his advantages were but limited, but by making the most of the opportunities at his command he acquired a fair knowledge of the fundamental branches of study besides adding to his general information by reading such books and periodicals as he could procure. Young Martin grew up, a strong, active youth and to him fell much of the labor required to cultivate the farm. While still a lad he became quiet adept in the use of his father's tools and later turned his mechanical skill to good account by working at the carpenter's trade. He followed carpentry and agriculture in his native state until the spring of 1867, at which time he went to Wayne county, Ohio, where he continued both vocations until changing his abode to the county of Stark, twelve years later. Mr. Senger came to this county in 1880 and the same year purchased a farm of one hundred and seventy-nine acres in Tuscarawas township, on which he lived as an enterprising, prosperous tiller of the soil until retiring from active life at a comparatively recent date. Like many of the country's most energetic and successful citizens, Mr. Senger is a self-made man and in the course of his long and active career he knew no such word as fail and in his regular vocations and business transactions discouragement never interfered with his plans nor delayed for any great length of time the accomplishment of his purpose. Since retiring from further participation in the busy world of affairs Mr. Senger has rented his farm and, in addition to the proceeds therefrom, has a fine coal bank which yields him an income more than sufficient to meet his necessary expenditures. The mine was developed in 1896 and since that time it has been steadily operated with liberal financial results. While primarily interested in his own affairs and intent upon increasing rather than diminishing the ample fortune in his possession, Mr. Senger is a public spirited man and takes no little part in matters concerning the welfare of the community in which he lives. He is a kind and obliging neighbor with a character marked by integrity and true benevolence. Like his parents before him, he believes firmly and trustfully in the great and sublime truths of revealed religion and as an humble but zealous member of the Mennonite church, his life has been and still is a power for good in the community.

The married life of Mr. Senger dates from 1868, on December 31st of which year he was united in the bonds of wedlock to Miss Elizabeth Brenneman, whose birth occurred in Wayne county, this state, November 14, 1843. Mrs. Senger is the daughter of Christian and Fannie (Rudy) Brenneman, both natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and early settlers of Wayne county, Ohio. Christian Brenneman was a farmer by occupation and he died in the county of Wayne in 1892 at an advanced age, his wife departing this life many years prior to that date, as long ago perhaps as 1847. Adam and Nancy (Eymen) Brenneman, the father and mother of Christian, were natives of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, but in an early day moved with their son to Ohio, settling in Wayne county, where their respective deaths occurred. Mrs. Senger's maternal grandparents were Christian and Barbara (Myers) Rudy, also from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and were also pioneers of the county of Wayne. To Mr. and Mrs. Senger five children have been born, namely: Harvey, Fannie, Rudy, David L. and Henry M., the oldest deceased, the second and third, twins.

DAVID B. HORST is the son of Jonas and Elizabeth (Buckwalter) Horst and an older brother of Jonas B. Horst, of Tuscarawas, in whose sketch on another page of this work is incorporated a brief epitome of the family history. On the 8th of December, 1833, in the old historic county of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, the subject was born and four years later left the scene of his childhood for Stark county, Ohio, where his parents settled in 1837. Of his youthful experience little need be said further than that they included the usual routine of labor common to boys reared in the rural districts and that he early learned to dignify honest toil and appreciate at their true value the lessons of virtue and thrift in which he was so carefully instructed. He was taught to look upon idleness as something akin to vice and to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, as one of the cardinal virtues forming the very groundwork of honorable and fully developed manhood. After acquiring a fair education in the common schools he addressed himself to the vocation of agriculture, first as his father's assistant on the homestead and later upon his own responsibility, beginning the struggle for himself when about twenty-five years of age. It is not necessary to follow in detail the various steps in the career of Mr. Horst as a tiller of the soil, nor write in full how he gradually added to his real estate until becoming the possessor of over three hundred acres of valuable land in the counties of Stark and Wayne. Suffice it to state, however, that the fine properties he now owns represent the fruits of his own labor, energy and excellent management, as he had comparatively little means when he commenced life for himself. He has been a first rate farmer and in the management of his business affairs, good judgment and wise forethought have ever been prominent. In all his relations Mr. Horst discharges his duties with energy and fidelity and is a man of acknowledged worth and irreproachable character. Politically he is a Republican, but not a partisan, and in religion a zealous and faithful communicant of the Mennonite church, his wife also belonging to the same body of worshipers.

January 25, 1859, Mr. Horst and Miss Annie Hess were united in the bonds of wedlock. Like her husband, Mrs. Horst was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and is the daughter of David and Elizabeth (Martin) Hess, both natives of the Keystone state, the father dying there a number of years ago. Some time after her husband's death, Mrs. Hess moved the family to Stark county, Ohio, subsequently changing her residence to the county of Wayne, where she afterward died. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Horst has been blessed with children, whose names are as follows: Joseph, Levi, David, Ezra, Frank, Jacob and Elizabeth. The last named married Noah Whitmere, of Stark county, and some time after his death became the wife of George Tyson; she bore her first husband one daughter, Annie, and a son by the name of Enos, the latter deceased, and died some years ago in the state of Indiana.

MALVERN E. MCFARREN.—Daniel McFarren, father of the subject, was born in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, Ohio, in 1847. He is of Scotch ancestry and in the present generation are manifested those sterling qualities of that honest and rugged race. Daniel McFarren was reared to the life of a farmer, and is indebted to the district schools of his neighborhood for his mental discipline. Upon attaining mature years he was united in marriage to Miss Jemima Shettler, a native of Bethlehem township, Stark county, born in 1848. Her father, Jacob Shettler, was a native of Pennsylvania, but in an early day removed to the Buckeye state, where he spent the remainder of his life, he and his wife both passing away in Bethlehem township. After his marriage Daniel McFarren purchased a farm adjoining the old homestead and followed agricultural pursuits there for about sixteen years. At the end of that time he removed to the Shettler homestead, but after residing there for some time he removed to the farm upon which he now resides, in Tuscarawas township. To him and his wife were born the following children: Malvern E., whose name heads this sketch; Jacob, who married Clara Linwood, and resides in this county; Arie, who became the wife of Ira Truby, of Maynard, Ohio; Harry, Kittie and Florence, all at home. Politically Daniel McFarren has been a life-long Republican, though never a seeker after the honors or emoluments of public offices. Religiously he and his wife have long been faithful and consistent members of the United Brethren church.

Malvern McFarren was born on the 25th of October, 1868, and was reared on his father's farm in Sugar Creek township, this county. From seven years of age until sixteen he faithfully attended the district schools of his neighborhood and made such rapid progress in his studies that at the latter age he was granted a license to teach in the common schools. Desirous of still further increasing his knowledge and to better fit him for his chosen profession he in the meantime spent two terms at Smithville Academy, and two years at Woodsworth Normal, in the latter institution being under the preceptorship of Prof. J. B. Eberly. He later entered Mount Union College, where he spent one year. Besides his collegiate training Mr. McFarren has ever been a close home student and has burnt much midnight oil in his efforts to acquire knowledge and equip himself for the exacting calling in which he has engaged.

In the fall of 1898 Mr. McFarren accepted the position of principal of the schools of Osna-burg, where he remained three years to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. In the fall of 1901 he came to Canton, having been chosen principal of the Garfield school. He has already won for himself a most excellent reputation as a successful and popular educator. He takes a deep interest in all educational matters, keeps in close touch with the most advanced thought and aims at all times to make the highest and best interests of those under his charge the object of his efforts. He has been honored in his selection as president of the teachers' examining board of Stark county and is also secretary of the Ohio Teachers' Reading Circle for Stark county.

On the 31st of May, 1892, at Canton, Malvern E. McFarren was united in marriage with Miss Laura Grove, the daughter of Jacob Grove, a well-known citizen of Canton. This union has been a most happy and congenial one and has been blessed by the birth of three children, Walter, Wilbur and Mildred. Wilbur died in 1902 at the age of six years.

Politically Mr. McFarren casts his ballot in favor of the platform and candidates of the Republican party, believing the principles of that party to be those most conducive to the welfare of the American people. His religious adherency is with the United Brethren church, belonging to the congregation at Canton.

Mr. McFarren in his capacity as educator has been enabled to wield a wide and powerful influence in guiding the young into the right channels of thought and action. Because of his uniform courtesy, genial disposition and genuine worth, he has won a warm place in the regard of all who know him.

JONAS B. HORST.—Of the early history of the Horst family nothing definite is known save that it has been represented in this country for many years, the ancestors having settled in Pennsylvania at a very early date. Christian Horst, the subject's grandfather, was born and reared in that state, as was also his wife, who before her marriage bore the maiden name of Barbara Moyer. As early as 1837 Christian Horst moved his family to Stark county, Ohio, and settled in Lawrence township, where his death occurred in 1860, his widow surviving him about twenty-two years. Among the children of Christian and Lavina Horst was a son by the name of Jonas, who also was born and reared in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. He married Miss Elizabeth Buckwalter, also a native of the county of Lancaster, and in 1837 came to Stark county, Ohio, locating with his father in Lawrence township, where in the course of time he acquired a large and valuable tract of land. He was a successful farmer and became one of the well-to-do men of the community in which he lived, owning at his death real estate to the amount of three hundred acres, much of which he reduced to tillage. He was also quite an influential citizen and enjoyed marked prestige not only by reason of his manly, straightforward course as a liberal patron of all enterprises for the moral advancement of the neighborhood in which he resided. Mr. Horst died in 1868 and in 1877 his wife was called to her home in the world beyond. Of the ten children that formerly gathered around the hearthstone of this estimable couple, seven are living, the subject of this sketch being the oldest of the family.

Jonas B. Horst was born October 2, 1835, in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and when a child of two years was brought by his parents to Stark county, Ohio, where he has since lived and with the material prosperity of which he has had not a little to do. His education, which from the nature of his early surroundings was somewhat limited, was obtained from the subscription schools when a boy and in the woods and fields he learned by rough usage the more practical lessons of life. He helped clear the home farm, labored equally as hard in its cultivation and remained his father's able and willing assistant until old enough to map out a course of action for himself. At the age of about twenty-five years Mr. Horst began his career as a farmer. He has been the architect of his own fortune, as he had but limited means at his command when he began life as an independent, self-supporting agent. By the exercise of the energy with which he is naturally endowed and the use of other means in his power he added to his possessions as the years went by until becoming the owner of a good farm in Tuscarawas township, his real estate at the present time amounting to two hundred and twelve acres, nearly all cultivated and well improved. He appreciates the worth of good live stock and keeps no others on his place. His horses are of the best breeds for general farming purposes, while his cattle, sheep and other domestic animals have been carefully selected and judiciously raised. Mr. Horst has an unfailing source of income in a rich deposit of coal on his lands from which he mines and sells at good prices every year many tons of black diamonds of excellent quality. As a neighbor and citizen no man in Tuscarawas township enjoys a larger measure of public esteem than Mr. Horst and his unflinching integrity and genuine native manhood have enabled him to maintain the status coming of his genial honest mein. In politics he is pronounced in his allegiance to the Republican party and in religion he and his family belong to that branch of the church known as Mennonites.

Mr. Horst's domestic history dates from 1860, in which year he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hursh, who bore him nine children, namely: Henry, Abram, Daniel, Christian, Annie, John, Martin, Henry and Jonas. In 1888 Mrs. Horst died and on the 10th day of September, 1893, the subject entered the marriage relation with Mrs. Eliza Martin (nee Hess).

JOHN F. MOCK was born in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 29th of November, 1848, being a son of John and Mary (Steighler) Mock and the eldest of their three surviving children, the other two being George, who is a resident of the state of Kansas, and Ida, who is the wife of Levi Lartzenheiser, of Canton, this county. The father of the subject was born in 1821 in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, being a son of Samuel Mock, who was a native of Pennsylvania, whence he came to Stark county, in the early pioneer epoch and here passed the residue of his life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. John Mock was reared on the old pioneer farm in this county and received a common school education. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Adams county, Indiana, his father having there purchased for him a tract of one hundred and sixty acres. The tract at that time was swampy, and he fell a victim to the all-pervading malady, ague, whose insistent agitation of his physical being caused him to become recalcitrant and return to Ohio, though he still retained his land and gradually brought about its development, passing his time between the two counties in Ohio and Indiana. He died in 1893, having passed the evening of his life in the home of our subject, where he was cared for with true filial solicitude. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and both he and his wife were devoted members of the United Brethren church. His widow now lives in Canton.

John F. Mock was reared in the parental home, passing a portion of his youthful days in Adams county, Indiana, but the greater portion of his time was spent in his native county, while his education was received in the public schools. At the early age of sixteen years he gave inception to what has been a most successful business career, becoming at that time a dealer in proprietary medicines and traveling through the state for the purpose of establishing agencies. He continued in this line of enterprise for a score of years and was successful in his efforts, thus laying the foundation for the solid prosperity which he has won through well directed endeavor. In the meantime he worked on a farm at varying intervals, while he had become owner of a small farm, of ten acres, in Ninishillen township. In 1884 he applied this property in partial payment on seventy-two acres of his present fine farm property, in the same township, and to this estate he later added two adjoining tracts,—of twenty-three and sixteen and three-fourths acres, respectively,—so that the place now comprises one hundred and sixteen and three-fourths acres. About 1887 Mr. Mock opened the coal vein on his farm, the same having been prospected for and discovered nearly forty years ago, though no developments had been made. Beneath the coal vein, which is about three and one-half feet in depth, lies a vein of fine fire clay, both of the deposits being very valuable. For about three years Mr. Mock utilized the coal for domestic purposes only, but in 1890 the works of the Louisville Tile and Brick Company were built on his land, he having sold the company a sufficient plot for the erection of the necessary building while he leased the clay and coal deposits. The enterprise is now one of the most extensive of the sort in this section of the state, and through the royalties received on the clay and coal taken out on the farm Mr. Mock has become wealthy. In the spring of 1902 Mr. Mock purchased a tract of seventy-two acres one-half mile to the west of his home farm, and on this land he has also discovered a good deposit of coal and a seemingly inexhaustible deposit of fire clay of the highest grade, and these beds will be developed under most favorable conditions. The county has no more progressive and public-spirited citizen than Mr. Mock. It is worthy of note that all the roads facing on his farm have been macadamized by Mr. Mock, making them the finest roads in the township. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party so far as national issues are involved, but in local affairs he maintains an independent position and is not dominated by strict partisan spirit. He and his wife are both members of the

On the 22d of March, 1872, Mr. Mock was united in marriage to Miss Mary Sefong, who was born in Nimishillen township, this county, being a daughter of the late John Sefong, who was one of the early settlers of Stark county, whither he came from Pennsylvania. Of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Mock we incorporate the following brief record: Elmer has charge of the operating of the homestead farm; Minnie is the wife of Levi Stucky, of Paris township; Clara is the wife of Melvin B. Summers, who is employed in the signal service department of the government and resides at Columbia, Missouri, and Emma remains at the parental home.

