HON, WILLIAM L. DAVIDSON. The people of every state are especially jealous of the honor and integrity of their highest courts, and Texas has always had special reason to be proud of the attainments and personal character of its judges and the dignified, able and impartial manner in which justice has been administered from the state courts. During more than twenty years of membership as associate and part of the time as presiding judge of the court of common appeal, Judge Davidson has discharged his judicial functions with a degree of human and technical understanding that rarely comes to the public service. Judge Davidson comes from that hardy, courageous and splendid stock of Scotch-Irish people and his ancestors were among the early settlers of the Atlantic colonies. Through his own record he has added much to the lustre of the name of this country.

William L. Davidson was born November 5, 1845, near Coffeeville, Mississippi. The Davidson family was originally Scotch, and the Davidson clan was one of the strongest in Scotland. From the north of Ireland they emigrated to North Carolina, while Judge Davidson's maternal grandparents were of the Irish stock of Mitchell, who came to the United States previous to the Revolutionary war. Judge Davidson is a son of Rev. Ashury and Mary M. (Fly) Davidson. His father, a native of Tennessee, was a Methodist minister and was one of the delegates and members of the Methodist Episcopal Conference at Louisville, Kentucky, in 1884, which inaugurated the division of the Methodist church into northern and southern branches, Rev. Davidson came to Texas in 1851, locating in Gonzales, and for many years was Presiding Elder of that district of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His death occurred December 21, 1868.

Judge Davidson received his early education in the country schools, and was about sixteen years old when the war broke out between the states. Though little more than a boy, he bore a full share of individual service practically from the beginning until the close of the great conflict. He was with the troops in 1861, but did not regularly enlist until March 10, 1862, when he became a member of Cook's Heavy Artillery, and in 1863 was transferred to Company B of the Thirty-second Texas Cavalry, attached to General Tom Green's Division. From that time until the close of the war he saw service in Louisiana and eastern and northern Texas. After the war he took up the study of law in Gonzales and in June, 1871, was admitted to the bar.

Judge Davidson carried on a successful private practice at Gonzales until January, 1887, and since then has been continuously in the public service. Governor L. S. Ross appointed him assistant attorney general of the state, and, by reappointment from the same governor in January, 1899, served four years in that office. On February 1, 1891, on the resignation of Judge Sam A. Willson from the court of criminal appeals, Governor Hogg appointed Judge Davidson as Willson's successor. He qualified for this high judicial position on February 5, 1891, and his service has been continuous for more than twenty-three years. From January 1, 1899, until July 1, 1913, Judge Davidson was presiding judge of the court.

Judge Davidson is a Past Master of Gonzales Lodge, No. 3, A. F. & A. M., affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter and the Royal and Select Council. He is a member of the Austin Press Club. Ou December 22, 1870, Judge Davidson married Miss Susan B. Howard, Her parents, Dr. William and Sarah Catherine (Duval) Howard, came to Texas from Virginia in 1853, locating at Gonzales, where her father gained distinction by his service as a physician. The Howards were an old and prominent Virginia family, while the Duval family has likewise been prominent in the south, and one of its members was a governor of Florida. The seven children of Judge Davidson and wife are named as follows: Nellie, the widow of W. K. Clement, a former lawyer of Milam county, Texas, now lives at Georgetown, and of Milan County, Fexas, now lives at Georgeton, and its principal of the Art Department of the Southwestern University; Katy is the wife of George W. Graves, a lawyer of Houston; William Howard Davidson is now judge of the district court at Beaumont; Thomas P. Davidson is a member of the firm of Kirby & Davidson, lawyers, at Abilene; Frank Ross Davidson is in the oil business at Beaumont; Duval A. Davidson is a business man at Georgetown; and Susie A. Davidson lives at home. The family resides at 610 San Antonio street in Austin.

KARL G. McDonald. One of the younger business men of Vernon, already successfully established in an enterprise of his own, Karl G. McDonald has made his success by following out one line of business, having started in before he had reached his majority, and being now proprietor of the Empire Laundry at Vernon. He owns the business, also a good home in Vernon, and hy first-class service has made his laundry an institution in the city and over a large surrounding territory.

Karl G. McDonald was born at Somerville, Texas, October 4, 1884, the youngest of three children born to David C. and Elizabeth A. (Pearsons) McDonald. His father, who was one of the early settlers at Cleburne, Texas, is still living there a successful farmer and stock raiser, being now sixty years of age. FRANK P. McGHEE. More than thirty years of continuous practice in the law at Vernon have constituted Mr. McGhee one of the oldest attorneys in northwest Texas, and his length of practice has been accompanied by a corresponding degree of success and prominence as a lawyer and man of affairs. All his success has been due to his own efforts, and he practically educated himself for the law, since he taught school in order to get the money to pay for his courses through the University of Missouri.

Frank P. McGhee was born in Walker county, Georgia, January 30, 1853, and was the third of nine children, five daughters and four sons, born to John Forrest and Nancy Elizabeth (Harris) McGhee. Both the parents were Tennesseeans by birth, the father born near Knoxville. A farmer by occupation, he spent some years in Georgia, and in 1856 moved to Wayne county, Missouri, where he spent many years in the quiet and substantial occupation of farming. His death occurred in that state in October 1881, at the age of fifty-seven. He went out to Missouri to serve in the Confederate army, became second lieutenant, and was in command of his company at his surrender on June 5, 1865. The mother received her education and was married in Georgia, and died in 1883 in Missouri at the age of fifty-seven

Frank P. McGhee grew up in Missouri, where he lived from the age of three years, attended the local schools, later took a course in the State Normal, and after several intervals of teaching and farm work finally completed his education in the law at the University of Missouri in 1881. His first practice was done in Mis-souri, where he remained until 1882, and in March 1882 arrived at Vernon. Vernon at that time was still on the frontier. The Fort Worth and Denver City Railway had hardly been completed to that point, and he was well established in the confidence of local people before Vernon began to improve and grow to an important business and commercial center.

Mr. McGhee has performed much useful public service. In 1884-86 he was county attorney of Wilbarger county, and was again elected to that office for 1904-06, and in 1910-12. His influence and activities have been helpful factors in Democratic success in this section of the state. His church is the Baptist. In Wilbarger county, in January 5, ISSS, Mr. McGhee married Miss Junia Miller, a daughter of John and Samantha (Switzer) Miller. Her mother was a native of Virginia, and her father of Pennsylvania, and both are still living being substantial farmer people of Wilbarger county. RT. REV. JOSEPH BLUM. Where eminent abilities and unblemished integrity, combined with unimpeachable virtue, derivable from the daily practice of religion and piety, contribute to adorn the character of an individual, then it is most proper to be prominently set forth as an example to those who would make themselves usetal to the rest of mankind. And the writer cherishes the belief that he will perform this acceptable service in giving a brief sketch of the reverend gentleman whose name here appears. Rt. Rev. Joseph Blum was whose latine here appears. Att. Rev. Joseph John was born at Breyell, in the Rhineish Province of Prussia, November 17, 1847, and is a son of Peter Joseph and Anna Mary (Born) Blum, natives of that country.

Father Blum was educated by private tutors at Coblentz, in France, and in the government schools of Prussia, proving himself an apt and diligent student, studious and reflective. Coming to the United States in 1866, he located at Galveston, Texas, in October of that year, and there completed his studies for the church at St. Mary's Seminary, remaining there one year and being ordained at the age of twenty-two years, March 25, 1871, in the Cathedral at Galveston, by Bishop Dubuis. At that time he was made assistant at Houston, of St. Vincent's Parish, and one year later, when the new church was finished, took over the old St. Vincent's, which was converted into a German church, and of this he had charge for six years. He next went to Galveston and assumed charge of St. Mary's Cathedral, but after eight months came to Sherman, Texas, and was appointed to take charge of St. Mary's here, continuing for seven years. At that time Bishop Gallagher appointed him to take charge of St. Mary's Cathedral at Galveston again, but six years later resigned and went to Denison, Texas, remaining three months in charge of St. Patrick's Church, and then being called by Bishop Gallagher to take charge of the Sacred Heart Cathedral at Dallas, where he continued for four years. On resigning that charge, he took up his work at Munster, being the first priest ever in that section, where he remained for fourteen months. Again being called to Sacred Heart Cathedral, at Dallas, he remained eight years, and then resigned and again came to Sherman, where he intends to remain, feeling that the needs of this parish should receive his labors during the rest of his life. He has built a magnificent church, school and an infirmary, and has labored indefatigably in behalf of his congregation. Father Blum has endeared himself to all classes, regardless of creed or nationality. His philanthropic work alone would tax the strength and endurance of most men, and all of his charities are carried on in such a quiet, unostentations manner that the extent of his benevolences will probably never be known. The biographer approached a little urchin on the street and asked rapher approached a fittle urchin on the street and asked him if he knew Father Blum. "Do I know him?" asked the youngster, scornfully. "Why, of course I know him. Say, do you know the best man in the world? Yes, and I love him, too. He knows all of us fellows every time." It is said that from the lips of a child comes truth. At any rate it seems that this is the general opinion where Father Blum is concerned. That because he knows the people and understands them. he is held in heartfelt affection.

CECIL STOREY. A young attorney who is rapidly making a name for himself in northwest Texas, Cecil Storey has been in practice at Vernon since 1909, and besides his important relations with his profession in that section, he is also prominent in politics. He belongs to one of the old Texas families, and has worthily lived up to the traditions and standards of both the old and the new generations of Texans.

Cecil Storey was born in Freestone county, Texas, December 21, 1884. His parents are William F. and Arabella Josephine (Johnson) Storey. The paternal grandparents were Captain J. W. and Anginetta Wills) Storey. Captain Storey made a record during the Civil war as a Confederate officer, and was one of the pioneers of Freestone county. Freestone county. Dr. J. R. and Amarilla Johnson, the maternal grandparents, were likewise among the older settlers. Dr. Johnson practiced medicine in this state for fifty years, and died in 1897 at the age of seventy-seven. His wife is still living, making her home with her daughter in Freestone county. William F. Storey, the father of Cecil, was born in Texas in Freestone county, graduated from the Agricultural and Mechanical College, and became an important factor in the political life of Freestone county. He served as county clerk for a number of years, and afterwards engaged in banking at Fairfield. He is still a well known banker in that part of the state and is now fifty-two years of age. The mother who was born in South Carolina, came to Texas as a child of eight years, and was educated and married in Limestone county. She is now fifty years of age. There were six sons and two daughters in the family, of whom Cecil was the third.

As a boy he attended public school in Freestone county until the fall of 1905. For two terms he was a student of shorthand and commercial arts in the Metropolitan Business College at Dallas, and stood at the head of his class in that work. In 1906 he entered the University of Texas, and was graduated in the law department in June 1909. In the July fol-lowing he established his office at Vernon, and has since been in active practice in that city. On locating at Vernon he became associated with Hon. R. W. Hall. In politics he is serving his second term as chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Wilbarger county, is also on his second term as chair-man of the Thirteenth Congressional District Committee, and is chairman of the Seventh Supreme Judicial District Committee. As to his political affiliation it is needless to say that he is a Democrat. Fraternally Mr. Storey's associations are with the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Masonic Order.

Masonic Order.

In Fort Worth, Texas, May 9, 1912, occurred the marriage of Mr. Storey to Miss Fannie T. Boger, a daughter of A. T. and Mattie (Fly) Boger. Her parents were both born in Georgia, and her mother taught the first school in Vernon. Mr. Storey, though he started out as a boy on his efforts has succeeded in establishing himself firmly in professional and civic affairs, and is regarded as one of the coming leaders. of the bar in Northwest Texas. He is fond of outdoor life and during his college career and since has taken much interest in athletic sports.

HENRY L. COLEMAN. County surveyor of Wilbarger county since 1908, Henry L. Coleman is a native Texan, represents the sterling qualities of the Texan and westerner, and both in business and in his profession has made a success. Henry L. Coleman was born in Harrison county, Texas, May 27, 1872. He was the oldest in a family of eight children, born to William H. and Ellen (Thrailkill) Coleman. The father was a native of Alabama, and the mother of Mississippi, both coming to Texas when young, and settling in Harrison county, where they were married. The father, a farmer and stockman, lived in Harrison county from 1853 to 1875. He then located in Coryell county, and now lives at Wellington, at the age of eighty-two years. Early in life he took part in the Civil war with a Texas regiment, and belonged to Longstreet's corps and Hood's Brigade. He was never wounded, although he served from beginning to end of the war. The mother is still living, and is sixty-one years of age.

Henry L. Coleman made his start in life a comparatively poor boy, and to his own efforts must be ascribed his rise in his profession, and in business. As a boy he attended school in Bell county, and then for several years was engaged in farming in this vicinity. By private study he perfected himself in civil engineering, and became well qualified for all the work of that professional art. In 1901 he moved to Wilbarger county, and for five years was engaged in contracting and building. In 1908 came his first election to the office of county surveyor, and by reelection he holds the office to the present time.

Mr. Coleman has done work as surveyor in all parts of Wilbarger county, and there is probably no man better informed as to the resources of this county. It is his opinion that the farmers cannot do better than to engage in mixed farming, combining the raising of grain and forage crops with stock, and with the building of silos and proper management this will eventually become one of the best agricultural regions in northwest Texas.

In politics Mr. Coleman is a Democrat, and fraterally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd ally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, and the Modern Woodmen of America. Dr. Charles P. Brokaw. When Dr. Charles P. Brokaw was graduated from the University of Kentucky at Louisville in 1904, he established himself in practice in Dalhart, Texas, where he continued from the first of January, 1905, until June 1, 1911. On the latter day he came to Electra, since which time he has been successfuly engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery, and his advancement in his profession here, as well as in his former location, has been noticeably good, each season gaining something to him in popularity and prominence and the confidence of the people. He has specialized somewhat in surgery, but as has been stated, his practice is general rather than otherwise, and he has made a creditable name for himself in professional circles since he began his life work,

Born in Pottawattomic county, Iowa, on April 9, 1880, Dr. Brokaw is the son of Isaac J. and Lucy (Mann) Brokaw, both natives of the state of Ohio. They were married in that state and made their way to Iowa in 1870, where they remained until 1882 and then moved to Florida, where the father became a prominent nurseyman. In 1899 he came to Texas, locating in the eastern part, and he died in Dallam county in 1908, at the age of sixty-two years. The mother is a woman of considerable education, and had beeu a school teacher in Ohio prior to her marriage. She is now living with her son at Electra, Texas, at the age of sixty-six years.

Of the five sons born to these parents, the subject of this brief review is the fourth born. He received fairly good educational advantages as a boy at home, and when he attended John B. Stetson University in Florida, he was graduated with the degree of A. B., receiving as well a scholarship from Stetson University to the University of Kentucky, at Louisville. He attended the latter institution in prosecution of his medical studies and in 1904 was duly graduated, soon after which he began his practice at Dalhart, as has already been mentioned. His success there as well as in Electra has been of a high order, and he takes his proper place among the best known medical men of the county, reputed among his confreres to be one of the most suc-eessful surgeons in this section of the state.

Dr. Brokaw is a member of the Wichita County Medical Society, as well as the district and state societies. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of Dalhart Lodge No. 255, Royal Arch Masons. He is a Democrat, politically speaking, and is a member of the Methodist church.

On May 10, 1906, Dr. Brokaw was married to Miss Mattie Wiggins, of Dahart, Texas, a daughter of Benjamin F. and Eola (Martin) Wiggins, of Clay country, where the father is living, but the mother is dead. The wife of Dr. Brokaw has also passed away, dying on the 25th of August, 1913. One child has been born to them, Charles Austin, born on May 23, 1909, in Dalhart, Texas.

ERNEST S. FLIPPO. In the list of commercial educators in Texas there is none with a better record and better accomplishments to his credit than Ernest S. Ernest S. Flippo, as a boy, attended school at Mineral Wells, Texas, and after finishing his high school course entered the Tyler Commercial College, taking his diploma there December 5, 1907. His first work was as assistant principal in the commercial department at the Abilene Business College, where he remained nine months. He then organized a writing school, and did work along that line for five months after which he moved to Quanah, and spent several months as commoved to Quantal, and spent several months as com-mercial and penmanship teacher. He was connected with the McKinney business college for two years, and then changed his residence to Vernon, where he was for some months associated with the Draughons Business College.

On September 3, 1912, he opened the Vernon Commercial College, an institution which has since met the needs of commercial education in this section of the state, has drawn a large number of pupils from the immediate and more remote sections, and is now a flourishing school.

Mr. Flippo is a Democrat in politics, is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and has membership in the Methodist church. At Vernon, on January 27, 1911, he was married to Jewel Murphy, a daughter of H. M. Murphy of Burnet, Texas. Her parents who are still living, were early settlers in western Texas.

JOHN S. HILL, M. D. With all of consistency may this well known and honored physician of Texas be termed one of the world's benefactors, for he has accomplished a great and noble work in the treatment of the unfortunate victims of the drug and liquor babits, to which phase of professional endeavor he now devotes virtually his entire time and attention. His success, through the medium of a course of treatment originated by himself, has been most definite and unequivocal, and for the proper care of the many who come to him for succor from the pitiable and baneful habits noted, he has established a private sanitarium in the beautiful city of Greenville, Hunt county. This institution is at-tractive in its appointments and is thoroughly modern in its equipment and facilities in all departments. It is known as the Hill Sanitarium and Dr. Hill is indefatigable, sympathetic and unselfish in his efforts to make the institution a veritable haven of refuge to those who seek freedom from the insatiable dominion of the drug and liquor addictions. The greater honor is due the Doctor by reason of the fact that he has been in the most significant sense the architect of his own fortunes and has achieved prominence and distinction in his exacting profession, as well as high reputation in his chosen field of practice.

Dr. Hill was born at Searcy, White county, Arkansas, on the 28th of June, 1854, and was a lad of ten years at the time of the family removal to Lamar county, Texas, in which state he has maintained his home during the long intervening years and in which his parents continued to reside until their death. He gained his rudimentary education in the public schools of Lamar county and supplemented this by ambitious self-discipline, as he devoted his otherwise leisure hours to careful reading and study. Through his own efforts he earned the money which enabled him to complete a partial course in the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, but his financial resources reached so low an ebb that he was unable to continue his studies to the point of graduation. Upon his return to Texas he proved, by most successfully passing the required examination, that he was eligible for the practice of medicine, and he was granted the necessary license. He initiated his professional work in Delta county, and finally established his residence at Cooper, the judicial center of that county. He gained definite success as a general practitioner and through continuous study and research kept himself in touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science. He was engaged in practice for some time at Sulphur Springs, Hopkins county, and finally he located at Waxahatchie, the capital of Ellis county, where he built up a large and representative practice and where he continued his earnest labors for a long period of years.

In 1897 Dr. Hill established his home in the city of Greenville, and here he has since given his attention almost exclusively to the treatment for drug and liquor addiction. About the year 1892 he began the use of a system of treatment which he himself had devised for use in such deplorable cases, and so successful did this system prove in practical results that the Doctor finally retired entirely from general practice to devote all of his time and efforts to the treatment of those addicted to the use of drugs, intoxicating liquors and cigarettes. Hundreds of victims to these habits have been permanently cured through availing themselves of the advantages of his sanitarium, which occupies two large buildings, and he has so improved his method of treatment that it represents virtually a specific agency for the cure of the disorders noted—a practical antidote for the poisons insidiously instilled into the human system through liquor and drugs and creating a pathological condition. The treatment is generously commended by the ethical medical profession, and a proposition has been made to bring about legislation providing for the use of the Hill system in the state institutions of Texas. A noteworthy feature of the Hill sanitarium is that its patients are entirely free from restraint and other strennous methods of treatment commonly utilized in institutions where the drug and liquor habits are treated and, further than this, Dr. Hill shows his deep humanitarian spirit by doing all in his power to aid his patients through advice and admonition, to quicken conscience and bring forward high ideals of morality and Christian faith. He is generous, sympathetic and considerate, and aside from his regular life work he is liberal in the support and furtherance of charitable and religious activities. His political allegiance is given to the Democratic party and his religious faith is that of the Methodist church, of which he is a zealous and liberal supporter.

As indicative of the great work being done by Dr. Hill is given an account of the redemption through the medium of his treatment of a woman of culture and refinement who had fallen to the lowest depths and whose initial step toward the rehabilitation of her life was made under the sympathetic guidance of a Methodist deaconess in the city of Dalias, where the unfor-tunate woman, not yet old in years, had been found by this Samaritan Woman "in an old saloon in the city of Dallas, lying on a bed of filthy rags. She who had once graced the courts of kings had fallen into the depths, lost to all hope, forgetful of all things uplifting. She was given treatment in four different institutions, but each in turn failed to bring her back from the awful realm of fantastic figures, darkness and death. Despair had almost closed in on us in our fight to reclaim her, when we found Dr. Hill and here she has been won back to life." The foregoing words are those of the devoted deaconess who effected the rescue, and who later gave a brief record concerning the life of the woman whom she "plucked as a brand from the burning." From this record the following extracts are made, with certain paraphrase and elimination:

"Ada came of wealthy parentage and she was given every advantage to secure an education; she was graduated in Potters College, Bowling Green, Kentucky, where she made a splendid record. She was a beautiful girl and very fond of society. Eventually there came across her path an Austrian nobleman, Count Arthur Ford Blanther von Seipic. He was a man of winning ways and much affability, and within her young bosom, already set upon social distinctions, there came a beautiful vision of courts and kings beyond the seas. It was an easy matter to fall in love with the count. They were married and her dreams of the society of the east came true. She was presented at the Austrian court, to Emperor Joseph, and at the court of St. James she was

"Eventually a daughter was born to the couple, at a country place near London. Soon afterward they began a tour around the world, but alas! though too late to help her, the wife learned that her nobleman was a gambler. They reached Chicago on their trip, but there the count indulged too freely his propensities for games of chance, and lost heavily. In his desperation he deeided to end it all. He shot his beautiful young wife and, think he had killed her, he turned the gun on himself and was dead when his side was reached. For weeks the young widow lay in the hospital and under the influence of drugs. Much to the surprise of her physicians, she recovered from the wound, but, alas! a victim of drugs. Because of her inability at that time to care for her child she gave the babe to friends, and there she began her downward course. Her fortune was gone and it was necessary for her to gain a livelihood. She tried school teaching and stenography, but the battle was more than she could bear. She fell, and became the mistress of a well known Texas millionaire. After a time he tired of her. Her beauty was fading and she began dropping lower and lower until she reached the final depths of human degradation, lost to the world and associating with crime. She was such a being when I found her, and although she had taken treatment she was such when Dr. Hill took her into charge. She was cured and now she is in her right mind, clothed in reason, with hope in the eyes, and with bright prospects before her. Soon after she felt the return of consciousness of a better life she professed a faith in Christ. She says she is happy and overjoyed at the change in her career." A sad and awful story is this brief record and aside from all connection with the great service rendered by Dr. Hill, in Christian zeal and all of sympathy, the tale offers an object lesson that may well be read by fathers and mothers and by young men and women throughout the length and breadth of our fair

Dr. Hill married Miss Laura Duff in 1880. There has been six children by this marriage: Stanley, who conducts a sanitarium at Ardmore, Oklahoma, owned by his father; Clarence, assistant manager of his father's Greenville sanitarium; George, secretary of his father's Greenville institution; Wallace A., also associated with his father, attends to outside correspondence outside the state; and Joseph and Annie, deceased.

J. H. Marriott, J. H. Marriott, prominent grocer, one time hotel owner and proprietor in Electra, former mayor of the city and today financially concerned in the principal oil developments in the Electra field, where he is the owner of some two hundred and seventeen acres, is unquestionably one of the really big men of the city and county. His activities along every line have been particularly worthy and of inestimable value to his community, and he takes his place among the leaders of thought and action in the city that has long held his interests and been the scene of his activities. He is a son of William Edward and Ellen (Burtell) Marriott, and he was born on the 27th day of December, 1857. His father was a native of Maryland and mother of Kentucky, and they came to Texas soon after their marriage in the latter named state, settling in Dallas county among the earliest pioneers to that place. William Marriott was a farmer and stockman, prominent and prosperous, and during the Civil war he participated in the hostilities as a member of a Texas company and regiment. Later in life he moved to Wiley, in Collin county, where he died in 1903 at the age of seventy-six. The mother died in Collin county also, in 1904, when she was seventy-two years of age. Nine children were born to them, and of that number J. H. Marriott was the seventh in order of birth.

J. H. Marriott attended the schools of Dallas and Collin counties as a boy, and when he left off his studies he turned his attention to farming at home, then engaged in the business independently in Collin and Dallas counties, and continuing until 1904.

On July 11, 1904, Mr. Merriott came to Wichita county and settled at Electra, where he launched the Electra Hotel business and continued in the mauagement of the hostelry for two years. He then built the Marriott Hotel, conducting the same for twelve months only, after which he started up in the grocery business. He undertook this enterprise in 1906, in association with Mr. Bob Cook and his son, and about that time he disposed of the Marriott Hotel, devoting himself to the grocery business. This establishment, begun on a small scale, is today one of the big grocery concerns of the place, and is managed and operated mainly by Mr. Marriott's son, he himself giving his time and attention to his other interests. In the past three years Mr. Marriott has come into a deal of wealth as a result of his interest in the oil operations of the Electra Oil belt, and his holdings of two hundred and seventeen acres net him aggregate royalties of from eight to nine thousand dollars a month. His one half interest in a two hundred and seventeen acre tract in the oil belt is leased by the Producer's Oil Company, and another tract of sixty-eight and one-half acres is leased by the Forest Oil Company, and the remaining forty acres by the Five Rivers Oil Company, besides which he has other holdings in land, and also owns an interest in the oil companies that are operating on his lands. Mr. Marriott is a man of much public spirit and one who has since coming to Electra, shown himself to be a citizen of the most approved type. He served one term as mayor of Electra, and was elected to fill the office of chief executive for another term, but the press of private affairs compelled his resignation. He is a Democrat, and a member of the Roman Catholic church.

On January 13, 1880, Mr. Marriott was united in marriage with Miss Rosie Cotter, of Collin county, Texas, and the daughter of Edward Cotter and his wife, now both deceased. Six children have been born white, now both deceased. Six funder have been obtained to them. Mrs. Annie Spurgin, the eldest, has three children; Mrs. Mary J. Dempsey, also of Collin county, has a family of five children; Edward Marriott, living in Electra, and his father's business associate, conducts the grocery business established by the elder Marriott some years ago and is a capable and rising young business man, and promises to do credit to his father; Mrs. Clara Turner lives in Electra; Robert Marriott is deceased, and John Marriott the youngest child, lives at home.

In Electra the Marriott family are leaders in the best social activities of the community, and enjoy the esteem and confidence of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Marriott is one of the most prosperous and high standing men of the state, and his success has been evolved from a lowly beginning as a farmer's boy. He has made a name for himself in these parts, and is justly entitled to the place he now occupies. The family resides on Wagner street, where they have one of the finest homes in Electra.

WILLIAM G. STANNARD. William G. Stannard is manager of the Western Union Office at Paris, a position he has filled here since 1885.

Mr. Stannard came to Paris, Texas, from Mount Vernon, Indiana, to which place he had accompanied his parents as a child from Jackson, Tennessee, where his father finished a long career as a railroad man with the Mobile & Ohio railroad, the same being terminated suddenly by the outbreak of the Civil war. Rome, New York, was the birth place of William G. Stannard, and February 15, 1855, his natal day. His father was Granville C. Stannard, a machinist, who went to Illinois in 1856 and worked for the first railroad built in that state. It ran from Chicago to Cairo eventually, but had its terminus at Centralia for a time. Just before the war Granville Stannard went to Tennessee, where secession and rebellion changed the whole tenor of his life, Being out of unison with the principles of the south, Granville C. Stannard crossed the Ohio river to loyal northern territory and located at Mount Vernon, Indinormers territory and located at Mount Vernon, Indiana, where he bought a small farm implement factory, and occupied himself in making farming tools during the few remaining years of his life. He died in 1896, when he was but forty years old. He was born at Syracuse, New York, and was of Irish and Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. He married Mary Vandenberg, the daughter of an early amount of the control of the c the daughter of an early superintendent of the street railway of Binghampton. Mrs. Stannard died at Mount Vernon, Indiana, in 1888, and William G. is one of the six children of his parents, the others being named as follows: Charles, who died in Evansville, Indiana, in 1908, and left a family at his death; Lucy, who married Charles Mauss first, later marrying David Dooley, and dying at New Haven, Illinois; Ellen married John Wilkerson and resides at Mount Vernon, Indiana; Hattie married John Radcliffe and lives in Jackson, Michigan; Henry is manager of the Western Union business at Fort Smith, Arkansas.

William G. Stannard had but few advantages of schooling, attending school but a few years, and he had just entered his teens when he gave up his studies to become a messenger boy for the old Ohio River Telegraph Company at his home town. His first position as an operator was at Carlisle, Indiana, and he was but fifteen years of age at the time, and weighed ninety-six pounds,—but he was neither too young nor too light to faithfully discharge the duties of his office as operator for the railroad office. He followed this position with a period as relief operator for the railroad, and subsequently was made operator at Terre Haute. He quitted railroad work there in 1872 and continued with the Western Union at Mount Vernon, continuing with that office until he was transferred to Texas in 1885. His long and continuous service with the company gives him a prominent place on the pen-sion rolls of the company when he chooses to retire, and ranks him among the few pioneer operators still handling the key. His millions of words sent over the wire and his volumes of messages taken in long hand have not destroyed the youthful cunning of his hand, and he is still quick and accurate in the handling of the kev.

In 1872 Mr. Stannard married Catherine V. Moore at Mount Vernon, Indiana. She is the daughter of an old Ohio River flatboat pilot, George Moore. children of Mr. and Mrs. Stannard are Lillie, the wife of John Moore, of Paris, Texas; Eugene, chief operator of the Western Union at Shreveport, Louisiana; Mrs. Grace Stevens of Paris; Albert, who is operator for the Shreveport Cotton Exchange; Fannie, the wife of H. A. Bass, of Fort Worth; Marie, the wife of Fred Conley, lives at Terre Haute, Indiana; and Frank lives in Paris, Texas. Mr. Stannard has been an Odd Fellow since he was twenty-one years of age and holds the veteran's jewel from the Texas Grand Lodge for his record of twenty-five years of service without a mark against him. He has passed all chairs of the subordinate lodge. Religiously, he is a member of the Methodist church.

WILLIAM P. DUNCAN, A man who has borne a worthy part in the business activities of the city of Paris since 1889, as well as in those of a purely civic nature, is William P. Duncan, of the Conway-Duncan Company, of this city. Active, energetic and always an ambitious man, Mr. Duncan began his mercantile career with a clerkship, as have so many of the successful merchants the country has known, and prior to his association with John T. Conway, to whom is dedicated a sketch on other pages of this work, he had been a member of a number of mercantile firms, in addition to his varied service as a salesman in mercantile lines. His success has been in every way worthy of the man, whose character as man and merchant have never been assailed in all the years of his commercial activity, a fact which makes his career the more pleasing to contemplate. Mr. Duncan comes of an old and estimable Alabama family, he himself having been born in Tala-poosa county, at Newsite, in that state, in 1869, and a son of Admiral Osborn and Laura Ann (Powell) Duncan, both natives of the state. Admiral Osborn Duncan was born within a mile of the place where death overcame him. He was a son of L. Bryant Duncan, who settled in Talapoosa county, from Georgia, the latter being born in that state in 1820, dving in his Alabama home in 1904. He belonged to the aristocratic planter class and was the owner of many negroes. He was a Baptist, of the variety known as "Hardshell," and a man of weight and power in his community. He married Narcissa Carnifax, who was reared in Talapoosa county, near Horse Shoe Bend, where her parents settled, and where the back of the great Cherokee tribe was broken in 1814, in the famed battle of Horse Shoe Band. The family of L. Bryant Duncan and his wife were six in number, and mention Duncan and his wife were said in number, and metron is made of them briefly as follows: Allen, a resident of Bartlett, Texas; John, who died as a Confederate soldier; Admiral Osborn, the father of the subject; Wainright R., who died in Alabama after having spent many years in Cass county, Texas; Isa B., who married James Lindsay and Anna, the wife of John R. Irvin, both of whom passed away in the vicinity of the old Alabama home, leaving no issue.

Reverting to the earlier ancestor of the subject, it may be said that his great-grandfather, Allen Duncan, was one of four brothers who were conspicuous in South Carolina as planters. They were: Miles T., Daniel, William P. and Allen. Of Scotch ancestry, which settled in New England and drifted into the south with the general movement in that direction following the days of the Revolution, the family has been since that time prominently identified with the activities of the southern states.

Admiral Osborn Duncan in early manhood married Miss Laura Ann Powell, a daughter of Jackson Powell, who lived in the vicinity of Wetunke, Alabama, when his daughter was born. Professor Jackson Powell was a man of considerable erudition, and he married the daughter of Benjamin Coghurn. Admiral Osborn Duncan and his wife reared four children, as follows; he married Lorena Jones, and at his death left two children; Edan and Harold Osborn Duncan; William P., of this review; Zoe L. married Joseph C. Manning and lives in Birmingham, Alabama; Narcissa P.; is the wife of William McCrockland, of Gatesville, Texas, and has four daughters.

The education of William P. Duncan was a liberal one, gained in the public schools of Bartlett, Texas, where the family settled in 1885. He was twenty years old when he came to Paris and began a business career which is now approaching the quarter century mark. His first work in Paris was a clerkship with the old Paris Dry Goods Company, and he later became a member of the new firm of Lattimore & Duncan, After four years he became the senior member of the firm of Duncan, Pool & Hutchinson, a concern that went out of business in 1905, when Mr. Duncan entered the service of Pleisher Brothers, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, as a road salesman, and continued with them in that eapacity for two and a half years.

Resuming active business operations once more, Mr. Duncan purchased the interest of E. H. Conway, the junior member of the firm of Conway Brothers, and the firm of Conway Brothers, and the firm of Conway & Duncan came into being. The later addition of T. E. Jones into membership brought about the firm which has since been known as the Conway-Duncan Company, one of the most successful mercantic establishments in the county, with branch houses at a number of different places throughout the district a the firm which has since been known as the Conway-Duncan Company, one of the most successful mercantile establishments in the county, with branch houses at a number of different places throughout the district. On June 26, 1895, Mr. Duncan married Miss Idia Terrell, a daughter of 6. I. Terrell, who was a representative of one of the old southern families, having sentiative of one of the old southern families, having (Kentucky, He is an old southern families, having and he married Fannie Patterson, from the Taladega Valley, in Alabama. The issue of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are as follows: Louise, born January 27, 1897; and Fannie Laura, born September 24, 1902.

Mr. Duncan's political activity has been in line with the prohibition Democracy of Texas, and he has long regarded the saloon evil as one of the greatest wrongs of our country. He is progressive and liberal in his ideas, and in this connection may be cited the fact that he was one of the first men in Paris to sign a petition in favor of womans' suffrage. His churchly relations are with the Presbyterian denomination, and he is one of the most estimable men of the city and country.

JUDGE G. WOOTEN. The wooth of May, 1913, rounded out a period of twenty years of continuous service as superintendent of the schools of Paris on the part of Judge Given Wooten, a period which covers an era of phenomenal progress and growth in the public school system of the city; and the brief facts presented here tell the story as it is, accurately and shorn of all elaboration. Such a record can not fail to impress a thoughtful reader with at least a comparative appreciation of the great agency for the training of the human mind in its formative period. A tenure of twenty years or more as the directing head of any enterprise, of whatever nature, indicates at once that he who has held that position has proven to the people that he has been the right man for the right place, and in Judge Wooten the city of Paris, Texas, has indubitably been justified in its long continued retention of his services as the head of its public school system. She has maintanied at the head of her educational system a man who has proven his abilities as a navigator in the waters of education, who has an accurate knowledge of the rocky points, the shoal waters and the floating derelicts upon which the ship of school administration is too often wrecked.

Judge Wooten was born in Warren county, Kentneky, not far from Bowling Green, on March 5, 1855, and is the son of Joseph W. and Ann (Brawner) Wooten. The father was born in Barren county, Kentucky, in 1828, and was a brother of Dr. Wooten, one time president of the board of regents of the University of Texas. Joseph W. Wooten was a farmer and merchant in Warren county and belonged to a Virginia family, of which his father was an off-shoot. It may be stated here that the grandfather of Judge Wooten was orphaned early the grandfather of Judge Wooten was orphaned early classified and the state of th esting family.

Joseph W. Wooten, as mentioned previously, married Ann Brawner, a daughter of William T. Brawner, a man who came of the old Revolutionary stock of Maryland, and whose wife was a member of the Cooksey family of that state, well and prominently known. Mr.
Wooten passed away in 1903 and his widow is now a resident of Owensboro, Kentucky. They reared four childra Judge Given, the educator of Paris, Reass; Townsend, the wife of a well known daetor of Owensboro, Kentucky; and W. B. Wooten of Gallatin, Tennessee.

Judge Wooten began his higher education at Bethel College in Russellville, Kentucky, and from that went to the University of Virginia, where he lacked but three months of his graduation when sudden illness seized him. He returned to Russellville, Kentucky, and there, upon his recovery, prepared for and engaged in the practice of law. He was chosen to membership on the county school board, and upon the occasion of a sudden vacancy in one of the county schools, he was asked to fill the place pending the engagement of a new teacher. Instead of dropping out of the work in the ensuing month, the young man stayed in the schools for three years, and thus identified himself with the teaching profession, discontinuing his connection with the law work that appealed with great strength to his instinct for service of the highest order. In his quite accidental acquaintance with the work of the school room, he discovered latent talent and possibilities along educational lines, and his work was soon recognized in the community, while his favor spread with the profession as well as with laymen. His ability as a disciplinarian was not less pronounced than his capacity as an instructor, and when he learned that Yazoo City, Mississippi, required a superintendent who, to quote their own terms, could govern "without regard to whether or not the children learned anything, 3, Judge Wooten applied for the place. So readily did he adjust the difficulties that had beset this community in its educational work that he contimed for three years, resigning then to accept the superintendency of the schools at Benton, Mississippi, subsequently passing on to West Point and Oxford, Mississippi. He was at the latter named place for five years and came to Paris direct from there. While in Mississippi he was president of the Teachers' Association of East Mississippi and secretary of the State Teachers' Association, and for some years he gave an added impetus to educational work in the state by his numerous addresses and contributions to educational journals, and by his especially telling and effective work in summer normals, a branch of school work that is coming to be more and more recognized as a necessary factor in the efficient training of teachers, aside from whatever educational advantages they may have previously enjoyed along those lines, and which was in its infancy in those days.

The facilities for education in Paris when Prof. Wooten assumed the duties of superintendent of the schools of the city were most primitive in contrast with present day conditions. There were two schools for white and one for colored people, and the high school department occupied a part of one of the ward buildings. There were seventy-three high school students, a total enrollment of about eighteen hundred, and a faculty of twenty-four teachers. There had been five annual graduations with a total of forty-nine pupils, and the system showed a deplorable want of reform and repair at many important points. Today, in 1913, seven buildings house the white students and four the colored, while the total enrollment is more than thirty-five hundred. One central high school building, with the most ideal equipment, enrolls four hundred and sixty-one pupils, with sixteen teachers on the high school staff, and the graduating class of 1913 numbered sixty-nine. There are four colored teachers in the colored high school and seventeen grade teachers of the colored faction, while there are forty-six grade teachers in the white schools. During the regime of Judge Wooten the course of study has been greatly extended and amplified, and today embraces a Latin and Scientific course, manual training, domestic science, and a new department in the form of two companies equipped for military drill composed of the high school boys. Graduates from the high school numbering more than eight hundred have gone forth in the business of life, some into the field of finance, some into merchandising and the professions, and a large percentage of the teaching force of the Paris schools comprise former students of the schools.

Judge Wooten's relation to education in Texas has continued earnest and active through the passing years, and the State meeting of teachers has always known him as a positive force for the onward march of progress in educational affairs. As previously stated, he has been president of the State Teachers' Association and also of the Association of School Superintendents of the State, and for many years has been active and prominent in the conduct of summer normal work.

In 1884 Judge Wooten was married in Adairville, Kentucky, to Miss Anna Paisley, a daughter of J. B. Paisley. Mrs. Wooten died in Paris in 1898, leaving him two daughters and a son: Lynne is a teacher of Latin, Ger-man and Spanish in Mary Connor College, in Paris; Lucile, a graduate of the Denton (Texas) Normal School; and Jo Paisley, who has just finished in the Paris High school.

In 1899 Judge Wooten married Mrs. Etta Read, a daughter of William C. Klyce. Judge Wooten is a thirty-second degree Mason of the Scottish Rite and has also taken all the degrees in the York Rite branch and is Grand Commander of the Knights Templar body of Texas. He is a member of the Christian church, and a Democrat.

Looking back over the two decades of service of Judge Wooten in his high position in Paris, it would be difficult indeed to make any adequate estimate as to the depth and breadth of his work among the student body of the city in all these years. Certain it is that he has recognized to the fullest his opportunity and his responsibility, and Paris has in turn shown her recognition of his splendid capacity for good in the work he long since chose for his lifework. Whole souled, generous in heart and in mind, with splendid capabilities and possessing an unbounded popularity, it is a pleasure to contemplate his work of past years, and Paris looks forward to many years of future association with him as the head of its educational system.

George W. Glasscock. Many pages of this publication are in the nature of a memorial to the pioneer element of Texas citizenship, and as its chief author was "a leader of the Texas Revolution," it is eminently fitting that the lives of early patriots and pioneers should be given as much space as possible. Among prominent early Texans none was more honored among his friends and the several communities where he lived than George W. Glasscock, who was one of the founders of Georgetown, the county seat of Williamson county, where many years of his life were passed and most of his interests centered.

When he died in Travis county, February 28, 1868, it was said that no death since the close of the war had occasioned so much regret in that part of the state. George W. Glasscock was born in Kentucky, April 11, 1810, grew up in his native state and in 1830 followed the leadings of an adventurous spirit and left home, spending two years in St. Louis as a merchant. Soon after he located in St. Louis the Black Hawk war broke out, and called volunteers from every one of the middle western states. Mr. Glasscock was elected first lieutenant in Captain J. M. Early's company of volunteers, and saw service until the capture of the famous chief and the close of hostilities. After this experience he engaged in flat-boating on the Sangamon and Illinois rivers, and had no less a partner in that enterprise than Abraham Lincoln. From the river traffic he finally returned to his uncle near St. Louis, and remained there a year or more. The province of Texas was then exciting great attention throughout the country, especially on account of the troubles between the American colonists and the Mexican government, and in 1834 Mr. Glasscock located at Savalla in the extreme southeastern corner of the state, in what was then known as the Municipality of Jasper, later Jasper county. There he was engaged in merchandising with T. B. Huling and Henry Millard, and besides selling goods the firm did a large amount of land locating, with Mr. Glasscock as the surveyor. It was as a land looker and surveyor that Mr. Glasscock first became acquainted with western Texas. In that way he traveled all over the counties of Travis, Williamson, Burnet, Lampasas and Milam. He had many thrilling experiences and hardships, and at one time was a fortunate member of a party the other section of which was captured by Indians and all massacred.

Mr. Glasscock was one of the soldiers of the Texas Revolution, and was a part of the army in the fall of 1835 which besieged and captured San Antonio, and again responded to the call for troops early in 1836 and did service in the concluding months of the war. From Jasper county Mr. Glasscock, in 1840, moved to the present county of Bastrop. That was his home for three years, and he lived in Travis county until 1848. It was in the county of Williamson that his principal landed interests lay, and there in 1848 he took up his home. He was among the first to develop the wheat-growing interests of that section of Texas, and in order to carry out his plans and encourage the growing of that grain he put up the first flouring mill ever seen in western Texas. To advance the prosperity of Williamson county seems to have been his most cherished wish. Its county seat now bears a portion of his name, because of his donation of the beautiful ground upon which it is situated. He used his influence and oftentimes liberally contributed of his possessions to encourage settlement and to help many a pioneer family that otherwise would have been discouraged and could not have stood the test of the struggle for existence.

From 1850 until the close of his life George W. Glasscock filled a number of public positions. He represented the counties of Williamson and Travis in the tenth and eleventh legislatures; was for many years county commissioner for Williamson county; was one of the contractors of the lunatic asylum during the terms of Gorernors Houston, Clark, Lubbock and Murrah; and was president of the Air-Line Railroad Company, by which Austin first eame into relation with the outside world by means of railway: A short time before his death he had perfected an arrangement with the Central Railroad Company for the completion of the line to Austin.

George W. Glassock died as a result of injuries received when a horse he was riding fell and he was taken from life at a comparatively early age and when the promise of many useful years naturally remained for him. While living in Jasper county in 1837 he married Miss Cynthia C. Knight. They shared together the privations and difficulties of pioneer existence in Texas, and she died in the city of Austin in 1866. They were the parents of ten children altogether, three of whom died before the parents, and several of whom are still living. One of the daughters is Mrs. E. J. Talbott, of Georgeton.

The late George W. Glasscock was prominent in Masonry, was an active member of Austin Lodge, No. 12, A. F. & A. M., and a portion of the tribute of respect drawn up and published by the lodge at the time of his death will supplement the brief facts already related:

"Our deceased brother was no ordinary man. There was a trieless energy in his character that entered into all his pursuits, and was the grand element of success. Possessed of a powerful native intellect and singularly clear perceptions, he understood human nature in an uncommon degree; and few combinations of circumstances surprised him or found him unprepared for any emergency that might present itself. Of a disposition singularly generous, a heart tendedry mild, he was open handed as the day to every call of charity made upon him either as a Mason or a man.

"He was a Mason of many years' standing; and those of us who have known him lougest miss, and will always miss, his presence from our mystic circle, and as we cast our eyes around us, while we notice the absence of many with whom we have been associated in former years, the remembrance of no one will call forth a deeper sigh than we heave as we mark the vacant seat of him whose loss we now deplore.

"And the suddemess of his departure from among us increases the force of the blow under which we bend in unavailing sorrow. One day we saw him among us, living, strone, active, full of energy and vitality; and though slightly past the prime of life, with the apparent prospect of many years of active life and prolonged usefulness; the next, our hearts are chilled with the sad nows that he is done with us, and life and time and tax we shall no more see and associate with him till the great Author of life shall call us all from the grave. So stunning the event, that we hardly yet realize its actual truth."

"Resolved. That in the death of our lamented brother, George W. Glasscock, we feel that we have sustained a loss not easily repaired; and while we bow in lumble submission to that Overuling Providence, more when the way to the grief so great a misfortune is so well calculated to produce.

WILLIAM W. FITEPATRICE. The medical profession of Paris, Texas, knows as one of its younger members and at the same time one of its most promising ones, Dr. William W. Fitzpatrick, who has here been engaged in practice since 1904. His training for his profession was most thorough, and the attention that the young doctor has since given to his work has designated him one of the coming men of the medical fraternity, and indeed, he has already won recognition of no small merit for his ability and achievement in his chosen career.

A native son of Paris, born here on November 25, 1876, Dr. Fitzpatrick comes of stanch and sturdy Irish stock, as his name indicates. His father, who came of a family of prominence in County Ulster, Ireland, was born in New York City in 1852. He left home as a youth of fourteen, thereafter maintaining himself chiefly as a clerk and salesman until he turned his face in a southwesterly direction. It was in 1872 that he first located in Texas, settling in Denison, and coming to Paris two years later. Here for some years the elder Fitzpatrick was occupied in a cigar business, but he eventually drifted in the cotton business as a shipper. Of late years he retired from that business, in which he achieved a pleasing success, and in recent times has identified himself in a more or less active way with the real estate business, although he is practically retired, his real estate operations being more of the nature of an avocation than otherwise. Mr. Fitzpatrick in his young manhood married Ella, the daughter of Dr. Withrow, of Denison, Texas, who located in that place from his native place, Springfield, Illinois. Ds. William W. and Miss Fay Fitzpatrick are the only issue of their union.

Although born in Paris, Dr. Fitzpatrick had but little acquaintance with the city until after he had finished his education and settled here as a member of the medical profession. After his knickerbocker days he was absent practically all the time in the pursuit of an education, first at St. Edwards College in Austin, Texas, and later in the University of Notre Dame, Indiana, where he carried on his literary studies. The year 1898 saw his graduation from that institution with his Bachelor's degree, and he then begun his preparation for his lifework in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in 1902. From that well known institution the young doctor began a thorough hospital training in St. Paul's Sanitarium, in Dallas, Texas, passing a year there in careful work and study, and thereafter spent a like period in the famous hospitals of New York and Chicago. Thus equipped with theoretical and practical knowledge, Dr. Fitzpatrick did not hesitate to present himself to the people of his native community as a member of the medical profession, and since 1904 he has enjoyed his share in the work of healing in Paris, and his practice has seen a continuous growth consistent with the meritorious work he has performed in the community. His interest in his profession is of a character such as to exclude him from all connection with business or affairs of ordinary public concerns. He is a member of the local and state medical societies, and likewise of the National Medical Association.

In February, 1907, Dr. Fitzpatrick was married in Paducah, Kentucky, to Miss Leitita Powell, daughter of W. W. Powell, prominent there as a man of business, and a grand-daughter of Governor Shelby of that state. Dr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick have one son, William W. Jr.

Sam B. GILLETT. A native son of the state of Texas, Sam B. Gillett, well known to the legal fraternity of El Paso and vicinity, has spent the best years of his life in his birth state, a period of something like sixteen years having heen given to professional associations in New Mexico in unison with Hon. Harvey B. Perguson, congressman from that state. He returned to Texas in 1903, and since that time has been active and prominent in professional circles, and has gained a place among the foremost among the legal men of the city and county.

Born in Gonzales county, Texas, on January 30, 1863, Sam B, Gillett is the son of Rev. James D, and Martha (Johnston) Gillett. The father was born in Matagordo county, this state, in 1833, in the days when Texas was a republic, and all his life from mature years on till retirement, has devoted his whole energies to the work of the ministry. He is now an honored resident of EI Paso, where he is well known for his identification with every charitable and philanthropic movement that has origin in the city. His devoted wife, who also survives, was born in Indiana, and she met and married her husband in the Lone Star state. Nine children were born to them, of which number the subject was the fourth born. The father of Rev. Gillett was Rev. Roswell Gillett, who likewise lived a life of the utmost usefulness in his sphere in Texas.

Samuel B. Gillett, it may be said, is essentially a Texas product, coming as he did from a father and grandfather who carried on their life work in the great southwestern state. He received his early education in the public schools, later attending the Southwestern University at Georgetown. Between his public school and college days, however, there elapsed a considerable gap of time, in which the young student was engaged in various activities which enabled him to make a start in his college career, and he finished that course by working his way so that his education came to him at the cost of many a personal sacrifice. None will be found, however, who will dispute that his training was none the less efficient or wholesome for that fact, and it is more than probable that he learned during that time lessons that have been of the greatest importance to him in his later life, and have been significant factors in the high order of success that he he achieved.

After Mr. Gillett had finished his hard won college course, he engaged in the sheep business, and continued in that work for about four years, when he turned his attention to the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1891, and soon thereafter began the practice of law in Silver City, New Mexico, where, as has already been mentioned, he was associated in practice with one of the most eminent New Mexico lawyers, Hon. Harvey B. Ferguson. It was in 1903 that he returned to Texas. locating at once in El Paso, and here he has achieved a success in every way worthy of the name, and one that has gained him a prominence and position that is indicative of the possession of a high order of ability. He has won distinction as one of the most noted criminal lawyers in the state, and it is a fact of record that during all the years of his practice in El Paso the jury only once returned a verdiet of "Guilty." A remarkable instance of his unusual ability and success in criminal practice was an occasion when he was called to defend a man charged with a serious crime. Evidence against the accused was almost overwhelming, and Mr. Gillett was called on so short a notice that he had practically no time to prepare himself for the trial. It was the belief of the court and attorney for the prosecution that the man was guilty as charged, and they were confident that no other verdict could be returned, but the verdict of that jury was "Not guilty." The judge himself congratulated Mr. Gillett and assured him that if he ever had the misfortune to require the services of a criminal lawyer, Mr. Gillett might consider himself retained in advance.

Mr. Gillett is a stanch Democrat and takes an active part in the activities of that body, being recognized as one of the party leaders in this section of the state, although it is a part of his plan of procedure that he never accepts public office himself. His residence in terests of the city, and as a member of the local school board he has performed worthy service in behalf of the educational system. No more enthusiastic Texan will be found when questions of its comparative opportunities are raised, and Mr. Gillett is prepared at all times to respond to any inquiries with reference to possible and certain opportunities are rare to be found within the border lines of Texas.

Mr. Gillett is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and has filled all chairs in the local lodge, as well as having served as representative to the Grand Lodge of Texas. He has been twice married. His first wife died in New Mexico, and is there buried. His second marriage took place at Silver City, New Mexico, on January 30, 1893, Miss Ruth Phelps becoming his wire, she being a native daughter of the state of Illinois. Five children were born to them—four sons and one daughter, named as follows: Idus, Rena, Clyde and Claude, who are twins, and Knox. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church South, in El Paso, and take prominent places in the many good works of the church with which they have affiliated since locating in El Paso.

Three generations of the Gillett family, which has long been identified with Texas in no uncertain manner, are thus established in El Paso, and while the activities of the subject are of a nature entirely different from the work that dominated the lives of his honored sire and grandsire, yet he is taking his place as an honored and honorable advocate of the law and as a citizen whose every instinct is in harmony with the growth and development of the best interests of his city.

J. SWAIN AVEES. Among the men who by their extitities in the field of business have added to the commercial importance of Amerillo, J. Swain Ayres, greatent of the J. S. Ayers Ice Cream Company, holds prominent position. Coming to this city a poor man, less than ten years ago, he has during this time built up one of the leading industries of its kind in the Lone Star state, the business of which extends not only throughout Texas but into Oklahoma and Mexico. Mr. Ayres is a Westerner by birth and training. He was born in San Saba county, Texas, January 14, 1880, and is a son of W. E. and Josephine (Webster) Ayres.

W. E. Ayres was a native of Mississippi, and when two years of age was brought to Texas by his parents, the family settling on a ranch in Goliad county. There Mr. Ayres grew to manhood, following in the foot-steps of his father and adopting agricultural pursuits, ranching and stock raising as his life work. He is now retired from active pursuits and is living at Clarendon, Texas, being sixty-five years of age. He was married at Goliad, Texas, to Josephine Webster, who was born and educated in Texas, and who is still living at the age of sixty-two years. She and her husband have had four sons and three daughters, J Swain being the fourth in order of birth.

After attending the public school at Mason, Texas, Mr. Ayres took up ranching, but subsequently turned his attention to dairying, which he followed at Cleburne, Texas, for one year. During the next year he divided his time between ranching and attending school, and then went to Colorado Springs, Colorado, where he was engaged in dairying for two years. After six months spent in central Texas, in 1904 he came to Amarillo, where he purchased a dairy business, and this he conducted two years. During this time Mr. Ayres became convinced that there was a field for a concern which could furnish a first-class grade of ice cream, and accordingly in 1906, he began to manufacture this delicacy. His business grew so rapidly, that in 1910 he became the organizer of the Ayres Ice Cream Company, and creeted the present modern buildings, which are equipped throughout with the most highly improved machinery for the manufacture of ice cream. His associate, J. W. Collins, secretary of the company, is one of the capable business men of the city, and ten experts are employed in manufacturing an excellent and wholesome confection. The business is conceded to be the largest of its kind west of Kansas City, and every precaution for sanitation is observed. The credit for the growth and development of this business lies with Mr. Ayres, not only because he was able to realize an opportunity and had the courage to grasp it, but because he also has had the perseverence, enterprise and inherent ability to build it up to extensive proportions. The greater part of his attention is centered in this business, but he has also interests in stock-raising operations, for he firmly believes this to be one of the greatest sections for stock in the country. Like all typical Westerners, he is fond of outdoor life and sports, and is never happier than when on an expedition with rod or gun. His fraternal associa-tions are with the local lodges of the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically, he gives his support to Democratic principles and candidates, but he has had no public aspirations.

with his family, he attends the Christian church.
On April 25, 1906, Mr. Ayres was married to Miss Mary E. Baker, daughter of John Baker, of Amarillo.
To this union there has come two interesting children, Ralph H., born October 22, 1907, at Amarillo, and Ruth, born September 4, 1913, at Amarillo, Texas.

REV. ROBERT E. VINSON, D.D. LL.D. As one of a REV. ROBERT E. VINOS. D.D. III. As one of the family that has been distinguished by its services in the Presbyterian ministry, Rev. Robert E. Vinson, D.D., LL.D., has especially gained prominence in the work of the church, not only through his activities in a ministry. terial capacity, but as president of Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, to which office he was elected in May, 1909, after seven years of work in the seminary as an instructor in various branches.

Robert E. Vinson was born in Winnsboro, Fairfield county, South Carolina, on November 4, 1876, and is a son of John Vinson, a South Carolina merchant and cotton buyer, born in that state in Sumter county, in 1839. Andrew P. Vinson, grandfather of the subject, was a Virginian by birth, who moved to South Carolina when a boy, and who was a very prominent lawyer in the Ante Bellum days. He died in 1846. John Vinson served in the Confederate army under General Beauregard. He enlisted at the beginning of the war from Citadel Academy where he was a student, and served throughout the entire four years. He was taken prisoner at Fort Sum-ter, but barring a few months imprisonment, was active in the service throughout the entire period of hostilities.

The Vinson family, it should be said, is one of the oldest in America today, the first of the name to settle on American soil having come from France in company with General LaFayette and they rendered valiant service during the revolutionary war.

John Vinson, father of the subject, married Mary Brice, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, her people having come originally from the North of Ireland, settling in the Piedmont section of South Carolina. Two of Mrs. Vinson's brothers fought under General Longstreet throughout the war, and two brothers of John Vinson also gave service to the South during that unhappy time. Walker Vinson was killed in Pickett's Brigade at Gettys-burg and the other, A. P. Vinson, still lives in Sunter, South Carolina. He served with the rank of Major during the war, and is still known by his military title. Another brother, W. D., was for twenty years a professor of mathematics in Davidson College, North Carolina.

To John and Mary (Brice) Vinson were born the following children: Walter H., a lawyer of St. Paul, Minnesota; William A., also a lawyer, engaged in practice in Houston, Texas; John W., missionary to China; T. Houston, Texas; John W., Inissionary to Chila, T. Chalmers, a missionary in Luebo, Belgian Congo. Africa; Mrs. W. J. Culver, of San Antonio, Texas; Mrs. W. A. McLeod, of Austin, Texas; Miss Brice Vinson, teaching in the public schools of San Antonio; and Rev. Robert E, of this review.

Robert E. Vinson came with his father's family to Sherman, Texas, in 1887. He had his education in the public schools, followed by attendance at Austin College, from which he took his B.A. degree in 1896. In 1899 he had his B.D. degree from Union Theological Seminary of Virginia, after which he became Associate Pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Charleston, West Virginia, continuing until 1902 in that connection. In 1902 Rev. Vinson took a special course in Hebrew and Archae-ology in the Divinity School of Chicago University, under Dr. Harper, and in September, 1902, he came to Austin, Texas, as professor of Old Testament languages and Exegesis. In 1906, at his own request, he was transferred to the Chair of English Bible and Practical Theology, which he still holds, and in May, 1909, he was elected president of the Seminary, his present office.

In 1905 Austin College conferred upon him the degree of D.D., and in 1910 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Southwestern Presbyterian University of Clarksville, Tennessee.

Too much credit cannot be accorded to Dr. Vinson for his work along educational lines in the state of Texas. In 1909 he formulated the plan under which the Presbyterian church in Texas has since operated its educational work, and he has been chairmen of the executive agency of the Synod since 1909. This commission has under its jurisdiction seven schools in the state, and Dr. Viuson has been field secretary since that time, raising all the money for the support and equipment of the schools-a work that has won for him especial prominence in the church and out of it.

Dr. Vinson was married on January 3, 1901, to Miss Katherine Kerr, of Sherman, Texas, a daughter of John S. Kerr, a nurseryman who has been prominently identified with the horticultural and agricultural interests of the state of Texas for the past quarter century. The Kerrs came originally from Scotland, as the family name would inevitably indicate, and they made their first settlement in Mississippi. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Vinson was one of the earliest settlers in Collins county, Texas, and that district is still the recognized seat of the family. Her maternal grandfather, of the seat of the family. Her material grandtanter, of the family name of Murray, was a pioneer Presbyterian Missionary to the Trans-Mississippi country of Arkan-sas and Texas, and her maternal grandmother was a Rutherford, also of Scotch descent, and a native of South Carolina.

The children of Dr. and Mrs. Vinson are Elizabeth, born December 26, 1901; Helen Rutherford, born July 9, 1906; and Katherine Kerr, born April 5, 1911.

JAMES HARVEY DAVIS. This publication will contain few more suggestive and interesting biographies of living Texans in public life than the following sketch of "Cy-clone" Davis. It is an appreciative tribute and description well justified by its contents, and requires no further editorial comment.

In the domain of politics the name of James Harvey Davis, of Sulphur Springs, has a renown far beyond the limits of Texas. Mr. Davis regards himself as a private citizen and vet none of the conspicuous leaders in public affairs better deserves the distinctions and honors which have come to his career. He is a man who has reached his zenith of political influence, after years of fighting against special privilege, unfair competition, political bossism and trickery, and may properly take to himself a goodly share of the victories won in the renovation of politics during recent years. He takes special personal satisfaction in the enthronement of a national administration pledged to the execution of policies of government of which he is and has been for twenty years a leading, active and forceful exponent. Victory does not always come to the brave, nor is the race always to the swift, but a combination of the qualities of courage and speed avail much when enlisted for humanity and directed toward the destruction of political and economic evils. "Cyclone" Davis, as he is familiarly known, is a man of rare qualities and services in these modern times of politics.

The remote ancestors of Mr. Davis were Welsh, and the family name was originally "Davies." when introduced into the colonies of the south. The exact rank and station of the Welsh progenitor is not a matter of knowledge, but appeared in the Carolinas as a subject of the English king and lived to raise up a small army of posterity to help beat back the soldiers of his sovereign. They fought under Francis Marion and with other squads and troops engaged in the Revolution, and seven great-uncles of William B. Davis, father of James H., were all engaged in the struggle for national independence.

As a family they have been civilians by nature, soldiers only to meet a public necessity and to defeat a public calamity. The industry of the farm and conformity to the established customs of the south seem to have afforded the regular channels of their energies. As planters of the old school, they employed the labor of the bondmen, and when their title to this property was threatened they met the emergency with an offer of their lives. Strong convictions were a feature of every character, and "love their neighbor" as themselves was a ruling principle of every nature.

Col. Harvey Davis, grandfather of James Harvey

Davis, was born after the Revolution and passed his life in South Carolina, his home being in the Pickens District. He manifested strong characteristics as a citizen, was an enthusiastic follower of Andrew Jackson, and his posterity have brought up their sons in the same political faith. He married a Miss Barton, a daughter of one of the pioneer families of the Palmetto state, and six sons and two daughters were born of their union. Young Davis, his oldest son, was a Confederate colonel and was a member of the Georgia State Senate many years.

William B., founder of the Texas branch of this family, was born early in the century in Pickens District of South Carolina, and was married there during the forties. He reached Texas in 1857, after the manner of the early settlers of that time. He was uneducated as the manner of education is today, but had learned the essentials and was fond of reading. He possessed no ability as a speaker and evinced no ambition for a political office. He asserted an independence that is strongly reflected in his descendants, and though not a Christian in the accepted sense of the word, was a veritable "blue stocking", in the observance of the Sabbath day. He held slaves and was a planter when the war came on. He used his influence for the success of the Confederacy, and saw his sons offer themselves as a sacrifice in the army of the gray. Although old and feeling the weight of years, he did some service upon the 'dod men's call'' toward the end of the war. He died at Winnshoro, at the age of eighty-three, while the mother of James H. died in 1859.

William D. Davis married Miss Salina Moore, a daughter of James S. Moore, who owned a water-mill near Raleigh, North Carolina, where Mrs. Davis was born. Their children were David B., who died in the hospital as a Confederate soldier; Commodore Decatur, mospiral as a confederate source; commodore Decautr, who at the time of his death at Anson, Texas, was district attorney; James Harvey; Warren L., of Abilene, Kansas; R. Sampson, of Sonora, California; Dr. Jeff D., of Roby, Texas; John and Jarrett, who both were cruelly slain when young men engaged in the cattle business in New Mexico; and Mrs. Ritta McGee, of Anson.

James H. Davis, subject of this sketch, was born in Pickens District, South Carolina, December 24, 1853, His memory of events did not begin until his parents reached Texas and settled near Winnsboro. This period of the war furnished a serious obstacle toward the acquirement of an education, since at that time he was giving his youthful strength toward the support and maintenance of his mother and younger children. His part in bread-winning and the situation during and following the war called for more serious work than attending school. In spite of these handicaps, he applied himself with such vigor to study and the knowledge of books that he was in time qualified as a teacher himself. His work as school-master was as educative to himself as to his scholars, since he found it necessary to train himself thoroughly in advance of his pupils over all the ground covered by them. When finally relieved of the burdens of home, he gave his energies full play in making up for lost time and eventually had mastered the common branches, had prospected some in the field of general literature, and also possessed himself of the basic prin-ciples of the law. The tallow candle and pine knots had served him while a student, until the invention of the oil lamp, and it is said he purchased the first glass lamp for the use of kerosene that came to Winnshoro.

He found himself ready for examination for the har in 1879, and took his examinations before Judge B. T. Estes at Mount Vernon. Among the local talent who composed the committee of examiners, were the chair-man, Judge Baldwin, now one of the leading lawyers of Rock Port, Texas; Judge W. P. McLean, of Fort Worth, one of the first railroad commissioners of Texas; and Hon. S. O. Moody, now of Colorado. Mr. Davis was already serving as county judge of Franklin county when admitted to practice law. After his admission he won a unique victory in the very first case with which he was connected as counsel. This case was tried before a justice and Mr. Davis was defending a man charged with drunkenness. He set up the claim in behalf of his client that the defendant owed the state nothing, and that there was no proof of "intent" to commit crime. He owed the state nothing because the state had collected its dues for the license which permitted the saloon-keeper to sell the liquor and make the defendant drunk and that fact, coupled with the fact that the fellow did not intend to get drunk when he took the drinks, ought to clear his client of the charge and, to the astonishment of the defense itself, it did.

Mr. Davis practiced law regularly until 1904, although the law had apparently always been more of a secondary matter with bim. Nature endowed him with strong powers of speech, and his ability in debate and argu ment and in forceful, logical presentation of facts, and native rugged eloquence, has found expression through the press and also in public debate. To bring his ideas and utterances directly before the people he bought a newspaper at Mt. Vernon, the Franklin Herald, a Democratic paper, and while he affiliated with the old party he was the mouthpiece of that organ. In early life he joined his brother in making a study of the politics of the country through the leading dailies of the United States. They read the New York World, Brick Pomeroy's Democrat, and several other metropolitan newspapers of both political parties, and for several years his own political convictions were shaped and ripened by the assimilation of the editorials of able students of government. Between his ownership of the Herald and the Vindicator at Sulphur Springs, Mr. Davis become a Populist, and he closed his fourteen years of newspaper work there as the editor of the latter paper. He also spent a year in Greenville, as the editor of the Greenville Herald, and soon afterwards came to Sulphur Springs to Practice law and carry on his political propaganda.

His interest in the Farmers' Alliance Movement and his sympathy with it were made practically useful through his services as a political leader and debater, in explanation and defense of its economic policies. Following the Ocala convention of the Alliance, the National Grange, the National Farmers' Alliance, the Knights of Labor, and the Federation of Labor issued a call for the presence of all who believed in the principles of government as announced in the Ocala demands of the Farmers' Alliance, to meet with them in Cincinnati. Mr. Davis was one of the five lawyers in the United States to respond to that invitation. Ignatius Donnelly of Minneapolis and Mr. Davis were of the party, and became a member of the committee on plat-forms. Meeting with different bodies organized with grip and password, but with a common purpose, was a new situation for lawyers, apostles of the law and against the practice of clandestine gatherings for political purposes, but they put themselves in harmony with the situation by organizing themselves into a similar body, adopting a sort of schedule of "demands," made the "hand strike" their grip, and added the sixteenth beatitude, "Blessed is he that expects nothing for he shall not be disappointed." They agreed to defend the platform made at that conference, and pledged each other to come to the relief of either who chanced to come into conflict with the law while earrying on their

eampaign. The platform prepared by that conference formulated the doctrines most prominent in the platforms of the Democratic and Progressive National parties today, and they included some principles as physical valuation of railroads, popular election of United States senators, initiative, referendum and recall, graduated income tax, a stock and bond law, and other planks, now thought to be progressive but not radical. With the formation of the Populist party, Mr. Davis spent five years in its organization, covering the United States from Pennsylvania west and from Baltimore south, speaking in nearly every county seat in the whole territory. During the life of that political party he was a factor in all its councils and conventions, and infused confidence and courage into his associates by the clearness of his conception of government and the sincerity with which he advocated its cause. He was one of the populist committee of six along with such men as Thomas Patterson, of Colorado; Ignatius Donnelly, of Minnesota; Harry Tracy, of Texas; Herman Taubeneck, of Illinois; Colonel Harvey, of Florida; and Col. John G. Rankin, of Indiana, treasurer of the party. It was Senator Tom Patterson who wrote the first plank into a national platform demanding the free coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one. Mr. Davis opposed the methods of stating the ratio because it necessitated an explanation to the average voter and proposed instead that the language be changed to read "Free and unlimited coinage as per the Coinage Act of 1873, and expressed in the creditthe comage Act or 1873, and expressed in the credit-strengthening act (25 8-10 grains of gold to 412 I-2 grains of silver)," which is the ratio of sixteen to one. His suggestion was voted down, and his prophecy as to the effect of the "Sixteen to One" declaration in the campaign came true.

In 1896 the Democrats made a bid for popular support of their ticket by offering to take Mr. Sewell's name from their ticket and substitute James H. Davis for vice-president as a running mate for Mr. Bryan. Having determined to accept no honors for himself, but to devote his energies to the welfare of popular principles, he declined the offer and advised his Popular friends not to indorse Bryan as they afterwards did, but to nominate a presidential candidate along with Watson, and make a combination with the Democrated would save when the substitute of the substit land in the White House.

In 1900 an effort was made by the Democrats to unite the forces opposed to the Republican party, and Mr. Davis was requested to take charge of the unionizing of the Populists and silver Republican party with the Demcrats in support of Mr. Bryan. Being wedded to the principle of the initiative, referendum and recall, Mr. Davis demanded that these be made a part of the National platform of the Kansas City Democratic Convention in consideration of his service in unionizing the elements above named. The Democratic Paders consented to this program, and Mr. Davis spent the months of that campaign in a task that proved hopeless of accomplishment.

At his home in Texas Mr. Davis' influence was as paramount as in the national convention of his party. In 1892 he was nominated without his approval as attorney general on the ticket with Mr. Nugent for governor. He and Mr. Nugent were the only lawyers on the ticket, the others being farmers, and both polled about one hundred and eight thousand votes, some ten thousand more votes than the farmers polled. He was nominated for Congress against David B. Culberson, then one of the leading men of the South, and carried all but three counties of the district. Mr. Culberson lost his own county of Marion by several hundred votes. Many gross irregularities and dishonesties were perpetrated by his old political enemies, which resulted in his being declared defeated for the office.

Mr. Davis' aim has been to bring back Democracy to its former home and not to win office for himself. He prefers to fight as a private, not as a candidate, although in Texas it was necessary for him to declare himself for high office in order that he might meet in discussion those candidates who opposed the platform demands of initiative, referendum and recall and other fundamental principles which must be a feature of the Democratic

In his sphere as a campaigner, Mr. Davis has discussed in joint debate the income tax, railroad commission, sixteen to one, and the other Populist demands, with the brains of the United States, and students of politics and economy understand how important has been this influence in the moulding of public opinion around these principles. It was in one of these discussions that he carned the name of "Cyclone." The event occurred early in his career as a public debater, and his efforts at that meeting made him both a name and fame. He was pitted against General Watt-Hardin, of Kentucky, a regular Democrat, a famous word-painter, and a political debater of renown. Senator Peffer, of Kansas, was also one of the Populist advocates at the meeting, but when Mr. Hardin got through with the modest but honest senator the latter was so completely unborsed that his effort only the more discouraged his follower. Not so with Mr. Davis. He was master of the constitution of the United States, knew the history of its making, was perfectly familiar with the "Madison papers," the life and history of Thomas Jefferson, and other documents bearing on the work of the constitutional convention, and he had these books all with him. After answering Mr. Hardin by showing the fallacy of his argument, the inaccuracies of his statements and so on, by quoting from his authorities, Mr. Davis beat down on him with withering sarcasm, then soared above him with inspiring eloquence. Before he had finished, Kentucky's favored "orator and intellectual giant" looked the wreck he was. The long, gaunt and awkward countryman from Texas, bedecked in a linen duster and with alligator boots, had torn his speech to shreds, set his friends to cheering the Texan, and put the Populist part of the audience into a frenzy of partisan outburst. Sam Carey, a son of General Carey, was the reporter for the Associated Press on the occasion, and in his article he referred in strong terms to the wonderful effect of Mr.

preserves in surong terms to the wonderful effect of Mr.

Rev. Bernt Howe. Rev. Bernt Howe came to Austin, Texas, in response to a call from the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church of this city in 1908, and he is still serving the church acceptably and faithfully. He came here after a pastorate of fourteen years in various churches in the middle west, and brought to his duties here an experience that fitted him most admirably for the work of his pastorate.

Born in Odalen, Norway, on October 6, 1868, Rev. Howe is a son of Kjostel Haugen, a farmer of that country. He had his education in the common schools of Norway, and came to Racine, Wisconsin, from his native land, in the year 1887, when he was nineteen years of age. Soon after his arrival on these shores the young man changed his name to Howe, and has since borne that horrowed patronymic. Four years after his settlement in America, he entered the Swedish Methodist Theological Seminary in Evanston, Illinois, and in 1894 he was graduated from that institution, an ordained minister. He took up his active work in the ministry as pastor of the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church in Tacoma, Washington, remaining there for two years, after which he was transferred to the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church at La Conner, Washington, where he remained for two years. His next pastorate was at Norway, Michigan, and he held the pastorate of the Swedish Methodist church of that thriving mining town for three years. His next service was performed as pastor of the First Swedish Methodist Episcopal church of Minneapolis, Minnesota, where for six years he rendered faithful service to his church, and then responded to a call in 1908 to Austin, Texas, where he is still pastor.

Rev. Howe has had a busy career in the ministry of his church, and his activities have taken him into the difficult fields of the church, as well as into those where prosperity and well being was the keynote of the parish. In every pastorate he has nequitted himself admirably, leaving a regerful church whenever he has responded as exception to the rule that has characterized his ministerial services throughout his entire active career thus far, In addition to his regular church work, Rev. Howe is a member of the directorate of the Texas Wesleyan College of Austin, organized under Scandinavian anspices, and one of the most successful schools in the state, concerning which further mention will be found elsewhere in this work,

In September, 1898, Rev. Howe was married to Miss Nanie Hedberg, of Tacoma, Washington. She is a daughter of P. S. Hedberg, who was born in Sweden, but who has been an American citizen for a good many years. Rev. and Mrs. Howe have three children—Serena, Beatrice and Eulalia. Rev. Howe has two brothers and a sister, all of whom are residents of the state of Wisconsin, and are there identified with the agricultural activities of the state.

Dr. Hans Harthan. In the labors to which men devote their activities, not the least in importance or the most insignificant in their impress upon character and destiny are those which minister to our aesthetic tastes. There are many diversities of art, wide variations in the display of artistic gifts. The painter transfers his fancy to canvas, the player holds the mirror up to nature, the sculptor carves his inspiration in living lines in bronze and marble, and the poet has the rare faculty of couching his thoughts in rythmic measure. And, standing preeminent among these, the musician reproduces in glorious melody the emotions which make our lives sad or joyous, despondent or hopeful. Who shall question, then, the right of the musician to a place in the temple of fame and to rank among the benefactors of mankind? Such thoughts arise while contemplating the career of one whose life has been spent in constant effort, not merely to amuse the public, but also to cultivate the popular taste for the higher forms of musical art.

Dr. Hans Harthan is a native of Bavaria, where he was born in 1855. He studied at the University of Munich, where he came in close relation with Lachner, Rheinberger, and von Buelow, and upon their recommendation he was appointed conductor of orchestra and chorus in Magdeburg. Rubinstein made his acquaintance. while in Berlin, and this meeting resulted in Doctor Harthan's nomination for leader of the Philharmonic Orchestra in Odessa. In St. Petersburg he met his great countryman, Adolph Hensel, who made him accept the position of musical director at the University in Derpat in 1885. In 1893 he resigned his position on account of the Russianizing of that famous university, and after a two-years' stay at Dresden, where he conducted the Bach Society and the Dresden School Teacher Singing Society, he was engaged by the Chilean Government as the director of the Conservatorio National de Musica, in Santiago, with a five-year contract. Doctor Harthan came to the United States in 1902 as judge of a singing contest at the Musical Festival, Baltimore, Maryland, spent one year in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, as director of the German Singing Society, and three years as director of music at McGill University, Montreal, Canada, and then again became judge of the Singing Festival, held at Newark, New Jersey, in 1906. In 1907 he came to Belton, Texas, as director of the musical department of Baylor College. Looking for a broader field of activity, he came to Austin, Texas, in 1909, and here he still lives, at this time holding the positions of organist and choir leader of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, and professor of music at Texas Wesleyan College. He has concertized for many years on piano and organ and has been the leader of orchestras for more than a quarter of a century. In addition to having composed over 1,500 selections, he edits music for a number of large publishing houses. It little becomes the layman to attempt an enumeration of the accomplishments of one who has so indelibly impressed his ability and genius upon the music-loving public. That were a task better fitted to the pens of those whose understanding of the art has been gained through years of study and training, and it is for this reason that the following extracts are quoted from the musical columns of some of the country's foremost journals, as well as those of other lands:

"Through Raff's Concerto for piano and orchestra we learned to know Doctor Harthan as a very cultured, educated and refined pianist, who also in the following solos showed himself to be a spirited interpreter. ''-Tageblatt (Leipzig). "It must be said straightaway, that Doctor Harthan, who made his first appearance on this occasion, passed the ordeal triumphantly, and proved himself a fine and very able cultured and sensitive musician.

Deutsche Wacht (Dresden). "What immediately won the public in Doctor Harthan's piano playing was his high intelligence and refined musical taste. At the same time he is a great master of technic, as witness his wonderful performance of Rubinstein's Etude, "-Posen Zeitung (Posen). "Doctor Harthan pleased me extremely, not only in the sonata by Gade, but also in his other selections. He is an excellent pianist with an extraordinarily fine technic, elegant touch and keen observation. narily me technic, elegant touch and keen observation, which give him the power to play every composition in the peculiar style of the composer. He proved himself a master and delighted all his hearers, "—Frankischer Kuri (Nurnherg), "I'n his second concert Doctor Harthan, director of the National Conservatory, played a wonderfully brilliant concerto for piano with orchestra. by J. S. Bach. We have never heard Bach played in such a glorious, harmonic manner, and we never dreamed that the music of this Titanic composer could raise the mighty enthusiasm which we noticed last evening in the crowded assembly .- Ferrocaril (Santiago de Chile). The following notices came from the Montreal papers, Herald: "Montreal finds a great pianist. Dr. Harthan's recital proves him an authority of international rank. Montrealers have often paid two dollars a seat to hear important pianists; none of them had Doctor Harthan's excellencies. True, they excelled him in mannerisms and in the copiousness of their press agency-two factors which Doctor Harthan seemingly scorns. He is a Teuton in playing as in appearance and as in nationality. Doctor Harthan is a master of tempo rubato when he likes, as witness the exquisite effectiveness of the momentary suspense upon the upper note of each phrase in the Chopin prelude, played by way of pre-liminary to an encore. It was Beethoven, however, in which he showed his power. His reading of the Kreutzer Sonata was massive, authoritative and above all intensely clear, and his tonal quality exquisitely beautiful at all times," Daily Star: "Doctor Harthau came to Montreal with a European reputation, and his recital was looked forward to with much interest. While not being in the least sensational or extravagant, and while he seemed to let his head govern his emotions, his interpretations are always meritorious and interesting. One of the most enjoyable features of Doctor Harthan's playing is a sympathetic touch noticeable in pianissimo passages. His technique is admirable for all requirements, and accuracy is one of his strongest points." Daily Witness: "Dr. Hans Harthan gave his first public piano recital in the Royal Victoria College last evening. Seldom in Montreal have music critics been so charmed with the art. Accuracy of technique and sympathy of rendition made it brilliant throughout." Herald: "Doctor Harthan is perhaps the most finished pianist in Canada. Certainly we know of no one who could approach the liquidness of his finger-passage in the Mendelssohn Spinning Song, or the intellectual clarity of his playing of the old polyphonic music.

The Mail and Empire, of Toronto, commented as follows: "There was a personality about his work that made it unique. He has a touch of wonderful firmness and tender delicacy, and is completely free from the distracting mannerisms of the average piano soloist. Seemingly, he plays abstractedly, forgetting himself, and devoting every thought to the music. In a Chopin prelude he did his best work, bringing out the resonant, swaying rythm with a peculiar force and beauty. Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 8 was given after the Chopin, and served as a contrast, in which his delicacy and clear-cut technique were predominant. Doctor Harthan also gave Beethoven's Allegro, op. 31, No. 2. The rapidity of the changes in expression, and the individuality of interpretation shown in this number, stamped Doctor Harthan as a Master.'' The New York Musical Courier said: "Doctor Harthan has been enjoying a round of formal receptions in New York and Philadelphia since his arrival. He is one of the best choral leaders now in the country. And again: "Doctor Harthan is one of the finest of European pianists and a composer of high repu-tation for voice and instrument." He was received enthusiastically in Philadelphia, as witness the extract from the North American of that city: "Doctor Harthan is a pianist and composer of high rank and world-wide recognition." The Houston Chronicle expressed its appreciation of his genius in the following manner: "Doctor Harthan's accompaniments were perfect gems. He accompanied the songs in their every feature with artistic effect, and many expressions of pleasure were given by the large number of listeners present. Both artists were repeatedly called out." At Dallas he was no less enthusiastically received and appreciated, as is chronicled by the Morning News; "Dr. Hans Harthan, with an unstudied simplicity, offered several piano numbers and won immediate appreciation. With that charming unaffectedness, characteristic of the German scholar, for which Doctor Harthan stands, aside from his musical worth, he played on, unmindful of his audience. His is the sort of liquid tone music that is unhampered with superfluous technique that so often mars. He played and the people loved the real music of the liquid touch. He is a real lover of Bach, and the influence of that master is felt keenly in the sustained work of the voices that sing throughout his own selections. It is not to intimate that technique or power was wanting-such was not so-but emphasis should be put on the charm of quietude in the man and his work. The Liszt Hungarian Rhapsodie awakened all the talent, power and brilliancy of hand work, and the tonal elision that constituted the value of his other numbers was for a time forgotten."

In 1883 Doctor Harthan was married to Miss Anna Fell, of Mainz, Germany, who at that time was his piano pupil. She is his faithful and able co-worker in his musical labors. Mrs. Harthan was a voice teacher in the conservatory of Chile, South America, and also taught in Baylor College for a year. Their daughter, Elsie Harthan Arendt, is one of the best singers in America, residing in Chicago and coming to Austin every winter for a few months, where she won much admiration, both as a singer and teacher of a large class. She was born in Odessa, Rassia. Hans, the elder son, was in California, while he was a consecsed an erhibit of the control of the Carlon of the Carlon of the Carlon Lutheran church. His pleasant home is situated at No. 1208 West Sixth street.

REW. H. JOHANNES ROMEERG. The life of Rev. H. Johannes Romberg has been one devoted to the ministry of the German Evangelical church in various places since he came to America from his native land in 1890. His work has been of an especially worthy order, entering largely into education service, and his ministry thus far has yielded rich returns in the young lives that have come into daily contact with him, as a result of his precept and practice.

Born at Berlin, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, on March 20, 1856, H. Johannes Romberg is a son of Hormann and Therese (Fischer) Romberg, the father a Lutheran minister all his life. To one interested in names and their derivations, it will be of interest to know that the name Romberg means Rome Mountain, that being the name of a mountain peak in the Tyrols on which was situated a castle inhabited by the family from which the Rombergs spring. The family is an old and honorable one in its native land, and Rev. Romberg does honor to the family name in the nature and purpose of his work in his adopted country.

Rev. Romberg had his education in Germany, and it was of a particularly thorough order, indeed. When he had finished the Gymnasium course, comparing favorably with our best high school training, he entered the University of Leipsie, from which he went as a student later to the University of Tubingen and still later to the University of Rostock, finishing the latter in its theological department. In 1890 he came to America, here entering into active service in the ministry for which his long years of study had carefully prepared him, and he has since that time filled pastorates in the following places, in the service of the German Evangelical Lutheran church: Earlville, Iowa, 1890 to 1895; from 1895 to 1897 he was pastor at Sheffield, Iowa, and in 1897 he came to Texas, and at Breman took up the duties of president of the German Lutheran College, continuing as president and as teacher Theology and German from then until 1903, when he came to Austin to accept the pastorate of St. Martin's Evangelical church, which he still holds.

In 1905 Rev. Romberg was elected president of the First German Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Texas, and he is still serving in that capacity, having under his supervision and direction sixty-five ministers and one hundred and twenty-five congregations, numbering 4,688 members.

In December, 1891, Rev. Romberg was married to Miss Emma Thedo Ommen, daughter of Peter Ommen, a prosperous farmer of Monticello, Iowa. The home of Rev. and Mrs. Romberg is at 105 East Fourteenth street, this city. They have no children.

How, J. W. Robertson. The late Col. Robertson was far many years following the close of the Civil war and until his death one of the ablest lawyers and distinction of Texas. His home was at Austin from 1872, and his widow still lives in that city, an esteemed member of Austin society and enjoying the regard paid to the memory of, her late husband. Mr. Robertson by gallantry and efficiency as a soldier won his title to command a regiment in the Southern army, and his qualities as a soldier wor have expense of the command and the law and in public affairs in Texas.

Col. Robertson was born under the shadow of the Allegheny mountains in Washington county of East Tennessee in 1840. When he was five years old his parents moved to Roane county, in the same part of the state, and his early years until manhood were spent on a farm.
In 1857 he became a student in Hiawassee Collego near Madisonville in East Tennessee, an institution of learning which graduated many young men subsequently distinguished in Tennessee and national history, and Col.
Robertson came out from that college at the head of his leass in 1861, and received the degree of Master of Arts from the same institution after the war. It was also in that institution he raised his regiment.

As a young college man he almost at once took his place as a fighter in the Confederate ranks, entering the service as first lieutenant in the Forty-third Tennessee regiment. In 1862 came his promotion to Captain in the Sixty-third Tennessee regiment, and there followed a long and arduous duty in many campaigns and on many battlefields. He was present in the battle of Chickamauga, at the siege and assault on Knoxville, and in manga, at the sege and assault on Knowler, and in the battle of Beans Station. In the spring of 1864, Bushrod Johnson's Brigade, to which the Sixty-third was attached, was sent first to Virginia, and Col. Robertson was present in the battles of Walthall Station, Swift Creek, and at Drury's Bluff, where three-fourths of his regiment were killed and wounded. He was in all the battles along the lines around Petersburg during June and July of 1864, and at New Market Heights and Fort Harrison in front of Richmond during the fall of 1864. On June 17, 1864, in the midst of a great battle, Colonel Robertson succeeded to the command of the Sixty-third Tennessee regiment and continued its leader until the fall of Petersburg, when he was made a prisoner of war. Col. Robertson was on several occasions mentioned for distinguished gallantry, and in the early part of 1865 was promoted to the rank of colonel of a consolidated Tennessee regiment, on recommendation by the brigade commander. Gen. McComb, and by Gen. Heth and Geo. A. P. Hill. However, he did not receive his commission in time to take command of that regiment. He remained a prisoner of war at first in the old capitol building at Washington and later on Johnson's Island, until paroled in June, 1865. From Johnson's Island he went to Huntsville, Missouri, spent the rest of the year in teaching school, and on March 28, 1866, was married in that town to Miss Sophronia M. Austin. She was a young woman of many accomplishments and proved an effective inspiration and practical adviser to her husband throughout his subsequent career.

Following his marriage Col. Robertson returned to Tennessee, had charge of the Academy at Sweetwater in eastern Tennessee, but in the latter part of 1867, came to Texas, and lived in Bryan and at Calvert until 1872. In that year his home was moved to Austin, and he remained a resident of that city until his death on June 30, 1892. Col. Robertson was soon prominent in public affairs, served a term in the legislature, and for a short time was district judge of the Austin District. The the city, In 1888, he was a delegate from the tenth district to the National Democratic convention in St. Louis, assisting in the nomination of Grover Cleveland.

As a lawyer Col. Robertson possessed thorough learning, marked ability both as a counselor and advocate, and gained a record of many important successes in the Texas bar. Much of his time for a number of years was taken up in important litigation in the courts of Austin and in adjoining counties, in the state supreme court, and in the United States circuit court. With his ability to comprehend and work out the details of a complicated ease he united splendid powers as an effective pleader and logical speaker, and attained a more than ordinary reputation for his literary accomplishments, possessing an incisive and fluent style which made all his work with the pen valuable both from the literary standpoint and for its effectiveness in reaching the object desired. At the time of his first sickness he was attorney for the English syndicate that built the state capitol. Col. Robertson was an honor to the Texas bar, and one of the distingished figures in the state during his generation. Mrs. Robertson now lives at 1710 Pearl street in Austin.

BENJAMIN KOWALSKI. Conspicuous in business eicles and prominent in the public affairs of Brownsville, Benjamin Kowalski, an ex-mayor of the city, is a true type of the energetic and enterprising citizens who have been influential in advancing the best interests of this part of Cameron county, his enthusiastic zeal, unquestioned ability and strong personality making him a leader among men. A son of Bernard Kowalski, he was born, in 1854, in New Orleans, Louisiana, of thrifty

Bernard Kowalski, a native of Poland, was born in 1821 in Inowrazlaw, where he received excellent educational advantages. Immigrating to the United States in 1841, he located in New Orleans, Louisiana, where he became highly successful as a business man and where in 1847 he was naturalized as an American citizen. He joined the Washington Artillery, a famous military organization of New Orleans, in which he was much interested. He subsequently enlisted for service in the Mexican War, and went with General Taylor's army into Mexico, on the way passing through Brownsville, Texas. He served with gallantry throughout the war, taking part in many engagements. In 1849 he went with the gold seekers to California, making an overland journey, but not meeting with the success he anticipated in that country he returned to New Orleans in 1850, and resumed business in that city. In 1861, being burned out, he came to Cameron county, Texas, and embarked in mercantile pursuits in Brownsville. On the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army, and having been commissioned major of artillery under General Bee took an active part in the defense of Fort Brown (Brownsville) and when the fort was captured in 1864 by General Herron, Bernard Kowalski was taken prisoner and carried to New Orleans where he was kept a prisoner until the close of the conflict. Returning then to Brownsville, he resumed his business operations in this city, and was here an honored resident until his death, June 24, 1889.

While in California Mr. Kowalski was a member of Terry Vigilantes of that state and helped drive had characters out of the state. He was intensely particite to the cause of the south, and was never "reconstructed," As a husband, a father, and a citizen, be was a man of the finest type, charitable and unselfish to an unusual degree, oftentimes taking greater interest in the troubles and discouragements of others than he did of his own. Beloved by all who knew him, his death was a cause of general regret. The maidien name of his Poland, and survived him but eleven months, dying in May, 1890.

Acquiring his rudimentary education in New Orleans, Benjamin Kowalski subsequently attended Soula Business College and the Brothers' College in Brownsville. At the early age of fourteen years he began his business life, becoming a clerk in his father's store, and later was engaged in mercantile pursuits on his own account. Taking an interest in local affairs from early manhood, he was for many years prominently connected with various branches of the public service in Brownsville, from 1869 until 1877 serving as assistant postmaster under Edward Downey. Nine years later, upon the death of Postmaster Hopkins, Mr. Kowalski was appointed as his successor, his commission hearing date of November 27, 1886. That was under President Cleveland's first administration, and Mr. Kowalski has the distinction of having been the first Democratic postmaster that ever Brownsville had. He served in that capacity for four years with conspicuous efficiency, and to the satisfaction of the public.

When Mr. Kowalski left the postoffice the first time, in 1577, he accepted a position at Fort Brown, first as army quartermaster's clerk, subsequently he was employed as clerk to General Sutton, United States Consul at Matamoras, Mexico. He is quite talented and accomplished, and an excellent linguist, having conversational knowledge of Spanish, French and German, as well as of English. It was almost entirely due to Mr. Kowalski that Brownsville obtained its Federal Building, his preliminary efforts in that direction having been hegun through a letter to Congressman Crane in 1888, and continue until successful. He has likewise served most acceptably as United States Commissioner, and as deputy district clerk for the Southern District of Texas.

In 1910 Mr. Kowalski was elected mayor of Brownsville, and served the regular term of two years with credit to himself, and to the honor of his constituents, rendering the city service of inestimable value, his achievements having been noteworthy in every respect. Among those of especial value to the community are the following named: The granting of franchise and build-ing of spur line by the Saint Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway from West Brownsville, extending around the northeastern part of the city, to the Little Indiana Canal Company's property; the extension, improvement and enlargement of the Municipal Water and Light System, putting in entirely new machinery with double units for all motive power, including new and larger water mains, fire hydrants and street lights, also new buildings and sheds for water and light plants and boiler sheds; the building of an up-to-date Filtering Plant, water ninety-eight pre cent pure; the building of a new market and city hall, with sheds to Fire Department Building; the extension of water and hydrants to the City Cemetery; the building of over twenty-five blocks of street paving, and the levy of a tax of one-third on the first paving district on all streets paved, to continue the street paving; the building of more than fifteen miles of concrete sidewalks; the granting of a franchise, and the building of the Robertson Street Railway; the granting of a franchise, and building a new street railway on Twelfth street, from the International Bridge to the Rio Grande Railroad Depot; the granting of a franchise, and building a spur line of the Saint Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway on Fronton street for the business houses; the building of a drainage pipe line for surface and overflow water; the purchase of a fire wagon, and three thousand feet of fire hose; and there is still on the docket, and to be voted on, a measure for three thousand dollars for the erection of a slaughter pen. During the two years, from May, 1910, until May, 1912, that Mr. Kowalski was at the head of the municipal government, there were more buildings erected in Brownsville, both for busi ness and residence purposes, than at any other equal length of time in its history. The sewerage plant was also completed under his regime.

Mr. Kowalski married Miss Corinne Wilson, a daughter of Dr. A. H. Wilson, who came to Brownsville from Georgia, where she was born. A woman of culture and refinement, whose purposes are in harmony with his, Mrs.

Kowalski has proved herself a worthy helpmate in every sense implied by the term, cheering him in his hours of discouragement, and aiding him by kindly words and acts in the many struggles that inevitably come to every enterprising, progressive and conscientious public servant. Six sons have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Kowalski, namely: M. B., a graduate of the N. M. College, is a civil engineer in Dallas, Texas; G. L., county attorney of Kleberg county, is a university graduate; Dave, in the abstract business; Paul O., teller in the First National Bank of Brownsville, is a college graduate; Alexander, with Cooper Grocer Company of Waco, is a college graduate, and Clarence, a student.

Praternally Mr. Kowalski is a member, and past master of Rio Grande Lodge, No. 81, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; a member, and past patron of Hope Chapter, No. 124, Order of the Eastern Star; a member of Texas Consistory, No. 1, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, of Galveston; of Ed Mina Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Galveston; a member, past chancellor and commander, of Brownsville Lodge, No. 339, Knights of Pythias; and a member, past consul, and commander of Acacia Camp, No. 699, Woodmen of the World. Mr. Kowalski is prominent and active in each of the orders to which he belong specially active in Masonry, in which he has taken the thirty-second degree. All the sons are members of the Masonic Order with the exception of the youngest.

REV. ERINEST SEVERIN. The one Swedish newspaper in the state of Texas is under the management of Rev. Ernest Severin. Who came to the 19.19 to 19.1

Rev. Ernest Severin was born on September 7, 1872, in Roda, Sweden, and is a son of A. G. Peterson, an architect of that place and a man of considerable prominence. When young Peterson came to Chicago in 1892 he found so wide an array of men of his same family name as his own that he considered it advisable to change his surname, and he accordingly took the name of Severin, under which he has since been known. Rev. Severin had his early education in the public and private schools of Sweden, and his parents gave careful attention to the matter of his training. He was twenty years of age when he came to America and going at once to Chicago, Illinois, he entered the Swedish Methodist Theological Seminary at Evanston, remaining there for a year, when illness prevented further attendance to his theological studies. Soon after that time young Severin came to Texas and entered Fort Worth University, which he attended for three years. He was ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church in 1898, following which he held pastorates in the Swedish Methodist churches of Fort Worth, Hulto, and Taylor, all in Texas, the time of his service being three years in the Fort Worth church and one year in each of the others.

This service was discontinued by reason of his declining health, and in 1901 he retired from the ministry, and when he had recovered sufficiently to make it possible for him to resume work of any sort, he engaged as a bookkeeper for a merenattle house in Taylor, Texas, continuing thus for four years. His health again began to play truant, and the young man withdrew from his elerical activities and retired to a ranch in McCullash country, where, after a period of roughing it, he felt himself so far renewed in physical well-heing as to be able to accept, in 1898, a call to his former Fort Worth pastorate. He resumed his work there in the year named and continued in active and effective service for three years, when he came to Austin and assumed charge of the Texas Posten, as has already been mentioned. Concerning this popular and constantly growing publication, fuller details of an interesting character will be found in the life sketch of Rev. John M. Ojerholm, of this city, so that further details on that point are not requisite at this writing.

Rev. Severin was married on March 10, 1900, to Miss Ida Christina Johnson, of Fort Worth, a daughter of C. W. Johnson. She was born in Sweden, as was also her husband, and she was but one year old when her parents emigrated to these shores. They settled first in Rockford, Illinois, but later moved to Texas, where they still reside.

To Rev. and Mrs. Severin four children were born: Evelyn Victoria, Ernest Oliver, Alice and Walter Henry. Rev. Severin is interested in educational work along various lines, and in addition to his other activities he is a director of the Texas Wesleyan College, a Swedish institution, of which more extended mention is made in the sketch of Dr. Ole Olander, also of Austin. Rev. Severin is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, with affiliations in Congress Camp No. 11929 of Austin. He has no other fraternal association, being one who devotes his best attentions to his work and having scant leisure for social activities. His work in the state has been a praiseworthy one thus far, and it is expected that he will make continued progress along the line of his present endeavors.

REV. JOHN M. OJERHOLM. The life and work of Rev. John M. Ojerholm, editor of the Texas Posten, the only Swedish newspaper ever established in the state, was devoted without a break to the ministry of the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church, in which he began his service as early as 1881, in his native land. He was born in Nykoping, Sweden, on July 29, 1858, and is a son of Andrew Ojerholm, who was long engaged in the iron industry, and who came to America in the year 1882, settling in Worcester, Massachusetts, in which place he passed the rest of his life, death coming to him there in the year 1910.

John M. Ojerholm had his early education in the public schools of Sweden, followed by attendance at the State College of Sweden, after which he began his ministry in his native land in 1881. He continued there for two years, and then followed his father to America. He had been in America but a short time when he entered the ministry of the Swedish M. E. church and he filled the following appointments in a creditable and praiseworthy manner: Providence, Rhode Island, one year; Lindsborg, Kansas, one year; Rockford, Illinois, two years. In the autumn of 1887 he came to Waco, Texas, for a time filling the pulpit of the Swedish M. E. church at that place, but later being transferred to the Fort Worth church, and still later to Georgetown, Texas. He was two years in the Decker, Texas, M. E. church, and in 1896 came to Austin to assume the editorship of the Texas Posten which had been established a short time before. Rev. Ojerholm is still head of the editorial department, and has a financial interest in the paper as well. Under his editorial direction the paper has grown in prominence and popularity with the Scandinavian population of the state, and he is ably seconded in his work by the offices of Rev. Ernest Severin, who is the manager of the publication, and who is mentioned at greater length in a sketch devoted to him elsewhere in this work.

Rev. Ojerholm was married in 1881 to Miss Mathilde Wiel, a daughter of Truls Wiel, a native of Norway. She was one of thirteen children born to her parents, and was highly educated. She was the author of a number of Swedish poems which have been brought before the public in a volume that has met with considerable favor among people of her nation. She died in 1903. In 1906 Rev. Ojerholm married Miss Olga Olsen of Austin, Texas, who came to this country from Sweden when she was about fourteen years old, in company with her father, Ole Olsen, who is now a resident of Austin. They have three children: Julia, Elizabeth and James,

The family home is at 807 East 14th street, Austin.

RT. REV. GEORGE HERBERT KINSOLVING. The present bishop of the Diocese of Texas of the Episcopal church was elevated to this high position twenty years ago, and is one of the best known and ablest churchmen of his denomination in America. A member of an old Virginia family which has stood high in professional, business and public life in that state for generations, Bishop Kinsolving was reared in an atmosphere of fine ideals and was liberally educated. His father before him made a notable record as a minister in the same church, and a half-brother, Lucien L. Kinsolving, has for a number of years been missionary bishop of the Brazilian Episcopal church.

George H. Kinsolving was born in Bedford county, Virginia, April 28, 1849, and is a true son of the old Dominion. His parents were Rev. Ovid A. and Julia Heiskell (Krauth) Kinsolving. His father, who was born in Albernarle county, Virginia, and was graduated from Kenyon College, at Gambier, Ohio, was for over fifty-three years an active clergyman of his church in Virginia, and died in 1894. The Kinsolving family dates back to the early Colonial epoch of Virginia. Mrs. Kinsolviug, mother of our subject, who died in 1858, was of a family which originated in Germany. Her father, Charles Philip Krauth, who was of the second or third generation in this country, was president of the Pennsylvania College and of the Theological Seminary of the Lutheran Church of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, while his son, Charles Porterfield Krauth, was Vice-Provost of the University of Pennsylvania.

Bishop Kinsolving finished his literary education and graduated from the University of Virginia, being a student there from 1868 to 1870. In 1874 he graduated from the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary of Virginia, and has since received, in 1892, the degree of S.T.D. from Griswold College of Iowa, and in 1893 the degree D.D. from the University of the South, Made a deacon in 1874, he was assistant in Christ church, Baltimore, Maryland, during 1874-75. In the latter year he was ordained a priest, and was rector in St. Mark's church in Baltimore from 1875 to 1878, From the latter year to 1881 he was rector in St. John's church at Cincinnati, and then became rector of the Church of the Epiphany of Philadelphia, where he remained from 1881 to 1892. He served as a member of the Standing committee of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and in 1892 was a delegate to the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, While at Philadelphia he also served as Overseer of the Protestant Episcopal Divinity school.

In 1892 he was elected assistant bishop of the Diocese of Texas, and in that year removed to Austin, which city has since been his home. On July 11, 1893, he succeeded the late Bishop Gregg as Bishop of the Diocese of Texas, and his work has thus been continued in that office for more than twenty years. The journal of the church reports a steady progress and large growth of the Episcopal church in Texas during his administration and probably no protestant bishop in the country stands higher in the esteem of both the clergy and the laymen than Bishop Kinsolving. He is the author of both "Church's Burden," published at New York in 1902; and "Volume of Memorial Sermons," published at Ogden in 1912, besides being author of various addresses and notable sermons preached on special Bishop Kinsolving was married at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 8, 1879, to Miss Grace Jaggar, a daughter of Walter Jaggar. Her father was a native of New York and during his lifetime one of the prominent bankers of that city. Mrs. Kinsolving is a sister of Bishop T. A. Jaggar, of the Southern Ohio Diocese. To their marriage has been born one son, Walter Ovid Kinsolving, who is now a curate at the Church of the Interession in New York City. Bishop Kinsolving's residence is at 2607 Whitis avenue, Austin.

HON. CHARLES H. JENKINS. Since 1910 an associate justice of the court of Civil Appeals for the third supreme judicial district of Texas, Judge Jenkins has filled this high position with admirable efficiency and with credit to his long career as a lawyer and citizen. Judge Jenkins still has his legal residence at Brownwood, where he was one of the early members of the bar, and where he gained his reputation as a lawyer and public official. At Brownwood Judge Jenkins is regarded as one of the men who has done most for that city, especially in the improvement and development of its educational system. Before he gained recognition as a lawyer he was a surveyor, did a great deal of practical work in his profession in northern and western Texas, and there is probably not another member of the higher state courts who possesses a more thorough and exact knowledge of land boundary laws and conditions than Judge Jenkins.

His was one of the pioneer families in north Texas. Judge Charles H. Jenkins himself was born in Dallas county May 17, 1852, a son of Colonel Jonathan E. and Mahala R. (Bonner) Jenkins. His father, a native of Alabama, was a surveyor and merchant in that state, and while living there served with the rank of colonel in the state militia. In 1851 he came to Texas, settling first in Dallas county, and in 1854 moving to Parker county, where he followed his profession as a surveyor, and at the same time was one of the early ranchers and stock raisers in that then frontier county. He moved to Dallas county in 1861, and early in the war between the states enlisted in the Confederate army and re-mained with the forces of the south until the end of the war, when he returned home broken in health and died soon afterwards. His widow survived him nearly half a century and died in November 1912 aged eightytwo years.

Judge Jenkins as a boy attended a private school conducted by Rev. Mr. Carlton in Dallas until the fall of 1866. In that year, being fourteen years of age, he was sent to Cedar Springs and placed under the instruction of W. R. Smith. While there he studied the pro-fession previously followed by his father, of surveyor, and perfected himself both in the theoretical and practical phases of this work. His ambition was soon directed to the law, and in 1870 he began its study in the office of Kendall & Ault at Dallas. His studies were interrupted in 1871 when he was placed in charge of the surveyor's office of Dallas county. The duties of that office kept him quite busy for a year and a half, and early in 1873 he was made city engineer of Dallas, heing associated in this work with Commodore S. W. C. Duncan and Major John H. Brown. It will be recalled that Dallas at that time had recently become the terminus of its first railroad, and was rapidly developing as a commercial center, so that city engineer Judge Jenkins had a great deal to do with the planning and introduction of many municipal improvements. While serving as surveyor and city engineer, he managed to keep up and continue his studies in the law, and in March, 1874, was admitted to the bar.

While Judge Jenkins began his practice in Dallas, he remained there only about five years, and in 1879 moved to Brownwood, which was then a frontier city, just about to become a point on a railroad, and at the be-ginning of its real growth and development. Judge Jenkins has accordingly been identified with Brown-wood through practically its entire progress from a frontier hamlet to one of the best cities in central west Texas. His public services there comprised several terms as an alderman and one term of Mayor. It was during his administration of the city as mayor that his leadership and influence were important elements in bringing about the construction of the Brownwood waterworks. However, his fellow citizens regarded his most important achievement his faithful, enthusiastic and self-sacrificing labors as a member of the school board. He served as a member of the board for twentysix consecutive years, and during fourteen years was president of the board. When he first came into this relation with the public schools of Brownwood, there was a small frame building of two rooms, where all the educational facilities of that community were centered. Judge Jenkins with several of his loyal associates realized and took the lead in the matter of securing proper school buildings, not only to accommodate the immediate population, but to provide and look ahead for the future. Under his leadership the board went ahead and erected a stone school house, known in that city as the "Coggin school." The finances of the city did not justify the expenditure of sufficient funds to erect such a building, and the members of the board took the matter upon their own responsibility, and gave their own individual notes aggregating about six thousand dollars to provide for the erection and finishing of the school. It was the second school building and the first modern building of its kind in Brownwood. The board at the same time also increased and remodeled the original school, known as the Central school, by the construction of an addition which converted the house into one of five rooms instead of two. The board went still further, secured a large lot of ground, and erected a modern high school building at a cost of sixteen thousand dollars. The city appropriated for this sixteen thousand dollars. The city appropriated for this purpose six thousand dollars, while again the individual members of the board gave their notes to secure the halance, ten thousand dollars. These notes were subsequently paid off from year to year as the board was able to save from the school funds. Then in a few years the Central school had been outgrown, and the board determined to replace the old structure with a new at a cost of twenty thousand dollars. The city allowed the board ten thousand dollars, and once more the former process of financing was resorted to, and the board members made themselves individually responsible for the balance of ten thousand dollars, an indebtedness which was finally cleared off in the same manner as had been done in the former case.

As a lawyer Judge Jenkins in a few years gained first rank not only at Brownwood but over the entire surrounding district. His practice extended to all the adjoining counties, and in two special fields he probably had no peer in that part of the state. His early knowledge of surveying naturally brought about a decided specialization of his practice in boundary cases, and for many years he has been a recognized authority on boundary law and facts. He also gained prominence as a lawyer of special skill and success in defending boundary and homicide cases, and his practice also included important civil litigation in every branch of the civil law.

In 1907 Judge Jenkins was elected a member of the Thirtieth Legislature, and was re-elected in 1909, representing the Brown county district. In the thirtieth legislature he introduced a number of bills covering judicial reform, among which might be mentioned a bill "Requiring pleadings to be verified and abolishing the general denial," and also a bill to "Abolish the degree of murder and creating it one offense instead of three offenses." He also introduced a bill "Creating a Legislative Commission.' which failed of passage, although at the present time seven states have a similar statute, and eventually Texas is sure to adopt such a plan. The purpose of the bill was to create a commission, whose office and records should serve as a legislative reference bureau, with a permanent and also elastic file of data and statistics which should be at the service of members of the legislature in preparing bills, while the commission itself should pass upon all bills offered, irrespective of whether the legislature was in session or not, and report as to the constitutionality, the general scope and purpose, and feasibility of any current piece of legislation.

Judge Jenkins in March 1910 resigned from the thirty-first legislature to accept an appointment given by Governor Campbell to fill a vacancy as associate judge in the court of Civil Appeals for the third Su-preme Judicial District. In the following November he stood as a candidate and was elected for the unexpired term, of four years.

Judge Jenkins is one of the prominent members of the Odd Fellows in the state of Texas, and has been identified with the order since 1880. He is Past Noble Grand of the lodge, a member of the Rebekahs, is Past Presiding Officer of his Encampment, a member of the Cantonment, and has been a delegate to the for of the Cantonment, and has been a delegate to the State Grand Lodge of the order. He is also sfilliated with the Woodmen of the World, an order he joined about twenty years ago, and belongs to the Woodmen's Circle. Judge Jenkins is an honorary member of the Austin Press Club, and belongs to the Texas Historical Association.

In September, 1873, Judge Jenkins married Miss Annie E. Smith, a daughter of John W. and Sarah A. Smith, of Colorado, but who were among the pioneer settlers of Dallas county. Mrs. Jenkins was a schoolmate of Judge Jenkins at Dallas. Her death occurred in 1909, and their three children are as follows: Willie, who is the wife of E. J. Miller, a lawyer of Brownwood; Annie May, wife of J. A. Johnson, of Brownwood; and Roberta J., who married B. L. Shropshire, of Brownwood, Judge Jenkins while in Austin has his residence at 204 East Tenth street.

Howell W. Runnels. In the spring of 1912 Mr. Ruunels was elected to the office of mayor of the progressive and thriving little city of Texarkana, Bowie county, and not only has his administration been marked by lib eral policies and careful use of his executive functions but also by such decisive popular approval as to make sure beyond all peradventure that there can be in his case no possible application of the scriptural aphorism that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." for he is a native son of Bowie county and has ever maintained his home within its borders. Mayor Runnels is one of the loval and influential citizens of the county, where he is the owner of the fine old home-stead plantation on which he was born, and he is a scion of a family whose name has been prominently and worthily linked with the annals of Texas since the days when it was an independent republic. Thus there are many points which render specially consistent the definite recognition accorded to him in this bistory of his native commonwealth.

Howell W. Runnels was born on the old homestead now owned by him and situated twelve miles northwest of Texarkana, Bowie county, and the date of his nativity was January 1, 1867. The fifth child and second son in a family of fourteen children, he is now the only one living, and in his generation he is effectively carrying forward the industrial enterprises and civic activities that were ably instituted by his honored father. He is a son of Howell W. and Martha C. B. (Adams) Runnels, both natives of the state of Mississippi and the latter a representative of the Adams family of Georgia that has given two presidents to the United States and that has been one of great prominence in the annals of American history. In 1840 Howell W. Runnels, Sr., in company with his brothers Hardin R., Edmond S., and Hiram A., came from Madison county, Mississippi, to the south-western frontier and first settled on the Brazos river. in Southern Texas, but they shortly afterward came to the northeastern part of the republic and established permanent homes in Bowie county, where they had instituted successful operations in the development of the agricultural resources of the district by the time of the admission of Texas to the Union, in 1845. One of the four brothers, Hardin R., who was familiarly and widely known as "Dick" Runnels, became specially prominent and influential in political and other civic activities in this part of the state, and finally he had the distinction of being elected governor of Texas, an office of which he was the efficient and popular incumbent for consecutive terms of one year each. Runnels county was named in his honor and he was in a true sense one of the distinguished men of his time in the Lone Star commonwealth. It may be noted that Hon. Hiram Runnels, an uncle of the Texas governor of the name, had served as governor of Mississippi, and that Colonel Harmond Runnels, a great-uncle and a prominent citizen of Georgia, was a gallant patriot soldier and officer in the Continental line in the war of the Revolution. The ancestral his tory, in both direct and collateral lines, is one of which the mayor of Texarkana, Texas, may well be proud.

Howell W. Runnels maintained his home near the old town of Boston, judicial center of Bowie county, until 1876, when he removed with his family to Texarkana, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1897, his cherished and devoted wife being summoned to eternal rest in his 73d year, and both having held membership in the Baptist church. Howell W. Runnels, Sr., was a man of strong individuality, broad and well fortified views and much business ability. He was a prominent factor in the social and industrial development and upbuilding of Bowie county, was one of the best known and most highly honored citizens of the county and was inflexible in his adherency to the Democratic party. He was a member of Legislature of 1857. At the time of the Civil war he did all in his power to support the cause of the Confederacy and thus showed his loyalty to the South, under whose benignant influence he had been reared.

Howell W. Runnels, Jr., now the only surviving members of the immediate family, was a lad of about eight years at the time of the family removal from the old homestead plantation to Texarkana, where he duly availed himself of the advantages of the public schools, after which he continued his studies in the Texas Agricultural & Mechanical College, at Bryan. He has never waveredin his allegiance to the great basic industries of agriculture and stock-growing, and still gives his active and appreciative supervision to his old homestead plantation, which is doubly endeared to him through the gracious memories and associations of the past. This property is equipped with the best of permanent improvements, comprises 2,200 acres, seven hundred under cultivation and, as previously noted, twelve miles northwest of Texarkana. In addition to his successful enterprise in this connection Mr. Runnels is also engaged in the timber business, in which his operations have been somewhat extensive.

For a number of years Mr. Runnels has been a decisively influential figure in the local councils of the Democratic party and has shown deep interest in public affairs. He never consented to become a candidate for public office until 1908, when he was elected city assessor and collector, a dual office of which he continued the efficient and acceptable incumbent for four years. He was almost immediately called to the highest office in the gift of the people of his home city, as in April, 1912, he was elected mayor of Texarkana, by an overwhelming majority over all opposition. This was an emphatic testimony to his personal popularity and to the confidence reposed in him by the voters of the city. His policy as chief executive of the municipal government has been at once progressive and duly conservative, and he has bent every energy and thought to the furtherance of wise administration of all departments of the municipal government, as well as to insistently advocating measures and enterprises of progressive order, especially in the expanding of the scheme of permanent public improvements. His regime has met with approval and commendation and within the same Texarkana has been prospered along both cive and material lines.

In the time honored Masonic fraternity Mayor Runnels has received the ancient-craft, capitular and chivalire degrees, his affiliation being with Clarkesville Commandery, Knights Templar of same place, where he also holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the fraternal Order of Eagles.

On the 18th of April, 1894, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Runnels to Miss Katharine M. Neely, was born in the state of Mississippi, and who has proved a most popular acquisition in the representative social activities. Mr. and Mrs. Runnels have six children, Howell R., Jack N., Martha Octavia, George Elizabeth, Hardin Richard, and Patsy Darden.

Major George W. Littleffeld. The founder and president of the American National Bank of Austin is one of the honored veterans of the great war between the states. His gallantry as a fighting member of the famous Terry's Rangers earned him the rauk and title by which he has been familiarly known to a large portion of Texas people for nearly fifty years. Among the cattlemen of the southwest Major Littlefield has also long held a conspicuous position, and a great variety of experience and incidents as well as financial achievement and success have characterized his career.

Though born in Panola county, Mississippi, June 21, 1842, Major Littlefield's home has been in Texas for nearly sixty-five years. His parents, Fleming and Mildred M. (Sattershite) Littlefield, natives respectively of Tennessee and Georgia, in 1850 settled at Gonzales, Texas, where the father was a cotton planter and mechant until his death in 1853. The mother died in June 1880.

George W. Littlefield had a few years of public school training, and subsequently attended the Baylor College while it was located at Independence, Texas, and also at Gonzales College. With the outbreak of the war in 1861 his services were enlisted as Second Sergeant in Company I of the Eighth Texas Cavalry, better known as Terry's Rangers. In January 1862 came his promotion as second lieutenant of his company, and in May 1862, following the great battle of Shiloh, he was made captain. He continued in active service during the great campaign between the northern and southern armies in Tennessee and northern Mississippi during the years 1862-63, and after the battle of Chickamanga in the latter year was made acting major of his regiment. On December 26, 1863, on the battlefield of Mossy Creek in eastern Tennessee, a portion of a shell cut his left hip, making a wound eleven inches in length and disabling him from further service. While he was lying on the battlefield, Brigadier-General Thomas Harrison and Colonel Patrick Christian rode up, and General Harrison, on seeing Captain Littlefield lying wounded, exclaimed: "I promote him to the rank of major for gallantry on the field." The wound kept Major Littlefield in his bed for four months, and he had to use crutches until 1867. Resigning his command in 1864, he was unable to get back to Texas for nearly a year, and after the war turned his attention to farming.

With the rapid development of the live stock industry after the war, Major Littlefield became one of its most prominent operators. Since 1871 his investments and enterprise have extended to a large part of the district in west Texas and New Mexico, where he has owned outright or held under lease many thousands of acres, and has been one of the most extensive cattle raisers. At one time seventy thousand head of cattle roaming over the range were marked with his brand, and forty and fifty thousand acres of land were owned or controlled by him. In the seventies and eighties probably most of his cattle were taken from the west Texas ranges over the old cattle trail through the Indian territory into Kansas, and from 1887 his ranch headritory into Kansas, and from 1857 his faith head quarters were in west Texas, with operations through Mason, Menard and Kimball counties. He had pre-viously become interested in a large cattle ranch in New Mexico. In 1901 Major Littlefield bought upwards of three hundred thousand acres of land in Hotkley and Lamb counties in the Panhandle, from the Farwell interests of Chicago. This land, bought at two dollars an acre, has since risen to five or six times that value. At the same time he retains his large land and cattle At the same time he letains his large land and carrie interests in New Mexico, and has owned a large amount of irrigated farm land near Roswell. His Hereford eattle ranch in that vicinity has long been a feature and one of the most valuable properties of its kind in the southwest, Major Littlefield having refused the sum of three hundred thousand dollars for the land and its improvements.

In 1890 Major Littlefield organized the American National Bank of Austin with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars, which has since increased to three hundred thousand dollars, with a surplus of six hundred thousand dollars. He has been president of this strong financial institution since its organization. He built one of Austin's finest business blocks, the Littlefield building, has served as president of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Austin, is a director of the Southwestern Life Insurance Company of Texas, a director of the Pierce-Fordyce Oil Company of Texas, and has numerous other financial and business relations with the state.

Probably every visitor at Austin has admired the splendid statue on the Capitol grounds constituting a monument to Terry's Rangers. This monument was erected in 1907 and Major Littlefield was chairman of the monumental committee and personally paid the greater part of the expense of having the bronze figures executed and placed in its present commanding position. Major Littlefield has long been closely identified with the affairs of the United Veterans of the Confederacy. Since 1910 he has served as a regent of the Littlefield with the social relations are with the Royal Arch and Knights Templar deres. His social relations are with the Austin Club, the Austin Country Club, and the University Club, Major Littlefield on January 14, 1963, married Miss Alice P, Tiller, a stepdaughter of W, Harral of Houston, Texas. Mrs. Littlefield was born in Mississippi, and her parents came from Virginia. The Littlefield borne is at 300 West Twenty-fourth street, Austin.

Frank Taylor Ramsey. It has long been a way of praising the work of the agriculturist to say that he has made two stalks of wheat grow where only one grew before. But in proportion as a perennially fruitful tree is more valuable than the stalk of wheat, so must a still greater trihute be paid as an adequate reward for the man who introduces an orchard where before was an unproductive waste, and who by his knowledge and skill in horticulture increases the fruitfulness of a country by the perfection of new varieties of fruit and those more adaptable to local conditions. In this field has been the distinction of Frank T. Ramsey of Austin, and Ramsey's Austin Nursery has for twenty years been one of the thriving industries of that locality.

It was in 1858 that his father, Alexander M. Ramsey, set out an orchard in Burnet county, which was the first one of any size or importance in the county, and was one of the pioner undertakings in the growing of orchard fruits in western Texas. In Burnet county Frank T. Ramsey was born June 15, 1861. His father and mother, A. M. Ramsey and Ellen Taylor, were born and married in western Pennsylvania. They moved to Burnet county in 1860, but had bought a farm there in 1858, and had sent peach seed for an orchard from Mississippi, which state had been their home for eight years. The sheep business was the principal occupayears. The sneep business was the principal tion of A. M. Ramsey for some years, combined with general farming, but hard winters and absence from home while engaged in scout service against the Comanche Indians, and the natural consequences of war left him in a poor condition financially when the war was over, A. M. Ramsey died in 1895, and his wife passed away in 1890.

Frank T. Ramsey received a common education in the country schools. When sixteen years old he became a partner with his father in the nursery which had been established by the latter in 1875, and so continued until his father's death at Austin, the nursery having been moved to the capital city in 1894 in order to secure better transportation facilities. Mr. F. T. Ramsey was married in 1884 to Miss Belle Sinclair, and another reason for his moving to Austin was to better educate his children, four of whom subsequently enjoyed the advantages of the university. After the nursery business was established in Austin it grew enormously, and Mr. Ramsey was the mainspring of its development until 1908, when his son, John Murray Ramsey, became a partner in it.

Their location was on the south margin of the range of peaches of the Persian strain and on the north margin of the south China strain, so they had to test and grow a larger list of peaches than is usually necessary. Besides the conditions imposed by local climate, Mr. Ramsey possesses a love for securing and testing any new varieties of fruits that promise to be valuable, and it is said that he could from memory name and describe probably five hundred varieties of peaches and three hundred of plums.

He has the reputation of having secured and budded more varieties of pecans, English or Persian walnuts, American persimmons, Chinese and Japanese jujubes, and various other fruits than any one in the United States or in the world.

Mr. Ramsey thought out and discovered many new methods in handling, growing and planting of trees of all kinds. He had a natural love for the hardy wild shrubs and flowers of West Texas, and has collected, tested and introduced many of them; and accidental hybrids, and crosses, and new seedlings in the nursery gave him some valuable and beautiful new trees, among which is a pyramidal tree that looks like a pyramidal cypress, but came from a seed of an arborvitæ, which he calls Gracegreen Hybrid, and another that he calls Beauty Green that came from seed of a horizontal cypress and has the outlines of its mother tree, but in its foliage shows it has arborvitæ blood.

Mr. Ramsey is a member of the noted Ramsey family, widely known not only in Texas but elsewhere in the United States, and its members have been prominent in the various walks of life for generations. The authe the various wants of the Ramsey family commences with the invasion of England by the Norman Conquerer, A. D. 1066. The common ancestor was an officer in the army of William, and participated in the decisive battle of Hastings, and from this family all the present Ram-seys and Ramsays of the British Empire and America are descended. At the same date the Stewart family appears in history, and the Stewarts and Ramseys have been closely related, having intermarried for many generations. Some of the family came over in the Mayflower, from whom probably came many of the name in New England. Toward the close of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth century quite a number of the family came to Pennsylvania. sought religious freedom and were at variance with the established church. They were known as Seceders and Covenanters, and the two sects afterwards uniting then were known as the United Presbyterians. A few years later these were followed by quite a number of Ramseys as exiles after the defeat of the Stewart pretender at the battle of Culloden. These Ramseys, with the banished Stewarts, landed together in Pennsylvania about the middle of the eighteenth century. From these families probably descended the majority of the Ramseys in the United States today. From Pennsylvania the families went south and west and founded the numerous families to which the greater number of the Ramseys belong. As to religion most of the Ramseys in the north are Presbyterians and in the South all sects are represented. The Ramsey and Ramsay families have organized the Ramsaey Family Association of Texas, and the Ramsaey Family Association of the United States, and Mr. Frank T. Ramsey has participated in the annual meetings, and a portion of his address at one of these family conventions in which he spoke of the tendencies of inheritance deserves a brief quotation: "But we inherit the traits and desires of a hundred generations of forefathers and foremothers. Seven hundred years ago unselfishness was hardly understood. A certain percent or ratio of our minds are influenced by those generations. The tendencies we inherit are closely related to instinct. Psychologists may keep on saying that only animals have instincts, but I notice the average American boy wants to go West if his mother did before him, just as naturally as the little duck goes into the water. The more generations a trait or quality has passed through, the harder it is or the longer it takes to change it. The Indian mother of fifty generations of black eyes does not often raise a family of blueeyed children. Future generations will inherit our traits and desires whether they end in fruition or disappointment. May we, of this generation, in our hearts, abhor all things that do not enhance the mind of the citizen. May those of the future generations treasure this saying in their hearts. This, truly, is labor and sacrifice without hope of reward; the kind that brings tenfold reward, perfect happiness."

Incidentally Mr. Ramsey is a lover of beautiful language and occasionally writes an article outside of horticultural subjects of interest and sometimes with a strain of exquisite humor. The late Elizabeth Ney, the maker of statues of Stephen F. Austin and Sam Houston that stand in the corridor of the Texas capital and in the Hall of Fame at Washington, was passionately fond of the flag of the Republic of Texas. When she had executed these commissions, the ladies of Austin, led by Mrs. A. C. Goeth and Mrs. Johanna Runge, of Austin and Galveston, presented her a large silk flag and had Mr. Ramsey write the presentation, which was read by his daughter, Jessie (now Mrs. R. V. Murray), and is said to be the only oceasion on which Miss Ney was ever known to have shed tears.

The lines as they appeared in the Austin Statesman at the time are given below. Mr. Ramsey's innate love of schools and learning made him place on a par with the Declaration of Independence the resolutions adopted by the pioneer settlers of Texas when refused the public free schools by the Mexican government, in which appeared this sentence: "Any government that fails to provide free schools for the education of the children of its citizens is unworthy of the loyalty of those citizens, and will sooner or later fall in decay." Hence the expression "for principles grander than ever before."

"We, daughters of Texas, love Texas and Texans, And the chief of our joys is to honor the men Who laid down their lives on Liberty's altar, Let the story be told again and again,

For principles grander than ever before Declared or defended by freemen or king; For right and for Texas their weapons they bore— The best of our songs for them we will sing.

"We fain would make Texans grow kinder and nobler, When the Alamo-Goliad stories they hear; Grow fonder of freedom and truer to Texas— Shall our story strike faintly posterity's ear? Your marble will last when our songs are forgotten, When our lips are all stilled and the ink has grown

Your marble will prompt the child as he gazes
To ask of his mother to tell him the tale.

"We give you this flag as a sign that we love you, For the work you have done for history and art; You will know when it waves triumphant above you We rejoice in its waving with a patriot's heart. Because you love Texas, we love you the better—Wave, wave, the Lone Star—wave, red, white and blue:

Wave emblem of freedom, wave, flag of our fathers, Wave, flag of our Texas, forever for you."

JOHN PRESTON, M. D. Placed at the head of a great state charitable institution, carrying the responsibility for the welfare of hundreds of unfortunates whose reason has been shattered, and imbued with an earnest desire to restore his charges to health and friends, Dr. John Preston, superintendent of the Texas State Lundie Asylum, is carrying on a work that entitles him to recognition, not alone among the members of the medical profession, but by the general public of the state in which he has labored so long and faithfully.

Doctor Preston comes of a family which was founded in America prior to the Revolutionary War, in which his great-grandfather, William Preston, of Virginia, took a prominent part as captain of a company of patriot volunteers. On his mother's side he helongs to the Rhea family, of Tennessee, whose members were for many years important factors in the development of that state, where Rhea county is named in their honor. James T. Preston, the father of Doctor Preston, was born in Washington county, Virginia, and for a number of years was a prominent attorney of the Old Dominion state, dying there is 1884. During the Civil war he enlisted for service in the Confederate army, and served valiantly throughout that struggle, holding the rank of colonel. He married Miss Fanny Rhea, of John Preston received his early education in the common schools of his native place, in Washington county, Virginia, where he was born July 12, 1851, and subsequently became a student in Georgtown University, Washington, D. C. Following this he entered the University of Virginia, where he was graduated in 1872, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and this was supplemented by a course in Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, where he graduated in 1873. He began the practice of his profession in Washington county in 1873, and in 1878 came to Texas, locating at Seguin, Guadalupe county, where he remained until At that time he was appointed first assistant physician of the Texas State Lunatic Asylum, at Austin, but resigned in 1890 and located in San Antonio, where how resigned in row and notated in San Anomary, when he resumed the general practice of his profession, but at the end of four months was offered, by Governous Hogg, and accepted, the position of superintendent of the North Texas Hospital for the Insane, at Terrell, Texas, where he remained in charge for four years. In 1895 Doctor Preston located at Lockhart, Texas, in the general practice of medicine, continuing there until 1903, when he was appointed by Governor Lanham superintendent of the Texas State Epileptic Colony, at Abilene, Texas. He established this colony and was reappointed by Governor Campbell, continuing as superintendent for five and one-half years. On January 15, 1909, Goveror Campbell appointed him superintendent of the Texas State Lunatic Asylum, at Austin, and he was reappointed by Governor Colquitt, the present governor, when he took office. Here he has 1,500 patients under his care. Doctor Preston is recognized throughout the medical fraternity of the Southwest as an au-thority on nervous and mental diseases. Those who have conversed with him upon his specialty in the science of medicine realize how devoted he is to the study of the human, both in its normal and abnormal conditions. A broad investigator, he is constantly striving to discover and put into practical use new means and methods of successfully treating the mental ills of those upon whose reason a cloud has fallen, and in his chosen field he has been eminently successful, the number of cures that have been effected at the asylum being truly remarkable. Nothing of gloom or despair pervades this institution, but throughout each department there exists that spirit of helpful co-operation among the superintendent, physicians and employes which makes for a determined effort to seek and find the best means of aiding in the restoration of impaired reason. Doctor Preston is a Master Mason and a member of the Pretorians, the Woodmen of the World, and the Austin Press Club.

In 1879 Doctor Preston was married to Miss Annie Levi SWhite, daughter of the Hon. John P. White, who was one of the three original members and presiding justice get the Court of Civil Appension of Texas, and comment to Doctor and Mrs. Preston, namely: Walter W., who is chief accountant of the firm of W. H. Richard Son & Company, of Austrip Dr. John L., a successful dental practitioner with offices at Forney, Texas; James R., who is connected with the Delaware & Hudson Railroad, in the main office at New York City; Fanny Rhea, a graduate of the University of Texas, and now a teacher in the high school at Marble Falls, Texas; Robert W., who is accountant for the wholesale grocery firm of H. O. Wooten Company, at Abilene, Texas; and Annie Lewis and Margaret Lynn, who reside with their parents. The pleasant home of Doctor and Mrs. Preston is located at No. 410 Guadeline street.

WILLIAM J. MCLNTYRE. One of the men of real business leadership in West Texas is William J. McIntyre, owner of thousands of acres of land in Brewster county and vicinity, the head of a large freighting establishment at Marathon, and occupying a place of such influence in his vicinity that it is proper to say that where he leads others follow.

William J. McIntyre was born in Rankin county, Mississippi, on November 5, 1860, and spent the first twenty-two years of his life in his native state. He then moved into Texas, first locating in Wilson county, where he made his home for about twelve years and followed ranching and merchandise. In 1893 he came further west to Brewster county, and has built up a large business as a rancher and cattleman in this section of the state. He owns a splendid ranch, and continued actively in the live stock industry until 1910, at which time he formed a partnership with his two sons and bought his present general merchandise store at Marathon. Under the firm name of W. J. McIntyre & Son, they handle a full line of general merchandise, both wholesale and retail, and supply a patronage over a broad extent of country surrounding Marathon. Besides his interests in mercantile business and his extensive realty holding, Mr. McIntyre is also vice president of the Marathon State Bank. Mr. McIntyre has always depended upon his own ability and exertions to get what he wanted in life and, after leaving the public schools of Mississippi, where he obtained most of his education, he has made his own way and never troubled any man for his help or influence. Most of his success has come through farming and ranching, and he is withal a very shrewd and energetic business man.

In Lavaca county, Texas, on January 9, 1884, Mr. McIntyre married Virginia Griffith, daughter of L. M. Griffith, of Lavaca county. Three children have been born to their marriage, two sons and one daughter, namely: Vernon, who is associated with his father in husiness, and is assistant eashier of the Marathon State Bank; Wells, also in the mercantile firm, and Gesna, now a student in school at Austin. The son Vernon is affiliated with the Masonic Order, and before entering business was a student at the State University, where he was a member of the Phi Delta Theta College Fra-Mr. McIntyre and wife are members of the Baptist Church, and she takes very active part in the women's organizations of the church. Mr. McIntyre is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Woodmen of the World. He is a Democrat, though not a party man. He has given his share of service to the welfare of the community and served as a member of the Alpine school board for a time, and acted as president during that period. About once a year or oftener, Mr. McIntyre enjoys a hunting trip, and is also interested in many of the other amusements and entertainments and social joys of life.

AUGUST B. PALM, whose name has long been identified with Austin and the Lone Star state, won fame in the business world of Texas as a planter, a pursuit from which he retired but a few years ago. But especially is he to be mentioned in this historical and biographical work because of the excellency of his services to the state and nation during the reconstruction period following the Civil war. No man in Austin displayed a finer spirit or one better calculated to bridge with kindly thought the great gulf that divided the northern and southern parts of our country at that time than did August B. Palm, and that credit should be awarded where credit is so manifestly due is wholly in accord with the spirit and purpose of this work.

August B. Palm was horn in Besthult, Sweden, August

August B, Palm was born in Besthult, Sweden, August B, 19, 1834, a son of Andrew Palm, a civil engineer in the King's service. Bringing his family with him, Andrew Palm came to Fort Bend county, Texas, in 1848, but soon after the immigration of this family to America the father died. Not long afterward August B, Palm came to Austin. He was one of six brothers, three of whom are now deceased, the other two surviving sons being Andrew Jackson and William Swante Palm. John, Carl and Henry Palm are the three who have passed away. All of these six sons with the exception of Henry served throughout the Civil war in the Confederate service.

August B. Palm received his educational training to the age of fourteen in private schools in Sweden, and after coming to Texas attended the State Military College at Reutersville, at that time under the principalship of Colonel Forshay. When the war came on he promptly enlisted with his brothers and served throughout the conflict

Then it was that the fine enthusiasm and splendid spirit of the man shown forth the brightest. The war had so crippled the state that Morgan Hamilton, state comptroller, announced that it would be necessary to close the State Institution for the Blind and the Insane Asylum, owing to the total lack of any funds wherewith to carry on the work, his plan being to send all immates back to the homes from which they came. Mr. Palm was then engaged in the mercantile business in Austin, and he promptly came to the front with an offer to supply all the needs of the two institutions in the way of supplies, but it developed that without $50,000 to pay the salaries of officials and attendants the places could not be kept up. Here again did Mr. Palm step into the breach, and wiring to his first cousins, the Swensons of New York City, he asked for $50,000. They sent the money without a question, the sum total coming in checks signed by the Swensons, ranging in size from firty cents to firty dollars, and payable in gold. Mr. Palm deposited the check book with the state treasurer, Samuel Harris, with instructions that it be used for the maintenance of the saylums for the blind and insane only. One year later, the treasury being in somewhat better shape, the loan was returned to Mr. Palm, but instead of in gold the payment was made in United States currency, a circumstance that caused a heavy loss to the benefactor of the public, because of the fact that currency at that time was worth only seventy-two cents on the dollar. However, Mr. Palm, like the true sportsman that he has ever shown himself to be, pocketed his loss without protest, feeling amply repaid in the knowledge that he had been the means of helping a class of people utterly without means of helping themselves in any way and at all times at the mercy of the public.

Early in the conflict which raged between the North and the South Mr. Palm joined the Confederate service, becoming a member of Fred Moore's Company, Flornoy's Regimeut, and was detailed to furnish supplies. When Galveston was demanded to surrender he joined his company at Virginia Point, across the bay, and on the following day was ordered to go up into the country for supplies. He labored valiantly in the cause which he espoused, and endured the untold hardships of the

After the close of the war many men of prominence in Texas, and especially in Austin, left the state, taking refuge in Mexico, fearing imprisonment. But Mr. Palm was not of these. Though he had been an ardent Secessionist and had fought with valor throughout the war, when the struggle was finally ended he placed himself strongly upon the side of the Union and thereafter applied his every energy to the business of reconstructing a new South. Among those men who felt that it would be the better part of valor to leave Texas was Captain W. H. D. Carrington, but Mr. Palm, who was the warm personal friend of General Reynolds, secured from the latter a permit that released Captain Carrington from the possibility of apprehension, so that he was able to remain in Austin, and thereafter he joined Mr. Palm to a large extent in the worth work of the period.

Mr. Palm also did much to promote a friendly feeling in the city toward the officials of the United States gov-One instance was that of a banquet given in his home to the United States officers and their families. No effort was spared to make the function an agreeable and pleasant one, and though feeling against the officials ran high in the city, all who were invited to the banquet accepted, recognizing in Mr. Palm's action an honest attempt to smooth out the situation in some degree. In this admirable spirit did this patriot continue his work of establishing feelings of friendliness toward the government in Austin, and in no city of the south to-day exists a more wholesome and honest spirit of lovalty than is everywhere apparent here. All his life that has been spent in Austin and in Texas has been redolent of a fine spirit of devotion to his adopted country, which has had its unconscious reflection in the activities of those who were unknowingly influenced by him and his

Gustave and Swante Palm, two uncles of this Austin rosident, were other early settlers of Texas. Gustave came over with his brother Andrew, the father of August B. Palm, Swante having arrived a few years prior to that time. All were prominent in early Texas affairs, and their families are still justly recorded as among the First Families of Texas.

August B. Palm was the first man to plant cotton in Williamson county, Texas, and he erected the first cotton gin, on his seven hundred acre farm. Today Williamson is the banner county of the state in its production of cotton, and Mr. Palm was known for years as one of the most extensive planters within its borders.

He retired from the business in 1905, and has since devoted himself to other interests in that city that has long been the center of his activities in a public way.

On the 26th of June, 1861, Mr. Palm married Miss Adela Belle Atwood, of Travis county, Texas. She is a daughter of W. W. Atwood, who came from Bolivar, Tennessee, to Texas in the year 1838, and was long identhing was 100 fems in the year 1500; and was 100 iden-tified with the affairs of Travis country. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Palm are as follows: Rufus Atwood, a well known farmer and stockman; Mary Josephine; Adela Belle, the wife of Dr. Henry L. Hilgartner, of Austin, Texas; and Irene, wife of Captain L. S. Morey, of the United States army, now in the Philippines.

HENRY J. LAAS. Few meu in Colorado county have a more substantial place or exercise stronger influence on local affairs than Henry J. Laas. For a number of years he has served as county tax assessor. He is the owner of a splendid farm estate, comprising more than one thousand acres of land, is a banker with stock in several financial concerns in this section of the state, has done much development work on his own account, and in co-operation with others, and his energy and enterprise can always be counted upon in assisting the forward movement in Colorado county.

Henry J. Laas was born near Sublime, in Lavaen county, Texas, August 22, 1872. His parents were C. J. and Emma (Pelser) Laas. His father, who was born in Germany, was four years of age when the grandfather brought his family across the ocean and granditather prought his family across the ocean and landed at Galveston, finding their first home at Cat Springs, in Austin county, and after several years moving to Aureac county. The mother was a native of Texas. In Lavaea county, C. J. Laas grew to man hood and when the Civil war broke out enlisted in Company H of Cavalry, Bates' Regiment, and afterwards served in Brown's Regiment, in the cause of Routh, in the Brigade of the famous Tom Green. He South, in the Brigade of the famous Tom Green. He saw much hard and dangerous service in Mexico and later in Louisiana, especially in the campaign, including the bloody battles of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill, Yellow Bayou, and other engagements. His service as a now Eayou, and other engagements. Its service as soldier in the uniform of gray continued nearly four years. He returned to Lavaca county in the year 1865 and was married in the fall of the same year to Miss Emma Pelzer. He then turned his energies to farming and stock raising. He soon afterwards, in the year 1873, moved to Colorado county and bought a large tract of land near Oakland, where he died. One thousand acres of that land is now owned by his son Henry. The father was a man of great energy, very public spirited, and through his enterprise was a public benefactor. For many years he owned and operated a saw and grist mill, and also a public gin. His death occurred in 1904. Besides being commercially active, he took much interest in the German Lutheran Church, of which both he and his wife were members, and they contributed liberally of their means to its support. Through the liberality of himself and two other planters of that neighborhood, a church of the German Lutheran faith was erected. Mrs. Emma Laas, the mother, died when her son Henry was a baby. The father later married Catherine Brune, who is still living. Henry J. Laas was one of two children. His brother Charles lives at Skidmore, where he is engaged in the mercantile business and in farming. There are three half-brothers, Chris, August, and Louis, and a halfsister, Minnie.

During the boyhood of Henry J. Laas, he lived at home on the farm, attended the local schools, and had the opportunities and advantages of a school at San Autonio. When he was seventeen years of age he started out working for himself, securing a clerkship in a store at Weimar. After one year he returned here and spent two years assisting his father.

On January 3, 1893, Mr. Laas married Miss Clara

Buske, a native of Texas, and a daughter of C. Buske, who was born in Germany and was one of the German settlers of Texas. Mr. Buske operated a public gin and a mill for many years and is now living a retired life. Following his marriage, Mr. Laas engaged in farming for one year and then entered merchandising at Weimar, where he did a large and successful business up to 1900, in which year came his first election to his present office of tax assessor of Colorado county. By repeated elections since then, in which the people have shown their confidence in his integrity and official ability, he has remained in that office to the present time. During his residence in Weimar he served as a member and secretary of the city council, resigning that place when elected assessor. As a Democrat he has always been a willing worker for the welfare of his party, and has served as chairman of the county and of other committees.

Mr. and Mrs. Laas are the parents of one child, Olga. All the family are members of the German Lutheran Church, Since he was twenty-one years of age, Mr. Laas has held membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, has held all the chairs in his local lodge, and several times has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge. He is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, having held all the chairs in that order. His other affiliations include the Woodmen of the World, the Sons of Hermann, the Pretorians, the Modern Woodmen of America, and at the present time he is taking the preliminary degrees in Masonry.

Mr. Laas was one of the organizers of the First State Bank of Columbus, and, besides his extensive laud in-terests in Colorado county and city and town real estate, he owns stock in the State Bank of Garwood and Rock Island. He has interests in several bonding companies, and is easily one of the most prominent and influential men of Colorado county. Mrs. Laas is a member of the Civic and other local clubs and takes much part in church affairs, and is an active worker in the mission and aid societies. Their daughter Olga is a member of Shropshire-Upton Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, a worker in the Sunday school and church, and quite a distinguished musician, having studied several years in the conservatories of the South.

CHARLES LOW. Forty years a resident of Texas, Charles Low has had a varied career of activity, beginning as a cowboy, later as an independent cattle man, from that branching out into commercial activities, and about a year ago retired from business as a manufacturer at Brownwood to take up the management of his ranch near that city.

Charles Low was born in Forfarshire, Scotland, September 11, 1866, the only son and child of Robert and Mary (Bell) Low. His father, who learned the trade of machinist in his native land, emigrated to the United States soon after the birth of his son, and for a time was employed in the Grant Locomotive Works at Paterson, New Jersey. In 1874 he became one of the pioneer settlers in the vicinity of Brownwood, Texas, bought land, and has since been successfully engaged in farming and stock raising. Robert Low has been content to devote his entire time and attention to his private interests, and has never sought nor cared for public office. He is inclined to support Democratic candidates, but is very independent, and being well posted upon current events uses his discretion in voting, the man in his estimation always coming before the party.

Eight years of age when the family moved to Brownwood, Charles Low finished in the local schools the education which had begun in New Jersey. His independent career began in boyhood, in riding the old range as a cowboy, and fully ten years were spent in the saddle. though at the age of eighteen he had invested a small capital and taken up the cattle husiness on his own account. His capacity and energy for hard work, a genial disposition, and a thorough business integrity has been his distinctive qualities from young manhood to the present. After four years as a cattle man, Mr. Low sold his interests and moved to San Antonio to engage in business, and subsequently was located at both Fort Worth and Ballinger. Returning to Brownwood in 1905, Mr. Low organized the Alamo Manufacturing Company, and was its president, active manager and largest stockholder until he sold out on July 1, 1913, and moved to his ranch four miles from Brownwood. The Alamo Manufacturing Company at the beginning was a modest bottling establishment. In 1907 it began to manufacture ice cream, and two years later a creamery was established. It has been one of the chief local industries of the city of Brownwood. While looking after the interests of the manufacturing plant, Mr. Low also conducted his fine dairy farm in Brown county, where he makes a specialty of breeding dairy cows. A lover of the hunt, his hobby is the raising of bird dogs, and he is widely recognized as a fancier in that line. An alert, active, energetic citizen, thoroughly alive to every opportunity that presents itself and a stanch supporter of progress in its every form, he has contributed in no small degree to the welfare of his adopted community. Since the organization of the local lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose he has been a valued and popular member of that order.

Mr. Low was married in 1888 to Miss Willie McMahan, of Williamson county, Texas. Her father, W. L. Mc-Mahan, was a pioneer and an old Indian fighter of the Lone Star State. Mr. and Mrs. Low have eight children, as follows: Bob, successfully engaged in irrigated farming in Brown county; William, a college student; Mary, the wife of C. L. Pouncey of Dallas; Annie, in the Brownwood bigh school; and Nat, Jack, Nellie and Gertrude, in public school,

IGNATURS GENERG GAM. His position as superintendent of the County Hospital at EI Paso, which he has held since 1899, is only one of many relations of interest and value which Ignatius G. Gaal sustains to West Texas, and particularly EI Paso county. He is one of the real pioneers of that district, having located the before the advent of railroads, and his own life story is an important chapter in the local history of that part of Texas.

Mr. Gaal was born at Somolnok, in the Department of Sepeshi Varas, Hungary, July 13, 1847. His parents were Frank and Elizabeth Gaal, his father a tanner by trade. His early training for life was unusually varied and efficient. For a time he studied medicine under Dr. Jacob Heidel, who was later one of the able corps in the General Hospital at Vienna. His commercial experience included work in general merchandising and in the drug trade, and at the age of eighteen, in 1865, he came to America. A short time was spent in New York looking for work, and from there he went to Creveland, Ohio, and for some six months was employed in a continuous control of the con

The career of Mr. Gaal has led him into many states and sections of America, and in 1850 be became one of the pioneers of Washington county, in Northern Kansas, locating in the valley of the Little Blue when there were very few neighbors in that region. While in that section of Kansas he helped to lay out the town of section of Kansas he went to St. Louis in 1871, and later in the same year set out for California. After a brief residence in San Francisco, he located at Sacramento and became connected with the Central Pacific Railway, now a part of the Southern Pacific system. Mr. Gaal acquired large and valuable real estate interests in the vicinity of Sacramento and Humboldt county and continued to prosper as a resident of the Pacific coast until 1880.

It was in 1880 that Mr. Gaal first became identified with West Texas and with the vicinity of El Paso. El Paso as a city had not yet begun. The village of Franklin was all there was to distinguish the locality. The Southern Pacific Railway had not yet been completed to the town, but was finished in 1881. On coming to West Texas, Mr. Gaal bought 6,000 acres of land in El Paso county, but first gave little attention to its management or development, and lived in town and had charge of the construction work on the Southern Pacific car shops until the shops were completed. For about a year he managed the furniture store of Robinson & Carrico, on San Antonio street, and thus became identified with some of the very earliest enterprises of the present city of El Paso. At that time the county seat of El Paso county was Ysleta, and in the summer of 1883 Mr. Gaal bought some property in that town and established a general store there. It was the largest town in El Paso county, and largely due to the commercial leadership and the civic enterprise of Mr. Gaal it developed into a city, and he was instrumental in changing its public free school into an independent free school district. With the prospering of his business, he extended his operations to include general contracting for the Southern Pacific Railway. He sold the com-pany thousands of cords of wood, and besides a good deal of work along the Rio Grande River in protecting the road from wash-outs, he built twenty-one miles of railroad tracks when the line was changed from the river valley to the foot hills. Mr. Gaal is a veteran whose reminiscences cover every detail of the early political life of El Paso county. He first entered actively into politics when it was proposed to move the county seat from Ysleta to El Paso, and naturally enlisted himself with all his energy and enthusiasm to keep the seat of justice at his home town. The ensuing election, however, resulted in the removal of the court house to El Paso in 1885. Mr. Gaal, on locating in Ysleta in 1883, found that his position in politics was practically unique. A Republican, he was able to find only one other citizen of his political faith in the town. That was a Mexican named Pablo Romero, who confessed to Republican principles, but was afraid of his life if his politics should become a part of public knowledge. Mr. Gaal has always been a man of convictions and did not allow considerations of personal danger or partisan prejudice to influence him, and for several years was active in promulgating and spreading his political belief, and reformed a good many Democrats into Republicans, and by 1886 had a following of several hundred men of that party. As a leader of a large section of citizenship, in 1886 Mr. Gaal's name was presented as candidate for county commissioner on the Republican ticket, and his defeat was due to a very small majority. In 1888 he was elected mayor of Ysleta and county commissioner by a Republican majority of six to one over his opponent, and was elected mayor again in 1890 and also in 1894.

It will illustrate some of the vicissitudes of early political life in that section of Texas to recount what has already been published concerning Mr. Gaal's administration as mayor of Vsleta. His last election to the office in 1894 was in the nature of a vinidation of his previous work. Mr. Gaal was engaged on the reconstruction of the Acequia Madre irrigation ditch of Ysleta for the use and benefit of the citizens of that corporation, and as mayor of the town had many men in his employ. That was in 1890. In this irrigation project a number of people were opposed to him, giving their support to another company who sought to construct another ditch. The matter was largely one of polities rather than one of engineering or business judgment or opinion. The troubles between the two factions kept growing until they almost resulted in eivil war. Mr. Gaal went on regardless of personal safety, and at one time was barricaded in his own home with his family for several hours, while his enemies fired thousands of shots, but the siege was finally raised by the friends of Mr. Gaal. Out of the turmoil and externed the Mr. Gaal came with the complete respect and esteem of all better classes of citizens, and for his course that the indorsement of county officials and many prominent men. Many of those who were his hitterest opponents in those days have since become convinced that his way was the right way, and have given him their warm friendship and regard.

While his business interests have always been important, Mr. Gaal has been more or less closely identified with public affairs ever since coming to El Paso. In 1891 he was appointed inspector and deputy collection of customs, in charge of Ysleta under Webster Flannagan, who was then the chief collector of customs for the IP paso district. He held that position until 1895. He also served as president of the school board of Ysleta for seven years, and in 1899 was chosen superintendent of the County Hospital at El Paso. His administration of the hospital for fifteen years has been one of economy and efficiency, and, while never neglecting his duty in any way to the imnates, he has regulated the fiscal affairs of the institution in such a way as to constitute the least burden upon the taxpayers.

Outside of business and public life, Mr. Gaal is also prominent in connection with fraternal affairs. Several of his relations with the older orders were begun during his residence in California. At Sacramento he joined Industrial Lodge No. 157, I. O. P., and also Lodge No. 11 of the Knights of Pythias at Sacramento, being become a member of both lodges in 1873. He is also a member of the Veteran Knights of Pythias Association of Sacramento, Since June 28, 1905, he has been a hife member of El Paso Lodge No. 187, B. P. O. E., and since 1910 has had affiliations with El Paso Lodge No. 289, T. P. B. He has a position on the executive committee of the Pioneer Society of El Pason, and belongs to the El Paso Club and the Cactus Bowling and Athletic Club of El Paso.

On May 29, 1878, at Sacramento, California, Mr. Gall matried Frances Concordia America Rademacher, She was born in Willimantic (Connecticut). LANDON CLAY CHAMBERS, A member of one of the leading families of Liberty and Southeast Texas, Landon Clay Chambers is a uephew of Gen. Thomas J. Chambers, how was the Alealde of Texas under Mexican rule, and the only judge of a superior court in this province while Texas remained under the jurisdiction of Mexico. General Chambers raised a regiment of soldiers at his own expense for service in aid of Texas independence, and equipped the regiment with two cannon, guns which now stand at the entrace to the capitol in Austin. Chambers county was named for this eminent Texan.

Landon Clay Chambers, who was born at Culpepper Court House, Virginia, June 6, 1842, is a son of Landon G. Chambers, an educator who was born in Culpepper county about 1785 and died in 1853, His father, an Englishman, was the founder of the Virginia family of the name and among his nineteen children was Gen, Thomas J. Chambers above mentioned. Landon G. Chambers married Mary G. Allen, a daughter of William G. Allen, a Virginia auctioneer. Of that marriage there were nine children, and the family are briefly mentioned individually as follows: Judge William Chambers, who came to Texas at the age of twenty years, spent the greater part of his long life in Chambers county and Liberty county, was a lawyer by profession, served as district judge, and was for some years intimately associated with his uncle, Gen. T. J. Chambers. Judge William Chambers married Bettie Keys and their two children were L. G. Chambers, of Galveston, and Mrs. Mary Evans of Shreveport, Louisiana. Jane, the second of the children, married Rev. Phelps, and spent her life in Virginia. Caroline married James Wood and also lived and died in her native state. Columbia A., wife of W. L. Herr, died in Virginia. Sallie, who married James D. Skinner, now lives in Galveston. Cumberland C. spent his life in Texas from early manhood, died at Liberty, was a farmer and public official, and married Fannie De Blanc. Thomas Jefferson Chambers, who was the eighth child of Landon G. and wife, has been for more than fifty years engaged in the newspaper business, and is probably the oldest newspaper man still active in his profession in the state.

Landon C. Chambers, the youngest of the family, grew up in his native county until he reached the age of sixteen years. He received a very limited education and had entered as an apprentice in the office of the Blue Ridge Republican, at Culpepper Court House, Virginia, edited by G. M. Garland, before he left his state. Mr. Chambers' trip to Texas was made with his mother, oldest brother and youngest sister, and they made the trip by mail to New Orleans and by ship to Galveston, trip by mail to New Orleans and by suip to Galesson, and again by boat up the Trinity to Liberty Landing, within a mile of the court bouse at Liberty. Here Mr. Chambers entered in with his brother, T. J. Chambers. Jr., in the editing of a weekly paper caller the Liberty Observer. He was embroiled in it with the rest of his family as a Confederate. He enlisted in Wall's Texas Legion, in 1861, as a private soldier, doing service in the eastern department of the Confederate government. He belonged to Pemberton's army, and his first engagement was at Yazoo, following which came Big Black and skirmishes all the way from the Yazoo River to Vicksburg. He was cooped up in the city for fortyeight days and nights and surrendered with his army comrades July 4, 1863, and was paroled. After about sixty days the regiment was exchanged and came to the Trans-Mississippi Department, and Mr. Chambers finished his army experience on this side at Mud Island, thirty miles west of Galveston, being located there when the war ended, and concluding his long experience without wounds.

Taking up civil life again, Mr. Chambers resumed newspaper work with his brother at Liberty. He was married in 1868 to Miss Mary Elizabeth Day, a daughter of Issiah C. Day, a prominent stockraiser of this cality. In 1870 Mr. Chambers entered the married liberty of the property of the p urer, and left the public arena in 1900.

In politics, nationally. Mr. Chambers is a Republican, but in state and county affairs he has always voted with the Democrats. He was repeatedly elected to office upon his merits rather than upon his political views. He was in several of the state Republican conventions and was nominated once for state treasurer on that ticket and received about 28,000 votes out of about 45,000 cast by the party in Texas. In his town Mr. Chambers have been alderman many times and is present secretary of the council. He belongs to only one fraternity, the Masons, in which he is past muster of Liberty Lodge.

Mr. Chambers was married January 28, 1808, his wife being a native of Liberty county. Her father came from Memphis, Tennessee, where he was born June 12, 1812, He married (first) Alice D. Stuart, July 27, 1835, and had some issue to reach mature years. His second marriage was to Rachel Whitole, August 31, 1842, and to this union there were born children as follows: Amanda, who married Young L. Ridley and resides at Hillshoro, Texas; Mrs. Chambers; and James C., who died in Liherty without a family. Mr. Day married a third time, his wife being Mrs. Martha Orr, and there was a daughter by this union, Mrs. Mattle E. Davis, of Dayton. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Chambers are: Thomas Day, who is constable and with the Texas & New Orleans Railway Company here, and Mittie P., wife of Joseph F. Richardson, of Liberty.

Join O. Mathews, M. D. For nearly a quarter of a century Dr. Mathews has practiced his profession in Grayson county, and for several years has been located at Sherman, the county seat. Most of his practice in the earlier years was in the country. He is a product of the best sebools and in his ability and attainments would suffer none by comparison with the leading city physicians.

John O. Mathews was born in Collin county, Texas, November 27, 1857, a son of Owen and Annie (Oyler) Mathews. His parents were both natives of Kentucky, coming from that state to Texas about 1851 and locating in Collin county. The parental ancestor is English and the maternal is Irish. The doctor's father was a surveyor, a teacher and a farmer, and during his active career became well known in Collin county. In his declining age he lived largely retired, devoting his attention to the supervision and oversight of his farm. When the war broke out between the states he volunteered for service with the Confederate army, and was a member of Hood's Brigade, and saw service in many important from beginning to end was practically uninterrapted by sickness or wounds. He died at his home in Collin county in 1910, while his wife passed away in 1856. They were the parents of nine children, five sons and four daughters, seven of whom are still livings.

Dr. Mathews, who was the second in order of birth, received most of his education in private schools, taught by his father, and later was student in the admirable institution at Thorp Springs, known as Add-ran College, where he was graduated with the degree Bachelor of Art. On leaving school he taught for three years in this state, and thus paid for most of his professional training. Entering the medical college of Louisville, Kentucky, he came out with the class of 1886, getting the degree of Doutor of Medicine and being graduated valedictorian. His first practice was at Allen, Texas, and in 1887, he came out with the class of the old Indian territory, now Oklahoma, He returned the old Indian territory, now Oklahoma, He returned 1969 Dr. Mathews has been located at Sherman, and now enjoys a large city practice. In 1905 he took post-graduate work at Louisville, and during his residence at Howe he served as local surgeon for the Houston and Texas Central Railroad Company.

Dr. Mathews has always been a stanch voter for the Democratic party, and fraternally is affiliated with the Massons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Honor. His church is the Christian

Dr. Mathews was married in February, 1888, at Mc-

Kinney, Texas, to Miss Antha Coe, a daughter of John A. Coe, who came from Kentucky to Texas during the early days, and was a substantial farmer at this date. During the war he was a Confederate soldier, and fought from 1861 until toward the close of the great war. He is now living retired at Allen, Texas. Ars. Matter was alberally educated and was a successful and popular teacher until her marriage. Mr. Mathews and wife are the parents of three children: Maidee, the wife of J. L. Mitchell, manager of the Texas Seed Breeding Farm of Grayson county, at Sherman; Miss Helen Mathews, who is a member of the senior class of the Sherman high school; John O. Mathews, Jr., twelve years of age and attending school.

In the course of his residence in north Texas, Dr. Mathews has witnessed many notable changes. One illustration of this is that when he was a boy his father sold 100 acres of land at a dollar and a half an acre. The doctor protested against this sale, predicting that some day the land would he worth fifty dollars an acre, and as a matter of fact his prediction has been doubly fulfilled, since the land would now soll for from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty dollars appear acre. Dr. Mathews is too busy a man to take a vacation, and for many years has rendered capable and efficient service in his professional capacity, and is one of the liberal and public spirited citizens as well. His home is at 1220 South Crockett street, in Sherman.

Harry W. McGre. Both through his own family and by his marriage, Mr. McGee represents some of the oldest and best known families of northeast Texas. The McGee family has been honorably known in this section of the state for considerably more than half a century, Mr. McGee thimself represents a younge generation and has for a number of years been one of the active and progressive business men of Marshall.

He was born in Panola county, Texas, in 1870, and is a son of Dr. John C. and Laura (Anderson) McGee. An honored pioneer physician whose service was given to many of the early settlers, and who always held a high place in their esteem. Dr. McGee was a native of Tennessee, from which state he came into Texas in the early efficies, settling in Panola county, and in 1871 brought his family to Marshall, in Harrison county, where he died. His wife was born in Panola county in 1883. The Anderson family, as this date would indicate, were among the earliest of American families to locate in this part of Texas. The late Dr. McGee served throughout the war between the states in the Confed-

Harry W. McGee was reared in Marshall and received most of his education in Colonel Bass' school, and now for some years has been successfully engaged in the land business. He handles his own property exclusively and does no brokerage business. The business which has been under his efficient management for some years, is perhaps the oldest of its kind in northeast Toxas, and was founded by the eminent Dr. James H. Starr at Nacogdoches, in 1842, during the existence of the Republic of Toxas. The business was transferred to Marshall in 1870. A more complete account of this interesting enterprise and of the career of Dr. Starr and his family will be found in succeeding paragraphs.

Dr. James Starr. Among Texas families who became identified with this state preceding the time of the Revolution and independence from Mexico and who have been continuously identified to the present time, none has been more prominent in affairs of Northeast Texas than that of Starr, whose founder was Dr. James H. Starr. His distinguished career is to a large extent a matter of history in every thorough and comprehensive account of this state, and his is one of the names that is familiarly associated with the founders of Texas' liberty and the organization of its Republican government. He was for many years associated with such men as Lamar, Houston, and others whose names are household words in this state. Dr. Starr was born at Hartford, Connecticut, December 18, 1809. His family is one of the oldest of the New England states, and he was directly descended from Dr. Comfort Starr, who emigrated from Ashford, England, in 1635, settling in the Massachusetts colony in the vicinity of Boston. Dr. Starr's grandfather was Nicholas Starr, a settler in Connecticut, who resided at Groton and was one of the citizen volunteers who fell in the defense of Fort Griswold, on September 6, 1781, when that fort was teriswold, on september 6, 1781, when that fort was stormed and captured by a British expedition under the command of Benedict Arnold. James Starr, the father of Dr. Starr, was born in Connecticut, where he married Miss Persia Shaw, a daughter of Jabez Shaw. Their home was for some time in New Hartford, Connecticut, but from that place the family in 1815 emi-grated to Ohio, settling near Worthington, in Franklin county, where James Starr died in 1824.

