INTRODUCTION

PART I.—THE GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE 'NEWMILLS MSS.'

LORD ROSEBERRY, in moving the adoption of the Report of the Scottish History Society in 1903, drew attention to the valuable information, relating to the environment of those who lived long ago, contained in their account-books, diaries, and family papers. In the Account Book of Sir John Foulis, 1671-1707, members of the Society already have a record of the purchases of a gentleman of the period, and the manuscripts printed in this volume are supplementary in so far as they cover much of the same interval, but treat of it from the point of view of the producer rather than that of the consumer. Further, being minutes, and not formal accounts, these documents contain a large amount of new material, dealing not only with the mechanism of business, but with the life of the time.

As apart from the positive increase in our knowledge of the period, one of the most charming characteristics of these records is the astonishing amount of human nature they contain as compared with similar documents of later date. Probably in Scotland in 1681 there were no precedents for the writing of minutes of a commercial undertaking, nor as to what should be recorded and what not. Hence, though the economist may miss particulars of some transactions he might expect to find, the general reader is more than compensated by the glimpses he obtains of the character of the merchants concerned, and curious side-lights on domestic life.

In one respect indeed these papers are quite unique. When one endeavours to reconstruct the common daily life of the seventeenth century, a serious difficulty is encountered in the absence of data connected with the little things of commerce. It is true that much of the inner history of the great companies for foreign and colonial trade, such as the East India Company, the Providence Island Company, the Royal African Company, the Virginia Company, the Hudson's Bay Company, the South Sea Company, can be recovered from the minutes which exist either in whole or in part. Then the records of the Banks of England and of Scotland no doubt contain many particulars relating to finance; but when one has mentioned these, this brief list comprises all the known minute-books for this early period, and none of them has been printed in full.¹ It will be noticed too that not one of the companies alluded to was a manufacturing one, and it is in this respect that the papers of the New Mills Company are of very great interest. When the large number and importance of the English manufacturing undertakings before 1707 are remembered, it is remarkable that data concerning this class of undertaking have been recovered only as yet from Scotland. Further, the minutes which follow should be of value since the greater part has been printed in full, and the remainder with only a single species of omissions, which was rendered necessary for reasons to be explained below.

The writing of an introduction and notes to documents of the kind indicated is a task of no common difficulty, since such work can best be performed by a comparative method, and in this case there is nothing available where direct resemblances may be found. Thus at first there will be many passages that are likely to be almost unintelligible to the reader, since not only have methods of business and manufacture changed, but this particular undertaking worked under conditions that have long since disappeared. In fact it in some respects exercised functions now assumed by Government, and it enjoyed most extensive privileges and immunities from the state. To make clear these and other points as they arise in the text would involve very many footnotes, besides much repetition. Further, it is probable that records such as these will be consulted by two different classes of readers—the one being interested chiefly in the social conditions of the time, and the other in the economic development presented. For a complete understanding of the latter it is necessary to be able to picture the whole complicated history of the cloth trade in Scotland during the seventeenth century (which is given in Part II. of this Introduction), and the mode of organisation of the joint-stock company at that period (Part III.). Then, to trace out the bearing of certain events recorded in the minutes (as well as to supply gaps in them), there is required an outline of the whole history of the company (Part IV.) The last part of the Introduction (Part V.) consists of certain important documents. Thus for the student of economic history the surroundings of the industry and the organisation of Scottish companies are explained, with the addition of an account of how the organisation worked and developed in the particular case of the New Mills undertaking.

Others, however, may not be desirous of following out all these details, and for such the minutes will be of interest as relating incidents connected with the social life of the period in which they were written. With a view of removing some difficulties, this part of the Introduction will sum up certain groups of data, the want of which might otherwise delay the reader. For instance, few people are interested in the minute details of the cloth manufacturing processes of over two hundred years ago, but it will frequently be found that strange words and expressions are used, which, being unknown, distract the attention. Rather than explain them one by one as they occur (where this would be possible), it will probably suffice to give a general description of the method of cloth making, in which most of the terms employed in the minutes will find their place, and similarly with the coinage and other business matters.

First of all the nature of the documents should be noticed. That printed first in the text consists of the minutes of the 'managers' (i.e. the directors), and it extends from the foundation of the Company in June 1681 to 1691. The original MS. is in the University Library, Edinburgh. It is a folio volume of about 436 pages. It came to the Library amongst the Laing Collection of MSS., and comparatively recently had been bound. The binder, possibly finding the title too long for his purposes—it is 'Book for the Managers of the Manufactories Weekly Sederunts, 1681'—condensed it in a manner that gave no clue to the importance of the volume, and it was only by an inspection of the contents that its character became known. This first part of the minutes is printed in full. As already stated, it ends in 1691, and the second part begins in 1701. The latter portion was discovered at the Register House when much of the first series of the minutes was actually in print. It appears to have been filed as part of the proof in some law-case—probably connected with either a sale of cloth to the Government, or the recovery of one of the many debts it records. This MS., as it now exists, ends on June 30, 1703, but it is apparent that many of the concluding leaves have been cut out, so that originally it probably continued till the close of the year. This volume is in the original vellum binding, and, although only containing entries for two and a half years, it is of about the same length as the first part. The increase of space required to record the transactions of the Company is due partly to the development of the business, partly to certain documents being now summarised, or even copied in full, which before were only mentioned. The Council of the Scottish History Society consented to include as much of the MS. as could be comprised within a single volume of the series. This involved a reduction of the material by about one-third, and the problem arose what to exclude. From previous experience I have found that the worst method of excision is for an editor to exclude what he thought of little interest, or to try to give selections from the MS. as a whole. For one has to consider readers consulting the printed book for all varieties of purposes; what each generally requires is to be certain that such and such information is either given in full, or if it can only be given in part he will probably have to go to the MS. itself in any case. Fortunately the book itself seemed to suggest certain divisions of the subject-matter. First there is a new feature (as compared with the previous series of minutes), namely, an inventory of the purchasers of each piece of cloth sold and the price paid, as well as greatly extended lists of the pieces made. Now valuable as this information may be to some student of the future, it is of a character that is unlikely to justify printing in full. The company only sold to shareholders and members of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh, and therefore the same names recur again and again. Then the prices realised were not market prices, but (according to a system to be explained later) 'lot-prices,'¹ and the chief information these long pages of statistics give is the cost of production. This did not vary much for the same quality of cloth, but it did vary greatly as between different grades. Therefore it seemed best that excisions should be made from these parts of the MS. Further it was found that a part of such particulars could be included, and so these are given for the first month (January 1701) and for the last month (June 1703). That is, in other words, for these two periods the minutes are printed in full, and the portion between is subject to the omission of the names of managers attending each meeting, and of the statistics of cloth made and sold.

In addition to the minutes, there are two other documents included, both of which are of considerable interest, and one of them, as far as I know, unique. These being prior to the minutes are printed together at the end of the Introduction. Both were found amongst a number of other papers relating to the estate of Sir James Stanfield (one of the founders of the company), and are at the Register House. The first is headed, 'A Memorial Concerning the Cloath Manufactory,' and consists of an estimate of the capital required, the working expenses, and the anticipated profits. Thus it may fairly be taken as a very early prototype of the modern prospectus, and, as such, is of the greatest value, since no other document of the kind of this period is known to exist. The second paper affords much light towards an understanding of the organisation of the company. It is the original contract of co-partnership. In this case there are many similar documents with which it may be compared, and some of the chief points of contact with other companies, both Scottish and English, are enumerated in Part III. of this Introduction. Thus the present volume will be found to include matter relating to the Company corresponding to its prospectus, its memorandum of association, and the minutes for a period of between one-third and one-half of its total existence.

It is to be expected that business conducted so long ago would differ in many respects from that of the present day.

The 'merchant erectors of the manufactory' show through their official acts a strong human interest. We see them sometimes kindly, sometimes deeply impressed with a sense of their importance, occasionally, as we should be inclined to think nowadays, a trifle overbearing. As instances of these characteristics, attention may be directed to the following minutes. On April 16, 1684, it was ordered that 'in consideratione of the pains the mesters doughter hath bein offen putt to when we goe out [i.e. from Edinburgh to New-mills], . . . to give his daughter a present of some wearing cloaths to the value of ten crouns.'¹ Evidently the 'master's doughter' was a favourite, for previously (November 2, 1682) directions had been given 'to buy as much stamped stuff, or any other good handsome stuff as be a suit of curtings to the master's daughter.'² Workmen who had deserved well were not neglected, for on April 29, 1685, there is the following minute: 'The mester haveing represented the conditi-tione of Alexander Smiths familie, that hime self wyfe and children have bein long seik of ane feaver and that he is most miserable yet a very honest servant ordered that James Marr pay his house rent.'³ Apart from employés, the managers endeavoured to recompense persons who had treated them well. Thus a member who had 'friedly and kindly' offered a loan to the Company,⁴ was thanked, and a lady who 'hes bein very kind to the work people,' was to receive 'two stone of ordinarie fleec wooll.'⁵ There was a sturdy independence in the dealings of the managers with other firms. In 1702 it had been suggested that money should be borrowed from the Bank of Scotland to supply a temporary emergency, whereupon 'Bailly John Hay answered that he was not altogether willing that such a society should borrow from the bank, and if £150 could serve for a little time he would lend it.¹

In many respects the relation of the company to its servants was patriarchal. One of the early entries deals with the payment of a salary of twenty merks a year to a piper at New Mills.² But it is not very long before we read of a prison being established at the works: 'There being a motion made of the necessity of a prison att the manufactory, its ordered thatt the house thatt was the stable be devided with a ston wall, and iron stenchers be putt in the window.'³ Not only were insubordinate servants liable to be imprisoned or dismissed, but, lest they should 'debouch' others in time to come, they were even prevented from remaining in Haddington.⁴ Some of the spinners who stole or 'detained' yarn were dealt with in a drastic manner by being kept in prison 'till the mercat day, and ther to stand in time of the mercat two hours, with a paper mentioning ther fault in great letters.'⁵ Similarly, 'if any weaver when he brings home his peece of cloath conceall or abstract any year[n]e he shall pay for evry pound of it five shillings and for English or Scotts 3s. shilling [sic] sterling the pound and shall be discharged the imploy imprisoned one day and stand two hours in the mercat day in the mercat place with a peaper on ther face.'⁶ In 1685 a woman was confined 'in the tolboath of Hedingtoune, for imbassleing of wooll befor the magistrats,' and the master was ordered 'to get out of her what discovery he can, and therafter to desire the magistrats to turne her out of the toune.'⁷ Hands that broke their engagements were subject to being brought back forcibly, unless they had obtained strong protectors. Thus in 1701, Maxwell, then master, communicated with the managers that he thought 'it fitt to gitt back the servant belonged to his work that runn away and ingadged in the manufactory at Hamiltone, to be ane terror to others to runn away; and that there are some other servants runn away and gone to my Lady Harcut to whom Bailly Marjoreibanks and Mr. Maxwell have wrot a discreet letter demandeing them back.'¹ A close hand was kept on the officials as well as the unskilled labourers. A letter having been received from the secretary which was very difficult to read, he was ordered to 'take more paines to write plainly.'² There is often a very peremptory tone in the directions given: the accountant was told to have certain accounts completed with 'all the hast[e] possible';³ and elsewhere, expressions such as 'all haste imaginable,' and 'all diligence possible,' occur frequently.⁴ The 'master' was bound, under a penalty, to turn out good and sufficient cloth, and in cases where defects were held to be due to careless supervision, he was charged with a suitable penalty. The following minute constitutes a very sharp reprimand: 'Orders Alexander Weir to wryt to David Maxwell that there is a generall complaint of the leidges of the Companie's cloaths, both as to ill mixing and ill burling being full of holes, and of the ill milliring which is most of all complained of which makes the Manadgers and others weell affected to manufactories affraid that the parliament may take it under there consideratione and rescind the prohibitory laus and againe allow of the import of forraigne goods because of the insufficiency as said is,' whereupon follows a line and a half obliterated, and marked in the margin 'this scored by consent.' Evidently the 'scored out' portion was a further censure on Maxwell, since the following words can be traced, 'and that some are apprehensive that Mr. Maxwell,' the remainder being unreadable.¹ The managers themselves were bound by stringent rules. If they attended a sederunt late, they had to pay a fine varying in amount according to the period of absence.² It was further agreed that 'any of there number undertakeing any particular to be done by them betwixt and there next meeting, if they shall faile to doe the same they shall forfeit foure shillings Scotts.'³

Related to the conduct of business, there are some interesting side-lights on the social customs of the period. A general meeting of the company was held 'in John Littles back shop,' another at Hamilton's Coffee-house 'after the burials,' sometimes later on at other coffee-houses (as for instance the High Coffee-house), and sometimes at the Hall of the Company.⁴ Apparently the seventeenth century shareholder was no more regular in attending meetings than is the modern one; but while it may sometimes happen that a board of directors rather rejoices in a 'thin meeting,' the New Mills managers felt somewhat injured, as is shown by the following minute: 'We have had two generall meetings att quhich not above 4 men were present, and for which cause it were fitt some effectuall course should be taken for more punctuall keeping.'⁵

It would be an interesting psychological study to ascertain how it so often happens that the most sedate men unbend over a horse deal. It was so at all events with the New Mills managers. First they sold 'a cropt horse' for £7 sterling.⁶

Then on contracting to have their cartage done, they gave orders for three other horses to be sold 'att the best advantage.'¹ Either two out of the three or two more were sold for £7 sterling the pair,² but only a short time afterwards the master was allowed to buy another at Kelso fair at from £5 to £7; and it is recorded, with evident enjoyment, 'he [the horse] being a peni worth acording to the masters letter reed this day.'³ Sad to relate, the Company valued its own stock at a higher price than it set on other people's. In 1684 some members of the Privy Council (including the Treasurer) inspected the works. The managers provided not only 'a treat,' but also conveyances. The horses were hired, and one met with a mischance, and hence the following record, 'ordered to pay the man who hired his horse (upon the Theasourer his coming to Newmilns) for the service of the company which horse dyed, and the owner being pour, do pay into hime twenty shillings sterling.'⁴

Some quaint expressions and descriptions may be noticed. A 'blew fatt' was to be erected, and the contractor was bound 'to make her sufficient work.'⁵ Skilled workmen were subject to a kind of examination, sometimes on their being likely to be permanent, 'such as are sober men that wee need not fear the runing away'; sometimes as to their qualifications: 'Joseph Young be desired to speak with the dyer at Kinross to try his humor, character, pairts, knowledg, sobriety, how he is imployed if he would remove and for what.'⁶ Later on, similar directions were given to the London agent relating to obtaining a weaver of broadcloth, skilled 'in all the parts therof, from the fleece to the chope, such as scribbing, dyeing, mixing, burling, etc.'⁷ The following entry seems to indicate a leisurely way of doing business. It was to be ascertained whether 'Duchrie Græme be in toune, and if he be in toune, that Ballendalloch be acquent therewith that he may commune with him anent ane bargain of oakin timber.'¹ A 'damnefied' pipe of oil is described as 'not worth any thing, and noe better than the dirt of the streets.'² A debtor for a considerable sum sent a petition to the following effect, that he was 'verry willing the Company be satisfyed, bot of himselfe being altogether unable to satisfy it, bot that if he could prevaill with any freind to procure a part, he hopes the Company will be so kynd to him as to give him ane ease.'³ The case of Alexander Mastertoune, Provost of Linlithgow, deserves honourable mention. The books of the company had been ill-kept before 1701, and no record had been preserved of a sale made to him. Mastertoune, however, came forward without being called on, and paid his debt.⁴

The minutes give much information bearing on the materials used in the costumes of the time. Most plain-coloured cloths were made at New Mills. The demand for different colours varied according to fashion and for quality according to circumstances. In 1701 a piece of sad-coloured cloth had lain so long in the warehouse that it had become moth-eaten;⁵ but in 1702 fine silver-grey shades were much demanded for second mourning.⁶ In the following year the following colours, namely yellow, light and dark blue, red and some light stone grey, were most required for liveries prior to the opening of Parliament.⁷ In addition to cloth, stockings had been made during the early years of the company's career. It is of some interest to note that in 1683 buff and 'a true native grass green' were favourite colours for women's hose.¹ The following year the fashionable shades were 'grein masarein blew hair collour, gold and chirie collour.'²

The methods of manufacturing cloth at the end of the seventeenth century are now of only antiquarian interest. At the same time there are so many references in the text to technical terms of the period that it may be convenient to summarise as briefly as possible the chief steps in the process.