CHARLES AUSTIN CRANE, M. D., is the scion of one of the oldest families that sought a home in the new world, his genealogy in America being traceable in unbroken succession to one Jasper Crane, and his wife Alice, natives of England, who became members of the New Haven Colony, Connecticut, as early as the year 1630. Shortly after landing in New England, Jasper Crane located at what was afterwards the town of Brantford, and from the most reliable information accessible he appears to have been a man of considerable local prominence and a leader among his fellow colonists. It is a matter of family history that he was the youngest son of Sir William Crane, who owned a valuable estate near the city of London, and who for his honesty and fidelity to the government, as well as for valuable personal services rendered the King, received the order of knighthood. The Crane coat of arms consisted of a silver shield with three red crosses, surmounted by the figure of a crane, the whole constituting an appropriate device, the honor of which has never been dimmed by any unworthy act on the part of the family for which it was designed. The Joseph Crane who came to America had formerly been a magistrate, and while living in England he devoted some years to mercantile pursuits, in which he acquired an ample competence. Within a short time after joining the Connecticut colony he and Captain Robert Treat, John Austin and his oldest son, John Crane, were appointed commissioners to explore the shore skirting Newark bay, and after making a favorable report to the authorities, they purchased the land on which the city of Newark, New Jersey, was subsequently built, paying for the site, which extended from the ocean back to Second mountain, one hundred and thirty pounds of tobacco, twelve blankets, and the same number of guns, with which exchange the original Indian owners appeared perfectly satisfied. About the year 1666 Jasper Crane changed his abode from Brantford, Connecticut, to Newark, New Jersey, and it appears that he took as lively interest in the growth and development of the latter colony as he had manifested in the former. As a matter of interest it may here be stated that in 1640 the New Haven colony established the oath of fidelity to the crown, the first to subscribe to the same being Governor Eaton, after which he administered it to his constituents, among the first of whom was Jasper Crane, who appears never to have hesitated in his allegiance to constituted authority.

The family of Jasper consisted of five children, whose names were Deliverance, John, Jasper, Azonah and Hannah, who married Thomas Huntington. It is pretty certain that the two eldest were born in England, and the fact is well established that Jasper and Azonah were born within a few years after the family settled in the colony of Connecticut. After a long and useful life, fraught with great good to the people of the different New England communities in which he lived, and for the material prosperity of which he unselfishly devoted so much of his time and energy. Jasper Crane, Sr., died at Newark in the year 1678. His youngest son, Azonah, married Mary Treat, daughter of Governor Robert Treat, and became the father of Moses Crane, a tailor by trade, and one of the first settlers of Warren, Ohio. The latter had a son of the name of Stephen, who moved in an early day from Ohio to Orange county, New Jersey, where he married and reared sons and daughters, among whom was Caleb, who entered the marriage relation with Tamar Harrison. Bethwie, son of Caleb S. and Tamar Crane, was the father of Aaron Crane, who achieved considerable prominence as a fine mechanic, among his inventions being a clock which ran one year without winding, and varied but a few minutes during that time. Deacon Oliver Crane, son of Aaron, and a man of prominence in his community, met with an accidental death by being thrown from a horse. His grandson, Rev. Oliver Crane, was one of the first American missionaries to India, and spent a number of years disseminating the doctrines of Christianity among the people of that country; subsequently he returned to Morristown, New Jersey, where his death occurred. One of his sons, Ezekiel by name, was taken prisoner at Oswego, New York, by the French and Indians in 1758, and afterwards died in Canada. Reverting to the lineal descent of Dr. Charles Austin Crane, the following is given as the correct succession: His father, George Benjamin Crane, was the son of Amza A. Crane, whose father's name was Benjamin; the latter's father also bore the name of Benjamin, and he was the son of Stephen Crane. Azonah Crane, father of Stephen, was the youngest son of the immigrant Jasper Crane, from whom originated the Crane family in the United States. Owing to absence of correct data it is impossible to give an authentic outline of the lives of several of these ancestors. Beginning, however, with the Doctor's great-great-grandfather, Benjamin Crane, it is learned that he was born at Eagle Rock, Essex county, New Jersey, and that in his youth he accompanied his father to Morris county, that state, where he grew to manhood and received his education. He studied law, became a successful practitioner in the courts of Morris county and elsewhere, and for a number of years occupied the bench in that part of the state. As a jurist he achieved high distinction and as a lawyer ranked with the leading members of the New Jersey bar. He instituted the first family reunion in 1850, the celebration of which was afterwards changed so as to date from August 21st, in honor of his birthday, Benjamin Crane, the subject's great-grandfather, was born in New Jersey, spent all of his life in his native state, and his body rests near the place where so many of his years were spent. Amza A. Crane, son of Benjamin, was born in Morris county, New Jersey, in 1717, was married there to Nancy Cosby, and later moved to Seneca county, New York, where he lived as a prosperous tiller of the soil until his death, in 1880, his wife preceding him to the grave by some years.

George Benjamin Crane, the Doctor's father, was born in the town of Junius, Seneca county, New York, in 1835, and spent his early life on his father's farm. After attending the common schools about the usual length of time he became a student in an academy at Waterloo, New York, where he attained much more than usual efficiency in general scholarship. When a youth of sixteen he severed home ties and went to New York city to accept a clerkship with the dry goods firm of Sherwood & Chapman, in which capacity he received his first practical knowledge of business life. He developed fine qualifications as a salesman, and was never in need of a remunerative position. He remained in the employ of the above house about six years, and then went to Cincinnati, where he was similarly engaged during the three years following. At the expiration of that time he accepted a position with a dry goods firm in St. Louis, but did not remain very long in that city, resigning his place within a couple of months for the purpose of engaging in business for himself. In partnership with his father-in-law, A. O. French, he opened a general store at Whitehall, Illinois, but after three years at that place the firm transferred their stock to the town of Edwardsville, in the same state, where the business was conducted under the name of French & Crane until 1881. In that year Mr. Crane purchased his partner's interest and continued as sole proprietor until closing out and retiring from active life in 1891. He was married, in 1863, to Miss Isabella French, whose birth occurred in New York city, November 10, 1844. Her father, A. O. French, to whom reference has already been made, removed to St. Louis, Missouri, in 1846, thence to Whitehall, Illinois, with the mercantile interests of which place he was identified for a number of years. Mrs. Crane bore her husband three sons, and departed this life at Edwardsville, Illinois, in December, 1901. Of the three children constituting the family of George B. and Isabella Crane, the subject of this sketch is the youngest and the only one living; the others, Edward O. and George B., were born in the order named.

Charles Austin Crane is a native of Edwardsville, Illinois, and dates his birth from the 15th day of August, 1875. His early life was without event worthy of note, as he spent the time pretty much as do the majority of lads reared and educated in country towns. When old enough he entered the schools of Edwardsville, and after attending the same until about the age of fifteen became a student of St. Vincent College, Los Angeles, California, in which city his father lived for a short time. The training received in this institution was afterwards supplemented by a course in a military school under the auspices of the United States government in southern Missouri, where he received a rigid but most excellent discipline, the effect of which was to lay a substantial foundation for his subsequent professional career.

In the year 1894 Dr. Crane entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated three years later and shortly thereafter he took a special course in diseases of the eye and ear in the Philadelphia Polyclinic and College for Medical Graduates. There, under some of the most distinguished specialists of the United States, he prosecuted his researches and experimental studies until completing the full course, receiving his degree in 1898. He next entered the Will's Eye Hospital, Philadelphia, where in addition to clinical study of all diseases peculiar to that organ, he was made assistant, and as such continued until finishing the prescribed course. Dr. Crane, on the 1st day of May, 1898, located at Canton, Ohio, from which time to the present he has been actively engaged in the practice with a large and steadily increasing business. His recognized skill as a specialist has won for him a wide reputation, and his success has placed him in the ranks of the leading specialists of Canton and Ohio. At this time he is the local medical examiner for the Equitable Life Insurance Company of Iowa, also medical adviser for the Maryland Casualty Company in this city. Among the various societies with which he is identified are the American Medical Association, Medical Society of Canton, Stark County Academy of Medicine, and the Ohio State Medical Society. He takes a lively interest in the deliberations of these bodies, and keeps pace with modern advancement in all lines of professional activity.

Dr. Crane has a beautiful and attractive home, presided over with becoming grace by a wife to whom he was united in the bonds of wedlock on the 6th of June, 1899, the ceremony being solemnized in the city of Canton. Mrs. Crane, who was formerly Miss Ida Norris, is a native of Canton, and the daughter of Basil and Elizabeth (Miller) Norris, of Stark county.

PROF. CICERO L. HINER is descended from a very old family that had its origin in Germany, from which country in a remote day certain representatives went to France, others to the northern part of Ireland, thence to Scotland. Owing to the absence of any connected genealogical record, it is not known from which of these countries the American branch of the family originally came. From the most reliable information at hand it appears that certain of the Hiners emigrated to America prior to the Revolutionary period, and settled in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, where the Professor's great-grandfather, Samuel Hiner, was born as long ago as the year 1760. The fact of his being of Irish descent leads to the conclusion that the first Hiners in America came from the Emerald Isle. John Hiner, son of the above Samuel, was born in 1786 in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and there married, about the year 1807, Elizabeth Mercer, a cousin of Gen. Hugh Mercer, a distinguished leader in the war for independence, whose name fills a high place in American history. Her father, Th. Mercer, a native of Germany, came to this country in the time of the colonies, and settled in Pennsylvania, subsequently removing to Ohio, where his death occurred. As early as 1812 John Hiner moved his family to Columbiana county, Ohio, and took up a section of land in what is now West township. He built a rude log cabin in the wilderness, and for many years experienced all the hardships incident to pioneer life, finally developing a good farm, which he cultivated until his removal, a number of years later, to the county of Stark. On coming to this county Mr. Hiner settled in the village of Paris, and it was there that his first wife died. Subsequently he remarried and continued to make his home in the above town until his death, in 1875, at the age of eighty-five years.

Henry Hiner, son of John Hiner, was born in Columbiana county, and grew to mature years on his father's frontier farm, bearing his full share of the labor required to carve a home out of the dense forest, by which the country was at that time covered. He attended school a couple of months each year in a little log cabin, and grew up a strong, stalwart young man, as independent and self-reliant as he was physically vigorous. He became an expert in handling the rifle, and while still a mere boy found his greatest amusement in hunting the bear, wolves and other wild game with which the woods during the early days were infested. It is said that the wolves were so numerous as to be positively dangerous to the early settlers, and many a night young Hiner and other members of the family were obliged to keep large fires burning near the house and stable to prevent these ferocious animals from destroying the live stock.

When a young man Hiner took up the trade of carpentry, which, in connection with agricultural pursuits, he followed to the end of his life, meeting with success in both vocations. In the year 1851 he was united in marriage, in the county of Columbiana, to Miss Emily Irey, whose birth occurred near the town of Guilford in 1823, she being the daughter of Dawson and Elizabeth (Moreland) Irey, of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania. From 1851 to 1865 Mr. Hiner lived on a farm about three miles south of Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, but in late years disposed of his interest there and changed his abode to the town of Baird, Columbiana county, where his wife's death took place in 1872. About six years later he married Mrs. Mary Hone, and in 1883 moved to a farm in Canton township, where he lived until 1886, when he retired to Canton. He spent the remainder of his days in this city, dying in the year 1895. Henry Hiner was a man of excellent repute, and stood high in the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat, and always manifested a lively interest in the public affairs of the communities in which he lived. He was the youngest of a family of twelve children, whose names are as follows: Samuel, Catherine, John, Sarah, Mary Ann, wife of Jacob Livelsberger, Jacob, Peter, James, David, Andrew and Robert, all but Mrs. Livelsberger deceased. By his first wife Henry Hiner was the father of five children, namely: Ervin C., for a number of years a practicing attorney of Canton, and later a resident of Kansas, where his death occurred; Elizabeth, wife of William Hirst, of Cleveland; Cicero L., the subject of this sketch; Eden, of Muncie, Indiana, and Harry, also a resident of that city. The second wife, who survived him, bore him three children, the two older, Ada and Ida, being twins; the former married Joseph Tomlinson, of Malvern, this state, and Ida became the wife of Charles Bixler, of Canton; Joseph, the youngest of the family, is a resident of Canton.

Prof. Cicero L. Hiner was born near Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 9th day of July, 1856. He early manifested an inclination for books and study, and at the proper age entered the district school of his neighborhood, where he made rapid progress in the elementary branches. Subsequently he attended schools of a higher grade, and by diligent application was enabled before his twentieth year to pass successfully the required examination and secure a teacher's license. Mr. Hiner began teaching in 1876 in a select school at East Rochester, of which his brother, Arvine, had charge. On account of sickness the brother was called home, and, to the satisfaction of all concerned, the subject took his place and finished the term in a manner which at once established his reputation as an able and judicious instructor. During the following summer he taught the Bayard school, which he had attended in early boyhood, and had for his pupils a large number of his former companions and playmates, to govern whom required no little diplomatic skill. His school numbered eighty-six pupils, ranging from the primary grade up, and to do justice to all required thirty-five recitations per day. Among his pupils were a number of young ladies and gentlemen especially efficient in the higher mathematics, and in order to keep ahead so as to teach them required much hard study upon his part after the daily sessions closed. Determined not to permit any of the students to surpass him, he worked early and late, mastered every principle of the subject taught, and thus became one of the finest mathematicians in the public schools of the county. He soon achieved much more than local reputation as an educator and his success and popularity may be inferred from the number of times he was retained in the same district. He had charge of the Pleasant Valley school five successive years, taught four terms in Paris township, nine terms at Paris, and in 1885 was elected principal of the South McKinley Avenue school, Canton. Prof. Hiner came to this city the above year for the purpose of reading law, and after studying for some months under the direction of his brother was admitted to the bar, but did not begin the practice. It was while pursuing his legal studies that he was elected to the principalship referred to above, and as head of the McKinley Avenue school he finished his seventeenth successive year of educational work in the city of Canton. On the 23rd of June, 1902, Prof. Hiner was made principal of the South Market Street schools, one of the most important positions in the local educational system, and here as elsewhere his services have been duly recognized and appreciated by the public.

As a teacher Prof. Hiner easily ranks with the most successful educators in eastern Ohio, being equally efficient as an instructor and disciplinarian. He is a man of great force of character, possesses executive ability of a high order, and under his able supervision the schools of which he has been principal have been brought to a state of efficiency unexcelled by any others in the city. He has long been prominent in the educational circles of this part of the state, and few teachers in the county of Stark are as widely and favorably known. He is thoroughly up to date in all matters pertaining to his profession, and has been honored with several responsible official positions, in all of which he has discharged his duties in a manner creditable to himself and satisfactory to the public. From 1886 to 1898, inclusive, he served as a member of the city board of examiners, and for several years has held a similar position with the county examining board, besides being an active worker in the Stark County and Bi-County Teachers' Associations. Fraternally he is a Mason of high standing, having served the order in different honorable stations, at this time being past councilor of Patrick Henry Council No. 84, Junior Order United American Mechanics. He is a member of the grand lodge of Ohio, and for a period of three years held the office of inspector of the same. He is also a past councillor of Molly Pitcher Council No. 10, Daughters of America, which organization is largely indebted to him for its present flourishing condition. Religiously Prof. Hiner is a Methodist, belonging with his family to Simpson Methodist Episcopal church of Canton, and politically he wields a potent influence for the Democratic party.

Prof. Hiner was married in Paris township, July 22, 1879, to Miss Rachael T. Shively, who was born in Stark county, Ohio, on the 14th day of July, 1859, the daughter of Martin and Barbara (Weimer) Shively. Four children have blessed this union, to-wit: Dora E., born March 5, 1881; Guy C., in June, 1882; George H., August 27, 1884, and Helen, whose birth occurred on February 8, 1893.

DAVID A. LEVERS comes of Pennsylvania stock, and traces his genealogy back to an early period in the history of that grand old commonwealth. His father, also David by name, was born in Pennsylvania and there married Elizabeth Kaylor, who became the mother of twelve children, nine of whom are living at the present time. About 1835 David Lever, Sr., moved his family to Stark county, and during the thirty-five years following rented a farm in Tuscarawas township, purchasing the place in 1870. He came here in comparatively limited circumstances, but by industry, thrift and wise foresight added to his means from time to time until he was finally enabled to make the above purchase, when he came into possession of one hundred and thirty-five acres of fine land, situated in one of the best agricultural districts of this part of the state. He served his township in the capacity of trustee and proved an able and judicious public servant, while as a neighbor none stood higher in the community, and no one was more loyal and abiding in his friendships. Mr. Levers lived a good life, and in his death the people of Tuscarawas township suffered the loss of one of their most estimable men and worthy citizens.