James Harper Starr attended an academic school in Worthington but even during that time of his life was largely on his own resources, having to earn the money by teaching school in order to continue his education. Some medical text books which he managed to secure and read was the beginning of his education for the profession and after the establishment of a medical college at Worthington in 1830, he at once entered as one of the first students and was graduated with his degree in 1832. In the same year he went south and located in Georgia, where he began the practice of medicine at McDonough, in Henry county. In that county he was united in marriage on February 21, 1833, to Miss Harriet J. Johnson.

Dr. Starr and wife emigrated to Texas in 1836, the same year with the winning of Independence from Mexico and the establishment of the Republic. How-

Mexico and the establishment of the Republic. Howcver, they did not arrive in Texas until January, 1837, at which time they located at Nacogdoches, the town which had been established by the Spaniards from Mexico early in the eighteenth century, and which is one of the oldest towns in the state. Captain Franklin J. Starr, a brother of the Dector, had come to Texas in 1835, and taken a very prominent part in the Texas

At Nacogdoches Dr. Starr began to practice medicine, and at about the same time began to purchase land. That remained his home for a third of a century, and along with material prosperity he was also favored with numerous honors in the public service under the Republic. Soon after coming to Texas he was appointed surgeon in the Texas army. In January, 1838, he was appointed president of the board of land commissioners for Nacogdoches county. When in May, 1839, President Lamar, chose him as his secretary of the treasury in the cabinet. He held that position under the Republican government and at a time when his duties were especially taxing and responsible until September, 1840, at which date he resigned. A number of years later, during the Civil war between the states, Dr. Starr was receiver of the Confederate states court at Tyler, and in 1863 President Davis appointed him to the position of Assistant Post Master General in charge of the postal departments for the Trans-Mississippi states, with official headquarters at Marshall. This high post in the Confederate service he held until the end of the war. In 1870 Dr. Starr removed from Nacogdoches to Marshall, which was his home until his death on July 25, 1890. His wife died November 28, 1882

Dr. Starr was one of the regents appointed by Gov. Roberts to establish the University of Texas, as provided for by an act of the legislature. This was an honor and responsibility, however, which he was com-pelled to decline on account of other duties. Besides his medical practice he had for a number of years engaged in the land business, and was one of the largest individual owners of real estate in northeast Texas. As a land dealer he had begun business in Nacogdoches in Two years later Samuel Amory became associated with him in the business under the firm name of Starr & Amory. With the withdrawal of Mr. Amory in 1858 Dr. Starr continued alone for some years, until 1868, when his son, James F. Starr, became a partner in the business, which now assumed the title of J. H. Starr & Son. The business was removed, together with the homes of its proprietors, to Marshall, in April, 1870, and they soon afterwards added a private banking department in connection with their real estate offices. banking business was transferred to Raguelt & Fry in October, 1872; then, on June 16, 1873, the land business of James H. Starr & Son went under the management of Emory R. Starr, another son of Dr. Starr, and of Emory Starr, was its proprietor until his death. Since that time Mr. Harry M. McGee, a son-in-law of Dr. Starr, has been at the head of this important business.

THE TEXABEANA PIPE COMPANY is a factor to be considered in the industrial and commercial activities of this city, and indeed of the Southwest for the output of its plant finds a market not only in the vicinity of Texarkana but also throughout Texas, Oklahoma, Arkanasas, Louisiana and Mexico. The company was originally known as the Post Pipe Company but in December, 1911, feeling that the success of the enterprise was due no more to the efforts of the management than to the loyal and enthusiastic support given to this home in dustry by its southern neighbors, it was decided to show appreciation of this good-will by linking with the name of the company the names of those three states, Texas-Arkansas-Louisiana (Tex-Ark-Ana) of which the company felt itself to be geographically as well as in spirit a part; and with January 1, 1912, the company took the name of the Texarkana Pipe Company.

A manufacturing plant of this sort is of marked advantage to the territory in which located, in contrast with a mercantile establishment, because instead of sending to foreign markets for merchandise to be distributed in the territory, the manufacturing plant on the other hand secures all its raw material, as well as labor, upon the ground, and reverses the operation of the mercantile establishment by sending its product abroad, and distributing the proceeds therefrom at home, in the purchase of such raw materials as clay, fuel, lumber, brick, etc., as well as supporting a large pay-roll, through which means a vast amount of money is released among retailers and others.

MAJ. AUGUSTUS C. ALLEN. An honored old age has from time immemorial been one of the best distinctions bestowed upon the individuals of mankind. But when to length of years are added achievements of varied and remarkable character and a long record of useful citizenship, the honor and esteem paid to such a life are of more than passing importance. Such a career of long and eventful years has been that of Maj. Augustus C. Allen, now retired, and one of the best loved citizens of Texarkana, where he has resided for more than thirty years. Major Allen was a soldier in two wars. He has und been dentified with the cotton business of Texar and his citizenship in the Lone Star state is more than half a century old.

Major Allen was born in Pike county, Georgia, on Morreh 6, 1836. His father was both a planter and a lawer. In 1840 the family removed to Holmes county, Mississippl, but a short time later took up their residence in New Orleans, where the father long practiced his profession and was one of the honored citizens.

Major Allen was a school boy in New Orleans, but at an early age entered a large mercantile house of that city as a clerk and there laid the foundation of a thorough and extensive business experience, which he applied in later years for his own great success in Texas. A distinction which now belongs to few living men is the possession of Major Allen in that he is a survivor of the famous filibustering expedition of General Walker into Nicaragua. In December, 1856, when he was just twenty years of age and at the most adventurous time of life he enlisted in what was designated Company B, or the ne emissed in what was designated company b, under Capt. Bob Harris, for service in Nicaragua, in the revolutionary forces led by Gen. William Walker. The unfortunate fate of that expedition is well known and Major Allen was one of the fortunate ones to escape the fate in which many of the number participated. At Graytown, on the coast of Nicaragua, he arrived with his company and went up the San Juan River, their object being to relieve General Walker, who was at that time in very close quarters on the Pacific side of the Peninsula, Young Allen in the meanwhile received promotion to the rank of lieutenant in his company, having been recommended for that promotion by Maj. Robert Ellers, who was Walker's chief recruiting officer at New Orleans. For several months his service continued in Nicaragua and was filled with adventure and escapes that would adorn the pages of the most romantic tale, and finally with a few comrades he made his escape from the country on the British sloop of war Tartar, This vessel carried him to Aspinwall, whence he continued his homeward journey on the American vessel Granada as far as Hanava, and from there to New Orleans on the steamer Empire City. Though his experience as a Central American revolutionist had continued for only a few months, he had displayed the qualities of the absolutely fearliess soldier and officer, and because of these qualifications had repeatedly been detached from regular duty to serve as scout and in recommotering expeditions which were even more dangerous than the main body of Walker's troops were subjected to.

Having returned to New Orleans, he again entered mercantile employment in 1857 and was thus engaged until 1800, at which year he removed to Jefferson, Texas, where he established himself independently in business. Then soon followed his next military experience. With the breaking out of the war he joined the Confederate army, enlisting in the Nineteenth Texas Infantry, a regiment of which R. Watterhouse was colonel and E. W. Graham was lieutenant colonel. Most of his service with this regiment was in the Transmississippi department, chiefly in Arkansas and Louisiana. In 1863, in Pointe Coupee parish, Louisiana, he was captured and held prisoner in New Orleans for four months. Rejoining his regiment at the end of that time, he was then promoted to major. Near the close of the war, upon the request of General Magruder, he was put in com-mand of the post at Hempstead, Texas, and remained there until the dissolution of the Confederacy. Major Allen was a strict disciplinarian and yet was exceedingly popular and influential with the soldiers and civilians, and it was largely due to his tactful and firm conduct at Hempstead that he was able to subdue the turbulent conditions that existed both among the soldiers and the populace in that vicinity. Few of the Texans in the Civil war made a more gallant or more distinguished record than did Major Allen, and among all his old associates he is considered one of the bravest and most efficient soldiers and officers remaining from the old army of the Confederacy. He had two twin brothers, known as the "Allen Twins," who served with distinction in General Lee's army in Virginia. A very important part of the business career of Major Allen was during the noteworthy boom period at Jefferson, extending from 1865 to about 1874. During those years Jefferson became the largest and most important shipping and commercial center of northern and central Texas, and its prosperity was so great that in population and diversified enterprise the city was much greater at that time than it has ever been since. Major Allen was the moving spirit in all this enterprise and for some time was agent for the Carter line of steamboats at Jefferson. Later he became manager of a cotton compress at Jefferson, and it was for the purpose of supervising the erection of the first cotton compress ever put up in Texarkana that he first came to this city in 1879. He has been a resident through all the subsequent years and has been prominently connected with the cotton business during a great part of that time. In about 1893 he retired from active business, though he still retains large and valuable property interests in this vicinity. His home is on the Texas side of State Line avenue.

Major Allen's domestic life has been peculiarly fortunate and happy. In November, 1855, he married Miss Virginia Adams, a daughter of Dr. Charles Adams, of Copiah county, Mississippi. Their two daughters are Mrs. Luey Mabry, of Texarkana, widow of the late Gen-William Haywood Mabry, and Mrs. Jessie, wife of Dr. C. Wise of Jefferson. There are also a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and the Allen home in Texarkana is a favorite gathering place for this family at different times, and nothing in his later years has given Major Allen more pleasure than the society and esteem of his children and his children's schildren.

John L. Worder. As president of the John F. Worley Printing Company of Dallas, Mr. Worley sat the head of a commercial enterprise which throughout all the years of its existence has stood for character as well as mere business success. The Worley Printing Company is more than a house for the production of a varied class of high-grade printing and for a service in all the kindred arts of the printing trade. It is also an institution, one of those central enterprises which every city recognizes as all important through its standing and success as a commercial center. The Worley Printing Company is a monument to the business character and wholesome integrity of its founder, the late John F. Worley, who was one of the ablest and most admired of Dallas citizens and business builders.

The late John F. Worley, whose death occurred in 1910 was born in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1852, learned the printer's trade in a newspaper office in that city, was compositor, contributor and publisher, then became connected with the old Chronicle at Pittsburg, and in 1876 came to Dallas, Texas as a traveler and visitor, rather than as a home-seeker. Perhaps he saw something more than the superficial surroundings which then characterized the town in its early years of growth, and it was this which caused him to remain and become one of the most active factors in its subsequent progress. He set up a small printing shop in the city, and for a time printed the old Dallas Herald. In 1890 he began the publication of the Dallas City Directory, and this plant has kept that business ever since. The late Mr. Worley was especially interested in the civic and benevolent institutions of his home city. He was chairman of the board of directors which built the Young Men's Christian Association building, completed in April 1909, and made the largest individual contribution to this building fund. John F. Worley married Miss Mary Belle Lewis, and their four children were John L., Mary, Edward and Margaret.
Mr. John L. Worley, son and successor in business of his honored father, was born in Dallas February 16, of his nonlored Interf, vas south in Danias February 19, 1884, received his education at Cole's Select Preparatory School and entered the University of Texas in 1900, graduating in 1904. In 1905, by post-graduate work he won the degree of M. A. His fellowship record was beyond the ordinary, and on leaving college he engaged in the work of teaching, and subsequently became an instructor in history at the University of Texas. He held this position up to 1910 at which time he returned to Dallas to take charge of the business which the death of his father left without a head. He became president of the John F. Worley Printing Company, and has since directed its business in the spirit and along the lines which made it so successful under the management of his father. In 1905 the John F Worley Printing Company incorporated with a capital of $50,000. The late John F. Worley was supervisor for the taking of the census at Dallas in 1910. The John F. Worlev Printing Company has a great volume of business in printing and blank book manufacture, and has the largest job plant in the state.

Mr. John L. Worley was married October 10, 1911, to Miss Lillian Aaron, a daughter of A. E. Aaron of

EDWARD H. CARY, M. D. As a specialist in the eye, ear, nose and throat diseases, there is no more eminent authority both in theory and practice in the state of Texas than Dr. Cary of Dallas. Dr. Cary entered upon his preparation for his profession with the intention of pursuing general practice, but his abilities during his collegiate career were strikingly manifested in the line of his present specialty, and when he began practice in Dallas some ten years ago he was already an acknowledged authority and expert in the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and has since had a large private practice and various honors and distinctions in the

Dr. Cary came to Dallas when a boy, a little more than twenty years ago, to take up a career in business, and it was only after several years of experimenting that he discovered his inclination and abilities for medicine and devoted himself to study and preparation for his real life work. Edward H. Cary was born at Union Springs, Alabama, February 28, 1872, a son of Joseph M. and Luey J. (Powell) Cary. The family is of old Virginia stock, from which original seat, its members migrated first to Georgia and then into Alabama. Dr. Cary came to Dallas in 1890 to become a business associate of his brother A. P. Cary, with whom he remained for several years. In 1894 his bent whom he remained for several years. In 1894 his cent for the profession of medicine having become fully demonstrated, he went to New York and entered the Bellevue Hospital Medical College (a famous institution, which in 1899 became the medical department of the University of New York City). In 1898 he graduated M. D. and his work as a student had won him the honor of appointment as medical and surgical interne. He not only had a term of clinical experience at the Bellevue Hospital, but also served an interne-ship in the New York Eye & Ear Infirmary. Soon afterward he established himself in practice at New York City, as a specialist in the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. He also served as an instructor of ophthal-mology at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College and at the New York Polyclinic, and was visiting ophthalmologist to the Bellevue Dispensary and assistant in the New York Eye & Ear Infirmary.

Dr. Cary returned to Dallas in 1901, and soon afterward was appointed to the chair of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat in the medical department of the University of Dallas. He was elected Dean of the faculty of this school in 1902. In 1903 the school became the medical department of the Baylor University, the chief seat of which institution is at Waco, the name of the medical department becoming the Baylor University School of Medicine. Dr. Cary continued as Dean of the faculty, and is still in that position. The medical department is closely affiliated with the Baptist Memorial Sanitarium in Dallas, and Dr. Cary is ophthalmologist and otologist of the clinical staff of the sani-tarium. THOMAS R. ERWIN. One of Parker county's oldest pioneer families is represented by Thomas R. Erwin, who a number of years ago started in business in a very small way as a dealer in groceries at Weatherford. His enterprise has since been expanded by his own energetic management and by the confidence which a community comes to have in a merchant of strictest honor and commercial integrity, and his is now the largest establishment for the sale of groceries, hardware and farm implements in Parker county. The Erwin family has been identified with Texas since the close of the Re-public, and two of its older members sacrificed their lives during the pioneer days of Parker county, while the entire family had to endure the hardships and dangers incident to life on the frontier.

Thomas R. Erwin was born in Parker county, August 23, 1872, a son of W. A. and Martha (Stinett) Erwin. The Erwins are a Scotch family, who settled in Virginia, during the colonial epoch, later moved to Tennessee and from there to Texas in 1844. Their journey to the Texas republic was accomplished by Grandfather Erwin was horn in Virginia, in 1894, lived in Tennessee as a farmer for some years, and then came to Texas. W. A. Erwin, the father, is still living and engaged in farming in Eastland county. His wife is also alive. During the Mexican war, W. A. Erwin was a soldier, and later in the Confederate army, and for years he fought the Indians on the frontier of Texas in all the counties adjoining that of Parker. His membership is in the Preshyterian church of the United States, he has been an elder in the Wentherford church for the the creats, and supers. During all that time not half a dozen Sundays have been missed from his regular attendance and work, and he is a trustee of the Fairmount Seminary of Texas, a girls' school.

Mr. Erwin was married October 8, 1901, in Weatherford to Mrs. Benoni Henry Porter, a daughter of Ben C. and Bell Henry. CAPAIN FRANK JOHNSON, A. former captain of the Texas rangers, and with a long record of official service in west Texas. Captain Johnson is a son of a Confederate soldier, and is in many ways typical of the strong and rugged character of the older generation of Texans. He has traveled extensively, has come to know men and affairs, and has recently settled down as a prosperous business man of Westherford.

Frank Johnson was born February 8, 1869, in Hartsville, Tennessee, a son of N. B. and Sarah Johnson. His father was a printer and newspaper man, and for more than twenty years served as postmaster at Weatherford. He moved from Tennessee to Texas in 1870, and his residence was at Weatherford up to the time of his death in 1901. During the war he enlisted from Tennessee, became a soldier in General Morgania famous troopens, and served from the early months of the war until its close. Captain Johnson the oldest of the family, had a public school education in Texas. His first important position was that of deputy sheriff of Dickens county, after which he was deputy sheriff in Kent county, and was a special ranger under Captain McDonald, who is now United States Marshal for the northern district of Texas. During his service as ranger Captain Johnson was inspector for the cattlemen's association of Texas. and also inspector for the live stock sanitary company several years. In 1901 came his promotion by appointment as sheriff and tax collector of Mitchell county, Texas. In March 1908 he was appointed captain of the Texas rangers, giving valuable service in making an excellent record with the state military organiza-tion until his resignation in November 1910. His career as captain of the rangers was followed by his taking a position as inspector for the live stock sanitary company, during which time he was located at Wichita Falls. In September, 1912, Captain Johnson went to South America to oversee a ranch in that country. On his return to Weatherford in May, 1912, he established an automobile tranfer business, and has conducted it successfully to the present time.

His support has always been given to the dominant political party in Fexas, and he is one of the stanch admirers of the present administration of President Wilson. Her father was one of the early settlers of Parker county, having moved from Illinois in 1871, and had been a Confederate soldier, seeing service from the start to the end of the war. Both her parents are now deceased. The captain and wife have two children, a son and a daughter, namely: Miss Dott, aged twelve, and Roy, aged nine, both in school.

JUDGE WILLIAM MCCARTY PECK. The personnel of the Texas judiciary has always been notable for the high qualities and the thorough legal ability of its members, and the present judge of the Fifteenth Judicial District has not only measured up to the high attainments of the Texas bench, but has added much from his individual character. Judge Peck has for forty years been identified with his profession in Grayson county, and he represents the best quality of the judiciary and well upholds the dignity of the bench and the bar of the state.

William McCarty Peck was born May 22, 1848, near Indianapolis, Indiana, being the second among four children born to Daniel and Sarah (McCarty) Peck. His early education was acquired in the schools near Indianapolis, and at the age of seventeen he went to Northern Alabama, where he was employed as a bookkeeper for a time. Returning to his native state, he took up the study of law with the firm of Williamson and Deggy the study of law with the firm of Williamson and Deggy and the study of law with the study of the with the study of law with the study of the study of law with the subsequently attorney generated to the law in Northern Alabama and was admitted to the bar there in 1872. In the following year he moved to North Texas, locating at Denison, and has been engaged in the practice of law in Grayson county ever since.

Judge Peck belongs to the old Jeffersonian school of the Democratic party and has many times rendered signal service to his community. From 1879 to 1881 he served one term as mayor of Denison. For most of the time for quarter of a century he was a member and during the greater part of the time was chairman of the school board of Denison. In the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions of the legislature he represented Grayson county in the lower house, and in both sessions was a member of the judiciary committee No. 1. In January, 1912, Judge Peck was appointed to fill out an unexpired term as judge of the Fifteenth Judicial District, and in the fall of the same year was elected for the regular term in that office, a position to which he lends dignity and inspires both the bar and the general public with an appreciation of his fairness and thorough qualifications for the judicial office. Judge Peck affiliates with the Masonic order, being a Knights Templar Mason. For a number of years he was connected with the Board of Trade at Denison, and has always been ready to take his part in community affairs.

On April 1, 1873, in Alabama, Judge Peck married Miss Augusta Charlton. They have but one child, Charl-ton Peck, aged thirty and an invalid. Judge Peck is of English and Irish descent and has no immediate relatives in the state of Texas. In the forty years of his residence here he has seen many changes and the increases in population and wealth, and is an euthusiast on the subject of North Texas resources and opportunities. He has a wide acquaintance, and during the past forty years has personally known every Texas governor except

JOSEPH F. CONNER. The present sheriff of Dawson county is a pioneer settler and old stockman of this section, having located at Lamesa about twenty years ago, when all the country was one uninterrupted stock range. and before permanent civilization had taken a foothold in a country up to that time occupied only by the wandering cattlemen, the buffaloes, and the other wild denizens of the western plains. Mr. Conner is well known among all the cattlemen of Dawson and surrounding counties, and as sheriff has made a splendid record in service of the people.

Joseph F. Conner was born in Lampasas county, January 12, 1862. He was the ninth in a family of fourteen children born to John F. and Mary T. (Turtelot) Conner. His father, a native of Arkansas, was married in Washington county of that state, and from there moved into Texas in 1848, only about three years after Texas entered the union. He located in Bastrop county, and for a number of years was engaged principally in the stock business. From that county he moved to Williamson county, and from there to Lampasas county. He was an active stockman in those different localities until 1886, and then lived retired until his death on February 1, 1909. His wife was born in New York state, and came to Arkansas with her parents when she was a child, and she died in November, 1894. Joseph F. Conner had a common school education, but most of his training was through practical exchange, and was acquired more as a result of driving horses on the range and handling stock and in farm work than through books and attendance at school. When he left home in 1881 at the age of nineteen, he went into the Panhandle, locating in Lipscomb county, where he was identified with the stock business about six years. From there he moved his headquarters to Fort McKavett, and continued in the same business for one year. From Fort McKavett he transferred his headquarters to Coke county, where he remained until 1894, in which year he moved into Dawson county, locating at Lamesa. At that time Lamesa was an unimproved townsite, surrounded by great open ranges, with cattle, coyotes and jackrabbits in abundance. He was steadily in the stock business in that locality and at one time owned four sections of land, a part of which has since been broken up and enclosed as the town of Lamesa. He has sold all his land except a little town property.

Mr. Conner first entered local politics when he became a caudidate for tax assessor in 1908. He failed to secure the honor at that time, but in the year 1910 was elected to the office of sheriff and tax collector, and by re-election in 1912 is still handling the affairs of the office. Since then he has retired entirely from the stock business.

At Fort McKavett on April 12, 1888, Mr. Conner married Miss Mary F. Poe, daughter of W. M. and Cynthis Poe. They were a family of pioneer Texans, and both were born in Texas. Mr. Conner and wife have eleven children, as follows: Eula, Frank, Pearl, Hoyle, Willie, Robert, Jack, Dollie, Silas, Reta and Thelma. Eula, Frank and Pearl are married.

Mr. Conner affiliates with the Masonic order, being Past Master of his lodge, and is Captain of the Royal Arch Chapter, and is Noble Grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In politics he is a Democrat.

HON. JOHN EDWARD KINNEY, county judge of Roberts county, Texas, has been identified with the bar and the bench at Miami since he entered upon the practice of his profession in 1900. His record parallels that of the self-made man, and therefore forms an interesting part of American hiography.

Judge Kinney dates his birth at Brooklyn, New York. January 8, 1873, and is the younger of the two sons born to John Edward and Clara M. (Dunn) Kinney, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of New York, but both now deceased. John Edward Kinney, Sr., was the son of G. O. Kinney, a New York broker, who was born in New Jersey and who died in New York. The latter was the son of James Kinney, who was born in New Jersey and died at Erie, Michigan, he having in middle life pioneered to the latter state. John Edward, the father, was a merchant in New York during the greater part of his life, and was moderately successful, but Florida and fruit raising had an attraction for him, and for thirteen years he made his home in that south-ern state, eight years of that time serving as post-master of Winsted in addition to looking after his fruit interests. The Dunn family is of Irish descent, and the Irishman who was the progenitor of that family in this county came here in 1798 from county Kilkenny and settled in New York. He was a soldier in the Black Hawk war and was killed in hattle. The older of the two sons born to John Edward and Clara M. Kinney, Charles B. Kinney, is secretary and manager of the Blinn Coal Company of Brooklyn, New York.

In the Brooklyn schools and the schools near the Kinney Florida home John E. Kinney, Jr., received his early training, being in attendance up to the time he was nineteen. At the age of twenty-seven he was engaged in a brokerage commission business for himself and others in New York city. In the meantime he took up the study of law and fitted himself for its practice. He completed his studies in the Nashville College of Law in 1900, and from that institution received the degree of LL. B. In June of that year he came to Texas and took up his residence at Miami in Roberts county, where he at once opened an office for the practice of law and in various ways identified himself with the interests of this locality. He has taken an active part in Democratic politics, local, state and national. During his early practice he served as deputy tax collector. He has twice been elected county judge, and is now serving his sec-ond term. He maintains fraternal identity with various organizations, including the W. O. W., K. of P., and the A. F. & A. M., his Masonic work covering the de-grees of the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Council. His creed is that of the Presbyterian church, of which he is an elder.

On the 6th of April, 1902, at Miami, Texas, was sol-emnized the marriage of John Edward Kinney and Miss

Golen levon

Bena H. Carter, and to them have been given two daughters and a son: Clara May, born August 16, 1903; Elvira, born August 27, 1904; and Leon McCord, born September 24, 1911. Wrs. Kinney is a native of Texas and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Carter, for thirty years residents of Roberts county, now living at Amarillo, Texas. During his residence in Roberts county S. G. Carter was one of its leading citizens. He filled the offices of county sheriff and treasurer, and for several years was county judge.

Although a busy man professionally, Judge Kinner finds time to look after the supervision of his agricultural interests, owning and operating a farm half a section in extent in Gray county. That he has succeeded in making a place and a name for himself is due to his own efforts, for neither in his business venture nor in the work of fitting himself for a professional life did he receive any financial aid.

Coi. Gain Crow was engaged in the merentile business in Austin, and, while he was not one of the first settlers, substantially the entire growth of the wonderful city was under his eye, was watched by him with the interest and pride of a proprietor, and was substantially aided by his wise councels and firm hand. His eareer was one teeming with adventures and exciting experiences from the time of his service as a soldier of the Confederacy through the days when he drove eattle across the plains to the Western frontier, and throughout his life he maintained his reputation as a stalwart and public spirited citizen, faithful in his friendships and conscientions in the discharge of every duty devolving upon him.

Colonel Crow was born in 1822 at Hartford, Ohio county, Kentucky, and was a son of John W. Crow, He was educated in private schools of his native place, and, coming of a family of merchants, it was but natural that he should enter into the activities of trade and commerce when he attrained manbood. In 1857 he was united in marriage with Miss Cordelia A. Jones, of Oregon, Missouri, a daughter of William F. Jones, a prominent merchant of that place. He had moved to Missouri several years before, and, in addition to being successfully engaged in a mercentile business, was prominent in Holt county politics, having served six years as sheriff and as member of the Missouri State Legislature. The outbreak of hostilities between the South and the North found his sympathies with the Confederacy, and he accordingly resigned his office in the legislature to enter the army of Gen. Sterling Price as colonel. He served from 1861 until 1863 with much gallantry, but in the latter year was captured by the federal troops and confined in the prison at Johnson's Island, off Sandusky. When, eleven months later, he secured his release, he was broken in health, with finances ruined because of his service and loyalty to the Lost Cause. Accordingly he decided upon a trip across the plains, and in the middle of June, 1864, left Nebraska City, reaching Salt Lake City in the following November. He drove cattle across the plains and disposed of them at a handsome profit in the Cache Valley in December, 1864. Colonel Crow became very favorably impressed with this country and determined to make it his future home. He returned to Missouri the 2d of December, 1864, by stage line run-ning from Salt Lake City to Nebraska City, known as the Frost and Holliday Line, a much more pleasant way to travel than the way he had gone, by ox-teams, traveling nine or ten miles a day, but his health was fully re-cuperated and he never had reason to regret taking the trip. When reaching home he sold his lovely home and other property and outfitted with goods and merchandise of different kinds, and May 21, 1865, started again across the plains, behind ox-teams, five yoke to a team, nine wagons, with 4,500 pounds to a wagon. Virginia City, Montana (territory), was reached August 22, 1865, without the loss of life to one in the party. However, the trip was not made without perils and hazards, as told by Mrs. Crow, who survives her husband and is well known in Austin. We quote from her account:

"We were attacked by Indians of the most warlike tribe, the Ogalak Sious, but after several hours of continual fighting managed to drive the hostiles off, although one of our men was wounded by an arrow, an injury from which he recovered in a week or so. He always thought he was saved from death by a cross pin which I wore all the time and which he had noticed. My husband had made it in prison and had sent it to me as a Christmas present in 1863. Those were troublesome, triing and irritating days for all concerned, but not a loud or distasteful word was ever uttered by Colonel Crow nor any profane language was indulged in by any of the party, which often numbered as many as 100 people. The Indians were very desperate and determined to drive off the cattle and kill the immigrants, and we were very much afraid of them. A. H. Crow, the oldest son of Colonel Crow, was then just fifteen years of age and very delicate, but the trip was exceedingly beneficial to his health.

"After living in Virginia City for two years, we sold out and returned to the States, leaving June 18, 1869, hy stage line for Fort Benton, on the upper Missouri River, where we took a boat, "The Fort Benton," coming down the Missouri River to Forest City, Missouri, and going thence to Oregon and on to Mound City to visit my mother. Mr. Crow went on to Kentucky for a visit to his old home at Hartford, Ohio county, and Allie Crow went to Carrolton, Kentucky, to attend college. In September, 1867, we again started for Texas, leaving St. Joseph, Missouri, for New Orleans, Louisiana, on a large Missouri-Mississippi river packet, the "Telegraph No. 2," an excellent boat and a delightful way to travel. The captain was named Lorillard, belonging to the family of tobacco fame, and was a perfect manager of his boat. It seemed to us that our hardships and privations were about over, but it was not to be so. reached New Orleans, on September 17th, we found that unfortunate city in the throes of one of its worst yellow fever epidemics, more people having died on the 15th and 16th of that month than at any other time during the season. Naturally, we were most anxious to leave the stricken city. Dr. Carter instructed us to go to the water, and there we found our same boat, Captain Lorillard extending a kind invitation to us to come aboard his vessel, on which we traveled back to the mouth of the Red River and up to the town of Alexandria. There, however, the people did not want us to land, as they had received news of the epidemic at New Orleans and feared that we would spread contagion. Colonel Crow said: 'I will land, but do not ask you to let me go into your town,' but the countrymen still insisted that we should not come near them, and it was necessary for Colonel Crow to display his gun, a well-mounted weapon, which, however, I had never heard of being an especially good one, although my husband was very proud of it. Finally an old man by the name of Captain Feathers came and shook hands with us and said: 'My friends, I own a hotel, so just follow me and I will take you under shelter.' Colonel Crow thanked him and said: 'On one condition, and that is if you will buy me a pair of horses, a spring wagon and suitable things with which we can camp.' This done, we started Texasward with our three children, and reached Washington county, near Independence, October 5, 1867. In a few days we were all down with yellow fever, Colonel Crow being very ill for several days and one of the children being also very sick - but the Crows were not to die that way. After the sick members of the party had recovered we moved to Bastrop county, Texas, reaching that point in a cold norther, November 20th. From Bastrop we moved to Austin in 1870, and here I have made my home ever since. I really feel as though I were a Texan."

A former county judge of Parker county, Robert Lee Stennis has for twenty years been a resident of Weatherford, and during most of this time has beer in active practice as a lawyer. Judge Stennis is a leader in his part of the state, a man of wholesome influence in affairs, and has a splendid record of accomplishment and attainment.

Robert Lee Stennis was born July 10, 1870, near Meridian, Mississippi, a son of A. T. and Julia (Ed-wards) Stennis. The Stennis family is of Scotch and Irish stock and Presbyterian in religion. There are large numbers bearing the name in the states of Mississippi and South Carolina, and most of them were slave holders and planters before the war and took an active part on the Confederate side. On his mother's side Judge Stennis is connected with the prominent old Edwards family, which came from Holland and settled in the Middle Atlantic and Southern states in the early days. The maternal grand mother was of English stock, thus uniting four different racial lines of ancestry in the judge. The judge's father was a planter and before the war a slave holder, and continued in that vocation until his death. During the war he became an officer in the Confederate army, having raised a company in Kemper county, Mississippi, serving as its captain, later was promoted to major of the Fifth Mississippi Infantry, and still later became lieutenant colonel. He went all through the war, and was one of the distin-guished southern soldiers. His death occurred in Mississippi in 1878, and his wife died in 1894. There were seven children, four sons and three daughters, all of whom are now living. Judge Stennis is the youngest son.

As a boy he lived on the Mississippi plantation, attending the local schools, and for five years was a statending the local schools, and for five years was a statent in the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi at Starksville, while General S. D. Lee was president of the institution. In 1892 he graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science. The following three years were spent in teaching in Mississippi and Texas, his residence in the latter state beginning in 1893. Since that year his home has been in Parker county. While teaching he took up the study of law, and in May 1895 was admitted to the bar at Westherford.

Judge Stennis has had an active part in public affairs, and in 1904 was elected county judge of Parker county, holding office for two terms. When he was first elected to the office the custom still prevailed in Texas as elsewhere of a general distribution by the railroad of passes among state and county officers of all grades. The judge showed himself in advance of his time, and scrupulously lived up to the standards of civic and official conduct which may be said now to prevail generally over the state. When passes were sent to him as county judge, he returned them to the railroad companies, and soon afterwards in a county judges convention condemned the uses with all his power of utterance, and eventually secured the passage of resolutions prohibiting the acceptance of railroad passes by the county judges. It illustrates his fidelity to his convictions of right that he refused the passes and began the agitation at a time when his action would be of the greatest benefit, and when it could not possibly be misconstrued. The judge has always been a Democrat, is a very effective speaker, and has taken part in a number of campaigns. He was a delegate from his county to the state convention in 1900, and is a loyal supporter of the present Wilson administration.

Fraterially his associations are with the Masonic Order in which he has taken the Knights Templar degree, and belongs to the Mystic Shrine, and he is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. As an active worker for local benefits, he has membership in the Chamber of Commerce of Weatherford. His church is the Southern Presbyterian, in which for eighteen years he has served as an elder.

On December 12, 1900, at Waxahachie, Texas, Mr. Stennis married Miss Lu Rainey Nash, a daughter of John and Lu Rainey Nash, who came from Louisiana to Texas in an early day. Her father was an attorney at law, and died in 1881, while her mother is still living. The judge and wife have two children, a son and a daughter. Miss Rainey Lee Stennis, aged eleven and now a student in the public schools; and Robert Nash Stennis, aged three.

Judge Stemnis is a steadfast booster of the resources and civilization of his section of Texas, and in support of his enthusiasm, he points to the excellent schools, the churches, the generally high standards of living among the people, and also the splendid material resources. It was Parker county to which was awarded the prize for the largest watermelon at the St. Louis Exposition, that prize melon weighing one hundred and fourteen pounds. Judge Stennis is well established in his profession and enjoys the confidence of all the people in his community. He has been too husy to take a vacation, and is always a worker, a genial personality, a good talker on all subjects, and has a career of large usefulness still ahead of him.

THEODERE F. TEMPLE. Twenty years ago Judge Temple was admitted to the Texas bar. Nearly all his professional career has been at Weatherford in Parker county, which he is now serving in the office of county judge. In the law, in public affairs, in education, and in business Judge Temple has been a real factor in the affairs of this county for a great many years. His ability and attainments are of that type which makes leaders of men, and it is in a position of leadership that he has worked for a number of years.

Theodore F. Temple was born October 27, 1861, at Greeneville, Tempessee, a son of William and Mary Temple. In ancestry the judge possesses the distinctive stock of the Irish, Scotch, and English. His father while a resident of Tempessee, was a slave holder and planter before the war, and there are a number of families of the Temples and related branches in that state. William Temple moved to Texas in 1881, and continued to farm in this state until his death on November 28, 1882. His widow survived mutil 1908. Of their eight children, four were sons and four were daughters, and the eldest son is Judge Temple.

Judge Temple lived in Tennessee, the first twenty years of his life. The public schools were his introduction to learning, and later he was a student in the Edwards Academy, conducted by the United Brethren Church at Greeneville. After coming to Texas he was a student in the Granbury College, and graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1889, School teaching was his profession for some years, and up to 1892 he was identified with the Weatherford College. While teaching there he took up the study of law and in May 1893 was admitted to the bar at Weatherford. Up to 1897 he was engaged in practice at Weatherford, and then went out to Toyah in western Texas, where he taught school for one year. Returning to Weatherford, Judge Temple formed a partnership with the late Col. J. L. L. McCall, which was only dissolved by the death of Col. McCall in 1904. Since then the Judge has practiced alone, and has enjoyed a large and distinctive patronage in both counsel and court work.

He received the Democratic nomination in the primaries of July, 1912, for the office of county judge and in the following November his election was approved by the people. The career of Judge Temple in politics has experienced some changes. In 1894, during the Populists movement, he supported that cause, and continued an advocate of the doctrines as long as W. J. Bryan upheld populistic views. However, in recent years, he has been a stanch Democrat, seeking, voting and working for the good of the party. In 1910 he was a delegate to the Democratic State Convention at Galveston. In 1912 his support was actively given to the Wilson cause, and the judge regards the present Wilson administration with much favor and satisfaction. Fraternally his associations are with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and others. He has each succeeding year been a delegate to the annual convention of Woodmen, since the organization of the order. He also belongs to the Columbia Woodmen and to the F. M. C. His public spirited citizenship is always manifest in every cooperative undertaking for the advancement of the interests of the town, and he has an active membership in the Chamber of Commerce of Weatherford. In religion his interest is very closely identified with the Methodist Episcopal church south, with which denomination he has been identified since he was ten years of age. He is a member of the board of stewards of the district conference, a teacher in the bible class for the past fifteen years, and was a delegate to the general conference at Asheville, North Carolina, in 1910.

The first marriage of Judge Temple was on Christmas Day of 1890 at Rockport, Texas, when Miss Mary A. Davis became his wife. Her parents were Hugh W. and Darthula K. Davis, of Weatherford. Her father, who was a cotton buyer, died in March, 1897, having survived his wife several years. Hugh W. Davis was a Confederate soldier, serving in the Infantry branch, and in one of the many battles in which it participated he was captured. After being held in Federal prison for a number of months, he managed to make his escape and though fired upon finally reached the Confederate lines and rejoined his company, continuing actively with his command until the close of the war. Judge Temple lost his first wife in September, 1897. There were two sons: Theodore W., now in a business college at Weathertord, is preparing to enter the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Bryan and take a course in civil engineering. Hugh W. Temple, is a student in the public schools of Weatherford. On December 14, 1899, Judge Temple married Miss Sarah E. Estes, a daughter of Dr. J. H. Estes of Hood county. Dr. Estes and wife both died in 1901. The judge and wife have one child, a daughter, Maggie Estes Temple, aged seven.

GEORGE W. HARDY. A Brownwood business man with a fine record of success, one who began in this city ten or twelve years ago, with very modest capital, Mr. Hardy has spent practically all his active career in Texas. and has great faith in the state as a region of unlimited natural resources, and a place where the industrious and ambitious may be sure of the satisfactory rewards

George W. Hardy is a native of Kentucky, born in Logan county, August 23, 1862. He was the oldest of the ten children, seven of whom are now living, born to John H. and Frances Hardy. The family is of English and Irish stock, and the grandfather of Mr. Hardy on his mother's side was a slave trader and planter in Kentucky. There are several families of the name in Kentucky and Virginia, and also in Mississippi. The father, who was a painter by trade, left Kentucky in 1882, and settled in Sherman, Texas, from which city he moved in 1899 to Brownwood, where he and his wife still reside. He has been in the painting business since moving to Brownwood.

George W. Hardy grew to manhood in the decade of the Civil war and the reconstruction period following, and this part of the country and the circumstances of the home did not permit of liberal educational advantages, although he made the best of his opportunities and is a man of thorough practical skill and well informed on all the vital problems of the day. When a boy he learned the painting and paperhanging trade, and followed it as a workman for about eighteen years. In 1901 he engaged in the wallpaper and painting business on a small capital, and in a very small shop. Success has come to him in generous measures since that time, and owing to his ability to fill contracts readily and reliably he has never lacked an abundance of custom. In 1911 his business had increased so that he organized the Hardy & Denney Paint & Wallpaper Company with a capital stock of fifteen thousand dollars. He has since been president of this company. The storeroom of the company is one hundred and twentyfive by twenty-five feet, and it is stocked with a complete line of all grades of paints and papers. Mr. Hardy is also a member of the Brownwood Oil & Development Company, his faith in the resources of this section of Texas leading him to support every enterprise that looks to better development of its resources,

For one term he has served as city alderman, and is a loyal Democrat, and supporter of Democratic policies, especially as exemplified by the present administration. He has affiliation with the Masonic and Knights of Pythias Order, and is Grand Representative of the lat-ter order, and is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Hardy is a member of the Presbyterian church south. On April 17, 1883, he married Miss Loca Bell Benton, of Sherman, Texas. Her father was a stock man for many years, and continued in that line until his death. Her mother, Amanda E. Benton, died in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Hardy became the parents of five children, only one of whom is now living. Miss Virginia Morton Hardy was born March 1, 1888, graduated from the Daniel Baker College of Brownwood, and now lives with her parents.

Joseph Becton, M. D. In a profession that was significantly dignified and honored by the character and ministrations of his distinguished father, Dr. Beeton bas himself gained marked priority and is one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native state. Engaged in practice in the city of Greenville, he is here conducting a well equipped private hospital and is devoting his attention almost exclusively to the surgical branch of his profession, He has achieved special success and reputation in surgery, as well as gynecology, and holds secure place in the esteem of his professional confreres and in the confidence and high regard of the general public in his field of activity. A scion of one of the sterling and influential pioneer families of the Lone Star state, Dr. Becton is a son of the late Dr. Edwin P. Becton, to whom a specific memoir is dedicated on other pages of this work, so that a repetition of the family history and other personal data is not demanded in the

sketch here presented. Dr. Becton was born in the village of Kilgore, Gregg county, Texas, on the 19th of October, 1865, and the major part of his preliminary educational discipline was acquired in the public schools of Sulphur Springs, Hopkins county, to which place the family removed in 1874. Later he completed an academic course in Austin College, at Sherman, this state, and in preparation for his chosen profession he availed himself of the advantages of the same institutions in which his honored father had been a student. His earlier profession studies were pursued in the medical department of the University of Louisville, at Louisville, Kentucky, and he completed his technical course in the medical department of the University of Tennessee, in the city of Nashville. In this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1890 and from the same he received his well carned degree of Doctor of Medicine. In August of the same year he established himself in practice at Quanah, the county seat of Hardeman county, Texas, and there he continued his zealous labors until 1897, when he removed to Greenville, in which thriving and important city of Northern Texas he has since continued in active and successful practice. Dr. Becton has counted as satisfactory to himself none but the highest possible standard in his profession, and for several years past he has given time to effective and advanced post-graduate work in the leading medical colleges and hospital clinics of the City of Chicago. Since 1900, with full recognition of the expediency of concentration in the work of his profession, he has limited his practice almost exclusively to surgery, and in this field of endeavor he has gained distinct precedence as a skilled operator in both major and minor surgery, with many delicate and critical operations to his credit. For the proper care and treatment of his surgical cases the Doctor maintains his admirably appointed private hospital, and the same affords the best of facilities in furthering the success of his work. He is identified with the American Medical Association and its various adjunct or subsidiary or-Association and its various adjunct of secondary or generalizations as vice-president of the Texas State Medical Society, and as president of each the Hunt County Medical Society, the Northeast Texas Medical Society, and the North Texas Medical Society, and the North Texas Medical Society society, and the Texas Medical Society for the Society Medical Society and the North Texas Medical Society for the Society Society f held the office of vice president of the Southwest Medical Association, covering the states of Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Dr. Becton is a loyal and progressive citizen and takes special interest in all that tends to foster the civic and material advancement of his home city. He is unwavering in his allegiance to the Democratic party and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Inde-

as aminated with the Masonic traterinty and the inde-pendent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 14th of January, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Becton to Miss Anna Sayles, daughter Robert Sayles, a representative physician of Greenville, and the three children of this union are: Mary, who is the wife of B. V. Collier, of Greenville; Anna who is the wife of B, V. Collier, of Greenville; Anna Olivia, who is the wife of Jesse Boyken, of Greenville, and Joseph, Jr. The family is one of prominence in connection with the representative social activities of Greenville.

JAMES LOUIS MILLSPAUGH. That a community should be what it is largely as a result of one man's life and activities is perhaps the highest tribute possible to pay to human individuality. None would dispute that the flourishing city of San Angelo bears in its present commercial and municipal organization the impress of the character and influence of the late James Louis Mills-paugh, who will long be remembered as a business builder, a civic leader and a man of splendid personal character. Mr. Millspangh came here in the days of old Fort Concho, more than forty years ago, was post trader and general contractor and otherwise connected with the government establishment here, and was thus on the ground and became a pioneer in the development of the little city, which has since become a metropolis of central west Texas.

James Louis Millspaugh was born at Middletown, New York, August 28, 1841, the youngest in a family of seven children born to Virgil Millspaugh and Hannah Mc-Veigh. The family on the paternal side was Holland Dutch, and on the maternal was Scotch Irish, and many of the names still live in New York state. In the publie schools of New York the late Mr. Millspaugh had an education better than the ordinary, and qualified himself and taught school in New York for several years. He was just at manhood when the war between the states broke out, and he then enlisted in Company F the eighty-third New York Infantry. On July 22, 1862, he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant of Company C of the Fifty-third New York Infantry. Not long after that he was wounded and so incapacitated that he was given his honorable discharge and returned home. He did not remain long in New York, and went out west and became connected with the railway contracting business during the construction of the Union Pacific Line from the Missouri River west. After that he moved around considerably in the western country, and finally came to Fort Concho, in 1871, at a time when permanent settlement had not advanced within many miles of that point, and the only occupants of the entire region were the soldiers and cattlemen. At Fort Concho he was appointed post trader, and for many years was postmaster there. He did an extensive business for the government, being a government contractor for supplies not only at Fort Concho, but for other government posts in Texas, and this business made him very well known and placed him in a position to be of great service to the country when it should begin to develope. Thus a few years later he assisted in platting the town site of San Angelo, near Fort Concho, and he must be given credit for the fact that the city has its streets one hundred feet in width, and that in other respects San Angelo is one of the best planned cities of the state. As population came and the town increased, he showed much enterprise in taking the lead in those undertakings, which are for the general welfare of all citizens, and among other things he built the first ice factory, operated the first electric light plant, and also organized the water company, which supplies the municipality with a general water service. In late years much has been heard and said in Texas about city heautifying, and special emphasis has been placed upon the necessity of planting trees in the streets. It is interesting in this connection that Mr. Millspaugh took the lead at San Angelo, and many of the trees which now give their grateful shade to the passer-by were set out and cared for as a result of Mr. Millspaugh in local citizenship. In this and in every other matter affecting the general improvement of the city he was foremost in advice and practical work. Mr. Millspaugh was one of the active members of the railroad committee which secured the construction of the Santa Fe Railroad to San Angelo as its terminus, a point at which it remained for so many years, and which gave San Angelo its first great impetus as a commercial center. He also constructed the dam across the Concho River, and thus provided for power and a permanent water supply.

The late James L. Millspaugh was a man of indomitable energy and of singular originality. He possessed a mind very fertile in expedient and enterprise, and had the courage of his convictions and the resourcefulness to but his plans into effect. He is remembered as one who took great delight in reading and study, and his retentive memory enabled him to employ the varied information to effective purpose whenever he needed it. He was a very interesting conversationalist, and withal one of the most popular men San Angelo ever had among its citiens. His ambitious and thought were all intertwined with the welfare of San Angelo, and to him perhaps more than to any other individual in this section does San Angelo owe its present success and prestige. The late Mr. Millspaugh was one of the organizers of the Concho National Bauk of San Angelo, the first financial institution in the city, and of which he was one of the first directors.

In polities he was always a Republican, and of the Progressive type, His church was the Preshyterian. In San Antonio, on December 31, 1879, Mr. Millspangh was muited in marriage with Miss Sarah J. Sanderson of that city. Her parents were R. B. and Mary (Currie) Sauderson, R. B., Sanderson was a well known sheep farmer in Tom Green county, and a very prominent man. He had come to Texas in 1876 from Wisconsin, having previously been a farmer in Columbia county of that state, and sevenal times having represented his county in both houses of the Wisconsin legislature. After moving to Texas he was in the stock raising business, and so continued until his death in 1887. His widow survived until 1902. Mrs. Milspaugh was the oldest of the six children in the Sanderson family, and the three others now living are: Robert C. Sanderson of Big Springs, Texas; Mrs. Charles W. Hobbs of San Angelo, and Frank G. Sanderson for Forth Worth

To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Millspaugh were horn eight children, six of whom are living, mention of them being made as follows: Sidney Sanderson Millspaugh, born in 1881, married Sarah C. Cunningham in 1908. Mary Bland now Mrs. Dwight L. Hunter, born in 1884; Emilly, born in 1885, died in 1886; Dorah, now Mrs. L. F. Boulware was born in 1886 and married in 1909; Helen, Mrs. Frank S. Joseph William Bogar was born in Lawrenceburg in Lawrence county, Tennessee, January 17, 1861. He was the second in the family of children born to Fletcher E. and Nancy (White) Bogar, natives of Tennessee, who moved to Texas in 1874 and located in Webberville, in Travis county. The father was a farmer and stock raiser in that locality and continued a career of honorable prosperity there until his death in 1992. His death occurred while on a visit to his old home in Lawrenceburg, county. Of the five children they may be a supported to the second of the seco

Mr. Joseph W. Bogar received only a country school ceducation in Travis county, his opportunities being limited to the rural schools, which at the time had not attained the standard of efficiency now prevalent in the country schools of Texas. He went to school more or less regularly until he was eighteen years of age and then determined to begin a business career and in merchandising. Dallas county was the scene of his first practical work, and he was clerk in a general store in that county for ten years, remaining there long enough to master all the details of merchandising, and accumulating some capital for future use. On leaving Dallas county he came out to Merkel in Taylor county, where he worked for one year as a clerk. Then in the fall of 1902 he came to Abilene, where he accepted a place as salesman with the firm of Morgan & Weaver, who at that time conducted the best dry goods establishment in Abilene. After being in their employ for one year, he branched out on his own responsibility, and hecame or-ganizer of the firm of Bogar, Campbell and Sellars Company, a company which founded and conducted a large and profitable business under Mr. Bogar's management. Mr. Bogar remained at the head of this firm until 1906 when he sold out his interest. He soon after organized Bogar & Company, and he is president, general manager and principal stockholder in this well known enterprise. He has built up a store which now employes during the busy season as many as twenty clerks, and its situation on one of the best corners in one of the main streets of Abilene commands for it a trade hardly second to any of the trading centers in the city.

of the trading centors in the city.

Mr. Bogar and family are members of the Methodist church. He was married October 22, 1592, to Miss Hattie Floyd, who was born in Texas, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Bains) Floyd, her parents having been among the early families of this state. Four children have been born to Mr. Bogar and wife. The coldest is William, now eighteen years of age, and associated with his father in business; Eugene is sixteen years of age, Ruth is twelve; and Floyd is seven. The family reside in an attractive home, and Mr. Bogar owns other city real estate. He is one of the leaders in the Civic community, and has always interested himself in any movement which would bring larger bonefit and development to Abilene or the vicinity.

THOMAS D. ROSS. Senior member of the firm of Ross, Ross & Alexander whose offices occupy the entire seend floor of the State National Bank Building, Thomas D. Ross has been a member of the Fort Worth bar for a number of years, and is one of the oldest and best known lawyers of the city and north Texas.

Thomas D. Ross was born at Magnolia, Arkansas, February 22, 1861, a son of Zeno C. and Mary J. (Davis) Ross. He acquired liberal educational advantages, attended the University of Arkansas up to his junior year and then entered the University of Virginia, where he was graduated in 1882, with the degree of LL. B. He continued his studies for the law in the Yale University law school, where he was graduated Master of Law in 1883. In the same year he was admitted to the bar, and at once came to Texas, locating in Fort Worth. Fort Worth was then a comparatively small town, though right at the beginning of its great expansion as a com-mercial metropolis of all west Texas. He opened his office, and has practiced law from that year to the present, always enjoying a liberal share of the patronage in the local courts. He formed a partnership with his father Zeno B. Ross who continued in the firm until his death in 1894. Since then Zeno C. Ross, Jr., and Aubrey G. Alexander have entered the firm. Ross, Ross & Alexander have a large corporation practice, and represent a great deal of home and foreign capital, the latter principally English and Scotch.

Mr. Ross is president of the Texas Securities Company, president of the Fort Worth and Tarrant County Abstract Company, and a director in the Fort Worth National Bank.

On October 24, 1889, he married Miss Clara G. Dunn, daughter of John B. Dunn of Kentucky. They have two daughters, Jeanne D. and Jessie M. Ross.

ANDREW JACKSON MARBERRY, M. D. Since 1881 a member of the medical fraternity, Dr. Marberry has since 1900 practiced as physician and surgeon in San Angelo, where he is one of the best known members of the profession, and enjoys a splendid practice.

Andrew Jackson Marberry was born November 20, 1553, in Wayne county, Missouri, a son of A. J. and Mary E. (Robinson) Marberry, both formerly from Tenessee. Some of the Marberry family are represented in Washington, D. C., and the immediate branch of the family originated in the state of North Carolina, and were slave holders and planters in the early days. The ancestry on the paternal side is English, and Sorth and Irish in the maternal line. A. J. Marberry was likewise a physician, and for a number of years practiced at Cape Girardeau, Missouri. From Missouri he moved into Arkansas, about 1866, locating at Lonoke, where he remained in practice until his death in 1881. His wife survived him more than twenty years and passed away in 1903. Of the six children, five boys and one girl, the doctor was the fourth.

Dr. A. J. Marberry, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Arkansas, after which he took a medical course in the Missouri Medical College, and was graduated M. D. in 1881. Since then, in line with his ambition to keep abreast of the improvements and progress in this science, he has taken post graduate work in New York, Chicago and St. Louis. His first practice was in Lonoke, Arkansas, from 1881 to 1893. In the latter year he located in Ballinger, Texas, and was a popular member of civic and professional circles there until 1900. In that year Dr. Marberry decided upon his permanent location as San Angelo, and since that time has been in regular practice in this city. As to politics the doctor has always been a stanch supporter of Democratic candidates and doctrine. He has taken the Knights Templar degrees in Masonry, and is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On July 3, 1888, he married Miss Sarah Young, a daughter of Dr. F. R. and Martha E. Young of Arkansas. Her father was for many years a physician at Morrilltown, Arkansas, and was a man of distinction in his community. The doctor and wife have two children living, Lilla Ruth and Mary. Miss Lilla is now a student in the University of Texas, and Miss Mary is in the public schools of San Angelo.

THOMAS W. SHEARER, M. D. Thirty years of successful practice as a physician and surgeon are not the full measure of the accomplishments and activities of Dr. Schearer. While devoted to his profession, he is in a peculiar sense a business man and has been identified with the organization and development of several important business concerns in South Texas. He was one of the first to take up on a commercial scale the cultivation of rice in Chambers county. The honors of public office have also come to him.

He had not been in the state long before he determined to make it his permanent home, and in 1887 settled in Chambers county. He took up active practice and during the twenty years of his residence in that county was prominently identified with public and business affairs. For twelve years he was honored with the office of county treasurer. As already mentioned, he was one of the business men who utilized the opportunities presented by the rice industry in the coast district of Texas. In 1903 he became one of the organizers of the Old River Rice Irrigation Company, and was president and manager until he sold his interest in 1907. He was also secretary of the Moore's Bluff Rice Irrigation Company. Cot. James H. Parramore. Out in Runnels county, in what was then the exclusively range cattle era of Western Texas, a little more than thirty-four years ago James H. Parramore began his career as a cattle man, a career which took him through all the ups and drowns, the vieissitudes of cold weather and drought, and the fluctations of markets, and until finally he had advanced to a place among the cattle kings of this state. He has been for many years one of the prominent leaders in the Texas Cattle Raisers Association, a member of its executive committee, and in many ways identified with the organized efforts of the cattle raisers of the state.

The most conspicuous fact in his career, however, is not so much the ultimate success which he attained, as the condition of its beginning. Mr. Parramore is like most successful men, who have won their way fairly and honestly, very modest about his own ability, and achievements, and really gives most of the credit for his successful performance to the kindly cooperation and counsel of his wife. Mrs. Parramore died several years ago, and her husband is still devoted to her memory, and esteems her as one of the best and nohlest women that ever lived. When he took his family out to Runnels county many years ago his first home was a dugont dwelling, standing out isolate on the prairie. A few months later they moved into a two-room lumber house he had built. That day Mr. Parramore characterizes as one of the happiest of his life. In that shelter hare of all the luxuries and nearly all the practical necessities of comfortable living. Mrs. Parramore lived contentedly with her six children during the years of hardships and discomforts imposed in getting a substantial start in the cattle business. She not only did much to soften the hard conditions of living for the family, and provided for their wants, but at the same time instilled in her children the principles of Christian life and virtues of manly and womanly character which are now evidenced in the young men and women who represent and do credit to her rearing.

Col. James H. Parramore was a son of William Warren and Rebeeca Jane (Norwood) Parramore. Roth parcuts came from old and highly respected families who were among the early settlers of Florida and Georgia. In ancestry the Parramores were of French origin, and the family history is that three brothers prior to the Revolutionary war came from France, one settling in Kentucky, one in Florida, and one in Virginia. The Norwoods are of Irish descent, and were prominent eitizens of Georgia. Both parents lived to the age of fiftyfour years and died in Gonzalez county, Texas.

James H. Parramore was born in Early county, Georgia, August 12, 1840. When he was two years old his father moved to Mississippi, and the family lived in that state until December, 1848, when they moved from there to Gonzalez county, Texas, arriving there the last of January, 1849. Mr. Parramore grew to manhood in Gonzalez county, and what education he attained was acquired in Gonzalez college.

Mr. Parramore is a veteran of the Civil war. He enlisted September 4, 1861, in Company I, of Perry's Texas Rangers better known as the Eighth Texas Cavalry. This regiment was attached to General Albert Sidney Johnston's army. Mr. Parramore went through the war and was wounded at the Battle of Murtreesboro, Tennessee, on January I, 1863. A few months later he returned to the regiment and was again wounded on July 30, 1864, so seriously that he was compelled to retire from the service, holding at the time the rank of Fourth Captain of Company 1. He did not get home until 1865, in the month of July, and was crippled up for some months after the war. He finally was able to work and began as a farmer, an occupation which he continued until 1875. He owned a farm of one hundred acres and as it was his nature to be ambitious and energetic he overworked in managing this estate, and was finally told by his doctor that he could no longer live in that section of Texas, and that he must go out into the western portion of the state in order to keep his health. For a time he was engaged in the cattle business in Gonzalez county, and then in 1879 came out to Runnels county. There was no trans-state railroad in existence at the time and Runnels county was really on the frontier. The only inhabitants of the entire regions were ranchers and traders and some of the few remaining buffalo hunters. In Runnels county his beginning as a cow man was on a very small scale, but he succeeded almost from the start and has long since been known as one of the largest operators in west Texas, owning many thousands of acres of ranch and grazing lands, and every year being one of the largest shippers of cattle and other live stock out of this state,

Mr. Parramore is now living largely retired from active service in Abilene, where he built a beautiful residence some years since. It was in that home that his beloved wife passed away on February 26, 1908. Before her marriage she was Miss Mary Jane Goodson, and their marriage occurred on October 28, 1806. Ten children were born to their marriage, three of them now being deceased and the others mentioned as follows: Hugh C., a cattle man at Ballinger, Texas; Eunice, living at home in Abilene; Doe Dillworth, who is a rancher in Sterling county; John Norwood, a rancher and large cattle raiser in King county; Sue, now Mrs. E. V. Sellers, a rancher of King county; John James H., Jr., who is a rancher in King county; The sons Doe D. and John N. are twins. Mr. Parramore has always been a Democratic voter, but has never accepted any official honors. The family are all active members of the Baptist church and he is affiliated with the Masonic Order through the various degrees of the York Rite and is a member of the Mystic Shrine.

W. A. GAULT, M. D. One of the well known and prominent physicians of this section of the state, and a resident of Electra, Texas, since 1912, where he has been engaged in practice, is W. A. Gault, M. D., who has leen identified actively with the profession since 1898, when he was graduated from the Barne's Medical College of St. Louis. Dr. Gault is a son of Ralph T. and Martha (King) Gault, and he was born in Austin, Texas, on June 30, 1867.

Robert T. Gault was born in Tennessee, and it is presumed that the mother's birth state is Texas. In 1852, when he was twelve years of age, the father came to this state with his parents, who settled twelve miles north of Austin, just west of Merrilltown, there establishing what became known as Gault Place, and settling up some twelve thousand acres of land. There Robert T. Gault was reared, for the most part, and when he reached young manhood he took up active farming, continuing there until 1852, when he moved to Coryel continuing their until 1852, when he moved to Coryel continuing their until 1852, when he moved to Coryel continuing the most properties of the continuing the continuing the continuing the continuing the state of the continuing the state of the continuing th

W. A. Gault was one of the two children born to his parents, he being the eldest. As a hoy be attended the country schools of Coryell county, then entering Barne's Medical College in St. Louis, from which he was duly graduated with his well earned degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1898. He began the active practice of his profession prior to that time, however, practicing under a certificate in I896 at McNeal, in Travis county, and after he received his degree from Barne's, he practiced in Killeen in Bell county until 1899. From 1899 until 1902 he practiced at Pidcoke in Corvell county, Texas. In 1902 Dr. Gault took up his practice in Spindletop Oil Fields in Beaumont, Texas, there remaining until 1903, after which he went to Batson, Texas, remaining for one year. His next move took him to Himble, Texas, where he continued until 1907, and from then until 1912 he was engaged in practice in Pidcoke, Texas. In 1912 he located in Electra, and to his work here he has brought a generous fund of experience and knowledge, gleaned from his various activities in former years in his profession, and from his well conducted studies along lines of scientific research. Dr. Gault is a post graduate of the Chicago Clinical School in 1901, and he is a member of the Wichita County Medical Association.

Dr. Gault is now serving as city physician, and is a member of the Wichita County Medical Association, and the State Board Medical Association, in both of which he is rendering a valuable service to his community. He is a Democrat in his political faith, and is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America.

In November, 1898, Dr. Gault was married to Miss Lizzie Rancier, of Temple, Texas, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Rancier, now both deceased, and two children have been born to them: Miss Highland Gault, born in 1900, now attending school at St. Mary's Immaculate Academy in Wichita Falls, and Robert Edwin Gault, born in 1902 in Hillsboro, Texas, now attending school in the southern part of the state.

The brief period of their residence here has been amply sufficient to establish the family firmly in the esteem and confidence of the community, and they are accorded the sincere regard of a wide circle of the best people of the

ALEX KAHN is an active factor in the commercial life of Wichita Falls, Texas. He has been in business here as a merchant for more than two decades and is substantially identified in many ways with the city.

Mr. Kahn's career in Texas covers nearly the whole of his life. He was born in Washington, D. C., July 1, 1866, and when he was nine years old his parents moved to this state. Sol Kahn, his father, a native of Germany, came to America when a boy. He was a successful merchant of Washington, D. C., for a number of years and later of Dallas, Texas. He is still living, now being retired. During the Civil war he served as a Confederate soldier in a Tennessee regiment and was once wounded. His services lasted throughout the war. His wife, Anna (Graf) Kahn, also a native of Germany, died at Dallas, Texas, in July, 1910, at the age of died at Dallas, Texas, in July, 1910, at the age of sixty-six years. She was a resident of America from her early girlhood, having come to this country with her parents, and she bore a family of ten children, Alex being the second born.

Up to the age of thirteen years Alex Kahn attended public school at Fort Worth, and when not in school was on the range as a cowboy. From 1879 to 1884 he was employed in construction work on the Texas & Pacific railroad. During 1885 and the following two years he was at Mobeetie, near Fort Elliott, in the Panhandle of Texas, and from 1888 to 1890 he was employed in mercautile lines as a clerk in the store of E. M. Kahn & Co. of Dallas. These varied experiences brought him in contact with different classes of people and afforded opportunity for the study of human nature, and as a clerk he laid the foundation for his business career as the head of a prosperous concern of no small proportions. Mr. Kahn came to Wichita Falls in 1890, and the next year, with a cash capital of only $300, started his present business. Today he has the largest retail ladies' ready-to-wear and gents' clothing and haber-dashing establishment at Wichita Falls. His store has a floor space of 60 by 75 feet, situated at the corner of Eighth and Indiana streets, one of the most desirable locations in the city, and he carries a stock valued at approximately fifty thousand dollars and employs fourteen salespeople and an efficient office corps. The business is known as the Alex Kahn. In addition to this splendid establishment, Mr. Kahn has large real estate holdings, among which is included his beautiful residence at 1500 Austin street. Mr. Kahn was one of the organizers of the Farmer's State Bank & Trust Co., of which he was for a number of years a director, and which was absorbed by the First State Bank & Trust

While Mr. Kahn has never taken any active part in politics, as an office seeker or holder, he has always maintained an interest and pride in civic affairs, and on election day has cast his franchise with the Democratic party. He has fraternal identity with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Masonic Order.

December 27, 1892, at Weatherford, Texas, Alex Kahn and Miss Minnie E. Couble, a native of Indiana and a daughter of H. F. Couble, were united in marriage, and to them have been given four children; Blanche, Thelma. Darrel A. and Anna Ruth.

WILLIAM J. CUNNINGHAM. Senior member of the law firm of Cunningham & Sewell, the strongest combination of law talent in Abilene, Mr. Cunningham has a deservedly high reputation throughout Texas both as a lawyer and in public life. By his service in the legislature he established a reputation for aggressive and broadminded ability as a lawmaker, and is probably equally well known as one of the fluent and graceful speakers of the state bar, whether in the course of regular practice or on the political platform,

William J. Cunningham was boru in Baxter county, Arkansas, October 8, 1870, the eighth in a family of fif-teen children born to A. W. and Nancy C. (Magee) Cunningham. The parents, who now are living retired and enjoying the comforts of life at Bowie in Montague county came to Texas prior to the Civil war. The father enlisted in the Confederate army, and went through the war from the beginning to the end. He was a farmer by occupation, spent many years of residence in Kaufman county, subsequently moving to Montague county. Seven of the large family of children are now living, and are prospered and honored citizens in various portions of this state.

Mr. Cunningham attained his first schooling in the public schools of Montague county and at Bowie took up the study of law. When he was twenty-two years of the study of law. When he was twenty two years or age, in 1892, he was admitted to the bar, and his first experience as a practicing lawyer was at Nacoma. In his practice there he showed himself the master of legal principles, and soon sought a larger field for his profession at Waco. He acquired in the course of a few years a large and representative clientele in that city and vicinity, and continued to practice in Waco until 1899 in which year he located in Abilene as one of the cour-ing cities of west Texas.

As an able lawyer, he has naturally been drawn into public affairs, and his first important position was an appointment on October 10, 1903, as district attorney for the Forty-Second Judicial district. He served until the expiration of the term in January, 1907, and in the preceding November was elected to fill the regular term of two years during 1907-08. Before completing this elective term he resigned in order to accept and fill out the unexpired term of State Senator A. S. Hawkins. His experience in the state senate brought him prominently before the people of Texas, as one of the keenest and best informed legislators of the state capital. Since leaving the state senate he has refused further official honors. Mr. Cunningham was chosen a member of Judge Poindexter's state executive committees during his campaign for governor. He has also taken a prominent part in the making of local option laws, and in 1904 stumped the state on behalf of state-wide prohibition. He is a member of the Abilene Bar Association, and was elected a school trustee of Abilene in 1911. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias and he and his wife have membership and are regular worshipers in the Missionary Baptist church.

Mr. Cunningham owns his present residence in Abilene, and has a nice family. He was married June 12, 1894, to Miss Harriet Elizabeth Jeffries, who was born in Brownsville, Tenn., a daughter of George and Mary E. Jeffries. Their three children are William J., Jr., aged eight years; Florence, aged eleven; and Myrtle M., aged thirteen.

Dr. Sam Corley Ball. A family which has been identified with Texas since the year of its independence from Mexico and the establishment of the Republic, is represented by Dr. Sam Corley Ball, one of the prominent physicians of Northeast Texas and a resident of New Boston. His grandfather was the founder of the family in this state and the doctor's father was one of the most noted of the early physicians in Bowie county.

Dr. Sam Corley Ball was born at Old Boston, in Bowie county, October 10, 1865. His grandfather was Hartwell Hall, who emigrated from Alabama into Texas in 1858, the year of the establishment of the Republic, and settled in what is now Harrison county, near Marshall. He was among the earliest to locate in this section of Texas, for at that date nearly all of the settlement was on the lower regions of the Brazos and Colorado rivers.

The parents of Dr. Ball were Dr. Isaac M. and Lou (Corley) Ball. The late doctor, Isaac M. Ball, whose death occurred at his home in New Boston in 1903, was one of the most prominent physicians and citizens of Bowie county. He was born at Florence, Alabama, in 1829, being seven years of age at the time the family moved to Texas. Then pioneering began at an early age, for in 1846 he moved to what is now Bowie county, where he enlisted for service in the Mexican war, along with six others from this county. The company in which they enlisted got no further than the Mexican border, and saw little or no active service in that period of hostilities. Soon after his return from this military expedition he went east and studied medicine at Jefrerson Medical College in Philadelphia, where he was graduated M. D. in 1851. From that time until the close of his long and useful life he was a resident of Bowie county, spending many years at what is known as Old Boston and when the old settlement was abandoned, moving to the present flourishing town of New Boston. On returning from Philadelphia he was one of the few college trained physicians in this part of the state, and combining his experience with his natural talent and fine character, he soon acquired a large practice and became one of the most eminent physicians of North East Texas. A complete account of his long and successful career would be a history of one of finest types of the old time country doctors. The public servant of a large patronage, who was on duty night and day and against the most adverse conditions, over difficult roads and in all kinds of weather riding to bring his skill and comfort to his patients. Practically all of his active practice was carried on in the days before the introduction of the telephone and before the automobile became so generally serviceable as it has to the modern doctor. To the hundreds of citizens of knew him, he was both a physician and a friend, and his accounts never showed the almost unnumbered acts of kindness which he distributed without stint throughout the large community into which his practice extended. He finally returned from active practice in 1901. At one time he had been engaged in the land business in partnership with the late Judge B. T. Estes, and together they owned twenty thousand acres of land in Bowie county. The late Dr. Ball's wife, who died in 1901, was a daughter of Rev. Sam. Corley, a noted pioneer Cumberland Presbyterian minister and missionary, and who came from Tennessee in the early thirties as a missionary to the Indians, and had a long and self-sacrificing service in Arkansas, Indian Territory and Texas. He was chaplain of his

Sam Corley Ball received his early education at Trinity University at Tebuacana, and later at the State University in Austin. He was a student in the university when tiss sessions were held in the temporary Capitol building. His medical studies were pursued in the Kentucky School of Medicine, whence is now the University of Louisville, from which he received his medical degree with the class of 1887. Since then for a period of a quarter of a century he has been in active practice and has enjoyed much of the esteem and success which characterized his father's long career in the same vicinity.

The doctor is the owner of a fine farm a mile and a half from New Boston. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies, and is president of the Northeast Texas Medical Society. Fraternally he is a Knight Templar Mason.

Dr. Ball married Miss Celeste Harris, who was born in Louisiana. Their three children are Louise, Harris and Samuel.

REV. THORNTON R. SAMPSON, D. D., LL. D. Another of the men of Austin who are prominently and creditably identified with Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary is Rev. Thornton R. Sampson, D. D., LL. D., professor of Church History and Polity since 1905, and president of the seminary prior to the election of Dr. Vinson, who now holds that office, and a sketch of whose life and work immediately precedes this brief review.

Dr. Sampson was born at Hampden Sidney, Prince Edward county, Virginia, on October 9, 1852, a son of Rev. Francis S. Sampson, D. D., and bis wife, Caroline Susan (Dudley) Sampson. The family on both sides traces its ancestry directly back to the royal blood of England and France, and the Baldwins, Dudleys, Byrds and Sampsons have long been established on American soil, representatives having established themselves here in Colonial days, and having been prominently identified with the country since that time.

Dr. Thornton R. Sampson was graduated from Hampden Sidney College in Virginia in the year 1871, after which he studied at the University of Virginia and also at Eduhurgh, Scotland, and Leipsic, Germany. He as his D. D. and LL. D. degrees from Davidson College, North Caroliua.

Dr. Sampson has traveled a great deal, much of his travels being in the interests of educational and church work. He was in missionary work among the Greeks in Athens and Thessalonica from 1878 to 1892, and did excellent work in the advancement of the Christian religion during that time. After his return to America he was engaged as secretary of foreign missions for the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolian from 1894 to 1894, and from 1894 to 1897 he was president of the assembly's home and school at Fredericksburg, Vignina. He was president of Austin College at Sherman, president of Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, which office he resigned on account of ill health in 1905, In the latter year he was succeeded in the presidency by Dr. Vinson, and he has since held the chair of Church History and Polity.

Dr. Sampson is chairman of the Association of Religious Teachers of the University of Texas, and when he was president of Austin College at Sherman he was northmental in bringing about its adilliation with the University of Texas, that being the first denominational school in the State to become so affilliated, an example later followed by every organized denomination in Texas. When Dr. Sampson first became president of the Austin College at Sherman it was the only institution which the Preblyterian Synod of Texas controlled. He was made chairman of the committee on church and Christian education, and in that position he brought about the unification of the educational work of the synod, after helping to organize several new institutions. Today he is still devoting his attention to the matter of getting the university to allow some further religious instruction, with due credits for such courses, a work that will be of the greatest benefit to the furtherance of religious knowledge. In 1914 he was made general agent for the Conference for Education in Texas.

Dr. Sampson is deserving of high praise for the accomplishments of his life thus far, for he is distinctly self-made in the matter of his education. His fathy died when he was eighteen months of age, and to his mother he owes much for the early training he received from her, and for the Christian principles she inculeated when he was at the pliant and impressionable age-the same having had their undying influence upon his life, causing him to enter church work at a very early age.

Dr. Sampson is an inveterate pedestrian, and his travels on foot have earried him into the remotest sec-tions of the globe. He has walked through England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Germany, Greece, Bulgaria, Palestine and extensively in numerous other countries. He crossed the Alps sixteen times on foot from Switzerland to Italy, and crossed the Pindus Mountains many times on foot. Three of his children were born in Athens, Greece, and one of them at Thessalonica.

The marriage of Dr. Sampson was solemnized in Memphis, Tennessee, on April 30, 1878, when Miss Ella S. Royster became his wife. She is a descendant of the Watkins and Venable families, who were among the first settlers of Virginia. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Sampson are Mrs. Janet Parsons, of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. Mary Drake, the wife of Rev. E. T. Drake, pastor of the Lutcher Memorial Presbyterian Church of Orange, Texas; Frank W. Sampson, an engineer for the Southern Traction Company, of Dallas, Texas, and Helen L. Sampson.

WILLIAM H. SEWELL. Junior member of the law firm of Cunningham & Sewell at Abilene, William H. Sewell is a Tennesseean, who came to Texas when a young man just out of college, studied law in this state, and since his admission to the bar about ten years ago has acquired a successful practice and is one of the leading members of the bar at Abilene.

William H. Sewell was born in Wilson county, Tennessee, Angust 11, 1877, a son of Rev. Luther R. and Josie (Barry) Sewell, both of whom were born in Tennessee, and are now deceased. The father devoted all his life to the ministry of the church. William H. Sewell as a boy attended the public schools of his native state and finished his education in Harding College at Nashville. Leaving college when twenty one years of age he came to Texas and located in Mitchell county, and read law in the office of W. K. Homan at Colorado. Following his admission to the bar in 1904 he practiced a short time in Colorado and then moved to Abilene, where he had an office to himself, and built up a good clientage. In February, 1909, he joined forces with Mr. W. J. Cunningham.

Mr. Sewell is a Democrat in politics, a member of the Abilene Bar Association, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and belongs to the Christian church. He was married April 26, 1903, to Miss Pinky G. Robertson, a native of Texas, and a daughter of A. B. and Leonore (Smith) Robertson, her father being a prominent ranchman at Slaton. One child has been born to their marriage, William Robertson Sewell.

JOHN DUSKIN GAITHER. As president and principal owner of the largest dry goods store in Merkel, Texas, John Duskin Gaither occupies a prominent place in the business world of that city. He is a modern and progressive business man and his success has come through his careful methods and his ability to perceive an opportnuity when one is presented. Mr. Gaither is chiefly occupied with his mercantile business.

John Duskin Gaither was born in Fayette county, Texas, on the 11th of October, 1880, the son of Burgess Clayton Gaither and Mary Atwood (Young) Gaither. Burgess C. Gaither was born in Lawrence county, Tennessee, and lived there until 1871 when he came to Texas and located in Fayette county where he engaged in stock raising. Here he met Mary Young, who was a native of Fayette county, Texas and they were married. They lived in Fayette county until 1883 when they removed to Taylor county. He drove his herd of cattle across the country to his new home, which was a ranch near Buffalo Gap. Here he continued stock raising until 1887, when owing to a protracted drought continuing through 1886 and 1887, he was forced to discontinue stock raising. He now turned his attention to farming and was very successful. In 1905 he retired from active life and is now living in Merkel with his wife, having gained a comfortable fortune during his active years. He has always taken an active interest in politics, being a member of the Democratic party, but he has never aspired to hold any office. Four children were horn to Mr. and Mrs. Gaither. In addition to John D. Gaither, these are: Leslie Davenport Gaither, who is engaged with his brother in the mercantile business in Merkel; Maggie Bell, who married Rex E. Dillard and lives in Taylor county, Texas; Forest Young Gaither, who is also associated with his brother in the drygoods business.

The eldest of these children was John D. Gaither. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Taylor county, and when he became older he was sent to the South Western University, where he remained for two terms. He was anxious to get to work and so at the age of sixteen he began his business career as a clerk in the store of J. W. Evans in Abilene, Texas. He worked as a clerk in this grocery store for three years and then returned to his father's home, and for two years assisted his father on the farm. He did not care for farming, and having learned eugineering in a very practical way on the farm, he now went to Fort Stanton, New Mexico, to accept a position as stationary engineer in the Marine Hospital Service. He had a natural bent for mechanics and he was very successful in this position, which he held for three years. During this time he saved his salary with an idea of starting in busi-ness for himself at some future date. At the end of these three years he returned to Merkel and engaged in a modest way in the grocery business. He later bought an interest in the Merkel Dry Goods and Grocery Company and in time became president and general manager. Since he hecame the executive head of this concern its business has been greatly increased and the improve-ment in stock and fixtures has been met with an equal improvement in the amount of patronage which it enjoys. The stores now cover a floor space of seven thousand feet and ten clerks are constantly employed by the firm while during the rush seasons many more are necessary. It is a highly successful concern and this is largely due to the energy and husiness ability of Mr. Gaither.

In addition to the store, Mr. Gaither is largely inter ested in two thousand aeres of land in Scurry county, This land is under a high state of cultivation and is operated upon the most modern scientific plan, being largely planted in cotton and corn. Mr. Gaither also owns his own comfortable home in Merkel.

In the fraternal world Mr. Gaither is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of the Independ-ent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party. He is keenly interested in givic affairs and was at one time secretary of the City of Merkel,

Mr. Gaither was married in July, 1906, to Miss Lola May Harris, a native of Limestone county, Texas. Mrs. Gaither is the daughter of Charles Tillman Harris and Connie J. (Wormick) Harris, who settled in Limestone county in 1854. They were early pioneers in that section of Texas and are highly respected citizens of the community. Three children have been born to Mr. Gaither and his wife, namely, John Duskin, Jr., Alma Elizabeth and Charles Clayton.

JUDGE CHARLES D. MIMS. It is worth a good deal to win a position of influence in one's own town, but to win a position of influence in one S owl town, out to do so is comparatively easy when placed alongside the task of winning renown throughout a territory the size of the state of Texas. Such renown belongs to Judge Charles D. Mims, of Merkel, Texas, and he is not so wilely known on account of pollitical honors or wealth, but because of his work in his profession and because no matter how insignificant may be his task, he puts his heart and soul into the business. Judge Mims is active in furthering all movements leading to the improvement of Texas and has led in many reforms that have proved of practical benefit.

A native of Arkansas, Judge Mims was born in Montieello, Drew county, Arkansas, on the 15th of January, 1860. He is the son of William D. Mims and Sarah B. (Hudspeth) Mims. His father was born in Virginia and his mother is a native of Mississippi. William D. Mims left Arkansas shortly after the birth of their son and removed to Smith county, Texas, locating permanently in Tyler. Here Mr. Mims, Sr., edited the Tyler Reporter, making the paper a power in politics, through his brilliant and clear-cut editorials. He was prominent in state politics, and although he himself never cared to hold office, his power over the peu and his command of editorial style made him one of the most influential men in the party in his district. He was said to be the best posted man in the state on national politics at the time of his death. Mr. Mims was a member of the Democratic party and owned and published the Tyler Reporter until his death in 1880. Mrs. Mims is still living and resides in the old home in Tyler. Of the four children born to Mr. Mins and his wife, only two are living, the judge and his sister, Josie E., who is living with her mother in Tyler and who is a prominent worker in religious circles and in club work.

Judge Mims had but a meager education in the school room but he received a broad and practical training in the press rooms and editorial sanctum of his father's paper. It was his ambition to become a lawyer and so at the age of fourteen he began to read law with General T. J. Jennings, of Tyler. He would work all day in the press room, helping to print the paper and then his work done for the day he spent the evening study-ing the ponderous law books. At the age of twenty-seven years he was admitted to the bar.

After his admission to the bar in 1887 he began in earnest upon his career as a lawyer. He located in Tyler, and two years later, in 1889, he was elected city attorney. He served for two years in this office and then resumed his private practice, which had by this time, grown to be quite lucrative. He remained in Tyler until 1893 when he removed to Beeville, in Bee county, Texas. Here he began to take an active interest in politics and his name first began to be spoken in political circles. In 1900 he was forced to move to Nacogdoches county, on account of his wife's failing health. He began the practice of his profession here and soon had made a reputation as a skillful lawyer, well versed in the technicalities of his profession. He was active in the Good Roads movement, being the father of that movement in that county, and extremely active in seeing it become a practical thing. He was appointed county judge in March, 1907, to fill the unexpired term of Judge W. H. Ratcliff, and he served on the bench for two years. It was also during this time that he was elected Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee, in which position he served for two years. In 1907 he was also a member of the State Executive Committee. In both these offices he was brought in contact with many prominent men throughout the state and many of these became his warm personal friends.

When his determination to leave Nacogdoches became when his determination to leave tracognories became known there was general regret, not only among his personal friends but among his professional acquain-tances. The night before he left the city he was tendered a banquet by the members of the local bar which was attended by practically all of the attorneys of the was aftended by practically an of the attorneys of the city. Considerable space was given to this good fellowship banquet in the next issue of the local paper, from which the following extracts are quoted. "Since his residence in the city C. D. Mims has always shown an active interest in all matters of public welfare and progress and during his time as county judge inaugurated many movements for the good of the county, among them chiefly the 'good roads' idea,' It was along this line that the successor of Judge Mims Judge F. P. Masshall made a most laudatory speech. "Judge Marshall made a most laudatory speech." all paid tribute to the honoree for his good work while county judge, recalling things done and precedents set that will live long,-to say nothing of the 'good roads' feature, of which Judge Mims is clearly the originator in this section.

At the conclusion of the banquet resolutions were adopted which show clearly the esteem in which Judge Mins is held by all who know him and are therefore worth quoting.

"Resolved, By the members of the Nacogdoches Bar, that in view of the fact that one of our members, Judge C. D. Mims, is about to remove from among us to a distant portion of the state, that we deem it meet and proper that we take some formal action in expressing our esteem for Judge Mims as a man and lawyer and in commending him to those with whom he may come in contact in his new home, and in so doing, it affords us pleasure collectively and individually to resolve:

"First, That having been intimately associated with Judge Mims both personally and professionally for the many years of his residence and professional life among us, we have found him as a man thoroughly honorable and reliable. As a lawyer; earnest, able, studious and profound. As a judge, careful, conscientious, painstaking and correct, and as a citizen, always for the right and for the best interests of the people.

"Second, To the profession, the courts and the people of his newly selected home, we commend him as in all respects entitled to their fullest confidence as a man, a lawyer and a citizen; and-

"Third, We feel that the loss of Judge Mims to the Bar and to the people and citizenship of this county is one which is keenly felt, and earnestly hope his success in his new field will be commensurate with his merits."

It was in October, 1909, that he moved to Merkel, in Taylor county, Texas, and it was not long before he had as many friends in his new home as in the one he had left behind him. In April, 1910, he was elected

Mayor of the city without opposition.

Judge Mims is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and the Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a Democratic, and in religious matters both he and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1881, when he was only a youth of twenty-one, Judge Mims was chairman of the Ex-governor Jim Hogg Club at Tyler, and ever since this time he has taken a keen interest in political questions. Judge Mims has acquired valuable farming lands in Taylor county and is also the owner of oil lands in different parts of Texas. He owns an attractive home in Merkel, and he and his family play an important part in the social life of the community.

Judge Mims was married in June, 1890, to Miss Vallie C. Price, of Nacogdoches. She was the daughter of Vincent and Annie J. (Mims) Price, and although her mother had the same name as her husband there was no relationship. Four children have been born to the Judge and his wife, as follows: Ruth, who is the wife of Irving C. Gilliland, of Fort Worth; Gordon; D. Vincent and Billie Burke, the younger three being with their parents.

Judge Mims predicts a bright future for Taylor county. the believes the land will become many times more valuable than its present selling price, for Taylor county has a good climate and an abundance of underground water within easy reach for irrigation, which must soon come.

RUPERT CLYDE PRIEST, M. D. The Priest family, of which Dr. Priest is a prominent representative in the field of medicine, with important professional and civic connections at Rusk, is one of the oldest in Cherokee county. The grandfather of Dr. Priest came to Cherokee county about the time Rusk was founded as a settlement, was a pioneer member of the bar of that city, and besides serving as the first district judge of this locality, an office he held for a number of years, he also officiated as the first pastor of the Rusk Congregation of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and divided his time for many years among the spheres of law, religion and politics. He had no connection with the military establishment of the south during the war, but furnished several sons who wore the grey uniform. Mr. Priest was born in Alabama, and his children were: Henry and William, both of whom were killed while wearing the Confederate uniform during the war; Elisha M., of Rusk; Mige of Fort Worth; Albert of Dallas; Mary, who married William Bird and died in Cherokee county; Lizzie, wife of Judge Sam A. Wilson of Rusk; Sallie, wife of Wm. David of Jacksonville.

Elisha M. Priest, father of Dr. Priest, came from Lawrence county, Alabama in 1844, and was at that time four years of age. His early years were spent in the home of his father, Judge Priest, and the greater part of his active life has been devoted to merchandising at Rusk. His career in that direction began when he was a young man, and he prosecuted his affairs with great vigor and enterprise. He missed the war so far as military service was concerned, and never figured in politics. His first wife was Miss Bettie McCord, who came from an Alabama family. His first wife died in 1883 and was the mother of the following children: Edgar, of Lubbock, Texas, who married Miss Mozelle Frazier; Mack, of Rusk, who married Lizzie Tittle; Dr. R. C. Priest, the youngest. Mr. Elisha M. Priest married for his second wife, Mrs. Ellen (Summers) Clark.

Dr. Rupert Clyde Priest was born in Rusk, December 1, 1881, and his early education was acquired in the publie school. Before reaching his majority, he had considerable experience as an employe in his father's store, but when starting out on his own account, learned the trade of moulder at Lufkin. He worked in that line of occupation at Algiers, Houston, and Beaumont, and finally abandoned it in 1896, in order to study medicine. His professional course was taken in the Southern Medical College at Dallas, and resulted in his graduation in 1910. In the same year he began practice at Rusk, and at the present time is acting prison physician for the Rusk penitentiary.

Dr. Priest was married in Rusk in October, 1912, to Miss Lottie Caupland, a daughter of Ben C. Caupland, one of the early settlers of this place, whose wife was Miss Sarah Tucker. The Caupland children are: Ollie, wife of Charles Chapman; Adda, wife of Dr. Cobble, of Rusk; Frank Caupland; and Mrs. Priest.

RICHARD G. MAURY, criminal district attorney of Harris county, Texas, has made a record for himself among the leading young attorneys of Houston.

Mr. Maury is a native of Mississippi. He was born near Suqualak, Noxubee county, that state, January 10, 1878, son of Matthew H. and Virginia (Gathright) Maury. The first of the Maurys who came to America were Matthew and Mary Ann (Fontaine) Maury, who in 1817 came from Dublin, Ireland, to this country and settled in Virginia. Their ancestors had fled from France to Ireland after the revocation of the edict of Nantes. Matthew H. Maury was a planter and merchant in Mississippi, where he spent his life and died, his death occurring in 1889. His wife died in 1905.

Richard G. Maury was reared and received his education in private schools in his native state. He first came to Texas in 1893. He spent one year in Fort Worth, and then went to Mexico, where he sojourned for a time. Returning to Texas, he again took up his residence at Fort Worth, where he found agreeable employment and studied law. He read law in the offices of Cowan & Burney and Judge N. A. Stedman, and also while stenographer and librarian of the Court of Civil Appeals, second supreme judicial district. In 1900 he was admitted to the bar at Fort Worth, and at once began the practice of law in that city, where he remained thus engaged for a period of three years. In January, 1903, he came to Houston. Here he became associated with Hunt & Myer, with whom he remained until 1906. From 1906 to 1910 he was alone in practice. In 1909 he served under special appointment by the City of Houston as special assistant to the criminal district attorney of Harris county, the conditions at that time being such that the City of Houston employed him at its own expense to assist the county criminal district attorney, and during the year which followed his record was such that in 1910 he was elected to the office in which he had served as deputy, receiving a large majority of the votes east. And at the expiration of his term he was re-elected by a large majority. During the first year of his administration of this office he not only put it on a systematic, business-like basis for the first time in the history of the county, but also he brought the docket virtually up to date, for the first time in many years. In this time twenty-two men were convicted for murder, a large number of which were whites. Mr. Maury while district attorney brought suit against the Standard Oil Company, the outcome of which was a judgment for $500,000. He was also instrumental in having all road houses and unlawful clubs in Harris county closed,

In the social life of Houston, Mr. Maury is prominent. He is identified with numeorus clubs and fraternal organizations, including the Houston Club, the Thalian Club of Houston, the Houston Light Gnards, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Modern Woodmen, Wood-men of the World, Houston Turn Vereiu, Knights of Pythias, and Houston Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Maury is unmarried. He resides at No. 8 The Beacorfield apartments, in Houston.

J. S. Jones, the popular and efficient incumbent of the office of county clerk of Deaf Smith county, Texas, a position which he has held since 1910, is another example of the self-made men of which the West is so proud. Content to begin his life in a humble capacity, he has gradually worked his way up to independence and prestige among his fellow men. Today he has the full confidence of the people of his community, who have signified their faith in his ability and trustworthiness by electing him to one of the most responsible county positions within the gift of the people.

J. S. Jones hails from the East, having been born in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, September 17, 1858. He is a son of H. C. and Mary Elizabeth (Fisher) Jones, natives of Maryland, who spent their entire lives in Baltimore, where the mother died in 1884 at the age of fifty-four years, and the father in 1902, when seventy years of age. H. C. Jones was for years engaged in the insurance business in the East and was well known in that line, for a long period having been vice president of the United States Fire and Marine Insurance Company. He and his wife were the parents of four children, of whom J. S. was the second in order of birth.

After attending the public schools of his native city, he came to Texas in 1880, first locating at Dallas, and from that time until 1884 was located at various points in Texas. At that time he returned to Baltimore and entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and during the next two years was in the offices at Baltimore. He then spent ten years at Topeka, Kansas, with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, but in 1900 came to Amarillo for the Santa Fe. Two years later he came to Hereford as ageut for the same line, but after five years resigned his position to engage in the real estate business, in which he was engaged on his own account for three years. He was thus occupied in 1910 when he received the election to the office of county clerk, a position he has continued to fill efficiently to the present time. Mr. Jones has proven himself an able and conscientious official, faithfully discharging the duties of his office in a manner calculated to best henefit security. His record will bear comparison with that of others who have been the incumbents of the office of county clerk of Deaf Smith county, while personally he is popular with men of all classes and political creeds. An enthusiastic Mason, he is secretary of the Blue Lodge at Hereford, and also holds membership in the Chapter and Council of this order. In political matters he supports the principles of the Democratic party.

On February 7, 1891, while a resident of Chicago, Illinois, Mr. Jones was married to Mrs. Regis S. Hushin, daughter of the late John Fraser, of New Orleans, Louisians. Four children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Jones: Mary Elizabeth, born in 1892, at Topeka, Kansas, attending the Canyon Normal School, elass of 1914; John Henry, born in 1895, at Topeka, Kansas, attending the Sechool at Hereford; Rebecca, born in 1894, at Pueblo, Colorado, who died there in 1895 and was there buried; and James, born in 1897, at Topeka, Kansas, who is a student in the Hereford public schools. Mr. Jones has resided in numerous parts of the United States, but has never before lived in a section for whose future he has never before primistic than the Panhandle country of Texas. He is an enthusiastic "booster" of his adopted section, and is every ready to extoll its climate, its opportunities and its people. With his family he attends the Presbyterian church.

George M. Calhoun. A resident of Houston county since before the war, and a veteran of the great strife between the states, Mr. Calhoun has spent a long and useful life, prosperous as a farmer and merchant and distinguished by a public spirit which has always been ready to serve and assist in the progress of his community.

George M. Calhoun was horn in South Carolina, December 4, 1844. His parents were Squire and Laura (Williams) Calhoun, both parents being natives of South Carolina and of Scoteb-Irish descent, belong to the same family which produced the great statesman, John C. Calhoun. Of John Calhoun, a Revolutionary ancestor, the following information was received from the Department of the Interior:

"John Calhoun was allowed pension on his application executed October 17, 1832, at which time he was a resident of Laurens District, South Carolina. He stated that he was born August 10, 1757, in Meclenburg county, North Carolina, and resided in Ninety-sixth District, South Carolina, when he volunteered in the Revolutionary war. His service was as follows: In November, 1775, under Capt. John Rodgers and Major Williamson, and was in the siege of Ninety-six; served three weeks. In December, 1775, under same captain, Colonel Richardson, served in the 'Snow Campaign' one month and three weeks. In May, 1776, under Capt. John Rodgers, Colonel Williams, and was engaged at Lindley Fort, Black-Hole, and in the Ring fight with the Indians; served six months. In 1777, under Captain Chew, in pursuit of Boyd, the Tory; two months. In 1778, under Captain Raney; three months. September 1, 1780, and Sumter, was in the battle of Blackstocks; served five months. In 1781 he engaged in the pursuit of Dunlap, the British officer, who was captured in Abbeville, South Carolina; served one month. In the fall of 1781, under Catolina, served one monta, in the ran in 1783, under Colonels White and Thomas, two months. In 1782, under Captain Collins, he served one mouth, making a total of twenty-two months' service. No dates of discharge are given. This soldier married December 8, 1793, Sarak Camp. He died September 29, 1838, and she was allowed pension, W. File No. 8, 579, on her application executed February 22, 1845, at which time she was seventy one years of age and a resident of Laurens District aforesaid. There is no other family data on file.'

Squire Calhoun had a varied and useful career. He was the possessor of many accomplishments, an excellent mechanic, a carpenter, a millwright, gin builder and farmer, and was also a local preacher of the Methodist Church. Throughout his life he was deeply interested in the social, religious and educational questions of the time. For many years he served as a justice of the peace. When the son, George M., was five years of age, the father moved his family to Chattanooga county, Georgia, settling at Summerville. There the father continued is work as a minister, and at the same time was a builder of mills, gins, and took such an active part as to leave the results of his work almost a permanent record on the industry of the vicinity. Seven years after locating in Georgia, the father came to Texas, settling south of Crockett, in Houston county. Here he had a large estate and farmed his plantation with the labor of a hundred slaves. That remained his home until his death, and his wife also passed away in Houston county.

George M. Calhoun had just began working for himself as a farmer during the year the Civil war came on. When the great conflict was actually engaged between the North and the South, he left his cotton, corn and other crops in the field and at Crockett, enlisted in Captain Adair's Company H, Green's Brigade of Cavalry, and with Walker's Division went to the front. He was with the Texas troops engaged in the western movement into New Mexico, and from El Paso went to Fort Craig, in New Mexico, where he participated in the lattle with the Union forces at that point. Subsequently the troops moved up the Rio Grande by way of Las Cruces and took part in the battle of Glorieta. After a furlough of thirty days the company was reorganized and sent to Galveston. Here it was the distinction of Mr. Calhoun to take part in the remarkable exploit which will always live in history, in the capture of the Federal gunboat, "The Harriet Lane," and the taking of the city of Galveston, which had been occupied by the Federal forces since early in the war. The Harriet Lane was one of the finest and most formidable of the enemy's gunboats, and in order to capture it the Confederates improvised three gunboats from cotton transports, two of these being sunk in the fierce conflict which raged on the surface of Galveston Bay during that eventful night. Mr. Calhoun was next transferred with the troops into Louisiana, where he took part in the bloody fight at Mansfield and Pleasant Hill, at the latter place having his horse shot from under Then succeeded the unsuccessful attack at night him. Then succeeded the unsuccessful attack at high upon Fort Donaldsonville and the bloody fight during the retreat up the bayou. He was next at Brasure City, where, after crossing the bayou in sugar coolers, the troops of which he was a member captured the town and 700 prisoners of war. Next transferred to Arkansas, and subsequently to Louisiana, he was with the army which camped near Red River and captured two Union gunboats. With the death of the commander, General Green, General Bee took command, and the army went by way of Old Caney and Nibley's Bluff to Yellow Bayou, where the fierce engagement occurred of that name. The troops next went into Arkansas, and thence to Bellevue, Texas, where Mr. Calhoun's company remained until the final disbandment at Mt. Enterprise, in Anderson county.

On returning home, Mr. Calhoun adapted himself as on a possible to the changed conditions brought on by the war and took up his life work as a farmer. Subsequeutly for a number of years he was one of the prosperous merchants at the town of Pennington. During his many years' residence and industry in Houston count't he has acquired a substantial position and owns a comfortable residence in Crockett and a fine farm in the country. On November S, 1867, Mr. Calhoun married Miss Au-

On November S, 1867, Mr. Calhoun married Miss Augusta Hill, of Crockett, and their happy wedded life has been extended over a period of more than forty-five years. Nine children were born to their marriage. Camilla and Ada are both deceased. Those living are: Beatrice, wife of John Bruten, a farmer of Houston county; Frank and Rad, both of Crockett; George E., of Grapeland; Harry Montgomery, of Dallas; Thomas, of Leon county, and Richard, who is in the railroad service and travels in and out of the state.

Mr. Calhoun was reared in the Methodist Church, but he and his wife are both Universalists and have active communion with that faith. They are intelligent and broadminded people whose lives have never run in the selfish grooves, but have reacted to the welfare and happiness of many others. Mr. Calhoun was affiliated with the Knights of Honor until the order disbanded at Crockett some years ago. He is one of the most popular members of Crockett Camp, United Confederate Veterans, being at the present time lieutenant of the camp.

EDWIN WINFREE. The career of Judge Winfree has been marked by large and worthy achievement and he has had much to do with the civic and material development and progress of Houston country, Texas, where has maintained his home for forty years and where his benignant influence has permeated in divers channels. He is presiding on the beach of the country court, in which important judicial office he has served for a full decade, though not consecutively, and he is one of the best known and most honored of the loyal and progressive Etizens of Crockett, the thriving metropolis and trains to Judge Winfree by reason of his gallant service as a soldier of the Confederacy in the war between the states, and he is now the popular incumbent of the position of commander of the Crockett camp of the United Confederacy Veterans' Association.

Judge Winfree claims the historic Old Dominion commonwealth as the place of his nativity and is a scion of one of its old and honored families-one that was there founded in the colonial era. He was born in Chester-field county, Virginia, on the 9th of April, 1845, and is a son of Thomas Edwin and Elizabeth Marrion (Taylor) Winfree, both of whom likewise were born and reared in that state, the former tracing his lineage to staunch English origin and the latter to fine old Welsh stock. Thomas Edwin Winfree owned and operated a large plantation in Chesterfield county, engaged in the raising of tobacco on an extensive scale, and also conducted a tobacco dry-stemming factory at Manchester, the me-tropolis of his home county. With these lines of indus-trial enterprise he continued to be actively and successfully identified until his death, and he was one of the honored and influential citizens of his county, where he commanded unqualified popular confidence and esteem and where he was frequently called upon to serve in positions of distinctive trust, including that of guardian or "next friend" for a number of negroes who had been given their freedom for faithful service, prior to the Civil war. Both he and his devoted wife continued to reside on their old homestead plantation until they were summoned from the stage of life's mortal endeavors, both having been earnest communicants of the Methodist Church. Of the eight children four are living: Mrs. Fannie Christian, of Manchester, Virginia; George, who resides in the city of Richmond, that state; Rupert W., who remains at Manchester, in the old home county, and Edwin, whose name initiates this review. The deceased children are: Virginia, who died as a young woman; Mrs. Sallie DuVal, Marion, and William W. Winfree.

Judge Winfree was afforded excellent educational advantages in his native state, and there gained valuable experience in connection with the affairs of the home plantation and his father's other business interests. He attended the Manchester and Richmond schools under Professor Jones and the Rev. Dr. Burroughs; also the tutorship of Professor Murray. Judge Winfree was a vigorous and ambitious youth of seventeen years at the time when civil war was precipitated upon the nation, and he forthwith subordinated all personal interests to tender his services as a defender of the cause of the Confederacy, which gained the active allegiance of the very federacy which gained the active allegiance or flower of young Southern manhood. On the 7th of September, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Drewery's Virginia Battery, which also became known as the South Side Artillery of Smith's Battalion, and with this most valiant command he served under Gen. Robert E. Lee until the close of the great internecine conflict between the North and the South. It should be especially noted that it was Drewery's Battery that held the fort at Drewery's Bluff against five Union gunboats that came up the river from Norfolk, and this was but one of many admirable exhibitions of loyal and intrepid service on the part of this gallant command. Judge Winfree made a military record that shall ever redound to his honor, and he lived up to the full tension of the long and weary struggle which called forth the ultimate of devotion and sacrifice on the part of the fair old Southland. He had many hazardous and dramatic experiences during his long period of service in camp and on the field of conflict, and well it is that he perpetuates the more gracious memories of those days through his appreciative identification with the fast depleting ranks of that noble organization, the United Confederate Veterans, in which he is a valued member of Crockett Camp, No. 141, of which he is serving as commander in 1912-13 He was a member of the famous eight thousand of Lee's worn and depleted army that lined up for battle just before the surrender at Appomattox, and his name is upon the Confederate roll of honor now retained in the Confederate Museum in the city of Richmond, Virginia, the capital of the Confederate government. This roll is inscribed with the names of the eight thousand brave and loyal Southerners who thus made the last stand in defense of the cause for which they had fought with all of loyal zeal and devotion. The roster was prepared for General Lee in compliance with his personal request, and Judge Winfree greatly prized the certificate which he received from the museum authorities and which states that his name appears upon this historic document, a letter from the house regent of the museum likewise having been addressed to the Judge and giving the same assurance. Another valued souvenir is a certificate which was given to him by the Adjutant General of the United States, showing his name to be upon the copy of the famous roll of honor that was given to General Grant upon his request and which was by him placed in the archives of the United States. Judge Winfree took part in virtually every engagement in and around Richmond, the fair old city whose seven hills bore the brunt of much of the important polemic activities of the great war between the states. He was twice wounded in action, but he did not long permit his injuries to keep him from his command.

After the close of the war Judge Winfree, with equal valor and ambition, turned his attention to winning the victories which peace ever hath in store, "no less renowned than war," and he idd well his part in bringing about a readjustment of affairs in the devastated and prostrate South, which he had deeply loved and faithfully served. He engaged in railroad contracting in the mountain districts of Virginia and later was identified with similar operations in Kentucky. For a period of about two years he thus worked under the direction of William R. Johnson, who during the war had served as civil engineer for General Beauregard around Richmond and Charleston. After retring from railroad work, Judge Winfree turned his attention to the vocation of bookkeeper and accountant, and in this capacity he was employed in turn in the cities of Louisville, Kentucky; Nashville, Tennessee, and Augusta, Georgia.

Imbued with a desire to come to the Southwest, in which progressive section of the Union he believed he could find hetter opportunities for advancement through personal effort, the financial resources of the family laving been brought to low ebb through the ravages of the war, he came to Texas in the autumn of 1873 and established his home at Crockett, which was thee, as now, one of the important commercial and industrial points of the state, as well as a center of admirable social activities, as the place had gained many citizens from the older states of the South. He devoted his attention for some time to clerical work, and eventually became one of the representative business men of the city, with inviolable place in popular confidence and regard. His career in Houston county has been one of significant usefulness and honor and he has contributed a generous quota to social and material development and advancement. For a period of about eight years he held the office of cashier of the old Houston County Bank, and when this institution was reorganized and incorporated as the First National Bank of Crockett he was prominently concerned in effecting this reorganization. He was identified with the banking business in an executive capacity for more than eight years and at the time of severing his relations with the First National Bank he was the incumbent of the position of county superintendent of public schools of Houston county, Texas.

Ever a stanch and ardent advocate of the principles and policies for which the Democratic party stands sponsor in a genetic way, Judge Winfree has been influential in its councils in his city and county, and as a citizen he has given earnest support to measures and undertakings projected for the general good of the community. In 1897 he was elected to the bench of the county court, and he continued to preside on the same, with characteristic ability and efficiency until 1902. After an interim of six years he was again elected to this important office in 1908, which term expired in November, 1912. He has thus been the honored and valued incumbent of this judicial position for a total of ten years, and his retention of the position is virtually a matter of his own volition. During his first period of administration of the affairs of the county court Judge Winfree also served as superintendent of the county schools, and in this connection he did a splendid work in bringing the educational facilities of the county up to a high standard, his service having met with such success and such unqualified approval that he has been frequently termed the father of the schools of Houston county. In the time-honored Masonic fraternity Judge Winfree is affiliated with Lothrop Lodge, No. 21, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master, and with Trinity Chapter, No. 4, Royal Arch Masons. He and his family all hold membership in the Baptist Church, and Mrs. Winfree is affiliated with the Order of the Eastern Star, an adjunct organization of the Masonic fraternity,

On the 16th of August, 1874, about a year after his arrival in Texas, Judge Winfree was united in marriage to Miss Willie King Matlock, daughter of the late William R. Matlock, who was one of the most honored citizens of Houston county and concerning whom more specific mention is made on other pages of this work, in the sketch dedicated to the only surviving child, Joseph G. Matlock. Mrs. Winfree was summoned to the life eternal in 1882, and was survived by four daughters-Mary, who became the wife of D. R. Baker, of Crockett, Texas, and who is now deceased; Helen, who is the wife of William Cone, of Crockett; Adele, who is the wife of James Crawford, of Carson, Louisiana, and Willie, who is the wife of Jack O. Powell, of Barham, that state. On the 10th of November, 1885, was solemnized the mar-riage of Judge Winfree to Mrs. Alice Bay, widow of Calvin Bay and a daughter of the late John King, who was a representative citizen of Grimes county, this state. Judge and Mrs. Winfree have three children-Joseph Edwin, who is an attorney-at-law in Crockett, and Marion L. and Mark King, who remain at the parental home. Mrs. Winfree has one son by her first marriage, Calvin Bay, who is a resident of Fullerton, Louisiana.

REV. JOHN J. WHELAN, O. M. I. No man in the town of Del Rio, Texas, is more greatly beloved than the Rev. John J. Whelan, the priest in charge of the Roman Catholic Church in this place. Father Whelan has accomplished much for the church in Del Rio. When he came to the city the church was greatly in want of a strong executive head as well as a truly spiritual leader, and Father Whelan was able to supply its needs. His influence in the town extends far beyond the borders of his own church, for his strength of character and his active practicing of his high ideals must necessarily influence all with whom he comes in contact.

The Rev. John J. Whelan was born in Ireland on the 1st of February, 1864. He received a fine education in the schools of his native land, first attending the elementary schools and later entering Christian Brothers College at Armagh, Ireland. After this he spent some time in an ecclesiastical college in the southern part of Ireland, and in 1888 came to Canada. Here he passed his novitiate, this being completed at the end of the first year. He then attended St. Joseph's Scholasticate, in Ottawa, Canada, for the study of philosophy and theology, and after completing his studies there was sent to New Westminster, British Columbia, and was there ordained priest on the 27th of May, 1894. This was in 1894, and he spent some time as a priest in British Columbia, being stationed most of the time in Vancouver. He then went to Buffalo, New York, but remained only a few months, on account of ill health. On doctors' advice he then came to Del Rio, this being in 1902 and he has not only accomplished much for the church, but he has also regained his lost health to a great extent. Upon his arrival in Del Rio, Father Whelan found the church in a bad condition. It is entirely due to his hard work and to the inspiration which he gave his parishioners that the church has been beautifully furnished, the fine linens and brasses and all the furnishings that add to the beauty of the ritual of the Roman Catholic Church having been added since his coming. Not only has his attention been centered on the church building itself, but the Sister's property, the church school, the Sacred Heart Academy, which was destroyed by fire, has been rebuilt and put into splendid running order. He has also been instrumental in securing a new church and parsonage for the Mexican people in the city, and they have their own priest and are a flourishing parish. When Father Whelan came to his parish the things which he has accomplished seemed well nigh impossible, but under the influence of his own industry and his enthusiasm for the cause in which he was working, his people have done a splendid work. The work of such a man cannot, however, he estimated by the outward signs, for in the quiet round of his parochial duties he ac-complishes perhaps his greatest work, work that none save himself and his people know. Politically, Father Whelan is independent and takes no active interest in politics, though he always likes to see the best man win. His work is his pleasure as well as his duty and his delight is in traveling about among his parishioners. He is an ardent believer in the state and the people among whom he has come to live. He says that Texas is a very large state and its people are big, broad-minded people, with warm, generous hearts. He adds that Texas is large in area and large in opportunities, and offers a welcome to any honest man who is willing to put forth honest effort.

James A. Smith, of El Paso, Texas, is one of the best known men in the city and is widely respected. He has been in business in the West and Southwest for many years and perhaps no one is more thoroughly acquainted with this section of the country, with its history and resources, than is Mr. Smith. His success in business is largely due to a capacity for hard work and to a wide experience with many kinds of men. Not only as a wealthy and influential business man is Mr. Smith known, but also through his position as postmaster of the city, an office involving no little responsibility and requiring considerable amount of executive ability.

J.A. Smith

James A. Smith was born in Hume, Alleghany county, New York, in 1852 on the 2d of May. His father, Asahel Smith, was also born in the state of New York and there grew up and married Susanna Taggart. Mrs. Smith died when her young son was only five years of age and after her death her husband moved to Missouri and settled in Cameron. He was living here when the Civil war broke out and he enlisted in the Union ranks as a private soldier. He was later made an officer and participated in the first battle of Levington, under Colonel Mulligan. Here he was captured, but was paroled three weeks later. He became very prominent in reconstruction days in Missouri and served at one time as county commissioner of De Kalle county, Missouri, He met his death aecidentally in 1900, in El Paso, where he lived with his son. He was seventy-four years of age at the time and his death resulted from the kick of a horse.

James A. Smith grew up in Missouri and received his education in the common schools of the state, spending the summer months in hard work, and thus serving an apprenticeship for the work he was destined to perform in later life. At the age of nineteen he went to work in earnest, finding employment in the sawmills. At the end of a year he went West to Colorado and located in Denver, where he was engaged in the furniture and up-holstery business from 1872 until the fall of 1875. At the end of this time he entered an entirely different line of work and one to which he was well adapted, this being the newspaper business. He went to Central City, Colorado, and there became editor and manager of the Central City Register. In the fall of 1897 he resigned from his position and once more entered the furniture business, continuing in Central City. In 1881 he sold out and removed to Durango, Colorado, where he engaged in the undertaking business. In the sprinig of 1882 he met with reverses in his business and lost practically everything he had. Undannted, however, by a disaster that would have made most men despair, he turned to the first thing by which he could earn a living and entered the railway mail service in Kansas City, Missouri.

It was in 1884 that he came to Texas and settled in El Paso. Here is where he made his first decided start on the road to success. He became a wholesale produce merchant and made a great success of this business, which he followed until 1890, when he received the appointment as postmaster of El Paso by President Harrison. At about this time he assumed the management and came into control of the El Paso Herald, the leading Republican newspaper of Western Texas. He conducted the business of the postoffice with the most conscientious care, but he was removed from office by President Cleveland, no reason being given, but his activity as editor of the Herald and the fact that it was conducted along lines of the most outspoken and frank Republicanism is very likely the reason for his removal. He continued as editor and manager of the paper until 1899, when he sold his interests, and during this year he incorporated the El Paso Dairy Company. He became president and manager of this company and has made it a great success, the dairy farm being located about twenty miles to the north of El Paso. He will, however, retire from this business in 1913, of which he is a director as well as manager,

In 1906 the postmaster of El Paso departed and left the management of the postoffice to his bondsmen, of whom Mr. Smith was one. His previous experience in this office led to his immediate selection as active manager of the affairs of the office, and in February, 1907, he was appointed postmaster by President Rossevelt. He was reappointed in February, 1911, by President Taft and has managed the affairs of the postal department since his first appointment with signal suc-

Mr. Smith has numerous business interests in addition to his public office. He is a director in the Pioneer Abstract Company and is also president of the Valley Implement and Vehicle Company. He is very much interested in the agricultural development of this section and is part owner in the Rosedale farm, eight miles below El Paso, which is one of the fine alfalfa farms in this region. He is also a director in a company that owns a dairy farm about twenty miles north of El Paso, and is owner of a home in the city itself.

Mr. Smith has always been an active member of the Republican party and has made many a journey in bebalf of the Republican Lanner. In 1900 he attended the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia as delegate-at-large, and in 1904, and again at the national convention in Chicago in 1908 he was a delecute from this district.

In fraternal affairs Mr. Smith has always taken a keen interest, belonging to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in which order he has taken the York and Scottish Rite degrees. He is also a member of the Ells, and in both of these fraternities he is a life member. He belongs to the chamber of commerce and at one time served as president of this body.

Mr. Smith has been twice married, his first marriage being in 1873 to Miss Ex Hendricks, of Illinois. She died in 1879, leaving three children, one of whom has since died. Kate, the delect, is the wide of Thomas Franklin, of El Paso, and Lily G. is the widow of E. A. Howard and is now engaged in teaching in the El Paso, public schools. In October, 1883, Mr. Smith was remarried at Cleburre, Texas, his second wife being Miss Alice Kendrick, a native of Caldwell county, Missouri, and was a Miss. Smith grew up near Cameron, Missouri, and was the second of the mean of the second of the se

When he was ready to take up the study of melicine, he entered Tulane University, at New Orleans, where he was graduated from the medical department with the degree of M. D. on May 1, 1901. His first practice after returning from college was in his native county of Houston, and he enjoyed a good patronage among the better class of people in that locality up to 1910, in which year he located in Marathon and established an office. Among other responsibilities of his profession he is at the present time assistant county health officer for Brewster county. He is a Democrat but not a practical politician and gives his vote for the cause of good government. In the recreations he finds his greatest pleasure in bunting. Dr. Worthington has found west Texas by all means the finest part of the state from his point of view, and he has many excellent reasons to assign for his belief that in the course of a few years it will become one of the garden spots and industrial centers of all the western country.

Solomon A. Starr. The proprietor of the only drug store in Marathon, Browster county, and possessing a large and prosperous business, Mr. Starr is a young business man who has had an exceedingly practical career, having begun life when a boy and having won success by his own efforts. R. WAYERLEY SMITH. If the city of Galveston wished to express in the character of one citizen its best ideals and achievements, probably no one man could represent its so broadly and fully as R. Waveley Smith. Mr. Smith is now, as he has been for upwards of twenty years, one of the vital forces in the progress of this community, and none will deny that Galveston in what it stands for and in what it has achieved, owes a great measure of gratitude to the broad capacity and ability of Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith is at the head of one of the largest banks, Mr. Smith is at the head of one of the largest banks a dozen well known corporations. However, his most hasing distinction will always consist in the prominent part he took in originating and perfecting the "Garleston Idea," resulting in the Galveston plan form which has government for the city, an idea and form which has since been adopted by hundred supposed and is now being seriously discussed as the proper solution for the inselegation of the city and the supposed and is now being seriously discussed as the proper solution for the inselegation of the city and the supposed and its now being seriously discussed as the proper solution for the inselegation of the city and the supposed that it is not being the city and the supposed of the proper solution for the inselegation. In 1900, and the subsequent rebuilding of the city and the origin of the commission plan is contained in a paniphlet written by E. R. Cheeseborough, and published by the Galveston Tribone Company on December 31, 1906. A portion of this article is quoted as follows:

After the storm of 1900, it was suggested that the first step necessary to a complete relabilitation was a thorough reorganization of the city government. It was seen and understoad, as every keen observer knows, that an efficient city government encourages the people, stimulates them to activity, invites capital and creates prosperity. The Galveston Deep Water Committee, therefore, decided that there was an imperative necessity that the charter of the city be completely overhauled and application made to the state legislature for a new charter along broader and better lines, and that some action should be taken looking to a compromise with the holders of the city's bonds, as to the interest on the outstanding bonds for a period of five years.

"Mr. R. Waverley Smith, president of the First National Bank of Galveston, a lawyer by training, and who for four years prior to that time, had held the office of city attorney, and who was then a member of fite Deep Water Committee and now its chairman, suggested the appointment of a committee from that organization to thoroughly revise and rewrite the city charter. Accordingly a sub-committee of three from said organization was appointed, consisting of Mr. Smith, Cel. Walter Greslam, a lawyer and a former member harmore and sphendid billions, lawyer of high baracter and sphendid billions, lawyer of high procured copies of the charters of a number of cities, procured copies of the charters of a number of cities, including the law governing the city of Washington, District of Columbia, a copy of the Act creating the Tax Commission for Memphis, Tennessee, after the great yellow fever epidemic of 1878, and a copy of the so-called Model Charter of Baltimore, Maryland.

"The commission features of the new charter were suggested and drawn by Mr. Smith, and the controlling idea was the creation of a governing body which should conform as near as possible to the organization of a great business corporation, providing the duties, carefully defining the responsibilities, and through the heads of the various departments concentrating both power and responsibility.

'In presenting the proposed charter to the legislature for adoption, the Deep Water Committee issued a remarkable address, setting forth in strong language the urgent needs of Galveston. This address which was written by Mr. R. Waverley Smith, stated in part: 'We believe that municipal government, as it has been administered in this community for the past twenty years is a failure. It did not require the storm to bring a realization of this fact, but it brought it home with greater force upon us. We are seeking relief from the municipal destruction and despair which is staring us in the face. It is a question with us of civic life and death. This committee has labored diligently and earnestly to prepare and present to the people of this city, and to the legislature, remedial legislation adequate for the grave emergency confronting us. Months have been given to its preparation. It is hoped that the central idea of the new charter—that of a commission embodies the practical solution of that hitherto unsolved problem; "How to govern, cheaply and well, a municipal corporation." We are asking for a charter, placing the entire control of the local government in the hands of five commissioners, designed to benefit the people, rather than to provide sinecures for politicians. The passage of the Commission charter bill through the legislature was accomplished only after a long and bitter fight, and as a two-thirds vote in favor of the bill was not secured, it did not go into active operation, until ninety days after the legislature had adjourned. It was just twelve months after the great storm of September 8, 1900, before the city government passed into the hands of the new board of city commissioners, the new charter becoming effective September 18, 1901. In the years which have passed since the inception of

In the years which have passed since the inception of the commission government at Galveston, the importance of Mr. Smith's public spirited elitzenship has suffered no deeline. He is as after today in behalf of all matterior of the summary of the summary of the summary was in the crisis of 1900. He is a big civic leader, a man who enjoys the thorough confidence and respect of his fellow citizens, and is one of that group of business men who have been laying a solid foundation in recent years for the greater and better Galveston, shaping all forces and plans to a realization of the possibilities which will come about when Galveston becomes in truth and in fact the greatest port city on the continent.

In attaining this purpose, he spent five years in the employ of a regular physician, studying and getting his board for such duties as the performed, which were of a very miscellaneous character. He then taught school in order to get the means to attend medical college, and has always been very progressive and kept himself by study and by attendance at post-graduate schools abreast of all the advancements in his science and art.

Dr. Johnson was born in St. Frances county, Arkansas, July 16, 1861, the oldest of six children born to A. F. and M. T. (Walker) Johnson. Prank M. Smith. The story of the success that has rewarded the efforts of Frank M. Smith, of Brownwood, is an interesting narrative, the chapters of which mark the way from a little Indiana farm to the head of a great lumber enterprise. Starting from a humble clerkship in a hank, he has reached his prevent position by methods which in these days of higher criticism of business practice have never heen assailed. Mr. Smith was born at Acton, Marion county, Indiana, April 20, 1861, and is a son of John S. and Pauline (Doswell) Smith.

The parents of Mr. Smith were natives of Virginia, and following their marriage in that State removed to Marion county, Indiana, where they settled on a farm. There they resided from 1860 until 1871, in which year they came to McLennan county, Texas, and purchased farm lands two miles from the city of Waco, although this property is now included within the corporate limits of that city. In 1881 they disposed of their interests there and came to Brown county, the mother dying here two years later and the father in 1902. There were ten children in the family, of whom four are deceased, the survivors being: R. C., a prominent farmer and public man of McCordsville, Indiana; Temple D., president of the Bank of Terdericksburg, the Bank of Timpson and the Bank of Carthage, Texas; Brooke, president and owner of the Brooke Smith Bank of Brownwood; Frank M.; N. L., a resident of Los Angeles, California; and Alice L., widow of J. J., Kniney, of Brownwood;

Frank M. Smith received only meager educational advantages in the country schools of Marion country. Indiana, and the Waro city schools, and at twenty years of age commenced his career as clerk in the private bank of his brother, Brooke, of the firm of Smith & Steffens, at Abilene. In 1882 he first came to Brownwood, with his parents, and for one year was in the employ of the Brownwood Bank of the same firm, Smith & Steffens. In 1884 he organized the Bank of Anson, in company with another brother, Temple D. Smith, and this firm also engaged in merchandising at Anson for twelve years. In 1896 Frank M. Smith removed to Timpson, but two years later went to Nacogdoches county, where he resided until 1908, and still owns 1,000 acres of farm lands in that county, although he has disposed of all of his other interests. From 1903 until 1908, he was engaged in the sawmill business there, but in the latter year, owing to ill health and the advice of his physicians to seek a higher altitude, he returned to Brownwood, which city has since been his home. In spite of the fact that Brownwood already had several lumber yards, owned by large corporations, Mr. Smith was courageous enough to open an establishment of this nature of his own, on an independent basis, and this, like all of his other undertakings, has proved markedly successful. He is today the largest shipper in lumber and accessories in Brown county, and carries double the amount of stock of any concern of this kind here. His connection with large affairs makes him one of the foremost business men of this section, and he is universally recognized among his associates as a man whose activities are contributing to the welfare and advancement of his adopted community. He has ever shown confidence in the future of the Southwest, and, believing that opportunities await men of ambition and energy here, has at all times been willing to give such information as is at his command in regard on December 27, 1892, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Mattie J. Brown, of Kentucky, daughter of Dr. M. D. Brown, who is now retired and a resident of Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Six children have been born to this union: Frank M., Jr., a student of the Brownwood High School, aged nineteen years; Fannie L., who is fifteen years of age; William T., aged thirteen years, and Brooke D., the baby, who is three years of age. Two children are dead. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are memtwo children are dead. All and acts shifts at the bers of the Christian church, in the faith of which all their children have been reared. In political matters he is a Democrat, but has never cared for public office, although on one occasion, while a resident of Jones county, he consented to become his party's candidate for county treasurer, and served acceptably in that office one term. During his long residence in various parts of Texas he has formed a wide acquaintance, in which he has numbered many warm personal friends.

ADDISON YANCEY GUNTER and WILLIAM WASHINGTON GUNTER, of Sivills Bend, Texas. The lives of these two men could not be written separately any more than could those of Damon and Pythias; for all their lives they lived together, and their mutual love and devotion was as great as any fabled heroes of antiquity. Their parents, Lemuel Gunter and Rebecca Williams Gunter, removed from Eastern North Carolina early in life and, having lost their all in gold mining in the North Caroline foot-hills, they settled near Jamestown in that state. there on April 3, 1826, William Washington Gunter was born. Addison Yancey Gunter was born at the same place on January 17, 1833. These men were only two of a large family, their brothers being Levin, Laertis, Shubert, Abner, Isaac, Harper, Jot, Charles, and Henry, all now deceased; Jesse, who is a retired farmer and lives near Victoria, Texas, and Martha, wife of John Childers, of Abilene, Texas.

Their father, finding life very difficult in North Carolina for a farmer with a large family, decided to try his fortune further west, and, following the easiest route, went sonth into Georgia, where he was induced to settle in Troupe county, near Franklin. Here his son, William Washington, entered the general merchandise store of Mr. Wilkinson in the capacity of errand boy. His industry, affability, and intellect in a few years won him a partnership in the store, when he at once took in his younger brother, Addison Yancey, as a clerk, and from that time on they were never separated for long, and their business interests were always interwoven. older brother having gone to Eastern Texas in 1854, the rest of the Gnnter family decided to join him in a year or two and enter the mercantile field in the new country. After an arduous journey to New Orleans and up the Red River to Jefferson, Texas, they located in Quitman, Wood county, Texas, where they opened a general merchandise store and quickly amassed a considerable fortune, though under great difficulties. All goods used in East and North Texas came up Red River to Jefferson by hoat. In 1859 the river did not rise and there was no navigation. W. W. Gunter, having left his family and business in his brother's care and gone to New Orleans for a supply of goods, found, after waiting for several months, that he could not ship his goods further than Alexandria. There he chartered a small boat, sold passenger fares enough to pay for her hire, loaded his goods aboard, though the insurance companies cancelled all his protection, and started for Shreveport. Cholera broke out among the deck hands and so many died that the passengers had to load wood and do many other menial tasks. Finally he reached his destination and was offered a profit of $20,000 on his goods by merchants in Shreveport who had not been able to get their goods up on account of low water. Refusing this, he journeyed by stage to Marshall, Texas, where he found the saddle horse he had left just six months before, and, after a couple of days on horseback, reached his home in Quitman.

When the war between the states broke out the six Gunter brothers then living shouldered arms for the Southern cause. William Washington Gunter and his brother Isaac joined Ector's Brigade, Tenth Texas Cavalry, Company B. They saw service at the siege of Corinth, the battle of Franklin, and the Kentneky campaign. W. W. Gunter reached the rank of captain, but the last year of the war he was invalided home and made conscript officer and tithe gatherer. His unflinching discharge of his duty in this capacity made him enemies among the renegades of the country and caused him much trouble during the reconstruction period.

Addison Vancey Genter, being in very poor health at the outbreak of the war, acted under the advice of his physician and went to South Texas, where he joined Brown's Battalion, doing coast guard duty on Galveston Island and at the mouth of the Brazos River. He soon reached the rank of first lieutenant. His last official act was the single handed arrest of a bunch of Quantrell's men who had been terrorizing Central Texas.

At the close of the war A. Y. and W. W. Gunter, as the firm had been named, found their comfortable fortue had vanished and their total available assets to be sixteen bales of cotton collected during the war and saved because of no shipping facilities. The proceeds from this cotton enabled them with their unimpaired credit to open a business in Jefferson, where they did an extensive jobbing business to Sherman, Dallas and other North Texas points. However, reconstruction troubles, dull times, and the health of the family decided them to go further West, and also decided A. Y. Gunter to give up the idea of practicing law, for which he had prepared himself directly after the war. Buving land in Sivills Bend, Cooke county, they tried the experiment of farming on a large scale, ultimately accumulating some 7,000 acres of land. The lure of the merchant, however, tempted them again and they opened a hig general store in Gainesville, the county seat. All went well till the panic of 1872, which wiped out all their assets except their farm and gave them years of labor and trouble to readjust and pay their debts. However, the firm of A. Y. and W. W. Gunter payed dollar for dollar and kept their name untarnished, as they did their cattle brand, the well-known Diamond Y. Their first agricultural success was raising oats for the government troops at Ft. Sill, to which place they sent long trains of ox wagons loaded with grain through the unsettled Indian Territory. Later they were particularly known as horse breeders and cotton planters.

Progressive in all things, they brought the first blooded horse to the county for breeding purposes, succeeding so well that the Diamond Y horse (which was a cross between a Kentucky thoroughbred and the native Spanish mustang) was known all over North Texas for his speed, endurance, and natural saddle gaits. They introduced and used the first riding plow, reaper, cultivator, and thresher that ever came to Cooke county. In conjunction with their father-in-law, they raised cotton and established one of the first gins in the county. Bringing the seed from Eastern Texas, they set out extensive orehards and gardens. By giving away wagon loads of fine peaches they proved to the skeptical that good fruit could be raised in a county that has since taken many borticultural prizes. They were also the first to extensively use barbed wire, thus fencing a big pasture. Believing above all things in education, they established a good school, two churches and a Masonic lodge in their community. In 1885 Addison Yancey Gunter was a member of the state legislature. A life-long Democrat, both he and his brother ever took an active intelligent interest in politics. Both A. Y. and W. W. Gunter were men of more than ordinary ability, progressiveness, and energy. Bringing to this new country the old ideal of hearty Southern hospitality, they kept open house for all comers. Their plantation was where the most eastern branch of the big cattle trails crossed Red River and was known as a place of good cheer for all men on the trail, while many were the busy men of affairs who made the long trip over rough roads to partake of their hos pitality and enjoy their rich humor, swift repartee, and deep insight into the affairs of the day. To them the bonds of family and friendship were stronger than bonds of steel. No member of the family or friend ever called on them in vain in time of need. Money, time, labor, and often personal safety were readily sacrificed for a brother in distress in these troubled times.

Addison Vancey Gunter married Miss Betty Ligon, daughter of Dr. Samuel Seth Ligon and Ealinor (Duncan Ligon, Dr. Ligon, a native of Richmond, Virginia, emigrated first to Clay county, Missouri. He had made the trip across the plains in 1849, acquiring a considerable fortune in the gold mines of California. He moved his family and slaves to Sivills Bend, Texas, in 1859, where he lived all during the war, regardless of Indian raids, having thrown a stockade around his house. He had four children, namely, Mary, James, and Rosa, all deceased, and Betty (Elizabeth), the widow of Addison Gunter. Two daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gunter—Lillian and Rosa, the wife of Isham Beasley, of Gainesvilla, Texas, and the mother of one son, Isham

Jackson Beasley.

William Washington Gunter was twice married. His first wife was Miss Rosamond Geer, a native of Georgia. W. W. Gunter and Rosa Ligon Gunter, married R. M. Field, of Gainesville, Texas, and has one child, Josephine. Addison Yancey Gunter died in August, 1894, greatly beloved by all who knew him. William Washington Gunter died in June, 1911, having witnessed in his long life most of the changes that go to make up our present-day civilization. The families of both A. Y. and W. W. Gunter have been identified with Cooke county and the upbuilding since 1806, having held continuous residence there since that date.

JOHN HUNTER THOMPSON. A seeming chance led John Hunter Thompson to abandon the profession for which he had fitted himself and in which he has already accomplished a considerable in the way of public achievement, and to identify himself with the life insurance business, which resulted not long after in his organization of the Guarantee Life Insurance Company, of which he is vice president and general manager. This company, organized as recently as 1906, is today admitted to be one of the greatest life insurance concerns in the Southwest, and is rapidly torging ahead to take its proper place among the foremost insurance institutions of the country.

John Hunter Thompson, organizer and founder of the company of which he is today vice president and general manager, was born at Nelsonville, Texas, on October 29, 1872, and is the son of Dr. Robert W, and Virginia (Minton) Thompson. The father was born in Dallas county, Alabama, in 1842, and with his parents came to Texas in 1848, settling in Austin county, where he was reared and established in life. He came to be a prominent physician of his city and county, and in addition to his professional attainments, gained a high place in state politics, serving at one time in the state legislature from Austin county. Dr. Thompson is still living in Houston, though retired from professional and public life. The mother of the subject was born in Austin county and comes of a well-known Texas family. Her grandparents were among the earliest settlers of the state, coming hence from Virginia in the days before Texas came to be a Republic.

John Hunter Thompson was educated in the grade schools of Belleville and in the high school of that place, receiving his training there under the direction of Professor Trenckmann, well knewn in educational circles of these parts at that time. He then attended the Agricultural and Mechanical College and his law course he took at the University of Texas. In 1899, Mr. Thompson was admitted to the bar of the state, and soon thereafter he was appointed county attorney of Austin county, to fill an unexpired term. After one year of service he was duly elected for the regular two-year term, and he thus served three successive years in the office, from 1899 to 1902. Following his retirement from that office, Mr. Thompson resumed the practice of law, but his health began to fail to such an extent that he deemed it unwise to confine himself to an office, the result being that he took up life insurance soliciting as a means of getting out into the open and ridding himself of the injurious effects of too close confinement to an office. It was this experience that opened his eyes to the latent possibilities offered by the insurance world, and he was not long in formulating plans for the furtherance of his new ideas. In 1906 he moved to Houston, and there he was instrumental in bringing about the organization of the Guarantee Life Insurance Company of Texas, becoming upon its organization vice president and general manager of the new concern, and afterwards acquiring a controlling interest in the stock of the company. In that year the business was incorporated with a capital and surplus of $125,000. Today (1913) it has assets of more than $1,000,000, with over $20,000,000 of insurance in force, a most remarkable record for a company so young as this one. The concern is doing a constantly increasing business in the states of Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama, and is ever widening the scope of its operations,

Mr. Thompson is prominent in social and fraternal circles, having membership in the Houston Club, the Houston Country Club, and the Thalian Club, of Houston, while he is a member of the Masonic order of long standing, his affiliations in that order being with Belleville Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Belleville Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Brenham Commandery, Knights Templar, and El Mina Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On December 20, 1899, Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Tummie Faires, daughter of R. O. Faires, of Fredonia, Texas. Mr. Faires was a lieutenant in the Confederate army under Captain Killough, whose daughter, Miss Eliza Killough, he married. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson-Fairy, John Hunter, Jr., and Robert Faires. The family residence is located at 3804 Main street.

Walter C. Moore, president of the Hardy Oil Company, has an office at Houston, Texas, but maintains his residence at San Antonio. Mr. Moore's activities have touched various lines of endeavor, and many important Texas enterprises have received his support. To him belongs the distinction of fathering the rice industry in this state. A detailed account of his identity with this one industry alone would fill a volume. As in a work of this character only generalities can be dealt in, the biographical record of Mr. Moore can be presented only in succinct form.

Walter C. Moore was born in Harris county, Texas, October 8, 1857, son of Pleasant and Kezia A. (O'Hara) Moore.

Pleasant Moore was born in Virginia, a representative of a family whose residence in the Old Dominion dates well back into the seventeenth century. The paternal great-grandfather of Walter C. served under General Washington in the Braddock campaign of the French and Indian war. In 1849, Pleasant Moore came to Texas and settled in Harris county, on the Buffalo Bayou, where he was a farmer and stock man and where he was also for a time engaged in contracting and building. During the war between the states he served in the Confederate army, with the commissary department, and was materially useful to the cause by operating grist mills and by providing fuel and other necessaries for the support of the armies in the field. He died in 1902,

Kezia A. (O'Hara) Moore was born in Ohio. Her grandfather, Francis O'Hara, was a Revolutionary soldier under General Washington and was of that number who spent the winter at Valley Forge. She was also related to Theodore O'Hara, the poet, and to Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Maryland, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. It was in 1850 that she came to Texas, and her marriage to Pleasant Moore took place on the plantation of Jonathan T. D. Walters, south of Richmond, on the Brazos River, in Fort Bend county.

Walter C. Moore attended school in Harris county until he was fourteen years of age, after which his education was carried forward in the broad and practical school of experience. At fourteen he entered the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company, at first as a messenger boy, afterwards as a delivery clerk, and still later as cashier, and he remained in their service for a period of five years. Then he accepted a position offered by the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company. From 1878 to 1881 he was operator and station agent at Dayton, Texas, and this service was followed by a year in the same capacity at Liberty, Texas, and three months as train dispatcher at San Antonio for the G. H. & S. A. R. R., and a year for the same company at Spofford Junction, Texas. In 1883 he entered the employ of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railroad Company and became agent and operator at Valley Mills,

Texas, where he remained until I890. From 1890 to 1892 he was relief agent for the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company, and while serving in this capacity his duties frequently called him to Southwestern Louisiana and gave him opportunities of observing and comparing industrial and agricultural conditions in different sections of the Southwest. At that time rice culture was in its infancy in Southwestern Louisiana, and had not extended beyond the Sabine River. Mr. Moore realized that the lands of Southeast and Southern Texas were as well adapted for this crop as those in the adjoining state, and he was the first to make this fact the basis of practical business enterprise. Up to this time the prairies of Southeast Texas had been almost entirely unprofitable, and were considered worthless from a standpoint of productive enterprise. Mr. Moore not only saw the opportunity for introducing the cultivation of rice in Texas, but also he fathered the industry in this state. His first move in this direction was his contribution of articles on the subject to the newspapers of Houston and Galveston, and to the Farm and Ranch and other agricultural papers, urging the introduction of rice growing. It was some years, however, before he was successful in interesting capital in the undertaking. In the meantime, in 1892, he left the railroad service and engaged in the real estate business in Houston, where he was better able to promote the plans which he had formed for the development of the rice fields. A few small rice farms were started in Southeast Texas, but nothing on an important scale was attempted. In 1895 and 1896, under the direction of Col. C. C. Gibbs, land commissioner of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, he made two trips through the North and West in the interest of the new industry. He distributed literature on rice culture and supplied the emigrant agencies throughout the Middle and Western states with several hundred bundles of rice grown in Louisiana and Texas. The efforts he put forth to induce Houston and Galveston capital to purchase large areas of cheap land, irrigate it and place it under rice cultivation, were unsuccessful, but he did succeed to a certain extent in interesting Northern capital. The Triuity Rice, Land and Irrigation Company was organized and incorporated, with a capital stock of $250,000, and the company purchased 15,000 acres of land for development. Mr. Moore was vice president of this organization. Also he was vice president of the Hill-Brown Irrigation Company, which was organized soon afterwards, with a capital stock of $45,000 and which purchased 6,000 acres. A later organization was the Moore-Cortes Canal Company, whose capital of $250,000 was subscribed largely in Houston. This company, of which Mr. Moore was president, bought 17,000 acres of land on the Colorado River. The Texas Rice Development Company was formed with a capital of $250,000 to purchase 22,000 acres in Metagorda county, and in this company also Mr. Moore was a prime factor, being its vice president.

And he assisted in locating the Raywood canal, in Liberty county. Individually and in connection with the above named organizations, he has assisted in the disposal of over half a million acres of land, a large part of which has since been brought into a high state of cultivation. The first pamphlet on rice cultivation ever issued in Southern Texas was prepared by Mr. Moore, in 1893, and his subsequent writings on the subject have been more extensive than those of any other one person, and have found a place in a wide range of publications. In 1903, Mr. Moore founded the town of Palacios, in Metagorda county, on the Texas Rice Development Company's property. The Moore Cortes Caual Company entered into a contest with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to extend its line from Van Vleck to Markham, and in order to get its further extension to Palacios, Mr. Moore gave his personal note for $24,000 to secure said extension. Palacios at this writing has about 2,500 population and the adjacent country is well settled and prosperous. In recent years Mr. Moore disposed of practically all of his interests in the rice industry, and since 1905 has been concerned principally with the development of the oil industry. He is president of the Hardy Oil Company of Houston, and has holdings in other fields and companies. He is also vice president of "Clifton by the Sea" Townsite Company of Houston, and president of the Terry Oil Company, a prospecting and developing organization.

Fraternally, Mr. Moore is identified with various organizations, including the San Antonio Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Ruthven Commandery No. 2, K. T.; El Mina Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He belongs to Houston Lodge No. 151, B. P. O. E., and to the Houston County Club, the Travis Club of San Antonio, and the San Antonio Country Club.

Mr. Moore was married in 1886, and he and his wife are the parents of four children-Perryman S., Annie Bess, Lydia B., and Christie E. Mrs. Moore, formerly Miss Emma Perryman, is a daughter of Col. W. W. Perryman, an ex-Confederate officer, now a resident of Liberty, Texas, and a relative of Colonel Travis and Mr. Bowie and Mr. Bonham of Alamo fame. residence in San Antonio is 217 East Elmira street.

Capt. John H. McCauley. For many years the late Capt. John H. McCauley, who died July 5, 1909, was a business man and citizen of distinction in Wichita Falls and vicinity. He had earned his title by gallant service in the Confederate army and from the close of the war until his death was closely attentive to business and the varied responsibilities of a long and successful career. He left a family of worthy sons and daughters to perpetuate his memory and continue the influence of his character, and Mrs. McCauley is now one of the highly esteemed residents of Wichita Falls.

The late Capt. John H. McCauley was born in North Carolina in March, 1837, and was therefore more than three-score and ten years of age at the time of his death. When he was a child the family moved to Texas, locating at Henderson, in Rusk county, where his parents were among the very early settlers, his father being a well-to-do farmer. Captain McCauley grew up in that locality, had only an ordinary education such as was afforded to Texas boys of that time, and had reached manhood and was already a worker and self-supporting citizen when the war between the states broke out. He made a record of efficient service in the Confederate army and won the rank of captain in the Tenth Texas Cavalry, a dismounted cavalry regiment. After the war he applied himself to different lines of business and for many years was regarded as an expert mineralogist. However, the lumber business was his principal vocation for many years, and it was in that line that he won his greatest success. Captain McCauley located at Wichita Falls during the early '80s, when that now flourishing city was a mere village. There he engaged in the lumber business with his brother-in-law, Captain McDonald, who is now United States Marshal and a resident of Dallas.

Captain McCauley married M. T. McDonald, a daughter of Capt. E. R. and Eunice (Durham) McDonald. Their marriage was celebrated at Henderson, in Rush county, on December 8, 1870. Mrs. McCauley is of an old and prominent Texas family, and on both sides is descended from distinguished Southern lineage. father was a captain in the Confederate army and was killed in the battle at Corinth, Mississippi. He was born in Winston county, Mississippi, where the McDonalds were prominent, and Mrs. McCauley's mother was a nathe of Kemp county, Mississippi, and died November 16, 1885, at Wiehita Falls. To Mr. and Mrs. McCauley were born the following children: Willie, born February 9, 1873, and died in 1911; Eula May, born August 4, 1874, and is the wife of A. R. Duke, of Wichita Falls; John Henry, born September 9, 1878, and died in April, 1912; Dot, born December 13, 1881, and is the wife of Frank Collier, a well-known clothing merchant of Wichita Frank Collier, a well-known clothing merchant of Medica Falls; Don, born July 30, 1887, in the drug business at Mineral Wells, was married September 30, 1913, to Miss Idell Brannon, of Sweetwater, Texas. Mrs. Mc-Cauley resides in the beautiful home in the best residential section of Wichita Falls, at 904 Bluff street, and her surroundings are those of a generous prosperity, supplied by the successful business endeavor of her late husband. She is also the owner of considerable town property. The late Captain McCauley was affiliated with the Masonic Order and, while always ready to serve his community, and a man of influence among his fellows, he never sought notoriety, filled no public office and was entirely content with the substantial achievement of the business man, the home-maker and the public spirited citizen.

BEN CAMPBELL. The present mayor of the city of Houston is a lawyer, not a politician, and for thirty years has been identified with his profession in many distinctive and successful capacities. He is senior member of the well known firm of Campbell, Soufield, Sewall & Myer, whose offices are in the First National Bank Building at Houston.

Ben Campbell was born in Alabama in 1858 and is a descendant of the Scotch Campbells. His parents were Dr. Farquhar and Gabriela (Singleton) Campbell. The Campbells were first settled in North Carolina, whence they removed to Alabama, and in 1859 the parents came to Texas, settling at old Waverly, in Walker county, where the father continued practicing his profession of medicine until his death.

Ben Campbell attained a country school education at the beginning and spent his early days at home on the farm, following the occupation of country life until he was twenty-two years of age. He then began reading law in the office of Abercrombie & Randolph at Huntsville, Texas. In 1882 he was admitted to the bar. From that time until 1893 he was engaged in the practice of law at Huntsville, where he enjoyed a large clientage. His first public distinction came in 1884, when he was elected county attorney of Walker county, serving one term of two years. In 1886 he was elected district at torney of the old Twelfth Judicial District, which comprised the counties of Walker, Grimes, Madison, Leon and Trinity. The duties of this office held him for two terms from 1886 to 1890. At the conclusion of the district attorneyship he entered a partnership with Thomas H. Ball under the firm name of Campbell & Ball, and that firm remained among the list of lawyers at Huntsville until 1893.

On moving to Houston in 1893, Mr. Campbell became associated with Joseph C. Hutcheson and W. G. Sears, thus composing the firm of Hutcheson, Campbell & Sears. Subsequently Mr. Sears retired, and Sterling Myer took his place. Several years later Mr. Myer also withdrew, and at that time Joseph C. Hutcheson, Jr., entered the firm, which was known as Hutcheson, Camp bell & Hutcheson. This title remained unbroken until January 1, 1909, at which time Mr. Campbell withdrew and formed a new alliance with Cleveland, Sewall & Sewell Myer under the firm name of Campbell, Sewall & Myer. In 1913 some changes were made in this firm, when Leon Soufield was taken in as partner. This was after Mr. Campbell had received the nomination for mayor, and at which time the title was changed to Campbell, Sonfield, Sewall & Myer,

As a lawyer and as a man, Mr. Campbell has always heen one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Houston. A representative body of the local citizenship chose him as the most appropriate man for the office of mayor, and when his name was presented to the general voters at the primary election in March, 1913, he received the nomination for mayor by a large majority of votes. In April, 1913, he was elected mayor of Houston and took office April 21, 1913.

Mr. Campbell is affiliated with Forest Lodge No. 19, A. F. & A. M., at Huntsville; Huntsville Chapter, R. A. M.; Trinity Commandery, Knights Templar, and El Minar Temple of the Mystic Shrine, at Galveston. He has no connection with the social clubs, and outside of his profession and the performance of his duties as a public official he devotes his time and leisure to his home. Mr. Campbell was married at Huntsville in 1882 to Miss Ella Smither, daughter of W. B. Bowles Smither, her father having been prominent in the political affairs of that county. Grandfather Robert Smither was one of the wealthiest and most influential men in Walker county during his generation. Mr. Campbell and wife are the parents of six children, named Ben S., Farquhar, Ella Smither, Robert Bowles, Wilbourn, and Sue Alice. The family reside at 1012 Crawford street, in Houston.

JESSE M. HILL, M. D. In the ranks of the medical profession of west Texas are to be found some of the most skilled and learned men of the calling in the state -men who have devoted themselves, their time, energy, and lives to the preservation of public health and the al-leviation of the ills of mankind. The physician of today faces entirely different conditions from those which confronted the medical practitioner of several decades ago, both as to training and practice, and when the modern doctor has finished the exceptionally rigid course of study he is often better fitted for his profession than the oldtime physician was after many years of practice. One of this modern class of physicians and in every respect the leader of his profession in Crowell, is Dr. Jesse M. Hill, whose home and professional activities have been at Crowell since 1902, and whose skill has won him the best practice in his community.

Dr. Hill was born in Calhoun, Georgia, April 13, 1877, and was the only child of Horace and Nancy Adelia (Fite) Hill, both of whom were natives of Georgia. About 1885 the family moved to Texas, where the father was a farmer, but died soon afterwards, and is buried in Dallas county. He was a devout Christian and a worker in the Baptist church. The mother, who still lives in Crowell, is also active in the work of the Baptist denomination. After the death of her first husband she denomination. After the death of her hist husband she married Mr. George Crowell, founder of the town of Crowell, who died in 1910. In the Crowell family are four sons and one daughter as follows: Marion Fite, Grover, Robert Clifton, Benjamin and Mabel. Mr. Crowell was born in Georgia, and was a pioneer of west Texas, following stock farming in Ford county, and becoming the founder of the town which bears his name.

Dr. Hill was seven or eight years of age when his parents moved to Texas, and the education in the public schools begun in Georgia was continued in Texas, until he was ready to take up the practical affairs of life on his own account. He entered the University at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1900; attended the University of Tennessee one year, and then graduated from the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1902, where he was a student for one year. Establishing himself in practice in Cole at the same year, he rapidly gained the confidence of the people, and for several years has had his choice of the practice in this locality.

In Crowell in 1904 Dr. Hill married Edna Mae Thacker, a daughter of M. F. Thacker of Foard county. They are the parents of two daughters, Frances Adelia and Helen. J. FRANK COLES. Prominent among the real estate firms in El Paso is that of A. P. Coles & Brothers, dealers in real estate, of which J. Frank Coles of this review is one of the members. It is only in recent years that Mr. Coles formed this business association with his brothers, but since that time the firm has made splendid progress with its work in this community, and is properly ranked among the more important establishments of its kind in the county. It was in 1892 that Mr. Coles first came to Texas, and since that time he has been chiefly identified with the fortunes of El Paso. He has been connected with numerous lines of enterprise in this section of the country. He was born in Lebanon, Tennes see, August 12, 1870, and is a son of J. F. Coles, Sr., of Lebanon, Tenn.

The early education of Mr. Coles was attained in the public schools of Lebanon, and he later took up a preparatory course at the university in that city. left school he for a time identified himself with farming activities, and so continued until he left his home in 1892 and came to El Paso. In 1896 Mr. Coles formed a partnership with his two brothers, A. P. and O. C. Coles, and the present business which they are conducting in El Paso is the result of that combination. They have come to be recognized among the most prominent business men in their line of enterprise and have given every proof of exceptional business ability. They are successful and prosperous and exercise good business judgment in all their business dealings. Mr. Coles him self is especially known as a leader in public enterprise in the city. Not only is he always found on the right side on subjects pertaining to the progress and development, but he is usually found as a promoter instead of a follower. He is eminently a leader, and is regarded as one of the most practical citizens of the city.

The firm of A. P. Coles & Brothers has had a prominent place in the best development of the various enterprises of El Paso and vicinity and as such the brothers are particularly deserving of some mention in a work of this character. Their work in the business annals of El Paso is one of the cleanest and most pro-gressive character and each member of the firm has added his full quota to the development and progress of the community.

Mr. Coles is a Democrat and takes considerable interest in affairs of that nature in and about the county. He at one time served as city treasurer and gave to the city a most admirable administration in that capacity. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and was one of the directors of that association during 1912. He is also a member of the Country Club, and served as vice president and director of the Coltec Club. Fraternally he has membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is now holding an office in that order. His principal recreation he finds in hunting and fishing, and despite the heavy demands upon his time which his business interests makes, he finds occasion at intervals to indulge himself in the pleasure of hunting and fishing.

Mr. Coles is one of the most enthusiastic converts to the faith in Texas and he believes it to be the coming state of the nation. He holds himself ready at all times to answer any inquiries that may be presented to him with regard to opportunities which the state presents.

In October, 1907, Mr. Coles was united in marriage with Miss Adele Fewel, who is a daughter of Major and Mrs. W. J. Fewel of EI Paso. To them have been born two children, a son and a daughter, William Fewel Coles and Katherine Hunt Coles. The family are members of the Methodist church and active in the work of the varrious departments of that body.

ORPHUS YORK, M. D. In the career of Dr. Orphus York, of Punhandle, Texas, is presented an excellent example of the success which may be attained through the exercise of determination and ambitious effort. Leaving home in his youth with no financial support, he so well directed his energies and took advantage of his opportunities that he was able not only to prepare himself for a career of useful endeavor in one of the higher callings, but to contribute materially to the support of his parents. The struggles and self-sacrifices attending such a course of action are obvious, but they have resulted in the gaining of a position among the substantial men of his calling as well as in bringing that sense of appreciation which may only be realized by those who have won their own way, unassisted, to success. Dr. York was born March 15, 1875, at Harrison, Boone county Arkanesa and is a son of J. A. and Samantha Caroline

(Watkins) York.

J. A. York was born in Polk county, Tennessee, and was there reared on a farm. He was but a lad of fourteen years when the struggle between the North and the South began, but early succeeded in enlisting in the Confederate service, becoming a private in Company E, First Regiment, Tennessee Volunteers. His first important trial under fire came at Manassas Junction, and during the four years that followed he was a participant in some of the most sanguinary engagements of the war. He was in the commands of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, Gen. John H. Morgan and Gen. Albert S. Johnston, at different times, all of these great commanders being killed in battle, but was himself never wounded, although the youthful soldier was invariably found in the thickest of the fight. He was in the trenches at Vicksburg for forty-nine days during the siege, and was present at the surrender. After Appomattox Court House, he was mustered out of the service, with an excellent record for bravery and faithful discharge of duty. In 1869 Mr. York removed to Arkansas and took up his residence on a farm near Harrison, in Boone county. There he continued to earry on operations until his death in 1910, when he was sixtyseven years of age. He was married in Arkansas to Samantha Caroline Watkins, who was born in Alaculsy, Murray county, Georgia, and was brought to Arkansas by her parents in 1859, locating in Boone county, where she was educated, reared and married. She is still living at Harrison, being now sixty-three years of age. She has been the mother of eight children: Ottis, who is a practicing physician of Harrison, Arkansas; Orphus, of this review; Dr. Onns, who is engaged in the practice of medicine in Calgary, Canada; Mrs. Ora Sands and Mrs. Ova Garvin, both residents of Harrison, Arkansas; and three children who are deceased.

The early education of Orphus York was secured in the public schools of Boone county, Arkanss, and during the summer months he devoted himself to assisting his father on the home farm. He early decided to embark upon a career of his own, although when he left the parental roof his cash capital consisted of twenty-five cents. He was possessed of sturdier resources, however, to fall back upon than those represented by mere monetary advantages, and, making the most of his opportunities, was able to attend the State University of Arkansas, from the literary department of which he was graduated in the literary department of which he was graduated in the literary department of which he was graduated in the literary separated by the content of Physicians and Surgeons, and in 1904 graduated at the head of a class of 150 pupils. During this time, in addition to paying for his own tuition, he had sent $1,100 home for the support of his parents. Dr. York commenced practice at Alco, Arkansas, after his first year in the medical college, and continued there during the ten years that followed. In 1908 he came direct to Panhandle, Texas, where he became the first physician in the growing town and where he has continued to remain with constantly increasing success. His practice extends far into the surrounding country and few physicians can boast of a more representative clientele. He has served as county physician of Carson and as local surgeon for the Santa Fe Railroad. A close and careful student, he keeps himself fully conversant with the developments and discoveries of his profession, and has taken a keen and active interest in the work of the various organizations, being a member of the Potter County, Southern and Texas State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. His fraternal connections are wide and varied, and include the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Tribe of Ben Hur, the Pretorians, the American Yeomen, the Royal Neighbors and the Columbians. With his family, he attends the Presbyterian church.

on August 31, 1902, Doctor York was married at Aleo, Arkansas, to Miss Bertha Richardson, daughter of F. M. and Cynthia Richardson, the former of whom is still living at Aleo in the same house in which he was born sixty years ago. The mother is deceased. Doctor and Mrs. six years ago. The mother is deceased. Doctor and Mrs. born in May, 1905, at Aleo, Arkansas, now attending the born in May, 1905, at Aleo, Arkansas, now attending the born in February, 1907, at Aleo, who, although but six years of ago, is also a student in the Third Grade; Mishred Ophelia, born April 15, 1909, at Panhandle; and Justin Orphus, born July 28, 1911, at Panhandle. Doctor York is a great lover of home, and is the owner of a handsome modern residence in his adopted place.

ROBERT W. BAIRD. Losing his father when a child of six years, early forced to assist in contributing to the support of his widowed mother, steadily and energetically working his way upward, and today the owner of 4825 actes of Texas land and the incumbent of the office of sheriff of Deaf Smith country-such, in brief, has been the career of Robert W. Baird, one of the best known men in Western Texas. It is not within the province of this review to give in detail the numerous interesting experiences of Mr. Baird's long and varied career, but to briefly sketch the steps by which he has risen from poor and obscure beybood to a place or prominence and influence in a section where strong men are not lacking.

Robert W. tosird is a Texan by nativity and training. Born in Grayson county, betober 12, 1855, he is a son of Joseph A. and Mathida J. (Reeves) Baird, the fifth in order of birth of their seven children. His father, anative of Tennessee, came to Texas in an early day, and at the outbreak of the struggle between the North and the South enlisted in a Texas regiment under the command of Capt. Randolph, and served gallantly throughout the four years of the war. His army experiences no doubt hastened his death, which occurred in 1871, when he was forty-nine years of age. Joseph A. Baird married Mathida J. Reeves, a native of Arkansas, who removed to Texas as a child with her parents, and her death occurred in 1904, while on a visit to her son. Robert W., and was buried in Grayson county in the cemetery donated by Col. W. S. Reeves, one of the early settles, the land liaving formerly been a part of the old Reeves homestead.

Robert W. Baird was but six years of age when his father died, and the greater part of his early education was secured in the school of hard work, although he subsequently attended the public schools of Grayson county, Prof. Carlyle's private school and the high school at Whitesboro, thus acquiring a liberal training. For some time he was engaged in working on ranches in various sections, and in 1886 entered the employ of Jot Gunter, owner of the T Anchor ranch, and while thus engaged drove cattle across the plains to Kansas, the nearest shipping point. At that time there was not a settler in Randall county; no house had been erected between Canyon and New Mexico, and the first settler between this point and New Mexico was J. C. Cox. Ambitious and enterprising, Mr. Baird invested his earnings in cattle, and was soon able to embark upon operations of his own. That these ventures in cattle raising and ranching have proved successful may be seen from the fact that today he is the owner of 1680 acres of pasture land, and also leases over 3000 acres, located eight miles southeast of Hereford, in Castro county, on which great herds of cattle are annually prepared for the market. A Demoerat in his political views, in 1910 Mr. Baird was the successful candidate for the office of sheriff in Deaf Smith county, and his success in suppressing lawlessness in this section during his first term resulted in his reelection in November, 1912. Both officially and unof-ficially, he is one of the best known men in Western Texas, where he is respected by the law-abiding element and greatly feared by the lawless. He has been fearless in the discharge of his duties, though always just, and Deaf Smith county has had no official who has given the citizens of the county more reason for self-congratulation. Fraternally, he is connected with the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World, in both of which orders he has passed through all the chairs.

In January, 1889, Mr. Baird was married in Grayson county, Texas, to Miss Dovie J. Bynum, a native of Texas, and a daughter of W. W. Bynum, an old pioneer from Arkansas, and a Confederate veteran who fought throughout the Civil war. Mr. Bynum died in 1910, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Baird, and was buried at Hereford. Mr. and Mrs. Baird have had two sons: Fred W., born in 1891, in Grayson county, a graduate of Hereford High school and now attending a business college at Fort Worth; and Horace C., born in Grayson county in 1892, who has charge of the operations on his father's ranch.

James I. Hewitz. Holding well earned precedence as one of the leading contractors and builders of Western Texas, Mr. Hewitt is numbered among the honored and valued business men of the city of El Paso, judicial center of the county of the same name, and has contributed in large measure to the development and upbuilding of this fine city on the border of the Republic of Mexico. He has been the artifier of his own fortunes, even as he has of innumerable buildings of the most attractive and substantial order, and he is one of the sterling citizens given to the Lone Star commonwealth by the fine old Buckey state. He is most liberal and public-spirited in his civic attitude and is at the present time a member of the board of aldermen of his home city, where his circle of friends is coincident with that of his acquaintances.

Mr. Hewitt was born at Camden, Preble county, Ohio, on the 15th of October, 1849, and is a son of Thomas B. and Eusebia Ann (Huddleston) Hewitt, the former a native of Ohio and a representative of one of the sterling pioneer families of that state, and the latter a native of Virginia, in which historic old commonwealth the Huddleston family was founded in the colonial era. Thomas Brown Hewitt was reared and educated in Ohio and was long and successfully engaged in business as a contractor and builder at Camden, an attractive little village of Preble county, where he died when about seventy-two years of age. He was twice married. His first wife, the mother of our subject, died in 1869 and his second wife is still living. The lineage of the Hewitt family is traced back to stanch Irish origin, and that of the Huddlestons to English stock of the stanchest order. He whose name initiates this review is the eldest in a family of eight children, and only one other of the number is now living-Alice, who is the wife of William Overholz, of Oxford, Ohio.

James Irvin Hewitt made the most of the educational advantages afforded to him in the public schools of his native state, and at the age of sixteen years he became associated with his father in the contracting and building business, in connection with which he was employed during the summer months and during the intervening winter terms became a skilled artisan at the trade of carpenter and joiner, and at the age of twenty years he severed the gracious home ties and set forth in the world as a full-fledged journeyman at his trade. After considerable travel through the Middle West, he settled in the village of Morning Snn, Louisa county, Iowa, and there, on the 22d of January, 1873, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Katherine V. Huffman, who was born in Ohio and who had accompanied her parents on their removal to Iowa. After his marriage the ambitious young artisan continued his earnest endeavors as a contractor and builder in that section of the Hawkeye state until September, 1883, when he decided to make a change of location, as the section of Iowa in which he was living failed to make the substantial progress which he had anticipated. Under these conditions he returned to Ohio and established his home at Oxford, Butler county, where he continued operations along the line of his chosen vocation for the ensuing fifteen years, at the expiration of which, in May, 1898, he decided to leave the town in which he had built up a successful business and established a high reputation, as he had erected some of the finest buildings in Oxford and its vicinity and was known as a man of inflexible integrity and as one ever faithful to the terms of every contract into which he entered. He accordingly disposed of his property and business at Oxford and came to Texas in 1898, May 2. After due investigation and consideration he established a home in El Paso, where his family joined him shortly afterwards, and here he turned his attention, with characteristic vigor and ability, to general contracting and building, in which his pronounced success soon justified his choice of location, with the result that he has never regretted the action which made him a permanent resident of the Lone Star state. He has been a prominent and resourceful factor in the development and upbuilding of his home city, where many fine and essentially modern buildings stand as enduring monuments to his technical skill and his scrupulous care in all details of work in which his interposition has been gained. Among the many fine buildings erected by him in El Paso is Protestant Episcopal church and the manse, or parsonage, of the Presbyterian church. He also erected the Henry Pfaff residence, one of the finest in the city, and also that of Sen. William W. Turner. He is also the contractor upon whom devolved the erection of the Masonic Temple in El Paso, this being a modern, fireproof building of seven stories. His work in connection with every contract assumed has been of the most creditable order and the result has been that he has become one of the leading contractors and builders of this part of the state, with an unassailable reputation for ability and for uprightness and fairness in all dealings.