Sorting.—The first step was to sort the wool on its arrival at the factory when delivered by the fleece. The sorter separated the different qualities and lengths.

Scouring or Scrubbing was the process of washing the unworked wool in order to free it from grease. It was placed in a mixture of three parts water to one of urine, and then drained and cleansed in running water.

Beating, 'Swinging,' and Picking.—When dry the wool was beaten on hurdles to render it flexible and to liberate any dust contained in it. Then it was picked over by hand to separate any larger particles of foreign matter that had escaped the beating.

Oiling.—Next comes oiling. On the Continent olive oil was used, in England rape oil.³ The threads sorted to form the warp were less oiled than those for the woof.

Carding.—Preparatory to spinning the wool was carded so as to comb out any knots. The cards or 'stock cards' were made of wood with upright pieces of wire fastened in them. A bunch of wool known as a 'sliver' was held in one and the other was drawn through it.⁴

Spinning.—In the spinning of yarn for making into cloth two kinds of thread were made—the one, close-twisted for the warp, the other, looser, for the woof.

³ A Compleat Body of Husbandry, by Thomas Hale, vol. iv. p. 97.

⁴ A pair of wool cards are drawn in History of Wool and Woolcombing, by James Burnley, p. 89.

Weaving was the first process in the making of cloth as distinct from the preparatory stages. It is difficult to convey any clear idea of this process without a minute description of the old loom, and this would require diagrams.¹ The ‘abb’ (or yarn intended for the warp), after being stiffened with size, was extended on the bobbins of the loom. Meanwhile the yarn for the woof had been inserted in shuttles, and the mechanism of the loom enabled the woof-yarn to be passed through the warp. This process was continued till the whole warp was filled with woof. The cloth in this form was again ‘scoured,’ and subsequently passed to the fulling-mill.

‘Fulling’ or ‘Milling.’—It was at this stage of the process that mechanical power was required. This was supplied at New Mills by means of a water-wheel, which alternately raised and depressed large wooden mallets which beat the cloth. While being ‘fulled’ the cloth (after being prepared with fuller’s earth) lay in troughs in which there was a mixture of water and Castile or Genoa soap.

The teasel.—When the cloth had been again washed it was sent to the carders, who, by means of the ‘teasel,’ raised the threads of the woof. The teasel was the head of a plant (Dipsacus dipsacaceæ) very thickly set with slender-pointed bracts.

Burling.—Any knots still remaining in the woof were removed by means of a ‘burling-iron,’ which was a species of tweezers.

Shearing.—The shearmen were responsible for producing an even nap on the cloth by clipping off any projecting parts of the woof. The cloth was subject to several shearings, and after each (except the last) was returned to the carders.

Tenting.—After another washing the cloth was stretched on poles known as 'tenters,' and then made up by being placed on a table and sprinkled on the back with gum-arabic.

Stretching or Drawing.—The cloth was then extended between two rollers, between which was an iron bar for the fabric to rest on. Underneath was an iron brazier which supplied the heat necessary to make this process a success.

Pressing.—Some cloths that were to be turned out with a gloss were overlaid with vellum and placed in a screw-press. Finally, heated pasteboard was placed between the folds, and the cloth was again pressed.

One of the greatest secrets in cloth-making was the dyeing. If the piece was to be of one colour it might be dyed after being received back from the 'shearmen,' or the wool might be dyed before weaving. A more complicated process was the production of what were called 'mixtures.' In this case the wool was dyed—one lot one colour and another another. The darker wool was laid out evenly on a flat floor and the lighter shade superimposed. It was then wound up into a long roll, like a very thick rope. This was picked out and worked in the method already described.

Dyeing was a comparatively simple process. A boiler of copper (called in the minutes 'a kettle') had a cross bar at the opening. When wool was dyed, it was placed over this bar and passed backwards and forwards into the dye below. Some dyes were used cold, but most were applied heated.

It was in the mixing of the dyes that skill was shown. There were only three prime colours—blue, red, and yellow. Black was obtained by intensifying dark purple. Before the application of any dye certain preparations were used to make the wool or cloth receptive of the dye, such as elder-bark, alum, argol ('argall,' § 482), saltpetre, potash, and sometimes gums, e.g. gum arabic or mastic.

Most of the strange words that occur in the text are variants of terms used to describe different dyes.

Black was chiefly produced from copperas.

Blue from woad, indigo ('Jameca indigo,' § 733), and logwood.

Yellow from weld or dyer's weed, sumach ('shoe-make,' § 687), and old fustic ('fussich,' § 482).

Red from red-wood (mahogany), madder, cochineal, sassafras.

To intensify colours (as, for instance, to make red flame-coloured) aquafortis was used. In many cases dyers who worked on a large scale prepared the dyes from the raw material themselves by grinding or pounding a wood (such as mahogany) to extract the colouring-matter. Colours other than those mentioned were obtained from dyeing first a primary shade then a second primary shade.¹

The minutes are of great importance in determining the rates of wages ruling at the time. The Scottish rates for unskilled labour were slightly lower than those current in England; while, since inducements had to be given to highly trained men to migrate, these received something above what they could obtain in England. Thus weavers and dyers at New Mills obtained just the same daily wage as the agricultural labourer in some parts of England—that is, 8d. sterling a day in both cases. The average rate for an English artisan was about 1s. sterling a day, but at New Mills shearmen and drawers received from 1s. to 1s. 8d. a day. Some idea of the real wages can be gained from the fact that the master was paid 2s. sterling per week for boarding the apprentices. The food and accommodation in this case would be much superior to that of the workmen, since one of these apprentices was to receive £6 sterling the first two years, £12 for a second term of the same length, and thereafter £30 a year. Particulars as to wages are summarised in the following table:—

To avoid frequent lengthy footnotes, it may not be out of place to conclude this part of this Introduction by a short account of the coins current and the state of the foreign exchange. The capital of the Company was expressed in pounds sterling, and as far as possible the accounts were kept in sterling, but there are frequent references to Scottish, Dutch, and Flemish currency. It is scarcely necessary to state that the pound Scots was equivalent to 20d. sterling, or that it may be reduced to sterling by dividing by twelve and conversely. In Flemish currency there were pounds consisting of 20 'schillings,' and each 'schilling' of 12 pence. In both Holland and Flanders the common monetary unit was the 'stiver.' The rix or rex dollar in the former consisted of 50 stivers, in the latter of 48 stivers. The rix dollar of Holland was rated by Sir Isaac Newton at 52·28 pence sterling. The Dutch ducatoon consisted of 63 stivers, and was rated at 65·59 pence sterling. The following table will show the relative values of these and other coins :¹—ent coins, or, in other words, the relative value at which two given coins, both unworn, would exchange. In many cases, however, where purchases had been made, payment was adjusted by means of bills of exchange, when the settlement was effected under the conditions of the rate of exchange ruling at the time. It has been shown by Thorold Rogers how much England suffered by the high rate of exchange that had to be paid on remittances abroad during the early years of the reign of William III.,¹ and there are occasional references to the onerous rates Scotland had also to pay even at a later period. Hitherto, however, it has not been possible to estimate the extent of the burden quantitatively, but the discovery of the second part of the New Mills' minutes should provide material for making the necessary calculations. It is perhaps scarcely safe to endeavour to reconstruct the mechanism of so intricate a department of business as the foreign exchange, but in view of the importance of the subject the attempt is worth making, always subject to the proviso that the information is obtained from a single source, and is therefore subject to correction should further data come to light.

As the subject, at this early period, is very complex, I venture to assume on the part of the reader a general acquaintance with the principles of foreign exchange. But in the early eighteenth century there was no direct cancellation of indebtedness by means of bills of exchange between Scotland and, say, Holland. The Scottish merchant had to calculate the rate from Edinburgh to London and from London to Amsterdam, the total rate being a compound of the two; and to make a reliable calculation it is necessary to arrive at these three rates so as to check one by the other.

There is a passage in the minutes (though one of considerable difficulty) which I believe gives the key to the puzzle. On November 5, 1701, there is entered :—

‘Mr. Drummond and Vanderhoydens letter 4th instant direct to the Manadgers, advyseing there draught upone Mr. William Frazer for the Company’s account payable att London in tuo bills each for 100 lb. sterling att $\frac{2}{usu}$ Exchange att 35 Fleems 10½d. per lb. sterling is. £2152 10 0

agio att 4¾ per cent. 102 5 0

£2254 15 0

‘Orders Alexander Herreot to debet Drummond and partner forsaid for the said £2254, 15, and to give credet to William Frazer in London for the £200 sterling on said account.

‘Orders Alexander Weir to provyd bills to remitt to Mr. Frazer for said payment.’

To explain this entry it is necessary to premise that Drummond and Vanderhoyden were the Company’s agents at Amsterdam, who purchased Spanish wool and other materials. Frazer was its representative in London. Since the managers had to buy abroad, and could sell little if anything to cover such purchases, they became indebted to their agents at Amsterdam. At this time Drummond had evidently to meet a liability in London, and he drew a bill on the Company’s London agent, which he sent to London to satisfy his obligations there. The entry quoted refers to the amount credited to the New Mills Company at the exchange of the day in return for the liability that had to be met by it of £200 sterling in London. Some of the phraseology is obscure, and the following points should be noted. $\frac{2}{usu}$ means that the bill was drawn at ‘double usance,’ that is at twice the ordinary or customary period for payment. ‘Double usance’ in this case would mean a bill payable in two calendar months after date. ‘35 Fleems 10½d. per lb.’ is 35s. 10½d. Flemish as exchanged for £1 sterling. According to Justice's tables¹ the par of exchange represented a larger number of Flemish 'schillings,' therefore £200 sterling would be converted into a less number of Flemish coins than at the par—in other words, a London bill was at a discount relatively to Amsterdam. Further, in Amsterdam transactions were effected not only in current coin but also in bank-money which was at a premium of from 4 to 5 per cent. This premium was known as the 'agio.' Since the New Mills Company received credit for the agio, it is to be inferred that the exchange of £200 sterling at London into £2152, 10s. Scots at Amsterdam includes the discount on exchange, the agio, and possibly some other charges.

With these data it is possible to restate the transaction. Drummond accepts payment of a debt of £200 sterling from the New Mills Company by a bill payable at London. How much is this bill worth at Amsterdam? If British money exchanged at par, and there were no agio, the bill would realise the equivalent of £200 sterling or £2400 Scots.² But the exchange was adverse to England, and allowing for discount, the agio, and perhaps other charges, £2400 Scots at London realised only £2152, 10s. Scots in bank-money at Amsterdam. In other words (including the agio) the discount on this transaction was $10\frac{1}{3}$ per cent., this again being the discount from London to Amsterdam. Thus the New Mills Company had credit for £2152, 10s. in bank-money of Amsterdam at Amsterdam, and, presumably to bring the books there into line with those at New Mills, the amount of the agio at $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. is added, making £2254, 15s. Scots.

This, however, does not conclude the transaction. It was necessary for the New Mills Company to remit bills to London for £200 sterling to cancel the debt of the same amount there. But exchange from Edinburgh to London was also at a discount, and on 19th November the Company had to pay £225, 10s. sterling for bills on London of £200 sterling, which were remitted to Frazer. This meant that the exchange on London was at a discount of 12·75 per cent. Thus to secure a credit of £2152, 10s. Scots in bank-money at Amsterdam, the Company had to pay no less than £2706 Scots at Edinburgh, or a total discount on the whole transaction of nearly 20·5 per cent.¹

In the minutes we find rates of discount from Edinburgh to London and also from Edinburgh to Amsterdam. The latter are expressed in three different forms.

First, in the following form, under February 1, 1701: 'Paid to James Nimmo as value £3,000 [Scots or £250 st.] in bills remitted to Messrs. Drumond and Vanderhoyden att 24s. 2d. per £ . . . £302, 1s. 8d. [sterling].' That is, to pay £1 sterling at Amsterdam, it was necessary to give 24s. 2d. sterling in Edinburgh, representing a discount on exchange of 20·8 per cent.²

Secondly, as for instance on (and for some time after)

¹ At first sight it would appear that the total discount was over 23 per cent., i.e. $12\frac{3}{4}$ from Edinburgh to London, and $10\frac{1}{2}$ from London to Amsterdam. But it is to be remembered that £2706 Scots was subject to $12\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. discount to London, producing £2400 Scots, and the £2400 Scots to $10\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. discount, producing finally £2152, 10s. Scots. According to the figures given by Justice, the total discount (not including agio) would be about 13 per cent. The agio would account for a part but not quite the whole of the difference, while the remainder is probably attributable to the charges and commissions of bill-brokers, e.g., on account of the indirect exchange and to the more distant date of payment than the bills in Justice's lists. A similar qualification has to be made in reference to all the other rates quoted in the minutes.

² In this as in other cases the discount is in excess of that obtainable from the figures of Justice. The difference slightly exceeds the amount of the agio.

April 30th, the rate of exchange is expressed as at so many pence (not shillings) per pound, e.g. 24½d. per pound. In such cases the reckoning is made in pounds Scots converted into sterling at 20d., so at this time the discount was 22·5 per cent.

Finally, later on the rate is taken in terms of the guilder, as for instance '24d. per guilder.' As the guilder was counted as equal to £1 Scots, the basis here is similar to the last.

To render the data as complete as possible, an examination has been made of the books of the Bank of Scotland from its foundation up to the Union.¹ Up to 1701, although the records are not complete, there are very full particulars of rates of exchange, but after that date, owing to a change in the system of accounts, such information was not preserved. Thus it is not possible to obtain a complete verification of the New Mills figures by comparison with those of a separate institution, still, since the records of both include the year 1701, and since the Bank of Scotland rates on London for January and February are 12½ and 14 per cent., and that given by the New Mills Company for the following August is 11 per cent., it may be inferred that the figures of both relating to London were kept on the same basis.

To deal fully with this subject would swell this Introduction beyond its appointed limits, but for the sake of completeness, the general state of Scotland's balance of indebtedness may be summarised as revealed by the rate of exchange. About 1681 the discount on payments to London was 12 to 15 per cent.² By 1683 this had fallen to 7½, and subsequently in the same year to 5 per cent.¹ By 1689 the discount was reduced to 2 per cent.² In 1696 several transactions were recorded by the Bank of Scotland where the exchange was at par. Afterwards two circumstances caused the rate to rise rapidly. The first was the improvement of the English coinage in 1696, which had the effect, according to Justice, of making Scottish coins, while nominally ranked at the ratio of 12:1, exchange as against English at a loss of 10 per cent.³ In the second place, the strain on the country's finances by the ill-fated Darien scheme⁴ began to tell, and thus again there was a discount on exchange to London, which in March 1697 was as much as 15 per cent. After being 8 per cent., in January 1698 it rose to 11 per cent., and by November 1699 it was again 15 per cent., touching 17½ per cent. in May 1700.⁵ The first record of exchange on London in the second series of the New Mills minutes gives a discount of 11 per cent., and until April 1702 the rate was between that amount and 13 per cent. In June 1702 the fall of the discount to 8 per cent. is noticed as 'a great ease in the exchange'; but the relief was only temporary, since by October 1702 it was once more 15 per cent., and although in January 1703 10 per cent. discount is mentioned, the last rates given (March 10, 1703) are 12 and 14 per cent.⁶

⁶ It would require too much space to enter with more detail into the intricacies of the rates of bills of exchange with Holland. The chief point of difficulty is that the rates in these minutes are in excess of those obtained by taking the discount on London and then the discount or premium from London to Amsterdam. I hope elsewhere to deal with this very interesting problem.