David A. Levers, the fourth of the twelve children, was born on the paternal homestead in Tuscarawas township June 12, 1848. He was confronted in boyhood by only fair prospects for future success in life. Born to toil, with only ordinary facilities for acquiring an education, he began a long way in the rear of the more favored sons of fortune, but it may be said that such circumstances served to develop his true character and prove the sterling metal which entered into his composition. Reared on the farm and early becoming familiar with its varied duties, he grew up with well-laid plans for his future. The meanwhile he received a fair educational training in the district schools, which he attended at stated intervals until a youth in his teens. After remaining at home until about twenty-seven years old, he engaged in genral merchandising at Brookfield, which line of business he continued at that place during the twenty years following, building up a lucrative trade and judiciously investing his surplus capital. In 1900 Mr. Levers disposed of his mercantile interests and turned his attention to coal pursuits, prominent among which was that of coal drilling. To this he devoted his time and energy for the greater part of twenty-eight years, a portion of which time he engaged in selling goods, but he realized his greatest success as a developer of mineral property when unhampered by other interests. Mr. Levers became an expert in all things pertaining to mining, and while thus engaged his services were in great demand, not only in Stark county but in other parts of Ohio, and not infrequently were his abilities utilized by operators in territory beyond the limits of this state. During the years he carried on the store and while employed in the coal business, his desire for agriculture never abated, and as soon as his affairs could be properly arranged he made every other consideration subordinate to husbandry. His present place, which includes an area of eighty-eight acres, is a model of neatness, bearing every evidence of successful tillage, the many beautiful and attractive features proving it the home of a gentleman of industrious habits, business energy and remarkably good taste. In addition to his farm, he owns two acres of valuable real estate in the town of Brookfield, also a fine business building erected in 1892, being in much more than comfortable circumstances; indeed, he has ranked for a number of years with the financially strong and reliable men of his part of the county. In politics a Republican, he has never indulged any desire for official preferment, wisely avoiding paths that led to military or civic distinction, and contenting himself with the far more enviable record of a private citizen. He takes pleasure in the fact of having voted for the late William McKinley every time that distinguished American asked for the suffrage of the people, and among the President's admirers in this part of the county no one exceeded the subject in intensity of ardor or in loyalty of support. Notwithstanding Mr. Levers' indifference to public position, he has filled the office of constable for several years, and at the present time he is serving as trustee of the township, and as a member of the local board of education. His fraternal relations are with the Order of American Mechanics, aside from which he is not identified with any benevolent organization.

The name of the lady to whom Mr. Levers was married on the 30th day of May, 1876, was Lavina Tamie; she was born in Pennsylvania, and departed this life August 5, 1895, leaving besides her husband two children to mourn her loss, namely: Elwood B. and Elsie Oral. Subsequently Mr. Levers, on December 27, 1896, married his present wife, Mary Hopper, who has borne him a son, Elmer L., and a daughter by the name of Gladys.

DAVID HEMPERLY, of Tuscarawas township, a man of thrift and sterling worth, possessing in a marked degree the elements and characteristics of the clear brained, successful husbandman of the present day, is a son of David and Mary Hemperly, of whom specific notice will be found elsewhere, and was born November 6, 1845, in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania. He came with his parents to Stark county when a mere lad, and grew to maturity on the homestead in Tuscarawas township, early becoming inured to all kinds of farm labor and in youth laying a broad and deep foundation for his subsequent career of honor and usefulness. In the public schools of the township he secured his educational discipline and learned the importance of self-reliance and self-restraint. He bore his share of the work required to carry on a farm, and remained at home until about sixteen years old, when he turned his attention to blacksmithing, at which, in due time, he became quite an efficient workman. After learning the trade he opened a shop in West Brookfield, where he did a remunerative business the sixteen years following, at the expiration of which time he abandoned mechanical work and moved to the farm where he has since lived. Mr. Hemperly has achieved marked prestige as an agriculturist, and is today numbered among the most successful and enterprising tillers of the soil in his part of the county, besides being widely recognized as a raiser of fine live stock, especially horses, in the breeding of which he has few equals and no superiors. He pays particular attention to roadsters, the superior qualities of which have created a demand he finds difficult to supply, and wherever his animals have been exhibited they have invariably sustained his high reputation, not only as a breeder but also as a superior judge of the qualities of horse flesh.

Mr. Hemperly is essentially an honorable man, as his neighbors will gladly testify, and his influence has always been on the side of right and morality, both in private affairs and matters of a public nature. During the dark days of the rebellion, when treason threatened to disrupt the Union, he demonstrated his loyalty to the government by upholding its honor in some of the most noted campaigns, and in many of the bloodiest battles, for which that stirring period was distinguished. Enlisting on the 2d of August, 1862, in Company E, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, he at once proceeded to the front and served with signal bravery until the close of the war, experiencing his share of the vicissitudes and dangers which military duty implies, and participating in all the engagements in which his command took part.

Mr. Hemperly is a Republican in politics, but has little taste for partisan strife and no inclination to enter the arena of office-seeker. Fraternally he is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, belonging to Hart Post at Massillon, of which organization he is one of the chief supporters.

The marriage of Mr. Hemperly was solemnized on the 31st of March, 1867, with Miss Sarah Rudy, whose birth occurred in Stark county, Ohio, March 10, 1846. Mrs. Hemperly is the daughter of Martin and Mary (Bear) Rudy, the father born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and the mother a native of Maryland. Their parents came to Stark county in 1834, where Martin's death took place about the year 1864; he was the son of William Rudy, of Pennsylvania, the ancestors of the family locating in Lancaster county at a very early period of the history in that part of the state. Mrs. Hemperly's grandparents were Christopher and Elizabeth Bear, natives of Maryland, and early settlers of Stark county. Mr. Bear purchased land in this county, and died a short time after taking possession of the same, his widow living to a good old age. Mr. Hemperly's mother died in 1877, when seventy-three years old. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hemperly has been blessed with seven children, the oldest of whom is a son by the name of William, who lives in this county; he married Rebecca Schammo, and is the father of two children, Clara and Estella. Della, the second, married David Weygant, who bore him one child, Alda May, and departed this life

July 4, 1891. Clarence E., the next in order of birth, served in the late Spanish-American war in the Eighty-fourth Ohio Regiment, known as "McKinley's Own," and made a good record as a soldier. Walter D. married Elizabeth Eberhart, and has one son by the name of Earl. Sadie M., wife of John Miller, is the sixth of the family; she has four offspring, namely, William H., Ester B., Myrtle M. and Agnes A. Myrtle D., the youngest of the subject's children, married Samuel King, and is the mother of one son, Paul.

LAUREN E. FLICKINGER, M. D., is descended paternally from German ancestors, the first representatives of the family in America settling many years ago in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. In that part of the state was born one John Flickinger, who married Sarah Lower, also a native of Lancaster county, this couple being the grandparents of the subject of this review. By occupation John Flickinger was a tiller of the soil, and he appears to have been a man of considerable local prominence, having served for many years as justice of the peace, besides filling other positions of honor and trust. About 1837 he moved to Mahoning county, Ohio, and purchased a farm in the township of Beaver, on which he lived until within a few years of his death, when he retired from active life. In many respects he was a moulder of opinion among his neighbors and fellow citizens, and appears to have been consulted by them in matters requiring a knowledge of law, and not infrequently were his services required in the settlement of difficulties and the adjustment of business affairs. For many years he was a prominent member of the German Reform church, and as such did much to disseminate the truths of the Christian religion among his fellow men. His wife was also identified with the same religious body, and lived a noble Christian life until called from the church militant to the church triumphant in 1868. John Flickinger survived his wife about twenty-one years, dying in Beaver township, Mahoning county, in 1889.

Among the children of John and Sarah Flickinger was a son by the name of Henry, whose birth occurred in the county of Mahoning in 1837, a short time after the family located in that state. He was the oldest of his parents' children, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving the best educational advantages the common schools of his early day afforded. He left the parental roof before the years of manhood, and engaged in business for himself as a buyer and shipper of live stock, in which he was pecuniarily quite successful. He followed this line of business with encouraging results before and after the late Civil war, but later purchased a mill, and for some time thereafter devoted his attention to the manufacture of flour. Like his father before him, he took an active interest in public affairs, served as justice of the peace for his township, and subsequently was elected treasurer of Mahoning county. On assuming the duties of this office he removed to Canfield, at that time the county seat, and continued to reside there until the seat of justice was transferred to the city of Youngstown, when he changed his abode to the latter place. At the expiration of his official term Henry Flickinger engaged in the real estate business at Youngstown, which he carried on about six years, when he returned to his farm in Beaver township, and resumed agriculture and stock raising, giving special attention to the latter. In every relation of life he proved himself an honorable, upright citizen, and in the different official stations to which he was called his efficiency and devotion to duty were demonstrated to the satisfaction of all. Some years ago he abandoned farming and moved to Salem, where he is now assistant superintendent of the city water works.

The maiden name of Mrs. Henry Flickinger was Sophia Beard, and the ceremony by which the two were made husband and wife was solemnized in Beaver township, Mahoning county, in which part of the state she was born and reared. Six children resulted from this union, namely: Attai, wife of Dr. Schiller, of Salem; Alice, wife of J. H. Metzger, now living in Chattanooga, Tennessee; Clement A. died at the age of eighteen; Lauren E., subject of this review; Blanch G. and Edna C., the last two unmarried.

Dr. Lauren E. Flickinger was born on the home farm in Mahoning county, Ohio, October 31, 1869, and when a lad of six years was taken by his parents to the town of Canfield, and later to Youngstown. The public schools afforded him the means of acquiring an elementary education, after which he entered the Northeastern Ohio Normal at Canfield, where he completed the prescribed course at the early age of seventeen. After teaching for two years, he became a student of the Western Reserve Medical College, at Cleveland, where he prosecuted his professional studies until March, 1892, on the 2d day of which month he was graduated with a record for efficiency excelled by no other member of his class. On receiving his degree Dr. Flickinger opened an office at North Industry, Stark county, where he practiced two and a half years, and then moved to a wider field in Salem, where he remained with gratifying professional and financial success until 1898. In October of the later year he changed his location to the city of Canton, where he has since resided, meantime building up a practice which in magnitude and successful results enables him to rank with the ablest physicians and surgeons in this part of the state. The continued advancements which have characterized the Doctor's career since he began the practice and the ease with which he has mounted to his present distinguished position in the medical world mark him the possessor of a high order of talent. He is a member of the Stark County Medical Society, Canton Medical Society, the Ohio State Medical Society, and the Medical Association of Northeastern Ohio, in all of which organizations he takes a lively interest. Not only as a physician does Dr. Flickinger take high rank in the community, but as an enterprising and progressive citizen, fully in touch with the times in all that tends to benefit the city of his residence along material, social, intellectual and moral lines. In politics he is a supporter of the Democratic party, but in the sense of aspiring to official preferment or taking a very active part in political affairs he cannot be termed a partisan. Personally the Doctor is a genial and companionable gentleman, courteous in his intercourse with his friends and acquaintances and popular in the social circles of the city in which he lives.

On the 5th of September, 1893, at North Industry, Dr. Flickinger was united in marriage with Miss Jennie A. Serva, also of North Industry, a union blessed with one child, whose name is Clement A.

CHRISTOPHER C. SICKAFOOSE is a native-born son of the Buckeye state, having been born in Wyandot county on the 27th of May, 1851. His parents were John and Nancy (Kimmel) Sickafoose, who both passed away in Sandy township, this county, at the age of seventy-seven years. When he was but two years old the parents of the subject removed from Wyandot county and made their home in Sandy township, Stark county, and the lad was reared to manhood. His early years were passed as are the youthful days of most farmers' sons and he early became acquainted with hard toil and was initiated into the mysteries of agriculture. As opportunity afforded he attended the common schools and, because of his earnest and faithful application to his studies, became the possessor of a fair education. Upon attaining sufficient age he learned the trade of carpentering, at which he worked for fourteen years. He was a conscientious workman and soon acquired a reputation for honesty and also for proficiency in his chosen occupation and, did a large amount of carpentering in his locality. Aside from this he has all his life followed the pursuit of agriculture, at which he has been a pronounced success. He possesses ninety acres of good, cultivable land and the farm is a model of neatness and successful tillage and from it he receives more liberal returns than are realized by many from much larger places. He thoroughly understands every minutae of agriculture and employs modern methods in the pursuit of his calling. He has erected substantial buildings and has surrounded himself with many of the comforts and conveniences of life, his place being among the most highly improved in the township, the well-tilled fields and well-kept appearance of everything about the premises indicating his careful and progressive spirit.

MR. AND MRS. C. C. SICKAFOOSE.

On the 19th of December, 1879, Mr. Sickafoose was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Miss Emma Brothers, a daughter of the late Eli Brothers. She is a native of Sandy township, this county, and there born and reared. Their union has been a most happy and congenial one and has been blessed by two children, a son who died in infancy and Edward, an intelligent and promising young man, the pride of his parents.

Politically the subject has all his life been a firm and uncompromising Republican, ever taking an earnest interest in all movements or questions affecting the public welfare. In the spring of 1898 his party nominated him for the office of trustee of his township and at the ensuing election he was duly chosen to fill the office. So efficient and satisfactory were his services in this important office in 1901 the voters elected him to succeed himself and he is still worthily discharging the duties of the office. Educational matters have also taken a deep hold upon his attention and for some time he served as a member of the board of school directors, doing much to advance educational interests in his locality. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Sickafoose are members of the Lutheran church and live in accordance with their profession, doing much effective work to advance the interests of the Master's kingdom. Fraternally Mr. Sickafoose belongs to the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and to the Knights of the Maccabees, exemplifying in his actions the beneficent principles of these noble orders. Honorable in business, loyal in citizenship, faithful in friendship, generous in sympathy and kind and loving in his home, he holds a warm place in the hearts of all who know him.

ELI HERSHBERGER.—The Hershberger family is of sterling German origin, but has been established on American soil since the colonial epoch in our national history, the original American progenitors having located in Pennsylvania, the old Keystone state of the Union, with whose annals the name has thus been identified for several generations. Eli Hershberger was born on the parental homestead in Osnaburg township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 5th of December, 1853, being one of the seven children of Jesse and Elizabeth (Dewalt) Hershberger, while all but one of the children are still living, Charles having passed away in infancy. The six surviving are here named in order of birth: Simon, who is engaged in the sawmilling business in Nimishillen township; Henry, who is a resident of the same township, and a carpenter by vocation; Laura, who is the wife of Jacob Sell, of Osnaburg township; Mary, who is the wife of John Zuber, also a resident of that township; Sarah, who is the wife of Isaiah Fock-ler, of Canton; and Eli, the immediate subject of this sketch. Jesse Hershberger, father of these children, is likewise a native of Stark county, having been born in Osnaburg township about the year 1832, and being a son of ——— and Elizabeth Hershberger, who were natives of Pennsylvania, emigrating to Stark county in the early pioneer epoch. Grandfather Hershberger took up a tract of government land in Osnaburg township, where he established his home in a primitive log cabin and forthwith initiated the task of clearing his land from the native timber and rendering it eligible for cultivation, and there both he and his wife remained until their deaths. Jesse Hershberger was reared to manhood on the homestead farm and amidst the labors and scenes of the pioneer days. After his marriage he removed to Plain township, where he continued agricultural pursuits for about a score of years, after which he purchased his present farm of sixty acres, in Nimishillen township, where he has since made his home, being one of the honored pioneer citizens of the county. He is a Republican in politics, and he and his wife are consistent members of the Progressive Brethren church. Mrs. Hershberger is likewise a native of Osnaburg township, where she was born in the year 1832, being a daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Dewalt, who came hither from Pennsylvania, and became numbered among the first settlers in the township mentioned. Mr. Dewalt was an excellent shot, and he was able to provide his table with an adequate supply of meat through the use of his trusty rifle, as deer, bear and other wild game still remained in abundance at the time of his coming to this section.