In politics Mr. Hewitt may be designated as somewhat conservative and independent, with affiliation with the Democratic party. In the spring of 1907 he was accorded a definite evidence of popular confidence and esteem in his election as representative of the El Paso board of aldermen, and he has given service of the most loyal and effective order, as it is uniformly conceded that during the municipal administration in which he bas been a valued factor El Paso has had its period of most substantial progress and most determinate advancement in the line of permanent municipal improvements and the expansion of general public utilities. Mr. Hewitt has maintained affiliation with the timehonored Masonic fraternity since 1872, in Iowa, and is identified with the various York Rite hodies in his home city, besides which he has attained to the thirtysecond degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and holds membership in the adjunct organization, the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, as well as in the Knights of Pythias. He and his family hold membership in the Presbyterian church, and he is known as a citizen of high civic ideals and of most progressive ideas. He is the owner of his attractive residence property and also other valuable realty in El Paso, and he is known and honored as one of the representative citizens of this thriving border city. Concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt brief record is entered in the concluding paragraph of this review. Margaret Ann is the wife of Harlan D. Vinnedge, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Colamah F. died at Oxford, Ohio, at the age of twenty years; Fred Austin is associated with his father in the contracting and building business, under the firm name of Hewitt & Son; Floyd C. is at home; Lucia A. is the wife of George C. Meyser, of El Paso, and James Arthur remains at the parental home. One child died in Iowa at the age of four years,

JUDGE WILLIAM B. POWELL. For a period of twentyfive years Judge Powell has been one of the leading members of the Jasper county bar. Eight years of this time were spent in service on the district beach, and during that service he made a record as a firm, upright, just and featless judge. Both as a lawyer and on the bench he has demonstrated his ability as a clear thinker, a sound reasoner, and also possesses a qualification so essential to a good judge, the judicial temperament. Judge Powell now does a large consulting practice at the county seat of Jasper county. William B. Powell, who represents one of the pioneer families of East Texas, was born in 1855 at Jasper, four miles east of the county seat. His parents were Richard Ely and Mary Ann (Gay) Powell. His father, a native of Virginia, came to Tennessee, in which state he was married, and then came on to Texas in 1839, first locating in San Augustine county. He removed with his family to Jasper county in 1841, establishing his home four miles east of Jasper. Both in San Augustine and Jasper counties he was a pioneer and began his activities and resistence in this state durance of the state of the stat

Judge Powell grew up on a farm and in the wholesome atmosphere of country life. His entrance into the field of the law came only after a number of years of hard preparation and much time spent in earning his own livelihood and in securing the means for his higher studies. After completing the course of the common schools, he won a first grade certificate as a teacher, and spent several years in that interesting and valuable vocation. His studies in the law were conducted in the law department of the University of Texas, where he was graduated LL. B. in the class of 1888. Returning to his native county, he opened an office at Jasper, to which town he had moved in 1887. Since then his home has been continuously at the county seat, and he has not only enjoyed a large, generous practice, but has been frequently honored by positions of trust and responsi-bility. He was elected and served as district attorney during 1901-02. In 1904 he was elected judge of the First Judicial District, and by re-election in 1908 served continuously for eight years, his term concluding in 1912. The First Judicial District comprises six counties-Jasper, Newton, Orange, Tyler, Sabine, and San Augustine. On leaving the hench, Judge Powell resumed private practice as a member of the firm of Powell & Lee, in Jasper. For several years past Judge Powell has had an affliction of the eye which seriously affects his sight, and for this reason his work as a lawyer is largely of an advisory and consulting nature. He owns a couple of good farms in Jasper county, and for many years has been practically interested in agriculture. Judge Powell has membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and fraternally is affiliated with the Masonic Order.

He has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Rosa Althea Henderson, a native of Jasper county and of an old family in this locality. She was the mother of six children, mentioned as follows: Lloyd B., Mrs. Ruby R. Stone, Miss Bertha Powell. Paul Powell, Mrs. Mary Roark, and Miss Rosie Powell. Por his second wife Judge Powell married Miss Mary A. Ward, who was reared in Jasper county, though her people came from Mississiph. Of this second marriage there are four children—Ward B., Myrtle, William Richard, and Marjorie Powell.

Frank Rozeman King, Ph. G., M. D. Success in what are properly termed the learned professions is the legitimate result of merit and painstaking endeavor. In commercial life one may come into possession of a lucrative business through inheritance or gift, but professional advancement is gained only by critical study and consecutive research long continued. Proper intellectual discipline, thorough professional knowledge and the possession and utilization of the qualities and attributes essential to success made Dr. Frank Bozeman King, of Houston, Texas, eminent in his chosen calling and for many years he has stood among the scholarly and enterprising physicians and surgeons in a community long distinguished for the high order of its medical talent. Dr.

Jank Bozenan King, M.J., M.S.

King's name will be held in lasting honor as one of the ablest surgeons that ever gave loyal service in behalf of suffering humanity in the city of his residence, for his life has been characterized not only by the most adroit professional ability, but also by the most profound human sympathy which overleaps mere sentiment to become an actuating motive, for when a youth he realized that there is no honor not founded on genuine worth, there is a vital purpose in life and that the best and highest accomplishment must come from a well trained mind and altruistic heart. Those who know him well are unstinted in their praise of his genial disposition and his superior ability. Older men in the profession here rely on his judgment and younger ones frequently seek his counsel, all admitting his eminence. The large success which is crowning this life work, coupled with his ripe experience and kind heart, enables him to bring comfort, hope and confidence to the sick room and he brings sunshine into many a home. He is a plain, unassuming gentleman and uniformly courteous.

Dr. King was born in Milam county, Texas, January 21, 1864. He is a son of Kenneth A. and Bettie (Letcher) King. The father was a native of Tennessee, where he spent his earlier years and received such educational training as the times afforded, and from that state he removed to Texas in 1858, locating in Milam county on a farm on which he spent the rest of his life, successfully engaged in general farming and stock raising. His death was born in Alabama. Her death occurred on May 6, 1962.

Dr. Nathan Bozeman, the famous surgeon of Montgomery, Alabama, now deceased, was Dr. King's great uncle. He founded, in conjunction with Dr. J. Marion Sims, the Bellevue Women's Hospital in New York City.

Dr. King was educated in the common schools of Milam county, and when a boy he assisted his father with the general work on the home farm and early in life determined upon a medical career. With this end in view he entered the Louisville School of Pharmacy, at Louisville, Kentucky, from which institution he was graduated in 1884. He also prosecuted his studies at the Kentucky School of Medicine, and the Louisville School of Medicine, and was graduated from the same with the class of 1885, having made an excellent record in both schools.

Thus well equipped for his chosen life work he returned to Milam county, Texas, and began practicing at the town of Davilla, but after a short time moved to Rockdale, then to Burnet, Eurnet county, where he was surgeon to Gus Wilke's camp of convicts, when they quarried the granite of which the state capitol at Austin was built. Later Dr. King established himself at Lampasas, Lampasas county. In 1888, while residing at Burnet, he was appointed by Judge Blackburn, of Burnet, president of the Board of Medical Examiners and Pharmaceutical Examiners of the twenty-seventh judicial district, which position he held from 1888 to 1894 in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned.

In 1895 Dr. King moved to Houston, where he soon took his position in the front rank of his professional brethren and he has continued in the practice here to the present time with great success, especially as a surgeon, until toolay he enjoys a very large, rapidly growing and lucrative patronage. While earrying on a general practice he has specialized, for some time, to some extent, in surgery. He is the physician and surgero of St. Joseph's Infirmary, located in Houston and lecturer at St. Joseph Training School for Nurses. Remaining a profound student of all that pertains to his vocation he has kept well abreast of the times.

Dr. King is a member of the American Medical Association, the Texas State Medical Association, the Harris County Medical Association, the South Texas Medical Association and the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America.

On December 21, 1887, Dr. King was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Winston, a representative of a well known family of Quincy, Illinois. To this union one child has been born, a daughter, Anne Winston King, now the wife of Morris J. Sullivan, of Detroit, Michigan, and they have one child, Morris J. Sullivan, Jr.

Fraternally, Mr. Carter has membership with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, and the Woodmen of the World. He was married in Center to Miss Ernic Crawford, who was born in Shelby county. They are the parents of one daughter, Iris.

Join W. WILLIS. A merchant of Plainview who has conducted his business with an excelent combination of conservatism and progressiveness, who is throughly familiar with the wants and desires of local patronage, and who takes pride in maintaining the best stock and the best store in the drug business in the town or county, is John W. Willis, the well-known druggist and citizen of Plainview.

John W. Willis is a native of Memphis, Tennessee, where he was born on Christmas day, 1873. His parents were R. F. and Margaret (Cox) Willis, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Mississippi. The father came to Texas from Tennessee in 1880, settling in Robertson county, where he has been a farmer and stock raiser for many years, and is still living there at the age of seventy-two years. During the Civil war period he went to the front as a Confederate soldier, and as a member of General Longstreet's division fought in Virginia and Maryland, was wounded at the battle of Antietam, and, after his recovery, rejoined his regiment and fought until the final surrender. The mother, now sixty-eight years of age, was born in the northern part of Mississippi, and her children comprise seven sons and one daughter, of whom the Plainview merchant

John W. Willis as a boy attended school at Franklin, Texas, and had one year of tuition at Paris, Texas. A clerkship in a drug store at Franklin, which he began when a youth, proved to be the route along which his career would be directed during his business life. He remained in the employ of one firm for eleven years, an exceptional record for a drug clerk, and then worked in various places for four years. He acquired a thorough knowledge of pharmacy and the commercial side of the business, and when he came to Plainview, in 1908, he was thoroughly equipped for conducting a successful business. In this town he joined Mr. Wyckoff, and they established the store which has been conducted to the present time. It was under the joint proprietorship for three years, at the end of which time Mr. Willis bought out the other interests and became sole proprietor. In the compounding of his drugs and prescriptions he employs none but expert pharmacists, and accuracy and care and reliability he has made the mottoes of his establishment. In connection with the drugs he carries an up-to-date line of jewelry and stationery. Mr. Willis is a Democrat in politics and his fraternal affiliations are with the Knights Templar Masonry and the Mystic Shrine, with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias. At Franklin, Texas, February 12, 1896, he married Miss Eva Marris, a daughter of John M. Marris, of an old family of Robertson county. The one child of Mr. and Mrs. Willis is Marguerite, born in Franklin, September 7, 1901, and now a student in the Wayland Baptist College at Phinxiew. Mr. and Mrs. Willis reside in a pleasant home of their own in Plainview and he is the owner of other property in the city.

WILLIAM J. B. ADAMS. Sixty-five years has come and gone since William J. B. Adams was brought to Jasper county a child of four years. He is one of the greatly esteemed pioneer citizens of the county, and his numerous friends consider him a part of the county's interesting history. His early life was spent among the pioneer conditions, and before he reached manhood he was a dashing cavalryman in the service of the Confederacy, and later for a long period of years held a foremost position in local trade and commerce.

William J. B. Adams was born in Thomas county, Georgia, in 1845, a son of Abel and Elizabeth (Paramere) Adams, both of whom were also natives of Georgia. In 1848 the family accomplished its removal westward to Texas, locating in Jasper county. There has been the home of William J. B. Adams ever since, and the parents also spent the remainder of their lives there. Their home was about three miles south of Jasper on a farm, and it was in such an environment that the son was reared to manhood.

He was about sixteen years old when the war broke out, and some time later he enlisted for service with Company E of the First Texas Legion, in Ross' Brigade, Jackson's Division of Cavalry. Towards the close of the war he was in Porest's Caulry. His service was largely in Mississippi, Georgia, and Tennessee, and he was in the great Atlanta campaign, after which his brigade covered Hoods' retreat from Atlanta to Nash-ville. While he was a soldier he participated in some the most sanguinary and hard-fought battles of the entire war.

A few years passed away after the war during which was chiefly interested in farming, and about 1872 be got a start in the mercantile business at Jasper, the county seat. For many years he was one of the town's most prominent and successful merchants. Since about 1910 he has practically retired from active affairs, although he still conducts a store on the public square, but more for the purpose of a restful occupation than with the object of making money. Besides other interests and investments, he has a nice farm south of town, that heing a portion of the homestead on which he was reared, and he is president of the Citizens' National Bank of Jasper.

Mr. Adaws married Miss Matilda Scurlock. Their seven children are named John R., Mrs. Mary Hart, Mrs. Alma Stone, Will J., Mrs. Matilda Jolly, George T., and Miss Lulu.

ALFED D. ARMSTRONG. The Armstrong Transfer and Storage Company is the only establishment of its kind in Amarillo and has been built up by a specially energetic young business man, who left a position as traveling salesman about six years ago and entered into competition with others who were then eccupying the field at Amarillo, and has since outdistanced all competitors and now commands the situation.

Alfred D. Armstrong is a Tennessean who came to Texas and found in this state, and particularly at Amarillo, the opportunity to satisfy his ambition. He was born in Columbia, Tennessee, April 9, 1870. His father was Elias J. Armstrong, also a native of Tennessee, who died in 1905 at Clearwater, Florida, at the age of fifty-seven. He was a farmer by occupation, a Democrat, and a Presbyterian. During the Civil war he had given four years of service in the Confederate army. The maiden name of the mother was Elizabeth Walker, and a native of Tennessee. She is now living at Clearwater, Florida, and became the mother of seven children.

The second in the family, Alfred D. Armstrong, received his education at Columbia, Tennessee, in the common and high schools, graduating from the latter in 1891. His early life was spent on his father's farm, and, on leaving high school, he took up his career as clerk in the hardware firm of Dobbins & Ewing, at Columbia. Four years of this experience fitted him for his next move in life, and he then came to Texas, first locating in Dallas in 1895 and becoming a traveling representative over this section of the Southwest for the McCormick Harvester Company. He remained on the road until 1907, and then abandoned threeling life to locate in Amarillo. To note that the stablished the Amarillo. Mr. Armstrong is a Democrat in politics and is now a member of the city council. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the United Commercial Travelers, and the Amarillo Chamber Commerce. His church is the Presbyterian. At Fort Worth, on October 28, 1905, he married Miss Frances King, a native of Texas, born in Fort Worth, and a daughter of Porter King, of an old Texas family. Their home is located at 800 Tyler street.

FINLEY HOLMES. The ability to become a successful merchant often runs in one family just as the ability to become a lawyer or doctor, and this would seem to be true in the case of the leading merchant of Toyah, Texas, Finley Holmes, for his father was a merchant before him and all of his brothers are making successes in mercantile lines. Mr. Holmes is the owner and manager of the largest mercantile establishment in the town of Toyah, and he began this store in a very modest way, its growth being entirely due to his business ability and to the energy and perseverance with which he managed

Finley Holmes was born at Dumas, Arkansas, on the 21st of March, 1872. His father was Abercrombie Holmes and his mother was Lethia (Pickett) Holmes, both of his parents having been born in Mississippi, His father was a leading business man in Walnut Lake, Arkansas for many years, later removing to Dumas, where he spent the last thirty-five years of his life. He was a soldier in the Confederate forces during the Civil war, serving in the army until the close of the struggle. He was a man of fine character and highly respected in the community. His death occurred in 1891, his wife having died in 1886, and both of them are interred in Four sons were born to Abercrombie Holmes and his wife, of whom Finley Holmes is the eldest. Abercrombie Holmes, the second son is a prominent merchant in Lindsey, Oklahoma, and Burke D. Holmes is associated with his brother, Paul K. Holmes, in the mercantile business in Maysville, Oklahoma, where they own the leading mercantile establishment.

Finley Holmes went to school in Dumas, but he left school at an early age, and going to Pendleton, Ar-kansas, he went to work as a clerk in a store. He remained in this town for four years, clerking in various stores and acquiring a thorough knowledge of the mercantile business. He then went to Little Rock, Arkansas, where he began to clerk for C. J. Kramer & Company, one of the large mercantile establishments in the city, He proved so valuable to the firm that he was made bookkeeper and later general manager. He remained here for eleven years, and then, in 1899, the western fever crept into his bones and he determined to try his fortunes in the new western counties of Texas that were then being opened up. He came to Pecos, Texas, in 1899, and here seenred a position as bookkeeper for the Pecos Mercantile Company, remaining here until 1902. At this time, having carefully laid away as much of his salary as was possible, he found that he had enough to go into business for himself. He therefore came to Toyah, and here organized the Reeves County Mercantile Company, becoming its secretary and manager and one of its principal stockholders. It was only a modest beginning, but it has grown into the leading store in Toyah. It is not only a retail establishment, but Mr. Holmes has a large wholesale business also. Seeing the need of more bank-ing facilities in Toyah, Mr. Holmes next organized the Citizens State Bank in 1907, being made vice president. In 1913 this institution was consolidated with the First National Bank of Toyah, assuming the affairs of the latter. Mr. Holmes is the owner of considerable valuable property in Toyah and also owns his handsome residence. He has the entire confidence of the community and is one of the most influential business men in the county.

Mr. Holmes is a member of the Baptist church and is active in church work, being a deacon. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World. On the 6th of June, 1901, he was married to Miss Josephine Bunting, a daughter of Alphonse S. Bunting, and a native of the state of Texas. Five children bave been born to this union, as follows: Joseph Finley, Margie Lee, Annie, Sidney and Ruth,

Mr. Holmes has great faith in this section of the country, believing that a boom is destined to come before long, on account of the cheapness of the land and the oil and mineral resources which when developed will make this section one of the most valuable parts of the state.

MARVIN P. GARNER. One of the severest tests of the manner in which a public official's services are regarded by his fellow citizens is made when he becomes a candidate for re-election, for it is then that his record is brought into prominence, his abilities and discrepancies are weighed in the balance, and the voters are called upon to judge whether he has kept his promises, taken advantage of his opportunities to further the in terests of his community, and faithfully discharged the duties of his office. The confidence and high regard in which Marvin P. Garner is held by the people of Randall county, Texas, was emphatically demonstrated on July 27, 1912, when he was re-elected county clerk by a majority the size of which left no doubt as to his popularity and standing in the community. Mr. Garner is a native of Texas, born in Montague county, October 15, 1881, and is a son of William Louis and Ursula (Palmer) Garner.

The parents of Mr. Garner were born in Tennessee and came to Texas during the early '70s, settling in Hunt county, where William L. Garner was engaged in farming and stock raising. Later in life he removed to Randall county, where he now resides, having reached his sixty-fifth birthday February 11, 1913. Mrs. Garner died April 18, 1909, aged sixty years, having been the mother of seven children: J. A., W. F., T. M., Marvin P., Mrs. M. V. Gibson, Mrs. Fannie B. Gates, and Mrs. Kate C. Boykin.

Marvin P. Garner was given only the advantages of a public school education in Montague county, after which he came to the Panhandle country and engaged in farming and stock raising. He was thus employed in 1908, at the time of his first election to the office of county clerk on the Democratic ticket, and on the strength of his admirable services during his first term he was made his party's nominee for the same office in 1910, when, as before stated, he succeeded himself as the incumbent of this responsible position. Mr. Garner has formed a wide acquaintance throughout the state, and it is a safe assertion to make that few men are more popular with those who know them. He has ably dis-charged every responsibility imposed upon him and is an excellent type of the self-made Western man. He has taken a pride in the achievements of his adopted community and has done much to forward the interests of Canyon, where he makes his home, believing that the great development of this section in recent years is sure to continue. He is a valued member of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and his religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Garner was married at Canyon, Texas, December 24, 1905, to Miss Ethel Cochell, daughter of Theodore Cochell, a well-known citizen of Hereford, Texas, and to this union there have come two children: Vesta Loure. born November 11, 1906, who died at the age of six months, and Weldon M., born June 12, 1908, in Randall

THOMAS D. LOVELADY. A business man, rancher, and public-spirited citizen, Mr. Lovelady has had a varied and interesting career, most of it spent in El Paso, and from a beginning as a salaried workman has reached a position of independence.

Thomas D. Lovelady was born in Bell county, Texas, August 16, 1870, being the third of ten children born to Thomas H. B. and Delilah (Brown) Lovelady. His father located in Texas in the early sixties and was a farmer and stock raiser, and is now a resident of Arizona, being still active in ranching. He served as a Confederate soldier during the Civil war from the beginning to the end of hostilities. The father was born in Missouri and is now living on his ranch about twenty-six miles out of Douglas, Arizona, at the age of sixty seven.

Mr. Lovelady attained his early education in the schools of Bell county; his early career was spent on a farm, where he worked regularly from the age of fifteen to twenty-two, and then left home and began life for himself. 'He learned the barbers' trade, and followed that occupation for eight years. At the same time he conducted a grocery husiness at Rock Springs, Texas. Selling out his interests there in 1900 he came to El Paso, and spent the first three years as clerk in one of the mercantile establishments of this city. During the following six years he was a building contractor, and built many of the residences erected during that time in El Paso and vicinity. In February, 1911, Mr. Lovelady became manager of the Houston Ice & Brewing Company and the San Antonio Brewing Association and still holds that position and has succeeded in building up a very large trade in El Paso for those manufacturing concerns. Mr. Lovelady is also proprietor of a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in Cochise county, Arizona. He has always taken an active part in Democratic politics and during his residence at Rock Springs, in Edwards county, this state, he served as deputy sheriff for five years. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Improved Order of Red Men, is a member of Moose, the Improved Order of Red Men, is a member of the Cactus Club and belongs to the Christian church. On June 5, 1892, at Rock Springs, Texas, he married Miss Mary Lee Cargill, a daughter of Thomas Cargill, the family having been among the early settlers of Texas. Four daughters and two sons comprise the house-hold of Mr. and Mrs. Lovelady. The family residence at the present time is at 3304 Hueco St., El Paso.

NATHAN GRANT, long a resident of Deport, and a man honored and esteemed among his fellows, is the last of his race of the pioneer Grants who founded the family in Lamar and Red River counties. His age and his usefulness to the community well serve to place him among the old patriarchs of his time, and his unalloyed citizen-ship and patriotic performances entitle him to a living distinction beyond the generation in which he has lived. It is therefore but fitting that mention of him and his family of an earlier generation be given space in a work of the nature and purpose of this publication.

Born in Madison county, Tennessee, on January 6, 1832. Nathan Grant is the son of parents who were honorable and upright in their lives, although not blessed with an undue share of material wealth. Spencer Grant was his father, and his grandfather was John Grant. The latter was born in Virginia, there reared, and there he passed many years of his life. He married the daughter of a Mr. Martin, and later took up his abode in Hen-derson county, Tennessee, where he died. His children were named Nathan, John, Stephen, Tabbie, Lottie and Ann. Tabbie became the wife of William Massey, while Lottie married Claihorn Henry, and Ann died as Mrs. Carrington. Spencer, the progenitor of the subject of this review, was the first-born of the family. He mar-ried Polly Stark, a daughter of John Walter Stark of Robertson county, Tennessee, where she was born in 1797, and the children of their union were Susan, who married Oliver Green and died in Red River county, Texas; Eliza, the wife of Stephen Massey, died in Madrid Bend, Missouri; Stephen, who came to Texas in 1842, lived for a time near Clarksville, and died in Lamar county in December, 1889, aged sixty-eight years. He was the first of the family to reach Texas, and he passed was the first of the family to reach lexas, and he passed his life as a prosperous farmer and ginman. He mar-ried Margaret Dickson for his first wife. James, who was older than Stephen, followed him to Texas in 1845 and settled in Tutus county. He married Ezivair, a daughter of Joseph Read of Alabama. James was born in 1814 and died in 1866, leaving four sons and three daughters in Lamar and Red River counties. Archibald came to Texas among the later emigrants of the family, and married first Abigail Spain and then Amanda Pen dergast. John married Jane Day and died in Red River county. Mary A. married Alexander Munns and died in Lime Stone county, Texas. Nathan is the subject of this review. Spencer, who hecame a doctor, married Margaret McCullough and died in Erath county. Nancy married Esom Dooley and passed her life in Red River county. William was the third of the family to come to Texas, and his advent into the state was marked by the year 1848. He joined the Sims, a surveying party, in that year, and was killed by Indians in Bastrop county. The mother of this goodly family of pioneers came out to Texas next and settled in Red River county, where she died in 1880.

The father of the family, Spencer Grant, had died in Henderson county in 1850. He had been a veteran of the war of 1812, in which he volunteered for service with his father, John Grant, and served in Jackson's army of riflemen. He was in the battle of New Orleans on January 8, 1815, and when the war had ended he was still in fighting mood. His fighting spirit was not quenched until he had given service in Florida against the Creeks and Seminoles and under "Old Hickory" did his full share in the matter of breaking up the trouble upon which these warriors were bent. When the war was over, Spencer Grant retired to his farm in Tennessee, and there passed the remainder of his life.

So much for the family of Nathan Grant. The information concerning these sturdy people is all too meager, but it will suffice as it stands to show something of the fine spirit that characterized the men of this fine old family.

In the country schools of his native community in Tennessee Nathan Grant got a smattering of learning, the three R's constituting the main subjects to which the youth of his day were introduced in the pursuit of education in the country districts. He was twenty-two years old when in 1854 he joined a party of three other young Tennesseeans bent upon a wagon trip to Texas. Young and enthusiastic, with an ambition to see something outside the border limits of his state, Mr. Grant, with his friends, crossed the Mississippi river at Memphis, took the Military road to Little Rock, Arkansas, and came into Texas at the mouth of the Mill Creek, where they crossed Red River. They were twenty-four days out from the old home before they saw the faces of those who had preceded them and become Texans in earnest, and the first serious act of Nathan Grant's life in Texas brought him into actual contact with a farm. While he devoted himself diligently to his farm, he watched with growing apprehension the gathering of the war clouds as the controversy over the slave question then up for discussion in Congress became more heated and bitter, and when the call to arms came he had long since reached his decision, and was ready to do a soldier's part in the defense of the southland.

Mr. Grant joined the Eleventh Texas Cavalry under Colonel "Bill" Young, rendezvoused two months at Fort Washita, now in Oklahoma, and then prepared for an Arkansas campaign. He was a participant in the battle of Elkhorn and followed orders of the army to proceed to the aid of the Confederates on the east side of the Mississippi river. He took part in the engagement at Corinth, became a part of Bragg's army in the invasion of Kentucky and helped to fight the Richman and Perryville battles. In the engagement at Murfreesboro, where he was in the thick of the fight, as usual, he was shot through the leg, captured and sent to Camp Morton, Indiana, as a prisoner of war. He was among the ex-changed prisoners at City Point, Virginia, on May 12, 1863, and was furloughed home from the South Carolina hospital. When he recovered sufficiently of his wound to take his old place in the line, he rejoined his command at Dalton, Georgia, on the Atlanta Campaign. General Jo Wheeler was in command, and when Atlanta fell he was on the retreat in front of Sherman's army to Savannah, back north into North Carolina, where the battle of Bentonville was fought and the surrender of General

Johnston's army soon took place.

The final collapse of the Rebellion served to throw many of the Confederate officers into an apparent panic to escape the possible consequences of their attempt to disrupt the Union, and among the number was General Wheeler. He proposed to bring the Texas soldiers home with the band of refugees he expected to muster for flight into Mexico, but the cordon of Federals was so tightly drawn about the troops in the latter part of the activities of the war that escape was impossible, and when the news of the capture of Jeff Davis, Wheeler and Reagan spread abroad, no further effort toward an organized expedition was made, and the command dissolved like the mist. Men chose companions for the lonely journey to saddened homes, and the activities of actual war were

Mr. Grant fell in with Lieutenant Barry of Red River county, and they faced their difficulties together. They sold their horses in Mississippi, fearing their later loss to the Negro troops patroling the country along the river, and when they struck the big river they boated to the mouth of Red River and reached home by way of Shreveport, on June 2, 1865.

Although soldiering had been the business of Nathan Grant for more than four years, he had by no means formed the habit of war, as one might say, but was rather willing than otherwise to exchange the sword for the more or less prosaic tool, the plowshare, and he lost little or no time in gathering up the threads of his abandoned vocation. During the war he had purchased a tract of land, and this he proceeded at once to bring under cultivation and to improve to the best of his ability. He was a bankrupt in all but courage when he donned the garb of a citizen, and his financial condition had not improved when he decided in 1866 to marry, His fiancee, he tells, came nobly to the rescue with the necessary five dollars with which to defray the cost of a license and a pair of gloves for her husband, and he actually borrowed the boots and the suit of clothes in which he took the vows of marrimony. These facts, let it be known, had no power to mar their happiness, and neither ever regretted the courage that prompted them to such a step at a time when the man of today would besitate and then retreat precipitately from a matrimonial alliance under such conditions. They went to house keeping in a Texas cabin with the conventional puncheon floor common to the cabins of the day, and here his young wife carded and spun the wool that entered into the making of his garments as well as her own, and it was her own hand that fashioned and sewed these garments. He added his share to that part of the duties of the home by making the family shoes for two years. He was not a shoemaker by trade, but he recognized when face to face with the old truth that "necessity is the mother of invention," and the part of a shirker had no place in his make-up, or in that of his faithful wife. In his farm work, he engaged in a systematic campaign of corn and cotton raising, and year by year stretched his slender credit to acquire more land. His appetite for that commodity, be it said, grew faster than did his ability to purchase, and when he reached the zenith of his career his tax list showed him to be the owner of eight hundred acres of the fertile black soil adjacent to Deport that is the pride of Texas, and in that vicinity is his present home.

While he was building up his modest fortune, Mr. Grant was also bringing up a family, and he has consistently shared his material prosperity with those who aided him in the achievement and in the twilight of his life, the strenuous work of earlier years is reflected in the possession of every comfort, and in the unalloyed friendship of a whole community of citizens.

Mr. Grant has passed through life without a visible effort toward a political career. He has acted with the Democratic party since he cast his first vote, and has ever taken a deep interest in the Veterans' movement, finding a genuine pleasure in attending the national encampment of the Confederate Veterans. Notwithstanding his advanced years, these scenes seem only to rejuveuate him, and his step today shows the spring of early life and his heart beats quick in unison with the martial strains of other days, while his still sturdy lungs gladly return the lusty shout that greets him from comrades who are living over the incidents of the never-to-be-forgotten conflict. Mr. Grant has taken a considerable interest in affairs in the community of Deport, and is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Deport, and in the same institution in Detroit, Texas. Religiously he holds to the doctrines of Presbyterianism, and his life has given expression to a very worthy desire to serve others while his own mission on earth was being fulfilled.

Mr. Grant has been twice married. His first marriage occurred on February 22, 1866, when Mary Dickson, a daughter of James and Abigail Dickson, became his wife. She passed away on March 30, 1894, the mother of six children, concerning whom mention is briefly made as follows: John D., the eldest, died unmarried; Minnie Abigail is the wife of Frank Bell of Deport, Texas; William S. also lives here; Gertrude, now deceased, was the wife of J. C. Mason of Deport; Charles lives in this community; Archie D. died in 1905, leaving one child. On February 4, 1896, Mr. Grant married Mrs. Laura Grant, the widow of his deceased brother, Stephen Grant. She was a daughter of Leander Bell, and her first husband was L. C. Thomas, by whom she was the mother of three sons—R. G., W. M. and L. C. Thomas. Two children were born to her and Mr. Grant, Ruby and Lee, both of whom died in childhood.

JOHN M. DAVIS. One of the sterling citizens who have been prominently identified with the development of the admirable agricultural resources of Kaufman county, where he has maintained his home for fully forty years, is John Moses Davis, one of the honored pioneer citizens of the village of Forney. He has been one of the extensive and successful agriculturists of this sec-tion of the state. Within the decade following the close of the Civil war Mr. Davis disposed of his farm in the state of Alabama and came to Texas in search of a more inviting and broader field of endeavor in connection with the great basic industry which had previously engrossed his attention. He made a preliminary investigation of Wise, Collin, Denton, and Jack counties, in search of a favorable location, and finally purchased a tract of fine black land on the rich and undulating plains about the present thriving little city of Forney, Kaufman county, his original purchase comprising seven hundred and twenty-five acres and the place being situated four miles northeast of Forney.

After the lapse of more than two score years the wisdom of Mr. Davis' choice of location has been amply justified. He reclaimed the virgin soil to cultivation and in the earlier years of his career as a Texas farmer he utilized his land almost entirely in the raising of grain, which at first yielded most bountifully, but which eventually proved inadequate in results to assure a due financial profit, under which conditions Mr. Davis showed his fertility of expedient and his good judgment by resorting to the raising of cotton, of which line of industrial enterprise he has long been one of the foremost exponents in this part of the state. In a retrospective way it may be noted that Mr. Davis plowed the first furrow on the original tract of land which he procured in the pioneer days, and that his modest dwelling was the first building erected on the tract, for which he had paid $4 an acre. His vigorous campaign of industry was not denied a gracious fruition, as his progressive and well ordered operations have given him place as one of the substantial capitalists of Kanfman county, besides contributing much toward the civic and material development of the county. He now owns a finely improved and most valuable landed estate of 1,250 acres, and virtually the entire tract is under effective cultivation, ready to "bring forth its increase" and to exemplify annually the marvelous productivity of the soil. Excellent buildings have been erected on the estate by its owner and among these are the several homes of the various tenants who assist in the cultivation and management of the fine rural demesne. The residence of Mr. Davis stands on an eminence and affords a fine view across the valley and to the village of Forney. The homestead is unique, in that it is practically a collec-tion of cottages that are so joined as to afford con-venient accommodations and to give the impression of consistency as well as substantial permanency, be-sides offering a suggestive picture of the picturesque pioneer days.

Mr. Davis came to Texas from Butler county, Alabama, where he was born on the 25th of August, 1837. His early educational advantages were those afforded in the common schools of the locality and period and he was a child at the time of the family removal to Loundes county, Alabama, where he was reared on the homestead plantation of his father and early gained experience in the directing of the labor of the few negro slaves. When the Civil war was precipitated on the nation he was loyal to the institutions under the influence of which he had been reared, and his loyalty forthwith found definite expression. On the 4th of June, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Ninth Alabama Infantry, and with the same went forth in defense of the cause of the Confederacy. His regiment was assigned to the Army of Northern Virginia and arrived too late to take part in the initial battle, at Manassas, but with this regiment Mr. Davis participated in the engagement at Williamsburg, the Seven Days' battles, Second Bull Run, and Sharpsburg. In September, 1862, he and other members of his regiment were captured by the enemy while they were defending themselves be-hind a stone pile, and all were removed to the military prison at Fort Delaware, in the immediate vicinity of the city of Baltimore, Maryland. There Mr. Davis was held a prisoner of war during the period through which the great conflict between the North and South continued, and he was not paroled until several weeks after the war had closed. He was released on the day mark-ing the fourth anniversary of that on which he had left his home and started forth as a valiant young sol-dier of the Confederacy, and from New York City he was transferred to New Orleans, on the steamship "Mariposa." From the Crescent City he proceeded by boat to Mobile, and from there by rail to Greenville, Alabama, and upon arriving at his home he girded himself to meet the requirements and exactions incidental to reviving the prostrate industries of the South and the winning of the noble victories which peace ever has in store. He found conditions at home better than he had anticipated. His father had succeeded in saving his mules from confiscation by the Federal soldiers and had saved sufficient grain for the propagation of a crop. During the few succeeding years in Alabama bountiful harvests were garnered by the Davis family, the financial condition of which improved with each successive year.

To Mr. Davis a definite and distinct appeal was made by the new country of the great Southwest, with its unbroken prairies and fertile soil. The land was to be obtained at a low price and the lure of Texas proved such that Mr. Davis could not resist. Accordingly, in the early spring of 1872, he set forth to number himself among the pioneers in a thinly settled section of the Lone Star state. Near the headwaters of the Trinity River he made investment in land, and here he has maintained his home during the long intervening period of forty years, which have brought in their train opulent prosperity and definite independence to the aspiring young soldier-citizen who thus had the courage of his convictions and was ready to endure the vicissitudes that ever fall to the lot of the pioneer. His loyalty to Texas is of the most intense and appreciative order and he is proud to call the state his home. He has made occasional visits to the place of his nativity, has indulged in a brief sojourn at the home of his elder son, in New Mexico, and has attended various reunions of the United Confederate Veterans' Association, through affiliation with which he perpetuates the more gracious memories of his army career, but at all times his interests have centered in Kaufman county, Texas, where he is known and honored as a representative citizen of progressive and public-spirited attitude.

Mr. Davis was one of the organizers of the Farmers' National Bank of Forney and is a director of this substantial and well conducted institution, besides which he is a stockholder in several cotton-ginning companies and slo in the Forney Cotton, Oil and Gin Company. His political allegiance has been given without reservation to the Democratic party, but he has had no desire for the honors or emoluments of public office. Both he and his wife are devoted members of the Christian church and they are held in affectionate regard in the community that has represented their home for many years.

In December, 1866, was soleunized the marriage of Mr. Davis to Miss Julia Pengler, who was born and reared in Alabama, where her father, Artenus Pengler, was a representative agriculturist and highly esteemed citizen. Concerning the children of this gracious union the following brief data are given: Bessie is the wife of John Portwood, of Honston, Texas. By a former marriage there is one son, Mose Elder. Jennie is the wife of M. U. Finley and a resident of Roswell, Chaves county, New Mexico, where he is engaged in farming and horticulture, and they have a son, Davis T., and two daughters, Elsa and Tinie. Polly A. remains at the parental home, and James, who is a cashier of the Farmers' National Bank of Forney, wedded Miss Lucy Jones; they have a winsome little daughter, Helen.

He to whom this review is dedicated is a son of James L, and Elizabeth (Patton) Davis, both of whom continued to reside in Alahama until their death, the father having passed away in 1874 and having survived his devoted wife by seven years. James L, Davis was born in Edgefeld district, South Carolina, in 1808, and was a scion of a sterling colonial family. He was a man of infexible integrity and had enlarged his mental ken through effective reading and other self-discipline which supplemented the meager enheational advantages of his youth. His entire active career was one of close identification with agricultural pursuits, though he never conducted his plantation operations on an extensive scale. He was a son of John and Esther (Little) Davis, and their children were: James L, Adam, Moses, Bettie (Mrs. Daniel Smith), Elliott (Mrs. James Perdue), Varcissa, and Melissa, twins, the former becoming the wife of George V. Thaggard; and Andrew, Jack, Robert, and Garoline, the last becoming the wife of Peter Roach.

The wife of James L. Davis was a daughter of John Patton, a planter and slaveholder of South Carolina, and concerning their children the following record is perpetuated: Jame, who became the wife of S. B. Earnest, died in Alabama. John M. is the immediate subject of this review. Rebecca, who became the wife of William Garrett, continued a resident of Alabama until her death. Matthew P., who was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy, died in Alabama. Frances, who died in the same state, was the wife of George W. Pengler, and Zack, the youngest of the children, was a youthful soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, after the close of which he continued to reside in his native state, Alabama, until his death,

MURPHY M. MORRISON, M. D. Both in the broad field of citizenship as well as in the more specific interests of his profession, Dr. Morrison has a notable career as a physician and surgeon at Denison. Born March 17, 1872, at Dandridge, Tennessee, he is a son of John M. and Nancy (Kilpatrick) Morrison, both of whom were born in North Carolina, and located in Tennessee in 1865. The family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The father was a mechanic and during the Civil war built the wagons for the Confederate government. He continued to follow his regular trade up to the time of his death, in January, 1913. The mother passed away in 1912. There was a large family of children, the doctor being one of the younger, and he has one sister and one brother in Texas. The latter is Dr. T. A. Morrison, a physician, in Grosvenor, Texas.

Dr. Morrison managed to secured the equivalent of a liberal education in his youth. He attended the district schools of Tennessee, studied medicine at Chattanooga, and was graduated M. D. in 1893. He began practice in Cocke county, of his native state, and in 1895 moved to Van Alstyne, in Grayson county, and in 1905 located in Denison, Texas, where he has enjoyed the rewards and the finer distinctions of professional life. In 1900 Dr. Morrison took post-graduate work in New Orleans. He has membership in the county and state medical society, and the District Medical Association. His fraternal affiliations are the Knights of Pythias, the Wood-men of the World, and the Improved Order of Red Men. A Democrat in politics, he has at different times entered into the active work of campaigns, but less for partisan purposes than for the advancement of good government and the education of the people along the higher planes of political thought.

Dr. Morrison was married in Cocke county, Tennessee, in August, 1892, to Miss Emma Thompson, a daughter of Ransom P. Thompson, for many years a school teacher and now living retired in Tennessee. The doctor and wife have eight children: Ralston, Anna May, Murphy M., Winnie Bell, Elliott H., Mattie, Thomas and Eugene Morrison, the ages of these children ranging from four years to twenty.

Dr. Morrison owns a comfortable residence in the suburbs of Denison and finds rest and recreation from his professional work in the cultivation of small fruits and vegetables. He is in the citizenship of Denison what might be called an all-around man, able to give practical assistance in many ways, and in the promotion of movements which concern the more wholesome and better life of the community. He has often become a civic leader, and is skillful on the stump, in presentation of advanced political thought. In 1912 he entered the political field as a candidate for Congress in his district. more for the purpose of getting certain principles before the people and to educate them, than with an expectation of election to office. A few extracts from one of his speeches during this campaign will illustrate his general views, and also the earnestness with which be expresses his convictions as to political theory and practice: "My fellow Democrats, beware of the seductive strain of the siren's song. The principles of just government are eternal as God himself. The same interests that engrafted on this government the policy of protection-the policy that enriches a few and enslaves a multitude-are the identical interests that are today advising us against all propositions looking to the good and betterment of humanity, the establishment of equal opportunities and the promotion of human happiness. The trust masters and their satellites oppose all remedies of legislation. They oppose the abandonment of the tariff; they oppose a revision of the tariff. They oppose the creation of a department of public health and by-giene. They oppose the enforcement of the pure food and drug act. They oppose campaign fund publicity and drug act. They oppose campaign rund pointity legislation. They oppose the enactment of laws prohibiting bribery and official corruption. They oppose the initiative. They oppose the reall. They oppose the referendum." These sentences are but a few taken at random from one of his addresses, and show the aggressive and outspoken character of Dr. Morrison, who has for years observed the trend of public affairs and has been an uplifting factor in his own community. Personally he is a man of much charm of manner, and his thorough intellectuality makes him a pleasing companion to all who enjoy the privilege of his acquaint-

TIMOTHY R. STUMP. The editor and publisher of the Nocona News, in Montague county, is in the third generation of the Stump family residents in Montague county, with which section of North Texas the name has been identified from the earliest pioneer days. Mr. Stump is an unusually aggressive and successful newspaper man, conducts an influential and up-to-date journal, and though still a young man has prospered far above the average of men of his age and of his profession.

Timothy R. Stump was born in Montague county, Texas, October 4, 1880, and with the exception of four years, three of which were spent in Oklahoma in farming, and one year in New Mexico on a cattle ranch, has lived all his life in Texas. The founder of the Stump family in Montague county was Reece B. Stump, grandfather of the Nocona editor. Reece B. Stump settled in that part of Texas in 1856, at a time when the entire north boundary of Texas was exposed to the constant hostile raids of Indians and outlaws. For many years he lived on the frontier and bore a prominent part in the early history of that section. His death occurred in December, 1913, and he was buried at Davin, Oklahoma. The father of Timothy R. Stump was Francis B. Stump, born in the state of Iowa, and moving to Texas with the family in 1856. During his early career he followed school teaching and was also a farmer. He was active in politics, held several important offices, and was a devout worker in the Baptist church. His death occurred in December, 1910, at the age of about fifty-seven years, and he is buried in Montague county. The maiden name of his wife was Alice V. Warren, who was born in Texas, and was married in Montague county. She is an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and has her home in Montague county. There were nine children in the family, of whom Timothy R. was the

During his boyhood he attended the public schools, also the high school at Nocona, and afterwards took a commercial course at Ardmore, Oklahoma. Leaving school at the age of eighteen he started out to battle his own way through life. He worked on a cattle ranch in New Mexico for one year, after which he returned to Nocona. and found work as a bookkeeper in a mercantile house. After about four years he bought out the Nocona News and has since been its owner and editor. This is a wellequipped printing establishment and he does much job work in connection with the printing of his paper. The News has a large circulation and a very wholesome influence over a large territory not only in Montague county, but across the river in Oklahoma. The circulation has increased thirty-five per cent during the last year. Mr. Stump through his paper advocates every cause for the advancement and development of his locality, and one of the principal objects of his editorial policy has been for good rural schools. He is now boosting of the work of the Texas Industrial Congress, and other movements which come into close relations with the practical welfare of the citizens.

At Mamou, in Saint Landry parish of Louisiana, on June 12, 1910, Mr. Stump married Mary Gaty, a daughter of Hon, and Mrs. W. H. Gaty. Her father is president of the police jury of his parish (now Evangeline parish) in Louisiana. To Mr. and Mrs. Stump have been born one child, Mary Josephine. The religious affilia-tion of Mr. and Mrs. Stump is with the Methodist church. He is affiliated with the Indepedent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World, and has held office in the Odd Fellows Lodge. In politics he is a Probibi-tion Democrat and is a student and close observer of political and civic affairs.

ROBERT MARION COLE has been identified more or less with the town of Franklin since its infancy, for he came here as a young man of twenty-one just following the Civil war, in which he had rendered faithful service to the Southern cause. His first interests in Robertson county were in the stock business, and his first home was established at Bald Prairie. His experience hereabout has been a varied one, and he has arisen in the scale of business and social prominence from a mediocre place to one that is notable, and well worthy of him and his accomplishments.

Mr. Cole is a native son of Leake county, Mississippi, where he was born on March 8, 1848, and he is a son of Thomas Andrew Cole, born in South Carolina and married in Mississippi to Miss Martha Boone, of the well known Georgia family of that name. Thomas well known Georgia family of that name. Thomas Andrew Cole died in 1864, ten years atter the passing of his wife. Their children were four in number and are here mentioned briefly as follows: William T., a soldier in the Confederate army, spent his later life in farming in Mississippi and came to Texas a few years before his death, which occurred in Robertson county; Robert Marion of this review; Charles died as a boy of eighteen years; and Martha Ella married James Freeney and died in Mississippi, leaving a large family of sons.

The paternal grandsire of Mr. Cole of this review was Mason Cole. He was a man of North Carolina birth, and he died in Mississippi. Michael Cole, who birth, and he died in Mississippi. Merhaet Core, who died in Bastrop county, Texas, was one of his sons; one of his daughters was Mrs. Nancy Townsend of Austin, and another was Mrs. Watson, who live in Louisiana. Besides Thomas Andrew he bad another son, Oliver Cole, who was long a resident of Hays county, Texas.

Robert Marion Cole had his upbringing on a Mississippi plantation. His school advantages were negligible, and he was yet a mere lad when he volunteered for bit, and he was yet a mere had when he contineted no service in the Southern army. He enlisted in May, 1862, for three months' service for the relief of Vicks-burg, and he was a member of General Adams' Cavalry, that body being active on the outside of the city, and having a little skirmish at Jackson before they were dishanded. Later young Cole enlisted in Company A, Fifth Mississippi, with Colonel Perrin in command, in General Jo Wheeler's corps. He went through Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia, and was in the Atlanta campaign, participating in all the cavalry activity of the Confederates to Atlanta, and following Sherman's army through to Savannah, where their brigade was dismounted and placed in the ditches for three days, then marching on foot to Puresburg, South Carolina, where their regiment was again mounted and started toward Virginia. They were in the vicinity of Raleigh, North Carolina, when General Lee surrendered, and his command was disbanded as a part of General Johnston's army. He was singularly fortunate in his military service, being neither wounded, captured nor the victim of illness of any sort throughout his service, and when the war ended and he resumed the garb of citizenship, he was still a youth, only seventeen years old. He had to run away from home to proffer his services, and when his first enlistment period was ended, he had an embarrassing prospect before him in the event of his return to his home, so he promptly re-enlisted and saw the affair through to the end.

At the close of the war he returned to the home of his grandfather, William Boon, where he had been reared for the most part, and he stayed at home until the fall, when he joined a party bent upon a bear hunting expedition in Sunflower county, Mississippi. When the frolic was over he decided to remain there and followed rafting on the Yazoo river for a time, making one trip down the big river to New Orleans. He drifted back to Mississippi again, and in 1868 he made a crop in Madison county, that state, as a farm hand on a plantation. The next year he went to his old home in Leake county, Mississippi, and there spent a year on the plantation, and in the fall of that year he came out to Texas with several Mississippi families of his home vicinity, the group including the Weir family, S. B. Blackman and Dave Wilson, all of whom have posterity in the state today.

Mr. Cole was twenty-one years old then, and he came to Texas in the garb of a workman, and without a penny in his pockets, for he had "gathered no moss" in his four years of rolling about from point to point after the war. He took a "job" at wood cutting, at a daily wage of one dollar and a half, and his next work was that of well digger. He then turned his hand to cotton-picking, and he finally went into the ranching field with a cowman, and he worked in that capacity during 1870 and 1871. The next year he spent in farming, and in December of 1872, he married, and engaged regularly in farming, for he decided that matrimony earried with it the added duty of settling down to a regular business. In 1908 Mr. Cole left off his farming activities, and moved to Franklin, after years of successful contact with the soil, and he has here been active and prominent in the operation of the city telephone system.

The Franklin Telephone Exchange may be said to have come into the Cole family soon after its establishment, and for the past seven years Mr. Cole has had the active management of it himself. The company comprises R. M. and R. W. Cole, F. S. Estes, Thos. Rushing and J. L. Goodman. The exchange covers the country for miles around Franklin and connects the county seat practically to every community in the county.

In 1912 Mr. Cole was elected to the office of mayor of the city, and he is distinguished as being the first man to hold that office. He was associated in the administration of the affairs of the city with R. M. Duffery and W. T. Maris, the other members of the commission, and is now a member of the commission, with R. M. Duffery and Mr. H. Porter. He acquitted himself creditably as the head of the commission, and proved himself a wise and efficient official of the city, his service measuring well up to the highest standards of citizenship recognized and demanded in the county.

In 1872 Mr. Cole married Miss Margaret Graham, a daughter of John Graham, who came to Texas as early as 1836, settling finally in Robertson county and engagas 1830, setting finally in Hobertson county and engag-ing in business as a land dealer. His wife was Mar-garet Roach, a Virginia girl, and Mrs. Cole was one of their five children. To Mr. and Mrs. Cole were born four children, three sons and a daughter, but only one son is living, Robert W., of Franklin. He married Lizzie Taylor, and is the father of Taylor, Thomas, Estes and Fred.

JOHN M. MELSON. One of the ablest lawyers, and one of the best known men in politics in northeast Texas is John M. Melson, of Sulphur Springs, who has been identified with the Texas bar for twenty-four years, and has had many important relations with his profession and with public affairs in the state.

He belongs to an old family, originally located in Georgia, and for nearly sixty years resident in Texas. His father was Aladdin T. Melson, of Picton, Texas, who was born in Coweta county, Georgia, in 1826, came to Texas in 1854, and settled in the community where he now lives. His education was one of the country school order, and as a Confederate soldier, he was in Captain R. F. Askew's company. His regiment served in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and among his bat-tles were those of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou. He passed through the service without wounds or capture. He was a slave holder before the war and a modest farmer since. He has always been actively interested in politics as a Democrat, though no office seeker. He is a Baptist, but has no fraternal affiliations.

The paternal grandfather was Appleton Melson, who was one of the extensive old-time planters and big slave holders in Coweta county, Georgia. His first wife was nolders in Cowera county, Georgia. This list wife was a Miss Sims, and he was again married. His children were Aladdin T., Mary Penelope, wife of Lee Houston of Georgia; William, who died in Georgia; and two daughters, now deceased.

Aladdin T. Melson, the father, married Martha M. Ransome, whose father Samuel Ransome was also a planter and holder of a large force of bondmen of the planter and notice of a large lote of a south. Samuel Ransome was twice married, both his wives being Askew sisters. Mrs. A. T. Melson died in 1909, the mother of William C., of Picton, Texas; James A., of Oklahoma City; John M., of Sulphur

John M. Melson spent his youth on the farm, and obtained his higher education in the schools of Sulphur Springs and in academic work in the University of Texas. He also took the law course at the University, graduating in the law department in 1888. His first practical work was a country school teacher of Hopkins county, but this work yielded to the law. He was admitted to the bar in 1889, by Judge Terhune, and among his examining committee were Judge Templeton, J. S. Whittle and John W. Cranford. He formed a partnership with the last named, under the title of Melson & Cranford, after he had begun and conducted his practice alone for a short while. His first case as an attorney was defending Dr. Chapman, who was charged with disturbing a religious meeting. The trial resulted in clearing the doctor. His practice since that time has included some of the big land suits of the county, and a mass of other litigations. In the suit of Hendricks versus Mrs. Jeffries, for an heir's part of an estate, covering the town site of Como, Texas, he was the attorney for the defense, which won the case after two years and after it had been carried to the supreme court.

In politics Mr. Melson is a Democrat. elected to the twenty-first legislature in 1888, and succeeded Col. B. M. Camp. He was returned in the twenty-second and twenty-third sessions, and had the chairmanship of the committees on education, engrossed bills, and of judiciary committee No. 2. He was a member of the special committee to investigate the penal institutions, and had other committee assignments. In the senatorial election, during his term, he voted for Culberson, and for Chilton instead of for R. Q. Mills, the latter having been elected. He put Joe Bailey in the field for senator by casting a complimentary vote for him.

In 1898 Mr. Melson was elected county attorney, and held that office for one term. He served on the state executive committee of his party, and has been chairman of his county committee. In 1908 he campaigned in support of Senator Bailey, for delegate at large to the Democratic National Convention at Denver. Aside from his large practice and other interests, Mr. Melson is one of the directors of the First State Bank of Sulphur Springs, has the place of assistant cashier in the hank, and also represents it as attorney.

January 18, 1900, Mr. Melson married Miss Fru Lanier, daughter of W. A. Lanier, a farmer and stockman, who married Miss Lou Potter, a sister of Judge Potter of Gainesville, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Melson have one daughter Margarite, who was born in 1903. Mr. Melson is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and is clerk of the Baptist church at Sulphur Springs.

Benjamin F. Looney. No citizen of the Lone Star state has manifested greater civic loyalty and appreciation or more enthusiastically put forth efforts in furtherance of its civic and industrial progress than the present attorney general of the commonwealth, Hon. Benjamin F. Looney, who was elected to this important post in November, 1912, and who has held other offices of distinctive public trust. He is one of the representa-tive members of the Texas bar and has maintained his home in this state since his childhood days, Benjamin Franklin Looney was born in Bossier parish, Louisiana, on the 19th of September, 1859, and is a son of B. F. and Josephine (Frith) Looney, both representative of stanch old southern families. Within a short period after his father's death he accompanied his widowed mother to Texas, where the family home was established in Marion county. There he was reared to the sturdy discipline of farm and country life and after availing himself of the local schools he continued his studies in the high school at Daingerfield, Morris county, the principal of the school at that time having been Professor Matthews, who was for many years a distinguished figure in educational circles in this state. Thereafter Mr. Looney passed two years in the literary or academic department of the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, and in preparation for his profession he then entered the law department of Cumberland University, at Lebanon, Tennessee, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1882 and from which he received his degree of Bachelor of Laws.

Admitted to the Texas bar immediately after his graduation, General Looney established an office at Greenville, the judicial center of Hunt county, where his practice developed into one of most representative order, giving him precedence as one of the leading members of the bar of northeastern Texas. He has maintained his home in the city of Greenville during the intervening

Mr. Looney is a recognized leader in the councils and activities of the Democratic party in Texas and has been a most zealous and effective advocate of its principles and policies. His eligibility for offices of high public trust has not lacked for popular recognition, and he has served in both branches of the state legislature, having represented the Fifth Senatorial District, includ ing Hunt county, in the state senate in the twenty-ninth and thirtieth general assemblies of the legislature, 1905-7, and having filled an unexpired term in the house in the thirty-first assembly, in 1910. In the legislature he proved a most active working member and soon rose to prominence in the senate, in which he served as a member of a number of the most important committees, including the judiciary committee, of which he was chairman. His record was marked by earnest devotion to the state and its people. It should be specially noted that he was the author of the first employers' liability bill introduced into the Texas legislature and that he has at all times actively supported measures projected for the benefit of organized labor. A summary of Mr. Looney's effective service in the legislature was given in a recent number of the Greenville Herald, and the estimate, well worthy of reproduction in this connection, is here given with but minor paraphrase:
"No man in the state is held in higher esteem by his friends and neighbors who know him best than Benjamin F. Looney. He has been for many years a student of public affairs in this state and is as well versed in matters of statecraft as our ablest public men. In the practice of law, his chosen profession, he has achieved a splendid reputation. As a public speaker and debater he has few if any superiors in the state. He served this district in the state senate in the twenty-ninth and thirtieth legislatures and during this brief period rendered distinguished service in behalf of the entire state. At the time of his election, though not forbidden by law, he refused to accept or use free passes on railroads or franks from telegraph and telephone companies. He was the author of the original free-pass law. He was the author of the anti-nepotism law, which prevents a public officer from appointing his relatives to public office. He was the author of the present law which prohibits all corporations from using their funds or means to influence elections in this state. He was also the author of the law which requires corporations to have the full amount of their capital stock in good faith subscribed and fifty per cent annually paid in, thus preventing the formation of wildcat companies which are organized only for the purpose of fleecing the public in the sale of worthless stock. He was the author of the first insolvent corporation law ever put on the statute books of the state, and this law gives to the attorney general the power to forfeit the charters of all such

"During the pendency of the case of the state of Texas versus the Waters-Pierce Oil Company he ascertained that important testimony without the state could be obtained if the attorney general were given the power by law to take testimony by the appointment of a commissioner without the state. He at once prepared and introduced such a statute, and the same was passed, Immediately thereafter this law bore valuable fruit, for under its provisions the attorney general secured the appointment of a commissioner in the state of New York to take testimony in this case, to oust the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. It was mainly testimony procured under this law that enabled the state to secure judgment for over one and one-half million dollars and to oust this company from doing business in Texas. No more important piece of legislation or one productive of better results than this law has been enacted in recent years, and in considering the splendid victory won by the attorney general in that case due credit should be given Mr. Looney for his admirable work in placing upon the statute books the law by virtue of which the principal evidence in this case was secured. One of the most splendid victories secured by him was in effecting the passage of the one-board medical bill. Prior to the passage of this law each session of the legislature was characterized more or less by bickerings and jealousies of the different schools of medicine. This act places the entire medical profession, including all the schools, under one board, which may be composed of members of the different schools, and thus a very troublesome question was settled. The practical working of the law has been to elevate the standard of the medical profession in the state.

"Perhaps the most distinguished service rendered by Mr. Looney while a member of the senate was along moral lines. During his term of service he did more to perfect and strengthen the local-option law than any other member of that body. He was the author of the felony feature of the gambling law, which has made public gambling a thing of the past in Texas. He had secured the passage of this law by the senate prior to the assassination of Jeff McLain, the county attorney of Tarrant county. The bill was pending in the house of representatives at the time McLain was killed by a gambler, and thus its final passage was rendered easy and met with practically no opposition."

The foregoing quotations measurably indicate the broad and well taken opinions of Mr. Looney concerning matters of public importance, and his standing as a legislator and as a lawyer marked him as specially eligible for the office of attorney general of the state, to which position he was elected in November, 1912, and to which he brings most admirable equipment, ability and civic lovalty. In the primary election he defeated two strong and well supported candidates, and in the popular election he rolled up a most gratifying majority at the polls. He assumed the duties of office in January 1913, and bis administration is creditable to himself and of benefit to the state which he represents.

Mr. Looney married Miss Robena Pender, at Greenville, Texas, on March 17th, 1887. She is a daughter of Rev. H. B. and Frances (Sharkman) Pender, of of Rev. H. B. and Frances (Sharkman) Pender, of Jacksonville, Texas. And they have the following children: Lawrence P. Looney, a farmer of Commerce, Texas; Mai Fair, who married P. S. Ashburn, a merchant of Emory, Texas; and Benjamin F. Looney, Jr., a student. Mr. Looney has taken the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery degrees in Masonry.

Major William H. Long. No city in America is so fortunately situated as El Paso in possessing a combination of climatic conditions and many of the finest business and industrial resources found anywhere in the country. This combination of climate and business has attracted many enterprising citizens, and one of the most conspicuous of these is Major Long, who has been a resident of El Paso for twenty-seven years, is one of the largest owners of city property, and, though now retired, has always been a leader in business and civic undertakings.

William H. Long is a native of the state of Pennsylvania, having been born in London, in Franklin county, October 21, 1839. His father was Jacob Long, also a native of Pennsylvania and of Scottish descent, a farmer by occupation, who had a moderately successful career and who died in 1843. The maiden name of the mother was Mary Springer, who was born in Pennsylvania, her family being of Dutch stock. She had one daughter by her first marriage, and there were two sons and one daughter by her marriage with Mr. Jacob Long. Major Long had his early educational advantages in the schools of Pennsylvania and Illinois, his mother and family having moved out to the latter state when he was a child. He never got any further than the common schools and gave up his studies of books at the age of seventeen and from that forward was familiarized by constant practice with men and affairs. On leaving school his first regular employment was as a clerk in a general store at Mt. Carroll, Illinois, where he received the moderate wages of $10.00 per month. His occupation at the beginning of this work was as a chore boy, and during the four years spent in the store he familiarized himself with the stock and all the details of the business, and his next position, in 1860, was in the Carroll County Bank. In 1864 this bank was organized as the First National Bank of Mt. Carroll, and from a clerkship he was promoted through the different grades, remained with the bank for fifteen years and during the last five years was assistant eashier and one of the stockholders. In 1875 he sold out his interest in real estate. farms and stocks in and around Mt. Carroll, Illinois, and moved to the city of Chicago. He there became connected with the commission and brokerage business, which he continued for eight years with fair success. Then, in association with other Chicago men, he became interested in a zinc mine at Knoxville, Tennessee, and moved to that city as manager of the enterprise. After several years he moved out to San Francisco, California, on account of his wife's ill health. During the four years he spent on the Pacific coast, he was not engaged in any particular business. From San Francisco, Mr. Long came to El Paso in 1886, so that he has been a resident of this city for more than a quarter of a century, and has witnessed practically its development from a frontier village to a city of 50,000. He invested heavily in real estate during the early years of his residence, when property was sold at only a fraction of its present value, and thus became owner of some of the best lots and improved blocks in the downtown district of the city. During these years

William Hong

Mr. Long has identified himself with a number of El Paso's conspicuous undertakings. OTTO HEROLD. Not in one day is the reputation of a large hotel built up and extended throughout a state or country. In the entire southwest there is no hotel with a better reputation for general excellence than the Oriental of Dallas. A generation of travelling men have known and esteemed this old hostelry. It has always stood for the best standard of hotel comforts, convenience, and both home and business facilities. As the Oriental was supreme a quarter of a century ago, so it is today, apace with the growing development and improvement all over this country. The new Oriental is one of the finest hotels in the south, and in recent years its equipment and service have been improved and extended far beyond any point reached in previous years. This modern improvement of the Oriental is largely due to the general manager, who has directed the workings of this hotel for the past seven or eight years. Mr. Otto Herold through his connection with the Oriental is one of the ablest hotel men of the south, and for this reason, and for his public spirited activities in other directions is one of the foremost citizens of Dallas.

Otto Herold, first vice-president and general manager of the Oriental Hotel Association, also president of the Oriental Laundry Company, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, Oetober 9, 1875. His father was Commodore Ferd Herold, who was born in Wieshaden, Germany, and came to America in 1851. He first located at a town in Illinois, where he started a hottling works, and was first postmaster, and in 1869 came to St. Louis, where he engaged in the Mississippi River Steamboat business. He built the large and commodious steamboat the Cherokee was sold to the Eagle Packet Company, and her name changed to the City of Chester. The Ferd Herold is still running regular trips up and down the

Ditto Herold received his education in the St. Louis public schools, and in Smith's Academy of that city, and on completing his education in the Academy took a position with the Cherokee Packet Company as clerk. After four years of that experience he became a traveling salesman for the house of David Nicholson & Company, in the wholesale grocery trade. He represented this house over a large territory, and was an energetic and successful salesman for five years. He then was given the place of paying teller for the Liucoln Trust Company of St. Louis, and held that office for five years. No position in banking requires greater skill and quick knowledge of mankind than that of paying teller, and in his position during that five years Mr. Herold handled many millions of dollars, and established a record among the men of his profession for the ability to serve at almost lightning speed a long line of people waiting to have their checks eashed. All this he could attend to without an error. In 1904, after leaving the bank, Mr. Herold came to Dallas as an accountant for the Oriental Hotel Association. He was made manager in 1905, and has managed this establishment to the present time, having since heen elected to the office of first vice president.

death was during the period of his management that the old Oriental Hotel has undergone its chief improvements. When he came to Dallas the hotel was very much as it had been for many years, although even them known all over Texas as the one standard hotel. Both on the outside and inside the Oriental has undergone many changes since then. The interior has been remodeled throughout and the cost of remodeling has been about $100,000, and as a result the Oriental Hotel has become one of the best equipped structures of its kind in Texas and has resumed its old position as one of the noted landmarks of the city. In 1905 Mr. Herold was elected vice president as well as being retained was elected vice president as well as being retained was elected electres of the board of directors, as well as the large patronage of the hotel. During the year 1912 the Oriental has had some important accessions in equipment, including turkish baths of the most modern style, this improvement alone having cost over $800,000.

In 1966 Mr. Herold organized the Oriental Laundry Company, Incorporated, with a capital stock of $100,000. This company has established in Dallas the most up-todate laundry plant in the entire state, and it has facilities for taking care of not only all the hotel laundry, but for general patronage, and has done a large business since its establishment. Mr. Herold became president of this company at its beginning.

It is largely due to Mr. Herold that the Adolphus Hotel was brought to Dallas. The commission committee of Dallas, in its desire to establish another hotel in the city, cooperated and advised with Mr. Herold, to whom it submitted its general plans. After this, Mr. Herold went to St. Louis to see Mr. Busch, and that great capitalist, after Mr. Herold's full explanation, was convined of the possibility of such a project, and soon after purchased the site for the erection of the hotel. The hotel building, as every one knows, is one of the lofty and beautiful structures in the Dallas business district, and one of the finest hotel buildings anywhere in the country. When the building had been fully completed, Mr. and Mrs. Herold superintended the furnishing of the hotel throughout, even designing the kitchen, which is one of the most modern in the world.

Mr. Otto Herold married Miss Carolyn Bodmer, a daughter of William Bodmer of Cincinnati, Obio. They are the parents of one child, Alvin W. Herold, who was born October 27, 1903.

CAPT. WILEY PICKENS BROWN. A prominent factor in the citizenship of Texas since 1849, when he came to the Lone Star commonwealth as a child of twelve years with his parents, Capt. Wiley Pickens Brown is today one of the best known men of the eastern part of the state. His record in military and civil life, as a business man and financier, as a helpful public-spirited citizen and in social and fraternal circles, has been at all times such as to win him the regard, esteem and confidence of his fellow men, and no individual is deserving of greater commendation for his contributions to the welfare of the section in which he has resided for so many vers. He was born in Tallabachie county, Mississippi, December 12, 1357, and is a son of Col. William A. and Margaret (Turbeville) Brown.

Col. William A. Brown was a South Carolinian, born in Pendleton Distriet, in October, 1805. His father, David Forter Brown, a planter, owned a number of slaves and moved out to Alabama when William A. was a boy, and lived in Lauderdale county for several years, moving next to Mississippi, where he died in Tallahachie county, as did his wife. David Porter Brown died about 1845, having reached the age of about seventy-three years. He was likewise a native of South Carolina, as was his wife, Mary Anderson, after whose family the noted Andersonville was named. Grandfather Brown's family comprised David, Joseph, William A.; Mary, who married Doctor Stone; Julia, who became the wife of Moses White, and three other daughters.

Col. William A. Brown was a Mississippi militia colonel during the old training days and served as sheriff of Tallahachie county for several years. He was always a Democrat, and after coming to Texas, in 1849, was elected treasurer of Limestone county, prior to the war. He was located at old Springfield and had many cattle grazing over the prairies. He did not belong to any church, yet he believed strongly in their work and died a Christian man, in 1869. In the matter of Secession he encouraged it and aided and abetted the cause of the Confederacy in every possible way, furnishing his only son of sufficient age for a soldier. Colonel Brown married Margaret Turbeville, a daughter of Samuel Turbeville, of a French family which settled in Louisiaua, its posterity drifting into Wilkinson county, Mississippi. Grandfather Turbeville was a planter and married twice, rearing children by his first wife only, they being: Mrs. Brown and Jackson Turbeville, who died at twenty-one years of age. The children of Colonel and Mrs. Brown were as follows: Mary, who married J. J. Cullison and died at Fairfield, Texas; William Pinkney, who never reached mature life; Capt. Wiley P.; Laura C., who died single; Elizabeth, who married A. L. Steele and died in Limestone county; Albert G., who spent his life as a farmer and died here; Joseph H., who was also a farmer and died in Limestone county, and David Hudson, who died at the age of two years. The mother of these children was born in 1816, and died at the age of eighty-two years.

Capt. Wiley P. Brown grew up around old Springfield, then the county seat of Limestone county, the family having made the journey here by wagons and crossing the Mississippi river at Memphis on a flatboat. The trip was made without incident of unusual character, and the company included Hudson Johnson and family, the brother-in-law of Colonel Brown. Captain Brown spent his youthful activities on his father's ranch and attended the log schoolhouse of the community and before becoming of age took a clerkship in a store at the county seat for Col. J. R. Henry, a wealthy man of this section. He succeeded this employment as clerk and bookkeeper for Oliver Brothers up to the outbreak of the Civil war, when he raised a company in connection with Major Farrar and was elected first lieutenant. The company rendezvoused at Waco and was there to become a part of Colonel Parson's regiment, but was subsequently dissolved by Captain Farrar and Lieutenant Brown then returned to Springfield. Here he attempted to join Wall's Legion, forming at Galveston, but could not get in and subsequently offered himself as a private in Captain Shropshire's Company, Colonel Nichols' Regiment. This was a six months regiment and when his time was up Captain Brown returned home and found a company organizing, joined it, and with it marched to the front. At Old Boston the company was reorganized and Captain Brown was elected first lieutenant under Captain McGee, Col. T. C. Bass' Regiment of cavalry, the Twentieth Texas. The captain soon died and Captain Brown was made captain of the company and remained so through to the end of the war.

From Old Boston the regiment went to Fort Smith, Arkanass, then to Little Rock and by forced march to Arkanass Post, but reached there too late to prevent its fall. The command then joined Price's army in Northern Arkanasa and took part in the battles of Prairie Grore and Payetteville, and then went back again to Fort Smith and to Little Rock. It remained there until December, 1862, when ordered north again, and when it reached Van Buren, Arkanasa, the regiment was dismounted, this being the Twentieth Texas, Dismounted Cavalry, and went into winter quarters at Fort Smith. In the spring the regiment was assigned to duty in the Indian Territory, very much to its chagrin and regret, although it did valuable service there for some months, fighting the "Pin's Indians, a tribe of Pederals. Later, in July, 1863, it engaged in battle with General Blunt's Federal troops at Honey Springs, where the regiment lost heavily on both sides in killed, wounded and prisohers taken, and was subsequently engaged in patrol and guard duty in sections of the country around Buffalo Gap and Fort Washta, Indian nation, until ordered again into Louisiana. The command failed to reach Mansfield in time for that campaign, but proceeded on south into Louisiana and Texas and was disbanded at Houston.

Captain Frown reached home somewhat discouraged and disheartened and little disposed to resume eivil be with any certainty of success. He began trading in stock, and in the spring of 1866 turned his attention to merchandise with Capt. J. W. Stephens, his fatherinal. The store was situated in Springield, and the firm of Stephens & Brown did business for twelve years with reasonable success. About this time the H. & T. C. Railway built through the county and the county seat was removed to Groesbeck, and in 1873 the firm moved from Mexia to the county seat. They closed out here and after an attempt to collect the remaint of the business of the old firm, Captain Brown entered political life.

He was elected county treasurer of Limestone county in 1876 and served in that office six years, and was then elected county clerk, a capacity in which he acted ten years, succeeding S. D. Walker and being succeeded by J. F. Gwines. On retiring from office, Captain Brown entered the drug business with his son, W. W. Brown, and the firm of W. P. & W. W. Brown did business for two years when the senior member sold out to the junior. In the meantime Captain Brown had secured some farming interests and did something toward the development of farms from the raw lands he owned. He also helped to organize the Oliver Bank and was a director of it for several years. In political matters he has ever been a Democraf.

Captain Brown was married at Springfield, May 25, 1864; to Miss Mary Stephens, a daughter of Capt, J. W. Stephens and Rhoda (Wilcox) Stephens, the former born in Georgia and the latter in Vermont. They came from Mississippi to Texas, where Captain Stephens died in 1881 and his wife in 1899, their children being: Mary; Lewis; John; Martin; Charley; Alice, the wife of D. A. Waller; and Clara, who married David Strain. To Captain and Mrs. Brown the following children were born: W. W., a physician of Groesbeck; Wiley P., Jr., of Okmulgee, Oklaboma; Porter P., of Wace; Frauk F., 10 Capania W., a physician of recomberg Wiley P. Jr., of Wichita Palls; Levile L., of Chemlege W. Wor Frunk F., of Wichita Palls; Levile L., of Groenbeck; John, also of this place; Marion M., of Mexia; Howard, who died here leaving no issue; Lena A., wife of J. A. Walker of Groenbeck, and Mary Pearl, the wife of R. L. Reese, of Corsicana.

JESSE NECUSOUS PYLE, M. D. One of the physicians and well established and with a reputation that has now extended beyond the immediate vicinity is Dr. Pyle, proprietor of the sanitarium and with a large practice both in medicine and surgery.

Jesse H. Pyle was born November 1, 1871, at Princeton, Kentucky, a son of Jesse Wilson and Harriet Ellen Pyle. Dr. Pyle is of cosmopolitan lineage, but of old American stock. His grandmother was a Virginian and a descendant of King James I. His great-grandfather was a chief surgeon and served with that rank under Washington in the Revolutionary war. The name Pyle is found throughout the United' States. Dr. Pyle's mother was of a southern family, and many of its members were prominent planters and slaveholders before the war. Jesse W. Pyle, the father, was born in Illinois, while his wife was a native of Kentucky. The father was a stockman and farmer, and in 1883 moved to Texas, locating in Fanuin county, where he continued as a farmer and stockraiser until a good old age. On retiring he lived with his children, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. William Wells, at Tishmingo, Oklahoma, at the age of eighty years, in ahout 1909. The mother died December 13, 1911.

Dr. Pyle, who was one of the younger members of the family, was liberally educated, first in the public schools and later at Burleson College in Greenville, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1897. He began teaching school at the age of seventeen, teaching twenty-one branches. His medical studies were begun in Barnes Medical College, St. Louis, where in 1906 he received the degree of M. D. He located for practice at Wolfe City, Texas, but in 1907 interrupted his practice to continue his studies in the National University at St. Louis and also took special courses at Chicago and in New York, after which, in 1911, he located at Mineral Wells. Dr. Pyle is well equipped both by talent and training for the treatment of all diseases in both medicine and surgery, and has a twostory sanitarium at Mineral Wells, with ample accommodations, and with a staff of trained assistants and nurses. A fact worthy of note in this connection is that in the thirteen years which he has served at the operat-

As to politics, Dr. Pyle has always supported the Democratic principles. His fraternal affiliations are with the Woodmen of the World, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias and his membership is also found with the Commercial Club of Minara! Wells. His clurch is the Partist.

Two children have been born to the marriage of Dr. and Mrs. Pyle, Miss Faula Juanita, born June 17, 1901, and Tom Short Pyle, born November 19, 1906. Both are now attending school. Dr. Pyle, by reason of his professional experience,

Dr. Pyle, by reason of his professional experience, declares that no community has a higher average of health than that of Mineral Wells. He evidences the fact that few children die in this community, and the cemetery is filled with the graves mostly of the aged among the imbalitants, while the majority of deaths are found among the temporary sojourners, those who have delayed their coming to this resort too long. Dr. Pyle intends to make Mineral Wells his permanent home, and with a good practice and a high standing among the local citizenship has every reason to be satisfied with career.

WILLIAM H. WHISLER. Former mayor of Rosenberg, Mr. Whisler is an old-time railroad man of Texas, and is now one of the useful and energetic business men of Fort Bend county.

In Areadia, Hamilton county, Indiana, William H. Whisler was born on September 18, 1863. When he was twenty-one years of age he came to Texas, and that great state has since had no more loyal citizen than he. He is the son of Benjamin and Mary (Stokes) Whisler, of German descent, and both natives of Pennsylvania. They moved to Indiana at an early day, and the father was a farmer all his life, first in Indiana, and later in Jasper county, Iowa, having moved there when his son William was three years old. The great-grandparents of the Rosenberg citizen can be regreted and useful life, though he was a man who never sought applause. He and his wife are buried at Prairie City, Iowa. Very broad in his religious views as in everything else, the father late in life joined the Dunkards church, of which the mother was also a member.

Her father was a stock raiser on a large scale, and the paternal side of the family, include many merchants, all her uncles having followed that vocation. John H. Fisher of Waco was one of the leading business men of that city. Mrs. Whisler's father is de-ceased, and her mother is still living. The latter's father, Thomas Slack, lived to be ninety years old and was a very wealthy man.

At the outbreak of the Civil war he east his sympathies with the South and became the organizer of the Milam County Greys, of which he was elected captain, the company being assigned to the Fifth Texas Regiment, Hood's Brigade. While serving in the latter capacity, in charge of his regiment at the battle of Chickamauga, he received a severe wound. in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Kemp.

Madison James Poole. The incumbent of the office of sheriff of Falls county since 1906, Madison James Poole, has established an admirable record, both because of his fearlessness as an officer and his high executive talents, and through his services has proved markedly the value and necessity of long practical training for the higher officials of county government. Although born in Alabama, he is by long residence and training a thorough Texan, with all the energy and practical ability which that name implies.

Sheriff Poole was born in Lauderdale county, Alabama, August 20, 1870, and is a son of James M. and Josephine (Garner) Poole. His father, also a native of Lauderdale county, born in 1836, moved to Tennessee in 1873, and there passed the remainder of a long and useful career in agricultural pursuits. His death oc-curred in 1902. The mother was born in Tennessee in 1839, and died in 1900, there having been nine children in the family, as follows: Minnie, who is a resident of Ardmore, Oklahoma; Madison James, of this review; Lula, who is the wife of W. White, marshal of Mansfield, Oklahoma; Ida, who married W. S. Rogers, a prosperous farmer of Mansfield, Oklahoma; George, who is a salesman and resides at Gulfport, Mississippi; Hattie, Bennett and Lillian, who are deceased; and Nellie, who is the wife of E. T. Cain, a dairyman, and resides at Dallas, Texas.

Until he reached the age of seventeen years, Madison J. Poole attended the public schools of Tennessee, to which state he had been taken by his parents as a child of three years. He then spent three years in agricul-tural pursuits, and when twenty years of age came to Texas and located on a farm in Bell county, in which vicinity he continued as a tiller of the soil for one year. Mr. Poole then accepted a position working on the county roads, and after four years' experience in Bell county was placed in charge of a convict road gang, in Falls, where he had his first experience in dealing in Falls, where he had its first experience in dealing with criminals. He was thus employed for ten years, and in 1896 came to Falls county. His reputation as a man who could accomplish results had preceded him, and here he was given entire charge of the grading crew and of the convicts of Falls county, and for ten years acted in the capacity of deputy sheriff. His faithful, fearless and efficient service in this office won him universal commendation and in 1906 he became the successful candidate of the Democratic party for the office of sheriff of Falls county. Re-elections have since been given him in 1908, 1910 and 1912, and he has always shown himself the kind of an officer to be depended upon in the solving of knotty problems, of which he has taken hold with determination, vim and bravery. Sheriff Poole is an active and energetic Democrat, and a hard worker in the ranks of his party in Falls county. His fraternal connections are with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and he has a large acquaintance and many friends throughout this section. among men of all ranks and conditions of life and of all political parties. He owns his own residence at Marlin. and has always supported beneficial measures, taking an active interest in business affairs as a member of the Chamber of Commerce. When he takes a vacation from his ardnous duties, he is usually accompanied by his fishing rod or his gun, and it is seldom that he returns from an excursion without he bears some trophy of the woods or stream. Sheriff Poole's family is iden-tified with the Baptist church, to the movements of which he has been a liberal donator.

On August 29, 1906, Sheriff Poole was married at Lott, Falls county, to Miss Mattie Cain, who was an orphan. To this union there has come one son,-Gar-

L. M. Ballowe. Not yet thirty years of age, Mr. Ballowe has achieved a position which reflects credit upon his steadfastness of character and purpose. He is a young man of able qualities of mind, and has the courage of his thought. Coming of an old and illustrious family on both sides of the house, his career gives promise of being in accord with that of his fathers and others whose names and efforts have been identified with much that is worthy in the Texas past.

Leigh Millican Ballowe was born in Brazoria, Texas, October 14, 1884, and is the son of John A. and Lillian Millican Ballowe, both parents being natives of Texas. The paternal grandfather, Samuel Leonard Smith Ballowe, was one of the early settlers of Brazoria county, and a prominent figure in his community. He was present at the first Masonic meeting ever held in Texas. He was a veteran of the Mexican war, and subsequently served throughout the Civil war with the rank of captain. In Fort Bend county, he was owner of a large plantation, and operated with slave labor. The paternal ancestry is of English origin, and a large estate in the Ballowe name is now and for many years has been in chancery in England.

Lillian Millican, the mother of the Richmond attorney, was a daughter of C. C. Millican, who was born in North Carolina. He went overland to California in and remained on the coast for four or five years digging gold. He returned to Texas, and another side of his experience was in driving cattle along the famous Chisholm trail. He was very successful in his operations, both in mining and in the cattle business, and finally settled on a large plantation in Brazoria county, where he was engaged in the raising of fast horses and in farming with his large retinue of slaves. He bred and raised on his estate the famous running mare, Queen Esther, who broke the world's record in the early eighties. He was elected county treasurer of Brazoria county, during the reconstruction era. His death occurred in 1897. C. C. Millican was a direct descendant of Col. Andrew Millican of Revolutionary fame, and one of seven brothers who came to America from Scotland, and founded the family on this side of the Atlantic. These brothers were all members of the noted Scotch clan of Millican. The maternal grandmother's father was named Spencer, and was a very large slave holder in Texas during the war, and three hundred of his negroes were released by the emancipation act.

John A. Ballowe, the father of L. M. Ballowe, was an attorney during his active years and one of the best known in his part of the state. His ability in private practice brought him prominently to the front in public affairs. In his youth he had taught himself to a great extent since his father's death had caused the burden of earing for his mother to fall upon his shoulders, and he had to contribute to the education of three younger brothers and a sister. In 1885 he was elected judge of Brazonia county, and served four years. After that he moved to Richmond, where he was engaged in law practice with Col. E. P. Peareson. During the administration of Governor Hogg, he represented Fort Bend county in the legislature serving two years. In 1896 he was elected county judge of Fort many four years, and an accordance of the men who drafted the original constitution of the Jay-Bird Democratic Association of Fort Bend county. Fraternally he was a Mason and had membership in the Eniscopal church.

In the family of the parents were five children, four now living, the others than L. M. Ballowe being mentioned as follows: Annie Masterson Ballowe, who is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and who was married in June, 1913, to E. L. Lancaster of Dallas; John Adriance Ballowe, who is private secretary to John M. Moore, congressman for the eighth district, and is also a lawyer by profession, now practicing law in Houston; Philip Pearson Ballowe, who is a member of the Law and the Art graduating class of the State University of 1913, and was quiz master in the Law Department in 1914, and Elmo Ballowe, who ided in infancy.

Leigh Millican Ballowe, attended the public schools of Richmond, then at St. Edward's College in Austin, and later the law department of the State University. Prior to his regular law course he read in the offices of D. R. Peareson, and S. C. Russell at Richmond. Having been admitted to the bar he began the practice of his profession in Richmond, August 11, 1908, and has always practiced alone. While he enjoys an extensive and growing practice in all courts, he prefers the criminal branch of the law and is specializing in this line. From his early manhood, he has been active in Democratic politics, and at the present time is secretary of the Jay-Bird Democratic Association of Fort Bend county. In 1912 he made a strong race for the office of district attorney of the twenty-third judicial district, being defeated by only a small margin. Mr. Ballowe was a member of the board of school trustees of the independent district of Richmond, and while in that position he took a prominent part in the election and in the business negotiations connected with floating the bonds for the erection of the splendid new school building in Richmond now in course of construction. Mr. Ballowe did all the work connected with this enterprise. He resigned from his place on the school board, in order to make the race for district attorney.

On November 24, 1940, Mr. Ballowe matried Miss Sue May Gregg, only daughter of Hon. A. W. Gregg, congressman for the seventh congressional district with residence at Palestine. Their two children are Mary Sue Ballowe and John Gregg Ballowe. Fraternally Mr. Ballowe is a Royal Arch Mason, and he and his family belong to the Episcopal Church. He at one time was superintendent of the Sunday school, and was also for several years ehoir director in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He takes much interest in music, dating from his college of the several threat of the state of the New School of the Church. He takes much interest in music, dating from his college of the several of the state of the New School of the Sc

In January, 1914, he removed to Cuero, Texas, and is now engaged in the law practice at that place.

Hon. James B. Gibson. One of the most prominent men in the husiness and political world of Peccos, Texas, is the Hon. James B. Gibson, the present mayor of that place. He is one of the prominent lawyers of fleeter county and has been a resident of Peccos for many years. He comes of plomes took, he may be the property of the property of the county when the property of the property

The father of James B. Gibson was Robert A. Gibson and he was a native of Tennessee. He came to Texas in 1845 and joined the army of General Taylor, serving in his command throughout the war with Mexico. After the close of the war he located in Burnet county and was there married. He engaged in stock raising and farming there until 1861, when he moved to Gillespie county. Here be followed stock raising for Gordine to the comment, Mr. Gibson, although the was fifty years of age at the time, volunteered his services and joined a battalion of frontier troops, serving with them until the end of that war. Just after the close of the war he, with a hand of twenty-five men, crossed the border to Mexico, and here they were arrested as spies and thrown into most of the market of the services and control of the services of the war into stocks and chained in their prisons, Mr. Gibson who was a fuent speaker of Spanish, managed in some way to make his escape. Although he was handicapped by a ball and chain he was almost sing, but in attempting to cross the Rio Grande he was short and killed by a Mexican soldier.

The mother of James B. Gibson was Celestine (Banta) Gibson, and she traces her ancestry back over a period of three hundred years. Her forehears came to New Jersey from Amsterdam and the banks of the Zuyder Zee, and these sturdy Hollanders were among the first settlers of the new colony to the south of New York. When this part of the country became pretty well settled up, some of the family emigrated to Kentucky, making the long journey on horseback and on foot, settling near Boonesborough, over one hundred years ago. Later they made their way into Indiana and there set-tled near Bloomington. Mrs. Gibson, mother of J. B. Gibson, was born in Indiana, at Bloomington, and she remembers very well how as a child of eleven years she walked beside the oxen drawing the heavily loaded emi-grant wagons in which her mother and father were moving their household goods to Texas. They had their milch cows and all their property that was movable and the journey was a perilous one. Upon their arrival Mr. Banta took up six hundred and forty acres of land in Fannin county, and here they settled. It was in the days when Indian uprisings were frequent and the Banta family endured many of the trials and dangers that their ancestors had suffered in the days when eivilization was blazing the trail across the Alleghany mountains. Mrs. Gibson comes of a family that has given a number of prominent men to this country, among whom may be mentioned an uncle, David Banta, who became dean of the law department of the University of Indiana, Mrs. Gibson is living today in Reeves county, Texas, and although aged eighty-two is as bright and courageous as she was in the early days which she remembers so well.

James B. Gibson was born in Burnet county, Texas, on the 23rd of December, 1857. He was the oldest of the four children of his parents, the other three being Roxie, who is the widow of James Sharpless and is now postmistress of Lagoona, Texas; Conn Gibson, who was two years younger than James Gibson, was a railway contractor and was shot to death at Carlsbad, New Mexico, in 1894; Mary Louise Gibson died at the age of nineteen years. James Gibson received his education in the common schools of south Texas and since means for an education were limited, both on account of the scarcity of money and the lack of good schools, he went to work at the age of sixteen. His first pay was earned as a cowboy and at this early age he drove cattle across the state of Texas and into Kansas. He then went to farming in Kerr county, Texas, in which he was engaged for about three years. The old military spirit which had inspired the father now began to show in the son and he joined the frontier battailon, becoming a member of Company C, which was under the command of Captain G. W. Arrington, and was stationed at old Fort Griffith, in Shackelford county. In 1878 the company was transferred to the headwaters of the Brazos river in Blanco canyon, where there was plenty of active work. James Gibson was promoted over the heads of older companions to the rank of second sergeant, both for bravery and efficiency. He did frontier duty for three years and during this time endured untold hardships, such as going without water for forty-eight hours and without very much in the shape of food for three days, during which he and his companions were pursuing Indians who were on the warpath. In 1886 he resigned from the command and returned to his home and mother.

They now sold their home in Gillespie county and removed to Pecos, in Reverse county. For two years Mr. Gilson was engaged in ranching and stock raising across the border hear Seven Rivers, New Mexico. In the fall of 1888 he was elected to the office of county and district clerk of Reeves county, and his services in this office were so satisfactory that he was re-elected for seven terms, serving fourteen years in the office. During this time he took up the study of law and in 1890 was admitted to the bar.

Now begins a new phase in the life of Mr. Gibson. He was elected to the office of attorney for Reeves county and served for two terms. He has been practicing law since that time, giving part of his time, however, to his ranching interests. He is a member of the mr of Gibson & Wilson, and they have one of the lest ijractices in the county. He purchased his present ranch in 1892, in partnership with his brother-in-law, George Mansfield, and they engaged in stock raising on a large scale in Reeres county. This partnership continued for six years and then Mr. Gibson sold his interests for the sum of seventy thousand dollars. He invested this money in real estate in Peccs, owning both residences and business blocks, his own home, which is worth about ten thousand dollars, being his property. Mr. Gibson was elected mayor of Peccs in April, 1912, Mr. Gibson was elected mayor of Peccs in April, 1912, and is filling this office to the satisfaction of the citizens

In 1894 Mr. Gibson was married to Miss Ney Mansfield, who was born in the southern part of Texas, and is a daughter of George T. and Amalda (McKinney) Mansfield. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gibson, but they have adopted little five-year-old Leo Ney McDaniel, and it is their chief desire to bring her up and educate her as though she were their own child.

WILLIAM A. BATES, M. D. Since establishing himself as a physician in the Purdon community of Nevarro county Dr. Bates has been one of the men of most service to the community, not only professionally but through his kindly helpfulness and ready enthusiasm for all that mean uplift and advancement. Dr. Bates is a real pioneer of the west, has spent many years in Texas, and his experiences led him throughout the northvol 1V-20. west during the years when that country was fiercely contested by the Indian tribes. His home has been in Navarro county since 1887, and the previous year was spent in Breckinridge, Texas, where he did his first medical practice in this state.

Dr. Bates came to Texas from Arizona, where for two years he was a physician at Quijotoa. Previous to his Arizona residence he had been in California, working as a prospector and looking out for a permanent location. In Montana he had spent several years, going out in 1876 and finally reaching Miles (City in 1879, and was in different parts of that country until 1882, when he went to Fort Benton and crossed into the Canadian northwest, following up the Saskatchewan river, and in that vicinity first did prospecting as a part of his profession. He was with au expedition of some twenty persons, and altogether spent two years on the Canadian side. From there he moved to California, thence to Arizona, and finally to Texas.

Before going to Montana Dr. Bates spent a year in the mining region of Deadwood, Dakota, and was with some of the freighting outfit from Cheyenne, Bismarck and Fort Pierre on the Missouri river. This account brings Dr. Bates back to his first residence in Texas, where he spent a portion of his early manhood. He had gone north from Sherman, Texas, passing through Indian Territory and Kansas over the old Chisholm trail with a number of cattle men. At Ogalalla, Kansas, he parted company with the cattle men, and continued his journey with a freighting outfit of a dozen persons to Deadwood, passing through Cheyenne. On this journey while in the Spearfish locality of Dakota he met a haymaker who was cutting grass with his Winchester rifle strapped to his machine. At that time the Sioux In-dians, with Sitting Bull at their head, were on the war path, Mr. Bates went back and forth between shipping points of the Missouri river and Deadwood with various trade outfits, and as a physician had a great deal of professional practice along the way, since there were very few resident physicians in that country. At Fort Meade he saw the old Dun horse with thirteen bullet wounds in the body that escaped from the Custer battlefield on the Big Horn river. He also was acquainted with Johnny Bruerierre, a half breed Sioux scout, the only man who made his escape from that horrible massacre. Although the red men were still on the war path while Dr. Bates was in the northwest, he never had personal encounter with the followers of old "Rain in the Face," "Gaul," and "Yellow Dog," the big chiefs of the tribe under Sitting Bull.

Dr. Bates had first come to Texas in 1870, and worked as a cowboy in different parts of northern Texas until he started on his trip to the north. He was born in White country, near Sparta, Tennessee, April 17, 1852. From the age of three until sixteen he had lived in Sharpe country. His early education came from the country schools of Arkanusas, and he was of school age while the Civil war was in progress. His father was Dr. James H. Bates, who died soon after the war at his home some twenty miles north of Pocahontas, near old Walnut Hill. The senior Dr. Bates was a native of Georgia, and had married in Tennessee Louisa Johnson, who died in Arkanusas. Their children were: Madison, who lives in Arkanusa; Jr. William A.; Sam H., of Arkansas; Thomas and Eugene, who both live in the old home locality of Arkansas. Dr. Bates is the only one living in Texas.

It was while in Montana that Dr. Bates took up the study of medicine, and practiced without a license, a course which was then legal and professional in that new and frontier community. During 1876 he spent a few months in the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, and received a license to practice in Texas from the Brownwood Medical board. During 1898 he was a student in the Fort Worth Medical College. On locating in Navarro county Dr. Bates practiced on a certificate from the State of Texas. Professionally his career has been extremely successful. He has a natural talent for surgery, and has acquired a reputation as a cancer spe-cialist and has performed many successful operations. In obstetrical cases his fame is widespread, and his services have been employed by two generations of mothers in this community.

When Dr. Bates came to Purdon there were only two stores and only a few homes on the south side of the railroad. His part has been a valuable factor in the upbuilding of the business section of the town, where he for some years had a general mercantile and drug store. Since 1902 he has served as postmaster of Purdon, and a part of his success has also come from his work as a practical farmer since 1900. He takes both pleasure and profit from the raising of thoroughbred Duroc hogs, having obtained the nucleus of his stock from the herd at Morgan and the Belcher ranch at Whiteright.

Dr. Bates was married at Quijotoa, Arizona, December 16, 1885, to Miss Hattie I. Jones. Her father, Leonard Jones, came from Ohio and lived at Tombstone. Leonard Jones married Rebecca Lawrence. Arizona. Their children besides Mrs. Bates were Ed T. of Tucson, Arizona, and Phebe, wife of Will Pierce, also of Tucson. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Bates are: Alva May, the wife of J. A. Mitchell of Purdon; and Winifred, wife of D. E. Dickson, of Dawson, Texas, who has a daughter Betsy Jane.

Dr. Bates affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has passed all the chairs of his lodge at Corsicana. His church is the Presbyterian. So far as known Dr. Bates is the founder and active spirit in the maintenance of the only small girls' singing class in the United States. Though not a musician himself, his enthusiasm and management have brought his class to a high standard of proficiency, so that it has won prizes over other advanced singing classes in the county. His work in this direction is only one of the many kindly and disinterested services for which his community has good reason to be grateful for the presence of this pioneer and excellent doctor.

Dr. Robert Fletcher Weathersbee, M. D. There are few active Texas physicians who combine the experience of the pioneer doctor with the modern activities of the profession in a more interesting manner than Dr. Weathersbee, who for nearly fifty years has been identified with medical prac-tice in this state, and since 1883 has held a high place both as a physician and citizen at Bedias in Grimes county. When he located in Bedias more than thirty years ago the place had only three small stores, and was thirty miles from a railroad. All the physicians with whom he consulted and associated in those early days have since passed away, and he is now the dean and veteran of his profession in that part of Texas, and although venerable in years still has the confidence and esteem of a large practice and is as proficient as many younger men.

Dr. Robert Fletcher Weathersbee was born in Martin county, North Carolina, June 19, 1839, and before taking up the successive stages of his own interesting career it would be well to refer briefly to his family. His grandfather was Thomas Weathersbee, and it is an unusual distinction that Dr. Weathersbee had only one grandfather on both maternal and paternal sides. Thomas Weathersbee was born also in North Carolina and died there between sixty-five and seventy years of age. He married Sarah Hyman, and of their sixteen children all grew up and reared families, and their posterity is now scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Canadian line to the Gulf of Mexico. The men of the family have devoted themselves to farming, and since the war practically none of them have appeared prominently in political affairs. The father of Dr. Weathersbee was John T. Weathersbee, a farmer, who was born in Martin county, North Carolina, in 1818, and in 1844 moved to Mississippi and spent his remaining years as a prosperous farmer and planter at Canton in that state, where he died in 1849. He was brought up on a plantation of slave-holders, and never became identified with public affairs. He was a Methodist in religion. John T. Weathersbee married his cousin, Rosalie F. A. Weathersbee, a daughter of grandfather Thomas Weathershee already mentioned. She died at Bedias, Texas, in 1885, and Dr. Weathershee is the only son and child.

Dr. Weathersbee was five years of age when his parents moved to Canton, Mississippi, in the fall of 1844, and he there grew to man's estate. His literary education was acquired in that vicinity, and he began the study of medicine at Camden, Mississippi, under Dr. T. L. Cotton. Subsequently his preparation was advanced by a course of lectures in the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, and he was graduated in 1860 from the New Orleans School of Medicine, an institution which the New Orleans School of Medicine, an institution which became extinct during the war. After a brief practice in Lawrence county, Mississippi, Dr. Weathershee responded to the call of patriotism and entered the Confederate army as a private soldier in Company G of the Eighteenth Mississippi Infantry under Captain McWillie and Colonel Burt. The regiment was attached to General Barksdale's Brigade in McLaw's Division of the Virginia army. It reached Virginia in time to take part in the first great battle of Manassas, and also fought at Leesburg. Soon after the latter engagement Dr. Weathershee was discharged on account of ill ment Dr. Weathersbee was discharged on account of ill health, returned home, and having recuperated rejoined the army, but this time in the cavalry wing. He was in Company G of Colonel Wirt Adams' Regiment, and thereafter fought with the Tennessee army in the great campaigns of Alabama and Georgia and Tennessee. His most arduous experience was in the Atlantic campaign, which began at Lookout Mountain and engaged him in almost constant fighting for a hundred days, in-cluding the battles at Resaca, New Hope Church, Dalton, Peach Tree Creek, and both the heavy engagements before Atlanta. After the fall of Atlanta his command was sent back under General Hood into Tennessee, and there took part in two of the severest struggles of the entire war, at Franklin and Nashville. Following the latter battle Dr. Weathersbee was placed on detached service with his company as an escort to General Loring, and then rejoined his regiment. His command was dishanded in Alabama in the midst of the woods and received its parole from General Canby.
Dr. Weathersbee did not remain in Mississippi long after the war, and in 1866 came to Texas and settled near Woodville in Tyler county. He practiced his pro-fession there and at Cold Springs in San Jacinto county until 1883, when he moved to Bedias, and has since given his services as a capable and faithful family physician to a large number of people in the northern part of Grimes county. His profession has been his sole vocation and ambition, and through it he has fulfilled his destiny and done much for the cause of humanity.

Dr. Weathersbee was married near Cold Springs, Texas, in 1869, to Miss Fannie Stocking, daughter of Rev. E. A. Stocking, who came from Mobile, Alabama. Mrs. Weathersbee died at Bedias in 1900 and the seven children of their marriage are briefly mentioned as follows:
Mrs. Cora Bishop, of Bedias; Walter E., of Del Rio, Texas; Mrs. Pearl MeIntyre of Navasota; Robert Eugene L., of Bedias; Mrs. Vera Moore of Sayers, Texas; Lamar of Electra, Texas; Mrs. Ethel Bullard, of Madison county. In 1908 Dr. Weathersbee married at Bedias Mrs. Ella Merrett, a daughter of Col. Richard H. Harrison, one of the pioneers in this section of Texas. She is a sister of two well known physicians of Bryan, and the Harrison family lineage and history will be found in a sketch of one of these physicians. Mrs. Weathersbee has two children: Mrs. Hattie Speer, of Louisville, Texas; and Percy Merrett of Bedias.

Dr. Weathersbee has fraternity relations with Hannibal Boone Camp of the United Confederate Veterans, and at one time was surgeon of the camp and is one of the few surviving members who still respond to roll call. He is also active in Masonry, having affiliation with the Jerusalem, No. 3, the Lodge, Chapter and Council and the Eastern Star, and is a Past Master of Bedias Lodge, No. 651. In religion he is a Methodist, has served his church as trustee, and to his community of Bedias besides his work in his profession has contributed service as a trustee of the public school.

DR. BEV HARRISON. How the enterprise of one man stimulates and upbuilds the economic and commercial resources of a community is well illustrated in the case of Dr. Bev Harrison, who formerly practiced medicine but is now engaged in farming and stock raising and other activities at Bedias in Grimes county.

Born in Grimes county in 1874, Dr. Harrison is still living on the same farm where he grew up and got his education. After attending the local schools he followed his ambition to enter medicine by beginning the study of that science in 1895 in Nashville University in Tennessee, and was graduated in medicine there in 1897. For two years he practiced at Stone City in Brazos county, spent one year in the city of Bryan, and then returned to his old home locality in Grimes county and was actively engaged in practice for seven years, when he abandoned his profession to take up his more important interests as a farmer and stock raiser. Harrison is now one of the largest feeders of cattle in Grimes county, and the importance of Bedias as a market is largely influenced by the forty or more carloads of cattle which every season are shipped out of this section as a result of his enterprise. In his business relation he is associated with M. M. Hall under the firm name of Harrison & Hall. Not alone in creating a market at Bedias has he been influential, but has performed much important work in creating permanent resources along agricultural lines. Dr. Harrison has a thousand acres under cultivation in this section, and gives empolyment to twenty-five families, who produce cotton as a chief crop. Due to his management and his capital some eight hundred acres of timberland has been cleared up, and he has constructed and provided fifteen houses for his tenants. His farms lie between Madisonville and Bedias Roads and the Iola and North Zulch Roads.

Dr. Bev Harrison was the youngest child of the late Richard Harrison, who settled in Grimes county in 1854, coming from Tennessee. He brought his little family of wife and children across the country in a wagon from Davidson county. He was a native of Virginia, but grew up in Tennessee and married there Miss Lucy Bishop, a daughter of Edmund Bishop. Edmund Bishop, who died just before his widow and children emigrated to Texas, was born in Lunenburg county, Virginia, about 1776, had a very limited education, served from Virginia as a soldier in the war of 1812, and left his home state in 1835 to locate in Tennessee. He married Miss Sallie Bowers, a daughter of Giles Bowers of Lunenburg county. Their children were: Elvira, who died near Bedias as Mrs. George Harrison; George T., who died in Tennessee; Caroline E., who married Atlas Phillips and died in Northern Mississippi; Lucy G., who is the widow of R. H. Harrison and lives at Bedias; Benjamin F., a farmer near Bedias; Sarah C., who was four times married and is now Mrs. Frank Ellington of Belton, Texas. Edmund Bishop was a son of Edmund Bishop, Sr., who was born in Ireland and came to America before the Revolutionary war. His children were Jerry, who moved to Georgia and died there; Joseph, who came to Texas in 1836; and Edmund, the grandfather of Dr.

Richard Harrison after his marriage and removal from Tennessee located in Grimes county at a place within view of his son, Dr. Harrison's present place. He was about two miles from what was then known as Bedias store now the town of Bedias. There Richard Marrison reared his family of ten children, all but one of whom grew up, and became a stock man and farmer and one of the large property owners in that section. He was never active in politics, and confined his par-ticipation to voting. During the war he proved a faith-ful and efficient soldier of the Confederacy, and attained the rank of colonel before leaving the army. He was identified with no church, and had only one fraternal relation, that of the Odd Fellows.

Dr. Harrison among other interests is a stockholder and director in the Bedias Hardware Company, and is president of the Citizens Bank (unincorporated) of Bedias, which has a capital stock of fifteen thousand dollars. Business has proved his forte and the means by which he contributes his benefits to the community. He votes the Democratic ticket, but has attended few Masonic lodge at Bedias, the Royal Arch Chapter at Madisonville, No. 242, and the Trinity Commandery, No. 19, K. T., at Huntsville. He is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias at Navasota, Dr. Harrison was married in his home locality, December 8, 1901, to Miss Zula Isbell. She is one of the seven children of Samuel A. and Martha (Upchurch) Isbell, who came to Texas from Rome, Georgia. The six children of the Isbell Tilman, who died unmarried; Mrs. Harrison, who was born November 14, 1881; Aaron, a farmer in the vicinity of Bedias; Kieffer, of Jones county, Texas; May, wife of Edgar Allen of Mexia; and Fred of Bedias. Dr. Harrison and wife have two children: Lucy Loree and Willie Ionne.

AUBREY RODGERS. In the flourishing little community of Rockdale Aubrey Rodgers has a place of usefulness and of distinction as a man who in a few years has built up a fine business in the tinning, roofing and plumbing line, and is also now serving as fire marshal. A worker in sheet metal, Mr. Rodgers probably has no superior in his part of the state, and by his thorough competence in his trade, by business methods that have commended his work to the public, though he started in life without resources, he is now at the head of a good and growing concern.

Aubrey Rodgers was born at Farmington in Grayson county, Texas, January 10, 1871. His father, Albert W. Rodgers, born in Arkansas in 1836, held a commission as captain in the Confederate army under General Cabell, was for many years a minister of the Presbyterian beh, was for many years a minister of the Fresbyterian church, and now lives at Sulphur Springs. The mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Bush, was born in Virginia in 1843. Her father, Michael G. Bush, born in Virginia in 1802, after nine years of residence in Illinois came to Texas in 1854, bringing his wife and four children, three daughters and one son. Michael G. Bush was one of the ablest pioneers of Northern Texas, and a man whose leadership was evident in many ways. He owned the first machine for the cutting of grain or grass and drawn by horse power. By profession he was a surveyor, and in that capacity laid off the first town site at Sherman, and was also employed with the engineering corps of the Houston and Texas Central Railway and did much surveying and engineering supervision for that road. Albert W. Rodgers and wife had five children: Aubrey, Anna, Maggie, Minnie and Lillian.

Aubrey Rodgers grew up in Grayson county, graduated from the high school at Farmington in 1888, and for three terms was a student in the Fort Worth University. His early experiences were as a cowboy, and he spent three years on the great eattle ranges of Western Texas. Choosing a more stable occupation, he learned the trade of tinner, and worked as a journeyman at various localities, and under different employers until 1908. That year Mr. Rodgers opened a shop at Rockdale, in Milam county, and now supplies his tinning and roofing service to a large territory surrounding that town.

At Norman, Oklahoma, in 1899, Mr. Rodgers married At Norman, Obligational, in 1888, 311. According to Mille May Lyster, daughter of A. J. Lyster, of Childress, Texas. They are the parents of three children: Frederick Lyster, King Abbott, and Aubrey Lund. Mr. Rodgers has a good residence at Rockdale, and is one of the popular and public-spirited citizens. He is a Democrat in politics, is serving as fire marshal, and is elder of the Rockdale Presbyterian church. His fraternities are the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of the Maccabees.

JAMES W. McCARVER, M. D. It is only stating a fact to say that the medical profession as a class have always been alert in their vigilance and energetic in their practical efforts to improve the human welfare. While medical practice has been largely a matter of individual service, there has never been lacking those physicians, who, while best with particular cases, have also stood on watch over community wholesomeness, and when the enemy of disease has swarmed over the gates, have devoted themselves to the battle with all the zeal of oldtime military heroes. There are today hundreds of conscientious doctors, who, placing the interests of the whole above their immediate material concerns, are rendering invaluable service as leaders and workers in the public health movement.

In Brownwood and Brown county, the services of Dr. McCarver have been directed not only to attending a large private practice, but also the public health, and he has a record in that field which is distinctly creditable. For eight years he served as health officer of Brown county, and it was largely due to his practical advice and efforts that the city of Brownwood in 1912 won the first prize as the cleanest city under ten thousand population in Texas. The contest, which was statewide, was inaugurated and much of its work carried on among the school children. Dr. McCarver did much to stimulate the zeal of all the children in Brown county over the motto "Clean and Keep Clean," and led the work through all its phases during the period of the contest. Largely due to his activities, the Brown county schools in 1910 adopted the individual drinking cup, and in 1912 seventy sanitary toilets were installed in the different schools throughout the county.

Dr. McCarver is a physician who is well entitled to his degree of doctor of medicine, and might properly be given a degree as an operating surgeon, if such a degree were in common use. He is well equipped and has been specially trained in surgery, and both as a physician and surgeon has made a fine record during his career. James W. McCarver was born January 3, 1870, in Coryell, Coryell county, Texas. He was the oldest of ten children, five sons and five daughters of Joseph W. and Ella (Chambers) McCarver. The parents originally came from Mississippi, and the father moved from that state to Arkansas, where he was a volunteer in the Confederate army under General Price, serving throughout the war, and participating in a number of important engagements. After the war he returned home, again took up farming and stock raising, and in 1870 came to Texas and located in Coryell county. There he was engaged in farming and raising stock, and now he and his wife live retired at Gatesville. Dr. McCarver is descended from a family of Scotland, and three brothers including his great-grandfather came to America many years ago, locating in the southern states, where the family has since been well known. The doctor's father, and other members of the family, were planters and slave holders before the war.

Dr. McCarver grew up in Coryell county, attending the schools of Coryell City. His education was excellent both in literary courses and in medicine. After attend-ing the Sam Houston Normal School at Huntsville, he entered the University of Texas, where he was graduated entered the University of Texas, where he was graunated M. D. in 1898. For three years he practiced in his home town, and in 1901-02 was house surgeon at St. Mary's Indimary in Galveston. He then took a postgraduate course in surgical pathology, diseases of women, and general surgery, in the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. Since 1904. Dr. McCarver has hear in the surgery of the property of the surgery been in practice at Brownwood, and has filled an important place in the beneficent activities of this city.

Dr. McCarver recently secured the grounds, and with the best structures of the kind in the country as his models, made plans and specifications for the building of a private sanitarium in Brownwood. With its completion the doctor cares for his patients in one of the finest and best equipped sanitariums in the state, supplied with operating rooms and with accommodations for twenty-five patients in private rooms, besides his general ward. His facilities are now unexcelled for carrying on his work both in the surgical and general field of medicine,

Dr. McCarver is a director in the Coggan National Bank of Brownwood. In politics he is a Democrat, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order. His church is the Presbyterian, and he is now serving as one of the elders in that society. On December 29, 1898, at Coryell City, he married Miss Willie G. Sadler. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Sadler of Coryell, her father, now deceased, having been a farmer and stockman.

HARBERSON HUDSON. One of the oldest merchants at Rockdale is Harberson Hudson, who has been identified with the grocery trade in that locality for the past twenty years. He is one of the most capable merchants of Milam county, has made a thorough study of his work, meets the demands of the popular desires along his line, and is one of the men who, successful themselves, have stood for general advancement and improvement in this community.

Harberson Hudson was born in the state of Maryland October 20, 1865, a son of Major and May (Murry) Hudson. His father, who was born in Maryland in 1827, was a farmer by occupation, and on moving to Texas in 1867 settled at Caldwell in Burleson county. His death occurred in 1882. The mother, who was born in Maryland in 1828, died in 1904. The six children were: land in 1828, died in 1904. The six children were: Annie K., deceased; John Sidney, who lives in San An-

Annie R., deceased; John Staney, who lives in Sail Ab-gelo; Thomas L., deceased; Lizzie, now Mrs. W. D. Wells, of Rockdale; Harberson; and Lon. Harberson Hudson grew up in Burleson county, at-tended the public schools there and also the schools of Rockdale until sixteen years of age. His first experience in mercantile life was as clerk in a grocery store at Rockdale. By 1894, with his accumulated earnings and experience, he and his brother Lon started an independent business under the firm name of H. & L. Hudson, Grocers. Their store has long been recognized as the center of reliable merchandise, and as a going concern. The business now represents a better value than the stock and fixtures of other concerns in this county.

Mr. Hudson is a Democrat in politics, and is an active member of the Methodist church, having resigned the office of steward in 1909. He owns, besides his dwelling house, a half interest in one hundred acres of improved nouse, a man interest in one mandred actes of improved farm lands in Milam county. For his recreation he oc-casionally goes on a fishing trip, but his business and home and family are the objects of his chief care and attention.

At Rockdale, on November 7, 1894, Mr. Hudson married Della Elholm, daughter of John Elholm. They are the parents of two children: Lon and Agnes. Lon married Gladys Walker and lives in Dallas, where he is cashier for a large real estate company of that city. The daughter Agnes is a talented musician, was educated in that line, and is now a teacher of music at Sharpe, in Milam county.

RICHARD H. HARRISON, M. D. The Harrison family has a large representation in Texas, and Dr. Richard Henry Harrison located at Bryan in 1896, and has since been prominent not only in his profession but also in public affairs.

Richard Henry Harrison was born at Bedias, Grimes county, Texas, October 16, 1869. His father was Colonel Richard H. Harrison, a pioneer settler, and a man widely known in Grimes county. Grandfather Harrison, who had a family of fifteen children, and who died in Tennessee, was one of three brothers, all of whom came from Ireland to the United States. One of these was a lawyer, one a minister, while Grandfather Harrison combined the occupations of farming and teaching. Among his children were the following: Barney; Philip; Mont; John; Joseph; Colonel R. H.; Catherine, who married and spent her life in Arkansas; Bettie Duncan; and a Mrs. McKeever.

Colonel Richard H. Harrison came to Texas from Nashville, Tennessee, about 1850. The journey was made by wagon in company with a party of emigrants, and he settled at Bedias, in Grimes county, where for a number of years he was successful as a farmer and stock raiser. At the time of his coming to Texas he was a young married man, and he and his wife established their first home in the woods. By the work of his slaves and his own close personal supervision he improved a fine farm and gradually got into the stock business on a large scale, owning cattle by the thousands, hogs by the hundreds, which ran wild and pastured in the woods, and a great many horses. The output of his farm and ranch was driven to market across the country in the days before railroads and shipping points were generously distributed over Texas. In a public way he served in the office of justice of the peace, and as postmaster at Bedias. However, he was not active in politics. During the war he was appointed colonel and served with that rank in Texas, and at the close of the war had to give up his slaves and had also lost much by other necessary sacrifices.

Colonel Harrison married Miss Lucy Bishop, whose father, George Bishop, spent his life in Tennessee as a planter. Mrs. Harrison is now living at Bedias at a good old age. Her children are briefly mentioned as follows: Donie, who married Sam McWhorter and died at Pankey, Texas. Ned, who died at Bedias and left a at Pankey, Teass. Ned, who died at Bedias and left a family; Tobe, who died in the same locality leaving chil-dren; Emma, who married Thomas Spell, of Bryan; Ella, wife of Dr. Weathersbee, of Bedias; Mrs. Lucy McDougald, of Bryan; Willie, who married R. E. L. Up-church and died at Bedias; Dr. R. H.; and Beverly, of Bedias.

Dr. Harrison grew up in his native locality, had his father's plantation as the scene of his early associations, and his education was acquired partly in the local schools, and partly in the Agricultural and Mechanical College. Until he reached his majority he followed farming, and at the age of twenty-two took up the study of medicine in the University of Nashville. That insti-tution graduated him in 1896 as doctor of medicine, and he at once located in Bryan for practice. His interest in the profession, and his ambition to reach the highest possible degree of success therein has kept him a constant student, and he has taken post-graduate work in the New Orleans Polyclinic, the Chicago Polyclinic, and the New York Polyclinic. He is a member of the County Medical Society, and the Texas State Medical Society. Dr. Harrison also has a record as a public spirited citizen. In 1898 he was elected mayor of Bryan, and remained in the office five years, resigning it for what he considered a position offering still greater opportunity to serve the community as city health officer. While mayor many notable improvements were made in the city, including the surfacing of Main street with clay and rocks, the building of the Carnegie Library, and also the West Side public school building. Dr. Harrison is known as one of the county's active men in Democratic polities. He affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, and the Loyal Order of Moose in a fra-ternal way. In May, 1895, he was married in Robertson county to Mrs. Jennie Bettele, whose father was Sam Evetts, a farmer of Benebley, Texas. Dr. Harrison and wife bave three children: Henry and Lucy, twins, and Samuel Evetts.

Dr. WILLIAM P. HARRISON, M. D., one of the foremost professional and business men of Teague, is a native of Grimes county, Texas, and is a son of Bernard Harrison, who settled in the vicinity of Bedias, as a pioneer, prior to the Civil war period. Dr. Harrison was a Virginian, and was a young man at the time of his advent into Texas. He was born in Grimes county, about 1830, and he died at his farm near Bedias, Texas, in 1895. He spent his life as a farmer and stock man, becoming an extensive land owner in the county, and proving himself a successful business man. He left a good-sized estate when he died.

Bernard Harrison was a soldier in the Civil war, and he had his first military experience as a member of Terry's Rangers, prior to the outbreak of the war. He later was enlisted regularly as a Confederate soldier, though still as a member of the well-known Terry organization, and he saw considerable active service. He was never one to take an unduly active part in politics, though he supported Democratic policies, and he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. In his business activities Bernard Harrison was successful and prosperous and he accumulated something like five thousand acres of land. His farm alone embraced five hundred acres, all of which was cleared and under the plow. His presence in that locality worked a decided improvement in what was originally a wilderness, and the Bedias community owed much to his aggressive and progressive methods. He married Miss Margaret Plaster, a daughter of William Plaster, who was a Tennessee settler coming to Texas prior to the birth of his daughter. Mr. Plaster was one of the first white settlers of Grimes county, and he was a merchant of Bedias, presumably the first one in the place.

Dr. Harrison of this review is one of a family of eleven children, nine of whom yet survive, and three of them are members of the medical profession. He is the youngest of the family. He was born on October 12, 1880, and he passed his boyhood in the Bedias community to the age of fifteen years, when he went to the hunning to the age of inteen years, when he went to the A. & M. College at Bryan, and there acquired his higher education. He finished the agricultural course there, and was graduated in 1899. He began his career in business as a traveling salesman for an advertising house out of Chicago, and for a year he was occupied in that manner. Then, in 1900, he took up the study of medicine in the medical department of the University of Texas, and in 1904 was graduated with the M. D. degree. His class standing won for him an internship in the John Sealey Hospital in Galveston, and he spent a year there.

About this time vellow fever broke out and became epidemic in New Orleans, and Dr. Harrison entered the quarantine service of the state of Texas, with station at Galveston. His assignment was that of quarantine inspector and with the quelling of the epidemic he left the service. He then took up professional work with the McCahe & Steen Construction Company, as a contract surgeon, and he served with them for three months,

In the fall of 1907 Dr. Harrison came to Teague and established himself in practice. He has been division surgeon for the T. & B. V. Railway since the establishment of the division here, and he is county health officer of Freestone county, as well as being a commissioned officer of the medical corps of the Texas National Guard, by appointment of Governor Colquitt, under date of June 10, 1913.

As to his business connections in Teague, it may be said that the Doctor is a stockholder in the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Teague and of the Teague Building Company.

Dr. Harrison was married in Teague on February 2, 1910, to Miss Grace Setzer, a daughter of Mrs. H. B. Setzer, who came to Texas from North Carolina, where Mrs. Harrison was born. Mrs. Setzer in maidenhood was Miss Helen Jones, and she has borne her husband two sons and two daughters. Dr. and Mrs. Harrison are without issue. The Dector is a Mason, with Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery affiliations, and he is also an Elk and a Pythian Knight. He has been a delegate to the State Democratic Conventions on several occasions, that constituting his only political service.

JOHN BARTOW REESE. The oldest lumber dealer of Kerens and a resident of that little Navarro county city since 1893, John B. Reese well deserves his general reputation through that community as a keen and successful business man, who has also at various times identified himself in a public spirited manner with the improvements and progress of his community.

Mr. Reese came to Texas in 1873 with his father, Lucian Larken Reese, who is now living at the age of eighty-four in Kosse. The Reese family has lived in different states of the South a number of generations. Grandfather Cuthbert Reese was a farmer at Hillsboro, Gorgrig, where he died before the war. He was a slave holder. His children were: Joseph; Gus, Bettie, who married Washington Holland; Lou, who married Gip Connell; Lucian L; and William. Of these Lucian and Bettie both moved to Texas.

Inclin Large Reca was born in Jasper county, Georgical and for his time received a liberal education and control of the received a liberal education and the properties of the received a liberal education and the properties of the received a liberal education and the received as the received a liberal to New Orleans and to Galveston, and followed up the line of the Houston and Texas Central Railway as far as Kosse, which was about the limit of that road's construction at that time, with his equipment as an educator, he resumed teaching in Limestone county, and eventually engaged in farming. During the war he served for a time as a Confederate soldier, and with that exception his life has been led along quiet and honorable lines. He is one of the older members of the Masonic Order at Kosse, and also falliates with the Baptist church. In Georgia, Lucien L. Reese married Nancy Ann McKissick, daughter of John McKissick and of an old family in that state. Mrs. Reese died at Kosse in February, 1907, at the age of staty-seven. Their children were: Amelia, of Kosse; John B.; Minnie, wife of C. W. Brown of Bremond, where she died; Montella, of Edna, Texas; and Isaac

John Sartow Reese, who was born in Georgia, July 27, 1861, was twelve years old when he accompanily altis father to Texas. His Kossi, on was continued in the council in the control of th lumber used in the construction of the town of Kerens has come from the Markham & Reese yards.

In public affairs he has served on the board of aldermen and is now one of the school trustees. While in the council he aided in upbuilding and improving the town, in grading the streets, and in laying a proper basis for permanent improvement. The new school house at Kerens was built when Mr. Rees was treasurer of the school board. In politics he has manifested little interest in party affairs and has attended no political interest in party affairs and has attended no political interest in party affairs and has attended no political Sunday school, and his only fraternal connection is with the Woodmen of the World, in which he is a charter member.

On June 10, 1886, in Limestone county Mr. Resemartied Miss Carrie Brown. Her father, Capit, J. P. Brown, who came from Georgia to Texas before the war, went out from this state for service in the Confederate army, was a substantial farmer, and was twice elected a member of the Texas legislature. Capitain Brown by his first marriage had the following childen: Gip, John, Irrim, William and Jimmie, the last the wife of Frank Bratton. Mrs. Reeses was one of the two children by the second marriage of Capt. Brown. Mr. and Mrs. Reese have the following family: Cresidus, wife of Roland Mays, of Kerens; Lucian Larken, who died at the age of seventeen; Irene; Annie; Carrie; Johnnie B.; and Charles Erin.

ANNER LUTHER LEWIS. Although one of the younger members of the Grayson county bar, Abner Luther Lewis is in the enjoyment of a distinctively representative clientage which has connected him with much of the important litigation tried in the courts of this district, Locating in the practice of his profession at Denison in 1910, the favorable opinion passed upon him at that time has in no degree been modified, but, on the contrary, has been strengthened with the passing years as he has demonstrated his ability to cope with the intricate problems of the law. Mr. Lewis is a native son of Texas and of Grayson county, having been born at Pilot Grove, December 18, 1886, a son of Gyton and Jennic (Jackson) Lewis. Both parents are natives of Grayson county, where the father was for some years engaged in agricultural pursuits, but at this time reside in Kimble county, where they continue to follow the tilling of the soil. Two children were in their family: Abner Luther, of this review; and Archie L., who is successfully engaged in the bakery business at Denison.

The early education of Abner Luther Lewis was secured in the public schools of Denison, but the family finances were such that after he had passed the eighth grade he was forced to lay aside his books and begin to work to assist in the support of his parents. He had early cherished an ambition, however, to enter the law, and with this goal in view, while working days in the transportation department of the offices of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, at Denison, began to study nights with such good results that he was able to secure the honors of his class when he graduated from high school. After eight years of day work and night study, with such money as he had been able to save from his with such money as he had been able to save from he earnings, he became a student in the University of Texas, and there spent two years, proving himself a most excellent and resceptive scholar. Upon leaving that institution he took up the study of his chosen voca-tion in the offices of John T. Suggs, under whose preceptorship he made rapid progress, and January 4, 1910, was admitted to the bar. He at once entered practice in Denison, and here has continued to maintain his field of endeavor. He is now recognized as one of the rising members of the bar, a lawyer strong and logical in argument, forceful in the presentation of his cause, with a ready command of language, and analytical reasoning and clear deduction which prove an influencing force in his arguments. His practice has grown steadily, and he has been eagerly sought in a number of cases of more than ordinary importance. Mr. Lewis is a Democrat and has always voted in support of his party and his friends, but his own public service has been limited to a short term as assistant county attorney of Grayson county, an office from which he resigned. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Moose, the Voerwarts, the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Woodmen of the World, and of the lastnamed has served as council commander for four years. He is also identified with the business life of the city as a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and has done much to advance the moral tone of the community by his connection with the Young Men's Christian Association and the Methodist Episcopal church. His offices are located at Nos. 312 and 314 Security Building.

On January 26, 1905, Mr. Lewis was married (first) to Miss Lillian Campbell, who died November 27, 1905. His second marriage occurred to Miss Clara Jackson on March 11, 1913, and to them was born on December 21, 1913, a son, Abner Luther Lewis, Jr. When he can spare time from his large practice and other interests. Mr. Lewis enjoys taking trips to neighboring cities, but he has not yet found the community which he would exchange for Denison, in the continued prosperity of which city he is firmly convinced. Both he and his wife are well known in social circles of the city, and their numerous friends always find a gracious welcome at the re-fined Lewis home, located at No. 317 North Scullin

George Washington Speed. The careers of few Texans have more marks of real business accomplishment and achievement over obstacles than this well-known farmer and banker of Kerens. He grew up under conditions which made the obtaining of an education difficult, was a soldier during the close of the war between the states, lived for a number of years in close intimacy with hardship and poverty, and finally moved out to Texas to begin life anew.

It was in 1876 that Mr. Speed settled in Navarro county. His first home was on Mill Creek, north of Blooming Grove, where he began with exceedingly limited resources and bought a small and scarcely improved tract of land on time. When he arrived he owned one mule, and his wife and four children had come out from Mississippi on a wagon owned by his brother. It was a journey of six weeks, and the trip had the usual spice of little incidents to break its monotony.

It was from Covington county, Mississippi, near Wil liamsburg, that Mr. Speed set out when he determined to seek a new home in Texas. He was born there April 11, 1846, and grew up in that locality. The time which would have proved most valuable in securing an education was spent in the army. He enlisted in 1864 in Stubbs' battalion of Woods' Brigade in the Confederate army, and was a river guard on the Mississippi river hetween Natchez and Yazoo city. There was no fighting of any consequence, and after the surrender of Lee his command was disbanded. He then returned home and assisted his father in farming. After the war he managed by hard efforts to acquire a year of schooling, and that proved exceedingly valuable to him later in life.

On December 1, 1869, he was married, and began housekeeping on a poor little farm from which he managed to drag the living until he left that state. When he moved away he left both the farm and the furniture of the little cabin which stood upon it. His total resources on leaving Mississippi amounted to about two hundred dollars, and on arriving in Navarro county he paid all the money he had, twenty dollars, toward the purchase of the little Mill Creek farm. With his single mule he managed to make two crops, and from the second one paid the six hundred and fifty dollars which still incumbered the land, and then bought a team. After four years on his first place, he made a purchase and a trade and acquired a farm on Black Hills, nearer to and northwest of Corsicana. That was the scene of his activities for twenty-three years, and his activities there laid the basis for his business prosperity. When he sold out he was the owner of seven hundred and seven acres, well improved and in a fine state of cultivation. His first purchase had been two hundred and thirty six acres, and the rest of it he had added from time to time. It was by concentration of effort that he prospered, and though a popular citizen and frequently urged to go into local politics, he de-clined until his prosperity was securely laid and he could afford the leisure for public effort.

Mr. Speed has been a resident of Kerens since 1899, and in 1901 sold out his lands at Black Hills and invested extensively in land about Kerens. The land in Elm Flat was cheap at that time, and some of his purchases were secured at less than five dollars an acre while for others he paid as high as twenty dollars an acre. All the land which he bought was improved and brought up to cultivation, and for some time he was one of the active farmers in this vicinity. Out of the various purchases made Mr. Speed still owns more than a thousand acres, and over half of this amount has come under cultivation through his own efforts or under his direction. Throughout his career in Texas he has been more or less engaged in the stock business, and in later years has done a great deal of feeding and has handled improved grades of cattle and horses. He has also helped local business enterprise by subscribing stock for two cotton gins. On the organization of the First State Bank of Kerens Mr. Speed was one of the large stock holders, became second president, now vice president and a director. Fraternally his relations are with the In-dependent Order of Odd Fellows and the Fraternal

Union, and his church is the Baptist.

Mr. Speed married Miss Elizabeth Burkhalter, daughter of Joshua Burkhalter, a Mississippi farmer whose wife was Martha Harvey, and they were the parents of when was martina frarey, and they were the parents of ten children, six of whom grew up. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Speed are: Martiu L., a real estate dealer and farmer at Beasley; John B., of San Jose, California; Lillie, widow of Joseph Lindsey of Kerens; Maggie, who married W. D. Arnett of Kerens; Martha, wife of J. C. Spurger of Kerens; Joseph and Joshua, twin sons, both of whom live in Kerens; Josephine, who married Thomas Stockton of Kerens; Elmo, who died a young man after his marriage to Miss Stockton; Georgie, wife of W. Bain of Kerens; Charles C., of Kerens; gie, wite of E. C. Bain; Elijah B.; and Trudie May, Mr. Speed has become the father of seventeen chil-dren, and thirteen of them are still living. While his business career has been one of increasing prosperity, he should also be honored not less for his value to the community as the father of a large and useful family.

Brief reference should also be made to the earlier generation of his family. The Speeds were Scotch-Irish and early settlers in America, and all were loyal ad herents of the cause of the colonies during the Revolution and several male members served as soldiers in that war. Grandfather William Speed moved from South Carolina to Mississippi, and was a planter. He married a Miss Lawrence, and their children were: James Monroe; Benjamin; two by the name of William, one being W. L., and the other W. W.; Mrs. Craig; and Mrs. John Jolly. James Monroe Speed, father of the Mrs. John John. Sames anomoe open, Taraer of South Kerens business man, was born in the Anderson district of South Carolina in May, 1808, and died in December, 1887, in Covington county, Mississippi. His life was spent as a farmer, he owned slaves before the war, and favored the secession of the South. Four of his sons went out and wore the gray as Confederate soldiers. Those of his children who grew up were: William; James; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Bigland; George W.; Joseph; Benjamin; John; Martin Luther; Martha, who married William Keys; Josephine, who married Warren Knight; and Meshack. Of these children, Benjamin and George W. both became permanent residents of Texas. Though in his earlier years Mr. Speed declined participation in politics, he has proved a most useful member of the community at Kerens. He served four years as alderman, and for a similar period was a member of When first in the council the streets were the council. graded and plank sidewalks built, although at the time he urged the building of cement walks as cheaper and more durable article. Since he returned to the board this improvement has been carried out. He is one of the substantial advocates and supporters of the movement for instituting waterworks, and that proposition was submitted to the voters of that community in 1914, and carried. In his relation to the schools Mr. Speed has served as a trustee, while at the Black Hills he served his district almost continuously, and in Kerens was a member of the board of education two years. Having been unfortunate in his own educational experiences, he understands what the loss of proper schooling means to men and women, and has exerted his efforts not only in behalf of his own children but of all those in the community where he lives. At different times he has been a worker in the local conventions of the Democratic party, and was a Wilson supporter in 1912. During the construction of the Baptist church at Kerens he was a member of the building committee, and has always given liberally of means to anything of consequence in his locality. He took up the cause of good roads, and while a worker in this direction has never found it convenient to attend the various conventions and meetings called to consider that proposition and other commercial causes. It should be stated that while Mr. Speed has been distinguished by his ability as a constructive business man, he has never tried to keep every dollar, and has used his means wisely and public spir-

Cot. William H. Martin. A citizen who will be remembered by members of the older generation as a prominent bunker, business man and journalist of Brown-wood, Texas, was the late Col. William H. Martin, whose death in 1886 removed from this section one whose influence was ever for good and whose useful and industrious life may serve as an example worthy of emulation by the youth of today. Of Section Irish and Holland Dutch descent, he was born at Fulton, Missouri, where the family was well known, in June, 1833, and was a son of William R. and Margaret (Wright) Martin.

William R. Martin was a native Missourian, and for the vicinity of Martinsburg, which town was named in his honor. Prior to the war between the South and the North he was the owner of large numbers of slaves, and was considered one of the substantial men of his community, where he died in 1873. After the death of his first wife he was again married, and his second wife followed him to the grave a few years after his denies.

William H. Martin was the second child born to his tather's first marriage, and grew up in his native locality, receiving his early education in the public schools and subsequently studying law under the preceptorship of ex-Governor Hardin, of Missouri, who was then a prominent attorney of Mexico, that state. Shortly after the outbreak of the Civil war, Mr. Martin took labout forty slaves to Ahbama for snicty, and while there joined the Confederate army under Gen. Sterling Price, was subsequently captured by the Union troops, and upon his exchange secured his honorable discharge on account of ill health, and was never able to again go to the front. On his return to private life he took up the practice of his profession at Martinsburg, where he was also engaged in the drug business, but in 1877 came to

Texas and at once located in Brownwood, where he became the editor and publisher of the Brown County Banner, a publication which he continued successfully for some years. He was also engaged in the drug business until about 1878, when he assisted in the organization of the bank of Coggin Brothers, this subsequently being succeeded by the firm of Coggin, Ford & Martin, bankers, with which he was connected as eashier up to the time of his death. He was widely known in Texas banking circles, and had the utmost confidence of his associates, who depended upon his judgment and fore-sight in matters of importance. Ever a stanch Democrat, he was active in his support of the party's principles, although he never sought office on his own account. He was a popular member of the Masonic order, and his religious connection was with the Baptist church and ever lived up to its teachings. His funeral was conducted by Rev. John D. Robnett, pastor of the Brownwood Baptist church, and was largely attended by his hosts of friends and acquaintances, who gathered to do honor to the memory of one who had ever proved himself a worthy citizen, an honorable man of business and a loval and generous friend. His remains were interred in Greenleaf Cemetery.

On November 4, 1864, Colonel Martin was married at Martinsburg, Missouri, to Mrs. Martha A. Powell, whose father was a retired farmer and slave holder of Martinsburg, Missouri, where his death occurred in 1884. By her former marriage, Mrs. Martin had two children. Mary Lewis ("Dollie") Powell married Rev. John D. Robnett, a Baptist minister, and the founder of Howard Payne College, of Brownwood, a Baptist college for girls and boys, in which young ministers are given free tuition. Four children were born to them: John D. Robnett, a paymaster in the United States Navy, living at Washington, D. C.; James Robnett, who entered the ministry of the Baptist church, and after a short pastorate at Amarillo, Texas, entered the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, at Louisville, Kentucky, where he died in 1901, leaving a widow and two children; Ausy Hamilton Robnett, a physician and surgeon of United States Navy; and E. H., an electrician at Bal-timore. James Powell, the son born to Mrs. Martin's first marriage, died at the age of eleven years.

Three children were born to Colonel and Mrs. Martin:
Them Lee, who was married December 23, 1886, to William Muse, an attorney and credit man for the John V. Farwell Company, wholesale dry goods merchants at Chicago, Illinois; James Powell, born May 17, 1868, who is married and is a stockman and contractor of Brownwood; and George Charence, who died at the age of seven months. Mrs. Martin, a lady of culture and refinement, survives her husband and resides in a comfortable modern home at Brownwood, in which city she is widely known in social circles and in charitable work.

WILLIAM BOOKE CHEATHAM. Many years have passed since William Boone Cheatham settled in Edgewood and engaged in real estate activities, in which he has been moderately prosperous and successful. Coming here in 1884, as a young man, he engaged in ranching and stock raising, but his native thrift and business acumen soon prompted him to do some speculating in land values. Buying small tracts of land at a time when the prices ranged from $1.50 to $3.00 an aere for the best land, he entered, with the swelling tide of immigration and settlement, into the real estate business in genuine earnest, and he has since continued in that enterprise. He is the owner of some very fine farming lands, which, under the guidance and care of his tenants, yield him a handsome income, and all things considered, is regarded as one of the most independent men of the county.

Born Marsh 21, 1856, in Titus county, Texas, William Boone Cheatham is a son of Edward Cheatham, who was born near Nashville, Tennessee, in 1811. He was given a good education and in his young manhood married Miss Martha Skinner, a daughter of Livingston Skinner. She died in 1856, leaving children as follows: George R., who spent his life in Morris county, and when he died, left a family there; Thomas H., who died in Yan Zandt county in 1910; James, who died in Morris county, leaving one daughter; Sallle, who married J. B. Lilly and resides at Keuefick, Okla; Emma, living at Whitesboro, Texas, the wife of B. T. Hays; and William Boone Cheatham of this review.

Edward Cheatham, it should be said in further de-lineation of the life of that worthy Texan, came to this state in 1838 and stopped at Crockett, from which point he soon joined a surveying party engaged in locating lands along the old Cherokee trail, as far west as the Trinity river in the vicinity of Dallas. They were in a wild and unsettled country and at Grand Saline Prairie they tried conclusions with the Indians, coming off victorious and without fatalities, but in their next encounter with them at the Forks of the Trinity river, where they made camp, they were not so fortunate, losing one man to the skill of the enemy. The party was engaged in locating headrights, and Edward Cheatham located for himself a fine tract of land, which he sold late in life, He lived in Titus county, near Daingerfield, until 1866, when he moved to Upshur county and located in the vicinity of Coffeyville, where he passed away in 1897. He was a Methodist, and a quiet man, retiring in manner, but determined in purpose, and he was well known in the communities where he maintained his residence.

William Boone Cheatham was a boy of ten years when his father moved to Upshur county and near Coffeyville he was reared gaining his education in the country schools. He engaged in active farming when he became of age and continued therein in that enterprise until the early nineties, when he abandoned the industry for the purpose of further devoting himself to real estate activities, in which he had become interested. He came to this locality in about 1884, settling on a farm, at a time when farm lands were at the lowest ebb. He soon began to indulge in a mild form of speculation in these lands, and began to buy more and more widely, giving up farming entirely. He has repeatedly sold much of the land adjacent to Edgewood, and he has furthermore carried on a sort of home-making process by bringing under cultivation wild lands, building houses upon them and selling them. He has witnessed the sale of farm lands in these parts at prices as low as $1.50 the acre, and has likewise seen the same lands climb in value to $100 an acre. He has encouraged in various ways the entry of new blood into the county, as well as the increase of the acreage under cultivation, and his work has been a most telling one in the business of settling the county and promoting agricultural activities. He is an acknowledged authority upon the adaptability of the soils here to the various crops, having all his days, even since he abandoned active farming, maintained an active interest in the more practical aspects of the subject.

Mr. Cheatham's connection with politics has been of a desultory nature, rather than otherwise, including his attendance at a few conventions of Democrats bent upon naming candidates for public office, and he has met other delegates in state convention work, notably when Mr. Colquitt was nominated for Governor of Texas. He is not especially active in the party ranks, however, and has never shown any inclination to get into politics on his own account. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Knights and Ladies of Honor, while his churchly relations are maintained as a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

In December, 1878, Mr. Cheatham was married in Upshur county, Texas, to Miss Annanda Campbell, a daughter of George Campbell, a well known merchant and farmer who came to Texas from Mississippi, his native state, and settled in Upshur county. There Mrs. Chatham was born in 1861, and she has borne her husband one child, Mabel Cheatham, the wife of C. L. Beard, of Edgewood, Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Beard have had four children: Oma, Glenn, Douglas, who is deceased, and Bonnie.

The Cheatham family is one of excellent standing in their home community, and they have a large circle of friends in and about the county, where they have long been known. As one who has wielded a most excellent influence in the matter of promoting the development of the county, Mr. Cheatham's place is everywhere acknowledged.

DENNY EDMUND WALSHE. No less for his public service in Grand Saline than for his business accomplishments is Denny Edmund Walshe known and esteemed in these parts. He has spent nineteen years as a resident of this city, and as postmaster since 1897 he has filled an important position in the public life of the place. He has for a great many years been identified with the salt industry, becoming first associated with that enterprise as a young man just assuming the responsibility of his own career, and he has risen to a position of some importance in that line of work.

A native of New York City, Denny Edmund Walshe was born there on October 21, 1865, and he is the son of Capt. John P. and Mary Ann (Gerton) Walshe. Captain Walshe, it should be stated, passed almost his en-tire life in the army service, and he died on duty near Dayton, Ohio, on June 29, 1891, and there is buried. He was born in county Mayo, Ireland, in 1821, and was a man of considerable education, coming of a fine old Irish family that contributed a number of the name to American citizenship. John P. Walshe was the advance American citizenship. To the family in that respect, and he reached these shores in the early fifties. He was engaged in business activities in New York City when the Civil war broke out, and he promptly enlisted for service, serving in the Army of the Potomac as a member of the Eighth Cavalry. He passed through the long civil conflict, coming out of the army as a commissioned officer, and a short time after his discharge he applied for admission to the Regular Army service as a lieutenant of cavalry. He gave this remaining years of life to the army service, moving to Texas in 1871 and establishing his family at Fort Griffin, where for some years the wife and mother conducted an inn or tavern. With his command under General Terry Lieutenant Walshe served at various points in the United States and was in the Big Horn country in 1876 when the Custer Massacre took place.

Lieutenant Walshe was married in Liverpool, England, in 1851, and when he came to America as an emigrant he brought his young wife with him. She was a daughter of Martin and Mary Ann (Walshe) Gerton, of Lan-eashire, and she died in Colorado City, Texas, in 1890, when she was sixty years of age. She had actually moved her Fort Griffin hotel to Colorado City. The hotel which was leased by Mrs. Walshe, was moved from Fort Griffin to Colorado City in the following manner: It was taken apart and sectionalized and numbered, board by board and spile by spile, and carried by wagon from Fort Griffin to Albany, a distance of sixteen miles, from there to Cisco by rail and from there to Colorado City by rail, where it was erected and conducted by our subject's mother for a short period. It was known as the "Planters Hotel," and it was in this old plains hostelry that Denny Walshe gained his first notions of business methods. Twelve children were born to Captain Walshe and his industrious and thrifty wife. Only four of that number reached years of maturity, Thos. A., who died at the age of sixteen years; Denny Edmund; Josephine, the wife of J. A. Clarey, of Fort Worth; and Mary A., the wife of Frank Tierney, of Dallas

Denny E. Walshe grew up in Port Griffin and in Colorado City, both in Texas, the family having moved to the latter place in 1883. He gained his education in a sort of high school maintained by voluntary contributions from the army contingent of the fort. As a young man he aided in the construction of the salt works in Colorado City in 1855, and it is worthy of mention that this plant made the first vat of steam-refined salt in Texas. In this service he made the acquaintance of the Salt City people of Grand Saline, a matter that subsequently affected his entire career. For several years the young man was employed as a peace officer in Colorado City, being chosen in the office of City Deputy Marshal and serving two terms, later serving as constable and still later as deputy United States Marshal of the Western District of Texas.

After a service of some eight years as an officer of the law he resigned and entered the merchandise business as a clerk for the firm of Waldo & Wells, hardware merchants of Colorado City. He was made the manager of a branch store they opened in Pond Creek, Oklahoma, while he was connected with the house, and in 1894 he went to Fort Worth to engage in service with the Voss-Brooks Construction Company, building an electric line out to the Polytechnic School. Later he became city collector for the Fort Worth Lumber Company, filling the position for a year.

It was at this juneture that he was called to Grand Saline by his former Colorado City employers in the salt industry, and he took with them a position as assistant superintendent of their plant, which he filled for seven years. The superintendent of the plant was Mr. Wilderspin, an uncle of Mrs. Walshe, whose connection with the salt industry at this point extended over a long period, and who was most important as a factor in the While Mr. Walshe served upbuilding of the industry. While Mr. Walshe served his company effectively, he also administered the affairs of the local postoffice as postmaster during such time as the office was maintained as a fourth class office. When the office was raised to a third class, he resigned from his position with the salt company and assumed active charge of the postoffice, its new status being such as to demand all his time in the supervision of its affairs. Mr. Walshe's experience in the cattle industry was as a range rider or on the trail, and he also had an interest at one time in a few hundred head of cattle and horses.

As Mr. Walshe continued a resident here he developed a wholesome interest in the Republican polities of the county, and has for some years been a factor in the activities of the party. He has represented his county in various Republican conventions, including senatorial and congressional, and was chairman pro tem of the congressional convention at Tyler, in 1908. His first presidential commission as postmaster came from Roosevelt's hand, as did his second one, and on August 16, 1912, he was commissioned by President Tart for a term of four years. All the rural mail service has developed here maler his regime and six routes distribute mail from this office. In recent time the increased work of the office has necessitated the addition of two clerks, in addition to the postmaster, who gives all his time to the duties of his office.

Mr. Walshe is a charter member of the Postmaster's Association of Texas, the same being the mother organization of this body for the world, and he was vice president of it and active in the work of furthering its efficiency and purpose. As an alderman of Grand Saline he has rendered a worthy service to the city, and was at one time a member of the board of education, on which he has served variously as president, secretary and treasurer, and in all of which capacities he proved well the interest he has ever felt in matters of an educational import in his home community.

Matters of fraternalism have won and held the interest of Mr. Welshe for years, and especially in Massonry is he well advanced and prominent. He is the pioneer Master of the Blue Lodge of Grand Saline, and has served as its secretary also, as well as serving as High Priest of the Chapter. He was a member of the By-laws committee of the Texas Grand Lodge for several years. He is a member of Hilla Temple, Dallas, and there took in Scottish Rite degree in 1905. He was a member of the degree team of 1907 and helped to confer the 28th degree in Masonry with the Grand Saline team, upon Senator Morris, Shepherd, Bishop Garrett and Dr. Buckner. Other Traternal associations of Mr. Waishe are his connection with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the woodmen of the World. In the Rnights of Pythias and the woodmen of the World. In the Rnights of Pythias he is a Past Chancellor, and is also a Past Grand in Oddfellowship, With his family, he has membership in the Episcopal church of this city.

Ön August 25, 1897, Mr. Walshe was married in Grand Saline to Miss Matidla Wilderspin, of English birth, having been born in Cambridgeshire in 1875. She is a daughter of Alfred Wilderspin, an inn-keeper in Ellsworth, England, and his wife, Mary Ann (Clark) Wilderspin, and is one of their nine children. Four of that number are residents of Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Walshe have three children: Blomt Ernest Anderson Walshe, Lindley Mortimer and Mary Winifred Walshe.

DATD F. STUARS, M. D. A noble position, a splendid sevrant of the public to his profession, a capatale business man and esteemed wherever known for his professional and private character, David Finney Stuart was for forty years a resident of the city of Houston, with which community the best portion of his life was identified. He died at his home in that city on September 8, 1909, being seventy-six years of age, He had lived in Texas for more than half a century, and during the war was a surgeon in the Confederate army. Houston and Texas had no more loyal citizen than the late Dr. Stuart. He was in the best sense of the word a philanthropist, the every day work of his life having been of a character which spread its benefits among hundreds of men and women, and like the best of the representatives of his profession, his charity was entirely unostentations, and was performed as a matter of duty and very often without expectation of any reward.

David Finney Stuart was born in Brook county, West Virginia, in 1833, and was descended from sturdy Section accessors. The founder of the family in Pennsylvania, about 1800, was Galbraith Stuart, who married Miss Mary Cummings, daughter of a prominent Virginian Dr. Stuart had one brother and four sisters, including Mrs. George C. Red, who founded Stuart Seminary, one of the successful educational institutions of the state.

Dr. Stuart grew up in the Pan Handle of West Virginia, and finished his early education in Bethany College, an institution founded by Alexander Campbell of the Christian church. In 1850, when seventeen years of age he came to Texas, and located at Gay Hill in Washington county, where his brother-in-law, Dr. George C. Red had already settled. He first studied medicine under Dr. Red, and beginning with 1859 attended Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, for two courses, followed by further study in the medical college of Louisiana at New Orleans. Returning to Texas, he soon built up a splendid practice, and his services as a physician and surgeon were widely in demand in his part of the state. He was not permitted to remain long in the quiet rounds of his professional duties. With in the quiet rounds of his professional duties. With the outbreak of the war in 1861, he was appointed as-sistant surgeon in the Tenth Texas Regiment, and from that was promoted to regimental surgeon. His professional skill, executive ability, and valor in the performance of his duties attracted the attention of the officers of the Tennessee army, and he was next made senior surgeon of Granbarry's Texas brigade, with which he served with distinction until the close of the war. During his services Dr. Stuart was several times wounded, and once was captured and kept in prison at Camp Douglas in Chicago for six months. The high esteem in which he was held by the army officers often brought upon him greater responsibilities than his official position called for, but he was always equal to the demand. It is said that among fighting soldiers no more popular officer was to be found in the army than Dr. Stuart.

With the close of the four years' struggle, he returned home to Washington county, and in 1887 located in Houston. He had an excellent practice in a short time, and was the first physician in the city to recognize the needs for a private hospital and act upon his recognition of that requirement. He established a private infirmary, in association with the late Dr. J. Larendon, under the firm name of Stuart & Larendon. The firm subsequently became Stuart, Larendon & Boyles, the third member being the late T. J. Boyles, With the retirement of Dr. Larendon, the firm continued as Stuart & Boyles, until 1901 when Dr. Boyles died, after which the title became Stuart, Red & Stuart, the latter being the son of Dr. Stuart.

However, it was in fields other than as a private practitioner, or in connection with the infirmary that Dr. Stuart made his most conspicuous mark in the medical history of this state. In 1872 he was appointed chief surgeon of the Houston & Texas Central Railroad, a position which he held until the time of his death. He was also chief surgeon of the Houston, East & West Texas Railway when it was completed to Houston, and when that city became a point on the lines of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway and the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway, he was likewise appointed their local medical representative. In 1871 Dr. Stuart was honored by election to the office of vice president of the State Medical Society, and in 1873 was made president of that body. In 1876 he served as a delegate to the meeting of the International Medical Association, held at Philadelphia, during the Centennial Celebration. From 1878 to 1895 he was president of the old Galveston Medical College, which in the latter year became the medical department of the State University.

In Houston and South Texas, Dr. Stuart's work as a physician is best remembered for the important service he rendered to the cause of public health while chairman of the city board of health in Houston. In 1867, he fell a victim to a scourge of yellow fever, passed through it safely, and his experiences and studies sub-sequently made him one of the recognized authorities on this disease in all Texas. At every subsequent recurrence of yellow fever in Houston and other Texas communities, he was frequently consulted, and the confidence of the profession and the people in Dr. Stuart often enabled a community to withstand the plague and prevent a complete depopulation of the locality. In 1897 it was reported that a case of yellow fever had developed in Houston. An expert delegated by the United States government visited the city and pronounced the case vellow fever. Railroad towns along all lines entering Houston required a rigid quarantine, and it was enforced with such severity that it meant a terrific loss to the commerce and prestige of the community. Dr. Stuart through his superior skill and ability not only proved the case was not yellow fever, but in less than four days had convinced the health physicians of the surrounding town of the proof of his efficiency, so that all quarantines against Houston were raised. Dr. Stuart was perhaps best known for his accomplishments in the general field of medicine, but he was a rare surgeon and performed many of the most difficult surgical operations. For a number of years in Houston he represented as medical examiner a number of the life insurance companies. It is not usual for a successful professional man to win a reputation in practical business affairs, but Dr. Stuart had a keen business judgment and was often entrusted with the management of large affairs. In 1886 he was appointed receiver of the Houston Savings Bank, and at the end of a receivership of two years, paid the creditors seventy cents on the dollar. He was for several years a director of the Commercial National Bank of Houston, and interested in various other business undertakings. Dr. Stuart was one of the leading men in the support of the Presbyterian Church of Houston, and was a member of the building committee that erected the magnificent stone church at Main street and McKinney avenue, his individual contributions having been among the largest in the construction of that edifice.

Dr. Stuart was first married September 17, 1867, to Miss Ellen Dart. The children of that union were the late Dr. J. R. Stuart of Houston, and Daisy, wife of Dawes E. Sturgis. The mother of these two died in 1880, and in 1883 Dr. Stuart married Miss Bettie H. Bocock. Mrs. Stuart is still living and resides at the attractive family home, 517 McGowan Avenue. She is the mother of two children: Susan Walker and Mary Cummins, the latter the wife of Dr. F. R. Ross.

DR. V. Bascom Cozev is one of the younger medical men of these parts, located here since 1908. Success has not heen a stranger to him, and his efforts have brought him a degree of prosperity of which he is well worthy, let is a native Texan, born at Garden Valley, Smith county, on September 29, 1875, and is the son of Columbus C. Cozby and the grandson of Isaac Cozby, who migrated to the state of Texas when a young man and during the pioneer period, and died at Garden Valley before the Civil war, when he was about forty-five years of age.

Isaac Cozby was a merchant and he married Jane Tunnell. They had two children, Columbus C. and Bell, who married T. J. Thompson. After the death of the husband and father Mrs. Cozby married J. W. Childress and continued to reside in the Garden Valley locality. Columbus C. Cozby grew up in Garden Valley locality. Columbus C. Cozby grew up in Garden Valley in the quiet of that little village, married and ultimately engaged in railroad contracting. He disappeared from the ken of his family and friends in the pursuit of that vocation and no later knowledge was ever gained of him. He married Sallie Mayne, a daughter of Samuel P. Mayne, an Alabama settler and a farmer, and Mrs. Cozby is now a resident of the country near Ben Wheeler, Her children are as follows: Miss Willie, who married A. C. Knight, of Van Zandt country. V. Baseom of this review; and Claud C., a farmer of Van Zandt country.

review; and Claud C., a farmer of Van Zandt county. Dr. Cozhy was reared as a boy near Coffax, in Van Zandt county, and was educated in the Alexander Colegiate Institute in Jacksonville, Texas. He engaged in teaching when he was twenty years of age, in which field of a citivity many a young professional man has made his start in life, and he gave six years of his young life to country and graded school work. When the Spanish-American war broke out he enlisted in Company K, Fourth Texas Volunteer Infantry, with Captain Hampson Gary and Colonel Edmundson in command. The regiment camped about Houston, also San Antonio, and was mustered out in the spring of 1899 without having seen the enemy. Dr. Cozhy then resumed teaching as principal of the village schools of Coffax and he closed his pedagogic eareer with two years of service there.

Having chosen medicine for his life work, the young man began its study in the Southwestern University Medical College at Dallas, in 1904, and he entered in practice on the certificate of the medical board of the state in 1906, practicing for two years thereafter at Colfax. He then returned to College and was graduated in 1908, when he located in Grand Saline. In 1910 he took post-graduate courses in the Polyclinic in New Orleans. He has served the Van Zandt County Medical Courty. He is Gity Healthoffter and does his political work in a quiet way but nevertheless, an effective one, as a Democrat. He has served as a member of the school board in Grand Saline, also, and in that office performed excellent service for his town. He has since coming to this community manifested a genuine and wholesome interest in the civic life of the place, and assumed his full share in the burdens of civic responsibility, as a good citizen should.

On December 24, 1901, Dr. Cozby was married to Miss Linnie Kirkpatrick in Van Zandt county. Her father, J. W. Kirkpatrick, as well as her mother, who was in her maiden days known as May Slaughter, are both ner mauen unys known as May Slaughter, are both natives of the county, and are highly esteemed among its citizenship. The children of the Kirkpatricks are Mrs. Cozby, Janie, who married A. F. Pitts, of Grand Saline; Andrew, also of this place; May, who married James Crosby of this eity; and Virgil. Dr. and Mrs. Cozby have children as follows: Harold, Raymond and Ruly. mond and Ruby.

Dr. Cozby is a Mason of the Royal Arch degree. He is Past Master of the Blue Lodge and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge of the state. His church membership is with the Methodist Episcopal, in which he is a member of the board of stewards, and in which his wife also is a member.

YANCEY MCKELLAR has spent the years of his majority as a resident of Forney, where he has been identified with the more important agricultural activities of the county, and where he has added very materially to the estate left him by his father. Today Mr. McKellar is regarded as one of the wealthiest men in these parts, and one of the most active along lines of industrial enterprises of varied natures.

Born in Henderson county, Texas, on September 13, 1859, Yancey McKellar is a son of John A. McKellar, who came to Texas in the days when it was yet a republic and settled in what came to be called Henderson county. He was a native of one of the Carolinas, born there in 1810, and moved to Alabama with his mother. The move to Henderson county came still later, and there he grew to manhood as one of a family of several children. His brother, Edward McKellar, finally became a resident of Shreveport, Louisiana, where some of his family still reside.

John McKellar, it would seem from all accounts, was educated chiefly through experience. He was, however, wonderfully endowed with business tact and judgment, and his foresight in those matters appeared little short of miraculous. He lived in Henderson county until after the Civil war, when he went to Marshall, Texas, and there engaged in the merchandise business. While there engaged in business the Texas & Pacific railroad began its extension westward, and he planned to keep pace with its onward march, and wherever their line should stop, there would he keep store. He went to Hallville from Marshall, and afterward located in Longview, when the road reached that place. In this manner did he manage to keep abreast of the building activity of the road, and he profited some by his commercial venture. He made money and invested it in cheap lands, chiefly in the black land belt of the state. In 1873 he reached Forney and during the two years he continued to live he devoted himself to the sale of lands and to the management of the immense volume of finaucial transactions that accrued as a result of his real estate deals. He owned lands by the thousands of acres that he had bought for two and three dollars an acre, and he sold this at six dollars, on credit, with notes bearing ten per cent interest. There was little farming being done in those days in the black land prairies, but there was an occasional spot to be found under plow, and Mr. McKellar was a pioneer in the movement that resulted in bringing practically every available acre of land into a productive state. He found the virgin soils excellently adapted to wheat and corn, and it was many years before the grain crops yielded place to cotton.

John A. McKellar married Miss Elizabeth Moore in Alabama, and she died in Forney aged seventy years. She accompanied her husband on his long journey through the west into Arkansas, where they abode for a time, thence on to Texas by wagon, reaching the Lone Star state about 1841. Their home was a Baptist one, and they reared their children in its simple faith and doctrines. Their children were six in number, and brief mention is made concerning them as follows: Marl L. married Col. Wm. L. Herndon, of Tyler, and spent her life there; Nora died young; Susan married B. M. Boren, also of Tyler; John C. died in Forney; Duncan Graham is deceased; Calvin also died here, unmarried; Yancey, the subject of this review; and Terry, who died in Texas, before reaching years of maturity.

Yancey McKellar was born in Henderson county, this state, as has been stated, and his early years were spent in a more or less migratory existence until he came to his youth. He was a lad of fourteen years when the family finally reached Forney, and when he had finished his schooling he joined his older brother in looking after the affairs of their father's estate, he having died some years previous, and not long after they located at Forney.

Today Yancey McKellar is one of the largest cot-ton growers of this section. He has been directly responsible for the breaking up of hundreds of acres of land known as the "hog wallow" variety, and placing it under cultivation, has erected homes for numerous families who aid in the cultivation of his domain. As the climate and soil proved its adaptability, Mr. McKellar substituted cotton for wheat, and he has built gins on his place from time to time, as well as having a hand in practically every enterprise in Forney that required a combination of capital to inaugurate. He is a heavy stockholder in the Forney Cotton Oil and Gin Company and is a director of the plant. He is a stockholder of the Farmers National Bank of Forney, and is identified with numerous other financial and industrial enterprises of the city and county.

His home, a mansion with wide galleries and corridors and countless rooms, is built upon the site of the parental residence and it stands surrounded by extensive and attractive grounds, its stately white columns standing forth as fitting markers of the original abiding place of this important family of Kaufman county,

Yancy McKellar has proven himself the true son of his father in his business skill. He inherited sufficient land to keep a score of farmers busy, but he has gone steadily forward adding one responsibility after another, with true McKellar foresight, so that he stands today as one of the most successful men of his county, strong in his position from every viewpoint.

An Odd Fellow, Mr. McKellar has no other fraternal affiliations, and he is not a member of any church, despite the fact that he was reared in its precepts. On May 20, 1892, he married Miss Emily Guyton, in Cass county, Missouri, and they have two children, Guyton and Elizabeth McKellar.

MICHAEL SPELLMAN is a well-to-do retired farmer of Forney and president of the First National Bank of Crandall, a lively and promising agricultural town in Kaufman county. His residence in this section of Texas began in childhood and he has lived within the confines of the commonwealth since 1872. His career is one of especial interest to those who view with concern the rise of those whose success is accomplished through their own unaided effort, and in this respect Mr. Spellman's life work thus far is especially praiseworthy.

Born in Springfield, Wisconsin, in October, 1858, Michael Spellman is the son of Thomas Spellman, who came to the United States from County Galway, Ireland, in the early forties, having been born in that country in ISIS. After settling in Wisconsin, he continued there as a resident for some years before and after the Civil war, identifying himself with various kinds of work, but chiefly of common labor. Though he possessed a fair education, he chose to compete in the labor markets for his subsistence for some years after settling on this side of the big pond. From Philadelphia he made his way westward by short stages, working on the Erie canal in New York, and gradually feeling his way toward the Mississippi Valley, stopping for a time at Zanesville, Ohio, and reaching Wisconsin before the out-

During his pioneer days in Wisconsin he chanced to engage in railroad work and eventually he became a foreman for his employers. In 1869 he moved to Iowa and at Moulton he spent three years in that state from which point he came to Texas. In Iowa he was in the employ of Martin Flynn, a prominent railroad builder, and he worked on the Des Moines and Mississippi Valley and the Rock Island Railroads, both of them building lines that extended through the state.

Mr. Spellman brought a few teams to Texas with him and put them to work on the Texas & Pacific, which was then crossing rapidly toward the west. Later on he took his outfit to San Antonio and helped to grade a line of road from Houston to that city made sacred by the Alamo, and when the panic of 1873 came on and railroad construction in Texas was suspended, he abandoned the work, and spent the remainder of his life in farming. In 1876 he established his family six miles southwest of Forney on a place he rented, and he continued in that status as a farmer during the remainder of his days. Thomas Spellman was reared under Roman Catholic influence, but his children were permitted to choose for themselves in that matter. In politics he contented himself with voting the Democratic ticket, car-ing little for politics in all their ramifications. He married Miss Mary Nolan in 1852, in Zanesville, Ohio, she being a daughter of William Nolan, a farmer, and also from County Galway, Mrs. Spellman died in Dallas, Texas, in 1883, and Mr. Spellman passed away at Forney in 1890. Their children were Sarah, who married Richard Paden and lives in Dallas; William, also of Dallas; Martin, who died in Kaufman, Texas, leaving a child; Thomas, of Forney, and Michael, the subject of this brief review.