PART II.—THE CLOTH TRADE IN SCOTLAND DURING THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

During the earlier years of the reign of James vi. Scotland had suffered from internal dissensions, with the result that both domestic and foreign trade was subject to frequent interruptions. No doubt there were many wealthy merchants residing in Edinburgh and the ports of the east coast who had acquired fortunes by the importation of commodities from France and Holland.¹ Almost all articles of luxury, as well as most of the comforts of life, were produced abroad, so that the chief imports consisted of wines and manufactures. Those exported were raw materials, such as coal, lead, wool, and linen yarn, the management of the shipping of these latter being in the hands of the organisation known as the Scottish Staple. By the time of James vi. it began to be felt that Scotland was very far behind other nations in its trade. To the economic ideas of the time it appeared a serious evil that raw materials were exported and manufactured goods imported. Still worse was it that, as was alleged, the Dutch found a gold-mine in their fishing off the coasts of Scotland. During the reigns of James and Charles i. two broad lines of commercial policy were pursued, but in a somewhat hesitating manner,—the encouragement of the home and Greenland fisheries and the attempt to establish Scottish manufactures. In a memorial prepared for the king about 1620, by John Keymor, it was estimated that the foundation of a trade to foreign countries in the exporting of fish and manufactures would make the country richer by £3,000,000. He recommends, with much detail, the vigorous prosecution of the fishings both at home and in Greenland.¹ Ideas of this nature had already resulted in the formation of a company to prosecute the whale fishing and to trade to India in 1617; but owing to engagements made by James I. to the East India Company of England, it was necessary to recall the patent. An important fishing company was formed by Charles I., which was intended to have subordinate associations for each district.² The king reserved the right of allotting certain counties to persons chosen by himself, with the result that enterprises requiring business skill were left in the hands of prominent courtiers, and it is scarcely necessary to add that the shareholders suffered. The same policy of grants of monopolies on personal grounds was extended to the field of manufactures. For instance, in 1619 privileges were granted to Nathaniel Udwart (son of a Nicol Udwart who had entertained the king) for a soap manufactory at Leith, and in 1634 a monopoly for the same commodity was conferred on 'the King's daily servitor,' Patrick Mauld,³ and in 1610 a patent had been granted to Sir John Hay for the manufacture of glass at Weems.⁴ A still earlier monopoly had been received in 1590 by several Germans for the production of paper, but all these industries were failures.⁵ A much more serious attempt was made to establish the making of a finer cloth than that which had hitherto been produced. In fact the watchword of Scottish economic policy was to 'rival the Dutch in fishing and the English in the woollen trade.' With these ends in view seven Flemish weavers were induced to settle in Scotland in 1601, six of whom were intended to introduce continental methods of making serges and one those of broadcloth.

The foreigners had expected to be allowed to live together but the jealousy of the chief towns prevented this, and it was proposed that one of them should be sent to each of the seven important burghs. The weavers were forced to appeal to the Privy Council; for, while the towns were fighting for the honour of their presence, the men themselves were in danger of starvation, being neither 'entertained' nor set to work. The Council ordered that they should remain for the present in Edinburgh, and that in the meantime food and drink were to be given them till they were set to work. Six weeks elapsed without any arrangements being made by the burghs for the employment of the weavers, and the Privy Council notified the magistrates concerned that unless work was started by the month of November, the Royal privilege would be withdrawn. Finally, in 1609, the foreigners were allowed to remain in Edinburgh, at Bonnington, and cloth was actually produced.¹ The weavers received special privileges from the Privy Council, but the work was interrupted by the magistrates of the Canongate, who endeavoured to force the strangers to become freemen, and thus, owing to the jealousy of the incorporated trades, the work was subject to frequent interruptions.²

In spite of the many difficulties of the Government during the first half of the seventeenth century, the ideal of a woollen trade that would rival England's was steadily kept in view. Thus in 1623 an attempt was made to encourage the woollen and fishing industries by the formation of local companies. Beyond a communication from the Convention of Royal Burghs thanking the king for his interest in the matter, there is no information as to the effects of this proposal on the cloth trade.³ Again in 1633 the Magistrates of Peebles, anticipating the policy of the trustees of the linen manufacture nearly a century later, resolved to have spinning regularly taught to the children of burgesses by a qualified mistress.¹

In 1641 an Act was passed by the Scottish Parliament to encourage the production of fine cloth. The native wool was not of a sufficiently good quality for the making of broadcloth, and therefore Spanish and foreign fine wool, as well as other materials, such as dyes and oil, were to be imported free of custom. All cloth produced was also to be free of taxation; and, to encourage the introduction of skilled workmen, their employers were to have complete control over them—in the words of the statute, ‘it shall not be lawful for any one to engage, reset, or entertain any of the servants of these works without the consent of their masters.’² In 1645 it was further enacted that the masters and workers of manufactories should be exempt from military service and from having troops quartered on them.³ On the faith of these Acts, factories were started at Bonnington (where the Flemings had settled at the beginning of the century), also at Ayr, and New Mills, near Haddington.⁴ All three works were favourably situated, for at that time the great wool-growing districts were the border shires, and the Bonnington and New Mills manufactories had the advantage of easy access to ports where the finer foreign wools might be imported. There is no information as to the success of the undertaking at Ayr. It may be inferred that the one at Bonnington met with sufficient encouragement to establish the industry there, as is shown by frequent references to a cloth factory at that place from 1683 till the end of the century. The New Mills factory is reported to have met with considerable success, but it had the ill-fortune to suffer during the Civil Wars. It happened that there was a large quantity of cloth belonging to these manufacturers at Dundee which was lost when the town was taken by Monk in 1651.¹

The great difficulty of these three early undertakings was the necessity for importing skilled workmen, the hindrances to the disposing of the goods through the obstructions to free internal trade by the burghs, the manufacturers not being themselves retailers, and lastly, the want of sufficient capital.² The poverty of the country was a very serious impediment to any progress in manufactures, and, after the Restoration, attempts were made to remedy this disadvantage. The expenses of starting an industry requiring machinery and skilled workmen were considerable. Not only had the latter to be tempted from their homes by large payments, but there were many obstacles placed in the way of those who wished to obtain manufacturing appliances in England or abroad ; and in addition the cost was magnified by the necessity of such payments being made in a depreciated currency, and at an adverse rate of foreign exchange.³ After the Restoration a resolute attempt was made to obviate these hindrances to the establishment of industries by two Acts passed in 1661, which embodied ingenious devices for the attracting of foreign capital by re-enacting the privileges granted by the Act of 1641, and in addition offering naturalisation to foreigners. The period of exemption from public and local taxes was limited to nineteen years ; and in the special case of linen and woollen works the undertakers were authorised to have a seal for stamping linens or cloth of a certain standard. To prevent the recurrence of friction between the foreigners and natives, and also as a further encouragement towards the introduction of capital, it was enacted that, inasmuch as manufactures previously established had for want of sufficient stocks, counsel, and assistance been crushed by those in more wealthy countries, in any case where such enterprises are beyond the means of single persons joint-stock companies might be formed, with full powers to incorporate themselves; and the making of cloth, linen, and stockings is indicated as a suitable field for such associations. It was further provided that no one except members of such companies should be allowed to export the goods made by that company. Rules were also framed for the internal organisation of the companies. The minimum subscription was five hundred merks Scots, and the qualification for a directorship was one thousand merks Scots.¹

This legislation failed to effect the object for which it was designed, because, though considerable privileges were granted to the proposed industries, it was thought that they would not be in a position to compete on favourable terms with manufactured goods imported from abroad, where such trades had long been established. In fact most of the 'infant industries' started immediately after the Restoration were afforded protection by means of patents or Acts of the Privy Council prohibiting importation of the commodities they were intended to produce. A period of twenty years elapsed before measures were taken for a complete protection of the home products. This movement received its final shape during the visit of the Duke of York to Scotland in 1681. On March 1st and again on April 11th of that year the Privy Council prohibited the importation and wearing of certain foreign manufactured goods. These acts were followed by a proclamation to the same effect.² This policy was ratified by an Act of Parliament, passed on September 13th, entitled an 'Act for Encouraging Trade and Manufactures.' The heading of this statute has caused the general trend of its provisions to be misinterpreted, for it is not only designed to encourage native industry but also to be a sumptuary law. These two lines of thought are clearly expressed in the preamble, which states that 'the money of this kingdom has been exhausted and the foreign exchange raised by the importation of foreign commodities which are superfluous or may be made within the kingdom by encouragement given to the manufactures thereof.'¹ With reference to 'superfluities,' several articles of luxury, such as gold and silver thread (as well as things made of such thread), flowered ribbons, silk-embroidered cloths, are forbidden to be either imported or worn. To encourage home manufactures prohibitions are enacted against the importation of a large number of commodities, such as linen, cambric, calico, East India linen, and all stuffs made of linen or cotton wool excepting arras carpets.² Persons possessed of either capital or technical knowledge were encouraged to settle in Scotland and found new industries or improve existing ones, not only by the prohibition of foreign manufactures but also by the grant of additional privileges. They were to receive naturalisation on condition of setting up manufactures of cloth, linen, stockings, or soap, and teaching the trade to Scotsmen. All the raw materials imported for a manufacture which received the benefit of this act were to be admitted free of custom and all public dues for ever. Manufactured products exported were exempt from duties for nineteen years after a given industry was founded. The capital invested was declared not subject to public or local taxes. The works recognised as a manufactory were not liable for the quartering of soldiers, and servants employed escaped military service for seven years. Finally, the Act ratifies 1 Car. II., Nos. 43 and 46 in prohibiting the export of raw materials produced at home, such as lint or yarn.¹

Although the Acts of 1661 and 1681 had given partnerships the right to incorporate themselves, to obtain the privileges offered it was necessary for persons who had started or who intended to start a new industry to apply to Parliament or the Privy Council. Between 1661 and 1681 applications were made by a company for making wool-cards at Leith, founded in 1663, a glass manufactory also at Leith (1664), and the Royal Fishing Company (1670). These three enterprises were granted monopolies. Then there were two sugar-works at Glasgow (1667, 1669), which, though they had no monopoly, were protected against foreign competition; and in 1667 a company for whale-fishing and soap-making was formed, which was encouraged by a special Act imposing duties on foreign soap, which almost amount to prohibition.²

On the passing of the Act of 1681, which granted protection to any company or individual that could establish its claim before Parliament, and more especially after the Revolution, the privileges of this Act were sought and obtained for very many different industries. Grants to cloth-works and glass-works were comparatively frequent. An important linen company, known as 'the Scots Linen Manufacture,' was incorporated in 1693, a silk manufactory in 1697, and manufactures of baizes, stockings, sail-cloth, ropes, cordage from 1690 to 1700. Two new partnerships for sugar refining were formed at Glasgow in 1696 and 1700. A company for making white paper was established in 1694. In the department of iron and steel work and mining there was a number of ventures. A 'Company for working mines and minerals in Scotland' was formed in 1694; another for a draining engine in 1693; a foundry had been established in Edinburgh in 1686. There were two hardware companies (for making knives, scythes, etc.) at Glasgow in 1699, 1700, and a co-partnery for smelting minerals (1701). Of a more miscellaneous character were two gunpowder works (1690 and 1695), a leather stamping company (1695), a company at Leith for works in horn and ivory (1695), another to carry on sawmills at Leith (1695), and a pottery company (1703).

PART III.—THE INFLUENCE OF THE JOINT-STOCK COMPANY ON THE INDUSTRIAL REVIVAL IN SCOTLAND TOWARDS THE END OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

Of all the undertakings established after 1681, the history of the New Mills Company is in several respects the most interesting, in view of the wealth of detail afforded by its minutes, and the extensive powers conferred upon it by the state. But before dealing with that history, it will be necessary to glance briefly at the joint-stock system which made such an organisation possible.

In all there were over fifty undertakings which received privileges from the state from 1661 to 1707. In comparison with the relative neglect of manufactures during the first half of the century, the period from 1660 shows a remarkable growth in the introduction of machinery—a growth rendered possible by the employment of capital from outside and the concessions granted to aliens. Of the fifty undertakings mentioned, no less than sixty-six per cent. were companies, some consisting of only a few members, others with a large number of stockholders, such as the Darien Company.

Only fourteen per cent. were owned by individuals, and the remaining twenty per cent. received privileges in the name of one or two persons, who may or may not have been acting for others whose names did not appear.

Under these circumstances, when the joint-stock system did so much to improve existing industries and to start new ones in Scotland, it is worth inquiring how these early companies were organised, and what success they obtained. Altogether, apart from the historical interest of such an investigation, it possesses a distinct value as a contribution to the development of the early joint-stock company, since details can be obtained of some of the Scottish manufacturing companies which are fuller than any that can now be recovered of similar works in England.

In comparing the methods of procedure in Scotland and England for the creation of a trading corporation, an interesting and important difference should be noticed. In England the legal maxim, that 'only the king can make a corporation,' resulted in almost all companies of any importance receiving incorporation by charter or patent from the king, and very few were able to obtain a confirmation of the royal grant from Parliament. The majority of the English patents conferred certain exclusive privileges besides the right of 'perpetual succession,' and therefore Parliament was inclined to oppose the privileged companies. In Scotland the converse method was adopted. Under the Act of 1661 the king remitted his powers of forming corporations for trading purposes to any persons who were prepared to invest capital in the establishment of industries. Therefore there were comparatively few Scottish patents for commercial undertakings after the Restoration, and those actually granted differed from the English ones in omitting to specify any particulars as to the nature of the corporation which they authorised. Instead of defining the 'body politic' as one with perpetual succession, having the right of purchasing lands and of using a common seal, with a specific title and minute regulations as to its internal government, Scottish patents mentioned incidentally that certain individuals constituted 'a societas,'¹ or alternatively made certain grants to several persons and their partners (sociis).² Similarly, when the privilege of a manufacture was given by Parliament or the Privy Council, it is very rare for any specific title to be mentioned. As a rule the partnership is referred to as carrying on a certain kind of manufacture at a certain place, as, for instance, 'the New Sugar Manufactory at Glasgow.'³ Sometimes, as in the case of the New Mills Company, the undertaking was spoken of as 'an incorporation.'⁴ Still more remarkable, as compared with the rigidity of the titles of companies in England, is it that in some cases where Scottish articles of co-partnership have been discovered, the name of the company in such articles differs from that given by its Act of Parliament, even when the articles are subsequent to the Act. Thus in the case of a linen company, the title in the Act of 1693 is the 'Linen Manufacture at the Citadel of Leith,'⁵ while in the articles of agreement made by the company for an issue of capital in 1694 it is described as the 'Scots Linen Manufacture.'⁶

Similarly, the company called in a document it issued¹ the 'Society of the White Writing and Printing Paper Manufactory of Scotland,' was designated the 'Scots White Paper Manufacture' in an Act passed on behalf of the partnership on July 4, 1695.² Such examples prove that the corporate character was both more readily granted and less strictly interpreted in Scotland than it was in England at the same period.

The mechanism for the creation of companies and the endowing them with the statutory privileges of the Acts of 1661 and 1681, presents a remarkable anticipation of the procedure at the present day to obtain a Private Act before a Parliamentary Committee. Both the Scottish Privy Council and the Estates appointed a Committee of Trade; and all applications for statutory privileges or for further powers came before these bodies, and those who wished to oppose the grant of a special Act were heard. If the Committee decided in favour of the application, the Privy Council or Parliament, as the case might be, issued an Act in most cases. The following are some instances in which a record of the proceedings has survived. The New Mills Company, having discovered that the prohibition of foreign cloth enacted in 1681 was evaded, presented a petition to the Privy Council in 1685, which was referred to the Committee of Trade, and on a report from the latter body favourable to the Company an Act was granted.³ In 1698 the White Paper Company already mentioned petitioned Parliament for a restraint on the consumption of rags by the candlemakers of Edinburgh, and the candlemakers made urgent representations against the paper company.¹ Sometimes when there was any question of extraordinary immunities for a proposed company, the hearing occupied some time. William Morison of Morison's Haven had obtained the privilege of a manufacture for glass-works he proposed to erect in 1697.² The next year he applied to Parliament for a monopoly for his district. The question was debated during the morning sederunt of the Committee of Trade on August 4th, and a decision was postponed till the afternoon. At the adjourned meeting a division was taken whether a monopoly should be granted 'for some few years' or not, and the majority voted in the affirmative. A motion was then put whether the monopoly should be for seven or nine years, and the latter term was accepted on the condition that security should be given that the proposed works would supply the whole kingdom. There was much further discussion; and, to meet the case of those who had already set up glass-works or who proposed doing so, a motion was proposed that any person should have liberty to set up such a manufacture within nine months, and as an amendment that such liberty should be extended for two years. The amendment was carried, and an Act was passed embodying that result.³

The number of undertakings that obtained the statutory privileges varied considerably at different periods. Between 1661 and 1681 the applications were comparatively few; and, as already shown, in most cases a monopoly or special favours in excess of the Act of 1661 were accorded. For some years after the passing of the Act of 1681 the numbers remained small, owing partly to suspicions of the ministry of James II., partly to the difficulty and great expense of obtaining competent foreign workmen. From 1690 to 1695 (and especially during the three years 1693, 1694, 1695) the number of applications was as great as the total before and afterwards up to the Union. Several causes contributed to this industrial activity. The influx of Huguenots to England had extended to Scotland, and so solved the great difficulty in obtaining skilled labour. It happened too that just at this time there was an extensive promotion of companies in England, and many of the promoters found Scotland a promising field for investment, in view of the comparatively few works requiring capital in existence there, the facilities for the formation of companies, and the many privileges and immunities granted to capitalists.