Eli Hershberger was reared under the beneficent influences of a good home, though it was humble in character, and he waxed strong in mind and body while assisting in the work of the homestead farm, his educational advantages being such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality and period. He early manifested marked ambition and self-reliance, and gave evidence of marked business acumen. At the age of eighteen years he acquired an interest in a saw-mill, and from that time forward to the present he has continued to be interested in this line of enterprise, while he has found further scope for his energies in the successful conducting of a fine farm and in the operation of a threshing outfit, in which last branch of his business he has kept his equipment constantly up to date, replacing inferior machines with the more modern types as improvements were made in the line. In 1877 he effected the purchase of his present homestead farm, which is located on section 31, Nimishillen township, and which comprises fifty-one acres, the place being maintained under a high state of cultivation, and having excellent improvements of a permanent nature, including a commodious and substantial residence. The farm is not a large one, but it may be consistently pointed out as a model farm, and it is one of the valuable places of the township. For the past ten years Mr. Hershberger has had in operation during the season two fine and thoroughly modern threshing machines, with all requisite accessories, and he finds a ready demand for his services with both outfits. He is progressive and public-spirited, and while he has never desired official preferment he is known as a stalwart supporter of the principles and policies of the Republican party, with which he has been identified from the time of attaining his majority. He is one of the influential and zealous members of the United Evangelical church at Fair Hope, and has been a member of its board of trustees for the past five years, giving a liberal support to the church work and to its collateral benevolences. Mrs. Hershberger is likewise a devoted member of the church.

In October, 1878, Mr. Hershberger was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Lesh, who was born in Nimishillen township, this county, being a daughter of the late Jacob Lesh, who was a prominent and honored farmer of this township. To the subject and his estimable wife have been born four children, namely: Tyrona, who is the wife of Frank Seibert, of Crystal Park, the popular summer resort near Canton; Fremont N., who is associated with his father in his business operations; Ida Gertrude, who died at the age of six years; and Mabel Grace, who remains at the parental home. In 1902 Mr. Hershberger bought eight acres of land at Fair Hope, where he expects to make his residence.

WILLIAM P. WERTZ, who is one of the successful and influential farmers of Nimishillen township, is a native of this township, where he was born on the 15th of September, 1853, being a son of John and Catherine (Pickens) Wertz, who became the parents of six children, of whom five are living, namely: William P., subject of this sketch; John, who is a resident of Trenton, Nebraska; Mary, who is the widow of Lincoln Eckerd, and a resident of Trenton, Nebraska; Margaret, who is the wife of Ira Stuckey, of York, Nebraska; and Henry, who resides in Findlay, Ohio. John Wertz was born in York county, Pennsylvania, in 1828, and was there reared to maturity, and as a young man he came to Stark county, and located in Belford, Nimishillen township, where he engaged in the sawmilling business, in which he continued until his death, which occurred on the 26th of January, 1864. He was a man of sterling character and marked business ability, and was one of the honored pioneers of the county, while in politics he was staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party. His father, Adam Wertz, was of German lineage, and it is probable that he was born in Germany.

He was engaged in farming in York county, Pennsylvania, where he died in his eighty-first year. Catherine (Pickens) Wertz, mother of our subject, is a native of Nimishillen township, where she was born on the 10th of March, 1832, being a daughter of William and Margaret (Over) Pickens, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, whence they came to Stark county, being numbered among the pioneer settlers of Nimishillen township, where they passed the remainder of their lives. The mother of the subject is still living, and resides with her children in Trenton, Nebraska.

For five years after the death of his father William P. Wertz made his home with Edward Moul, a farmer of Osnaburg township, and his educational privileges were such as were afforded in the district schools of that township and the one in which he was born. At the age of seventeen years he began his career as a farm hand, and when twenty years of age, realizing the necessity of a more thorough scholastic training in preparing for the practical duties of life, he entered Mount Union College, at Alliance, this state, where he completed a course of study in the commercial department. In 1874 he accepted a clerical position in the hardware establishment of C. C. Snyder, at Canton, where he remained about seven years. After his marriage, which occurred in the year 1881, he removed to his present home farm. In 1889 he left the farm and returned to Canton, where he again entered the employ of Mr. Snyder, but shortly afterward he there engaged in the hardware business on his own responsibility, continuing the enterprise for a period of five years, at the expiration of which he sold the business, in 1900, and has since lived retired, living for a short time on the home farm, and then retiring to Canton. His place comprises one hundred and twenty-three acres, and is one of the valuable farms of the county, being under a high state of cultivation, and equipped with excellent buildings and other permanent improvements of the best order. In politics Mr. Wertz is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and he takes a public-spirited interest in all that concerns the well being of the community. Fraternally he is identified with the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, affiliating with McKinley Council No. 218, in Canton.

On the 1st of February, 1881, Mr. Wertz was united in marriage to Miss Amanda Hershey, who was born in Nimishillen township, being a daughter of the late Jacob Hershey, who was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and who settled in Stark county, Ohio, in the early pioneer epoch, becoming one of the influential farmers of Nimishillen township. Mr. and Mrs. Wertz have one daughter, Estella.

CHARLES C. BOW was born on a farm in the immediate vicinity of the village of Atwater, Portage county, Ohio, on the 12th of January, 1858, being a son of Abraham and Mary (Burns) Bow. Abraham Bow was a native of the old Bay state, having come to Ohio from Pittsfield, Massachusetts, and having been numbered among the early settlers in Atwater township, Portage county, where he engaged in the carpentering and contracting business. He was a son of Abraham Bow, who was born in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, where his parents took up their abode upon their emigration from England, prior to the war of the Revolution, there passing the remainder of their lives. Abraham Bow removed with his family to Alliance, Ohio, when the subject of this review was a lad of ten years, and there he engaged in his trade as carpenter, continuing to make his home in that city until his death, which occurred in 1893, his devoted wife passing away in 1901. They became the parents of six children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the sixth in order of birth, and of the number four are living at the present time. In the public schools of Alliance Charles C. Bow continued his educational discipline until he had completed a course in the high school, and in the meanwhile he had formulated definite plans for his future life work, in harmony with which he began reading law in the office of one of the leading members of the bar of Alliance, showing a marked predilection for the work, in being thorough, appreciative and conscientious in his study, in which he had the encouragement of an able preceptor. In 1881 Mr. Bow came to Canton to assume the position of deputy clerk of courts, in which capacity he rendered most efficient service for a period of four years, the discipline being one of marked value to him in furthering his knowledge of the science of jurisprudence and of the practical methods of the profession, while he continued his studies of the law with marked perseverance and fidelity, and was duly admitted to the bar of the state in 1883, upon examination before the supreme court. He continued incumbent of the office of deputy clerk until 1885, when he established himself in his present offices, in the McKinley Block, and turned his attention to the active work of his profession, having formed a partnership association with Judson A. Wann, who continued his professional coadjutor until 1901, when the partnership was dissolved, owing to the removal of Mr. Wann to Pueblo, Colorado. The professional novitiate of our subject was of comparatively brief duration, for he had established a large acquaintanceship in the city and county while in tenure of office, and had become known as a careful, discriminating and conservative lawyer, of broad and exact technical knowledge, even before he had entered upon active practice. Thus he soon gained a representative clientele, and his precedence has been cumulative in character, resulting in the control of a large and gratifying legal business, while he is recognized as one of the able trial lawyers of the county and as a safe counsel. He has been concerned in much important litigation in both state and federal courts and his success has been largely due to his invariably careful preparation before presenting a cause, his cogency and conciseness of argument and his clear presentation of his case being the means through which he has won distinctive victories.

In politics Mr. Bow has ever given an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he has done active and effective work, though he has never sought office aside from that directly pertinent to the line of his profession. In 1890 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Stark county and was incumbent of this position until 1896, giving a most able administration and proving one of the most popular and successful prosecutors the county has had. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Maccabees and the Order of Elks, being a past exalted ruler in the latter order. Mr. Bow was married in the fall of 1881, to Ella J. Townsend, of Alliance, Ohio, who departed this life in 1893. He was married in 1896 to Anna E. Withrow, of Omaha, Nebraska. Three children have been born of the second marriage, two boys and one girl.

HENRY FOLK.—Born in Nimishillen township, Stark county, on the farm owned and occupied by his brother John D., the date of Henry Folk's nativity was May 2, 1849, being the son of John and Elizabeth (Dice) Folk. The original representatives of the family in Stark county were Peter Folk, the grandfather of our subject, and his two brothers, Jacob and Abraham. The three entered claim to an entire section of government land in this county, and the deed is signed by James Madison, who was then President of the United States. They divided the property equally and were numbered among the earliest settlers in the county, contributing materially to the development and reclamation of the land, which was heavily timbered at the time when they came into possession of the same. The father of the subject was born in York county, Pennsylvania, about the year 1813, and was a lad of eight years at the time when his parents took up their permanent abode in Stark county, in 1820 or 1821. Peter Folk erected a log cabin of the primitive type, in the midst of the forest, and there installed his family, his land being in Nimishillen township, where his son John was reared to maturity under the conditions and influences of pioneer life. After his marriage John settled on a portion of the homestead farm, which his father had divided between him and his brother Peter, his share comprising a tract of one hundred and six acres. Here he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1879. He espoused the cause of the Republican party at the time of its organization and thereafter gave it his unqualified support, while both he and his wife were consistent members of the Lutheran church and ever active in good works, being folk of sterling character and commanding the high esteem of all who knew them. The devoted wife and mother survived her husband by about a decade, her death occurring on the 30th of March, 1886, at the age of seventy-five years. They became the parents of eight children, of whom four are living, namely: Elizabeth, who is still a resident of Nimishillen township, being a maiden lady; Rebecca, who is the wife of Samuel Snyder, of this township; Henry, the immediate subject of this sketch, and John D., of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work.

Henry Folk, whose name initiates this review, grew up under the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm, to whose work he early began to contribute his quota, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the district schools. Shortly before the death of his father he became associated with his brother, John D., in the purchase of the homestead farm, and thereafter they continued to be associated in carrying on the farm until 1894, when our subject rented his portion of the same to his brother and removed to the Joseph Folk farm, which he leases, and here he has since continued to be actively engaged in agricultural operations, so directing his efforts as to secure the maximum returns from his labors. The farm which he occupies comprises one hundred acres and is well improved, while under his direction much has been done to increase its productive value for he is enterprising and progressive and endowed with superior business ability. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party but has never sought official preferment, though he maintains a deep interest in all that concerns the welfare of his native county. He is a valued member of the Reformed church, doing all in his power to further its spiritual and temporal wellbeing.

On the 25th of June, 1874, Mr. Folk was united in marriage to Miss Isabelle Shilling, who was born in Nimishillen township, being a daughter of John and Catherine (Klopfenstein) Shilling, the former of whom was born in Germany and the latter in France, both having been brought to Stark county in infancy, their respective parents having been numbered among the very early settlers in the county. Mr. Shilling is still living and resides on the farm, in Nimishillen township, upon which his parents located when they first came to the county. His wife died a number of years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Folk became the parents of three children, of whom two are living, Harvey C., who assists in the management of the home farm, and Amelia, who is the wife of Homer Sheffer, a carpenter in this township. The third child was Ada J., who died in infancy.

CHARLES D. OBERLIN, farmer and coal driller, third son of William E. and Susan (Dague) Oberlin, and younger brother of Otto E. Oberlin, of whom specific notice will be found elsewhere, is a native of Stark county, Ohio, born November 20, 1859, in the township of Tuscarawas. He grew up to the full stature of well developed manhood amid the quiet scenes of rural life, and inheriting from his parents strong mental powers, early turned them to good account by laboring for the acquisition of useful knowledge. His nature being studious he made the most of the opportunities as the public schools supplied and after completing the branches constituting the common course, devoted considerable attention to the more advanced grades of study. At a very early age he manifested a decided taste for music, and his abilities in this direction were fostered and encouraged by his parents, who provided him with every means within their power for the cultivation of his talents. He pursued the musical studies with the interest of an enthusiast, and in due time became not only an accomplished vocalist, but ere long was sufficiently qualified to instruct others. To him music appeals with rare power and force, his whole being responding with peculiar susceptibility to harmony. He has never ceased being a student and availing himself of every opportunity to add his theoretical knowledge of the divine art, he has been equally persistent in reducing it to practice. It may easily be inferred from his knowledge and skill in music that Mr. Oberlin is a gentleman of much more than ordinary taste and mental acquirements. His study of music has been the direct means of developing other qualities and having always been of a studious and inquiring turn of mind, much given to reading and intelligent observation it is not at all strange that in the course of time he should have become a well informed and thoroughly accomplished gentleman. In the main he has pursued music more for his own gratification than as the source of income, consequently he derives his livelihood from other and entirely dissimilar vocations. As already stated he was reared a farmer and ever since beginning life for himself his chief occupation has been that of tilling the soil. He is now the fortunate possessor of a small but exceedingly fertile and well cultivated place of fifty-five acres in Tuscarawas township, on which may be seen some of the best improvements in this part of the county, having been free in expending his surplus earnings for the beautifying and making attractive the home which he has provided for himself and family. In addition to husbandry, Mr. Oberlin of recent years has added very materially to his income as a coal driller, his labors in the direction having been quite successful from a pecuniary point of view. He has developed quite a number of rich producing mineral properties in various parts of Stark county and elsewhere, being an adept at the business and thoroughly reliable in all he undertakes. His services are in frequent demand by coal operators, and when not looking after his farm, he experiences no difficulty in securing all the remunerative employment to which he can possibly devote his attention. Like all intelligent men and enterprising citizens, Mr. Oberlin is a politician—not in the narrow partisan sense which the term usually conveys to the casual, unthinking mind, but in the broader sense which includes the individual's relation to the community, the state and nation as a personal factor in the body politic. Though born and reared a Democrat, he is not a supporter of that party by reason of birth-right, but rather from convictions, believing its principles when properly understood to be for the best interests of the people. The only position he ever held was as a member of the local school board, in which capacity he labored very diligently for some years to advance the cause of education in the township of Tuscarawas.

Mr. Oberlin was married on the 28th day of December, 1882, to Miss Lucy E. Harold, who was born in Sugar Creek township, Stark county, Ohio, in the year 1862. She is the daughter of Wesley and Margaret (Mottinger) Harrold, natives of Pennsylvania, who came to this county in an early day and settled in the above township, where their respective deaths subsequently occurred. To Mr. and Mrs. Oberlin six children have been born, namely: Verdie B., Elma G., Lura M., Mary S., Nina J. and Harrold B.

JOHN HEMPERLY was born near the central part of the Keystone state, in the old historic county of Lebanon, July 31, 1831, the son of David and Mary Hemperly, the latter prior to marriage a Houck. Both parents sprang from old and supposedly German families, the names evidently indicating Teutonic origin. By occupation David Hemperly was a farmer. He followed his chosen calling in his native county, and it was there that his seven children were born, his death, in 1845, following not many years the birth of the youngest member of the family. Two years after her husband's demise Mrs. Hemperly, with her seven fatherless children, came to Stark county, Ohio, settling near the present site of what is known as school house No. 16. Here she spent the remainder of a long and useful life, during which she looked carefully after the welfare of her children, all of whom grew to be honorable men and women, five of the number living at the present time. Mrs. Hemperly lived to a ripe old age, departing this life in the year 1889.