Michael Spellman, one might almost say, was reared in the family of a nomad. Certain it is that he moved about with his family more than is usually the misfortune of a small boy, and the result was that in the matter of his education he was very much neglected. He was ever in an atmosphere of industry, and he early learned that a career of labor was for him. He was ambitious and energetic, however, counting it no hardship to work, though he sometimes endured and suffered experiences that he recognizes today as having been genuine hardships, in order that he might help in the maintenance of the family. One incident alone will serve to illustrate something of the manner of the boy's life. When he was about twenty years of age he and his brothers went into the bottoms of the East Fork of the Trinity in Kaufman county to make fence rails. It was in the dead of winter and they provided themselves with a wagon to sleep in and to house their commissary while they were at work with ax, maul and wedge. During their stay the river began to rise and it crept upon them so silently that their passage to safety was cut off before they saw their danger, and they were marooned on an island, helpless. On Friday their provisions could be stretched no further. They subsisted on hackberry balls from then on, meantime attempting to solve a way out of their predicament. Hunger was fast making inroads upon their strength, and their case began to appear little short of desperate. Before they had hit upon any practicable mode of escape, help from outside came to them, making their deliverance possible. One Mr. Crandall, for whom Crandall, Texas was named, knew that the boys were in the bottoms, and he set about to make a craft that might be used in taking them off. To his dismay, when he launched the unsightly craft, it sank, and he found he must resort to another method. This proved to be a mule, upon which he mounted his son-in-law, Dr. Hubbard, and this was the vehicle of transportation that made the rescue of the marooned Spellman boys. By that time, Sunday afternoon, the lads were well nigh disheartened, and inexpressibly hungry as well. Arrived at the home of Mr. Crandall, the family ministered to their hodily comfort with warm clothing and a hearty meal, and Mr. Spellman recalls today the anxiety with which he looked forward to that repast. The delay occasioned in its serving by the offering up of thanks of the kindly old gentleman for the safety of the boys was scarce bearable, but when they sat down to a bountiful repast and must again refrain from indulgence while their host returned thanks, his anguish, mental and physical, was most acute. He remembers today with some pride that he restrained himself until the conventions had been complied with, and he also remembers vividly the joys of that wonderful supper that terminated his four days fast.

Some little time after this Mr. Spellman and his brother were employed in railroad work as subcontractors on the grading of the M. K. & T. railroad at Fort Worth; on the Pecos River section of the Texas & Pacific; on the Texas Central, or the Waco Tap; on the Fort Worth & Denver in Wise county; then on to the Texas Midland construction and later to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Meridian in Louisiana, After this long season of railroad contracting, the brothers pooled their savings and bought one hundred and ninety acres of land, paying cash on the purchase of $800. This tract, it should be stated, forms a part of the domain which "Mike" Spellman now owns. They continued together for a number of years, and when they dis-solved partnership, their holdings had increased very materially, Mike Spellman's portion heing 357 acres. This he continued to actively cultivate until 1908, when he moved his family to Forney. While on the farm he built several small houses upon it, a mammoth barn, and a central country home of ten rooms, all of which improvements served to mark his place conspicuously among the more advanced farmers of Kaufman county.

On coming to Forney Mr. Spellman purchased the Rhea home on Center street, which he remodeled into one of the commodious and attractive homes of the town, Many years ago Mr. Spellman identified himself with hanking interests, and he has for fifteen years been a director of the Farmers' National Bank of Forney, and for thirteen years he has been president of the First National Bank of Crandall. He is a Democrat, and is a member of the Council of Forney, on which body he has given excellent service in behalf of his home community.

In August, 1907, Mr. Spellman was married in Dallas county to Miss Carrie Huffines, a daughter of Charles Huffines, who came to Texas from Simpson county, Kentucky, in 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Spellman have three children: Corinne, Patsy and Helen. The family are members of the Preshyterian church of Forney and

Mr. Spellman is a deacon in that body.

Few men in the community or the county have a hetter position, either in business or social circles than has Mr. Spellman, and he has risen above the untoward conditions and circumstances of his youth in a manner that entitles him to the highest praise. No element of luck or chance, or any assistance from outside quarters has entered into his success. It has been evolved bit by bit from his own energy, ambition and native wit and ingenuity. He has been for years a power in his community, and with his family he enjoys the con-fidence and esteem of the representative people of the town, as well as the genuine friendship of a host of friends.

NEWTON HANCE LASSITER. One of the best known and most successful attorneys of Fort Worth, Mr. Lassiter, besides a large private practice as attorney, representing several railways and other corporations, is president of one of the important insurance companies of Fort Worth, and at different times has become a public-spirited leader in movements for civic betterment.

Newton Hance Lassiter was born on a farm in Henderson county, Tennessee, on the thirteenth of September, 1862. His father, Henry Lassiter, was a native of Tennessee, being of the same family as Andrew Johnson, governor of Tennessee, and later vice president and president of the United States during and succeeding Lincoln's administration. Henry Lassiter married Eliza Boswell. The father was engaged in farming and was fairly prosperous until the Civil war, which swept away all his property. Later he continued in the same calling and recovered considerable part of his former prosperity. In 1871 the family moved to Lexington, Tennessee, where the father died in 1873, leaving a comfortable estate. The mother died in Fort Worth in 1912 at the home of her son, Newton H. There were five children, three of whom died in infancy. Newton H. Lassiter has a brother, Robert Lee Lassiter, who also took up law as his profession, and for some time was a member of the Fort Worth bar, but considerations of health led him to abandon his professional career, and he is now engaged in farming at Lawson, Arkansas.

Newton H. Lassiter received his education in the schools of Lexington, Tennessee, and later in Cumberland University at Lebanon, where he was graduated in law in 1881. During his earlier life Mr. Lassiter suffered the handicap of ill health, and for a time this caused him to turn aside from his professional career and engage in farming. Finally opening an office at Lexington, Tennessee, in a short time he had built up a good business throughout the surrounding county. Lexington at that time was off the line of railroad, and it was as a result of his desire to have a field where the opportunities were greater that he decided to come to Texas. Thus in 1885 he found a location in Fort Worth, and has witnessed and been a part in the development of this city for nearly thirty years. It was in March, 1885, that he arrived in the city which was to be his future home, and his decision to make a change proved to be a wise one, for his success here not only equaled but surpassed that in his home town. In 1887 he was appointed local attorney for the Cotton Belt Railroad Company at Fort Worth, and represented that corporation ten years. Two years later, in December, 1889, he received appointment as general attorney of the Fort Worth & Rio Grande Railroad Company and acted in that capacity for twelve years. As a railroad attorney his reputation grew and gave him notice much beyond the ordinary limits of local practice. In 1892 the Chicago, Rock Island & Texas Railway Company appointed him local attorney and he continued with the Rock Island Railway Company until 1902, when he was appointed assistant general attorney of the road. Few lawyers in Texas have been more successful in handling the complicated business of a railway counsel, and his ability led to his promotion in October, 1910, as general attornev of the Rock Island System in Texas. At the same time of his appointment as general attorney of the Rock Island, Mr. Lassiter was also made general attor-ney of the Trinity & Brazos Valley Railway, and represents both lines at this time.

Mr. Lassiter represents a number of important financial concerns in Fort Worth, among these being the Employers Liability Assurance Association of London, England, and the Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut. He has always taken an important part in business affairs, and being a really publicspirited man, has done much to aid in the advancement and progress of the city along lines which have increased the advantages and resources of the community in every way. Mr. Lassiter is president of the Fort Worth Life Insurance Company, and is a director of the American National Bank of Fort Worth. In 1911 he served as president of the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce, and has membership in various business and social and civic organizations. He is an Elk and belongs to Lodge No. 124 at Fort Worth.

Mr. Lassiter was married on July 9, 1890, to Miss Sarah Elizabeth Davis, a daughter of Henry and Sarah Saran Elizabeth Davis. Two daughters have been born to them: Helen Davis Lassiter, who was born May 1, 1892, and Henry Ruth Lassiter, born July 1, 1894.

WILLIAM L. BROWNING. As the proprietor of the Iowa Park Improvement Company, Incorporated, which he purchased in 1911, William L. Browning occupies a place among the leading business men of the town, and the head of one of the most prosperous institutions of its kind in the country. Mr. Browning was born in Penola country, Texas, on September 25, 1870, and is a son of John R. and Julia (Ballard) Browning.

Concerning the parents of Mr. Browning, it is known that they were natives of Tennessee and that they came to Texas in 1866, locating in Panola county, where they devoted themselves to farming and stock raising. In later years they moved to Wise county, and there the father and mother now reside at the age of eighty-two years, respectively. They became the parents of nine children, and William L. Browning of this brief review was the seventh in order of birth.

As a boy William L. Browning attended the schools of Lampasas county, in Texas, and then took up agricultural pursuits, continuing to be engaged thus in various parts of the state for some time. He finally settled in Wise county, where he continued for twelve years, coming to Wichita county in 1906 and identifying himself with the farming activities of the county. He was successful in that industry, and in 1911 added another enterprise to his activities, when he bought out the Iowa Park Improvement Company, and has since busied himself with its affairs.

Mr. Browning is a citizen of the most exemplary type, and takes his place among the men of the community who are continually adding to its development and upbuilding. He is a Democrat, but not especially active in politics, and has served his town as a trustee on the school board. His churchly affiliations are with the Baptist church.

On July 20, 1895, Mr. Browning was married to Miss Emily Mount, of Rome, Texas, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Mount of that place, both of whom are deceased. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Browning, as follows: Carla Browning, born on May 31, 1897, in Wise county, now attending school; Edna, born in 1899, also in Wise county; Nolan, born in 1901; Ernest, born in 1906, and Paul Browning, born in Wichita county in 1909.

ROBERT L. BLAFFER. In the operations over the southeast Texas oil fields, during the past ten years, one of the best known workers has been Robert L. Blaffer, now head of the R. L. Blaffer & Company, with offices in the Carter Building at Houston. Mr. Blaffer is a man of southern birth and parentage, who was equipped with a college education, but began life at a very early age and has worked his own way into prominence both in business and social affairs.

Born in New Orleans, in 1875, he is a son of John A. and Clementine Amelia (Schneider) Blaffer. His father, who saw four years of service in the Confederate army, under General Lee, was a lumber merchant at New Orleans, and for many years after the war continued in the same line of business in that city where he still resides. With an education acquired in the schools of New Orleans and at Tulane University, R. L. Blaffer started his business career at the age of sixteen. The experience of his early years was chiefly in the coal business. He possessed the initiative and enterprise necessary for independent effort, and readily adapted himself to the new opportunities presented when the oil excitement at Beaumont became acute in 1901. In 1902 he began business at Beaumont as an oil producer, and it is along that line that his activities have continued to the present time. In 1906, with the shifting of the center of interest to the Humble oil fields, Mr. Blaffer moved his headquarters to Houston, which city has since been his home. The firm of R. L. Blaffer & Company, have large interests in both the Beaumont and Hnmble oil fields, and are among the largest independent producers of oil in this part of the state.

Mr. Blaffer is one of the directors of the South Texas Commercial National Bank of Houston. He belongs to all the best Houston social clubs, and as a Mason has membership in Hermitage Lodge, No. 98, A. F. & A.

M., at New Orleans.

In April, 1909, occurred the marriage of Mr. R. L. Blaffer and Miss Sarah Turnbull Campbell. Her father was W. T. Campbell of Lampasas, a well known banker, who was one of the original members of the Hogg-Swayne Syndicate and of the Texas Company. Mr. and Mrs. Blaffer have one son, John Hepburn Blaffer. Their home is 1009 Elgin Avenue in Houston.

LEONIDAS B. SOWELL, M. D. Successful both as a physician and as a farmer, Dr. Leonidas B. Sowell has gained prominence in this city and county, where all his life has been spent. He is the son of a physician who gained prominence in these parts, and the son is carrying on his work in a manner that is highly creditable to him, both in his profession and as a farming man. He was born at Scyene in Dallas county, Texas, on May 29, 1872, and is the son of Dr. Connor B. and Texis (McGee) Sowell. Dr. Connor B. Sowell died September 14, 1885, and Mrs. Sowell makes her home in Waxahachie, Texas.

Dr. Connor B. Sowell was one of the first physicians of Forney, and he located in the town when it was merely a station on the line of the Texas & Pacific, being one of the first medical men to engage in practice here. He was a son of Rev. A. M. K. Sowell, widely known in his day in religious circles as a minister of the Baptist faith, who gave the vigor of his entire life to the work of his church in Dallas and Kaufman counties. Rev. Sowell was born in Mississippi, and his education was a matter of observation and absorption rather than of actual training. He came to Texas in 1859, having entered the Baptist ministry in his native state, and he became one of the most energetic and effective preachers in these parts. He served as pastor at Kemp, and also preached at Long Creek in Dallas county for many years, although he did not confine his activities to those places alone, for his voice was heard in the admonition of his fellows in every community in this section of the state, and none was more highly esteemed in the ministry than was he. He continued to wage his war against sin until his strength left him, and he died at the age of eighty-eight years. He married Mary J. Moore, who died when about eighty years of age, and their children were as follows: Hamilton, engaged in lumbering and stock raising in New Mexico; Marv, who died in Kaufman county as the wife of George Stratton; Sallie, who married Samuel Murphy and spent her life in Kaufman county; Dr. Connor B., father of the subject; Alice, who married Dr. Stroud and passed the closing years of her life in Terrell, Texas; Thomas and Marion both died here; Emory, who was a Confederate soldier and died in the service; Jason, a resident of Forney, who has served Kaufman county many years as county assessor and county commissioner; and Archibald Sowell, assistant county assessor of Kaufman connty.

Dr. Conner B. Sowell was born in Mississippi, in 1853, and he gained his education there in the common schools such as the district afforded after the war. He was ambitious and enterprising, and it was chiefly his own initiative that made possible his college edneaton, and he was graduated from Tulane University in 1871, in the department of medicine, after which he went to the University of Louisville, and added another course, graduating in 1883. He began and finished his medical practice in Forney, forming a partner-ship here in 1874 with Dr. N. E. Shands, and continuing with him in professional work for several years. He gave his life to his profession, for which he was amply fitted by talent and training, and he was endowed by nature with many social gifts that endeared him to his community.

A good business man, Dr. Sowell acquired a goodly quantity of farm lands around Forney and was beginning to develop them into creditable farms when he was called by death. He was known for one of the early business men of the town, for he it was who established the first harness store in the place, as a member of the firm of Sowell & Turner, and also the first grocery store, under the firm name of Sowell & Sowell. He early recognized the utility of barbed wire for fencing purposes, and he was one of the first land owners to bring in a car load and enclose his fields therewith, the vogue of that community spread-

In 1871 Dr. Connor B. Sowell married Miss Texis
McGee in Dallas county, Texas. She was a daughter of Dr. M. J. M. McGee of Kaufman county, who came here from Sulphur Springs, Texas, where Mrs. Sowell was born in 1852. Their children were six in number, and are named as follows: Leonidas B., of this review; Pearl and Daisey, who died in childhood; Miss Willie, a music teacher in Forney; Miss Beuna, a kin-dergarten teacher of Waxahachic; and Curg B., who died in Forney, Texas, at the age of nine years. Dr. Sowell was a man who undeniably possessed the key to social success. A real lover of mankind, he per-formed his professional work with an eye to the benefiting of his fellows, and the result of his activities was that he gained a popularity that was measured only by the limits of his acquaintance. He was active in church work, and when he died in 1885 he was an elder in the Presbyterian church.

Leonidas B. Sowell, M. D., was born in Sceyne, Dallas county, as has already been stated, but his parents moved to Forney very soon after his birth, so that this has been his home practically all his days. Sceyne, it might be mentioned, was the home of the famous Younger Brothers, who terrorized the state for a time, and while resident there the Sowells formed the intimate acquaintance of some of the world's famous bandits. Leonidas Sowell was given a public school education in Forney and he attended Trinity University at Tehuacana to the senior year. He gained his medical training in the University of Louisville, also the Alma Mater of his honored father, and he was graduated from that well known institution in 1893. Not yet twenty-one when he was awarded his medical diploma, Dr. Sowell promptly engaged in practice here where he was reared, and where his father had long been identified in medical practice before him, and he has already given some twenty years of his life in the profession. In 1913 he took a post-gradu-ate course in the New Orleans Polyclinic and has in other ways fortified himself in the knowledge of his profession, of which he has been and still is a close student, keeping well abreast of the advance in medical research. He has identified himself in an active manner with the medical societies of the country, being president of the Kaufman County Medical Society, as well as a member of the same, and is also a member of the North Texas and the Texas State Medical

Like his father, also, he has manifested a considerable interest and activity in farming, and carries on some rather extensive operations in that line. He employs every modern method along the lines of labor saving devices, etc., and is progressive to the last

Dr. Sowell is a Democrat, and a member of the Masonic fraternity, being a past master and having represented Forney three times in the Grand Lodge of the State.

In September, 1897, Dr. Sowell was married to Miss Pauline Rugel, a daughter of J. C. Rugel, once a mer-chant but now a banker of Mesquite, Texas, and a settler from Tennessee, The children of Dr. and Mrs. Souther from fennessee, the canaren of Dr. and Mrs. Sowell are Miriam, Rugel, Flora and Frederick. The family are Presbyterian people, with membership in that church, which has for generations claimed for its own representatives of both families. The Sowells enjoy a fine social position here and in the county, and have a leading party in the representative social activities of the place.

ARTHUR M. Mosse. Among the men to whom the city of Denison is indebted for its prestige as a center of commercial activity is found Arthur M. Mosse, retail and wholesale dealer in saddles, harness and buggies and the proprietor of a business which is at once indicative of his superior qualifications, his straightforward methods, his laudable ambition and his indefatigable energy. Although not a native son, he was brought to this city when an infant, and his entire career has been spent in the community in which he now occupies such a high position among business men. Mr. Mosse was born in the city of Toronto, Canada, February 20, 1876, and is a son of W. T. and Maggie Mosse and of Irish and French descent.

W. T. Mosse was born in Chicago, Illinois; was there reared to manhood and received an ordinary public school education. He spent some time in Canada, where he was married to a native daughter of the Dominion, but in 1877 came to Denison, Texas, and for a long period of years was connected as a merchant with the firm of Mosse & Company. He was an industrious and hard-working citizen and through a life of integrity and well-directed effort won success in business and the esteem of his fellow citizens. His death occurred July 6, 1913, while the mother still survives and makes her home in Denison. Five children were born to W. T. and Maggie Mosse, namely: Arthur M., of this review; Miss Blanche, who is engaged in school teaching; Charles, engaged in the blacksmith business in Denison; Roy, a clerk in the employ of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad; and Miss Mabel, who is attending the Denison High School.

Immediately upon completing his education in the schools of Denison, to which city he had been brought when a child of one year, Arthur M. Mosse entered upon his business career in the line in which he is now engaged. He has been the proprietor of his present establishment for nearly ten years and now occupies a two-story building, 25x120 ft., at No. 416 West Main street, where he carries a full line of saddles, harness and buggies and all the appurtenances usual to a business of this character. He has, through enterprise and straightforward dealing, built up a retail trade that extends all over Grayson and the surrounding counties, in addition to which he does a large wholesale business in saddles, selling to the retail dealers in the adjoining country. The excellence of his goods has gained him a widespread reputation and created a healthy demand for his articles, and this reputation he continues to steadfastly maintain. A man of tireless energy, he devotes himself strictly to his business affairs, and every detail of his transactions is at his instant command. This devotion to his affairs has precluded any idea of his entering the political field actively, although he takes a keen and intelligent interest in matters which affect his community and is at all times ready to aid in promoting and bringing to a successful issue beneficial movements. His support is given to the democratic party. He has been prominent fraternally as a member of the Knights of the Maccabees, of which he is clerk and recorder for the local order; of the Woodmen of the World, of which he was council commander for seven years; of the Woodmen Circle, and of the American Insurance Union. He is also a valued member of the Denison Chamber of Commerce.

On June 23, 1898, Mr. Mosse was married at Ladonta, Texas, to Miss Maude Stout, daughter of John M. Stout, who was a painter of that place, and seven children have been born to this union: Alvin, aged fourteen years; nave been born to this union; Alvin, aged toureen years, George, aged twelve; Mildred, aged nine; Dorothea, aged seven; Winston, aged five; Maxine, aged three; and Arthur M., Jr., the baby, one year old. Mr. Mosse owns his own home at No. 731 West Elm St.

James C. Hodge, M. D. With the character and attainments of a successful and hard-working physician, Dr. Hodge is a lifelong resident of Texas, and has for thirty years practiced medicine at Athens in Henderson county. The early family associations of Dr. Hodge were with pioneer conditions in this section of Texas, and his father was one of the most devoted and able of the early ministers of the Gospel.

Dr. James C. Hodge was born in Henderson county, Dr. James C. Hodge was born in Henderson county, October 21, 1552, a son of Rev. Robert Hodge. Rev. He belonged to the Bacon Presbytery. In 1860 be took the census of Henderson county. In politics he was always a Demo-crat, and led a life of long and honorable usefulness. He had only a common school education, but was a student both of books and men and began preaching when about twenty years of age.

In the state of Mississippi near Jackson, in the old home of Governor Runnells of that state and father of Governor Dick Runnells of Texas, Reverend Hodge was married to Miss Bethany Hall, a niece of Governor Runnells just mentioned and a cousin of the Texas Governor. She died in 1860 at forty-six years of age. She was born in Mississippi in 1815, and her children are mentioned as follows: Harden A., who died wearing the Confederate uniform during the war; Mrs. Captain Geo. P. Wallace of Mississippi, who died in Texas; Aurelia, who married Asbury Mitcham and died in Texas without children; John, who died in Henderson county; Margarite I., who became the wife of William Morris Margarite 1., who became the whi of vinitian Mofris of Hill county, Texas; Magnus Hall, who served four years in the Confederate army as a member of 'Howdy' Martin's Company; Richard S., who died in early life; Harmon, who went through the war fighting for the southern cause, and died unmarried. nguring for the southern cause, and died unmarried. Some years after he had reached his majority, he took up the study of medicine and did his first work in that direction while still wearing his farmer clothes. Later he attended the Kentucky School of Medicine, and was graduated athur M. Mosse!

When he was thirty-two years of age the Judicial District Board, embracing the counties of Anderson and Houston, granted him a certificate to practice, and he later became president of that board which issued him his first license. In 1900 Dr. Hodge, who has always kept abreast of the times, and has been a student and worker in his profession, took a post-graduate course in the New Orleans Polyelinic. He has served as president of the County Medical Society, and as a member of the legislative committee of the state Society of Medicine. For some time he has served as local surgeon of the Cotton Belt Railway Company, and belongs to the Railroad Company's Surgeons' Association. He has never held any political office, has never had any desire for po-litical activity, though he is a good Democrat, and a very public spirited citizen. His church is the Presbyterian. In physical appearance, Dr. Hodge gives the impression of a man who has always been strong and able to bear his own burdens and a considerable share of other people's. He has lived well, has always been in comfortable circumstances and in his county and home town is a man of the highest standing.

In Henderson county, in September, 1875, Dr. Hodge married Miss Bethany T. Burns, a daughter of Robert Burns, her family having been Scotch Presbyterians and farmers by occupation. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Hodge are: Dr. Robert H., who graduated from the Galveston Medical College in 1905, and is now successfully practicing his profession at Athens, mar-ried Miss Dovie McWilliams, and their one daughter is Eugenia; Willie J.; Hugh Marvin; Bruce; and Mary. Mrs. Hodge died in June, 1911. Dr. Hodge is past master of Athens Lodge No. 165, and also a member of the Royal Arch Chapter of Masonry.

EMANUEL M. ROGERS. A resident of Vernon since 1894, Mr. Rogers has been one of the important factors in the improvement and upbuilding of this section of the state, and has a long record of efficient public service. At the present time he is filling the office of County Clerk of Wilbarger county.

Emanuel M. Rogers was born in Johnston county, Arkansas, Sept. 18, 1867, the youngest in a family of seven sons and five daughters born to J. S. and Harriet (Smith) Rogers. His father, who was born in Bonham, Texas, moved to Arkansas in 1866, locating in the county where his son was born. He was a planter and a man who was regarded as successful in business affairs, and held a place of esteem in his community. During the Civil war he entered the service of the Confederate army, with an Arkansas regiment. His death occurred at Clarksville, Arkansas, in 1882, at the age of sixty-two. His wife, who was born in middle Tennessee, received her education in that state, and died in Arkansas at the age of sixty-two in 1880.

As a boy Emanuel M. Rogers lived on the farm in Arkanass, and first attended the district schools. That education was supplemented with a course at Hendricks college in Arkansas, and when he left school he found a field of experience and opportunity for advancement in a store at Hartman, Arkansas. Arkansas continued to be his home until 1892, in which year he moved to Texas, and located first in Knox county, where he was in the stock business for a couple of years. Then in 1894 he moved to Wilbarger county, and for eight years was employed in one of the local mercantile establishments at Vernon. His popularity as a citizen and well known integrity brought him to the front as a candidate for public office and elected him county assessor, which position he filled from 1905 to 1912. In November, 1912, he was elected county clerk, and is now filling that office.

In politics he is a Democrat, and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World, and has filled the chairs in these different orders. His church is the Methodist.

In Johnston county, Arkansas, December 17, 1886, Mr. Rogers married Miss Nannie McFadden, a daugh-ter of John and Nannie McFadden. The McFadden family has been well known in northwest Texas, and Mrs. Rogers' mother is now living at Vernon at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. Her father died in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have five children: Mrs. Lela Pinkston, born in Arkansas in 1889, lives in Vernon and has one child; H. E. Rogers, born in Arkansas in 1890, is married and lives at Vernon, has one daughter; Miss Annie Rogers, born in 1897 in Texas, is attending school at Vernon; Lois Rogers, born in 1904, is a school girl, and Buddy Rogers, born in 1906 at Vernon, is in school.

JAMES F. BOYD. As cashier of the First National Bank of Iowa Park, James F. Boyd has a prominent place among the leading men of the town, and his leadership is further accentnated by his incumbency of the office of Mayor, to which he was elected in 1911. He has been identified with various business enterprises in the years of his residence in these parts, and yet retains his interest in the grain business in which he was active prior to his association with the First National Bank. He has made his way upward without appreciable help from others, and he is today one of the most widely and favorably known young men in these parts.

Born on the 25th day of July, 1880, Mr. Boyd is the son of James A. and Emma (White) Boyd, natives of Virginia, and of Dallas county, Texas. James A. Boyd came to Texas as a young man and settled at Lancaster, in Dallas county, where he eventually came to be a well known merchant. He has been postmaster at that place for many years, and has also demonstrated at that place for many years, and has any demonstrated his versatility by taking an active part in the agricul-tural industry in that community. He is still living at Lancaster, busy and alert as ever at the age of sixty-three years. His wife, who was born, bred and educated in Dallas county, there married her husband. She was the daughter of parents who came to Texas among the first settlers of Dallas county, and were long and worthily identified with the development of that district. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Boyd:

Mrs. Aileen Roland, living in Dallas; James F., of this review; and E. P. Boyd, living in Wichita county.

James Boyd in his boyhood days attended the schools of Dallas county, and in 1899 was graduated from Randolph College in Lancaster, his home town. He then engaged in the retail merchandise business at Lancaster, remaining thus identified for five years, and severing remaining thus identified for five years, and severing his connection with merchandise to associate himself with the grain buying business. For two years he followed that enterprise, in 1905 coming to Iowa Park, locating in the grain business here and continuing therein for two and a half years. It was then that he became as-sociated with the First National Bank as a clerk in the establishment, and in 1911 he was elected to the office of cashier, in which he has since continued and where he has given a valuable and praiseworthy service. The bank, which is one of the sturdy and stanch among the smaller institutions of the county, has a capital stock of $25,000; surplus of $25,000; with undivided profits of $15,000. The bank was organized in 1900, and has made a pleasing record in the passing years.

Mr. Boyd, in addition to serving as mayor of the city, is serving as treasurer of the school board, and his interest in the educational affairs of the town is one of the fine spots in his makeup. He is a Democrat, but does not permit national politics to interfere with civic fidelity and service. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church as well.

On May 20, 1903, Mr. Boyd was married to Miss

Pearl Ferguson, of Iowa Park, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. N. Ferguson, who are yet residents of this community, and among the best known and most highly esteemed people of the city. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Boyd are Fay, horn in Dallas county, in 1904, and Francis, born in 1908 in Iowa Park.

Children R. Houston. The modern merchant is found in nearly every town and city of west Texas. The man who knows what the people want, and how far their wants can be faithfully stimulated; who keeps a large and well selected stock of goods, but never so long that it is out of date; and who acts on the principle that real success is only a return for an adequate commercial service—those are the qualities of the most prosperous men in merchandising in west Texas today, and one such merchant is Charles R. Houston, secretary and manager of the Carter-Houston Dry Goods Company at Plainview.

Mr. Houston is a native of Mississippi, born in Calhoun, July 8, 1875, a son of L. B. and Mattie (Thornhom) Houston, both parents also natives of that state. During his early life the father was a farmer and planter in Calhoun county, and in 1867 moved to Texas, spending three years in Ellis county. He then went back to Mississippi, but eventually returned to Texas for his permanent home, and is now living in Bell county. He is a farmer and stock raiser. The father was born in 1848, being now sixty-five years of age. The mother, who was born in 1850, died in this state

Of the six sons and two daughters of the family, Charles R. was the third. At an early age he began laying the foundation for his career, by attendance at the public schools, and after leaving the local schools he took a course in the Metropolitan College of Dallas, where he was graduated in the commercial class of May 1, 1901. In 1899 he had begun his practical career as a clerk at Bartlett, and spent five years in working for W. W. Walton. The Walton Dry Goods Company was then organized and he became one of the owners and the active manager for four years. He then sold out and came to Plainview, and was employed by the Carter Mercantile Company for one year. At the end of that time the business was reorganized and incorporated, Mr. Houston buying an interest and being made active manager. Under his control the Carter-Houston Dry Goods Company has become one of the largest stores in west Texas. Mr. E. M. Carter is president of the company, Mr. Ellis Carter is vice president and Mr. Houston is secretary and manager. Since Mr. Houston took charge the business has increased in volume to double its former aggregate. About a dozen expert salespeople are employed throughout the year and at times the force is increased to twenty-five.

Mr. Houston in politics is a Democrat, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order through the York Rife to the Commandery degrees. His church is the Methodist, On May 8, 1911, at Plainive, Mr. Houston married Miss Mamie Ethel Grigsby, who was born in the state of Tennessee. Mr. Houston has won his own success, having started in at the lowest grade of merantile service and worked his way up to the top. It believes that he has selected the finest portion of Texas for his residence, a region which is bound to develop and grow in prosperity with the passing years. He is the owner of his own home in Plainive, and he and his wife enjoy the highest standing in social circles.

WILLIAM HENRY WOLCOTT. For many years one of the green in the cattle industry of west Texas, William H. Wolcott retired a few years ago, and while not traveling he and his wife maintain their pleasant home in Midland. He has had a long and prosperous career and represents a family whose members have horne the responsibilities of life honorably and usefully.

William H. Wolcott was born at Hot Springs, Alawhiman 11. Wolcott was born at Hot Springs, Ahama, November 29, 1842, a son of William and Eliza (Galligher) Wolcott. The father was a native of New York and the mother of Alabama. William Wolcott, Sr., when a young man of eighteen, having been well educated in schools of New York City, came to Alahama during the early forties and located in the Wetumpka, in what was then Coosa county, but is now Elmore county. A man of education, he found his work as a teacher, and was eugaged in teaching in different parts of the state until 1853. In that year he brought his family overland to Tyler, Texas, and thus became one of the early settlers of Smith's county. He continued his profession as teacher in the vicinity of Tyler until his death, in 1860. Outside of his regular occupation, he was prominent in many ways in his community and always took a leading part in political affairs. His wife died in Dallas county, Texas, in 1878, at the age of fiftyfive. His great-grandfather, a native of Georgia, had the distinction of being the first white man who lived in Wetumpka county, Alabama, being an Indian trader and a man of great influence, not only among the Indians who then inhabited Alabama, but also subsequently among the pioneer white settlers. There were eight children in the family of the parents, and they are named as follows: Benjamin F. Wolcott, who is a prominent farmer at Corpus Christi and Fannley of Midland, this state; Elmira, now deceased, was the wife of Samuel Cooper of Dallas county; William H., who was the third in the family; Mary, wife of Timothy F. Garvin of Ellis county, a prominent farmer and stockman; Eva, widow of Samuel Garvin, brother of Timothy, Mrs. Garvin now residing in comfort and ease in the city of Dallas; George Wolcott, who is a successful stockman at Midland; Andrew J., who is retired from ranching and makes his home in Dallas; Oliver P. Wolcott, who is a farmer in Dallas county and has a prominent part in politics in that part of the state, having served as county commissioner of Dallas county for several terms.

Mr. William H. Wolcott is now a man of seventy, yet in appearance and activity is still in his fifties. He is optimistic, genial and an enjoyable companion, has always enjoyed success, and has won his prosperity without interfering with the rights of others and has been helpful to his friends and neighbors throughout his career. attained his education in Smith county, near Tyler, and when fourteen years old left school and assisted in the farm work until the outbreak of the Civil war. He was eighteen years old when he enlisted in the Nineteenth Texas Cavalry, under Col. Buford, in Parsons' Brigade. For four years he was a Confederate soldier and one of the most loval and efficient men who bore arms for the South. He was in many campaigns, and was in the especially trying battle of Yellow Bayou, where for thirtysix days his brigade were continually engaged in fighting. After the war he was connected with the transportation business of northern and central Texas as then conducted. He drove ox teams, hauling wagons loaded with merchandise and other products from Waxahachie to Millican, Millican at the time was the northern terminus of the Houston and Central Railway and the nearest railway station to all points in north and central Texas. It was a distance of one hundred and fifty miles from Waxahachie to Millican, and the round trip required a number of days and was a slow and arduous method of transportation, but practically the only one prevailing in that time.

On March 28, 1867, Mr. Wolcott married Miss Margaret Boydstun, who was born in Illinois and when a child came across the country to Texas, in 1848, when she was 11 years old. Her father was Jacob G. Boydstun, a farmer and a man of standing in his community. After his marriage Mr. Wolcott located in Ellis country, where he was engaged in stock raising, and subsequently followed the same occupation in Tarrant county, as one of the old-time cattlemen, and by exercise of the constant vigilance and judgment which were essential to support in those days, Mr. Wolcott in time cause to support in those days, Mr. Wolcott in time cause to be proprietor of large berds, who followed the pasture over many ranges, and, though he had the reverses which were insequarable from the range-cattle industry, he on the whole was successful and prosperous, and when he finally sold out he possessed a competence for his declining years. After selling out he moved to Deaf Smit out the county, in 1906, and also bought many hundreds of acres of land in Midland, county. In 1909 he finally sold out practically all his stock interest and has since lived retired in Midland. He and Mrs. Wolcott have enjoyed one long vacation in California, and they now contemplate the places of travel in many parts of the country, Mr. Wolcott has always avoided any practical party work or official honor. He and his wife are members of the Christian church.

Robert J. King, is postmaster of Clarksville, where he has resided continuously since 1855. Save for a short period in the educational field of the county upon his advent to the state, his relation to the community of Clarksville was clerical until he entered the government service nearly sixteen years ago. In his service as postmaster of the metropolis of Red River county, he has rendered unusual and conspicuous attention to duty, and holds a record seldom cauded in presidential offices as a continuous servant of the government.

Mr. King is one of the many contributions of Bedford county, Tennessee, to the citizenship of Texas. He was born in that locality on May 18, 1860, where his father, Rev. Robert J. King, spent his life preaching the Gospel as a minister of the Lutheran church, and he was a son of Samuel King, who came out of the state of North Carolina and passed away in or near Shelbyville, Tennessee when in his young manhood. He, as the founder of this pioneer family, was descended from ancestry that settled in the colony of the old Tarheel state when King George yet held sway in America. This old patriarch was the father of five sons and three daughters, and their preacher son was among the first born of the number. One of these sons passed his life near Nashville; another lived near to Knoxville, and a third made his home in the vicinity of Murfreesboro, Tennessee.

Rev. King was born on Christmas Day, 1810. He was a man who was self-educated as well as self-assertive, and from his early life he felt impelled to take ministerial work upon himself. He died near Shelbyville in 1892, after an active and vigorous religious life that was resultant of much good in the cause in which he labored. During the turnoil of the Rebellion he remained steadfast for the Union, although many of his relatives went south because of their sentiment and gave active aid to the Confederate cause. Even his own son took the path marked out by the leaders in secession and opposed his brother on the battlefield at Murfreesboro.

Rev. King married Miss Mary Ann Philips, a daughter of William Philips, who migrated to Tennessee from Virginia. Mrs. King died at the age of seventy-five. Their children were eight in number, named as follows: John F., of Manchester Tennessee, an ex-soldier of the Confederacy; Samuel F., who passed away in his native state; Charles B., of Cottage Grove, Oregon, and a Union soldier; Edmond C., of Alexandria, Indiana; George T., of Fresno, California; Mrs. Samuel Brantley, of Beech Grove, Tennessee; Mrs. Leah V. Bobo, of Tullahoma, Tennessee, and Robert J., of this review.

Robert J. King received a liberal schooling in Shelbyville, Tennessee, and made use of his learning for a time as a teacher. He was twenty-five years old when he sought the west in Texas, and dates his advent into Red River county from September, 1885. He taught some two years at Rosalie and in 1887 he became a merchant's clerk in Clarksville. Four years were spent in the employ of R. N. Shaw and six years with Sam Steinlein, and from the store of the latter he went as the appointee to the office of postmaster of the city. He received his appointment from President McKinley and took the office on May 1, 1898, as the successor of W. H. Dickson. In 1902 he was commissioned by President Roosevelt and again in 1906, and Mr. Taft gave him his fourth commission in 1910, with the completion of which appointment he will have served sixteen years and broken the record for official tenure in the Clarksville office. His record has been one that he may well be proud of, and he occupies a prominent place in civic and municipal affairs in the city. He place in civic and maintenar annies in the civic in was brought up in a loyal home where the doctrines of Republicanism overshadowed all other political topics, and whatever active connection he has displayed in politics went to Republican fortunes, although he has never sought for political honors at any time in his life.

ALLEN T. REED, M. D. Despite the fact that Dr. Allen T. Reed gained his medical training under circumstances in which he was desperately handicapped, he has won through to a place of prominence in his pro-fession in Clay county, and is well and favorably known to the medical profession as well as to the laity. He is a native Texas product, born in Sherman, on July 17, 1863, and has lived in Texas all his life. He is a son of Dr. Nelson B. and Lavanda A. (Trousdale) Reed, concerning whom brief mention is made here as follows: Nelson B. Reed was born in Iowa and came to Texas in the fifties. He practiced medicine all his life, dying in 1867 when he was forty-eight years of age. He was a Methodist and a member of the Masonic order, and when he died in 1867 he left his widow and seven small children practically unprovided for. The mother was born in Tennessee, and in that state she was married. She was a devout Christian woman, long an active worker in the Methodist church, and she labored faithfully to rear her young children following the death of their father. She died in 1890 and is buried near Honey Grove, Texas.

Of the seven children born to Dr. Nelson Reed and his wife, Allen T. Reed is the sixth child and the youngest son. In the public schools of Honey Grove and vicinity he gained his early education, and up to the age of nineteen he continued at home. He then set out to plan for his own future, and for two years he devoted himself to farm work, saving every penny of his earnings in the meantime. He then entered the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, Missouri, and after a two-year course of study there he went to the Kentucky School of Medicine, from which he was graduated in 1890, with the degree of M. D. The first years of his practice were confined to Honey Grove, his old home locality, and he continued there in all success, but in 1912 he decided to move to Byers, and here he has since continued in active practice, Dr. Reed may well be regarded as the leading physician of the city and of these parts, where his standing is of the most excellent order and his practice a large and lucrative one.

He has kept well abreast of the times in his studies and has taken post-graduate courses from time to time, both in the best clinics of New Orleans and Chicago. He is the local surgeon for the Wichita Valley and Fort Worth & Dewer Railroads at that point, and has membership in the Northwestern Texas Medical Association and the state medical association. Dr. Reed is a Democrat, but not an active participant in politics, and he has membership in the Masonic order with Blue Lodge and Chapter affiliations, and he is also a member of the Woodmen of the World.

In 1889 Dr. Reed was married in Fannin county, this state, to Gersham A. Cravens, the daughter of W. H. Cravens of Fannin county. Four children were born to them. Gertrude and Willie are deceased, while Velma and Annette were spared to them.

J. Who Davis has been connected worthly with he city of Teagas since its incipient stages of existence, coming to the place in a day when the Teagas towns towns to the place in a day when the Teagas townsite was nothing more than a cottonfield, in striking contrast to its present day appearance of metropolitanism with its sturdy lines of brick buildings lending dignity and solidity to the streets. Mr. Davis came here first from Elgin, in Bastrop county, this state, where he went as a settler from Ripley, Missispip, in 1833. He is a soo of John Davis, only son of another of the same name, who was a Revolutionary soldier, and was discharged at Cowpens, South Carolina, after the war. It is worthy of mention that the field on which that battle was waged was a part of Grandfather Bayais' land, and it was there that canceral control control

John Davis 2d was born in South Carolina, and he died in Hopkinsville, Mississippi. He was educated in mechanical engineering and was a recognized authority on that subject. He was largely engaged in excavation work on a large scale, changing the courses of streams and other allied engineering tasks that require skilled men in their performance. Mr. Davis and his two eldest sons entered the first company that was organized in Spartanburg county, and stayed in the service through the entire war, up to the surrender of General Lee. He took part in the heavy fighting of the Army of Northern Virginia and was in the engineering department. He passed through the war without being once wounded or captured, but one of his sons was a prisoner in a northern prison at Elmira, New York, for many months. After the war Mr. Davis returned to his profession, and he met his death while engaged in changing the course of a river in Mississippi.

Mr. Davis married Miss Elmira Byars, a daughter of Earl Byars, a German farmer and stockman of South Carolina. The wife and mother died in 1898, and it should be stated here that she was his second wife, be having first married a Miss Jones, who became the mother of nine children, here mentioned briefly as follows: Lawson B., of North Carolina; Marshall T., of Elgin, Texas; Letha; Mildred, who married J. B. Greenway, of Hamlin, Texas; John A., of Elgin, Texas; Martha, who married M. T. Humphries and died at Elgin; Benjamin P., who died at Elgin in 1899, leaving a family; Sarah, of Monroe, Louisiana. The children of the second marriage are J. Wed of this review; James P., who died in St. Louis, Missouri, leaving a family, and Mary, who married T. L. Potts and died in Teague in 1910.

J. Wed Davis had only a common school education, and when he first started out independently he did so in connection with the Calcasien Lumber Company, remaining with that concern for fourteen years. he withdrew from that firm he came direct to Teague. finding it in the state that is mentioned in the opening paragraph. He came here in association with the South Texas Lumber Company, originally the Teague Lumber Company, and he started the first lumber yard the place knew. He was manager of the yard for four years, after which he engaged in the real estate, loans and investment business, under the firm name of J. Wed Davis & Company. Mr. Davis was connected with the real estate business both as a broker and dealer, and his chief work has been as a broker in farm lands. He placed more than a hundred new families in the Teague district in two years, and it should be stated that he built the first home that was erected in the city. He has been largely identified with the actual building of Teague, for he was con-nected prominently with the building of ten of its brick store structures. He is the owner of a large quantity of farm lands, and he has been especially active in disposing of land to desirable settlers and getting them started in the community.

Mr. Davis served as president of the Commercial Club of Teague for six years, and he was postmaster of the city for five years. He had his appointment from Theodore Roosevelt as president and has identified himself actively with Republican politics, for though he comes of a stanch old Democrat family, the has absorbed his political principles from his business associations with Republicans. He has served on many occasions as a delegate to state conventions and to congressional and other conventions as well.

Mr. Davis is a Mason with Blue Lodge and Royal Arch associations, and was secretary of Elgin Lodge for many years. He is also a Pythian Knight and has been Chancellor Commander in the local lodge for several years. He is a Baptist and a member of a number of insurance orders of fraternal nature.

The first marriage of Mr. Davis took place in 1888, when in November Miss Elizabeth Standfield became his wife. She was a daughter of C. W. Standfield head Alabama, and when she died she left two children J. Melvin is associated with his father in business and is married to Lucile Anderson, and Modene married John Mosbauh, of Teague. The second marriage took place in 1899, when Miss Lulu Brown, of Lee country became Mrs. Davis. The children of this second marriage are Carl, Hubert, Mary Frances, Garland, Margaret, J. Wed, Jr., and Lulu Brown. Garland Davis, it should be said, was the first male child born in Teague.

DR. WILLIAM P. KELLY. A practicing physician in Tennessee and Texas for many years, Dr. William P. Kelly retired from active practice in 1912, and is now filing the office of city recorder. In addition to that, he is identified with the real estate business and operates on a large scale in this section of the state. He is one of the best known men in Clay county. Texas, and numbers his friends by the score, among those who have known him both in his professional and his private capacity, as well as a business man of ability in later years.

Born in Lawrence county, Tennessee, on January 17, 1849, Dr. William P. Kelly is the son of John J. and

W.R. Crane

Susan Kelly, both of whom passed their lives in the state of Tennessee and are there buried. He gained his early education in the schools of Lawrence county. Tennessee, and when he had finished the high school course of his home town he entered the Nashville University, and there his medical training was secured. He engaged in medical practice in his native state upon his graduation, and until 1893 he continued there, in that year coming to Texan and locating in Ellis county. For ten years he practiced successfully in Ellis county, and then moved to Clay county, where he has maintained a continuous residence ever since. In 1912 Dr. Kelly virtually retired from medical practice and became city recorder of Petrolia, and he gives but little attention to medical affairs. Though he disclaims to be in practice, there are times when the demands of old friends are so insistent as to overcome his decisions, and he goes forth to serve as in former years. His attention, however, is chiefly confined to his office and to the real estate business, in which he has been successful and prosperous. He has extensive property interests in the state and especially in and about Electra, and is known for one of the financially independent men of the county. A citizen of the first order, no more public-spirited man could be found in the community than Dr. Kelly. He is concerned about the future of Petrolia and does all that can be done for the advancement of the best interests of the place by a man in his position. He will be found at the forefront of every movement designed to further the best interests of his home city, and any assistance he can lend in such causes is always forthcoming at the right time.

Dr. Kelly has membership in the Cumberland Presbyterian church of Petrolia, and he is a Mason, with Blue Lodge and Chapter affiliations. He is worshipful master of Petrolia Lodge No. 592, A. P. & A. M., also High Priest of Henrietta Chapter 161, R. A. M., Henrietta, Texas, and is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Few men have a greater fondness for ont-of-door life than has Dr. Kelly, and his chiefest pleasures are to be found in the pursuit of sports of that nature.

Twice has the doctor been married. He was first married at Port Gibson, Mississippi, to Miss Olive O. Thompson, of that place. She died in 1897, and is buried in Ellis county, this state, then the home of the family. She was a member of the Baptis church and a devout Christian woman of the most worthy character, and she left a son and a daughter. William P., Jr., the eldest of the two, is married and makes his home in Electra, Texas, and Olive Louise is also married, the wife of Ira C. James. She lives at Reserve, Louisiana.

The second marriage of Dr. Kelly took place in Fort Worth, Texas, on April 5, 1905, when Miss Tina Quarles became his wife. She is a daughter of J. R. Quarles of Fort Worth, a well known resident of that city, and she was one of the prominent and popular young women of the place.

Dr. Kelly and his wife enjoy a leading position in social circles of the city, and they have a host of good friends in the city and county, who know them for their many excellent qualities of heart and mind. They have taken a prominent place in public affairs since they established a home in Petrolia, and have contributed their full quota to the upbuilding of the city along lines of civic and moral growth and prosperity.

WILLIAM R. CRANE. Five consecutive terms of service in any office, of whatever nature, indicates undeniably a measure of efficiency and popularity on the part of the man who is thus distinguished and gives him a high place in his community. William R. Crane has won that distinction as sheriff of Kaufman county. He began his first administration with a condition existing that was most alarming in a community of this nature, and his careful analysis of the manifold elements entering into the development of such a state of affairs as here was dominant, and the remedy he applied for the bringing about of normal conditions, have marked him broadly as a public servant whose capacities and abilities might not well be overlooked by his community. It is gratifying to note that the public he served so well saw it to restore him to his office at each succeeding blemial election, and he is now in the tenth consecutive year of his service as sheriff of the county.

Mr. Crane, it may be said, is all but a native Texan. for he was brought to Kaufman county by his parents as an infant of two years. His birth occurred in Tippah an infall of two years. Insolute occurred in Tippan country, Mississippi, on March 6, 1867, and he is the son of Calvert and Susan (Nelms) Crane, both in DeKalb country, Alabama, and Tippah country, Mississippi, respectively. Concerning the paternal ancestry of Mr. Crane, it should be said here that Calvert Crane was one of the four sons of Isaiah Crane, the others being Wilburn, Reuben and Shrell. But little is known definitely of the grandfather of the subject beyond the brief fact here stated. Calvert, the third son of his parents, married Susan Nelms, who was a daughter of William Nelms of Tippah county, Mississippi. On coming to Texas, in December, 1869, Calvert Crane settled in the northern part of the county, where his family was reared, and he continued to be engaged in agricultural activities until death claimed him, in 1884. In addition to his farm work, Mr. Crane was a local preacher of the Methodist church. Though of a slender education, he was a constant student, and, being early converted to the doctrines of Methodism, he was ordained to preach at the age of twenty-seven years, just at the close of the Civil war. He served during the period of warfare as a soldier of the Confederacy, was captured, and escaped from federal prison just in time to save himself from a continued incarceration on Johnson's Island, in Lake Erie. Mr. Crane's ministerial duties were mainly performed in the rural communities and were carried on largely in connection with his work as a farmer. His religious example in citizenship was a most worthy one and one that never failed to impress observers with a knowledge of his splendid integrity and wholesome sincerity, while the influence that his life shed abroad was always a credit to him and an undeniable benefit to his community. His children were five in number, and are here named in the order of their birth: Elzert is a farmer of Kaufman county; William R., of this review; Mollie, the wife of Lee Hall and now deceased; Mattie, the wife of Leon Fry of Wills Point, Texas; and Lela, who married B. M. Coon of Kaufman, Texas.

William R. Crane was denied in his youth the pleasures and advantages of an education, and he had passed his mapority before he learned aught beyond the work of the home farm. At the age when other young men were finishing their education he began to acquaint himself with the first rudiments of book learning-a fact which in itself tells more of the innate character of the man than could a more wordy eulogy ever hope to con-In 1894 Mr. Crane was appointed a deputy sheriff by Sheriff Keller for the Elmo community, and he performed the duties of that office in conjunction with his farm work, as well as serving later as constable of his precinct. He resigned from the latter office in the fall of 1897 to accept the superintendency of the county farm, and he continued successfully at the head of that institution until 1904, when he voluntarily relinquished the post and moved back to the farm. In the same year he entered the race for the office of county sheriff, entering the list against a most formidable array of well-known and popular candidates for the place. His election followed, and be succeeded F. W. Henderson as sheriff of Kaufman county.

As has been intimated in a previous paragraph, Mr.

Crane's new office was no sinecure and held out no promise of that nature to candidates for its duties. A survey of conditions in which he found the courts at the first sitting of that judicial body convinced the new in-cumbent of the sheriff's office that a remedy was needed to reduce crime in Kaufman county and that a general cleaning-up process was next in order of performance. seventy-eight felony cases listed on the docket, of which more than seventeen were murder charges. At the first term of District court seventeen special venires were summoned to try these cases, a condition that meant the quartering of a body of several hundred men at the county seat, to be maintained at a large expense while their jury service was being per-formed. Mr. Crane discovered, through the attorneys for that army of prisoners and by observation, that the illicit sale of intoxicants entered largely into the production of this unhealthy state of affairs in the county. The saloon had departed from the limits of Kaufman county before Mr. Crane took office, but its devotees and hangers on were still present and everywhere exerting their unwholesome influences about the so-called "frosty joints" which were permitted under the law to do business. "Frosty" in itself was deemed a harmless beverage, but its close kinship to lager beer created a situation that was decidedly delicate for a mere peace officer to cope with and still abide within the domain of his authority. "Frosty" was kept in stock by these places, but beer and other intoxicants were sold to the frequenters of the places under the name of the more innocent beverage, and the effect, on the whole, was even more harmful than had been that of the open saloon. Men drank "frosty," so-called, and under the influences of its fumes committed crimes for which the county was put to the expense of prosecuting them. "Frosty' no revenues to the county and thus bore no part in the enormous expenses of the court when dealing with the criminal. So it came about that Sheriff Crane decided to make his fight on this seemingly innocent drink, and he did it with so much success that he rid the county of the "frosty joints" during his first term, reducing the capital offenses fifty per cent and cutting the court expenses for the term just in half. During the ten years of his incumbency he is known to have saved the county, as court expenses, a net sum of forty thousand dollars as a result of his activity.

As might well be expected, Mr. Craue has, because of his well-waged war upon lawbreakers and that ilk, earned the ill will of an element of citizenship that manifests its unfairness and displays its anger by opposing him steadfastly at each opposing election. But, notwithstanding the merit of the man who is usually chosen to enter the lists against him, Mr. Crane usually comes out of the fray with a majority of about two to one-proof positive that Kaufman county knows where her best interests lie and when they are best protected. In all the years he has been in office Mr. Crane has been a member of the Sheriff's Association of Texas. In 1912 he was elected vice president of the association, at Fort Worth, and was elected president of the association the succeeding year, which position he now holds. His effort to make Kaufman county a clean and wholesome rural community has cost him infinitely more than the fees of the office have aggregated while the work was being actively pushed, and a remembrance of this fact is uppermost in the minds of the voters of the county when they are called upon to choose a sheriff from time to time. Mr. Crane is one of those plain, quiet, but earnest and withal vigorous men whose sense of right and justice is ever uppermost, and he does what he believes to be the part of duty and justice, and nothing more. He has never struck a man or had trouble with any one during the whole of his life. His popularity is one of the most apparent things in the county, when political matters are uppermost, and so long as he evinces a desire to be sheriff of Kaufman county there is little doubt but the voters of the county will give him little opposition, and none that will be effective against him.

On December 27, 1894, Mr. Crane was married in Kanfman county to Miss Jennie Russell, a daughter of J. O. Russell and Mattie (Stewart) Russell, both natives of Alississippi, where they spent their lives in the farming industry. Mrs. Crane is one of the six children of her parents, they being here named in the order of their birth, as follows: Mrs. Mollie Hill of Oklahoma; James, who died in 1901; Mrs. Crane, who was born in 1855; Charles, of Wichita Falls, Texas; John, of Haskell, Texas; and Naomi, the wife of Ben Jones, of Kaufman county. To Mr. and Mrs. Crane were born six girls—twin daughters whom they have named Arrah and Aerah, and Bertie, Guylia, Elsie and Jonnie. Mrs. Crane is a member of the Baptist church, while Mr. Crane aides to the church of which his father was a minister. They are pleasantly situated in Kaufman and enjoy the friendship and esteem of a wide circle of friends throughout the county.

Dr. I. DAVID RUSSELL. As the leading physician of Petrolia, Texas, Dr. I. David Russell, who has been engaged in practice here since 1907, is especially deserving of some mention in a historical and biographical work of this order. Dr. Russell proved himself one who had the courage of his convictions, and even after he had learned a trade and worked at it for some years with good success, he decided that the medical field was his proper sphere, and took action accordingly. His excellent success in the five or six years of his active practice have amply proven that he was well fitted for that profession, and that his decision was a most excellent one and one that will doubtless be of great benefit to humanity, as indeed it has already proven. Born in Sulphur Springs, Texas, on March 14, 1875, David Russell is the son of Isham and Mary (Gibson) Russell, both natives of Alabama, and concerning whom brief mention is here made as follows: Isham Russell came to Texas from Alabama while yet a boy, and he was a man who was prominent in public life for many years, holding many political and other of-fices, and being generally known for a faithful official and an excellent and worthy character. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served throughout as a Confederate soldier, and he was for twenty years postmaster in Winsboro, Texas. He was a devout Christian gentleman, a member of the Methodist church, and a prominent Mason. He died in 1911, aged eighty years, and is buried in Wood county, Texas. His wife, whom he married after he came to Texas, was also a member of the Methodist church, and a woman of a most esti-mable and lovable character. She died in 1898, when she was about sixty years old, and is buried beside her husband. They were the parents of seven children, and of that number Dr. Russell of this review was the fourth child and the youngest son.

Up to the age of eighteen years I. David Russell attended the public schools of Winsborn, Texas. He then took a position in a jewelry store in his home town, and he continued in the work in the jewelry repairing department for about six years, coming out as a full-fledged jeweler and watchmaker. He soon after engaged in the drug business, which he followed with success for about four years, and he then took up the study of medicine, entering Baylor University at Dallas, and he was graduated from the medical department in 1902 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He went to Edgewood to initiate the practice of his new profession, continuing there until 1907, when he came to Petrolia and here established himself in gen eral practice. His progress here as in Edgewood has been excellent, and Dr. Russell is known for the leading physician of the town today. He is a member of the Wichita County Medical Society, the State Medical Society and the Panhandle District Medical Society, and he is now serving as eity health physician of Petrolia, his record for service in that office being an excellent one thus far.

Dr. Russell is a Democrat, but not active in politics, and he is a member of the Methodist church of Petrolia. His fraternal affiliatious are with the Masonic order and the Woodmen of the World.

In 1899 Dr. Russell was married in Canton, Texas, to Jessie Matthews, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Matthews, of Canton. Mrs. Russell died in 1911, at the age of thirty-four years, leaving three children—Cleo, Marie and Lorenz.

Join E. Hooper. A residence covering a period of thirty-three years, during which time he has been ideutified with the material growth and prosperity of Colorado, has given John E. Hooper, eashier of the City National Bank, marked prestige among the citizens of this thriving Texas community. His activities have contributed in no small manner to the prominence of the city as the commercial and financial center of Mitchell county, and he has also impressed his influence upon the public and social life of the city, where, with other curnest and zealous men, he has striven for the advance of education, citic betterment and good citizenship. Mr. Hooper was born at Rome, Georgia, May 28, 1857, and is a sour of Benjamin F. and Amelia May 28, 1857, and is a sour of Benjamin F. and Amelia

A. Hooper.

The Hooper family has furnished to this country distinguished citizons in every walk of life. A direct ancestor of the subject of this review. William Hooper, was one of the subject of this review. William Hooper, was one of the subject of the review william Hooper, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The family at one time owned large plantations in the South and many slaves, but, like many others, went down with the Lost Cause, and during the Reconstruction period its members sought new homes in various sections of the country. Benjamin F. Hooper, tather of John E. Hooper, owned large estates in Floridia and Georgia, which he operated with slave labor. At the outbreak of hostilities between the South and the North, he east his fortunes with the Confederacy, and because of his prominence in his community was chosen a member of the board of examiners for the Southern army, as in regard to physical ability. Well known in religious circles, for fifteen years he was clerk of the Bush Arbor Baptist church, and was ever active in its work. In his death, which occurred in 1871, his community lost one of its most valued and valuable citizues. His wife died in 1862.

The fourth in order of birth of the eight children of his parents, John E. Hooper completed his educational training at Hearne Academy, Cave Spring, Floyd county, Georgia, and at the age of eighteen years turned his face toward Texas. He first settled on a ranch in Brown county, now Mills county, and con-tinued to be engaged in cattle raising and shipping stock until 1881, in which year he came to Colorado. He entered commercial life as a clerk in a grocery store and was subsequently promoted to bookkeeper, a position which he was filling at the time of his election, in November, 1884, to the office of county and district clerk, a capacity in which he continued fourteen con-secutive years. In 1898 he received the nomination and was subsequently elected county judge of Mitchell county, and gave his attention to the duties of that office for one two-year term. Mr. Hooper's entry into financial life occurred in 1900, when he became one of the organizers of the City National Bank of Colorado, and since that time has continued to act in the capacity of eashier of that institution. He is widely known in banking circles, and the high reputation which he bears in his community has served in no small degree to popularize the coffers of the bank which he represents. Fraternally Mr. Hooper is associated with the Masonic order, being high pricst of his Chapter and thrice illustrious master of his Council. Always a stalwart Democrat, he has worked untringly in behalf of his party. During the past fifteen years he has been a deacon of the Baptist church.

Mr. Hooper was married November 16, 1887, to Miss Louella White, of Dallas, Texas, daughter of G. W. White, who was for some years a merchant of Marlin, Texas, but is now living retired in Dallas. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hooper, Elsie May, aged twenty-two years, who makes her home with her parents.

EDWIN P. WALSH. The present county clerk of Wichita county, having held that office since the election of November, 1912, Mr. Walsh is an old resident of this section of Texas, and for more than twenty years has lived in Wichita Falls, where he was well known in business circles until he took his present office of county clerk.

Edwin P. Walsh was born at Fulton, Mississippi, February 18, 1861, the only child of James F. and Almira (Rogers) Walsh, the father a native of Tennessee and the mother of Mississippi. The father was a young man when he came to Mississippi, locating at Fulton, where he was engaged in merchandising. During the war he he was engaged in merchandising. During the war he he was engaged in the Thirty-fifth Mississippi, Regiment of Infantry, reached the rank of lieutenaut of his company, was wounded in battle, and also spent some time in a Federal prison after the battle of Nashville. Following the war he returned to Mississippi, again took up business, and subsequently moved to Louisville, Kentucky, where he was in business the latter years of his life. His death occurred in 1895 at the age of sixty-seven. The mother, who was educated and married in Mississippi, died in that state in 1864.

Edwin P. Walsh obtained his early education in the schools of Kentucky, and also attended college in Louisville. On leaving school he sought Texns as the field of his careef, and in Johnson county was engaged in the cattle business until 1890. In that year he moved to Wichita Falls, and for twelve years was actively associated with business in this city. In November, 1912, he was the choice of the citizens of Wichita county for the office of county clerk. For one term he served in the city council. Mr. Walsh is an active factor in local Democratic circles. His fraternal relations are with the Masonic Order, in which he has taken the York Rite degrees, including the Knight Templar degrees, and is also a member of the Shrine. He is safiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent bytering the control of Ellis. His clurch is the Pres-

Ou March 16, 1897, Mr. Walsh married Miss Cora Russell at Wichita Falls. Her father was the late M. P. Russell, who came to Texas in 1890, and both he and his wife are now deceased. The one child born to Mr. and Mrs. Walsh is Miss Annette Walsh, born at Wichita Falls, December 17, 1897, and now attending an academic school. Mr. Walsh has ereated his success entirely from his own hard work and application, and is now one of the most influential citizens of a city which he and many others consider a coming metropolis of Texas, having the best future of any town in the entire state.

LOUIS C. HIXCKLEY. To those equipped by nature for the profession of civil engineering, this vocation undoubtedly offers a great future. It demands, however, perhaps a more thorough technical knowledge of more subjects than almost any other business in which a man can engage, but its rewards are comensurate with its difficulties, and upon the pages of history the names of civil engineers who have seemingly accomplished the impossible appear with other benefactors of mankind. The great Southwest, and especially portions of Texas, without these able, trained, accurate, and daring men, would today have been somnolent, instead of offering homes and untold riches to the world. In the connection of civil engineering, Wichita Falls is especially fortunate in the possession of such an able and conscientous official as Louis C. Hinckley, city engineer, to whose activities and faithful service may be accredited much of the remarkable growth and development of this community during the past several years. Mr. Hinckley is a native of Fitchville, ohio, and was born August 24, 1872, a son of E. P. and Mary E. (Roe) Hinckley, who were also born at that place. The father was born in 1845 and the mother in 1847 and were married in 1871, and have led agricultural lives, now being residents of North Fairfield, Ohio. They have had four children-Louis C., William and Charles, who are engaged in farming in Ohio, and Martha, also a resident of the Buckeye

After attending the public schools of his native county, Louis C. Hinckley entered the University of Ohio, where he took a civil engineering course and graduated in 1892. He at once entered upon the practice of his pro-fession in Ohio, but in 1894 migrated to Texas, and was engaged in general civil engineering work in Wichita Falls and the surrounding country. In 1902 he took charge of an irrigation plant, the operations of which he directed until 1908, and in the spring of 1909 was elected city engineer of Wichita Falls, an office to which he has given his attention ever since. He has had charge of all public works, including the building of twenty miles of sewers and the laying of 35,000 square yards of street paving, and in addition to his general city work has been in the enjoyment of a large private business. His skill in handling projects of a large nature has made him one of the best known civil engineers in this part of the state, while in his official capacity he has proved painstaking and conscientious. His activities have carried him to various sections of the Southwest, and in each community in which he has found himself has made numerous friends. With a firm belief in the future of this part of the country he neglects no opportunity to sing its praises and advance its interests.

On August 26, 1896, Mr. Hinckley was married in Archer county, Texas, to Miss Mary Krehs, daughter of Arener county, resus, to miss mary Krens, daugner of John and Louisa Krebs, both still residents of Archer county, where they were pioneers. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hinckley: Elvira Louise, born in 1897, in Wichita county, Texas, who will graduate from the Wichita Falls High School in 1914; Della, horn in 1899, in this county, now attending the high school; Emmett, born at Wichita Falls, December 26, 1902, and now attending the graded schools, and Mary Elizabeth, born in February, 1907, at Wichita Falls. Mr. and Mrs. Hinckley are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a Democrat in his political belief and is fraternally connected with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Masons, in the latter of which he has attained to the Commandery and is now Worthy Patron of the Eastern Star.

Dr. WM. B. CRUDGINGTON. Though Dr. Crudgington has been but a brief period of time in Denison, having settled here early in 1913, he has already made some progress in his profession in this locality, and the promise of a successful career in his profession here, should he elect to remain, is a very bright one.

Dr. William B. Crudgington was born on September 4, 1866, near Knoxville, Tennessee, and is a son of Elijah and Caroline (Fender) Crudgington, the latter a sister of Captain Fender of Fort Worth, Texas. Elijah Crudgington was a farmer and stock raiser, and he came to Rockwell county, this state, in 1870, here continuing successfully in stock farming. He had served in the Union Army as a lieutenant in Company F, Thirty-Second Regiment of East Teunessee, and had a hard experience in the service. He was taken prisoner by Colonel Neal of the Confederate forces and held in prisons at Knoxville, Castle Thunder, Richmond and Salisbury, his period of confinement in those several prisons aggregating nineteen months. He suffered all the horrors of prison life, and when he came forth into the world again he was broken in health, and almost an invalid to the end of his days. He died at his home, in Breckenridge, Stephens county, on November 15, 1902, having gone to that place from Rockwell county in 1878. The mother died in Nine children were born to these parents, and of the five sons and four daughters Dr. Crudgington was the sixth in order of birth. He had his early education in the schools of Breckenridge, Texas, and when he had fin-ished the high school there he entered the medical department of the University at Louisville, Kentucky. In 1897 he was graduated from the Fort Worth University with the degree of M. D., and soon thereafter he engaged in practice in Archer City, in Archer county, Texas. He continued there for ten years, and in 1901 he established himself in practice in Gainesville, Texas, coming to Denison in March, 1913,

In the years of his practice Dr. Crudgington has enjoyed a favorable following, and has gained a reputation for skill in his chosen profession that is highly creditable to him. He has specialized the study of diseases of the nerves, and has taken post-graduate courses in the Chicago Post-Graduate College, at Chicago.

Dr. Crudgington has been a Democrat since he arrived at the dignity of his legal majority and has taken a fairly active part in politics in whatever community he has found himself located. He was county health physician for Archer county during a number of years while located there. Fraternally the doctor has membership in the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Royal Neighbors of America. He is a member of the United Presbyterian church, which denomination is generally regarded as being the acme of Presbyterianism.

Dr. Crudgington was married on December 18, 1892, at Archer City, Texas, to Miss Mary N. Youngblood, a daughter of Dr. J. M. Youngblood of Missouri. Both Dr. and Mrs. Youngblood are now deceased. To the Doctor and his wife seven children have been born, brief mention of whom are here made as follows: Leonard C., aged twenty years, is a marble-cutter at Gavensville, Texas. Mary C., eighteen years old, is devoting herself especially to the study of music, in which she is unusually talented. Herbert, aged seventeen, is a student, as are also Edward Kenneth, Charles, Marie V., and Varied strains of blood have entered into the make-up of Dr. Crudgington, his father being of English ancestry, and his mother a woman of German and Scotch parentage. Three brothers of Dr. Crudgington live in Texas. John R. is a stock farmer of Breckenridge, as is also James N., and Jonathan Wilford is an attorney of some prominence at Amarilla, Texas. He was county judge of Stephens county for some years, and is now chairman of the Prohibition Campaign Committee of the county. Another brother, George Elbert, was a railroad contractor, and died on February 2I, 1900, at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

ROBERT WHITE KNOX, M. D. Both professional success and influential activity as a citizen have marked the career of Dr. Knox in Houston and south Texas, where he has been a resident and physician and surgeon for thirty years. Few physicians in this part of the state have accomplished more or gained higher recognition in the profession than Dr. Knox. Dr. Knox at the present time is chief surgeon for the Atlantic Division for the Southern Pacific Railroad, a position which he has held for more than ten years. An achievement which was brought to successful issue during his service as chief surgeon, and to the success of which he gave an important impetus, was the establishment at Houston of the Southern Pacific Hospital, one of the finest institutions of the kind along the entire Southern Pacific System, and an institution of which the city of Houston as a community is intensely proud.

Dr. Robert White Knox was born at Danville, Kentucky, November 21, 1859. On both sides he is descended from sterling old Scotch ancestry, the ancestries who founded the family in America having come from Scotland to Philadelphia about 1732. In later generations representatives of the name were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and in every generation and in almost every phase of American national history the family has contributed worthy men and women to meet and perform the burdens and responsibilities of their day and generation. The parents of Dr. Kuox were David A. and Martha H. (Maxwell) Knox, the father having been a stock raiser in Kentucky.

Dr. Knox attained his higher education at Center College, Kentucky, where he was graduated in 1880 with the degree of A. B. and from the same institution attained the degree of Master of Arts in 1885. meantime he had entered the University of Virginia to pursue his medical studies and was graduated in 1882 with the degree of M. D. Subsequently, in order to prepare himself thoroughly for his chosen work, he entered the New York Post-Graduate Medical College, and gained an enlarged knowledge and skill by clinical observation and experience. After leaving school he became an interne at the Kentucky Infirmary for Women and Children of Louisville, where he remained for about one year. Coming to Texas, which was the field for his professional activities in 1883, Dr. Knox located at Richmond, where he established his office and where he remained for two years. At that date he entered upon his duties as chief surgeon of the Atlantic Division for the Southern Pacific Railway Company. The Southern Pacific Hospital was built by the railroad at a cost of $200,000, and the splendid building and ground were opened for use on June 22, 1911.

Dr. Knox is thoroughly representative of the modern profession of medicine, and is a man of varied and broad interests, in his own profession and in the larger fields of social and civic life. He is at the present time vice president of the Texas State Medical Association, was formerly president of the South Texas Medical Association, and a former president of the Houston Medical Club, and a member of the Southern Medical Association. He is connected with various business interests in his home city. His interests aside from his profession attract him most into the life of the outdoors, and there is no better exemplar nor advocate of outdoor living than Dr. Knox. He has membership in the Houston Club, The Houston Country Club, The San Antonio Club, The Galveston Country Club and is a lifelong member of The Houston Turn Verein, and takes a very active part in the activities of these various organizations which represent the choicest features of social life in his home city and other Texas centers. In January, 1903, he was sent out by Stone & Webster to Ponce in Porto Rico, as manager of the Ponce Railway & Lighting Company. He remained there until May, 1905, and in July, 1905, came to Houston as manager of the Houston Electric Company. The residents of Houston who are familiar with the important changes in the local transportation service will recall that the street car service has been practically made over since Mr. Daly came to take charge of the local system, and at the present time there is no city in Texas or the south, for that matter, possessing better equipment and more efficient operation than the Houston Electric Co. In April, 1913, was announced the appointment of Mr. Daly as manager of the Galves-ton-Houston Electric Railway Company. Mr. Daly is a director of the Lumberman's National Bank, vice president of the Suburban Realty Company of Houston, and has been director, managing director, vice president and president of the No-Tsu-Oh Association. He is one of the prominent members of the Houston Club and other social organizations, including the Rotary Club, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the Benevthe Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Commons, the Benevicel and Protective Order of Elks, the Halian Club, the Houston Country Club, and the Houston Turnverein. Mr. Daly was married January 12, 1910, to Miss Gertrude Hyde Paine, a daughter of Robert E. Paine of Houston. They are the parents of one daughter, Gertrude Paine Daly. The home of Mr. Daly and family is at 1505 McKinney Avenue in Houston.

MILTON LINK MORRIS. Beginning at the early age of twelve years in his connection with the International & Northern Railroad, Milton Link Morris, now District Passenger Agent for that road, has experienced practically every variety of service peculiar to the elerical and executive departments up to and including his present responsible position. Twenty-seven years of service with one concern, and that covering the entire business career of the man, is a record that few men may point to, but that is the distinction claimed by Mr. Morris, and it is one that places him in a class by himself. He has advanced step by step from the post of office boy to stenographer, clerk and ticket stock clerk, each in their turn; then special advertising clerk, assistant ticket agent, special passenger agent and relief agent, and in 1901 got into line for his present post. His rise has been consistent, justifiable and steady, and is a source of much gratification to those who have witnessed his upward climb.

Born at Palestine, Texas, in 1876, Milton Link Morris is the son of William and Nannie (Latimer) Morris. The father was born in Virginia and came to Texas about 1852, settling then in Palestine, where he married and engaged in the mercantile business, in which he continued until death claimed him in 1882. The mother was a daughter of D. A. Latimer, one of the first settlers of Palestine, coming here from Kentucky with his family and making the trip overland, in the accepted and usual mode common to the period. They brought with them the first cook stove shown in Anderson county, Texas, and were conspicuous from that fact, if for no other reason. He was a man who was prominent for years in the affairs of Anderson county, and was the first sheriff the county ever boasted.

Milton Morris received little enough in the way of schooling, for he was but twelve years old, as already stated, when he entered the employ of the International and Great Northern Railroad in the capacity of office boy. The death of his father some few years previous made necessary this early independence of the lad, but his rise in his work has not been appreciably hampered by his lack in educational training. His advance from by his lack in educational training. His advance from one post to another has already been cited, but it remains to add here that in 1901 he was made traveling passenger agent with headquarters at San Antonio, and in 1906 he became city passenger and ticket agent at Houston, in charge of the city and depot offices, a position he continued to hold until 1911, when he was made District Passenger and Ticket Agent. The crowning honor of his career to date came in September, 1911, when the reorganization of the road was effected. Mr. Morris was one of the incorporators of the new company and a director of the same, which is his status with the International at this time. His advance has been due entirely to his ability, ambition and concentration on the duties of the position in which he found himself, and each promotion came as a distinct reward for efficient and praiseworthy service.

Mr. Morris is a member of the First Presbyterian church of Houston, and his fraternal affiliations are with the Masons, in which he has attained the Master Mason degree, and with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Houston Press Club, the Houston Athletic Club, the Houston Aderaft Club, the Houston Lumbermen's Club, the Houston Musical Club, and the Houston Turnverein Club. On January 28, 1992, Mr. Morris was married to Miss Ruby Anderson, the daughter of A. A. Anderson, of Palestine, Texas, and they reside at 1509 Capital Avenue, Houston.

W. T. MELTON. The life of the late W. T. Melton of Brady was noteworthy, both in character and in accomplishment. It began with his service to the Confederacy and closed after forty years of business and civic activities in this state, to which he always manifested the finest loyalty and affection. As editor, publisher, business man and legislator, he displayed a high order of ability, and in his death McCulloch county lost one who had at all times demonstrated the highest ideals of citi-

The first of seven children, Mr. Melton was born July 11, 1843, in Alabama, and was a son of David C. Melton, also of that state. The latter, a miller by trade, was an early settler in Denton county, Texas, where for some years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. Subsequently he removed to San Saba, where he continued for a long period in the milling business, but finally removed to Paint Rock, Concho county, where his death occurred about the year 1885.

W. T. Melton received his education in the public schools of his native state. When a youth he was ap-prenticed to the trade of printer. On completing his apprenticeship be worked at his trade in Louina and Wedowee, Alabama, and when but eighteen years of age enlisted in the Confederate army for service in the Civil war, which had just broken out. He served through the war in General Lee's army, participating in numerous important and hard-fought engagements and at all times proving himself a brave, valiant and faithful sol-dier. How largely the great Civil war developed the youth of the country can never be adequately known, but there are those living and those deceased who entered upon the hardships incident to a soldier's life when but lads and so bravely and courageously faced every vicissitude and uncomplainingly bore suffering and hardship that their valor should be remembered when this united country counts over its heroes. The great struggle between the north and the south, with the important issues it represented, surely produced a class of trained, disciplined men, whose influence has ever since been recognized in the peaceful pursuits which have engaged them. It was in the conflict of arms that the temper of Mr. Melton's character was set and his faculties trained for the large services of his more mature age. Like many other Sontherners, unable to bear conditions as they were in the period of Reconstruction, he sought a new field for his activities in the great southwest, and in 1866 settled near Cameron, in Milam county, Texas, where he worked at his trade for some time. Moving to Bell county, he became proprietor of a newspaper at Belton, subsequently moving to Lampasas, where he was publisher of the Lampasas Dispatch, the first paper in Lampasas county. Some time later Mr. Melton moved on to San Saba, where he published the San Saba News, but about 1890 disposed of his printing press, retired from the newspaper business, and embarked in the sheep business in Concho county. He was thus engaged until elected sheriff of Concho county, at which time he moved to Paint Rock, the county seat, where he had his home during the eight years of office. He made an excellent record as sheriff, and was urged by his fellow citizens to accept office again, but declined re-election and entered the real estate business. In 1896 he was elected representative of his district in the State Logislature, where he served one term, and in 1897 went to Brownwood, where served one term, and in 1897 went to Brownwood, where to Brady in 1904, and here became senior member of the Melton Land and Abstract Company, with which he continued to be identified until the time of his death, which occurred April 28, 1909.

Mr. Melton's funeral, which was conducted by the Rev. Bolton of the Fort Worth Methodist Church and the Rev. Matthis of the Brady Methodist church, was a solemnity such as well attests the value of his lifetime. He had become widely known over the state, and the tributes of respect were not alone from his bome community. He was laid to rest in the Brady cemetery, and the Masons, Odd Peldows, Knights Templar, Conteerate Veterans, and all the orders to which he belonged, as well as many private citizens not related by the bonds of fraternal union, united in a great demonstration of brotherly love and esteem for their deceased associate and friend.

For three years Mr. Melton was commander of the Mountain Remnant Brigade of Southern Texas. In Masonry he had reached the Knights Templar degree. From youth a member of the Methodist church, he served for many years as steward and superintendent of the Sunday school, and his work in healt of religious and charitable movements made his death a severe loss to many who had depended upon him.

Mr. Melton was successful in his business affairs and in his political activities, and was no less successful in gaining the love and esteem of his fellow men, and, although he has passed to those shores toward which all mankind is hastening, his good deeds will be long remembered and his memory will remain green in the hearts of those who learned to call him friend.

Mr. Melton was married to Miss Missouri Frances Barron of Alabama. To their marriage were born six children, four daughters and two sons, all of whom are married, with the exception of one son, Thornton Lee Melton. A brief record of the children is as follows: Miss Cora married Jesse F. Cross of Fort Worth and has two daughters, Mesdames Fay Looney and Chas. Miller of Brownwood. Miss Willie married William Vaughn of Brady, and their two children are Barron Melton, aged eighteen, and Hazel, aged twelve. Miss Lula married John Vaughn of Plainview, Texas, and their four children—three sons and one daughter—are: Grady, Bertraud, Holfred and John Melton, Miss Mannie have no children. W. T. Melton, Lt., married Miss Flora Gray of San Safe County, and they have a daughter, Frances Camille. Thornton Lee Melton, who is a teacher of instrumental music at Brady, lives at home with his mother.

JOSEPH F. MEYER. One of the magnificent army of self-made men of America is Joseph F. Meyer, president of the Houston National Exchange Bank, prominent in business circles in Houston and the county and widely known as a successful financier. He began in the business world when he was sixteen years old, as the proprictor of an independent business, and while his earlier operations were on a slender scale, they expanded with years he came to be reckoned among the more telling and forceful business men of the city. His career is one that may be viewed with pride by all who honor the success of that man who fighth his own way up from obscurity into prominence, and Mr. Meyer has met with due recognition of his prosperity and success wherever he has gone.

Born in Germany in 1851, Joseph F. Meyer is the son of Frank and Josephine (Meyer) Meyer. The mother of the boy died when he was three years old, and the father brought him to America in 1855, settling in Memphis, Tennessee, moving in 1867 to Houston, Texas. In that year Joseph Meyer was sixteen years of age, but he did not regard his extreme youth as any great drawback to his entering into business on his own responsibility, and he engaged in the hardware business in the same year of his arrival here. From then until now he has been identified, more or less conspicuously, with the financial and commercial activities of Texas. Beginning as he did in a small way in 1867, the business three years later came to be known as the Joseph F. Meyer Company, of which he was president at the age of nineteen, and as such he has since continued. From the infinitesimal scope of the business in its early life, it has expanded yearly until it has now assumed magnificent proportions, and carries on an ever increasing trade in heavy hardware, wagon makers' supplies, farm implements, railroad contractors' supplies. iron, steel, etc., and is one of the biggest concerns of its kind in the city or county.

With the continued prosperity that Mr. Meyer experienced, be began in the early inheries to cast about for other places for the investment of his capital, and in 1892 he was one of the organizers of the Houston National Exchange Bank, of which he was vice president until 1912, when he became president. He has shown himself a financier of no mean ability, as well as a merchant in the best sense of the term, and he enjoys the confidence of the people of Houston, who know him for his many excellent qualities.

Mr. Meyer is an Independent Democrat in his political faith, and while it is true that he has never sought political office, it is also true that various offices have sought him, and he was twice elected alderman in the city of Houston, representing the third ward in the city council from ISSS to ISS2. He also served one year as county commissioner of Harris county and enjoys the distinction of having been chief of the Houston Volunteer Fire Department as long ago as in ISSO.

Mr. Meyer is a Mason of the Royal Arch degree, and is also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elbs. He was married in 1884 to Miss Rebecca Baker, the daughter of George Baker, a pioneer citizen of Houston, where Mrs. Meyer was born and reared. Three children have come to them—George B., Joseph P., Jr., and Frank K. Meyer.

DOUGADD J. PRICE. Forty years of continuous service with one company is a record that reflects the greatest of credit upon any man who may make claim to such a career, and Dougald J. Price is one who has duly qualified in that respect. From messenger boy to General Passenger agent is an ascent that few men experience in a life time, and in the case of Mr. Price the accomplishment is so much the greater in consideration of the fact that he had little or no schooling in his boyhood. He is today one of the foremest men in business circles of Houston.

Dougdd J. Price was born in Wilmington, North Carolina, in 1859, and is the son of William J. and Annie E. (Westeott) Price. The father was a native of North Carolina, and was a Naval Stores Inspector for a number of years, later engaging in the business of building saw mills in North Carolina, a business that claimed his attention for many years. During the Civil war he was a participant as a member of a North Carolina Confederate Regiment, and saw much service during the years of hostilities. Both he and his wife are now deceased.

The schools of Wilmington furnished the training of Dougald Price up to the age of twelve. When he was fourteen years old he came to Texas and entered the employ of the I. & G. N. R. R. Company as a messenger in the telegraph. In this department, bright messengers are given an opportunity to learn the Morse alphabate, and young Price soon demonstrated his power over the key, becoming in December, 1873, operator at Crockett, Texas, despite his extreme youth. He remained in the telegraph service for five years, when he was advanced to the General Superintendent's office, then the accounting department and there spent three years, during which time he beam familiar with much of the system. In 1882 he was placed in the pacities there until 1897, when he was promoted to the office of General Passenger Agent of the entire system, and he has successfully carried out the duties of that responsible position from then until the present time.

Mr. Price is prominent in fraternal and social circles

M.F. Tries is pominient in Jaccana and solar fraces in his home city, having membership in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and in the Houston Club and the Houston Chamber of Commerce. He was warried in 1880 to Miss Mary E. Jowers, the daughter of Judge W. G. W. Jowers, who was a pioneer of Anderson county, Mrs. Price died in 1909, leaving five children, as follows: George F., Charles M., Annie Marie, Frank McCullough and Hunter Jowers Price. Mr. Price was married a second time in June, 1911, Miss Nellie Hafford becoming his wife. She died in August, 1912. The residence of the family is maintained at No. 3704 Main street, and is one of the sightly homes of the city.

JAMES W. Haddock. The present sewer commissioner of El Paso has been for fitteen years identified by residence with his section of Texas, and has gained material and large influence in public life. During his administration as sewer commissioner many improvements have been made to increase the sanitary system of El Paso, and among these might be mentioned the construction of ten miles of sewerage, the erection of a pumping plant which is large enough to handle all the city sewage, besides an auxiliary pumping plant for East El Paso. The capacity of these two plants is 4,000,000 gallons per day. It is municipal improvement of this kind which counts effectively in placing a city upon a par with the best of American nunicipalities, and it is the ambition of all friends of El Paso and her present official administration to place this city without any superiors among municipalities of the same rank in population, and wealth.

James W. Hadlock, who has had a long and varied career, including many lines of service and responsibility, is a native of the state of New Hampsbire, born at Monroe, that state, October 9, 1842. New Hampshire remained his home until he was about thirty years of age, at which time he moved to Boston, where he was for six years engaged in the railway supply and machinery business. From there he came to Texas, locating at Dallas, and while there promoted the Texas Trunk Rail-road, building this line as far as Kaufman. Subsequently he spent about fifteen years in St. Louis, where he was general western manager of the Burton Stock Car Company. The succeeding two years were spent in the City of Mexico, and during that time be was locomotive eugineer, running a passenger train out of the City of Mexico. From the capital of Mexico he came to El Paso in 1898, and being a man of moderate means, entered actively into several enterprises which have rewarded him with substantial prosperity during the succeeding fifteen years. For two years he was engaged in the development of a large irrigation plant, three miles east of the city. He then became connected with the Government Customs service and was in the El Paso custom house for five years. During the next year he was engaged in the real estate business, and in 1907 was appointed sewer commissioner, the office which he

Mr. Hadlock obtained his early education in the public schools of New Hampshire, and when a very young man began earning his own way as a news agent. This was his occupation until he was nineteen years of age, at which time he enlisted in the Tenth Vermont Infantry, and gave three years of service as a Union soldier. For two years he was on the staff of General Ricketts. At the Battle of Spottsylvania he was standing beside General John G. Sedgewick when that general was killed. During the Battle of the Wilderness he was detailed on the staff of Generals Grant and Meade, and during the engagement had a horse shot from under him and himself slightly wounded, although he quickly obtained a new mount and went on with his duties.

After his return from the war, Mr. Hadlock took up the work of railroading, becoming a locomotive engineer, and continued that employment regularly until he came west. At Woodsville, New Hampshire, on April 11, 1861, Mr. Hadlock married Miss Mary Helen Cutting, a daughter of Joseph Cutting of Haverhill.

Mrs. Hadlock was a woman of strong mentality and many virtues of heart and mind, and her encouragement and assistance were always effective forces guiding and directing her husband in his business affairs, as well as in the life of the home and society. They enjoyed an unusual length of married companionship, their wedded life being prolonged for more than fifty-one years, and in April, 1911, they celebrated their golden wedding. Mrs. Hadlock passed away on April 27, 1912, at the age of sixty-eight and her last resting place is in one of the beautiful cemeteries of El Paso. She was very popular in social circles, and at her death was paid a somewhat unusual honor by being given a semi-military funeral. She was very charitable both in her church and among poor people of all classes in the city. The two children born of their marriage are as follows: Edson J., who is married and a resident of El Paso, and for the past twenty-nine years having been locomotive engineer on the Texas & Pacific Railroad; Fred D., also married and residing in El Paso is a locomotive engineer on the Southern Pacific line. Mr. Hadlock is not affiliated with any one church but favors and helps them all. Fraternally he is a Mason, is a member of the Grand Army Post, of the National Union, and an honorary member of the Brotherhood of Union, and an nonorary member of the Brothenson Locomotive Engineers. He has for some years been one of the party fighters of the Democratic party and takes an active interest in all matters pertaining to government and political questions.

It is the opinion of Mr. Hadlock that whether a man be young or old, provided he has ambition, and whether he possesses capital or not, provided he is houset and has energy, that such a person can come to any part of Texas and eventually succeed. Provided he has a little capital he will find opportunities that will not disappoint him, and that cannot be found elsewhere. Mr. Hadlock's own experience, since both he and his two sons have prospered remarkally well during their residence here, and they are among the most loyal and enthusiastic friends of El Paso and of the entire state.

ADOLEH KRAKAUER. Among the men of wealth and prominence in the city of El Paso, Texas, Adolph Krakauer occupies a position of the highest rank, playing not only an important part in the business affairs of the city but also in her civic affairs. Mr. Krakauer, although foreign born, has lived in this country for many years and is most truly an American. He is recognized as one of the most public spirited men in the city and his progressive ideas have been influential in questions of public interest more than once. He is of that class of men whom one always finds in growing cities, men of initiative and executive power, who are not afraid to take a step into the future even though the outcome be not quite certain, and who in consequeuce are deferred to and admired by all those with whom they are acquainted.

Adolph Krakauer was born in Fürth, Bavaria, on the 23d of May, 1846, the son of Joel and Babette (El-Sasser) Krakauer, both of whom were born in Bavaria. The young boy received a good education in the Latin schools of the country and later attended the Royal Commercial College of Fürth, from which he was graduated in the class of 1862. After his graduation he first went to work as a clerk in one of the leading commercial establishments of Fürth, being thus engaged from 1862 until 1865.

During the latter year he emigrated from Bavaria to New York City, where he soon secured employment as a clerk. He had very little money in his pockets when he landed in New York, but by dint of hard work both as clerk and bookkeeper, he succeeded in laying by quite a bit, and when he left New York in 1869 he was far better able to cope with the world than when he arrived. He came to San Antonio, Texas, and there became bookkeeper for Louis Zork, the leading merchant in San Antonio at that time and a pioneer of the city, having settled there in the early forties. Mr. Krakauer remained with him for some time and became a valued employee and later on his son-in-law. After a time he secured an interest in the firm and when he came to El Paso he was well equipped both with experience and in a pecuniary way.

It was in 1875 that he came to El Paso, and at this time the city consisted of seventy-five Mexicans and twenty-five white residents. He entered the employ of Samuel Schutz and Brother, who operated a general merchandise store. Mr. Krakauer remained with this firm as a clerk until 1879 when the proprietors sold out to Ketelsen and Deletau. Under the new ownership to Ketesken and Deletau. Under the new ownershall,
Mr. Krakauer became general manager for the store and later became a partner. He sold his interest in the business in 1885 and in January of that year organized the firm of Krakauer, Zork and Moye, Mr. Zork being a son of his former employer at San Antonio and his own brother-in-law. In January, 1911, Mr. Move sold out his interest in the business and the firm was then incorporated as Krakauer, Zork and Moye's Successors, Incorporated. The firm deals in hardware, machinery and mining supplies, and is one of the largest wholesale houses in this business in this section of the country. They have a large branch house in Chihuahua, Mexico, and is the largest concern of its kind in western Texas, or indeed in the south-west. Over seventy men and women are employed and the business of the company extends over New Mexico, Texas, Arizona and Old Mexico.

In addition to being the president and leading spirit in this enterprise, Mr. Krakauer is deeply interested in various other enterprises of importance, among these being the Two Republic Life Insurance Company, of which he is president. He is a director in the First National Bank and also in the Rio Grande Valley Banking and Trust Company. He is a large property owner, having interests in the city of El Paso and also throughout the southwest.

Mr. Krakauer has always taken a keen interest in political affairs and has taken a leading part in local polities ever since coming to El Paso, though of late years his business cares have grown so heavy that he can not give much time to politics. He was at one time county commissioner of El Paso county, serving one term. He was later elected alderman and served for four terms, winning the approbation of the public to such an extent that he was elected mayor of the eity in 1889, being the first Republican ever elected to this position.

In his religious beliefs Mr. Krakauer is a member of the Jewish church, and has done a great deal for the people of his faith in this city. He at one time served as president of the Jewish church and is now one of the trustees. During his term as president he assisted very materially in the erection of the Jewish Temple.

Mr. Krakauer is a charming, well educated man, a man of refinement as well as business ability, and a citizen to be proud of. He speaks the Spanish language fluently and is widely traveled, frequently visiting the old world with his wife and family.

Iu 1873 Adolph Krakauer and Miss Ada Zork were united in marriage, and three children have been born to them. Robert and Julins A. are associated with their father in business and live in El Paso. Addie married Hugh Dotter and resides in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Mr. Krakauer had a brother and sister in this country, but the former, Max Krakauer, died in Chi-huahua, Mexico, where he was engaged in business as a partner of his brother's. The sister, Hermina, is the widow of Beruard Ordenstein, and lives in El Paso.

J. DAVID AVIS. No history of Texas and the men who have contributed to its development would be complete that failed to make extended mention of J. David Avis, who since 1875 has been a participant in the wonderful changes that have transformed the great Southwest from a practically wild and uncivilized section into one of the most productive and valuable stretches of the country. First as freighter and Indian fighter, later as cattle dealer and breeder, and finally as leading business man and public official, in every capacity Mr. Avis has ably discharged the duties of life and today is recognized as one of the prominent and substantial men of Wichita Falls. He is a Texan by birth and training, and was the first child born in the town of Montague, Montague county, August 13, 1861, a son of David and Mahala Katherine (Webb) Avis.

David Avis was born in the State of Maryland, and as a young man came to Texas, settling at Montague during the early fifties. Subsequently he removed to Montague, and there, in the later fifties, established himself in a general mercantile business, in which he was engaged during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1868, when he was fifty-two years of age. During the Indian outrages Mr. Avis built the fort at Montague for the protection of the early settlers, and his military training thus gained served him in good stead when the Civil war broke out and he became a lieutenant in a regiment of Texas volunteer infantry, with which he served until the close of the struggle. wife, a native of Missouri, came to Texas as a child and settled at Montague County, there being married to Mr. Avis in 1859. After his death she was again married, and her second husband is also deceased, but she still survives, and is living at Wichita Falls, aged seventy-three years and in the best of health. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Avis, all of whom are living, and of these J. David is the oldest.

J. David Avis received his education in the public schools of Montague county, and subsequently attended a private school under the preceptorship of Colonel Hall; but the early death of his father made it necessary that he should contribute to the family support, and accordingly in 1876, when but fifteen years of age, he left home, built a log cabin on Salt Creek, and there engaged in cattle raising. The long nights were often passed in reading and study by the light of a tallow candle, and thus the youth prepared himself for the duties of after life. He also carried ou farming operations, and was engaged in freighting between Denison and Sherman and to the west and had many thrilling experiences in the outlaw-infested country, as well as taking part in numerous encounters with the hostile Indians. In 1880 he sold his outfit to give his entire attention to cattle raising and selling in Montague county, and in 1882, on coming to Wichita county, continued in the same line of business. He still has large interests in farming lands and stock raising in various parts of the State, and in this connection is widely known. Mr. Avis entered business life in Wichita Falls in 1891, when he became the proprietor of a grocery establishment, and this he conducted successfully until 1896, when he sold his interests therein and embarked in the hardware business. The Avis Hardware Company was established in September, 1909, and this has since developed into one of the leading ventures of its kind in this part of the State. He continues as president of this concern, is vice president of the First National Bank, in which he has held an interest for upwards of thirty years, and is a director in the Southern Wichita Life Insurance Company, having in addition large interests in various other enterprises. He is a member of the Masonic Lodge, in which he is Past Master, Past High Priest and a Shriner, having reached the thirty-second degree of Masonry, and is connected also with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. A stalwart Democrat in his political views, he has served as county commissioner from precinct No. 1 and during three terms has been a member of the city council. With his family, he attends the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Avis was married March 1, 1885, at Montague, Texas, to Miss Minnie Ollie Bush, native of Virginia, who was brought to Texas as a child by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Bush, pioneers of Grayson county. Mr. Bush met his death in a runaway accident. Four sons and four daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Avis: Frank P., born December 27, 1885, at Montague, a graduate of Wichita Falls Business College, now in business with his father, is married and has one child; J. Davis, Jr., born in Wichita county in 1887, a ranch owner of Wichita Falls, is married and has two children; owner or Wichita Fails, is married and has two children; Kathryn Lou, born in 1889 in Wichita county, who mar-ried W. F. Weeks; Lillian Grace, born in Wichita county in 1892; Albert W., born in 1894 at Wichita Falls, who is engaged in business with his father; Charles Robert, born in 1896 at Wichita Falls and now attending high school; Gretchen, born at Wichita Falls in 1900 and now attending the graded schools; and Ruby Cornelia, born in 1902 at Wichita Falls and also a student in the public schools.

Hon. CLYDE DAVIS WRIGHT. The present county judge of Deaf Smith county, Mr. Wright is an attorney and has been a resident of the Texas Panhandle for the past twenty two years. Few men have had better opportunity for close study of conditions in this section of the state and having seen the Panhandle during its hardest times, he is more than content to stake his confidence and his all on the continued prosperity and development of the region.

(lyde Davis Wright was born January 19, 1879, in Ellis county near Milford, Texas. His paternal grandfather was one of the founders of this town, where Judge Wright was born. The father, John R. Wright, was born in Indiana, and came to Texas in 1852, the Wright family being among the pioneers of Ellis county. The family is of English descent and was founded in North Carolina early in the eighteenth century. The original immigrant served as a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Subsequently the Wrights crossed the mountains and located in Kentucky, and from there moved to Indiana. Great-grandfather William Wright was a resident of Indiana before the territory was admitted to the Union, and was chosen as one of the prominent citizens of his community to be one of the committee which greeted General Lafayette on his visit to America during the twenties. William Wright was a farmer by occupation. On the maternal side Judge Wright's family were early settlers of Georgia, coming wright's taimly were early sections of coeffin, coming to that colony from England. They lived on the Savannah river, where they were prominent planters and slave holders. John R. Wright, the father, was a farmer and also a surveyor. He served as county surveyor, and also as county commissioner of Ellis county, and was one of the men of that county who was depended upon for leadership in public affairs. He is now living retired at Hereford, which has been his home since December, 1907. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company B of the First Texas Cavalry, serving as a private from beginning to end. Although he thus fought for the southern cause, neither he nor his father, Arvin Wright, had ever held slaves, did not believe in the institution, and opposed secession. John R. Wright married Florence Tate, who was born in Georgia, her family moving to Texas after the war, and she was married in Ellis county in 1874. Her death occurred in that county when thirty-eight years of age. One of the three children is now deceased.

Clyde Davis Wright, partly through the advantages supplied by his father and partly on his own account, secured what would be accounted a liberal education, first in the public schools and then in Clarendon College. The first twelve years of his career he spent on a farm, and then began reading law in the office of Ware & Smith at Clarendon. By close attention to his studies he was admitted to practice in 1902 in all the courts of Texas. His professional career began at Silverton, where he was in general practice for three years. In December, 1907, he opened his office in Hereford, and has been in general practice there until elected to the office of county judge in 1910. He is now serving his second term, and the citizens have given him their hearty support, and recognize him as one of the most capable officials Deaf Smith county has ever had. Mr. Wright has also served two terms in the office of county attorney of Briscoe county, one term by election and one by appointment.

He is a worker for the Democratic party, is a mem-ber of the Masonic Blue Lodge and the Knights of Pythias, and he and his family worship in the Presbyterian church. He was married June 15, 1910, in Hereford to Miss Lelia Gregg, who was born in California, but was reared in Indiana, a daughter of Austin W. Gregg. The two children of their marriage are W. Gregg. The two children of their marriage are Elva Lee Wright, born at Hereford, May 26, 1911, and Arvin Gregg Wright, born August 26, 1913, in Hereford. Judge Wright devotes all his time to his official duties and his profession. His chief recreation is the game of tennis, and he is a thorough student of general literature, and of current affairs. He is also interested in agriculture and stock raising.

Jas. L. Dow. A schoolboy and printer's devil at the same time; promoted to the "case," and by practical doing learning the art preservative; then a journeyman, and gradually accumulating, in spite of reverses, the means for independence; and now editor and manager and largest stockholder in the best country newspaper and printery in west Texas—such in brief, suggestive phrasing, has been the career of Mr. Dow of Lubbock.

James L. Dow is a Texan, born in Hamilton county, September 25, 1878. His father, James Dow, came from his native Scotland to America in 1870 and direct to Texas, locating first in Collin county, near McKinney. He was a farmer and stock raiser, but prior to coming to America followed the sea as a sailor. In Texas he served for a term as county treasurer of Gaines county and took a very prominent part in school matters. He is now a resident of Gaines county, having gone there in 1904. He is a Democrat and a member of the Methodist church. Of late years he has engaged in the telephone business, being one of the principal stockholders and directors of the Seminole Telephone Company of Gaines county. The maiden name of his wife was Margaret G. Nisbett, who was born in Scotland, and followed her husband to America as soon as he had established himself in this country. Her five children are all now living. She died at Seminole, Texas, at the age of sixty-four on March 6, 1911.

The third child of the family, James L. Dow, had his education in the public schools of Lampasas and Borden counties, and attended high school in Colorado City, Texas, where he was graduated in 1897. His early career was spent on a ranch and farm, and at the age of twenty-one he started out for himself. His first practical training for his career was during his school days, when he was attending school and working between times in a printing office, where he first learned the technical details of printing. He completed his apprenticeship with Colorado Spokesman, and his first wages was not more than ten dollars a month and board. He was connected with this paper for more than two years, and for one year was with the Stockman Publishing Company. After that, having saved some money, he bought the paper on which he had served his apprenticeship, and conducted the plant with success, and finally sold it at a good advance on the purchase price. He then bought the Weekly Review, which proved disastrous, owing to a fire which consumed the building and destroyed all its equipment. There was little or no insurance, so that Mr. Dow was practically at the beginning of his career once more. He was then employed some time on the Merkle Mail and the Brownwood Bulletin. He persevered, and finally with his savings he moved to Lubbock and became foreman and associate editor with the Avalanche Publishing Company. After two years he bought out the establishment, and since April, 1908, has conducted the Aralanche as a paper with a very large circulation, a strong list of advertisers, and a news gatherer and publisher of exceptional influence and ability. The mechanical plant has few equals among the country papers of Texas. Mr. Dow has improved it from a three thousand dollar plant to one in which twelve thousand dollars is invested, that representing the capital stock of the incorporation, of which Mr. Dow controls the largest interest. He is president, editor and manager of the Avalanche Publishing Company. The Avalanche has a weekly issue, a twelve to sixteen page paper, and the offices and machinery are housed in a new and modern structure twenty-six by eighty feet in ground dimensions. company has introduced the hest and latest machinery and does a large amount of business in job work.

Mr. Dow is a Democrat in politics and has always interested himself in local affairs and in promoting good government. He has never sought any public office, and at the present time, as a member of the school board, is filling about the only public place he has ever been willing to accept. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Woodmen Circle, the Modern Order of Pretorians, and the Knights of Pythias. He belongs to the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the Methodist church and Superintendent of its Sunday school.

On May I. 1905, in Mitchell county, Mr. Dow married Miss Lila Dorn, a native of Alabama, but reared in Texas from childhood. Her father was J. M. Dorn of Mitchell county. The two sons born to their marriage are: James Rankin Dow, who was born in Sweetwater, Texas, June, 1906; and Melvin Nisbett Dow, born at Lubbock, March 10, 1908.

J. H. Smith. During a quarter century's residence in El Paso, Mr. Smith has witnessed the growth of this city from 9.000 population to 50,000 and corresponding development in every direction. On leaving school, he entered the mercantile business for himself in Randolph county, and for eighteen years was a merchant of his native county. He was then associated with his father on the farm until October, 1888, at which date he moved to Texas and located at El Paso, then a comparatively small city with only a tithe of the industry and business which it now possesses. In El Paso he was first engaged in the fuel and feed business, and after four years became actively identified with public affairs, serving for eight years as city collector and as city treasurer for two years. At the end of this political service he established himself in the real estate business and now handles general transactions in that line. THOMAS ALBERT THUSSTON. The leading firm of public necountants in El Paso and west Texas is that which was established in the spring of 1907 by Mr. Thurston. The profession of necountancy is comparatively modern in its present features and scope and yet has been developed to be one of the most important adjuncts of modern commerce. Mr. Thurston has a splendid equipment and expert knowledge of his business, and it has been reinforced by a long and varied experience in business affairs.

Thomas Albert Thurston was born at Quiney, Illinois, April 23, 1869, being the oldest of four children born to Eugene and Emma A. (Butts) Thurston. The father was born in New York State and the mother in Ohio, and they moved to Illinois at a very early time. The father, whose death occurred at the age of fifty two in 1898, was for many years a successful railroad man and became a resident of Tennessee in 1883. The mother is now living in New York City at the age of sixty-four.

Subsequently for several years he was with a live stock commission company in Kansas City, he then engaged in business for himself, with Mr. H. T. Bruce as partner, and they carried on an extensive business dealing in horses and mules. WILLIAM A. TAYLOR. For many years a successful merebant and farmer of Kaufman county, William A. Taylor of Kaufman is now living a somewhat retired life, although his financial interests still bear a close relation to merchandise and banking, in addition to which he is extensively connected with agriculture. He came to Kaufman county in 1872, a young man of twenty-three years, with a poor education and only the experience in business secured on the farm. He was in company with his brother, George B. Taylor, and the twain drove through in a buggy from East Texas, seeking a place to engage in business where their small capital would win some favor and be able to compete successfully in the marts of country trade. They selected Prairieville, in Kaufman county, as suitable for them, and there opened a store with three hundred dollars' worth of goods, the business being established under the style of Taylor Brothers.

It was not long before the brothers discovered that their limited means were a source of embarrassment their limited means were a source of embarrassment their limited exess seemed not to lie in the patrons of their community. It was impossible for them to buy everything the people needed and called for, and this tended to popularize their competitors there or elsewhere. But they did establish a standing for good intentions which was worth much more, and the economy they practiced enabled them to reach a point where a full stock could be carried and all the wants of the neighborhood supplied. From that time forward their success was assured. Their first stock was housed in a building 18x20 feet, which premises gradually lengthened to 180 feet by the year 18x5 and housed a stock that was a satisfaction for the bothers to contemplate.

The success of their merchandise venture led the Taylor brothers into the cattle business, and after a number of years they gathered together a bunch of cattle for the free grazing adjacent to their location. The gradual expansion in this industry led to the purchase of the cheap grass lands about Prairieville, and they became dealers and traders as well as growers of beef, and ultimately shippers to the St. Louis market. This branch of the brothers' business was encouraged, and continued until 1886, when they curtailed their business and invested their profits in lands and in the expansion of their business interests in Kaufman.

In 1886 the brothers moved their stock to Kanfman, Texas, and subsequently erected the business house on Houston street in which W. W. Baird & Company are now doing business. They continued business until 1895, when they sold to Erwin, Spikes & Company. After three years of rest, Taylor & Company engaged in business and witnessed another prosperous business era of seventeen years, when they sold their interests to A. Miles & Company and retired to a less strenuous life with the management of their personal affairs.

The influx of settlers into Kaufman county necessitated the abandonment of grazing and the opening of farms, and Taylor Brothers entered upon a period of farm-making which has not yet been finished, although a large amount of their former pasture is now producing ectton and grain. They have under cultivation two thousand acres, with ample provisions for tenants, and are buying and selling lands from time to time. The thirty families which do the work involved in the proper care and cultivation of such a domain as theirs forms a population sufficient for a healthy country school, and the situation is in agreeable contrast with the "old-time" cow ranch of which the lands of the brothers were once a part.

William A. Taylor is bimself a director of the First State Bank of Kaufman and was one of the organizers of its predecessor, the Citizens' National Bank, which came into existence in 1890 and continued until 1910. He is a member of the mercantile firm of W. W. Baird & Company, His home, on Houston street, the popular and exclusive residence street of the city, was erected by bim and his brother, and George owns an elaborate modern home of his own planning and building not far therefrom.

William A. Taylor was born in Marshall county, Texas, August 27, 1849. His father, R. P. Taylor, went there as a boy from the state of Mississippi in 1838. The latter was a "runaway" youth, and eventually acquired capital sufficient to engage in mercantile pursuits fourteen miles west of Marshall. He became the possessor of a farm there, and owned more than twenty megroes, which exempted him from service in the Confederate army during the war. He won financial independence, but permitted his good nature to allow him to endorse for others, and died in 1865 minus his former estate.

R. P. Taylor was born in 1818, possessed unusual native ability, had a fair education, and was one of six children of his parents. He had a half-brother, James F. Taylor, who spent his life as a farmer six miles east of Marshall and who was once a member of the Legislature. He left a family of five children. The children of James F. Taylor were as follows: Sallie, who married Eugene Horton and resides at Shreveport, Louisiana; and Ophelia, the wife of Capt. W. W. Fields of Haskell, Texas. The sons of Mr. Taylor were: Dr. Howard, of Marshall, Texas; and Hollis and Lewis, also of that city. William A. Taylor was married in Prairieville, Texas, November 1, 1875, his wife being Miss Florence Anglin, whose parents came to Texas from Louisiana and died leaving two daughters: Florence and Mattie, Mrs. Taylor grew up in the home of Capt. R. B. Shaw, one of Texas' nobleman farmers and merchants, of Prairieville, once sheriff of Kaufman county, and for four years a Confederate soldier. His life impressed itself upon his community indelibly and was an example worthy of emulation. Mrs. Taylor was educated as Captain Shaw's own child. She and her husband have been the parents of the following children: Eddie G., who is the wife of C. B. Harton, of Kaufman, and the mother of the following children: Jean, Carotton and Bill Taylor, Gladys and Nina are the younger children. Mr. Taylor has kept away from political entauglements. He has been a number of the Methodist church for forty years, doing his duty as a lay and official member thereof.

George B. Taylor was born in Harrison county, Texas, April 26, 1851, and was given the same educational advantages as his brother, whom he has accompanied through all the vicissitations of a long and honorable business life. His mother was Almeda Sanders, daughter of Richard Sanders, and passed away before her husband. Their children were as follows: Mrs. Prances King, whose death occurred at Weatherford, Texas; Mrs. Virginia Cole, a resident of Hallville, Texas; Mrs. Nona Davis, a resident of Longview, Texas; Most. Wirdin and William A. and George B. of Kanfman. Robert P. Taylor, Sr., the father of the foregoing children, married Jennie Ford for his second wife, and she now resides in Gregg county, Texas, and is the mother of Engenia and Nona.

George B. Taylor was married in Prairieville, Texas, in 1876, to Miss Mattie Anglin, who was reared to womanhood in Louisiana. The children who have been born to this union are as follows: Cornelia, who hecame the wife of Gregg Powell, of Terrell, Texas; Miss Alma, who resides at Kaufman; Essie, who is the wife of Paul Bond, of Terrell; and Robert Paul, who died at the age of eleven years.

Like his brother, Mr. Taylor has eschewed practical polities, giving his support to democratic policies without much ado. He has ever been affiliated with church work as a Methodist, and has served the congregation in Kaufman many years as a steward. He is a Master mason and a member of the Chapter, and Past Noble Grand of Oddfellowship.

George A. Stambaugh was about five years of age made in necessary that the latter should devote a large portion of his early youth and young manhood to providing for his widowed mother and other members of the family. He has therefore experienced necessity and hardship from an early age, and from that early experience of doing more than was actually necessary for his own support, has derived a splendid discipline and practice which has no doubt been largely responsible for his present position as head of the largest mercantile house of Hereford in Deaf Smith county.

George A. Stambaugh was born in Collin county, Texas, April I, 1864. His father was Jacob R. Stambaugh, a native of Pennsylvania, who came to Texas in 1852, from Illinois, where he had been a resident for ten years, and was one of the pioneer settlers of Schuyler county. Farming and stock raising was his occupation and he enjoyed a fair success. He was a Democrat and member of the Methodist church. During the Civil war he was exempt from service owing to ill health. His death occurred in 1869, when forty-one years of age. The maiden name of his wife was Mary Ann Hopkins, whose father was Dr. G. V. Hopkins, a native of Kentucky, from which state he moved to Illinois, locating in Fulton county, where Mrs. Stambaugh was married in the town of Astoria, in 1851. She is still living, being now seventy-nine years of age and residing on the old home place in Collin county. Of the seven children, one died in infancy and the others are still alive. The paternal ancestry of Mr. Stambaugh was German, the first members of the family having located in Pennsylvania. On the maternal side the grandfather was a Kentuckian and the grandmother a native of Ohio.

George A. Stambaugh was the fourth in the family of his parents. When a boy he attended school in Collin county. As already stated, he was at work from almost the earliest time he can recollect, and from the age of sixteen to twenty-eight he engaged actively in farming in the northwestern part of Collin county. He then made up the deficiencies in his early education and received a course in the academy in Collin county when twenty-eight years of age. During four years he was merchandising in Collin county, between 1895 and 1899, at Roseland, Texas, and in January of the latter year moved to Deaf Smith county. For three years he was in the grain business and then entered into a partnership in the present establishment, his three partners in the concern being W. H. Patton, J. M. Garner and A. J. Lipscomb. All the other partners have since dropped ont and Mr. Stambaugh is now sole proprietor and conduets what is easily the largest store with the largest stock of general merchandise, dry goods, notions, men's and women's furnishings and millinery in Hereford and and women's riminings and minings, in receiving the Deaf Smith county. The store has floor space of thirty by one hundred and sixty feet and six clerks are employed in attending to the trade. Mr. Stambaugh is also financially interested in the Dallas Dry Goods Company, which is a new wholesale firm whose stockholders are merchants in Texas and surrounding states.

Mr. Stambaugh is a Democrat without official appirations. He is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Pellows, and is a leacon in the Christian church. In 1895 in Collin county he married Inez Harris, sho was born in Illinois, reared in Missouri, being a daughter of James T. and Lovisa Harris. Their one son is George V. Stambaugh, born in Deaf Smith county, June 14, 1901.

ALFED R, HAMBLEN. One of the oldest and most distinguished names in the Harris county bar is that of Hamblen. The late Judge W. P. Hamblen made a distinguished record both as a lawyer and as a jurist and was a man of exafted character and his name stood for the finest qualities of the able attorney wherever it was known, and that was all over southern Texas. Two sons of the late Judge Hamblen now continue the relations of the family name with the legal profession at Houston. Of these, Afred R. Hamblen is the senior member of of these Afred R. Affred R. Hamblen was born in Houston in 1877, a son of the late William P. and Isabella T. (Miller) Hamblen. William P. Hamblen, who died in April, 1911, was born in Indian in 1834, enue to Texas in the Spring of 1848, locating in Houston, where he studied law, and with his admission to practice on June 21, 1855, began a career which for nearly half a century kept him in the foremost ranks of Houston lawyers, and brought him many enviable successes. In 1902 came his election to the office of judge of the district court of Harris county, and he presided over that court with a splendid dignity and a ripeness of judgment which made the sessions of his court notable for their exemplification of the finest qualities of court-room practice. The widow of Judge Hamblen is still living.

Alfred R. Hamblen received his education in the Honston schools. His studies in preparation for the practice of law were earried on under his father's direction and in the office of Hutchinson & Sears, and later with Hutchinson, Campbell & Sears. The latter was one of the most distinguished legal combinations of its time in south Texas. His admission to the bar came in 1897. He at once began practice in partnership with his father, under the firm name of W. P. and A. R. Hamblen. The elevation of Judge Hamblen to the bench in 1902 interrupted their active relations as partners, and at that time W. P. Hamblen, Jr., came into the firm and it has since been continued under the title of A. R. & W. P. Hamblen.

Probably no other member of the Harris county bar has been so frequently selected from the private walks of the profession for duty as special judge. Mr. Hamblen has served in all the local courts in that capacity, three times in the county court, and four times in the district court. He is well known fraternally, belonging to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Houston Turn Vereiu, and the Loyal Order of Moose. Mr. Hamblen was married in 1904 to Mrs. Minnie E. Matthews, a daughter of John Lynch of Galveston. They have their home at 1920 Leeland Street.

HON, CORNELIUS WARE ROBINSON. The present judge of the criminal district court of Harris county got his training in the law while engaged in farming in one of the south Texas counties. He has been a hard worker all his life, and it was a steadfast ambition which led him from the restricted field of agriculture to the higher sphere of the law and life.

Born November 22, 1863, at Point Blank, in Polk county, but now in San Jacinto county, Texas, Judge Robinson is a son of Henry Ware and Annie (Goodall) Robinson. He is a descendant of prominent Alabama and Tennessee families. His great-uncle was Judge Todd Robinson, who rose to distinction as a member of the Texas bar, from this state moved out to California, where he was elevated to the bench and became chief justice of the supreme court of California. Henry Ware Robinson was horn in Alabama, came to Texas about 1855, settling at Point Blank in what was then Polk county, and as a business man was a planter and stock raiser. During the war he went to the front with a Texas regiment, and after the struggle was over returned and took up the quiet vocations of country life. Annie (Goodall) Robinson was of a Tennessee family, whose members were long prominent in that state.

Judge Robinson was educated at the Agricultural and Mechanical College in Bryan and in Baylor University while located at Independence, Texas. He became a farmer, and while looking after his farm and providing for his little household he applied himself diligently to the study of law at night, and at all leisure intervals, and by continuing this dual occupation was qualified and admitted to the bar in March, 1887. He at once began practice at Cold Springs in San Jacinto county, and was a member of the bar there until 1903. Since then he has had his home and practice in Houston, and became associated with the law firm of Hume, Robinson & Hume. His partnership continued until April 1, 1910, when Governor Campbell appointed him judge of the criminal district court of Harris county to fill the unexpired term of Judge Ed. R. Campbell. Such was his record on the bench during those two years, that in 1912 he was chosen at the regular election for the term of four years. Judge Robinson enjoys a reputation for broad learning and absolute impartiality as a judge, and is held in high esteem by all the members of the Harris county bar.

Fraternally he is a Master Mason, and belongs to the Knights of Honor, the Knights and Ladies of Honor, the Woodmen of the World, the Lodge No. 151 of Houston Elks, the Loyal Order of Moose, and the Houston Turn

At Galveston in 1882 Judge Robinson married Miss Annie Bell Dorroh, daughter of Dr. John Dorroh of Mississippi. Her mother was a descendant of Caesar Rodney, who was one of the signers of the declaration of independence. The judge and wife have two daughters, Jimmie Lea, who is the wife of E. L. Stephens of Houston; and Mary Louise, who married Fagin Burch of Houston. The home of the Judge and family is in Montrose.

Marion F. Hammond. Texas has upwards of two hundred counties, but not one of them has a sheriff's office administered with greater efficiency of system than that of Harris county. The present sheriff of Harris that of Harris county. The present sheriff of Harris county is Marion F. Hammond, who took up his duties after his election in 1912, and who has made a remarkable record in the handling of the important duties entrusted to the sheriff under Texas state laws, Mr. Hammond saw a long term of service on the Houston police force, and for some years did outside work for a large and prominent firm of lawyers. This experi-ence gave him unusual qualification for his present office, which he conducts along the lines of modern business methods.

Marion F. Hammond was born at Kosse, Limestone county, Texas, July 22, 1872. His parents were Benjamin Franklin and Sarah Elizabeth (Burns) Hammond. His father came to Texas in 1856 from Yalobusha county, Mississippi, settling at Kosse as one of the pioneers of Limestone county, and engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married in 1857, and four years later left his home to enter the service of the Confederate army. He was fighting on the side of the south all through the war, and then returned to his old home at Kosse, where he has continued to reside on the homestead and is one of the venerable pioneer residents of that vicinity, being now in his eighty-third year. His wife was a daughter of Judge Burns, one of the early settlers of Limestone county. She is now living in her seventy-ninth year. Sheriff Hammond was educated in the public schools of Kosse. His early training was on the home farm, and he lived with his parents until twenty-one, at which time he started out as an independent farmer in that vicinity. In September, 1897, he moved to the City of Houston, and during the following season put in a crop and carried on general farming in the vicinity. After that came his appointment as a member of the police force, and his service in the department continued for five and a half years. He resigned in order to go into railroad train service, and followed that work about one year. The large law firm of Lovejoy & Malevinsky at Houston then engaged him to attend to their outside work, and he continued as their representative in the performance of many responsible and delicate tasks, for eight years. In the fall of 1910 Mr. Hammond resigned his position with the law firm in order to make the campaign for sheriff of Harris county. He was defeated in that year, but in 1912 was again a candidate, and was elected by a handsome majority against four other candidates. Since taking office he has proved his fitness for the position and the opinion of attorneys composing the Harris county bar is quite unanimous to the effect that the sheriff's office of Harris county under Sheriff Hammond is the best conducted in the entire state. Mr. Hammond is well known in fraternal circles, belongs to the local lodge of Masons, the K. of P., the Woodmen of the World, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Knights of the Maccabees, the Tribe of Ben Hur, the Grand Fraternity, and the Houston Turnverein.

In 1895 occurred his marriage with Miss Pearl Winfield, a daughter of W. J. Winfield, of Kosse. They are the parents of five children, as follows: Eldred, who has manifested special inclination for art work and is now at the Academy of Fine Arts in Chicago; Marion, now a student in Baylor College at Belton; and Gladys, Janice, and Hope, all at home. The family residence is at the foot of Capitol Avenue in Houston.

JOSEPH ALEXANDER KEMP. That a city may become great in its facilities and commercial service to a large scope of country all through the vitalizing energy of one man is the conspicuous fact in the career of Joseph A. Kemp and Wichita Falls. There is hardly one of the larger institutions and enterprises of this city upon which and with which the name and influence of Mr. Kemp has not either now or at some time been impressed and associated. That a community should be what it is largely as a result of one man's life and activities is perhaps the highest tribute possible to pay to human individuality. Mr. Kemp has had a career typical of many successful Americans. He started out in life a poor boy, but possessed peculiar qualities and abilities in a business way, and was hardly of age when he had become a factor in local business circles. He has been officially connected with a dozen or more successful enterprises, including railroads, in and about Wichita Falls, and he is known all over the state of Texas for his energy and also for his modest manner. Though a man who has attained almost the summit of success, Mr. Kemp is still a loyal and every day citizen of Wichita Falls, and has no desire to leave the scene of his many successes for life in the larger metropolitan centers of the world.

Joseph Alexander Kemp was born at Clifton in Bosque county, Texas, July 31, 1861, a son of William T. and Emma F. (Stinnett) Kemp. His father, a native of Tennessee, came to Texas when a young man before the Civil war in 1856, locating in McClennan county, afterwards moving to Clifton, where for many years he was a well known and respected merchant and citizen. He also served as tax assessor of Bosque county, and died at Wichita Falls, Texas, in 1891 at the age of fifty-two. During the Civil war he enlisted his services with the Confederacy and saw a long and arduous service, including many notable battles, but went through the war without wounds or capture, and at its close returned to his regular business in Bosque county. His wife, who was a native of Missouri, where her people were pioneer settlers, came to Texas when she was a girl, and from Grayson county moved to Bosque county, where she completed her education and was married. She is still living at Wichita Falls, and is a fine old lady who easily bears the weight of her seventy-three years. She was the mother of seven children, three sons and four daughters, of whom Joseph A. was the oldest.

He grew up in Bosque county, had the usual amount of schooling in the common schools, graduating from the high school at Clifton at the age of seventeen. In the meantime he had become more or less familiar with merchandising through his vacation periods of work in his father's establishment, and at the age of eighteen he undertook his first independent venture as a merchant, opening a stock of goods at Clifton, and conducting the business successfully, until at the end of two years he accepted an excellent offer to sell. Then, in 1883, he came to Wichita Falls, a town which was very small at the time, the Ft. Worth and Denver City Railway having only recently been completed, and he thus became one of the pioneers in laying the foundations of the present city, and has been very closely identified with all the work of rearing the superstructure of this city as a commercial center of North Texas. His first enterprise was the establishment of a small stock of general merchandise, and he was one of the early merchants in the village. His store was located on Ohio Street, and was one of the typical establishments of its kind, at least in general appearance, although there was probably no other business man in Wichita Falls at that time who possessed so much resource and ambition as young Kemp. After several years of successful merchandising he sold out in 1887, and then spent several years in looking over the field preparatory to his next venture. In 1890, was established the J. A. Kemp wholesale grocery company, an enterprise which had been established some time before by C. C. White. Under his control the wholesale grocery business prospered exceedingly, and continued to flourish and develop under the presidency of Mr. Kemp until it was doing a business of more than a million dollars each year. At the same time branches were established in different parts of the western part of the state, and the success of this establishment has been one of the corner stones of Wichita Falls' importance in trade circles of north Texas. In the latter part of 1903, Mr. Kemp sold his controlling interest in the grocery company to Mr. Blair and Mr. Hughes, but still has stock in the business and is its vice president. The grocery house has continued to prosper under its present manage ment and now has branches in all the leading trade centers of the southwest, including a branch house in Dallas, Texas.

Probably at the present time and in years to come the work of Mr. Kemp of greatest importance to Wichita Falls and surrounding territory will be his activity as a builder and promoter of railroads. He has become interested in railroad construction before leaving the wholesale grocery business, and since then has devoted much of his time and ability along this line. His first venture was the organization of a company, and the building of was the organization of a company, and the billion a railroad from Henricita to Wichita Falls, this being the second railroad built into Wichita Falls. He served as president of the road for many years. Under his management, it was extended four hundred and thirty miles, and was an enterprise of which every citizen of which its Falls was very proud. These lines embrace what is known as the Wichita Falls & Northwestern R. R. extending from Wichita Falls to Forgan, Oklahoma, a distance of three hundred and three miles, and the Wichita Falls & Wellington R. R. from Altus, Oklahoma to Wellington, Texas, and also a line known as The Wichita Falls & Southern extending from Wichita Falls to Newcastle in Young County, known as The Young County Coal Fields. Mr. Kemp was President during the promotion and construction of all these lines and remained President until 1911, at which time these properties were acquired by the M. K. T. R. R., Mr. Kemp, however, remaining as vice president of all these

In 1890 the City National Bank of Wichita Falls was organized and in 1891, Mr. Kemp as one of its organizers was elected to the office of president, a position which he has filled to the present time. The capital and surplus of this well known bank now aggregates four hundred thousand dollars, and it is easily one of the strongest financial concerns of North Texas. Mr. Kemp is president, P. P. Lanford is vice president, Wiley Blair is also vice president, C. W. Snider is cashier, and W. L. Robertson is assistant eashier. It is a model institution of its kind, and its quarters are the entire first floor of the Kemp-Kell office building in Wichita Falls.

Mr. Kemp is vice president of the Blair-Hughes wholesale grocery company of which he was the founder and for so many years active as its president. It was his success in the wholesale grocery business which gave

Mr. Kemp his first great start.

The Wichita Falls Traction Company owes its inception and construction to Mr. Kemp, and is a first-class electric line affording good urban transportation facilities, and regarded as one of the best equipped properties of its kind in the state. This road was built and opened in 1910, and Mr. Kemp has been its president since it started. The main line of the system operates between Wichita Falls and the beautiful Lake Wichita. Along the route of this electric line is located the plant of the Wichita Falls Window Glass factory, and also of the Wichita Bottle Manufacturing Company. These manufactures have proved important additions to Wichita Falls' growing importance as an industrial center, and were both organized and brought to successful issue by Mr. Kemp. The plants manufacture high grade of wares, employ a number of expert workmen, and represent a large investment of capital. Mr. Kemp is president of both companies.

Through his instrumentality has also been brought to Wichita Falls an industry which has already given this city a reputation throughout the west and in various parts of the entire country. This is the Wichita Motor Truck Company, an entirely new enterprise for Texas. The company confines its output entirely to trucks, and the Wichita trucks have already established themselves in the favor of users all over the United States and Canada. Mr. Kemp is president of the company. He is also president of the Wichita Falls Water Company, and is president of the Lake Wichita Irrigation and Water Company, which was organized by him in 1901 and is one of the largest irrigation undertakings in this part of the state. Through his success in carrying out this irrigation enterprise, Mr. Kemp first became prominent as a pioneer in industrial affairs, and larger constructive enterprises.

With regard to the project, which involved the impounding of the waters of Holliday Creek and the making of an immense artificial lake, three thousand acres in extent, Mr. Kemp had complete confidence in the matter, but had to endure a great deal of suspicion and apathy before he could get the undertaking well nnder way. It was regarded as one of those visionary schemes in which a great deal of capital might be sunk and from which the material benefits would never be great. However, Mr. Kemp finally succeeded in enlisting the aid of ontside capital, did much of the preliminary work himself, and finally produced a body of water which in itself is an attractive feature of this vicinity, and affords water privileges valued at many thousands of dollars every year to the farmers in this locality. Through his success in this enterprise. Mr. Kemp may properly be regarded as one of the pioneers in irrigation in north Texas, and the Lake Wichita project has without doubt influenced many similar enterprises undertaken in different sections of the semi-arid regions of the western plain

Mr. Kemp is president of the Wichita Falls & Southern Life Insurance Company. He is president of the Floral Heights Realty Company, a company which has laid out a subdivision of beautiful home sites within the eity limits of Wichita Falls. The company platted and has sold for homes over eight hundred lots, fifty by one hundred and fifty feet and this entire tract is within easy access of the carline.

One of the enterprises in which Mr. Kemp may properly take great pride is the Model office building, which he and his partner Mr. Kell constructed, and which is a building of such size and accommodation and modern facilities as would be a credit to any city in this state. Mr. Kemp is president of the company which con-structed and owns the Kemp-Kell Building, and Mr. Kell is vice president. This building occupies 50x150 ft., is six stories high, and has every convenience and feature of the modern metropolitan office building.

These are the more important undertakings in which Mr. Kemp has engaged in line with his purpose to make Wichita Falls one of the leading commercial and business centers of Texas. It is a distinctly worthy ambition, and the more so because in his success he is working not less for the city than for himself. As will readily be understood from this brief review of his active business career, Mr. Kemp has had little time for public affairs, and has never been in any sense a politician. However, when he was twenty-two years old he was appointed to the office of county treasurer of Wichita county, and at the expiration of his appointed term was elected for two successive terms to the same office. Since then he has been too busy to accept any preferment from his party, although he is and always has been a loyal Democrat. Fraternally his associations are with the Masonic bodies, in which he has attained to the Thirty-Second degree, Shrine, with the Knights of Pythias, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is one of the directors in the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce. His church is the old school Presbyterian.

On October 18, 1882, at Clifton, Mr. Kemp married Miss Flora Anderson, a native of Texas and a daughter of Captain and Mrs. Mary (Robinson McLennan) Anderson. Captain Allen Anderson was a well known pioneer and Indian fighter, and did much service on the frontier during the early days in protecting life and property of the settlers. He was accidentally killed by a member of his own company while engaged in a fight with Indians on the western border. Mrs. Kemp's mother was a daughter of the McLennan for whom Me-Lennan county was named, and was one of the very prominent pioneers in central Texas. The five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kemp were Emma Sibyl, Mary Jewel, Flora Charlotte, Bertha May, and Joseph Anderson. The first, born in 1885 at Wichita Falls, is a graduate of St. Mary's College at Dallas, and also a graduate in the languages and music from the University of Cincinnati, Ohio, and is now the wife of Mr. Newton Maer, of Wichita Falls, and the mother of one child, Joseph Kemp Maer, who was born in Wichita Falls. Miss Mary Jewel was born in 1887 at Wichita Falls, and is a graduate of St. Mary's College of Dallas. Miss Flora, born in 1893 at Wichita Falls, died at Detroit, Michigan, in 1911, after a long illness of typhoid fever, Miss Bertha, born at Wichita Falls in 1888, graduated from St. Mary's College, is now in a private school in St. Lonis. Joseph Anderson Kemp, born at Wichita Falls in 1904, is in school. Mr. Kemp and his family reside in one of the most palatial homes in Wichita Falls. It has recently been completed and is situated in the Hill district, the most exclusive residence portion of the city.

HORACE BALDWIN RICE. As a civic honor few men would desire one more distinctive and more likely to be associated with favorable comment in later years than that of being the first mayor of Houston under the commission form of government. A charter on the commission plan, but somewhat different from the original Galvestou organic law, was granted to Houston on March 18, 1905. At the first city election under the new charter Horace Baldwin Rice was elected head of the commission, and titular mayor. At every recurring two years he was re-elected, and continued at the head of the city government until 1913, at which time he declined to become a candidate for further honors. The progress of Houston as a municipality, including the remarkable reforms in its methods of handling business, in the efficiency of its taxcollecting system, and in a general strengthening and concentration of municipal powers, Baldwin Rice will always have a large share of the honors which go to the city at large.

Horace Baldwin Rice was born at Houston, March 28, 1861, being one of the younger children of Frederick Allen and Charlotte (Baldwin) Rice. On both his father's and mother's side he is descended from American er's and mother's side he is descended from American Revolutionary stock, and the ancestry is a mingling of Scotch-Irish and English. One of his great-grandfathers, named Hall, was wounded in the battle of Lexington in 1775, but lived to be one hundred and three years old, and spent all his life in Massachusetts. Frederick Allen Rice, father of Mayor Rice, was born in Massachusetts, moved to Houston, Texas, in 1850, and for many years was identified with mercantile and railroad duties. was one of the builders of the old Houston and Texas Central Railroad, and one of the men who were largely responsible for making Houston the commercial metropolis of the southeastern quarter of the state. Frederick A. Rice died in 1901 at the age of seventy one. He was a brother of the late William M. Rice, founder of the Rice Institute at Houston. Charlotte (Baldwin) Rice, mother of Baldwin Rice, was born in New York state. Her father, Horace Baldwin, was a brother in-law to A. C. Allen, one of the owners of the original townsite, and a founder of the city of Houston in 1836. Horace Baldwin himself located in Texas in 1840, and was engaged in the transportation business along the Gulf coast, and from Houston down the Bayou. In 1844 he was honored with election to the office of mayor at Houston. There were seven sons and three daughters in the family of Frederick A. Rice and wife, of whom the oldest is Col. J. S. Rice, the well-known capitalist and banker of Houston.

The early education of Horace Baldwin Rice was attained chiefly in the Texas Military Institute at Austin, and on leaving school he went into the cattle and cotton business. After some time spent as a cattle raiser, he received his first political office as public weigher of cotton for Harris county, an office which he filled until 1896. At the same time his interest in the cattle business continued.

His achievements as mayor of Houston have overshoulowed some of his earlier services in behalf of the public welfare. From 1892 to 1896, a period of four and a half years, he was one of the county commissioners of Harris county. During that time the board of commissioners constructed the first paved highway in Harris county. That road was built under a special road act, and was a practical beginning of the many flue shell and macadiam roads which now stretch out in every direction about Houston and over Harris county. In 1893 Michigan was cheefed mayor and served until 1898. From the close of his term as mayor until 1895 he was closely identified with the cattle industry. After his first election under the new city chatter in 1905, Mr. Rice was reelected in 1907, 1909, and 1911, so that he was at the head of Houston city government for eight years.

In 1901 Mr. Rice was appointed by the probate court of Harris county as administrator for the estate of the late William M. Rice, his uncle. The administration of this large estate has taken much of his time ever since.

Mr. Rice is president of the Suburban Homesteal Company and vice president of the Houston Ice and Brewing Company. He is a student of municipal affairs and a man whose broad information and ability as a social and civic leader enabled him to fill his office as mayor with distinction as well as with efficiency. Mr. Rice has membership in many social and fraternal organizations, including the Houston Club, the Houston Country Club, the Tallian Club of Houston, and also belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Lodge No. 151, and the Woodmen of the World at Houston. In 185 occurred his marria Cerge Dumble, a native of Canada, who came to Houston about 1850, and was a man of more than ordinary influence and standing in the community. Mr. and Mrs. Rice reside at 1916 Main street, and his business offices are in the Union National Bank Building.

Atons R. Miller, State and County Tax Assessor, Houston, Texas, is by vitue of long service in public office in close touch with the people and affairs generally in his locality. Back of his public service his record is that of an honorable, upright citizen, and his whole life has been spent in Harris county.

Mr. Miller was born at Houston, January 4, 1859, son of Isidor and Lisette (Plessman) Miller. His father, a native of Alsace-Lorraine, came to America in 1844 and took up his residence at Houston, where he was for years occupied as a contracting painter. During the war of the Rebellion he took up arms in defense of the Confederate cause, and as a member of Company B, Waul's Legion, at the siege of Vicksburg, endured exposure which resulted in his death in 1867. Mr. Miller's mother was a native of Saxony. She came with her parents to this country about 1844, either just before or soon after the arrival of Isidor Miller, and from her fifth year was reared in Houston. Here she spent her life, and passed away in 1905. Her parents did not long survive their removal to this new country; both died in 1845. Isidor and Lisette (Plessman) Miller were the parents of ten children, of whom only three are now living: Alois, whose name introduces this sketch; Isidor J., who is in the employ of the San Antonio & Aransas Pass Railroad Company, and Laura, wife of M. R. Forney, of Houston.

The son of foreign born parents and one of a large family of children, in a new country and in a time of civil war, Alois R. Miller had limited advantages for obtaining an education. His father's death made it necessary for the youth at the age of nine years to assist in earning a livelihood. From his ninth to his eleventh year he sold papers on the streets. Then he became "devil" in the office of the old Telegraph, which later was changed to the Telegram. In the office of this paper he learned typesetting at the case, and until 1880 was compositor for the Telegram. Close confinement in the office brought on ill health and, in seeking outdoor life, he took up farming at Bear Creek, Harris county, in which he was engaged until 1885. The next two years he was a locomotive fireman on the H. & T. C. R. R., after which he returned to his earlier vocation as compositor on the Houston Post, with which he was connected in 1888 for a short time, subsequently became connected with the Galveston Daily News. He remained with the latter publication until 1890, when he returned to Houston and again became connected with the Houston Post, continuing until 1894. The year 1892 marked the introduction of linotypes into the big newspaper offices, and Mr. Miller changed from the case to the machine, being one of the first operators in the office of the Post.

Mr. Miller's first public service dates back to 1894, when Mayor John T. Browne appointed him city market master, an office which he continued to hold for four years, through the administration of Mayor H. B. Rice. At the end of that time (1898) he returned to the office of the Post and resumed work as a linotype operator, In 1900 he purchased a half interest in a linotype office. and he has since been interested in job printing, at first under the firm name of Andrew & Miller, afterwards Miller & Bauerfeind, and since 1902 as Miller & Orem. In 1909 the firm incorporated under the name of Miller & Orem Typesetting Company. In 1902 Mr. Miller was again appointed market master, this at the hands of Mayor O. T. Holt, and he filled the office until 1904, when he was elected state and county tax assessor. He is still the incumbent of this latter office, having been successively re-elected every two years since that time, and now being on his fifth term. The crude system of accounts in vogue in the office when he assumed charge has been replaced by modern, up-to-date methods, and under his supervision the work of the office has been put in smooth running order and has kept pace with the demands of the times. Since 1904 the valuation of the county has increased from $40,000,000 to $130,000,000 in 1913.

Mr. Miller first married, in 1880, Miss Amelia Bode, daughter of Jacob Bode, a native of Prussia. She died in 1885, leaving two children, namely: Mary, wife of J. W. Harard, of Houston, and Joseph Isidor, who is married and settled in Houston. In 1889 Mr. Miller married for his second wife Miss Margaret Jane Peary, of a native of England and a daughter of George Peary, of Houston. Two children were born of this union: Lee Robert, of Houston, and Lisette, who died in infrance.

While Mr. Miller had little schooling in his horhoad, be embraced the opportunities that presented themselves for educating bimself in the newspaper office and elsewhere, and he now has at his command an intinate knowledge of the German as well as the English language, and a broad store of useful information which has come to him through the various avenues of business and public office life. He resides at 215 Bayland avenue, Woodland Heights, Houston, and he has identity with numerous fraternal, social, and other organizations, among which may be named: Woodlmen of the World, Improved Order of Read Men, Loval Order of Moose, Knichts of Columbus, Turn Verein, Sengerbund, No Tsu-Oh Carnival Association, and Shark's Club. Also he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Real Estate Exchange, and the Park Place Company of Houston, being a director of the latter. During his years at the case and the linotype machine he was an active and enthusiastic member of the Typographical Union. Religiously, he and his family are Roman Catholies, members of St. Joseph Church.

Lee L. Pugh, County School Superintendent of Harris county, Texas, has occupied this position for a period of nine years, and during this time his faith that the great heart of the people yearned for what is best for the children has with each succeeding year become stronger and deeper. And with the cooperation of the people he has succeeded in making great strides along the line of betterment in educational work.

Professor Pugh is a native of Illinois. He was born at West Salem, that state, in 1873, son of John P. and Margaret (Wyatt) Pugh, the former of Tennessee and the latter of Illinois birth. John P. Pugh was a de-scendant of the family of Pughs long prominent and influential in Tennessee. In early life he went from that state to Illinois, where he married and settled down to agricultural pursuits. A man of education and progressive views, he soon took rank with the leading upto-date farmers of Illinois. Lee L. passed his boyhood days on his father's farm and received his education in the Southern Collegiate Institute, Albion, Illinois, and the Southern Normal College, Carbondale, that state, having in view the profession of teaching. This profession he followed in Illinois and Missouri previous to 1899, when he came to Texas and accepted a position as teacher at Crosby, Harris county. He taught one year at that place and the next two years at Harrisburg, and resigned his place as teacher at the last named place in order to accept the office of superintendent of schools for Harris county, having been appointed to fill an unexpired term. In 1904 he was elected to the position for the term of two years, and he has been regularly elected every two years since that time, namely, 1906, 1908, 1910 and 1912.

When Mr. Pugh took charge of the schools of Harris county, he did it with a determination to improve the educational facilities of the rural districts, and he has worked steadily with that end in view. The first important step taken was the adoption of the "County Course of Study," which was done against tremendous odds and which has resulted in systematizing the work of the schools. The schools of the county have been classified into three divisions: Primary schools, which include the first four grades; intermediate schools, the fifth, sixth and seventh grades, and high schools, the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh grades. With the raising of the school standard has come higher requirements for teachers and proportionately better remuneration for their work. As showing the progress made in educational lines in Harris county during Mr. Pugh's incumbency of the office of superintendent, it may be stated that the report of the year ending August 31, 1912, showed the total value of county school buildings to be $356,500, as against $40,000 when he came into the office. The buildings now number 121, of which 22 are brick and 99 wood. And the increase in teachers' efficiency may be judged by the increase in pay, which has been sixty per cent in the past eight years.

In this great workshop for the building of character the public school system of Harris county—Professor Pugh has endeavored to put forth his best efforts, and in doing so has found a joy in his work known only to the true teacher. In his labor he has at all times felt and appreciated the support of the various boards of trustees, patrons and teachers.

Professor Pugh has his office in the court house, and minitains his residence at 2011 Pease avenue, Houston, Texas, He was married while in Missouri, in April, 1898, to Miss Ada, M. Shelly, a daughter of P. P. Shelby, of Illinois, a representative of the Kentucky family of Shelbys, They have one daughter, Rub Gray Pugh. Fraternally, Mr. Pugh is identified with numerons organizations, including Knights of Pythias, D. O. K. K., Woodmen of the World, Modern Order of Pratorians, and Order of Moose, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Houston Turn Verein. Also be has membership in the Houston Chamber of Commerce.

ADOLPH ALBRECHT. A former rancher and cattleman of Texas was Adolph Albrecht, who had gained a prosperous and estemed position at an early age, and death came to him when practically at the beginning of a very successful carreer.

Adolph A. Albrecht was born in Honston, Texas, March 2, 1876, a son of Adolph A. and Mary (Callen) Albrecht, both parents having come from Germany. There were six children in the family, namely: Henry, of St. Louis, Missouri; Mary, who is married and lives in St. Louis; Emma, who is a resident of Houston; Katie, wife of Joseph Bruce, of Brooklyn, New York; Adolph A.; and Lena, attending school in Houston.

The late Mr. Albrecht grew up to manhood in Houston, received his education in the local shools of that city, and when he was twenty-one years old started out for himself by getting work on a ranch, and followed ranching and was foreman on different ranches for some years. His father was a large property owner in Vietoria county, and the son managed a part of that estate for some years. Mr. Albrecht was a Democrat, but never held office and was not a politician. He belonged to the Prebyberian church and was safiliated with the Sons of Hermann.

Mr. Albrecht was married in 1894 to Miss Minnie R. Ernst, a native of Texas and a daughter of Frank C. and Rosie (Gaines) Ernst. Her father is a large rancher and in business at Marianna, Texas. Her mother is deceased. Mrs. Albrecht was one of four children, the others mentioned as follows: Ida, wife of Robert Arnold, of Marianna, Texas, and a rancher; Eleanora, wife of George Dieler, of Dallas; and Lewis, of Marianna, a rancher. Mrs. Albrecht now makes her home in Dallas, at 1409 Gano street. She has no children.

GEORGE S. PHILLIPS is the dean of the lumber business in Kaufman, Texas. For three decades he has been actively engaged in this business here, and he has lived in Texas since 1855, when he came here with his parents from Vertical Very

from Kentucky

John G. Phillips, the father of George S., died in December, 1913, at Waxahachie, Texas. He was born in Missouri, in September, 1831, and grew to manhood in Kentucky, where his parents had grown up and married. He learned the wagon-maker's trade in Kentucky, and after his removal to Waxahachie he engaged in the buggy and wagon-making business, and continued the same throughout his active life. His first settlement in Texas was in Atascosa county, where he remained a few years, but the stock business with which he was connected was not to his liking and he turned to his trade, as above set forth, in the fertile blackland bett and put his reliance upon the community of Waxahachie as to future success.

While the war between the states was in progress, John G. Phillips quit his trade and aided the Confederacy as a powder-maker in Waxobachie, where a small plant was maintained, and when the dove of peace finally hovered over our country and men went to work instead of war, he dropped back into his own quiet shop, and there had a long and uneventful career. Religiously, he is a Methodist, and his political affiliation, quiet but sincere, has always been with the democratic party.

Samuel Gore Phillips, the father of John G., passed away without leaving any tangible record of himself or his ancestry. He came to Texas before the war and died in Waxahachie during the progress of that fraternal

John G. Phillips married Miss Sarah Peak, a daughter of George Peak, a Kentucky farmer. Mrs. Phillips was born a year before her husband and still survives. Their children are as follows: George S. of Kaufman; Mrs. Thomas Hunter, of Waxahachie; Miss Kate; Claud B., engaged in the lumber business at Houston, Texas.

George S. Phillips was born in Marion county, Kentucky, December 23, 1853, and was only two years of age when brought to Texas by his parents. He lived in Waxahachie through his school days and until after he had gained his first business experience. He attended not only the public schools but also took a course of study at Marvin College, Waxahachie, and he was a clerk in that town until March, 1882. He then formed partnership with S. P. Langsford of Waxahachie in farm and implement business, which continued to December, 1883. At that time he took charge of the lumber yard of the M. T. Jones Lumber Co. in Kanfman, and he has rounded out a period of thirty years of service in that same yard. For seven years he was manager of the business. Then he joined a cousin, J. H. Phillips, and bought the property, and Phillips & Phillips carried on the business until 1901, when George S. became sole proprietor. Throughout all these years this industry has been conducted on a retail basis, and in addition to Inmber all lines of building material have been handled. The nature of this business has placed Mr. Phillips in a position to enter the field of Kaufman as a builder, and from time to time during his career here he has bought and improved property in the residence districts until now numerous homes throughout the town stand as a monument to his foresight as a developer of the county seat.

As a citizen, Mr. Phillips has rendered no public service save as a member of the educational board of the city, where he gave eleven years continuously to the interests of public education. As an Odd Fellow he wears a badge of honor for a quarter of a century in the order, having joined it in 1881. He is a Past Noble Grand and has been a representative to the Grand Lodge. Also as a Knight of Pythins he has filled the chairs and is a Past Chancellor. Religiously, he is a the board of stewards of the Methodist church at Knufman and he was the first superintendent of the Sunday school here, an office he filled for three years.

In December, 1882, Mr. Phillips was married in Wax-ahachic to Miss Fannie F. Butler, daughter of Andrew J. and Caroline (Beat) Butler. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips are Mrs. W. H. Kendrick, of Kaufman; Mrs. Fred Hicks, also of Kaufman; and Misses Daisy K., Vella and Hazel. One son, George, Jr., died at the age of free years.

Join H. Ellis. A seion of the third generation of the Ellis family in Texas, he whose name initiates this review is well upholding the prestige of a name that has been most closely and worthily linked with the annals of civic and industrial development and progress in the Lone Star state, where the paternal grandparents of the subject of this sketch established their home about the year 1840, when Texas was still an independent republic, under the presidency of General Sam Houston.

John H. Ellis, the able and popular tax assessor of Houston county, with residence in the thriving city of Crockett, the judicial center of the county, was born at Lancaster, Dallas county, Texas, on the 20th of April, 1870, and is a son of James H, and Mary (Rawlins) 1810, and is a son of James H, and Mary (Rawlins) 6 Pennsylvania, both having been young at the time of Pennsylvania, both having been young at the time of Pennsylvania to the timmigration of the respective families to Texas, about the year 1840. The marriage of the parents was solemnized in Dallas county and there they still reside on the fine old homestead on which they established their residence at the time when they initiated their welder life, which has been one of ideal relations. To them have been born six sons and one daugher, all of whom are living and of whom John H., of this review, is the eldest: Ross R, resides in Austin, the capital of the state; William R., King T., and Robert L. maintain their home in the city of Dallas, where the latter is the efficient incumbent of the office of tax collector of Dallas country; and Harry and Ethel maintain their residence at Lancaster, Dallas county, the latter being the wife of Y. G. Scott. The patternal and maternal grandparents of him to whom this sketch is dedicated were numbered among the pioneer settlers of Dallas county, where they continued to reside until their death, the names of both ramilies having been prominently identified with the families having been prominently identified with the section of the state of the state

John H. Ellis, a man of sterling character, of vigorous purpose and definite thrift, has won large and worthy success through his identification with the agricultural and stock industries in the state that has long been his home, and he has resided continuously on the old homestead on which he initiated his independent career. He has developed the same into one of the well improved and valuable properties of Dallas county, and in the midst of the insistent demands of a signally industrious and prolific career he has shown an unselfish and helpful interest in the furtherance of measures and enterprises conserving the general progress and prosperity of the community. Never a seeker of public office, he has quietly pursued the even tenor of his way, achieving much and doing well his part in forwarding the great march of development that has made Texas one of the greatest commonwealths of the Union. His life has been ordered upon the highest plane of integrity and usefulness and he and his noble wife have inviolable place in the confidence and high regard of all who know them, both being earnest and consistent members of the Baptist church. Mr. Ellis exemplifies the sturdy traits of character that ever indicate the Scottish race, of which he is a scion, and he gives unequivocal allegiance to the cause of the Democratic party. When the great Civil war was precipitated on the nation, John H. Ellis promptly gave evidence of his insistent loyalty to the Confederacy, and he enlisted in the first volunteer company organized in Dallas county, the same becoming a part of the gallant Ross Brigade, which went to the front as a cavalry command, but which later was dismounted. In the commands of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston and General Hood the regiment experienced to the full the great tension of the conflict between the North and the South, endured untold privations and hardships, and participated in many of the most bitter and san-guinary engagements marking the progress of the long and weary contest. Mr. Ellis was twice woundedfirst in an engagement with the Indians and later in the battle of Iuka, Mississippi. He was with the command of General Johnston in the ever memorable final retreat, marked by constant fighting, and, with the gallant and jaded command, he surrendered. He has ever retained the deepest interest in his old comrades in arms and perpetuates the more gracious memories and associations of his long, arduous and gallant military career through his active affiliation with the United Confederate Veterans, the reunions of which he attends with regularity, as does he also the meetings of the camp in which he holds membership. He has honored the Lone Star state through his character and achievement and is a wellknown and highly esteemed citizen of Dallas county.

John H. Ellis, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared to the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the old home plantation and, after availing himself of the advantages of the public schools of the village of Lancaster, he completed an effective course in Hill's Business College, in the city of Dallas. At the age of eighteen years Mr. Ellis assumed the position of book-keeper in a mercantile establishment at Lancaster, where he continued to be thus employed until he had attained to his legal majority. He then removed to Houston county, where he engaged in farming, near Porter Springs. He thus continued his active work for a period about five years, at the expiration of which he established his home in Crockett, the county seat, in which city he has since resided. Here he held the position of hookkeeper for R. D. King, engaged in the general mercantile business for some time, after which he accepted a similar office in the large mercantile establishment of the James S. Shivers Company, with which he was thus identified until 1903, when he was elected tax assessor of Houston county, an office of much responsibility and one of exacting order. By successive re-elections he has continued the efficient and valued incumbent of this position, and that his administration has met with unequivocal popular approval is shown not only in his retention of the post, but also in the uniqualified confidence and esteem reposed in him by the people of the county, throughout the limits of which he has become well known and in which it may consistently be said that his circle of friends is limited only by that of his acquaintances. In 1912 he entered upon his fifth consecutive term in the office of tax assessor, and in connection with his official duties he has also given effective service as a practical surveyor, the two lines of work having given him a broad and accurate knowledge of real estate values, resources and general civic conditions in his home county. It is needless to say that Mr. Ellis is found arrayed as a loyal supporter of the cause of the Democratic party, whose star is once more in the ascendency in national affairs, and as a citizen he has shown himself distinctively progressive and public-spirited. He has not wavered in the religious faith in which he was reared and is a zealous member of the Baptist church, his wife being a member of the Metho-dist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Ellis is actively affilunst Episcopa Churen, South. 3rt. Edits is actively almitated with Davy Crockett Lodge, No. 193, Knights of Pythius, and Myrtle Camp, No. 277, Woodmen of the World, and his popularity is shown by the fact that he has passed all of the official chairs in each of them. He is also a member of Lothrop Lodge, No. 21, A. F. & A. M., and Trinity Chapter, No. 4, Royal Arch Masons.

The 5th of October, 1892, marked the solemnization of the marriage of Mr. Ellis to Miss Mattie Burton, who was born and reared in Houston county, a representative of one of its oldest and most honored ramilies, and who is a daughter of David L. and Lucy (Baker) Burton, the former of whom is deceased and the latter of whom resides in Crockett, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have serve children, namely: Hallie, Henry, John B., Mary, Ross, Ralph, and Esther May, and all remain at the parental home, which is known as a place of most gracious and buoyant hospitality.

JAMES WILLIAM MADDEN. Former Secretary of State of Texus and well known throughout the state for his participation in public affairs, James William Madden as had a long and active career as a member of the bar, and has resided in Houston county all his life. He represents the old stock of Eastern Texas, the different branches of his family having located here long before the ante-bellum days, and on one line of the ancestry the family history goes back to the years of the Republic and even prior thereto. Mr. Madden began his career as a worker for the support of his father's family when he was a mere child and continued for a number of years to hear such burdens and responsibilities; but through it all his aspirations were directed toward attaining an additional swhere of usefulness in the world. That he attained to such a position and that he has won so many merited distinctions is the most significant and interesting fact in the life of this well known person-

James William Madden was born in Houston county, Texes, June 16, 1856. His parents were Balis and Missouri (Adams) Madden, the father being a native of Louisiana and the mother of Houston county, Texas. The Madden family, which is of Sotoft-Irish descent, came to Texas many years ago, when the father of the Crockett lawyer was but three years of age. The paternal grandparents were James and Lucinda (Edens) Madden, The Edens family is one of the oldest and most noted in the annals of Eastern Texas. They came to this country during the era of the Republic of Texas and were given a league of land under the act passed by the government of the Republic to induce immigration to Texas, The great-grandfather Edens and the grandfathers Maden and Adams secured a league of land each in this way. The leagues owned by Grandfathers Madden and Adams secured a league of land each in this way. The leagues owned by Grandfathers Madden and Adams were located in Anderson country and the Edens league was in Houston country. The families were all planters of the early times and owned a number of slaves, who worked their plantations.

One of the most notable events of the Texas frontier has a pertinent place in the Madden and Edens annals. has a perturbit pace in the Madden and Edens annois. This was what is known as the "Edens' Massacre," which occurred during the early '30s in the northeast part of Houston county. James Madden, the paternal grandfather, and his family, were all directly involved in this murderous raid from the Indians. Grandmother Madden was tomahawked, being wounded in the side, back and head, and having her collar-bone cut in two. She was left for dead, but succeeded in dragging herself out of the house between the legs of an Indian guard, the Indians in their excitement failing to observe her exit. Crawling to the corner of a fence, she lay there, bleeding, while the Indians set fire to the buildings and destroyed the entire group of houses with the exception of one little outbuilding. Into this little shelter she pulled herself, after the Indians had departed, and lay there alone all night. The Crockett lawyer has heard from her own lips the remarkable statement that she "never slept better in all her life," a fact probably due to the severe loss of blood. There were two principal dwellings on the place, and in times of danger one of them was occupied by the women and the other by the men. This Indian raid had been anticipated and the men had collected in their house, but when the danger had apparently passed they had left their guns stacked and had gone over to the house of the women. It was in this situation that the attack came, while the men were cut off from their arms, between nine and ten o'clock at night. About seven or eight of the party were killed, in-cluding two brothers of Balis Madden. Charred remains were afterward found in the debris of the burned houses, indicating that the bodies of these children were consumed after the slaughter. Balis Madden, at the time of the massacre, was a small boy and ran away with the negro slaves to save himself, and with whom he remained in hiding in a hog's hed until morning. The Indians rarely ever molested the negroes, so that the boy was practically safe while with them. Despite all her terrible injuries and experiences of that night, the grand-mother recovered in a short time and lived in Houston county until 1889, dying at the advanced age of seventyseven years. Grandfather James Madden, who was noted throughout the country for his great physical strength, died long before the passing of his wife, and his death was directly due to a strain resulting from some feat of physical effort. The maternal grandfather Adams, about the same time, was injured by a runaway plow-team, and also died.

and was one of the prominent men in the community in all the movements and activities which represented the better citizenship and moral growth of this vicinity. There were six children in the inally, two sons dying in childhood. A daughter, Mary, was the wife of James A. Glover, and at her death left one child, Nannie, who lives in Colorado City, Texas. Dorothy is the wife of B. F. Holcomb, a tarmer near Alto, Texas. Florinda is the wite of Joe R. Monk, who lives at Kennard, in Houston county. Each has several children. James William Madden, who is the only surviving son, spent his early childhood in Houston county during the Civil war period. When the war closed he was nine years old, and in the meantime his parents had lost all the slaves with which the plantation was operated, and the father, being a cripple from his wound, was unable to give much attention to his estate. In this situation the work of managing the farm devolved largely upon the young lad, and he remained at this post of duty and faithfully bore his responsibility in behalf of his parents until he was of age. He then married Miss Bettie Mitchell, a native of Houston county and daughter of Z. W. Mitchell. Their three children are named as follows: Addie-Missouri is the wife of Samuel M. Boone, who is a partner with James W. Madden in the real estate and abstract business; they have two children, Madden and Paul Boone. Charles Madden is engaged in the lumber and hardware business at Jourdantown, Texas; by his marriage to Miss Alice Dean they have three children, James, Elizabeth and Charles. Wilson-Erls Madden, who is now a civil engineer residing in Denver, Colorado, has had a notable career. A graduate of the Annapolis Naval Academy in the class of 1906, he then entered actual service, was with the Atlantic fleet on its remarkable tour of the globe of that year or the year following, and after the return was with the Pacific fleet, reaching the position of Junior Lieutenant of the Navy. On account of ill health in 1910 he was retired on part pay by the naval authorities and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession at Denver. He married Miss Dorothy Ann Hayes, of New Jersey, and they have one child, Dorothy Sage Madden. Bettie, the mother of these three children, died at Crockett in April, 1884, and in November, 1885, Mr. Madden married Miss Sarah Thomas Holcomb, the daughter of Thomas H. Holcomb, who is now a resident of Augusta, Houston county.

After leaving the farm, James W. Madden located in Crockett in 1882, and for three years served as deputy tax collector under his father, this being followed by six years' service as deputy county and deputy district clerk, the duties of both positions having been efficiently per-formed by him at the same time. He also edited the Crockett Economist, a weekly newspaper, during two years of this time. At the age of eighteen he had taken up the study of law, and he continued this at every possible interval over a period of seventeen years, until in 1891 he successfully passed the examinations and was admitted to the bar. Since then he has been an active member of his profession, with the exception of three years, when he was called upon to give all his attention to public affairs. In 1896 Mr. Madden became private secretary to Charles A. Culberson, who was then governor of Texas, and is now the senior United States Senator from this state. In 1897 and 1898, during the Culberson administration, Mr. Madden was a member of the official family of the government, holding the chief office under his appointment as Secretary of State. His services in that office were important. He was ex-officio a member of the State Printing Board and State Board of Education. He was during that time also a member of the first Texas State Text-Book Board, a body created to select and adopt a uniform system of text-books for use in the public schools of the state. His associates on this board were Governor C. A. Culberson, M. M. Crane, then Attorney General; R. W. Finley, who was Comptroller; J. M. Carlisle, who was Superintendent of Public Instruction, and Professor W. F. Prichett, who was then President of the Sam Houston Normal School. During this time Mr. Madden also presided at the organization of the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth sessions of the legislature of his state, which was a part of his official duties. Since returning from Austin, Mr. Madden has given all his attention to his large and lucrative law practice at Crockett. He has served upon the city school board and has interested himself in a public spirited manner with all movements for the advancement of his home locality. He and his wife are members of the Southern Methodist Church, which he joined when sixteen years of age and she at fonrteen, and he has been almost constantly on the board of stewards of his church, of which he is now chairman, and has also served as superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school for several years. He and his present wife have no children of their own, but his three children by his first wife were quite young when he married his present wife and they never knew her ex-cept as "mother." They are all prominent members of their respective communities and owe their splendid stations in life in a large degree to her worthy and kindly precepts. In polities, Mr. Madden has always been a Democrat, being a firm believer in democratic principles of government and is a great admirer of our present executive head, President Woodrow Wilson.

JOSEPH H. NATIONS. In the commercial enterprise of El Paso during the last quarter of a century there has been no more conspicuous figure than that of Joseph H. Nations, who is owner and proprietor of the J. H. Nations Packing & Mercantile Company, and probably owns as extensive properties in ranches and the cattle industry as any other individual in west Texas. Mr. Nations has not only been an important factor in various lines of business, but also in the civic development of his comnunity, and has contributed largely to the advancement of the general welfare.