The reason for the fewer applications after 1695 is to be found partly in the collapse of the boom in companies' shares in London, but still more in the lock-up of capital by the company trading to Africa and the Indies, better known as the Darien Company. This organisation constituted the keystone of the whole structure of Scottish commerce at the end of the seventeenth century. It was in fact the necessary outcome of the Act of 1681, for once Scotland prohibited the manufactures of other nations, a policy of retaliation had to be faced. Even as early as the last decade of the seventeenth century manufacturers had begun to feel the advantages of production on a large scale. At this time Scotland had reached what had long been the ideal of her commercial policy, namely, the establishment of manufactures, but at the same time it began to be understood that the price to be paid for this advance was the loss of almost all foreign markets. Therefore the only possible outlet for surplus production was to be found in the creation of Scottish colonies, and it was this chain of facts that constituted the true inwardness of the Darien Scheme.

What would have happened had the colonisation of New Caledonia proved a success might be easily imagined. But altogether, apart from the opposition of the English Government, the scheme, though remarkably well conceived, was foredoomed to failure owing to the meagre capital resources of the company. The first of the two English East India Companies had a capital of £1,488,000,¹ and in 1698 a second was formed.² Against this (supposing English diplomacy had stood aside) the Scottish Company could call up no more than 42½ per cent. on £400,000 sterling, and even the whole of the £170,000 was not paid up.³ In fact the Darien Company was starting with a smaller capital than the English Company had had in 1617, when it was able to found no permanent settlements. The Dutch and English India Companies besides were in possession of trading monopolies in India and the Far East, so that a competing organisation would have required immense capital resources to make sufficient 'presents' to the native potentates to secure any footing.

There are several points of interest about the capitalisation of the Darien Company. In the first place, owing to the compulsory withdrawal of English and foreign subscriptions, the whole £400,000 of stock was allotted to Scotsmen.⁴ In the second place, the call of less than half of this amount made a greater drain on Scottish industry than would be anticipated. Indeed, there is reason to believe that these calls of £170,000 amounted to nearly as much as the total investments in the new undertakings that had received Parliamentary privileges—and these were just those industries where capital was required. The data upon which this calcu-

The Royal Fishing Co., 1670,	£25,000 ¹	sterling.
The Glasgow Whaling and Soap Co., 1667,	11,700 ²	„
The Wester or Easter Sugar Co., Glasgow,	10,000 ³	„

The Glasgow Rope Co., 1690, £40,000 Scots	3,333 ⁶	„
	£64,033

In the case of the ‘Scots Linen Manufacture,’ a capital of £30,000 sterling was offered for subscription,⁷ but it was not fully subscribed, and judging from the difficulty found in completing the subscription of £4000 sterling for the Paper Company, it is unlikely that as much as £10,000 was actually paid up. If, however, this figure be estimated as the capital of the Linen Company, we reach a total of about £74,000 sterling as the capital of seven companies. It would be utterly misleading to take the average of this sum as representing the capital of the typical Scottish company before 1696, because these undertakings mentioned were the largest and most important. Some of the others, such as the New Mills Company, and the remaining early sugar company, doubtless required a capital of close on £10,000 sterling.¹ Others, and these would be the majority, would not represent investments of more than £2000 or £1000 sterling; some, indeed, would have been below the latter sum. If the capital of the remaining statutory manufactures be averaged at £3000 sterling each, the forty founded before 1696 would have an aggregate capitalisation of £120,000 sterling; adding this to the capital that is known definitely, the following results are obtained:—

Estimate of Capital of Scottish Manufactures 1661-1695.

Capital of seven companies . . .	£74,033 sterling
Estimate of capital of say 40 other ‘Manufactures’ at £3000 st. each	120,000 „

This amount was less than half the nominal capital of the Darien Company, and but little more than the sum that a 42½ per cent. call should have realised, so that the country was left with very small capital to invest from the time the pressure of the Darien calls began to be felt,² until the principal invested, with 5 per cent. interest, was repaid after the Union.

The number of the members of Scottish companies before the Union varied very much. The Darien Company had about fourteen hundred stockholders, a larger number than either the East India or Royal African Companies had at the same period.³ The Bank of Scotland and the New Mills

² These results are confirmed by a comparison of the later New Mills minutes with the earlier ones. In the second series there is a remarkable increase in the number of persons indebted to the Company who had to be subjected to legal proceedings.

Woollen Manufactory found it necessary to advertise their meetings in the newspapers. Several companies had a considerable body of shareholders resident in England, and share registers were kept in London as well as in Edinburgh by the Baize, Linen, and Paper Companies.¹ In other cases the membership was much smaller. The Glasgow Whale Fishing and Soap Manufacturing Company had nine members.² The Easter Sugar Works began with only five partners, and nearly half a century after its foundation the undertaking remained in the possession of the representatives of the founders.³ In fact, many of the statutory manufactures were formed by a small group of from five to ten persons, who, owing to the facilities of the Act of 1661, acted as and enjoyed all the advantages of a 'Society.'

The numbers of those participating in these early societies varying so much, and passing by almost insensible steps from the partnership to a company, it is not to be expected that the internal affairs of these organisations should be conducted on a uniform system. It is interesting to notice that the smallness of membership did not always conduce to harmony. The Wester Sugar Works was founded in 1667, and only four partners are mentioned at that time. On the death of one of these, the whole business was dislocated because his widow and the others could not agree in the management. The men wished to purchase the share of their late partner, and the widow refused to sell, so that matters remained at a deadlock till the Privy Council intervened.⁴ The New Mills Company had only been in existence a year when the members were dissatisfied, and the books were ordered to lie open for their inspection.⁵ Three years later, after the Company had obtained Acts of the Privy Council prohibiting foreign cloth, it was found that a shareholder was one of the leading importers of English cloth, and the Privy Council ordained that in future any member of the Company offending should not only be liable to the statutory penalties, but would be deprived of his shares in addition.¹ There are several other points of interest connected with the holding of shares in the New Mills Company. The members agreed that no distribution was to be made in the way of dividend for the first three years, and for the second three years only the legal rate of interest, i.e. 5 per cent., was to be paid; afterwards the whole profits were to be subject to division.² The same company shows a very important point of contact with what is known as a 'Regulated Company' (i.e. a company which enjoyed certain privileges, but where each member traded on his own capital), in so far as the whole product of the looms was purchased by the members, who sold it as best they could.³

Information as to the internal management of early Scottish companies is far from being so copious as that obtainable from similar institutions in England. Still, meagre as it is, some divergencies from English methods are worthy of notice. The official now called a manager was in Scotland at this time invariably alluded to as the master, as, for instance, the Master of the New Mills Manufactory,⁴ the Master of the Soaperie⁵ (i.e. the Glasgow Soap Company), the Master of the Sugarie,¹ the Master of the North Leith Glass Works.² The shareholders elected a board, who were often called the managers, sometimes the assistants (i.e. of the governor), and (in the case of the Darien Company) the directors. The New Mills Company elected annually five managers, three of whom retired each year.³ The Paper Company had thirteen managers, and in both companies the managers elected a præses.⁴ On the other hand, the Scots Linen Manufacture followed the English model, and the board was composed of the governor, deputy-governor, and thirty assistants.⁵

Voting rights were in some cases strictly defined. In the Bank of Scotland, each £1000 Scots nominal entitled the proprietor to one vote.⁶ As only 10 per cent. was paid up for several years, £100 Scots paid in (£8, 6s. 8d. sterling) secured a vote. In both the Paper and Linen Companies each five shares gave the right of a vote—shares in the former having been issued at £4 and in the latter at £5—subject to the condition, in the Linen Company, that no one proprietor might have more than five votes.⁷ In the Royal Fishing Company the minimum subscription was £100 sterling.⁸ In the Darien Company there was also a limit, and no subscriber might ‘adventure’ more than £3000.⁹ In the case of the Bank of Scotland the maximum was £10,000 Scots, and the minimum £1000 Scots.¹⁰

In reference to the relation of companies to each other, there were some curious instances of community of interest. In England, the Royal African Company and the Society for the Mines Royal—these being engaged in the control of the precious metals—had a working agreement.¹ Amongst manufacturing enterprises there was a network of interests in the linen trade. The King's and Queen's Corporation for the Linen Manufacture in England, established in 1690, had provided a part of the capital for the subsidiary companies in Scotland and Ireland.² Further, an arrangement of a very peculiar nature was made affecting the Scottish Company, by which half the capital of £30,000 should be reserved for the royal burghs, half for private persons.³ Sometimes the relations were far from harmonious, for one company, either by design or through unforeseen developments of trade, invaded the sphere marked off for another. Thus, though the Bank of Scotland had a monopoly for twenty-one years, the Darien Company soon after its foundation began to issue notes.⁴ The Silk Manufacture was attacked by the Cloth Companies for diminishing the demand for their products.⁵ The Paper Company, too, had trouble with the Edinburgh candlemakers.⁶

The consideration of friction of this kind naturally leads to the investigation of the economic relation of early Scottish companies to the general public. There was a wide difference between the policy of the Parliaments of England and

Scotland in the encouragement of new or improved industries. In England, anybody sufficiently influential could secure a patent granting the exclusive exercise of any new trade for a term of years. In Scotland, on the contrary, after the passing of the Act of 1681, very few monopolies were granted. The whole tendency, both of legislation and parliamentary practice, was to afford stringent protection to 'infant industries' by prohibiting competitive imports from abroad, to encourage the inflow of capital by conceding immunity from taxes and customs, and at the same time to trust that the founding of several factories of the same kind would provide sufficient safeguards for the consumer by keeping prices low through the resulting competition. Thus there were many woollen, several sugar, glass, and rope works. At the same time, exclusive privileges continued to be granted in exceptional cases, e.g. to a sail-cloth manufactory, 1694,¹ to two powder factories, one of which received the grant in 1690, but was not in operation when the second application was made in 1695.² Several companies asked for an exclusive grant, but failed to obtain it: for instance, the Paper Company in 1697,³ and the Silk Manufacture in 1698.⁴ Evidently it sometimes happened that a compromise was found advisable, and so the Baize Manufacture had a monopoly against other companies, but not against individuals.⁵ The Leith Sawmills had the exclusive right of sawing wood by machinery within a radius of fifteen miles of it for a period of nineteen years.⁶ Again, Morison's glass-works had the monopoly of glass-making except against the proprietors of factories already in existence, or which would be established within two years from the passing of the Act in 1698.¹

The investigation of the fortunes of the companies before the Union would be one of the greatest interest were materials for an exact calculation available. Failing these, there are indications that tend to show the fate of several of the ventures of which mention has been made. The Royal Fishing Company was a failure. The alum works, founded in 1695, soon resulted in a total loss, but the powder manufacture owned by the same persons was succeeding in 1702. Judging by the history of the English Linen Company, it is to be expected that the one established in Scotland under the same auspices shared a similar fate. Many of the smaller societies in all probability resulted in loss to the partners. It is of course by no means easy to fix upon a satisfactory criterion of the success or failure of a trading venture working at a time so remote from our own. Probably the safest standard would be to estimate that any company which either returned the original capital with legal interest, or which alternatively had maintained its capital intact at a given date and returned the legal rate of interest (which in Scotland was then 5 per cent.), cannot be said to have failed financially, and any excess above this amount would constitute the measure of its success. Judged by this standard the Darien Company—despite the fiasco of its expeditions and the losses of individuals who could not pay the calls and forfeited their stock—cannot be judged a failure considered solely as an investment, for, at the Union, the amount actually paid up by the proprietors was returned them together with 5 per cent. interest from the dates of payment of the calls.² Several companies may be concluded to have been successful on the whole. In this class may be mentioned the New Mills¹ and Musselburgh Woollen Manufactures, the Silk Manufacture (which after a career of four years was making sufficient profits to rouse the envy of outsiders²), and possibly the Leith Manufactory of Wool Cards, which, though it had lost three stocks between 1663 and 1690, was also subject to jealousy in 1705.³

The Glasgow Rope Company, which was founded in 1690 and still existed in 1777, may be taken to have succeeded, otherwise it would not have had such a protracted existence. The same remarks apply to the four Glasgow sugar-works and the soaperie, many of which continued under the management of descendants of the founders for about a century. Indeed in the case of the sugaries there is the evidence of official documents which declared the trade to be 'a most profitable one.'⁴ Finally, there still remains the Bank of Scotland, which has passed its bicentenary, and which from its foundation till the Union paid dividends of 138 per cent., or an average of $11\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., besides forming reserves.⁵

It may be added that of the eleven undertakings mentioned as having been successful only two had express monopolies, namely the Leith Wool-card Manufacture and the Bank of Scotland. The Silk Manufacture, though it had no monopoly, appears to have been the only one of the kind.

⁵ From the records of the Bank, supplied by the courtesy of the secretary. In this calculation the dividend declared in 1708 is included as it was earned in 1707.

The others all had rivals, frequently in the same town, and in all cases at no great distance. The cloth-works were freed from foreign competition, apart from smuggling and other evasions of the officers of the customs, while the sugar, soap, and rope works, though not favoured by the total prohibition of competing foreign products, were protected by very heavy import duties.

PART IV.—THE HISTORY OF THE ‘WOOLLEN MANUFACTORY AT NEW MILLS IN THE SHIRE OF HADDINGTON’

The Acts of the Privy Council and of Parliament in 1681 for the encouragement of trade and manufactures were far from being speculative, for in that year there were several proposals for the development of Scottish industries. Prominent amongst these was one which aimed at the establishment of a large cloth-manufacturing company. This scheme, indeed, was probably one of the reasons of the legislation of 1681, for the Duke of York (afterwards James II.), who was then visiting Scotland, had approved of the idea. Finding that the country had few commodities to export to pay for imports of cloth, etc., from England, whereby ‘English money was not to be had under 6 or 7 per cent., [and was] scarce at any rate,’ while the exchange between Edinburgh and London had risen, as against Edinburgh, to between 12 and 15 per cent., he favoured a plan of establishing works for the production of fine cloth.¹ He ‘invited and encouraged’ the undertakers, some of whom were Englishmen of substance, so that with the prestige of royal patronage there was no difficulty in finding an adequate amount of capital. The chief promoters of the Company were Robert Blackwood, an Edinburgh merchant of repute who was afterwards Master of the Merchant Company, and Sir James Stanfield, a man at that time of considerable wealth.¹ The part taken by Stanfield in the formation of the undertaking in all probability decided the locality of the works. He had acquired a property near Haddington, then known as Newmills,² which formerly belonged to the local monastery.³ The situation was evidently a suitable one for the industry, being in a good wool-producing district, and within easy reach of Edinburgh. As already shown, it had been thirty years before the site of a similar undertaking. Stanfield was prepared to lease to the Company his walk mills 'and all his office-houses, which are many, great and spacious,' at what was then considered a moderate rental.⁴

The very interesting document printed in the Introduction might be characterised as the prospectus of the Company.⁵ It was calculated that a capital of £5000 sterling or £60,000 Scots would suffice to purchase and maintain 20 looms employing 233 hands, besides providing working capital. A detailed estimate of the probable output was made, and it was considered that there should be produced annually 55,823 ells of cloth, realising, on the average, £55,823 Scots. Thus the yearly turnover would have almost equalled the capital. The details for the cost of production throw much light on the current rates of wages, and the total expenses under this head, together with the provision of raw material, amounted to over £38,900 Scots. To this was to be added the payments necessary for foreign skilled workmen. The rent of the works was only payable after legal interest had been earned on the capital, so that it does not enter into the cost of manufacture. Thus in the form of a modern prospectus the estimates might be summarised as follows:—

The profit anticipated from the factory—

		Scots	Sterling
Receivable for cloth,	55823 ells averaging £1 Scots	£55,823	£4652
Less Expenses	Wages £18,144
	Materials £20,744
	<hr/>	£38,888	£3241
Profit (subject to payments to foreign workmen)		£16,935	£1411

This (not allowing for deductions) exceeded 25 per cent. on the capital.