John Hemperly was a sturdy lad of sixteen years when his mother changed her abode to Stark county, and with little exception his life since 1847 has been spent within the present limits of Tuscarawas township. His mother provided as best she could for his intellectual training, sending him a few months of each year to such schools as the rural districts afforded, the rest of his time being required to assist in providing for the comfort and support of the family. In his youth he took up the cooper's trade and after becoming an efficient workmen found remunerative employment at various places, spending three years in East Greenville, this state, where he really began life upon his own responsibility. When a mere boy he and his brother Daniel walked from their old Pennsylvania home to Stark county, and during the long journey met with many interesting experiences and lively adventures which he still recalls with pleasure.

After following his trade for some years with fair profits, Mr. Hemperly turned his attention to agriculture, which he pursued until about 1885, spending forty-three years as an industrious and successful tiller of the soil. He owns a farm of about seventy-four acres, lying in one of the most fertile sections of the county, and by systematic and scientific tillage the land has been fully developed and its productiveness greatly enhanced. Mr. Hemperly is a Republican in politics, but has never been a very aggressive worker in the party, having no taste for the wrangling and contentions of partisan strife. In religion he advocates the beautiful and sublime teachings of Christian Science, being one of the leading members of that faith in his part of the county. As a neighbor and citizen his standing has always been above reproach and wherever known his reputation is that of an intelligent, honorable man of sound veracity and unimpeachable integrity.

On the 26th day of February, 1855, Mr. Hemperly was married to Miss Barbara Kittinger, whose birth occurred in Pennsylvania, August 30, 1836. Mrs. Hemperly is the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Shelingbercer) Kittinger, the father a native of Pennsylvania, the mother of Germany. These parents came to Stark county in 1843 and settled on the farm which the subject now owns and occupies, it being the older Kittinger homestead. Mr. Kittinger died some years ago, but his widow still survives, having reached the remarkable age of ninety-four. Of her ten children seven are living, the majority residents of Stark county. Mr. and Mrs. Hemperly have had two children, both dying when quite young.

SAMUEL H. WELCH was born on the parental homestead, in Bethlehem township, Stark county, Ohio, on the 13th of October, 1859, being the eldest son and third in order of birth in a family of eight children, of whom six are living at the present time, four of the sons and two of the daughters. His father, William Welch, now venerable in years and revered as one of the patriarch pioneers of the county, is residing in Indiana, while his loved and devoted wife, whose maiden name was Mary Jane Smith, died in Pike township, at the age of sixty years. William Welch was born in Rose township, Carroll county, Ohio, where his parents settled in the early pioneer epoch and where he was reared and educated. His wife was a daughter of the late Milton Smith, who was one of the early settlers in Sandy township, Tuscarawas county, this state, where he held the office of justice of the peace for many years, being a man of influence in the community. When the subject was about one year of age his parents removed to Pike township, and here he has passed practically his entire life, which has been prolific in good works in various fields of endeavor. As a youth he contributed his quota to the work of the home farm, while his early educational discipline was received in the district schools. Endowed by nature with a peculiarly alert and receptive mentality, he soon became interested in his studies and his ambition was quickened to the point of action, and he could not remain satisfied with such advantages as were offered in the common schools. Accordingly, at the age of twenty-two, we find him duly matriculated in the Northwestern Ohio Normal University, at Ada, where in due course of time he completed the scientific course, being graduated at a member of the class of 1884. Long before this, however, he had become eligible for pedagogic honors, having initiated his work in this line as a teacher in the district schools of Pike township when he was but seventeen years of age, while from that time forward he continued in the active work of the pedagogic profession in his native county until 1901, with the exception of two years. His success was of pronounced type and his popularity in the educational field of the most unmistakable order. He now resides on a fine farm in Pike township, having here given his attention to agricultural pursuits since the year 1895, though other demands placed upon his time suffer no neglect. In 1899, as candidate on the Republican ticket, Mr. Welch was elected to the office of justice of the peace, for a term of three years, and in the spring of 1902 he was chosen as his own successor in this office, in which his services had proved so acceptable as to win him the commendation of all classes. For two terms Mr. Welch was incumbent of the office of township clerk, and since 1901 he has been a valued member of the board of education, his zeal in the cause never having wavered. He is a man of broad and comprehensive reading and fine intellectuality, having the courage of his convictions and demanding the approval of conscience of every action of his life, so that he stands a distinct individual and one worthy of the objective confidence and esteem so uniformly accorded him. He has been a stanch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party from the time of attaining his legal majority, and his first presidential vote was cast for the lamented General Garfield. From the foregoing context it will be seen that the subject has made his influence potently felt along avenues of definite and helpful utility, but his labors have not ended here, for he has been particularly active in church work, in which his zeal and devotion have been unflagging. In the winter of 1878-9 he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, but in 1898 he withdrew from fellowship in this communion and identified himself with the United Brethren church, in whose temporal and spiritual work he has ever since taken an active part. At the age of twenty years he became superintendent of the Sunday school, and as such he has ever since continued to serve, while he has also been called to various official positions in this very important department of church work. For the past four years he has been superintendent of the Sunday school of the church at Otterbein. Since February, 1899, he has been a member of the county executive committee on Sunday school work in Stark county, and he served for four years as president of the Pike Township Sunday School Association, an inter-denominational organization whose functions have been exercised in a most beneficent way. Fraternally he is identified with Thomas Jefferson Council No. 100, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, at North Industry.

In the city of Canton, on the 23d of March, 1884, Mr. Welch was united in marriage to Miss Harriet Hines, a daughter of the late Washington Hines, who died in Pike township, in 1883, at the age of seventy-two years, one of the honored pioneer citizens of the county. His widow, whose maiden name was Christina J. Hockensmith, died in the same township in 1894, in her eightieth year. Mrs. Welch was born in this township, on the 8th of January, 1857, and is a woman of gracious and gentle refinement, being, like her husband, an active and devoted member of the United Brethren church. They have three children, Earl H., Howard and Edna.

OTTO E. OBERLIN was born in the above township September 25, 1853, as was also his father, William E. Oberlin, who first saw the light of day on the paternal homestead March 9, 1822. For a number of years William C. Oberlin was one of the most successful and popular teachers of Stark county and as an intelligent, broad-minded, progressive man, he made his influence felt in the community, having filled various official capacities and on account of his mature judgment and superior business qualifications was frequently employed to settle estates and adjust affairs requiring much more than a superficial knowledge of the law. He served his township thirty years as justice of the peace and much important litigation was brought to his court, his rulings and decisions being noted for their fairness and impartiality. He had a sound legal mind, lent dignity to the position and it is a matter of record that few appeals were taken from him to higher courts. He was also assessor a number of terms, filled the office of township clerk twelve years in succession, was long a notary public and is said to have written more deeds and drawn up more legal papers than any man in the county outside the cities of Canton and Massillon. He was one of the useful men of his day and generation, a member of the Reformed church and a Democrat in politics. In his death, which occurred on the 18th of April, 1895, the people of the township felt a personal and grievous loss. Susan Dague, who became the wife of William C. Oberlin and the mother of his children, was born in 1832, in Pennsylvania, and when about five years old was brought by her parents, Jacob and Margaret (Oberly) Oberlin, to Wayne county, Ohio, where she grew to maturity. She proved a devoted companion and fit helpmeet, nobly fulfilled the duties of wifehood and motherhood and preceded her husband to the tomb, dying in February, 1891. The following are the names of the children constituting the family of this estimable couple: Otto E., whose name furnishes the caption of this sketch; Albert B.; Charles D.; Sanford J. and Jennie M., all but Sanford J. living.

Otto E. Oberlin was early accustomed to labor and worked with his father on the farm until a young man in his teens, attending the common schools during the winter months, subsequently taking a course in the Smithville Normal for the purpose of preparing himself for teaching. He received his first teacher's license in 1876, and during the seven years following was engaged in educational work in Stark county, winning while thus employed an honorable record as an instructor. His brother Albert is also an educator and for twenty-six years has taught in the Stark county schools, being at this time principal of one of the leading schools of Massillon. In 1881 these two brothers became associated in the stove and hardware business at Bellevue, this state, and the firm thus constituted lasted about six years, at the expiration of which time the subject disposed of his interest in the house and turned his attention to the pursuit of agriculture. After remaining on his farm two years, he established himself in the general mercantile business at Stanwood and when a postoffice was established at the village in 1895 he took charge of the same, his commission as postmaster dating from May 12th of that year. He now commands a large share of patronage in the lines of goods with which his establishment is plentifully stocked and in addition to his business interests and official duties also looks after his farm, a fine and admirably situated place not far from the town limits.

Mr. Oberlin is public spirited and a natural leader in the affairs of his town and township.

He has served as assessor and while a resident of Bellevue was a member of the school board for several years, besides taking an active part in promoting the business and general growth of that place in other than official capacities. Since old enough to wield the elective franchise he has been an ardent supporter of the Democratic party and at the present time is one of its leaders in his township.

Mr. Oberlin married Miss Mary F. Welty on the 23d day of December, 1880, who died May 4, 1895, after bearing the following children: May, Edward W., Jessie F. and Helen, all living. On the 25th day of November, 1895, the subject married his present companion, Jane F. Poyser, of Canton, a union without issue. Mr. and Mrs. Oberlin are highly respected members of the Reformed church of Stanwood and their home is well known to the best society people of the town and surrounding country. Both maintain an abiding interest in all movements for the good of the community taking an active part in ministering to comfort of the poor and unfortunate and contributing with generous hands to further all charitable and benevolent work.

SAMUEL R. MILLER was born November 29, 1825, in Stark county, Ohio, the son of Jonathan and Sarah Miller, mentioned elsewhere in these pages. Of his early life and youthful experiences little need be said save he remained with his parents on a farm in Stark county until passing his minority, the meanwhile, like all country boys, being reared to habits of industry and instructed in the lessons of integrity and rectitude that make for sterling manhood and honorable citizenship. For some years he attended the common schools in the neighborhood in which he was raised and also received instruction in a private institution of learning, later supplementing this discipline by the wide reading and intelligent observations which have made him one of the well informed men of his community. Mr. Miller elected to become a farmer and he has never had any reason to regret the choice of the above vocation to which his life and energies have been devoted. Mr. Miller continued to prosecute his labors until, by reason of infirmities incident to advancing age, he retired from active life, having by industry and the successful management of his business affairs acquired a sufficiency of temporal wealth to make him independent for the remainder of his days. From his youth he has been characterized by industry and energy, ever maintaining an abiding interest in the material prosperity of his township and taking a leading part in all matters relating to the advancement of agriculture. For many years he was a supporter of the Republican party, but of late has been a staunch Prohibitionist, the principles of which he upholds with a tenacity of purpose which convinces all with whom he comes in contact of the strength and deep sincerity of his convictions. His views of religious truth are likewise clear and decided, believing with his whole heart and soul the doctrines and tenets of the Methodist Episcopal church as laid down in the standards of that body.

Mr. Miller was married May 10, 1853, to Sarah Ann Slusser, who was born in Tuscarawas township in the year 1827, the daughter of Michael and Catherine Slusser, who were among the early pioneers of Stark county. Two children have been born to this union, the older of whom, Charles S., resides in Brookfield, this state, where he is engaged in the coal business. His wife, who was formerly Miss Lena Houriet, has presented him with the following children: Harry L., Nina, Grace and Russell. The subject's second child is a daughter by the name of Bell, now the widow of Absalom Miller, who died September 16, 1901. She is the mother of nine children, of whom the following are living, Nora, William, Ida, Edith,

Hester A., Rhoda and Hazel. Nora married John Bremer, of this county, and has one daughter, Gladys. Ida is the wife of David Edwards and the mother of one child by the name of Venice. Edith entered the marriage relation with Joseph Davis, a union blessed with a daughter who goes by the name of Grace.

Sarah Newsletter, who married Jonathan Miller and became the mother of the subject of this sketch, was the daughter of Conradt and Mary Newsletter, the father a native of Switzerland. When a youth he was sold by his guardians to Napoleon Bonaparte and compelled to become a soldier in the army commanded by the great emperor. Not relishing such enforced service, he waited for a favorable opportunity to desert, after which he succeeded in making his escape to the United States, and spent the rest of his life in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, Ohio. In closing this brief review, it is proper to state that Mr. Miller has always been an active participant in the public affairs of the township, having served the public very satisfactorily as trustee, besides filling other minor official positions. Like the majority of mankind, he has been compelled to pass through the deep waters of bereavement, his loving and faithful companion having been taken from him on the 5th day of June, 1900.

REV. MERIT McCLELLAN RADER traces his genealogy to Germany, from which country certain of his paternal ancestors came to America in an early day and were among the pioneer settlers of Ohio. His grandfather, Christian Rader, was a native of Fairfield county, this state, and for a number of years worked at the carpenter's trade in the town of Baltimore. He married a Mrs. Spitler, who was also born in the county of Fairfield, and reared sons and daughters, among the former being John Rader, whose birth occurred in the village of Baltimore about the year 1829. He also learned carpentry, but later turned his attention to cabinet-making, in which he became a very efficient workman. In his young manhood he married Miss Mary Magdaline Miller, daughter of Peter Miller, whose wife belonged to one of the earliest pioneer families of Fairfield county. Peter Miller was born in the above county, where his father, a native of Pennsylvania, settled when the country was little less than a wilderness. The Millers were prominent members of the United Brethren church and it was in their little log cabin that the earliest religious services of that denomination in the county of Fairfield were held. The wife of Peter Miller, a noble woman, whose name is still held in veneration among the people of the community in which she formerly resided, lived to a green old age, dying in her ninety-first year; her husband preceded her to the other world, departing this life when about forty-five years old. Mrs. Mary M. Rader was born about 1837 in Fairfield county, grew to mature years there and is a lady of many sterling qualities of head and heart, well fitted to adorn the station of life to which she has been called. After his marriage John Rader moved to a small farm adjoining the village of Baltimore, but not finding agriculture to his taste he abandoned the pursuit after a few years of unsuccessful trial and resumed the trade of cabinet-making and carpentry in the above town. Subsequently he changed his abode to the little village of Carroll, in the county of Fairfield, where he now resides. Mr. Rader was reared according to the doctrines and rather strict usages of the Presbyterian faith, but later became a member of the Reformed church, of which body he is still an earnest and faithful communicant. Politically he has been a life-long Democrat, supporting his opinions with the same zeal as he maintains the soundness of his moral and religious principles. The following are the names of the children born to John and Mary Magdaline Rader: Wilbur died in infancy; Anna C. is now the wife of W. J. Miller, of Steubenville, Ohio; Julius L. is a resident of Chicago, Illinois; Esther E. is the widow of the late Enoch Langel, of Fairfield county; Merit McClellan, whose name introduces this article; Milo, also a resident of the county of Fairfield, where he married Annie Morrow, and Earl, who died when quite young.

Rev. Merit Rader was born May 6, 1862, in the little village of Basil, Fairfield county, Ohio, and grew to maturity in the neighborhood where he first saw the light of day. Blessed with excellent parentage, there were early implanted in his mind and heart those principles of moral rectitude and correct conduct which had a decided influence in shaping his future course of life, and hand in hand with his instruction went the best educational discipline the district schools afforded. When old enough, he found plenty to do on the farm and between labor of this kind in the summer time and attending school of winter seasons, he spent the first eighteen years of his life. His parents being in comparatively limited circumstances, he began when a mere youth to depend upon his own exertions for a livelihood, securing, as already stated, employment as a farm laborer and devoting his attention to that line of occupation until there came to him the idea that greater opportunities for advancement were to be found in some other vocation. Accordingly he learned telegraphy and after becoming an efficient operator he secured a position with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, being placed in charge of an office in Chicago, Illinois, where he remained for a period of two years. After discharging the duties of his position about fourteen months he returned to his native county where, on the 27th of September, 1887, he was united in the bonds of wedlock to Miss Mary C. Swartz, whose birth occurred in the same county February 18, 1858. Resuming his post at Chicago station, he continued there about ten months, at the expiration of which time he resigned with the object in view of engaging in the mercantile business in his home town.