Joseph H. Nations, who represents one of the oldest families of Texas, was born in Gonzales county, Texas. January 5, 1857, a son of Eli and Eliza (Austin Woodruff) Nations, natives respectively of Mississippi and Texas. Eli Nations, the father, came to Texas when a boy, in company with his father, and was reared in Austin and subsequently became a cattleman and farmer. During the closing months of the Civil war he was in the service of the Confederate government as beef buyer for the army. His death occurred at the great age of eighty-seven years in 1912, while his wife passed away in the same year at the age of seventy-six. The father was a resident of Gonzales county until 1883, at which date he sold his interests there and moved to Alpine. where he and his wife had their home until 1888, at which date they came to El Paso and lived in quiet retirement in this city until death came to both of them. The mother's half-sister was the wife of Anson Jones, who was the last president of the Texas Republic.
Mr. Joseph H. Nations spent his boyhood in southern

Mr. Joseph H. Nations spent his boyhood in southern Texas and attended the public schools, and also was a student in Moulton College of Lavaca county. When he left school at the age of twenty-one years it was to take up the occupation which his father had so long followed, the stock raising industry, and among his contemporaries the judgment is that no man in the state of Texas has made a more substantial and consistent success as a cattleman than Joseph H. Nations of El Pasocounty, a large ranch in Socorro county, New Mocio, another in Pecos county, Texas, and his herds of cattle, horses and sheep, principally cattle, number many thousand and cover many hills and valleys while grazing over the vast estate of Mr. Nations.

The year 1886 is remembered among old time cattlemen as one in which the cattle market was at about its lowest point, when the price of cattle was such that few men could make a profit by driving their stock to the northern and eastern markets. It was in this period of special depression that Mr. Nations made the beginnining of an enterprise which has since flourished as one of the largest of its kind in the Southwest. He established at El Paso a retail butcher business. From small beginning this has developed with the growth of El Paso in the general extension of the cattle business and all other lines of industry, and the J. H. Nations Packing Company today does an annual business amounting to more than half a million dollars and has about one hundred people in its employ. It is by far the largest establishment of its kind in El Paso and is an important commercial asset to the city. Mr. Nations also has interests in a transfer company, in the real estate business, and in laving out additions to the city, and various other enterprises of this city. He is also a member of the executive committee of the Panhandle and Southwestern Stockmen's Association, El Paso, and of the American National Live Stock Association. His business career has been of a very strenuous nature. He has never allowed himself any vacation and from an early age has been constantly in the saddle, both literally and figuratively speaking, and it is as a result of this unremitting application to business that his success has expanded and been so generous. Mr. Nations is a di-rector of the First National Bank of El Paso, is president of the Young Men's Christian Association, and is a trustee of the First Baptist church. He is also a member of the Elks Lodge.

Mr. Nations was married October 6, 1880, to Miss Ida M. Hicks, who was born in Mississippi and who came when a child to Texas with her parents. Her father and mother were Joseph Y. and Mary E. (Braden) Hicks, natives respectively of Mississippi and Tennesse. Both her parents represented some of the old and prominent families of the South, and for generations bad been identified with the wealthy and cultured and had been identified with the wealthy and cultured and slave-owning country and Southern aristocracy. Dr. Joseph Y. Hicks, father of Mrs. Nations, was a graduate of Tulane University of New Orleans and for many years was engaged in the successful practice of his profession in Lavaca county, Texas. The four children of Mr. and Mrs. Nations are as follows: Josephine Nations, residing with her father in this city; Anna is the wife of A. B. Urmston, who is a wealthy retired ranchman and now resides with his wife on a beautiful and large landed estate near Edinburgh, Scotland; Kathrine, who is the wife of Nelson Studebaker Riley, Mr. Riley being a nephew of the well-known Studebaker Brothers, automobile and wagon manufacturers and the manager of the branch house of the Studebakers at Kansas City; Mary, the youngest child, is at the present time pursuing her studies in music at the University of Berlin, Germany. Finally, after many years of constant devotion to his business, Mr. Nations, appreciating the strain placed upon his health and physical resources, determined to take a vacation and enjoy a much needed rest by an extensive trip throughout the East. The home of himself and his family is at 904 South Magoffin street. Through all the years of his residence, Mr. Nations has kept a firm faith in the future of this city, and he himself has witnessed and helped promote a prosperity which has been surpassed by no other Texas city. With the completion of the great irrigation project now in progress, and with the further development of mining industries which are still in their infancy, and with the proper extension of trade with Mexico, El Paso, according to Mr. Nation's positive convictions, will forge rapidly to the front, and within less than ten years will have a population of one hundred thousand people. Mrs. Nations is well known in El Paso for church and charities, and her name has often been associated with the social and benevolent undertakings which have been a feature of El Paso life during late years.

ROBERT L. LATTIMORE is well known as an attorney of Paris who has spent his professional life largely in the public service. He was born in Lamar county, Texas, near Roxton, on March 19, 1878, and he is the son of Joseph M. Lattimore.

Joseph M. Lattimore came to Texas from McMinn country, Tennessee, where both he and his wife were born and reared. Joseph was born in 1844 and his wife were born and reared. Joseph was born in 1844 and his wife was born in 1852. She died in January, 1899, the mother of Thomas, of Sulphur, Oklahoma; John, a farmer at Rox-ton, Texas; Robert L., of this brief notice; Samuel, of Fort Worth, Texas; William, a merchant of Paris, Texas, and Roy and David Dickson Lattimore, Faris, Texas, and Roy and David Dickson Lattimore, Faris, Texas, and Roy and David Dickson Lattimore was Buchanan Lattimore, who was born in Tennessee and there passed his entire life. He was a farmer, and he participated in the Civil war as a Confederate soldier, furnishing two sons to the service as well. His son, Joseph M., the father of the subject, was with General forrest's command during much of the time he wore the Confederate gray, some four years in all, and he served nine months in a Federal prison. Buchanan Lattimore married a daughter of John Kelley, and she bore him the following named children: Joseph M.; John, who was killed in battle during the Rebellion; Callie, who was killed in battle during the Rebellion; Callie, who married Dr. King; Susie, the wife of William Sartin; Eveline married William Rowland, and one who died unmarried.

It thus appears that the Lattimore family is one of the solid ones of the South, which has produced many sons in each generation, who have done good work for their state in the way of citizenship and public service.

Robert L. Lattimore was educated in Roxton and was graduated from the Roxton High School. After a year as a teacher in the schools of the Prairie Point District, Mr. Lattimore took up the study of law under the pre-ceptorship of W. P. Brown and the firm of Wolf, Sherman & Semple, and his admission to the bar followed on December 21, 1898. Mr. Lattimore established himself in Paris soon thereafter in the practice of his profession, and after two years of legal activity was appointed as-sistant county attorney by Leslie L. Hardison, serving four years in that capacity. In 1904 he was elected to the office, which he filled most acceptably for another four years. His term of office was marked by a number of prominent cases, among which was the prosecution of the Youngs for murder, which terminated in the confession of one of those implicated after she had been committed to prison for life. The murder of one Jacowby, a prominent rural school teacher, by one Long furnished another case peculiar in the annals of crime in Lamar county, the prosecution of which fell to Mr. Lattimore, who convicted his man, and Long is now serving a life sentence in prison. Other cases of a similar kind came up during Mr. Lattimore's incumbency of office and he handled them in that eareful and effective manner that came to mark his regime as one of the most efficient ones in the history of the county.

In 1908 Mr. Lattimore was elected district atroncy without opposition, and served thus for another four years. His district comprised Red River, Lamar, and Fannin counties, and the work of his department was conducted along lines of the most complete thorough nees, so that offenders against the law suffered the consequences of their crimes in every instance. He retired from office in December, 1912, resuming private practice in association with Mr. Hutchinson.

Mr. Lattimore was married to Miss Jessie Caviness, daughter of C. G. Caviness, a well-known contractor of this city, who came to Texas from the state of Arkansas. Mrs. Caviness is the mother of four children. To Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore have been born two children— Boh and Louise.

millis Holloway

WILLIS A. HOLLOWAY. Now living retired at Midland, Mr. Holloway is a Texas farmer and cattleman whose experience covers more than half a century and who belongs to one of the oldest families of American stock settled in the state.

Willis A. Holloway was born December 20, 1843, near San Angustine, Texas. His father was Simpson Holloway, a native of South Carolina, who came to Texas in 1818 and located on a farm near San Augustine. He was thus a settler of Texas three years before the first Austin colony was introduced into the boundaries of the province and he was among the few Americans who had located in the censtern border of the state. Simpson Holloway was a solvier of the Mexican war and had also served in the Revolution of Texas during and had she served in the Revolution of Texas during Irish and French and Dutch descent, and the name has been identified with the southern states for generations and the families have always been planters and farmers and before the Civil war owned slaves.

Mr. Holloway at the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted in the eivil service and served in the troops under Col-Henry McCullough. He went all through the war and afterwards was at three different times a member of the State Rangers Service, his service being under John Cannon, John F. Ford and Captain Kirk Mays. He also belonged to an independent ranger company for several years in the Indian campaign and he now draws a pension for his services of twenty dollars per month.

Mr. Holloway was engaged in the cattle business at Midland up to 1905 and in that year was elected county treasurer, an office which he filled with fidelity and zeal for six years, and since then has been retired, living on his farm near Midland. Mr. Holloway first married Miss Mary Roberts, of Alabama, her family having come to Texas at an early date. She died in 1868. His second marriage occurred some years later when Miss Martha McReynolds became his wife. They are the parents of one son, who is now nineteen years of age. Mr. Holloway is a stanch Democrat in politics and has always given his time and contributed otherwise to the party organization. He is affiliated with the Masonic order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a member of the Baptist church, having been a deacon of that church for forty years.

N. LAWRENCE LINDSLEY. The high accomplishments that have marked the professional career of N. Lawrence county have, prove his fitness as a representative of a funity that for generations has been noted for its attainments in the learned professions. His great-grandfather, Phinp Lindsley, was a noted educator and was president of what was formerly Nashville University, now Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee. His grandparents were N. Lawrence and Julia (Stevens) Lindsley, the former of whom collaborated in the compiling of Worcester's Dictionary, while the latter was a daughter of Moses Stevens, also a widely known educator, to whose memory stands a monument in the old city cemetry, Nashville, erected by the Masonic Grand Lodge of Tensessee. The father of Mr. Lindsley, Henry Stevens Lindsley, was a lawyer of distinction in central Tensesee, where he died in 1875, and one of his uncles was the late Judge Philip Lindsley, of Dallas, Texas. Mr. Atkins.

N. Lawrence Lindsley was born at Lebanon, Wilson county, Tennessee, in June, 1873, and was thoroughly educated in the classical, literary, and legal courses at Cumberland University, his native place. He was there graduated in January, 1894, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and soon thereafter entered upon the practice of his profession at Evansville, Indiana. His abilities were quickly recognized, a large and representative practice resulted, and he was eventually retained as attroney by the Western Union Telegraph Company. As counsel for this corporation he came to Dallas, Texas, in 1899, and here he was at once welcomed among the leading legists of the city. Although he has retained his official position with the telegraph company, he is also engaged in the general practice. During the last several years, in recognition of his services, the com-pany has not only retained him in cases in which his personal attention has been desired, but also in association with other attorneys throughout the state on the appeal of their cases. As a lawyer Mr. Lindsley is up to the best standards of his profession. In the best sense of the word he had been a full-measured man and citizen, filling all the places of professional and social life with rare ability and conscientious zeal and an earnest purpose which have made his influence in Dallas a constant force in behalf of the principles of good citizenship. His legal knowledge, perception, shrewd-ness, and ability are of the highest order, and his devotion to his profession and the interests of his clients has been distinguished even in a community of lawyers so strong, intent and tireless as those of Dallas. He is a good speaker, of the persuasive and convincing kind, and his cases are carefully thought and studied before trial and then ably argued and contested before court and jury. As might be expected from his scholarly training, the law has not alienated his attention from general literature, and he is as pleasant to meet socially as a friend as he is formidable professionally as an oppo-

In 1899, Mr. Lindsley was united in marriage with Miss Mildred Maude Field, the daughter of Judge A. H. Field, of Dallas, recognized as one of the most famous lawyers in the state during the early days, and considered the greatest jury lawyer in Texas.

SEEPHER DECATUR BROWN. For manay years one of the quietly prosperous and enterprising citizens of the vicinity of Dallas was the late Stephen Decatur Brown, well known as a stockman and farmer, whose home on the outskirts of Dallas has in recent years become built up and practically a part of the city.

Stephen Decatur Brown was born in Virginia, Pebruary 21, 1853, and he died September 13, 1853. His parents were William and Mary Brown, both natives of Virginia, and they had four children, only one now living, named as follows: Oscar, deceased; Jary, the wife of Dr. William Berkly, of Washington, D. C., and Stephen Decatur.

The war disturbed all peace and order in Virginia during the '60c and came at a time when Stephen Deeatur Brown was a boy hardly in his teens, and while getting his first lessons in the local schools. He ran away from school and joined the Confederate army under General Lee, and served as a private from the early part of the war until its close. Although a boy, he did an efficient part as soldier and continued in active service until the end. He was never wounded nor captured. After his discharge from the army be went out to New Mexico and engaged in the cattle business there. Later he was in Comanche county, Texas, where he was elected and gave capable service as sheriff for two years. After that he moved to Dallas county, and thereafter until his death was prosperously engaged in stock raising. He built his home where Mrs. Brown still resides, at 1320 Penn avenue, and continued to operate his farm and stock business for many years. His widow now owns seven residences which were built on the original farm. Mr. Brown was a member of the Episcopal church and was a Democrat in politics, and, though always public spirited and held in high esteem by his community, was never willingly a candidate for office.

In 1873, Mr. Brown married Miss Octavia Coleman, a native of Texas and a daughter of Dr. George S. and Ellen (Douglas) Coleman. Dr. Coleman was a native of Asheville, North Carolina, and his wife of Virginia. There were six children in the Coleman family, mentioned as follows: Mary S., deceased; David S., of Athens, Texas; William D., deceased; Douglas, de-Athens, Texas; William D., deceased; Douglas, deceased; Mrs. Brown; and Carrie, who is unmarried and lives with Mrs. Brown. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Brown were born four children: George C. Brown is an optician of Dallas, senior member of the firm of Brown and Montgomery; Alexander B. is deceased; Edgar D. is employed in the treasurer's department of the Texas & Pacific Railroad and is unmarried; Gertrude is deceased.

Walter Shepherd Trigg. On August 3, 1905, at his home in Dallas, closed the life record of Walter Shepherd Trigg, who had made an almost extraordinary success as a business man, and whose charity and public spirit equaled his material success. For some years during his early career he lived at Dallas, but his achievements in husiness were centered at Paris, which was his home until shortly before his death,

Walter Shepherd Trigg was born in Gallatin, Tennessee, July 22, 1854, and was fifty-one years of age at his death. His parents were John H. and Catherine (Shepherd) Trigg, both natives of Tennessee, where the father was a merchant. There were eleven children in the family, only the first of whom is still living, their names being as follows: Martha, widow of Will Lucas, of Gallatin, Tennessee, and the mother of eight children; James, Charles, John, Nannie, Lillie, Nancy, Mary, Walter, William, and Walter S.

Owing to the death of his mother when he was nine years of age, Walter Shepherd Trigg had a very early years of age, water sucprict Trigg and a constant in life's responsibilities. His education after that was exceedingly limited and he practically carved his own fortune from the beginning to end. For several years he earned his way by clerking in a store, and then years he earned his way by clerking in a store, and then took a course in dentistry. He followed that profes-sion for a few years until he perceived that the possi-bilities were restricted and that he could never expand beyond certain limits. In 1876 Mr. Trigg settled in Dallas, where he began work for a large leather and saddle manufacturing concern. During the ten years spent with that house he laid the foundation for his independent business career. Moving to Paris, Texas, he engaged in the saddle business for himself and was for nineteen years proprietor of a constantly growing concern in that city. He was engaged in both the wholesale and retail harness and saddlery trade, and built up his enterprise to large proportions. In March, 1905, having sold out his business, he retired to Dallas, where he had his home during the remaining few months of bis life. When he first went to Paris, Mr. Trigg started with a very small capital and only a limited stock, By hard work, close attention to detail and fair and honorable dealings, he was soon on the road to success, and his trade grew so rapidly that after a few years the business was incorporated, and he continued as its presi dent until he finally sold out. While at Paris he also organized and conducted a horse collar factory and his products were sold throughout the southern states.

The late Mr. Trigg was extremely charitable, and during his residence at Paris there was never an undertaking in building or in institutional work with which his name was not connected as a financial contributor or in some other way. He was long an active member of the Presbyterian church at Paris, in politics was a Democrat, though never a politician, and bore a helpful part in all relations with his community. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias.

In 1880 Mr. Trigg married Miss Mary Catherine Hatzenbuehler, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Lutz) Hatzenbuehler. Her parents were natives of Germany and her father was a farmer. Mrs. Trigg was the oldest in a family of nine children, the others being mentioned as follows: Peter, deceased; Catherine, deceased; Elizabeth, deceased; Denie, of Dallas; Katie, wife of Jack Gorman, of Dallas; John, of Dallas; Phillip, of Dallas, and George, also a resident at Dallas, The one child born to Mr. and Mrs. Trigg is Ruby Shepherd Trigg, a successful business man at Dallas, and living with his mother at their residence at 4503 Junius street. Ruby S. Trigg married Miss Mary Felix Coonce, a native of St. Louis. They have no children

HUBERT FELIX LEACH, M. D. In matters of progressive citizenship, as also in the ability and skill of his profession, the city of Weatherford acknowledges one of its leading men of affairs in the person of Dr. Leach, whose work as a physician and surgeon and proprietor of the only sanitarium in Parker county are well known.

Hubert Felix Leach was born July 20, 1875, in eastern Tennessee, a son of W. J. and M. E. Leach, who came to Texas in 1878 and located in Wise county. There are large families of the Leach name in eastern Teanessee, and before the war most of them were slave holders and planters. The descent is from Scotch-Irish ancestors. W. J. Leach went through the war as a Confederate soldier, and afterwards followed farming on a substantial basis throughout his active life. Dr. Leach was the third in a family of five sons.

His early education was in the public schools of Wise county, and from 1892 to 1895 he was a student in the Polytechnic College of Fort Worth. His medical studies were pursued in the medical department of Fort Worth University, where he was graduated in 1899, with the degree of M. D. Soon after his graduation he began active practice at Alede in Parker county. Since 1910 Dr. Leach has had his home and practice in Weatherford. In that city under his direct supervision has been erected a modern private sanitarium, on a high and healthful location, and the sanitarium receives and treats medical and surgical cases from all the adjoining country. It is the only institution of the kind in Parker county, and has been of great service to the community in affording facilities which previously could not be obtained short of Fort Worth. In addition to his large private practice is now serving as health officer of Weatherford. Since graduating from medical college, his studies and experience have combined to keep bim fully abreast of the times, and he has taken three post-graduate courses in the Chicago Poly-Clinic, and in 1913 was a student in the medical department of Tulane University at New Orleans.

In politics Dr. Leach is a Democrat. His fraternal connections are with the Masonic Order, in which he has taken both the York and Scottish Rite, including fourteen degrees of the latter, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine. His only other fraternity is the Woodmen of the World. As a member of the Weatherford Commercial Club, he contributes his share to the advancement of commercial interests as promoted by that hody. For a number of years he has been a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

At Fort Worth on August 12, 1896, Dr. Leach and Miss Eva C. Hall were married. Mrs. Leach is a daughter of A. S. and M. E. Hall, her father a prominent ranchman and stockman, who donated the site to the Methodist Episcopal Church for the Polytechnic College at Fort Worth. Mr. and Mrs. Hall now have their home with the dector and wife, and are living retired. Mr. Hall came to Texas from Kentucky, and located in this state before the war, later serving as a Confederate soldier throughout the period of hostilities. Four children have been born to the doctor and wife, and the only son is now deceased. The daughters are: Eva Sue, aged fourteen; Mamie, aged twelve, and Elizabeth, aged four. The two older are now in school.

Dr. Leach is an enthusiastic advocate of the resources and advantages of Parker county and vicinity. By his own example he has done a good deal to keep the community abreast of modern progress. He is the owner of a farm, and was the first man in Parker county to build a silo, an improvement which has subsequently been copied by many of the most progressive farmers in this vicinity. He also shipped the first cream from Alcio, Parker county, and did much to promote the establishment and extension of telephone lines in the county. He was the first member of his profession in Parker county to buy an automobile and use it in his practice.

ELIH M. WEBB, M. D. One of the pioneer physicians of northwest Texas is Dr. Elihu M. Webb, who has been identified with Hardiman county and adjacent territory for upwards of twenty-five years. He is a resident and man of affairs of Chillicothe and is the oldest physician in point of continuous practice in the locality. Dr. Webb has had a very prominent place in activities outside of his profession, and has done much to promote and develop business enterprise in his section of the state.

Elihn M. Webb was born in Perry county, Tennessee, December 23, 1855. He was left an orphan at an early age and earned his way and means necessary to equip himself for his learned profession. His great-grand-father Webb came from Buncomb county, North Carolina, to Perry county, Tennessee, in 1816, one of the pioneers of that section. The Webbs are of English ancestry and there is also an admixture of German stock in the family. Dr. Webb's father was Joseph Webb, a mative of Tennessee, who died when his son Demorat in politics. The Dector's mother was Elizabeth Webb, also a native of Tennessee, who died in 1824, the mother of four children, of whom Dr. Webb was the first born.

After the death of his mother Dr. Webb was reared by an uncle, Major John L. Webb, of Linden, Tennessee, and he attended school at Linden to the age of twenty. By hard work he qualified himself for the duties of a teacher, and he followed that occupation for five years. It was with the earnings from this work that he entered upon his college training and was graduated from the medical department of Vanderbill University at Nashville in 1881. His first practice was in Perry county, where he remained for two years, and on May 12, 1883, arrived at Rockdale, Pexas.

Until 1889 Dr. Webb practiced at Valley View, in Cooke county, and then moved to Chillicothe, where he was one of the few physicians who practiced over the broad extent of northwest Texas, and in the early alsays he had his full share of pioneer practice, with all its hardships and difficulties which the physician had to encounter before the era of telephone and of modern

Libra Webb is sole proprietor of what was once the Chillicothe Telephone Company, and he owns the entire plant. He owns the Webb building, a two-story brick block, and the Webb opera house and has given his support to a number of local undertakings for the benefit of the community. He is a member of the Hardiman County and the Panhandle District Medical Association, also the Texas State Medical Association, but the state of the text of the

At Eldorado, Texas, as it was then called, but now a portion of Greer county, Oklahoma, Dr. Webb was married on April 13, 1892, to Miss Thursey C. Bishop, a Texas girl, born April 13, 1877, and a daughter of

Simpson B. and Margaret (Littlejohn) Bishop, now both deceased and who were old pioneer settlers of Fannin and Greer counties. To Dr. and Mrs. Webb were born two children, a daughter and a son. Jessie May was born on August 14, 1893, and was graduated with the class of 1913 from the Chillicothe high school. She is a member of the Methodist church and is now a student in Clarendon college, a Methodist institution of Clarendon. She is a fine type of Texas young womanhood and has always been an obedient danghter, very conscientious in all her relations with family and others, and has exercised her talents to increase the happiness and pleasure of all about her. Her father and mother take great pride in this daughter and have great hopes of her success and a worthy place in the world. The son, William S., was born in Chillicothe, which town was also the birthplace of the daughter, on September 6, 1895, and is now a student in the local high school. He has already done much to justify the care and labors bestowed upon him by his parents, who have well grounded anticipations for his future, feeling that he will always be true to the principles which they have endeavored to inculcate in his training. Mrs. Webb, who is popular and prominent in local society, was a charter member of Prairie Gem Lodge, No. 232, Order of the Eastern Star, at Chillicothe, and has filled all the Star offices and is Past Worthy Matron of the order. Dr. Webb is justly proud of his family and of his wife and says he believes that there never was a mother who has tried harder to instill the principles of truth and veracity in her children than Mrs. Webb.

JAMES M. BLANKENSHIP. Since 1910 identified with the bar of Wichita Falls Mr. Blankenship has reached a very creditable position in local professional and business circles, and has been honored with the position of vice president of the Wichita County Bar Association. He is a young man, possesses the qualities of energy and talents which are the chief requisites in the law, and his friends predict for him a brilliant future.

James M. Blankenship was born in Macon country, Tennessee, September 21, 1882, the youngest of five sons and one daughter, born to S. S. M. and Kathrine (White) Blankenship. Both parents were natives of Tennessee, and are still living, the father at the age of Seventy-two, and the mother aged seventy-three. The father by occupation has been a farmer. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Ninth Kentucky Regiment, and though wounded at the battle of Murfreesboro, continued on as a soldier until the end of the struggle.

Mr. Blankenship as a boy attended school in both Kentucky and Tennessee, and acquired a liberal education. He graduated from the Bowling Green Business College, and from the Southern Normal School of Kentucky with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1904, and with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1904, and with the A. B. degree in 1906. From Cumberland University he graduated in law in 1907. Fraternally Mr. Blankenship is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks: In politics he is a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Blankenship have one girl. Amie Ruth, horn July 20, 1913. He is very fond of outdoor life and sports, and he and his wife move in the best social circles of Wichita Falls.

THOMAS BENTON PRUETT. No man bears a finer record in Pecos and Reeves county, Texas, than Thomas Benton Pruett, one of the most prominent business men in this section. He was one of the early settlers of this region, and as one of the pioneer lumbermen did much for the development of the country around Pecos. He is now the head of one of the largest lumber concerns in western Texas, and is considered one of the most influential men in the business world of this section. But his success in business is not what has given him his wide popularity, it is rather the way in which he has earned this prosperity, for no more honorable career can be pointed to than Mr. Pruett's. He has the highest reputation for honor and integrity and possesses the confidence of the entire business world, for he has never been known to conduct a business deal in anything but the most honorable way. His geniality and ability to make friends has won for him a large circle of warm friends both in Pecos and in the other sections where he has lived.

Thomas Benton Pruett was born on the 7th of January, 1855, in White county, Arkansas. His father, Benjamin H. Pruett, was born in Kentucky. He lived there until after his marriage to Nancy McBride, who was also a native of Kentucky and in 1849 they removed to White county, Arkansas. Here Mr. Pruett became fairly successful as a farmer, dying in 1892. He was born in 1808 and was eightly-four years of age at the time of his death. Mrs. Pruett, who was born in 1817 lived until 1998, when she died at the age of eightly-one.

Nine children were born to Benjamin Pruett and his wife and five of this number are deceased. In addition to Thomas B. Pruett, those living are Phillip H. Pruett, who is a prominent stock man of Alpine, Texas; James B. Pruett, who is engaged in farming in Hopkins county, Texas, and Diana, who is the wife of W. W. Hinson, of Alpine, Texas.

Thomas B. Pruett was the next to the youngest child and the education which he received was very meager, amounting to twelve mouths in all. Even this little schooling, which was had in the private school of White county, Arkansas, was received at the rate of two months a year. Not only were the country schools of the poorest but it was a hard struggle for existence in those days and children had to get what education they could and be thankful for it, no matter how little it was. At the age of eighteen he began farming in White county, and for fourteen years followed this occupation. During this period, in September, 1874, he was married to Miss Minerva Hammons, who was born in White county, Arkansas. In 1887 he sold his farm and moved to Texas where he located at Fort Davis. Here he went into the mercantile business and became very successful. He preferred the farm, however, and so after a time sold his business to good advantage and moved to Fannin county, Texas, where he bought a farm and settled down to the old life again. He lived here for three years when his wife died, leaving him with the care of a family of seven small children, the youngest of whom died eight months after the death of the mother. With six children to rear and educate and no wife to help him, life looked pretty gray to Mr. Pruett about this time, but he was not to be discouraged, and so selling his farm in Fannin county he removed to Mitchell county, Texas, where he farmed for a year,

It was in 1892 that he moved to Pecos and here his real prosperity began. His first essay at business was as the owner of a transfer and daryage business and for four years he followed this line successfully. He then engaged in the lumber business, being one of the very first men to enter the field in this section. He has been very successful and between 1896 and 1905 established five lumber yards. These are located at Pecos, Toyah, Barstow, Monahan and Grand Falls. In 1905 he organized the Pruett Lumber Company, having previously been in business by himself. The capital was twenty-five thousand dollars and in 1907 this capital was increased to one hundred thousand dollars. He served as president of the company for two years and during this time has added three more yards to those already in operation. The new yards are located at Pyote, Saragessa and Balmorhea, Texas. He has considerable capital invested in real estate in this section of Texas, owning in addition to his fine home in Peccs, four sections of land in Reeves county. Mr. Pruett should be credited with the success of his children as well as his own success for it is largely due to his careful training and the good education which he has given them that they are the successful and useful men and women which they have become. The eldest, Vida Pruett, is now the wife of the Reverend Joel F. Hedgpeth, the minister of the Methodist church in Pecos. Tina is the widow of William Adams, who died in 1909 at Barstow, Texas, as the county clerk of Ward county, and she now makes her home in Pecos. Verde Elmer Pruett is the manager of one of the Pruett Lumber Company's yards, located at Balmorhea, Texas. Mamie married A. Graves Taggert, who is the bookkeeper of the Pecos Mercantile Company at Pecos. Lilian Pruett is a successful teacher of music at Pecos. Pear, the youngest, married Charles Jorden, who is connected with the Pecos Valley State Bank of Pecos.

In 1899 Mr. Pruett was married again, his wife being Mss Mamie Taylor, the daughter of 1ra and Mrs. A. O. Taylor. Two children have been born to this union, as follows, Ora, who is now twelve years old, and Thomas

Benton Pruett, Jr.

Mr. Pruett is a member of the Methodist church, and for twenty-one years has served as a steward in this church. He is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being a Royal Arch Mason. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

F. S. EBERIAKT. A prominent attorney at Mineral Wells, where he located in 1908, Mr. Eberbart began practice in Texas in 1886, and has long had a high standing as a lawyer and a public spirited citizen. His position has been gained through his individual efforts, and early in life he manifested talents fitting him for a career of service both to himself and to his community.

F. S. Eberhart is a native of Georgia, where Mr. Eberhart's family has been a numerous and thrifty stock since the early days. On his father's side, Mr. Eberhart is of German and Welsh descent, and his mother is of English lineage. Nearly all the members of the family were planters and slave holders before the war, and were of that substantial stock upon whom the results of the struggle bore most heavily. Mr. Eberhart was born in Elberta county, January 9, 1862, a son of George and Sarah Helen Eberhart. His father was a physician and saw service in the Confederate army, first as a surgeon, and later organized and became captain of a company of his own. He and his company participated in many of the battles in General Lee's army in Virginia, and he was in the struggle from the beginning to the end. After the war his practice was resumed, and was continued until his death at Hartwell in Hart county, Georgia, in 1893. The mother died there about 1901. Three of the nine children are still living and the Mineral Wells attorney was fourth in order of birth. Two brothers, E. J. and H. H. Eberhart are farmers in South Carolina. The grandfather of Mr. Eberhart was a large planter and slave holder in Georgia before the war.

F. S. Eberhatt finished his early schooling in the Hartwell high school in Georgia. Several years before reaching his majority he came to Texas with Professor M. V. Looney, who had been his former tutor, and after reaching this state qualified as a teacher and assisted Professor Looney in a school at Overton in Rusk county, and later at Atlanta. His work as a

His first eases as a lawyer were obtained in Cass county, and from there he moved to Gilmer in 1892. Since 1908 Mr. Eberhart has been one of the leading lawyers of Mineral Wells. Though a stanch Democrat and often working privately in the interests of his party, Mr. Eberhart has firmly declined all applications of the process. all proffers to enter politics for office or other honors, and has given his best service in the capacity of a lawyer and a public spirited citizen. Her father was born in Texas, was a farmer throughout his active career, and during the war served in the Confederate army along the coast. Her mother came from Georgia, a daughter of Robert Westmoreland, who owned a large plantation and many slaves in that state, and who came to Texas while the war was still in progress. Mr. and Mrs. Eberhart have one child, a daughter of Lila Maud, born September 18,

WILLIAM H. MERCER. The business position of Mr. Mercer at Mineral Wells is that of superintendent of the City Water Works. That indicates only one phase of his varied activities and his value as a social factor in the community. Mr. Mercer is one of the prominent Masons of North Texas, has long been active in community affairs, is a zealous worker for church and charity, and is a man whose upright life has not only brought him personally high esteem, but has resulted in numberless acts of kindness and love to his fellow

William H. Mercer was born July 21, 1872, at Tehuacana, in Limestone county, Texas. It has always been a matter of satisfaction to bimself that he is a native of Texas. His parents were Adiel S. and Julia (Hamilton) Mercer, who came from Georgia to Texas in 1861, locating at Towash in Hill county. His father, who was a nephew of Professor Jesse Mercer, founder of Mercer's University at Cartersville, Georgia, was a farmer and stockman for many years, sold out his interests about 1900, and was engaged in the hotel business at Mineral Wells until his death in February, 1910. The mother is still living at Mineral Wells. There were ten children in the family, six daughters and four sons, and the oldest of these is William H.

His early life was spent on a farm, and his education was liberal, and he was able to complete the course at Trinity University at Tehuacana. While as-sisting his father he learned all the details of farming and stock raising, but chose a business career. His first position was as bookkeeper and manager for the Round Bale Cotton Company, a large concern operating branch plants at Gatesville, Waco, Belton, and Houston. In 1906 Mr. Mercer took a position as branch-house manager for Swift & Co., Chicago, and for two years was located at Abilene. From Abilene be came to Mineral Wells, and has since been closely identified with this great health resort and thriving commercial center. His first two years of residence here were spent as manager for the Mineral Wells Light, Power & Heating Company. This was followed by his election and service as city auditor, and general superintendent of the city water works in 1908, and his attention has since been closely directed to the large and responsible public affairs entrusted to his charge. The water supply of Mineral Wells comes from a large lake of seven hun-dred acres situated across the hills west from the town.

The water is pumped through mains through the town to a large standpipe, situated on an eminence east of the city, and this standpipe gives a pressure of eightyseven pounds to the square inch. It is soft water, and of the highest quality for all purposes.

In politics Mr. Mercer has always voted and supported the Democratic ticket, and as a citizen has given both intelligence and the most scrupulous integrity to the discharge of all duties conferred upon him by his community. His Masonic relations are as follows: Member of the Blue Lodge at Mineral Wells, of which he is past master; past worthy patron of the Order of the Eastern Star; past high priest of the Royal Arch chapter; past illustrious master of the council of Royal and Select Masters; a member of Dallas Consistory No. 2, of the Scottish Rite; and member of Hella Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Mercer is past exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias; past grand in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has long been interested in the work of public charity and benevolence. He is now president of the United Charities and Corrections of Mineral Wells. He is treasurer of the Palo Pinto County Fair Association, and a director in the Mineral Wells Commercial Club.

Mr. Mercer is chaplain of the Volunteer Fire Department, and since the death of his father has acted as chaplain of the Stonewall Jackson Camp of Confederate Veterans. His church membership is with the Baptist denomination, in which he is a deacon and is secretary and treasurer of the Sabbath school. Mr. Mercer is a bachelor, has always regarded his parents' home his own, and says that he has never missed a birthday dinner or a Christmas dinner that his mother has cooked or superintended during his lifetime. It is his intention to make Mineral Wells his permanent home, and his relations with this community are of the most pleasant and agreeable kind, all his fel-lows having the utmost confidence and respect for his character and ability. Mr. Mercer has made himself the particular friend and guardian of the young men of his community. Wherever possible he endeavors to help younger people both by advice and by practical assistance. His favorite method of counseling his young friends is the distribution of printed slips, which he always carries about him, and a quotation of the words printed on one of these slips will indicate what he considers practical and inspiring advice. The slip reads as follows: "A man that's clean inside and out, who neither looks up to the rich or down to the poor, who can lose without squealing and win without bragging, who is considerate of women, children and old people, who is too brave to lie, too generous to cheat, and who takes his share of the world and lets others have theirs."

JOHN SCHMIDT. More than thirty-five years have passed since John Schmidt became identified with the varied business interests of Nacogdoches, and during all this period he has been known as one of its most progressive and reliable citizens. Time has but brightened his reputation in business circles and his life here covers one of the most important and interesting periods of the history of this part of Texas, while there are few large commercial and industrial activities with which he is not in some way or another connected. The sturdy German element in our national commonwealth has been one of the most important in furthering the substantial development of the country, for this is an element signally appreciative of practical values and also of the higher intellectuality which transcends all provincial confines. Mr. Schmidt is one who claims the Fatherland as the place of his nativity, and in his life he has displayed the strongest and best traits of character of the German race. He was born November 14, 1856, at Boos, near the city of Kreuznach, in Rhein province, Germany, where his father, Philip Schmidt, was a farmer, and in which locality his forefathers had lived for many generations. Philip Schmidt married Marguerite Coerper and they became the parents of ten children, of whom John was the fourth in order of birth. One other, Jacob F., came to the United States.

John Schmidt attended the public schools until eleven years of age and then became a student in the gymnasium, which corresponds with the American high school. When he was fourteen years of age he entered upon his business career, becoming an apprentice to the mercantile business, and when three years had been thus spent he came to the United States with his friend, Abram Mayer. Mr. Schmidt secured employment in New York City as a salary boy, and continued in that capacity for three years, then coming to Texas, in 1877, where he secured a position as a clerk at Henderson. In the meantime, his friend Mr. Mayer had come to Henderson, Texas, in 1876, and in 1878 Mr. Schmidt joined him and under the firm name of Mayer & Schmidt they embarked in a small grocery business at Xacogdoches, Texas, on March 15th of that year. Their first place of business was located on the public square in a frame building, on the west side, and there they remained nearly two years. They then moved to the north side of the square and after another move located on Main street, the present site, where in 1882 they built a large mercantile house in order to accommodate their rapidly growing trade. In 1908 this building was destroyed by fire, but in 1909 the present handsome structure, modern in every detail, was erected. The firm drifted slightly into the jobbing business with the country stores and the firm finally became in a measure a department store. the mrn many necessary in a measure a department score. This was incorporated in 1909, capitalized at $75,000, and the present officers are B. M. Isaaes, president; H. P. Schmidt, vice president; C. C. Reien, treasurer; and Albert M. Brewer, secretary. In 1910 Mr. Schmidt withdrew from this business.

Mr. Schmidt's outside interests have been large and of a varied character. He was one of the promoters of the Nacogdoches Grocery Company, and has been president thereof for eight years; he aided in the organization of the Nacogdoches Oil Mill Company and the compress company here; is vice president and a director of the Commercial Guaranty State Bank of Nacogdoches; a director and vice president of the first doches; a director and vice president of the first of Cason, Monk & Company, hardware dealers; a director of the Crain Furniture Company; president of the big house of Mayer & Schmidt, at Tyler, Texas; a stock holder in the firm of Titche-Goettinger & Company, of Delles and a Schematz Land. Dallas, and of Schwartz-Landauer Company, of Dallas, the Guaranty and Trust Company, the Southwestern Life Insurance Company of Dallas, the Fort Worth Elevators Company of Fort Worth (of which he is also vice president), the Lufkin National Bank, of Lufkin, Texas, the Paunee Land and Lumber Company, of Paunee, Louisiana, and the Wadel-Dickey Hardware Company, of Tyler, Texas.

Mr. Schmidt's political activities have not been large. He was a delegate to the famed "car-shed" convention at Houston, when the democratic party split, and was a Hogg supporter there. In 1892 he was an alternate to the Democratic National Convention, when Mr. Cleveland was nominated the third time for the presidency. He was a gold Democrat in 1896, when he supported Palmer and Buckner, but voted for Mr. Bryan the next two times. In addition he has served as alderman and city clerk of Nacogdoches for two years and has served as school trustee here. In fraternal circles he is con-nected with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity, is a Pythian and an Elk, and also some fraternity, is a rytinan and an E.ik, and also belongs to the Hoo Hoos. He is a life member of the State Historical Society. He was reared in the faith of the Lutheran Protestant church. Mr. Schmidt has erected many residences of Nacogdoches adjacent to his

North street home and has also built numerous brick stores here, including the postoffice building, with Mr. Blount, and the block on Main street, between Church and Fredonia streets. He also erected the Mayer-Schmidt business house in Tyler and is one of the owners of a four-story brick building in Dallas, at Main and Austin streets. He is fond of travel and has visited his native country on four different occasions, in 1887, 1899, 1907 and 1912.

On January 13, 1880, Mr. Schmidt was married in Nacogdoches to Miss Elizabeth K. Voigt, a daughter of a pioneer settler, Henry Voigt, who came from Westphalia, Germany, to the United States in 1846. He was a baker by trade and for some years was engaged in business at Nacogdoches. There were four children in the Voigt family: William F., who died in 1888 in Nacogdoches, where at one time he served as postmaster; Mrs. Mena Mergenthal, of Palestine, Texas; Mrs. Elizabeth Schmidt; and Mrs. Augusta Schuh, of Taeoma, Washington. To Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt have been born six children, as follows: Alice M., the wife of W. F. Gintz, secretary of the Nacogdoches Grocery Company; Philip Henry, who died in infancy; Louise, who married C. C. Rhein, with the firm of Mayer & Schmidt, Inc., of this city Emma A, the wife of C. H. Johnson, of Fort Worth; Herbert J., with the Nacog doches Grocery Company, married Maud Sloan, and August Carl, who is working for the Titche-Goetinger Company, of Dallas.

T. S. RICHARDS. Every one of the eight thousand inhabitants of Mineral Wells and many thousands of the annual visitors to that famous resort know and esteem the genial old pioneer Uncle Tom Richards, proprietor of the Star Wells. Mr. Richards came to Mineral Wells over thirty years ago, when its population was less than one hundred people, and when the Wells had a reputation only among the people living within that immediate vicinity. Mr. Richards bought and developed the Star Well, and his enterprise and the many facilities provided at his direction for the entertainment of vistors have been a very important factor in making Mineral Wells a resort city second to none in the southwest, and the mecca for thousands of visitors every year.

T. S. Richards was born July 30, 1830, in Troup county Georgia, a son of T. S. and Elizabeth (Jordan) Richards. The Richards family, of English descent, was established in America during the colonial period by the great-grandfather of the Mineral Wells citizens. Grandfather was a soldier on the American side during the Revolutionary war, and came out of that struggle with the rank of major. The military record of the family goes back to the father of Mr. Richards, who was a soldier during the war of 1812, and fought Indians, in Alabama and Florida. Mr. Richards himself has a military record, and during his long resi-dence in Texas has seen much of pioneer existence, experienced an occasional Indian raid, has seen the plains covered with herds of buffalo, and has also hunted deer, elk, wild turkeys, and other game when it was plentiful, in regions now covered with towns and well ordered homesteads. His father moved from Georgia to Alabama, and became one of the large planters and slave owners and also operated a mill in that state. The father died in 1846, and his widow survived nearly half a century until 1890, and was a second time married. There were three children by the first marriage, and seven by the second, Mr. Richards being the third child of the second wife. His opportunities for getting an education were necessarily limited, when in Alabama, where his youth was spent, there being few schools excepting a private institution here and there, and in consequence his learning has been largely acquired by individual training and experience. His father died when he was sixteen years of age, and at that time the burden of responsibilities for managing the homestead was árgely shifted to his shoulders. Later he located at Lonnie, Alabama, and established a general merchandise store, built up a large trade, and at the beginning of the war his property was worth at least thirty thousand dollars. Fractically all of it was swept away during the long conflict among the states, and he himself raised a company of cavalry and fought on the side of the Confederacy. His company was in the Sixth Alabama Cavalry, but most of its service was as independent scouts. Captain Richards was captured at Bluffs Springs in Florida, on March 25, 1865, by the army under General Steele, was taken to prison at Ship Island, and guarded by negroes until his exchange at Vicksburg. About that time peace was declared and he returned

In January, 1867, Captain Richards came to Texas, spending a short time in Williamson county, and then locating on a farm in Coryell county. That was his home for ten years, and as a farmer and stock raiser he became one of the substantial men in that vicinity. The ill health of his wife was the cause which prompted bim to move to Mineral Wells. He and his wife went there on November 19, 1881, and the drinking of the waters from the Star Well cured his wife of Bright's disease. With this happy outcome of the visit, Mr. Richards was so pleased with the location that he determined to become a permanent resident, bought the Star Well, and also a hotel, and conducted it as the Richards House. When Mr. Richards bought the Star Well the water was drawn up by an old-fashioned rope and bucket. Since then many improvements have been introduced, and the water is now pumped to the surface by an electric motor, and is served at counters in a large pavilion surrounding the well. This pavilion is the regular resort for visitors and residents, and has naturally developed as the social center for the city. Thousands of people who never entered the limits of the city of Mineral Wells are familiar with and can testify to the virtues of the Star water, which as a health drink rivals the famous waters imported from abroad. The Star water is shipped by thousands of cases to all points in the United States.

When Mr. Richards located in Mineral Wells in 1831 there were but eight houses, and only two wells in operation, the Lynch and Star Wells. Some twenty-five or thirty families were there and most of them living in tents in order to drink the water. The approach to the city at that time could only be gained by taking a hack or stage at Millsap on the Texas and Pacific Railroad, and riding across the rough country for ten miles. At the present time two railroads enter Mineral Wells, the Texas & Pacific and the Gulf Western, and there is an electric street railway line in operation. The population at the present time is about eight thousand.

In politics Mr. Richards has always been a Democrat and since twenty-one years of age has been affiliated with the Masonic Order. His church is the Primitive Baptist. In Chambers county, Alabama, on June 19, 1861, Mr. Richards married Miss Mary Jane Lawson. She was an orphan girl, and was reared in the home of her grandfather, W. B. Knox, a prominent planter and stockman before the war. Ten children have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Richards, six sons and four daughters, and six are still living, namely; W. L. Richards, who is a cattleman and banker at Dickinson, North Dakota; Mary, wife of Dr. Lutrell, of Mineral Wells; Martha R., wife of A. J. Thomas, cashier of the Mineral Wells Bank; Lavisa Elvira, wife of Augustus Wicklong, an engineer on the Mineral Wells Northwestern Railroad; Alice Iva, wife of W. T. Hiles, a commercial salesman for the McCord-Collins Company of Fort Worth, and Frauk, a land and stock trader of Mineral Wells Mr. Richards is of the opinion, based upon long experience and close observation, that Mineral Wells has no superior as a health resort in the entire United States. He has lived here thirty-one years, has reared a large family and his aggregate dector bill throughout that time has been only seven and one-half dollars. He is himself now eighty-three years of age, is hale and hearty, and has many reasons besides those of material advantage to feel grateful to the wonderful well of which he is proprietor.

James B. Badgra. The business career of James B. Badger has been a varied one, and has embraced many lines of activity from the time when he began his active independent career until he established himself in his present business in 1897. Mr. Badger was horn in San Jacinto, Texas, on December 6, 1856, and is the son of James B. and Fannie (Jameson) Badger.

James B. Badger, father of the subject, was born in Onio, and came to Texas in the early days with the pioneers. He was a ship carpenter by trade, and followed that and other occupations during his active business life. He died in 1863. His wife, who, as before mentioned, was Pannie Jameson, was born in Texas, and she has the unique distinction of having lived under four different dags, namely: the Mexican, Texas, United States and Confederate flags. She met to in 1850, and she died in 1911. They were the parents of eight children, of which James B. of this review was the fourth born.

James B. Badger has lived in Texas all his life. Here he received his early education in private schools, there being no public schools in his early boyhood. His education, however, did not extend past his thirteenth birthday, and at that age he started out to do battle with the world upon his own responsibility. He went to Galveston at about that time, and for sixteen years made his home in that city. His first work there was in a cigar store, where be worked for one year, and he later clerked in a grocery store for a similar period. His next position was with the L. C. Hirschberger Company, and he later served a four-year apprenticeship as a sheet metal worker with the above firm. At the completion of his apprenticeship he continued in this line of work for eleven years, and it was in 1886 that he came to El Paso and engaged in the grocery business, with which he was identified for the following seven years. At that time he sold out the business, and after a short rest established his present business, which consisted of the dealing in coal, feed and building material, and he is today one of the largest dealers in these lines in El Paso.

Mr. Badger has been identified with some of the leading business enterprises of El Paso. At one time he was a stock holder and officer in the Automatic Telephone Company, and he maintained this connection with the company until it sold out, when he withdrew from all participation in its affairs. He has always manifested a lively interest in the welfare of the city. and in the days when El Paso maintained a volunteer fire department he was a member of it for years and they still maintain the organization and are subject to call in emergency cases. He is now its secretary and was president for a number of years. Mr. Badger wears a very handsome medal that was presented to him by the department for long and faithful service in the work. He is a Democrat and takes an active interest in local political affairs, and has served on the city council for more than thirteen years. During that time he has been instrumental in bringing about some very important changes in the administration of the city, and his service has been one of a highly valuable nature to the community.

Mr. Badger has been twice married. His first marriage took place at Galveston, Texas, when Miss Harriet Mannin became his wife. She died in 1880 without issue, His second marriage took place in 1895 when

Mrs. Mary F. Lane became his wife. She was a widow with a family of five children when he married her, they being named as follows: Walter, Alice, Florence, Bessie and Edward. Since the passing of his second wife and helpmate, Mr. Badger has maintained the care and direction of the lives of these young people, and has looked upon them in the same manner he would as if they had been his own, showing them every care and attention that a kindly parent would give to his own offspring. He is a man who enjoys the highest regard and esteem of the best people in El Paso, where he is well and favorably known for his many excellent qualities of heart and mind.

WILLIAM EDWARD PICKARD, a retired farmer of Kaufman, Texas, has by his life in this state proved what can be accomplished here by an energetic and persever-ing man who started out with a determination to win success.

Born in Maury county, Tennessee, William Edward Pickard grew up in the Mount Joy neighborhood, four miles west of Mount Pleasant. His birth occurred mues west of Mount Pieasant. His birth occurred October 25, 1859, and his educational advantages were limited to the schools close by. He merely tasted grammar, geography and history and in arithmetic he went little beyond its elementary parts. The period of the Civil war militated against him in this matter. He reached manhood, however, with a spelndid physique. good judgment and an inordinate ambition to succeed at something.

Mr. Pickard's grandparents, William and Millie Pickard, went to Tennessee from North Carolina, where they passed their lives on a plantation which was conducted without slave labor. Of their children, three sons and two daughters, we record that Nancy was the wife of Rev. David Jones, a Baptist preacher, and Emily, wife of Harvey Cloyce, lives in Arkansas. One son was named Alexander and another John Sidney. William Pickard died in Maury county, Tennessee. The father of the subject of this sketch was born there in 1831 and passed away in 1901, in Kaufman, Texas. In early life he operated a sawmill and was thus occupied during the Civil war and so missed service in the Confederate army with his two brothers. After the war he engaged in agricultural pursuits and reared his family on a farm. His widow, Sallie E. (Cooper) Pickard, lives with her son, W. Ed Pickard, in Kaufman, Texas.

M. Dickard

She is a daughter of Robert Cooper, of Lewis county, Tennessee, a public officer and farmer. Her children are E. Josephine, widow of Rev. John King, of Kanf-Texas: Laura, deceased, was the wife of Monroe Wyrick; William Edward, whose name introduces this sketch; Mrs. Mary E. King, deceased; and Cora Lee, who died unmarried.

Ed Pickard, as he is familiarly known, seems to have made little progress financially back in the old state of Tennessee when he married, and he chose to start his career with a wife among strangers in Texas. When he reached Dallas, December 19, 1885, he found his cash resources amounting to $9.75. He fell in with "Parson'' Hughes at Dallas, who rented him land and "furnished him" entirely the first year. While he made a crop of thirty-five bales of cotton, fifteen hundred bushels of corn and some other grain, he had domestic misfortune. Death entered his home and claimed his wife, leaving him with an infant daughter. He began the second year with his widowed sister and family as his companions and had two teams and ample provision to carry himself through the season. Misfortune in the way of sickness now attacked him and kept him out of the field until nearly fall, but when the year's business was footed up he found himself master of the situation, and he remained on that farm another in 1888, Mr. Hughes came to Kaufman county and purchased a farm of twenty-five hundred acres, of which he placed Mr. Pickard in charge. By this time Mr. Pickard had become able to carry himself easily and he experienced a fair degree of independence. A few years later Mr. Hughes offered to sell out to Mr. Pickard, seeing that he was in a position to buy; but Mr. Pickard declined to pay the price, $15,000, for the two thousand five hundred acres, and continued to remain a tenant. He did a large amount of substantial improvement, paid $500 a year rent and the taxes on the farm and bought the premises after fourteen years for $40,000.

During the progress of the years of independence Mr Pickard improved his opportunity to speculate in land in Texas. He owns a ranch of thirty-five hundred acres in Toyah Valley and is interested with Spikes Brothers and W. A. Nash in a cattle ranch in King county. He cultivates eight hundred acres on his farm in Kaufman county, personally overseeing the work by telephone and automobile. He is a director of the First National Bank of Kaufman and of the same institution in Crandall, in both of which he owns stock, and he is a stockholder of several ice plants. His home in Kaufman is the old M. H. Cossett property which occupies an eminence north of the city proper and overlooks a vast stretch of country to the north,

Mr. Pickard has membership in the fraternal orders of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and his religious creed is that of the Methodist church,

His first marriage, which was in 1885, was to Miss Belle Beckum, a daughter of Robert Beckum. Maud, the little daughter she left, is now the wife of William Youngblook and resides on a Kaufman county farm. In January, 1907, Mr. Pickard married Miss Dixte Pickard, a daughter of G. N. Pickard, of Tennessee, and a distant relative of his. To them have been given two children, Polly and James E., of whom the latter died in May, 1913.

HALBERT C. RANDOLPH. A successful legist of Plainview, Halbert C. Randolph has been engaged in practice at this place since 1901, and is recognized as one of the leading members of his profession in Hale county, having attained high distinction in the line of his chosen calling. With strong intellectual endowments, laudable ambition and resolute purpose, he has achieved enviable success and has won the favorable criticism of his professional brethren as well as the confidence of the public. Halbert C. Randolph is a Texan, born in the city of Anstin, September 22, 1861, a son of Cyrus H. and Susan (Nowlin) Randolph. On the paternal side he is descended from English ancestors, the progenitor of the family in America being Peyton Randolph, of Virginia, a Revolutionary soldier and president of the first Colonial Congress organized after the declaration of separation. On the maternal side Mr. Randolph's forebears were early South Carolinians of Irish descent.

Cyrus H. Randolph was born in the southern part of Illinois, but when a child of three years was brought to Alabama by his parents, Jesse and Susanna (Halbert) Randolph. In that state he received his education and was reared to manhood, in 1838 coming to Texas. Five years later he joined the famous Snively Expedition, which crossed the plains on a secret journey for the Texas Government. Later Mr. Randolph, who was a lawyer by profession, became very active in political affairs. He served as sheriff of Houston county, was later elected county judge, and after serving four terms as representative of his district in the State Legislature, was elected state treasurer, an office he held during the Civil War period. His death occurred at Austin in September, 1889, when he was seventy-two years of age. He was married in Texas, in 1848, to Miss Susan Nowlin, daughter of P. W. Nowlin, born and reared in Missouri, who came to Texas in 1848. She passed away at Austin in September, 1911, when eighty-two years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Randolph were the parents of five children: P. D., who died in 1883; Judge J. C., whose death occurred in 1910; Miss Anna, a resident of Alvin, Texas; Halbert C.; and Miss Lulu, who also survives and makes her home at Alvin.

Halbert C. Randolph received his early education in Prof. Jacob Bickler's private academy at Austin, Texas, and graduated from the law department of the University of Texas in 1885. During this same year he was admitted to the bar, and at once entered upon the practice of his profession at Coleman, Texas, where he resided until 1901. In that year he came to Plainview, and here he has continued to pursue his profession, limiting himself to a civil practice. He devotes his entire attention to his profession and has no outside connections, and although long considered one of the leading lights of his vocation, and a man of scholarly ability and learning, he is, withal, one signally free from ostentation, and has never desired nor accepted public office. He has shown an interest in fraternal matters, being a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons, high priest and past high chief of the Royal Arch Chapter, and a member of the Knights Templar, and also stands high in Oddfellowship, being a past grand of that order. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and assists its members in forwarding movements for the benefit of his adopted community. His religious connection is with the Christian church, where he is a member of the board of directors and of the finance committee.

On August 23, 1887, Mr. Randolph was married first to Miss Lucille Beaumont, who was born in Washington county, Texas, daughter of G. H. Beaumont, an old settler of that county and highly esteemed citizen. Mrs. Randolph died in April, 1893, at Coleman, Texas, when but twenty-eight years of age, having been the mother of one son, Peyton B., born at Coleman, May 24, 1888, who is now associated with his father in the practice of law, the firm style being Randolph & Randolph. He was admitted to the bar in 1909, and is considered an attorney of promise. On June 5, 1895, Mr. Randolph was married at Coleman, to Miss Anna Blackburn, who was born in Texas, daughter of W. P. Blackburn, a pioneer of this state. One son has been born to this union, Leslie N., born May 15, 1902, at Plainview.

ELWIN H. HUMPHREYS. The career of Elwin H. Humphreys illustrates most forcibly the possibilities that are open to a young man who possesses sterling business qualifications. It proves that neither wealth nor social position, nor the assistance of influential friends at the outset of his catter, are at all necessary to place a young man upon the road to success. It also proves that ambitions perseverance, steadfastness of purpose and indefatigable industry, combined with sound business principles, will be rewarded, and that true success follows individual efforts only. Mr. Humphreys was born at Gilmer, Upshar county, Texas, June 17, 1872, and is a son of Benjamin T. and Elizabeth (Rogers) Humphreys.

Benjamin T. Humphreys was born in Alabama, and there was engaged in farming until the outbreak of the war between the states, when he enlisted for service in the Confederate army, in the ranks of which he fought valiantly throughout that struggle. He participated in numerous hard-fought engagements, but succeeded in going through the eutire war without heing wounded or captured. When peace was declared, he sought a new home in the growing Southwest, choosing Upshur county, Texas, as his field of endeavor, and being one of the organizers of that county. He engaged in stock raising and became fairly successful, and was well and favorably known among his fellow-citizens who elected him sheriff of his county for two terms. His politics were those of the Democratic party, and his religious faith that of the Baptist church. His death occurred when he was seventy years of age, in 1896, at Dallas. Mr. Humphreys married Elizabeth Rogers, who was born in Mississippi and came to Texas during the early sixties with her parents. She still survives her hus-band and is a resident of Dallas, being the mother of six children, of whom Elwin H. is the next to the oldest.

Elwin H. Humphreys was given but meager educational advantages, the greater part of his education having been obtained in the schools of hard work and experience, as he was but seven years of age when he commenced to make his own way in the world. At that tender age he secured a position as cash boy in the tender age ne secured a position as cash boy in the store of Sanger Brothers, at Dallas, Texas, his salary being at that time $2.50 per week. At the start he showed himself ambitious, faithful and quick to learn, and as his services were recognized and appreciated, he was promoted and given a larger salary. During the years that followed he went from position to position and from one establishment to another, always bettering himself, and applying himself conscientiously to his work, thus perfecting himself in every detail of the mercantile business, which he had chosen for his life work. Mr. Humphreys had ever been careful with his earnings, knowing well from personal experience the value of a dollar, and by the time he was twenty years of age he was able to realize his ambition of being the proprietor of an establishment of his own, opening a grocery at Colorado City, Texas. The young merchant met with success from the start, the excellence of his goods, his evident desire to please, and the progressive and original manner in which he placed his goods before the public, all combining to attract a large and paying trade. He continued to carry on this business at Colorado City for ten years, and then, receiving an advantageous offer, disposed of his interests there and came to Plainview. Here he became finan-cially interested in the Donohoo-Ware Hardware Company, where he was influential in increasing the capital from $20,000 to $100,000, and two and one-half vears later this business was incorporated. Since 1906 he has been secretary and treasurer of the firm, of which W. H. Fuqua, of Amarillo, is president. This is the largest business of its kind in this section of the state, employing eight salesman, and occupying a new and modern building, 75x120 feet, built especially for this enterprise, Mr. Humphreys' close attention to and sagacious management of this business, has insured its success, and he has become widely known and regarded with confidence as a man fair and honorable in his dealings and true to all obligations; a safe man, whose operations are reasonably sure to succeed. He has connections with a number of commercial enterprises and has invested heavily in land. Mr. Humphreys is a meuber of the Plainview Commercial Club, and his fraternal connections are with the Elks, the Woodmen of the World and the Pretorians.

In 1895 Mr. Humphreys was married at Colorado City, Texas, to Miss Jennie Rix, who was born in Wisconsin, daughter of J. L. Rix. Two children have come to them: Jennie Rix, born September 6, 1897, at Colorado City; and Elwin H., Jr., born June 18, 1910, at Plainview.

PIERCE P. LANGFORD. One of the men who has done a small and inconspicuous village to one of the leading commercial centers of the state is Pierce P. Langford, who has speut nearly thirty years in this locality, and from a clerk in a wholesale house has become prominent as an executive and official in half a dozen or more financial and business institutions.

Boru at Newberry, South Carolina, October 24, 1861, he was twenty-four years old when he came to Wichita Falls in 1885. His first position was as bookkeeper in the wholesale grocery house of Kemp, Stinnett & Mall, After four years with that firm his services were transferred to public office, when he was elected county treasurer of Wichita county. He was kept in that place by re-election for four successive terms of two years each. Then in 1898 he became identified with the City National Bank as cashier. From that time to the present he has been one of the best known bankers of North Texas. He acted as cashier of the City National from 1898 to 1911, and was then chosen vice president and director, an office which he still holds. Mr. Langford is a director in the First National Bank at Burkburnett, of the First State Bank of Electra, of the First State Bank at Newcastle, and also a stock holder and director in nine other banking institutions in Texas and Oklahoma. He is president of the Wichita Ice Company, which is one of the important local manufacturing institutions of Wichita Falls. He is a director in the Wichita Southern Life Insurance Company, in the Wichita Falls Investment Company, the Wichita Falls Bottle Manufacturing Company, and his name is connected in some capacity or other with many other important enterprises in this city.

The parents of this well known Wichita Falls business man were Asa and Sarah (Sawyer) Langford. The father was born in South Carolina, and before the war was a large land owner and possessed many slaves and was accounted one of the prosperous stockmen and planters of the vicinity. He was greatly impoverished by the war, and gave his life for the cause of the Confederacy. He enlisted and fought in many of the battles of Virginia, and died during the siege of Richmond at the age of forty-eight years. The mother was also born in South Carolina, was reared, educated and married in that state, and belonged to an old and dis-tinguished southern family. Her death occurred in South Carolina in 1898 at the age of seventy-one years. There were four sons and three daughters and Pierce P. was the youngest of the family. He never saw his father, who died away from home a year or two after the birth of this son. As a boy he attended the public schools of South Carolina, and also graduated from the Newberry College. Owing to the unsettled condition of the war times and the years following, and the losses it inflicted upon his family, he had to begin work when a very young boy, in order to help support the household, and has been a hard worker all his life. From such beginnings he has finally reached a position where he may be properly regarded as one of the leading men in influence and wealth in his section of the state.

Gro A, Webster

At Huntsville, Texas, October 17, 1907, Mr. Langford married Miss Lula Hyatt, a daughter of Major Ben and Elizabeth Hyatt. Her father was one of the well known early settlers of this section of Texas, entisted and made a gallant record in the Confederate army, and is now deceased, while his widow lives in Wichita Falls. The three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Langford are: Pierce P. Langford, Jr., born at Wichita Falls, August, 1908; Ben Langford, born in September, 1909; and Sarah Elizabeth, born in November, 1912.

CHARLES HOUSTON VEALE. The Veale family has been prominent in the Texas bar for many years. Judge Veale is one of the leading lawyers of Amarillo, and his son named at the beginning of this paragraph is now identified with the Floyd county bar, and one of its ablest junior members.

Charles Houston Veale was born in Breekenridge, Texas, October 3, 1888, a son of John W. Veale, for a number of years has been one of the leading members of the Potter county bar. Genge A. Werster, born at Lime, New Hamsshire, January II, 1845, was the second son of Daniel Noble Webster and a direct descendant of Hon. John Webster, who came to Hartford, Connecticut, with the first settlers, a member of the General Court in 1637, a Magistrate in 1639, Deputy Governor in 1655 and Governor of Connecticut in 1656. His father was a prominent merchant and banker of Conneaut, Ohio, and his boyhood days were spent there and at other points on Lake Erie until he callsted at Greenfield, Huron county, Ohio, August 15, 1862, as a boy soldier in the war between the north and the south. During the war he took part in nine hard fought battless and numerous skirmishes. He was taken prisoner at Winchester in June at the time of Milroy's defeat, and was placed in Libby prison but was later transferred to Belle Island. In July of the same year he was paroled. At Berryyille, Shenandon Valley, Virginia, September 3, 1864, he was again taken prisoner and was held until February or March of the following year, was at Lynchburg and Salsbury, North Carolina. He was sergeant of Company C, 123rd Ohio Voluteer Infantry, and at one time was given charge of his company, but his youth prevented him from being commissioned as captain. He was mustered out at Camp Chase, Ohio, June 12, 1865. He was a member of the Richard J. Oglesby Post, No. 6, G. A. R., of Dallas, Texas. His mother, Lois (Swain) Webster, was his father's second wife; she afterwards became the wife of G. C. Wright, and the last years of her life were spent at Norvalk, Ohio.

After the close of the Civil war Mr. Webster engaged in the insurance business at Alliance, Ohio, where he met Miss Mary Frances Garrison, a native of Ohio and the daughter of James W. and Amanda (Rhodes) Garrison, and in July, 1899, they were married at Pitts-burgh, Pennsylvania. Her father was an able writer and editor and for many years was a prominent publisher and well known and an active worker in the ranks of the republican party in Ohio, being a close friend of President McKinley and enjoying the distinction and honor of having nominated him for his first public

Mr. Webster's identification with Dallas and the Loan Star state began in 1875. He had sold his insurance business, and was then representing a very prominent company who were the large manufacturers of firearms and sewing machines in the east, when they sent him to Texas from St. Louis to represent them in this large territory where every one was supposed to own a six-shooter or some other kind of gun. afterwards passed laws prohibiting the carrying of pistols and as the merchants then stopped buying very large bills of such goods, Mr. Webster devoted his entire time to the sewing machine business for a number of years, having Texas and north Louisiana as his territory, with his headquarters at Dallas. Afterwards he embarked in the musical merchandise business together with sewing machine supplies, etc., but soon returned to the road, representing a St. Louis firm of manufacturers of jail cages or cells, with whom he was connected for fourteen years prior to his death. He died at Robert Lee, the county seat of Coke county, Texas, while on an important trip in the interest of that company, June 10, 1907, and was laid to rest in Oakland cemetery in Dallas. Texas, with Masonic houors, June 13, 1907

M. S., which office he had held for about twenty years.

To Mr. and Mrs. Webster were born six children, three sons and three daughters. Two of the sons are living, both married and have children. They are:
Daniel G., employed in the general offices of the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, and John L., a teller in the American Exchange National Bank. Edward Thomas, the third son, died in Waco, Texas, September 9, 1910, at the age of twenty-six years, having been married only three months. He was well known in insurance circles. The daughters are Fannie, Helen and Mary Esther and live with their mother at 1916 South Harwood street, Dallas, Texas.

An extract from the resolutions on the death of Mr.

Webster from Tannehill Lodge, No. 52, A. F. & A. M., will show the respect and esteem in which he was held: "None knew him but to love him. He always met his associates, no matter what the circumstances or conditions were, with a smile and a hearty handshake. He was a man broad and liberal in his ideas and without a selfish motive in his nature. He was without an enemy and was ever ready with his purse and council to assist and encourage those in need or in distress. In short, he measured up to the full standard of a man."

CLARENCE SMITH. Postmaster at Hereford, Clarence Smith has been a resident of this city since 1905, and was appointed to his present office towards the close of Roosevelt's administration. He is one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of Deaf Smith county, and his individual influence goes to support every movement and enterprise which may secure the greater welfare of this section of Texas.

Mr. Smith is a Missourian by birth, having been born in Mercer county, that state, November 22 His father was William Smith, a native of Putnam county, Indiana, whence he moved to Missouri in the spring of IS64. Grandfather Joseph Smith settled in Mercer county in IS54. The father was a farmer who enjoyed moderate success and prosperity and is now living in Dimmit, Castro county, Texas, still active at the age of seventy-three years. He still has a farm and is engaged in stock raising. He came to Texas in 1899. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the Christian church. The maiden name of the mother was Martha Jane Gardner, who was also born in Putnam county, Indiana, and died in 1897 in Mercer county, Missouri, when fifty-six years of age. The seven children are all living, Clarence Smith being the oldest.

As a boy he attended the public schools of his native county and until twenty-one years of age lived on the home farm. When he started out for himself, the first five years were spent in farming, after which he got into the milling business in Mercer county, and has been a miller or identified with that industry in some capacity for thirty-five years.

On January 31, 1905, Mr. Smith located at Hereford, and the first two and a half years were spent in the service of the Santa Fe Railroad Company. In July, 1907, he was appointed postmaster at Hereford, and has administered the office to the benefit of its patrons and local business for the past six years. Mr. Smith is one of the active Republicans of the Panhandle. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Yeomen, and is a member of the Methodist Church South. In Mercer county, Missouri, November 6, 1886, he married Miss Minnie Crew, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Jacob Crew. Their three children are: Leslie E., born in Mercer county; William J., born in Mercer county; and Ralph, also a native of the same county.

DAVID L. MCDONALD. The sight of four hundred wind mills in and about the town of Hereford, each one mills in and arout the town of Heretord, each one pumping water for domestic uses, led D. L. McDonald, about six years ago, to the conviction that what could be done on a small scale, such as a forty-foot garden patch, could be applied to a quarter section of land. The only requirement was to increase the power of the wind-driven machinery by several hundred times, and this could easily be done by installing large fuel consuming engines, and centrifugal pumps. Mr. McDonald saw all these facts during a temporary residence at Hereford and other parts of Texas, and in 1910 returned to put this plan in operation and has the distinction of having installed the first successful irrigating plant in the Texas Panhandle.

Mr. McDonald had his first well sunk on some land he owned two miles south of Hereford, and put in a centrifugal pump with a capacity of one thousand gallons of water per minute. All of Deaf Smith county, as well as a great portion of the entire Panhandle region, is underlaid, as those who have even a cursory knowledge of geological formations in northwest Texas understand, with what appears to be an inexhaustible supply of water bearing sand, and though hundreds of wells have been sunk since Mr. McDonald's initial enterprise in the vicinity of Hereford, many of which pump as much as eighteen hundred gallons per minute, this subterranean water supply has never been diminished or shown the slightest sign of failing. A result of all this is that hundreds of irrigated farms have now taken the place of the old drought-stricken area which was formerly subject to the inconstant seasons and irregular supply of natural rain falls. It is an interesting fact that Mr. McDonald's enterprise was first put into successful operation during a year which was considered one of the dryest and hottest in recent Texas history, and since the pumping plant went night and day with no diminution of water, is conclusive evidence that this sub-surface method of irrigation will prove permanently successful.

Mr. McDonald as the pioneer developer of irrigation farming in Deaf Smith county and the Panhandle has spent two or three very busy years in development work and promoting the success of his irrigation plans to the farming region about Hereford. He is a member of the Edwards-McDonald Company, composed of himself and Mr. Ed. B. Edwards. Mr. Edwards is president of the First State Bank & Trust Company of Hereford, and is a banker of wide experience and well known for his conservative judgment and action. This company controls large amounts of land about Hereford, and is installing as rapidly as possible irrigating plauts on every farm subdivision, these plants being constructed under the personal supervision of Mr. McDonald. The company guarantees results, every contract of sale having a clause which guarantees delivery of enough water to irrigate every acre of the soil, otherwise the purchaser need not pay. The firm is interested in banking, farming, real estate and general development work and has done much to build up a community of homes in the rich and productive country about Hereford.

David L. McDonald, who started out in life with no resources to speak of, and made his way by relying upon his resourcefulness and ability to encounter every propo-Pennsylvania, at the town of Concord, November 26, 1872. His father, David L. McDonald, was born in Pennsylvania, and was a physician and surgeon by profession. He also served in the Civil war as a member of Company I of the Forty-Ninth Pennsylvania Infantry. His death occurred in Pennsylvania in 1900 at the age of sixty-seven. The mother was Margaret Robertson, born in Pennsylvania, and now a resident of Philadelphia. There were five children, of whom David L.

He received a public school education at Greencastle up to the time he was seventeen and on leaving school learned the business of pharmacist, and for ten years was engaged in the drug trade. As already stated, he first came to Texas some six or seven years ago, and in May, 1910, located permanently at Hereford, where he has since been in the real estate and irrigation development business. Since the beginning he has placed water on more than five thousand acres of land, all within a few miles of Hereford, and in time he plans to irrigate two hundred thousand acres. He owns a thousand acres of farming land of his own, and produces mixed crops every season.

He is a Democrat in politics, and is a member of the Lutheran church. On December 12, 1900, at Van Wert, Ohio, he married Miss Anna K. Rupright, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of John Rupright. Three children have been born to their marriage, namely: Mary. David and John, all of whom were born in Ohio.

ANDREW JACKSON LUSCOME. Cashier of the Western National Bank at Herectord, Mr. Lipscomb has been identified with this section of the Panhandle for a number of years as a rancher and as a cattle raiser in Deaf Smith county, and more recently has taken an active part in financial and husteness affairs at Hereford.

Andrew Jackson Lipscomb was born in Wood county, Texas, March 29, 1866, and the family was among the pioneers of that county. His paternal ancestors came from England and settled in the colony prior to the Revolutionary war and one or more members of the family served with the Virginia troops in that and other early wars of the nation. The maternal ancestors were of Irish stock, and among the early settlers of Georgia.

David Thomas Lipscomb, father of the Hereford banker, was born in Georgia, and came to Texas with his wife and two sons in 1847, locating in Wood county. He was a prominent farmer and stock raiser in the early days and built up through honest labor and good management an estate which was one of the largest in that section. It is said that he cleared more land than any other resident of Wood county, having opened and put in cultivation fifteen hundred acres. Before the war he operated this plantation with the aid of a large number of slaves and more cotton, grain and stock was produced on his farm than by any other individual in the county. During the Civil war he en-listed under Captain Dick Hubbard, and spent three years in the service, being flag-bearer during the last two years. His death occurred January 1, 1904, at the age of seventy-six. He was a Democrat in politics and very active in civic affairs. His church was the Baptist. He married Mary Garrett, who was born in Georgia, and they were married in that state in 1856. In crossing the country to Texas they drove teams of oxen and horses, making the trip in true pioneer fashion. The mother is now living at the good old age of seventy-nine, hale and hearty, her home being at the old place in Wood county. Four sons and four daughters blessed their union and four sons and one daughter are still living. Andrew J. was one of twin brothers, the other being Charles Day.

He received his early education in the schools of Wood county and supplemented that training with a course in the National Normal University of Lebanon, Ohio, and also one year in college in Hunt county, Texas. His early life, aside from his schooling, was spent on a farm, and at the age of twenty-one he began teaching, following that vocation in Wood county for three years. During one year of this time he was president of the Board of Examiners. In March, 1890, Mr. Lipscomb came out to the Panhandle country, at a time when settlement was very sparse and no development had occurred, except in the ranching and stock raising business. He located in Deaf Smith county, where he acquired a large range for his cattle, and operated as acquired a large range for his cattle, and operated as a stockman on a large scale. He at one time had eight sections of land in his pastures, and ran about five hundred head of stock. After some years he sold out his stock interests and ranch and moved into Hereford, since which time he has been one of the most active factors in business and banking. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank, of which he was a stock holder and director. He also established a coal, grain and lumber business, remaining in the latter branch of trade for two years. After that he invested and took considerable part in the management of the Hereford Mercantile Company, and was with that business until 1908. His interests then became allied with the Western National Bank, and a year later he was made cashier of this bank, an office which he has held to the present time, and he is practical manager of the institution, which is one of the strongest in the Panhandle.

Although he has never filled an office and sought no public distinction, Mr. Lipscomb is one of the active workers in the Democratic ranks in his home district. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order, including the Royal Arch Chapter and also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias. He is an elder and treasurer of the First Presbyterian church of Hereford.

Mr. Lipscomb was first married in Wood county to Miss Alice B. Greer, who was born in Texas, a daughter of Walter Greer, who during his youth had been a companion and close friend of Mr. Lipscomb's father, and who also served in the Civil war. Walter Greer took up his residence in Texas and died soon after the war. Mrs. Lipscomb passed away August 18, 1897, in Deaf Smith county, while living on a ranch about five miles northwest of Hereford. The three sons of their marriage were: Walter David, who died at the age of two years; James R., born in Wood county; and William Andrew, also a native of Wood county. The second marriage of Mr. Lipscomb occurred July 17, 1907, to Miss Alma Carlock, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of E. W. Carlock.

HAYMON KEUPP. A business career of unusual success and achievements has been that of Haymon Krupp, now proprietor of an extensive wholesate merchandise business in El Paso. When little more than a boy and with only two years' experience in an American store, Mr. Krupp came to El Paso in 1890 and six months after his arrival had established a retail store. He was a business builder from the start, acquired a first class trade, and in a short time had two establishments in prosperous operation. With the expansion of the business in 1910 he finally turned his attention to exclusive wholesale lines, and now handles a complete line of men's goods, clothing, hats, shoes, notions, and has a trade extending to retail stores throughout west Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and old Mexico.

Haymon Krupp was born in Russia March 14, 1875, the youngest of fourteen children born to Abraham and Malcho Krupp. Of the large family of children, five are now living in the United States, and three in Europe. Mr. Krupp attained his early education in the public schools of Russia, and at the age of fifteen crossed the Atlantic to New York City, where he remained for two years, and clerked in a mcreantile house in that city. At the conclusion of that experience he came to El Paso where he has been a resident ever since.

In New York City, April 11, 1899, Mr. Krupp married Miss Leah Silverman, daughter of P. Silverman of New York City. Their three children are Birdie, Bernhard and Paula. Mr. Krupp is affiliated with Masonry from the Blue Lodge to the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite, including the Mystic Shrine, is also a member of the Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of Maceahees, and other social and fraternal organizations. He is independent in politics, takes an eative interest in civic affairs, and it is his belief that every man owes a duty to his country to the extent of easting a well reasoned vote. He has several times refused official honors. Mr. Krupp says that he is well and states, but to his mind Texas fills more desires

Pattillo Higgins. It will hardly be disputed that no industry in recent years has wrought so munificently in the best interests of the great state of Texas along lines of development as has the oil industry of the different proven oil fields of the state. Developments in such fields as have thus far been exploited successfully have brought millions of dollars into the state, created a multitude of new industries and attracted the attention of the world at large to this hitherto scarce known portion of the country. When new industries are brought into being, among those men who gain prom-inence and fortune in the enterprise one man will usually be found who, by reason of the nature of his activities and of his relation to the enterprise, will inevitably stand forth as the human agency most responsible for the success of the project. It is here that Pattillo Higgins enters as the original locator and discoverer of the great Beaumont oil field, the development of which soon led to the exploiting of other petroleum fields in the state, and he stands today as the accredited pioneer in the industry and as one whose word is indisputable authority when the merits and demerits of any particular suspected oil field is up for consideration.

Mr. Higgins might well be termed the Wizard of the Wells, for he has, according to all accredited reports, never yet failed in his prognostication concerning the success or failure of any projected oil enterprise whereon his opinion has been given, despite the unhappy fact that his endeavors to open the Beaumont field was for years retarded by the opinions of geological experts who brought to bear their scientific knowledge in contradiction to the less accredited but more accurate knowledge of a student of signs in Nature. For Mr. Higgins for years devoted his time to the study of surface conditions of the Beaumont field and when he attempted to open the field be knew to a certainty what would be found as a result of his work.

In a most interesting and altogether comprehensive little brochure published under the title, "History of Oil in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana," Mr. Higgins has stated facts that are incontrovertible in the light of the miraculous developments in oil in recent years. He may with all propriety be quoted briefly from this little booklet, and the following sentences are offered as giving some light upon the methods and ideas of the man in his capacity as devel-oper and exploiter. He says in part: "With me the oil business has been second nature by reason of my close association with it for many years, or since the opening of the Great Gusher pool at Beaumont. For that reason I feel competent to advance any theory I may have relative to the location of oil pools in undeveloped sections. I began at the bottom, picking up stray indications of nature here and there, and baving seen them demonstrated time and again, I believe I am in a position to know, and that is the reason why I have the hardibood to submit to the public this history of oil development in the Gulf Coast Country.

"I have been one of the closest observers of this development. In fact, I have always been with the advance guard of pioneers and I know that no element of chance need enter into the development of the future great oil fields.

"This story of the oil discoveries is not intended to show the statistical side of the production, but is intended to prove that every field brought in or every condition encountered in past years only went to substantiate my theory-the theory that has since become a science-that there are surface indications of all great pools of oil. This I have contended for years. The theories I have advanced have not been received with open arms and I have been forced to prove them at my own expense, but they have been proved, nevertheless. I have surmounted every obstacle and made it patent to men who know something of the oil business that there is a real, true science in locating oil fields. My record in the greatest fields in the Gulf Coast Country is incontrovertible evidence in support of my theories as to surface indications."

And indeed, Mr. Higgins' record has been one of which he may well be proud. For the movements he has set in in the development of the Gulf Coast Oil Country of Texas and Louisiana have been productive of enormous wealth and revived all classes of industry in the entire southwest. Prior to the discovery of oil in the Gulf Coast Country practically all manner of business was at a standstill. The discoveries attendant upon Mr. Higgins' activities have so advertised this section that millions of dollars have poured into the state for investment in all spheres of legitimate business activity. Many of these millions have been spent in the excellent work of building, equipping and standardizing railroads, as well as in erecting for them suitable and necessary depots, stations, office buildings and shops. New banks and trust companies have entered the field, well organized and with splendid backing, and those already existing have so far increased their capitalization as to permit them to keep pace with the tremendous financial progress of the day. Building and construction companies of every order have made rapid strides forward and the many substantial skyscrapers of both Houston and Beaumont bear eloquent testimony to the profits made in oil in the past ten years. All classes of lands have increased in value as the various oil fields have been developed and agriculture has received such an impetus as was never before known in this section,

The coming of oil brought in the day of the million dollar concern in Texas, where prior to that time the company that had a capital of a hundred thousand dollars was indeed a rarity. Millions have been expended in the oil fields in the building of oil refineries and pipe lines and the capital of even the smaller oil companies will aggregate millions. Enormous civic improvements, county roads and immense drainage projects that have been successfully consummated in recent years may all be attributed directly to the advancement and activity subsequent to the development of the oil fields of Texas. And it is the belief and opinion of such men as Pattillo Higgins that the industry in this state is yet in its infancy.

In his booklet, "The History of Oil," Mr. Higgins sets forth his reasons for carrying his investigations into any specified field in search of oil. He claims that there are ever existant on the surface of any productive field four infallible signs that will warrant any expenditure in the opening up of that field, for the results will be sure and unfailing. He claims that these signs have been present in every Texas oil field thus far, and that he has detected them in many tracts of land as yet unsuspected, but destined to yield up their wealth when the time comes. The presence of these infallible signs induced his untiring efforts to open up the Beaumont fields, with what results the whole world is today more or less cognizant.

It was on August 24, 1892, that Mr. Higgins definitely engaged in the oil business, though he had devoted much of his time to the study of conditions in the Beaumont field before he made any open move along lines of development. At that time he organized the Gladys City Oil, Gas and Manufacturing Company at Beaumont, under the laws of the state, with an authorized capital stock of $200,000. This was the first oil company incorporated in the state of Texas-a fact worthy of mention in the light of subsequent developments. It was the intention of Mr. Higgins to interest a goodly number of responsible Beaumont men in the enterprise in order to raise ample funds for the purpose of puchasing desirable lands and making needed improvements. He met with the usual disappointment of the man who, without capital of his own, endeavors to enlist the sympathies of men of means in an enterprise that has not yet been proven, and the result was that only a comparative few of those solicited could be induced to come in with him. It is significant of the lack of doubt that was in Mr. Higgins' mind as to the ultimate success of the enterprise that he was in no wise discouraged at the lack of enthusiasm he met, but weut ahead with the work with the means he was able to command. Much of the failure he experienced in gaining the ear of the investing public resulted from the interference of the State Geological Department, who on hearing of the enterprise sent one of its experts to investigate the field. His report was distinctly adverse and newspaper articles over his signature did not tend to stimulate faith in Mr. Higgins and his work. The first well contractor he secured threw up the work after failure to encounter oil at three hundred feet, but Mr. Higgins finally succeeded in making a contract with Captain A. F. Lucas to enter the field, and the work was begun in genuine earnest in 1900, and on January 10, 1901, the first of the Texas oil gushers, later known as the Lucas well, was brought

In 1901 Mr. Higgins organized the Higgins Oil and Fuel Company, operating at Beaumont, and in 1911 he organized the Gulf Coast Oil Company of Houston, of which he is president and general manager. This company is now developing new fields in Texas and controls lands that have hitherto been unsuspected of hidden wealth of this nature but which will, if Mr. Higgins' prophecy does not fail, produce many more millions to the people of Texas. In the light of past and present successes, it would seem that there is no great danger that his premises of profitable development of these lands should not materialize.

Mr. Higgins is an undoubted authority on the subject of oil, and in his History of Oil a number of pages are devoted to an intensely interesting article entitled "The Great Basin, and How Oil Was Formed in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana." In this article he has combined a knowledge of what he terms "text-book science" with the observations of a naturally scientific mind after years of close and careful study of surface and other indications, and the result is most interesting and convincing. Certain it is that he has employed his knowledge to excellent purpose and to the undying good of the state in the last decade, with promise of much more to follow along similar lines.

Concerning the birth and parentage of Mr. Higgins, it may be said that he was born in Beaumont, Texas, in 1863, and he is the son of Richard J. and Sarah (Ray) Higgins. His father was a mechanic by trade, who came to Texas from Georgia in the year 1858 and settled at Sabine Pass. Later he moved to Beaumont, and there he died in 1891. The mother of Mr. Higgins lived until 1905, and witnessed the first years of her son's phenomenal success.

As a boy Mr. Higgins enjoyed but a meagre season of schooling and when a mere youth went to work for a sawmill company. In 1884 he engaged independ-ently in the timber business, and it was while thus engaged that he began to develop an interest in geology as applied to conditions in his district. For some years he devoted his every spare moment to the study of petroleum, oil and gas and all surface indications thereof, so that when he entered definitely into the oil enterprise he did so well equipped as a result of his study of the subject, bringing to bear the wisdom of a scientist with the skill of a mechanic upon his activities in development work.

The development work now under way by Mr. Higgins and his company is highly endorsed by men of unimpeachable standing in Beaumont and Houston, and he has in his possession a number of letters bearing testimony to his standing and responsibility as an oil expert by men who are of most excellent standing in financial and industrial circles in the south. Among them might be mentioned J. S. Rice, president Union National Bank of Houston; S. F. Carter, president Lumberman's National Bank of Houston; Sam Park, president American Lumber Company of Houston; H. P. Attwater, indus-trial agent, the Sunset Route, of Houston; Daniel E.

Garrett, Congressman at large for Texas, of Houston; B. B. Gilmer, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Houston; W. G. Van Vleck, vice president and general manager Sunset-Central Lines, of Houston; W. S. Davidson, president First National Bank of Beaumont; B. R. Norvell, president American National Bank of Beaumont; and E. A. Fletcher, mayor of Beaumont.

The press of Texas has not withheld its meed of recognition and appreciation of the activities of Mr. Higgins in the oil fields and he is everywhere accredited by the press as the originator and founder of the present enterprise in oil.

Mr. Higgins has compiled an interesting little assortment of press clippings relative to the oil enterprise in Texas and Louisiana, with dates under which they appeared in the various publications of Houston, Beaumont and other representative cities and many of them are of especial interest in their mention of him and his work. One of them appears under the heading of "Pattillo Higgins Views" in the February 2nd issue of the Beaumont Daily Journal, and is here offered in part as a comprehensive and pertinent commentary upon the standing of the man in oil circles of the state: "Pattillo Higgins, the well known oil man of Houston, spent yesterday in the city. Mr. Higgins states that his drilling operations in the Hockley field are progressing satisfactorily, and he is arranging to sink two new wells in the field. Mr. Higgins has the utmost confidence in his ability to bring in a good field at Hockley and he proposes to stay with the drilling until he has accomplished this result.

"Mr. Higgins differs from the opinion of Mr. C. H. Markham, general manager of the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company, contained in an interview recently given out by Mr. Markham at San Antonio, that the oil fields of Texas were gradually playing out, and that a durable production was no longer expected. In combating this opinion Mr. Higgius said: 'Texas is only in its infancy in the oil business. Many large gushers will be developed in the coast country of Texas, and some of the new fields will surpass any that have so far been developed, and will surprise the world. In my opinion, other sections of the state will be developed into great paying oil fields at some future day,

"There is no reason for consumers of crude oil to fear the fuel problem. Nature has put great quantities rear the fuel problem. Nature has put great quantities of fuel right at our doors and the supply will not be exhausted. This will insure a perennial supply of oil at much lower prices than are now being paid.

"'Mr. Higgins, it will be remembered, was the first to forecast the existence of the great oil pools in the coast country of Texas, and his predictions were ridiculed at the time by wise men and oil experts, the latter making positive statements that oil could not exist in the deposits and formation of the coast country of Texas. Mr. Higgins has devoted his life to the quest of oil fields and in the face of conditions and obstacles which would have discouraged the average man, he has continued to test his theories. He says that Texas is peculiarly favored and that enormous wealth exists in the bowels of the earth in the form of oil fields, which time and enterprise will bring to light."

It is worthy of mention, in the light of the foregoing statements appearing in the press as long ago as the year 1907, that since the appearance of this article five enormously rich and productive oil fields have been brought in, four of them being in Texas and one in Louisiana, and most of which Mr. Higgins foretold the existence of and aided in their development. In the face of such a record, it is small wonder that Mr. Higgins enjoys so solid a reputation in reputable circles of his native state, and the state is distinctly to be congratulated on the possession of a man who had the foresight and knowledge of nature to bring into being the present industrial conditions that have resulted from his activities in his chosen field.

Mr. Higgins, who resides at 2208 Crawford street. was married in 1906 to Miss Annie Higgins, of Houston, and to them have been born two children-Gladys Higgins and Pattillo Higgins, Jr. He and his wife are members of the Baptist church.

DAVID R. GASS. The men who give of their energy, skill, ambitious vigor and enthusiasm to the building up of a community are the benefactors of humanity, and their names cannot be held in too high esteem. In every undertaking which is to prove successful there must be a logical beginning, and the man who lays the foundations of what afterwards may become a large and flourishing city, must have the courage of his convictions, and an unlimited faith in the future of the location which he selects as the scene of his endeavors. David R. Gass, on first coming to Northwest-ern Texas, was a man whose keen mind and boundless enthusiasm allowed him to look far beyond the narrow horizon of his day and to easily read the signs of a dawning tomorrow. To him belongs the honor of being one of the founders of the city of Hereford, for some years known also as Blue Water, and the results of his planning, his sacrifices and his work of development live today and will as long as civilization lasts, for he built upon the solid foundation of merit, honesty and faith in humanity. He is still engaged in business here, and occupies the first store built in the city.

Mr. Gass is a Texan and was born in Collin county, September 15, 1848, a son of John M. and Sarah Jane Gass. His father, a native of Tennessee, came to Texas in 1844 and settled on a ranch in Collin county, where be became a leading stockman. Subsequently he opened the first store at Millwood, but sold his interests in that enterprise about 1851 and erected the first meal treadmill in the state of Texas, continuing to operate this until 1856. Shortly thereafter, in his forty-first year, he passed away. Mr. Gass was the first commissioner of Collin county, and was a man widely and favorably known. He was married in Collin county, his wife having come to Texas with her parents, and she survived him until 1906, when she died in her seventy-fifth year. They became the parents of two children, of whom

David R. was the elder.

David R. Gass received his preliminary education in the little primitive log schoolhouse in the vicinity of his birthplace in Collin county, and later supplemented this by attendance at the high school. He remained with his mother until he attained his majority. He then married and farmed on his own account for fourteen years in Rockwall county. In 1882 he entered the mercantile business and conducted a store there until September, 1885, then going to Haskell, Texas, where he continued in the same line for the following seven years. December, 1892, found him established in business at Hale Center, Texas, but one year later he went to Tulia, and in 1898 he came to Hereford and erected the first store at this place, being engaged in general merchandise, but afterwards he split up the business and sold the hardware department, also the grocery department, con-tinuing the dry goods, in which business he took his son into partnership. During the fifteen years that he has resided at Hereford, Mr. Gass has seen the little hamlet grow and develop into a flourishing, prosperous city, the center of large commercial interests, an enlightened, educated community, and the home of good citizenship. He has devoted himself energetically to advancing its interests along every line, and has erected many of the buildings here, a number of which he owns. No movement for progress has been complete until it has had his name on its list of supporters, and he has withheld his co-operation from no beneficial enterprise. His success in life may be accredited to his own efforts, for when he embarked upon his career he was a poor boy, without influential friends or monetary influence.

On July 1, 1869, Mr. Gass was married to Miss Emma

McReynolds, a native of Collin county, Texas, daughter of J. M. McReynolds, a pioneer of the Lone Star state. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gass, namely: Charles, born July 21, 1870, in Rockwall county, a business man and banker at St. Joe, Texas, coliny, a 005-ness man and banker at Nr. Jove, Leans, and the father of three children; Claude L., born October 25, 1873, in Rockwall county, cashier of the First State Bank of Ringgold. Texas, and the father of one child; Nester E., born February 9, 1877, in Rockwall, now associated in business with his father at Hereford; Mrs. Beulah Hutchinson, born June 15, 1881, at Tulia, Texas, wife of a prominent stockman and the mother of Texas, which is a profile to state and the most three children, still living at Tulia; Mrs. Brissy Mc-Intyre, twin of Beulah, born June 15, 1881, at Tulia, now the wife of a well-known druggist of Canyon, and the mother of one child; Mrs. Ima Anthony, born September 1, 1886, at Haskell, Texas, the wife of a druggist of Canyon and the mother of one child; Miss Dipple, born July 29, 1892, at Haskell; and Miss Mabel, born February 1, 1895. Mr. Gass is a Democrat in his political views, but has had no aspirations for public

RICHARD COKE HOPPING. The career of Richard Coke Hopping, sheriff of Parmer county, Texas, has been one replete with experiences of an interesting, and sometimes hazardous, nature, with obstacles overcome and barriers of discouragement surmounted. He was left an orphan at a tender age, and his boyhood struggles were hard and unceasing, but he never lost courage and his persistent efforts have finally brought him a wellmerited success. Richard Coke Hopping was born August 20, 1875, at Granbury, Texas, and is a son of Wray and Susan (Nutt) Hopping, natives of Alabama. His father, a well-known Southern planter, came to Texas at an early period and engaged in farming, especially cotton raising. He later left home and has not been heard from for fifteen years, but if still alive would be in the vicinity of seventy-five years of age. His wife in the vicinity or seventy-ne years of age. His wife died at Granbury, in 1878, aged thirty-eight years. Of their three children, Richard C. was the youngest. Richard Coke Hopping was but three years of age when his mother died, and at that time he became a ward of an uncle, Jacob Nutt, with whom he made his home at Granbury. There he spent his school days, his work of the farm from the time he was large enough to reach the plow-handles. When his education was completed he began farming and cattle raising for Mr. Nutt, but in 1901 went to Portales, New Mexico, and for five years was engaged in the cattle business on his own account, but in 1906 disposed of his interests there and came to Parmer county. Here he has since been the owner of a fine ranch and is known as one of the leading stockmen of his district. He is a member of the Panhandle Stock Raisers Association, of which he has been inspector during the past two years, and has devoted himself assiduously to furthering the interests of this influential and progressive body. A Democrat in politics, Mr. Hopping has ever labored faithfully in the ranks of his party, and in 1910, when a strong man was needed to make the race for the office of sheriff, Mr. Hopping was the choice of his party and his sub-sequent election left no doubt as to his popularity. He received the re-election in 1912, and has continued to discharge the duties of his office in an able and efficient manner. He has been called upon at times to officiate in his official capacity on occasions when he was forced to display a high order of courage, tact and discretion, and at no time has be failed to vindicate the confidence placed in him. He belongs to the Masonic Blue Lodge at Farwell, and is also a member of the Baptist Church.

On January 15, 1892, Mr. Hopping was married in Hood county, Texas, to Miss Lelia Jones, daughter of the late Luke Jones, but reared in the family of John R. Jones, a well-known pioneer of Hood county. Seven children were born to this union: La Verna, born in December, 1894, at Granbury, Texas; Flora Best, born in 1997, at Granbury, and now attending school at Milford, Texas; Jacob, born in 1900, at Granbury, and now attending school at Farwell; Earl, born in 1903, at Portales, New Mexico, and now attending school at Farwell; Sidney, born in 1906, at Texico, New Mexico, also a student in the Farwell public schools; Lillian, born in 1908, at Farwell; and Pattie, the baby, born at this place in 1911.

B. E. Nobles. Among the commercial houses of Parmer county which have added to the business prestige of this section of the Lone Star state, that of B. E. Nobles & Son Grocery Company, of Farwell and Texico, holds prominent place. The founder of this business, B. E. Nobles, is widely known in Texas, belonging to that class of self-made men who value their success all the more because it has been self-gained. His business operations extend over a wide area, and have brought him into contact with a great number of people, repre-senting all spheres and conditions of Western pioneer life. Fertile in resources, the reverses with which he has met from time to time have proved but temporary embarrassments, and every new undertaking has been prosecuted with a zeal and energy which has merited, and usually attained, success,

Mr. Nobles was born in Henderson county, Tennessee, January 20, 1859, and is a son of W. A. and Elizabeth P. (Mann) Nobles. His parents, natives of Tennessee, were married in that state, and prior to the Civil war Mr. Nobles was one of the well-known plauters of Henderson county. When the struggle between the North and the South broke out, he enlisted in the Confederate service and met a soldier's death at the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, in 1864, being but thirty-seven years of age. His widow survived him for a long period, passing away in 1904, when eighty-four years of age, having been the mother of five sons and one daughter, B. E. being the fifth child in order of birth.

B. E. Nobles attended college at Spring Creek, Tennessee, but left that institution prior to his graduation and returned to his mother's home, where he remained until his nineteenth year. At that time, in 1878, he came to Texas and first settled in Kaufman county, where he was engaged in farming for three years. He then made removal to Lamar county, and there established himself in the mercantile business, remaining there until 1907. At that time he came to Farwell and established the firm of B. E. Nobles & Son Grocery Company, which has continued to carry on business under the same firm style to the present time. Starting in a small way, it has been gradually developed into the largest business of its kind in Farwell and Texico, and the management of this enterprise has left Mr. Nobles with little time for other pursuits. He has given his thought and attention to his business, but has found leisure to discharge the duties of citizenship, being at this time a member of the board of county commissioners, and under this administration numerous improvements have been made, including the building of roads from the Mexico line to the end of Parmer county. He has found time, also, to indulge in the social intercourse and charitable work of the Masonic order, in which he has passed all the chairs in the Blue Lodge and is now a member of the Chapter and also holds membership in the Woodmen of the World in Lamar county. He has also been active in the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Farwell, where he has served for some time as superintendent of the Sunday school.

Mr. Nobles was married first in Kaufman county,

Texas, October 20, 1881, to Miss Mattie E. Daniel, who was born in that county, daughter of Dr. T. J. Daniel, and she died in October, 1885, having been the mother of two children-Lola E., who was born in 1882 in Kaufman county, and now resides at Deport, Lamar county, and J. O., born in 1884, in Kaufman county. county, and J. O., born in 1884, in Kautima county, and now a member of the wholesale house of Nobles Brothers, at Dalhart, Texas. In May, 1887, Mr. Nobles was married in Lamar county, to Mary Josephine Baught, daughter of G. C. Baught, of Tennessee, now a well-known research of the county of th Miss Estelle, born in 1894, in Lamar county, and now a resident of Farwell.

JOHN M. DORRANCE. There are few men in the country who have had a longer and more diversified experience as cotton buyers than John M. Dorrance, head of the firm of Dorrance & Company, cotton exporters at Houston. Mr. Dorrance got his first experience as a cotton buyer nearly fifty years ago, when a boy of about fourteen. There have been very few interruptions to his continuous identification with that line of business since 1866. During a residence at Houston of more than twenty years Mr. Dorrance has extended his activities and influence beyond the strict lines of his private business, and has associated himself influentially with many concerns and movements which are of a public or semi-public nature.

A New Englander by birth, John M. Dorrance was born at Webster, Massachusetts, in 1852, a son of George W. and Eliza (Bartello) Dorrance. His father held the rank of chaplain in the United States Navy and saw service throughout the Civil war. His death occurred in 1887. The mother was a native of Washington, D. C. After a common school education, John M. Dorrance started to work at the age of fourteen in the cotton business with the firm of R. T. Wilson & Company of New York City. Later Murchison & Company of New York City sent him as their representative to Raleigh, North Carolina, and he later located for the same company at Greenville, South Carolina. His work continued in South Carolina up to 1880, when he was compelled to resign on account of ill health, and since then his home has been in the middle west and southwest. He lived at St. Louis until 1884 and in that year first came to Houston, Texas. After a short time he went to Bryan and had his headquarters as a cotton buyer in that city until 1890. Since the latter year his home has been in Houston, and most of his business activities are centered in this city. There are numerous other concerns and organizations which might be mentioned as having profited by the relations of Mr. Dorrance with them. HON. JAMES O. LUEY. San Diego, Texas, has no more highly esteemed citizen than the Hon. James O. Luby, ex-county judge of Daval county, who first came to Texas as a solider in the Confederate ranks. To the gent struggle between the south and the north the state all ranks of life—men who in all probability would have rounded out their enterers in other sections of the country, but whom the fortunes of war caused to seek ewe fields in which to recuperate their losses and to begin again lives that had been all but shattered in the support of the "lost cause." Here in the new and developing southwest they gathered together the broken threads of life and gallantly fought the battles of peace, eventually forgetting the misfortunes of the past in the successes of the present. Judge Luby identified himself with one of the counties of Texas which at the time was in the isolated borderland of south Texas, and performed a valuable individual share in the development which has since brought buval material wealth and substantial civil

PAIL WHITFIELD HORN. Probably no educator of Texas has more nearly realized the ideals of civic leadership than Professor Horn, the superintendent of the Houston public school system. Professor Horn is a teacher with many years of successful experience in the practical duties of the school room. Since 1904 he has made a splendid record in building up and developing the Houston system of public schools, and that the local school system has ranked and excelled any of the Southern cities is chiefly due to Professor Horn's superior ability as a manager and director. Aside from this work directly counceted with his profession, however, Professor Horn has been almost equally well known as a citizen of Houston, one of the leaders whose influence and counsel are considered necessary in all the larger community undertakings, and whose name properly belongs in that group of public spirited men and women who have done most to create and develop the larger and fuller life of this city.

WILLIS T. BISHOP. Now filling the office of mayor of San Angelo, Willis T. Bishop is one of the most popular and at the same time one of the most successful business men of that city. His home has been in San Angelo for many years; every one in the city pays him the tribute of esteem, and it is in recognition of his ability as a citizen that he was given the present office. The reputation for honesty and fair dealing which Mr. Bishop has attained as a business man has been further strengthened since his advent into public life. He realizes what it means to be a servant of the people and his ideal is not to serve one party or section of the community, but the whole body.

Willis T. Bishop, who is of Scotch and English descent, was born at Griffin, Georgia, on May 27, 1859. His father was Willis M. Bishop, a native of Georgia, and who before the war was a large planter, and also operated a mercantile business at Griffin. With the outbreak of the war between the states he enlisted in the Confederate army, became captain of a company and saw active service during the struggle between the North and the South. He participated in many important engagements, and finally met his death on the fifth of the 'Seven Day' battles near Richmond. That was the 25th of June, 1862, which marked the beginning of a series of disasters which finally drove the armies of McClellan and Halleck completely out of northern Virginia with the second battle of Manassas.

Willis M. Bishop married Eliza Steagall, a daughter of Rev. Ivey F. Steagall, a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who worked and preached in Georgia, and was presiding elder for a number of years. Mrs. Bishop, after the death of her hus-band, continued to live in Georgia a number of years, and in 1870 moved to Texas, where she had her home until her death in 1884 at Henderson. She was the

was the mother of three children, two of whom are still living.

Willis T. Bishop was a small boy when his mother moved to Texas, and his education was largely obtained in the latter state. The public schools afforded him the fundamentals, and when old enough to enter college he matriculated at Tulane University, in New Orleans. After studying there during 1888-9, he de-termined to leave his books and get into business for himself. His first venture was as a druggist, and he located in San Angelo in 1890 in that capacity. His health began to fail and caused him to sell his business in 1893, but later he resumed his relations with the business community as a general merchant. In that business he has continued up to the present time and has been very successful.

The political career of Mr. Bishop began in 1906, when he was elected a member of the city council of San Angelo. He served as such during 1906-07, and, when elected mayor in April, 1912, he entered upon the duties of that office with considerable practical experience in municipal government. He is now filling the executive chair to the entire satisfaction of those who placed him in office. Mr. Bishop is a member of the Democratic party and has taken much interest in party affairs and gives his services wherever they are needed. He affiliates with the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen of the World. His church is the Baptist, and for about ten years he

on October 29, 1884, Mr. Bishop and Miss Jennie Birdwell were married. Mrs Bishop is a daughter of Colonel Allen and Jane Birdwell, of Mt. Enterprise, Texas. Colonel Birdwell was a large landed proprietor in the days before the war, and a prominent citizen, representing his district in the legislature for several terms, and a man whose name was known much beyond the limits of his home locality. He died in 1893 at the good old age of ninety-two. His wife also lived to old age, passing away in 1903, when eighty-three years old. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop are the parents of three children, one of whom is deceased. The other two are Miss Addie Bishop and Metz Bishop.

ALPHEUS D. STROUD, M. D. More than fifty years of devotion to his profession is the record of Alpheus D. Stroud, M. D., a veteran physician of Henderson, Texas; more than fifty years of his life given to the calling which be chose as his life work in young manhood, more than a half a century of time spent in the alleviation of the ills of mankind. Such indeed is a faithful service, a record in which any man might feel a reasonable degree of pride. Today, although well advanced in years, his tall, erect and well-built figure is still to be seen on the streets, and his alert and energetic mind continues to answer every call made upon it along the lines of his honored vocation. Doctor Stroud was born in Chambers county, Alabama, March 29, 1839, and is a son of Mark and Sarah (Trammell) Strond

The original ancestor of this family in America was Mark Stroud, who came to this country from England, a refugee from the minions of the crown who wished his punishment as a follower of Cromwell the regicide. He settled in Georgia, it is believed, and his advent to the American shore would necessarily be soon after 1661, when Cromwell's commonwealth came to an end. Eli Stroud, the grandfather of Dr. Alpheus D. Stroud, was a Georgia planter and slaveholder, and died in Russell county, Alabama, in 1867, when about ninety years of age. Among his several children was Mark Stroud, who was born in Walton county, Georgia, in January, 1812, came to Texas in 1839 and settled in what was then Robertson county, but now a part of the domain of Rusk county. He had been married in Chambers county, Alabama, to Miss Sarah Trammell, and the journey to Texas was made overland by wagon. After a short sojourn in Robertson county they moved to Nacogdoches proper and subsequently came into the present boundaries of Rusk county and settled, ultimately, northeast of Henderson, where the father passed his remaining active years in farming and died in Rusk in December, 1888. Prior to the outbreak of the war between the states he was a member of the lower house of the state legislature, and always aided and abetted in the success of the democratic party. He opposed secession, like Houston, but unlike that old warrier he came to the support of the Confederate cause with what means he could command, and with his sons, one of whom died in an army hospital in Kentucky. Mark Stroud was a Methodist, and died in that faith in 1888, the same year in which his wife passed away. She was a daughter of John Trammell, a Georgia man who died in Chambers county, Alabama. Mr. Trammell married Mary Dickin-son, and Sarah was one of their ten children and the only one to make her residence in Texas. The children born to Mark and Sarah Stroud were as follows: E., who married William F. Richards and died in Timpson, Texas; Ethan Allen, who was the soldier who died in Kentucky; Alpheus D., of this review; America, who married W. M. Masson, of Henderson; and Sarah, who is the widow of F. H. Obertbier, of Henderson.

Alpheus D. Stroud has been a resident of Rusk county since 1845. For his higher education he attended school at Lafayette, Alabama, and, choosing medicine as his life work, studied in the New Orleans School of Medieine, an institution from which he was graduated in March, 1861. Before he could take up the practice he enlisted to the call of arms, and was commissioned assistant surgeon of the Tenth Texas, in the Confederate service, and was with the Army of the Tennessee through all its various struggles and achievements in the thick of the war. He was under fire frequently while on duty and ministered to the wounded on a score of bloody fields, his engagements including Richmond (Kentucky), Chickamauga, Murfreesboro, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, Resaca, Dalton, Ringgold Gap, New Hope Church, Kennesaw Mountain, where he witnessed from the heights the fascinating panorama of the whole Federal army forming and marching below and the firing of cannon and maneuvering of troops as the forces of the north closed in on the retreating soldiers of Joseph E. Johnston toward Atlanta. He attended the wounded at Peach Tree Creek and at Jonesboro, and when Atlanta fell his immediate command became, by transfer, the Fifteenth Confederate Cavalry that reinforced Mobile and turned its front toward Fort Claiborne on the Alabama river subsequently, and was soon surrendered to the Union forces operating in that section. Doctor Stroud was paroled at Montgomery, Alabama, and given transportation to Shreveport, Louisiana, from which point he continued on foot to his Texas home. His war record is an excellent one and his memory is enshrined in the hearts of many of his old comrades whose distress and pain he was able to assuage on the field of strife.

During the four years that he was in the army, Doctor Stroud gained a wide experience in his profession, and he at once took up practice on the old home farm near Henderson. A year later he moved to the county seat and here he has lived continuously since January 1, 1807. He is the oldest physician in the county and few in Texas of his age are actively dispensing relief to the sick and afflicted. He attended the initial proceedings toward the forming of a local medical society and is an ex-president of the Rusk County Medical Society, holding membership also in the Texas State and American Medical Associations. Doctor Stroud is a Democrat without a record in active politics. His

A. D. Strong

Masonic connections are with the Blue Lodge and Chapter and no man has enjoyed in greater degree the respect and esteem of his fellow members. A consistent member of the Presbyterian church, he is now serving as elder, and has frequently officiated as a delegate to synods and presbyteries and several of the general assemblies of the church.

Doctor Stroud was married (first) in Rusk country, Texas, in June, 1865, to Miss Pannie G. Rogers, a daughter of John Rogers, who came to Texas from Georgia. Mrs. Stroud died in 1884, the mother of these children: Minnie, who is the wife of E. C. Hearne, of Texarkana, with these children—Ollie, Frank, William, A. D. and Worth; Miss Martha, a resident of Henderson; Mark, of Monroe, Louisiana, who married Pearl Sharp, and has four children—Lucile, Eva, Martha and Frances; John P., of Plestime, Texas; Albert Sidney, of Mouroe, Louisiana, who married Neta Wite and has son, Carl W.; and Fannie, who married Eugene Croon, of Marting George of the Company of Mouroe, Louisiana, who married Regene Croon, of Arrings George of the Martin State of Stephen Foreman, a Mississippian, and one son has been born to them—Alphous F.

CHARLES CHAUNCEY GIDNEY, M. D. In the active practice of medicine in Texas, since 1892, Dr. Gidney, by his thorough training and successful experience, may easily be ranked as one of the ablest men in his profession at the partnership of Drs. Anderson & Gidney, which was formed at Granger, Texas, in January, 1895, and still exists after nineteen years, is probably the oldest medical partnership existing in the state. Dr. Gidney and partner are now practicing at Plainview, in Hale county, and are the recognized leaders of their profession in that locality.

Charles Chauncey Gidney was born May 17, 1867, at Shelby, North Carolina, a son of Capt. John W. and Mary E. (McFarland) Gidney. His father won his title and rank through service in the war between the states. Dr. Gidney has an unusually liberal and thorough educational equipment. After spending two years at the University of North Carolina, in 1884-85, he was appointed and was for one year a student in the United States Military Academy of West Point during 1886. He later graduated from the Eastman Business College of Poughkeepsie, New York, and soon afterwards dimedical profession. For some time he taught school in North Carolina, and in New York City worked as a hotel With the means acquired through these occupations, he entered Louisville Medical College, in Kentucky, where he was graduated M. D. in 1892. On four different occasions, since beginning his career as a physician in Texas, Dr. Gidney has interrupted his practice for varying lengths of time in order to take post graduate courses. He spent one term in St. Louis in 1895, and has done post-graduate work in Chicago in 1897, in 1900, and in 1902. Dr. Gidney began the general practice of medicine at Granger, Texas, in 1892, and lived there until 1910. Since the latter date he and Dr. Anderson have been in practice at Plainview.

With excellent professional success he has also interseted himself in business and financial affairs. While in Granger he owned several brick business houses, stock in the First National Bank, and still owns farm lands in Williamson, Nucces, Jim Wells, and Hale counties, besides residence and business property at Plainview.

In his political views he is a Democrat. Fraternally, his associations are with the Knights of Pythias, is associations are with the Knights of Pythias, or which order he is district deputy grand chancellor, and also has membership in the Woodmen of the World and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The doctor has the different professional associations with medical societies. He has served as president of the Vol. N~=6 board of stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Granger and at Plainview for ten years.

On November 6, 1894, at Granger, occurred his mariage to Miss Maggie K. Keliehor, a daughter of Col. and Mrs. William Keliehor, of Williamson county. They have the following children: Anna Marie, Daisie Elizabeth, C. Chauncey, John William, and James A., the last named being now deceased.

ELMER E. WINN. In Plainview, Mr. Winn since 1908 has made a very successful record as real estate man and practical colonizer. He does a large business, has located many contented families in the south of the Panhandle country, and is highly esteemed by his community.

Elmer E. Winn was born in Hancock county, Indiana, May 18, 1863. His father, Ira Winn, a native of Virginia, from Indiana moved to Wayne county, Iowa, in 1865, where he was long engaged in farming. He had no taste for political affairs, though he was a lifelong Democrat. He belonged to the Methodist church. His death occurred in 1907 in Kansas, to which state he had removed in 1905. He married Maria A. Mack, who was born in Indiana, where she was married. There were six children. The mother died at Plaintiew, Texas, while on a visit to her son Elmer, on January 13, 1913, at the age of seventy-two. She is buried beside her husband at Burlington, Kansas.

Elmör E. Winn, who was the third of the children, was educated in the public schools of Wayne county, fowa, and his early life was spent on a farm. The seven children born of their marriage are Mabel, Alda, Fern, Virgil, Elger, Merlin, and Margaret.

WILLIS H. FLAMM, M. D. Each profession or vocation has its prominent men, some made such by long membership, others by their proficiency in their calling, Dr. Willis H. Flamm, president of the Hale County Medical Society, and one of the leading physicians of Plainview, Texas, is made conspicuous among the medical men of this section, not because of the length of time he has devoted to his profession—for he is as yet a young man—but because of the eminent success he has already attained therein. Dr. Flamm was born in Jefferson county, Nebraska, July 13, 1882, and is a son of Philip and Anna (Mosley) Flamm.

The Planun family originated in Germany and was founded in this country by Nicholas Planun, the paternal grandfather of Dr. Flanun, who settled in Pennsylvania and later moved to Illinois. In the latter state was born Philip Planun, who moved to Nebraska about the year 1878, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his retirement from active affairs in 1999, In that year he came to Texas, and is now living quietly at Plainview. He was well and favorably known among the farmers and stock raisers of Nebraska, owning a faith is that of the Republican party, and in religious plain and the state of the Republican party, and in religious plain and the state of the Republican party, and in religious plain and the state of the Republican party, and in religious the plain of the state of the Republican party, and in religious the plain and the state of the Republican party, and in religious the plain of the state of the Republican party, and in religious the plain of the state of the Republican party and in religious the plain of the state of the Republican party and in religious the plain of the state of the Republican party and the religious threads the state of the Republican party and the religious threads and the state of the Republican party and the religious threads and the state of the Republican party and the state of the stat

Willis H. Flamm secured his early education in the public schools of his native county, and supplemented this by attendance at the University of Nebraska, from which he was graduated at the age of twenty-one years. In order to pay for his tuition, he worked throughout his college period, turning his hand to whatever honorable employment appeared. He subsequently decided upon a professional career, and again went to work to earn the means to take him through St. Louis Medical College and Creighton Medical College, Omaha, graduating from the latter in 1908 with his diploma and degree. After serving for some time as interne in St. Joseph's Hospital, Omaha, Dr. Flamm began practice in that city, where for eighteen months he served in the capacity of police surgeon. In 1910 he came to Plainview, Texas, and here he has continued in the enjoyment of a large and representative practice to the present time. Possessed of a kindly, genial nature, great ability, and a natural taste for the various branches of medical work, it may be said of Dr. Flamm that he is one of those men who have chosen well. In addition to his large private practice, he is examining physician for a number of the old line life insurance companies, and is the owner of a quarter section farm located not far from Plainview, although he lives in the city, where he is the owner of his own home. He belongs to the Hale County Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association, and is president of the first-named.

On Angust 2, 1904, Dr. Flamm was married at Fair-bury, Nebraska, to Miss Mattie B. Blagrade, who was born in that state, daughter of T. E. Blagrade. To this union there has come one son, Harold, who was born at Fairhury, Nebraska, June 19, 1906. Dr. Flamm is a Republican, but has taken little more than a good citizen's interest in affairs of a public nature. His fraternal connections include membership in the local lodges of the Elks, the Ould Fellows, and the Wedner of the Commerce. He has done much to advance the interests of his community in numerous ways, and few men are more highly esteemed in professional or social circles.

LITHER FINLEY CORE. A resident of any one of the middle states who has a considerable attendance with its people extending over a period of years has frequent occasion to use the phrase in referring to former neighbors—"Gone to Texas." In a central section of Missouri, about the town of Odessa, "Gone to Texas." is often spoken of a one-time popular and successful business man of that locality, now equally, if not more, popular and successful business man of several grain elevators and is so well satisfied with this new country that be states with conviction, when asked, that nothing could induce him to return permanently to his native commonwealth.

Luther Finley Cobb was born in La Fayette county, Missouri, May 9, 1857, a son of Alfred L. and Louise (Hoskins) Cobb. North Carolina was the native state of his father, whence he came to Tennessee when a young man and later to Missouri, in which state he arrived in time to take up a homestead direct from the government in La Fayette county in 1836. That continued to he his home until his death in 1873 at the age of fifty-seven. The mother was horn in Tennessee, was edue her hashand fitted out a wagon drawn by ox-teams, traveled across the country, crossing the Mississippi at St. Louis in a ferryboat, that being many years before the first bridge was constructed, and thence continued on the central portion of the state. An incident of that journey still preserved among the family traditions is that the father and mother stopped at St. Louis and bought supplies for the rest of the journey, and one of the articles purchased was matches, then a rare commodity, and for which they paid five cents apiece. The mother died at the Missouri home in 1891 at the age of sixty-eight.

Luther F. Cohb, the third of seven children, when a boy attended the Missouri schools, but at a very early age, when no more than twelve, began working in the fields of a Missouri farm, receiving wages of fifteen dollars per mouth. He continued in that way up to his twenty-fifth year, when he moved to Odessa, and engaged in the grain business and as a dealer in mules. He has had from early years rare judgment in this line of business, and developed a large trade with Odessa as his headowaters.

Selling out his interests in Missouri in 1006, Mr. Cobb came to Texas and established an elevator at Hatty. This elevator he subsequently sold, and when the railroad was built into Tulia he was in advance of enterprise by establishing an elevator there in association with his son-in-law. Mr. Elliott. Since then the firm has been known as Cobb & Elliott, and they are among the largest grain dealers in the Panhandle country. With the development of the business they built another at Lockney. The elevator at Plainview has a capacity of twelve thousand bushels, and that of Lockney has eight thousand bushels capacity, and the one at Tulia five thousand. In connection with the Plainview business, the firm has extensive cod yards and engages in milling, the firm has extensive cod yards and engages in milling.

Mr. Cobb is a member of the Masonic bodies in the York Rite through all the degrees, and belongs to the Shrine. He also is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and in politics is a Democrat. His church is the Presbyterian.

In his home county of La Fayette, Missouri, he was married November 21, 1883, to Miss Luln Hughes, who died at Odessa in 1895. Her father was Colby Hughes, of La Fayette county. Mr. and Mrs. Cobb have two children—Mrs. Elsie Elliott, born at Odessa in 1885, married John F. Elliott, a member of the firm of Cobb & Elliott, already mentioned. Their home is at Plaintiew. The one child of Mr. and Mrs. Elliott is Carl Finley Elliott, horn at Plaintiew. Texas, in 1910. The second child of Mr. cobb is Mrs. Opal Hocker, how has born at Odessa in 1888, is now a resident of Kansas City, and has one daughter, Ellizabeth B. Hocker, horn at Kansas City in 1909. Mr. Cobb resides in the home of his son-in-law and daughter at Plaintiew.

Hon. Fanette Ratliff. The attraction and force to be found in biographical reviews of those men who, through individual ability, have attained merited distinction in American law, commend them to every sound thinker. It is but natural to feel an interest in tracing the footsteps of those who have reached elevated positions in public confidence, and have wielded their influence for public good, who have mederiatingly followed account of the contraction of the profession of the profession in their pursuit of reputation, distinction and position. Among the distinguished members of the profession in their pursuit of reputation, distinction and position. Among the distinguished members of the contraction of the profession in their pursuit of reputation, distinction and position. Among the distinguished members of the profession in their pursuit of reputation, distinction and position. Among the distinguished members of the foreston county bench is found the Hon Fayette Ratliff, judge of the county court, the soundness and equity of whose decisions have been rarely questioned, a man of high scholarship, with a well-poised mind, ever ready with his legal knowledge. He has occupied his present position since 1910, and has demonstrated his fitness to Fayette Ratliff was born March 20, 1874, in Murray county, Tennessee, and is a son of Noah W, and Martha (Vermon) Ratliff, also natives of the Big Bend state. His father, a well-known southern planter, came to Texas in 1881, locating near Lewisville, Denton county, where was engaged in rauching and farming for some years.

Fayelle Patliff

He is now living a somewhat retired life in Johnston county, Oklahoma, being fifty-eight years of age. His wife, who also survives, has likewise reached her fifty-eighth year, having the same natal day as her husband.

The second in order of birth of his parents' nine children, Fayette Ratliff received his early education in the schools of Parker county, Texas, and was graduated from the high school at Springtown in 1897. During this time he had spent his spare time in working at various employments, and, when he could find the oppor-tunity, in reading law. In 1897 he entered the office of Henry M. Farman, an attorney of Fort Worth, Texas, and after several years was admitted to the bar and formed a partnership with his brother, J. S. Ratliff, at Tishomingo, where he remained until 1907. In that year Mr. Ratliff came to Panhandle, where he opened offices, and this city has since been the scene of his professional endeavors. He at once took rank among the best citizens of the progressive community, his professional and personal excellencies having made him a leader of sagacity and worth. As a lawyer none had a higher ideal than his of what was due the clients whose cause he undertook and his well-balanced and discerping mind made him almost infallible in the solution of numerous legal complexities. These qualities made him the logical choice of the Democratic party in 1910 for the office of county judge, to which he was elected, and the people of Carson county voiced their appreciation of his conscientious services during his first term when he was re-elected in November, 1912. Judge Ratliff is a valued member of the Texas Bar Association. His fraternal connection is with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and at this time he is serving as secretary of his lodge.

on December 23, 1898, Judge Ratliff was united in marriage with Miss Myrtle McCoy, at Springtown, Texas. She is a native of the Lone Star state and a daughter of the Rev. J. M. McCoy, a pioneer Methodist Episcopal minister now located at Deertown, Texas. Her mother is now deceased. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ratliff, namely: Adele, born at Russett, Oklahoma, August 25, 1900, now attending stone at Frahamdle; Douglass, born September 10, 300, and 1918. School at Frahamdle; Douglass, born September 10, 1909; and the properties of t of all classes and political creeds.

W. C. Mathes. A prominent attorney and vice president of the First National Bank of Plainview. Mr. Mathes is one of the oldest members of the bar in Hale county, having practiced here continuously for the past seventeen years. He was one of the men who during the '90s bad sufficient faith in the future development of this section of the West to remain through the season of trial and discouragement, and the rewards have come to him as they have to practically all others who had the courage of persistency as early settlers. William C. Mathes was born in Limestone county,

William C. Mathes was born in Limestone country, Fexas, June I, 1869. His parents were W. M. and M. C. (McCarver) Mathes, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Texas. The father came to this state during the early '50s, first locating in Parker country, where he was a merchant for a number of years before the war, and subsequently moved to Limestone country and latter to Coryell country. Finally he took up his residence in Oklahoma, where he now resides at the advanced age of eighty years. During the Civil war he was one of the Texas volunteers to the Confederacy and much of his service was in the warfare against the Indians, and also partly in some of the regular campaigns of the war. He went through without wound, and returned as a veteran to take up the pursuits of civil life. The mother, who was reared and educated in Texas, died in Coryell county in 1882 at the age of thirty-five. Of their four children, William C, was the second,

He grew up for the most part in Coryoll county, where he attended school. He gained his admission to the bar by hard study in the offices of practicing lawyers, the principal firm under which he studied being Wordeman & White, at Gatesville. From there he moved to Stephens county, where he was admitted to the bar in 1892, but after a short time went to Plainview in 1896. Due to his ability and his long residence in this county, he has from the first enjoyed a select share of the litigation in the courts of this vicinity.

Mr. Mathes has been honored with election to the office of county judge of Hale county four terms. He is a director and vice president of the First National Bank, and is otherwise identified with business affairs. Politically, he supports the independent ticket as a rule, and was himself elected county judge on such a ticket.

His church is the Methodist.

In Stephens county, June 13, 1594, Judge Mathes married Miss Mai Eurke, daughter of Dr. Burke, of Stephens county, now deceased. Mr. Mathes and wifer are the parents of five children, namely: Burke, burn in Stephens county in 1896 and now in the Plainview high school; John, born at Plainview in 1899 and high school student; W. C., Jr., born at Plainview in 1904, and in high school; Curtise, born at Plainview in 1904, and in grammar school, and Maurine, born at Plainview in 1906.

John C. Hooper. In November, 1912, the citizens of Hale county selected from among their well-known and popular farmers and ranchuen John C. Hooper to fill the office of sheriff for the succeeding term. An efficient officer who has a full sense of his duty to the public, in this important position Mr. Hooper, by his business career and his long residence in west Texas, hawell deserved all honors that can be paid to him by his fellow citizens.

A native of Cooke county, Texas, John C. Hooper was born August 2, 1867, the third in a family of eight sons and one daughter, James Hooper, the father, was born North Carolina, was about eighteen years old when he came to Texas, and finally located in Cooke county, where he was a farmer and stock raiser. In 1892 he moved out to Hale county, which was his home and where he engaged in farming and stock raising until his death in March, 1909, at the age of eighty-six years. He was one of the last survivors among the Mexican war veterans in the state, and about fifteen years after he had returned from the victorious passage at arms between the United States and Mexico, he entered the Confederate army and went through the Civil war. He married a Texas woman and she died in Hale county in 1900 at the age of fifty-two.

Mr. John C. Hooper during his early youth attended the schools of Cooke county and then began work on his father's farm. During his twenty-second year he took up farming and stock raising on his own account, which he followed in his native county until 1898. He then moved to Hale county, and in the past year was placed on the Democratic ticket as candinate for sheriff, to which position he was elected by a good majority.

Mr. Hooper was married January 23, 1890, to Miss Addie L. Pierce, of Cooke county. The five children of the marriage are: Clara B, born in Cooke county, January 26, 1894, and a graduate of the Plainview high school; Alva H, born in Cooke county. April 17, 1896, and attending high school; James Kelly, born in Cooke county, January 4, 1898, and a papil of the Plainview schools; Robert and Ruth, twins, born at Plainview, April 14, 1904, and both now in school.

When Sheriff Hooper first came out to Hale county there was very little in the way of substantial development in this part of the state. He has seen both the town and country prosper and grow, and it is his con-viction that this development will continue until west Texas becomes the most prosperous farming and stock raising country in the world. He owns his own home in Plainview and other city property, and is a prosperous, well-known citizen, with many influential friends in different parts of the state.

ROBERT LEE JOINER. One of the leading enterprises of its kind in Northwestern Texas is that of the Joiner Printing Company, of Amarillo, whose founder and present proprietor, Robert Lee Joiner, has been a resident of this city since 1907, and of the state of Texas all his life. For some years Mr. Joiner was well known to the journalistic world of the Southwest as the publisher of a weekly newspaper, but has of late years devoted himself entirely to his present business. He was born September 26, 1876, on Galveston Bay, Harris county, Texas, and is a son of Robert Hansel and Mary (Hotchkiss) Joiner.

Robert H. Joiner was born in North Carolina and came to Texas during the latter '50s, settling in Harris county, where the greater part of his remaining years were spent in mercantile pursuits. During the Civil war he enlisted as a soldier in the Confederate army and had a brave and faithful military record. Mr. Joiner married Miss Mary Hotchkiss, a member of an English family that emigrated to New York and thence to Texas, born in Nacogdoches county, Texas, daughter of Charles Hotchkiss, a pioneer of Texas and brother of Archibald Hotchkiss, who was provisional governor of Texas prior to the establishing of Texas independence. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Joiner-Jessie, who died in 1890, and Robert Lee.

Robert Lee Joiner attended the public schools until he was sixteen years of age, at which time he was apprenticed to the trade of printer and for some time served in the offices of newspapers in Waco and other cities of Texas, until 1897, when he entered the newspaper business on his own account as the editor and publisher of the Caldwell News-Chronicle, a weekly publication, with which he continued eleven years, but in 1907 came to Amarillo and organized the Joiner Printing Company, of which he has been the directing head to the present time. Mr. Joiner is a printer who has ample facilities to undertake every work, large or small; a printer who has had the experience and who recognizes his patrons' own needs as thoroughly as they themselves He is prepared to design the copy, lav it ont, print, bind and deliver it, all under one roof and one management, and is doing this for many large and most exact-ing advertisers. In politics Mr. Joiner is a Democrat, but he has not taken an active part in political matters since coming to Amarillo, although during his newspaper days he was active in the support of his party.

Mr. Joiner was married at Caldwell, Texas, in 1902, to Miss Alma Lampkin, a native of Burleson county, Texas, whence her parents had come from Virginia at an early day, and to this union there has come one daughter—Alma Lee, born January 27, 1905. The pleasant family home is situated at No. 806 Fillmore street, while the offices and shop of the Joiner Printing Com-pany are located at No. 317 Polk street, Amarillo.

ALLEN N. WEEMS. Few examples could be found that better illustrate the fact that perseverance, industry and determination, wisely directed, will eventuate in success, than the career of Allen N. Weems, proprietor of the Electric Gin, at Cameron. When he arrived in Cameron, some twenty years ago, he was a man of family, and was possessed of a cash capital of less than a dollar, but was not discouraged by his prospects, disheartening as they might have seemed to a man of less courage and strength of character. Content to start upon the lowest rnng of the ladder, he steadily worked his way upward, and today occupies the proud position of one of the leading and influential business men of a community which is in no way lacking in strong, forceful men. His life should prove an encouragement to those who feel themselves handicapped by the lack of financial resources.

Mr. Weems was born in Cherokee county, Alabama, April 4, 1868, and is a son of Allen and Martha (Powers) Weems. His father, born July 3, 1827, in Polk county, Georgia, was a farmer by vocation, went to Alabama in young manhood, and in February, 1895, came to Texas, where he died in August of the same year. Mrs. Weems was born in Union District, South Carolina, December 23, 1827, and survived her husband six years, dying in Texas in 1901. They were the parents of ten children, of whom five are living: Joel C., Jake H., Starlin, Acie A. and Allen N. There was nothing in the boyhood of Allen N. Weems which would tend to give him an advantage over the other youths of his day. From the time he was able to do the simplest duties he worked and worked hard, and his education was obtained when he could be spared at odd times from the farm. However, it is often under the most adverse circumstances that our latent abilities are developed and this early strenuous training may have had much to do with Mr. Weems' later success in life. When he was nineteen years of age he left the parental roof and accepted a position as a railroad laborer, later became a worker in a blast furnace, and subsequently accepted whatever honorable employment presented itself until 1893, when he decided to try his fortunes in the rapidly growing community of Cameron. In the meantime he had been married and become the father of four children, and had been unable to save from his earnings more than enough to pay the family railroad fare to his new field of activity. As a result he arrived in Cameron with the princely sum of ninety cents, but was willing and industrious and almost immediately secured employment as a farm hand on the farm of W. T. Watts, in Milam county. Later he became a clerk in the Gaston-Sprinkle Mercantile Company's store, at Cameron, and in 1908, in company with J. B. Cavitt, built a cotton gin, and continued to operate it in partnership until 1913, in which year he purchased Mr. Cavitt's interests, moved to his present place, and erected the new Electric Gin, at a cost of $18,000. This now has a capacity of 100 bales for a day of twelve hours and is constantly growing in scope and patronage. While his rise has been rapid and has been marked by the grasping of every oppor-tunity, Mr. Weems has never taken advantage of the misfortune of another, so that his standing among business men is exceptionally high. His gin occupies a tract of eight and one-half acres, in addition to which Mr. Weems owns a half block in Cameron and his own residence and two others which occupy an entire block in this city. His straightforward dealing, his strict integrity, his fidelity to every engagement and his willingness to assist others to the success which he has himself attained have gained him the confidence and good will of all who know him, and few men have a wider circle of stauch friends. Fraternally, Mr. Weems is associated with the local lodge of the Woodmen of the World. He has been too busily engaged with his business interests to enter the political field, but has ably discharged all the duties of citizenship. With his family he attends the Methodist church.

On February 17, 1886, Mr. Weems was married to Miss Margaret Josephine Shuffleld, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Shuffield, of Marshall county, Alabama, and to this union there have been born twelve children, as follows: Melvin, engaged in business with his father, married Ellie Moore, and has had four children, Lillian, Bruce, Eva and Melvin; William, deceased; Roy, an engineer and machinist, married Etta Phipps; and Maudie, Audell, Owen, Louis, Oma, Robert, Martha, Alefine, and a baby.

BENJAMIN FLOURNOY TEAGUE. To no small degree the prestige and strength of the Brenham law firm of Mathis, Teague & Embrey is due to the long and varied experience of its second member, Benjamin F. Teague, who has practiced law for twenty years, but has spent much of his time in public affairs, especially in the state comptroller's office at Austin, and that training gave him an unusual equipment for many of the responsibilities which he has since assumed in his private practice.

Benjamin Flournoy Teague was born February 16, 1872, in Cleburne county, Alabama, a son of Elijah Arnold and Rebecca (Poole) Teague. His father, an Alabama planter, moved to Texas in January, 1883, settling in Lee county, where he continued his career as an agriculturist. Besides the well known Brenham lawyer another son is D. E. Teague, who since 1890 has served continuously in the office of sheriff of Washington county.

Benjamin F. Teague acquired some of his early education in Alabama, was eleven years old when the family moved to Lee county, and was a student in the schools of Giddings and in 1893 graduated from the Blinn Memorial College at Brenham. His education for the law was also acquired at Brenham, chiefly by reading in the office of Ben S. Rogers, until admitted to the bar in 1894. In 1895 Mr. Teague became associated with his present partner, J. M. Mathis, in the law firm of Mathis & Teague. This firm dissolved partnership in 1900 and in the following year Mr. Teague moved to Austin and began his service in the state comptroller's department, of which he subsequently be-came chief clerk. Mr. Teague handled many of the most responsible duties of the office, and was identified with that department of the state government from 1901 to 1911. During that time he continued his training for the law by special courses under Judge J. C. Townes and Judge I. P. Hildebrand. In 1910 Mr. Teague was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of state comptroller, being defeated by a small number of votes by W. P. Lane. Returning to Brenham in 1911 he again resumed his relations as a partner with J. M. Mathis, and in 1913 the firm of Mathis & Teague was extended by the admission of W. J. Embery.

Mr. Teague is a believer in the principles of fraternal orders, and has membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Improved Order of Red Men and the Woodmen of the World. In 1904 he was married to Miss Virginia Gaddy, daughter of Rev. W. M. Gaddy, who was born in Mississippi and for a number of years was minister of the Baptist church at Houston, Texas. Mr. Teague and wife have one son, William Flournov

Teague.

JOHN M. MATHIS. A member of the Texas bar for the last twenty years, and since 1895 in practice at Brenham, John M. Mathis is regarded as one of the ablest representatives of his profession, has for years enjoyed a successful practice both in criminal and civil litigation, and as a citizen has performed a useful and bonorable part in his community and state. During the past ten years little litigation either in the criminal or civil courts of Washington county has not had the services of Mr. Mathis as counsel on one side or the other, and he has performed his work with a rare skill that justifies his present reputation and standing in the Texas bar. As an orator his eloquence has been a factor in many political campaigns, and he has spoken for some of the principal candidates in almost every section of the state. Mr. Mathis is senior member of the firm of Mathis, Teague & Embrey.

Born in Smith county, Texas, in 1870, John M. Mathis is a son of Rev. John S. and Aurelia (Jones) Mathis. His father, a native of Tennessee, who came to Texas about 1860, locating in Smith county, was one of the pioneer circuit-riding Methodist preachers, and later held some of the important charges in the Texas Conference. During the war between the states he served as chaplain in the Confederate army for four years. As a member of the East Texas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he filled pulpits at Palestine, Marshall, Tyler and other places in that district. After nearly half a century of service to his church and his fellowmen he died March 4, 1908, at the age of seventyfive. His wife was born in North Carolina, and her father, during his residence at Asheville, North Carolina, served as sheriff of the county, and coming to Texas after the close of the war located in Cooke county, which he represented in the state legislature and for many years served as sheriff.

John M. Mathis received a liberal education, graduat-John M. Mathis received a horis contaction, granuac-ing from the Southwestern University at Georgetown in 1891 with the degree of A. B. Following a brief period as a teacher at Valley View in Cooke county, in 1892 he was selected by R. T. Milner, then speaker of the House of Representatives at Austin, as clerk to the speaker, and this afforded him a valuable opportunity to pursue the study of law which he had begun while teaching school. Later he continued his studies at Rusk under Samuel A. Wilson, formerly judge of the court of criminal appeals, and his son, S. P. Wilson, now a member of the court of civil appeals at Texarkana. Admitted to the bar in 1894, Mr. Mathis began practice at Rusk, after about a year moved to Wichita Falls, where he was in partnership with his brother, L. H. Mathis, but in 1895 came to Brenham and with B. F. Teague formed the law partnership of Mathis & Teague. Their relations were dissolved in 1900, and Mr. Mathis practiced alone until 1905. Then, with J. P. Buchanan, who had resigned the office of district attorney, and with L. E. Rasberry, he entered the partnership of Mathis, Buchanan & Rasberry. This firm was terminated in 1911, when Mr. Buchanan went to the legislature, and Mr. Teague having in the meantime returned from Austin the firm of Mathis & Teague again took its place in the Washington county bar. In 1913 W. J. Embrey was admitted, making the firm as it stands at present,

From 1899 to 1911, a period of twelve years, Mr. Mathis was one of the school trustees of Brenham, but was eventually obliged to resign the office on account of his increasing pressure of professional business. In 1912 be was one of the Texas state Democratic electors who early in the following year put their formal official seal to the election of Woodrow Wilson as president of the United States. Mr. Mathis is a Past Noble Grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has membership in the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of the Maccabees, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Cardinals.

In 1892 Mr. Mathis married Miss Louise Mayfield. daughter of Dr. W. N. Mayfield of Georgetown, Texas. Their two children are John M. Mathis, Jr., and Louise Ozelle Mathis. It should be noted that the practice of Mr. Mathis as a lawyer is by no means confined to Washington county, and he has for some years represented large and important cases of litigation in the higher state courts and in a number of counties outside of Washington.

Robert Boudre Savage Foster, Jr. It is doubtful if many men of Texas have achieved such a full measure of success in so limited a period of time as that which rewarded the efforts of the late Robert Boudre Savage Foster, Jr., of Navasota. Starting his career with his bare hands, as it were, when he passed away August 30, 1899, when not yet forty-eight years of age, he was credited with achievements that would have satisfied the ordinary man after a full lifetime of endeavor. He was a native son of Texas, born in Washington county, September 11, 1851. His name "Boudre Savage" came from the French, his grandmother Foster being of French descent.

Mr. Foster was educated in the common schools and passed a term in Tehnacana College, beginning life as a farmer. He worked a yoke of cattle as early as the age of fourteen years, within three miles of Navasota, the beginning efforts in his successful eareer, and his labors, prosecuted assiduously, were effective. Although he had no business equipment, he was a natural moneymaker and a fine judge of values. As the years passed Mr. Foster added to his holdings from time to time, until he was considered one of the most potent and successful men of his day in his county. As many as fifty families secured their substance from his farms and agriculture proved his sole interest. He steered clear of stock enterprises, even shunning the opportunity of aiding in organizing one of the leading banks of Navasota. He had the best judgment in a trade of anyone, and it was said of him that he could do the planning of eight men and finish by executing the plans. In his political life Mr. Foster was quiet and unobtrusive, even declining service in any capacity not required by law. He was not identified with the church in the vigor of life but he believed in its efficacy and was brought up under the influence of Methodist parents. He belonged to no order. In social matters Mr. Foster was very reticent. He talked little upon topics outside of purely business, and when making a deal let the other person do the talking, although he did the active trading himself.

Mr. Foster was married June 20, 1883, at Anderson, Frans, to Miss Mattie Brigance, a daughter of Franklin and Susan E. (Rogers) Brigance. Three children have been born to this union: Mrs. Georgie Rogers, of Brookshire, Texas; Robert Franklin, of Navasota; and Nettle Rose, the wife of William S. Baker, of this city.

Franklin Brigance was horn in Sumner county, Tennessee, Angust 12, 1818, and died in Anderson, Texas, in June, 1900. He was for sixty years recording steward of the Methodist church, missing two meetings only during this time, and when he came to Anderson he organized a small class-meeting of Methodists in his log cabin home. He was a charter member of the A. F. & A. M., at Anderson, Texas, and Past High Priest. Mr. Brigance was a son of Charles Newton and Frances Brigance, who lived on the west fork of Station Camp Creek, Sumner county, Tennessee, eight miles west of Gallatin. When fifteen years old he went to two mer-chant tailor uncles, at Hantington, Tennessee, learned the tailor's trade with them, and remained with them four years. He was a resident of Huntington when the news came that Sam Houston had gained a victory over the Mexican army in Texas. This result decided many of the people of Tennessee to come to Texas, and in 1838 Mr. Brigance came out with his parents and settled at Anderson, Grimes county. The old home they left was the one his grandfather established in the early settlement, and they arrived in Texas in December, 1838, coming by the boat "Rocky Mountain" from Clarksville, Tennessee, to New Orleans, Louisiana, and by schooner to Galveston, Texas, five days out, and steamed across Galveston Bay and up Buffalo Bayou to Houston, arriving there in February, 1839. There they engaged a wagon and team to convey them to Black's Prairie, Montgomery (now Grimes) county, Republic of Texas, and March 4, 1839, they arrived there and stopped at a house owned by John F. Martin. There they remained until summer, when the father of Mr. Brigance purchased a tract of land on the prairie, began its improvement, and there lost his wife, the mother of Franklin Brigance. In the fall of 1839 Franklin Brigance responded to the call made for men to defend the settlement against the Indians, joined other neighbors, and rendezvoused at old Timmanville, at the crossing of the old San Autonio and Nacogdoches road and the Navasota river. Their equipment consisted of a mustang pony, saddle and lariat, rope, rifle, shot-pouch, powder-horn, etc., and the commissary outfit comprised a wallet thrown across the saddle, with each end filled with cornbread made from meal ground on a steel handmill, and the sack also contained jerked beef. The campaign comprised a trip over to the Brazos river and up that stream to Comanche Peak and back again through to Wheelock, Texas, to their homes, after killing two Indians, and losing two men. Another expedition, in 1841, was without results, save that the Indians were seared away, and Mr. Brigance returned with his comrades with neither scalps nor stolen horses. He joined Captain Bowen's company, in 1842, to repel the army of the Mexican General Woll, and to avenge the recent slaughter of the Texans under Captain Dawson, near San Antonio, Mr. Brigance being made orderly sergeant. They camped at San Antonio several weeks on scant rations, being even forced to appropriate the hogs and corn of the Mexicans to appease their hunger. After a move or two of the camp the company was discharged, as the Mexican troops had moved hack across the Rio Graude. They were discharged withnace across me and branch provide themselves with sub-sistence to get home. Mr. Brigance was detailed as one to forage for food, invested his only nickel in corn meal, and started back to camp with his companion. They were lost on the prairie in the darkness and wandered about until past midnight, when they found themselves back at the mill where Mr. Brigance had bought the meal. There they found other comrades with a fat hog secured from the Mexicans, and right there the fat hog and the meal mixed and a good meal was enjoyed. The meal was baked in the ashes of the campfire, all slept under the canopy of heaven that night, the ordeal was finally repeated in the morning, and after some days of anxiety all hands reached home after passing through a hostile country.

In 1842 Mr. Brigance and J. J. King, a neighbor, decided to visit their old home in Tennessee. They crossed the Mississippi river at the mouth of the Red river and by horseback made the trip to the home of Mr. King's brother, below Natchez, and by boat to Natchez and Vicksburg, where Mr. Brigance continued by boat to Nashville and then to his old home. There he went to school for several months, and also taught school until the fall of 1844, at which time he returned to Texas, via New Orleans by hoat, by ship to Galveston and boat up to Houston, and by mail wagon to Cypress, from where he walked to Fantharp, now Anderson, in Grimes county. He soon found a little school in the Plantersville neighborhood and after teaching a session he abandoned it because the work did not prove congenial, and took up tailoring instead. In June, 1846, he was elected the first assessor and collector of taxes of Grimes county, was again elected in 1848 for two years more, and traveled over the country twice a year, the county then extending from the San Antonio road on the north to Spring Creek on the south, a distance of seventy-five miles, and it was twenty miles wide. In 1850 he failed of reelection because he had held office two terms. He was then appointed deputy clerk of the district court by H. W. Raglin and held the position until the next election when he was himself elevated to the office, In 1860 he was defeated for this office and then turned his attention to farming with his force of slaves. In February, 1863, he was selected by his community to superintend the construction of breastworks at Galveston, it falling to the lot of Texas citizens to fortify the city, and there he remained until August, 1863, when he was appointed Confederate tax assessor of Grimes county, and held that position until the close of hostilities between the South and the North. As a result of the war he was stripped of all save his wife and children, and without anything better to do resorted to his old business, a clerkship.

At the first election after the war he was chosen clerk of the county and was made deputy assessor, keeping the books of that office also. With the defalcation of the assessor, the responsibility of assessing and collecting the taxes for 1898 and 1899 fell to him and he discharged their duties and made his returns to Austin without bond, having as much as $23,000 of public funds pass through his bands without bonds. In 1899 his the reconstruction plan of the Republican party, but he was appointed deputy district clerk later, under J. Lawrence Dickson. He continued there until his disabilities were removed and in 1876 was elected district clerk of the country, and was reelected from time to time until politics became so mixed up that he was defeated and never again became a candidate. Later on he was appointed to the office of postmaster of Anderson, in which capacity he served seven years, but in son, in which capacity he served seven years, our many the hildren of Mr. Brigance were as follows; A. Frank, a resident of Navasota; Mattie B., now Mrs. Foster, Jr., of this review; Thomas Alfred, a resident of Beaumont, Texas; Mrs. Burton Routt, of Chappell Hill, Texas; John H., whose death occurred at Waco, Texas, in February, 1914; and Miss Edna Brigance, a resident of Navasota.

ROBERT A. JOHNSON, D. D. S. The Johnson family through three successive generations has been identified with either the medical or dental profession, and Robert A. Johnson is successor of his father in the same line at Navasota, where the family has been well known for the past twenty-five years.

Dr. Robert A. Johnson was born in Troy, Alabama, February 6, 1885. His grandfather was a physician who belonged to an old and loval Southern family, all the male members of which participated in the war as Confederate soldiers except the doctor, who remained at home on account of his profession, since in that way he could do more for the community than as a soldier. Of his five children one was the late Osborn S. Johnson, who was born in Alahama January 8, 1857, and practiced John Was John Marasada, Texas, from TSS until his death in January, 1907. He was educated professionally Manderbilt University at Nashville, and after a brief practice at Troy, Alabama, moved to Texas, locating first a Bryan and finally at Navasota. He was one of the early members of the State Dental Association of Texas, and as a Democrat with only incidental interest in practical politics served as tax assessor and collector of Navasota. His church was the Methodist. Dr. Osborn S. Johnson was married in Troy, Alabama, to Miss Fannie McKinzie. Her father was a cattleman who settled near Corsicana, Texas, and died there. Dr. Johnson and wife have the following children.: Dr. Robert A.; Hayne, of Bryan, Texas; Miss Leona, a teacher in the Navasota schools; Bess, a student of the Sam Houston Normal at Huntsville; and Allister, who is attending school at Navasota.

Dr. Robert A. Johnson grew up and was educated in the public schools of Navasota, and after finishing the public school course in 1903 carned his livelihood by clerking in a local store, and finally entered his father's office to learn dentistry. After some experience under his father, he entered the dental department of the Vanderhilt University at Nashvilka his father's old school, took up practice at Navasota and has served a good many of his father's old patrons. Dr. Johnson was married January 14, 1914, to Miss Lula Roan, a daughter of

J. H. Roan.

ALUN P. CLARK. Among the men who have contributed their full quota to the industrial and commercial development of Kaufman and Kaufman county and who have made independent fortunes for themselves out of their continued activities in business circles, may well be mentioned Alvin P. Clark, a leading furniture dealer and undertaker of Kaufman and one of the finest citizens of the community where he enjoys a most enviable standing.

Born on December 1, 1869, at Lancaster, Texas, Alvin P. Clark is the son of Alonzo S. and Nancy Clarinda (Taylor) Clark. The father was born in New York state in 1837, and in his native state gained an excellent education, which included voice culture, in which he was especially talented. He came to Texas just prior to the inception of the Civil war, and, settling first at Lancaster, he was for some years occupied as a millwright. He erected a sawmill on the Trinity river east of Laneaster, among other mills, and a flouring mill at Hutchins, where he himself finally settled. During a part of the war period he was engaged in the manufacture of pistols for the Confederacy at Lancaster, and he allied himself stanchly with the institutions and customs of the south, as a resident of that section of the country. He entered the political arena in a local way during the somewhat chaotic days following the war, and in one of his races for the legislature he was a victim of the well known "counting out" process which obtained about that time and was employed on many occasions. He was an able speaker and his charming voice gave him an ever prominent place as a singer and leader of music at religious meetings, and in a number of singing schools which he conducted. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist church and fraternally was identified with the Masonic lodge. He had two sisters, Mrs. Mary Whitaker, who died at Waterloo, Iowa. and Mrs. Esther Hall, a resident of Hoquiam, Washington. Mr. Clark was married at Lancaster to Nancy Clarinda Taylor, whose father came to Texas from Whitehall, Illinois, before the war. Mrs. Clark passed away in May, 1909, and her husband followed her in July of the same year. Of the three children born to them, Mary A. and Alvin P. reached mature life. The daughter married T. S. Cartright and resides in Van Alstyne, Texas.

Alvin P. Clark grew up in Hutchins, Texas, whither his parents moved in his young childhood. The schools there provided him with a solid basis for future training, and he devoted himself to the farm until he was well into his youth, when he turned his back upon the fields and engaged in railroad work. He learned telegraphy at Hutchins and the H. & T. C. R. R. Company gave him his first position at Van Alstyne as operator and cashier at that station. He subsequently became relief agent of the company and remained with it in that capacity for two years, after which he was in the service of the Santa Fe for five years as relief agent and then was with the Texas Midland at Terrell, where he was assistant manager and dispatcher of that budding system for two years. Here he met and learned to admire the many excellent qualities of Colonel Greene, who was then dividing his attention between the building of a railroad and managing the local baseball team. Being a pitcher of some renown, Mr. Clark fitted admirably into the dual business system and he added much of genuine pleasure to his employer's life there as well as to his own by vanquishing all the teams who manifested designs on Terrell's pennant. So exciting did the base-ball situation become during his residence there that in a game with Tyler, Colonel Greene sent an engine to Kaufman after Mr. Clark, and his favorite pitcher gratified the genial Colonel by giving Tyler fans and players the severest drubbing of their careers, after which Mr. Clark was returned by engine to his post at Kaufman. Thus did the little pleasures of life mingle with its many duties, and it is entirely probable that the railroad system did not suffer too great loss from the trifling neglects it was subjected to on such occasions.

In 1894 Mr. Clark was transferred to Kaufman and continued as agent of that station until 1898, when he resigned and engaged in business here. His father-inlaw was engaged in the furniture business and Mr. Clark bought a half interest in the firm, which was Ayers & Clark, and after one year he bought Mr. Ayers' interest. Mr. Clark started in a small way, it is true, but he prepared himself for further branching out as he went along and soon was fitted with a license as a professional embalmer. He is a member of the undertakers' organization of the state and of the State Board of Embalmers as well. Some few years ago he purchased the brick block of the Kaufman Improvement Company and enlarged it to meet the demands of his undertaking department, which is one of the important phases of his business, and his establishment today is one of the con-spicuous concerns of Kaufman and the most up-to-date mortuary in the county.

In his civic connection with Kaufman, Mr. Clark is an active member of the Commercial Club and it may also be stated that he served as chief of the local fire department for five years, giving an excellent service to the community in his official capacity, Fraternally he is Past Chancellor of Lodge No. 110 of Kaufman Knights of Pythias and he is also Deputy Grand Chancellor of the state. He helped to institute the Order of Red Men at this point and was chosen Grand Sachem of the order at that time. His churchly relations are with the Presbyterian church.

In April, 1899, Mr. Clark was married in Kaufman to Miss Della Ayers, a daughter of W. R. Ayers, who was a merchant here and an early Texan. Mrs. Clark is one of the three daughters of her parents, the others being Mrs. Mollie McDowell and Mrs. Lula Petty, both of Dallas, Mr. and Mrs. Clark have two daughters, Ruth and Lorilie, The family home is situated on Houston street, where the handsomest residences of the city are to be found, and the various members are popular and prominent in the best circles of the city. Mr. Clark is one of those genial and wholesouled men who are always found to be most popular and he still retains a lingering fondness for the great American game of baseball, in which he would undoubtedly have won many honors had he continued in it.

LANGSTON JAMES GOREE, D. D. S. The period immediately following the close of the war between the South and the North, in Grimes county, was prolific in pioneers. There were first pioneers in settlement, all of whom but the most sturdy have passed away. Next came pioneers in trade, and then those who had established reputations in the professional field. The minister and lawyer came first, and close behind them followed the doctor; then came the practitioners in spe-cial lines, seeking for patronage and a livelihood. The late Dr. Langston James Goree II was a pioneer in dentistry in Grimes county, coming to this section in 1867 and being located here until his death in November, 1888.

The Goree family is of French-Huguenot extraction, and for some years was well known in Alabama, Lang-ston J. Goree I, the father of Doctor Goree II, being a farmer of Marion, that state, and where the mother was a teacher in Judson College. She was the second wife of Dr. Langston, and they were the parents of the following children: Maj. Thomas, who died at Galveston, Texas, leaving a son and a daughter, and who served sixteen years as warden of the Texas Penitentiary and made an excellent record as such; Robert, who resides at an excellent record as such; Robert, who resides at Knox City, Texas; Ed. K., of Huntsville, Texas; Pleasant K., of Midway, Texas; Mrs. Hugh Hayes, of Midway; and Langston James.

Dr. Langston James Goree II was born at Marion, Alabama, and was but a child when he accompanied his parents to near Midway, Madison county, Texas, where his father spent his remaining years as an agriculturist. From Midway he went to Walker county, and thence to Waco, Texas, where he enlisted in Company H, Fifth Regiment, Texas Volunteer Infantry, Colonel Hood's regiment, and served in that officer's brigade in the Army of Northern Virginia. He took part in the battles of Manassas, Gaines Mill, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Wilderness and Appomattox, and was wounded at second Manassas, losing two fingers of his left hand. He was an active man at heart in Confederate veterans' meetings as long as he lived, and was a member of Hood's Texas Brigade Association, a social organization of the old veterans who wore the gray.

Immediately after the close of the Civil War, Doctor Goree started to prepare himself for his chosen calling. He had formerly secured a common school education, and he now went to Baltimore, Maryland, where he graduated from college and received his degree. At that time he returned to Texas and located at Huntsville, but moved from there to Waco and from the latter place to Navasota in 1867. This city continued to be his home until the time of his death, twenty-one years later. It had been an opportune time for the young professional man to enter business in this growing country. Dentistry had not yet fallen into the hands of specialists. The nicer operations for preserving the teeth and replacing those lost or decayed, by artificial means, were quite unknown in the region. Doctor Gore's patronage in Navasota was not merely a local one, for the reputation that he had acquired for skill and dexterity brought patients from all the surrounding country to obtain the treatment that was not yet accessible near their country homes. He became regarded as a master of his profession, and, not content with the knowledge which his early study had given, he kept his eyes open to the progress of the art and adopted every improvement that the advancement of dentistry introduced. He was a member of the State Dental Association of Texas, and devoted himself whole-heartedly to his calling, not being interested in business nor industrial affairs. In politics he was a Democrat, and was also known as one of the most zealous and earnest prohibitionists in the state. He belonged to no church, but was a Knight of Honor,

Doctor Goree was married at New Waverly, Texas, to Miss Fannie Wood, who was born in 1850, in Walker county, Texas, and there educated, and died in May, 1911. She was a daughter of Green M. Wood, a farmer who came to Texas from Montgomery, Alabama. Doctor and Mrs. Goree were the parents of the following children: Dr. Langston James, of Navasota; Robert B., of Orange, Texas; Edwin, who died single; Eloise, who died in childhood; Sue Willie, of Denver, Colorado, who married C. W. Seay; Mary, who died as Mrs. John Prine, without issue; and Fannie B., the wife of Will Thomas, of Navasota,

Dr. Langston James Goree III, of Navasota, a leading member of the dental profession, was born December 9, 1873, grew up in this city, and received his early educational training here. He next attended the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Bryan and received his professional education in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee, from which institution he was graduated in February, 1895. He at once established himself in practice at Navasota, and has continued therein to the present time, commanding a goodly share of the city's representative practice and enjoying prestige among his professional brethren. He belongs to the Texas State Dental Society. Doctor Goree is connected religiously with the Methodist church, and belongs to the board of stewards. As one of the developers of Navasota, he erected his own handsome home, as well as the Goree business house, where he now has his office. His fraternal connections include membership in the Woodmen of the World, in which he is past consul; the Knights of the Maccabees, in which he is past chancellor commander, and the Knights of Pythias.

Doctor Goree was married in Navasota, in March, 1897, to Miss Anna Trotter, a daughter of Marion L. Trotter, a teacher in the public schools and an ex-Confederate soldier, who married Anna Gooch. Mrs. Goree is one of three children. Two sons have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Goree, namely: Langston James IV and Robert Tillman.

Hugh Hamill Wilson, The Wilson family of Grimes county has been conspicuous for the useful service and activities of its members and has occupied an bonored place in citizenship for fully sixty years. It was founded by the late Hugh Hamill Wilson, who lived in Grimes county from 1855 until his recent death. In the second generation as sons of this honored business man and citizen, are several men in the professions, including Dr. Walter T. Wilson, one of the most prominent physicians of Grimes county.

The late Hugh Hamill Wilson was born in Belfast, Ireland, January 9, 1838. His father, John Hamill Wilson, was a ship-supply contractor in Ireland, and had several vessels engaged in the trans-Atlantic trade, and it was on one of these boats of his father that Hugh H. Wilson gained his first experience on the sea, in the meantime attending school and partly finishing the course of the high school in Belfast. He had made several voyages and when a lad of fifteen and on his third trip to the United States landed from the boat at New York and went to New Orleans. At New Orleans news came to him of his father's business failure. From there he proceeded to Houston, Texas, and then learned of the completeness of the misfortunes which had overtaken his father, involving even the sacrifice of the old home to the interests of his creditors. Thus deprived of his father's resources, Hugh H. Wilson went to Anderson, Texas, and found work as a typesetter in a printing office, and continued that occupation until the outbreak of the war. Mr. Wilson enlisted in Company D in one of the regiments comprising Walker's Division, and was commissioned a lieutenant of his company. In the Trans-Mississippi Department, during the campaign following Banks' invasion of Texas, he had a prominent part in the battle at Mansfield. He received the surrender of a Federal colonel who had been surrounded by Confederates and refused to surrender to anyone not of his own rank. Mr. Wilson, who was barefooted and whose trousers were worn off almost to his knees, declared himself to be Colonel Wilson, and succeeded in imposing this bluff on the Federal officer and after receiving his sword kept it almost to the time of his death. He was himself wounded in that engagement, but soon recovered and continued in the war until the end, being mustered out at Hempstead.

Following the war Mr. Wilson began business life as a merchant at Anderson, and became associated with his brother, John H., under the name of J. H. Wilson & Company. Soon afterwards the town of Navasota was established at the terminus of the Houston & Texas Central Railway, and he was one of the pioneers on the ground at the beginning of that now flourishing city. The firm had a large trade over an extensive territory about Navasota, and continued to prosper until meeting misfortunes during the '70s, when Mr. Wilson turned his stock over to his creditors and gave notes for the balance of his liabilities, and eventually cleared off every incumbrance to his financial integrity. In 1871 Hugh H. Wilson engaged in the warehouse business at Navasota, and that was his chief line of enterprise until his death. After a long and successful career of more than forty years at Navasota he died after fulfilling the best ideals of a worthy business career on December 24, 1913. Besides his warehouse business he was identified with fire insurance and other minor enterprises.

His political career was also an important fact in the community where he lived, and in 1878 he was elected city alderman, and was subsequently city tax assessor and collector for many years. Early in life he joined the Masonic Order, in Anderson Lodge, No. 3, before the war, and subsequently affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter, and for twenty-five years was secretary of Navasota Lodge of Masons. About 1873 he became identified with the Presbyterian church, and was deacon of the Navasota church and at one time declined the position of elder.

At Anderson on December 13, 1866, about the beginning of his independent business career, Hugh Hamill Wilson married Miss Maggie O. Martin. She belonged to one of the oldest families of Grimes county, and her relationship by blood included the noted name of Travis and of other Texas patriots. The children of Hugh H. Wilson and wife were as follows: Arthur H. of Navasota; Dr. Walter T.; H. Baylor of Dallas; Dr. Hugh M. of Navasota; Miss Carrie, the oldest daughter and living in Navasota; Miss Margaret, of Navasota; Mrs. Ethel Jones, wife of Milton Jones of Navasota, The late Hugh H. Wilson was a man of remarkable intellectual faculties, and it is not out of place to refer briefly to some of his interests and avocations. He possessed a wonderful memory, was a persistent searcher after truth along historical and scientific lines, and as a reader of history he had followed the fortunes of nearly every section of the civilized world, especially the dynasties of Europe. He had a ready acquaintance through the pages of history with all the notable men of Europe. History of wars was especially his forte, and having participated in the Civil war of the United States and from his individual experience having stored his mind with the stories from the lips of his comrades and the pens of chroniclers for fifty years, he was regarded as an almost infallible authority on every important inci-dent of war times. He was a student of Mexican affairs, and had a close knowledge of the real situations in that country at a time when most Americans dwelt in ignorance and unconcern about the barbarities perpetrated under the name of a civilized government. was no uncommon thing for the late Mr. Wilson to become so absorbed in his reading as to forget to go to bed, and to be aroused by the family in the morning and apparently awake with a start and inquire "is it morning?"