A Company such as this, with great privileges from the state, was objected to by many. Conservative people complained that it was a novelty, and that the cloth could never be so good as that made in England. Others were of opinion, even if the cloth were sufficiently good, it could never be sold as cheaply as that imported prior to the prohibition. While the works were being erected and the workmen procured, good cloth could not be obtained, and afterwards, even when the producing stage was reached, the Company could not manufacture enough to supply the whole country. Thus the temptation to import cloth, in spite of the Proclamation and the Act of Parliament, would be so great that it would be impossible for the Company to gain the encouragement expected and intended by Parliament and the Privy Council.¹ On behalf of the Company it was shown that ultimately it would be possible to produce as cheaply in Scotland as in England, owing to the fact that 'nowhere else do workmen live so cheaply as in Scotland.'¹ Where so large a part of the cost of production consisted of wages, this was a most important consideration, which was bound in time to affect the market-price. In fact, as the writer expresses it, 'where cloth can be cheapest made it can be cheapest sold'; but the question was, would it be under a system of rigid protection? This is partly answered by the admission that it was not intended that the New Mills Company should supply the whole country, and all information was offered to others who might intend to set up manufactories elsewhere.² To attain the desirable end of home-made broadcloth eventually selling as cheaply as that made abroad, and to prevent the exportation of bullion, it is urged that patriotic Scotsmen should be content with a cloth 'a little dear at first,' owing to the great cost of 'importing looms and procuring foreign workmen, besides the many losses and inconveniences attending beginners,' so that the consumer was to pay for the mistakes of the producer.³

The promoters of the scheme were fully convinced of the personal and national advantages to be derived from the undertaking, and on 10th May 1681 the document known as 'the great contract' was signed.⁴ The members of the Company had no little pride in this document. 'We have entered into a mutual contract,' one of them writes, 'whereby we have bound ourselves to such rules and methods that the undertaking cannot fail except in case of a public and universal calamity.’¹ The ‘methods’ mentioned are of great interest, not only as an early instance of joint-stock organisation for a manufacturing company, but also as showing in several directions interesting traces of the transition from the regulated to the joint-stock type of organisation. The articles of co-partnership are printed in the Introduction, and a summary of the chief provisions with the reasons for framing them is given in the pamphlet already quoted. Four general meetings were to be held in each year. At the meeting in May five persons were to be chosen as managers, and (after the first election) two of the former managers were to continue in office, and three new ones only were to be elected. The chairman at both managers’ and general meetings was called the ‘præses,’ and all orders for payments were signed by him. The managers were to meet at least once a week. There were certain self-denying ordinances relating to the holding of stock. During the first three years no payment whatever was to be made to stockholders by way of dividend; for the second three years proprietors were to receive the legal rate of interest on their capital and no more. The balance of profit remaining at the end of the sixth year (after payment of interest for the second three years) was to be added to the original capital.² Sir James Stanfield also met the Company in a generous manner. The rent of the ground and buildings was not to constitute a charge against the gross profit, but was to be deferred until the legal interest had been earned and paid on the capital, and was to be charged against the remaining profit.³ There was also a remarkable limitation of the rights of bequest to the representatives of a member of the Company—his stock passed to female heirs without division, and if the beneficiary were a minor only one tutor or curator could have a voice at the meetings.¹ The regulations and obligations of the members as to the disposing of the cloth produced are important. The cloth was to be brought to the warehouse of the Company at Edinburgh, which was situated 'below the Trone Church.'² The managers, having ascertained the cost of production, added 2d. per ls. per ell, or in other words allowed as manufacturer's profit 3s. 4d. in the pound. The cloth so valued was apportioned in convenient quantities and distributed by lot amongst the proprietors, each of whom had the right to draw once for each £100 sterling of his stock. If a member who drew a quantity of cloth failed to remove it within fourteen days, it was sold by public roup. When there was a loss as compared with the prime cost, that loss was charged to the defaulter; if, on the other hand, the sale showed a profit, the gain was credited to the Company.³ The reasons for pro rata distributions of commodities to shareholders of early companies will be more apparent, especially in Scotland, when the great restrictions of trade even within the country are remembered. By such a device the cloth manufactured was distributed in many directions where the Company in its corporate capacity could find no

³ A Representation of the Advantages that would arise . . . by the erecting and improving of Manufactories, ut supra, p. 20. This regulation was a modification of that originally intended. According to the 'Memorial' (Introduction, Part v.), the master was to estimate the cost of production, and the managers were then to add to this sum the difference between it and the price at which they had been accustomed to purchase similar fabrics.

opening.¹ In the case of the New Mills Company, there was the further advantage that every proprietor as a retailer was vitally interested, altogether apart from his being a stockholder, in preventing, or at least reporting, cases in which foreign cloth was imported. It sometimes happened that the rule confining the distribution of cloth to members was relaxed in order to conciliate persons who might be useful to the Company. On another occasion the cloth drawn for a member who had failed to pay the calls on his stock was, by resolution of the managers, assigned to another shareholder, Bailie Douglas, who had obtained none by lot, he having befriended the Company by lending money for 'supplying their needfull occasions.'² It is an interesting comment on the expressions of opinion as to the solidarity of the members of the Company amongst themselves that less than a year after the signature of 'the great contract' some of the stockholders were dissatisfied with the proceedings of the managers, and wished to have the plans of the board explained to them. It was pointed out that any member might be present at meetings of the managers, and that the books were always open to inspection. Besides, it was suggested that the stockholders should appoint a committee from their own number to report on all proceedings of the managers since the formation of the Company.³

As already shown, the contract of co-partnership was signed on May 10, 1681, and from the 22nd of June the meetings of the managers were recorded in a minute-book preserved in the University Library, Edinburgh, and printed in full in the present volume. On the title-page there is the inscription, 'Book for the Managers of the Manufactories Weekly Sederunts,' and the records of proceedings extend till March 21, 1691. As there is reference on a blank page at the beginning to the year 1704, it is probable that the existing minutes form only a portion of less than half of the original book. The records have been carefully kept, and reference was facilitated by the ingenious device of numbering each order of the managers—a plan that would have advantages for the modern secretary.

The first steps taken by the managers consisted in the procuring of looms and other appliances and the still more difficult task of securing competent workmen. It was agreed that the men should be paid by piece-work.¹ Considerable difficulties were experienced in inducing hands to come from England, and it became necessary for some of the managers to go south to secure trained weavers,² some being brought from Yorkshire, others from the west of England. By July a head of the works, called the 'Master of the Manufactory,' had been appointed, and in August the men had arrived at New Mills.³ By October two looms were in operation, though as yet only 'coarse cloth' was made.⁴ Mixed cloth (i.e. cloth made of native and foreign wool) was ordered to be tried early in January 1682, and before the end of the month preparations were in train for the eventual production of fine cloth,⁵ directions being given that only the best wool should be purchased. As progress was made it was found that more plant was required, and estimates were considered on September 20, 1682. By February 19, 1683, ground for extensions was needed.⁶ Meanwhile great care was taken of the quality of the cloth. By order of the managers, dated September 27, 1682, no sales of serges or stockings were to be made at New Mills, all the goods made being sent to Edinburgh.¹ In April 1683 the master was recommended 'to take great care in improveing the spinning and dressing of the cloth that it be good and sufficient cloth, and that the rents and too near shearing of some cloth lately sent in be prevented in time coming.'² All the cloth sent to Edinburgh was to be duly weighed and measured.³ The number of looms at work had now increased from two in 1681 to a total of twenty-seven, of which twenty-five were used for cloth and two for serges.⁴ This plant proved insufficient to meet the demand, and about the same time ten new looms were ordered, which would bring the production up to 12,000 ells a year. In addition, after considerable trouble, some stocking-frames had been brought from the west of England and were at work.⁵ In 1684 the output had attained considerable volume, as the provision required for a single payment for materials was estimated to amount to £1428, 9s. 4d. sterling,⁶ and the financial results appear to have been sufficiently satisfactory to justify the recommendation of the payment of legal interest on the stock immediately after the expiration of the first three years, as provided in the 'great contract.'⁷ As soon as the manufacture of fine cloth was established, a detailed estimate was framed

Meanwhile the Company had been making efforts to secure the patronage of the Government for the provision of military uniforms, which were just beginning to come into vogue in Scotland, as an Act of the Privy Council naïvely expresses it, ‘to distinguish sojers from other skulking and vagrant persons.’² On February 22, 1683, the Company were licensed by the Privy Council to import 2536 ells of stone-grey cloth from England for clothing General Dalzell’s regiment of Dragoons, as he could not procure as much cloth of the colour he required in Scotland.³ On the 16th of March this order was modified to the extent that General Dalzell might appoint any person he pleased to import the cloth on condition that the price should not exceed 5s. per ell, and that it should be sealed with the seal of the New Mills Company.⁴ It is evident from a consideration of the cost price of the New Mills cloth that, at this date, it was not merely a ‘little dear’ but considerably higher in price than that made in England. Therefore cloth imported at a maximum price of 5s. per ell would mean an important saving in army clothing, as the lowest cost-price in the foregoing table works out at nearly 6s. 6d. per ell. The managers of the Company petitioned the Privy Council against this violation of the Act of 1681, and on August 28, 1684, representatives of the Company were heard by a special Committee of the Council. It was asked whether the New Mills works could furnish enough cloth in a short time at reasonable rates for the forces, and the deputation undertook on behalf of the Company to supply the army as quickly as cloth could be imported from England and at the same rates. They were also prepared to dye the cloth ordered any colour required, to show samples within a fortnight, and to give security for carrying out the contract.¹ It would appear that this offer was not accepted, or if accepted, that licences for the importation of English cloth continued to be given. A fresh permission was issued to General Dalzell on September 16, 1685, to import 100 ells of stone-grey cloth at 9s. per ell, for the use of his officers, and 1100 ells for soldiers at 6s. per ell.² On January 8th of the following year the Captain of the Edinburgh Town Guard received a similar licence for scarlet cloth, and on the same date, and again on February 3rd, further exemptions were granted to other officers.³

Not only had the Company to face the loss of the Government contracts it had anticipated, while still in its infancy, but it had many difficulties with its work-people. When it is remembered that the employés numbered over seven hundred, and that some of these had come from a distance, that others were foreigners, and that the native Scot had little sympathy with imported labour, it need occasion no surprise that much of the time of the managers and master was spent in settling disputes at the mills. They found 'the country people very backward to anything new or strange and not easily drawn from their old way of living, though the new be more comfortable and better.’¹ Some of the skilled workmen not only would not obey orders but incited the others to quarrels, and it became necessary to ask the co-operation of the Provost of Haddington to have two discharged men removed from the district.² Within the Company matters remained harmonious. At first some of the managers did not attend the meetings regularly. This was remedied by the institution of a system by which each manager deposited two dollars from which the sum of sixpence would be deducted for each absence.³ At this time, and prior to the building of the Company’s hall, the meetings of managers was held in the back-shop of a John Little. At first some of the members were dilatory in paying in their subscriptions,⁴ and others did not remove the cloth they had obtained by lot within the specified time.⁵ Otherwise the minutes show that the internal working of the Company was quite satisfactory.

It was fortunate that the members were united, for difficulties had to be faced. The Government had made a serious mistake in granting licences for the import of English cloth, which tended to make the Act of 1681 a dead letter. In any case, there were certain to be many evasions of the law as long as importation remained profitable. Owing to the system of the farming of the customs, the control of commodities imported had, to a certain extent, passed out of the hands of the Government, and when the State itself set the example of making exceptions to its own legislation, it was to be expected that private persons would endeavour to bring English cloth into the country in spite of the prohibition. Noblemen who travelled abroad returned with many years’ supply of foreign cloth, and it was said that their servants concealed considerable quantities which they sold.¹ As early as 1683 the New Mills Company became alarmed at the amount of cloth imported, and Sir James Stanfield was asked to use his influence with the officers of State in favour of a more strict adherence to the law.² In August of 1683 a complaint had been made against the Company, but was 'superseded' by a proclamation in its favour, after which measures were taken against a number of Edinburgh merchants who were known to deal regularly in prohibited cloth. They had been invited to join the Company on condition of taking up stock at par and paying a premium equal to the amount of interest which had not been withdrawn by the original proprietors. The 'interlopers,' however, as if to 'show their incorrigibleness and obstinacy,' 'slighting so great a mark of clemency,' imported more cloth in the few months after the proclamation than in the three years before. The Privy Council decreed that the goods should be seized and burned, besides which the offenders were condemned to pay a fine.³ Only a few weeks later a member of the Company, Councillor John Baillie, was found to have imported English cloth to the value of £400 sterling, and it was decided that the cloth was to be burned by the common hangman, and his stock in the Company forfeited.⁴ The Company saw the expected monopoly slipping away, and in 1685 the managers complained that they were in danger of being 'utterly ruined and broke.'⁵ On March 4th it was decided to call a general meeting to consider whether the undertaking should stand or be dissolved.¹ Probably this language was exaggerated, inasmuch as a dividend had been paid in the May of the previous year, but it impressed the Privy Council, which had to face the alternatives of either allowing the Act of 1681 to become a dead letter, or else taking measures to enforce it. Eventually it was decided to adopt the latter course, and the Company was requested by the Lord Secretary to submit a statement of its grievances for the consideration of the Privy Council.² This address and memorial was remitted to a committee, which reported on August 7, 1685, and the Privy Council, by an Act of August 14th, explicitly ratified the forfeiture of the interest in the Company of any member who imported prohibited cloth. It further forbids, under heavy penalties, the importing, wearing, or selling of all foreign cloth and serges, silk gloves and stockings, as well as worsted stockings. The Company, or its agents, had full powers to seize any of the prohibited goods, to sue persons contravening the Act before any competent tribunal, and to retain one-half of the penalty to defray expenses of the seizure. In cases of doubt as to whether certain commodities were native or foreign, the possessors of such goods were compelled to declare on oath from whom they had obtained them. As a further encouragement to the Company, the Privy Council agreed to cease the granting of licences for the importing of English cloth to supply the troops, on condition that the Company would produce sufficient quantities, of the required colours, and at a rate to be agreed upon by the Company, with the proviso that in case the price asked by the Company was found to be too high the Privy Council reserved the right of proposing a new rate for the contracts.³ On September 11th of the same year a further addition was made to the powers of the Company by the grant of authorisation of breaking open doors, chests, or other places where prohibited goods were suspected.¹ Early in the following year a king's letter and proclamation was issued on behalf of the Company.²

Though the extensive powers conveyed by these documents afford an instance of the commercial policy of the times, the methods of obtaining them, and the consideration given, constitute a curious side-light on the ethical standard of the age. These are set down in the most naïve manner in the minutes of the managers, just as the various 'gratifications' given by the East India Company during the early years of its history are recorded in the Court Books. 'Mr. Colling M'Kenzie' received five guineas on account of the great care and pains he had taken in procuring the first Act of the Privy Council, and various subordinate persons received smaller sums, ranging from one to six dollars.³ The sum of £15 sterling was remitted to London, partly to 'gratify' persons who had aided the Company, partly to pay expenses.⁴ On the Bill 'anent freedom of trade' being sent to the king, an official expected to be gratified, and it was ordered that he should be offered a pair of silk stockings 'if that will satisfy him,' if not, four dollars, and one dollar for his man. The following resolution speaks for itself: 'It being represented' to the managers 'that the King's Advocat drawes thess lybells against the transgressours wrong because he is not informed,' persons were to wait upon and inform him, and at the same time give him ten dollars for himself and his men two dollars each, and 'ingadge' him in time to come.⁵

From the grant of extended privileges until the Revolution the Company enjoyed a considerable degree of prosperity, and, apart from prosecutions of transgressors, it was able to give greater attention to its internal affairs. It was a common complaint amongst early Scottish companies that the expense of skilled labour was very great. At the end of the year 1686 an attempt was made to arrange a scale of piece-work wages, which was under no circumstances to be exceeded. The weavers of the coarsest white cloth were not to receive more than 5d. per ell, the highest wages for weaving Spanish wool was not to be more than 14d. per ell, while the shearmen were to receive from 5d. to 8d. per ell.¹ The friction was not only confined to the hands, for it was frequently necessary to remonstrate with more important officials of the Company. The cashier was charged with partiality in the allocation of the payment for piece-work, and it was ordered that, in the event of any unjust distribution in future, six times the amount that he had underpaid or overpaid the men should be deducted from his own wages.² It was necessary to 'discourse and reason' with the master about his method of dyeing fine black cloth,³ and also to compel him to instruct the apprentices in dyeing so as to carry out the obligations of the Company under the Act of 1681.⁴