After a short visit with his parents Mr. Rader effected a copartnership with J. J. Hansberger, and during the six years following the firm thus constituted conducted a general store in Baltimore, meeting with encouraging success in the enterprise. It was while thus engaged that Mr. Rader's plans were radically changed by a circumstance which directed his future into a channel entirely different from that of commerce or any other kind of secular pursuit. This was the meeting at Baltimore of the conference of the United Evangelical church, in the deliberation of which the subject took an active part. Having embraced religion a number of years before and demonstrated not only piety but a remarkable ability in the art of public discourse, he was persuaded by the bishop and many of his friends to accept a preacher's license and devote the remainder of his life to the ministry of the word. Feeling the weight of these importunities and realizing that his duty lay in the direction of public service for the Master, he finally consented to accept the license, with the promise that he be permitted time in which to prepare himself by taking a theological course. This being granted, he closed out his business and entered the Biblical Seminary at Dayton, where he at once addressed himself assiduously to his studies, completing the prescribed English course and graduating in May, 1896. Actuated by a laudable desire to prosecute his researches still further in order that he might be more proficient in his holy office, Mr. Rader subsequently became a student of the Moody Institute at Chicago, but hardly had he begun his labors in that institution when he was requested by one of the bishops to take the important charge at Greensburg, Summit county, Ohio, one of the largest and most influential United Evangelical churches in the eastern part of the state. Rev. Rader's appointment to this church was a recognition of his ability as well as a compliment to his high personal standing and genuine worth. He entered upon the discharge of his duties no without some trepidation, but from the first his labors were highly satisfactory and successful, as is attested by the substantial growth of the church materially and spiritually during the four years of his pastorate. Severing his connection with the church at Greensburg at the expiration of that time, he assumed pastoral control of the Trinity United Evangelical church at Canton, with which he has since labored with great acceptance, his efforts resulting in many accessions to the congregation and a more devoted consecration on the part of the entire membership.

Rev. Rader is a man of strong mentality and he brought to his work a mind well fortified with intellectual culture and theological training. A natural orator, he is fluent in the use of language, arranges his discourses with much study and care, presents the precepts to divine truth with logic and force and seldom fails to interest and deeply impress the most careless and indifferent and satisfy the critical auditor. A profound student of the Sacred Scriptures, a knowledge of which is the successful minister's greatest tower of strength, also a close reader of the best current religious literature, but first of all a devoted disciple of the Nazarene, he avails himself of every opportunity to increase his effectiveness in his sacred office.

Mr. and Mrs. Rader have a pleasant and happy home, but, like the majority of human kind, they have been made to feel the hand of bereavement laid heavily upon them. Two of their three children, Edith and Milo Richard, budded on earth to bloom in Paradise, both dying in infancy. The first born, Raymond by name, a bright lad in whom many fond hopes are centered, is a student in the schools of Canton.

JOHN D. FOLK is of the third generation of the family in Stark county, his grandfather, Peter Folk, having come hither from Pennsylvania about 1820 and entered claim to an entire section of land, the deed to which was signed by James Madison, who was then President of the United States. The brothers made an equal division of the property, and Peter became the owner eventually of three hundred and twenty acres, in Nimishillen township, the present homestead of our subject being an integral portion of the ancestral estate. The land was entirely unreclaimed when the grandfather here took up his abode in the little log cabin which he had erected in the midst of the forest wilds, making a small clearing for this purpose. Here there fell to his lot the usual experiences of the pioneer, and his name merits a place of honor as one of the founders of the county and as a man of industry, integrity and sterling worth. On this old homestead farm, which is now his home, John D. Folk was born, the date of his nativity having been May 2, 1847, while he was the fourth in order of birth of a family of six children, of whom four survive, namely: Elizabeth, who has never married and who has passed her entire life in Nimishillen township; Rebecca, who is the wife of Samuel Snyder, of this township; Henry, concerning whom individual mention is made elsewhere in this volume; and John D., subject of this sketch. The parents of these children were John and Elizabeth (Dice) Folk, the former of whom was born in York county, Pennsylvania, about 1813, while the latter was born in Pennsylvania in 1811. John Folk was about eight years of age at the time when his parents removed from Pennsylvania to Stark county, and here he was reared on the pioneer farm, his educational advantages being meager, owing to the exigencies of the time and place, the schools being few and of the most primitive character. After his marriage he settled on a portion of the home farm, which had been divided among the three sons, his portion comprising one hundred and sixty acres. Here he continued to reside until his death, having made excellent improvements on his homestead and having brought the same under effective cultivation, a large portion of the land having been cleared by him. He died on the 3d of October, 1879, at the age of sixty-six years, his wife surviving him by about a decade, being summoned into eternal rest on the 30th of March, 1886, at the age of seventy-five years. In politics the father of the subject originally gave his support to the Whig party, but after the Republican party was organized he transferred his allegiance to the same, and ever afterward was a stalwart advocate of its principles. He and his wife are both devoted members of the Lutheran church, exemplifying their faith in their daily walk and conversation.

John D. Folk was reared to maturity on the old homestead farm, and he early became inured to the arduous labors involved in improving and cultivating the ancestral acres, his services being in such constant requisition that his educational advantages as a boy were very limited, while the facilities afforded in the line were only such as were to be had in the little country school house, some distance from his home, but in the latter years of earnest toil and endeavor, through personal application and association with his fellow men, he has been able to effectively round out his store of knowledge and is a man of broad information and strong mentality. Upon attaining his legal majority he was associated with his elder brother in conducting the farm on shares, and after the death of their father, in 1879, they purchased the property and still own the same in partnership, though our subject now has practically the entire charge, since in 1894 his brother removed to another farm in the township. Mr. Folk is thoroughly progressive in his methods, and is ever ready to take advantage of improvements in systems or in mechanical devices which will facilitate the work of the farm. He was reared in the faith of the Republican party, and has never vacillated in his political allegiance, though he has never been an aspirant for office. He is not a member of any religious organization, but has ever stood ready to aid in church work and in the furthering of collateral benevolences.

On the 27th of December, 1878, Mr. Folk was united in marriage to Miss Emma Miller, who was born in Louisville, this county, being a daughter of the late Peter Miller, who was there engaged in the undertaking business for many years, being one of the honored pioneers of the county. Mr. Miller came to Stark county in 1834, and his death occurred August 17, 1900, his widow passing away February 17, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Folk have one child, Gertrude, who still remains at the parental home.

OLIVER BRUMBAUGH was born on a farm in Lake township, this county, on the 7th of September, 1862, being the only child of Daniel and Anna (Yoder) Brumbaugh. Daniel Brumbaugh was likewise a native of Stark county, having been born in Marlboro township in 1837, a son of George and Elizabeth (Hoover) Brumbaugh, who were numbered among the honored pioneers of the county, where both died when well advanced in years. The father of the subject was reared on the old homestead farm, having such educational advantages as were afforded by the district schools of the locality and period, and after his marriage he located in Lake township, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres, upon which he continued to reside for nine years, at the expiration of which he disposed of the property and purchased the home farm of his father-in-law, Christian Yoder, in Nimi-shillen township, where he died two years later, at the early age of thirty-three years, being thus cut off in the very prime of his young manhood, though he had fully demonstrated his powers as an able and faithful man of business and shown himself to be dominated and guided by a spirit of the most absolute integrity and honor. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities, and his religious views were in harmony with the tenets of the Dunkard church. His wife, who was born in Nimi-shillen township, ever remained faithful to the memory of the husband of her youth and died at her home in the village of Louisville, October 14, 1902.

Oliver Brumbaugh was but eight years of age at the time of his father's death, but his mother remained on the homestead farm, and there he was reared to maturity, while he received his early educational discipline in the public schools. Realizing the exigencies of the case and the weight of the burden resting on the shoulders of his devoted mother, he put his shoulder against the wheel when but thirteen years of age and practically assumed the management of the home farm, sparing himself no effort that would insure the best results in the way of returns from the products of field and meadow, while the experience which he gained thus early has proved of inestimable value to him in the later years of his active and successful business career.

On the 15th of March, 1889, Mr. Brumbaugh was united in marriage to Miss Tamzon Houston, who was born in Washington township, this county, being a daughter of John and Catherine (Smith) Houston, her father being numbered among the representative pioneer farmers of that township. After his marriage the subject continued to devote his attention to the operation of the home farm, while his mother took up her residence in the village which is now her home. In 1894 Mr. Brumbaugh purchased an interest in the Louisville Brick and Tile Company, and two years later he was made superintendent of the works, the plant being one of the most extensive of the sort in the county and controlling a large business. The homestead farm is now rented and he devotes practically his entire time to his official duties in the connection noted, having proved himself a business man of rare executive ability and holding the confidence of all with whom he comes in contact. He manifests a commendable concern in all that touches the welfare of his home community and his native county, his political support being given to the Republican party. Since assuming the superintendency of the brick and tile works he has maintained his residence in Louisville, where he has a pleasant home and one in which the refined amenities of life are ever in evidence. He and his wife have two children, Mary and John.

REV. WILLIAM E. TURNER, the popular and efficient pastor of the Church of God in Canton and a man widely and favorably known in the ecclesiastical circles of that denomination throughout Ohio, is descended paternally from English ancestry and there also flows in his veins the blood of a long line of Danish antecedents who many years ago were closely related to the royal family of their native country. The subject's grandfather was James Turner, whose birth occurred in Yarmouth, England, about the year 1799. He was reared in that country and followed hedging for a livelihood, his work including the planting and caring for hedges, a vocation at one time very profitable in various parts of England and other European countries. He married in his native land Miss Mary Clark, from whose ancestors the subject inherits the Danish strain referred to above. A number of years ago James Turner and family left their English home and came to America, remaining two years in the city of New York and at the expiration of that time migrating to Williams county, Ohio, when that part of the state was little more than a primitive wilderness. Mr. Turner was one of the early pioneers of the county, living for some time in a diminutive log cabin and experiencing all the hardships and vicissitudes incident to life in a new and heavily wooded country. He bore his full share in clearing away the dense forests, and lived to witness the many remarkable changes which transformed his county into one of the most enterprising and progressive sections of western Ohio. His wife, who was born in the year 1800, died in 1879, his death taking place in 1883. James and Mary Turner were the parents of a very large family, sixteen children, of whom William, the subject's father, was the youngest. Some of these sons and daughters emigrated to Australia, but the majority came to America, settling in several states and becoming well situated in life. One of the sons, John Turner, served for twenty-three years in the English army, rose to the rank of captain and distinguished himself by brave and gallant conduct in the East Indian or Sepoy rebellion. Severing his connection with the army, he emigrated to Canada, where he now resides. Another son, James, and a married daughter, Mrs. Reader, came to the United States in 1842 and located in Williams county, this state, where they soon became well known among the pioneer settlers. William Turner, father of the subject, was born in Yarmouth, England, February 5, 1844, and was a youth of fourteen when his parents came to Ohio. Owing to the scarcity of schools and the inferior grade of such as were accessible, his educational discipline was exceedingly limited, but having a natural craving for knowledge, he subsequently made up in a large degree for this deficiency by much reading. He acquired a wide and varied knowledge and when a youth sought the society of older and wiser people than his playmates and companions for the purpose of profiting by their conversation. Growing to manhood amid the stirring scenes and hard work of the pioneer times, he early developed fine physical powers. In his young manhood Mr. Turner was married in Hillsdale, Michigan, to Miss Sarah Elliott, a native of Stark county, Ohio, born in the town of Marlborough, November 16, 1848. When Mrs. Turner was two years old her parents, William and Maria (Hagerman) Elliott, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively, moved to Hillsdale county, Michigan, being among the earliest pioneers of that part of the state. Mr. Elliott took an active part in the growth and development of the country in which he settled and is still living in the county of Hillsdale, having reached the ripe old age of seventy-seven years. His wife, after sharing with him many hardships and difficulties, the necessary accompaniments of life in a frontier country, was called to her eternal rest, dying some years ago in the county of Hillsdale.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Turner settled in Crawford county, Ohio, but three years later purchased a farm in the southern part of Hillsdale county, Michigan, where they still reside. He has followed agricultural pursuits with a fair measure of success and stands high as a neighbor and citizen. He was reared in the Episcopal faith, his wife coming from an old Quaker family long noted for piety, religious zeal and good works, both in and out of the church. Their children, five in number, are named as follows: William E., of this review; Maria, now Mrs. Loa Sheldon, is also a resident of that county; Mary, wife of Calvin Lambright, of Williams county, Ohio; Lizzie, who married Roscoe Brown, of Ohio, and Henry E., who lives in Camden, Michigan.

Rev. William E. Turner was born August 20, 1869, in the town of New Washington, Crawford county, Ohio, where his parents spent the first three years of their married life. Thence he was taken to Hillsdale county, Michigan, where he spent his childhood and youthful days, growing to vigorous young manhood on the farm, with the rugged duties of which he early became acquainted. In the public schools he received an educational training and by close and diligent application he made substantial progress in the more advanced branches of learning. On leaving school young Turner entered the employ of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad as a brakeman, and continued in that capacity for three years, when he resigned his position, entering the employ of the Holland Detective Agency at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He was in the employ of this agency for one year and developed marked ability as a detective, but in 1892 severed his connection with his employers and came back to his boyhood home, where in the spring election he was elected constable and afterwards was appointed township school inspector, in which office he faithfully served the public three years.

Mr. Turner experienced conversion in 1895, and possessing strong mental abilities, together with the qualities essential to success in the public ministry, he felt it his duty to enter upon that work and labor for the advancement of Christ's kingdom among men. He united with the Church of God immediately after his conversion and in the fall of 1895 was licensed to preach by the Ohio eldership. The better to prepare himself for effective service in his sacred office he took a theological course under the direction of Findlay College, Findlay, Ohio, and while prosecuting his studies was placed in charge of the Ottawa Lake circuit, which he served four years, making his home the meantime at Ottawa Lake, southern Michigan. Mr. Turner completed the course of study in 1898 and the year following was transferred to the charge at Canton, where he has labored zealously and with much acceptance ever since, greatly building up the church along all lines of activity and strengthening its influence as a potent factor for substantial good in the community. Under his administration and the power and force of his ministry the membership has largely increased. A higher degree of spirituality has also been awakened, a conclusive evidence of the reverence and trust his people repose in him personally and in his effectiveness as a teacher of divine truth. Mr. Turner is a pleasing and forceful speaker and his strong and stirring appeals for people to abandon their sins and seek salvation not infrequently rise to the heights of true eloquence. His life has been fraught with good works and his kind words of admonition not only in the sacred desk but in personal contact with his fellow men in their homes and elsewhere have been instrumental in changing the course of many lives but that for his influence would have continued the downward way. He has served on several important committees in the church, and in 1902 was elected clerk of the eldership.

Rev. Turner was married in Williams county, Ohio, to Miss Maud Summer, the ceremony being solemnized on the 8th of August, 1897. Mrs. Turner was born in Williams county, October 28, 1873, and is the daughter of Alonzo and Jennie (Preston) Summer, both parents natives of Ohio. Alonzo Summer's parents were William and Elizabeth (Pool) Summer, the former the son of Uriah Summer, a native of New York and one of the first permanent settlers of Williams county, Ohio. Tracing the genealogy further back, it is learned that the Summers were among the old substantial families of Massachusetts and some of the name figured prominently in several localities of that commonwealth. Rev. and Mrs. Turner's marriage has been blessed with two offspring, both sons, namely: Ralph Summer and Ross Dale.