Dr. Walter T. Wilson, son of the late Hugh H. Wilson, has made a worthy record as a physician and is one of the leading business men of Navasota. He was born in that city October 12, 1871, was educated in the public schools and began the study of medicine when a lad of only fifteen years under the direction of Dr. A. R. Kilpatrick of Navasota. He was employed in the office of several different physicians in the city and had many unusual opportunities to acquire a practical knowledge before he went away to school. Dr. Wilson graduated in 1891 from the Memphis Hospital Medical College and after a year's work as an interne in the City Hospital of Memphis returned to Texas and practiced at Edna until 1893. That year marked his return to his home town, and for the past twenty years he has enjoyed a practice and a prestige as a physician and surgeon second to none in that vicinity. A man of alleged intellectual interests similar to his father's, Dr. Wilson has pursued post-graduate work in nine courses at the New York Polyelinic and one course in Chicago, He is active in organized professional affairs as a member of the County and State Medical societies and the American Medical Association. Dr. Wilson is also physician and surgeon to the Houston & Texas Central Railway at Navasota, the Mexia cut-off, the main line of the International and Great Northern, and Madisonville branch, and also to the Santa Fe Railroad. For eight years he served as city physician of Navasota, finally resigning his office, and during his residence at Edna was county physician in Jackson county.

Dr. Wilson is well known in business affairs at Navasota, having organized and having since held the office of president of the Planters' Cotton Oil Company of that city, and is a stockholder in several local banks and other financial enterprises. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Presbyterian church, but outside of his profession, home and business, has little part in political or fraternal affairs. He belongs to the American Geographical Society, and has great interest in Texas pioneer history.

Dr. Wilson was married December, 1897, to Miss Stella Ogilvy at Palestine, Texas. Her parents were Thomas C. and Ada (Horlock) Ogilvy, who had four daughters. Thomas C. Ogilvy was a compress man and came to Texas from Alyth, Scotland. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Wilson are: Walter O., Charles O., and Walter Stephen J. Walker. As a builder of material prosperity and a promoter of individual success few citizens have a record that compare favorably with that of Stephen J. Walker of Navasota, who has lived in Texas since 1870, when he came to this state from Jefferson county, Florida. Mr. Walker is a man of self-attain-ments, began at the bottom, was a worker for wages and at almost anything he could find to do during his first years in Texas, and by his industry and applied ability has gained recognition as one of the successful men in his part of the state.

Stephen J. Walker was born in Jefferson county, Florida, April 4, 1847. He grew up on a plantation. His father, David Walker, was born in Barnwell District, South Carolina, March 23, 1819, had a fair education, spent his career as a farmer and planter. Grandfather Joel Walker, who died in Florida before Stephen J., his grandson, was born, moved his family to Florida in 1833. His children were: Jesse, James, Berry, David, Joel and Jane, all of whom died in Florida and left large families. The daughter Jane married Stephen Lightsey. David Walker died during the war, and was a Confederate soldier serving in the same company as his son Stephen. He married Miss Caroline Goodman, whose father, Rev. Jesse Goodman, was a Baptist preacher who lived in Lowndes county, Georgia, until moving to Florida, and his daughter Caroline was born in Georgia. Caroline Walker followed her son Stephen to Texas after an interval of about two years, and died at Navasota in 1886. Only three of her eight children reached maturity, the oldest being Stephen J. Emma married William Farquahr and lives in Navasota; and Rosa, who married Robert Moore, died in Navasota and

Stephen J. Walker had an exceedingly limited education. This was due largely to the fact that the war came on when he was about fourteen years of age, and the years which most boys spend in school were devoted by him to the service of the South. The family were all ardent upholders of the Confederacy, and although he was too young for life as a soldier, he en-listed in November, 1861, for three months. He was in an independent company which did guard duty on the coast at St. Marks, and his captain was William J. Bailey. His time expired in February, 1862, and he was out of the service until 1864, when he re-entered as orderly sergeant in Company F of the First Regiment of Florida Reserves under Captain Barwick and Colonel J. J. Daniels. This regiment was engaged chiefly in guard duty in the eastern part of Florida, and was at Madison, Florida, guarding prisoners when the war

Mr. Walker was still a young man of only eighteen years when the war closed, and he resumed civil life as He had been brought up under the institua farmer. tion of slavery, when all the heavy labor was performed by black men, and it was not easy to adapt himself at once to the new economic situation, When nearly twenty-three years of age he decided to come to Texas, and on February 14, 1870, left home, making the trip by a Havana steamer from St. Marks to New Orleans, thence proceeding by rail as far as Morgan City, and thence by boat to Galveston. He was alone, had no capital, and was master of no trade except such as a man of intelligence and with capable hands could perform. He finally arrived in Navasota, and used his trunk to insure his payment of lodging and board at the hotel until he could establish a foothold. For a time he did what work he could find in the town, and then drifted into a lumber camp in Montgomery county. After a year he found employment at logging and coutinued to be profitably identified with the lumber business for about four years. He next moved to Washington county, spent ten years as a farmer in that section, and from there on December 31, 1883, came to Navasota and was employed a year as a clerk for J. M. Shaw & Company in a cotton warehouse. He continued in the same business as a partner of J. W. Rodes under the style Rodes & Walker for four years, and after that the firm was known for seven years as Rodes, Owen & Company. This house did a large general mercantile, implement, and warehouse business, and when the partnership was dissolved Mr. Walker took the warehouse and has continued in that line ever since. In the meantime he had also once more resumed extensive activities as a farmer, and now owns a splendid estate of five hundred acres on Spring Creek, and through his cultivation of corn and cotton crops gives employment to about eleven families.

His part in public affairs has not been without benefit to his community, and while serving as alderman for two different terms the schoolhouse and city hall were constructed. He is a Democrat, and his only fraternal affiliation is with the Knights of the Maccabees. He was brought up in the faith of the Baptist church. Mr. Walker was married in Washington county, Texas, on January 17, 1872, to Miss Josephine Farquhar, whose father, James L. Farquhar, was a Mississippian, who became a pioneer of Texas. Mrs. Walker died April 20, 1892. Her two children were: Annie, who is the wife of Dr. Lewis of Navasota, and has two children, Jessie and Thaddeus; and Miss Ruby Walker, who is unmarried. On March 28, 1893, Mr. Walker married for his second wife Mrs. Mary Bassett, of Anderson. Her father was Dr. G. M. Patrick, one of the foremost men of influence and pioneers of Grimes county. Mrs.

Walker died without children March 16, 1910.

Hal, J. Palmer, M. D. This energetic gentleman, who, at the age of seventy-eight years, with the vigorous step and active mind of a man of sixty, still attends to the details of his large professional interests, and keeps himself abreast in knowledge and sympathy of the new generation amongst whom he survives, first came to Texas in 1857 and has been identified with the medical fraternity of this state in the main since that time. Now, in a hale old age, he is enjoying the fruits of a busy and well-ordered life and sharing the wonderful progress which has been made in this phenomenal commouwealth, almost under his own eves,

Dr. Palmer was born September 20, 1836, and comes of a Southern family and of secession sympathy, and his father, John Palmer, who still survives at the age of one hundred and one years, is "fighting the Civil war yet." The latter was born in the city of Richmond, Virginia, in September, 1813, and is a college graduate and a member of the Eclectic school of medicine. He went to Kentucky from his native state when a boy, and after spending some years at Danville went to Bowling Green, where he married Miss Hannah Curry, the daughter of a big planter of that county. Later he moved to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and then to Montgomery, in that state, and has since made that his home. His only child is Dr. Palmer of this review.

Hal J. Palmer took up medicine first in New York City, as a student under the preceptorship of Dr. John Sneed, right across the street from the Little Church Around the Corner, Plymouth, and there began the practice under his preceptor when he was a lad of but sixteen years. His first medical education was in the

My Hanney son

Regular school and he practiced Allopathy for twenty years, then taking Homeopathy at the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, and graduated there in 1869. Subsequently he attended a course of lectures in the medical department of the University of Missouri, in 1872, and annually for years took post-graduate work in different institutions both of the North and the South. He began his career as a specialist right after the Civil war, trayeling extensively through the Southern states, treating cancers and chronic diseases of women and children. His special studies have been chronic diseases and diseases of females, especially those of the genital organs. After the death of Dr. Sneed, Dr. Palmer returned to the South and to Texas, in 1860, and located in Burleson county, where he was located at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war. He at once enlisted as an as-sistant physician and surgeon with Hood's Brigade, serving under Chief Surgeon Cantrell in and about Gal veston, where he was present at the capture of that city by the Federal troops. Following the close of hostilities, he began a tour of medical practice which took him to Little Rock, Arkansas, thence to Fort Smith and out into the Choctaw Nation, and practiced among the Indians at Muskogee. He went then to New Orleans, and subsequently practiced at different points in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas until 1870, when he returned to Texas. At that time he established him-self at Tanglewood, Burleson county, and he has since practiced at Houston and Galveston, at different points in Harris county, and in Johnson county, and has spent many years at points in Grimes county. During a portion of his long career he has been interested in infirmary work at Brenham with Dr. H. C. Weeks, and in a private sanitarium at Plantersville. He is now established in another at Navasota, and has been eminently successful in his work. He has had no time for politics. His step is still lively, and his energy youthful, his ambition still active and his love for his profession as consuming as in the early years of his practice. He has firmly established himself in the confidence and esteem of the people of his community, and his professional standing is equally high.

While a resident of Erie, Pennsylvania, Dr. Palmer was married to Miss Mary Lewis, who died in Palestine, Texas, leaving a son, Charles W., of Oklahoma City, a jeweler, and married. Dr. Palmer was married at Navasota, July 16, 1898, to Miss Minnie Meinike, and a son, Albert Whitworth, has been born to this union, General Webster Flanagan. Of the surviving "elder statesmen" of Texas, none is better known and entitled to more distinction for his past services than General Webster Flanagan, of Henderson, Texas, He is one of the few remaining public men of the old regime of republicans in the Lone Star state, and a character among the active and forceful participants in state affairs from and after the Civil war until his recent retirement from a federal office. He is the only brigadier general now living appointed by Sam Houston. General Flanagan belongs to the era of pioneer settlement during the republic, was a participant in the events that filled Texas history during the Confederacy, espoused Republican policies when the war ended because of the principle of protection, entered actively into reconstruction politics, sat in the law-making bodies of the state as a representative from his section during the military and republic rule following the war, has been the recipient of favors from the various Republican national administrations in federal offices and has been a delegate to more national conventions of his party than any other man in the United States. As one still living from the old times, General Flanagan merits special recognition in these pages, but at the same time the memorial of history should be extended to include his father, who was in his time hardly less prominent as a factor in larger politics.

Webster Flanagan was born in Breckenridge country, Kentucky, January 9, 1829, and was eleven years old when he came to Texas with his father, Major James W, Flanagan in 1843. In 1844, the family hone was established at Henderson. Grandfather Charles Flanagan made a record of which later generations are proud, as a soldier of the Revolutionary war, and was at one time in charge of a supply train for the colonists. In Kentucky after the war, he was a blacksmith at Cloverport, and a flatboat man, and on the return home one trip down the Mississippi River he contracted cholera, and died in 1840.

Major James W. Flanagan was born in Albermarle county, Virginia, September 7, 1805, and in 1815 accompanied his father, Charles to Kentucky, settling no Boonesboro. A few months of his boyhood was spent in attendance at the "Old Field Schools," but after that his education was of a practical business nature acd self-acquired. For a few years after reaching man-lood, he was a horse dealer along the line of Virginia and Kentucky, subsequently opened a stock of merchandise at Cloverport, doing a successful business, and finally engaged in the river transportation industry which in that era before railroads was one of the most important undertakings to which men of enterprise directed their energies. Eventually he acquired proprietorship of a flotilla of flatboats on the Ohio River, and each year sent these boats ladened with hoop-poles, staves, bacon, beeswax, and other common products of the country adjacent, down the currents of the Ohio, and into the Mississippi, as far as New Orleans, where the flatboats were sold for the lumber contained in them, and the proprietor and his men usually found their way back home on foot, the entire distance of six hundred miles or more. That was his steady vocation, until the battle of San Jacinto had been fought on Texas soil and had brought liberty to the patriot Texans, and then his heart became set on Texas, and he sold out, making arrangements to transfer his residence to the new republic.

Major Flanagan went by boat as far as Shreveport, and then to Slabtown, on the seventeenth meridian, separating Louisiana and Texas, where he established himself as a farmer and merchant. The following year in 1844, and on the ninth day of August, he reached Henderson, which was then a pioneer community. While in Kentucky, Major Flanagan served as justice of the peace and that office gave him a fair knowledge of the law, so that when he located in Henderson, his practice of the law went along with storkeeping and farining, and dealing in land. As a lawyer he acquired a reputation especially as a successful defender of causes. His investment in lands extended widely, and his holdings included several thousand acres about Henderson.

During the war Major Flanagan submitted reluctantly to the part Texas took, and the state went out of the Union in opposition to his advice and counsel. Before the war he had become a factor in politics, and was elected to the lower house, and later to the Senate. Among his varied services as a legislator, should be mentioned the introduction and work in securing the passage of the bill that gave Texas its first insane asylum, and secured an appropriation for the organization and maintenance of that institution. He also secured the passage of a bill chartering the Galveston, Houston & Henderson Railroad, which was never completed. As to his early political affiliation, he possessed the old Whig doctrine of internal improvement by the central government, favored a national bank and a protective tariff, and during the fifties, and in the early sixties, stood with Sam Houston, with whom he was on intimate terms of friendship in opposition to secession. With the outbreak of the war he retired to his farm, established a tanyard, and furnished under contract large quantities of leather to the quartermaster's department of the Confederate government. When the war ended with the result that he had forecast, be gave every evidence of his love for his home people, and with his son saw that they were properly treated, and in the neighborhood over which his influence was most potent during the years following the war, no one can now be found who suffered as others claimed they did suffer from the acts of the federal soldiers. And as an evidence of the esteem for him among his fellow citizens, and an acknowledgment of his conduct and efforts in their behalf, Major Flanagan and J. H. Parsons, a prominent lawyer, and a partisan se-cessionist, were both elected from Rusk county, to the reconstruction constitutional convention of 1866. The acts of that constitutional convention were not recognized by the United States Government, and the State of Texas was accordingly placed under a provisional governor, A. M. Pease, dominated by General Reynolds, and Governor Throckmorton was deposed from office. Under that military rule another constitutional convention was held in 1868, and both Major Flanagan and his son were chosen as delegates to that convention. At the election following the ratification of the Constitution of 1868, and its acceptance by the federal government, E. J. Davis was elected governor, James W. Flanagan lieutenant governor, and Webster Flanagan was elected to the state senate. Such was Major Flanagan's standing in his state, that the legislature of 1869 elected him and Morgan C. Hamilton to the United States Senate, where Senator Flanagan served until March 4, 1875, when succeeded by John Bell Maxey of Paris. In his service in the United States Congress. Major Flanagan was chairman of the committee on post offices and post roads, and was always a friend to Texas people.

Following his retirement from the United States Senate, Major Flanagan left active politics and was not again in political life. His personal affairs, which were extensive, required his attention, while he yet lived, and his death occurred in Longview. September 19, 1887. He is buried beside his first wife in Henderson, in the family plot which was established in 1844 when he lost his first wife. Major Hanagan was in religion a Missionary Baptist, and fraternally affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Major James W. Flanagan was three times married. His first wife was Polly Miller Moorman, a daughter of Rev. James T. L. Moorman, a Baptist preacher in Kentucky, and a nieve of Bishop John Early of Virginia. The elikhen of that marriage were. Laura, who made who died as a died at Henderson, and the died at Henderson and the sand General Flanagan are the two oldest residents of that city. The second wife of Major Flanagan was Mrs. Ware.

The second wife of Major Flanagan was Mrs. Ware. General Webster Flanagan grew up in Henderson, was educated there in the public schools, read law under his father, and in 1851 at the age of nineteen was admitted to the bar under special act of the legislature permitting Roger Q. Mills and Webster Flanagan to practice law. His entrance into the practical work of his profession was immediate, and was continued without interruption until the beginning of the Civil war. General Flanagan served in the Confederate army, though e was opposed to the dissolution of the Union, and when the final surrender occurred, be accepted its result as a foregone conclusion, and entered into the reconstruction movement in the hope of being able to prender some aid in ameliorating the afflictions from which the former Confederate soldiers of the state were almost inevitably bound to suffer.

His election to the constitutional convention of 1868, marked his active entry into politics as a Republican, and the beginning of his long career in public life. In that election he ran twenty-five votes ahead of his father, and when a member at Austin reproved him for some evidence of forwardness, tending to place himself ahead of his ancestor, he replied to the criticism, with a remark that he was the senior member of the delegation from Rusk county, having polled twenty-five more votes than his colleague, his father. The nomination which came to him as associate of his father, gave him great pleasure, and it is one of the rare occurrences in political life that a family should have both father and son participating in the same body where a constitution for the Commonwealth was being made. His election to the state senate enabled him to add his vote to the majority given to his father as candidate for the United States senatorship, and that likewise is an bonor seldom given to a legislator. The Twelfth legislature in which he served was called the "Reconstruction legislature." and he was chosen by the senate as lieutenant governor as the successor of Don Campbell. Before his election to the lieutenant governorship, he was chairman of the committee on internal improvements, and it is a matter of record that he reported from the committee more railroad legislation than ever came from that committee in any other legislature before or since. After a service of a year as presiding officer of the senate he was returned to the senate from his county in 1874, and when the election for the constitutional convention of 1875 was called he was elected a delegate to that body, and thus like his father, participated in the deliberations of two constitutional conventions of Texas. When his term expired in the senate be was not again a candidate and retired to take up a business career. General Flanagan became prominent in promoting the Henderson & Overton Railroad, in 1876 was elected president of the railroad company, and so continued until the line was sold to the International and Great Northern in 1882. In the latter year came his appointment as collector of internal revenue for the Fourth Texas district, with headquarters at Henderson. In 1885 President Cleveland declared him an "Offensive Partisan," and retired him from office. In the four years interim, his attention was given to private business affairs, and soon after his inauguration, President Harrison appointed him col-lector of customs at El Paso, an office he held until the second coming of Cleveland. The President seemed disposed to leave the General in undisturbed possession of his office, but the latter resigned and again resumed private life.

In the campaign of 1896, General Flanagan was very energetic in supporting the candidacy of William Mc-Kinley for the presidency, and secured a delegation of Republicans to the national convention at St. Louis in perfect harmony with the McKinley aspirations, number of years before General Flanagan had made the acquaintance of the great tariff legislator, had sat in several national conventions with him, and knew and sympathized with his political convictions and principles perhaps as closely as any other man in the party. After Major McKinley's election, it was well understood that General Flanagan might select any federal place in Texas, within the gift of the president. Thus the office of internal revenue collector of the Third District came to General Flanagan, that selection having been made because its headquarters were at Austin, where a resident had particular advantages for his family, in the good public and private schools, and the State University. General Flanagan has always been one of the warmest friends and supporters of the State University. When the entire state of Texas was made into one revenue district, the General was retained as collector, and was reappointed by President Roosevelt, and by President Taft, and filled the office until September 1, 1913, a period of almost sixteen years.

There is perhaps one exception to the statement that General Flanagan has attended more national conventions than any other man in the United States, but even so, his experience in this respect is one of the note worthy facts of political history. His first service as a Republican delegate was in the uational convention of 1868, when General Grant was the nominee of his party; however, at that time the delegation from Texas was not seated because the government had not accepted the state constitution of 1866. In 1872 General Flanagan was a delegate to the convention at Philadelphia, and supported General Grant for his second nomination. In 1880 he was one of "306" who voted thirty-six times the was one of the more dealth private times for the nomination of the great solder, and an appropriate medal is among his heritoons for his loyalty to the Union commander. In this convention, General Flanagan made his noted speech— What are we here for??" A speech that has been referred to by public speakers and politicians in public assemblages ever since. In 1884, General Flanagan was a friend and champion of John Sherman for the presidency, as he was also at the Chicago convention of ISSS, and when it was seen that the Mansfield statesman could not be named, he voted with the Texas delegation for General Harrison. In 1892 the national convention was held at Minneapolis, and there General Flanagan aided in bringing about the renomination of Harrison. In this convention an element of the party manifested itself for William McKinley, and thus indicated the rising of a star which was to reach its zenith four years later. In 1904 General Flanagan did his final convention work at Chicago when he supported Theodore Roosevelt for the presidency, and witnessed his nomination. During all this long service of national convention work, and candidate-making General Flanagan was a constant attendant upon state conventions and a member of the state committee and an adviser in the conduct of national and state campaigns.

General Flanagan is a lover of live stock, and has owned some of the best horse blood ever introduced into Texas. In his stable at one time was the celebrated racer "Jack Gamble," and "Highlander," and he brought to the state the first cow from the Island of Jersey, the results of which are still visible on the dairy farms about Henderson and over East Texas.

There are many interesting phases to such a career and character as that of General Plannagan. He is a sportsman in the best sense of the term. His achievements in that direction began early, when as a lad of thirteen years, and within two hundred yards of where his Henderson residence is now located, he killed his first deer. In passing it should be noted that that residence was built in 1848 and is still good for another similar period of existence. The number of deer killed by General Planagan since his first could not easily be reckoned. He has every year gone to the wilds of southwest Texas on deer, wild hog, catamount and other game bunts, and his home is filled with trophics of the chase, including many heads and horns of the antiers tribe. General Planagan affiliates with the same 1855, Shawme Lodge, No. 15, at Henderson, and is the oldest in membership of the order in the state. He belongs to Bonita Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and his membership with the Knights of Honor began in 1875. As a church man he has been a Bantist since 1838.

On December 20, 1853, General Flanagan married Miss Lizzie Graham, a daughter of Major John Edrahman of Nacogdoches. Her death occurred November 20, 1872. Her children were: Webster, of Austin: Charles, who died in Henderson and left a family; Dr. Emmet of DeBerry, Texas; Marian, who died as Mrs. William Elliott, and left four children; Horace B., who married John Ware, and resides in Longview; and Bonnie May, who died the wife of Herbert Vinson, and left a daughter, now Mrs. Thomas of Dallas. In May, 1878, General Flanagan married Miss Sallie

In May, 1878, General Flanagan married Miss Sallie Ware, a daughter of Dr. Levi Ware, whose widow was the third wife of Major James W. Flanagan, as already stated above. The Ware family came from South Carolina, but Mrs. Flanagan was born in Texas. To the second marriage of General Flanagan are the following children: Clarence, a farmer at Flanagan in Rusk county; Bessie V., who died in Austin, May 3, 1908; John Conklin, a farmer and ranchman of Zavalla county, Texas; and Irma, living at home. The family returned to the old home in 1913 and the General says he is fixing it up for his heirs, trusting they may take better care of it than he has and to love it as he has always.

ALFRED WARREN. While his home in San Antonio and Texas has been of only brief duration, Alfred Warren sustains a distinctive relationship to the metropolis of the state as the founder and builder of what is known as the Henry Warren Memorial Art Gallery, and through this institution the career of both himself and his honored father becomes a subject of interest to a state and community far removed from the original scenes of their active careers.

Henry Warren, who was a distinguished American artist, was born in Bath, England, in 1793, came to America in 1806 with his brother William, lived for many years in Philadelphia, and died at the home of his son Alfred in Cheinnati in 1877. When a child he developed talent for drawing and painting, and, though without formal instruction in art, he studied the designs made by others, first using the old wood-cut illustrations in a book on mythology. His excellence in the domain of art extended to all its branches except sculpture. It is said that wherever he went he carried pencil and drawing paper, and sketched many objects which he later painted.

Henry Warren's first oil painting was "Sir Walter Scott's Cottage Door," after Gainsborough, painted in 1815, and is now found in the collection contained in the Henry Warren Memorial Art Gallery at San Antonio. His first regular work as an artist, and the chief source of his livelihood, was as scene painter for the old Chestnut Street Theater in Philadelphia. His brother William was lessee and manager of that playhouse. During many long tramps through the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio, Henry Warren made almost countless sketches and pictures of landscapes. Many of these were drawn in sepia or India ink and are so perfect as to resemble steel or wood engravings. Some of the most interesting of these pictures are of cities such as Trenton, New Jersey, Pitts-burgh, Glens Falls, New York, Marietta, Ohio, portraying those localities as they appeared in the early '50s, and the pictures now have great historical value as local material in comparison with the present appearance of the cities. His range of work embraced many subjects and kinds of art. He painted in oil and water colors, made sepia, pen and ink and pencil sketches, and did a great deal of portraiture, and the few portraits which he sold were the only examples of his art which he did not preserve and which are not to be found in the memorial gallery at San Antonio. Many of his subjects were scriptural and others were taken from characters were scriptural and others were taken from characters and scenes in Scotch poetry, particularly Walter Scott and Robert Burns, and from classical subjects. What the artist himself considered his masterpiece, and one upon which he worked for several years, is the painting called "Hymen's Bower," an idyllic scene of great charm and beauty. One of the interesting small pictures is a drawing of the residence of Nicholas Biddle in Philadelphia, the ancestral home of the famous Biddle family of that city.

Henry Warren married Elizabeth Hamilton, who was born in Philadelphia and ided in that city in 1861. After the death of his wife, Henry Warren retired in 1862 and thereafter lived in Cincinnati with his son Alfred until his death in 1877. He had six children, as follows: William, Henry, Charles, Archibald, Mary Ann, and Alfred, of whom Alfred Warren of San Antonio, now eighty-three years of age, is the only survivor.

Alfred Warren was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1831. For more than half a century, from 1854 to 1906, he was a bookseller and merchant in Cincinnati. His bookstore was a famous place, quaint and interesting, lined throughout with book-filled shelves, and besides was a veritable curiosity shop, abounding not only with everything in the book and stationery line. but in art objects, curios, and the like. When he sold out his store and retired in 1906, the local newspapers called attention to the fact that the children had lost an old friend. From its founding it was a great center for school children, who bought their school books, tablets, slates, pencils, and other supplies, and many men now distinguished in the professions or in business had in their childhood patronized the Warren store, a place which was associated with many happy memories, ing all the years of his business career Alfred Warren was in the same location, although it was enlarged and improved several times. The place was originally 235 Western Row, the name of which was later changed to Central avenue and the number changed to 219. It was a three-story building and in later years he ex-tended his store space and had, besides the entrance at 219 Central avenue, two other entrances around the corner on West Sixth street, the two latter entrances being 271 and 273.

Alfred Warren married Mary Jane Pinkerton, who died February 19, 1881. Of the three surviving daughters Mrs. Elizabeth Warren Ziegler lives in Cincinnati, while Mrs. Martha Warren Grothaus and Mrs. Alpha Warren Hunsdon are residents of San Antonio.

When Henry Warren moved from Philadelphia to Cincinnati he boxed all his collection of art works and had them stored in his son's establishment. There they remained for a long period of years, and neither Alfred Warren nor any of the artist's descendants had any accurate idea of what the boxes contained. The collection became the property of Alfred Warren by mat-ter of inheritance, and when the latter moved to Texas after retiring from business in Cincinnati, he had the many boxes opened and their contents examined. Thus it was discovered that practically the life work of Henry Warren, excepting some of his portrait paintings and his routine work as a scene painter, was contained in the collection stored in those boxes. Mr. Warren called in several competent critics to inspect the pictures, and on the basis of their judgment as to their high individual and average merit he determined not to sell one specimen, and brought them all to Texas. After two years of residence in Austin he followed his daughter to San Antonio, and in the meantime had determined to build a memorial to his father in the form of an art gallery. The Henry Warren Memorial Art Gallery, the result of that determination, was begun in 1912 and finished in 1914. It is located on a beautiful elevation at Alamo Heights in the north section of San Antonio, being situated at the corner of Verbena Road and Terrell Road or Via Madre, and fronting on the last named street. This memorial has perhaps the peculiar distinction of being the only art gallery in the world that has ever been built for the purpose of displaying the paintings and drawings of a single artist. The building is of brick trimmed with stone, and above its main entrance is an art memorial window with the name Warren and the corner-stone has a bronze tablet on which is in-scribed, "Erected to the memory of Henry Warren, artist, by Alfred Warren."

Ulrich H. Rische. One of the most valuable officials of the city of San Antonio is Ulrich H. Rische, alderman from the Fifth ward. With fine old German stock as his ancestry, he has in abundance those qualities which have caused America to welcome with open arms settlers from the Fatherland. Far-sighted and industrious, careful and patient, Mr. Rische makes an ideal city father. He is a successful business man, and, having lived in San Antonio for many years, he has many friends here.

Ulrich H. Rische is the son of Edward and Louise (Griesenbeck) Rische, both of whom were born in Germany. They came to America with the Prince Solms-Braunfels colony in 1846, locating at New Braunfels, in Comal county, Texas. Later they removed to San Antonio, and Edward Rische took an active part in the city's affairs. He served four years as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, going out from New Braunfels, and he was also an enrolling officer from that place. He was city tax collector for four years and was a wellknown Mason and a Knights Templar. He died on the 1st of August, 1898, and his wife survived him until the 15th of May, 1904. Ulrich H. Rische was born in New Braunfels, on the Comal River, May 30, 1855. When he was eight years old his parents removed to San Antonio, obtaining his first glimpse of the city which was to be his future home, on St. Patrick's day, 1866. He grew up in this city, attending St. Mary's College and receiving his higher education from Professor C. Plagge. For forty years Mr. Rische has lived in what was known as "Irish Flat," but which is now called the Fifth ward. He is the head and sole owner of the Rische Bottling Works. a prosperous enterprise which manufactures soda water and other soft drinks. He has three brothers and four sisters living.

On February 1, 1912, Mayor A. H. Jones appointed Mr. Rische alderman of the Fifth ward, to fill an unexpired term, and in 1913, so competent had he proved and so satisfied were the people of the Fifth ward with their representative, that they returned him to the city council by a large majority. He is valued by his fellow councilmen as a hard working and conscientious member. He is a member of the committee on streets, bridges and drainage and of the Commerce street widening committee. He is also chairman of the committee on street cleaning, sanitation and hospitals.

In the fraternal world Mr. Rische is also prominent, being a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at San Antonio, Lodge No. 11, this being the largest and wealthiest chapter in the state. In September, 1913, he received from this lodge a Veteran's Jewel in honor of his twenty-five years' membership therein. He is also a member of the Sam Houston Camp of the Woodmen of the World, a member of the Casino Association, and is one of the oldest members of the San Antonio Club.

On the 28th of February, 1905, he was married to Miss Leile Pearl Woods, and they have one son, Ulrich H. Rische, Jr., who was born March 27, 1910.

THOMAS F. HARDY. The financial interests of Thomas F. Hardy have been varied and his activities have been of a nature proving directly beneficial to the communities in which he has labored in the promotion of commercial and industrial enterprises. As a citizen he has ever wielded an influence for good, but has devoted the greater part of his attention to financial affairs, and is president of the Cameron State Bank, the Burlington State Bank, and the Buckholts State Bank, making his residence at Cameron. Mr. Hardy was born in Barbour county, Alabama, September 30, 1860, and is a son of Joseph E. and Martha A. (Patterson) Hardy. Joseph E. Hardy was born in Bedford county, Virginia, April 30, 1827, and there received a good education of the county of the cou tional training and grew to manhood on the family plantation. As a young man he went to Barbour county, Alabama, where he was residing at the time of the outbreak of hostilities between the states of the South and the North, and, casting his sympathies with the Confederacy, he enlisted in the ranks of the Gray. He participated in a number of engagements and met a soldier's death while with his command in Louisiana, passing away in 1863. Mr. Hardy married Miss Martha A. Patterson, who was born in Stuart county, Georgia, June 21, 1838, and after her first husband's death she married Nathan Watson, a Southern farmer, who died in Alabama. Mrs. Watson passed away in 1875. By each of her marriages there were three children born, the first three being those of the first union: William Hardy, who is now deceased; Thomas F. Hardy; and Edward Hardy, who is deceased; Lula, John and James Watson.

Thomas F. Hardy received his early education in the public schools of Pike county, Alabama, whence his mother had moved after the death of the father, and subsequently he received the benefit of attendance at a private school at Troy, Alabama, following which he became a student in Baylor University, Waco, Texas. He had reached the age of twenty-one years when he laid aside his books to join the world's army of workers, becoming a clerk in country stores. In 1883 he came to Milam county and secured employment in stores in Cameron, and in 1885 was made assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Cameron, a position which he filled for some years before being made cashier. He thus received an excellent training in financial affairs, and in 1906 became one of the organizers of the Cameron State Bank, of which he has since been president, with T. H. Graves as vice president and T. A. Robinson as cashier. This is known as one of the solid and substantial institutions of this part of Texas, and its depositors have been attracted to it through their thorough confidence in Mr. Hardy's integrity and reliability, as well as his keen knowledge of financial affairs. It has a capital stock of $30,000 and surplus and profits of $40,000, and the business has enjoyed a healthy and consecutive growth ever since the bank threw open its doors for business. Brooking no obstacles that could be overcome by determined, earnest and honorable purpose, Mr. Hardy has steadily worked his way upward in the financial life of Cameron, where he is known for his close adherence to a high standard of business ethics. He has been successful in his affairs because he has given to them absolute devotion and is master of every detail of his chosen work. In recent years he has broadened the scope of his activities and at present is president of the Burlington State Bank and the Buckholts State Bank, both of which are well patronized institutions. Possessing all the quali-ties which make a man successful in business, his associates hold him in the highest confidence, and look constantly to him for counsel and leadership.

Mr. Hardy was married at Cameron, Texas, December 5, 1889, to Miss Vance Hefley, of this city, daughter of William V. and Jane (Crenshaw) Hefley, and to this union there have been born three children, namely: Thomas F., who is deceased; William Edwin and Maude Vance. Mr. Hardy ranks with the distinguished representatives of Masonry in Texas, affiliating with the Knights Templar and Shriners, and is also well known in the lodges of the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of the Maccabees. In political matters he is a Democrat, but is not an active politician and has never sought public office, although he has faithfully and conscientiously performed the responsibilities of citizenship as a member of the board of education of Cameron. With his family he attends the Methodist church, in the work of which he has been particularly active, and at this time is serving as steward and as a member of the board of trustees. While he is socially inclined and has a wide circle of warm and appreciative friends, Mr. Hardy is naturally a domestic man, and when not found absorbed in his business affairs is usually located in his home, where he finds his greatest pleasure.

MAJ. RICHARD LYLES, who, in the profession of American law and jurisprudence, has conferred honor upon the legal history of Texas, became one of the early members of the Milam county bar, and throughout the forty years of his connection therewith has maintained a foremost place in its ranks. The law demands not alone a high order of ability, but a superior combination of tact. learning, patience, and industry, and the successful legist must be a man of well balanced mentality, thoroughly familiar with the law and practice, of broad and detailed general information, and be absolutely devoted to his calling. Possessing these qualities, Major Lyles has won a high place in the confidence of the people of Cameron, where he has been engaged in practice since 1874. Major Lyles was born at Russellville, Logan county, Kentucky, December 16, 1839, and is a son of Archibald M. and Harriet T. (Feister) Lyles.

Archibald M. Lyles was born at Rockville, Montgomery county, Maryland, in 1807, and was an attorney by profession, following that vocation successfully throughout life. He died in 1890, in Kentucky, to which state he had removed in young manhood. Mrs. Lyles was born at Leesburg, Virginia, in 1809, and met her death in a railroad accident in 1888. There were eleven children in the road accident in 1888. There were eleven children in the family, namely: John R., Elizabeth A., Thomas H., and Archibald M., all deceased; Martha E.; Richard; Robert J., deceased; William W.; Edward H., who is deceased;

May C., and one child who died in infancy

Richard Lyles was educated in the public schools of Kentucky until he was eighteen years af age, at which time he became a student in Lebanon University Lebanon, Tennessee, being graduated from that institution in 1857. He was admitted to the bar of his native state during that same year, and engaged in practice at Russellville until the outbreak of the war between the South and the North. He at first enlisted for service in the Fourteenth Regiment, Tennessee Infantry, and was discharged in September, 1861, following which he re-enlisted in the Ninth Kentucky Infantry, Company A, and served for an extended period therein. In 1864 he raised the Thirteenth Kentucky Cavalry of which he continued as major until the close of hostilities. Major Lyles' service was an exceedingly active one, and during it be was wounded no less than three times, first at Greenbriar, Virginia; second at Fairview, Kentucky, and third at Nolin Creek, Kentucky. He was known as a gallant soldier and efficient officer, and won the respect of his fellow officers and the admiration of his men. When the war had closed he returned to his practice at Russellville, but there continued for a short period only, and in 1874, seeking a new location, came to Texas and settled at Cameron, Milam county, Here he has built up a large and representative practice, having upon his books the names of some of the leading business houses and corporations in this part of the state. His connection with a number of important cases has made him a familiar figure in the courts, where his broad knowledge and high accomplishments have won him success. Major Lyles assisted in putting through the T. C. & W. Railroad, now a part of the M. K. & T. Railroad, in 1892, which operates between Granger and Maustin, and was the general manager and right-of-way man for this road. While Major Lyles carries on a general practice, his specialty is criminal law, in which he has been very successful.

Major Lyles has been married three times, his first union being with Mary E. Jones, in 1857, who died in 1881, the mother of two children; Richard M. a resident of Temple, Texas, who married Elma Robinson and has two children: Lee M. and May G.; and Irby M., who married Ida V. Bradley, and has four children— Richard, Ida, May V. and Nadine. Major Lyles' second marriage was to Mrs. Idelia Looney, in 1882, who died in 1894, there being two children to this union-Richard, Jr., who married Edna Rose, lives in Waco and has three children—Francis D., Celia R. and Jose-phine; and Robert M., who is single and his father's law partner. Major Lyles was married in 1898 to Lucy P. White, at Waco, she heing a daughter of Captain White of Falls county, Texas, and three children have been born to this union-Gladys D., Hazel K. and Mattie C., all of whom are single and live with their parents.

Politically, Major Lyles is a Democrat, and his abilities have been recognized repeatedly by the people who have sent him to positions of responsibility and trust, in which he has failed in no way to discharge the duties devolving upon him. He has frequently served as special judge of the district court of Milam county, and was also county attorney of Caldwell county, Kentucky, for four years. In 1912 Major Lyles was appointed superintendent of the Confederate Soldiers' Home by Governor Colquitt, but after thirteen months resigned his position in order to concentrate his energies upon discharging the duties of his profession. He is a member of the Texas Bar Association and is held in high regard by his fellow members, who recognize in him a man who has the highest regard for professional ethics, a valued associate and a worthy opponent. With his family he attends the Episcopal church. He owns his own residence at Cameron and is never as happy as when in his home, surrounded by his children. He is now reaching his seventy-fifth year, yet still takes an active interest in his profession, in affairs of importance to the country and in those movements which are making for the betterment of his community. Major Lyles' life has been an exceptionally full one and in none of its activities has he failed to bear himself creditably.

MARVIN C. OVERTON, M. D. Now regarded as the physician with the largest practice in Lubbock county, Dr. Overton has the distinction of being the first doctor to locate permanently in the town of Lubbock. Within the town limits there were only one hundred and twenty five persons to whom he could offer his services when he opened his office. Dr. Overton by his own work paid his way through college and it has been his constant aim to keep his ability and knowledge up to date, which he has done by close attention to his work, and by postgraduate courses since beginning practice. He well deserves his success.

Dr. Marvin C. Overton was born in Morganfield, Kentucky, June 13, 1878. His father, George B. Overton, was also born in Kentucky and now resides in Lubbock, Texas. His profession has been the ministry of the Methodist church, to which he has devoted his time and energies for a period of fifty-three years. Rev. Overton is a graduate of the Pennsylvania University. His ancestry was English, of early colonial settlement, members of which bore arms during the Revolution and subsequent generations moved from Virginia to North Carolina and then to Kentucky. The maiden name of Dr. Overton's mother was Susan J. Lawson, a native of Kentucky, and now a resident at Lubbock. She was the mother of six children, all of whom are living, the doctor being the fifth in order of birth.

He attained his early education in the public schools of Louisville, Kentucky, graduated from the high school of that city, and pursued his medical studies and took his degrees in 1902 from the University of Louisville. He served one year as interne in the University hospital after his graduation, and in the spring of 1902 arrived at Lubbock to begin practice. In 1905, having established himself firmly in the regard of a large number of patients. Dr. Overton went east to continue his studies by post-graduate work in the New York Polyclinic. In 1910 he again took a vacation from his work and was a student in the Chicago post graduate schools. Besides his large private practice he has the post of examiner for a number of old-line insurance companies, and secret orders. He is also, together with his partner, Dr. C. J. Wagner, now conducting the Overton Sanitarium, an institution with twenty beds, modernly equipped for medical and surgical cases.

During 1909 Dr. Overton was president of the First National Bank of Lubbock, and since locating here has always been closely identified with public affairs and business, so far as his large practice would permit. He is independent in politics, and at the present time is serving as an alderman. For four years he was school trustee, and for several years served as county physician of Lubbock county. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, including the Knights Templar degree, with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Knights and Ladies of Security, and professionally belongs to the county, district, state, and the American Medical Association. He is now vice president of the Lubbock County Medical Society. His church is the Methodist.

On June 25, 1902, at Louisville, Kentucky, Dr. Overton married Miss Georgie T. Robertson, a native of Kentucky, and a daughter of G. W. Robertson. The three children born to their marriage are: Marvin C., Jr., born in Lubbock, April 29, 1903; George, born in Lubbock, November 7, 1905; and Philip R., born at Lubbock, March 26, 1908.

James Watson, D. D. S. An able and popular representative of the profession of which he is a successful exponent at Cameron, the judicial center of Milam county, Dr. Watson here has built up a large and substantial practice, the extent and character of which attest his technical skill as well as his distinctive hold upon popular confidence and esteem.

Dr. Watson comes of stanch Southern lineage and was born at Brundidge, Pike county, Alabama, on the 17th of November, 1874. His father, Nathan C. Watson, was born in Macon county, Alabama, in 1830, and his mother was born at Cuthbert, Randolph county, Georgia, in 1836. Her death occurred in 1875, only a few months after the birth of her son James, whose name introduces this article. Nathan C. Watson married Martha Sellers, who survives him and who resides at Banks, Alabama. The death of the husband and father occurred in 1902, and he had long been numbered among the representative farmers and honored citizens of the state of Alabama. The three children of his first marriage are Lulu, John and James, and the one child of his second union is Hugh, who remains with his widowed mother.

Dr. Watson attended the public schools of Brundidge, Alabama, until he had completed the curriculum of the high school, and for the purpose of preparing himself adequately for his chosen profession he then went to Nashville, Tennessee, in which city he entered the department of dentistry in fine old Vanderbilt University. In this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1907, and from the same he received his covered and well carned degree of Dector of Dental Surgery. In the same year he came to Texas and engaged in the practice of his profession at Cameron, where he has since maintained his home, where he has finely appointed offices, with the best of modern equipment, and where his practice is of appreciative and representative order. He and his wife are popular in the leading social circles of their home city and here they are zealous members of the Presbyterian church. The Doctor is a stalwart in the local camp of the Democratic party, is liberal and progressive as a citizen, but he is devoted to his profession and has had no desire ne is devoted to his profession and has had no desire for the activities of politics. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World.

On the 23d of April, 1913, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Watson to Miss George Bowman, daughter of George W. Bowman, of Monroeville, Texas, and she presides as the gracious chatelaine of their attractive

As a lad he led the life of a cowboy, drifted naturally into the business of speculating in cattle, shipped at one time more stock than any other man from Milam country, and is now serving ably in public office, having been appointed justice of the peace of precinct No. 1, in 1913.

Justice Nabours was born in Milam county, September 17, 1856, and is a son of Jerry M. and Mary (Stewart) Nabours. His father was a native of Alabama, born in 1817, was a local Methodist minister, served as county assessor had collector of Milam county prior to the Civil war, and as district clerk and county clerk following the close of that struggle until the two offices were separated, and was known as one of the foremost

The country schools of Milam county furnished Robert A. Nabours with his educational training, but at the age of seventeen years he laid aside his books to face the world on his own account, accepting employment as a cowboy, a capacity in which he was employed during the following ten years. He then turned his attention to farming for two years, and while thus engaged became a speculator in cattle, and shipped and raised more stock than any one individual in Milam county. For a number of years his ventures were crowned with a high order of success, but circumstances over which he had no control caused the failure of several of his large transactions, and for a time he was compelled to accept heavy reverses. However, it is not in Mr. Nabours' nature to become disheartened, and he has since recuperated his losses and is known as one of the substantial business men of his community. He has always been straightforward in his dealings, has been content to accept conditions as he has found them, and to make the most of whatever chances have come his way. His associates have had every reason to trust him implicitly and his reputation is that of a man of high business integrity and stalwart personal worth. It was probably the possession of these qualities that gained him the appointment as justice of the peace of precinct No. 1, in 1913, an office in which he has shown himself capably fitted for the discharge of its responsibilities, and a mau of impartiality and excellent judgment. His polities coincide with the principles of the Democratic party, in the ranks of which he is known as a strong and influential factor in Milam county.

Mr. Nabours was married March 15, 1877, at the home of the bride in Milam county, to Miss Rebecca Potect, daughter of J. B. Potect. She was born in Mississippi, but at the age of eleven years was brought to Milam county, and this has since been her bome. Mr. and Mrs. Nabours have a comfortable home at Cameron and are the parents of five children—Lula P., May Ethel, Willard, Parolee, and Homer. Of these, Lula P. May Ethel, Willard, Parolee, and Homer. Of these, Lula R. May Ethel married Herbert Massingale, a farmer of Milam county, and has four children—Robert, LeRoy, Rebecca, and Mildred. Willard married Mollie Lascoski, of Cameron, is an auditor of Oklahoma, and has one son, Don. Parolee married C. M. Davis, a civil engineer, and they reside at Fort Worth and have one child, Martha Zoe,

This daughter in May, 1913, at the baby show held in Cameron, was awarded the first prize for beauty for children between two and four years of age, and this honor is naturally one of which the parents are proud.

John R. Young. A Cameron merehant and business man whose success has been much greater than the brevity of his years, John R. Young is proprietor of the Red Cross drug store and has many interests which identify him permanently with that community.

John R. Young was born near Brenham, in Washington county, Texas, April 6, 1886. His father, Dr. Fd. win R. In that year Mr. Young established the Red Cross drug store in Cameron, opening for business on the 1st of June, and has since built up a large trade and has made this store headquarters for the public in that town. Mr. Young is also a stockholder in the Cameron Herald.

He is a steward in the Methodist church, and in politics is a Democrat. At Jacksboro, Texas, on November 9, 1903, Mr. Young married Esther Cabbler, whose home was originally in Kansas. They are the parents of one child, Lucile.

CAPTAIN DANIEL McDOWELL SHORT. The late Captain Short, whose death occurred at Center, in Shelly county, Texas, on April 8, 1902, was a distinguished Texan, one of the strong characters of his day and generation, and his death made a chronicle marked with regret by people throughout the state. After leaving his native commonwealth of Delaware, Captain Short was a citizen of three successive governments—the Texas Republic, the Confederacy and again of the United States, and he fought valiantly as a soldier in two wars.

Captain Daniel M. Short was born at Smyrna, Delaware, December 14, 1819. At an early age he lost his parents, but received a liberal education, according to the standards of his time. Coming to Texas in 1842, he first located at Marshall in Harrison county, but later went to Sabinetown in Sabine county, where he pursued the study of the law and was admitted to the bar in 1845, at Milam, Sabine county. He had made the acquaintance of and became a lifelong friend of O. M. Roberts, one of the great men of the state, becoming afterward governor of Texas, and Senator of the United States, besides being Colonel of three regiments in the Confederate States Army. Theirs was a deep and gen-uine friendship that lasted all their lives, more than half a century, and was reciprocally advantageous. Cap-tain Short became a partner in law practice with Mr. Roberts in 1846 at Shelbyville, which was then the county seat of Shelby county. At the breaking out of the Mexican war he received from President Polk, through Congressman David S. Kaufman, in whose office he had studied law at Sabinetown, a lieutenant's commission in the United States army. He was attached to the Twelfth United States Infantry, and served in General Scott's army throughout the war, being presumably in command of his company in all the battles of the campaign. Returning to Shelbyville, he resumed the practice of law, and soon became a prominent figure in state politics. He was a delegate to all the state and congressional conventions in the decade preceding the Civil war and for twenty years afterward. He had deep convictions on political and economic questions, and belonged to the school of the strict Constructionists of the Federal Constitution as applied to the rights of the States. He was an active associate with his friends, O. M. Roberts, James Pinckney Henderson, and other patriots holding similar political views, in leading the opposition in Texas to Sam Houston and his followers on the issues of annexation of Texas and later of secession. In 1859 Captain Short was elected and served as a member of the famous eight legislature, whose roster contained the names of some of the most distinguished men that Texas has produced, men who were leaders in shaping the destiny of the state. It was this body which elected Louis T. Wigfall United States Senator over Sam Houston, a fact in which Captain Short took much pride and was entitled to much credit. He was also elected and served as a member of the famous secession convention at Austin, his old law partner, O. M. Roberts, being its president. From Austin, when the work of the convention was completed, he hurried back to Shelby county, raised and became cap-tain of the first company raised in the county, Company E, which was assigned to duty in the Third Regiment of Cavalry, commanded by Colonel Greer, and in the brigade commanded by General Hogg. This company unfurled commanded by Orderal Hogg. Ins company until the first Confederate flag in east Texas, and a finer or better equipped body of men the sun never shone on. That flag was made by Captain Short's mother-in-law, Mrs. Melita Ballard Ratliff, the Captain having married her daughter, Miss Evaline Ballard. During the remainder of the war Captain Short served with distinction in the Trans-Mississippi Department. In 1866, he was elected a member of the Eleventh legislature, which elected O. M. Roberts United States Senator over John Hancock, who had renegaded to the North during the war. Later he again served in the legislature, in 1873. This legislature was acclaimed "the deliverer of the people," as indeed it was. From 1866 to 1892 Captain Short was chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of his district and county, and continued a leading and powerful influence in state politics until 1896. From 1875 until 1886 he also served as inspector of Covernor O. M. Roberts, for with exponiment from the control of t

In 1886 Captain Short formed the law partnership of D. M. Short & Sons, consisting of himself and two sons, Hugh B. and Carroll B. Short. The latter son is since deceased. Captain Short remained in the practice of the law, in an advisory capacity, almost to the time of his death, which occurred April S, 1902. From Shelty-ville, the old county seat of Shelby county, when he host by fire most of his books and papers as well as his home, he moved, in 1876, to Center, the new seat of justice, and made his home there during the remainder justice, and made his home there during the remainder

Throughout his career, a conspicuous figure and a prominent participant in many stirring pulie dramas, he carried no arms, had no personal encounters, and was immensely respected by all the people with whom he became intimately associated without having his veracity impeached or his integrity questioned even by his bitterest camer.

Hon. Hugh B. Short. For a period of more than prominent in east Texas, as soldiers, lawyers, statesmen and as vigorous, public spirited citizens, always leaders in their respective communities.

The Hon. Hugh B. Short, the surviving son of Captain Daniel M. Short, and who has added to the distinction of the family in the field of law, was born at Shelbyville, Shelby county, Texas, April 24, 1856. His early schooling was received in Shelby county, and his experience in public affairs began at an early age, when he became a page in the house of representatives at Austin. Through Congressman Herndon he received an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point. After passing the required examination he started for West Point, but was compelled to return when attacked by a "white swelling," which has caused him to be lame ever since. Through a long invalidism he took up the study of law, pursuing it most of the time while in bed, and was admitted to the bar at Center in 1882. A few years later, he became an associate of his father, and since that time has been a very busy practitioner, handling a large business in both civil and criminal practice. His record places him in the front rank of east Texas attorneys, and since he took up the practice he has participated in at least one hundred trials of men charged with murder, and more than five hun-dred involving titles to land. Before beginning pracdred involving tries to said. Before organing practice and when only twenty-one years of age, Mr. Short was appointed clerk of the Circuit Court of Shelby county, and subsequently was elected without opposition, so that he served four years in that position. In 1884 he was appointed by Governor John Ireland district attorney, and filled out an unexpired term, with great credit to himself and much benefit to the state.

The home life of Mr. Short has been delightful and happy. Mrs. Short, who before her marriage was Miss Mattie Weatherred, was born in Sabine county, a daughter of the late Senator W. W. Weatherred. Their five children are: Hoya B. Short, who is now a practicing

In 1864, when he was six years of age, the family had come to Texas, settling first in Cass county, where they lived about one year, and then moved to Emory, in Raines county, Reared on a farm, James W. Woosley engaged in that vocation for bimself after his marriage and spent ten years as a tiller of the soil in Raines and Hopkins counties. In 1891 he was induced to enter mercantile life as a clerk for his father in Whitewright. He sub-sequently became a partner in the firm of J. B. Woosley & Son. His entry into the business gave the house new life, and its volume of trade and popularity extended beyond the commercial limits of Whitewright and led to the establishment of the son in a business at Leonard. In 1898 he opened a hardware and implement house in the last named place, while maintaining his residence at Whitewright until 1905, when J. B. Woosley & Son sold out and the son moved to Trenton and opened a similar business as J. W. Woosley & Son, thus making an opportunity for his own son ney a son, thus maxing an opportunity for his own son to engage in business. This store, chief of its kind at Trenton, and ranking with the leading stores of Fannin county, began business February 1, 1905, and was driven with all the force of a veritable engine of was criven with all the local of a visitorie dis-humanity until its machinery became clogged by dis-ease, but work was stopped only when the fires of energy refused longer to burn. Few men have been endowed with the qualities possessed by the late James W. Woosley, who was familiarly known by the name of "Louis," a nickname which, given him in boyhood, was associated with him throughout his life. He weighed 225 pounds, was possessed of a snnny disposition, won the confidence and good will of all, made friends with children and chums with his own, and was a type of jolly good nature. His business enterprises were successful because he was a real merchant and a born business man. He had convictions, was nevertheless inoffensive in his expressions of opinion, and observed no practice of policy in local polities. He was as forcibly against a bad man as be was for a good one who sought office, and, although a Democrat, he did not always lend his aid to candidates of that persuasion. He had no ability as a speaker, but talked freely and with carnestuess. He was not a professor of religion, but admitted the good influence of the church. The estate left by him was a monument to his achievements and told in stronger terms than words of the genius of a man of small agnital and who for many years was a borrower.

James W. Woosley married Emma Huffman, who was born in Hopkins county, Texas, in 1864, a daughtel of David M. and Louisa (Voss) Huffman. David M. Huffman, who was second in a family of seven children, three boys and four girls, was born in Alabama, in November, 1830, and died after a career as a farmer and slave-holding planter in 1868. early youth a horse had fallen on him and left him a cripple, but in spite of this handicap he gave good service as a Confederate soldier and was a guard at Tyler throughout the war. Louisa Voss, who was sixth in a family of six children, two boys and four girls, was born in Middle Tennessee in April, 1830, and died in 1888. Besides Mrs. James W. Woosley, the children of David Huffman and wife were as follows: George, who died in infancy; Mary, whose husband, F. H. Peoples, a farmer of Point, in Raines county, died, leaving her two children, whose names are Low and David S.; David Ora, who died in infancy; H. L., whose home is in Holdenville, Oklahoma, and whose first wife was Martha Hargroves, and second wife was Marietta Johnson, was the father of five children, and the three now living are Maud, Lawrence and Lester; and David M., Jr., who lives in Hope, Arkansas. The children of James W. Woosley and wife were as folchildren of James W. Woosely and wife were as Johnson Clarence, whose individual career is sketched in the following paragraphs; James M., who died when about five years of age; Bettie Lou, who is the wife of about n've years or age; Bettle Lou, who is the whie of Mr. R. Foster, a capitalist and retired farmer and a director of the First National Bank of Trenton; and bessie P., who is the wife of James Butler, engaged in farming near Krnm, in Denton county.

Clarence Woosley, who is now manager of the business of J. W. Woosley & Son at Trenton, and who is descended through three or four generations of successful merchants and business men, was born December 6, 1883, at Point in Raines county, Texas. He was educated at Whitewright, in Grayson College, and grew up in the atmosphere of mercantile affairs. On becoming of age he was made a partner in the Trenton business, and became manager after his father's death. and in 1911 established a branch house at Leonard, in addition to which he exercises general supervision over the estate, In 1913 Clarence Woosley entered the field of banking as organizer of the Guaranty State Bank of Trenton, an institution with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars, with himself as president; Al H. Birdsong as cashier; and R. M. McCollom and W. R. Johns as vice presidents. Fraternally Mr. Woosley is master of Trenton Lodge of the Masonic order, and has sat in the Grand Lodge of the state.

On May 1, 1907, Mr. Woosley married Albertine Wilson, and they are the parents of three children: Bettie Lou, Louis Wilson and Evelyn W. Mrs. Woolsey is a daughter of J. D. Wilson, a farmer and banker of Trenton. He was born at Hickman, Tennessee, October 24, 1847, a son of Albert Gallatin Wilson, who died in 1851 at the age of thirty-five years. J. D. Wilson is a grandson of Adam Wilson and a greatgrandson of William Wilson, whose brother, James Wilson, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Inde pendence. The bodies of Adam and Albert G. Wilson both lie in the Vernon Cemetery at Hickman, Tennes-see. The wife of Albert G. Wilson was Miss Weems, a lineal descendant of the "Wemyss" of Wemyss Castle lineal descendant of the "Wenryss" of Wennyss Castle in Scotland. After the death of her first husband she married Rev. W. A. Williams, who brought the family to Texas during the fifties. The three Wilson children were: Albertine, who died as Mrs. John Tate; James D. and Albert, of Weatherford, Texas. The children of the Williams marriage were: Belle, who married Sam Roberts; Susie, who married Bli Thomas; Robert, Bud and William.

James D. Wilson was brought up on a Texas farm, and acquired a liberal education. Though only fourteen years of age when the war broke out, he served in the Confederate Militia and in the regular military establishment of the Southern government under General Gans and after the close of hostilities between the North and South took up school teaching, also drove oxen to a freighting wagon, crossed the plains in 1868 with a herd of cattle for the Colorado miners, and after his return engaged in farming. His career as a farmer was followed with work as a merchant in Trenton, and along both lines he prospered. Mr. Wilson subsequently became the founder of the Wilson Planters Bank in Trenton, and is accounted one of the ablest financiers of his section, James D. Wilson mar-ried Elizabeth Harrison, a daughter of Andrew Harrison of Georgia.

C. C. Moore. The citizenship of Kaufman county has for a long period of years been enriched by the presence of C. C. Moore and his family. Mr. Moore, who now lives retired at the town of Kemp, bore a valiant part in the war between the states, while his father gave up his life during the Mexican war of the forties. Mr. Moore has lived in Kaufman county for forty-five years, and has reared about him a substantial prosperity and has long been one of the most influential citizens.

C. C. Moore was born in Calhonn county, Alabama, August 30, 1844, a son of Robert and Martha (Maroney) Moore. Both parents were born in North Carolina, and the father was a farmer who established a home in Alabama, and went out from that state as a volunteer in the army during the war against Mexico, was stricken with disease and sent to a hospital in Galveston, where he died either in 1847 or 1848. him were his widow and a family of seven children, of whom C. C. Moore was the youngest. The mother herself died in 1853, when the youngest son was only nine years of age. The father was a Democrat and both parents were Baptists.

Until he was fifteen years of age Mr. Moore remained in Alabama and attended common schools, but in 1860 went to Pontotoe county, now Union county, Missis-sippi, and was employed in farming activities until about the middle period of the great war. In August, 1863, he volunteered for the service of the South in Company C of the Second Alabama Cavalry. This regiment was under the command of Brigadier General Ferguson, who is one of the two living Brigadier Generals of the Confederate army. The commander of the regiment was Colonel Earle, an Alabama man who en-listed as a captain of an Alabama company during the Mexican war, and that company had as a private Robert Moore, the father of C. C. Moore. Though C. C. Moore was a resident of Mississippi during the war, when he enlisted he went out with an Alabama company and the regiment of which Earle was colonel. In 1864 he was transferred to Company A of the Twelfth Mississippi, under Colonel Inge, but Brigadier General Ferguson still commanded the brigade. At Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in May, 1865, Mr. Moore was taken a prisoner, and soon afterwards paroled. The principal engagements in which he fought were many of the battles of the Atlanta campaign and he was afterwards in Georgia and the Carolinas at Salisbury, Colliersville, and many minor engagements, but went through the service without a wound.

When hostilities were concluded between the North and South, he took up farming in Mississippi for about four years, and in the fall of 1869 came to Kaufman county, Texas. A poor man, he made the best of his opportunities and resources, and was engaged in farming on rented land until about 1888. In the meantime he had done a great deal of work as a carpenter, which was his regular trade and after 1888 for three years did a regular business as a carpenter and builder. In 1892 Mr. Moore was elected commissioner and justice of the peace at Kemp, and held the commissioner's office for six years. The office of justice of the peace is still his, and his service has been continuous with the exception of about eighteen months during the years 1898-99. In 1910 Mr. Moore assisted his son, C. C. Moore, Jr., in getting established in the grocery trade at Kemp, and gave his advice and assistance with the at Reinp, and gave his device and associated with the enterprise for about a year and a half.

On December 3, 1867, in Union county, Mississippi, Mr. Moore married Mary Ann Collins, who was the fifth in a family of eight living children born to Tie and Martha (Collins) Collins, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of North Carolina. Mrs. Moore was born in New Albany, Mississippi, and had her education in that locality. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Moore are briefly mentioned as follows: J. E. Moore, who was born in Mississippi October 11, 1868, is prominent as a banker and business man, being president of the First National Bank of Kemp, of which he was one of the organizers; by his marriage to Miss Mollie Rogers he is the father of five children: Forrest, Jesse Egbert, Richard, Annie Mae and Mary Bess. Eddie, who was the second child, died in infancy. Mae, the third, born in Kaufman county, Texas, is the wife of Dr. J. M. Still, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this publication. E. C. Moore, who was born in Kaufman county, is manager for the Walker-Smith Grocery Company at San Angelo, Texas, married Miss Minnie Nash, daughter of a Methodist minister, and they have two girls, Frances and Mildred. C. C. Moore, Jr., above mentioned, was born in Kaufman county and at the present time has charge of the grocery department of the firm of Haynie Bros. Grocery and Dry Goods store; he married Miss Jodie Shaw, and has two children, Joe Crosby and Shaw. Della, the sixth of the children, is a native of Kaufman county, and the wife of O. C. French, in the insurance business at Fort Worth, and has one daughter, Maedell. Furman, the youngest, also horn in Kaufman county, is now serving as assistant postmaster at Kenp. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are both regular members of the Methodist church, his politics is Democratic, and his fraternal relations are with the Masonic Order and the Knights and Ladies of Honor.

RT. REV. JOSEPH PATRICK LYNCH, D. D., Catholic Bishop of the diocese of Dallas, and North Texas. Bishop Lynch is one of the youngest Catholic Bishops in America, and succeeded the late Bishop Dunne as head of the diocese of Dallas because of his approved efficiency and capability such as made him the logical choice for the episcopal office. It was at the request and direct efforts of the priesthood in North Texas that the appointment of Father Lynch to the vacant See of Dallas was advised, and it was in response to this general desire of the clergy that the church gave him the distinction of this appointment.

Joseph Patrick Lynch was born in Berrien county, Michigan, November 16, 1872, one of the children in the family of John V. and Veronica J. (Betham) Lynch, He was graduated in 1891 from St. Charles' College, at Ellicott City, Maryland, and in 1895 from St. Mary's Seminary at Baltimore. His studies in theology were continued at the Kenrick Seminary at St. Louis where he was graduated in 1900 and was ordained to the priesthood on June the 9th of the same year.

He began his active career in the sacred ministry as associate Rector of the Cathedral at Dallas, where he labored with zeal and success during the years of 1900 and 1902. In the following year he was appointed the Rector of St. Stephen's church, Weatherford, Texas, and during his incumbency here he was untiring in extending the activities of the parish, and built a church that is a monument to Catholicity in North Texas.

From 1900 to 1907 he held the position of Procurator Fiscalis of the Dallas diocese. In 1909 he built St.

Rita's church, Handley.

He also founded and built St. Edward's church, school and rectory at Dallas.

These works and others stamped him as one of the ablest administrators and executives in the diocese. On June 19, 1910, Bishop Dunne appointed his his Vicar General, and on the death of this prelate, he was appointed the administrator of the diocese of Dallas, "Sede Vacante." It was through the position where he held the practical direction of the fiscal and religious affairs of the diocese that he came by a natural progress to the office of Bishop. The priests of North Texas expressed their preference and through the proper channels con-veyed their desires to Pope Pius X who appointed him on June the 18th, 1911, as Bishop Dunne's successor. He was consecrated in the magnificent Cathedral at Dallas on July the 12th, 1911, by Archbishop Blenk of New Orleans, assisted by the Bishops of Galveston and Little Rock, in the presence of twelve other Bishops, over a hundred priests, and a throng of people crowding the Cathedral and overflowing into the streets. The ceremony was reported in the prints of the day as the most splendid and gorgeous religious pageantry ever witnessed in Texas.

The episcopal residence is at 4846 Swiss avenue, Dallas, Texas.

JOHN WOOTEN. The thirty-five years' service of the Wooten family in the office of county and district clerk of Chambers county is a record which has seldom been equalled in the annals of county officials in this state, and the long continuance in this important position has been accompanied by faithful and intelligent service in behalf of the people. The office is now ably administered by John Wooten, a son of the original clerk, at whose death the administration was transferred first to his widow, and then to the present incumbent.

The family is one of the ploneers. Chambers would be young as a constraint of the plone of the plone of the plone of the H. (Kilgore) Wooten. His father was born in Florida and his mother in Texas. The father on coming to Texas was engaged in farming and saw milling, and subsequently entered upon his work as deputy county and district elerk of Chambers county, and in 1878 was appointed to the office as chief, and by successive re-lection filled that honored post until his death on July 16, 1903. The grandfather of John Wooten was also ramed John Wooten, and he was one of the pioneer part of the plane of the property of the plane of the

Mr. John Wooten has spent practically all his life either in Wallisville, the old county seat, or the town of Anahuac, where the present seat of justice is located. Until he was fourteen years of age he attended the public schools, and his first occupation was in helping his father in the performance of his official duties. For two years he was his father's deputy. On the death of his father his step-mother was made head of the office, and held the position nominally from 1903 to 1906, although John Wooten performed practically all the duties. Mr. Wooten was deputy to his step-mother during that time, and in November, 1906, was regularly decied to the office, and has since continued by subsequent re-election to the present time.

On October 16, 1907, Mr. Wooten married Miss Bertha White, a daughter of James T. White III, one of the successful live stock men of Jefferson and Chambers counties.

Jacob H. Suber. During a period of twenty-eight years the late Jacob Hardy Suber, Jr., was identified with the farming and stock raising interests of Brazos county, and throughout his life contributed to the development and progress of this part of Texas. He was a son of Jacob Hardy Suber, Sr., who accompanied him to Texas in 1878, both having come from Newberry District, South Carolina, where the father was born Angust 13, 1825, and the son October 21, 1853, The elder man died January 30, 1906, and the younger November 6 of the same year. The father of Jacob H. Suber, Sr., was Jacob Suber, who was born September 11, 1793, and died April 16, 1852. He was of German descent or extraction, and married Catherine Souter, and both passed away in South Carolina. Their children who grew up were: Laura, who married Mr. Burley; Annie, who married Mr. Folk; David F., who died in South Carolina, and Jacob H.

Jacob Hardy Suber, Sr., acquired his education in the country schools, and grew up a farmer, giving his attention to agricultural pursuits throughout his career. He was a resident of South Carolina during the Civil War and gave service in some capacity to the Confederate cause. He married Miss Eugenia Gunter, who died in South Carolina, August 27, 1861, their children being: Lucy, who married C. P. Dickert and resides at Titton, Georgia; Jacob Hardy, Jr.; Lilla, who married J. W. Hill, of Newberry, South Carolina; and Edwin M., who died in 1903, at Athens, Georgia.

Jacob Hardy, Jr., was brought up in the cenutry of Newherry District, South Carolina, where he acquired a country school education and passed his boyhood and youth in assisting his father in the work of the farm. He was married there December 18, 1873, and five years later came to Texas, the family coming by rail to Bryan and making its permanent location near the Agricultural and Mechanical College. Mr. Suber first purchased a small tract, with modest improvements, and in addition to his farm work accepted whatever honorable employment presented itself, including the hauling of wood and supplying the college with its annual consumption of rucl. He cleared up many acres of the timber land around the college, and as the years passed acquired a large area of land in the county, becoming one of the most extensive farmers of his section. He had been been consumed to the most extensive farmers of his section. He had been consumed to the farm. In the cattle business he devoted his time to growing the common beef stock and bought, sold, fed and shipped stock to the market toward the end of his career.

Mr. Suber always evidenced himself as a man favorable to education in every form. He was unde a member of the beard of menagers of the old Texas Womnen's College, now the Baptist Academy, at Bryan, and was on the beard from the inception of the school for several years. For a short time he served as constable of his precinct, and his public services were characterized by the utmost integrity and devotion to duty. In local matters he exerted his influence in favor of good morals in politics. He was a Prohibitionist in practice and principle and was a consistent member of the Baptist church, while his fraternal affiliations were with the Ameient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of Honor.

Mr. Suber married Leila Richards, a daughter of Berry and Elizabeth (Kitchens) Richards, the latter a daughter of John Kitchens. Of the Richards, children, Lula married James L. Henderson, of Center Point, Arkansas; Leila married Mr. Suber; and John Berry is a resident of Newberry District, South Carolina. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Suber were: Eugene Hardy, of Brownwood, Texas; Elizabeth, who was educated at Bryan and at Mary Nash College Alsendand, and is now a popular school teacher of Bryan; Leila, who is the wife of R. B. Adams, of Oakwood, Texas; Miss Corrie, who attended Mary Nash College, Sherman; Jacob H., who was killed by contact with an electric light wire at college, December 14, 1913, and left a widow of six months, who was formerly Miss Annie McMillan; John Richards, of Dallas, Texas; Miss Bertie, who graduated from Sam Houston Normal school, class of 1914, and is now engaged in teaching; and Lawrence Sullivan, Thomas Goodwin and Milton Parker, all residing at home.

WILLIAM R. SANDERS. This representative merchant and progressive citizen of Bryan, the judicial center of Brazos county, has been a resident of the Lone Star State for nearly forty years. He has been engaged in business at Bryan since 1896, and for the preceding decade he had been a merchant at 10a, Grimes county. The three years immediately prior to this found him as one of the successful farmers in the vicinity of Anderson, the county seat of Grimes county, and his entire active business career has been marked by circumstances of the country of purpose, so that he has the all times commended the respect and confidence of his follow men.

William Reuben Sanders was born in the state of Georgia, on the 7th of March, 1850, and from the aze of five years until he had attained to years of maturity he was a resident of Bibb county, that state, where he was reared under the invigorating discipline of the farm. The disrupted conditions in Georgia incidental to the Civil war caused him to find his educational opportunities during his early youth somewhat limited, as the schools suffered from the same conditions that affected the state in general. In Bibb county his marriage was solemnized and there he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until the time of his removal to Texas, the while he assumed the virtual care of his brothers and sisters after the death of the honored parents

In 1876 Mr. Sanders set forth for Texas, in company with his immediate family, and Navasota was the original destination. His financial resources at the time were limited, and during the first three years of his residence in the state he farmed on rented land, in Grimes county, as already noted. At the expiration of this period he engaged in the general merchandise business at Iola, where he built up, by effective service and fair dealings, a prosperous enterprise. After the lapse of ten years he sold his business to one of his brothers and removed to Bryan, where he became associated in the purchase of the general merchandise business of the firm of Merritt Brothers. In the earlier years of his operations here the business was conducted under the title of Sanders Brothers & Company, and the enterprise is now carried forward under the firm name of Sanders Brothers, his brother James B, being his valued associate. Mr. Sanders has been distinctly aggressive and enterprising in his business activities and his success has been pronounced, as is shown by the fact that he is a stockholder in each of the two wholesale mercantile houses of Bryan-a director of the Lawrence Wholesale Grocery Company, his brother James being a member of the directorate of the First State Bank & Trust Company of Bryan. Mr. Sanders has shown a loyal interest in all that touches the general wellbeing of his attractive home city, especially in popular educational facilities. He has been a most zealous member of the local board of education, of which he has been president since 1910. His political allegiance is given insistently to the Democratic party, and both he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist church.

John Hilliard Sanders, father of him whose name introduces this review, was a native of North Carolina and was a lad of about eight years at the time of the family removal to Bibb county, Georgia, his father, William Sanders, having there passed the remainder of his life and having been sixty-two years of age at the time of his death, about the year 1854. The maiden name of the wife of William Sanders was Barnes and she was of English lineage. Of their children Mark continued his residence in Georgia until death, and he reared his family in Crawford county, where he died and where a number of his descendants are still to be found; Mattie, daughter of William Sanders, became the wife of John Sharp and was a resident of Crawford county, Georgia, at the time of her demise; and James Hilliard Sanders was the other child who attained to maturity.

James Hilliard Sanders wedded Miss Lucinda Me-Michael, daughter of Reuben McMichael, a scion of staunch Scotch stock, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Lawrence. James H. Sanders died in the year 1871, and his widow passed to the life eternal in 1874. Of their children the eldest is William Reuben, of this sketch; Emma is the wife of William Thomas, of Navasota, Texas; Ella, who became the wife of John H. Jewett, died in Georgia; John H. is a resident of Iola, this state; James B. is associated with his brother William R. in business at Bryan, as has already been stated in this context; Maggie, who became the wife of Dr. Nowlin, died at Iola, Texas; and Adial Augustus maintains his home at Iola. In December, 1874, was solemnized the marriage of William R. Sanders to Miss Susie McGehee, daughter of Dr. McGehee, of Griffinville, Georgia. Mrs. Sanders died at Iola, Texas, in 1886, and is survived by three died at 101a. Lexas, in 1-30, and is survived by children—william Olin, Waldine and Adaline, all residents of Bryan. In April, 1889, Mr. Sanders wedded Miss Lizzie Burnett, whose father was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war and who came to Texas from Louisiana, having become a successful agriculturist in the Lone Star state. Mr. and Mrs. Sanders have four children-J. E. Claire and Earl N., who are connected with their father's mercantile business, the former in the capacity of bookkeeper; and Lillie Fay and Harold D., who remain at the parental home. J. E. Claire Sanders, the eldest son, married Miss Doris Locke.

JOHN E. ASTIN. This well known citizen and representative business man of Bryan, Brazos county, is another of the native sons of Texas who has accounted well to himself and to the state in the matter of large and worthy achievement, and he is a scion of one of the old and honored families of the Lone Star commonwealth, his father having been the late James H. Astin, and his brother, Hon. J. Robert Astin, at present a member of the state senate, being individually represented in this history, the sketch of his career giving further data concerning the family.

John Ethelbert Astin has been a resident of Bryan during the major part of his active career and is identified with a number of the most important business enterprises of this attractive little city. He was one of the organizers of the Lawrence Grocery Company, which is here engaged in the wholesale grocery business, and is president of this corporation at the present time, besides which he is a director of the City National Bank of Bryan and a stockholder in the Parker-Astin Hardware Company, which here conducts a business of both wholesale and retail ramifications. He was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and continued to be actively concerned with agricultural operations in his native state until 1913, when he sold his landed estate, the same being in Brazos county. He is known and honored as one of the progressive citizens and representative business men of Brazos county and is well entitled to recognition in this history of his native state.

Mr. Astin was born on a farm near Mumford, Robertson county, Texas, on the 16th of October, 1872, and his earlier educational advantages included those afforded by the excellent public schools of Bryan. These were supplemented by his attending the Hill Business College, in the city of Dallas, and the celebrated Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York. At the age of twenty years he instituted his independent operations as an agriculturist, and in this connection his energy and progressive policies brought to him definite success, though, as previously stated, he has maintained his home at Bryan during the major part of his active career and has here been closely concerned with leading business enterprises.

Reared in the faith of the Democratic party, Mr. Astin has been uncompromising in his allegiance to the same and he has given active service in behalf of its cause. His father was a distinguished representative of the party in Texas, and was likewise a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war. John E. Astin himself was a delegate to the Democratic state convention of Texas in 1906, as was he also to that of 1910. He and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church and he is affiliated with the Bryan lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

At Brenham, Washington county, Texas, on the 9th of April, 1907, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Astin to Miss Mollie White Harrison, daughter of the late Henry K. Harrison, who was a representative of Washington county as a soldier of the Confederacy and who was president of the Washington County State Bank at the time of his death, which occurred March 11, 1914. He came to Texas from Alabama and was a sterling pioneer of the Lone Star state, his age at the time of death having been sixty-eight years. His wife, whose maiden name was Juliette Shepherd, preceded him to the life beyond, her death occurring January 26, 1910. They are survived by three sons and five daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Astin are popular and representative figures in the leading social activities of their home

THOS. M. CUNNINGHAM. Among the important factors in the development of Roberts county, Texas, and classed among its wealthy and influential citizens, none are deserving of more honorable mention than Thomas M. Cunningham, president of the Bank of Miami. Mr. Cunningham is to all purposes a Texan, for, although not born here, he has spent almost his entire life within the borders of the Lone Star State, has been reared and educated here, and has been a witness to and a participant in the wonderful growth and development which have marked it during the last several decades. Mr. Cunningham was born in North Eastern Alabama, February 11, 1859, and is a son of William J. and Tilitha (Baxter) Cunningham, natives of Eastern Tennessee and Alabama, respectively, and both members of wellknown and highly respected families. His father, almost from boyhood, was a prominent planter and farmer, and up to the time of the outbreak of war between the North and the South worked his vast cotton fields with slave labor. Like thousands of others of his fellow-southerners, the close of the war found him stripped of his fortune, a martyr to the great Lost Cause, and he decided to locate in a new country and there endeavor to rehabilitate his fortunes. The bitterness and prejudices engendered by the great struggle made it un-desirable for him to cross the Mason and Dixon line, and accordingly he set his face toward Texas, and after a long and tedious journey, the greater part of it overland, arrived in Hamilton county, in September, 1869. Here be found many neighbors from his old home, who like himself had lost everything, and being a clever mechanic he took up the occupation of carpenter and assisted in building many of the homes necessary to accommodate the emigrants. Subsequently he moved to Johnston county, and there he continued to reside during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in his forty-ninth year, in 1880, at Cleburne, where his remains now repose. He was married in Alabama to Tilitha Baxter, who was born October 20, 1835, in that State, and reared, educated and married there, and she survives her husband and is now making her home with her daughter at Miami. In his youth, Thos. M. Cunningham attended the public schools of Cleburne, after leaving which, like many other young men of the great Southwest, he took up the stock business. For several years he followed the life and fortunes of a range rider, or cow-boy, his skill as a horseman and in the use of the lariat enabling him to easily secure profitable employment. However, he had aspirations and ambitions far above those of the average range rider, and it was not long before his hard work and careful saving made it possible for him to embark in the cattle business on his own account. His first venture was in Johnston county, where he took up stock raising and farming, but subsequently he moved to Tarrant county, thence to Dallas and Hill counties, and finally to Roberts county. As he made each move he increased the size of his holdings, and now owns two ranches in Roberts county, comprising many thousands of acres of fine grazing ground, which he has leased out to reliable parties. On his retirement from active participation in stock raising, Mr. Cunningham came to Miami, and here became one of the organizers of the Bank of Miami, which he has since been president, a substantial financial institution of this city, whose stockholders and board of directors all make their home here. He has interested himself in various other enterprises of an extensive nature, and his activities have been essentially of a business and financial character, although he has not neglected the duties of citizenship, and has served three terms of two years each in the capacity of county judge of Roberts county, where he has displayed his ability to handle the affairs of public life. His political affiliation is with the democratic party, and he has ever been stanch in his support of its principles and candidates. With his family, he attends the Baptist church.

Mr. Cunningham was married at Archer City, Texas, in October, 1884, to Miss Fronie Cooley, daughter of J. W. Cooley, also an early pioneer of Texas, now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have had no children, It is but natural that Mr. Cunningham should have a deep-rooted faith in the future of Texas, for the marvelous development that has gone on under his eyes has been of such a nature as to inspire confidence. Many of the prosperous and flourishing towns and villages that are now great centers of industrial, commercial and educational activity have come into being since he rode the ranges in the sombrero and chaps of the "cowpuncher," while the productiveness of the farming country has been brought to a state where it promises great things for the future. He has never hesitated to express his views along these lines, and by word and pen has done much to encourage settlement in the State of his adoption.

Walter Wipprecht stands in a varied relationship with the business and public community of Bryan and Brazos county. In 1904 he was elected to the office of tax collector of the county, and has since been re-elected four times, a fact which indicates the confidence reposed in him by the people of that section. Mr. Wipprecht is an expert cotton man, and acquainted both with the scientific and the practical side of agriculture. He is general manager of the Bryan Press Company, and as president of the Bryan Telephone Company has directed the affairs of that public utility with much profit to the stockholders and increase of good service to the community.

Walter Wipprecht was born at Sisterdale, Kendall. county, Texas, January 3, 1864. A scholarly man him-self, he is a son and is descended from a line of scholarly ancestors. His father was Rudolph Wipprecht, who died at Seguin, Texas, in 1891, when sixty-seven years of age. The elder Wipprecht was born in Saxony, Germany, at the town of Rudelstadt, where the family name had been for many generations. He left Germany in 1849, coming to Galveston and thence to the old town of Indianola, whose history and existence came to a termination with the disastrous flood of many years ago. Rudolph Wipprecht was a graduate of Jena University, and was especially proficient in the Spanish language, and some of his Spanish translations done after coming to Texas are now to be found in the State Library. In Texas he taught school for a number of years, and in Germany had been in the customs service. Rudolph Wipprecht was married in Kendall county to Miss Kapp. Her father, Ernest Kapp, who came from the town of Minden, Prussia, was an educator and the author of several philosophical works, who died in Dueffeldorf, Germany. Ernest Kapp married a Miss Cappel. The children of Rudolph Wipprecht and wife were: Ida, wife of I. Japhet of Houston; Paul, who is connected with the department of agriculture at Austin; Walter and Elsbeth, of Bryan.

Walter Wipprecht has lived in Brazos county almost continuously since 1881, when he entered the Agricultural and Mechanical College. After graduating in the class of 1884 be took the first post-graduate course offered by that institution in 1885, receiving the degree of Bach-elor of Science, and for two years was an instructor, being assistant in chemistry and physics. Subsequently he went abroad, and was a student in the University of Jena, Germany, where his father had previously graduated. He took special courses in chemistry while abroad, and remained in the prosecution of his higher studies from 1887 until 1889. After returning to Texas Mr. Wipprecht was appointed to the position of the first chemist for the Texas Experiment Station, and was engaged in that important work for about two years. He then went to the Louisiana Sugar Experiment Station at Audubon Park, near New Orleans, and opened a chemical laboratory under the state government. Returning to Bryan he was engaged in the drug business as junior member of the firm of James & Wipprecht, his partner being M. H. James. After a few years in that line Mr. Wipprecht engaged in the cotton compress work, and in 1897 was one of those who organized the Bryan Press Company, of which he has since been manager. In 1906 the plant of the company was destroyed by fire, but owing to the prompt and energetic business methods of its managers, a new press was in operation within ninety days from the date of the disaster. The company's facilities are equal to one hundred bales of cotton per day, and during the season is run at its full capacity. Mr. Wipprecht is interested in farming in his rich agricultural district, carrying on a general and diversified plan of operation, and has spent much time and money in the improvement of his building, and in increasing the soil value of his estate. He is also one of the directors of the Parker-Astin Hardware Company of Bryan.

Mr. Wipprecht first entered the field of local politics in 1904, with his election to the office of tax collector, as the successor of J. J. Adams. He is a strong believer in higher education, and has decided convictions as to the principles of maintaining all state institutions upon an independent basis, and free from political or other prejudicial influence. In line with this policy he was chairman of the committee appointed to defeat at the polls the senate joint resolution No. 18, which threatened the independence of the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Bryan. He was sent to Austin by the city of Bryan to bring the legislature of 1913 on a visit of inspection to the college. Mr. Wipprecht affiliates with the Sons of Hermann, and supports the Lutheran church

On June 15, 1892, he married Miss Ethel Read, a daughter of Dr. R. W. Read of Texarkana, Texas. Their children are: Miss Ida, a student in the Texas State University; Read, Carl and Walter.

Joe B. Reed. A resident of Texas since 1870, Joe B. Reed first came to the state in 1869, and for a brief time prospected at Galveston, and subsequently located in Corsicana. For nearly forty years Mr. Reed has been a resident of Bryan, was connected with the cotton business at that point for a number of years, and has been in the insurance business ever since. The life and accident insurance agency conducted by him represents some of the oldest and best known companies, and enjoys a large share of the business credited to similar agencies in this part of the state.

Mr. Reed is a native of Massachusetts, and came to Texas from New York City. He was born at Hub-bardston on December 31, 1847. The first sixteen years of his life were spent in his native state, on a farm, and his schooling was obtained at Canadaigua, New York, and later in the Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie. A year and a half was spent in New York City as a clerk, and when a young man with considerable business experience and ability he started out to carve his own fortune in the world, he turned his eyes toward Texas. His old New York employer, C. W. Adams, was located in Galveston, and it was that fact which caused young Reed to consider Texas as the field of his future operations. After locating at Corsicana, he was in the dry goods business a year, and in July, 1871, moved to Comanche, where he was in general merchandising business a year and a half. Moving from there to Rockdale, which at that time had recently become the terminus of the I. & G. N. Railroad, he started in business there as a furniture merchant, and subsequently was proprietor of a hotel and restaurant. Mr. Reed moved to Bryan in 1874, and became associated with his father in law, Col. A. C. L. Hill, in the cotton business. Colonel Hill was a commission merchant, who did business all along the line of the Houston and Texas Central, and was one of the prominent business men of Bryan from the time it first sprung into prominence as a commercial center, with the completion of the Houston and Texas Central Railway to that point. The cotton business continued to be the line in which Mr. Reed was chiefly interested for eighteen years. He then started in the life insurance work, at first with the Mutual Reserve Life Company, and subsequently became representative for the Southwestern Life of Texas, his present company. He is one of the pioneer agents of the Southwestern Life, and the first policy he wrote for the company was number two hundred.

Mr. Reed is well known in fraternal affairs; ISSI at Bryan he joined the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of Honor and is still with both, and has been Grand Recorder of the Ancient Workmen in Texas and Supreme Representative to the Grand Lodge. He has represented the Knights of Honor in the State Meeting, and was an officer of the Grand Lodge. In the Knights of Pythias Mr. Reed has represented the order in the Grand Lodge of the state, and is master of finance for his own lodge. He is the record keeper for the Knights of the Maccabees, and has also been in the Grand Lodge of that organization. For many years he has been clerk of the Woodmen of the World, has represented it at the head camp of Texas. In both Odd Fellowship and Masonry he has served as secretary of his own lodges, and is secretary of the Royal Arch Chapter. Mr. Reed was brought up under Democratic influter. Mr. Reed was bloom up hadd belined at the mee, has supported that party regularly, but has never been an aspirant for any public position. His parents were Unitarians, and Mr. Reed was at first of the same faith, but since living in Texas' has been a member of the Christian church. He is one of the leading men of Bryan, is a member of its commercial club, and at one time served as collector for the club. Governor O. M. Roberts, during his administration, commissioned Mr. Reed as major in the Texas militia. During all the years of his residence at Bryan he has interested himself in every movement for the betterment and improvement of the city, and not only as a public spirited individual for the larger phases of civic work has he been prominent, but his practical charities and helpfulness to the poor and those who need counsel has been almost without limit, and no record could be made of the thousands of kindly acts he has performed for his fellowmen.

Mr. Reed was married in Corsicana, Texas, in June, 1870, to Miss Carrie Hill, daughter of Col. A. C. L. Hill, who came to Texas from Arkansas, where he was a planter and slave holder, but who was born in the State of Maine. Colonel Hill died in Bryan during the nineties. The maiden name of his wife was Sarah Manley who died at Bryan. Mrs. Reed, who died in June, 1904, without children, was one of five children, as follows: Frank, Helen, Lillie, Daisy, and Mrs. Reed.

The family to which Mr. Reed belongs is of Revolutionary stock, and came from old England to the New World. Grandfather Reed was Micajah, of Massachusetts, and a farmer by occupation. Major George W. Reed, father of the Bryan business man, was born in Petersham, Massachusetts, was a farmer, and married Lydia Smith, a daughter of Samuel Smith of Barry, Massachusetts, a pioneer New Englander in lineage, and a farmer by calling. Of the Reed family Mr. Joe B. Reed is the last of the line, even from Micajah Reed, his grandfather. Major Reed had the following children: Frederick, who was the first to grow up and who spent his life and died at Hubbardstown, Massachusetts; Charles H. F., who early went to sea, became a captain of a vessel, subsequently engaged in brokering and as a speculator in New York City, and spent his last years in California, dying in San Francisco.

ALBERT WADSWORTH WILKERSON. The cashier of the City National Bank of Bryan is preeminently a business man, has devoted all his time and energy to banking since he was a boy of seventeen, and his success is due to this concentration and to his exceptional capabilities in that field. Mr. Wilkerson came to Bryan in 1902 and assisted in the reorganization of the old Merchanta & Planters National Bank into the City National Bank, and since that date has beld the post of cashier. Associated with him in the work of reorganization were G. S. Parker, Ed Hall, and E. H. Astin. Mr. Wilkerson came to Bryan from Austin, where he had been for thirteen cyars identified with banking, and had entered the City National Bank at the age of seventeen, and was assistant cashier when he left. A. P. Wooldridge was president of the bank during Mr. Wilkerson's connection therewith.

James L. Fountain gathered what might be termed a pick-up education during the war period, his boyhood experience being similar to that of the average country youth, barring the flavor of military activity that pervaded the years of his early boyhood. He began life as clerk in Selma, Alabama. He later studied dentistry and took a course of training in the New Orleans Dental College, after which he practiced his profession in Dallas county, Alabama, coming to Texas in 1875. He biss also served in a similar capacity in the public schools, and he is now a member of the Board of Trustees of the Bryan Baptist Academy. Mr. Fountain is a Democrat by birth, and in 1876 he cast his first presidential vote for Samuel Tilden. He has since voted for practically every regular nominee of the party. He has played a fairly active part in local and district politics, and in 1901 was elected to the lower house of the state legislature, serving as a member of the 27th assembly. He later served from the same district as a member of the 28th, 29th, 32d and 33d legislative bodies. When first a member Mr. Fountain was assigned to the appropriations committee and the educational committee, and he was active and help-ful in legislation favorable to the A. & M. College.

In 1886 Mr. Fountain was married in Bryan to Miss Mary Calhom, who came to Texas as a child and the niece of Colonel Yarborough of Grimes county. She died on November 17, 1892, the mother of Frances, now the wife of Edwin P. Price, who is a resident of Chicago and has one son, Edwin P. Price, Jr.

The late Marx Marcus died at Wichita Palls, May 12, 1905, when fifty-four years of age. He was a man of excertional enterprise, of an ambitious spirit which had carried him successively through all the vieissitudes of business experience, and together with industry had a character as a man of conviction and sterling ideals of honor. After coming to America he was patriotic and public spirited in all his relations with civic affairs, and in his death his community lost a man whose place was hard to fill. He took a keen interest in Wiehita Falls, and during his long residence in Texas gained and retained numerous friends. His widow, who still survives, is a resident of Dallas, Texas, and is now sixty years of age. They were the parents of seven children.

MARION O. NIX. There is no one official of Falls county to whom the community is more indebted for practical and permanent improvements in county affairs than to Marion O. Nix, county treasurer. His earnestness, honesty and unassuming ability have retained him in office during two terms, and the final result of his faithful and progressive service is not only to firmly establish him in the confidence of the local public, but to give him a place among the men who may be named as the builders of the great commonwealth of Texas. Mr. Nix was born in Dallas county, Arkansas, April 15, 1848, and is a son of Isham J. and Frances W. (Berry) Nix. His father, a native of Franklin county, Georgia, was born August 28, 1822, and in his native county was for a number of years engaged in farming. Subsequently he migrated to Arkansas, where he resided for some years, and in 1877 came to Texas, this state being his home from that time until his death in 1898. He devoted his entire life to agricultural pursnits, and was known as an industrious workman and a public-spirited citizen. He married Frances W. In 1877 he accompanied his father to Texas, and was employed on farms in various capacities until 1898, when he was thrown from a mule, and in the fall broke the knuckle bone from his hip, which has made him a cripple ever since. In 1900 Mr. Nix received the election to the office of the justice of the peace of Chilton, an office which he filled satisfactorily for six years, and following this spent four years as a clerk in a mercantile establishment in that city, being so engaged at the time of his election, in 1910, to the office of county treasurer, an office to which he was re-elected in 1912. He has discharged the duties of his office with zeal, honesty and ability, and has established a record for notable vigilance in safeguarding public office, of praiseworthy enthusiasm in official service, and of splendid adherence to high ideals.

On August 31, 1873, Mr. Nix was married in Dallas county, Arkansas, to Miss Lethea R. Toone, and to this union there have been born eight children, namely: Robert T., Walter N., Lawrence C., Frank M., Charles E., John R., Lucian M. and Ira, of whom Charles E. is deceased. BENJAMIN L. L. TAYLOR. Falls county is an exceptionally well governed commonity, made so by the efficient and unselfish services of those who have been elected to posttous of public trust, and among the officials who found Benjamin L. L. Taylor, justice of the peace resident of Marlin since 1900, he has had experience in official and business life, and this, combined with natural ability, keen discernment and a knowledge of human nature, enables him to maintain the high standard and dignity of his office. Judge Taylor has spent his entire life in Falls county, having been born here on his father's farm, February 24, 1871, a son of Rev. Isaac and Amanda (Ruble) Taylor.

Rev. Isaac Taylor was born in Kentucky, and was a child of four years when taken by his parents to Illinois, the family settling in the vicinity of Springheld, where the lad was reared and educated and adopted the occupation of farmer. He was twenty-four years of age when he came to Texas and settled in Falls county, and his subsequent career was spent here as a farmer and minister of the Methodist church, and here his death occurred in 1895. He was married first in Texas to Miss Amanda Ruble, who was born in Falls county in 1831, and she died in 1875, having been the mother of three children: May, Benjamin L. L. and Caledonia. Mr. Taylor's second marriage was to Miss Cazady English, of West Falls, Falls county, and she still survives and resides at Chilton. There were no children by the second union.

The public schools of Falls county furnished Benjamin L. L. Taylor with his educational training, and until he was nineteen years of age he applied himself assiduously to his studies. Following this, he spent four years in assisting his father in the cultivation of the homestead place, and then went to Blevins, where he accepted a position as bookkeeper in a mercantile establishment. He was so occupied for a period of five years, and then came to Marlin, having been elected district clerk, a capacity in which he acted acceptably for six years, and upon the expiration of his term of office turned his attention to the insurance and cotton business, a venture upon which he concentrated his activities until 1910, when he was elected justice of the peace of Marlin. He has continued to act in this capacity to the present, and his management of the affairs of his office has been such as to win him universal commendation.

Judge Taylor was married November 16, 1890, at the home of the bride near Holland, Bell county, to Miss Cora Bowers, daughter of Daniel and Anna Bowers, of that county, and seven children have been born to this union: Ruth, Roy, Ronald, R. L., Ramonia, Reynold and a babe. Judge Taylor is a Democrat in his political views, and has been active in his support of his party's policies and principles in this section. His fraternal affiliations are with the Woodmen of the World, the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and his religious faith that of the Methodist church, When he is able to put aside the duties of his office and take a vacation, he goes on hunting and fishing trips, but his greatest pleasure is found in his home, and he is the owner of a comfortable residence at Marlin.

Charles D. Fant. Under the conditions and organization of today, the fire department of any progressive community worthy the name is one of the most important in the municipal service, and its management requires rare abilities of an executive nature, good diplomatic powers in the handling of a large body of men, the bravery and courage of a soldier and the broad judgment and directing powers of a general. All of these qualities were taken into consideration when Charles D. Fant was chosen assistant chief of the Marlin Fire Department, November 6, 1913, since which time he has continued to act in his official capacity. Mr. Fant was born in Henry county, Alabama, November 22, 1873, and is a son of Terrell C. and Mattie M. (Hamilton) Fant, the former born at Ansonville, South Carolina, in 1846, and the latter in Dale county, Alabama, in the same year. Mr. Fant, a farmer by vocation, brought his family to Texas in 1879 and settled at Waco, here continuing in agricultural pursuits up to the time of his death in 1905, the mother surviving until 1911. They were the parents of six children, as follows: Samuel, who is deceased; Low M., who is now Mrs. J. M. Lockridge, of Waco; John W., a prosperous retired farmer of Fort Worth, Texas; Terrell, who is a farmer in McLennan county; Charles D., of this review; and one child who died in infancy

The early education of Charles D. Fant was secured in the public schools of McLennan county, and his youth was devoted to a variety of pursuits, in all of which he displayed a spirit of enthusiasm and determination to succeed. When he was twenty-four years of age he embarked in business on his own account, becoming the proprietor of a grocery establishment at Erath, McLennan county, where he was subsequently made postmaster. After two years he disposed of his interests there and went to Muskogee, Oklahoma, where he was also engaged in the same line of business and was deputy sheriff of Muskogee county during his residence there. He resided in Oklahoma until April, 1911, when he came to Marlin and founded a meat market, which he conducted for nine months, then selling out to engage in the restaurant business. Three months later he disposed of this and became a dealer in horses and mules, but in 1912, when he joined the Marlin Fire Department, he retired from business affairs. On November 6, 1913, he was appointed assistant chief. The assistant chief is a man of fortyone years, vigorous, wide-awake and experienced, and promises to assist to maintain the service at its past standard of superiority, and incorporate into the system the methods and improvements indicated by the advaucement of science and mechanics.

Mr. Fant is a member of the Masons, the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America. His business affairs have been successful in a material way and he has shown his confidence in the future prosperity of Falls county by investing in land here, being the owner of a fine ranch of sixty-four acres. A consistent member of the Presbyterian church, he takes an active and helpful interest in its work. In political matters Mr. Fant gives his unreserved support to the Democratic party, but has never found time to actively engage in politics as an office seeker. He is unmarried.

Morris A. Marcus. Among the progressive younger business men who through their activities are developing the commercial and industrial interests of Wichita Falls, one of the ablest is Morris A. Marcus, son of the late Marx Marcus, and now directing head of the People's Ice Company, the largest manufacturing concern in this section of Texas. Mr. Marcus has been identified with this enterprise since its beginning, and its success has in no small degree been created by his energy and man-

Morris A. Marcus is a Texan, and was born at Tyler in Smith County, May 7, 1878. When he was three years old his parents moved to Wichita Falls, and after attendance at the public schools he was sent to New York to attend Packer College. He did not remain to graduate, but returned to Wichita Falls to enter business with his father, and since the latter's death has been treasurer and secretary of the People's Ice Company. The original plant which was at first considered large enough to take care of all demands, was found inadequate as the business continued to grow and on May 1, 1913, the new plant was ready for occupancy, a structure covering two acres of land with a capacity of one hundred and ten tons of ice daily. Thirty men are employed in the business, fifteen teams are used in delivering the product, and the equipment is of the latest and most highly improved pattern manufactured. Mr. Marcus is one of the most progressive and energetic men of Wichita Falls, and has other relations with local business affairs. In political matters he is a Democrat, but is not a politician except where the welfare of his community has been concerned. He is a master Mason, and affiliation of the community has been concerned. ated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On May 25, 1902, at Weatherford, Texas, Mr. Marcus was united in marriage with Miss Glennie Barry, a was united in marriage with Miss Gleinie Barry, a native of Texas and a daughter of Dr. William and Rosie Barry, her father being deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Marcus: Adele, born in 1903 at Abilene, and now attending school in Wichita Falls; Lawrence, born in 1904 at Abilene and also a public school student; and Kathryne, born at Wichita Falls in 1909. It would be difficult to find a more enthusiastic booster for Wiehita Falls, its people, its opportunities and its climate, than Mr. Marcus, for, to use his own words, he has "seen the town grow from a shoestring and expects to see it continue to prosper." One of its best features, to his way of thinking, is its climate. It has specially impressed itself upon him as a lover of outdoor life and sports.

Francis A. Nort. One of the prosperous business enterprises of Marlin which is meeting with prosperty under able and effective management, is the Marlin Steam Laundry, of which Francis A. Nort is proprietor. He has been identified with business interests here only since July, 1913, but has impressed himself upon the community as an energetic and progressive business man and a citizen who may be relied upon to help his new locality in every possible way. Mr. Nort is an Arkansu by nativity, born in Crawford county, July 31, 1872, a son of Cyril W. and Leathy (Fortester) Nott.

Mr. Nott comes of Revolutionary stock, one of his ancestors having been a soldier in the patriot army during the War for American Independence. His father was born in Washington county, Arkansas, and came to Bell county, Texas, in 1875, here settling on a tract of land and engaging in agricultural pursuits, in which he continued during his active career. At this time he is living somewhat retired, making his home at Temple, Bell county. Mrs. Nott, who was born near Greenville, South Carolina, in 1852, passed away in 1911, having been the mother of three children: Francis A.; Phoebe, who married B. F. Giles, of Temple, and has two children—Beatrice and Sybil; and Florence, who married T. F. Prater, of Temple, and has two children—Bernice and Mabel.

Francis A. Nott attended the public schools of Temple, Texas, until he was seventeen years of age, at which time he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and continued as a tiller of the soil until his thirty-first year. At that time he turned his attention to mercantile lines, and also eugaged in the laundry business, and in July, 1913, came to Marlin and purchased the Marlin Steam Laundry. He has steadily developed this into one of the successful enterprises of the city, attracting a large custom by good workmanship and prompt fidelity to every engagement. His plant has been equipped with the latest and most highly improved machinery known to the business, and is now valued at $4,000. A thoroughly progressive and self-made man, Mr. Nott has been the architect of his own fortunes, fighting his own way steadily up the ladder of success from a humble position among the world's workers. He has gained the reputation of being a man of the strictest integrity, and his associates have every reason to have confidence in his business ability. When the Progressive party was organized in 1912, Mr. Nott became a supporter of that organization, and although he has not been an active politician has continued to support its principles and candidates. With his family he is a member of the Baptist church. Fraternally he belongs to the Praetorians and the Modern Woodmen of America, but prefers the pleasures of the home circle to those to be secured in fraternal orders.

STLYESTER S. MUNGER, M. D. Few families of Texas are better known than that of Munger, whose members have been identified with the history of the state since 1828. Men of the name have honored the professions, business, the military and public and civic life, and always they have been found contributing to the material progress and advancement which have made the great state what it is today. A worthy representative of the name is found in the person of Dr. Sylvester S. Munger, one of the leading medical practitioners of Marlin, a man whose thorough training, inherent ability and devotion to his profession have made his career one of rapid and consecutive advancement. Doctor Munger, was born in the city of Houston, January 1, 1869, and is a son of the late Judge Sylvester S. and Margaret Josephine (McGowan) Munger. Judge Sylvester S. Munger was born at Colchester, Connecticut, June 3, 1821, and came to Texas in 1838, settling in Fayette county. He was in the civil service of the Republic of Texas while the seat of Government was at San Felipe, and became a member of the Milam Guards, of Houston, under Captain Ridley, during the raids by the Mexicans in 1838-40. In an article written by Judge Munger in 1899, under the title "Texas Sixty-One Years Ago, ', and published in the Lampasas Leader, he gave an interesting description of several incidents which occurred at that time, in which he was a participant: "At this time there were a good many Indians scattered over the country, and the Mexicans took special pains to incite them to depredations upon the settlements. In 1839 the capital of Texas was located at Austin, on the extreme west and north of the settlements. * * * In the year 1840, just succeeding the moving of the capital to Austin, occurred one of the most daring raids the Indians ever made. This, too, was instigated by the Mexicans. Over 1,000 warriors, with many squaws and pack-horses, made a descent from the north entirely through Texas, passing south about fifteen miles east of Gonzales, by way of Victoria, to Linnville, on the coast, a small town on the present site of Port Lavaca. They were so stealthy in their advance that they were near Gonzales before the news spread, but soon our small scattering forces were in pursuit. The Indians sacked Linnville and started back, when they were overtaken by the Texans about 100 miles away, and a fight ensued. The Indians were completely routed. It was a running fight for thirty or forty miles. leaders in this fight were Gen. Felix Huston, Col. J. H. Moore, Capt. Clark L. Owens, Ben and Henry McCulloch, and others of our brave frontiersmen. This fight had the effect of checking the Indian depredations for a while, but there was much anxiety of mind, as our forces were not large enough for security at all points." In 1854 Judge Munger became judge of the county court of Fayette county at LaGrange, and prior to the outbreak of the Civil war also served as county judge of Bastrop county. During the war he was placed at the head of the courier service between Houston and Iberia, Louisiana, by General Magruder. In 1866 he moved to Houston, where he was engaged in the lumber business, then went to Eureka, where he was president of the Eureka Manufacturing Company, in 1877 moved to Williamson county, and in 1880 to Georgetown, Texas, and in 1882 went to San Saba county. In 1883 he located in Lampasas county, and in 1885 was made postmaster by President Arthur, being reappointed to that office in 1889 by President Cleveland. When his term expired 1889 by President Cleveland, when his death occurred at the retired to private life, and his death occurred at Lampassas, March 27, 1901. He was a Past Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch Masons of Texas and a consistent member of the Methodist church. Judge Munger married Margaret Josephine McGowan, who was born in 1833 in Coffee county, Tennessee, the daughter of John McGowan, and granddaughter of Andrew McGowan, a notable man in the history of Tennessee. At the time of the war, under General Jackson, he was given a colonel's commission, raised a regiment of Indians and fought in the battle of the Bond. He came to Texas in 1835 and was prominent in the early days of the Republic. To Colonel McGowan were born eleven children, and two of the sons participated in the battle of San Jacinto. The family knew much of the hardships of frontier life, and when Margaret was but four years of age her father died, leaving the care of the large family to the mother who passed away six years later. When she was fourteen years of age Margaret McGowan was converted under the ministry of Rev. Josiah Whipple. There was in her that strong faith in God which characterized her whole life. Her mind thirsted for knowledge, and she was never happier than when reading such books as "Lord Bacon's Essays," "Fox's Book of Martyrs," "Lives of Goorge Washington and his Generals," etc. Fortunately for her, a noted teacher from Scotland, a Professor Montrose, established an academy of high grade at Anderson, Texas, which she attended and at which she graduated when fifteen years old. For three years she taught school, and while on a visit to her brother, Carroll, met Judge Munger, whom she married in January, 1854. She led an active Christian life and for fourteen years was conference president of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society—two years in the West Texas Conference and twelve years in the Northwest Texas. She had executive ability of the highest order, presiding with dignity and firmness, mingled with such sweetness and poise that commanded respect and order in the largest assemblies. At the time of her death sorrow was universal, for her many admirable qualities had made her widely beloved. She passed quietly away in the faith of her Maker, December 4, 1901, at Lampasas. Ten children were born to Judge and Mrs. Munger, namely: Nora, Nelson C., Ennis, Eloise, Josie, May, Maggie and Sylvester S., William T. and Henry L. Maggie and Sylvester S. are said to have been the first pair of twins born in Houston. Dr. S. S. Munger attended Centenary College at Lampasas until 1887, in which year he became clerk in the postoffice at that place, and continued to act as such for four years. During this time he had prepared for college to some extent, having decided upon a career in medi-cine, and took a course in the medical department of the University of Tennessee. Upon his graduation therefrom, in 1891, he embarked in practice at Rogers, Bell county, where he spent six months, next went to Trickham, Coleman county, for one year, then to Brady, Mc-Lennan county, for a like period, and succeeding this to Mobeetie, Wheeler county, for three years. His next lo-cation was Woodward, Oklahoma, where he spent four years, spent one year in Lampasas and a like period in Waco, then practiced four years at Perry, Falls county, and in 1906 moved to Marlin, Falls county, a health resort, which has since been his field of practice. He has carried on a general practice, specializing more or less in rheumatism and skin and venereal diseases, and has attracted to him a large and licrative practice by reason of his acknowledged skill. He has been honored by appointment and election to various positions of trust and responsibility in the different sections where his practice has been located, serving as county and city physician, a member of the United States Board of Pension Examiners, physician of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, and, while in Oklahoma, as coroner, Since 1909 he has been city physician of Marlin. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Masons, the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America, and serves in the capacity of examining physician for all of these orders. A natural mechanic, next to his profession Doctor Munger takes the greatest interest in machinery of all kinds. He belongs to the

JOHN WILLIAM COOK, M. D. During recent years the community of Marlin. Texas, has justly become recognized as one of the leading health resorts of the towards, and each year is visited by those the search of health from the search of health from the search of health from the search of the search firmly established himself in the confidence of the comnunity and built up a large professional business. He was born near Homer, Claiborne Parish, Louisiana, February 4, 1856, and is a son of John and Penelope Richardson (Boykin), Cook.

John Cook was born in Elbert county, Georgia, in 1822, there grew to manhood, and received a good educational training. He first became a teacher in the publie schools, and gave up a professional career to enter mercantile pursuits, which, in turn, he left to become a farmer. From Georgia he removed to Claiborne county, Louisiana, and in 1878 came to Texas, settling first in Tarrant county for two years and then moving to Coryell county. Subsequently he went to McLennan county, where he rounded out a long and useful career, passing away in 1907. He had an honorable military record, having participated in the Mexican War under General Thomas, as well as in the Civil War, and was a successful business man and farmer and a highly-respected citizen. He was married in Homer, Louisiana, to Penelope Richardson Boykin, who was born near Selma, Alabama, in 1833, and she still survives him and is a resident of Moody, Texas. They were the parents of three children: Alice C., who is now Mrs. Monk of Moody and the mother of four children—Dr. Charles L., of New Orleans, Louisiana, Willie and Nellie of Mineral Wells, Texas, and Dr. John Boykin of Waco; Dr. John William, of this review; and Willie, the younger daughter, who died at the age of six years.

The early educational training of Dr. John William Cook was secured at Emory College, Oxford, Georgia, where he spent three years in literary work, and following this returned to his home and for one year was employed as a teacher. In 1877 he came to Texas, and after ton, being deputy sheriff of Tarrant county for a period of three years. Following this he went to Bell county and spent another year as a teacher, and then entered mercantile pursuits as a clerk at Moody. After one year thus spent he embarked in business on his own account and had a successful business career covering a period of three years. He had always, however, entertained an ambition to follow a professional career, and at this time, finding himself in a position to gratify his desires, disposed of his mercantile holdings and took a course of lectures and studied medicine at the Atlanta (Georgia) Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1891. For three years after receiving his diploma he practiced in Coryell county, and then came to Marlin and established himself in a general practice, which he has carried on with much success to the present time. About the year 1895 he opened the first bath house here and the original sanitarium, and this has become one of the leading institutions of its kind in the state, its reputation having extended to far-distant points in the country. The Doctor has been a close and earnest student, keeping fully abreast of the advancements continually being made in his calling, and in 1898 took a post-graduate course at the Chicago Polyclinic, in 1900 at New York, and again in 1901 at Chicago. He belongs to the various organizations of the profession, and is affiliated fra-ternally with the Masons, in which he has attained the Chapter degree, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. His political views correspond with those of the Democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist church. He is devoted to his calling, and his practice is of such an extensive nature that he seldom is allowed time for recreation, but when he is able to take vacations they are spent in hunting and fishing. He has heen successful in a business way, and in addition to his residence and sanitarium, he is the owner of three houses and lots in Marlin and of 887 acres of fine ranch land in Jim Wells county, also a six-story hotel and bathhouse combined.

On August 10, 1882, Doctor Cook was married at "The Grove," in Coryoll county, to Miss Ellen Torhett, daughter of J. C. Torbett, of Metiregor, and three children have been born of this union: Laverge, who married W. A. Karns, a salesman of Waco, and has two children-Mary E. and Laverge; Jesse, who married L. M. Loring, superintendent of the Southwestern District for the Southwestern Telephone Company, and a resident of Little Rock, Arkansas; and May N., who is single and resides with her parents at Marlin.

JAMES OTIS CHANCE. A resident of Brazos county since he was six years of age, James Otis Chance is deseended from one of the original Austin colony, and during the past thirty years has played a varied and important part in his community as a business man, extensive farmer, and manager of land, and in many next ways has advanced the prosperity and welfare of his locality.

James Otis Chance was born in Caldwell, Texas, February 9, 1862. When he was a child both parents died, and he grew up under the care of an uncle, Milton Parker, a brother to his mother. Grandfather J. B. Chance was a surveyor, and came into Texas as a follower of Stephen F. Austin, settling in the vicinity of old Washington, where he died. He was a man of spirit, a hardy pioneer, and his character as a family man is well shown by his effort to educate his children much above the usual standards of the time, and he gave them all the advantages that were afforded by the schools of Independence and in his home. J. B. Chance and wife had the following children: William, who died when a young man; Cole, who spent his life in Caldwell and in Williamson county, where he died; Elijah J., and Martha, who married a Mr. Wyatt of Caldwell, where she died, leaving a family. Elijah J. Chance, father of James O. Chance, was born in Tennessee, but was a small child when the family moved to Texas and settled in Burleson county. Some years later he devoted himself to the law. He died at a comparatively young age, from troubles contracted by exposure during the war. He was a Confederate soldier, fought with the Tennessec army, operating chiefly in Mississippi. After the war he devoted himself to his profession at Caldwell, where he died in 1868. His wife was Miss Frances Ann Parker, a daughter of Rev. Samuel Parker, who came from Tennessee, and was a pioneer Baptist minister in Texas. Mrs. Chance died before her husband and the children who grew up were: John P., who left a family in Bryan; James Otis and Francis Alexander, both of whom are living. Two children died in infancy.

While growing up the early years of James O. Chance were spent in Bryan, and he lived in a family and under the influance of a busy and thrifty man, whose success was of a marked character. Thus he had a good training for the practical work of life, although his education, so far as books were concerned, was much neglected. In young manhood he began an apprenticeship, and worked three years for a saddler, in Bryan, and then for some time was in the saddlery business for himself at Temple. Returning to Bryan in 1883, Mr. Chance opened a grocery, with his brother, under the name of Chance Brothers. This firm, which existed some ten or twelve years, was a prosperous establishment, and was finally acquired by Mr. Chance in 1891 and he conducted this business alone until 1895. On leaving merchandising Mr. Chance engaged in farming. In this line his enterprise is easily one of the most important in the Brazos Valley. When he started out he directed his attention to a great tract of virgin soil along the Brazos River, less than one hundred acres of which was then under cultivation. After twenty years of close application to farm development, Mr. Chance has achieved a result worth while. Some thirty-five hundred acres have been brought into a productive state, and scores of homes for tenants have been built, and far and wide the operations of successful husbandry are now carried on under the Chance management.

Mr. Chance was married in Brazos county, December 18, 1887, to Mrs. George Bessman. She is the only daughter of George Williams, who came to Texas in the early fifties. His original state was Connecticut, and he was born at North Stonington, in 1818. Growing up almost entirely dependent upon his own resources and ability, he finally came west and engaged in the buying of furs, finally reaching Texas and establishing stores at different points along the Brazos River. In connection with his trading operations he wisely invested in land, and accumulated a vast amount of the virgin bottom lands. His later years were spent as a rancher, and his home and his pride was the famous "GG" Ranch, one of the best known of the older homesteads of Burleson county, and which in recent years, under the management of Mr. Chance, has become equally noted for its diversified agriculture as much as in earlier years for its live stock and cotton. George Williams died January 2, 1897. He married Mrs. Patience (Lawson) Loverin, who was a daughter of John H, and Sallie Richardson Dent Lawson. The Dents were of the old Georgia stock of that name, and both they and the Williams family went back to Revolutionary ancestry. Mrs. Chance was the only child of George Williams and wife. She grew up on the old ranch, but was educated in Philadelphia, and in Poughkeepsie, New York, and was married soon after leaving school. Mr. and Mrs. Chance have the following children: George G., born in 1888, now associated in business with his father, and by his marriage to Miss Lucile Williamson has a daughter, Eleanor Frances; Catherine Parker, who was born January 4, 1892, and died in childhood; James Otis, Jr., a schoolboy, and now a student in the city of Philadelphia. The Chance family have membership in the Episcopal church. At West Anderson street, in Bryan, one of the new and splendid homes is that of Mr. Chance and family. It is a beautiful colonial residence and its broad and ample galleries are themselves typical of the generous hospitality which has ever been characteristic of this family.

A. MARCUS. Vice president of the People's Ice Company of Wichita Palls, A. Marcus is one of the prominent citizens who have carned a place among local business men entitled to the honor of substantial achievement and success. Although still a young man he has demonstrated his fitness to handle large concerns.

A son of the late Marx Marcus, A. Marcus was born at Gainesville, Cooke county, Texas, July 31, 1881. The public schools of Wichita Falls, where he has resided since infancy, furnished him his preliminary education, and he was for a time a student in the Agricultural and Mechanical College. Ambitious to begin a career of his own, he left before graduation, and became identified with the cattle industry in Potter County, where his father was at that time operating. After five years he sold his own interests there, and became associated with his father in the establishment of the Poeple's Ice Company, of which he has since been vice president. DURANT MOTIER DANSIV. Alabama is the native state of Durant Motier Dansby, his birth occurring there in Macon county on September 16, 1841, and he was but eight years old when he came to Texas with his parents. He is a son of Daniel M. Dansby, who died in Brazos county, this state, in 1879, when he was seventy-seven years of age. The father was born in Fairfield District. South Carolina, and there he was reared, getting a fairly good education, and himself engaging in teaching for a term or two in his native community. He came to Alabama with his widowed mother, Winzey (Barker) Dansby, the widow of Isham Dansby, who died in South Carolina in early life, leaving children as follows: Daniel M., father of the subject; John, who died at Barber county, Alabama; Isham, who died in Alabama, near Bladen Springs; Catherine, who married Jesses Johns and died in Cass county, Texas; and a daughter who married Jacob Minshew and died in Union county, Arkansas.

Durant M. Dansby had his early training in Cass county, town of Douglassville, and when the war broke out he enlisted in Dallas on June 6, 1861, in Company I, Third Texas Cavalry, the command making a forced march to Missouri soon after, where it participated in the battle of Oak Hills, or Springfield, on August 10, 1861. The young soldier came through his first battle without suffering more than a good seare, and the command remained in that section until winter set in, when it went into winter quarters at Camp Wigfall, near Van Buren, Arkansas. When spring came the battle of Elkhorn came on and through this experience also he passed without injury. The enemy drove the command back to the Arkansas River, where it was dismounted at Little Rock and sent across the Mississippi to Corinth, there to participate in the Mississippi campaign. Mr. Dansby's company there joined in the general work of that locality and in the battle of Iuka he was shot through the left shoulder, the shot tearing away the humerus bone and rendering him a cripple for the rest of his days. He was taken prisoner by the Federals, but later escaped, and was taken by an uncle to Mobile, Alabama, and there had his wounds treated, remaining in the hospital for about two months. He reached home on June 1, 1863, and was then appointed by the Confederate government as tithe agent for Cass county, in which office he served until the close of the war.

When the war was over, Mr. Dansby settled down to farming. He made one crop, then disposed of all his Cass county lands and moved to Brazos county, settling there in January, 1867. He engaged in farming four miles east of Bryan, buying land at a figure of $2.50 au acre. Later he was so fortunate as to pick up other lands, which seemed to him to be fairly desirable, at a figure as low as forty cents the acre. His capital was small when he settled in Brazos county, and he purchased a comparatively small tract of land, to which he applied himself diligently in the expectation that he would make a farm out of it. He devoted himself rather closely to sheep raising, and in that line his success was excellent. He increased his herd from season to season until the drove aggregated several thousand head, and the clip from this drove he sold at forty cents the pound. He paid close attention to the quality of his breed, and his flock held a goodly number of choice Merinos, from which he improved the herd until a sheep would shear from five to eight pounds annually. With wool at that figure, Mr. Dansby prospered, and he gradually acquired more lands. He continued to operate until the results of his industry made it possible for him to retire about ten years ago. About twenty years ago he moved to Bryan and here has since maintained his residence.

Mr. Danshy is one of the popular and prominent men of Bryan. He is a Democrat, active in the work of the party, a stanch Baptist, and he has been a Master Mason since the war.

Mr. Dansby was first married in Brazos county, on December 14, 1871, when Miss Laura C. Todd, a daughter of Atha Todd, from Lowndes county, Alabama, became his wife. On October 30, 1892, Mrs. Danshy passed away, leaving three children. Marshall F., the eldest, is a retired merchant and farmer of Bryan; Miss Icy married Edgar Peters and lives in Brazos county; D. Paul lives in Bryan. On May 17, 1894, Mr. Dansby married Mrs. Eliza C. Lee, a daughter of J. Irwin Barron, a native son of Louisiana. Concerning him a few brief facts are wholly consistent with the spirit and purpose of this work, and it should be said that he was born in Alabama in 1811 and died in the year 1866. was a man of rather limited education and was all his life a farmer. He was a small slave holder in his native state, and served in the southern army under General Forrest. He was a son of James Wingate Barron, of Union Parish, Louisiana, and the family was one of Irish ancestry. The father of Mrs. Dansby was one of four brothers: Jorid Irvin, John, James and William. Jorid I. married Amelia Soles, a daughter of Joseph Soles, of Lowndes county, Alabama, a farmer and large slave holder, and the issue of their union were Sarah Ann, Caroline E., Mary Frances, James Wingate, Elmina, John Caroline E., Mary Frances, James Hingare,
M. and Pink L. Of these, Caroline E. first married
George W. Lee, and her second husband is Durant M.
Dausby. The children of Mrs. Dausby by her first marriage are Samuel Irwin, of Neuces county, this state, and Dr. George Francis of Welborn, Texas.

The family are popular and prominent in Bryan, where they have had a residence since 1894, and they have a host of stanch friends throughout the county, where they have long been favorably known.

T. W. Parker. One of the hest known newspaper men in the state and one who has done much to promote the hest interests of Iowa Park, Texas, and the surrounding communities, is T. W. Parker, long identified with publicity work in these parts, and a most successful and enterprising young man. It was in 1909 that he located in Iowa Park, and since he took over the paper, then known as the Wichita Comty Herald, its successor the Iowa Park Herald, has reached a high state of efficiency and popularity in and about the county. Mr. Parker has shown himself to be a capable newspaper man and one who appreciates to the full the functions and responsibilities of a country sheet.

T. W. Parker was born in Noble county, Indiana, on January 18, 1871, and is a son of Asher Snow and Cloe Gannary 18, 1871, and is a son of Asher Show and Cloe (Wadsworth) Parker, the latter a cousin of William Wadsworth Longfellow, of poetic fame and name. The father was a native of New York state, and he came to Indiana as a young man. He was a well known physician in Noble county, and a noted Democrat, participating largely in the political activities of his time. Later in life he identified himself with newspaper interests and became well and prominently known in those circles, being located for twenty-six years in Kendallville, Indiana, and the editor and proprietor of the Kendallville News. He died there in 1904, at the age of seventy-two years. The mother, it may be of interest to note, was the first white child born in Noble county, Indiana, her birth occurring in 1839, and she died in Kendallville, Indiana, in 1882, when she was but forty-three years old. She was a woman of many excellent attainments and worthy qualities of heart and mind. A rarely educated woman, she was ever the greatest help to her husband, and shared alike in his successes and his disappointments. They became the parents of five children, of which number T. W. Parker of this review was the youngest.

T. W. Parker attended school in Noble county as a boy, and he was nineteen years old when he was graduated from the high school of Kendallville. He then went straightway into the newspaper offices of his father in Kendallville, and remained there for nine years. In 1905 he went to Oklahoma, settling in Shawnee, that state, and remaining for two years. Thence he came to Nacona in 1908, and for a year at that place he conducted a newspaper. In 1909 he came to Iowa Park, where he proceeded to buy out the Wichita County Herald, the publication becoming known as the Iowa Park Herald upon his assumption of the enterprise, and it has since expanded into a most creditable paper and a decided boon to the community, in comparison with its former newspapers. Today the Herald enjoys a wide circulation and is patronized by the business men of the county to a pleasing degree, its methods and its guaranteed circulation verifying the support which the merchants and other advertisers have accorded to it.

Mr. Parker is a Democrat, and his paper voices his opinions on political subjects. He is a Master Mason, a Pythian Knight and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His churchly affiliations are with the Episcopal church.

Twice has Mr. Parker been married. His first marriage took place on December 24, 1896, at Montpelier, Miami county, Indiana, when Miss Carrie Rice became his wife. She was a daughter of C. D. Rice and his wife, and the parents still reside in their Indiana home, though Mrs. Parker died in 1900, leaving two children; Ryal Bryan Parker, born in July, 1897, and Paul Parker, who died in infancy. The first named is now in business with his father. On April 14, 1903, Mr. Parker married Miss Hazel Starr, who was a native daughter of Peru, Indiana. No children have come of their union.

Antonio W. Tobin. A life long resident of the Lone Star state, who has witnessed the wonderful development of the Southwest from a wide open ranch country, given over entirely to the raising of cattle, to one of the greatest commercial and industrial sections of the country, Antonio W. Tobin has contributed materially to the progress and development that have brought this desirable condition about. Mr. Tobin was for a number of years personally engaged in cattle raising, and still owns a ranch in Jim Wells county, but during the past several years has made his home in San Diego, where since 1908 he has acted efficiently in the capacity of sheriff of Duval county.

Sheriff Tobin was born in the city of San Antonio, Texas, in 1858, and is a son of Dan and Josefa (Navarro) Tobin. His father passed away in 1872, but his His father passed away in 1872, but his mother is still living, and makes her home at Naco, Arizona. She is a daughter of Colonel Navarro, who belonged to one of the prominent families of the early history of the state and was one of the signers of the Texas declaration of independence. The education of Antonio W. Tobin was secured in St. Mary's College, in his native city, and there he was reared to manhood. He was but fourteen years of age at the time of his father's death, and he soon learned to be self-supporting, securing employment among the cattle men of that vi-cinity. When he was twenty years of age he went to Zapata county, on the Mexican border, and there was elected to the office of county clerk, in which he served two years, following which he spent two more years in that locality, and in 1882 removed to Nences county.

The location in which he made his home became Jim Wells county, by enactment of the State Legislature. May 9, 1911, and there his handsome ranch is still situated. He had been well and thoroughly trained and possessed inherent business ability, and as a result was able to make a success of his business ventures, accumulating a large tract of land and many head of cattle. In 1908 he became the candidate of the Democratic party for the office of sheriff of Duval county, and in the election which followed received a handsome majority. In 1910 he again made the race and was the choice of the people, and in 1912 was once more revol. IV-28 elected, and has continued to give the people excellent service. A man of determination, energy and unbounded courage, he has won the confidence of the law-abiding citizens, while the criminal element has a wholesome fear of his vigilance and ability. His long residence in this section has made him known all over this part of the state, and he is respected, not alone as a conscientious and hard working public officer, but as a man who has ever been loyal to his friends.

Mr. Tobin was united in marriage with Miss Geronimo Canales, who was born at Mier, Mexico, and to this union there have been born six children: Oscar, Beatrice, Agnes, Dan, Antonio, Jr., and Jesus. The family resides in a handsome modern home in San Diego.

JOHN T. THREADGILL, who recently moved to the town of Deport from his farm in the vicinity of the place, has been identified with the community adjacent to this village since 1896, and with Red River county since 1880, He is a fine example of independence and modest thrift after a period of dependence covering a generous part of his married life, and the story of his rise in fortunes is but another chapter out of the general compliment paid to the black land section of Texas by the wealth it brings to those who will cultivate its acquaintance assiduously and husband its luxurious growths.

Mr. Threadgill came bither from Henderson county. Tennessee, where his birth occurred, in the vicinity of Lexington, on December 16, 1848. He is the son of Allen J. Threadgill, who passed his life at the black-smith's forge and in the business of farming at Crucipher, that county, and died there in 1888, when he was something like sixty-five years of age. The father was born in North Carolina and came from the laboring classes. He contributed little to the public weal save this excellent citizenship, which is a quality of which too much may not be said in praise. As a boy, Allen J. Threadgill accompanied his father to Tennessee from North Carolina, and the elder Threadgill spent much of his time in business activities in Lexington. He was a major in the militia in his early days, and a man of some education and much usefulness in his county. He was one of the few Masons in the country in his time and was prominent in the order and active in his membership in the Methodist church. He died when he was about seventy-five years old. His first wife was a Miss West, who bore him the following children: Elizabeth. who died as Mrs. Wadley; Whit, who spent his life in Arkansas; Mrs. Sallie Brewer, who died in Tennessee; Allen J., who became the father of the Deport citizen; Julia, who died unmarried; Eveline, who married Mr. Kingery, and Clinton, who spent his life in Tennessee.

Allen J. Threadgill was a loyal citizen, surrounded by warring elements in Henderson county, but he maintained his position in that region while the war raged, and came out with honor and dignity, despite his position. He early married Mary A. Cawthon, a daughter of John B. Cawthon, a Methodist minister, who came out of North Carolina, and whose wife was a Miss Elizabeth Holtom. Mrs. Threadgill died in October, 1904, the mother of six children, as follows: John T., of this review; Alice E., who died as the wife of W. H. Fesmire, in Tennessee; Laura Ann, who married James McDaniel and resides in Tennessee, where also reside

Allen W., Joseph and Mattie.

John T. Threadgill was a youth attending the work on his father's farm while the war of the Rebellion was being waged. He entertained Union sentiments, in harmony with his father and grandfather. Such education as he received came to him in the school at Crucipher, and he reached his majority while yet sharing in the shelter of the parental roof. He married in 1870, and in that year, when he was twenty-two years old, set ont upon an independent career. In beginning their wedded life, Mr. and Mrs. Threadgill each possessed a horse and a cow, and the customary feather bed and a bureau were a part of their first possessions. Although his industry was ably supplemented by that of his faithful and willing young wife, the ten years that they passed in diligent attention to the soil of their native state, little return rewarded their labors save a bare living, and they came to Texas without possessing sufficient capital to make them owners of the smallest kind of a farm. They made the trip by train, stopping at Detroit to pay a visit to Mrs. Threadgill's brother, made his home there, and soon after established their home upon a tract of land that they were able to arrange for the purchase of. The story of the sixteen years spent upon that farm is one of practically unrewarded effort, for it is a fact that more lean years than fat ones fell to their lot and portion. The result was that they finally decided to become renters upon the much vaunted black land of the state, having become sufficiently acquainted with the sandy soil after sixteen years of disappointment. Accordingly they moved into the Deport community, rented a farm just east of the town, and settled down to work. Mr. Threadgill avers that the four years he worked that black dirt farm brought him more actual money than he had ever before possessed, and he straightway acted upon the suggestion that his good judgment prompted and bought a farm of his own. This place, his first real home in Texas, lies three miles east of Deport, and comprised originally one hundred and fifty-nine acres, with what might be termed frontier improvements. Corn and cotton raising has solved the problems of finance for Mr. Threadgill, and, with his own labor, he has marketed cotton below four cents a pound and yet made some money. The cultivation of his farm with its added acreage and the vast changes that have been brought about by the erection of substantial and even costly buildings, has been the dream and the accomplishment of Mr. Threadgill. His seven room residence, with its four galleries, his fine barns and sheds, his seed house and buggy shed, all point to a climax of a successful career and suggest eloquently the contrast between the first sixteen years of his Texas farming experience and the last period of a similar duration. Mr. Threadgill has sold cotton at less than four cents, as has been stated, and as high as $14.90 a hundred; he has produced his own meat and other stuff that he required for family use, and he has learned the way to independence in the truest sense of the word. His change from one location to another has put him in the class of farmers who hold shares in banks and other fiduciary concerns, and he is financially banks and other indicary concerns, and he is mandadin interested in the First State Bank of Deport and in the Western Casualty and Guaranty Company of Dellas. In December, 1912, Mr. Threadgill had so far advanced in the scale of prosperity that he felt justified in withdrawing from his active farm interests, and left the farm to take a residence in Deport, where he is now located and here he takes an important part in the civic life of the town. He is a member of the Methodist church and a trustee of its official body. His fraternal interests are represented by his membership in the Masonic order, of which he has been a member for some time and in which he has a wholesouled and intelligent interest. On September 8, 1870, Mr. Threadgill married Miss Elizabeth C. Brooks, a daughter of Aaron S. and Nancy (Russell) Brooks. The father of Mrs. Threadgill was born in Tennessee and his wife in North Carolina, and they became the parents of eight children, named as fol-lows: Elizabeth, the wife of Mr. Threadgill; Jerry, who died single; Sena, married to George E. Turner; Wil-liam; George; Harriet, the wife of W. G. Thomas; Wes-ley, a resident of Oklahoma, and James, of Red River county. William, George and Mrs. Turner are all residing in Lamar county.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Threadgill reared a fine family of nine children, all of whom have come to occupy useful places in life. They are as follows: Dora, the wife of William Handley; Mary, who married Guff Slayden; Nannie married Eliza Green Morgan; Bessie, now Mrs. Charles Gifford; Newton, who married Nora Martin, of Wichita Falls, Texas; Allen, who married Rosa Davis. All of the above reside in Red River county. Joe married Susie Davis, and they live in Gur-ley, Alabama; Claud, a farmer of Red River county, who married Annie Talley; Marshall, the youngest born, is the only one of the nine who still clings to the family home.

JUDGE CLEMENT B. POTTER. On October 2, 1912, there passed away a citizen of Gainesville of an ability and character such as that community or any other could ill afford to lose. At the time of his death Judge Potter was just closing his second term of service as circuit judge of the sixteenth judicial district, and was regarded as one of the foremost lawyers and jurists of North Texas. He had spent all his career of forty years in Gainesville, and from young manhood until his death was a prominent factor in local civic affairs.

Clement B. Potter, who was born in Gainesville, August 7, 1872, was a son of Judge C. C. Potter, an eminent attorney, who was one of the pioneer lawyers of north Texas and is still engaged in practice at Gainesville. The maiden name of the mother was Helen R. Bogardus, a native of Illinois, while C. C. Potter was born in Mississippi. Of the six children in their family, the late Clement B. was the oldest, while the others are: Roy T., who is married and is cashier of the Lindsey National Bank of Gainesville; William D., an attorney at Ardmore, Oklahoma; Grace, wife of C. A. Kinnar, an attorney of Seattle, Washington; Harold, deceased; and Ralph, deceased.

The late Judge Potter received his early education in the public schools of Gainesville, and at the age of sixteen went east and entered the preparatory school at Asheville, North Carolina, conducted by Major Bingham, continuing as a student there for three terms, after which he was in the University of Texas for two years. He studied law at the University and received his degree in 1892. Returning to Gainesville he entered the law firm of is father and practiced as junior member of the firm of Potter & Potter until 1906. In 1906 he was ap-pointed to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Barrett, deceased, and on the expiration of that term his record as judge was so satisfactory that he was chosen in the regular election for judge of the Sixteenth Judicial District. He held the office for one regular term, and as already mentioned was just about to enter his third term when his death occurred. Both the bar and the citizens of his district have cause for grateful memory of the late Judge Potter, and he stood as one of the leading lawyers of his time. While his attention was devoted to the law, he was also interested in farming and was known all over this section of Texas as a horse raiser. He kept only pedigreed animals, and was a fancier of fine horses. At the time of his death he was the owner of a large amount of farm land, and he and his father together owned and operated a large amount of Texas property. His horses were frequently entered on the race tracks of the southwest, and in the exhibits, and won a number of premiums.

Judge Potter was a Democrat, but never sought any office except the one in which he was serving at the time of his death. He and his wife belong to the Methodist church south and fraternally he was affiliated Methodist church south and fraternally he was affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, and the Maccabees. Though a man of many interests he centered his affections in his home, and found his pleasures in the domestic circles and in the activity of his home city. Judge Potter married Miss Eva Metz, a native of Sherman, Pexas, and a daughter of Charles and Frances (Lilley) Metz, the father a native of Vermont, and the mother of Pennsylvania. The Metz family originally came from Germany. Mrs. Potter's father was a business man and cattle raiser, came to Texas in 1873, and was one of the early merchants of Sherman, where he was in the implement business. In 1887 he moved to Gainesville, and was a furniture merchant there until his death in 1892. His wife died in 1912. Mrs. Potter is one of a family of four children, the others being: Cora, wife of William McKemie, who is in the ice business at Gainesville; Stella, wife of C. H. Rives, a banker of Ada, Oklahoma; and William Lee, now deceased. Judge Potter and wife were married July 12, 1899, and five children were born to their union, as follows: Marjoric, Evelyn, Zella, Clement, and Francis, the first three being in school. Mrs. Potter since her husband's death, has kept her residence on East Church Street in Gainesville, and is devoting her efforts to the education and training of her children. She is the owner of much real estate in and about Gainesville. and allowed sainesville.

GENERE WOOTTEN GRANT. Sixty-five years of residence in this section of the great state of Texas entitle George Wootten Grant to every consideration as a citizen, and the further fact that he was born in Red River county establishes him securely in his community. His is a family that pioneered to Texas while the state was yet a Republic, and from then until now the name of Grant has stood for solid integrity in the state, and suggested a connection with affairs of an agricultural nature that has been of no slight henefit to the communities with which the various members of the family were identified.

George Wootten Grant was born in Red River county, some three miles west of the county seat, on the 1st day of February, 1848. His parents were Stephen Graut and Margaret (Dickson) Grant. It was Stephen Grant who led the family out of the old state of Tennessee that had long represented the family home, and he was the advance guard of a large contribution of men of that name to the state of Texas, and himself became a most important factor in the affairs of the community in which he settled. He was twice married. His first wife was Margaret Dickson, a daughter of James and Abigail Dickson, and their union was blessed with thirteen children, six of whom are named: Mrs. Mary Thomas, of Deport, Texas; George Wootten, of this review; Mrs. Namie Seaff, of Fulbright, Texas; James W., of Belzoni, Oklahoma; Samuel H., of Deport, and Nathan W., of Alvin, Texas. Mrs. Grant died, and in later years the father wedded Mrs. Josephine Laura Thomas. The children of their union died unmarried. This wife is also deceased, and Stephen Grant passed from the scenes of life in December, 1889. He was a farmer and a man of importance in his community, and his sons have proved themselves worthy of him in every way, all taking their place in the life of their communities in a manner manifestly creditable to them and to the parent who reared them.

George Wootten Grant was named in honor of Doctor Wootten, who attended at his birth and concerning whom a sketch will be found elsewhere in this work. The boy came to manhood in the community where he was born, and received his education in the country schools and in McKenzie College. He remained under the shelter of the parental roof until February, 1869, when he married and took his young wife to their new home, launching together a successful career in the field of agriculture. Two years previous the family had moved to the community of Deport, and the young married couple set out from that point full of hope for the future. The first venture of Mr. Grant in his independent capacity as a husband and provider was in the purchase of a bundred acres of land in the community where he now resides. The improvements that were visible on the place at that time were limited to a one room box house with a dirt and stick chimney, and a small plot of ground that had known first contact with the plowshare. Into that primitive cabin the young couple moved their effects, which included even the feed for his team, and there took up their housekeeping operations. That place was the scene of many a makeshift arrangement, one of his masterpieces being a wagon that he made by hand from hois des are and white oak. Other botstacles were overcome in a like manner in the early years while the foundations of his future fortunes and prosperity were being laid. After ten years he sold that farm, and the present owners of the place today are Grogan & Clifton.

In 1881, Mr. Grant purchased land on Blosson Prairie and started the community of Rughy. This was then a new and untouched locality, and the nucleus of his present farm was one hundred and twenty nine in the parties and the family, and, with its several additions of recent years, still constitutes a part of the substantial and roomy domicile where he still abides. The planting of the always popular crops of cotton and corn followed the breaking of the virgin sod, and in 1833 the demands of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community for a gin were met by the enterprise of the community of the substantial community of the substantial control of the substantial cont

In the years while Mr. Grant was a ginner his main enterprise was still being carried on with strength and profit. His domain extended to three hundred acres of timber land in the vicinity of Red River county, and three hundred and fifty acres of superb black, waxy loam in his home place. His improvements, together with the presence of the gin, attracted the new railroad when it built its line from Deport to Bogata, and a station was located almost at his door, while a suggestion of urban life began to pervade the atmosphere. To cultivate his two hundred and seventy-five acres afready under plow requires today the aid of six families of tenants, and the homes he has erected for these people had dotted the landscape with a little group of cottages that lends an air of prosperity and growth to the place that is by no means misleading.

Mr. Grant is a man who has ever kept his hauds and head alike busy, and has utilized the days of cloud and rain as well as those of sunshine, recognizing all as something to add permanence and value to his estate. He is never to be found with the village loafers during the slow seasons, as many otherwise creditable farmers frequently are, but in those necessarily quiet times he occupies himself in study of his business, or in the study of the bible, or in helpful communing with his family in the sacred precincts of the home. Early in life he began to develop traits and characteristics that never fail to make for exemplary citizenship, and he has all his days been deeply concerned about the public welfare and about the propagation of those principles that develop patriotic and honorable citizens. As a young man he allied himself with the church, and he is the sole survivor of the first Cumberland Presbyterian church organized on Blossom Prairie. He was an elder of that church and has officiated in that capacity since 1870. His political support has gone to worthy candidates of the Democratic party, but he has withheld it from men of the party that he deemed unworthy of public trust, thus evidencing his stanch support of honesty and integrity in the political activities of the country. He is a Mason of the Blue Lodge and Chapter, but has no fraternal affiliations beyond his connection with that order.

On January 27, 1869, Mr. Grant married Miss Fannie Seaff, whose father, John Seaff, was an early settler of Red River county and a well known farmer of that region. To Mr. and Mrs. Grant have been born the following named children: Maggie, who is the wife of V. S. Griffin, a successful farmer near Rugby, Texas; Tyrena Jane died as the wife of E. M. McBride: Ellen May is the wife of R. M. Bell, of Rugby; Dr. Stephen H., of Deport, Texas; Emma, who married J. D. Wood and resides in Tom Green county, Texas; and Florence, the youngest of the family, who is the wife of Dr. H. D. Roach, of Bogota, Texas.

James W. Garrett. Among the merchants of east Texas who are prospering and whose success has been largely due to their ability to estimate conditions, James W. Garrett, of Athens, is probably one of the most conspicuous examples. He started in a number of years ago as a clerk, and by always making his ventures and advances in a conservative manner, has prospered steadily from the start, and now owns one of the best establishments in the town.

James W. Garrett was born in the Cottonwood community of Henderson county, nine miles north of Athens, on the old Garrett homestead, January 19, 1873. His grandfather, Stephen Garrett, moved from South Carolina to Alabama, where he died at the age of about P. Garrett, a retired farmer, now living at Eustace, in Henderson county. He first settled in Texas in 1869, in Henderson county, nine miles morth of Athens, and continued as an active farmer and blacksmith there until his retirement. William P. Garrett was a soldier in the southern army during the war. In a sketch of the elder brother of James W. Garrett, published elsewhere in this work, will be found further details concerning this prominent family of Henderson county

James W. Garrett's life upon the farm was a counterpart of that of other country youths in the time and place, and his education came from the rural college of the same neighborhood, being finally completed by a high school course in Athens. His home remained with his parents until He was twenty-three years of age, when he yielded to the example of his older brother, who had already made a successful start as a merchant in Athens, and himself became a clerk in the house of W. C. Scott & Company, with which firm his brother was a silent partner. He applied himself as diligently behind the counter as he did formerly behind the plow, and made rapid progress toward the time when he could see his own name listed among the commercial firms of Athens. He clerked seven years, and then engaged in the grocery business on the east side of the public square. As a merchant his start gradually ascended until it reached the zenith of prosperity, when he constructed his own business house, a two story double brick structure at the southwest corner of the square. This house he occupied in 1910, and it represents his contribution to the substantial growth of the county seat. In di-mensions it is forty-two and a half by sixty-eight feet, and makes one of the conspicuous corners of the city.

As a citizen of Athens, Mr. Garrett has been content to give the description of the d

In the neighborhood in which he was brought up Mr. Garrett was married on October 24, 1895, to Miss Mary Roberson, a daughter of R. E. Roberson and Mary (Wilman) Roberson, both of whom came originally from Alabama. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett's household contains the following children: Eugene, Elmer, Lillian, Pearl, Robert, Jack, Pauline, and John. Fraternally, Mr. Garrett is affiliated with the Masonic Blue Lodge, with the Knights of Pythias, the Knights and Ladies of Honor and the Modern Woodmen of America. His church is the Christian denomination.

JOHN H. GARRETT. One of the leading merehants of Athens, John H. Garrett, was evidently born with a predisposition to mercantile life, since he has been identified with merchandising from the early years of his manhood, and his progress has been steadily npward until now he ranks second to none among the business men of Athens and Henderson county. Mr. Garrett is a son of William P. Garrett, a retired farmer of Mabank, Kaufman county. The family came to Texas in 1869, settling in the Cottonwood locality of Henderson county, nine miles north of Athens. There the father carried on a modest farm industry, trained his children to traits of honesty and diligence, and retired to his present residence full of years and with the rewards due one who has added a new and earnest element to the citizenship of his county.

William P. Garrett was born in South Carolina, January 8, 1838, being one of six children born to Stephen Garrett, a carpenter by trade, who died about 1870, at sixty-five years of age. Stephen Garrett took his family to Alabama, where William P. was reared and received such school training as was afforded to the people of that state in the years before the war. He chose farming as his vocation, and managed his affairs with such industry and enterprise that he always lived well and maintained the social and economic traditions of his and maintained the Social and economic traditions of his house. He married Mrs. Sarah Pool, a daughter of David Cowan. Mr. and Mrs. William P. Garrett had the following children: John H., of Athens; Mrs. Georgie Cook, of Cumby, Texas; Mrs. Mattie Benge of Oklahoma; Mrs. Ella Chandler, of Oklahoma; James W., a merchant of Athens; Jesse, who is engaged in business at Eustace, Texas, and Mrs. Sallie Roberson, of Mabank, Texas. William P. Garrett was a Confederate soldier in General Bragg's army and helped keep back the invading forces of the north until overwhelming numbers made the contest so unequal that further resistance was in vain. John H. Garrett was a boy near school age when he came to Texas, and his training on the little farm cultivated by his parents developed in him a sound and vigorous constitution, and at the same time he attended the short terms of school accessible to the children of that district. He also attended a private school at Goshen, Texas, and his first venture upon his own account was in teaching a country schoolroom. His experience as a teacher was brief, but it gave him confidence in himself and provided him with some funds for his first business start. At the age of twenty-three he left the old home and moved to Athens, to take up commercial work. He was fortunate in his first position, and the first enterprise which secured his service was likewise fortunate. At Athens he took charge of the Farmers store, which had then just been founded, and remained in charge of its affairs for two years. This experience brought him into contact with the traveling representatives of wholesale houses and opened the way for entering a new business for himself as a salesman for Ullman, Lewis & Company, of Galveston, and for ten years was with that house in Texas territory. His earnestness, his industry, his splendid physical endurance, and his inherent qualities of salesmanship soon made themselves apparent, and he became an almost indispensable man to his friends. Eventually Mr. Garrett found himself one of the best paid commercial men in Texas. While traveling was an attractive and profitable proposition, it did not appeal to Mr. Garrett as a social success nor as an ideal life for a man bringing up a family. He determined to abandon the road and invest his personal capital in a store of his own. Thus, in and personal capital in a store of his own. I hills, in January, 1898, he became one of the firm of W. C. Scott & Company, of Athens. He soon bought the in-terest of Mr. Scott and took Dr. R. B. Longmire into the firm, and Garrett & Longmire did business as a firm until January, 1899, when they rold to Wofford & Barrou. Then Mr. Garrett established himself in business under his individual name and has since conducted a large general merchandise stock at Athens. He also owns a business in Eustace, conducted as Garrett & Hambrick.

It will thus be seen that for thirty or thirty-five years Mr. Garrett has devoted all his time to merchandising. His first venture with the Farmers' Store was successful, and from that date to this he has never felt any cause to get out of the channel which he first chose as the direction of his energy. Mr. Garrett is a dynamo of physical and mental energy, weighs two hundred and sixty pounds, and is ruddy and as sprightly as a youth. Fraternally, he is prominent in Masonry and has taken the degrees qualifying him for membership in the Mystic Shrine, his membership being with Hella Temple, at Dallas. He is also a member of the Woodlen of the World, and was brought up in the Christian church, with which he still has membership.

On February 10, 1883, Mr. Garrett was married in Henderson county to Miss Pauline Roberson, a daughter of Robert G. Roberson, a farmer from Alabama. Their children are: John R., a bookkeeper for his father, who first attended the public school of Athens, later a business college at Tyler, and who by his marriage to Miss Mary Spener has a son, John Speneer; Nell is the wife of J. O. Roberts, of Corsicana, Texas; Ellen is the wife of Martin Forrester, of Athens; Miss Maudi is the youngest child. Mr. Garrett has a comfortable home in Athens, laking erected it himself a few years ago.

WILLIAM DURANT SCOTT, M. D. Now a retired physician and an honored citize of Athens, Dr. William D. Scott is one of the few medical men still surviving from a practice which identified them with Texas during the war times and later. Doctor Scott is a fine type of the old time physician. Like nany of the doctors of the early days, he served his fellowmen with the best resources of his generation and of a fine character, the never had a college training, but that was not considered necessary when he started practice, and for many weary years he rode about on horseback, with his saddlebag and his apothecary shop ready for every emergency. He rendered kindly, capable service to the community, and is gratefully remembered by hundreds of the old families whom he attended during his active professional career.

This family is one of the most numerous in American biographical annals, and dates its founding during the colonial period of South Carolina. The great-grandfather of Doctor Scott settled as an Irish emigrant, but at a date which cannot now be accurately ascertained. The members of the family were lovers of liberty, and the old pioneer settlers took a very positive stand in this attitude toward the question which separated the colonies from Great Britain. Thus the Scott family was early marked for vengeance by the Tories, who did so much to hinder the cause of liberty and independence. At the beginning of the Revolutionary war Great-Grandfather Scott and his son Robert were regarded as leaders in their community in the cause of the Revolution, and on this account soon had the active enmity of "Big John" Garrett and his Tory band. One day as the Scotts were going to mill with a bag of corn, they saw dust rising abead of them as from horsemen, and were soon apprised of the approach of Garrett and his followers. The son was commanded to hide himself in the brush, while the father remained in the road, thinking his advanced years would save him from violence at the hands of Garrett. When the band rode up, Garrett struck the venerable patriot on the head with a dragoon saber. Mr. Scott fell from bis horse with a piece of his skull lifted from his brain, and thus having dispatched another enemy of King George, as he believed, Garrett rode on. The vounger Scott then came forth from his concealment and lifted his father upon his horse, tied him fast, took him to a doctor, who dressed the wound, and within a few months the old man was as sound as before. Many incidents might be told of the family experiences during the war. Their home was frequently robbed of bed quilts, as they were hung out in the yard, and after the war the good housemother saw many of her own quilts graining the beds of Tory families in the neighborhood. At another time Robert Scott lived for four days without drink or meat, save one snail and a bit of bacon which he picked up on the road during one of his trying marches.

Some time after the cowardly assault upon the older Scott, the news came that Garrett and a number of his friends were having a revel at a Tory home about a mile from the Scotts. A group of patriots were hastily summoned, their flintlocks put in readiness, and with the Scotts as their leaders they proceeded to the Tory home. Robert Scott, after reconnoitering, discovered that the Tories were seated at a table with Garrett as master of ceremonies. The patriots then surrounded the house, and by a vigorous assault exterminated the cream of the state of the seated and the state of the seated and table with Garrett as master of ceremonies. Robert Scott married some time during the war, and early in the following century moved out to Mississippi, where he became a large planter and slave owner, where his death occurred. Among his children were: John who became a banker in Mississippi; Robert, who spent his life in that state; one who moved out to Texas and died in this state; William Finney, next to be mentioned; Washington, who died in Mississippi; and also a daughter who lived and died in Mississippi.

William Finney Scott was born in Abbeville district, in South Carolina, in 1788. In the primitive manner of the old time, he was educated with very little, if any, knowledge of books and letters, but with skill in all the accomplishments of the American manhood of that time. He was a high-spirited young man, loved his drink, was a "shoulder-slapper" at gatherings of the country, and loved to match a fight and see the sport. With the weight of middle years be softened down in character and conduct and became one of the most orderly and peace-loving citizens. However, he always continued to love the excitement of a political campaign, and was on the Democratic side in the campaign of 1840, when Gen-all Harrison was placed in the presidency by the Whigs.

William F. Scott left Mississippi during the decades of the twenties and moved to Obion county, Tennessee. Some years later his father died and he returned to Mississippi for a portion of the family estate. Outside of land there was practically no wealth, except the negro slaves, and as he had no desire for that kind of property, be returned home almost empty-handed. In 1845 he accomplished another western stage of emigration, and established himself in New Madrid county, Missouri, and in the following year moved to Stoddard county, in the same state. In 1847 he brought his family down to Texas, settling in Lamar county, where he remained a prospering farmer until late in life. He then went to Athens, and died at the home of his son, William D. Scott, in 1865. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Hawkins, died in 1852. Their children were: Lucinda, who married Rev. Joseph Edwards, who died at Paris, Texas, after which his widow moved to Arkansas and died; Travis, who died in Henderson county, Texas; Rayburn, who died in Texas; Tilford, who died in Comanche county, Texas; Ashley, who died while a Federal prisoner during the Civil war; Robert, who died in Tyler, Texas, in 1853; William Durant, the subject of this sketch, and Joseph R., who died in Stoddard county, Missouri.

Dr. William Durant Scott was born near Troy, Obion county, Tennessee, in 1831. He was a boy of sixteen years when the family reached Tyler, Texas, and there he arrived at manhood. His education was supplied by the common schools of several different localities, and in Tyler he took up the study of "Physic" under Doctor Lindsay. According to the understanding of such things and the standards of medical education, it was believed that a knowledge of the effect of certain common drugs on the system, and a practical skill in obstetrics, made up the training and equipment of a doctor. Dr. Scott accordingly began practice in Henderson county, his home being located ten miles east of Athens, and he remained there until February 1, 1865. He was one of a very limited number of medical men in all that part of the state, Doctor Mabry being the only doctor in Athens at the time of the outbreak of the war. Professional work as performed fifty or sixty years ago in this western country was largely carried on in the saddle. The old pill bags made a veritable traveling apothecary, and the doctor almost never wrote a prescription for a pharmacist to fill, but compounded his medicine and boluses on the spot.

During the war Doctor Scott arranged to go to the front, and had already equipped himself with a mount, when he was prevailed upon to remain and attend to the needs of his community, while Doctor Mabry went out and satisfied himself by duty as a soldier. Thus the country would not be left entirely without the services of a physician. During this delay Doctor Scott dis-covered that sons of slave-holding planters were staying out of the army because of legal exemptions for slaves, and Doctor Scott accordingly determined not to expose his life to the dangers of bullets for a cause in which he had no personal grievance, and as a result he never did take up arms. For a few years after the war Doctor Scott carried on merchandising at Athens. That, together with his medical work, constituted his business activities through a long period of years. He never as-pired to office, though he cast his vote regularly with the Democrats, and has always been a lay member of the Methodist church. Though an octogenarian, Doctor Scott is still vigorous and a hale and hearty old man, with a long and interesting retrospect over the decades extending clear back to the fifties.

In 1860 Mr. William D. Scott was married in Henderson county to Fannie Morrison. She was a daughter of Rev. Henry B. Morrison, of Alabama, where Mrs. Scott was born. She died in 1872, leaving two children Deort was oorn. Sne died in 1872, feaving two children —Mrs. Florence Barron, of Athens, and Dr. Walter Scott, of Athens. In December, 1880, Dr. Scott married Mrs. Amanda Warren, a widow of Doctor Warren, of Athens. She died in 1888 without children. Walter Scott, who has followed in the footsteps of his father, is one of the leading physicians of Athens, was born in his home town February 27, 1868. his education in the public schools at Athens and Tyler, he started out as a business man, first as a clerk, spending a few years with C. T. Scott & Company. He then attended medical schools and was graduated M. D. from the Kentucky School of Medicine, at Louisville, in 1890. During the following six years he practiced at Tyler, and then continued in Athens, until his health obliged him to abandon professional activities. After that he was in the drug business as a member of the W. T. Green Drug Company, until his recent retirement.

Dr. Walter Scott was married in Benham, Texas, in 1892, to Miss Emma Wilson, a daughter of D. A. Wilson, a mechanic, who came to Texas from Kentucky. Doctor and Mrs. Scott have one son, William Finney, born in 1897. Doctor Scott is a past master of Lodge No. 165, A. F. & A. M., and is affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter and the Commandery at Athens. His church is the Methodist.

JOHN R. CALLAGHAN, deceased. From the early settlement of Panhandle, Texas, to the present time the name of Callaghan has been familiar to its residents, and Callaghan enterprise and public spirit-that of both father and son-have been prime factors in pushing forward the development of the town.

John R. Callaghan was born in West Virginia, the son of slave-holding parents with large plantation in-terests. The fortunes of war, however, left them im-poverished, but he remained on the home plantation until 1885, at which time he migrated with his family to Kansas, and the next five years he spent in farming in Kansas, at Kiewa, Barber county, and from farming he turned his attention to railroading. He came to Texas, in 1890, as an employe of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, and established his home at Panhandle, where he spent the rest of his life. After coming here he continued in railroad work for two years, as superintendent of construction. Carson county was at that time but sparsely settled, but the railroad brought in more people, and soon Mr. Callaghan saw the need of a hotel at Panhandle. Accordingly he erected the Calnote at ranname. Accordingly he erected the Cal-laghan Hold, the first bastlery opened to the traveling public in the town. This botel he conducted for a period of thirteen years. In the mentime, in 1892, he estab-lished the J. R. Callaghan Mercantile Co., which he conducted, in connection with operating the hotel, until his death. He died August 26, 1903, at the age of fifty-one years. As a business man he was successful. He accumulated a comfortable fortune, his possessions including both farming and town property. Politically, he was a Democrat, but he never sought or filled office. He had no time for office holding; his own business affairs occupied his whole attention. His religious creed was that of the M. E. Church South.

Bettie J. (Morton) Callaghan, Mr. Callaghan's wife, also a native of West Virginia, died at Panhandle in 1908, at the age of fifty-six years. She had accompanied him to Texas, and shared with him the privations of frontier life and the later success he achieved through his efforts here. They were the parents of two children:

Canterbery F. and Asbery A.
Canterbery F. Callaghan was born in 1872, and died in 1890, shortly after the removal of the family to Panhandle. He had been educated at Kiowa, Kansas. and was a railroad man, in the employ of the Santa Fe. He met with accidental death while in train service, at Wellington, Kansas, and is buried at Kiowa, that State.

Asbery A. Callaghan, the only survivor of the family, was born at Craigsville, West Virginia, November 16, 1878. He was educated in the Polytechnic College at Fort Worth, Texas, where he graduated in 1897 from the Commercial Department; and he took a four years' course in the Literary Department of Fort Worth University. On his return home from the university he became associated in business with his father, and at his father's death succeeded him in the interests above outlined. On first entering the mercantile business, young Callaghan assumed the responsibility of its management, and has conducted it ever since, for a period of twenty-one years. The Callaghan general store is the oldest mercantile establishment in the town. Mr. Callaghan is a stockholder and director in the Panhandle Bank, he owns about two-thirds of the city's business property, and he has two farms, four hundred and eighty acres in

During his college days, Mr. Callaghan was corporal and afterward captain of the College Guards Infantry Co., and throughout his business life as well as in college work he has taken the initiative. He helped to organize the Panhandle Commercial Club and was its first secretary, serving one term. He served four terms, eight years in all, as County Treasurer of Carson county, and at the end of his last term openly declined to be a candidate for re-election, amounting the fact through the columns of the Panhandle Herald. This announcement was received with much regret by the people of the county. Mr. Callaghan has always harmonized with the Democratic party and has taken an active part in politics ever since he became a voter. He helped to organize the Carson County Democratic Committee, and since its organization has been its secretary. As the representative of this committee, he met Governor Colquitt on the train en route to Snyder from Post City, Texas, on May 2, 1912, and gave him an invitation to deliver an address at Panhandle. May 13, the Governor addressed at Panhandle the largest assembly ever gathered in the entire Panhandle section.

Mr. Callaghan is associated with the church in which he was reared, and is one of its trustees, and he has membership in the fraternal organizations of the I. O. O. F. and W. O. W.

Mr. Callaghan's favorite playmate in the primary school days is now his wife. This was Miss Louie A. Henson, daughter of Col. A. L. Henson of Jocksboro, Texas, Sergeant of the Texas Rangers, Sheriff of Carson county, and for many years a prominent stock man in the Panhandle. They were married June 5, 1901, in the M. E. church at Panhandle, by the Rev. Henry R. Coleman, and are the parents of two children: Lillian, born October 30, 1903, and Pauline, May 23, 1906, both natives of Panhandle.

THOMAS H. BARRON. In the little city of Athens and the country surrounding, Thomas H. Barron is a man who has succeeded as a man of affairs, a farmer, merchant, and freighter, and is now retired from active participation in those concerns which for many years made up the business of his life. He is an example of the self-made man in the matter of his achievements, and without an inventory of his resources it would be only a guess to estimate just how fortunate he has been. His career has been one not only prosperous from his individual standpoint, but has been useful in service and in many ways to his community, and he has long stood as a leader in Henderson county affairs.

Thomas H. Barron was born in Marion, Perry county, Alabama, October 14, 1857. When two years old he eame to Texas with his father, Joseph J. Barron, who located in Houston county. Joseph J. Barron was born in Alabama in 1832. There is evidence that a portion of the ancestral stock was Spanish, since Thomas Barron, the grandfather, is believed to have been a son of people who were originally subjects of the King of Spain. Thomas Barron was married in Alabama to a Miss Jameson, a sister of Henry, Bobb and Jack Jameson, of Perry county. The children in the grandfather's family were: Robert, Joseph J., Thomas, Elias, Alfred, Kittie, and Puss, who married a Mr. Wells, and Eunice, who married William Hinton.