During this period the Company had protracted negotiations with Sir James Stanfield. In 1681 he was a wealthy man, but owing to the extravagance of his eldest son (who was later executed for parricide) he was gradually falling into pecuniary difficulties. On March 1, 1686, he proposed to sell his interest in the land and buildings at New Mills to the Company,¹ and on the 14th of May he was paid for certain goods he had handed over to the joint-stock undertaking.² The following year he offered his stock in the Company on similar terms to that obtained at the previous sale. He also notified the Company that he claimed that the privilege of furnishing cloth for the troops should be divided between the existing Company and a new one which he proposed to set up in proportion to the number of looms owned by each.³ Owing to Stanfield's death soon afterwards, nothing more is heard of the proposed rival company. The purchase of the land and buildings at New Mills, though not effected during his lifetime, was carried out soon afterwards, as it became necessary to realise the estate to satisfy the creditors, but it is impossible to determine the date, as his affairs were still in bankruptcy in 1703.⁴ Very soon afterwards there was another attempt at competition at New Mills. A former servant of the Company, named Spurroway, had taken the house at New Mills with a view to establish cloth-works. The Company felt it would be a 'great inconveniencie . . . to have another work ther,' and so a message was sent to Spurroway desiring 'hime to keep up that good understanding hes bein betwixt hime and the Company ever to this day, and if he cannot be prevailed with in a fair way to pass from it, to tell hime the Company will take ther oun way to prevent his entering ther, and will reakon themselves very much disoblged by such methods quhich they hope he will prevent.'⁵

Meanwhile the undertaking continued to make progress. The practical monopoly of supplying cloth for the army began to prove profitable. Mention is made of a contract for a troop at Edinburgh, to supply ready-made coats at 22s.

each, when £6 sterling was allowed for making one hundred and twelve coats (or about 1s. per coat), the remaining £117 being for the cloth.¹ It is interesting to notice that on the eve of the Revolution the garrison at the Bass was clothed in cloth made at New Mills.² One seems to obtain a glimpse of the possibility of a secret profit at the expense of the Government in the sale of some coarse cloth, which had been in the warehouse for four years, to Lieutenant-General Douglas. This cloth had been valued at 6s. 3d. per ell, but was now sold at 4s. 2d. sterling.³ In 1687 the output was again increased by the erection of a large twisting-mill,⁴ but against this is to be set the fact that the attempt to produce machine-made stockings had yielded little or no profit, and the frames were ordered to be sold by public roup.⁵

With the Revolution there came a temporary set-back in the progress of the Company. During the unsettled times before the government of William III. was fully established, foreign cloth was again imported with very little hindrance. Such importation was tacitly recognised by an Act of Parliament of 1690 which granted the magistrates of Edinburgh an impost of 12s. Scots per ell on imported English or foreign cloth.⁶ In 1693 the Company was incorporated by Act of Parliament under the title of 'the Incorporation of the Woollen Manufactory at New Mills in the Shire of Haddington.' This Act recites that the undertaking had been subject to many discouragements and confirms the privileges of the Act of 1681, and in addition confers exemption from customs for twenty-one years. It was also provided that an entry in the books kept in Edinburgh and in London should be sufficient evidence of ownership of shares.⁷ By another Act of the same year it was provided that the army should wear cloth made in Scotland, under similar conditions to those laid down by the Privy Council in 1685.¹ In 1695 the Company was exempted from taxation.²

Since the Revolution the stringent legislation against the import of foreign cloth and the export of Scottish wool, though not repealed, had come to be neglected. It may have been that the Government felt that after nearly ten years of protection the New Mills Company and other makers of fine cloth should be able to face foreign competition, but it is more probable that during the change of administration it was inconvenient to enforce these laws. Opinions as to the effect of the relaxation of protection were biased according to the interests of the persons who expressed them. It appears that the export of manufactured cloth had fallen very seriously. In 1674, 400,000 ells of plaiding had been exported from Aberdeen, and in the year 1694-95 the quantity for the same district had fallen to 80,000 ells. The price realised too was lower, owing to the fact that the best wool was exported and the home manufacturers were left with the refuse. Therefore both the quantity and quality of cloth produced had declined.³ Arguments of this nature had weight with the Parliamentary Committee of Trade, and it was resolved to encourage a number of industries, including the New Mills Manufactory. A note was appended to the resolution stating that the persons concerned in that manufacture had permission to bring in such Acts as they thought fit.⁴ At first it was proposed that the duty on imported cloth should be increased by 12s. Scots and that on serges by 6s. Scots,¹ but the manufacturers were still anxious to obtain a complete prohibition of imports. Accordingly, on October 8, 1696 the New Mills Company presented a petition stating that 'the undertakers had advanced to that perfection that they were able not only to make woollen cloth as good as is made in any other nation, but also in such quantities as may serve the kingdom and all ranks and degrees of persons within the same.' It was pointed out that the Act of 1681 prohibiting foreign cloth, as well as subsequent confirmatory Acts of the Privy Council and the Lords of the Exchequer, had never been expressly rescinded. But 'an allowance or practice' of importing foreign cloth had come into vogue 'to the great discouragement of the Company.' It is therefore asked that the Act of 1681 should be revived, especially as the Company was prepared to be inspected by the Privy Council, 'and at their sight to make sufficient quantities of cloth and at reasonable rates for serving the whole kingdom, which was never formerly offered by any other manufacturer in this nation.'² The petition was remitted to the Committee of Trade to bring an Act, and the draft bill was read a first time on October 8th.³ On August 4, 1698, the Committee of Trade adopted the view that the importation of foreign cloth was a great discouragement to the existing manufactories, and the prohibition of imports of it was recommended.⁴ Accordingly overtures for Acts prohibiting the importation of cloth and the exportation of wool, as well as for encouraging the woollen manufacture, were presented to Parliament.⁵

Meanwhile the strength of the opposition to the existing state of affairs was strengthened by the foundation of several other woollen works, and finally, in June 1699, the exportation of woollen yarn was prohibited by an Act of the Privy Council.¹ Gradually the policy of a return to prohibition was making headway. It was believed that one reason of the decrease in exports was the deficient quality of the cloth exported, one writer stating that a thousand times as much could be sold abroad if it were rightly made.² Accordingly an overture for an Act for measuring and sealing linen and woollen cloth came before Parliament in 1700, which proposed that all pieces of cloth should be of equal length, consisting of a definite number of ells.³ No cloth could be legally sold unless it was sealed by the official sealmaster, who was bound to seal only such cloth as was declared to be made at home. As in the Act of 1685 in favour of the New Mills Company, the sealmaster had the right of administering an oath, and he could compel persons bringing cloth to be sealed to declare the name of the weaver and his place of residence. Cloth not distinguishable from that made abroad was subject to forfeiture.⁴ In 1701 the manufacturers addressed a petition to Parliament against the continued export of wool. They stated that the woollen industry at one time employed 50,000 persons and produced £10,000 sterling a year, and it is now in danger of being destroyed. Exports have ceased to be profitable, indeed those made recently had not realised half the prime cost.⁵ Prior to the export of wool manufactured cloths and stockings had been sent abroad from 'the north country and Stirling,' but at present this trade has ceased and the goods were rotting. A class of cloth, known as 'Galloway whites,' had at one time been sold abroad in large quantities. This continued till sheepskins began to be exported, and now not a single pack of Galloway whites was shipped.¹ This and other representations at length had weight with Parliament, and in 1701 an Act was passed confirming the previous prohibitions of the wearing or importing of foreign cloth as well as the export of yarn. The chief addition to the previous Acts of Privy Council was the provision that instead of any cloth seized under the Act being destroyed it was now to become the property of the informer, on condition that he gave security to export it within six months.²

The passing of this Act ended for a time the more pressing difficulties of the cloth manufacturer. How far the New Mills Company had suffered from the neglect of the Act of 1681 between 1689 and 1701 it is difficult to determine. Curiously enough the first series of the minutes ends about the earlier date and the second part only begins at the later one. On June 4, 1701, it is recorded that in 1699 certain of the salaries at New Mills had been reduced owing to 'the work being low,'³ and in the petition presented to Parliament in 1696 the Company stated that it had suffered great discouragement. Probably the least reliable information as to the financial condition of any undertaking would be its own account given either to servants when their wages were to be revised or to Parliament when further encouragement was to be sought. No doubt the conflicting practices of customs officials must have been very perplexing, and a complete system of non-prohibited imports of cloth would have been better than one under which English and foreign cloth was sometimes admitted, sometimes stopped. This must have meant a very serious inconvenience to the manufacturer, and the New Mills Company, besides, had now to face the competition of other Scottish companies. The very fact that so many of these had been founded before 1701 affords indirect evidence that the cloth trade was considered to have favourable prospects even before the legislation of 1701. This conclusion is confirmed by a comparison of the later with the earlier New Mills minutes. The volume, beginning in 1701, shows that the business had grown during the interval. The capital had been increased, the quantity of cloth made was greater, and the purchases of wool were larger. Besides it happens there is record of a transaction that gives some information as to the dividends actually declared. In January 20, 1703, it would appear that the four previous dividends had amounted to 13, 10, 11, and 18 per cent. respectively, or a total of 52 per cent.¹ This clearly shows that even before 1701 considerable profits were made.

Despite the competition of younger undertakings, the New Mills Company seems to have held its own. By its constitution it dealt directly with leading cloth merchants, and these being members of the Company secured it a respectable sale of its goods. Then, too, it continued to obtain a share of the Government contracts for cloth. But the great difficulty the business had to contend with at this date was the stringency of the local money market. Debtors paid very slowly, the exchange abroad was adverse, and even the Government owed the sum of £1952, 14s. 2d. sterling for over ten years to the managers.¹ The State in other respects continued to support the Company by granting exemption from taxation. Thus in 1702, in the Act levying a ten and a half months' cess on land-rent, 'the lands of Newmills belonging to the woollen manufactory' are excepted, and a similar privilege is recorded in the Act of 1704 for a six months' cess, also in that of 1705 for a seven months' cess.²

One effect of the Act of 1701 is said to have been to have raised the amount of cloth exported, which had grown from 80,000 ells in 1694-5 to 200,000 ells in 1702-3, from the same district.³ The balance of opinion was favourable to the quality of cloth made at this period. One writer says that the cloth industry had, by 1700, arrived at 'a very good degree of perfection,' adding that 'it is not to be expected that a child new-born should do all things as a man of perfect age, and therefore we are bound to have patience and cherish children till they attain to vigour so as to serve us—and so we must do with our manufactures.'⁴ Another author is of opinion that 'woollen-cloth is now made as good as may serve the uses of the country.'⁵ Others were convinced that the industry had progressed far beyond what could have been expected in the comparatively short time since its inception.⁶ In other quarters the judgment was far from being so decisive. The propounder of Reasons general for a Sumptuary Law held that 'Scots manufactures are so little specious when compared to the gaudy imports, that what is manufactured in Scotland will not be used but contemned by the vain—and that is (in experience) almost all.'¹ The minutes of the Company show that, through laxity at the works, there was considerable cause for complaint. In 1702 'scrimp' measure had created 'a great deall of clamour and trouble,' and in the following year there was much annoyance through the ill-milling of the cloth, which was said to be 'full of holes.'² Though the prohibition of 1701 was received at first 'with much popular applause and alacrity,' it was not long before there was dissatisfaction because every man did not immediately experience the advantage he would gain.³ In all probability, in view of the reduction of prices from 1695 to 1700, the plain man would need much argument to convince him of the benefit he would derive from any increase that might be made, on the return to complete protection. At the same time it is worthy of note that it is recorded after 1700 that the tendency on the whole was towards lower prices for cloth.⁴

From the beginning of the eighteenth century to the Union the history of the New Mills Company is embraced in the wider movement of the legislation affecting wool. In 1703 two draft Acts were brought before Parliament, the one for the measurement and sealing of cloth and the other to prohibit the importation of foreign wool.⁵ Against these an overture for an Act was considered which provided for the encouragement of woollen manufactories.¹ Such overtures represented the struggle between the manufacturing and land-owning interests. The prosperity of the proprietors of Galloway and Roxburgh largely depended on the prices realised for wool, and freedom of exporting meant a high return as against a low one when the wool must be consumed at home.² From the point of view of the manufacturer the prohibition of the export of wool was a necessity not only to provide him with cheap raw material but also to limit the supply of wool available for the foreign competitors with whom he must compete if he exported his cloth.

The woolmasters secured a small advantage by endeavouring to obtain permission to export sheepskins with the wool on them.³ The manufacturers presented a petition showing that the proposed Act meant the re-introduction of the export of wool,⁴ and they were joined by the skinners and shoemakers. However, the export of skins was permitted under the condition that shipments should be limited to Borrowstounes, Newport-Glasgow and Dumfries.⁵ In 1704 the case of the woolmasters was carried a stage further by the promotion of a draft Act allowing the export of wool. Against this the manufacturers were heard before Parliament. They represented that 'on the faith of former laws, which were even but temporary, they erected manufactories at great charge, and now to bring in an Act which entirely overturns them seems to be a hardship the like whereof has been unprecedented.'⁶ There was considerable debate on the clauses of the Act, which was finally passed in the form of allowing export of wool and at the same time prohibiting the importation of cloth.¹ At the same time the export of Scottish cloth was exempted from duty, and this was recognised as some compensation to the manufacturer.²

These Acts constituted a complete triumph to the woolmasters, and at the same time a very serious blow to the undertakers of woollen works. According to Defoe, 'the shipping off of the wool from Scotland . . . was a mortal wound given to the industry of the people, discouraging all attempts of manufacturing among them.' The recommencement of the exportation of wool was coincident with the cessation of the exportation of cloth to Sweden and the Baltic, for 'the Swedes now took their wool from Scotland, which they had not been used to do, by which it was apparent, they (having the wool) made the manufactures themselves, and this was a dead loss to Scotland just so much as the employment and labour of the poor amounted to.'³

These events were unfortunate for Scotland when commercial relations with England came to be adjusted at the Union. For many years past it had been the fixed policy of England to discourage the cloth trade elsewhere and concentrate it at home. For instance, in 1698, the House of Commons, noticing the growth of the woollen trade in Ireland, stated in a petition to the king that 'it behoves them like their ancestors to be jealous of the establishment and increase of this trade elsewhere.' Accordingly, by a king's letter, the Government in Ireland was directed to discourage the woollen trade and encourage the manufacture of linen.¹ The same policy was now to be applied to Scotland, but with this difference, that the Union being of the nature of a contract between the two countries, Scotland had the right of bargaining for a quid pro quo to compensate for losses due to the Union. England, in conformity with a definite policy, required the prohibition of the export of wool, and therefore some compensation was awarded to the woolmasters affected by the change through subsidies to the manufacture of coarse cloth. It was widely felt that there was a hardship to Scottish producers in the destruction of the fine cloth-works already established. For, with freedom of trade between the two countries, English cloth ceased to be prohibited, and it was sold at much lower prices than the home product.² At the same time it must be remembered that Scotland could only be compensated once for the same thing. Granting the export of wool, for the cessation of which compensation was given, it was impossible that allowance should be made for the loss of protection to the fine cloth manufacture, for this trade had already been very seriously endangered by the same permission of freedom to export wool. In fact there were, up till 1704, two avenues possible for a claim for compensation. The one the continuation of the prohibition of the export of wool, in which case there would have been grounds in equity for allowances to be made to the manufacturers of broadcloth for the loss of protection against English imports. In view of the anxiety of England to secure the cloth trade, it is possible the Scottish position, in bargaining on the terms of the Union, would have been stronger on this than on the grounds that had to be taken up, namely, the loss of the right to export wool.¹

After the Union some of the early manufactories turned their attention to the production of inferior cloth, and petitions were presented from Wm. Hogg of Harcarse and the Musselburgh Company, making certain offers in return for grants from the Equivalent.² The New Mills Company does not appear to have made any attempt to adapt itself to the changed circumstances, and preparations were made for the winding up of the Company. The necessary steps could only be made very slowly, as there was difficulty in obtaining payment of some long outstanding accounts due by the Government for army clothing.³ At a meeting held towards the end of February 1711 it was decided to accept proposals from intending purchasers of the lands of New Mills, the dead stock and privileges of the Company.⁴ Meetings of the members were called for the 3rd of June, the 11th of June, and the 28th of June of the same year.⁵ In February 1712 the property was again advertised for sale with the hall of the Company in Edinburgh.⁶ Early in May it was announced that the sale had been adjourned.⁷ Evidently there was important business for which it was difficult to obtain a quorum, for, during the last days of October an advertisement was published to the effect that 'the Proprietors of the New Mills Manufactory are entreated to meet at their hall on Monday November 3rd at 2 o'clock in the afternoon anent special affairs of the Company.'⁸ As a result of this meeting it was decided to offer the property in separate lots, and, in the next issue of the Scots Courant, the lands of New Mills were advertised for public sale and 'the proprietors were entreated to be present at the Roup'¹ on December 1st at 3 o'clock. The hall was to be roused on the 8th, but subsequently the sale was adjourned to February 16, 1713.² Just before the sale of the hall a drawing of the remaining cloth by lot was held on February 2nd.³ Last of all, on March 20th, the machinery and plant were sold. It comprised tools for the manufacture of broadcloth, such as 'shiffers, cards, hand-stocks with and without teassels, weavers'-looms, spinning-wheels, weavers'-shuttles, weavers' reeds, reels, sheer-boards and dubbing boards, brushes, burling tables, tenters, iron stove, two hot presses, one cold press, pressing planks, pressing papers, also Spanish wool dyed several mixtures.'⁴

The lands of New Mills were purchased by Colonel Charteris, and he changed the name to Amisfield, so that with the winding-up of the Company the designation of its property disappeared.