JOSIAH HARTZELL is a native of the state of Ohio, having been born in the town of Deerfield, Portage county, on the 7th of September, 1833, and being a son of Frederick and Mary (Ickes) Hartzell, both of whom were born and reared in Pennsylvania, being representatives of the stanch German stock which has played so important a part in the history of the Keystone commonwealth. Frederick Hartzell removed to Ohio in 1810, and he was identified with the great fundamental art of agriculture until his death, which occurred in Mahoning county, on the 13th of November, 1868, his wife passing away on the 20th of August, 1888. They became the parents of ten children, of whom six are living at the present time. In both the agnatic and maternal lines the descent of the subject of this sketch is traced from German families who, in consequence of religious persecution in their native land, accepted certain landed and homestead propositions made them by William Penn and came to America as the pioneer settlers of Pennsylvania. The original American progenitor of the Hartzell family was Heinrich Hartzell, who came to Pennsylvania in the year 1687.

Josiah Hartzell passed his youthful days in Portage county, Ohio, and received his preliminary education in the common schools. In 1850 he was matriculated in Amherst College, in Massachusetts, where he completed the college course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1854, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while later his alma mater conferred upon him in turn the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy. After his collegiate course Mr. Hartzell took up the study of law in Toledo, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of the state in 1856. He located in Davenport, Iowa, where he practiced law two years and then came to Canton in 1858. His predilections led him to view with favor the overtures made him to devote his attention to editorial work and he assumed the editorial chair of the office of the Canton Republican in 1858 and subsequently became editor of the Canton Repository, the oldest paper in Stark county, the same having been established in the year 1815, under the title of the Ohio Repository, while it has been consecutively published during the long intervening years. He continued as editor in chief of the Repository for nearly a score of years, retiring about 1876, though he has since continued to make occasional and timely contribution to this and other representative papers, being known as a forceful and trenchant writer and ever utilizing the chaste diction indicative of high scholarship and appreciative literary taste. Since his retirement from newspaper work Mr. Hartzell has devoted the major portion of his attention to the various and important manufacturing interests with which he is identified. He has twice made tours of the European continent, and was representative of important manufacturing interests during the term of the Paris exposition of 1878, as well as that held in that city in 1900, and also at the World's Columbian Exposition, held in the city of Chicago in 1893.

It was but natural that a man of so alert mentality and one so intimately identified with the discussion of matters of public import through the columns of the press, should become a factor in the directing of opinion and in the conduct of local affairs. Mr. Hartzell has ever given his allegiance to the Republican party and has been an effective advocate of its cause, and while he has never been animated by specific political ambition, he has been called upon to serve in various positions of local trust. He was postmaster of Canton for four years, during the administration of Presidents Lincoln and

Johnson, while he also served as a member of the board of park commissioners of Canton and as sewer commissioner, his policy in local affairs being at all times a progressive and broad-minded one. In 1893 he was made a member of the Ohio state board of health, in which capacity his term will not expire until 1907, and he has filled the various offices in this body, manifesting an unflagging interest in its work. He is also a member of the American Public Health Association, and at its convention, in the city of Philadelphia, in 1898 he was appointed a member of a committee which received instructions to memorialize the President and congress of the United States to take certain measures for the suppression of yellow fever in Cuba, from which source have emanated the recurred epidemics of the scourge in the southern states of the Union. In the following year he was reappointed on another committee whose object was the same, the two committees holding their sessions in the city of Washington. Through this means was initiated the work which led to the establishing by our government, in the city of Havana, of that commission of bacteriological experts whose experimental studies and careful researches have made possible the suppression of yellow fever in American cities for all time to come. Mr. Hartzell has been a member of the board of trustees of the Ohio Historical and Archaeological Society, and in each of the connections noted his zeal has been insistent and has vitalized the work undertaken and carried forward.

On the 21st of February, 1856, Mr. Hartzell was united in marriage to Miss Mary K. Johnson, who was born in Stark county, Ohio, being a daughter of Simon Johnson, an honored pioneer of Stark county. Of this union were born eight children, one of whom, Mary K., died in infancy, while of the others we incorporate the following brief data: Wilbur J., who was born November 22, 1856, is now a resident of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is engaged in the wheat commission business; Dora V., who was born on the 8th of January, 1859, resides in St. Paul, that state, being the wife of Captain H. L. Kuhns, who is engaged in the hotel business; Frederic S., who was born on the 22d of August, 1860, resides in Canton and is acting secretary of the McKinley Monument Association; Charles, born on the 15th of July, 1862, is a resident of the city of San Juan, Porto Rico, and is secretary of the island; Josiah, Jr., born on the 6th of May, 1868, is a dentist and makes his home in Minneapolis; Grace, born May 28, 1871, resides in her native city of Canton; and Ralph W., who was born on the 21st of October, 1874, is a lawyer and resides in Denver, Colorado. Mr. and Mrs. Hartzell have ten grandchildren, and the family relationships and associations throughout have been of ideal character.

JACOB FREDERICK MARCHAND, M. D., is a native of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, born in the town of Jacksonville on the 17th day of February, 1858. In the public schools of his native place, which he attended until the age of fifteen, he acquired a good elementary education and during the ensuing four years taught in the county of Westmoreland, earning the reputation of an able and popular instructor. The training in the public schools and his experience as a teacher were afterwards supplemented by a full course in Washington and Jefferson College, which institution he entered at the age of nineteen and from which he was graduated with a creditable record in the year 1882. Soon after completion of his college course Mr. Marchand was elected principal of the high school of Canton, Ohio, in which capacity he continued two years, resigning at the expiration of that time, although re-elected for another term. He was led to abandon educational work in order to take up the study of medicine, for which profession he had long manifested a decided preference as the calling best suited for a life work. In September, 1884, he entered the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia and after prosecuting his studies the greater part of three years was graduated with the class of 1887. On receiving his degree he opened an office in Canton, where his thorough professional training soon won him a lucrative practice which has continued to increase from that time to the present. As a physician and surgeon he is easily the peer of the leading medical men of the city and county of his residence and it may also be stated that in the treatment of many diseases requiring a high degree of efficiency and skill he has a reputation much more than local.

The Doctor has left untried no reasonable efforts to rise in his profession, not from ambitious motives but from an intense and laudable desire to become a true healer so as to confer the great boon of health upon suffering humanity. He is identified with a number of medical societies, in the deliberations of which he always manifests an active interest and not infrequently has he read before these various bodies carefully prepared papers evincing profound erudition and critical research, which have elicited from medical circles both local and throughout the state, profuse praise and high encomiums. He is a member of the Mississippi Valley and Northeastern Ohio Medical Societies, the Stark County Medical Society, Canton Medical Club, the American Medical Association and is also a fellow of the American Academy of Medicine, maintaining intimate relations with all of these organizations. He has been city physician of Canton and at this time he holds the position of local health officer, being also surgeon to the Aultman Hospital and a member of the staff.

Fraternally Dr. Marchand belongs to the Masonic order and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has been a life-long Democrat and, while earnest in maintaining the correctness of his principles and untiring in keeping himself well informed upon the great public questions and issues of the day, he has no political ambitions, the pressing claims of his profession preventing him from taking a very active interest in party affairs. As a citizen he has been active in encouraging every utility for the city's material welfare.

On the 30th day of April, 1891, was solemnized, in Canton, the ceremony which united in the bonds of marriage Dr. Marchand and Miss Laura A. Martin, daughter of Hon. Henry S. Martin, the father formerly superintendent of the public schools of the city and for a period of fourteen years connected with the United States treasury department in Washington, D. C. Dr. and Mrs. Marchand have one son, Charles Martin, a bright lad in whom are centered many fond hopes for the future.

REV. JOHN ANDREW HALL, D. D.—

The Hall family of which the Doctor is a member originated in Switzerland, from which country his grandfather came to America a number of years ago and settled near Reading, Pennsylvania. John Hall, the Doctor's father, was born in that state about the year 1816 and when young was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood. In his youth he learned the tinner's trade and worked at the same until young manhood when he decided to devote the remainder of his life to the ministry. He was appointed to the Wooster circuit, Ohio, and for several years ministered to the churches in that part of the state, visiting his several appointments on horseback and experiencing many hardships and vicissitudes in the discharge of his duties. He was married at Wooster to Miss Sarah Reiner, whose father, George Reiner, was one of the earliest pioneers of Wayne county. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Hall resulted in the following children: Rev. Henry H., D. D., an eminent Lutheran clergyman, formerly chaplain of the Western Pennsylvania penitentiary but at the present time pastor of the church at Litchfield, Illinois; Mrs. Elizabeth Faust, of Woodberry, Ohio; Mrs. Mary Sowers, who lives at the same place, and John A., whose name initiates this article. After serving many years as an itinerant, Rev. John Hall was given a charge at Sandusky, after which he served as pastor at different cities, his last regular work being with the church in Dayton. Owing to failing health he was obliged to give up the active labors of the ministry and retire to his estate in Morrow county, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying at a good old age in the year 1900. His widow still survives, having reached her seventy-eighth year.

Rev. John A. Hall was born on the 17th day of August, 1852, in Morrow county, Ohio, and spent the years of his childhood and youth on his father's farm. There he learned the true dignity of honest toil and grew up impressed with the idea that God had prepared no place in the world for drones or idlers. At the age of six he entered the district schools and between attending these in the winter time and working on the farm during the summer seasons he spent the eight years following. During the next year he pursued his studies in the schools of Woodberry, after which he spent about two and a half years in a private institution at Lexington, Ohio, where he prepared himself for college.

At the age of eighteen Dr. Hall entered Wittenberg College, from which he was graduated in 1875 and immediately thereafter began his theological studies in the seminary at Wittenberg, completing the prescribed course three years later. Well qualified by intellectual culture and theological training for the noble work of the ministry, Mr. Hall accepted for his first charge the Mt. Zion church in Richland county, where he labored with zeal and great acceptance for a period of seven years. During that time he developed fine powers as a preacher and superior executive ability in managing the material interests of his congregation. All lines of work prospered and the young pastor won the highest regard, not only of his own parishioners, but of the entire citizenship. Severing his connection with Mt. Zion, Dr. Hall accepted the pastorate of the Plymouth Lutheran church, where he labored for the spiritual interest of the people four years, meeting with most encouraging results the meantime. His next charge was the church at Walnut Hill, Cincinnati, a wealthy and influential congregation in one of the most beautiful parts of the city. There his labors were also greatly appreciated and during a pastorate of nine years the congregation constantly increased in numerical strength and influence, while a deeper spirit of devotion and consecration was aroused among the membership. "Dr. Hall did much personal work in Cincinnati, became widely known throughout the city and stood high in the esteem of his brother ministers of other denominations.

In October, 1896, Dr. Hall entered upon his labors as pastor of Trinity Lutheran church, Canton, and since that time has been earnest and untiring in behalf of the Master's interests in this city. The continual enlargement of the congregation's sphere of influence and its steady but sure advancement along material and spiritual lines is the best evidence of the pastor's ability as a preacher and of his leadership in planning and carrying to successful issue great things for the upbuilding of the Master's kingdom. Dr. Hall's sermons are clear, concise, practical and logical and his eloquence of that fervid kind that not only pleases but carries conviction to his hearers. In politics he is pronounced in his allegiance to the Republican party and hesitates not to labor for its success during campaigns, believing as he does that every good citizen should be in the best sense of the term a politician. Dr. Hall is a married man and the father of two children, namely: Ralph, a student of Wittenberg College, and Arthur, who is still a member of the home circle. Mrs. Hall was formerly Miss Minerva Huntsman, of Belleville, Ohio, in which place her name was changed to the one she now bears.

JONATHAN D. MILLER.—The Miller and Newsletter families, of which the subject of this review is a representative, have been identified with the growth and development of Stark county since a very early period of the history of this part of the state. His parental grandparents, Daniel and Maria C. Miller, were natives of Center county, Pennsylvania, and among their children was a son by the name of Jonathan, whose birth occurred on the 20th day of April, 1797. When a young man, this Jonathan married Miss Sarah Newsletter, whose father, Conradt Newsletter, came to America as a deserter from the army of the great Napoleon, having in his youth been forced to a life of military service from which he only escaped by resorting to what was known as "French leave." Mr. Newsletter settled in Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, where he married and it was there that his daughter, Mrs. Miller, was born. As early as 1816 he migrated to Stark county, Ohio, purchasing land in what is now Tuscarawas township, where he cleared a farm, reared his family and spent the latter part of his life. The Millers came to Stark county about the year 1816, and also settled within the present limits of the township of Tuscarawas. In early manhood Jonathan Miller learned the carpenter trade, but after locating in Stark county he devoted his attention principally to agriculture, clearing with his own hands an eighty-acre farm in Tuscarawas township. During the old Whig regime, he was an ardent supporter of that party, but after it had fulfilled its mission and ceased to exist he became a Republican and so continued to the end of his life. Jonathan and Sarah Miller reared a family of six children, whose names are as follows: Joseph A., member of Company C, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the late Civil war, died in Andersonville prison in the year 1864; Samuel R.; Margaret, wife of John Walter; Jonathan D., of this review; David F., deceased, and Martin L. The father died in 1858, the mother about the year 1876. Mrs. Miller's father departed this life March 6, 1858, at the age of sixty, the mother dying on the 5th day of January, 1876, when seventy-one years old. Jonathan D. Miller was born on the paternal homestead in Tuscarawas township, Stark county, Ohio, September 19, 1833, and from that date to the present day he has spent his life within a short distance of the place of his birth. His early training on the farm fostered habits of industry and self-reliance and he grew to vigorous young manhood with a proper conception of life and its responsibilities. In his younger days he attended during the winter months the country schools, and after spending his minority with his parents, he learned carpentry, which trade he followed for a number of years in connection with agricultural pursuits. Mr. Miller continued to devote his attention to carpentry and farming until the year 1893, when he moved to the town of Brookfield. He owns one of the finest residences in the above town and is one of the leading citizens of the community, being active in promoting his own affairs and public spirited in all the term implies. Politically Mr. Miller is a Republican and an influential party worker. He cast a ballot for the first Republican nominee for President, John C. Fremont, and voted for every one of the party's distinguished candidates for that high office to the present administration, having missed no national election since 1858. He held the office of township clerk for two years, and in 1900 was elected trustee, the duties of which he is now discharging.

Susan R. Ralston, who became the wife of Jonathan D. Miller in the year of 1860, is the daughter of William and Anna (Rough) Ralston, and was born September 18, 1836, in Stark county. William Ralston was born March 26, 1788, in Pennsylvania, and his wife in the same state on the 11th of December, 1791. These parents were married July 17, 1817, and had children as follows: Joseph, Harriet, Maria, George, Henry, William, Jane, Susan, Rebecca and James. William Ralston and wife came to Stark county in 1834, settling in Tuscarawas township, where they lived the remainder of their lives, the former dying in August, 1858, and the latter, May 30, 1868. By occupation Mr. Ralston was a plasterer, in addition to which he also followed farming. In politics he was a Democrat and in religion he was a Presbyterian, to which church his wife and several of his children likewise belonged. Mrs. Miller's paternal grandparents were David and Mary Ralston, natives of England and early settlers of Pennsylvania, in which state their deaths occurred many years ago. Her mother, Jane Rough, was the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Farney) Rough, both born and reared in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, the former dying there at the age of eighty-four, the latter departing this life in Stark county in 1837, while on a visit to her relatives, being sixty-three at the time of her demise. The Ralstons have long been noted for their patriotism and love of country, several of Mrs. Miller's brothers having distinguished themselves in the late Rebellion as soldiers. Henry went from Michigan and served until the close of the struggle, taking part in some of the bloodiest battles of the war. George served in an Ohio regiment and made an honorable record for bravery in a number of campaigns. Of William it is proper to speak at more length, as his experience on the march and on the field of conflict has seldom been equalled. Enlisting August 7, 1862, in Company E, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Infantry, he at once proceeded to the front and during an active service of three years duration took part in many battles, of which the following are perhaps the most noted: Covington, Danville, Knoxville, Resaca, Cedarville, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Pine Run, Atlanta, Pumpkinvine Creek, Columbia, Tennessee, Franklin, Nashville, Ft. Anderson, North Carolina, Farm Creek and others of equal importance whose names cannot be recalled. Reverting to the domestic history of the subject and his wife, it is learned that their marriage resulted in the birth of four children: Paris, a machinist, working at his trade in Massillon; Curtis C., a jeweler and optician of Massillon; Burton J., a physician and surgeon of the same city, and Daisy, deceased.