Joseph J. Barron married Eliza Nelms, of Perry county, Alabama. It was in Perry county that Gen. Sam Houston married his last wife, a wedding ceremony which Mrs. Barron attended, as a guest. J. Barron died in Houston county, Texas, in 1868, and his widow survived him many years, until 1906, when she was seventy-two years of age. They had come to Texas in 1859, by wagon, and along with their family and houshold possessions also brought a number of slaves. Mr. Barron during the war joined the Confederate army and was in the Trans-Mississippi Department, under Gen. Tom Green, and was present when that gallant Confederate leader lost his life by a cannon shot in the Red River campaign. The children of Joseph J. and Eliza Barron were: Mollie, who married John McClellan and died in Comanche county, Oklahoma; Thomas H.; Fannie, wife of Wimburn Jones, of Marlow, Oklahoma; Sallie, who married Albert Ellis of Oklahoma; Joseph J., of Houston county, Texas; Cornelia, wife of Burrell McClendon, of Duncan, Oklahoma, and Young Barron, of Lee county, Texas. Thomas H. Barron grew up in a humble home. He was only eleven years old when his father died. As the oldest son he had to get out and hustle, not only for himself, but to support his mother and younger sister. The family estate was so small that he never claimed any of it when he reached the age of twenty-one. At the same time his educational advantages were necessarily meager, and his attendance at school was simost negligible. During the decade of the seventies, when he was still young, he came to Henderson county and found work as a clerk in Athens, with Dr. Scott. Subsequently he worked a few years for J. H. Gerrall. As his monthly salary was sufficient to only pay a little more than his current expenses and enable him to lay by a few dollars at the end of the year, he soon gave up his occupation and started out independently. He managed to acquire a home and then traded the property for a farm west of Athens, giving his notes for the balance. That move was the opening wedge in his successful career. He proved by actual experience that he was a first class farmer, he soon had his land paid for, and, by trading in stock and energetic management of all his interests, increased his wealth rapidly from year to year. He was soon listed among the independent and substantial men of Henderson county. His credit was always maintained at gilt edge, and as he always met his responsibilities on the moment, it was never difficult to secure the funds to help him through his deals. Finally he turned over the management of the farm to negro labor and moved to Athens, where he engaged in merchandising. He sold groceries, was associated as one of the firm of Wofford and Barron, and later conducted a hardware business of his own. He carried on a general line of trading in Athens property and in farm lands, and did a good deal toward the improvement and development of farms near the county seat. In Athens he acquired some of the business houses, and his farms still form a material source of his income.

His success in business seems to have encouraged Mr. Barron to study political questions and political conditions, and he thus formed a growing interest in economic affairs. He has always voted the Democratic ticket, but is not in harmony with his party on some of the vital questions of the day. He favors a tariff on raw material for revenue, and believes in the encouragement of home industry on the farm and elsewhere by the im-position of proper tariff rates. His idea was repre-sented by the candidacy of Mr. Harmon for president sented by the candidacy of Aff. Hammon of president in 1912, rather than by those who he considers of more populistic tendencies. His study of politics and his reputation as a man of splendid judgment in business finally brought him into the field for the legislature, and he was elected a member of the twenty-third assembly. He was placed on the committee on military affairs, farming and stock raising and federal relations. His chief service was in heading off vicious legislation and the enactment of laws tending to burden the state with-out a corresponding benefit. He introduced a bill making it a penitentiary offense for a mortgagor to run off personal property on which he had borrowed money. That measure was defeated. He also opposed the appropriation of public money for the transportation of militia to points of disturbance where railroad interests needed guarding, believing the railroads should bear that expense, since the service was for their benefit.

In December, 1880, Mr. Barron was married in Athens to Miss Florence Scott, daughter of the venerable Dr. William D. Scott, whose career is given space elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Barron was born in 1865. Their children are: Horace S., born in 1884, and now cashier of the State Bank at Chandler, and one of the promising young business men of this section, and Helen Barron, who was born in 1903.

ARTHUR MAULDIN. A young citizen and business man of exceptional prominence and enterprise at Kemp is Arthur Mauldin, cashier of the Farmers' Guaranty State Bank. Mr. Mauldin's first business experience was in banking, and, having quickly demonstrated his ability in the minor grades of the service, was given larger and larger responsibilities, and soon took the initiative in organizing and conducting financial institutions in several localities of central and western Texas. He has also taken much filterest in matters of local citizenship, and is one of the most intelligent workers for the substantial prosperity of his home city of Kemp.

Arthur Mauldin was born at Commerce, Texas, August 25, 1883, a son of C. S. Mauldin and a grandson of Payne Mauldin. Grandfather Mauldin died in Hunt county, Texas, and among his children were: C. S. Mauldin; D. C. Mauldin, of Fort Worth; West, of El Paso, and Mrs. J. A. Hodge, of Sulphur Springs, Texas.

C. S. Mauldin, who is a cotton buyer at Greenville, came to Texas in 1878, from Atlanta, Georgia. He was born at Marietta, Georgia, in 1857, grew up and was educated at Atlanta, and also attended school at Honey Grove, Texas, where the family located on coming to this state. He began his career as a laborer on a ranch, subsequently became an independent farmer, but his principal business career had been in connection with cotton business. He was directed to that through his election as a cotton weigher at Commerce. His four election as a cotton weigher at commerce. This low-years of service in that capacity so familiarized him with cotton grading and sampling as to render him a valuable man for cotton brokers. He was employed by P. E. Henson & Company, of Paris, for a time, then by Bush, Witherspoon & Company as a buyer, and then by J. L. Goldman, of Dallas. For the past several years he has followed the business independently as a speculator at Greenville. Mr. C. S. Mauldin married Miss Elizabeth Lewis, a daughter of Mrs. Faraby Lewis. Mrs. Mauldin died at Greenville in 1912, and her children are Arthur and Miss Mary Mauldin, the latter being a teacher in Hopkins county, Texas.

Arthur Mauldin attended the east Texas normal school at Commerce, where he took a commercial course. With that preparation be became a bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Commerce, and his experience there lasted for more than two years. Thoroughly familiar with all the departments of banking, he then organized the Chilton Bank, of which he was cashier two years. From Chilton he went to Frankston, Texas, where he was cashier of the First State Bank for a year, and in 1909 came to Kemp and organized the Farmers' Guaranty State Bank, of which he was chosen eashier. In 1913, Mr. Mauldin organized the Citizens Bank of Scurry, Texas, and is vice president of that institution. His associate in the organization of the bank at Chilton was Judge Riddel, the well known financier of Dallas. The same metropolitan influence entered into the forming of the state bank in Kemp and the Citizens Bank at Scurry, Judge Riddle being president of both institutions. The Kemp bank has a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars, and its earnings to the 1st of July, 1913, were approximately ten thousand dollars, with dividends of forty-five hundred dollars paid in eash.

On October 29, 1905, Mr. Mauldin was married in Commerce to Miss Annie Cornelius. Mrs. Mauldin was born in Honey Grove, Texas, May 18, 1889, and to ber marriage has been born one daughter, Evelym Mauldin. Mr. Mauldin has served as president of the Kemp Commercial Glub, and is now treasurer of that live civic and business organization. He has been a member of the board of stewards of the Methodist church, and fraternally is secretary of Lodge No. 528, A. F. & A. M., at Kemp, Texas.

WILLIAM PILLEY, A resident of Texas since December 27, 1869, Mr. William Pilley has been prominent as a business man and public official at Wills Point for more than thirty years, the greater part of which time has been spent in the service of his community in the capacity of postmaster. Mr. Pilley took charge of the local postofice at a time when its service could be performed by one man, the postmaster himself, and has imaggnated there all the important additions to the postal facilities, including rural free delivery, and had charge of the office when the parcel post went into effect. During the war between the states Mr. Pilley was a Union solitier, and comes of a long line of ancestors who have been devoted to America and its freedom

His earliest forefather in America was his grandfather, an Irishnam by birth, who deserted from the British army and joined the American troops in time to render some service in the cause of American independence. One of the sons of this patriot was William Pilley, a soldier in Commodore MacDoungh's fleet duing the war of 1812. He suffered capture by the English and was executed.

Mr. William Piller was born in Washington county, Arkansus, September S, 1847, a son of John R. Pilley. The latter, who was born in Massachusetts in 1814, was a man of learning and ability as a teacher, a student of conditions of his day, and a partisan of the Union against all comers. During his earlier career he cast his vote as a Whig, and was afterwards a stanch advocate of Republicanism. Leaving New England when a young man, he spent some time in Tennessee, and enlisted for service in the Mexican war near Jopin, Missouri. He served with the army of General Taylor, and after that war moved to Arkansas. Most of his career was spent war moved to Arkansas. Most of his career was spent see, known as "Fighting Parkinson," In 1852, John R. Pilley moved from Washington to Sebastian county, Arkansas, and died on his farm near Port Smith in 1866. His widow survived him many years and died in the same locality in 1905. Their children were: J. R., who died in Kaufman county, Texas, and left a family; John K., who died in Sebastian county, Arkansas, and Mrs. Malinda Ray, of Crosly county,

It was in the country about Fort Smith, Arkansas, that William Pilley spent his years from the age of seven, and had a common school education. He was brought up under the influences of his father as regards the questions of secession and slavery, and had all the spirit of his fighting ancestors to urge him to war when war came. He ran away from home, and in April, 1863, joined the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, which was then operating in Indian territory. He witnessed and participated in some of the desultory fighting with that regiment, and was in the engagements at Backbone, Marks' Jenkins Ferry, and in the second capture of Helena. Jenkins Perry, and in the second capture of Ferent.
From there the command was ordered back to Fort Smith to intercept General Price, who was on his way to Missouri from his great raid toward Kansas City.
The regiment remained around Fort Gibson, in Indian Territory, where he was mustered out of service in June, 1865. The two years of his army service did not suffice to satisfy Mr. Pilley's love of adventure, and he then joined the government train for the Black Hill regions, making the trip as a wagon driver. His em-ployer was a man named John Boyle, government wagonmaster. He reached Fort Crook without any special incident, and the two years spent about there were uneventful except for the drawing of his pay. His return to civilization was made over the new Union Pacific Railroad, and on reaching Leavenworth he concluded his connection with the government in 1868. The next few months were spent in adding needed repairs to his mother's farm in Arkansas, and in December of 1869 he started for Texas. Shortly before he had married in Topeka, Kansas, and it was with his young wife that he began life in the Lone Star state. Settling near Rockwall, he was engaged in farming and stock raising until 1880, and then moved to Wills Point and estab-lished his home and turned to the vocation of merchandising. As a clerk for nine years he sold goods, under John T. Reed. In July, 1889, he was appointed during the Harrison administration as postmaster. The office was then in the fourth class and his predecessor had been W. F. Weaver. After four and a half years, Mr. Cleveland replaced himself with R. E. Yantis, whom Mr. Pilley succeeded soon after the beginning of the McKinley administration. President Roosevelt and President Taft gave him reappointment, and his present term expires in May, 1914. Since the time when he did all the work of the office himself the force has been increased, until there are now two regular assistants and six rural delivery routes have been established.

In his political activity, Mr. Pilley has been a Republican since he became a voter, casting his first vote for U. S. Grant. He is one of the old guards who carried on Republican work in the state of Texas for many years, and was a frequent delegate to congressional and state conventions. He has also served as precinct chairman and county chairman of the Republican party. As to religion, Mr. Pilley was reared under the doctrines of the Universalist faith, his father having held such belief and taught same to his children.

Mr. Pilley in 1869 married Miss Mildred Hart, a daughter of James H. Hart, of Fort Smith, Arkansas. This wife died in Kaufman county in 1878. Her one child was John R., of Wills Point, who married a Miss Sayre, now deceased, and they had five children. Mr. Pilley for his second wife married Miss Belle Jones, a daughter of Anson D. Jones. At her death she left one son, Anson D., now of Wills Point. The third wife of Mr. Pilley was Mrs. Mellissa Dixon, who died without children. His next marriage was with Mrs. Sadie Barker, who died without issue. The present Mrs. Pilley was formerly a Mrs. Payne.

CAPT. THOMAS G. THOMPSON. The pioneer merchant of Wills Point is now living retired, after thirty-five years of successful merchandising. Capt. Thomas Thompson has been a vigorous and aggressive business man, and at the same time has performed his part of commercial and social service with a fine dignity, which is still evident in his distinctive bearing and manner. Early in life he did his part as a soldier of the Confederacy, and received his first experience in trade soon after the close of the war.

Captain Thompson, who represents an old family in different southern states, was born in Monroe county, Mississippi, March 28, 1845. The grandfather was John A. Thompson, a native of Scotland, from which country, with two brothers, one of whom was William, he emigrated to the United States, and after a brief residence in North Carolina moved to Murry county, Tennessee, and from there into Mississippi, which state continued to be his home until late in life, and his death occurred in Smith county, Texas, shortly before the Civil war. The birth of John A. Thompson occurred about the time of the close of the American Revolution. On coming to America he took up with the established custom of the south in owning slave property, and was a substantial and fairly prosperous man. He married Elizabeth Edwards, who died in Smith county, Texas, at the age of ninety-eight. Her children were: Stephen, who died near Ardmore, Oklahoma; William, who died in Smith county, Texas; Allen, who died in Van Zandt county; Anderson and Samuel, who remained in Mississippi: Bettie, who married Lee McKinley; Mrs. Nancy Bickerstaff; Harvey, who died in Grayson county, Texas; Elizabeth, who married Mr McLemurry and died in Missouri; Burrell W., father of Captain Thompson; James, who died in Cherokee county, Texas; Tolliver G., who died in Van Zandt county. The sons James and Tolliver were soldiers in the Confederate army. Burrell W. Thompson, father of Captain Thompson, was a Mississippian, acquired an ordinary education, was a Democrat in politics, and belonged to no church. In 1848 he brought his family to Texas, settling in the locality of Bullard, in Smith county. There he lived as a farmer, had a small number of slaves before the war, and for several years served his county as a member of its board of commissioners. His death occurred in 1880 at the age of seventy-one. Burrell W. Thompson married Cyrena Flint, daughter of Jesse Flint, who died in Monroe county, Mississippi. Their children were: William F., who died in Cherokee county, Texas; Samuel, a resident of Jacksonville, Texas; Thomas G., Burrell, of Ellis county, Texas; Mrs. A. M. Freeman, of Fort Worth; Mrs. Cassic Blankenship, who died in Van Zandt county; William F., who was captain of Company C., in the Seventeenth Texas Consolidated Regiment, in Polignac's Brigade; Samuel, who was a member of Douglas's Battery and took part in all the historic engagements east of the Mississippi River from Corinth to the end of the Atlanta campaign.

Thomas G. Thompson was reared from the age of three years in Smith county, Texas, and was about sixteen years old when the war came on. In 1862 he enlisted in the Confederate service in Company L, commanded By Captain Johnson, in the regiment of Partisan Rangers, under Col. W. P. Lane. This regiment was attached to the Trans-Mississippi Department, and he served in several skirmishes, and was in the last battle of the Mansfield campaign, that of Yellow Bayou. His service was in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas, and he was with his command near Austin in expectation of a Federal raid from the Rio Grande, at the time the news of the surrender of General Lee reached that place. The whole command was then disbanded and the privates all returned to their homes.

For six months after the war Captain Thompson attended school and made up for some of the deficiencies of his early training. During the season of I866 he put in and cultivated a crop, and then turned his attention to merchandising, which proved his lifelong business, At Old Mount Vernon he worked as a clerk for Alf Lofton, and from there went to Larissa to take employment under his brother, who was managing a business for Clapp & Brown. In 1872 Captain Thompson moved to Jacksonville, becoming manager of a branch house for the same firm. In 1878 occurred his final removal to Wills Point, where he engaged in business for himself. Wills Point, when Mr. Thompson first became a resident, had only a few stores, and was a hamlet of no considerable importance in the trade of the county. Its derelative in the trade of the county. As acceptant from this small village stage to an incorporated city of nearly two thousand people has all been witnessed and participated in by Mr. Thompson, and he has himself contributed something substantial toward the improvement, not only through his activity as a merchant, but also as the builder of a brick business house and a substantial home. He began trade as one of the firm of Thompson, McKinney & Company. The name was later changed to Thompson & McKinney, which was fater changed to trompson a accumer, which existed and prospered until December, 1912, when Cap-tain Thompson wrapped up his final package, waited upon his last customer, and then turned the business over to his son, who is now proprietor of this flourishing establishment.

During the passage of his many years of residence at Wills Point, Captain Thompson acquired some interest in farming, and has added in the improvement of the virgin soil of Van Zandt county. The old firm now owns a farm near Wills Point and is cultivating three hundred and fifty acres in the staple crops of this vicinity. The place is operated by tenants, and the improvements are fairly substantial and increasing with tenant farming.

While always a busy man with his private affairs, Captain Thompson has never failed in responding to his civic duties. Since the organization of the town of Wills Point he served as city treasurer up to May, 1913, when he resigned. Formerly he attended conventions of the Democratic party, but as a rule has observed the propriety of a business man and exhibited no special partisanship in politics. He has been one of the prominent laymen of the Presbyterian church, is an elder of the Wills Point congregation, has attended Presbyteries and Synods, and was a member of the general assembly at Decatur, Illinois, which brought about the consolidation of the divisions of the Presbyterian church, himself voting and supporting the move for such a union. This consolidation was effected in 1906.

On August 18, 1878, Captain Thompson was married at Jacksonville, Texas, to Miss Allie C. Doherty. Her death occurred in August, 1912, at the age of fifty-four. Mrs. Thompson was a daughter of Moore Doherty, who came from Alabama, and was a farmer of Cherokee county, Texas. Moore Doherty was a native of Ireland, and being a millwright by trade was exempt from military duty during the war. He married a Miss Shoemaker, and the Doherty children were: Sallie C.; Torbett of Cameron, Texas; Mrs. Thompson; Mrs. Susan Love of Jacksonville; Mrs. Elsie McKinney of Wills Point, and Calvin M. at Lubbock, Texas. The children of Captain and Mrs. Thompson are: Edgar, who is now proprietor of the business of Thompson & McKinney at Wills Point; Mrs. W. L. Pitts of Marshall, Texas; Dr. J. Dellis, a graduate of the Cincinnati Dental College, now practicing dentistry at Wills Point, and mar-ried Miss Grace McGee of Dodd City, Texas; Miss Clyde, the voungest, is her father's companion at the old home. Fraternally Captain Thompson is a master Mason, has passed all the chairs in his local lodge, and has served as a delegate to the Grand Lodge. He is also affiliated with the Knights and Ladies of Honor.

JACAMIAH SEAMAN DAUGHERTY. The following sketch of the career of a well known Houston citizen, who, however, deserves to be called a Texan rather than to be identified with any one city or locality, is an abstract of an individual history which might well comprise one of the most important chapters covering the develop-ment of this state during the past forty years. From the time he arrived in Texas in 1872 until the present, Mr. Daugherty has been intimately connected with land developments, with railroad building, with city planning, with the larger affairs of municipal and state politics, so that through his career may be read much of the real history of the state.

Jacamiah Seaman Daugherty was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, August 25, 1849. His great-grand-father, John Daugherty, belonged to the Ineshowen Valley Daugherty Clan of whom it was said: "A coward nor traitor was ever known." Grandfather James Daugherty immigrated to the United States before 1824, settling in Harper's Ferry, Virginia, and was a contractor and builder of canals and other works. Captain Robert W. Daugherty, the father, moved from Virginia to Missouri in pioneer days and was a farmer and stock raiser. He introduced Kentucky blue grass into Sullivan county, was the owner of the first corn-planting machine, and the first reaping machine in that locality, and was also the first to introduce blooded live stock there. He was the first man to volunteer from Sullivan county at the outbreak of the Civil war on the Confederate side, joined a company in Chariton county, and afterwards became captain of another company and served in Price's army. He was twice wounded in the battle of Pea Ridge.

Captain Daugherty married Lydia E. Seaman. The Seaman family settled in the Valley of Virginia, before the American Revolution, and many of its members were prominent during the Revolution and afterwards. While Captain Daugherty was away from his home in Sullivan county, the Federal troops confiscated all the horses and grain and other property about the home, and towards the close of 1861 the only live stock left were a few milch cows and a blind mule, and a few colts.

At that time Jacamiah S. Daugherty was entering his thirtcenth year, the oldest of five children. He used his youthful strength to cut down wood, and hauled it to the house with the blind mule in order to keep the family warm during the following winter. At the same time he attended country school. He cultivated a crop of corn with the blind mule during the summer of 1862, and afterwards broke to work a pair of two-year-old steers. In 1863 the Federal troops took away one of these steers and it became necessary for him to yoke a cow by the side of the other steer, and with this illassorted team he put in a small crop of corn and wheat and oats, during 1863. He threshed out this grain with a wooden flail, and thus provided enough flour for the family use during the winter. In 1864 the father of whom nothing had been heard for nearly two years, sent a messenger with teams and wagon to aid the family, and from that time on till the close of the war, conditions were better about the Daugherty farm. But the homestead had been in the meantime sold to satisfy security debts, and it was a hard struggle to keep the family alive and to devise means for paying off the obligations resting upon the household. After the surrender gations resting upon the household. After the surrender of the Confederate army, Captain Daugherty was unable to return home since Sullivan county was a rabidly Union community. He engaged in buying and selling the outfits offered for sale by the government, and also engaged in freighting. In 1866 when he began cotton planting in the Red River Valley of Louisiana. Thus by 1869 he was able to pay off the debts hanging over the homestead and the family once more breathed freely. After this arduous experience of the Civil war period the son Jacamiah began planning his own future, and sought to remedy the deficiencies in his early education. At country school he had proved himself a very apt pupil and was one of the leading contestants in all the spelling and debating occasions as also in the athletic games played among the boys. When moderate prosperity had once more come to the family, he attained permission from his father to begin a collegiate course of educa-tion, and in December, 1869, entered the Kentucky Uni-versity at Lexington, where he remained until October, 1872, graduating with first honors in the business department, and also completing the English course and taking courses in mathematics, the languages, science, and political philosophy. In the University he was again prominent in the student and social life, was editor of the college paper, and orator for the Secropian Ltterary Society. Owing to a misunderstanding with his father he left college before he had completed all the prescribed courses, and landed in Galveston on November 21, 1872, with just two and a half dollars in cash. Unable to secure any work there, he pawned his watch, and went to Houston, where again he was unsuccessful in securing an opening and then traveled north to Waco and finally to Dallas. Unable to get the business open-ing which he desired, he finally accepted an offer to take the Cedar Hill district school in Dallas county, at one hundred dollars a month. A Republican administration had recently burdened the district with a heavy public school tax, and there was much hostility to the school which manifested itself in the burning of the school house a few days after the session had begun. Daugherty was not a man then or now to quit in the face of difficulties, and at once opened school in a private residence, and applied himself with such industry and tact to the management of his school that at its close its enrollment had increased from six pupils to eighty, and the patrons were so highly pleased that they asked him to continue the teaching for another year. However, the Democratic party in the meantime had come into power, had repealed the school laws, enacted by the previous administration, and at the end of the school year Mr. Daugherty had vouchers amounting to over five hundred dollars, upon which he could not realize from the hoard management, who refused to pay the vouchers. He also owed a board bill of about one hundred dollars, but his landlord, who was a bighearted man refused to be concerned about the settlement of this bill, and allowed the young teacher all the time he required to pay it. He finally discounted his vouchers at sixty-eight cents on the dollar, and with the proceeds bought a horse and buggy and furnished a small office as a real scatte center in Dallas. During the following years he made enough money to meet expenses, to pay off his board bill and to redeem his watch, which he still wears.

Mr. Daugherty was one of the men who looked ahead and foresaw a great possibility for the land business, especially what was then west Texas. He induced an old college friend C. U. Connellee to become his partner, and in September, 1874, they established their headquarters in Dallas, and engaged in the land locating business, Mr. Connellee making his headquarters in Brownwood in Brown county. Buying three hundred and twenty acres of land in Eastland county, they surveyed in December, 1874, the site upon which the town of Eastland is now located. The choice of a county seat was decided about the middle of the following year, and their townsite was chosen by nineteen more votes than all the other three places combined. The firm had agreed to erect a two-story store building at Eastland, the upper floor of which was to be used for county purposes, and in order to get the necessary funds to carry out this agreement, the two partners induced Mr. J. B. Ammerman of Kentucky, an another college mate to come into the firm thus making the firm Daugherty, Connellee & Ammerman, in 1876. From that time they were engaged in locating many of the lands in Floyd, Hale, Crosby, and Lubbock counties, and in various other parts of the state. They sold a large tract of land to a Quaker colony, from Indiana, and in October, 1878, the firm in preparation for this colony sunk at Estacado in Crosby county, the first well ever put down on the staked plains of Texas. At a depth of ninety-eight feet the diggers struck an abundant supply of good water in sheet form, thus opening up a resource which subsequently has proved the greatest boon of the west Texas plains country. Another large sale which the firm carried out was in the center of Hale county, of a tract comprising more than sixty thousand acres for a Methodist colony, and the town of Hale Center now occupies the center of that ground.

In 1880, Mr. Daugherty indicated to the chief engineer of the Texas & Pacific Railroad how a better line could be obtained for the route of the railroad through the town of Eastland than along the survey as first made, and it was as a result of this demonstration that the Texas & Pacific Railroad was built to the town of Eastland. In 1880, Mr. Connellee retired from the firm and in the following spring Mr. Daugherty bought out the other partner, and since that time has been engaged in general real estate and land business on his own account. In connection with a Boston Syndicate, he located many thousands of acres in the extreme southwestern portions of the state fronting on the Rio Grande and the Pecos Rivers, and also a large tract in Howard county within a short distance of the present town of Big Springs. Even to one who is familiar with the vast extent of Texas, some of the purchases made by Mr. Daugherty and associates in the early days is surprising, and several of his deals ran well up to half a million acres, while that of the Boston Syndicate just noted included lands of more than a million and a quarter acres. these various purchases and transactions cannot be reviewed in detail, there is much interest attaching to his individual purchase in 1879, of about eleven hundred acres, situated in Kaufman county, twenty-eight miles southeast of Dallas. He improved this land and increased it in following years to more than thirty-three hundred acres, twenty-three hundred acres of which he put under the plow. The Texas Trunk Railroad was built through the land, and a depot established called Daugherty. At this station he had erected a store, a gin and ten first-class tenant houses. He constructed a large water tank, and supplied water to every house and barn on the place, and so arranged it that his tenants might have even the conveniences of hot and cold water in their houses. He also did much to encourage progress in agriculture in that community and improvement along other lines. He offered a first and second premium to the women who kept their houses and yards in the most attractive conditions, and was thus a pioneer in the "town beautiful" idea, which in recent years has had so much vogue in this state and elsewhere. During the eighties Mr. Daugherty owned a half section of land adjoining the town site of Colorado, the county seat of Mitchell county, and with his former partners owned a section of land upon which Lubbock, the present county seat of Lubbock county is now located. All told he had title to about one hundred and fifty thousand acres in Texas, and a half interest in over four hundred thousand acres of Mexican land.

Mr. Daugherty's home during this time was in Dallas, and about his lot he laid the first concrete sidewalk ever constructed in that city. His home was for years a landmark in Dallas, and the sidewalks laid in 1851 are in 1913 still in a good state of preservation. He was also actively interested in buying and developing city real estate in Dallas, and a number of early improvements might be mentioned which originated with Mr. David, his properties of the control of t

His increasing investments in land and in various business enterprises brought Mr. Daugherty to his first great business crisis toward the close of the decade of the eighties. It was not from lack of good judgment that he was drawn into his dilemma, since the situation which he had to face also confronted nearly every other business man in Texas. This phase of his career has special historical interest and will bear more intimate consideration. In May, 1882, C. C. Slaughter of Dallas sold a thousand beeves off the grass on the Chicago market at seven cents per pound. This was the first grass-fed beef that brought as high a price in the United States. As a result the live stock industry became most active in Texas. English and Scotch syndicates, with noblemen as members and others were rolling into Texas and buying its cheap grazing lands, and establishing ranches of fifty thousand, one hundred thousand, five hundred thousand and seven hundred thousand and more acres. All the neighboring states of Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida were ransacked for cattle with which to stock these ranges, and sheep in great numbers were brought in from Mexico. The Texas stockmen to protect their ranges were forced to buy lands in large bodies. This combined demand for land caused the cheap grazing tracts in the fifty-two Panhandle counties and southwest of them, where during 1875-77 land could he located and titles procured at fifteen cents per acre to jump in selling price by 1882 to from fifty cents to two dollars and a half per acre. Stockmen and landmen had loaded themselves with debt in buying lands, and during the early eighties loans commanded from two to five per cent per month in Texas, and the best of conditions called for one per cent per month. The few who could discount their paper in the eastern banking centers at from six to ten per cent were a privileged class.

Then in 1883 cattle began to decline. Over production forced this decline through the following year, and in 1885 there prevailed a severe drought all over west Texas, continuing through the year 1886. In the meantime the winter of 1885-86 had been unusually severe. The short range and the cold weather killed cattle and sheep by the tens of thousands. The pioner settlers who had constituted the first great migration into west Texas, owing to the drought could make no crops, and thousands of them moved out of the country. The obligations of the landmen and the cattlemen began to mature in large sums, eattle were sacrifieed because they could not be fed for market, and under these varied conditions it became simply impossible to sell western lands. Practically all the cattlemen were heavily in debt, and hundreds of them went bankrupt. The few who succeeded in getting through that period of 1886 to 1886 are now among the wealthy class of Texans.

In this state of affairs, being unable to do anything with his western land except pay taxes, and let the cattlemen graze them without renuneration, and owing large sums of money, in 1888, Mr. Daugherty transferred all his efforts to the grain business. He obtained contracts to supply thirteen United States posts in Texas with grain and hay. Then occurred the excessive rainfall of 1888, which prevented the harvesting of his crops, damaged the oats so that they would be supplied to the state of the state of

About this time Mr. Daugherty first became interested in the country in and about Houston. In 1888, in order to get more land for the production of hay, he bought six thousand acres in Harris county, about twelve or fif-teen miles west of Houston. He gave the right-of-way to the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway, and got a siding for the townsite of Dairy, now Alief, situated near the center of his land. He also acquired the land across from the Grand Central Station in Houston, now occupied by the Brazos Hotel. Soon afterwards he directed his energies to a proposition in the city of Dallas, whereby he endeavored to commit the officials of the Houston & Texas Central Railroad, including Mr. Jay Gould, to locate the Union Depot on a block of land controlled by Mr. Daugherty. The negotiations were carried on for a year between him and Mr. C. P. Huntington and J. Gould and resulted in a practical agreement for the location of the depot on the proposed site, and Mr. Huntington had signed the contract, but following a series of delays and excuses on the part of Mr. Gould the latter finally refused to sign the last papers and thus repudiated the contract of agreement to which he had previously consented.

Following the results of the great drought of the eighties came on the panic, beginning with the year is said. The property was burlened with the ownership and control of thousands of acres of land for which there was no sale. He was land poor in the most rigorous sense of that phrase. Jaulgments were taken in the courts against him and all of his lands, which in normal conditions then would have commanded from fifty cents to two dollars and fifty cents per acre were taken away at fifteen cents to forty cents per acre were taken away at fifteen cents to forty cents per acre, so the proceeds did not bring enough to satisfy the judgments by a large sum. However, Mr. Daugherty refused to take advantage of the bankruptey act, and in all his subsequent difficulties bas never accepted the leniency offered through that avenue of legality.

In January, 1894, he determined that Houston and the coast country of Texas presented the best territory for his efforts. He left his family in their home in Dalhas, which, as a result of the wise homestead was of the state, had been except the wise homestead was centions lad in Houston with his experience as his expending the highest his property. He had not with more than one hundred thousand dollars in judgments hanging over him. He had procured a selling contract for the six thousand acres he had previously owned, west of Houston. Subdividing this into forty-arce tracts, and having a side-track put in at wat is now Alief, then called Dairy, he brought farmers there from the black-lands of north Texas. He offered and paid premiums to the farmer who produced the most cotton on his land in the Dairy community, thus anticipating by about fifteen years the efforts of the Texas Industrial Congress along the same line. It is to his efforts that Harris county owes its most successful agricultural community, and it was to Dairy that the Houston real estate men made their first excursion with the business men of Houston when they were demonstrating that it was possible to successfully develop Harris county along agricultural lines. In all of his land transactions Mr. Daugherty has never foreclosed the vendor's lien on a tract of land sold by him, and after the disaster following the Galveston storm in 1900 he protected the settlers on his land and stood responsible for their notes until they were all paid. At Houston he had sold the block of property previously mentioned, and induced the purchaser to build a part of the hotel now included in the well known Brazos Hotel. Mr. Daugherty operated extensively in the lands of the Brazos Valley, and led the way in colonization and development in that section of the state. After the bollweevil had blighted the prospects of the cotton growers in the gulf coast country about 1898-99, he brought an expert tobaeco grower to this vicinity and experimented with tobacco productions. His first crop in the Brazos Valley was destroyed by an unprecedented flood in the Brazos river. And about the time the eigar leaf tobacco industry was in a fair way to development, especially in Montgomery county, the United States took off one half the tariff from tobacco grown in Cuba, and all of the tariff on that grown in the Philippines and Porto Rico, and this tariff reduction destroyed the eigar-leaf tobacco business in southeast Texas. In 1900 he induced Dave Harris, a noted broom corn grower of Tuscola, Illinois, to locate in Fort Bend county and experiment with the growing of this plant. The winds from the Galveston storm of 1900 blew the entire crop flat to the earth, and thus ended another praiseworthy attempt at agricultural development.

In 1600 Conrad Bering successfully grew the first crop of rice in Harris county. In the fall of that year the first grain thresher was brought through Houston on its way to the Bering farm. The rice crop yielded about twenty bags to the acre, and as rice was then selling from four and a half to five dollars a barrel, the initial crop brought new financial prospects to the coast country of Texas.

In the meantime in January, 1901, the Lucas Oil Gusher broke forth at Beaumont, and during the following months the attention and speculative desires of half the nations of the world were centered on this locality in southeast Texas. Immediately after the discovery at Beaumont Mr. Daugherty and Edward Moskowitz of Houston went to Beaumont and took a ground lease on a lot, upon which they erected a corrugated-iron build-They bought and shipped two dozen cheap desks and invited a number of their friends to occupy them, their intention being to use the free desks as factors to draw them land business. Mr. Daugherty during the exciting times at Beaumont following this oil boom saw that among the various classes of business men and investors were a great many interested in mineral developments, and he formulated a plan to set before these men the resources of Texas in the mineral field. An expert was secured to gather up a carload of samples of the best minerals in the Llano regions, and these were displayed at Beaumont, where they attracted general attention and led eventually to the sale of the Iron Mountains in Llano county. In spite of his leadership and active interest in these and resulting transactions, Mr. Daugherty never received a dollar for the sale of the mineral lands in Llano county. In this connection it should also be noted that in 1886 Mr. Daugherty cooperated with Professor W. C. Dollins in mining and introducing for practical use the first carload of lignite coal from the Texas deposits. He also actively concerned himself and did much valuable work toward bringing other mineral resources of this state to the attention of capitalists and others interested.

His experiences in developing the rice industry are of particular interest. In 1901 he prepared literature setting forth the results that Conrad Bering had accomplished in rice growing in Harris county. The pioneer of rice growing in southwestern Louisiana was W. W. Duson, and he was the authoritative head of all the rice industry in the southwest. Mr. Daugherty obtained a sack of rice from the Bering crop, sent it to Mr. Duson, without informing him where the rice was grown, and in return received a very favorable statement as to its quality from Mr. Duson. Mr. Duson had hitherto claimed that the Texas coast climate was not suitable to rice growing. After this letter had been included in the literature prepared by Mr. Daugherty, many of the Louisiana rice planters were induced to come to Texas and examine conditions, as a result of which in a short time there was more or less of a general immigration of those interested in rice growing to this section of the gulf coast. Mr. Duson and his brother were thus forced to come to Texas and open an office and join in boosting the rice industry of this state. In the summer of 1901 Mr. Daugherty began the construction of the Brazos Canal in Fort Bend county, an enterprise now known as the Cane Belt Canal. The difficulties encountered by the company of which Mr. Daugherty was president and manager are too long to be recounted here. Be it said that through the disloyalty of his partner, the company was eventually put to hard straits, and involved in various lawsuits and other troubles, thus crippling the financial power of the company and preventing a successful culmination of the project along the lines originally planned. Mr. Daugherty finally got out from the enterprise, after a loss of about thirty-five thousand dollars, and has ever since been paying off the company's debts for which he has held himself personally responsible, although the machinations of his partners really produced the crisis and unfortunate conditions of the company's affairs.

In 1905, Mr. Daugherty interested himself in bringing in the Humble oil fields. He induced George H. Hermann to sell to James B. Weed of Beaumont two hundred acres near where Barrett was boring for oil. Weed subdivided this tract of two hundred acres and sold it to leading oil producers, each of whom promised to bore for oil. This brought about a general immigration to the fields, and in the course of operation D. R. Beatty of Houston was the first to bring in a gusher, and established an oil field which is even yet one of the largest in Texas. A son of Mr. Daugherty, Bryan Daugherty, sunk a hole in Liberty county, from which he obtained a small supply of gas, and finally through lack of capital surrendered his interest in the property. In this same hole was later placed the drill which brought in the first gusher in what is known as the Batson field.

Among the more recent enterprises to which Mr. Daugherty has given his attention should be mentioned the laying out of a subdivision in 1908 at the Turning Basin of the Houston ship channel. In 1909 he organized with two others the Penn City Land Company, as company that acquired two thousand five hundred and eighteen acress of Penn City as a site for an industrial city, out the site of Penn City as a site for an industrial city, have been supposed to the site of Penn City as a site for an industrial city, burg, Pennsylvania, Syndicate, but that group of industrial city of the penn City deal along with them.

Mr. Daugherty is now giving his energies to an attempt to reorganize Penn (fity, and he has very sanguine hopes of its becoming a great industrial center, especially with the early completion of the ship channel. Only a most summary review has been taken of Mr. Daugherty's extensive operations in the land business in Texas, and a great many of the deals which smaller land men would esteem notable and conspicuous of themselves shrink to insignificance among so many of the same of larger natures carried out by Mr. Daugherty. He claims that he has bought and sold and handled more Texas lands than any man who ever did business along this line, and a complete record of his transactions would prove to any unprejudiced individual that his claims were well justified. He has probably seen more of Texas than any other individual and knows more of its resources. While at the same time up to the present he has less to show for his indefatigable industry than many who have confined their operations to a much more modest scale. That he has not been rewarded on a liberal scale for his work is due, according to his opinion, to the fact that his contest has been waged with debt and its strong ally, interest, taken in connection with the results of the drought of I885-86, the flood of I888, and the panic of 1893. In the settlement of his many obligations he has been harrassed much to suits of attachments and garnishments. His earning capacity has been greatly curtailed by them, and by the further fact that he could not take titles in his own name to the properties he has been buying and selling. At times he has not had money to pay railroad fare or to buy stamps with which to push his business, but he has never faltered in his determination to pay all his just obligations, and no one who has had dealings with Mr. Daugherty or is familiar with his record will doubt that he has the ability, provided he lives, to satisfy every claim. Notwithstanding the fact that for more than twenty years the bankrupt law has been in force, he has never availed himself of it to wipe out the old judgments and has paid large sums in their satisfaction,

While many of the large land transactions of Mr. Daugherty have been in the nature of public enter-prises, aside from these he has had a large and beneficent part in public affairs. He had been located in Texas but a short while when he became interested in behalf of some of his friends in the city politics of Dallas. A little later he participated in the movement originating in that city after Dallas had voted one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars to secure the building of the Dallas and Wichita Railroad. Then during the winter of 1875-76 came up the subject of building a railroad from Dallas to Cleburne. The people of Johnson county were much aroused over this project, and were peculiarly open to any projects that might be proposed for supporting the enterprise. Some of the men who had been most prominent in the Dallas and Wichita projects were also taking the lead in the new proposition. They had spent the donation made by Dallas in building about twenty miles of track from Dallas, and thereafter the enterprise had practically come to an end and there was no prospect of its completion, Mr. Daugherty was the only responsible party representing Dallas at the meeting in Cleburne, and though a young man he took it upon himself to address the local citizens and explain the failure of a similar enterprise promoted and engineered by the same parties who were making such a vigorous appeal to the people of Johnson county. As a result the convention at Cleburne voted to delay their immediate support to the undertaking until they could investigate the standing of the railroad promoters, in Dallas. This checkmating of the plans of Col. Obenchain, the leader of the railroad promoters, resulted a day or so later in a personal conflict between Mr. Daugherty and the colonel, in which the latter was sorely bested. However, the chief purpose was attained in discounting the irresponsible management and exploitation of local citizens in support of a badly matured enterprise which would never have brought anything but disaster to all the supporters and contributors and would have proved a serious set-back to railroad construction from Dallas.

Mr. Daugherty took an important part in the gubernatorial campaigns in which J. W. Throckmorton was candidate, and owing to Mr. Throckmorton's disregard of a general petition for the establishment of Eastland as one of the places for holding the Federal court in the northern judicial district, Mr. Daugherty took it upon himself to lead the opposition to that candidate when he sought the nomination for governor. Outside of pure politics, Mr. Daugherty during those years lent his efforts to much that was political and at the same time closely connected with the economic welfare of the state.

Barbed wire as fencing material was first introduced into Texas in 1877. By 1880 the cattlemen were fencing in large areas they did not own or legally control. This brought about the era of wire-cutting, and resulted in many feuds and much blood being spilled among the wirecutters and the various groups into which the cattle interests were divided. The state school fund, the state university and the different counties of the state owned millions of acres of land upon which the cattlemen were grazing their herds and paying nothing for their use. It was the consideration of this fact that led Mr. Daugherty to issue a call to the leading land men of Texas to meet in Dallas for the purpose of forming a real estate association. There were a large number who responded to the call and at that time was organized in Texas the first state real estate men's association, of which Mr. Daugherty became president. He submitted a resolution which was adopted, declaring that it was the sense of the association that "all land should be made to pay a revenue to its owner, whether the owner was an individual, corporation or a fund." He drafted a bill and had it published in the Galveston News, in which it was proposed that the legislature should enact into laws and in substance did enact into law a measure prohibiting the fencing of land which the party enclosing it did not own or control under lease. The enactment of this law forced the cattlemen to rent millions of acres of land that prior to that time they had grazed for nothing, and thereafter they paid into the treasury of Texas, as part of the school fund, from a quarter to half a million dollars each year. His activity in this matter brought him the antagonism of many of the old cattlemen, but most of them have since accepted the plain justice of the case, and are now his warm admirers for the work he did in this instance.

His part in connection with another semi-official organization of Dallas should be noted. It had been his observation that many business men, bankers and industries prior to 1882 had sought Dallas as a location, but after investigating conditions had gone away to other places for lack of having the advantages of Dallas properly presented. At the same time many fakirs and pro-moters of unsubstantial institutions had come to the city and had remained long enough to get the local money without any adequate return. Thus originated with him the idea of the city having such a public organization as might look after its general welfare. At that time there was no city in the United States with such a standing Dallas had its board of trade, and at a meeting of that board early in 1882 Mr. Daugherty offered a resolution for the creation of a committee of twenty representative business men to be known as ".The Committee on Public Interests," whose duty it was to investigate all subjects affecting the general welfare and to encourage those that were meritorious and to con-demn such as were otherwise. This committee was constituted, and the results of its splendid work are still to be seen in the permanent commercial prosperity of Dallas. This committee encouraged the building of the Santa Fe Railroad from Dallas to Paris, of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas from Dallas to Hillsboro, brought about the construction of many local buildings and the establishment of institutions which have been an essential part of the business organization of Dallas, and among other things brought about the organization of the Texas State Fair Association. Other cities seeing the successful work done by the Dallas committee, adopted the same idea, and since then the idea has spread all over the United States, but Dallas has credit for having had the first committee, and Mr. Daugherty was author of the original idea. He was chairman of the committee for six years, and did the work free that in later years is performed by commercial secretaries at large salaries.

Mr. Daugherty took a very important part in the agitation over the creation of a deep water port at Galveston. He was living in Dallas at the time and Dallas citizens as a whole were at least apathetic, if not actively hostile to any project concerning what seemed to be a more intimate benefit of the coast city. Mr. Daugherty was one of the broad-minded and far-sighted men who realized that the establishment of a deep water port at Galveston was closely concerned with the entire destiny of Texas in its commercial relations. During the various negotiations and the various phases in the contest between the citizens of Dallas and those of Galveston, the Galveston News kept a correspondent constantly in Dallas. The chief Dallas paper, at that time the Old Herald, was aligned with the forces of opposition to the deep water plan. Mr. Daugherty during the long-drawn-out campaign finally presented to the managers and proprietors of the Galveston paper the advisability of establishing their paper at Dallas, which possessed superior advantages over Galveston for printing and distributing a large paper. After a business conference between the Dallas Committee and the proprietors of the Galveston News, the proposition was made that if twenty-five thousand dollars of capital stock in the News would be subscribed by the citizens of Dallas, the News would establish a branch in Dallas, and publish as good a paper in Dallas as was the Galveston News. This proposition was accepted, the subscriptions to the stock were obwas accepted, the sunscriptions to the stock were ob-tained in one afternoon, and in sixty days the Dallas News was founded, and in another sixty days the new paper had absorbed the old Dallas Herald. This was the beginning of what is now easily the greatest newspaper in the southwest and one of the premier journals of the entire nation

Perhaps a still more important achievement of Mr. Daugherty came while he was chairman of the Dallas Committee on Public Interests. The great railroad corporations were then just taking shape throughout the nation, forecasting the tremendous consolidation and concentration which have been brought about in recent years. These railroads through the west and southwest practically controlled the destinies of the state through which they passed. For one thing they were diverting immigration to Kansas, Colorado and California, at the expense of Texas, which at that time enjoyed few, if any, of the favors since granted by railroad lines and which proved so important a factor in colonizing and developing the state. At the same time an agitation arose in the state for a better adjustment and equalization of freight rates as well as passenger rates. The result of this was a convention which met in Dallas at the close of 1887, with delegates from all over the state, and a number of vital questions concerning the welfare of Texas and its business interests were discussed, most of which depended upon the proper solution and adjustment of transportation rates and the betterment of facilities. Out of that convention grew the immigration bureau of the state of Texas, of which Mr. Daugherty was chosen chairman. The railroads had made guarded promises for a series of low rates to go into effect in the following year, but when the time came for putting such rates into effect no satisfaction could be obtained by the husiness interests or the Bureau of Immigration from the railroad officials. The power of a semi-public organization of business interests and citizens in securing an adjustment of transportation difficulties having proved itself unequal to the contest with the railroads, the situation passed into its next phase. Both in the halls of national legislation and in Texas had been gradually growing the sentiment for public control of the great transportation facilities of the country, at that time entirely confined to the railroads. Mr. Daugherty out of his long experience and study of transportation condi-tions in Texas, and the various limitations and obstacles placed upon the private citizen and local business by the railroad companies, had become a firm advocate of a railroad commission which might regulate and adjust freight and passenger rates and control the operations of railand passenger rates and control represents that road lines in the interests of all the people rather than for the special privilege of a few. The bad faith practiced by the representatives of the Texas Railways on the committee of which Mr. Daugherty was chairman, as to immigration rates; the hobbled conditions in which the industrial growth of Texas was held by the unjust policies of her railroad management, keyed Mr. Daugherty up to the fighting pitch. He had worked for years, spent his time and his money to secure railroads to Texas, because he believed they could be made the most potent factors in creating its prosperity. Instead of the railroads being managed to perform their true func-tions, he saw their control in the hands of stock and bond gamblers who operated them as stock and bond gambling devices. He saw no way to remedy the evil, except through government ownership or a state railroad commission. To review all his active connection and participation with the discussion and agitation for a railroad commission in Texas would be too long a story. Despite his own and the vigorous advocacy of others for such a commission, the legislature refused to pass a joint resolution authorizing the submission to the voters of Texas an amendment to the constitution authorizing the creation of such a commission. An article written by Mr. Daugherty in favor of the establishment of the railroad commission and offered to the Galveston News for publication had been held up by the editor until the day after the legislature committed itself on this resolution, and was then given to the public. Mr. Daugherty was congratulated on the many strong and forceful arguments contained in that article, and among others convinced James S. Hogg, then attorney general, of the feasibility and necessity of such a state body. Mr. Hogg soon afterwards became active candidate for the office of governor, and one of the principal planks in his platform was the submission of a constitutional amendment authorizing the creation of a state railroad commission. During his subsequent campaign, Mr. Hogg used largely the material supplied by Mr. Daugherty in advocating his new and somewhat radical proposal for the railroad regulating body. Mr. Hogg was chosen governor after a hot campaign, and under the constitutional amendment authorizing the creation of a railroad commission, he caused to be enacted a law creating the first efficient commission of that kind possessed by any state of the American Union.

Hardly less important has been Mr. Daugherty's connection with other movements. Governor Hogg appointed him to represent Texas on the good road committee of the United States, a position he held for several years. During that time he issued and distributed at his own expense large quantities of good road literature, brought about a good road convention at Houston, and in other ways did much toward developing public sentiment in Texas, which has latterly borne fruit in the construction of thousands of miles of good macadamized public roads throughout the state. Governor Hogg in 1893 appointed him a delegate to the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, and among the many distinguished represent-atives of the various state delegations was William Jennings Bryan. Mr. Daugherty offered in this congress a resolution asking that Congress should enact a law to require the banks of the nation to provide an ample fund to protect their depositors against loss. So far as known this was the first instance in which such a measure was ever publicly advocated, and thus he has a good claim to authorship of the idea of the now popular plan of guaranty of bank deposits. Mr. Daugherty was also appointed to prepare the address to the people of the United States on the silver question. He was also chosen one of the orators for Silver Day at the World's Fair in Chicago. The address prepared by Mr. Daugherty to the people of the United States on the silver question at the request of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress was very generally published by the silver press of the nation as campaign literature. When Richard P. Bland, leader of the silver forces in Congress, made his argument in behalf of silver coinage at the special session of Congress, which was granted, that said address of Mr. Daugherty might be printed in the Congressional Record as a part of Mr. Bland's argument on the subject, and it was done.

As a citizen of Houston Mr. Daugherty has interested himself in some of the larger projects and movements for the improvement of business and eivie conditions. He gave his efforts to the establishment of cotton manufacturing industries in southern Texas, particularly at Houston, and has been a strong advocate of a measure which would place an embargo upon the exportation of raw cotton. By so taxing exports of this staple that it would be unprofitable to ship it abroad to the foreign mills, Mr. Daugherty believes that local industries would be stimulated and in time all our cotton would be consumed in local manufacture, to the great benefit of the entire nation.

In Harris county and vicinity Mr. Daugherty has been a vigorous exponent of the organization of local drainage districts, was made the first chairman of the Harris county Drainage Association. He also took a prominent part in the discussion preceding the organization of the navigation district, a district tributary to the Houston ship channel, and it was due to his suggestion and advoeacy that all of Harris county was comprised in that district rather than the limited section of territory first proposed. In 1910, Mr. Daugherty proposed resolutions for the inauguration of a movement to secure the location on the Gulf coast of Texas of a United States Naval Station, navy yard, dry-dock, arsenal and ordnance factory, and through his influence had these resolutions endorsed at the meetings of the Texas industrial congress and of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, both congresses having met in Texas during that year. Among other things Mr. Daugherty has interested himself in extending the friendly and protective interests and relations of the United States to the Latin American Republic on the south. His broad-minded vision covers a great range of the possibilities and probabilities of the future in both commercial and political history. At the same time Mr. Daugherty is extremely loyal now as always to his home state of Texas, and particularly to his home city of Houston. Concerning the advantages and the opportunities which an alert people must set themselves to realize in and about this city, he has written the following sentences: "Now is the time for the young, courageous, industrious, economical and temperate of all nations to cast their lot with Houston. Here will dwell demand for muscle, brawn, inventive genius, mechanical skill, financial capacity, executive power and the inherent excellencies that crown success. It is possible for such to weave themselves and their families into the important factors that will constitute the successful and mighty whole. Do not lament that you did not live in the early days of San Francisco, Chicago, or New York. Opportunities, unexcelled by either of these in their most fortuitous days, now invite you to Houston. The great axis of commerce of the western hemisphere will ultimately take its true position on a northwest and southeast line. When the multiplied millions of North, Central and South America, educated and energized through the methods of progressive civilization, seek to exchange the product of their industry, climate and soil, the shortest line of least resistance will be northwest and southeast. In addition to these, the meeting of the great railway systems and steamship interests, in the Houston-Galveston district, have established it as the place for one of the earth's mighty emporiums."

On December 19, 1878. Jaconiah Scaman Daugherty married Margaret Cartuel Bryan, a daughter of Daniel and Sarnh (Pettit) Bryan of Lexington, Kentacky. Daniel Boone married one of the Bryan family, and several of its male members accompanied the great pathiader and pioneer to Kentucky, participating with him in the Indian wars and in the development of that magnificent blue-grass region, and many of their descendants are yet located around Lexington. Joseph Bryan, M. D. the oldest brother of Mrs. Daugherty, is a distinguished physician and surgeon. It was he who, while in Bellevue Hospital in New York, first introduced plaster of paris jackets in the treatment of weak spines and other weak members of the human body. The five children born to Mr. Daugherty and wife are Erryan Detection of the Company of the

At the age of almost sixty-four years, with clear mind and sound body and determination, brightened with hope, Mr. Daugherty still faces his work, both in business and in the public interests. He proposes to devote the best thought and persistent effort of the remainder of his days to giving concrete being to these ideals which he has always cherished, and which will give new meaning and new direction to the industrial growth and civiliza-tion of the great country of which Houston and Texas are at the center. In the past he has been closely identified and always taking a positive side in many important discussions and movements. His attitude is still that of a man of strong conviction and positive belief. Among other things in the modern movements he believes that the woman suffrage plan is a discordant note, and that it is bachelorhood to which woman should direct her blows. He believes that man should be strongly imbued with three loves; that the more perfect these three loves are in him, the better man is he, viz.: the love of the true and living God; the love of country; and the love of and for one good woman, the crowning honor of his home, the inspiration of all that is good and true in humanity-the qualities that make for the higher and better life here; and increase our capacity to better perceive and recognize the beckonings of God to the progressive plains of the hereafter.

George G. Shaw. The legal profession of Kaufman county has in George G. Shaw one of its ablest representatives, and the county and city find in him one of the thower of their citizenship. His record for more than two decades has been one of the highest order, and with the passing years he has gathered to himself honors not a few and the proper fruits of his profession have been generously accorded to him. As senior member of the firm of Shaw, Nash, keading insurance and real estate people of Kaufman, he has been identified with most of the county of the his profession in the county of the his profession in the county of the his profession in the county of the his profession of the truest importance to the city, and as the executive head of the city of Kaufman, he directed its affairs through one of the most important epochs in municipal development.

Born on the 29th day of January, 1866, in Claiborne Parish, Louisiana, George G. Shaw is the son of Alexander and Sarah Ann (Kinarel) Shaw, natives of Georgia and South Carolina, respectively. The father was a farmer of modest means who spent his later hie in Louisiana. He was born in Greene county, Georgia of rural pepple, and was there reared to years of comparative maturity, being yet under legal age when he went to Alabama, there joining a company of Confederate troops and serving through the Civil war. When the long conflict was at an end he left Alabama, where he had already married Sarah Ann Kinard, and going to Louisiana, he settled on a farm, but death claimed him in April, 1866. His widow survived him until 1902, when she died in Louisiana, where she had long made her home. They were the parents of seven children, briefly mentioned as follows: Mary, who married J. A. Abercrombic, of Louisille, Peass; Mattie J., the wife Alayewelle, Louisiana; Mellosa, Married J., the wife diagnostic Louisiana; Mellosa, Louisiana; Mellosa, Louisiana; Charles, Who married John Stratton and lives near Texarkana, Arkansas; Charles, who died in St. Louis, and George G., who is the immediate subject of this necessarily brief review.

· George Shaw passed through his youth on the farm his father settled upon in the hill country near Claiborne and there his widowed mother saw to the nurture and rearing of her young brood. A country school education was his, and when he came to Texas in 1884 he was a youth of eighteen years, fitted only for farm labor. He reached Kaufman on November 11, when the election of Grover Cleveland to the presidency was being celebrated, and with his brother Charles, who had accompanied him, engaged in farming in the south end of the county. Despite Mr. Shaw's lack of training, he possessed sufficient courage to undertake the teaching of a country school in Henderson, Texas, and he succeeded so well on the first venture that he was induced to perform the same duties the next season. It was about that time that Mr. Shaw determined to make something of his life other than to devote it to the farming industry, for which he had no strong penchant, and he chose the law as a fitting career for one of his endowments and inclinations. He lost no time in beginning a sys-tematic course of study under the direction of Woods & Gossett, local attorneys, and he also took a course of lectures under Capt. Manion, Judge Green J. Clark and Judge Dillard, all of them being men who stood high in the legal profession in the state. In 1891 he was admitted to practice before Judge Anson Rainey, and he inaugurated his career with a civic suit in a justice court, to reach which he was forced to swim a swollen stream. He represented Schoolcraft & Company, suing one Jones for debt, and he won his suit, losing no time in collecting the judgment awarded. Mr. Shaw has a general practice, rather than along any specific lines. In 1908 he was licensed to practice in the supreme court of Texas, and while at the inauguration cere-monies of President Wilson in Washington in 1913 he went before the United States Supreme Court and secured license to practice before the Federal Courts. His law library is a splendid one, representing a judi-cious selection of authorities and reference works and is the most extensive in the city.

In 1896 Mr. Shaw was elected to the office of Mayor of Kaufman, and he served without a break in that office for twelve years. When he took up the duties of his new office, public spirit was at a decidedly low ebb in the city, and a movement was sadly needed to stir up the sleeping civic pride which the people later proved themselves to possess. Needless to say, the election of Mr. Shaw was the impetus needed to arouse the slumbering city and bring it to a realization of its condition. The first reform was that of the city water supply. The question of a new water plant was launched, and agitation followed sufficient to bring the matter to a vote, with the result that Kaufman today has a pure water system unsurpassed in Texas, with a chemical test of better than ninety-nine per cent pure, and with an adequate service for domestic supply and fire protection. Mr. Shaw retired from the office for the first time in 1908, but was returned to the office after an interval of two years, and he left the public service in the spring of 1912 with a completed water service and a splendid new high school accredited to his administration.

Some twenty years ago he associated himself with Wood Nash in the insurance and real estate business under the firm style of Shaw & Nash. Fire years later Temple Nash was introduced into the firm, and the present firm of Shaw, Nash & Nash dates from that time. Thairs is one of the most active and alert firms of its kind in the city, and they control a generous proportion of the real estate and insurance business of the city.

In politics Mr. Shaw is a stanch Democrat, but his connection with political campaigns has been rather of a local nature. He acquired some slight acquaintance with conventions and convention men as a delegate to state conventions and in 1912 he was chairman of the Kaufman County Central Committee, aiding Governor Colquitt with whatever influence he had at his command in his re-election.

Mr. Shaw is a Master Mason, and is affiliated with all the Masonic bodies in the York and Scottish Rites. He was Grand Marshal at the laying of the corner stone of the Widows and Orphans Masonic Home in Fort Worth in 1900. A member of the Knights of Pythias, he was Outer Guard of the Grand Lodge of Texas in 1912, and is Inner Guard for the year of 1913.

On January 2c, 1895, Mr. Shaw was married in Indianapolis, Indiana, to Miss Ethel L. Ellis, a daughter of Samuel Ellis, of that city. Mrs. Shaw passed away on February 23, 1902. Mr. Shaw has been identified with the Christian church as a member since 1882, and he has been clerk and treasurer of the church for many years.

WILLIAM TEMPLE NASH. Prominent among the men of Kaufman county, Texas, whose activities along various lines of endeavor are contributing materially to the progress of this section of the Lone Star State is William Temple Nash, of Kaufman, who is ably maintaining the family reputation for financial ability and business prowess that has ever characterized its members. He is a son of the late financier, Herbert Temple Nash, of Kaufman, who proved himself one of the able and successful men of affairs of his state. William Nash, the paternal grandfather of William Temple Nash, came to Texas from near Franklin, Tennessee, before the outbreak of the war for independence, and settled at San Augustine. His brother, John D. Nash, or "Jack," as he was familiarly known, who had accompanied him, placed his signature to the Texas declaration of independence and removed, finally, to Bastrop county, while William came to Kaufman county in 1851 and was here poisoned by two ex-slaves close upon the close of the war. He was a prosperous planter and owned much slave property, and was still in the prime of life when he passed away. William Nash married Miss Louisa Temple, a family of prominence and local renown about Nashville, Tennessee, and she survived her husband many years, passing away at Kaufman during the 'eighties. Among their children were the following: Dempsey, who died a single man at San Augustine. Texas; Llewellyn T., who died in Kaufman county, leaving a family; Charles Cornelius, who served Kaufman county as its treasurer and spent his life as a merchant and stockman; Lucy, who became the wife of Augustus Gardner and passed her life in Kaufman county; Napoleon B., who left a family here at his death; Herbert T.; Mrs. Dr. Pyle, and Dora, who became the wife of Henry Boykin. The Nashes were ever a pastoral and agrarian people and were conspicuous as stockmen and farmers from the time of their advent in Texas.

Herbert Temple Nash was born at San Augustine, Texas, March 9, 1841, the youngest of his father's children. He was approaching closely upon his majority when the Civil War made soldiers out of all red-blooded men of sound body, and he entered the service of the Confederacy, in General Ross' Brigade, as a member of Captain Hardin's company, of the Sixth Texas Cavalry, Colonel Stone, and was in the Confederate service from early in 1861 until the end of the war. He took part in the engagement with the Indians of the Territory at Chustenola, was in the engagement at Elkhorn Tavern, Arkansas, and his command was dismounted at Desark Arkansas, and an command was unanounced with the annual set, with other troops of Price's army, by hoat to Memphis, Tennessee, to aid the Confederates operating against the forces of General Grant. He subsequently was in the battles of Corinth, Iuka, Farmington, the Holly Springs raid, Thompson's Station, the service in-Holly Springs raid, Thompson's Station, the service in-cident to General Johnston's efforts to relieve Vicks-burg, fought Sherman's army across Mississippi to Meridian, then into the Atlanta campaign, where for 100 days there was continuous fighting and skirmishing, and was with his regiment as a part of General Hood's army which went back into Tennessee after the fall of Atlanta and fought at Franklin, Second Murfreesborr and back into Mississippi, where the command surrendered to General Canby's department in April, 1865. With the fighting organization of the Waco general, Mr. Nash took part in as many as 100 different engagements and was admired by his comrades and respected by his officers as a brave and gallant soldier.

When resistance was made useless at Appomattox, Mr. Nash resumed his place as a citizen of the Republic of the United States, where he had grown up. Following the local troubles of the negroes soon after the war, he was pursued with others by the authorities for a year or two under suspicion of being implicated in the slaughter of some of the freedmen, but was released upon a hearing and went about the serious affairs of life in a manner which promised success. Mr. Nash manifested a penchant for land. He was such a believer in the future of Texas land that he set about acquiring valuable tracts in various counties until his possessions embraced thousands of acres. While he assailed Nature and made the wild grasses yield their place to cotton, he liked the native turf and seemed to regret its passing when settlement demanded the opening of new farms. He reached a position of financial independence within a decade after the war that enabled him to abandon active farming and devote himself to business affairs in Kaufman.

Although for some time embarrassed by the lack of a liberal early education, he overcame this by experience in the affairs of the world which taught him the fundamentals of business. In 1881 he established a private bank in Kaufman, and conducted it with marked success, and in 1888, associated with some of the leading men of his town, chartered the First National Bank, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars, and was made president of the institution. He remained in that office until his death, March 26, 1912. During the life of its charter-a period of twenty years-the management doubled the capital of the bank, paid annual dividends of ten per cent for nineteen years, and a dividend of thirty-one per cent the last year, besides a surplus of twenty-five per cent on its capital and surplus, amounting to twenty-five thousand dollars. In February, 1910, the bank was reorganized with a one hundred thousanddollar capital and a twenty-five thousand-dollar surplus, and has continued its record-making dividend career.

Mr. Nash so displayed his ability as a financier that his services were called for by public institutions needing a strong and able guiding hand. When the old Texas Trunk railway became embarrassed and went into the hands of the court, he was appointed receiver of the road and rehabilitated its affairs, and when Governor Ross made up his board of managers for the North Texas Insane Asylum he chose Mr. Nash one of its members and he gave that institution four years of wise administration in harmony with his colleagues on that body. His activity in politics carried him into convention work of the state and made him well known for his Democratic adherence. Mr. Nash was a large holder of the original stock of the Kaufman Oil Mill, creeted the first residence in the county to cost twenty thousand dollars, and in the construction of the home of the First National Bank built the first brick business house in the county to cost thirty-four thousand dollars. After his children were all grown and some of his grandchildren had passed through the Kaufman schools, he urged the raising of the school tax materially to aid the schools to do more efficient work, demonstrating his willingness that the public school should enjoy any benewillingness that the pinnie season and any any tells fits which his capital could reasonably provide. He exemplified his fraternal side as a Knights Templar Mason and as a Knight of Pythias. For thirty years he was a consistent member of the Baptist church. He was of fine physique, standing six feet one inch in height, and weighing 265 pounds. On January 5, 1870, Herbert Temple Nash was mar-ried to Miss Louisa Jane Shannon, a member of a Temple, of this notice; and Jack A. Nash was born in 1878, attending Bingham Military Institute, North Carolina, after the public schools, and then took a course in Bethel College, Russellville, Kentucky. He began life with the affairs of his father as assistant cashier of the First National Bank at Kaufman, subsequently built the old mill at Athens. Texas, and has since been associated with his brother in the conduct of their vast agricultural interests, in the development of farms and in the multitudinous matters in the management of possessions equal to a baronial estate. He is one of the directors of the First National Bank of Kaufman. Mr. Nash was married at Athens, Texas, to Miss May Richardson, a daughter of Ed Richardson, a lawyer of Henderson county, and they have been the parents of three children: Jack, Jr., Janie

Catherine and Franklin.

William Temple Nash was born while the family were still farmers, June 22, 1873. The public schools of Kaufman educated him liberally as he grew to manhood, and he subsequently attended the Bingham Military Institute, North Carolina, the University of Texas, and the Poughkeepsie Business College, New York. When he left school, he spent a few years in the First National Bank, and then turned his attention to farming, aiding actively in the overseeing of the development work going on upon the family estate. Four-room bungalows with fourteen feet-square rooms on every 150 acres, with good barns, mark the character of their improvements, and their clearing of the "green briar" lands of the and their creating of the green that I lands of the Elm Flats of Kaufman county marks an epoch in farm-making in that region. They have under cultivation in Kaufman county twelve hundred acres and seven hundred acres in Navarro county. The brothers carry on the largest mule business in the county, at Kaufman, and William T. is a director of the Kaufman Compress Company and one of its promoters, as well as a director in the First National Bank. During the eight years Mr. Nash was a member of the Kaufman City Council numerous improvements were made in the city, these including the installation of the city water works and the filtration system. The father and brothers have ever been firm believers in the church as a great factor in civilization and have contributed liberally to all denominations and creeds.

On December 8, 1898, William Temple Nash was united in marriage with Miss Bettie B. Erwin, a daughter of Henry and Nancy (Spikes) Erwin. Two children have been born to this union, namely: Nancy Jane and Belle Temple.

Temple S. Pyle, president of the First National Bank of Kaufman, is a son of Dr. William H. Pyle, who established the family in Texas a few years before the tablished the laimly in lexas a rew years before the outbreak of the Civil war, and who thereafter became conspicuously identified with the professional, business and political affairs of Kaufman county. For a brief period after his advent into the state Dr. Pyle maintained his residence in Rush county, but he came to the vicinity of Kaufman in its infancy and spent the re-mainder of his life in its midst. Dr. Pyle was easily one of the foremost men of his time in Kaufman county, and in a work of the character of which this publication partakes, omission of a fairly complete account of his life and work would render the publication most incomplete.

William H. Pyle was born at Richmond, Ohio, June 9, 1833, and died February 9, 1891. He was a son of Dr. Eli M. Pyle and his wife, Mary McMurray (Shields) Pyle. The mother was a daughter of William and Elizabeth Shields, of Jefferson county, Ohio, and she was born January 7, 1807, her death occurring at Richmond, Ohio, on August 1, 1895. They became the parents of the following children: William Hamilton, father of the subject; Roxana; Elizabeth; Mary; Margaretta; Thomas H.; Samuel M.; Sheridan B.; Annie E.; Paulina, and Emma M.

Dr. Eli M. Pyle moved to Ohio and in 1831 located in Richmond, and there, save for a year spent at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, he lived out his remaining years. He was an intimate friend of Secretary Stanton, Mr. Lincoln's War Secretary, and at the age of sixty years he tendered his service as a volunteer surgeon of the Union Army. Mr. Stanton acknowledged this patriotic offer in a letter stating that his age would probably preclude him from the opportunity of serving in the field, but that as soon as he found an opening in a local capacity he would be pleased to recognize the offer of his old friend. He was a strong supporter of the Union cause, and lent his moral support to the overthrow of the Confederacy, for whose support his son, William H., was ardently striving. Another son, Thomas H., swas ardently striving. Another son, Thomas H., served in the Eightieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, while his oldest son was Brigadier Surgeon of General Carter's

Dr. William H. Pyle was graduated from Richmond College in 1850 and in 1851 was graduated from Washington College, in Washington, Pennsylvania. He completed his medical studies in the old Miami Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, and came west with a mental training and endowment that augured well for his future success. At the inception of the Civil War, though of Northern birth and education, he espoused the cause of his adopted country, and in 1862 joined a Texas regiment, heing commissioned surgeon of his command. His regiment formed a part of General Walker's Division of the Trans-Mississippi Department and he took part in the prominent field operations around Mansfield, Pleasant Hill, Yellow Bayou, Jenkins' Ferry and others, where he ministered to the sick and wounded so long as hostilities continued. With the fall of the Confederacy he dropped back into civil life, accepting there his share of responsibility in local affairs.

In the year 1869 Dr. Pyle was elected to the senate of Texas, representing the counties Kaufman, Ellis and Navarro, and he was a member of the never-to-be-forgotten Twelfth and Thirteenth legislatures, which have their prominent place in history, though few live today who actually participated in them. Included in his committee work of the senate, Dr. Pyle was chairman of the committee on Contingent Expense and reported out the bills carrying a recommendation for appropriations for the senate contingent fund. He allied himself with the influences at work for the development of the state by railroad and other corporation interests, and the legislation of those years helped to prepare the political soil for the germination and growth of interests which are today being strenuously opposed as monopolies, and as inimical to the healthy condition of commonwealth affairs. Thus is apparent the chauge in sentiment wrought by a few decades in these first days of fast developing enterprises.

Dr. Pyle was a personality of rare mould in his community. He was large of mind as be was of fame, and he loomed high above the average citizen of his period in every phase of life. He possessed a generous fund of information upon all live topics, was a brilliant and ready conversationalist, and ever an entertaining speaker. In the later years of his life be became affiliated with the Baptist church, though he was never a man to make much of a profession with regard to matters pertaining to the church. In the later years of his life Dr. Pyle was engaged with his sons in the drug business in Kaufman, and he was for some years one of the directors of the First National Bank of Kaufman of which his son, the subject of this review, is president.

On January 26, 1860, Dr. Pyle was married to Miss Mary Nash, a daughter of William Nash, one of the pioneers of Texas and one whose family is now one of the most numerous and prominent of Kaufman county. Mrs. Pyle survives her busband, at the age of seventy one, and is the mother of six children, briefly mentioned as follows: Laura, who died unmarried; Sallie, who died here as the wife of E. J. Haddock; Temple S., of this review; Charles B., of Kaufman; Fannie, the wife of W. A. Boggs, of Okema, Oklahoma; and Anna Pauline, the wife of Dr. H. W. Hoffer, of Kaufman, Temple S. Pyle was born in Kaufman, on February 27, 1866. He was educated in the public schools of this place and began life as an associate of his brother in the drug business. After some twenty years of successful activity in that enterprise they sold the business and Temple Pyle engaged in farming and stock raising, carrying on a gradual development work that tended toward perfection in improvement and cultivation, and introducing into their community registered Jersey cattle and handling it to the highest advantage of the dairy interests of the county.

For many years prior to his official connection in his present capacity, Mr. Pyle was a member of the Board of Directors of the First National Bank of Kaufman, and his worthy achievements in business commended him favorably to the directorate of the bank as one in every way fitting and appropriate to fill the post of president, when a vacancy occurred in that office. He was elected president of the bank in May, 1912, as the successor of H. T. Nash, deceased, and his record thus far is one of the highest order.

Save as a consistent voter of the Democratic ticket, Mr. Pyle has no political record, for he has devoted himself rather to business than to politics of the county, and his accomplishments have been as heavily fraught with good to the community in the field he has occu-with good to the community in the field he has occu-pied as they could have been in any other quarter. In March, 1888, Mr. Pyle married Miss Lee Echols, a daughter of J. D. Echols, a farmer who came to Texas from Tennessee after the war. Mr. and Mrs. Pyle have three children: Mary, the wife of R. H. Carlisle, of Kaufman; Adeline and Richard. Mr. Pyle has a membership in the Knights of Pythias.

JUDGE EPHRAIM C. HEATH. Probably no other family has more distinctive associations with the early history of what is now Rockwall county than the Heaths. A prominent representative of the name is Judge Ephraim C. Heath, who was born in what is now Rockwall county, was at one time county judge, made a record in the state legislature, and was one of the pioneers in the temperance movement in Texas, and has done as much as any other leader in furthering the cause since it received its first practical expression through the people nearly forty years ago. Judge Heath was also one of the organizers of Rockwall county. Although a very young man at the time, he circulated a petition during the winter of 1872-73 for the creation of the new county The organization took place in 1873, and he was one of the board of registrars of voters.

Judge Ephraim C. Heath was born November 4, 1850, at what is now the town of Heath in the southern part of Rockwall county, then a portion of Kaufman county. Heath, both now deceased. The Heath family was established in New England in the early colonial days, and among the earlier members who gained distinction was General William Heath, who was born in Massachusetts and died in that state in 1814 and who served with gallantry as an officer in the Continental army during the American Revolution. The Heaths are a family of pioneers, and almost every generation has seen its removal into new territories of settlement, or its members have taken part as advance couriers in social and civic movements identified with the welfare of humanity. In the earlier days their strong and courageous men helped to conquer the wilderness and blazed the way for the coming generations. Ephraim Heath, the grand-father of Judge Heath, was born in Prince George county, Virginia, March 13, 1790. In 1816 he crossed the mountains and found a home in Kentucky, locating in Simpson county. From there he moved to Callaway county in the latter part of 1818. About that time he went back to his old home in Virginia, a distance of six hundred miles, accompanied by his young wife, who carried her baby, John O. Heath, in her arms, The entire distance was accomplished on horseback. When the family located in Callaway county, Kentucky, twelve families, including the Heaths, comprised the entire citizenship of that vicinity.

John O. Heath, father of Judge Heath, who was born in Simpson, Kentucky, January 30, 1818, in his turn became a pioneer in Texas. He made the journey in a wagon, with his wife and one child, a daughter, in 1846, and instead of locating in the older portions of the state, established his home near the present town of Heath, which was named in his honor, on the east fork of the Trinity river in what is now Rockwall county. The country was then in the jurisdiction of Nacogdoches county, afterwards Henderson and then Kaufman and now Rockwall county. It was all a wilderness, and was practically on the border of the frontier line of civilization in northern Texas. About half a dozen other families settled in the same vicinity in the same year. John O. Heath's settlement and the survey of his land preceded all others. The first postoffice ever established in what is now Rockwall county was kept in his cabin home. He was the first postmaster, receiving his com-mission to that office in 1849. At that time the postoffice was known as Black Hill, and it retained that name until the office was transferred to Rockwall in 1855. During the administration of Gov. J. Pinckney Henderson, 1846-47, John O. Heath was commissioned by the governor as captain of militia for Henderson and Kaufman counties. Beginning in 1862 John O. Heath served until the close of the war as first lieutenant of Company K, B. Warren Stone's Second regiment in the Trans-Mississippi department. He went all through the Red River campaign, and his record as a soldier is one that will always be prized by his descendants. In 1856 he moved with his family to the town of Rockwall, and there spent the remainder of his life. He was the first person to join the Methodist Episconal Church, South, in that town. His death occurred in 1897. John O. Heath was a fine, strong, upright character, a man of power and influence, and possessed the bone and sinew and intellect of which nations are made. His wife was born in Callaway county, Kentucky, and married

December 24, 1844. She died in 1854.

Judge E. C. Heath received a good education in local private schools, notwithstanding the fact that his home was in a new country and the entire south was dis-tracted by the events of the war during his youth. From early manhood until 1890 he was engaged in the mercantile business in Rockwall. From that time until January, 1914, he did a large business in the abstract and title work at Rockwall. Judge Heath has a beautiful home and a fine farm of eighty acres about a mile north of Rockwall, where he and his family enjoy all the comforts of good living. It is in his public career that the life of Judge Heath has been particularly noteworthy. In 1882 he was elected county judge of Rockwall county, was re-elected in 1884, and held the office until 1886. It was an able, efficient and economical administration of pubilic affairs in his county. In 1886 he was elected flo-torial representative to the state legislature for the district embracing Rockwall, Dallas and Tarrant coun-ties. He was a member of the session of 1887, and during that time was a leader in causing the submission of the state-wide prohibition amendment. Also in the same session he was chairman of the committee on roads and bridges. Judge Heath since early youth has been an ardent advocate and a courageous and energetic supporter of all temperance and prohibition movements. Following the adoption of the constitution of 1876, which contained the local option provision, Judge Heath circulated what is understood to have been the first local option petition in Texas. He was a delegate to the great temperance convention held in New York City in 1890, at which addresses were made by Gen. Neal Dow and other prominent figures in the temperance cause. Also in 1890 Judge Heath undertook the leadership of a forlorn hope as candidate of the Prohibition party for the office of Governor. He made a speaking campaign over the entire state, and though he failed of election his campaign had some valuable results. The campaign, it will be remembered, followed the depression of prohibition sentiment caused by the defeat in 1887, and students of the fluctuating movements of state politics give credit to Judge Heath's vigorous conduct of his campaign for keeping alive the prohibition sentiment and paving the way for the present era of almost universal prohibition in this state. It was in 1869 or 1870 that Judge Heath became identified with the first temperance movement organized in the south, and for many years he was an active member of the Good Templars organization. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as all his ancestors have been. He pal Church, South, as all his ancestors have been. He is also a member of the A. F. & A. M., and has taken all the degrees of the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. In 1881 at Rockwall Judge Heath married Mrs. Ida 4ft 1851 at Rockwall Judge Heath dearfied 34%, fold A. (Collins) Carter. She was born at Paulding, Jasper county, Mississippi. By her first marriage she has a son, Ernest C. Carter, of Henrietta, Texas. Judge Heath and wife have three children: John O. Heath, who is living in Kanass City and is married and has one child; Mrs. Katherine Neville and Miss Mary Heath.

JOHN A. HOLMES. A career that has been marked by rapid advancement and brilliant achievement is that of John A. Holmes, county attorney of Roberts county, Texas, and one of the leading members of the younger generation of legal practitioners of this part of the Lone Star State. Although he has been engaged in practice for something less than five years, Mr. Holmes has ably for something less than n've years, Mr. Holmes has ally demonstrated his ability, his thorough knowledge of law and jurisprudence and his inherent inclination for his profession, and since his advent in Miami, his present field of endeavor, has not only won a recognized position in the ranks of his calling, but has thoroughly established himself in the confidence of the people. Mr. Holmes is a Missistepinal, and was born at Sallis, Attala county, January 20, 1886. His father, Thomas S. Holmes, was born in Holmes county, Mississippi, a member of an old and honored family of that section, and for many years has been well known in commercial circles as a prominent and wealthy merchant. He has also taken an active participation in affairs of a public nature, and at this time is mayor of Sallis. He is now sixty-two years of age. He married Miss Mary E. Sallis, who was born in Attala county, Mississippi, and educated in Woodworth College, and she died in 1895, aged thirty-five years, having been the mother of four children, namely: T. W., who is now a resident of Startwille, Mississippi; John A., of this review; W. E., whose home is in Laurel, Mississippi; and Miss Bessie S., of Sallis, Mississippi.

John A. Holmes was given the advantages of an excellent educational training, his preliminary studies being pursued in the public schools of his native place, following which he attended the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College for four years. After his graduation from that institution, in 1906, he came to Texas and entered the State University, where he received his degree in law in 1909. In June of that year he entered upon the practice of his profession at Bonham, Fannin county, but in the following September changed his headquarters to Miami, and here he has since continued in the enjoyment of a constantly increasing professional business. He has been connected in one capacity or another with a number of important cases where his talents and abilities have been proven, and the prominence thus gained has brought to him some of the most profitable business that can fall to the lot of a young lawyer. In November, 1909, he became the candidate of the democratic party for the office of county attorney of Roberts county, was subsequently elected thereto, and since that time has been twice re-elected, and his entire administration has been of such a nature as to justify the confidence and faith placed in him by his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Holmes's only social connection is with the college fraternity of the University of Texas, he being a member of the Delta Sigma Phi, although he is very popular with the younger set in Miami and the adjacent country where he has a wide acquaintance. He has achieved success through constant application and per-severing ambition, for his only assistance from home came in the form of an education. Whatever else he has accomplished has come through his own efforts. a "booster" of the most enthusiastic order for this section of the state, and has an interest in several enterprises here, among them the Miami Bank, in which he is a stockholder. Personally, Mr. Holmes is a man of good habits, studious and euergetic, and extremely fond of bunting and fishing when the duties of his office and his extensive practice allow him a vacation. He has never married.

JUDGE HENRY M. WADE. The Rockwall county bar includes among its leading members the native Texan whose name introduces this sketch, Henry M. Wade was born in Hunt county, Texas, June 21, 1864, son of Henry W. and Elizabeth J. (Kuykendall) Wade, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Mississippi. Henry Wade was born in Callaway county, Kentucky, of Kentucky parents, and made that place his home until 1850, when he came to Texas and settled in Upshur county. In 1859 he moved to Rockwall county, where he remained until 1866. Meanwhile he had sent his family to Hunt county and in 1866 he joined them there and they settled on a farm, twelve miles southeast of Greenville, where he spent the rest of his life, and where he died, January 7, 1912. Throughout the Civil war he served in the Confederate army, as a member of Company B, Sixth Texas Cavalry, Ross's Brigade. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1876 from Hunt county. His widow. Mrs. Elizabeth J. Wade, was a representative of one of the earliest pioneer families of Hunt county—the Kuykendalls—whose settlement there dates back in 1843.

Henry M. Wade was educated at Sam Houston Normal School, Huntsville, where he graduated in 1888. Until he was twenty-five years of age he lived on his father's farm, dividing his time between farming and school teaching. He taught school several years in Kaufman county. In the meantime he took up the study of haw and was in due time admitted to the bar. In 1896 he moved to Royse City, Rockwall county, and from there, in 1996, he came to Rockwall, having that year been elected County Attorney. Rockwall has ever since been his home. In 1906 he was elected County Judge, a position he filled six years, up to 1912, when he was again elected County Attorney, the office he is now filling.

Judge Wade maintains fraternal relations with various organizations, including the M. W. of A., the K. of P., and B. P. O. E., and the A. F. & A. M. His religious creed is that of the Methodist church, of which he is a worthy member.

Mrs. Henry M. Wade was formerly Miss Lulu Miekey. She was born and reared in Kaufman county, Texas, and is the mother of seven children, namely: Robert N., Reese D., Mart, Joe C., Oscar C., Carrie, and Nona A.

ROBERT E. Myers, M. D. Since the year 1803 Dr. Myers has been in active practice at the town of Kemp, an able physician and surgeon. Of well trained and experienced ability, Dr. Myers has done his work well in that community, and both as a citizen and a doctor stands high in Kaufman county. His family has lived in central and western Texas from a period before the Civil war, and its various members have been ranchers, farmers, millers, and morehants, and otherwise identified with those activities which are most important in maintaining the general welfare of any locality.

maintaining the general welfare of any locality.

Robert E. Myers was born at Lancaster, Texas, July 12, 1867, a son of Jasper C. Myers. The father died at Golston Ranch, now Big Springs, Texas, in May, 1875, when about forty-three years of age. He was one of the earliest ranchers to locate in the vicinity of what is now the thriving city of Big Springs, having gone there before the war, and he ranched with head-quarters at the old Golston Ranch at Buffalo Gap. During the war he was in the employ of the Confederate government, driving beef cattle to Shreveport, for the army of the south. Jasper C. Myers, who came to Texas when a young man, married at Palo Pinto, Texas, Miss Allen, whose father, Anderson Allen, ran a grist mill at Palo Pinto during the war times. Anderson Allen was a native of Tennessee, and first moved to Missouri and later to Texas. He had two sons and one of them served with the Texas rangers against the Indians during the Civil War. Anderson Allen died at Fort Worth, at the age of eighty-one, and is buried at Old Birdsville, once the county seat of Tarrant county. Shortly after his marriage Jasper C. Myers established his home at Lancaster, and his home was the chief residence and place of hospitality, an open house, where friends and strangers were entertained with equal hospitality and whence emanated many influences and practical charities in the community. In that home Mrs. Jasper C. Myers died in 1888, and it was in the vicinity of the old homestead that her children started their careers. The children were: Robert E.; Thomas C., who was killed in a railroad wreck on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad near Denton, and Miss Emma Myers, a teacher of music in Fort Worth.

Dr. Robert E. Mvers engaged in business as a mature youth with such education as Lancaster provided for its young people, and began his work as a clerk for the well known townsman Rena P. Henry, who was then a local merchant. When Mr. Henry retired from business, Mr. Myers entered the firm of Gibson, Lyon, and Company, and afterwards was with N. B. Johnson. After several years he left the trade to take up the medical study, entering the medical department of the University of Nashville, Tennessee, where he was graduated M. D. in 1893. In the same year he opened his office at Kemp, where he attended his first patient, and where he soon attained recognition as a skillful and reliable doctor. Dr. Myers belongs to the different medical societies, the Kaufman County and the State Societies, the American Medical Association. At different times since the beginning of practice he has attended school for brief periods, pursuing special courses and thus keeping in touch with the advance in science and medicine.

Dr. Myers in politics is a Democrat, and was pioneer in the Wilson cause at Kemp. When the campaign started he advocated the New Jersey educator as the ablest stateman on the Democratic side, and his personal influence had much to do with the practical support later accorded the new president of the United States.

In Kaufman county, in November, 1906, Dr. Myers married Miss Edna Jackson, a dughter of C. Q. Jackson of Kemp. The village was named by J. C. Watkins in honor of his wife, Kempy, a near relative of Mrs. Myers. Mr. C. Q. Jackson was an early settler in Kaufman county, was a trader, and now resides at Austrell, Texas. The only child of Dr. Myers and wife is Mary Emmett Myers.

JAMES M. SPILL, M. D. The family to which Dr. Still, of Kemp, belongs, has been notable for its prominent relations and activities in the profession of medicine and the ministry, and has numerous representatives in Kanfuan county, and other sections of Texas. The settlement of the Stills in Texas dates back to about the close of the Civil war, and previous to that time the family had been prominent in Tennessee and Arkansas, and physicians and ministers of the name are known in many sections of the union.

Dr. James M. Still, who was born at Palestine, Texas, March S. 1869, is a son of the venerable retired physician, Dr. Abraham J. Still of Komp. The family record goes back to the great grandfather Still, who callisted from Virginia, his home colony, and was an officer during the Revolutionary war. This American soldier married a Miss Lidy, and among their children were: Dr. Andrew, grandfather of Dr. James M.; Rev. Abraham Still, a physician and a Methodist preacher, who spent his life in Tennessee and Kansas, dying in the latter state; James and Dr. Isaac, who both died in Tennessee; Dr. Henry, who died in Arkansas; Keziah, who married first a Phelps, and later a Rodgers, and died in Tennessee.

Dr. Andrew Still, the grandfather, was born in Viginia, and moved across the mountains into Tennessee, where he was among the early settlers. He studied medicine, and was long a successful physician. He married Miss Sallie Bryant, who died in 1533. Her people belong to the pioneer farmers of Tennessee. Dr. Andrew Still and wife were the parents of: George, who died in Tennessee, as did his sister Martha, who never married: Mary, who married John Greenway, and spent ber life in Tennessee; Dr. Abrahmu J., and Elizabeth, who died in Kaufman county, Texas, as Mrs. Roger Gibson.

Armham Jefferson Still, father of James M. Still, he nout from Henderson county, Tennessee, and boeated at Palestine, Texas. in 1868. He was born in Decature county, Tennessee, July 30, 1829, and was left without parents when a lad of fourteen. He secured education as the neighborhood schools afforded, and at the age of eighteen went to Henderson county, Tennessee. Following the family inclination and practice, he decided on medicine as a calling, and at nineteen moved to Marion, Arkansas, to study under his unele, Dr. Isaac Still. Subsequently he took lectures in the Memphiis Medical College, graduating in 1857. His first office and practice were in the country clientage in the county of his birth, and he maintained an extensive country clientage during his residence in Tennessee. During the war between the states, Dr. Still was in the employ of the Confederate Government as assistant surgeon under Dr. West at Columbus, Mississippi, for a short time, until failing health caused him to abandon the work and return home. He was one of the most vigorous advocates of the southern cause, and his attitude alienated many of his old friends during the war, and he subsequently suffered disfranchisement by the Federal governquenty suffered distrancement by the Federal government. On moving to Texas he took up practice at Palestine, where he lived until 1870, when he made his final move and settled on a farm at Kemp. This farm was subsequently selected as the site of the new town, and is now largely covered by the homes and business houses of the village. At what was known as the "Old town," he opened a store and engaged in merchandising, at the same time continuing his medical practice until 1889. Dr. A. J. Still joined the first medical so-ciety organized in Kaufman county, and since early manhood has been a member of the Baptist church, and a Democrat in politics. He was filled with the spirit of opposition to military and carpet-bag rules in Texas, when he first came to the state and although denied suffrage for a few years he aided in the movement which suffrage for a rew years he anded in the movement whene verentually placed the reins of local and state government in the hands of Texas people.

Abraham Jefferson Still was married in Decatur county, Tennessee, December 17, 1859, to Miss Margaret Graves. Her father was a professional accountant, whose birthplace was South Carolina, and who was the state of the state married a Miss Mackey, of Virginia. Their children are: Eugene, an accountant of Dallas; Mrs. E. W. Mason of Brazoria county, Texas; Dr. Benjamin F., a graduate of the Osteopathic Medical Schools founded and maintained by Dr. Still, a relative, at Kirksville, Missouri, and now a resident of Elizabeth, New Jersey; George, who is a traveling salesman in Texas; Dr. James M.; Arthur Jefferson; Reagan, who is with the Independent Telephone Company at Tyler, and Mrs. Eldred Thompson, wife of a minister at Roanoke, Texas. Arthur Jefferson Still, named in the above list of children, was born on the townsite of Kemp, January 14, 1872, was educated in the local public schools, lived on the farm until he was nineteen years of age, then clerked for W. A. Boggs, in Kaufman, and later for Mr. Stewart, in Kemp, and became a bookkeeper in the Mason Bank, at Kemp. When the bank failed he engaged in the real estate and loan business, and has since built up a large clientele. He also represents the Texas Life Insurance Company as an agent for the loaning of their funds, and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company of Boston, and the Union Central of Cincinnati. Arthur Jefferson Still married in Dallas in June, 1905, Miss Bessie, a daughter of Stephen Moore, and they have no children.

Dr. James M. Still received a country training, and has many reasons to be grateful to the surroundings and influence of his youth in addition to the vigorous physical manhood which he obtained as a boy on a farm. From the country schools he went to Baylor University at Waco for two years. He read medicine two years under his father and attended his first lectures in the Memphis Hospital Medical College. From there he went to "Marion Sims," the ancient and honorable old school of medicine in St. Louis and graduated from there in 1892. For three years Dr. Still practiced at Noble, Oklahoma, after which he returned to the scenes of his childhood and has given this community his presence and his skill since that time.

In 1905 he took a post-graduate course in the Chicago Polyclinic. He affiliates with the county and state societies. Dr. Still has no record in politics except as a voter with the majority party.

Dr. Still was married in Kaufman county, December

29, 1892, to Miss Mary Moore, a daughter of C. C. Moore, a former commissioner of the county, and an ex-Confederate soldier, who settled here from Mississippi. Dr. Still and wife have children: Miss Virginia, a stu-dent in the Milford School for Girls, and Miss Maurine. Dr. Still is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and is a Master Mason in Lodge No. 528 at Kemp.

ALBERT A. BLASINGAME, M. D. Manager of the Barnett Drug Company at Kenip, Dr. Blasingame has been in business at this point for over ten years, and has now practically given up his medical practice. many years he was well known as a physician in Kaufman and Van Zandt counties, and represents a family which has been identified with this section of Texas for sixty years or more.

Dr. Blasingame was born in Kaufman county, August 16, 1866, a son of Silas A. Blasingame, and a grandson of Wade B. Blasingame. The grandfather brought his family to Van Zandt courty, Texas, in 1852, lived there as a farmer for many years, and died in 1891, when about eighty years of age. He fought Indians in the Florida Indian war of the thirties, and though too old to serve as a soldier in the Civil war sent two of his sons to the aid of the Confederacy, one of them being lost during the war. Wade Blasingame was born in to the state of th now deceased; Thomas, who died in the Confederate army; Silas A., father of Dr. Blasingame; Horace, who died in Hunt county with a family, and Jess, a farmer in Van Zandt county.

Silas Blasingame, who now resides on the farm which he settled in 1869, near Wills Point, was born in Tennessee in 1841, and was about eleven years of age when the family moved to Van Zandt county, Texas, Soon after reaching manhood he entered the war between the states as a Confederate soldier, did his duty bravely and well in the cause of the south, and then returned home to resume his regular vocation as a farmer. He married Martha Norman. Her father was Alexander Norman, who married a Miss Hill, and both came to Texas from Tennessee, and were old and honored settlers of Van Zandt county. To the marriage of Silas A. Blasingame and wife were born: Dr. Albert A., of Kemp; Mrs. Sallie Dotson, of Van Zandt county; Henry, who died in young manhood; Mrs. Josie Pamphlin of Van Zandt county; Finis, a farmer near Wills Point; George, a farmer and stockman of Van Zandt county, and Mrs. Della Nichols, of Van Zandt county.

Albert A. Blasingame remained with his parents until he was eighteen years old and in the meantime acquired a substantial common school education. For one term he was engaged in teaching school, and then took up the drug business in Kemp as a member of the firm of Nunnelee & Blasingame for two years. His ambition was directed towards a profession, and he prepared for that vocation by study in the Memphis Hospital Medical College, where he was graduated M. D. in 1885. He began practice in the country near his birthplace, subsequently moved to Chisholm, where he practiced six years, and in 1902 removed to Kemp, where he engaged in the drug business and gradually abandoned his practice. Mr. Blasingame now owns most of the stock in the Barnett Drug Company, a popular institution whose history spans many years of this town. By close attention to business he has built up a large trade and is one of the most progressive and successful merchants in the city.

On June 12, 1892, Dr. Blasingame married in Kaufman county, Miss Amy Rice, a daughter of Captain John Rice, a farmer and pioneer Texan, and a soldier of the Confederacy. Captain Rice married Mrs. Lou Stafford, and had two sons and one daughter. The children of Dr, and Mrs. Blasingame are Jerone, Leota and Annie. Dr. Blasingame is a member of the Christian church, and in politics follows the family principles of the Democracy. He affiliated with the Blue Lodge of Masonry.

WILLIAM H. INGERTON. One of the oldest stock raisers and ranchers of the Panhaudle country, Mr. Ingerton has been prominent at Amarillo and vicinity for a number of years, and besides the importance of his industrial activities has been a leader in the organization and development of several of the Panhandle planters, and in every way is a man of large public spirit and of broad and influential activities.

There are few of the old time Amarillo citizens who do not possess an affectionate remembrance for Mr. Ingerton's mother. She was one of the remarkable women in this section of the state, served as postmaster at Amarillo for a number of years, and for a much longer period had been a school teacher and many of the prominent men of the present time were her pupils and give her credit for many of the influences and kindly helpfulness which started them on their careers.

William H. Ingerton was born in Columbus, Ohio, May 7, 1865, and was the only child of William H. and Martha Hannah (Sargent) Ingerton. Both parents were natives of Ohio. The father in his young manhood gained the rank of captain in the United States Army and became lieutenant colonel of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry during the Civil war in which he served from the beginning to the end. Near the close of the war at Knoxville, Tenn., he met a tragic death and was twentyeight years of age at the time. Mrs. Ingerton, who was married at Urbana, Ohio, in 1864, after the death of her husband engaged in teaching, as a means to support herself and her only child. In 1872 she came to Texas, and for seventeen years, up to 1889, was engaged in teaching. She was a woman of excellent education, a graduate of Holbrook College, and on coming to Texas she began teaching in Waco, subsequently in Marlin, later at Denison, Sherman, Midland, and Sulphur Springs. She was principal of the Elmo school at Elmo and was assistant principal of the Normal school in Sulphur Springs. About 1889 she was appointed postmaster at Amarillo, and held that office and administered its service most efficiently for six years and four months up to the time of her death, which occurred in Amarillo, when she was sixty-six years of age. William H. Ingerton owes much to his mother's influence and training and was given excellent advantages despite the handicaps imposed upon his mother in prodespite the namicials imposed upon his mother in pro-viding for the livelihood of both of them. He was edu-eated in the public schools of Denison and Sherman to the age of fifteen, and subsequently was sent to the State Normal school at Salina, Kansas, during the period which his mother was postmaster at Amarillo. His first work after leaving school was with the firm of Gunther & Munson, surveyors, and was employed in va-rious capacities by this firm in different parts of the state. He then became a cowboy, and rode the range for ten years, in western Texas, and thus laid the foundation for his successful career as a stockman. At the end of that time he gathered a bunch of cattle and began business on his own account. His success in this field is a matter of common knowledge to nearly all the residents of the Panhandle. At the present time he owns and operates a ranch of two thousand acres and also holds a large amount of leased pasture lands in Hutchinson county. He runs upwards of a thousand head of cattle and other live stock, and is one of the large ship-pers from this section. During his early career he served for a time as assistant postmaster under his mother and succeeded J. M. Kendred as postmaster.

Mr. Ingerton has the distinction of having been the first county judge of Hutchinson county, serving two years in that important administrative office, during which time he practically organized and set in operation the machinery of the county. He was one of the organizers of not only that county but also of Potter county, and was the presiding officer at the time of the organization of Potter county. In politics he is a Republican, and has always interested himself in political affairs. For nine years he served in the Texas National Guards and attained the rank of captain in Troop B of the First Cavalry Regiment, T. N. G. His church is the Episcopal. Mr. Ingerton was married in Amarillo January 10, 1894, to Miss Ida Wheatley, whose father was Dr. T. A. Wheatley, her mother's maiden name baving been Rager. Her father and family were among the old times in this section of Texas. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ingerton, and they are accounted for as follows: Enid, who is a graduate of the high school at Amarillo, class of 1913; Sheridan; William H., Jr.; Adelene and Madalene, twins; Ida Lola; Mary; Gillen. All the children were born in Amarillo.

JESSE F. COLLINS. In the flourishing little commercial center of Kemp, in Kaufman county, Mr. Collins has for a quarter of a century been closely identified with mercantile enterprise, and in later years has also taken part in local banking. He now has a position of prominence in a locality where he grew up as a harefoot boy.

Jesse F. Collins was born in Mississippi, May 12, 1866, and was a child when brought to Kaufman county. His father was James T. Collins, who was born in Cul-peper, Virginia, had a limited education in the old field schools, early in youth went to Mississippi, and for many years resided in Pontotoc and Calhoun counties. He was reared on a tobacco plantation in the Old Dominion, and from Mississippi went out as a private soldier in the Confederacy. He lived the uneventful but useful career of a farmer, and spent his last years in Kaufman county near Kemp, where he died in 1883. James T. Collins was married in Mississippi to Miss Martha Collins, a daughter of Jesse Collins, but they were not kin. Jesse Collins was a slave holder, and was an Alabaman by birth. The children of James T. Colan Alacaman by Dirto. Inc condition of sames A. Con-lins and wife numbered sixteen, of whom the follow-ing grew up: Kate, who resides in Mississippi, and mar-ried George Young; Mary A., wife of C. C. Moore of Kemp; Lewis D., James B., and John D., who live in and about Kemp; Fred B., of Mississippi; Jesse F., and Virgil A., of Waco, in the employ of a railroad there. James T. Collins was a man full of years when he came to Texas, and entered upon the work of making a farm and rearing his family. He went through his work and accepted the results of his efforts without shout or murmur, mingled with his neighbors as one of them, belonged to no church or fraternity, and cast his ballot in political contests as a Democrat. His wife died in 1902, and both lie in the cemetery at Kemp.

Jesse F. Collins grew to man's estate on the farm a mile north of Kemp, and a commercial course in Lawrence's business college of Dallas was added to his country school work. He began life in the commercial world as a clerk for W. C. Mason & Son, in 1888, and learned the business of merchandising during the four years he was in this employ. In 1892 he associated himself with his brother, John D., and engaged in business as J. D. Collins and brother. The firm bought the building now housing the Guaranty State Bank of Kemp, and in 1895 the senior Collins retired and Mr. B. Reasonover entered the firm, which became Collins & Reasonover. This was continued for one year, when J. D. Collins again entered the firm, buying out Mr. Reasonover, and Collins Brothers continued together until 1904, when the senior member again retired. Since then the firm has been conducted under the style of J. F. Collins. In 1907 Mr. Collins left his old business location and bought lot No. 2 in block C, one of the attractive brick blocks of the vigorous little town. Mr. Collins became a stockholder in the Guaranty State Bank of Kaufman within a few months after its organization, and has been vice president since 1910. His home in block No. 99 on Eleventh Street was erected under his supervision and marks the substantial character of the man and suggests his permanent and abiding faith in the little town where he has lived for many years. Mr. Collins' public service has been rendered to his town in the capacity of city secretary, and as a member of the board of education.

Mr. Collins is secretary of Lodge No. 528, A. F. & A. M., is a Knight of Pythias, and is a steward in the Methodist church. He does his political work quietly, as a member of the majority party of Texas, and before the advent of the primary system often attended the local conventions. At Gatesville, Texas, March 6, 1893, Mr. Collins married Miss Addie Washburn, a daughter of R. H. Washburn, a jeweler of that place and a former Confederate soldier. Mr. Washburn was born in Tennessee, and married Miss Nannie Reed. and their children were Lucy, now Mrs. Dan P. Quesenberry of Waco; Mrs. Collins; John, of Gatesville; Eli, who is associated with Mr. Collins in business at Kemy, Erin, wife of Fred Kaler, of Center Point, Texas; and Florine, Mrs. Ralph Lombard of Corpus Christi. Mr.

and Mrs. Collins have children: R. H., aged eighteen; Leslie, aged sixteen, and Thelma, aged fourteen.

THOMAS PEYTON LUKER. Each year witnesses remarkable progress in the science of agriculture, for scientific farming has been developed to such a degree that it has been brought to the front among the honored callings and is regarded as one that demands careful preparation and that returns sure and generous compensation. To understand the aroused and continued interest in agricultural achievement, the work of such progressive farmers as Thomas Peyton Luker, of Henderson county, must be taken into consideration. Mr. Luker has resided in Henderson county since his birth, and is a son of Alabama settlers of Texas of the year 1847. His father was Judge Joshua B. Luker, who came to Texas with the widow Holland's family and pre-empted land six miles north of Athens, several years before the county seat acquired the importance of a town. resided on his half-section of land and occupied himself with its development into a farm until his death in 1860. He was county judge during the fifties and had a hand in the organization of Athens. Joshua B. Luker married in Van Zandt county, Texas, in 1851, Miss Julia A. McWilliams, a daughter of Watson McWilliams, her residence now being at Stockard, only a few miles from where she spent her honeymoon. She was born in Alabama in 1836 and came to Texas with her parents about the time her husband migrated to the Lone Star State. Judge Luker spent his life in Texas without the presence of any of his brothers or sisters and it has been only in recent years that several of his nieces and nephews have come into the state and settled in Comanche county. The children born to the late Judge Joshua B. and Julia A. (McWilliams) Luker were as follows: Lizzie, who became the wife of Jo Cox, and died near the old homestead in Henderson county, being the mother of several children: Sarah, who became the wife of Jeff Section Children. Safan, who recame the wife of Jein Killingsworth, a residued of Eustaee. Texas: Thomas Peyton, of this review; Mary C, who passed away a maiden, and James M., who is engaged in the mercantile business at Athens, Texas.

Thomas Peyton Luker was born December 3, 1855, in Henderson county, Texas, and grew to manhood at his birthplace. His education came from the brief terms of the country school, consisting of several months during the winter season, and farm work was the vocation which he adopted as his life work and to which be assiduously applied himself. He was married early and started his own career on a small farm which had been presented to him by his mother and he clung to it and added other acres occasionally until 1901. When he sold it he deeded 180 acres, a farm built largely by his own hands. He then came to Murchison, where he owns 380 acres within a mile or two of the town, and this he has raised to a state of efficiency which challenges the record of any other upland farm of its size in this part of the state.

While the ordinary labor of cultivation has proceeded from year to year, Mr. Luker has demonstrated by special care the average farmer of this section takes less from his land than fertility can be made to produce. His methods of farming have always kept him from buying a bashel of corn for his own use since he has been doing his own agricultural work. His 250 acres under cultivation are as friable and as lively in production as the other fertile soils of Texas, and under at test of two acres he proved that 1,560 pounds of list tilizer. He has also demonstrated that one acre of land will produce 235 bushels of sweet potatoes right after a crop of 120 bushels of Irish potatoes have been dug, both of these being the crop of the same season.

In his relations to his community and locality in a general way, Mr. Luker is vice-president of the First State Bank of Murchison, and is one of the stockholders of the Cliviens State Bank of Chandler, Texas. His skill as an agriculturist and among his associates he is skill as an agriculturist and among his associates he is skill as an agriculturist and among his associates he is skill as an agriculturist and among his associates he is of his exciton has been the erection of a number of fine and substantial buildings on his several properties. A clean, energetic and abstemious life has left him a sturdy, stalwart and fresh-looking man, appearing fully ten years younger than he admits.

On February 28, 1876, Mr. Luker was married in Henderson country, Texas, to Miss Frances Mayfield, a daughter of Austin Mayfield, one of the early men and permanent settlers of Henderson, and a native of Alabama. Mrs. Luker was a native of the Lone Star State and died Angust 3, 1901. Nine children were born to this union: Ella, the eldest, born 1876, died March, 1901; John W., the third, born 1876, died March, 1901; John W., the third, born November 13, died 1897; and one, the fifth born, died in infancy; and married Miss Essie Martin, has a son, Leonard Mayer and the star of the married Miss Essie Martin, has a son, Leonard Miss Hender and the star of the married Miss Essie Martin, has a son, Leonard Miss Hender and the star of the star of

Mr. and Mrs. Luker are associated with the Baptist church, and have been liberal in their support of its movements. In politics a Democrat, Mr. Luker has been stanch in his adherence to its principles, and as manuager of elections in his district wields a wide influence in party affairs. He has not cared to affiliate with fraternal bodies

EMORY FOUNTAIN HUDGL, M. D. The annals of the medical profession of Henderson county would be decidedly incomplete without extended mention being made of Dr. Emory Fountain Huddle, the only remaining pioneer of Murchison, and a physician whose devotion to his noble calling has made him widely known and successful therein and whose high conception of the duties of eitirenship entitle him to the universal regard and esteem in which he is held by his fellow-drusnen. Doctor Huddle is a son of William B. Huddle, a pioneer to Van Zandt county, Texas, of the year 1850, when he ended a long and arduous journey from Wythe county, Virginia, by two-horse wagon. William B. Huddle was born in Wythe county, in 1832, his tather being David Huddle, who married a Miss Brown, both of the latter dying in that county. The cons in the family were: William B.; Rufus and John, who died as soldiers during the Civil War, the former leaving three children and the latter one; Josiah Emory, who died recently in Van Zandt county, Texas, leaving a family, and Benjamin, James and Frank, who remained in Virginia. There were three daughters in the family of David

Huddle, but none ever came to Texas, William B. Huddle received his education in the winam B. Huddle received his calculation in the country schools of Wythe country, Virginia, and there was married to Barbara E. Cormany, also a native of Old Dominion. Not long after their union they bid farewell to their family and friends and turned their faces toward the Southwest, intent on finding a new locality in which to make their home. On arriving in Yan Zandt county, Texas, they settled on Horsley Creek, four miles northeast of Ben Wheeler, and were there residing at the time of the outbreak of the war between the South and the North, when Mr. Huddle cast his fortunes with the Confederacy and enlisted in one of the first companies to leave for the front in defense of the Stars and Bars. His brothers, Rufus and John, were also soldiers in the same cause, and, like William B., took part in the Mansfield campaign, in which both lost their lives. On the close of his military service, William B. Huddle returned to the duties of peace, and soon thereafter changed his location to the com-munity five miles northwest of Chandler, where he purchased land, developed a farm, made a comfortable home and reared his family. There he finished his work as an active factor in human affairs, and died in Van Zandt county, November 23, 1910, being buried in the old cemetery in the community in which he had lived after the Civil War. His life, although one of privacy, was also one of usefulness to his community, and everywhere he was known as a man of the strictest integrity and high ideals of citizenship. He was not a politician, caring little for the struggles of the public arena, but was a consistent supporter of Democratic principles and candidates, and ever took a keen interest in matters as they affected the welfare of his community. He worshipped as a Presbyterian, and reared his family in that faith, Mrs, Huddle passed away in 1894, having been the mother of the following children: George R., who died when sixteen years of age; James B. died at the age of eighteen years; Emory Fountain, of this review; Robert C., who died near Cooper, Texas, his wife and children now being residents of Coleman county, this state; Mrs. V. V. Wilson, who is a resident of Van Zandt county; Laura C., who is the wife of Thomas Wyatt, of Clark's, Louisiana; Mrs. America A. Holloman, of Henderson county, Texas; Mattie K., who is now Mrs. John Ferguson, of Clark's, Louisiana, and Arch W., a

Emory Fountain Huddle was born at the Horsley Creek home of his parents, in the "Free State" of Van Zandt, June 2, 1859. When but a few years old he was permitted by his parents to live in the childless home of his mother's sister, Mrs. Hiram Neff, in Henderson country, and there he grew to manhood. His education came to him in the main as a pupil of McFiride & Cross' Mount Sylvan Aeademy and at Professor Orr's school at Omen, where many men who subsequently became prominent in the history of Texas were trained. In 1887 Mr. Huddle gave up his studies and for one year was engaged in conducting the old homestead farm, but in 1888 began reading medicine with Doctor Belcher, at Chandler, Under the proceptorship of this able phy resident of Denver, Colorado, sician and surgeon, Doctor Huddle was prepared for college, and in 1889 entered Louisville (Kentucky) Medical College, from which he was graduated with his degree in 1891.

Doctor Huddle at once located in Murchison for practice, this hamlet at that time containing the families ot J. L. Townley and John B. Murphy, the latter of whom soon moved to Athens, Texas, to accept an official position in Henderson county. Doctor Huddle was at that time single, and he at first boarded in the Murphy home. He practiced out of his medicine case until the home. He practiced out of his meaderne case until the establishment of a drug store and the introduction of the prescription about 1904, although this, being a decided departure from the old custom, was successfully resisted by the people for a time. Various characters of fevers were prevalent and common that are now rare, and drugs were fed to the afflicted in allopathic doses. Doctor Huddle brought about the establihament of the Murchison Drug Company in 1900, and has been interested in that concern since the time it was organized. As a physician he has attained an enviable reputation and among his professional brethren is known as a rigid observer of the unwritten ethics of his calling. He did not cease to be a student when he graduated from college, for he has continued to apply himself to his medical books and to periodicals of his profession which keep him well abreast of the wonderful advancements and discoveries which are constantly being made. Doctor Huddle has found time to engage in lines of activity outside of his profession, being a partner in the Murchison Mercantile Company, and the building in which it is located, a stockholder in the First State Bank of Murchison, and a farmer by proxy, owning several valu-able tracts of land in the vicinity of Murchison. He was among the first to plant Elberta orchards here, but has lately decided that there is little profit in peaches and is letting his orchard pass away. The tall, wellproportioned figure of Doctor Huddle is a familiar sight on the streets of Murchison, where he is constantly being greeted by his numerous friends. He is a Demoerat, but not a politician. In religion he is a Presbyterian, but does not belong to any church as there is none of that denomination here. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Union of America.

On April 10, 1895, Doetor Huddle was united in maringe in Murchison, to Miss Kate L. Denton, daughter of Doetor Denton, a dentist, who died in Mississippi. His family then eame to Texas and his widow is now a resident of Murchison and the mother of these children: Mrs. B. D. Ware, who is the postmistresh of Murchison; J. O., a railroad man, who died at this place in 1913, and left a family john W., a resident of Tyler, Texas; Mrs. Florence Wood, a resident of Athens, Mrs. Huddle, Frank, who is engaged in farming in Henderson and Anderson counties, Texas, and Walter G., residing in Murchison. Doetor and Mrs. Huddle have one daughter, Grace Pauline, who was born March 1, 1896, took a three-year course at the Alexander College Institute at Jacksonville, Texas, and is now attending Trinity University, Waxahachie, Texas, Doetor Huddle is also a member of the Henderson County Medical Association and the State Medical Association.

MATTHEW E. EDGAR. On May 26, 1910, Mr. Edgar organized the First State Bank of Enstace with a capital of ten thousand dollars. Since that time he has served as its president, and has made the bank one of the best managed financial institutions of Henderson county. The vice president is G. J. Cook, and the cashier S. E. Bradely, Mr. Edgar is also a director in the Guarantee State Bank of Athens, and for a number of years has been one of the leading business men and upbuilders of the town of Eustace. He has watched and encouraged its prospects and welfare until the hamlet has given way to the village and it seems that a long road of prosperous development is still before this community.

M. E. Edgar was born at Starville, in Smith county, Texas, December 30, 1866. His boyhood was spent in Smith and Upshur counties. His grandfather was from Pennsylvania, an early settler in Alabama, where he was married and reared a family of four sons and one daughter. Two of these sons were killed while serving in the Contederate army; another, Mack, died near Grand Saline, Texas; John M., the father of the Eustace banker, died at Big Sandy; the daughter married a Mr. Williamson and moved to San Saba county, Texas.

John M. Edgar, who was born about 1831, was thrown upon the world in childhood, and his educational equipment was very limited. He came to Texas when a lad of fourteen years. All his lifetine was devoted to farming, and in Smith county he married Jal Miss Mary Jones, who died in 1871, leaving children: Matthew E., and Amanda, who married Jack Mosser, and lives in Texas. The second wife of John M. Edgar was Sallie Kilpatick, and their eight sons and three daughters have resirck, and their eight sons and three daughters have resired.

dence in different sections of Texas.

Matthew E. Edgar remained on the farm with his father until he was a month and fourteen days past his majority. While growing up he had little oppor-tunity to attend school, and did not give very close attention to his studies while he was in the school room so that when he reached his majority his educational equipment would have classed him as an elementary pupil. He got into the saloon business as a bar-keeper, and subsequently opened a stock of wet goods on his own account. He began the business in Big Sandy, and when the place voted "dry" he moved to Tyler, and opened another place. There he continued until the Prohibition sentiment overturned things and closed up all the saloons. His next move was to Athens, and the same performance was repeated there. Then he sought an opening at Eustace, where he was permitted to conduct business until December 30, 1909, when he closed his place as a result of a dry vote, and quit the business after having followed it for twenty-two years, always pursued by the hostile public opinion which for years has been menacing the liquor business throughout Texas. Having been "voted out" of business four times, Mr. Edgar sought a new field, and thus turned his attention to banking, with what results has already been stated. As one of the vigorous promoters of Eustace welfare, Mr. Edgar stands out as the father of the wet side portion of the town, where his row of five business houses stand.

Mr. Edgar has never been in politics except in local affairs, and is a Democrat, his father having followed the same political cleavage, and having fought as a soldier of the south. On Christmas Day of 1902 at Overton, Texas, Mr. Edgar married Miss Annie Oliver, a daughter of Wiley Oliver, a Tennessecan, who came to Texas many years ago, was a soldier of the Confederacy and followed a career as a tarmer. Wiley Oliver married a Miss Green. Mrs. Edgar was one of two daughters and four sons. The children of Mr. Edgar and wife are Wilbur and Dotthie Lee.

Senior member of the law firm of Carlton, Townes & Townes, with offices in the Stewart Building at Houston, and also maintaining offices in Beaumont, Mr. Carlton has been identified with the Texas bar for a quarter of a century and has practiced with unusual success and enjoyed large and influential connections with business and social affairs.

HONDRAILE WILLIAM J. RUSSELL. Prosperously engaged in the practice of a profession demanding a large measure of veritable talent in addition to a vast amount of hard work, Honorable William J. Russell, of Brownsville, has won success through a vise application of his native and acquired ability and skill, and gained a position of note among the able and influential members of the Texas har. He was born in Fayette county Texas, in 1856, of pioneer descent. His paternal grandfather, also named William J. Russell, migrated from his native state, North Carolina, to Texas, in the twenties, and fought, under General Houston, in the battles of 1836, for Texas independent.

William H. and Miriam (Williams) Russell, Mr. Russell's parents, are neither of them living. The father, who was born in Brazoria county, Texas, came from there to Cameron county in 1870, and subsequently made his home in Brownsville.

But five years old when brought to Brownsville, William J. Russell laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the public schools, and later turned his attention to the study of law, for which he was well adapted. Admitted to the har at Brownsville in 1892, he at once engaged in the general practice of his chosen profession, and has met with eminent success as a lawyer.

Taking a genuine interest in public matters, Mr. Russell has served ally and acceptably in many positions of responsibility. During the second administration of President Cleveland he was Brownsville's postunaster, and for two terms he served as city attorney. In 1903 and 1904 he was county judge of Cameron county, and now, in Junuary, 1913, is United States Commissioner and referee in bankrupter for the United States Court. Propresentative to the State Legislature, having heen a member of the House of Representatives during the twenty-third, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth sessions.

ELI A. JOHNSTON, M. D. In the minds of the majority of the people of Amarillo the name of Dr. Eli A. Johnston at once suggests the proud position which the city has attained in medical centers of the Lone Star State. Although not one of the pioneers of this city, he has witnessed the wonderful growth of the community within the past decade, and has played no small part himself in bringing about the change and development that have been such a source of pride to the citizens of Amarillo. Dr. Johnston was born at Troy, Alabama, March 21, 1850, and is a son of Dr. A. C. and Rebecca C. (Simmons) Johnston, natives of North Carolina who early moved to Alabama. In 1859 the family located in Arkansas, and there Dr. A. C. Johnson was engaged in an extensive practice until 1863, when he brought his family to Texas and settled in Hopkins county. At the close of the struggle between the North and the South, in 1865, he returned to Arkansas, and there continued in practice up to the time of his death, which occurred in his eighty-fourth year. His widow still survives him, aged eighty-four years, and is a resident of Arkan-sas. They were the parents of three sons and four daughters, Eli A. being the oldest. Eli A. Johnston received his early education in the

Eli A. Johnston received his early education in the public schools of Arkansas, subsequently entering the University of Arkansas, but left that institution before his graduation. During the years of 1876 and 1877 he attended the St. Louis Eclectic College, and graduated, and in the latter year returned to Arkansas and entered upon the practice of his profession, continuing there, until 1886. He then entered Memphis Hosnital Medical College, for further study, and was graduated therefrom in 1887, then again returning to Arkansas and continuing there until 1889. At this time he came to Henrietta, Texas, where he continued in practice until 1901, and since that year has made the city of Amarillo his field of endeavor. He has continued his studies, taking post-graduate work at Chicago in 1905, at New Orleans in 1907 and at New York in 1909, and has kept fully abreast of the changes and scientific discoveries of his profession by subscription to the leading medical periodicals of the day and close attention to the work of the State and county medical societies, the American Medical Association and the American Congress of Surgeons, in all of which he holds membership. Of strong character, he is possessed of uncommon energy and spirit. His abundant labors, his varied experiences and his ceaseless activity have not abated the vivacity of his disposition or the energy of his character, and he continues to take a keen interest in the material welfare of the city that he has seen grow from a community of 1200 souls. Indeed, the Doctor has implicit confidence in the future of Amarillo, which, aside from its advantages as a health resort, he believes is the logical dis-Paso. He is a Democrat in his political views, but has had no personal aspirations for public life. He has shown an interest in fraternal work, having attained to the Shriner and Scottish Rite degrees in Masonry, and is also a member of the Elks, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World. With his family he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. His career, from the days when with youthful energy and ambition he worked his own way through school, has been one of constant endeavor and steady advancement, and he well deserves the material success that has come to him as well as the position he occupies as one of the foremost physicians of this section.

Dr. Johnston was married in November. 1874, at Louisville, Arkansas, to Miss Virginia J. Featherston, daughter of T. J. Featherston, of Lewisville, Arkansas, and five children were born to this union.

JUDGE HIRAM M. GARWOOD. Few men of Houston bave been more conspicuously or worthly identified with the professional or political life of this section of the state than has Judge Hiram M. Garwood, member of the firm of Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood for some years past, one time state representative and later state senator, with a term as county judge of Bastrop county intervening between the periods of his legislative service. He has won distinctive laurels in his profession and in his public service, and is well worthy of place in a work of the nature of this publication.

Judge Garwood was born at Eastrop, Texas, on January 11, 1864, and is the son of Calvin B, and Frances B. (Walker) Garwood. The father was born in Bellerontaine, Ohio, and came to Texas about 1852. He then entered upon the study of law in the office of Gov. Joseph D. Sayres at Bastrop, Texas, and was admitted to the bar in 1885, since which tube he has been associated in partnership with Col. G. W. Jones, B. D. Oergain, and Jonathan Lane, later forming his present connection with the firm of Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood.

He became county judge of Bastrop county in 1888, and from 1890 to 1892 represented Lee, Bastrop and Fayette counties in the state senate. His service in all these offices was of a high order, creditable both to him and to the state.

Judge Garwood has long been concerned in the welfare of his Alma Mater and has been a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Texas for a numher of years. He is accounted one of the most valuable friends of the University to be found in the state today. Long popular in the legal fraternity, he has been president of the Texas State Bar Association. His fraternal connections are wide in their scope, embracing Masonry in its various branches, and the Knights of Pythias. In the former order he has membership in the Royal Arch Masons, the Knights Templar and the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. His college fraternity is the Alpha Tan Omega, and in Honston he has membership in the Thalian Club, the Houston Club and the Houston Country Club.

E. A. CLOUSNITZER. One of the local industries which has done much to give Quanah a place among the well improved and finished cities of Texas is the electric light and ice plant, which supplies light and power as well as one of the most valuable commodities in use by the people of this community. The founder of this local industry was Mr. E. A. Clousnitzer, and he has since been its proprietor and active manager.

E. A. Clousnitzer is a native of Germany, born in the city of Dresden, January 3, 1869, the youngest of twelve children born to Frederick Augustus and Christina Amelia (Eisbricht) Clousnitzer. The parents, both natives of Germany, moved to America in 1837, and located in Texas. The father, who by profession was a mining en-gineer, took up farming and stock raising in Texas, and he lived in this state until his death in 1895, when he was at the age of sixty-six years. The mother also died in Texas, in 1893, aged sixty-eight years.

Mr. Clousnitzer was reared in his native land, and had the advantages of the excellent technical schools of that country. He served an apprenticeship in the machinist trade, and when he had finished that preparation he came to America and formed a home in Texas. After a short period as a farmer he went to work at his trade in Houston and was for a time employed in the railroad shops of that city. His next move took him to old Mexico, where he was employed as a locomotive engineer on the Inter & Mexican Central Railroad for a number of years. He then became a stationary engineer at Taylor, Texas, and from there he went to San Angelo as superintendent of the San Angelo waterworks. Some years later he took up the special work in which he has been so successful, that of installing electric light and ice systems.

Mr. Clousitzer is the pioneer electrical engineer of this part of the state, and it is he who promoted most of the plants along the line of the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad lines. He had in charge the work of installing plants at Colorado City, Bowie, Wichita Falls, and Vernon, and in 1902 he came to Quanah and installed the splendid electric light and ice plant here operating. It is a large and important industry, and represents a goodly amount of capital, the machinery for such a system being very intricate and costly, both for the generation of electric power and the manufacture of ice.

Mr. Clousnitzer is a Democrat in his politics, but has never entered the political arena to any extent. He is affiliated with Masonry in the Knights Templar body, and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. His church is the Methodist.

At Colorado, Texas, on May 24, 1897, Mr. Clousnitzer was married to Miss Ella Lee, a daughter of W. R. and Sylvesta (Young) Lee. Her father is now deceased, and was one of the old timers of Texas, having moved to this state from Tennessee in the early forties. The three children of Mr. Clousnitzer and his wife are: Irene, born at Colorado City in 1898 and now attending high school; Fern, born in Quanah, January 20, 1903, and also attending school; and Colvin, born in Quanah, May 29, 1904.

Mr. Clousnitzer is one of the very prosperous citizens of Quanah, and his prosperity is the more satisfactory since it is the result of his own unaided efforts and enterprise. Besides the large business of which he is the owner and proprietor, he and his family live in a very handsome residence in Quanah, their home being one of the show places of the city.

There are some who believe that Mr. Clousnitzer bears a charmed existence, else he would not otherwise be among the active members of society in Quanah today, for he has had experiences in the past few years that are fortunately not the lot of every man. In October, 1906, Mr. Clousnitzer, who is one of the best known huntsmen in the state, accidentally emptied a charge of gunshot into his arm at the shoulder. His life was despaired of for weeks, but modern surgery, aided by his wonderful constitution and clean blood, resulted in a perfect recovery, though his arm, as the result of the operation performed, is three inches shorter than the other. However, he has perfect control of that member and, though short, is considerably better than no arm at all, as Mr. Clousnitzer will readily attest.

Again, on May 12, 1913, while crossing the tracks of the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad, less than three hundred feet from his house, his automobile was struck by a fast train, which was obscured from view by some box cars on the siding, and Mr. Clousnitzer was thrown a distance of seventy-nine feet, hurtling through the air, his flight being stopped at last by a fence post. The machine, which was thrown a distance of something like forty feet, was literally smashed into kindling. Mr. Clousnitzer kept his bed three weeks, but the experience was not sufficient to conquer him and at the end of that time he was able to be about again, while he is now, some two months later, enjoying the most perfect health.

EMERY A. SMITH. Among the young business leaders of El Paso, men who have located in this city arter a thorough survey and investigation of commercial conditions and have embarked in their enterprise with the determination to remain and earn a prosperity for themselves and to promote the welfare of the entire community, Henry A. Smith, and his partner, A. Rader, are particularly well known and have a high commercial rating in the business circles of this city.

Emery A. Smith, who has been a resident of El Paso for the past ten years and identified with the southwest throughout nearly all the years of his active career, was born in Madison county, Ohio, August 2, 1868, a son of Charles B. and Mellissa (Dominy) Smith. The father, a native of Delaware county, Ohio, spent all his life in that state, and by occupation was a banker and stock raiser. His death occurred in 1892, when fifty-two years of age. He was a young man at the time of the Civil war, and enlisted and got as far as Camp Chase, at which point the troops were disbanded. The mother was also born in the state of Ohio, was married there, and her death occurred in 1891, when she was forty-cieht vears

Mr. Emery A. Smith, the third in a family of four children, attended the public schools of Ohio until he was ready to begin work for himself, and his first business experience was in farming and in a general store at Hyatts, Ohio. After one year there, however, he came into the southwest, and for six years was with the Santa Fe Railroad in New Mexico. From railroading he drifted into the mining camps of New Mexico, where he had a varied experience for one year, and then for two years was at Douglas, Arizona. In 1903 Mr. Smith eame to El Paso, and as a result of his hard experience during the preceding years was in poor health, so that for several years he did little more than recuperate. He then established the El Paso Carriage Works in 1907, having as his associate Mr. Harry A. Rader. This business the partners have developed to extensive proportions and they occupy quarters in several thousand feet of floor space and equipped with the most modern machinery for the work. In polities Mr. Smith is independent.

On June 10, 1912, in El Paso, Mr. Smith married Mrs. Lizzie Leech.

Harry A. Rader. The partner of Mr. Smith in his business enterprise at El Paso, Harry A. Rader, was horn in Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, 1872, a son of Thurston and Emma (Knoll) Rader. His father and mother were both born in Pennsylvania and the mother is now living with her son in El Paso at the age of sixty-four years. The father was for many years a locomotive engineer, and some years ago moved to El Paso, where his death occurred in 1907 at the age of sixty-two years. There were four children in the family, of whom Harry A. was the second. His childbood and early youth were passed in California and El Paso chieffy, and it was in the public schools of these two localities that he attained his education. He left school before graduating in order to begin work for the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway. pation for which he was accepted in the employment of this company was that of coach painter, and he was for fifteen years at work in the shop of the Southern Pacific in this trade. Then, in 1908, he established himself as a partner with Mr. Smith, and they have since conducted a large husiness in general manufacturing, painting and trimming.

Fraternally, Mr. Rader is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Order of Elks. In politics he maintains an independent attitude and his church is the Methodist. Mr. Rader has a large acquaintance among the leading business men of El Paso, where he has resided for many years, and he and Mr. Smith well uphold the title of progressive business men and citizens.

FRANK A. WHITE. We have all heard of brakemen who have become railroad presidents and grocer boys who have become judges, but although we know these things are true, we feel that they are often exaggerated. However, in Amarillo, Texas, Frank A. White can tell a story that sounds as much like fiction as any novel. Mr. White is now one of the most prominent and suc-cessful business men in the city of Amarillo. He began life as a messenger boy and has risen through hard work and pluck and the determination never to sleep at his post. He has had innumerable difficulties to overcome and his advance has not been aided by good luck. Whatever he has won he has earned by hard work.

Frank A. White was born in Iola, Allen county, Kansas, on the 12th of December, 1874, the son of Joseph N. White. The latter was a native of the state of Indiana where he was born in 1837. He grew up in his native state and when the Civil war broke out he enlisted in the lilth Indiana Infantry. He served as second lieutenant in his company, being in the Federal service for three years. After the war he returned home, but in 1868 migrated to Kansas where he lived for a time, carrying on his business as a builder and contractor. In 1880 he removed to Lees Summit, Missouri, where he resided until 1887. At the time of his death in 1905 he was living in Leavenworth, Kansas. Joseph N. White married Miss Katherine Garrettson, a daughter of James L. Garrettson and a native of Illinois. They were married in 1868 in Oden, Illinois, and Mrs. White died in 1908 at San Diego, California, at the age of fifty-nine. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. White, and of these

Frank A. White was the youngest.
Frank A. White went to school in Kansas City and in Lees Summit, Missouri. He had to leave school at the age of twelve, however, and he gained the remainder of his education by studying by himself and by wide reading. As a boy he sold papers in Kansas City and in Lees Summit, and he also worked as a messenger boy. His first real position of any importance was with the Home Telegraph and Signal Company, of Kansas City, with whom he was apprenticed to learn the business. He next entered the employ of the Postal Telegraph Company as delivery clerk and upon leaving their employ he entered that of the Interstate Electric Light Company, being employed in the hattery department. He never lost an opportunity in any of these positions to learn everything he could about the business and he was so valuable an employee that when the company failed he had no difficulty in securing a place with the Edison Electric Light and Power Company, which is now known as the Kansas City Electric Light Company. He entered their offices as station office boy and remained with them for sixteen and a half years. He was steadily promoted for efficiency, working in turn in every department, until in 1906 when he left the employ of this company he was assistant to the general manager and one of the influential men in the company.

In August, 1906, he determined to resign to go into business for himself. He entered the business world as a manufacturer of chandeliers and brasses in Kansas City, but the business proved a failure and Mr. White lost all that he had saved. He then removed to Texas and came to Amarillo in the summer of 1907 to take charge of the Amarillo Water, Light and Power Com-This company is now known as the City Light and Water Company and the capital is owned by eastern investors. Mr. White is now serving as general manager and his work while with this company has won much admiration, for the position has been a difficult one. In March, 1909, the company was put into the hands of Mr. White, as receiver, by the United States courts, he having been manager for eighteen months. In the month of June, 1912, he was able to return the company to its original owners, having increased the business fourfold. He was able to liquidate every indebtedness, giving one hundred cents on the dollar, and giving a very nice dividend to the stockholders. It was a big task and he handled it in a masterly manner,

In addition to his work as general manager of the above company, he is vice president of the First State Bank and also a director and general manager of the Amarillo Street Railway Company. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and has been treasurer of the traffic bureau for the past five years.

In politics Mr. White is a member of the Democratic party. He has never cared to hold office and of late has taken no active part in politics. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and of the Rejuvenated Sons of Jove. In religious matters he is a member of the Presbyterian church. He cares little for fraternal or social affairs, being devoted to his family and finding his recreation in his home

Mr. White was married in Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 12th of September, 1893, to Miss Isabel Stone, who was a native of Oakland, California, and a daughter of Jefferson and Minnie Stone. Five children have been Jefferson and Minne Stone. Five Children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. White: Ruth Katherine, born June 24, 1895, died at the age of three years; Eugene G. was born in Leareworth, Kansas, on the 3rd of October, 1898; Harry Morton, born December 30, 1901, died aged ten years; Frank A., Jr., was born in Amarillo, October 18, 1908; James L. is also a native of Amarillo, where he was born on the 8th of January,

THOMAS JEFFERSON McCAMANT, M. D. One of the best known residents in this section of Texas is Thomas Jefferson McCamant, of El Paso, Texas. He has been for many years engaged in the practice of his profession in this part of the state and has won a reputation for skillful work and for closely following the high ideals of his profession. He has held a number of public positions, being keenly interested in politics and in civic matters, and he has filled each post with honor to himself and to the great satisfaction of his many and warm friends.

Thomas Jefferson McCamant was born at Glenrose, Texas, on the 27th of November, 1874. He is a son of William Graham McCamant, who was born in Old Town, Virginia. William McCamant left his native state in 1854 and came to Texas overland, making the journey in a prairie schooner. He was a well known civil and mechanical engineer and was the government surveyor for the counties of Erath, Hood and Somerville, living during that time in the three counties, but never changed his residence, because Hood and Somerville were originally contained in Erath. He was the first settler in Somerville county, and previous to locating in this county he lived for a time at Greenville, Texas. He was in the frontier service against the Indians under the command of Major Valentine, and was in a number of Indian raids, in all of which he was so fortunate as to come out unscathed. He was later a member of one of the Texas regiments that fought on the side of the Contederacy during the Civil war. He died at Glenrose, Texas, in 1884. William McCamant married Susan Gardner, who was born and reared in Virginia, and there received her education. She was married in her native state and came to Texas with her husband, being an able helper to him in those early pioneer days. She was the first member of the Presbyterian church to settle in Somerville county, and when that church was organized in the county there were only two members, Mrs. Mc-Camant and a gentleman by the name of Mr. Davidson. During the war she made many of the clothes that were worn by the Texas soldiers at the front. Mrs. Mc-Camant died in Glenrose in 1886 at the age of sixtythree. Three children were born to William McCamant and his wife. The eldest, Mrs. Iola Graham Thompson, was born at Granberry, Texas, and died in Meridian, Texas, in 1898. Mrs. Margerie Robinson, the second child, is still living in the old homestead at Glenrose.

Doctor McCamant was the youngest of the three children, and, although he was born where Glenrose is now located, at the time of his birth it was a single log cabin a half mile sonthwest of Barnum's Mill. He attended the old school, known as Presbyterian College, at Glenrose, and here he was graduated in 1894 with the degree of B. S. After this he worked for a few years in a drug store in Glenrose and then determined to pursue his scientific studies further and become a physician. He therefore took up the study of medicine in the medical department of Fort Worth University, and in 1902 was graduated with a cum laude, a high honor. He began to practice in Asperment, Texas, and remained there for nine years, during which time he built up a flourishing practice. While living in Asperment he took an active part in the political affairs of the community and was chairman of the Democratic committee for Stonewall county. He was also campaign manager in Stone-wall county for W. R. Smith in both of his campaigns for Congress.

In 1911 he was appointed state quarantine officer by Governor Colquitt, and in February of that year he came to El Paso, making this city his headquarters. He has taken up his general practice also since coming here and this, together with the duties attaching to his public position, make him a very busy man. He has a large practice and is generally recognized as one of the most successful physicians in this city.

The doctor is a member of the American Medical Association, of the Texas State Medical Society and of the El Paso County Medical Society. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party. He has always taken a deep interest in the various fraternal societies to which he belongs and he has been an active member of the Masons for many years. He is a member of the Knights Templar of Haskell, Texas, is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, belonging to Maida Temple, in El Paso, and he is also a Royal Arch Mason, belonging to Lodge No. 157. He holds membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 187, of El Paso, and the Loyal Order of the Moose, No. 526.

In 1912 Doctor McCamant won much praise and made a number of bitter enemies through his work as the investigator of the illegal practitioners of medicine, an investigation that resulted in the indictment of ten illegal practitioners and in the departure of several from

On the 13th of May, 1901, Doctor McCamant was married to Miss Helen Livermore, of Denver, Colorado, the only daughter of W. B. Livermore, who now lives in Whillets, California. Doctor and Mrs. McCamant have no children.

Doctor McCamant believes that El Paso will become the leading city in the state in time, and he is especially enthusiastic over the local administration, saying that it is one of the best governed cities in the state, every improvement that has been made having been carried by the vote of the people. Personally he hopes that he may spend the balance of his life in this city, where he has made so many friends.

WILLIAM R. SCHUTZ. A solid business enterprise of El Paso has a history of its own which illustrates both the progress of the town and the career of one of its foremost citizens. This is the El Paso Piano Company, of which Mr. William R. Schutz is proprietor and sole owner, and which is the largest concern of its kind in western Texas. Mr. Schutz in 1900 entered the employ of this piano company at a salary of $30 per month. In 1904 he had so thoroughly learned the business and become so energetic a factor therein that he was made a partner, and in 1908 became its sole owner. In 1910 he bought the piano department in the general business of the W. G. Walz Company, and in the same year erected his own building on his lots at the corner of Myrtle and Campbell streets.

William R. Schutz was born in Hanover, Germany, May 15, 1883, a son of S. C. and Frieda Schutz. Both parents were natives of Germany, the father being a prosperous merchant. The father first came to Texas in 1865 and located at El Paso when it was a small village, consisting of only a few buildings and inhabited almost entirely by Mexicans. He crossed the plains from San Antonio, and it required six weeks for his wagons to make the overland trip, during which several encounters were had with the hostile Indians on the way. Several years later the father returned to Germany, where he remained a number of years. He subsequently returned to El Paso, when it was beginning its modern development, and was at one time mayor of the city, besides holding various other places of responsibility and trust. The father, who is still living, is now a resident of Mexico City, at the age of sixty-eight years. He is president of the Los Ocotes Mining and Milling Company, whose offices are in Mexico City, and the mines located in the state of Michoacan, Mexico. The mines are silver and gold property, and exceedingly profitable. The mother died in El Paso in 1899 at the age of fortyeight, and of their six children one is now deceased and the others are named as follows: Mrs. Dr. Gustav Hofgaard, of Fredrikshald, Norway; A. E. Schutz, of El Paso; H. H. Schutz, of Los Lumas, New Mexico; William R., of El Paso, and Mrs. J. E. Dutcher, of El Paso. Mr. W. R. Schutz was reared in El Paso, attended the local schools and immediately after his graduation from the high school in 1900 entered the employ of the Piano Company and began his rapid rise to business success and independence. He is affiliated with the Order of Elks in El Paso. In politics he is independent. He enjoys a large circle of friends, is very popular in the young society circles of the city, and his principal diversion is automobiling.

The father was for four years a soldier in the Confederate army, serving under General Forrest and being wounded at the battle of Shiloh, After the war he became a successful mill owner and planter in Logan county and at Adairsville. It was in 1876 that the father came and he lived here until his death, which occurred in Gainesville in 1884. The mother died in Tennessee in 1852. They were the parents of four children, namely Eliza J., who married a Mr. Holden and died in 1875, leaving two children who have since been orphaned by the death of the father; Laura, who became the wife of a Mr. McDonald and died in 1999, leaving one child; William and Hugh

M., who died in 1884.

William Killgore grew up in Tennessee, where he received his education. He married Miss Mary Dobson in 1868, and with his young bride set out in the following year for Texas. His brother Hugh accompanied them and they located near Dodd City, Texas, renting land from Major Dodd. Here they farmed for two years and then Mr. Killgore moved to Grayson, Texas, where he bought some land. He afterwards purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land near Grayson and went into the cattle business. He continued in this line until 1881, when misfortune overtook him and he lost his money and was forced to give up his ranch.

It was at this time that he came to Gainesville and here opened a small grocery store, his capital being $275. He was a hard worker, however, and soon his business began to increase. It continued to grow, for people began to discover where the best groceries and best service could be found. In 1902 he incorporated the business under the name of William Killgore Company, Incorporated, with a capital of $60,000, which he had made by his own efforts alone. In the meantime he had been building up a large trade throughout the surrounding country, shipping goods all over this section. He was elected president and general manager at the time of the incorporation, and has held these offices ever since. Mr. Killgore also organized a branch house at Marietta, Oklahoma, under the same firm name, but he has since sold this business and devotes his attention to the Gainesville business, which is the largest general mercantile establishment in the city.

Mr. Killgore takes the keenest interest in his landed estates and spends much time planning and carrying out improvements and in the management of his two large places. He owns an eighteen hundred-acre cattle ranch four miles from Gainesville, five hundred acres of which are under cultivation. All of this land has been paid for and is worth $100,000. Here he raises wheat and oats and has made the place his hobby. He spends much of his time here and has added so many improvements that he has made it a show place in this section. At present he is building a $500 fish tank and expects to stock it with government fish. He also owns a smaller place of three hundred and fifty acres four miles south of the city which is worth $75 an acre. In addition to these properties, Mr. Killgore has built a whole block of brick buildings in the business section of Gainesville and he owns other business properties. He is also the owner of five residences which he rents and of his own beautiful home.

Mr. Killgore has always been very active in religious affairs. He is a member of the Christian church and has been for thirty-eight years, and is now a deacon in this church. He is one of the advisory board of Christian University in Fort Worth, Texas, and gives a great deal of money as well as time and personal interest to this institution. Politically he belongs to the Democratic party and he has served in the city council of Gainesville for two terms. In the fraternal world he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and has been for many years. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

Mrs. Killgore was a native of Kentucky. Her father died in that state years ago and her mother died in Gainesville at the home of Mr. Killgore in 1902, Mrs. Killgore was one of seven children and her death oc-curred on the 19th of April, 1911. Two children were adopted by Mrs. Killgore, namely, Maggie, who is the wife of Val Horton, a stockholder in the William Killgore Company, Incorporated, and Lucy A., who was married and had one child, both mother and child being now deceased. On September 21, 1913, Mr. Killgore married Miss Lucy Spires, who was born August 12, 1894, in Faulkner county, Arkansas, and there was raised and received her early education. She came to Texas in 1905 where she finished her education in St. Mary's Day School. She is a daughter of G. W. and Gertrude (Danley) Spires, the father a native of Mississippi and the mother of Arkansas. By occupation he is a farmer and they reside on their ranch north of Gainesville. Mrs. Killgore was the sixth in order of birth in a family of seven children, four daughters and three sons.

AARON STOLAROFF. As a citizen and business builder of El Paso, none have been better known or regarded with greater esteem than Aaron Stolaroff. In the business district at 112 San Antonio street is located the china palace of which he is proprietor. This is a wholesale and retail establishment carrying a splendid stock of crockery, glassware, graniteware, tinware, and house furnishing goods. This establishment is not only a center of trade where the annual volume of sales represent a tidy little fortune, but to a large number of El Paso citizens this store stands for the business home of a man of sterling character and one who came to El Paso a little more than twenty years ago a poor young man from a foreign land and whose energy and integrity have won him a splendid success.

Aaron Stolaroff was born August 24, 1862, at Koidanow, in Minisk, Russia, a son of Fabian and Toibe Stolaroff. The father, who was a cabinetmaker, followed his trade and lived quietly in his native city until death came to him there in 1873. The mother is now a resident at Jerusalem, in Palestine. There were three sons who composed this worthy family, and the other two were Joaquim, who is owner of the large Boston Department Store at El Paso, and Isaac, who is a Jewish rabbi and a prominent author and religious authority among his people.

Mr. Aaron Stolaroff received such education as the primary schools in his home city afforded. Lack of advantages, however, have interfered little with a man whose intellectual energy has never been dulled, and who has carried with him through all his experiences a natural curiosity which he has satisfied by extensive observation and by almost constant reading in the literature of various tongues. He has devoted all his spare time to study and reading, and is thoroughly versed in history, and speaks fluently five languages-English, German, Hebrew, Spanish and Russian.

Mr. Stolaroff arrived at New York City on the 10th of May, 1890, and received his first impression of America and experiences in New York City, where he remained six months. From that city he came west to El Paso, arriving here with practically no capital, although with considerable business experience, which at once became valuable to him. His brother Joaquim had come to El Paso in 1886, and was already established in the china and glassware business. Under his brother, Aaron began his career in El Paso, and at the end of eight months as a clerk had progressed so far that his brother turned over to him the management of the business. At that time Aaron bought a half interest in the estal lishment, and at the end of five years had become sole owner. He has built up a splendid establishment and there is nothing superior to it in the entire southwest. They have lately established a new warehouse with over four thousand square feet, and a new store with six thousand square feet of floor space, located at 109 South Oregon street, in the rear of their present china parlors. Fourteen people find steady employment in this store. The average value of stock carried is more than forty thousand dollars, and a large wholesale trade is carried on throughout Texas, Mexico, New Mexico, and Arizona. Along with his success as a business man and merchant, Mr. Stolaroff has acquired large and valuable interests in real estate and residence properties in El Paso and at Cloudcroft, in Mexico, and is one of the large stockholders in the Ascot Valley Land and Improvement Company.

The secret of Mr. Stolaroff's success as a merchant is not only due to his native ability in trade, but perhaps even more to his unusual energy and application. For twenty-three years, ever since coming to El Paso, he has been on duty at his place of business at seven o'clock in the morning, every day, with only one exception, the period spent in 1912 on a vacation travel, when he traveled throughout Europe and the Holy Land, visiting his mother in Jerusalem. Mr. Stolaroff has a life membership in the Elks Club of El Paso, is a Mason with thirty-two degrees of the Scottish Rite, and a member of the Mystic Shrine; also a member of the Maccabees and one of the founders of the Jewish Syna-gogue at El Paso. Both socially and in business circles there is no citizen of El Paso who enjoys more thorough respect and esteem than Mr. Stolaroff.

He delights in his home and family, and is said to possess one of the finest and largest private libraries in this city. In this modern world, when men are so absorbed in business activities, it is a pleasure to con-template the life of a man whose own energies have been so persistently directed to business, and yet who has found time and opportunity amid the many dis-tracting cares of business life to devote hours to study and the wholesome recreation furnished by books.

Mr. Stolaroff was married in his native city in Russia on November 1, 1888, to Miss Sarah Schnarzbord. are properly proud of their fine family of four children, whose names and positions are briefly mentioned as follows: Annie, who is a graduate of the Institute of Musical Art of New York City with the class of 1910, and an accomplished young lady is a leader in El Paso society; Mary, who graduated from the El Paso High School and the State Normal at San Marcos, Texas, is also an accomplished musician, and is now the wife of Harry Hyman, of Waco; Rose is a graduate of the State Normal and now a student in the University of Texas, at Austin, she having graduated from the Normal College at the age of seventeen; Solomon, the only son, is now a student in the eighth grade of the El Paso public schools.

GEORGE R. LE BAROX. Texas in the eyes of George R. Le Baron, of El Paso, is certainly the land for young men. He is barely thirty and is ranked among the live and successful business men of that city. He is filled with the modern spirit of progress and with the enthusiasm which belongs to young men has handled his real estate business in such a way as to merit and win real estate business in such a way as to merit and win evaluate business in Feaso, or at least in the section in estate business in Texas, or at least in the section in estate business in Texas, or at least in the section in the use of energy, good advertising, a thorough knowledge of the field, and tireless aftention to business, has been the cause of considerable exchange of property, with the resultant benefits to the city.

George R. Le Baron was born in Pensacola, Florida, on the 25th of October, 1881. He passed an uneventful boyhood, except that his ambition always urged him to get out into the world and accomplish something. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Pensacola, but he had to leave school as a young boy. Feeling that he would never make anything of himself with so seanty an education, he went to work and earned the money to go through St. Barnard's School, at Cullman, Alabama, and also to take a special course at this school. He later had a course in Rock Hill College, in Baltimore, Maryland. Upon leaving school he returned to his home in Florida and found employment in a small real estate office in Pensacola, He remained here until he was twenty years of age, when he went to Alabama and entered the iron and steel business. He was thus engaged for about two years, at the end of which time he returned to Pensacola, this time only for a short stay of one year.

He came to Texas in 1905 and located in El Paso, entering the employ of the El Paso Foundry and Ma-chine Company. He remained with this company for five years, after a time becoming secretary and manager and purchasing agent for the supply department. He saw the advantages of this section of the country and the possibilities in the undeveloped resources of the whole section, and his desire to enter this rich field for himself finally led to his resignation from the El Paso Foundry and Machine Company. He entered into partnership with H. W. Broaddus, and the firm of Broaddus and Le Baron opened for business. This firm does a general real estate, insurance and investment business, and the push and energy of the two partners has made the business a success from the very beginning. The older men in the business world of El Paso, if asked to point out the men whom they believe will eventually become men of power and influence in the business affairs of the city, will be sure to mention Mr. Le Baron among the number, so good a showing has he already made.

In polities, although believing in the principles of the Democratic party, Mr. Le Baron prefers to vote independently rather than for any man the party chooses to put up. In religious matters he is a communicant of the Roman Catholic church. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus and is a past grand knight. He is a member of the chamber of commerce, and the high regard in which be is held by the business men is shown in the fact that he was a member of the board of directors in 1911. In the social world of El Paso, Mr. Le Baron is just as popular as in other fields, and the El Paso Social Club. He occupies beautiful said the El Paso Social Club. He occupies beautiful offices, and here his friends are always welcome, though he has too large a business to be able to take very much time for other matters.

Mr. Le Baron has no use for lazy men, but he says that for any one who is energetic and willing to apply himself there is room and opportunity in western Texas. Any one coming out here will be measured by himself, and not by his ancestors, and, as Mr. Le Baron such it is a country for strong men and a country where the future is brighter than the past.

Mr. Le Baron was married in El Paso, Texas, on the 20th of April, 1910, to Miss Laura Townsend, a daughter of Judge and Mrs. J. E. Townsend, of El Paso. One daughter, Florence Robmer, has been born to this

CHARLES L. VOWELL. A member of the Texas bar for nearly a quarter of a century, Mr. Vowell had a successful career in practice and in public affairs for many years at Sherman, and more recently has been det El Paso, where he is regarded as one of the strongest members of the local bar.

Charles L. Vowell was born in Grayson county, Texas, August 9, 1865, a son of Dr. John L. and Martha Jane Vowell. There were five children in the parents' family, and Charles L. was the fourth and youngest son. His early education was attained in the private schools of Grayson county, it being followed by a high school course, and subsequently he was a student in the Sam Houston Normal Institute, at Huntsville, where he graduated in 1886. It was able to attend the Sam Houston Normal, and after his with the cartnings from his personal industry that he was able to attend the Sam Houston Normal, and after his was successful to the configuration of the confi

Mr. Vowell was married at Sherman, December 20, 1897, to Miss Edna Caruthers, a daughter of M. J. Caruthers, of Sherman. Mrs. Vowell is also a native of Texas. The three children, two sons and one daughter, born to their marriage are named as follows: Edna Eyrline, Jack Caruthers and Fulton Vowell. Mr. Vowell and family are members of the Christian church, and he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Maceahees and the Order of Elks. In the line of his profession he has membership in the Texas State Bar Association.

Mr. Vowell has always been an active Democrat and has taken an active interest in both national and state affairs, and problems connected with the political situation. During his residence in Sherman he had numerous political distinctions. He served as city attorney, was for four years assistant district attorney, and then was elected district, attorney, and during his administration in the latter office he secured a larger percentage of convictions according to the number of cases brought before the court than was true in any other county of the state at that time. He was also a member of the school board while residing at Sherman. Mr. Vowell is a man of culture and broad interests, is a thorough student of the law, and excellently well versed in its practice. He takes much pleasure in the resources of his private library, is a man of outdoor interests, and likes hunting and fishing, and in his home community responds readily to every movement for the betterment and advancement of this city.

CHARLES E. Ross, of El Paso, Texas, is one of the many men who have found success in this section of the state of Texas. Mr. Ross belongs to that type of man which is to be found nowhere in the world save in America, the man who learns a trade with the intention of using it merely as a stepping stone to an independent business of his own. That Mr. Ross has succeeded in gratifying his ambitions has been due to the fact that he was skilled in his line of work no less than to his willingness to work, and to work hard.

North Carolina is the native state of Charles E. Ross, his birth having taken place in Union county on the 7th of October, 1877. His father is James E. Ross, who now resides at Montgomery, Alabama, where he is a prominent business man. His mother, Emma Ross, is also living. Charles E. Ross lived in his native state until he was about twelve years old, and then his partents moved into South Carolina, living there about four years, at the end of which time they moved to Jackson-ville, Florida. The education of the lad was therefore rather interrupted, and the best years of his schooling were had in the city of Jacksonville.

It was in the latter city that he first started out as a wage-earner. His first position was as delivery boy for one of the evening papers, and, after about a year of this work, he decided that the best thing for a boy without any capital was to learn some trade, so he apprenticed himself to learn the trade of a carriage painter. For three years he worked for the firm of McMurry and Baker, in Jacksonville, and hecame an expert in his line. He then entered the employ of Smith and Neil, of the same city, remaining with them for two years and a half. At the end of this time he went to Montgomery, Alabama, and went to work at his trade. He remained in this city for eighteen months and then returned to Florida and located in Pensacola, remaining there for a year. It was in 1905 that he came to El Paso, and he has lived here since that time. He first went to work on a salary, but by carefully saving his money he was able in five years to establish himself in a business of his own. This was in 1910, and he has been in this husiness ever since. He has a painting shop in which all kinds of high class painting is done, but he devotes himself especially to the painting of carriages and automobiles. He has among his customers the best people in the city and has a large patronage. His shop is furnished with modern equipment throughout and he has a reputation for putting out finely finished work,

In religious matters Mr. Ross is a member of no church, but he has a tendency toward the Methodist church. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Loyal Order of Moose. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party, but takes no active part in politics, although he is keenly interested in local affairs.

Mr. Ross says that he likes El Paso and western Texas because they have heen good to him; that he has been very successful here and will make this city his permanent home. He says that when he first came here he expected to remain only a few months, but that he soon realized that the city had a great future and he decided to remain. In his opinion there is no better city in the United States, and he advises all those seeking a permanent location to come and investigate.

J. Frank Slax. Since 1888 a resident of Armstrong county, of which he has the distinction of serving as first assessor, Mr. Slay has for a number of years been identified with the hardware business at Claude and has the largest establishment in that line in the city.

J. Frank Slay was born September 6, 1860, in Sabine parish, Louisiana, the third of eight children born to Erastus B. and Frances (Smith) Slay, both of whom were natives of Georgia. The father was a child when his family moved to Alabama, in which state he was educated, and in 1863 he moved to eastern Texas, locating in Van Zandt county. Immediately upon arriving in that county he enlisted in a Texas regiment which did guard duty until the close of the war. He was a cripple and was mable to take part in any of the active campaigns. His death occurred in 1899 in Montague county, but at the time he was a resident of Armstrong county. His regular occupation throughout his eareer was farming, but owing to his infirmities he pever hecame to any degree affluent and died a poor man. In polities he was a Democrat and a member of the Baptist church. The mother came to Texas with her hisband and is now living in Carson county at the age of seventy-

J. Frank Slay had a primary education in Van Zandt and Wise counties, comprising a few months at school. For some years he contributed his work to the support of the family and was performing a man's part on the home farm when many of his age were in school. His first work on his own account was as a cowboy and he spent a year in riding berd over the western cattle range, and from that occupation branched out into the freighting business, which was a large and important enterprise in west Texas before the days of the railroad. He transported many loads of merchandise and supplies between Wichita Falls and Old Clarendon, a distance of two hundred miles. The completion of the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad put an end to the business and in 1886 he entered the employ of the railroad company with which he continued for two years. He was next identified with a line of work of hardly less importance in the panhandle country, in drilling wells. He was one of those who sunk the first well in the panhandle country and continued the work for twelve years. In 1888 he became a permanent resident of Armstrong county, and on the organization of the county government was elected tax assessor, in which he served for two terms. He later served a term of county treasurer. In 1899 he began the lumber business, which he followed for three years, and then established himself in the hardware trade which he has followed to the present time, with particular success. He now carries a stock of general hardware valued at about twenty thousand dollars and has an excellent store building twenty-five by one hundred feet with a warehouse forty by one hundred and forty feet. Besides his business he has a large amount of city real estate and owns his store property and his residence.

The polities of Mr. Slay have always been Democratic and he has taken much interest in political and civic affairs. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, belongs to the Commercial Club, in religion was for twenty-nine years a Baptist, and for the past five years has been an active member of the Methodist church, south, serving as steward and district steward. In Claude, Texas, July 10, 1895, he married Miss Maggie Miller, a native of Johnson county and a Confederate veteran of Texas. The five sons born to their union are: Olin, born August 10, 1896, in Claude; Alva, born December 3, 1897; Roy, born August 2, 1899; William, born November 22, 1999; william, born November 29, 1902; and Erwin, born August 7, 1904. All the children were born in Claude.

THOMAS A. BURCH. Proprietor of the Texico Transfer Company, at El Paso. Mr. Burch established and built up an excellent business and is regarded as one of the successful and enterprising young men of El Paso's commercial life.

Thomas A. Burch was born in Chillicothe, Missouri, May 1, 1870, a son of John and Elliabeth Burch. His father was a native of New York state and the mother of Kentucky. Thomas A. Burch lived in his native state for more than thirty years and obtained his education in the public schools, completing it with a course at Professor Moore's Normal and Business College. Between his school and college days he engaged in farming, and after leaving college taught for some time, conducting a mercantile, establishment in Missouri, which he operated with considerable success until he was about thirty-four years of age. He then came to El-Paso in 1904 and has been a resident of this state ever since. The first two years he spend as a commercial salesman, traveling all over west Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. In 1906 he sought a field of independent enterprise in his present line, and began a general transfer, livery and storage business. He has built up and maintained a complete and thoroughly equipped establishment, employing about twenty persons, a large number of teams and wagons, and he has very modern and efficient facilities for storage and all lines of services connected with his business.

Mr. Burch was married at his native city of Chillicothe, Missouri, September 5, 1893, to Miss Jessie Rogers, daughter of John Rogers, of Chillicothe. They are the parents of one child, John Q., who is a student in the University of Texas, Mrs. Burch died in May. 1910, and is buried in El Paso. She was a very active member of the Methodist church, with which denomina-tion her husband affiliates. He is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Masons, and is a Republican voter. Among the outdoor sports he is especially fond of football and enjoys all the good things of life.

A. P. McKinnon, attorney and counselor-at-law, Floydada, Texas, is one of those men, too few in number, who fully recognize the truth so often urged by the sages of the law, that, of all men, the reading and thoughts of a lawyer should be the most extended. Systematic reading gives a more comprehensive grasp to the mind, variety and richness to thought, and a larger perception of the motives of men and the principles of things, indeed, of the very spirit of laws. This he has found most essential in the prosecution of

He was born in Thomas county, Georgia, December 19, 1849, and his parents, Daniel and Sarah (Mc-Millan) McKinnon, were natives of North Carolina.
They were of Scotch-Irish descent, Daniel McKinnon was a farmer of considerable means and owned a farm fifteen miles south of Thomasville, the south boundary of his plantation being the line between the states of Georgia and Florida at that place. There was a new line established between said states about the year 1864, which put his plantation, with the exception of about one hundred acres, in the state of Florida, and he thus lived in Florida until his death, in 1882, at the age of sixty-eight. He served in the militia during the last year of the Civil war with the Confederate army. He was elected by his regiment postmaster, and therefore was exempt from guard duty. A negro, Abe, attended him as his body servant during this cam-paign, and Abe was faithful and obedient in all things, until the army was disbanded, though he had every opportunity to escape and have his freedom. The mother was a well educated woman of one of the best families in Georgia. Her chief delight was her large family of children. She was broad-minded and liberal, besides being a devout Christian. Daniel was a member of the Presbyterian church, while she was a member of the Baptist church. She died in 1859 at the age of forty-nine years. Daniel and Sarah McKinnon had born to them twelve children, among whom the son A. P. was the eighth.

He was educated in the schools of the neighborhood and at the high school at Monticello, Florida. In 1870 he began reading law at Monticello, under Simkins & Simkins, and was admitted to the bar on the 1st day of May, 1872, and he left the next day for Texas, having been advised by Hon. E. J. Simkins, who had in the meanwhile located at Corsicana, Texas, that Texas was a good place for a young man to come to. He remained at Corsicana with Judge Simkins until January 1, 1873. He then permanently located at Hillsboro, Texas. He entered immediately upon his practice, and continued his residence at Hillsboro until December, 1912. He found it necessary to seek a change of climate, both on account of his own health and that of his wife. He located in Floydada, Texas, February 3, 1913. During his residence in Hillsboro, Texas, which was about forty years, he enjoyed a large practice and was engaged in the most important litigation at the Hill county har, as also in much land litigation in the United States District Court at Waco and Dallas. He has always refused to enter politics as a business, preferring the law to the uncertainties of public life. He, however, took an interest in politics to the extent of exercising his influence in favor of men and measures which he believed to be to the best interest of the state. He was a member of the Democratic state conventions from 1879 until one's views on the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 became a test of one's Democracy in Texas. He was not an advocate of that measure. He was county attorney of Hill county in 1878-79, and filled that position in a very creditable and satisfactory manner. As a lawyer he combines ability and thorough training in legal principles with industry and close application to the interests of his clients, and enjoys general esteem as a scholarly gentleman, a valuable counselor and a useful and influential citizen. He is a strong speaker, making no especial pretensions to oratory, but able to express himself forcibly, relying more on matter than manner for influence. He is an exact logician and perfectly at home even in the midst of the most complicated state of facts. He is calm in address and strictly methodical in the arrangement of his matter, terse and vigorous, pointed in phraseology and accurate in the choice of his words.

Having a world of good nature in his make-up, he is never impolite or captious, nor yet boisterous or egotistical; however, he has the courage of his convictions and nothing can move him from the rock on which he grounds his beliefs. He always exhibits the nicest sense of professional propriety, his bearing towards the court being always respectful and towards adverse counsel courteous. To the younger members of the bar he is ever willing to extend a helping hand, and no one is quicker to recognize merit or give an encouraging word to a struggling young brother. He possesses an abun-dance of patience and energy, and these he has never ceased to exercise throughout his career. Whatever of success he has attained he attributes to hard, persistent labor and to a strict observance of the ethics of his profession.