BOOK FOR THE MANUFACTORIES

EDINBROUGH, ANNO DOMINI, JUNE 22TH 1681

Edinburgh, June 22th 1681.

Present att the first meeting of the manufactories—Mr. Robertt Blackwood, Robertt Blackwood, George Home, Samuel McClelland, and John Drummond.¹

1. First they agreed to severall heads of the great contract and ordained coppies thereof to be given to the members of the Society, and there thoughts to be desired of the forsaid heads and what they think fitt to add or diminish against the next meeting.²

¹ The foundation and organisation of the society has been detailed in the Introduction. The deed of copartnership had been signed on May 10th, and the first meeting of those directing the undertaking was held on June 22nd. These officials, corresponding to modern directors, were called 'managers,' and the chairman was known as the præses (vide §191). The 'master,' to whom reference is made in subsequent entries, was the manager of the works. There were five 'managers,' of whom three retired annually.

Of the first body of managers the most prominent man was Robert Blackwood, who with Sir James Stanfield had been instrumental in founding the society. There were two Robert Blackwoods managers of the Newmills company, and one of them was in 1691 both a bailie and a master of the 'Company of Edinburgh Merchants' (Edinburgh Merchants, by Robert Chambers, 1859, p. 23), and a few years later it is recorded that a Robert Blackwood was a director of the Darien Company, in which he held £3000 stock, as well as being a member of the 'Committee of Improvements' of that company.—Darien Papers, pp. 31-34.

² The 'great contract' was the articles of copartnership of the company, and corresponded to the modern articles of association. It does not appear to have been entered in the Register House, but a copy (which appears to have been used in a lawsuit) came to light while this work was in the press, and is printed at the end of the Introduction under the title of 'Articles agreed upon by the merchants erectors of the cloath Manufactorie at Newmilnes.' Its chief provisions are also recorded in a pamphlet published in the interests of the company, a copy of which is preserved in the Advocates' Library, entitled A Representation of the Advantages that would arise to this Kingdom by the erecting and improving of Manufactories, but more especially that of Woollen-cloath, with an answer to the objections against this last, and an account of its present state and the success of the

2. The cash keeper is appointed to bring in his accounts against next meeting, and who have not paid.¹

3. That the cash keeper send James Foules bills next post for two hundredth pound sterling.

4. Comissionatt Robertt Blackwood to send for 1000 ells of Galloway whytes from 11s. to 13 per ell.²

5. George Home being ordered to look for a copper for dyeing reports that the copper he was ordered to inspect ryses in the bottome, and for deying must be otherways.

Edinburgh, June 27th 1681.

Absent John Drummond and James Standfield.

6. John Drummond appointed to give to John Angly, Sir James Stamfeildis man, upon the said Sir James Stamfeildis advice by his order fifty pound sterling to buy att Peebles als much worsetts as he shall find fitteing for makeing course cloathes.³

7. Appoints John Drummond to give the copies of the Manufactory at New-Milnes for Wollen-cloath, serges, silk and worsted stockings and of the rules and methods observed by the undertakers in managing it with proposals to such as shall be willing to join in that Work. Edinburgh, 1683.

¹ The reference to those 'who have not paid' evidently refers to members who were in arrear in paying calls due on their shares. Vide entry July 29th, 1681.

² As a general rule, throughout these minutes, when a sum of money is mentioned without the addition of the word 'sterling,' Scottish currency is to be understood. The 'par of exchange' between pounds Scots and pounds sterling was 12 : 1. In other words, neglecting the exchange rates, which were at this time adverse to Scotland (A Representation . . . of the advantages of erecting manufactories, etc., ut supra, p. 3), pounds Scots may be converted into pounds sterling by dividing by 12 and conversely. It is to be noted, however, that the price of cloth per ell is generally quoted in sterling, even where this is not expressly stated, e.g. § 69.

³ 'Stamfeildis' is Stanfield. Sir James Stanfield was one of the promoters of the company, and leased it the mills at Newmills. At this period he was a man of considerable wealth, and he had many transactions with noblemen in giving them monetary accommodation. He was also a Member of Parliament

Edinburgh, July 15, 1681.

The managers all present.

12. Immediatly to cause be made ready one copper of for Haddington until his death in 1687. The latter event was very tragic in its surroundings. Stanfield was found dead near his house, and suspicions were aroused against his son, who, having fallen into dissolute courses, had seriously embarrassed his father. These suspicions were accentuated by a bleeding or movement of the corpse on the approach of the son. The latter was eventually tried for parricide and convicted. The execution was marked by a distressing accident through the breaking of the rope.—Chambers's Domestic Annals of Scotland, vol. ii. passim; Chronological Notes of Scottish Affairs by Lord Fountainhall, Edinburgh, 1822, pp. 233-236.

¹ The 'cards' to which reference is made in this and subsequent sections were 'wool-cards.' There was a manufactory for making these at Leith, which had been established in 1663 (Reg. Mag. Sig. Com. Cart. Appret., lib. x. (1676-84) f. 142—General Register House). This industry is noteworthy as one of the few in Scotland which obtained a monopoly from the state. For this reason its existence was repeatedly threatened by the Convention of Royal Burghs (Records, 1677-1711, pp. 21, 59, 141, 155, 210, 229, 303). The Parliamentary Papers at the General Register House contain many documents relating to this undertaking, which are characterised both by considerable dialectical ability and by great powers of invective.

311. Ordered when clothes are delivered out all Spanish both ab³ and warp.

Item ane other of English warp and Spanish ab.

Item ane other of English 2^d both ab and warp.

² According to a previous order, as far as possible, coarse wool was not to be purchased. Therefore the three looms last mentioned were to be employed on mixtures and any coarse wool ('if any bee'), which was to be dyed red, black, or any other colour desired.

³ 'ab' or (as below) 'abb' appears to stand for 'ebb' (vide §331). The effect of the classification was to distinguish different qualities of cloth by numbers, according to the nature of the 'abb' or 'ebb' and 'werp.'

Item ane other of English thrids ab and warp.

Item ane other of dito for warp and 2^d abb then Mr. Marr is to place those peeces as he gives them out to the spinners and weavers in his book in the same manner and with the same distinctionis as is above mentioned with their numbers as alsoe he is to observe what ells are laid in warping of one or other of the peeces above mentioned with there numbers as above to follow this method with the silk stocken weavers.

312. When you receive silk you to give of all silk of a collour if it be 3 or 4 5 or 6 ^{lbs} to one man and weight it out to him and when the stockens of that silk comes back you are to weightt it back and know if you receive back the silk allowing the waste which you are likewise to keep by you till you discharge yourselfe thereby.

313. You are to pay for every pair of hose 2s. 6d. per pair and to Mr. Pike 2s. 10d. per pair and for womens hose two shillings per pair and if any stockens be desyred whose weight shall come to foure or more ounces the stocken weaver is to have ten pence per ounce for every ounce above three besyde his ordinary price.

To weightt every peece of cloth as it comes in.

314. To dey the master's daughter's peece stuff and your own remnants.

315. Pay the master of the boyes weekly as you doe our servants.

316. Item you are ordered to tell the stocken weavers not to make stockens for ordinary above 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. or at most not above 3 oz. and if they doe in the contraire he is to rebate 4d. per pair off the work.

317. Orders James Marr to give the masters daughter ten dollars for numbering the clothes in times past and for other services done for the companey when they are out. Ro. Blackwood.

² 'The counsell' is the Privy Council. At this date the company was endeavouring to obtain contracts for supplying cloth for army uniforms. Vide Introduction, Part IV.

624. The managers considering that my Lord Secretary at his departur desired that our proposalls in favours of the manufactory might be sent up to hime and haveing read the proposalls that ware already consulted together with the draught of a letter to be sent to David Lindsay.¹

625. They approve of the same and orders them to be sent up and to be dabled in the letter book. Ja. Nicolson.

Mr. Debnam's famley being now com to toun in order to their transportation to London and finding there passage will be dear which the Company is oblidged to by contrack with Mr. Debnam we apoynt George Home to give them ten pounds in order to their transportation and to pay Mistres Debnam ten dollars for her gown for this currant year and to clear his daughters all their by past weadges they have to crave any manner of way that they have no just cause of complaint. Sam. M^cClellan.

Edenbrugh, 30th Agust 1689.

Present Dean of Gild Nicolsone; James Bowden and George Home.

Dean of Gild Nicolsone, Preces.

1266. Orders George Home to clire with the Earle of Leiven and take bills for the ballance payable at London exchange at two per cent, the ballance being about five hundred and fifty pounds of quhich orders hime to remitt to Mr. Spurroway ane hundred pounds sterline rebateing the exchange and the rest is to lye in his hand till Mertimes nixt for paymentt of my Lord Advocat.

Orders Alexander Herreot to enter the folloueing articles in the books viz :—To give cridet to Mr. Drumond and partner for the folloueing articles conteaned in ane account current sent by them to September last.

¹ William Black was himself a woollen manufacturer. He owned a factory known as Gordon's Mill or Northmills, near Aberdeen. The method on which the undertaking was conducted is worth quoting : 'By the constitution thereof the servants are bound to work for any of the country who shall happen to employ them in any sort of manufacture, and work only for the petitioner when they have nothing else to do—yea, when any work comes from the country his is laid aside.' It is not surprising to learn that Black was sole owner of his factory, 'since,' as he quaintly expresses it, 'a society would not so unanimously agree in running such hazard' (Acts of Parl. xi. p. 81). Black was the author of The Privileges of the Royal Burrows, Edinburgh, 1707.

Possibly the Act referred to in the text was that summarised in the Introduction, Part IV., which recapitulated certain proclamations of the Privy Council prohibiting the importation of foreign cloth.

² The 'card-work' was probably the wool-card manufactory at Leith, which had been founded as early as 1663, and which had a monopoly. The master was Ewan MacGrigor, who is to be thanked for some of the most pungent writing to be found in the petitions presented to Parliament during this period and who evoked equally strong language from the Convention of Royal Burghs. The latter having characterised the monopoly 'as an intolerable grievance,' against which there 'was one universal complaint' . . . 'even from whole parishes which had been distressed by the masters of the manufactory,' MacGrigor replied that any prosecutions which his company had started had been directed against the importation of 'that rotten stuff of foreign old cards,' which 'though in a manner cast away abroad and bought up for little or nothing, yet are endeavoured to be imposed on this kingdom.' In fact, according to this statement, the whole alledged attacks arose from 'the whippers and complaints of querulous, envious persons.'

Orders to uryt to David Maxwell not to dye any more cou[r]se blacks at least quhat is below 8/ first coast to the Company untill farder orders.

Orders lykuayes to uryt to him that the brushes for black cloaths be layed up except when makeing use of for blacks in regaird severall marchants complaine of whyt hairs that are in black cloaths.

That David Maxwell advyse quhat part of the 10 patrons sent him the 30th April last are put foruward, and when they may be expected in and of the 3 numbers then mentioned viz :—No. 93, 94, and 95.

Bailly Marjoreibanks and Alexander Herreot who were conjoynd with the Committee appoynted to inspect the work and books thereto belonging they report from the work at Neumilnes.

Report by Bailly Marjoreibanks and Alexander Herreot
from the work.

That Mr. Maxwell is takeing all possible care to prevent the export of wooll and that Mr. Maxwell thinks it fitt to gett back the servant belonged to his work that runn away and ingadged in the manufactory at Hamiltone to be ane terror to others to runn away; and that there are some other servants runn away and gone to my Lady Harcut to whom Bailly Marjoreibanks and Mr. Maxwell have wrot a descreet letter remandeing them back.

That there is noe changeing of the long wooll with the short wooll at Glasgow except in wholl fleeces because when they cast all there short wooll together there is at least three sorts of it courser and fyner and quhen mixt together cannot be againe resorted for the one confounds the other, bot if the master of Glasgow work were in Edinburgh and could be prevailed with to come to Neumilnes he and Mr. Maxwell could concert the bussiness better then in wryteing.

As to fyne and midling blacks Mr. Maxwell sayes that with advyse of the Manadgers he shall keep alwayes $\frac{2}{3}$ parts of the work for prepareing all whyt cloaths to be ready for blacks scarletts or other heale collours till contrary orders.

As to the wooll to be sold to Stirling men, Mr. Maxwell reports that he will lay up what quanteties he cann make and advyse the Manadgers of the quantety and quhen they may come and sie it.

As to quhat Bailly Blackuood desyres to be informed of the breadths and pryce of cours reid cloath and scarlet Mr. Maxwell cannot condescend upone the pryce presently seing it seems it uould be too generall, therefor he proposes that it will be safest both for the Bailly and the Company that the Bailly come out to Neumilnes where he shall have first his choyse of whyt cloaths which he may by and take up there numbers which shall be specially dyed for the Baillies accompt, which being done the Bailly will never have reasone to complaine of any, and after the choyse is made Mr. Maxwell sayes he will condescend upone the pryses and advyse the Manadgers thereof and that he will performe the dyeing and all thats needfull therein in $\frac{2}{m}$ tyme after the signeing of the contracts, and is of opinion that the Company cann furnish Scarlet cloaths to Bailly Blackuood at 18/ per ell and if within 70 ells cann doe it in $\frac{2}{m}$ tyme.

Reports that they had considered the seaverall books at Neumilnes and are of opinion that the books there kept could not give satisfacione as to what is past in every speciall charge of the work; and they had formed seaverall books with speciall directiones to keep the same aright, bot that it was told them by the master of the work that he thought the persones who had a part of the service and kept such accompts could not closly follow the forme. As to which it was ansuered by James Dunlop that provydeing the Company would allow him ane suitable allowance for one to uryt at his directione he thought he could be in a conditione to ansuer the demands of the Company as to the cleareing and giving satisfactione to every accompt of charge in the work.

Orders that comissione be given to Mr. William Frazer in London to buy fyve balls of the best Sigovia wooll for accompt of the Company.

Orders to wryt to J. Foullis that the ballance dew by him to Mr. James Mureisone on the Companie's accompt shall be payed or remitted upone said J. Foullis and Moreisone's discharge.

Robert Johnstone, marchant in Edinburgh haveing produced ane dispositione granted by Mr. William Aitchisone in London deceast to him, and Mathew Aitchisone in Glasgow quhereby he dispones to them his share in the Companie with all the profiteis past and to come aryseing therefrom, therefor desyres the same to be recorded with pouer to him to transferr the said shares, and also intimating that he was to transferr it to Comissary Pitkairne.

Orders Alexander Weir to gett the forsaid dispositione registrat and keep the extract as alsoe Mathew Aitchisone's procuratorie to said Robert Johnstone, and to enter the same in the transferr books as alsoe to enter Mr. Johnstone's transferr in favours of the said Comissar Pitkairne being in presence of a Manadger.

And that he make knowne to the other servants in the work that is not in the pouer of any manufactory or privat persone to seduce or hyre any servants from the work without speciall liberty had and obtained from the master thereof.

¹ Sir John Shaw of Greenock was prominent in the industrial enterprises of the period. In 1696 he promoted a private Act for the formation of a company for fishing and to make salt in Scotland. This company was to have a 'considerable' stock.—Acts of Parliament, vol. x. p. 80. Chambers records that 'an entire hogshead' of claret was consumed at his wedding in 1701. He was involved in a serious altercation with James Houston, son of Sir Patrick Houston. The two 'jostled' each other in Edinburgh, and Shaw beat Houston with his cane. The cane escaped from his hand, whereupon he drew his sword 'and passed it twice through Houston's body.' The injured man made a partial recovery and eventually obtained £500 damages.—Domestic Annals of Scotland, vol. iii. pp. 240, 402.