MOSES CLAY.—The subject of this review is one of Stark county's oldest native sons and he is also numbered among its leading farmers and representative men of affairs. His father was Isaac Clay, a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother, who bore the maiden name of Mary Pennock, was born in the state of Connecticut. The subject's paternal ancestors were among the early settlers of Pennsylvania, while his mother's genealogy is traceable to an early period in the history of New England. David Clay, the grandfather, was born and reared in the Keystone state, but many years ago migrated to Columbiana county, Ohio, where he purchased land, improved a farm and spent the remainder of his life. William Pennock, the subject's maternal grandfather, was one of Stark county's earliest pioneers, locating in Plain township as long ago as the year 1810. Subsequently he changed his abode to what is now the township of Marlborough, where he became a successful tiller of the soil, which vocation he followed as long as he lived, dying there at a good old age. His wife also lived to be very old, being ninety-six years of age at the time of her death. Isaac Clay, father of Moses, was reared a farmer and came to Ohio with his parents when a young man. As early as 1812 he became a resident of Stark county, purchasing that year the place in Plain township which the subject now owns and making it his home until his death in 1832. He was one of the sturdy pioneers of this part of the state and a man of sterling worth, whom to know was to respect and honor. He was a staunch Whig in politics, took an active interest in the affairs of his community, and is remembered as a kind neighbor and a most excellent citizen. His wife, who also died in 1832, bore him seven children, all of whom lived to be over seventy years of age, the subject being the sole survivor of the family.

Returning to the life of Moses Clay, it is learned that he has been a resident of Jackson township all his life, having been born on the farm where he now lives, November 27, 1823. A continuous residence of eighty years in one locality, such as his has been, is perhaps without parallel in the history of Stark county. He has seen the country developed from a thinly settled community to one of the finest agricultural regions in the state, nor has he been a mere passive spectator of the many remarkable changes affected since his boyhood, but with strong arm and determined purpose he has contributed largely to the advancement of his township in all that constitutes a high order of civilization. Mr. Clay's early life on the farm taught him the true dignity of honest toil and laudable endeavor, and while still a mere youth he was ready to assume all the duties and the responsibilities of manhood. He was reared to habits of industry, and, on attaining his majority, began farming for himself, a vocation which he followed with a large measure of success until advancing years obliged him to forego further manual labor, and spent the evening of his life in retirement. Meanwhile, by diligence and thrift, he acquired a comfortable fortune, owning at one time three hundred and fifty-six acres of fine land, on which he made many substantial improvements, besides accumulating a large amount of personal property. For many years Mr. Clay was an extensive breeder of fine Jersey cattle, from the sale of which he has derived a large income. As a farmer, he always occupied a place in the front rank and earned an honorable reputation as a scientific agriculturist, having prosecuted his labors with the greatest care and with the object in view of obtaining the largest possible results. Some years ago he disposed of one hundred acres of real estate, but the amount he still owns is much more than sufficient to supply his wants, his home place being among one of the largest as well as one of the best farms in the township of Jackson.

Mr. Clay has been an ardent Republican ever since the organization of the party, but has never taken a very active part in public affairs further than to vote his ticket and defend the soundness of his opinions. His duties as a citizen have always been honorably discharged, but at no time has he had political aspirations, preferring the quiet life of a farmer to any office within the power of the people to bestow. He has lived well, provided liberally for his family, and grown old gracefully, and now, from the topmost round in the ladder of success, can look back over a life well spent with little cause for regret.

Catherine Madison, who became the wife of Moses Clay in 1850, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in the year 1832, the daughter of Otis Madison, a native of Maryland and an early settler of Detroit, Michigan, in which city he is said to have worked at the tailor trade, many years ago. It is stated that he made the first pattern for cutting men's clothing, a device that was subsequently adopted by the leading tailoring establishments throughout the United States. He died a number of years since. To Mr. and Mrs. Clay have been born eight children, namely: Elvira, Harvey, Otis, Frank, Edward, Mary and Emma.

JOSEPH B. SUMMER was born near East Rochester, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 24th of March, 1861, being the son of Noah and Susan (Aspey) Summer, the respective families having been residents of the United States for ten generations. Noah Summer was born near Poland, Mahoning county, Ohio, in the year 1818, and his death occurred in 1898, while his wife, who was born in North Georgetown, Columbiana county, Ohio, in 1823, died in 1903. The father of the subject became one of the successful farmers of Columbiana county, and there occurred the death of both himself and his wife. The original progenitors of both the Summer and Aspey families in America immigrated hither from Switzerland about three hundred years ago, settling in Maryland and Virginia, whence representatives later removed to Pennsylvania, while finally members of the respective families came into Ohio in the pioneer epoch and descendants are now to be found in the most diverse sections of the Union.

The subject of this sketch attended the common schools of his native county until he had attained the age of sixteen years, when he was matriculated in Mount Union College, in Alliance, Stark county, where he continued his studies for a period of three years. He began teaching in the public schools at the age of seventeen and continued to follow this vocation about ten years, in Columbiana, Carroll and Stark counties, and being successful in his pedagogic work. In 1889 he entered the employ of a wholesale house in Canton, in the capacity of traveling salesman, and he followed this line of work until the spring of 1896, in the meantime having taken up his residence in North Industry, this county, in 1883. He there continued to make his home until 1897, when he removed to Canton and assumed the duties of the office of which he is now incumbent. In the autumn of 1896 Mr. Summer was elected county commissioner, for a term of three years, and so acceptable was his administration of the affairs of the office that he was chosen as his own successor in the election of 1899, his second term expiring on the 21st of September, 1903, while it is certain that the best interests of the county will be conserved if he is continued in the service by re-election at the close of his present term. In politics he gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, taking a lively interest in the cause and doing all in his power to promote the same. He is a man of alert and vigorous mentality, a capable business man and a citizen who commands unqualified esteem.

On the 29th of March, 1883, in Canton, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Summer to Miss Agnes Serva, whose father was of French lineage and mother of German. Her paternal grandfather, Paul Serva, was a member of the cavalry of Napoleon Bonaparte for twelve years. To this union were born three children, Fay, Roscoe and Harold. Mrs. Summers died March 13, 1898, and on January 17, 1903, Mr. Summer was married to Ada Hill, who was born within a few hundred feet of where the subject of this sketch first saw the light of day, and is the daughter of Hiram and Emma Hill.

JOHN METZGER is a native son of Stark county, having been born on the parental homestead in Ninishtillen township, on the 24th of May, 1839. He was the fifth in order of birth of the nine children of John and Catherine (Goodman) Metzger, and of the number seven are living at the present time, namely: Mary, who is the widow of Frank Guitard and who resides in Louisville, this county; Julia, who is the wife of Peter Dubail, of South Bend, Indiana; Catherine, who is the widow of Samuel Lane, resides in Mishawaka, Indiana; John, who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Maria, who is the wife of Nicholas Murley, of Canton; Susan, who is the wife of Frank Pierson, of Louisville, this county; and Adam, who is engaged in the hardware business in Louisville. The father of the subject was born in the province of Alsace, France, now a portion of the German empire, being of pure German extraction in the agnatic line. The year of his nativity was 1811 and he was a son of John and Susan (Kena) Metzger, who came with their family to America in the year 1828, making their way, by the primitive methods of transportation then in vogue, across the continent to the state of Ohio, which was then held to be on the very frontier of civilization. They came to Stark county and were numbered among the first settlers in Nimishillen township, where the grandfather purchased three hundred and twenty acres of government land, in the midst of the virgin forest, and here he erected his little log house in the midst of the forest, and set himself valiantly to the task of subduing the wilderness and placing his land under cultivation, the work, as a matter of course, progressing by slow degrees. With the aid of his sons he continued his labors along this line until he was called upon to answer the inexorable summons of death, at the age of eighty-six years, his wife also dying on the old homestead. It will be noted that the full patronymic of John Metzger has been borne by the three generations of the family in the county, the subject being of the third generation. His father, John Metzger (2d), grew to manhood in this county, and after his marriage located on a tract of eighty acres of heavily timbered land which had been deeded to him by his honored father, who made similar provision for each of his other two sons, Sebastian and Andrew. He continued his experience as a pioneer farmer and succeeded in reclaiming the major portion of his land, becoming one of the prosperous and highly honored farmers of the township. He continued to reside on his homestead until the year 1870, when he retired from active business and took up his abode in the village of Louisville, where he passed the residue of his days, passing away in 1880, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was a staunch Democrat in his political proclivities, and his religious faith was that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared. His wife was likewise a native of the province of Alsace, France, and she was born in 1811, the same year in which he was ushered into the world. She came with her parents to Ohio in the same year as did the Metzgers, being a daughter of Joseph and Maria (Dietrich) Goodman. They settled in Canton township, near the site of the present county infirmary, later moving to Washington township and later to Nimishillen, where they died. Mrs. Metzger was summoned into eternal rest in 1885, when eighty-four years of age, she likewise having been a faithful member and communicant of the Catholic church.

From the foregoing statements it will be seen that the subject of this review is a representative of sterling pioneer families of Stark county, being of the third generation in both the paternal and maternal lines. He was reared on the homestead farm on which he was born, early beginning to contribute to the work of the same, and even as a boy finding his services in requisition in the arduous work of clearing off the timber and making the land ready for cultivation. Scholastic facilities were of meager sort at best in the locality, and he attended the little district school during the winter months up to the time of attaining the age of twelve years, while his subsequent discipline has been that afforded in the practical and valuable school of experience. The work of the farm largely devolved upon him from the time of his fourteenth year, his father's health being impaired, so that he was not longer able to take the initiative. The subject continued to devote his attention to the management of the paternal homestead until three years after his marriage, his father having in the meanwhile removed to the village of Louisville, and then he purchased a tract of twenty-two acres just to the south of that town and there made his home for the ensuing three years, while for the succeeding period of three years he rented a neighboring farm of one hundred and seventy-three acres. He then passed a year on his little farm, and then turned the property over in partial payment on an adjoining farm of eighty-nine acres, realizing that he needed a wider field for his agricultural operations. On that place he continued his work with energy and discrimination for the next decade, when he rented the place and took up his residence in Louisville, where he has since made his home, having a comfortable and attractive residence and enjoying the fruits of his former years of earnest toil and endeavor. His farm is under a high state of cultivation, is equipped with good buildings and is one of the attractive places of the township, while from the same he receives an income which insures him all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. In politics he is staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, but has never been ambitious for official preferment, though he was called by the local contingent of his party to become a candidate for township trustee in 1879, consented to accept the nomination and was elected by a gratifying majority, while the best evidence of the popular appreciation of his services is that afforded in the fact that he was continued as incumbent of this office for the long period of nine years. He and his wife are both communicants of the Catholic church.

On the 22d of February, 1867, Mr. Metzger was united in marriage to Miss Frances Pierson, who was born in Nimishillen township, this county, being a daughter of Louis and Frances Pierson, who were pioneers of this section. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Metzger, namely: John F. and Catherine, who remain at the parental home; Dr. Edward L., who is engaged in the practice of his profession as a veterinary surgeon, in Louisville; and Louis A., who died in infancy.

JONAS M. KEIM, son of Moses and Lydia Keim, was born in Holmes county, Ohio, on the 21st of April, 1843. It was his privilege to be reared on a farm, the source from which have sprung the majority of the nation's greatest men, and he early became acquainted with the manifold duties which such a mode of life implies. At the proper age he entered the public schools and attended the same until about eighteen years old, meanwhile assisting his father of summer seasons with the work of the farm. On the 15th day of August, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served three years, during which time he took part in many noted campaigns and bloody battles, including the various engagements in which General Thomas' command participated. The day on which the regiment was mustered out he was sent to a hospital where he remained about one month and at the expiration of that time he received his discharge and returned home.

On leaving the army Mr. Keim resumed the pursuit of agriculture on the home farm and in the fall of 1865 was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Trump, daughter of George Trump, of Nimishillen township, Stark county. He continued tilling the soil in his native county until 1869, at which time he changed his residence to the county of Stark, locating at Louisville, where he engaged in the grain business, in connection with which he also handled provisions and dealt quite extensively in wool. Subsequently he disposed of this business and purchased an interest in the hardware house founded by his father and during the next twenty-five years was a member of the firm of Keim & Sons, which became one of the largest and most successful establishments of the kind in the county. His connection for so long a time with this line of trade resulted in the accumulation of a fortune which enabled him, in 1897, to lay aside business cares, since which time he has been living a life of honorable retirement in the thriving little town of Louisville.

Mr. Keim possesses marked business ability and superior judgment. He looked after the management of the house with commendable fidelity, built up a large and lucrative trade and by fair and honorable dealing won the confidence of all with whom he had relations of any kind whatever. Aside from his connection with the commercial interests of Louisville, Mr. Keim has long been a factor of considerable consequence in the general affairs of the town, every enterprise calculated to advance the community materially, socially, or morally, receiving his support and hearty co-operation. As a citizen he is deservedly popular, charity and benevolence being among his chief characteristics, and to the poor and needy he is ever ready to extend a helping hand. His political support is given to the Republican party, but the wiles and chicanery of modern partisanship have always received his strongest disapproval. Religiously he is an influential member of the Progressive Branch of the German Baptist church, belonging with his wife to the Louisville congregation, of which he is one of the pillars and chief supporters. He has high ideals of Christian character and endeavors to realize the same in his daily life and conduct.

Mr. Keim's first marriage was blessed with the birth of one son, Charles B. Keim, who is now engaged in the boot and shoe business in Louisville. Mrs. Keim dying in 1873, the subject afterwards wedded Miss Mary Keim, of Nimishillen township, daughter of Adam Keim, a union terminated by the death of the wife in 1887. Mr. Keim's present companion, to whom he was united in the bonds of wedlock in the year 1896, was Mrs. Ella Werner, formerly Miss Slote.

FRANK W. GAVIN, M. D., is of Scotch descent, the advent of his family into America dating from 1850. In that year his grandfather, Robert Gavin, with a wife and nine children, came to the United States and settled in Cleveland, Ohio, being at the time well advanced in life. In his native land Robert Gavin had been a manufacturer of woolen goods, but he did not follow the business very long after coming to this country, retiring in a few years to Fort Wayne, Indiana, where he died in 1874, at the age of seventy-eight. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Isabella Craig, preceded him to the grave, departing this life in the year 1851.

James A. Gavin, son of Robert and Isabella Gavin and father of the subject of this sketch, was born September 10, 1848, in Scotland and was about two years old when the family came to America. He spent his early life in the cities of Cleveland and Fort Wayne, received a common school education, but by diligent course of private study he made such progress that in due time he fitted himself for the profession of teaching. His advancement in that field of endeavor was rapid and it was not long until he became one of the most accomplished teachers in Fort Wayne, with the public schools of which city he was identified for a period of over twenty-one years. By a series of continued advancements he rose from the position of grade teacher to a principalship, thence to