¹ The 'agio' of the Bank of Amsterdam was the premium on a credit with the bank as compared with the same nominal amount in metallic currency. The agio was due to the fact that the metallic money was light and clipped, whereas the bank-credit represented the mint value. The reasons for establishing the system as well as the economic principles involved are fully explained by Adam Smith in his 'Digression concerning Banks of Deposit and more particularly concerning that of Amsterdam.'—Wealth of Nations, Book IV. ch. iii. (edited by Professor Nicholson, pp. 194-198; edition by Dr. E. Cannan, vol. i. pp. 443-452). The passage above is dealt with in the Introduction, Part I.

Edinburgh, April 15th 1702.

[At this meeting no business was transacted except the routine of approving of sales made.]

Edinburgh, 22nd Aprill, 1702.

Approves of the payments following made by Alexander Weir since the 28th March last.

To James Dunlope for the use of the work	£75 : 0 : 0	1702 April 11th.
To Gavin Plummer $\frac{x}{yr}$ annual rent of £4000 to Martimas 1701, £220 Scots inde	18 : 6 : 8
To Robert Nicolson $\frac{x}{yr}$ annual rent of £800 to Candlemass 1702 ¹	44 : 0 : 0
To James Dunlope for the use of the work	50 : 0 : 0
To James Gordone, senior, for his bill on Alexander Gordon att the house of Mr. John Gordon, jun ^r merchant in Roterdame payable and remitted att double usance to		20th.

¹ The figure before 'annual rent' in this and other places (cf. supra, pp. 279, 280, 288) presents some difficulty. In the MS. it resembles a fraction with either a 7 or a 4 for the denominator; but if this had been intended, the passage above would read ' $\frac{1}{4}$ annual rent of £800 . . . £44,' which would give 22 per cent. per annum on the Company's bonds. Since the rate on these obligations at this time was $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. (cf. supra, p. 280), it is evident that one year's 'annual rent' is intended, and on the analogy of contractions, such as $\frac{10}{ds}$, $\frac{x}{mo}$, $\frac{2}{usu}$, the formula has been printed $\frac{x}{y}$ or $\frac{1}{yr}$.

Orders and directiones to David Maxwell,

1st. Orders to transmitt to David Maxwell the following derrections viz:—

In respect wee find that there is here in the hall sufficient quantities of all sorts of course mixt cloaths therefore to make noe more new numbers of such neither to hasten such course cloaths if only in yearne, but if they be in the milne mens hands may be forward only by litle and litle soe as not to stope other cloaths that is more for present and currant sale and to observe this stope untill wee think needfull to acquaint you thereof.

2nd. As to fyne and middlen mixt cloaths that he only forward by litle and litle such as are in the milne mens hands and some alsoe that are in the yearne but to make very few new numbers thereof untill such time as wee shall send you new patrons.

3rd. To forward with all haste imaginable the course red cloaths for performeing conditions contained in two separate contracts with Captain Coult in the castle of Edinburgh and with Lowrance Doun as formerly advised, the former betwixt and the 20th current and the other betuixt and the 15th August next, both which were limited by your letters.

4th. In respect there is neither fyne nor middling black cloaths here att present therefore to forward hither with all requisite conveniencie and make a stock of 3 or 400 ends always to lye att the work, and as soon as any quantity litle or meikle thereof are dyed black immediately then to make again new numbers soe as the quantity dyed may always be supplied with the like quantities of whytt new made.

5th. In respect that the fyne silver gray cullored cloath for second murning is much demanded att present therefore to forward hether with all convenient speed all these which are given out to your spiners any where since the 20th April last by past.

6th. In regard that the whole old and new quantities of your third and fourth cast be 3rd and fourth cast course whytt cloaths are all already ordered to be dyed red, therefore to take care and putt to work people with all requisite conveniencie to make ready a stock of these ordinary course whytt cloaths att least 150 whole peice which may lye ready, to waite orders from the Manadgers how the same is to be dyed and alsoe to take care that when any pairt of the saids 150 are dyed that the like quantities of new whytt cloaths may always be supplied.

The Manadgers have been prepareing measures whereby to give orders for keeping just and regular accounts of all sorts of cloath made att the work and how they doe any ways come in to this hall and therefore to prevent the trouble and difficulty that may happen do find it expedient that what ever be the numbers of the cloath from the wooll whether it be ane mixt cloath or a whytt cloath that the said number is never to be altered when sent in here, for wee apprehend (only by conjecture) that ye keep up ane number of whytt cloaths which we approve of but when you dye any of these whytt cloaths either in red, blew, yellow, green or black, that you are accustomed to alter the number it had when whytt and gives it a new number when dyed, which custome of altering of numbers wee strictly discharge from this very time and requires that in all time comeing whatever collouer it be dyed that it doe always retaine (without altering) the first number it had when whytt.

This day James Wood hes signed a dispositione by him to the Manadgers corroborating his bonds to the Companie and which is delyvered to Alexander Weir to keep.

This day Robert Watson of Muirhouse, marchant in Edinburgh, tutor dative to Alexander Deans sone to the deceast Robert Deans and nephew and executor testamentar nominat by the deceast Thomas Deans sone to the deceast James Deans, bailly in the Cannongate,¹ did lay befor the Manadgers the ¹ James Deans had started a ropework at Newhaven. This was a failure, and in 1694 Thomas Deans received the 'privilege of a manufactory' under the Act of 1681 on his undertaking to re-start the undertaking.

The remainder of this entry is of great interest and importance as affording some light on the profits made by the Company. It should be premised that at this period the stockholder was credited with the dividend and debited with his purchases from the Company. Therefore in some cases the profits standing to a stockholder's credit would not give the total of his dividends being subject to deductions for his indebtedness to the undertaking. In other cases where no purchases had been made the 'profits' would of course be the sum of the dividends not withdrawn, and there might be a considerable amount accrued in this way, since, as in the East India Company, members were expected to apply personally for their warrants. It appears too from previous entries that there had been some dispute as to the ownership of the Deans' holding. Therefore it may have happened that one parcel of stock represented a balance of dividends less amount due to the Company, while another was transferrable cum dividends said Thomas Deans his confirmed testament testamantar datted 29th December last in which the said Thomas Deans hes of stock in the woollen manufactory of Neumilnes three thousand pounds Scotts with £1207:7/ mony forsaid of by gone profits. Item given in by Thomas Pitts to which the said defunct had rycht £1200 Scotts with £156 of bygone profits. Item, more given in by David Foullis to which the said defunct had rycht, £2400 Scotts with £744 Scotts of profits. Item stocked in by James Foullis to which the said defunct had rycht £2400 Scotts with £504 mony forsaid of profits and therefor craved that the said shares and profits be transferred in the person of the said Alexander Deans and the profits dew thereunto be payed to him.

Orders that Alexander Weir doe enter quhat is above in relatione to Robert Watson of Muirhouse in the transferr book and to take the said Robert Watsone his acceptance thereof in name and behalfe of the said Alexander Deans the minor, and to take his receipt for the profits upone payment of the samyne, all arreistments either against the said Thomas Deans or the above named persones from whom he had rycht being alwayes first purged.

Resolved that the Manadgers goe to Neumilnes Thursday next to inspect James Dunlop's books as to the ballanceing of the wooll and also his other books and visit the work.

without deductions. Applying these principles to the sums mentioned in the text, we get the following data :—

Stock.	Accumulated Dividends.	Per Cent.	Remarks.
£3000 Scots.	£1207 7 Scots.	£40 4 10	Evidently an odd amount.
1200	156 „	13	13
2400	744 „	31	? 18% + 13%
2400	504 „	21	? 11% + 10%

It was recorded on June 3, 1702 that dividends of 18%, 11%, 10% had been declared immediately previous to that date. The annual meeting was in May, and, since the dividend on £1200 was an even 13%, this may have been the distribution for 1702. If this were so, the accrued dividends on the two parcels of stock of £2400 Scots each would be accounted for as being the sum of an 18% and a 13% dividend in the one case and of a 10% and 11% dividend in the other. On March 10th (vide infra) the payment made in sterling was approved.

REPORT OF THE EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SCOTTISH HISTORY SOCIETY

THE EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY was held on Saturday, the 19th November 1904, in Dowell's Rooms, George Street, Edinburgh,—Mr. C. J. GUTHRIE, K.C., presiding.

The INT. HON. SECRETARY read the Report of the Council, which was as follows:—

The Council have, with deep regret, to report the great loss the Society has, since its last meeting, sustained in the death of the Hon. Secretary, Dr. Law, which occurred on the 12th of March. A special meeting of Council was held on the 29th of that month, when the following resolution was adopted and recorded in their Minutes:—

The Council unanimously resolved to place on record in their Minutes an expression of their sense of the great loss sustained by the Society through the death of their Hon. Secretary, Dr. Law, and of their appreciation of his accurate and extensive learning, his critical acumen, and the unvarying tact and courtesy which he brought to bear upon the work of the Society as its Secretary during the eighteen years of its existence—work to which the Society owes, in a large measure, its continuous success.

The Council further desire to record an expression of their sincere sympathy with Mrs. Law and her family in their bereavement, and direct an excerpt of this minute to be sent to Mrs. Law.

The above resolution was gratefully and courteously acknowledged by Mrs. Law on behalf of herself and her family.

At the same Meeting the Council arranged that Mr. J. T. Clark should act as interim Hon. Secretary till the end of the current year. Mr. A. Francis Steuart consenting to continue to superintend the passing through the press of the two publications then in progress.

The changes in the membership during the year amount to eighteen—eleven by death and seven by resignation. After the vacancies thus caused have been filled up there will still be forty-three candidates for admission. The libraries on the list now number eighty.

None of the publications due for the current year have yet been issued; but two of them, viz.: The Wardlaw Manuscript, edited by Mr. William Mackay, and The Minutes of the New Mills Cloth Manufacturing Company, which is being brought out under the editorship of Mr. Robert Scott, of St. Andrews University, are practically completed, and will be in the hands of Members in a few weeks. The third volume for the year, being Volume 1. of the Justiciary Court Records, 1661-1678, which is being edited by Sheriff Scott Moncrieff, is so far printed off that in all likelihood it will be issued before the end of this year.

The publications which the Council have decided to issue to members for the year 1904-1905 will be taken from among the following:—1. A volume of the Statuta Ecclesiae Scotticanae, which is being brought out with a translation and Notes by Dr. David Patrick. 2. A volume of Macfarlane's

Topographical Collections, edited by Sir Arthur Mitchell from the MS. in the Advocates' Library. This MS. has all been transcribed, and the first portion of it is now in the printer's hands. 3. The Records of the Baron Court of Stitchill. These Records, which extend in an unbroken series from the 8th January 1655 to the 21st of November 1807, were transcribed from the original in Stitchill House, Roxburghshire, by the late Rev. George Gunn, minister of Stitchill, and they have now been offered to the Society by Dr. Gunn of Peebles, who has also undertaken to edit them. The work is all ready to go to press. 4. Volume II. of the Justiciary Court Records, 1661-1678. The Council hope that with the funds at their disposal they will again be able to issue three of these works as the publications for 1904-1905.

The Members of Council who at this time fall to retire by rotation are Sir Arthur Mitchell, the Rev. Canon Murdoch, and Professor Lodge. It is proposed that Sir Arthur Mitchell and Canon Murdoch be re-elected, that Mr. A. Francis Steuart be elected in room of Professor Lodge, and that the present arrangement with regard to the Secretaryship be continued for another year.

The annexed abstract of the accounts of the Hon. Treasurer shows that there was a balance at 24th October 1903 of £588, 10s. 4d., that the income for the year 1903-1904 had been £540, 13s. 8d., and the expenditure £597, 1s. 5d., being an excess of expenditure over income of £56, 7s. 9d. The balance in favour of the Society as at 31st October 1904 is £532, 2s. 7d.

THE CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the Report, said it was with great although melancholy satisfaction that they remembered that they did not allow their late Secretary to leave them without an expression last year in that room of their gratitude for his services as Secretary of that Society, and their admiration for his brilliant abilities and his profound learning, and—what probably he valued much more than all—of their sincere affection for the man himself. Dr. Law's was a unique personality, formed by a unique experience and a unique career. He was a remarkable combination, so able, so learned, and yet to the very end he retained the simple-heartedness of childhood, and the chivalry and enthusiasm of youth. He had left a great monument in that Society in those remarkable forty-five volumes of theirs. A number of them would never have had an existence at all but for him, and there was not a single one of them that did not owe a great deal to his encouragement, his sympathy, and his generous and unremitting labour for other people.

Speaking of the publications of the Society, he said their books must be considered remarkable when they thought not only of the sources, home and foreign, from which they were drawn—even from the Vatican—but when they considered the various men, Roman Catholic, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, who had been got to do their work. Of the three volumes to be put immediately in their hands, he was bound to say The Wardlaw Manuscript interested him most. The man who wrote it—the Rev. James Fraser, was one of the most notable of Scotsmen. He was no ordinary parish minister; he served for a year in the Pope's Guard at Rome. He was able not only to write in English and Gaelic, but in French, German, Italian, Hebrew, Latin, and Greek, and he had travelled in nearly every country in Europe. He wrote fifty-three books. None of them had been published, but one of the manuscripts was now to be put in their hands by Mr. William Mackay of Inverness.

The second of their publications, The Minutes of the New Mills Cloth Manufacturing Company, had a valuable introduction dealing with the whole history of trade in Scotland. Many of the Minutes of the Company were delightfully quaint. The New Mills Company did a large business in military uniforms, and he saw the order was given by the Privy Council to this manufactory to make the uniforms to 'distinguish the "sojers" from other vagrant and skulking persons.' The manuscript also brought out that these were the delightful days for the supporters of Protection against Free Trade. It was not a mere question of a tariff upon outside cloth—English cloth—but any person found in the possession of English cloth had to hand it over, and it was burned by the common hangman! These were the good old days for the makers of cloth ; whether for the wearers might be another question.

The last book they had was Justiciary Court Records. The dates were quite enough to suggest its quality—1661-1678, the killing times. Sheriff Scott Moncrieff informed him that the book would contain a full account of the trial of that uncanny person, Major Weir.

The report was a very satisfactory one ; and he was sure they all felt that their Society was rendering a very special service. It enabled people to form their own opinions on historical matters. People professed to have opinions on historical matters, but generally speaking they simply repeated opinions of Mr. Froude or Lord Macaulay or Mr. Andrew Lang ; and it was only by going through the original manuscripts that one could really come to have what one could honestly say was their own opinion.

Their only regret that day was that they had not in the chair that great man, Professor Masson.

Mr. D. W. KEMP, Leith, seconded, and suggested that the Society should look into the Parish Records of Scotland.

The Report was adopted.

RULES

1. THE object of the Society is the discovery and printing, under selected editorship, of unpublished documents illustrative of the civil, religious, and social history of Scotland. The Society will also undertake, in exceptional cases, to issue translations of printed works of a similar nature, which have not hitherto been accessible in English.

2. The number of Members of the Society shall be limited to 400.

3. The affairs of the Society shall be managed by a Council, consisting of a Chairman, Treasurer, Secretary, and twelve elected Members, five to make a quorum. Three of the twelve elected Members shall retire annually by ballot, but they shall be eligible for re-election.

4. The Annual Subscription to the Society shall be One Guinea. The publications of the Society shall not be delivered to any Member whose Subscription is in arrear, and no Member shall be permitted to receive more than one copy of the Society's publications.

5. The Society will undertake the issue of its own publications, i.e. without the intervention of a publisher or any other paid agent.

6. The Society will issue yearly two octavo volumes of about 320 pages each.

7. An Annual General Meeting of the Society shall be held at the end of October, or at an approximate date to be determined by the Council.

8. Two stated Meetings of the Council shall be held each year, one on the last Tuesday of May, the other on the Tuesday preceding the day upon which the Annual General Meeting shall be held. The Secretary, on the request of three Members of the Council, shall call a special meeting of the Council.

9. Editors shall receive 20 copies of each volume they edit for the Society.

10. The owners of Manuscripts published by the Society will also be presented with a certain number of copies.

11. The Annual Balance-Sheet, Rules, and List of Members shall be printed.

12. No alteration shall be made in these Rules except at a General Meeting of the Society. A fortnight's notice of any alteration to be proposed shall be given to the Members of the Council.