Mr. McKinnon has held a number of positions which indicate his influence and ability as a lawyer and citizen. He served as special judge by the election of the Hill county bar, during several terms of District Court. He was appointed by Gov. Thomas M. Campbell in January, 1907, a member of the state board of pardon advisers, which position he filled two terms, during the full two terms of Governor Campbell's administration. His policy while a member of said board was characterized by strict and exact justice. He made a most careful examination into the history of the convict and the facts on which he was convicted, and, in connection with Hon. William Blakesley, his associate on the board, a most competent and conscientious gentleman, the application for pardon was either granted or refused. It was well understood that no pardon was recommended or refused except on the merits of the case, and the reasons for the action of the board given in writing to the Governor. In retiring from this office both he and his associate received from the Governor the most flattering commendation for the valuable services rendered in assisting him to the matter of granting and refusing pardons.

During his residence in Hill county, on October 20, 1878, Mr. McKinnon married Miss Anna Eliza Shetter, daughter of John and Mary Shetter, a well known family of Limestone county, Texas, both parents being now deceased. Mr. McKinnon takes much pride in the fact that he and his good wife have raised a family of five children to manhood and womanhood. They have never lost a child by death. Their children each have been well educated. The eldest, Eldred, now a resident in Hillsboro, is eashier of one of the leading banks in that city; John Alexander, the second son, is now a resident of the city of Austin, Texas, and he holds a responsible position with a leading furniture company of that city, and Austin James, the youngest son, is a resident of Crosbyton, Texas. He is vice president and cashier of the First National Bank of that place. Lucy, the elder daughter, married R. J. Jung in September, 1907, at Austin, Texas. She now resides in Houston, Texas, at which place Mr. Jung is employed as principal of the high school in Woodland Heights, a suburb of Houston. Mary Nancy, the younger daughter, lives with her parents in Floydada, Texas. She finished her education while in Austin.

DR. JAMES HENRY WAYLAND. The amassing of a great fortune may be the end and aim of many men, but to gather wealth through business ability and to distribute it widely and well has been the ambition of such men as Doctor Wayland, of Plainview, whose career is a valuable subject for study and emulation, and who has raised for himself a monument and given to the young men and women of Texas a permanent source of intellectual and character training in the Wayland Bap-tist College, which was founded by him at Plainview.

Dr. James Henry Wayland was born in Randolph county, Missouri, April 22, 1863, and is now fifty-one years of age and in the very prime of his manhood and usefulness. His father, Joseph Henry Wayland, born in dectancess. His latter, Joseph Treiny Wayman, torn Virginia in 1832, came to Missouri in 1843, lived in that state fifty-seven years, was a farmer and stock raiser, and in 1990 moved to Pexas, and is now living, a hale and hearty old gentleman at the age of eighty-two, in Plaintiew. The mother, Catherine Wayland, is seventy-two years of age.

Doctor Wayland was educated in the common schools of Missouri and Central College of that state, and in 1886 was graduated in medicine from the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky. Several years before, in July, 1883, he had come to Texas, locating in Parker county, at that time far out toward the western frontier. There he met and married, on December 27, 1883, Miss Sallie F. Tucker, who has been the guiding influence in his remarkable career of prosperity for thirty years. Doctor Wayland practiced medicine in Parker county four years, moved from there to Hunt county, but somewhat later, on account of ill health, was obliged to go farther West. In March, 1891, he arrived in Hale county, in the Lower Panhandle, and has had his home there ever since, and expects to spend the rest of his life on the high plains of Northwest Texas. At Plainview he engaged in the drug business and the general practice of medicine, and in the early days practiced medicine over a territory extending one hundred miles in a radius about Plainview, and endured all the hardships of weather and travel over bad roads all the hardsbips or weather and travel over bad roads which have been incident to the practice of pioneer physicians in every locality. He has spent many a night out on the bleak prairies, sleeping in dugouts when he could get to them, and at the present day looks none the worse for that experience. Doctor Wayland came to Plainview an invalid, weighing only ninety-six pounds, but is today strong and vigorous, a man of about one hundred and sixty pounds weight, and bids fair to live many years. He is always doing something, is never idle, a man of tireless energy, life and helpful activity. His own comfort is never considered, and, though he has acquired large wealth, his living is as plain and simple as the most ordinary man. Doctor Wayland is a man of culture, refinement, ability and leadership among men. Early in his career he began buying cattle, established a ranch, and his prosperity extended much beyond his expectations, so that he is now considered worth a quarter of a million.

Doctor Wayland is a direct descendant of Dr. Francis Wayland, the famous writer and educator of New England. Like his famous ancestor, Doctor Wayland has a passion for colleges and universities, and years ago conceived the idea of a great college for the plains, se-lected a site for its erection and began to work and sacrifice to realize his dreams, until today Wayland College is established in a magnificent structure costing one hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars, has grounds on the highest point in the city, is one mile west of the square, and the grounds and buildings and equipments represent a value of two hundred thousand dollars. Though the college is young, three hundred and fifteen students were enrolled in 1913-14. His first gift was the campus of thirty acres and ten thousand dollars in cash, but as the buildings progressed he put more and more into it, until his donations represent over one hundred thousand dollars in actual cash, and he expects to give more.

Early in life Doctor Wayland was converted and joined the Baptist church. In politics he is a Demo-crat. He became identified with the Masonic Lodge in 1885, taking the Royal Arch degree in 1889, and becoming a member of the Commandery in 1914. By his marriage to Miss Tucker, celebrated December 27, 1883, at Azle, in Parker county, Texas, Doctor Wayland is the father of nine children, namely: Beulah M., born June 18, 1885; Joseph Marvin, born March 3, 1887; Mabel C., December 30, 1891; John H., September 29, 1894; Catherine L., December 31, 1896; Mary B., March 2, 1898; Sarah F., March 13, 1902, and James Robert and Helen Marguerite, twins, born March 7, 1907. Six of these children are still living.

The information for this brief sketch of one of Texas' most notable public benefactors has been furnished by one who knows his career and his accomplishments, and this brief sketch may conclude with this sincere estimate and tribute: "He is without doubt the most progressive and liberal Baptist layman in Texas, according to his means. He is not a rich man when compared to many others in Texas, for there are men on the plains worth many times what he controls, but none with a more liberal soul. He gives to every good cause, he has given thousands of dollars to other interests in Texas, including missions and philanthropy, and especially to the young and growing Baptist Seminary at Fort Worth, to which institution he gave three thousand dollars since Wayland College was founded. He is an active churchman along all lines of church work, supports every worthy enterprise, and is honored by his people of this great section. He has made a name worthy to go down in history along with his worthy ancestor, Dr. Francis Wayland of national fame."

WESLEY ALLEN FRENCH. One of the old-time merchants of Kaufman and the representative of one of the oldest American families, Wesley Allen French is one who has given a worthy account of himself in the business of life, and won for himself a place of importance in the business and civic life of the community. For thirty-five years he has carried on a cattle trade in Kaufman that has given him a wide prominence in the beef markets of the west, and as the owner of a fine ranch of eight hundred acres he takes rank among the most successful agricultural men of the county.
Wesley A. French was born at old Tarrant, Texas on December 9, 1853, and is the son of Allen Oliver and Lucy Jane (Ferris) French. The father was born in Vermont in 1818, and there was reared to rural life, receiving at the same time a passing fair education. His family was a most distinguished one of the Green Mountain state, his mother's uncle being Ethan Allen, famed in Revolutionary times and the author of that historic reply at Ticonderoga, "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress," when asked by whose authority he demanded the surrender of Fort Ticonderoga. Allen Oliver French was the only one of the children of his parents who did not linger about the old parental home and devote his life to the state of his birth. He came in 1851 overland from Vermont to Texas, and made this state his home during the remainder of his life. The quiet, peaceful atmosphere of his parental home had scant attraction for him when young manhood woke within him, and he longed for the freedom and the untutored ways of the Western frontier. He roved about a considerable time in Texas before he stopped at old Tarrant, in Hopkins county, and there he spent two years, during a part of the time being occupied in the conduct of a small country store. He traded his stock of goods for a number of horses, his intention being to penetrate farther into the west, but his horses, all save a mule and a pony, were stolen by Indians the day following the trade, and it was upon the backs of these last remnants of his little fortune that the family and their remaining effects made their way into Waxahachie. For a few months Mr. French stopped there, being occupied during that time in selling out a stock of goods owned by another party, and accompanying them to Kaufman to assist in a similar performance when the work in Waxahachie was completed. It was in 1855 that they settled here, and when the sale had been consummated he profited by the few acquaintances he had made and found other employment as deputy county clerk. He was later appointed to the office of clerk of the county and served a short time. When he discontinued his public service, he again gave his attention to the merchandise business and opened a little store on the corner of the public square, where his son is still active in business and where he carried on a mercantile career, him in January, 1873.

Allen Oliver French came into the South ten years

prior to the war, and it pleased him to array himself on the side of the South on that question that separated the North and the South at that time. He said but little of his Yankee antecedents, and even dismissed the subject of family history, to the decided disadvantage of his own children. He was a man ever sincere and earnest in his communications with his new neighbors, and soon found himself to fit into the civic fabric so like the original threads that it would be difficult indeed to distinguish the boundaries of his individual personality. He was such a man as the public needed in those days for the collection and custody of its taxes during the chaotic period of the Civil war, and he was made tax collector and treasurer for Kaufman and Van Zandt counties while the war was in progress. While performing his duties as collector he did his work on horseback, kept his money in an old trunk, and carried it to Austin at intervals in that "strongbox" placed in a buggy. He was absent from his home many days at a time, and he carried on communication with his family through the medium of his son, Wesley Allen, of this review, who often carried money, as well as messages, and met his father at great distances from home and at cross roads where the elder man was expected to be at certain times. When Mr. French surrendered his commission and retired to his little store in Kaufman as a private citizen, no breath of suspicion attached to any of his transactions during his service, and no man before or since has served whose public or private life more nearly conformed to the principles of right between man and man.

In the political turmoil just preceding the outbreak of the war he saw more clearly than did his neighbors the results that must inevitably accrne from the threat-enel conflict. He knew full well the resources of the North and advised and voted against secession, but when it was accomplished by the convention of Texas, he acquiesced and loyally supported the government of the Confederate states. His store in Kaufman continued business while the war was in progress, and the "war widows" bought goods of him that were never paid for, and much goods were sold for which Confederate scrip was exchanged, the same yielding nothing in the end. But, in spite of these and other adversities, he persevered and came to the end of his life with comforts for his family, satisfied that he had done what he could to relieve suffering and toward the construction of a state.

Allen French married Miss Lucy Jane Ferris, a daughter of Rev. Philo Ferris, a Methodist minister of Racine, Wisconsin, and a sister of Judge Ferris, who spent his life in Waxahachie, Texas. The father was a native of Vermont and went to Wisconsin in early life. Mr. French and Lucy Ferris were married in 1845, and they came down the Mississippi river to the mouth of the Red river, on up to Jefferson, Texas. They were bound for California, but finding the climate of Texas beneficial to the health of Mr. French, they settled here, and thus was established in Texas a family that has been up and doing in the interests of the state since its location here. Judge Ferris, the brother of Mrs. French, was easily one of the foremost men of Ellis county and one who is properly deserving of men-tion in this connection. He was born on March 26, 1823, in the town of Hudson, on the Hudson river, in New York state, and received a good education as measured by the standards of that early period. He was twenty-four years old when he first made his way to Texas, having by that time become a full-fledged lawyer. From the beginning his career in law was spectacular. His briefs began to make their appearance in the Supreme Court reports as early as the Fourth Texas Report, and success attended him at every step. He was a Democrat, and during the presidential campaign of 1852 he served as editor of the Jefferson Herald, performing the duties of his task chiefly at night, so as not to interfere with his regular professional work. In that year he was elected to the Legislature for the counties of Titus and Cass, and the authorship of the common school system then adopted for Texas was directly credited to him, he having prepared the bill and followed it to its final passage. In 1854 he moved, for the sake of his health, to the town of Waxahachie, then a small village, beautifully located on the waters of the Waxahachie river, and here he soon found himself deluged in a practice that included seven counties. His progress from then up to the outbreak of the war was rapid, and during the war he served in the position of judge of the Sixteenth Judicial District, a position in which he felt he could render better service, owing to the ill state of his health, than he could on the field of battle. His was a lawless district, but the judge with a firm hand maintained the supremacy of the law to the end of the war. At one time, in Parker county, his life was threatened in the event that he should attempt to hold court and organize a grand jury, and it is needless to say that the judge carried out his plans to the letter, afterward indicting the parties, who were in due time tried and convicted. Thus was the spirit of insubordination successfully quelled in his district. At the close of the war the judge retired to the duties of a practicing attorney, and in 1868 he associated himself in a banking enterprise with a Mr. Getzandaner. Judge Ferris withdrew from the bank some eight years later in favor of his son, and formed a partnership with a Mr. Rainey that endured for several years, and conducted some of the most important litigation that was carried on in the county. In 1875 Judge Ferris was chosen by the people to frame a new constitution for the state of Texas, and he rendered a most praise-worthy service in that important work. Later he was one of the five commissioners appointed by Governor Coke to amend and revise the statutory laws of the state, and this laborious task was carried to completion with great credit to the commission. The articles in the revised statutes relating to "Public Lands," "Statute of Frauds," "Trespass to Try Title," "Foreible Entry and Detanier," "Registration," etc., were the work of Judge Ferris, and so well were they prepared that in a committee appointed in later years to re-digest and revise the laws, they were required not to change or alter any word or seatence, or even the punctuation, in the former revision.

Judge Férris was one of the delegates from Texas to the National Democratic Convention in Chicago in 1884, and that was his last act of participation in the public life of his district. He withdrew from all activities of a public nature, and devoted himself thereafter to a quiet private life, his closing days being passed in his fine home, surrounded by every comfort and luxury. He was for many years a consistent member and supporter of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and his daily works were of the most exemplary order, showing forth many of the gentler Christian virtues and the straightforwardness and integrity of a gennine man-

Mrs. French, whose brother Judge Ferris was, died in 1894, the mother of five children. Ella died unmarried; Ida is the widow of W. C. Hollenquist and resides in Terrell, Texas; Wesley A. is the subject of this review; Mary A. died in Kaufman as the wife of this review; Mary A. died in Kaufman as the wife of the Terrell, Texas, which will be a subject of the John C. Graves, one of the leading merchants and citizens of Kaufman, and has one son, June Graves.

Wesley Allen French was born at Tarrant, Texas, on December 9, 1853, and during his childhood was ever a valuable aid to the material welfare of the family. He was a part of the little store that his father conducted in Kaufman, and when his father died in 1873 he returned home from Waxmahehie, where he had been attending school, and since that time has not strayed from Kaufman. He saw to it that the little store was conducted in such manner as to maintain in comfort the family and educate the younger sisters, and in the years he has devoted to it he has outgrown two businesses houses, and recently erected a third, which will permanently mark the spot upon which Allen Oliver French launched his business life in the county seat.

As success in the mercantile business followed Mr. French, he concluded to devote himself to activities in the eattle business, as an experiment, and so well did his experiment work out that for thirty-five years now he has been thus occupied. He has displayed a rare judgment and sagacity in perfecting shipments of beef for the markets, and his cattle rarely miss the top price for beef, while packers have come to know Mr. French through their long acquaintance with the products of his ranch. His fine farm of eight hundred acres in the vicinity of Kaufman, as well as his business house in the city, testify substantially to the character of his material progress in this community, as well as adding not a little to the appearance and wealth of the same.

Mr. French has been twice married. In ISS9 he married Miss Emma Irvine, a daughter of Judge John Irvine, of Terrell, and she died in ISS2, leaving a son and a daughter. William Allen was graduated from the A. & M. College of Texas in the class of 1913, and is now at the head of his father's business interests. Mattle Lee was born in ISS9. In June, ISS9, Mr. French married Miss Araminta Love, a daughter of John K. He was a conspicuous about the early settlers of Texas The Was a conspicuous about the early settlers of Texas many years, and a Confederate solviner. The children of Mr. and Mrs. French are eight in number and are named as follows: Jane and Julia, who are twins; Ferris, named in honor of his maternal grandmother's family; Raebael, Thad, Katie, Dick and John Wesley,

Mr. French has never been a man to devote himself to fraternal or other social life, confining his attentions to his family and his business affairs. He has, however, been a member of the Methodist church, and served it as a steward for many years. He is one of the solid and conservative men of Kaufman who has reached a high place in material prosperity as a result of his own activities, and his place here in the esteem of the people is one that is undeniably secure and desirable.

OTIS T. BACON. Thirty years of residence and official activities have given Mr. Bacon a place of bonor where he might properly be called the foremost citizen of Wichita Falls. He was chosen many years ago to fill the first term as mayor after the incorporation of the city and that distinction will be associated with his name as long as Wichita Falls has a history. Thus in an official and private capacity he has done much to promote the general improvement and upbuilding of this fine commercial center of Texas. For the past six years he has served as postmaster and his administration of that office has been productive of many changes and improvements in the service and he was the organizer of the first regular, city delivery service in Wichita Falls and during his term has also been completed the splendid and during his term has also been completed the splendid new postoffice building.

Otis T. Bacon was born at Paris in Bourbon county. Kentucky, September 13, 1858. His father was Warren A. Bacon, a native of Massachusetts, born in the town A. bacon, a harre of Massachusetts, both in the tolk of Dudley, September 18, 1816, moving to Kentucky in 1840 and becoming a farmer and banker and a very successful man in that locality. During his early years of Kentucky residence he taught school and was comparatively a poor man when he began his career in that state. In early life he was a Whig and afterwards a Republican and in religion was an Universalist. His death occurred at Paris, Bourbon county, Kentucky, June 28, 1902, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. The maiden name of his wife was Belle Talbott, a daughter of Louis and Sarah Talbott, and she was born in Bourbon county, April 1, 1836, and died in August, 1898, at the age of sixty two years. She was the mother of six children, three sons and three daughters, of whom Of six as the third. The Bacon family has a long an-cestral record, going back to the parish of Winston in Snffolk county, England, to the year 1600. The first ancestor of record was Michael Bacon, and Michael Bacon, Jr., was one of the founders of Dedham, Massachasetts, where he resided from 1635, the year in which he came from England. Many of the family in that and subsequent generations took part in the Indian wars and also in the Revolutionary struggles. An uncle of Otis T. Bacon was Edward Davis Bacon, eighth in descent from the original American settlers, and was a missionary in the cause of liberal Christianity, while his younger brother, William S. Bacon, was a preacher of the Universalist faith. The Universalist Society in Oxford was the third society of that faith in America being organized in 1775, and all the Learned and Davis families, who were ancestors of Mr. Bacon, were subscribers to the organization of the church. On the maternal side Mr. Bacon is descended from early Virginians of English descent who had lived in that commonwealth from before the Revolutionary war. Grandfather James Jones was a Revolutionary soldier and was in the Kings Mountain fight. He was also in the fight at Guilford Court House, in which he was taken prisoner, and died on a British prison ship. James Jones married Ariabelle Kennedy, whose father, Jesse Kennedy, was an official surveyor in Kentucky, and lived on Kennedy's creek where he was among the first settlers.

Otis T. Bacon was educated in the private schools of Kentucky and at the age of nineteen left home with limited resources and arrived at Taylor, Texas, in October, 1877, his first employment being as clerk in a store at that place. He lived there for six years and on August 10, 1883, arrived and became a citizen of Wiehlar Falls, which was then a small village. For a number of years he was successfully identified with the real estate business in this city and as a result of early and estate business in this city and as a result of early and continued investments in the city and adjacent country he has accumulated a large fortune, his holdings consisting of business and residence property. At the solicitaing of meanices and restorence projects; Ar. the solution of Col. Ceeil A. Lyon, chairman and national committeeman of Texas, Mr. Bacon consented to have his name presented to the president for the position of postmaster of Wichita Falls. On November 1, 1907, President Rossevelt appointed him postmaster and he has conducted the office from that time to the present writing. On January 1, 1913, the postoffice was moved into the new Federal building, a structure which is an ornament and credit to Wichita Falls and which was built at a cost of $67,868.50. This is said to be the finest office in a city of its size in the state of Texas. Fifteen clerks now compose the staff of the local postoffice and there are six city and six rural carriers. Bacon, among other things, has the credit for having established and supervised the new service of the parcel post at the beginning of 1913, and has inaugurated many other changes for the benefit of the citizens. The total business of the local office for the year ending March 31, 1908, was $18,036.13. Each year from that time forward showed a large increase and the total receipts for the year ending March 31, 1913, were $47,352.90. In 1908 the office had only four clerks, there were three rural carriers and no city carriers. When he became postmaster Mr. Bacon found the local office in a very unsatisfactory state and he accepted the office under protest. His management, however, soon cleared up all the disorder and for several years he has had a record as head of one of the best conducted postoffices in Texas.

In February, 1889, Mr. Bacon served as county road overseer and in that position graded the first road in Wichita county. He held the office for six months, until the fall of 1889. At that date Wichita Falls was incorporated, and Mr. Bacon was chosen the first mayor. He was re-elected in the following April and served two years and nine months. He was also president of the school hoard for two years, and for three years was a member of the city council. A Republican in politics, he has always been one of the leaders in the Texas party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Wichita Falls, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks in this city, and is a member of the local chamber of commerce. He has membership in the Christian church.

On December 9, 1885, at Muir, in Fayette county, Kentucky, he married Miss Drusie Smith, a native of Fayette county and a daughter of John and Augusta Smith, old residents of that vicinity. The two children born to their union are Otis T., who died in infancy, and Benjamin B., born at Muir, Kentucky, June 20,

Mr. Bacon is very democratic in his tastes and rela-tions, has been a friend of the laboring man and of labor organizations and many of his staunchest admirers are among what is often called the common people. He possesses very broad views, is a man of versatile accomplishments and has many delightful reminiscences of old-time days in Texas and Wichita Falls. During his conduct of the local postoffice he has never made a practice of keeping his door locked to the public and any one has ready access to his hearing and counsel.

WILLIAM JOHN YATES, tax assessor of Kaufman county, Texas, was born in Dallas county, this state, March 4, 1871, the son of a Dallas county farmer, Eli Yates.

Eli Yates was a native of Alabama, but he grew up and married in Scott county, Mississippi, and from there enlisted his services in the Confederate army. He participated in the battle of Iuka and other engagements of the Army of the Tennessee, and at the close of the war brought his family to Texas. In his youth he had no opportunities for schooling, and in the battle of life he was hampered by reason of his lack of an education. On coming to Texas he settled on the old Caruth farm, one coloning to reads as section on the out cardin tarm, near Dallas, from whence, a few years after the birth of his son John, he removed to Kaufman county. His life was that of the quiet, honest farmer, and in his religious views he harmonized with the teachings of the Baptist church, of which he was a worthy member. He passed away in 1909. His widow, Angerona (Wig-He passed away in 1902. His wanow, Angerona (1972) gins) Yates, survived him a few years and her death occurred in June, 1912. They were the parents of James A. and Willoughby E., of Forney, Texas; Mrs. George Deeds, of Arlington, Texas; Mrs. E. J. Ball, of Forney, and Willam John, whose name introduces this sketch.

William John Yates was reared on his father's farm. He attended the schools near his home and also for a session or two was a student at Baylor University. His first work away from the farm was as a clerk for the Conway-McCord Company, a leading mercantile establishment of Terrell, Texas, where he won several promotions, until he was made buyer in the shoe department, a position he held for fifteen consecutive years. He was with the firm from the time it opened its first goods in Terrell in January, 1893, until he resigned his place in order to enter upon his duties as a public officer of the county.

Mr. Yates made the campaign for assessor in 1912 in a field where five candidates were competing for the office, and he led the nearest competitor six hundred votes, winning the nomination and subsequent election, and in November, 1912, being installed as the successor of Ed Legg.

As a lodge man, Mr. Yates affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of the World, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, and the Yeomen. He is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the Grand Lodge. He holds to the religious creed in which he was reared, that of the Baptist church, and he is noted for his genial good nature, his popularity being bounded only by his acquaintance.

Deing Jounded only by his acquaintance.
October 23, 1896, at Terrell, Texas, Mr. Yates and Miss Eddie Clary were united in marriage, and they are the parents of two children, Fred and Gordon, Mrs.
Yates' father, John Clary, died at Corsicana, Texas, when she was a child. Her mother, Mary (Redden) Hanson, is still living. There were two children in the Clary family—Mrs. Yates and John Clary, a resident of Urandall, Texas.

HENRY SPARKS, clerk of Kaufman county and a native son thereof, is one of the prominent public officials of these parts. He has been in the public service for a number of years, beginning his official career as a particularly young man, and has gained a wide prominence in these parts because of his many excellent traits of character and the high order of the service he has given to the public.

Born at Ables Springs, Texas, on November 18, 1874, Henry Sparks is the son of George W. and Sophia Adams Sparks, the latter a daughter of Ezekiel Ables. The father came to Texas as a child of three years, in company with his widowed mother and several children. They were from Tennessee, and there the father was born in 1849, a son of William Sparks, who passed away in the full vigor of manhood, leaving a widow and seven young children to battle with the world without a father's care. The widowed mother guided her little family to Texas, making the journey by wagon to Cherokee county, where she made her first stop, in 1852. She remained there until 1858, when she came to Kaufman county, and here spent her final years. She settled in the timber regions in the vicinity of Terrell and slowly accomplished the task of making a productive and self-supporting farm, which clothed and educated her children and maintained her in comparative comfort while she lived. She was denied an education, but she could read and write, and was a devoted student of her bible, and few of the laymen of the Free Will Baptists could cope with her in quoting from Holy Writ. She dwelt much in later life upon the things of the spirit, and her life was a blessing to all who came within the circle of her acquaintance. When she died in 1907 she was seventy three years old. Those of her children who reached mature years were as follows: Martha, who became the wife of Carey A. McCracken, and resides on White's Prairie, Kaufman county; George W., of Ables Springs, the father of the subject; James M., of Terrell, Texas; Lucinda, the wife of T. B. Enochs, of Sulphur Springs, and Samuel, who died unmarried.

George W. Sparks reached manhood without gaining more than the rudiments of an education, and the mother's frugal home in the sandy land of the Terrell vicinity was his home until he married in 1872. His wife was Mrs. Sophia Adams, the daughter of Ezekiel Ables, who came to Kaufman county from Nacogdoches county, but was originally of Mississippi origin. He was a large land owner in the vicinity of Ables Springs, and the place was named in his honor. Mrs. Sparks was born in Nacogdoches county in 1838. When her first husband died he left her with six children, named as follows: Young, who died at the age of thirty-seven follows: Young, who died at the age of thirty-seven in Kaufman county; James, of Sulphur Springs, Oklahoma; John K., of Childress, Texas; Wade Hampton, of Royce, Texas; William, who died at the age of eighten years, and Jasper, of Ables Springs. The issue of the marriage of George W. and Sophia Sparks were Henry, of this review, and Maggie, the widow of James Russell, of Kaufman county. Mrs. Sparks died in 1902.

Henry Sparks gained his early educational training in Ables Springs, and finished his studies in Hills Business College, Dallas, after which he spent a few seasons on the home farm, coming in 1902 to the office of the county clerk as his deputy, the incumbent of the office being J. E. Boykin. He served in that capacity for four years, and was then selected by the directors of the Citizens' National Bank of Kaufman as assistant cashier, where he passed the succeeding four years. Thence he went into the race for the office of county clerk and defeated all comers for nomination, succeeding Clerk Hindman in the office in November of that year. He was renominated without opposition in 1912, and he is widely regarded as one of the most efficient and capable men ever intrusted with the administration of the office in the county. He is familiar with the duties of other county officials through actual contact with them, and in the matter of public records his system is the embodiment of clerical perfection.

On May 13, 1897, at Ables Springs, Mr. Sparks was married to Miss Bessie Lord, the daughter of Samuel J. Lord and his wife, Emily (Hunt) Lord. They came from Florida to Texas, and Mrs. Sparks is one of the five children of the family, the others being William H., Ella, who married Robert Samples and died in Kaufman county, and Miss Mamie Lord. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Sparks are William J. Bryan, Herman and Lucile, all of whom are exceptionally brilliant and give splendid promise for future achievement. Mr. Sparks is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was secretary of the local lodge and of the Odd Fellows Association for several years. He performed a like duty for the Pretorians upon becoming identified fraternally with that order, and it may be further stated that he is a charter member of the Oakwood Camp of the Woodmen of the World, and was once clerk of that camp. He is a man who enjoys a deal of popularity with his fellows in and about the county, and is one of the genial, wholesouled men who ever find friends and continue to retain them through the years.

Henry Clifton Hicks, president of the Hicks-Kellam Company, a dry goods and ladies' ready-to-wear establishment of Kautman, Texas, ranks with the leading merchants of the city.

Mr. Hicks has been a resident of Kaufman since 1883. at which time a valise full of good clothes, a mercantile experience, and a little pocket change—less than a hundred dollars—constituted his capital stock, and he was only twenty years of age. Mr. Railey, at this writing president of the First National Bank of Terrell. stood sponsor for the young man and induced the firm of Muckleroy and Sons of Kaufman to give him a clerkship in their store.

A residence of three years here gave Mr. Hicks a wide acquaintance, won him a confidence in the commu-nity that he could coin into money under certain circumstances, and also won him a companion for life's path-Then he married and soon afterward faced the world as a merchant instead of a clerk.

In his early boyhood Mr. Hicks had become dissatisfied at home and fell a victim to the "call of the wild," as it were. So he ran away, or left without the permission of his parents, and started an independent career. In the community of Downsville, Louisiana, he found a hame with Maj. E. S. Pipes, a farmer and merchant, with whom he spent a year on the farm. The many good qualities of the boy, especially his alertness and his genial manner, marked him as possessing the requisites for a mercantile career, and his employer took him out of the field and placed him behind the counter. During the next five years he gained an experience at Downsville that proved the opening wedge to a business career of his own when the moment for real action ar-When he married, Mr. Hicks had eight years' rived. business experience to his credit, and he had a personal credit of which he was ignorant. His old employer at Downsville proposed a business partnership and furnished five thousand dollars with which to open the business at Kaufman. For eleven months Major Pipes gave the enterprise his presence, and during that time convinced himself that he had made no mistake in placing his money "on the boy," and he proposed to sell the business to his ambitious young partner "on time." This was done, and some of the personal notes given by the young merchant as the sole security of his benefactor still lie among the former's personal papers and are prized as a reminder of his first important successful transaction.

Mr. Hicks continued in business alone until September, 1912, when he incorporated as the Hicks-Kellman Company, with a capital of twenty thousand dollars. He is president of the company; J. S. Kellam, vice president; O. T. Kellam, secretary; and Joseph Kellam, treasurer. During his long period of merchandising at Kaurman, business conditions have fluctuated with the rise and fall of the commercial barometer of the country and once or twice a grasping or miserly creditor could have plunged his enterprise into ruin but for the response of some loyal heart who knew his worth, his spirit and his pluck and carried him through the deep waters of obligation to where he could wade again and preserve his name untarnished. He never told his troubles to anyone but his creditors. He always faced persons he owed and sold his goods with a smile and a firm clasp and created more confidence and more credit. The fighting spirit of his father was mixed in generous proportion in his own makeup, and his motto was "Never Quit." If his task seemed hopeless, he stuck the closer to it, and he appreciated a victory more after it was won against the expressed judgment of men of busi-When in a pinch for a large sum of cash for immediate use, he went to the source of money and pleaded his own cause successfully and made his financier proud of the transaction by paying the loan before it was due.

Henry Clifton Hicks was born at Downsville, Louisiana, January 27, 1861. All the schooling he received was betore his fifteenth year. His parental home was that of a doctor and preacher, for his father both practiced medicine and expounded the gospel as a Sisonary Baptist during a long and effective career. Henry C. was the seventh of eight children of the family of which Dr. Dulaney L. Hicks was the paternal

Dr. Hicks was born in Alabama in 1824 and came into Louisiana in early life. He received his medical degree from Tulane University, New Orleans, and practiced his profession in Union parish, at Farmersville and Downsville, for more than sixty years. At the outbreak of the war between the states, he was commissioned Captain of one of the first companies that left northern Louisiana for the front in defense of the Confederate cause. In his church work he was active all his life, he proved himself an able and effective minister, and he actually "died in the harness" at Miles, Texas, in 1908. At one time he was State Evangelist of Louisiana for his church. He dealt always in truth and fairness; and he was peaceful and peace loving, but one had only to dispute his word to be knocked down for his trouble. His mental processes were of the highest order; his literary education came rather from observation and experience than from training in school. He made no history in politics, but he knew Masonic work and was given a Masonic burial. Before he reached his majority, Doctor Hicks married a school girl of his Alabama locality and moved to Louisiana, where they hegan their wedded life. She was Miss Elizabeth Fore-hand and was one of a family of nine children.

Henry C. Hicks has given of his time to affairs in Kaufman, as a member of the city council, in which he served for a period of eight years and during the time when important matters of urban life were being matured. When Kaufman's pullie school building was erected he was chairman of the finance committee. As a citizen he stands for temperance and sobriety and opposed to the saloon. He has lived in Kaufman with the saloon and without it, and the principle of prohibition has been demonstrated to his satisfaction as the proper one for his community. Legalizing a traffic in human lives through the liquor route merits, as he believes, the condemnation of every family man.

December 9, 1884, Mr. Hicks was married to Miss Cornelia (Neely) Nash, a daughter of Charles Cornelius Nash, whose career as a citizen of Kaufman county reached its zenith the first dozen years after the war and ended prematurely in his death. Misses Robin and Patti Hicks are the children of this marriage. The former was educated in Hollins, Virginia, and the latter at Christian College, Columbia, Missouri

PHILIP GORDON BACON has been engaged in the lumber business at Kaufman since 1897, and since early in the 70's has been a resident of Kaufman county. For expert years he was engaged in making a farm west of the county seat and in exploiting the common products peculiar to Texas. Thus he belongs to the class of rural home-builders close upon the heels of the pastoral era on the prairies of Texas.

Mr. Bacon is a contribution of the north to the analgamating civilization of the south. He was born art yeslant, Michigan, October 10, 1850, say of Henry Hiram Bacon, who migrated to the 1850, so of the country from Schenectad, where he and his many the second property of the second the second property of the second pro

Petibone, who followed the westward course of empire in the latter 50°s, and settled on a claim in Douglas county, Kansas, in 1558. He lived there through the period of promiseuous settlement, through the events of the Quantrell Raid, and through the era of railroad building which gave Kansas such an impetus and put her lands upon the market as securities and filled up her prairies with a cosmopolitan citizenship unlike that of any of the older states.

While the Civil war was going on, Milton Petithone was in the Union army and was commissioned captain of the company he raised in the community of Black Jack where he lived. He remained in the army while the war lasted and with the resumption of peace returned to his family and the prairie farm. He continued his agrarian vocation until the weight of years pressed upon him, when he moved to Lawrence, Kansass, and there passed away at a ripe old age. His own children were Elmyra, now Mix. Charles Mendenhall, of drein were Elmyra, in Mix. Charles Mendenhall, of Kansass, and Charles Fettilone, of Lawrence, Kansass,

Philip G. Bacon spent his boyhood among the pioneers of eastern Kansas and assisted his stepfather with the preliminary work of their new home. He acquired a fair education notwithstanding he was out of the fringe of settlement, but Kansas always provided for the education of her youth first, and he was a Kansas youth. He saw the railroad come through his locality, establish the station of Wellsville near his own home and got his first important employment away from the farm in the actual building of that branch of the Santa Fe road. He left the friends of his boyhood in 1879 and took a team to a railroad construction camp and went to work on the grade. He worked on the M. K. and T. railroad grade then being constructed from Sedalia to Fort Scott, on a part of the Missouri Pacific system from Holden, Missouri, to Paola, Kansas. Following this experience he traded for a claim in Elk county, Kansas, where he communed with primitive nature for a year and sighed as he missed the flow of the "yellow" which accompanied the force of railroad builders. So at the end of the year he exchanged his claim for an outfit and set out for a railroad camp, which he found at Newton, Kansas, where the Santa Fe had concentrated its material and started its line westward. He accompanied the slowly creeping artery of commerce across the plains to Hole-in-the-Rock, Colorado, where the work stopped. As a consequence many men were thrown out of a job. As a means of tiding himself over this crisis, Mr. Bacon made his first trip to Texas, journeying by wagon from Coffeyville, Kansas, and bringing with him three teams of mules. In Kaufman county he took a contract for breaking prairie not far from the county seat for Doctor Dashiell. Here he surprised the native population by dragging a plow with mules instead of the proverbial Texas "Longhorn," as had been done heretofore. When the financial sky cleared up so that railroad work was resumed he returned to that and ahandoned, for a few years, the life of a farmer, but he looked forward to the date when he should become an actual settler on the prairie land he first helped to plow up. He then took a contract for the construction of a section of the extension of the "Waco Tap" between Hillsboro and Waco and had to take third mortgage bonds for his pay for the work. This left him in an embarrassing position, as he had no funds with which to pay his men. Next he took a contract on the narrow gauge road then being built from Jefferson west and built a segment of the line in Morris county, where he met his obligations to his help and then secured another contract, this time out of Denison on the Denison and Southeastern, from Greenville to Dallas. He then returned to Hole-in-the-Rock and continued with the Santa Fe line past Albuquerque, New Mexico, to the Arizona line, where he left the Atlantic & Pacific, as it was then called. Whether in the exact order of their happening or loot, these routings account for his time chiefly while he was a railroad contractor and when he finally abandoned it he came back to the black land whose sod he had turned over some years lefore. He then purchased a tract of land one mile north of Gastonia, and settled down to farming in earnest, and here for fifteen years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1897, when he bought his present lumber business.

May 2, 1878, in Kanfman county, Mr. Bacon was married to Miss Amanda Elizabeth Shelman, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Still) Shelman. Mr. Shelman can the to Texas from Pennsylvania previous to the Civil war and he and his wife were married at San Augustine. He Still family being among the pioneers of Texas. Mrs. Bacon was born in Kaufman county in 1857. Their ishildren are: Perl, wife of James DeLaey, of Kaufmar, Milton, of Crandall, Texas; Mary, Alice, Grandon and Ruth. Mr. Bacon's mother died at Lawrence, Kansas, in January, 1913, at the age of ninety-three years. Fraternally Mr. Bacon is an Odd Fellow.

LEWIS MERIWETHER, M. D. A native of the Lone Star state and a scion of one of its distinguished pioneer families, Dr. Meriwether is here an able and successful representative of the exacting profession that was signally dignified and honored by the character and services of his father, who was one of the pioneer physicians and surgeons of Houston county, this state. In the active work of his profession he whose name initiates this review has well upheld the prestige of the family name, as has be also as a loyal and progressive citizen of Houston county, his residence and professional headquarters being maintained in the thriving and attractive city of Crockett, the metropolis and judicial center of the county. A succinct delineation of the personal appearance of this representative physician of eastern Texas has been given in the following words: "Well above the average height, straight as a pine, with his kindly fea-tures bronzed by years of exposure to sun and wind and rain, there is no more familiar figure upon the streets of the city of Crockett than that of Dr. Meriwether, and no citizen has more impregnable vantage place in popular confidence and esteem."

Dr. Lewis Meriwether was born near Marshall, the capital of Harrison county, Texas, on the 2nd of October, 1850, and is a son of Dr. Francis L. and Ethalinda (Dunlay) Meriwether, the former of whom was born in Abbeville district, South Carolina, and the latter of whom was born in Greene county, Alabama. The Meriwhom was born in Greene country, Alabama. The Meri-wether family was founded in America in the early colonial days and the lineage is traced back to the stanchest of English origin. Dr. Francis L. Meri-wether was a boy at the time of his parents' immigra-tion from South Carolina to Alabama, where he was accorded excellent educational advantages, his father-bearing towards. having been a man of substantial means and a citizen of prominence and influence in his community, both parents having continued to reside in Alabama until their death. In preparing for the work of his chosen profession, Dr. F. L. Meriwether availed himself of the advantages of the Lexington Medical College, in the city of Lexington, Kentucky, and he ably qualified himself according to the professional standards of that period. Concerning this sterling pioneer physician of Texas the following interesting record has been given and is well worthy of perpetuation in this publication: "It is significant of the character of Dr. F. L. Meriwether that while he was a man of extreme culture and refinement, coming of a family born to an appreciation of the best that civilization offers, yet an inborn love of nature and the primitive led the young pioneer physician to settle always just at the edge of the better known haunts of men. With his young wife he came to the state of Texas, bringing with him forty slaves, and he settled in the more or less primitive surroundings of Harrison county, where the fishing and hunting were good and where he could drink in the ruggedness and charm of the mighty woodland. He first practiced his profession in Alabama, chiefly among the Choctaw Indians, and in later years he related how he fixed in the Indian mind the time his prescriptions should be taken, indicating in turn certain points in the sky, calling attention to the sun and then pretending to swallow." He came to Harrison county, Texas, in 1845, and in 1850 he removed to Houston county, where he purchased a large tract of land and developed a productive ranch, besides giving his attention to the work of his profession, in which he ministered throughout a wide territory and with utmost self-abnegation and faithfulness, so that his name is held in reverent memory in the community that long represented his home. He passed the closing years of his life upon his old homestead ranch, where he died in 1881, in the fullness of years and well earned honors, Too advanced in age to enter the Confederate ranks at the time of the Civil war, Dr. Meriwether did all in his power to further the cause of the Confederacy, and he showed his loyalty as well as his deep human sympathy by providing for the widows and families of soldiers killed in conflict or those in active service at the front. He attended such families in a professional way without thought of making any demand for compensation and in many other ways he was kindly and helpful to those in adversity and distress during that climacteric period in the nation's history. He was a man of exalted character and his life and labors counted for much, as such a man could not be obscure, whether in the wilderness or in the centers of metropolitan activities. His cherished and devoted wife was summoned to the life eternal in 1876, and both were devout members of the Christian church. Concerning their six children the following brief record is given: Huldah, who became the wife of Dr. Frank Rainey, of Dallas, Texas, is now deceased, as are also Frank and Willie Gertrude; Dr. Lewis Meriwether, to whom this article is dedicated was the third in order of birth; Fanny is the wife of Judge Anson Rainey, presiding on the bench of the court of civil appeals in the city of Dallas; and Jessie is the wife of Thomas H. Dailey, a representative real estate broker of that city.

In a retrospective way it may be noted that two distinct branches of the Meriwether family have been prominent in the annals of American history, one branch having made original settlement in Tennessee and Kentucky and the other having found representation in the early settlement of Georgia, Alabama and other southern states. Meriwether county, Georgia, received its name in honor of a distinguished member of this family, and of a collateral branch of the family was Captain Meriwether Lewis, one of the leaders of the historic Lewis & Clark expedition across the western wilds under the auspices of the Government and at the time when Thomas Jefferson was president of the United States.

earned degree of Doctor of Medicine. At the age of twenty-one years he initiated the active practice of his profession at Grapeland, Houston county, where he served his novitiate and continued to maintain his residence until 1903, when he removed to Crockett, the judicial center of the county, where he has continued in active general practice during the long intervening years which have been filled with unwavering devotion to his exacting and humane vocation and by the attainment of unequivocal success. He has kept in close touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science and has had recourse to the best of its standard and periodical literature, with the result that he avails himself at all times of the most approved remedial agents and the most advanced methods of surgical manipulations. His practice is of extensive and representative order and he is one of the leading representatives of his profession in eastern Texas, the while his success is the more gratifying to contemplate by reason of the fact that the stage of his activities has been the county which has represented his home from the days of his childhood, his mgi stanuing in popular conndence and esteem render-ing impossible any application in his case of the Scrip-tural aphorism that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." high standing in popular confidence and esteem render-

Dr. Meriwether has ever stood exponent of most loyal and progressive citizenship and has noted with the greatest satisfaction the magnificent development and growth of his, native state. He is aligned as an uncompromising supporter of the cause of the Democratic party and he has been a member of the Christian church from the time of attaining to his legal majority. He is identified with the Houston County Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason in the lodge of Ancient Free & Accepted Masons at Grapeland, of which he is Past Master, and he is now affiliated with Lothrop Lodge, No. 21, of Crockett.

In 1875 Dr. Meriwether wedded Miss Jennie Murchison, daughter of Dr. William F. Murchison, who resided near Daly, Houston county, and she passed to the life eternal in 1877, being survived by two children-Carrie Dunlap, who is the wife of William Hart, of Austin, this state, and Minnie Jane, who is the wife of Robert Hamby, a representative real estate dealer of that city. In 1879 Dr. Meriwether was united in marriage to Miss Martha Champion, daughter of the late William A. Champion, who served as clerk of the district court of Houston county. She died in 1891 and is survived by one child, Ethel A., who is the wife of William W. Waugh, of Duran, New Mexico. In 1883 was solemnial, the control of the control of the way of the control of the c ized the marriage of Dr. Meriwether to Miss Fannie Keen, who was born and reared in Houston county and who is a daughter of the late Thomas J. Keen, an honored citizen of Daly, this county. The four children of this union all remain at the parental home and their names are here entered in respective order of birth: Lewis Keen, Willie Adelaide, Elwin and Yancy Daly. Mrs. Meriwether is a most popular figure in the social activities of her home city, is a devout member of the Baptist church and is a successful teacher of music in her home city, as she has received the best of cultiva-tion in the "divine art," for which her natural talent was of high order.

WILLIAM M. GABERTY, M. D. The entire professional crandall, Texas, has been passed in Kanfman county, where he entered upon his career as a practitioner of Forney, in 1886. His antecedents on both sides were among, or compatriots of, those who laid the foundations for Texas greatness and bared their breasts to the dangers incident to military strife or to the savagery of the native tribes opposing the advance of civilization. Doctor Garrett's father was Julius N. Garrett, who was born at Greenville, South Carolina, and grew up in there married to Miss Mary Minerva Truit, whose English ancestors spelled the name "Truitt." She was a daughter of Hon. James M. Truit, who came out of North Carolina in 1838 and entered actively and conspicuously into the affairs of the Republic.

The history of the American Truits starts with three brothers, who left England for the American Colonies and settled among the people of the south, where they will be a seen to have a malagamated and their blood was mixed with the new race of men who inspired the contest for litherty and equality and whose posterity fought the battles of independence and laid the foundation for the first Republic of the New World. Col. J. M. Truit was born in Buncombe county, North Carolina, in 1790. Developing a strong mind in a strong body, he entered life with a liberal training, was elected sheriff of Buncombe county about 1830, and, herefore, brought with him a political experience to Texas. He served in the lower house of the Texas Congress and early in the history of statehood was elected to the Scand and that of his sons rose at the start of the start for the start is sons rose at the other conditions of the start Texas fend known as the "Regulators" and the "Woderators," and Capt. A. M. Truit, one of his sons, was in command of a company of the "Moderators," and which had for its object the regulation of the "Regulators," and which put an end to the neighborhood disturbance.

Captain Truit was subsequently elected captain of a company and went to Mexico with one of the regiments under General Taylor, operating along the Rio Grande. In the battle of Monterey he distinguished himself by disobeying orders and was commended by the commander-in-chief for his act, a fact hitherto unrecorded in the annals of that engagement. Being ordered to hold a certain position during that battle, Captain Truit saw it menaced by Mexican artillery, so threatened with destruction as to necessitate the capture of the battery or see his little command swept from the earth. He had no time to ask for other orders, so issued a command for the capture of the deadly battery, which was accomplished with no casualties, and when the incident was reported to General Taylor, the latter invited him to his headquarters and apprised him of his conduct in the face of specific orders. This the honest Captain admitted and said he was ready for his punishment. To his surprise and gratification, General Taylor stated that he had only to commend him for his foresight and bravery and complimented him upon the particular service he rendered the army. His brother, J. H., who lives at Center, Texas, now in his eighty-sixth year, and landrew J., who is deceased, were soldiers in that war, and all took part as Confederates in the war between the states, Captain Truit being a major, and dying in the service in 1863. The other children of Col. J. M. Truit besides the soons mentioned above and Mrs. Garrett were: Caroline, who became the mother of Congressman John H. Stephens, of Texas; Mrs. Clara Stephens, and Mrs.

Cynthia Rushing, of Joaquim, Texas,
Julius Garrett passed an uneventful life as a farmer, and passed away in 1883, his wife having died ten years before. Their children were: Alfred M, of Logansport, Louisiana, died March 19, 1914; James A., who died umarried at Center, Texas, in 1878; Dr. William M; Julius T., who died in 1886, at Center, Texas, and left a family; Robert R., of Timpson, Texas; L. M., who served Shelby county, Texas, as sheriff, and died in 1989, with a family; John H., of Sego, Texas; Mrs. S. J.
Harris, of Center; Mrs. Mary S. Ponville, also of Center; and Missouri M., wife of W. F. Price, of Nacogdoches,

Texas.

William M. Garrett was born June 26, 1853, and came up in a home without the means to provide even the rudiments of an education, never learning the multiplication table until he came of age. He possessed a robust physique, a desire to know, and an ambition far and away beyond what his father believed could ever be realized. He was born with industry oozing from every pore, and early learned how to be useful at choring and common labor, and having heard of young men passing through college with just such a capital as he possessed. felt sure that what was possible for them was not impossible for him to accomplish. Accordingly, he entered school at Waco as a preparatory student of Baylor and made an arrangement to "work his way through school." He left home with sixty-five dollars, and the practice he secured while giving value for his tuition and board made him an expert at sweeping, wood-chopping and as a hostler and garden-maker. He made his grades with the class and passed his examinations with regularity, graduating in 1880 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. His commencement day filled the parental heart to overflowing, and the ease with which he had acquired a college education made him feel a pardonable pride in himself.

Marting finished his literary course, Doctor Garrett applied himself temporarily to teaching for two years while getting his bearings for a professional career. He chose medicine and read the subject with Dr. J. H. Rodgers, of Center, one year, and then entered the University of Louisville, Kentucky. After two years of work he passed successfully the examination required for a certificate to practice and did his first work as a doctor at Center, Texas. After a few months he returned to college and graduated in 1883. He opened an office in Overton, Texas, at that time and practiced for three years, and then came out to Forney, and was there located from 1886 to 1912, when he moved to post-graduate schools for eleven courses, chiedy at Tulane Polyelinie, New Orleans, and has maintained himself in harmony with the Regular school by the society affiliations of the country and state. For forty years he has been a consistent member of the Baptist church.

On August 15, 1882, Doctor Garrett was married to Miss Laura V. Dodson, a daughter of John M. and Harriet J. (Doyle) Dodson. His wife died at Forney, Texas, July 3, 1901, without issue, and on September 16, 1903, Doctor Garrett was married to Miss Mary D. Reading, of Mineola, Texas. Six children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Garrett: Mary L., a promising and intellectual student and book lover of the grades in the public schools; Eunice B.; William M., Jr.; Julius R.; Arthur R., who died January 19, 1914; and Alfred P., who was born Febraury 23, 1914. Doctor Garrett has been a Mason since 1885, when he joined the order at Overton, Texas, and is a member of Brooklyn Lodge, at Forney. He has no record in politics save as he stands for Democracy unhampered by politicians. He has neither held nor aspired to office.

George N. Gibbs. In the history of Kaufman county, the Gibbs family has figured conspicuously from the earliest days. It is of interest to know that James W. W. Gibbs, father of the above named, assisted in the erection of the first house in Kaufman, and his license to marry was one of the first issued after the organization of the county. George N. Gibbs, who represents the third generation of the family in this section of Texas, has for many years been prominent as a planter and business man, and is now eashier and active manager of the Citizens National Bank of Crandall.

The Gibbs family was settled on the bleak prairies of Kaufman county in the winter of 1846, when Stephen O. Gibbs, grandfather of George N., brought his wife and children to this locality. Stephen O. Gibbs, who became one of the early sheriffs of Kaufman county, was born in Tennessee, and afterwards left his native state and settled in the state of Mississippi. He married Lurana Wells, and about 1848 continued his journey toward the Rio Grande with a colony of Texas settlers comprising forty-six families for the Mercer colony. of these colonists, it is declared, returned to Mississippi, because of dissatisfaction with the conditions confronting the settlers. The history of the Mercer enterprise shows that there were many sound reasons for dissatisfaction, on every hand. Stephen O. Gibbs had attained prominence by service in the legislature of Mississippi. He made arrangements with the Texas authorities, on the basis of so much land for every settler, to bring a company of immigrants to the state. Stephen O. Gibbs and wife were the parents of: James W. W.; John G.; Newton; Donnie; Mrs. Sarah Hill of Kaufman, Texas, and Mrs. Frazier Hatch of the same city. Stephen O. Gibbs died at Jefferson, Texas, during the war,

James W. W. Gibbs, who was a stockman and successful farmer, was born in August, 1831, acquired only a meagre education, and on coming to Texas, in early youth, selected his half section of land, given him as a member of the Mercer colony, east of Kaufman. This tract be subsequently traded for land one mile west of Crandall townsite, where he continued to make his home and where his material achievements as a farmer and stockman were perfected. His thrift led bim to the accumulation of one thousand acres of land, which he distributed among his children, after having extended a life of effort in bringing the broad prairie into productive fields, and dotting the landscape with modest homes for his industrious men in the field. During his earlier career he served as Confederate soldier, as a member of Captain Michaux's company of Texas cavalry. He participated in the battles of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Yellow Bayou, and went through the war without personal injury or eapture. The late James W. W. Gibbs assisted in promoting the Citizens National Bank of Crandall, which ranked twenty-ninth among National Banks with a capital of less than fifty thousand dollars. He was a director of the institution until his death. He expended no energy in politics, and yet was always esteemed a useful factor in his community. He was a Methodist. His death occurred in September, 1911, and his wife, who was born in December, 1831, died in 1909. James W. W. Gibbs was married during the fif-ties to Miss Mary Augusta Sawyer, a daughter of George Sawyer, a native of Northboro, Massachusetts. To this union were born: William N., a merchant of Crandall, Texas; Lucy, wife of John DeVlaming, of Kaufman, Texas; Stephen O., who died at the age of twenty-four, and who married Julia Crandall, leaving no children; and George N., the youngest.

George N. Gibbs grew up on the farm where he was born in 1866. He completed his schooling in the Ben Allen high school at Kaufman, and then continued with his father dealing in stock and farming until ten years after his marriage. Among his first services after leaving school he was engaged in teaching, his several terms being spent at Black Land, Crandall, Prairie, Chappell, and New Hope schools. He then engaged in farming, but left off his active work in that direction in November, 1901, in order to become cashier of the Citizens National Bank. However, his interests in farming have not fallen off since he became a banker. He owns at the present time, six hundred and seventy acres of land, of which five hundred and seventy-five acres are under plow, and highly improved. He is a progressive farmer, and has done much to reclaim his land from the seasonal overflows. He has some two hundred acres protected with dam and levee, and the fertility of this is now subject to reliable and constant cropping.

The Citizens National Bank was organized in August, 1901, with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars. Its officers have been: J. K. Brooks, president; J. A. Crawford, vice president, and George N. Gibbs cashier. The surplus and undivided profits are fifty-two thousand dollars, with furniture and fixtures of the bank charged off.

In January, 1889, occurred the marriage of Mr. Gibbs to Miss Lizzie Crawford, a daughter of J. A. Crawford, The one child horn to their marriage, Owen Crawford, died in childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs are active church people, he a Methodist and his wife a Presbyterian.

WILLIAM FURNEAUX. Although nearly thirty years have passed since the labors of William Furneaux were cut short by death, the work which he founded and to which he gave the active years of his career is still being carried on, remaining a monument to his industry and business prowess. As an agent for foreign interests, he was most active in successfully guiding the affairs of large corporations, and his complete and rapid comprehension of business propositions as they were presented to him seemed to be intuitive and marked him as one of the able men of his time. Mr. Furneaux was a native of Devonshire, England, and was born in 1840, a son of John and Maria (Hamlyn) Furneaux. father, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal faith, labored long in the service of his Master, and died in his native England. The mother survived and lived in Texas for many years, whence she had come some years after the arrival here of her son, William. She died on the ocean on her return trip to England and was buried at sea. There were five children in the family: Samuel, who was educated for the medical profession, but died when but twenty years of age; William; John, who still resides in England, where he is connected with a large woolen mill, and Eliza and Mary S., who are both deceased.

William Furneaux was eighteen years of age when he came to the United States, having at that time just completed his education in the English schools. Locating in Dallas, Texas, he took up the vocation of farmer, subsequently engaged in stock-raising operations, and eventually began negotiations for foreign capitalists in handling and developing land. A shrewd understanding of men and their probable motives made him strikingly successful in his chosen field, and during his career he accumulated in the neighborhood of 4,000 acres of land. Throughout his life he was a man of marked liberality and public spirit. He was ever looked to by his associates for counsel, leadership and guidance, and his word had a value above parchment or legal formalities. In his death, which occurred in 1884, his community lost a man who in no small degree had assisted in the development of the great Southwest. He was a Democrat in his political views, but, white he took an active interest in public matters as they affected his community, he was no politician. His religious faith was that of the Baptist church, and he ever lived according to its teachings. During the war between the South and the North he served as an enrolling officer.

Mr. Furneaux was married in Texas in 1861, to Miss Fannie Jackson, also a native of Devonshire, England, and a daughter of John and Mary (Amery) Jackson. Her father was a farmer and stock raiser in his native country, and on coming to the United States, in 1848, settled on land which he had purchased before leaving London, and which was located fifteen miles north of the present site of the city of Dallas, which place at that time boasted of one small store and a blacksmith shop. A man of more than ordinary business ability, Mr. Jackson was successful in his ventures, and succeeded in accumulating a handsome property and in becoming one of the leading stock raisers of his section. His death occurred in 1866. During the Civil War, all of his sons enlisted in the Confederate service, and all emerged therefrom with gallant records. His children were as follows: John, who is now deceased; William, deceased, who rose to the rank of captain in Colonel Darnell's regiment in the Confederate service; George, deceased; Frank, who was wounded while serving as a soldier, and now is the operator of the old homestead fifteen miles north of Dallas; Mary Ann, who is de-ceased; Fannie, who is now Mrs. Furneaux, and Susan, the wife of James H. Mathis, of Dallas, an active member of the Confederate Veterans of Texas.

To Mr. and Mrs. Furneaux there were born four children: Joseph H., of Dallas; William C.; Mary Maria, and John L.

JUDGE W. J. OXFORD. Judge of the twenty-ninth judicial district of Texas, an office which he has capably administered for the past fourteen years, Judge Oxford represents the pioneer citizenship of Erath county, of which he is a native son, and has been a member of the bar at Stephenville upwards of twenty-eight years. As district judge he has tried all kinds of cases, both civil and criminal, and the Bench and Bar of Texas give him credit as one of the ablest trial judges in the state. While his record proves his successes as a judge and lawyer, it should also be mentioned that in personal character he represents some of the hest ideals of American manhood, has lived a life of exemplary sobriety and honor, and has guided his entire eareer on the principles which are the most fundamental and necessary to the continued physical and moral health whether of state or nation.

W. J. Oxford was born on a farm nine miles northeast of Stephenville, Erath county, May 11, 1861, and the first twenty-one years of his life were spent on a farm and ranch. His parents, Brink and Mary A. Oxford, were substantial farming people, and both con-sistent Christians, members of the Methodist Episcopal church. They were among the early settlers in what was at the time the western frontier of Texas, and they not only suffered the hardships common to all frontier communities, but also had to fight the Indians and struggle with the forces of both nature and man in order to maintain a home. Judge Oxford himself has a vivid recollection of dodging and hiding from Indians when they came in the vicinity of his father's home on raids for the purpose of stealing horses.

His early education was quite limited, owing to the dearth of schools in Erath county, and he took two years of study in the old Add-Ran University at Thorp Springs in Hood county. One source of his livelihood came from teaching country school two years, and he then took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar at Stephenville October 18, 1886. As a young man he was sober and industrious, and his life on the ranch and farm until he reached his majority was the means of hardy physical training which has proved extremely useful in his busy professional career. In his earlier years Judge Oxford could ride a bucking bronco on the range along with the best of horsemen of that day, but along with his interest in outdoor life, which has never left hin, he also combined a fondness for the reading of good books, and his practical work as a lawyer and judge has always been characterized by an exceptional intellectual interest and breadth of culture.

His public career began with his election as county attorney of Erath county in 1888, and re-election to the office in 1890 and in 1892 gave him abundant opportunities for experience in the courts and in connection with a great variety of litigation. After his six years as county attorney he made an unsuccessful race for the office of district attorney of the twenty-ninth judicial district, and then engaged in a general practice of law at Stephenville. In 1900 he was elected judge of the twenty-ninth district, and by re-election in 1904, 1908 and 1912 is now in the midst of his fourth consecutive term. A Democrat both by training and principles, Judge Oxford in 1892 was one of the loval supporters of James Stephen Hogg for governor against George Clark. In his politics he has always combined an un-qualified opposition to the liquor traffic in any form, and believes that the government of both state and nation should use its powers to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor and should protect the rising genera-tion from its contaminating influence. In 1911 he went out over the state in an active campaign for the cause of state-wide prohibition, and is now supporting Tom Ball for governor on the Prohibition-Democratic ticket. In government as well as in private life he stands for good moral ideals, and believes in the rigid enforcement of all laws,

For more than twenty-five years Judge Oxford has been affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with the Knights of Pythias for more than twenty years, has been a member of the Rebekabs ten years, and of the Woodmen of the World and the Woodmen's Circle for six years. His membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, covers a period of twenty years, and Judge Oxford is a firm believer in the teachings of the Bible and the Christian religion. In religious stage for the next, and bolts that the Christian destrine and the church are the greatest forces in the universe for the suppression and lessening of crime and for the elevation of society.

In 1883 Judge Öxford married Elizabeth B. Hale of Stephentile. She was the daughter of a poor widow, and proved a most capable and faithful wife during the twenty years of their married companionship. At her death on June 4, 1903, she left four children: Nape B., a son, born October 14, 1884; Edith, born September 15, 1886; Ina, born in August, 1888; and Esta, born in June, 1890, and died May 3, 1911. The other children are all living and well established in the world. On May 28, 1909, Judge Oxford married Lulu G. Dalton of Palo Pinto, who died thirty days after their marriage, on December 28, 1911, he married Wytte Martin of Palo Pinto county. The one son by this marriage is W. J. Oxford, Jr., born December 26, 1913.

ROBERT FULTON CAMPERLL. Until death claimed him May 24. 1905, in the sixty-ninth year of his life, Robert Fulton Campbell was one of El Paso's citizens whose names have been most prominently associated with sterling civic qualities and large achievements in affairs. A resident of this city since the early railroad cra, he had contributed much to the upbuilding and growth of early El Paso, and to the end of his life was not only recognized as one who had done much for the material city, but also as one whose personal character and influence were invaluable factors to the community.

Robert Pulton Campbell was born in Memphis, Tenessee, May 16, 1836, a son of Duncan and Naney (Anderson) Campbell, both natives of Tennessee, The mother was descendant of an old family of that city. The father served as a soldier in the war of 1812 and then for many years was a large planter in Tennessee, In 1840 Duncan Campbell brought his wife and their son, Robert F., to Texas, locating in Bastrop county, where be bought a large amount of land and was extensively engaged in its cultivation up to the time of his death. He also had a large store and harness and saddlery factory at Bastrop.

Robert F. Campbell review his education in the country schools of Bastrop county and when he was seventeen years of age began his practical experience in the saddlery business conducted by his father. He learned all the details of the trade in making saddles and harness, and at the end of his apprenticeship found that the business was not in the line of his indinations. He therefore directed his attention to other lines and his enterprise from that time forward was in a continually larger circle and he gained a place in business affairs. From Bastrop, where he held many important political offices, often holding two and three at one time, as was permissible in those days, he moved to Austin, where he was appointed revenue collector by President Garfield. He held this position for four years, when he came to El Paso.

It was in ISS2, about the time the first railroad had been built into El Paso, that Mr. Campbell located here. He was one of the early settlers, who recognized the possibilities and the almost inevitable development of this city, and fortified by that confidence he bought a large amount of real estate which he improved and developed and a large amount of which is still owned by his family, some of it being located in the very heart of the modern city of El Paso. Mr. Campbell's foresight and taste in thus taking hold of a country whose value at the time was only potential must always be regarded as his chief-contribution to the early development of this city. During the remaining years of his life he gave all his attention to the care and manage.

ment of his realty interests in El Paso,

At the same time he manifested his splendid public spirit by accepting various offices of responsibilities in the community and served in the office of United States revenue collector, as postmaster of El Paso and for one term as mayor. It is said that he was the only Republican mayor ever elected in the state of Texas on a Republican ticket. In the early years he was the largest individual owner of real estate in the city and most of his business consisted in trading and buying and selling, but never as a broker, always dealing for himself and with his own resources. He was a man of large acquaintance in public life, was an influential man in the Republican party and was personally acquainted with many of the leaders of the party. Among his personal friends was the late President McKinley, and Mr. Campbell was always a welcome visitor at the White House during the administration of Mr. McKinley. Both in his private and civic life, the late Mr. Campbell manifested the best qualities of charity and was never known to refuse aid to a worthy cause, and his name was associated with a great many movements and undertakings which were important in the institutional and benevolent life of the city. He had no affiliations with fraternities or clubs and was a devout member of the Christian church. The best qualities of his affection he reserved for his home and family and among them his memory is most secure. Mr. Campbell married Miss Thebe Irene Wallace, whose father was James P. Wallace, of Bastrop county, known as a Texas pioneer, Indian fighter and a prominent factor in state politics and official affairs. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell and the five now living are mentioned as follows: Lum F., a resident of Denver, who married Elizabeth Cody; Adele, now a resident of New York City and widow of Parry Wright; Staf-ford, a resident of El Paso, who married Miss Edith Dedrick; Edgar E., of San Antonio, who was twice married, his second wife being Mrs. Flora Bugh; and Mrs. Alfred Aloe, wife of Captain Aloe of the United States army, now stationed at Galveston.

The late Mr. Campbell began life without financial aid or influential assistance and through his own efforts created a generous prosperity for his family and used his resources for the substantial benefit of his commu-nity and humanity. His body now rests in beautiful Evergreen cemetery at El Paso. Mrs. Campbell resides in a beautiful home at 701 Masa street. The late Mr. Campbell was a member of the Texas Pioneer Society. A short time after his death the home suffered another bereavement in the death of Mr. Edgar E. Campbell's first wife. She left a beautiful baby daughter christened Irene, who was legally adopted by her grandmother, Mrs. Campbell, and in her care and companionship Mrs. Campbell has found her greatest joy, the two being inseparable in their devotion to each other.

James A. Drane. It is not often that a man goes into a community and wins personal popularity and public respect as rapidly as has James A. Drane of Pecos, Texas. He has only lived in this city a few years but he is already one of its well known men, and in 1912 was elected to the office of county attorney. Mr. Drane has received a splendid education, is a conscientious worker and endowed with a legal cast of mind, his success was, therefore, to be expected, but that it has come so soon is owing as largely to his ability to make friends as to any of his other qualities. He has made a fine record in his present office and has won the confidence and respect of his brother lawyers as well as of the public.

James A. Drane was born in Chester, Mississippi, on the 2d of May, 1883. His father was James Drane and his mother was Belle (Hemphill) Drane. His father was also a lawyer and was a prominent member of the Mississippi bar, being a member of the Mississippi legislature just prior to his death.

Much attention was given to the education of James A. Drane and after completing his elementary education he was sent to the French Camp Academy at French Camp, Mississippi, where he received a fine literary education. He then entered the University of Mississippi, where he spent three years and then took the law course at Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, graduating with the class of 1907.

After being graduated from college he went to Oklahoma and in 1908 established himself at South Mc-Alester where his first position was that of deputy clerk of the county court. He filled this position for a year and a half and then began the practice of law. He followed his profession for two years in South McAlester, and then removed to Kiowa, Oklahoma, where he remained a year, engaged in the practice of his profession. In October, 1910, he came to Pecos and became a member of the firm of Buck and Drane, and they have conducted a successful business since that time. In 1912 Mr. Drane was elected county attorney on the Democratic ticket, and he is now serving in this office. He has always been an active worker in the Democratic party.

In the fraternal world Mr. Drane is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and of the Knights of Pythias. He is also a member of the college fraternity, Phi Delta Theta, and he is an active member of the County Bar Association.

Mr. Drane is the owner of forty acres of fine irrigable land in Reeves county, near Pecos, and here he intends to make his permanent home. He believes that Reeves county and this section of Texas has a fine future.

WILLIAM F. WEEKS. A young attorney who has made a brilliant beginning in his profession at Wichita Falls, and whose future looks exceedingly bright to his friends, William F. Weeks belongs to one of the old families of North Texas, and has spent practically all his career in this section of the state,

William F. Weeks was born at Fort Worth, September 13, 1888, a son of William Curtis and Ella (Potter) Weeks. Both parents were born in Texas in Cooke county, and the grandparents on both sides came to this state in the early days from Georgia. Grandfather John W. Weeks died in 1895 at the age of sixty years, and his wife was Idris Louise (Sparks) Weeks. Grandfather Captain C. C. Potter was an Indian fighter and pioneer of North and West Texas, and one of the splendid old pioneers of Cooke county. William C. Weeks, the father, has for many years been in the brick and contracting business at Arlington, and has also been prominent in the light and water works and in road building in Tarrant county and elsewhere. He served as mayor and in other public offices at Arlington, where he now resides at the age of fifty-three. The mother who was educated and was married at Bowie, Texas, died July 6, 1912, at the age of fifty-one. There were two sons and two daughters in the family, of whom the Wichita Falls lawyer was the second in order of birth. While growing up he was given the best advantages of school, and attended the Carlisle Military Academy in Austin, and White's Academic School of that city and was graduated in the law department of the University of Texas. He took his bar examination in 1908 at the age of nineteen and then went east to Yale University, where he graduated in June, 1909. With this excellent equipment for practical life he returned to Texas, and opened his office in Wichita Falls, where in the past four years he has built up a good clientage and is regarded as one of the attorneys who can best be trusted with important litigated interests.

Mr. Weeks is a Democrat in politics, is a member of Alpha Sigma Phi College Fraternity, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His church is the Presbyterian. At Wichita Falls on April 14, 1910, Mr. Weeks married Miss Katherine Louise Avis, who was born in Wichita county, a daughter of J. D. and Minnie (Bush) Avis. Her parents both reside at Wichita Falls, and were old settlers of North Texas. The children of Mir. and Mrs. Weeks are: Katherine Avis Weeks, born at Wichita Falls, August 23, 1911, and Ella Potter Weeks, born January 25, 1913. Mr. Weeks and family occupy a beautiful home in Wichita Falls, and stand high in the social circles of the city. He is fond of all outdoor recreations, and is popular both in and out of his profession.

HENRY C. ZIMMER. Among the men to whom Texas has spelled success should be mentioned Henry C. Zimmer, of Pecos, Texas. One of the oldest and best known residents of Pecos, Mr. Zimmer began his life here in a humble way, but has prospered with the growth of the town until he is now one of the influential business men of the city. He is the owner of the largest exclusive hardware and farm machinery business in Pecos and his success has been entirely due to his own efforts, for he came to Pecos with practically nothing. Henry C. Zimmer was born on the 10th of January, 1864, in Saint Francis county, Missouri, the son of John and Mary Anna (Mazer) Zimmer. Both of his parents were born in Germany and were married in the old country. Upon coming to this country they located in Saint Francis county and there they lived until they died. John Zimmer was a farmer and died at the age of seventy-three years. His wife died in 1866. They reared a family of nine children and two of their sons, John and Joe, gave their lives for the cause of the Confederacy.

Henry C. Zimmer was the youngest of his parents' children and is the only one who has settled in Texas. He attended the public schools of Saint Francis county until he was fourteen years of age, when having been left an orphan, it was necessary for him to go to work. He first found employment in a brick yard in Saint Francis county, spending one summer in this work. He then decided that he would learn some trade and selected that of blacksmithing and horseshoeing. He learned this trade thoroughly at Farmington, Missouri, and at the age of twenty-one determined to go to California. He made the long journey but did not find the Country to his liking and so started on his way back.

Upon his arrival in Dallas, Texas, he determined to locate here for a time and worked as a journeyman in Dallas for three years. At the end of this time, having saved his earnings, he came to Pecos, this being in 1886. Here he went into business for himself and as the years rolled by he became prominent and pros-The business which he founded was a blacksmithing and wagon manufacturing business and for twenty-two years he managed this with much success. During this time he was widely recognized as a man with a big store of common sense and with an especial adaptability for public affairs. Consequently he was placed in public offices many times and would still be serving in office, very likely, were it not that he refused to accept any more political honors. In 1909 he sold the business which had won him prosperity and in April of that year he opened a general hardware store on the best corner of the main business street of Pecos. This business has been very successful and Mr. Zimmer carries a modern and well selected stock.

Mr. Zimmer owns large real estate interests in Pecos and his own home should be included among these,

In polities Mr. Zimmer is a member of the Republiean party. He has held the office of county commissioner for three terms, and that of justice of the peace for one term, but his work during his five years as mayor of Pecos brought him the most renown in a political way, for he was one of the best executive officers that Pecos has ever had.

Mr. Zimmer is a member of the Homesteaders and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Woodmen of the World. In religious matters he is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

On the 5th of April, 1891, Mr. Zimmer was married to Miss Fannie Mitchell, who was born in Wise county, Texas, the daughter of Mark and Eliza (Pope) Mitchell. Pour children bave been born to Mr. and Mrs. Zimmer, Anna and Frances, who are twins, Elizabeth and Ethel. Anna is a tencher in the public schools of Pecos, Frances is a bookkeeper and stenographer and assists her father in his business, Elizabeth is also a stenographer and Ethel is still in sehool.

HON, T. J. HIFFER. One of the most prominent lawyers and influential men of western Texas is Judge T. J. Hefner, of Pecos. He has been engaged in the practice of law for many years in this section of the state, and has not only gained a reputation for being one of the most successful attorneys in the district, but also for being one of the most upright and distinguished citizens this section of the state may claim. He is himself a native of Texas and practically his whole life has been given to the study and administration of her laws. He is widely respected and liked and with his splendid character and broad intellect he has ever been a good influence in the life of the town.

T. J. Hefner was born near Lagrange, in Fayette county, Texas, on the 29th of April, 1858. His father was Balser Hefner, and he was born in Virginia. He married Cynthia Dixon Slack, who was a native of Texas and in the early fifties settled in Fayette county, Texas. Here he became a stock raiser and farmer and was also the owner of a prosperous mill. During the Civil war Balser Hefner served in the Confederate army, serving most of the time in Galveston. He died at the age of sixty-nine, in Weimer, Colorado county, Texas. His wife now resides in Weimer, with a son and daughter, having reached the age of seventy-five years.

Nine children were born to Balser Hefner and his wife, two of whom are deceased. Of these children Judge Hefner is the eldest. William J. Hefner, the next son, is a prominent merchant and banker in El Campo, Texas. Jennie Hefner married James H. Gillespie, who is a man prominent throughout the state. They now reside in Dallas, and Mr. Gillespie was for many years super-intendent of the deaf and domh asylum and years super-intendent of the deaf and domh asylum James Halloway, her hashand being a merchant in Waco, Texas. Samuel Hefner is a prominent farmer and stock man of Dewitt, Texas. Muad Hefner and Balser Hefner reside with their mother in Weimer. Emma Hefner is now Mrs. Wolf of Houston, Texas.

Judge Herner veceived his early education in the public schools of Fayette country, Texas, and was then sent to Trinity University. He left the university when has as a school teacher. He taught school in Hunt, Lawaca, Eastland and Stephens counties, remaining a year in each country. He did not, however, intend to make pedagogy his life work and as soon as he left the university he began to spend all of his spare time delving into law books. He saved what money he could during his years as a teacher and at the end of this time he entered the law offices of Timmins and Brown in Lagrange, Texas. Here he spent one year in study and in 1855 Texas.

In the fall of 1855 Mr. Hefner began the practice of his profession in Pecos, then one of the frontier towns of the state. He has been in active practice in Reeves county ever since that time but his practice has not been confined to one county, but has extended over this whole western section of Texas. For fourteen vears he served Reeves county as county indige and for three terms he was county attorney for this same county. His entire time has been given to his profession and neither politics nor business have interested him. Four years ago Judge Hefner met with a serious accident which has necessitated his taking care of himself and part of the time he is compelled to remain at home. This would be a great hardship for so active and energetic a man as the judge were it not that he has a delightful family and also a fine library in which he delights to spend his Jeisure time among his books.

In politics Judge Hefner is a member of the Democratic party and in religious matters both the judge and his wife are members of the Baptist church. He belongs to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being a Royal Arch Mason, and he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias.

On Christmas Day, 1833, Judge Hefner was married to Miss Ann Eliza Morgan, who was a native of Colorado, Texas. She is the daughter of William I. and Sallie (Hollman) Morgan, both of whom are natives of Alabama. Mr. Morgan is a prominent farmer and stockman, and her parents were pioneers of Texas. Nine children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Hefner, of whom one is deceased. Ettie May, the eldest, is the widow of Whalen Medaris and now makes her home in Pecos. Chara married Joseph A. Dean and lives in Pecos. Chara married Joseph A. Dean and lives in a clerical capacity in a walesafe grocery in proposition of the control of the process of the Starley of Pecos, and Harl Rowen Hudson lives in Pecos. The second marriage of Mr. Hudson occurred in 1898, his wite being Miss Stella Bullard of Waxahachie, Texas, a daughter of 1. H. Bullard. One son, Hill Davidson Hudson, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hudson.

Mr. Hudson owns an attractive home in Pecos, and he is also the owner of the finest private library in the town. His books are his chief enjoyment, and he is a great student. He helieves thoroughly in this section of the state, believing that the outlook and conditions in the Pecos Valley district are remarkably good for people of moderate means, for land is plentiful and cheap and when irrigated big returns may be expected, especially since the climate is excellent. Miss Williebe Woods. The woman question is ecratinly to the fore today and whether we may believe that there is such a thing as a woman question or not, we must face the fact that women are playing a different part in the economic scheme than they did a century ago. When, therefore, we meet a woman who is doing a man's work and doing it well, we must stop and give her our admiration, not only for the fact that she has proved that there is at least one woman capable of competing with men, but also for the moral courage that enabled her to enter the lists. In Reeves county, Texas, the county clerk and district clerk is a woman, Miss Willie-de Woods, and since her election in 1912, she has proved extremely efficient, winning the praise of all who know of her work, and the admiration of business men for the efficient way in which she handles the work of her office. which she handles the work of her order.

Miss Woods was born in Pearsburg, Virginia, the daughter of Oscar F. and Sallie (Dennis) Woods, both of whom were natives of the state of Virginia. They lived in Pearsburg for many years, coming to Texas in 1903. In September of that year they settled in Pecos, where Mr. Woods engaged in merchandising. He later met with reverses in his business and then it was that Miss Woods showed the courageous stuff of which she was made. She had received a splendid education in her native city and determined to put it to some use and thus aid in the family finances, for she was the eldest of the five children. She therefore secured a position as deputy in the county clerk's office and remained here during 1909 and 1910. She next entered the office of the Pecos Abstract Company, remaining here during 1911 and up to October, 1912. She has displayed unnsual ability in both these positions, and has become extremely popular with the men who come in contact with her, for she is genial and gracious to every one, and, in spite of her undeniable attractiveness, always puts everything on a business basis, a thing which business men appreciate and which women are so prone to forget. Her success in her work at the court house, together with the fact that she liked the work so much, determined her in offering her services as county clerk and district clerk for Reeves county. She became a candidate on the Democratic ticket in 1912 and made a determined fight for the office against one of the ablest men in the county, and a man who had had much experience in the office, H. M. McKeller. her predecessor in office. She made a very thorough canvass, going from house to house and town to town throughout the county, and her record, together with her determined fight, turned the tide in her favor. She was snecessful and was elected by a handsome majority over Mr. McKeller, who was later appointed county judge. Miss Woods has the honor of being the first woman elected to office in Reeves county, and when one pauses to think that she is a direct descendant of Patrick Henry, one can see whence her independence and ability in public matters may come.

Jefferson Davis Bartlett was born June 27, 1870, at Water Valley, Mississippi, and is a son of Josiah and Elizabeth (Sitton) Bartlett.

Josiab Bartlett was born in Kentucky and as a young man moved to Neshoba county, Mississippi, where he became widely known and served in the capacity of sheriff or fifteen years. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate service, faithfully discharging his duties and lecoming captain in the commissary department. Some time after the close of hostilities he removed to Water Valley, Mississippi, and there the remainder of his life was passed, his death occurring in December, 1892, when he was seventy-two years of age. At the end of another period of like durntion he disposed of his interests in De Leon and came to Amarillo, arriving in this city September 10, 1901. On December 10, 1902, having secured a location to his liking, he founded his present business. He is a member of the control of the control of the control of the Royal Arch Chapter, No. 196. He is also a member of the Polk Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1895, Mr. Bartlett was married at Water Valley, Mississippi, to Miss Anma Harmon, daughter of George and Mary Elizabeth (Anderson) Harmon, of Mississippi, the former a Confederate veteran mader General Forrest and still living in Amarillo. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett—Harmon, born in 1896 at De Leon, Texas, now attending Lowry Phillips School at Amarille, Louise, born in 1896 at De Leon, and Davis, born in 1905 at Amarillo, both attending the public schools of this city.

JAMES ISAAC KENDRICK. As a business builder few men in northwest Texas have had so progressive and successful a career as James Isaac Kendrick, now head of a large furniture establishment at Amarillo. Mr. Kendrick gained his early experience as a clerk, and on starting business for himself opened a very small stock of goods in one of the central Texas towns. From small beginning he has extended his enterprise nntil he would now easily rank among the leading merchants of the state. His career has also been successful from the point of view of his relations with eivic affairs, and he has always been a leader and a worker for organized movements which would benefit his local community or the state at large.

James Isaac Kendrick was born in Scott county, Virginia, August 15, 1865, and comes from a family which in its several generations of American residence has been characterized by the best qualities of citizenship and business ability. Of Scotch-Irish stock, the paternal grandfather, J. Q. Kendrick, was the founder of the American branch of the name. He was in his time one of the wealthiest men in southwest Virginia. He took up his residence in America prior to the Revolutionary war, and, settling in southwestern Virginia, became owner of large tracts of land there. These lands are today worth millions of dollars on account of their mineral resources and are largely controlled by eastern capitalists. On the maternal side, Mr. Kendrick's ancestry goes back to his great-grandfather, Draper, who was the founder of the Draper family in this country in the colony of Pennsylvania. Grandfather Jonathan Draper was a Methodist preacher, but belonged to a Quaker family, and was born in Philadelphia, of Scotch descent.

The father of the Amarillo business man was James P. Kendrick, who was born in Virginia, and is now living retired in the enjoyment of a well spent life at Wheeling. West Virginia. From 1876 to 1891 he was a resident of Texas, and while in this state was engaged in merchandising and in the lumber business at Ennis, subsequently moving to Plano, in Collin county, where he continued business as a merchant. During the Civil war he had been captain of a company in the Confederate army, going throughout the struggle and being wounded in the battle of Gettysburg. He was a member of Stonewall Jackson's command during the early years of the war. In politics he is a Democrat and is a member of the Methodist church. The maiden name of his wife was Annie Draper, who was born in Virginia and was married in Lebanon, Russell county, that state, in 1858. Her death occurred at Plano, Texas, in 1887, at the age of forty-six. There were nine children in the family, of whom James I, was the third. Two of his brothers, M.

R. and A. S. Kendrick, are residents of Texas, the former at Plano, where he is a merchant, and the latter at Dalbart, in the real estate business.

James I. Kendrick attained part of his early education in the Emory and Henry College, near Abingdon, in Washington county, Virginia. He also attended school in Ennis for a short time, and on leaving school entered the employ of his father in the store, where he remained until 1885 and gained a thorough knowledge of business details. On embarking in business on his own account, he chose the town of Gatesville, in Coryell county, where he opened a stock of hardware and furniture, and proceeded with characteristic vigor to build up a trade. transferred his operations to the Panhandle country in 1891, first locating at Quanah, and he conducted several branch stores at different points in this part of the state. In 1904 he moved his headquarters to Amarillo, and in the past ten years has created the largest store and stock in furniture and house furnishing goods at this city. His store is sixty by one hundred and ten feet in dimension, and there is a large warehouse for storage of additional stock. A Democrat in politics, Mr. Kendrick is not now active in party affairs, but before coming to Amarillo was honored with a number of places of trust at the gift of his party. Mr. Kendrick is now a director and the only official in this section of the state of the Fish and Game Association of Texas, an organization whose purpose is the protection of game within the borders of Texas, and composed of leading citizens throughout the state. Kendriek some years ago took a very active part in having passed by the legislature the law regulating the undertaking and embalming husiness. He is one of the oldest undertakers and embalmers in the state, although now retired from active practice. He still retains his membership and was at one time president of the State Association of Embalmers. During his residence in other Texas cities he has held such offices as alderman, mayor, school director, but has declined official honors since coming to Amarillo. He holds membership in the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the Preshyterian church.

On June 27, 1887, at Waco, Mr. Kendrick married Miss Maggie Kendrick, daughter of Capt. B. J. Kendrick, one of the pioneers of Texas, who died in April, 1912, at Waco, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Captain Kendrick was one of the first settlers in the vi-cinity of Waco, having come to Texas at the close of the Civil war. He served as a soldier in the Confederate army from Georgia, serving in General Morgan's com-mand. Mr. and Mrs. Kendrick are the parents of ten children, all of whom were born in Texas. The Kendrick residence in Amarillo is at 1110 Harrison street. Mrs. Kendrick takes an active part in church work and the activities of the Woman's Club at Amarillo.

Sim Florence. A resident of Grand Saline, Texas, since the early eighties, Sim Florence has a wide acquaintance in and about the county and as the leading insurance and real estate man of the city and proprietor of the Journal and Sun, a weekly newspaper, his reputation and standing is most secure. Possessing none of the more showy qualities, he manifests in his daily walk those more sturdy and quiet traits that mean so much in their possessor and never fail of producing excellent results in the better interests of the community wherein their owner resides. Mr. Florence is well known among the newspaper men of the county, having engaged in the work soon after his advent to the county as the founder of the Grand Saline Sun, which printed its first issue in 1893, with Sim Florence as proprietor and Jud Riley as

Born in Lincoln county, Georgia, on September 13, 1841, Sim Florence is the son of Scaborn Florence, who spent his life in farming. He was born in Georgia, of slaveholding parents, and he was reared under that influence. He came to Texas in 1869 with his family and settled in Smith county, where he died in 1893, when he was seventy-three years of age. His ancestors were French people and his wife was Eveline Blaylock, who died in Alabama in 1853. They had children as follows: David, who died in Dallas county, Texas, leaving a family, he having been a Confederate soldier; Gibson. Martha and Lucinda did not reach mature life; Wilson died in Smith county, Texas, in 1912, and he had served in the Confederate army also, and, like his brother, he left a family at his death; Thomas B., another Confederate soldier, died in Henderson county, this state, leaving one son, Dudley; John, who died in Van Zandt county in 1893, leaving a son and a daughter; Hamilton died in the Confederate service; and Virginia died in childhood. Seaborn Florence married in later years and reared another family. He was a member of the Baptist church and the tenets of that church were effectively instilled into the minds of his offspring.

Sim Florence spent several years of his hoyhood in Sim Forence spent several years of his hoyabor in St. Clair county, Alabama, whither the father settled after the birth of the boy, and there he acquired his education in the country school of the district as well as in similar schools in Texas after they took up their residence in this state. Like his brothers, he entered the service of the southern army, and when he returned from the war he taught school for a short time in Henderson county, no certificate being required at that time, the principal element that entered into the making of a the principal element that entered into the making of successful teacher being the courage to approach the task. He later engaged in farming here, which he followed until 1876, and in that year he moved to Wills Point, where for some time he was engaged in cotton buying. He came to Grand Saline in 1888 or 1889 and here continued for a time in the same enterprise, leaving it to enter the newspaper field and the insurance and real estate business.

The Grand Saline Sun was the first vigorous and permanent periodical given to the readers of this industrial center, and its literary and editorial success was the result of the efficiency of Mr. Riley, mentioned in a previous paragraph, while its business success lay with Mr. Florence. They continued in control of the paper for a time, then it was sold, and the Journal of Edgewood was purchased. In 1908 it was moved to Grand Saline, and it now occupies an ideal newspaper home, built by its owners after many years of experience in familiarizing themselves with the needs of a country office such as theirs. A concrete building, with concrete floors, amply lighted and ventilated and equipped in the most thorough manner, is now the home of the Journal, a Democratic paper which aims to instruct and entertain the home folk rather than to dispense political opinions and prejudices.

In February, 1914, Mr. Florence bought the Grand Saline Sun and consolidated it with the Journal, discontinuing the name Journal and keeping that of the Sun as it was the oldest paper. After the consolidation he sold a half interest to Roy Walton who now has charge of the best paper in the best field in all East Texas-the Grand Saline Sun.

With the Sun firmly founded and its editorial department well provided for, Mr. Florence turned his attention to the development of a business where his own superior talents might be displayed. He found this in the writing of fire insurance and in the exploitation of real estate enterprises, a combination for which he has displayed and demonstrated an aptitude and ability wholly equal to his hopes. His business connection has served to ally him with the vital affairs of the town and his hand has been seen in much that has taken place in the development of it and its enterprises.

When Mr. Florence first came to Grand Saline he was placed in charge of the mercantile affairs of Dr. J. C. Austin, the pioneer merchant of the place. As permanent administrator of the doctor's estate, he wound up its affairs and himself remained in the merchandise business and in cotton buying until he saw an opportunity to engage in newspaper work.

Sim House

In 1861 Mr. Florence enlisted in Company K of the Third Texas Cavalry, with Captains Gaines and Johnson and Golonel Greer in command of the regiment. He participated in the battles of Oak Hills and Elkhorn and went with his command across the Mississippi river and fought at Corinth and other engagements in which the Tennessee army was active, leading up to the fall of Yiesburg, then going with General Houbston's army on the retreat from Chattanooga to Atlanta. He was with General Houd's army when it made the last Tennessee campaign, after the fall of Atlanta, and after the battle of Nashville Mr. Florence furloughed home, where he was when the war ended. He was wounded in the hand with a poisoned bullet at Newnan, Georgia, on the Atlanta campaign in July, 1864, but otherwise passed through the war without injury.

As a Democrat, Mr. Florence has participated in state politics to some extent and he was in the state convention when "Charley" Culbertson was nominated for governor of Texas. He has always been a factor in Baptist affairs in Grand Saline and as one of the older members of the church here he has attended state conventions and missionary associations of the church as a delegate.

Mr. Florence was married in Talladega county, Alabama, in September, 1864, to Miss Fannie E. Curry, a daughter of Allen K. Curry and Elizabeth (Hogan) Curry, both Irish people. The children of their union were Elizabeth, who died in Grand Saline as the wife of Jud Riley, without surviving issue, and Jennie, who married Walt Smith of Grandfield, Oklahoma, and has one son, Sidney.

DEWITT C. PRIDOY. Beginning his independent business career with only fifty dollars of capital, and having from early boyhood relied upon his own efforts to promote along the line of his ambition, Mr. Priddy is now one of the foremost real estate men of Amarillo, and, besides possessing a large amount of property and one of the successful men and influential citizens of the Texas

Panhandle. DeWitt C. Priddy was born near Booneville, Mississippi, March 4, 1875, and was a son of Dr. Racy Priddy, who was born in Alabama and later moved to Mississippi after the close of the war. The paternal ancestry was from Ireland, and its members were early settlers in Virginia, and the family furnished several soldiers to the Revolutionary war. The founder of the American branch of the family was James Priddy. For services rendered during the early wars one of the ancestors received title to one hundred and sixty acres of land, including the site of the present courthouse of St. Louis, Missouri, and this property has never been relinquished or deeded away. Dr. Racy Priddy was a carpenter by trade, and during the Civil war enlisted in the Twelfth Alabama Infantry at the beginning of hostilities, and went through the entire command as a soldier in Lee's army in Virginia. He was never taken prisoner, but was twice wounded and fought in every important engagement that took place on the great Virginia battlefield. He was one among those who stacked arms at Lee's surrender and helped take the last two pieces of artillery secured by Lee's army. He is now living at the age of seventy-six in Quanah, Texas, being retired after a long and successful career. He came to Texas on December 15, 1880, first locating in Gainesville, in Cooke county, at the time the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad was first being operated through that section of the state, and removed to St. Joe, Texas. For a number of years he was en-gaged in merchandising at that place. The maiden name of the mother was Mary Cornelius Oshorne, who was born in Alabama, of a family which settled in this state many years ago and before the war were planters and large slave owners. The mother died at Quanah on November 19, 1912, at the age of sixty-eight years. Of the twelve children in the family, DeWitt C. was the ninth.

As a boy he lived in Montague county and attended school in that vicinity, at Liberty Chapel, Montague county, and completed his education in the St. Joe high school of Montague county. At the age of nineteen he left home and started to make his own way. His first independent undertaking was in the confectionery business near Wichita Falls, where during four and a half years he built up a good trade and made considerable money, at the end of which time he sold his business at a profit and then entered the employ of the Wichita Mill & Elevator Company, of which Mr. Frank Kell was proprietor. He continued for several years to work in the milling business, and after resigning engaged as a grain bnyer for E. R. and D. C. Cobb, who were wholesale grain dealers. At the close of three years in that line of business he came out to Clarendon, where he established a real estate office and made the beginning of what has proved a very successful career as a real estate man. After six years at Clarendon he came to Amarillo and has since been in business in this city.

Mr. Priddy is an active worker in the Democratic interests. Fraternally be is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Woodmen of the World in Amarillo. Mr. Priddy is an active member in the Folk Street Methodist church at Amarillo and was formerly secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

At Claude, in Armstrong county, on April 25, 1903, Mr. Priddy married Miss Naney Dora Rambow, a daughter of J. K. Rambow. Her father came to Texas and settled in Milam county more than half a century ago. The two sons of Mr. Priddy and wife are Horace Peyton Priddy, horn at Clarendon, Ovtober 19, 1905, and DeWitt Clinton Priddy, Jr., born at Amarillo, April 5, 1912. Mr. Priddy, while gaining success for himself, has been noted for his helpfulness and charity to others who were struggling along in the harder roads of life. He is an enthusiastic advocate of Amarillo, which is destined to be at some time in the not far distant future one of the great cities of Texas.

Storger, a Confederate soldier in the war between the states, an educator of ability, serving his country in official capacity, always achieving success, and maintaining a high standard of citizenshp, was born June 24, 1841, in Coosa country, Alabama. His father, Allen Stoker, was married to Harriet M. Myers in 1848, and J. J. was the oldest of six children, four sons and two daughters.

Judge Stoker is of Scotch-Irish-German descent. His great-grandfather, Robert Stoker, immigrated to America just after the Revolutionary war, settled in North Carolina, and had seven sons, from whom the Stokers are

J. J. Stoker was educated at Wewoka Academy, in Coosa county, and in 1861 enlisted in Company I, Third Regiment, Alabama Infantry, Col. T. Lomax; was at Norfolk, Virginia, in Billy Mahone's Brigade, Huger's Division, until after the naval battle in Hampton Roads; was at Drury's Bluff, below Richmond, when the Federal fleet ascended the James River, in May, 1862; was at the battle of Seven Pines, where his regiment lost heavily, Colonel Lomax being killed.

At eight years of age he became a total abstainer from alcoholic liquors. A comrade said of him after the war: "I never knew him to use an oath, take a drink of whisky, play eards or gamble in any way, in the army." Being a total abstainer, it is easy for him to be a prohibitionist of the liquor traffic, local, state, nation, world-wide.

Judge Stoker is a Democrat, was a secessionist in 1860, but accepted the arbitrament of the sword as to the right of a state to seede from the Union, and with genuine patriotism and true Southern chivatry has devoted himself to the upbuilding of his own beloved Southland, while not trying to tear down any other section of our great country.

JAMES N, BARTHOLOW. A former newspaper man and editor who is well remembered in different sections of Texas, and who possessed more than ordinary ability in literary matters, James N, Bartholow followed his profession in Dallas for a munber of years, and died there about eighteen years ago.

He was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1850, a son of Elijah and Mary (Given) Bartholow. James N. Bartholow grew up in his native state of Maryland and was educated for the law, but never practiced the profession. He also studied medicine, but the pursuit of that was also not attractive, and so far as known he never had a case. All his tastes and inclinations were for literary work and for books, and it was this which led him into newspaper work. ALPED M. NEWMAN, M. D. No character comes in closer or more carnest touch with frontier life than does the pioneer physician. His very presence at the bedside of the isolated homesteader is often a potion as powerly and a sin pills and his powders, and his sympathy and advice are far reaching factors for good in the various phases of development of any new locality. Dr. Alfred M. Newman, of Canadian, Texas, belongs to this class of pioneer physicians. More than two decades ago he was the only doctor in a territory including nine counties, and he has been in continuous and successful practice here ever since. A review of his life is of interest in this connection, and, briefly, is as follows:

Alfred M. Newman was born in Adams county, Ohio, August 29, 1861, and has in his veins a mixture of a.M. Mewman, M. D.

Scotch-Irish and Pennsylvania Dutch blood, the former from the paternal side and the latter from the maternal. His father, John Newman, was born and lived and died in Ohio. His life was that of the successful farmer and his age at death was that of seventy-one years. He passed away in 1855, and his good wife, Ann (Herdman) Newman, in 1898. She was born in Ohio in 1819 and her age at death, therefore, was seventy-nine years. In their family were ten children, of whom Alfred M.

In the public schools Alfred M. Newman received his early training, and up to the time he was sixteen he worked on his father's farm when not attending school. Then for several years he alternated school teaching and attending college. He pursued a course of study at the National Normal University, Lebanon, Ohio, and at the Medical College of Ohio, Cincinnati. Following his graduation from the latter institution in 1884, he further prepared himself for his profession by taking special work under the guidance of one of the leading surgeons of Cincinnati. That same year, 1884, he entered upon the practice of medicine in Burden, Kanas, where he remained for nine years. In 1891 he came down into Texas and took up his residence in Hemphill county. Since that date Canadian has been his home and the surrounding country for many miles his field of practice, In the early days here he was the only physician in nine counties. For fifteen years he was physician and surgeon for the Santa Fe Railroad Company. He is a member of the District Medical and State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association. The former organization covers the counties of Hemphill, Roberts, Liscomb, Ochiltree and Wheeler, and its members have honored Dr. Newman with the office of president. Also he served as president of the Canadian school board, filling the office four years, at all times showing a progressive public spirit. A local public utility put in operation by him was the long distance telephone. He organized the Canadian Long Distance Telephone Company, of which he was president and treasurer and his son secretary and manager. They built and equipped this concern and operated the line two and a half years, at the end of which time they sold out to the Bell Telephone Company. During his residence here Dr. Newman has acquired large real estate interests, his holdings including both farm and town property.

July 16, 1884, at Glenn Springs, Lewis county, Kentucky, Dr. Alfred M. Newman and Miss Zora E. Jones, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of S. S. and Mary Jones, were united in marriage, and they are the parent of two children, a son and daughter, O. Ross Newman and Miss Bertha May Newman.

O. Ross Newman was born at Burden, Kansas, Januy 2, 1886. He is a graduate of Armour Institute of Technology and as an electrical engineer is connected with the Bell Telephone Company, having charge of twenty-seven counties in Kansas. He married Miss Mary Brooks, and is a resident of Wichita, Kansas. Miss Bertha May Newman is a native of Canadian, Texas, and was born May 8, 1892. She is a graduate of the Canadian High School, the Canadian Academy, Baylor University, and of the State University. She won a two-year scholarship from the academy which gave hor to C. C. Shaller on May 2, 1, 1913. Mr. Shaller is a graduate of the legal department of the State University of Texas.

B. F. CHERRY. Manager of the Weatherford Water, Light and Ice Company, and also head of a large drug company of the city, Mr. Cherry is an alert and enterprising young business man, still in his thirties, and has a record of accomplishment that might well be envied by many older men.

B. F. Cherry was born March 24, 1876, at Lawryville, Hardin county, Tennessee, a son of H. J. and Sarah E. (Alexander) Cherry. The Cherry family is of Scotch descent and had numerous representations in the state of Tennessee, where most of them were planters and slave holders. Many of the name were Confederate sympathizers, and several served on the Confederate side in the war. H. J. Cherry, who is now living retired in Parker county at the age of seventy, was a courier for Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston in the battle of Shiloh and carried the news of his commander's fatal wound to General Beanregard. One of his brothers, W. H. Cherry, of Savannah, Tennessee, was a personal friend of Gen. U. S. Grant, and General Grant spent the night of April 5 in the home of W. H. Cherry just before the battle of Shiloh. Thus one brother was entertaining the Union commander, while another was in the army of the South and serving under General Johnston. Later this brother interceded through General Grant for the release of H. J. Cherry, who was at the time a prisoner of war at Rock Island, Illinois. In 1895 the Cherry family moved from Tennessee to Weatherford, Texas, where the mother died in September, 1904. There were nine children in the family and the fifth in order of birth was B. F. Cherry.

His early education was in the Tennessee public schools, and for two years be was a student in Hardin College, at Savannah, Tennessee. While living in Tennessee he began his career as a school teacher, and on coming to Texas, at the beginning of young manhood, he found a place as clerk in a drug store. For more than seven years he has been independently identified with the drug business and is now president of the Sherty-Akard Drug Company of Weatherford. For the past three years Mr. Cherry has successfully managed the Weatherford plant for the supply of water, light and iee to the citizens of this community. The water supply of Weatherford is probably unexelled by that of any Texas city. The source of supply is in the Trinity sands, at a depth of four hundred feet, and the plant has a capacity of furnishing three hundred thousand gallons per day. During the three years of Mr. Cherry's management the water plant has been maintained equal to the demands made upon it, and for the first time in Weatherford, notwithstanding some protracted spells of dry weather have occurred in this time.

Mr. Cherry in politics has always voted the Democratic ticket. His fraternal connections for sixteen years have been with Lone Star Lodge, No. 4, of the Knights of Pythias, and he also belongs to the Columbia Camp of Woodmen. He belongs to the Commercial Club and the Chamber of Commerce in Weatherford, is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a very popular citizer

On October 25, 1900, at Weatherford, Mr. Cherry maried a Miss Heiprin, a daughter of 6, N. and Jennie Heiprin, both of whom were born in Texas. Mr. Heiprin is now engaged in the real estate business at Weatherford, and was one of the first land surveyors in this part of the state. Both Mrs. Cherry's parents were reared in Parker county, and during their lifetime witnessed practically all the changes marking the development of this country from the pioneer period to the modern present. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cherry was born, December 22, 1901, a son, George Franklin Cherry.

Mr. Cherry is an ardent advocate of the possibilities of Parker county and speaks with enthusiasm of may things that indicate the resources of this part of the country. The production of watermelons has given Parker county a well earned fame, and at the St. Louis Fair a few years ago ten melons were exhibited whose aggregate weight was eleven hundred pounds. These melons are shipped to all parts of the United States and several carloads have been sent to Europe.

WILLIAM D. COWEN. As is usually the case with the leading business man of a place, William D. Cowen, who occupies this position in Pecos, Texas, grew up in the hard school of experience and his early years were full of hard knocks. He started in life as a rancher, in the same way that hundreds of men have started, but he succeeded where many men have failed, through the qualities which he possessed of being able to work early and late and of possessing perseverance enough to cling to a thing until it was accomplished. He is now one of the most influential men in the whole of west Texas, influential not only on account of his wealth, but also on account of the strength and force of his personality.

William David Cowen was born on the 25th of July, 1851, in Gonzales county, Texas. His father, John Cowen, was a native of Ireland and his mother, Elizabeth (Nations) Cowen, was born in Mississippi. When a young man John Cowen emigrated from Ireland to this country, settling in South Carolina. He later moved to Mississippi and there in the fall of 1849 he was married to Elizabeth Nations. He came with his wife to Texas and they located in Gonzales county, near Belman, where they lived until 1852, when they moved to Fayette county. Here Mr. Cowen died in 1886. He spent all of his life as a rancher and stock raiser. Mrs. Cowen died in 1892, and of the seven children born of this union five grew to maturity. Of these Robert B. Cowen is a prominent farmer near San Marcos, Texas, and Willis Cowen is a teacher in San Marcos. William D.

Cowen was the eldest of the children.

Owing to the fact that William Cowen was the eldest and that his father's family was large, he received only a limited education, attending the country schools in the winters and assisting his father or working on the neighboring ranches during the summers. When he was old enough to start out for himself he went into cattle raising on a very small scale in Fayette county. His herds grew and he later transferred them to Gonzales county, where he remained until 1883. Then he moved to Brewster county, and in 1884 came to Reeves county. During these eyars he had been continuously successful, everything that he had undertaken had turned out well, and this was not due to good luck, but to careful management and the use of good sense. In Reeves county he operated on a large scale, owning a ranch of thirty thousand acres, and his Merds had become immense. After making so fine a success of ranching, he turned to other fields, and is now the leader in all of the important business enterprises in Pecos.

Mr. Cowen became the president and is the principal owner of the Pecos Valley Bank, in 1901. He is a prominent member of the Pecos Land Company and was one of the leaders in the movement which resulted in the growth and development of Pecos. He is president of the Pecos Valley and Southern Railroad Company and is one of the largest stockholders in this enterprise. Financial enterprises have claimed the larger share of his time of late, and he organized the Bank of Barstow, at Barstow, Texas, and is vice president of the Toyah Citizens' Bank, at Toyah, Texas. He is actively interested in the welfare of these various institutions and spends much of his time looking after their affairs.

Mr. Cowen was married on the 3d of January, 1870, to Miss Josephine Darling, a native of Texas and the daughter of Socrates Darling, who was one of the early pioneers of Texas, having settled here in 1834, and also heing a veteran of the Mexican war. Mrs. Josephine Cowen died in 1889 and is buried in Toyah. Six children were born of this marriage, as follows: William Cowen is a prominent rancher of Culberson county, Texas; Lou married J. L. Duncan and lives in Jeff Davis county, Texas; John Cowen is a successful ranch owner of Reeves county; Frances is the wife of J. B. Pruett, a merchant of Pecos; Sidney Cowen is also successfully engaged in ranching in Reeves county, and Myrtle is the widow of Judge Ben C. Thomas and now makes her home with her father in Pecos. Mr. Cowen was married for the second time in 1891 to Lethia Porter Phillips, the widow of John Phillips, Mrs. Cowen being a native of the state of Missouri. One son, Marvin Cowen, has been born to this marriage, and he is at present a student in Baylor University, at Dallas, Texas. Mr. Cowen has taken especial care in seeing that all of his children received a fair education,

In speaking of the leading business man of a town, a picture always comes to mind of an arrogant, domineering sort of a man, who considers himself not only the owner of the land and buildings of a town, but also of the people living therein, but one must draw a very different picture of William D. Cowen. He is a plain, simple husiness man, modest and of retiring disposition, prone to consider what he has accomplished in life as being possible of accomplishment by any man who works hard enough. He is highly respected and heartily liked by his fellow citizens, which is sufficient evidence that he does not stoop to take an unfair advantage of his influence and power.

WALTER CARUTH. The history of settlement at Dallas and vicinity begins about the middle of the forties. A few years later, in 1852, the late Walter Caruth arrived in Dallas county and began a career of activity in business and as a good citizen, which continued with in-creasing esteem from his community until his death, which occurred at the old Caruth homestead near Dallas, February 3, 1897. The late Walter Caruth was one of the pioneer merchants of Dallas and had a store there for a great many years before the first railroad was built. He was a veteran of the late war and, though he never figured in political affairs, was always ready to help out any worthy cause, whether of civic or benevolent nature.

Walter Caruth was born in Allen county, Kentucky, February 1, 1826, and was past seventy years of age at the time of his death. He was the oldest in the family of John and Catherine (Henderson) Caruth, who were natives of Virginia, and at an early day settled in Kentucky, where the father was a farmer and merchant. The father came out to Dallas county, Texas, in 1858, and died there in 1868. His wife survived some years.

Walter Caruth was reared and educated in his native county and his merchandising experience began early in youth. After his arrival in Dallas, in 1852, he established a store and was active in its management until 1881. In that year he became owner by purchase of a large farm of nine hundred acres, partly improved, the previous owner of which had been Judge Patterson. Caruth during the succeeding years gave much of his attention and personal management to the improvement of his place, and made of it one of the finest rural homesteads in Dallas county. At the same time he owned and occupied with his family a beautiful residence in the city.

In 1861 Mr. Caruth entered the Confederate army, in Col. N. H. Darnell's regiment, holding the office of commissary for one year, after which he was quartermaster in Colonel Stone's regiment. In 1865 he became quartermaster at Tyler, Texas, and held that post until the end of the war.

In 1865 Mr. Caruth was married in Dallas to Miss Anna Worthington, who was born in Mississippi, a daughter of Thomas and Rebecca (Hort) Worthington. Her parents were natives of Kentucky, but settled in Mississippi at an early day, and afterwards moved to Texas, where her father owned several stores. Her father died in Mississippi, and the widow afterwards came to Dallas county, where her death occurred. In 1892 Mr. Caruth took up his residence on his farm near Dallas and lived there until his death. At the time of his death he was also owner of a mercantile establishment and possessed a great deal of land and stock. The children are mentioned as follows: Mattie, wife of N. A. Mc-Millan, who is president of the St. Louis Trust Company of St. Louis; Walter died at the age of twenty-seven and had been in the mining business in Nevada;

Robert & Sluff

William is a mining man at Joplin, Missouri, and is marieried; Raymond P., a real estate operator, is maried. The late Mr. Caruth, who was a Democrat, was offen offered political honors, but never accepted. With the aid of his brother, William Caruth, he built the Caruth Chapel, on the Caruth farm, for the henefit of his tenants. He was always devoted to his home and was a good man in every sense of the word.

GREGORY OBERLY. Among the men who have contributed materially to the advancement of Dallas as a great commercial center of the Southwest may be mentioned the late Gregory Oberly, who will perhaps be reremembered only by the older generation of business men, but whose activities left their impress upon the life of the community. For many years Mr. Oberly was the directing head of the Oberly Cooperage Company, an enterprise which he built up from modest beginnings to become one of the largest business ventures of its line in the state, and to which he gave the active years of a long and useful career. Mr. Oberly was a native of Switzerland and was born in 1831, a son of John and Mary Oberly, both born in that country. In their native land the parents of Mr. Oberly were prominently known as large wine growers and had an extensive and profitable business, but in 1848 decided to try their fortunes in the United States, and accordingly disposed of their interests and embarked for this country. First settling in Cincinnati, Ohio, they remained there until 1851, and in that year made removal to Missouri, where they located near Commerce, in Scott county. After coming to America, the elderly Oberly was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and continued to be so employed to the time of his death. He was a man of industry and integrity, laboring faithfully to make a bome for himself and family, and ever displaying a commendable spirit of loyalty to his adopted land. He and his wife became the parents of sixteen children.

Gregory Oberly received his early education in the schools of his native land, and was seventeen years of age when he accompanied his parents to this country. He began to learn the trade of cooper in Cincinnati and, after serving his apprenticeship, worked at that vocation for some time, although while a resident of Missonri he was also engaged in mercantile lines. Having heard of the wonderful opportunities for business success in the Southwest, Mr. Oberly came to Texas and in 1876 founded the Oberly Cooperage Company, of which he was directing head during the remainder of his life. It was not surprising that Mr. Oherly's career proved a successful one, for he had all the essential characteristics which go to make for success in the commercial field. Far sighted, possessed of acumen, judgment and inherent ability, he also had the somewhat contradictory traits of conservatism and courage in the grasping of opportunities. Those who had business dealings remember him as one in whom the utmost faith could be placed, and to whom many of his contemporaries in the business field went to for advice and leadership. His success never made him forgetful of the days when he was fighting his way step by step over the numbers of obstacles which harass the young man seeking financial independence, and he was at all times ready to lend a hand to aspiring youth. Having served in the Union army during the Civil war, he was a member for many years of the Grand Army of the Republic, in the work of which he ever took an active and helpful interest, and he also belonged to the Pioneers' Association. He was reared in the faith of the Catholic church and lived up to its teachings through life. A stanch Republican, he earnestly supported the candidates of his party, and, although never a seeker for public preferment, was sincere in his desire to assist in the development and advancement of his city. In his death, December 19, 1890, Dallas lost one of its best citizens, On June 20, 1856, Mr. Oberly was united in marriage in Missouri with Miss Sophia Heisser, who was born in Prance, one of the ten children of Michael and Monica (Stobler) Heisser, who came to this country when Mrs. Oberly was a child of elevia years. They became farming people of Missouri, and in that state passed the remainder of their lives. Nine children were born to Mrs. and Mrs. Oberly, as follows: Mary L., who is deceased; Victoria, who is also deceased; Mary Magdalen, who has also passed away; Pauline, who is single and resides at the observation of the deceased; Mary Magdalen, who has also passed away; Pauline, who is single and residents of Dallas, and Milliam J., both single and residents of Dallas, and Hattie, single and a music teacher, living at the old home place in Dallas.

ROBERT E. HIFF. President of the First National Bank of Wichita Falls, and one of that small group of men who in every city are controlling factors in business affairs. Robert E. Hinff is a lawyer by profession estables practiced law and has been closely identified with civic and business affairs in Wichita Falls for more than thirty years. He was one of the pioneer members of the local bar, and it has been his privilege to witness and to bear an important part in all the development of the town from its village days until it is now one of the best and most vigorous commercial centers of the northern section of the state.

Robert E. Huff is a native of Virginia, born at Lebanon, January 31, 1857, a son of William and Martha (Johnson) Huff. His father was born in Virginia and after the Civil war moved to Tennessee, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying in Bedford county of that state in 1898 at the age of seventy-four. During the war he was chaplain in a Virginia regiment. By profession he was a minister of the Baptist church and was devoted to the cause of religion and humanity. The mother, a native of Tennessee, in Carter county, was not a surface of the state of the state of the state of the accompanied her husband to Virginia. She is now living at the age of seventy-five with her children in Wichita Falls. There were seven in the family, of whom the banker and lawer was the oldest.

As a boy he had the privileges of the country schools of Tennessee, in which state he was reared from about the time he was eight years old. He afterwards entered Cumberland University in the law department and was graduated in 1879. His first practice was in Shelbyville, but after two years he determined to seek a new field in Texas. In following out this resolution he arrived in Wichita Falls on May 2, 1882. Thirty years ago Wichita Falls was a very small town, situated on the newly constructed railroad, and the railroad and the fact that it was the prospective county seat were the chief advantages and promises of great things for the place. In a short time Mr. Huff became one of the leaders in the local bar, and for many years has been notable for his ability and success as a civil lawyer. He has confined himself entirely to civil practice and has never accepted a criminal case in all the years he has practiced in Wichita Falls. The success which he gained as a lawyer in its material reward be converted largely into bank stock, and in 1888 became interested in the First National Bank of Wichita Falls. He was elected president and has managed the affairs of this bank to the present time. The First National Bank was organized in 1884 and its present capital stock is $100,000.00, with surplus of $140,000.00.

In the earlier years of his residence, Mr. Huff was especially active in Democratic polities, and was elected and served for a term as county attorney when Wichita county was organized. He was a delegate to the national Democratic conventions in 1904 and in 1912. He is a member of the County Bar Association, belongs to the Baptist church and since 1908 has been president of the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce. This chamber of commerce is regarded as one of the strongest aggregations of live business men in Texas and Mr. Huff has given much of his time as president to the broad work planned and earried out for the greater development and betterment of the city.

On May 13, 1885, at Eowie, Texas, Mr. Buff married Miss Elizabeth Burroughs, a daughter of Rew. H. Burroughs, a well known Baptist minister, whose home was in Montague county. Her mother is deceased. The four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Huff are: William El. Huff, born in October, 1889, at Wichita Falls; Arthur Huff, born in 1889 at Wichita Falls and is now married and lives in Wichita Falls and attending the North-born in 1893 at Wichita Falls and attending the North-born in 1902 at Wichita Falls and attending school. Mr. Huff during his boyhood was not surrounded by affluent success largely through his own efforts. He has accomplished much more than the average man either in the law or in business and occupies a very important and influential place in his home community.

Louis S. Floterau, Jr. The death of Louis S. Floterau, Jr., which occurred December 25, 1912, cut short a career of brilliant promise in the field of business. During the comparatively short time that he had identified himself with the affairs of Dallas, Mr. Floteau had gained a wide reputation and high standing among realty men of the Southwest, and his early demise was sincerely mourned by those who had been associated with him in every walk of life. He was born at Pittsburg, Camp county, Texas, July 31, 1876, and was as no of Louis S. and Ella (Potts) Floteau, the former a native of France and the latter of the Lone Star state. He was noe of a family of seven children: Kate, who became the wife of T. T. Ratcliffe, of St. Louis, Missouri; Louis S., Jr.; Lotawona, who is the widow of Mr. Ellis, of Dallas; Unlas, the wife of Thomas C. Gooch, of Dallas; Winnie, the wife of G. C. Long, of Hartford, Connecticut; Henry C., of Dallas, and Sadie, who is single and resides with her mother.

Louis S. Floteau, Jr., attended the public and high schools of Pittsburg, Texas, and when sixteen years of age took a post-graduate course in the latter institution. Following this, he went to Louisiana, where he took charge of his uncle's sugar plantation, but after two years came to Dallas, where he entered the employ of a large implement house. Starting in the capacity of office boy, his ability and faithful application gained him such rapid and steady promotion that at the end of two years he found himself in charge of the buggy department of this great concern. He continued in the employ of this enterprise for nine years, and then embarked in business on his own account in the line of real estate, and at the time of his death owned extensive properties in various parts of Texas, as well as a large orange grove at Redlands, California, the latter, however, having been since sold. His career was one of constant industry and rapid advancement, and his operations at all times were marked by the most conscientious devotion to the strictest integrity. His contribution to the growth of Dallas is found in the modern Floteau Building, one of the city's handsome business structures, and in various ways he assisted in the development of the varied interests of his adopted place.

In 1903 Mr. Floteau was united in marriage with Miss Ruth Bryan, a native of Texas and daughter of J. H. and Sophia (Clark) Bryan, the former a native of Texas and the latter of Tennessee. Mr. Floteau was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was a Democrat in his political views, but found no time to enter actively into the struggles of the political arena. For some years he was a member of the State Militia, in which he rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, but pressing business obligations caused his resignation. His widow, who survives him, resides at No. 2620 Maple avenue, Dallas, and is well known in social circles of the city. She is a member of the Apostolic faith, CHARLES AUGUSTUS BOHNY. A former business man of Dallas, Charles Augustus Bohny lived in this city for a number of years, and his family, consisting of widow and children, have their home here at the present time.

Charles Augustus Bohny was born in Germany in 1854, a son of Joseph and Caroline (Hauck) Bohny. The father, who was a winegrower and manufacturer, died in Germany when Charles Augustus was a child, and the mother brought her family to America when he was six years old, first locating in Nashville, Tennessee, where the mother died. Of the six children in the family only one is now living, namely, Josephine, the widow of Paul Melms, of San Diego, California. The late Charles Augustus grew up and received a public school education iu Nashville, and his mother died when he was fourteen years old. At the age of nineteen he began an apprenticeship in the pattern- making trade, and followed that for a few years. He worked in that line at Dallas when first arriving here, and from this city moved to Denver, Colorado, where he spent four years in the employ of a large furniture house. Returning to Dallas, he established himself in the liquor business, and followed that until his death in 1911. He was a good business man and left a large property, now owned by his widow. She and her family reside in a large house at 2727 Live Oak street, and she also owns a dwelling which she rents and a ranch of one hundred and forty acres near San Antonio. The late Mr. Bohny was a member of the Catholic faith, belonged to the Knights and Ladies of Honor, and was a Republican in politics.

In 1883 he married Miss Catherine Hamberg, who was born in Marshall, Texas, and was of German parentage. Both her parents are now deceased, and Mrs. Bohny is the only one now living of their six children. The six children born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bohny are mentioned as follows: Otelia, wife of L. S. Davidson, a traveling salesman of Dallas, and they have one child, Katherine; Viola is unmarried and lives at home; Frances is a business woman and also lives at home; Lecontine, Charles J., and Laura Marie are all attending

ARTHUR GEEN. The journalistic world of Texas has never been called upon to suffer a more severe loss than that occasioned by the death of "Major" Arthur Geen, who for practically a quarter of a century was a valued member of the forces of the Galveston-Dallas News. While not known to the public at large as a contributor to the daily news sheets, it is doubtful if there was an employe of the News in either Dallas or Galveston who did not hold him in the greatest esteem and affection, and the memory of his kindly disposition, his great-heartedness and his whole souled devotion to what he believed to be the right will long remain as a cherished memory wherever Texas newspaper men foregather. He was born November 2, 1852, at Topsham, England, a son of William H. and Elizabeth Geen, natives of that country. Mr. Geen's father, a florist by vocation, died in England, while his mother still survives and makes her home at Stoke-on-Trent. There were eight children in the family, as follows: Arthur; John, of Galveston, Texas; Emily, unmarried and a resident of England; Fred, who is mayor of Stoke-on-Trent, England; William, who is deceased; Elizabeth, single and living in England; Annie, who is also unmarried and lives in her native land, and Alfred, who is deceased

Arthur Geen received ordinary educational advantages in the schools of England, and as a youth of fifteen years emigrated to the United States locating at once in Galveston, Texas, where he secured employment with J. Reymershoffer, a wholesale dealer in crockery, in whose home he resided. He subsequently became an employe of the Galveston postoffice and rapidly rose in the service through various positions in the money order department to the office of assistant postmaster, and at one time was acting postmaster. He was assistant post-master under J. S. Witwer in 1885, when he resigned his position to accept that of chief bookkeeper and cashier of the Dallas News, a capacity in which he acted up to the hour of his death. In 1906 he was elected a director of the corporation of A. H. Belo & Company, publishers. In an article written at the time of his death by one who had labored with and loved him, the writer said of Mr. Geen in part as follows: "Men who work long together in a newspaper office grow to have an affection for each other not commonly appreciated. And of all those who have had a part in the history of the News, none emjoyed to a greater degree than Mr. Geen the respect and esteem of his associates. in their affection they called him 'Major,' and all his younger associates were 'Sonny' to him. Always cheerful and courteous and never under any circumstances indulging in criticism of others, he made and kept many warm friends. The authority he exercised over those subordinate to him was more paternal than otherwise. He had been with the News practically a quarter of a century and his affection for it extended beyond the men who helped make it to the very furniture in his office. When the News left the old building on Commerce street and moved into its present quarters, he declared that it was with a genuine pang that he parted with the desk at which he had worked daily for many years. Since the removal he had become attached to another desk, principally because the lock of this one, like the one on that in the old building, did not work well.

On September 12, 1874, Mr. Geen was married to Miss Elizabeth Smith, of Kirkaldy, Scotland, whom he met while on a visit to his mother in England. She was a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Watson) Smith, of Scotland, whose other children were: Robert, Wilhelmina and William, all of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Geen were the parents of eight children: William, who is deceased; Arthur H., employed in the News composing room, Dallas, who has one child, Helen; Elizabeth and Robert; Douglas H., who is single and engaged in the banking business at Houston, Texas; John, who died in infancy; Emily, who is single and resides at home; Alfred H., a graduate of Texas University, and now a student at Yale College, studying versity, and now a student at Yale College, studying electrical engineering.

Mr. Geen was a Republican in his political views, but aside from his positions in the postal service, never sought official office. He was a very faithful worker, not only for the Central Congregational Church, but for the Colonial Chapel, and his life was in keeping with the teachings of this faith. His death caused universal sorrow in that those who had known him realized that from their midst had gone one whose place it would be almost impossible to fill. One of his exemployes wrote of him: "'As a valued employe of the News he was truly incomparable. His efficiency, his winsome smile, his pleasant voice, his nobility of character, are now a thing, or memories, of the past. Never will I forget Major Geen's hearty handshake and pleasant conversation on my return from a trip on the road during and as a friend of Major Geen I extend to the News sincere sympathy. They have sustained a loss which I know is and will be felt by every member of the force. I never saw the Major angry. I never heard him speak a sharp word, and I never heard any one speak anything but good of the Major. This is the greatest tribute I can pay to his memory."

On the day following his death the Employes' Association of the Dallas News met and adopted these resolutions: "Bowing to the will of our Heavenly Father, we, the members of the News Employes' Association, mourn the loss of our departed brother and fellowworker, Mr. Arthur Geen, a lovable Christian character and one who combined in his personality many virtues and the noble attributes of his race. A man of splendid business ability in his field, he was conspicuous for his sterling integrity, his fidelity to duty, his loyalty to his employes and fellow-workers, notably so as to those who had long been connected with the News, from the lowest to the highest station. A model of faithfulness, of courtesy, of kindness, of cheerfulness, whatever the difficulties, and withal modest, it can be truthfully said of him that he was one who would 'Hear no evil, see no evil, speak no evil.' For the erring brother he found excuse; of him no one that we can recall spoke evil. His was an example of good which has left its impress and will endure. Sensible of our great loss in his removal, we tender to his bereaved family, so much more losing, these expressions as a weak token of our heartfelt sympathy.

In closing this all too inadequate review of a man who so lived as to win the love of his fellows, the biographer will quote from the resolutions unanimously adopted by the Dallas Press Club: "We have lost a good friend in Arthur Geen, we members of the press, and with his going has gone what has always seemed a cheery ray of sunshine, brightening us when we were sad and making us even happier when we were happy. Others may have been influenced by the worries or variety of the control of the cont

"The youngest boy, the oldest writer, the young reporter and the veteran newspaper man were all one to him in his greeting. The Press Club, realizing these things and feeling the loss to the press as it must, can form some idea of the grief of his family, and to them it extends its heartfelt sympathy, and asks them from the hearts of its members to share this one thought: He was content always with what God gave him, and now he has been called to receive the reward the Creator bestows on those who have done his will on earth, and his joy must now be complete."

HARRY L. KYLE, M. D. For many years prominent both as a physician and farmer at Frankfort, in Dallas county, Dr. Harry L. Kyle died at his home there February 7, 1898.

He was born in North Vernon, Indiana, in 1845, being one of a family of four children. The sister Kate is deceased, his brother Thomas lives in California, and his brother Edward in Cincinnati, Ohio. In his native state of Indiana he grew up and received his education, starting out when young to make his own way in the world. He paid his own way while studying medicine, and soon after his graduation moved to Texas and settled in Dallas county, at the village of Frankfort. There he combined medical practice with farming, and after twenty years moved into the city of Dallas. He was there only six years, and in that time acquired and looked after a good practice. A distinguishing characteristic of Dr. Kyle was his love for country life and farm activities, and it was this which caused him to give up his city residence and practice and return to his old home at Frankfort, where he remained until his death. He was very prosperous both as a farmer and doctor, and left his widow an ample competence. She still owns the farm of two hundred and fifty acres, considered one of the model country estates of Dallas county, well improved and all in cultivation. Dr. Kyle was a Democrat in politics, was a liberal contributor and a worker in the Methodist church, and was affiliated with the Masonic Order. Outside of these interests, he spent practically no time away from home and family and was devoted to the charms of his own domestic circle.

In 1877 Dr. Kyle married Miss Carrie M. Harper, who was horn in South Carolina, a daughter of John E. and Hattie A. (Harkness) Harper. Both her parents were natives of North Carolina. Her great-grandfather Harkness came from Ireland when her grandfather was three weeks old, and settled in South Carolina. John Harper, her father, grew up in South Carolina, and at the age of fifteen found a position in a store, and for many years was engaged in merchandising. He later moved to Homer, Georgia, where he had a store and lived there until the war broke out. He then joined the Confederate army in General Cummins' Brigade, and went through the entire struggle. At the close of the war he returned to South Carolina and engaged in business there until 1874, when he sold out and moved to Texas, settling in Denton county. For seven years he farmed there and then moved to the town of Pilot Point, where he was in the grocery business until his death, September 29, 1899. His widow still lives at Pilot Point. Mrs. Kyle was one of a family of ten children, mentioned as follows: William J., deceased; Mrs. Kyle; John B., who died, leaving a family of four children; James F., a druggist at San Antonio: Hattie wife of James F., a druggist at San Antonio; Hattie, wife of W. B. Montgomery, of Pilot Point; Robert N., who died in infancy; Pearl, deceased; Hugh H., a druggist, of San Antonio; Annie Lee, who died in infancy, and Catherine, unmarried and living with her mother. Mrs. Kyle has her home at 3416 Cole avenue, in Dallas.

RICHARD P. PINSON. President of the City National Bank of Forney and the owner of extensive tracts of land near that town, Richard P. Pinson is an old-time Texan, a survivor of the Confederate veterans, and has made what many would regard as a remarkable material success, chiefly through the avenue of Texas farming. His agricultural operations are now considered the largest in bis part of the state. Mr. Pinson has lived in Texas since 1862, when he came with his father's family from Jasper country, Missouri, settling in Falls county, Texas.

Richard P. Pinson was born in Allen county, Kenteky, on August 29, 1835. The Pinson family originally come from England, settling along the Atlantic coast, and finally enigrated to North Carolina, living in the Spartanshurg district. From that district Aaron Pinson and his seven sons entered the Revolutionary army, Aaron Pinson was the great-grandfather of the Forney banker and farmer. Some years after the war, Aaron and the sons moved into Kentucky, taking up land near Bowling Green. The family scattered from there, Aaron and six of his name of the farmer of the family scattered from there, Aaron and six of the family scattered from there, Aaron and six of the family scattered from there, Aaron and six of the family scattered from the family have all descended. Aaron Pinson married a Miss Wells. Gephaniah married a Miss Venalbe, and among their several children was Rev. Josiah F. Pinson, father of Riebard P.

Richard P.
Josiah F. Pinson moved to Missouri in 1841, making the journey with ox teams and buying a home in the country near Joplin postoffice. The location was on Center Creek, about twelve miles east of the postoffice, and there the family lived until the events of the Civil war caused it to seek a home in a country where there was greater uniformity as to political sentiment. Josiah
F. Pinson was a Baptist preacher and was horn in Allen country, Kentucky, in 1807. He was in every way a southern man and two of his sons became Confederate soldiers. Rev. Josiah F. Pinson married, first, Miss Drasilla Burton, a daughter of Drew Burton, a slavper country, Missouri, in 1849. Their children were:
Martha, who married Rafe Scott and died in Carroll country, Missouri; jerry, who died of wounds received in the engagement at Yellow Bayou, Louisiana, while in the engagement at Yellow Bayou, Louisiana, while

a Confederate soldier; Eliza J. married Rebert De Graffenried and spent her last years in Hill county, Texas; Kichard P.; Helen, who became the wife of Jo Hailey and resides at Quanah, Texas; Yirginia, who married John Joyner and died in Taylor county, Texas; Sallie, who married Phil Hailey, of Forney; and William H., a farmer near Forney. Aaron Pisson married for his second wife Millie Hunt, of Cooper county, Missouri, but they had no children. The home of Rev. Pinson continued in Falls county, Texas, until 1865 when he bought land near the Orphans? Home in Dallas county. There his career for a number of years was that of farming, with which he combined his active work as the preaches the second of the committee of the second of the committee wealth. In 1884 he sold his estate and dome to Forney to be near his son, and died kere in 1990.

Jacker dept. Pinson was reared to man's estate in Jaser county, Missouri, which was his home from the time of the state of the second of Missouri before and the war and his educational privileges were therefore limited war and his educational privileges were therefore limited has never suffered any particular handicap when competing with his fellow men. In September, 1861, his services were offered to the Confederate militia of Missouri and he saw six months of service in southwest Missouri under General Raines, in Livingston's Guards, whose business it was to watch the Kansas Jay-Hawkers and prevent inroads into the state. He was on the battefield of Oak Hills, or Wilson Creek, the day after the battle was fought and witnessed the great destruction of life and property in that vicinity. He was also in hearing of the battle of Carthage at a later date.

On March 25, 1862, Mr. Pinson left Missouri with the

Pinson family and drove across the Indian Territory with the stock and other property, finding eventually a place in Texas well removed from the hostilities of war. Here he became identified with farming and continued that vocation in Dallas county until 1874. In that year came his first purchase of land in Kaufman county, and his home has been in the locality of Forney for nearly forty years. For his first land he paid sixteen dollars an aere and it was considered an improved farm. capital when he came to Kaufman was barely sufficient to pay for this land and the success of his life has been attained by concentrating his energies and keeping his faith centered on farming. He soon started to buying and dealing in land, and some of the fine black land in Kaufman county was bought by him at a price as low as four dollars an acre. Farming and farm making have been the chief industry of Mr. Pinson for forty years and he has been responsible for the turning of hundreds of acres of prairie grass into fertile and productive fields. Miles of fences have been built under his supervision, modest homes have been erected on his land for the use of his tenants, and with the accumulation of many hundreds of acres of uplands and bottom along the east course of the Trinity he has come to be regarded as the largest farmer of this locality. Mr. Pinson remained in the market for land until it reached fifty-five dollars an acre, the highest point to which he believed it possible for land values to go, and since then has practically ceased to add to his land capital.

Mr. Pinson was one of the organizers of the City National Bank of Forney in 1902, and has since served as its president. The vice president is A. F. Duke and its eashier is James Rhea, with Ed D. McKellar as assistant cashier. Besides the bank, Mr. Pinson assisted in promoting the establishment of the oil mill at Forney and is vice president of the company operating that local plant.

The only political service of Mr. Pinson has been as alderman of Forney, having been one of the first after the incorporation of the town. He is a Democrat and has attended a few political conventions. His church is the Baptist.

In August, 1874, was solemnized in Dallas county the marriage of Mr. Pinson with Miss Alice E. Widman, a daughter of Thomas Widman, who came to Texas from South Carolina before the war. Mrs. Pinson died in 1902 at the age of forty-two. Her children are: Pearl, the oldest child, who died at the age of fifteen; Thomas, of Forney, who married Ione Gaston; Alice, wife of Dr. Hudgins, of Forney; Cora, who married E. A. Stallings, of Terrell-Alice and Cora being twins; James, of Forney; and Miss Vesta.

CLYDE .S. KARKAEITS. A young business man whose ability has secured him rapid promotion and who is now identified with one of the largest mercantile establishments of Midland, Clyde S. Karkacits was born in Eastland county, Texas, January 18, 1884. His parents were J. A. and Amanda Karkaeits. His father, who was of an Austrian family, came to Texas about 1878, locating in Eastland county, where he was engaged in farming until 1890. He then moved to Cisco, where he entered the firm of John T. Creech as clerk in the drug and grocery business. In 1894 he was elected county clerk of Eastland county, and that election caused his removal to the county seat in Eastland. In 1897 he returned to Cisco and engaged in the grocery business there until 1901. He then went on the road as traveling salesman, and has continued one of the Texas commercial men ever since. The mother of Mrs. Karkaeits is of an American

Clyde S. Karkaeits received his education in the public schools of Texas, and his first employment was with the Wells-Fargo & Company express. Four years of that experience prepared him for his next work, and in 1906 he took a position with the Rockwell Brothers & Company at Cisco. This business is one of the largest mercantile houses in west Texas, and in 1907 Mr. Karkaeits was promoted and given charge of the branch house at Midland, having the management of the bookkeeping for the next two years, and in 1911 became the sole manager of the business at Midland. Much of the success of this firm in Midland is due to the capable management of Mr. Karkaeits. In politics he is a Progressive Demoerat and expresses much pleasure at the present national administration of the party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, and the Woodmen of the World. At Midland he is especially prominent in church work as a member of the Baptist church. He is deacon and treasurer of church and is superintendent of the Sunday school. The Baptists have the largest and most flourishing congregation and the finest church edifice in Midland, their membership being over four hundred, and the Sunday school enrollment being over two hundred and fifty. There is also a vigorous Baptist Young People's Union of the church.

Mr. Karkaeits was married on September 12, 1905, to Miss Ethel Patterson, of Cisco, Texas, a daughter of John F. and Sarah Patterson, her father being now a retired business man at Cisco. The four children of Mr. Karkaeits and wife are named Louise, Burette, Clyde S., Jr., and Jules.

FRANK C. McCorkle, who has recently identified himself with the citizenship and business affairs of Midland. has spent most of his life in this state and is a young man of much enterprise and successful accomplishment. He was horn June 5, 1880, at Santa Fe, New Mexico, being the second in a family of five children born to Henry and Emma B. McCorkle. His father is a master mechanic in the railway shops at Tyler, Texas, and has lived in this state since 1881. He has followed his trade at Tyler for twenty-three years and has a place of esteem in the citizenship of that city. The mother is also still living. The McCorkle family is of ScotchIrish ancestry, the great-grandfather having immigrated to America from the north of Ireland, and during the Civil war having served as a member of the Home Guards in the Confederate army. He was prominent in politics and for three terms was county attorney of Catawba county, North Carolina.

Mr. McCorkle was educated in the public schools of Tyler and his first business after leaving school was as clerk in a grocery store at that city. He subsequently served an apprenticeship in the Southern Pacific Railway Shops at Houston as a blacksmith, and later studied embalming at the Barnes School of Embalming. He first followed his profession in Tyler, then moved to Oklahoma, where he was in the undertaking and furniture business, and, selling out his interests there, he located on January 1, 1912, at Midland, where he is now engaged in the undertaking business with Mr. T. J. Powell. He is a Democrat in political faith, is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Yeomen, the Knights of the Maccabees, and is associated with the business men of the city in the Commercial Club of Midland. He and his family worship in the Baptist church.

On Christmas Day of 1906, Mr. McCorkle was married to Miss Mamie E. Justice, of Chappell Hill, Texas, a daughter of John J. and Mary E. Justice, her father heing a pioneer settler of Washington county. Her father was a planter and also a merchant at Chappell Hill. Mr. and Mrs. McCorkle are the parents of two children, a daughter and a son, namely, Martha Mae and

Francis Marion.

DAVID W. BRUNSON. Among the thriving cities of west Texas which have grown up and gained prosperity since the construction of the Texas and Pacific Railroad through this country some thirty years ago, Midland undoubtedly could present as many substantial proofs of prominence and solid prosperity as any of its cities along that route of transportation. There have been a number of progressive and enterprising families and individuals in Midland, who during the past years have contributed largely to this present rank and standing of the city, and of these probably none has done more in a business way and in public-spirited citizenship than the Brunson family. Mr. David W. Brunson, president of the Midland National Bank, is one of the vital forces in the progress of this community, and Midland owes much to his public-spirited leadership. The Midland National Bank, of which he is president and of which he was one of the organizers, is the strongest financial institution in Midland county, has a capital stock of $75,000 and a surplus of half that amount, and is a United States depository.

David W. Brunson was born in Lee county, Georgia, October 1, 1856, a son of Almorane and Eliza (Woodard) Brunson, natives of Georgia, his father having been a prosperous planter and slave owner. Prior to the war he lived on a generous scale and in true Southern style. He was a soldier in the Confederate army, and some years after the war moved out to Texas, locating in Stephens county in April, 1877. He engaged in stock raising in that vicinity and lived there until 1887, at which time he came to Midland county, which continued to be his home until his death in 1898, at the age of eighty-six. His wife had passed away in 1890, and both now rest in the Midland cemetery. The father, although he had suffered reverses, especially during his early career and during the war, recouped his fortunes and gained a considerable degree of success as a stockman in Texas. Of the seven children in the parents' family the following are now living: D. T. Brunson, who is a prominent farmer at Rosboro, Arkansas; Nancy, wife of J. G. Pollock, of Rome. Georgia; Mary, wife of William Barnes, of Olkahoma; Susana, widow of T. A. Wright, of Midland; W. H. Brunson, and David W., the Midland

Mr. Brunson attained his early education in private schools in Georgia, and in that state learned all the duties of farming as conducted on a Georgia plantation. He was about twenty-one years of age when he came with the family to Texas, and here became associated with his father in stock raising. He continued that partnership actively until his father's death, at which time he disposed of most of his ranch interests as conducted jointly, and then located on a ranch of his own and became very successful and prominent as a stock raiser. He and his brother, W. H. Bronson, are the owners of several large ranches in Glasscock county. Mr. Brunson became one of the organizers of the Midland National Bank, and he took a prominent part in the erection of the Llano Hotel, Bank, Office and Store Building, a structure which cost $140,000 and is a building which would be a credit to a city twice the size of Midland. It is a handsome modern structure of five stories, and is by all means the most conspicuous landmark in the business district of Midland. Mr. Brunson is one of the principal owners of the company which put up and still owns this building. Mr. Brunson and family also reside in one of the finest homes in Midland, and is a director in the Home National Bank at Stanton.

Fraternally he is affiliated with Masonry, in which has attained the Royal Arch degree, and is a member of the Woodmen of the World. His family are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Brunson was first married in 1880 to Miss Elizabeth McCarver, who was born in Floyd county, Georgia, and died in 1882. Their one son was William W. Brunson. In 1890 Mr. Brunson married Miss Lulu Veale, a native of Texas and a daughter of Carroll and Amanda (Abel) Veale. The six children born to their union are named as follows: Lawton A.; Susie L., a student in Simmons College; Gilbert C., Lula May, Henry W. Brunson, and Dage; Gilbert C., Lula May, Henry W. Brunson, and Dage;

Mr. Brunson is first and foremost a friend of education. He himself had no opportunity to secure anything more than a common school training, but does not for that reason think his own children should be thus limited, and has spent his means liberally in providing the best early training for his family. As to Midland county and this section of west Texas in general, Mr. Brunson believes its prospects are such that in the course of a few years this section will rank as one of the most prosperous in the entire state. From fifty to one hundred feet below the surface there exists an nnexhaustible supply of water, and that fact alone is one of the best assets of the country, and with such an abundance of water Midland county will become a garden spot, blessed with one of the finest climates to be found anywhere. This belief concerning the fertility and possibilities of Midland county on the part of Mr. Brunson is not a vain assertion by any means. He has himself planted an orchard, and twenty years ago at that, and from his trees and vines has obtained such yields as would convince almost any one of the great possibilities of this region. His grapes in particular are remarkable, and single bunches of the Tokay variety frequently weigh from three to four pounds. He also raises many fine peaches. As an example of the public spiritedness of Mr. Brunson, it should be stated that he presented the city of Midland with the land from which is derived the present municipal water supply.

CHLRLES A. TALLOR, Among the merchants and business men of Midland, Mr. Taylor holds a distinctive position by reason of his being the pioneer and by many years the oldest druggist in the city. He came to Midland only a few years after the Texas and Pacific Railroad was constructed through this region, and when all the country around about was devoted entirely to stock raising. He has been with the town from almost its beginning, and along with every stage of progress has been willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and advance, not only his private prosperity, but the general welfare of the entire community.

Charles A. Taylor was born July 10, 1852, at Oxford, North Carolina, and come of an old and honored Southern family, with the best characteristics and enture of the Southern lineage. His parents were Dr. Leonidas and Fannie (Worthington) Taylor, the father a native of North Carolina and the mother of Virginia. As a citizen and physician Dector Taylor has a place of peculiar esteem in Oxford, where he was engaged in practice for sixty years. He lived to the age of eighty-nine, and besides his splendid work as a doctor, he was also prominent in politics and in Masonry, having been a member of one lodge for sixty years. His wife passed away at the age of seventy-two, and both are now interred at Oxford, North Carolina. They were the parents of five children. The first born was William R, who was a farmer; Charles A; Lena, who married I. B. Hines; James Archibald, who was a merchant at Oxford and is the father of thirteen living children: Richard Pelham Taylor, another son, is in business at Oxford Port Carolina.

Charles A. Taylor completed his preparatory education in Professor Horner's College, in his native town of Oxford. He left school when seventeen, contrary to his father's wishes, which were that he should pursue a university course. Instead he entered a drug store in his native town, and by practical methods acquired a thorough knowledge of pharmacy. He was subsequently located in Petersburg and Danville, Vignina, and spent ten years as a drug clerk. In 1879 he acted on his determination to come west, and, after arriving at Waco, his first joh was on a sheep ranch in that part of the state. Two years later he left the ranch and became employed as pharmacist at Colorado, where he remained of or five years. Mr. Taylor in 1886 came to Midland and opened a stock of drugs, his being the first exclusive drug business in the town. He has kept his store in advance with all the progressive stages of progress, and his establishment is not only the largest and hest of its kind, but is in a manner one of the landmarks of the city, and practically everyhody in the county knows Taylor's Drug Store. Besides this prosperous husiness he is the owner of valuable real estate, including a comfortable residence for himself and family.

Mr. Taylor is a Democrat and an active worker for his party's interests in Midland county. He served as chairman of the Central Committee for two years, but himself has never aspired to any public honors. He has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1872 and his church is the Methodist. In 1882, at Colorado, Texas, he married Miss Irene Wood, who was born in Erath county, a daughter of I, T, and Elizabeth (Hooper) Wood. Her parents were among the pioneer settlers of the state and Mrs. Taylor was a cousin of Hon, Thomas Hooper of San Antonio. Taylor, now deceased, was the mother of five children, Taylof, now deceased, was the mother of the califoren, namely: Thomas W., who is associated with his father in the drug business; Hayes, who was accidentally shot and killed while hunting in Midhad county in 1908; Fannie Bess, who is a high school graduate and is now in charge of her father's home; Cortelia, and Lena, who died when three years of age. Thomas Wood Taylor, the oldest son, and the partner of his father, was married on June 3, 1909, to Miss Leta Fair, daughter of William J. and Carlie (Ferguson) Fair. Thomas W. Taylor is an active member of the Commercial Club and the Woodmen of the World, and also a Democrat. His wife belongs to the Methodist church. The Taylor family represents the best citizenship and social qualities of Midland, and their home is a center of social activities and pleasures.

D. J. Young. The men who control the monetary institutions of the Lone Star state have been recruited from almost every section of the Union and have received their training under varied conditions and in various walks of life. It will be found, however, that almost invariably these masters of finance resemble one another in at least one particular—they have the point in com-mon of having been the architects of their own fortunes. In this respect, D. J. Young, president of the First National Bank of Canadian, is no exception to the rule. A Chicagoan by birth, he cast his fortunes with the developing southwest when still little more than a lad, and subsequently has worked his way up the difficult self-made road to prosperity, sturdily surmounting the obstacles which have appeared in his path. His career is but another instance furnished by Texans of welldirected and persevering effort culminating in deserved success. Mr. Young was born October 24, 1865, in Chi-cago, Illinois, and is a son of David S. and Mary (Short) Young, natives of Canda. The father came to Chicago from his native Dominion during the days of the Civil war and took up the grain business, but in 1867 removed to Wyandotte, Kansas, and was there engaged in farming until 1880. In that year he established himself in the real estate and loan business at Kansas City, Kansas, and he was so engaged until his death, which occurred in 1898, when he was seventy-six years of age. Mrs. Young was reared and educated in her native country and still survives her husband, living at Kansas City, Kansas, at the age of seventy-seven years. She and her husband were the parents of six children, four daughters and two sons, and of these D. J. was the third in order of birth,

The early educational training of D. J. Young was secured in the public schools of Wyandotte and Kansas City, Kansas, following which he prepared for a business career in Spalding Commercial College, Kansas City, Missouri. When but sixteen years of age he left the parental roof and embarked upon a career of his own, going to a Colorado ranch as cowboy. It was while thus employed, in 1888, that he was sent with two thousand three hundred head of cattle to Texas, for the John W. Prowers Estate, and after completing the transaction was so favorably impressed with the appearance of the country that he decided to remain. Accordingly, he took up ranching in the vicinity of Canadian, and also opened a drug business at this place, and these two enterprises oc-cupied his attention until March 7, 1892, when he completed the organization of the Canadian Valley Bank, in partnership with Mr. Robert Moody, who was the first president of the bank, Mr. Young being cashier. In May, 1903, this was changed to a national bank, with a capital stock of $100,000.00, and since that time Mr. Young has acted in the chief executive capacity. His wise counsel, his firm control, his farsightedness and his cool judgment have placed the institution upon a firm and substantial footing. He combines the sane and conservative qualities of the master banker with the courageous, quickacting characteristics of the financier, and his associates look to him unquestionably for leadership in all matters of an important nature.

On June 30, 1890, Mr. Young was married at Canadian, Texas, to Miss Mary A. Moody, daughter of Robert Moody, an early settler of Texas, who came from England in 1858. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Young, namely: John S., born April 29, 1891, at Canadian, a graduate of Canadian Academy and now a clerk in the First National Bank of Canadian; Kenneth Moody, born November 27, 1893, at Canadian, a graduate of Culver Military Academy, Culver, Indiana, and now assistant cashier of the First National Bank; Robert Ralph, born February 14, 1897, at Canadian, attending Culver Military Academy; and Florence Edith, born January 11, 1904, at Canadian, attending Canadian Academy, Mr. Young has expressed his confidence in the future of Texas by investing in numerous business interests here, among which is the Canadian Water, Light and Power Company, of which he is a director.

His politics are those of the Democratic party, but he has not cared for public life, and his only fraternal connection is with the Odd Fellows, having become a charter member of the local lodge in 1892. family, he is a consistent attendant of the Presbyterian church.

C. Homer Wileman, general manager of Draughon's Business College, at Amarillo, owes his present position to no happy chance or circumstance, but to well directed effort, constant industry and persevering ambition. His education was acquired through the medium of hard and laborious work on an Oklahoma farm, and from the start of his career he has exhibited self-reliance and never-failing diligence that have steadily and surely brought him to the front. Mr. Wileman is a Missourian, born at Springfield, July 30, 1889, the eldest child of Joseph H. and Cassie (Stowe) Wileman. On his father's side he is descended from an old Tennessee family, while his mother's people, supposedly of French extraction, were early settlers of St. Lonis, Missouri. Mr. Wileman's father was born in Indiana, moved to Missouri about 1878, and is now a resident of Beckham county, Oklahoma, where he is a moderately successful farmer and prominent politician, having filled a number of local offices. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and have been the parents of seven children, of whom six snrvive.

C. Homer Wileman attended public school at Spring-field, Missouri, and subsequently became a student in the Southwestern Normal school at Weatherford, Oklahoma. Following this he entered Draughon's Business College, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, from which he was graduated in 1908, and at that time adopted the profession of educator, teaching in the common schools of Oklahoma and the high school at Erick, in that state. On Octoher 31, 1910, Mr. Wileman came to Amarillo to take charge of the commercial department of Draughon's Business College, which was opened on the following day with an attendance of twelve pupils. On May 1, 1911, Mr. Wileman was made general manager of this institution, which now has an enrollment of 287 pupils, and employs two regular teachers. Draughon's Business College operates fifty schools, and the one at Amarillo had advanced as rapidly in every department as has any in the country. Mr. Wileman, while still a young man, is thoroughly conversant with every branch of the work, and aside from his abilities as an edncator is an excellent business man, handling the affairs of the college in an able manner. The college is located at the corner of Third and Taylor streets, and although established in Amarillo for only a comparatively short period, has become well and favorably known among educational institutions of the Lone Star State.

Mr. Wileman has been an Amarillo "booster" ever since coming to the city, and as a member of the Chamber of Commerce has associated himself with other earnest and hard-working citizens in forwarding movements for the advancement of the city's interests. In political matters he is independent, believing it the right of every individual to support those men and movements which he deems best suited to the public good, but, being of a progressive nature, has inclined toward the new party of that name. He has not, however, had any personal aspirations, being satisfied to devote his energies to his business. His religious belief is that of the Baptist Church. Mr. Wileman is unmarried.

JOHN R. TROLINGER. Among the younger generation of business men of Amarillo, John R. Trolinger holds prestige as one who has within a few short years fought his way from obscurity and humble circumstances to an acknowledged place in the commercial world. His career is an exemplification of the fact that opportunities still await youths of ambition, determination and courage, and that neither influential connections nor financial advantages are necessary at the start to the man who is willing to work with his hands and be content to travel the difficult self-made road. Mr. Trolinger was horn at Whiteshoro, Tennessee, October 15, 1587, and is a son of Andrew M. and Josephine T. Trolinger, both natives of the Big Bend State. His father, who was for years a successful merchant and subsequently became a farmer, served eighteen months during the latter years of the war between the states, in a company under the command of the Federal General Johnston, and was discharged with the rank of captain. His death occurred at Amarillo in 1908, when he was sixty-seven years of age, while his widow still survives him at the age of fifty-five years and makes her home in this city. They were the parents of ten children, of whom John R. was the third in order of birth.

John R. Trolinger acquired his educational training in the public and high schools of Tennessee, and upon the completion of his latter course came to Texas, in 1897, and for one year was engaged in farming in McLennan county. BERT J. BEAN. At the head of the oldest retail and wholesale grocery concern of Wichita Falls, Mr. Bean has proved a worthy successor to his honored father. who was the father and gave prosperity to the business. During a period of nearly thirty years the family of this name has been closely identified with the welfare and progressive business interests of Wichita Falls, and the grocery house of O. W. Bean & Son may properly be considered as one of the foundation stones of Wichita Falls' greatness in the commercial life of north

Bert J. Bean was born November 18, 1868, at Jackson, Michigan. His birthplace is historic. The home in which he was born was located on the tract of ground mear the "Old Oaks," under which was organized in 1853 the Republican party in Michigan, that conven-tion having been the first formal movement which later broadened out over all the states and became the Grand Old Party. The land on which this historic political episode occurred was owned by the father of Bert J. Bean, and in later years a large and imposing monument has been erected on the site to commemorate the event. The Bean family was founded in America in 1610, by Sir John Bean, who came from Scotland and settled in one of the Atlantic colonies. All the subsequent de-scendants of that first ancestor had been on the frontier line of civilization, each generation moving further westward, and practically all of them had been farmers, and accumulators of substantial material prosperity. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Bean came from Reading, England, first settling at Niagara Falls on the American side, and afterwards moving across to the Canadian banks. The late Otis W. Bean, father of the Wichita Falls business man, was born in New Hampshire and was two years old when his parents moved to Michigan, in 1834. The grandfather was Sinclair Bean, and a pioneer in southern Michigan, locating in the vicinity of Jackson, when it was a village in the wilderness. Otis W. Bean was a merchant, for a number of years was engaged in the tanning industry in Michigan, and in 1884 moved to Wichita Falls, Texas, where in 1889 he founded and established the grocery concern which has grown to such large proportions under the name of the O. W. Bean & Son. Otis W. Bean, who died at Hot Springs, Arkansas, in 1900, was never active in politics, though he supported the principles of the old Green-back party and later the Populists. Bert J. Bean up to the age of sixteen years attended school at Tecumseh, Michigan, and the first work for which he received wages was as clerk in a retail grouper, house. This was aften his remember to the control of retail grocery house. This was after his removal to Texas, and he was actively associated with his father when the present business was organized in 1889. Since the death of his father he has succeeded to the controlling interests and management of the concern, and still conducted under its old firm name. Mr. Bean is also vice president of the Wichita Falls State Bank, and owns considerable stock in other local corporations.

A Democrat in politics he takes no active part in public affairs as a politician, though for seven years he served as a member of the city council, and is always willing and eager to advance the best interests of his home locality. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and formerly one of its directors. His maternal grandiather was an Irishman and his maternal grandiather was of Seoth origin. And with a mixture of Irish and Scotch blood which came to him through pioneer and warrior parentage, he was equipped to win his own way in the world, and this he has done through his own persevering energies.

REV. WILLIAM D. HAMMACK. The life record of Rev. William D. Hammack since his coming to Kaufman county in 1874, is one notable not alone for his achievements in the fields of agriculture and finance, but also for his long and zealous service in the work of his Master. Coming here with but little save his youthful strength of heart, ambition and determination to win, he has accumulated a handsome financial competency and has gained also what few men achieve, the esteem and love of those with whom he has passed so many years. Rev. Hammack was born in Lee county, Alayears. Rev. Hammack was born in Lee county, Au-bama, February 15, 1853, and was reared on a small farm and in an upright though humble home. His father was William B. Hammack, who owned a few slaves and identified himself with Alabama in the flush of young manhood. He was born in Georgia in 1826, and it is believed that he left his native state about the year 1840, although the early separation of our subject from his parents and his continued living apart from them his parents and his continued ming apart from the precluded his acquiring data regarding the identity of his forebears of the intimate facts of his immediate family. William B. Hammack married a neighbor girl, Miss Susan Ligon, and they passed their lives within a quarter of a mile of where they established their first home. Mr. Hammack, in some manner, acquired a lib-eral education, for he taught school in young manhood and was fitted for equal competition with his fellow farmers in the race of life. He entered the Confederate army while the war between the south and north was in progress and was with General Pemberton's troops when they surrendered at Vicksburg in 1863. He was a supporter of democratic principles, and in his religious belief was a devout Missionary Baptist. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: Eugenia, who married Robert Short and died at Columbus, who married Robert Short and the at Collinous, Georgia; William D., whose name introduces this review; Pascal H., who died at Abilene, Texas; John D., who is carrying on operations on the old family home in Alabama; Lee, who resides at Columbus, Georgia; Villis W., who passed away at Crandall, Texas; Joseph, who died at Abilene. Texas; and Inez, who is the wife of Robert McKinney, of Young county, Texas.

William D. Hammack was arged by the spirit of empire to seek the West in his youth. He left home with the blessings of his parents at the age of nineteen years and went by rail from Loachapoka, Alabama, to New Orleans, where he took passage on a Mississippi steamer for Jefferson, Texas, reaching that point atter some ten days of travel. He and his companion, Robert McKinney, who subsequently became his brother-in-law, boarded a Dallas freight ox-wagon at Jefferson and spent about ten days covering the distance between that old historic town and the future metropolis at the forks of the Trinity. Their destination was Collin courty, where Mr. McKinney's people lived, and the morning following his arrival Mr. Hammack started the serious part of his independent career.

As a beginning, Mr. Hamanack accepted employment is farmer. Henry Smith, in Dallas county, at nine dollars a mouth an extendit with him for a period of three months. The second with him for a period of three months is services to the extent of paying him the property of the extent of paying him the property of the extent of paying him the property of the property

Mr. Hammack began the year 1874 as a hand at twenty dollars per month and board for "the two" with Joe Sullivan and closed the year with the suggestion of a "nest-egg?" which made an end of his career as a farm laborer. In 1874 he rented land in that locality and in the fall moved into Kaufman county with his few family effects and his one horse, which later he had the misfortune to lose. The next two years he worked on shares with P. E. Yates, and out of his profits equipped himself with a team, and, for the first time, exercised some independence as a farmer. He then began renting land for the "third and fourth" and continued it until 1885, when, having accumulated a small bunch of cattle and a little surplus money, he moved to Hamilton county, Texas, with the hope of becoming, some day, a cattle baron of Central Texas. Just what happened to alter his plans so suddenly does not appear, but within ten months after his departure from Kaufman county he was back here, minus his stock and some man county he was not sere, mans his stock and some of his money, but, with commendable perseverance, ready to recuperate his losses behind the plow. Sub-sequently he bargained for a small tract of land three miles north of Crandall, a property containing fifty-five acres, which he could have purchased some years before at five dollars an aere-and for which he had possessed the money-but for which he now paid thirty dollars an acre, giving five notes for the balance of the purchase money. The little house on the farm sheltered his family and served as his home, with its changes and its successor, for many years, and here he witnessed some of the most prosperous years of his active life. He brought the tract all under cultivation, purchased the five notes as they came due, added other lands to his tax values from time to time and even-tually accumulated two bundred and fifty acres, which, with other material possessions, form the substantial character of his holdings at the present time.

In 1899 Mr. Hammack moved into Crandall and for a few years remained in active conduct of his rural affairs from this point. He was one of the early settlers of the new towns, and built his home and a brick business house as his contribution to the development of the community. He is vice president of the First National Bank of Crandall and a member of its official board. While he has accomplished with much credit the task of rearing and educating his family, he has not neglected the spiritual side of man's nature. He was reared in a home where Christian influence prevailed, but his own conversion was delayed until 1874, when at a meeting at Big Springs, near Dallas, his heart was touched under the preaching of Rev. Lockhart and he surrendered and offered his services in some manner to the forces striving against sin. A voice called him to preach, and he qualified by ordination in 1887 at the Mount Calvary church, north of Crandall. He entered actively into the work of pastor and into the auxiliary work of the church and filled several charges about the country, including a service of eight years as pastor of the church where he was ordained. He continued the work unfil 1910, when his physical condition rendered him incapable of effective and efficient service and he abandoned active connection with the ministry as well as his business affairs. He was a member of the East Fork Baptist Association, which co-operated with the Church party during the split in the Baptist church of Texas.

Mr. Hammack married Miss Mary E. Rogers, whose father spent his last years and died in Scott county, Texas. She was born near Forrest, Mississippi, in 1854, and she and her husband became the parents of the following children: Russell P., a farmer of Kaufman county, who married Maggie McShann; Henry M., who is engaged in farming near Kemp, Texas; John D., a resident of Groesbeek, Texas, who married Lula Trra; and Martha, who is Mrs. J. W. Webb, of Bosque county, Texas. The mother of these children died in 1890. O January 4, 1893, in Kaufman county, Mr. Hammack married the second time, Mrs. J. M. Yates, who was Ruth Seaberry, a daughter of Oliver and Susan (Harper) Seaberry, native of Georgia. The father was a prominent planter and farmer. By her first marriage the present Mrs. Hammack had seven children, five of whom are living, two dying in infancy. Although retired from active participation in business affairs, Mr.

Hammack still evinces a keen interest in all that affects the welfare of his community, where his well-known in-tegrity, probity and force of character give him a distinct influence in the forming of public opinion.

THOMAS H. JACKSON. Now manager for the real estate department of the Central Texas Exchange Company at Waco, Mr. Jackson has had a long and successful career in business affairs at Waco. Starting in as a clerk with a mercantile house, he was for seventeen years continuously identified with tthe fortunes of that firm, and rose to a responsible place in its employ. the interests nearest his heart.

GAYLORD N. BEBOUT. An individual thoroughly versed in the laws of the country, as distinguished from the business man or the politician, has always been a recognized power. He has ever been depended upon to conserve the best and permanent interests of the whole people of his community, and without those like bim and of his practical judgment, his deep knowledge and his thorough training, the efforts of the statesman and the industry of the worker in the marts of trade and commerce and the labors of the mechanic would go for naught. The reason is not far to seek; the lawyer is never the creature of chance or circumstance. The profession is open only to talent, and no definite prestige or success can be attained therein save by the utmost perseverance, indomitable energy, tireless patience and strong mentality.

Among the distinguished members of the Texas legal profession who have risen to prominence in their chosen calling through the possession of these qualities, Gaylord N. Bebout holds a leading position. Although a resident of this city only since 1913, he has already firmly established himself in the confidence of the people of Waco, and in the field of real estate, insurance, corporation, bonding and civil law has shown himself a worthy opponent for any member of the bar. Mr. Bebout opponent for any member of the bar. Mr. Bebout was born in Knox county, Ohio, June 27, 1878, and is a son of Aaron S. and Louisa Olive (Newell) Bebout. His father, a native of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, was born February 7, 1848, removing to Knox county, Ohio, in early youth, and there grew up in a rnral community, early adopting the tilling of the soil as the medium through which he would rise to success. He continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits in Ohio until 1882, when he came to Texas and settled in Coryell county, having decided that the West offered better opportunities than either the eastern or middle western states. Here he settled on a ranch, devoted himself to the sheep and cattle business, and through industry, good management and well directed effort accumulated a competency, so that he was able to retire and enjoy the fruits of his early years of labor. At this time he is living quietly at Gatesville, and is known as a capitalist, owning considerable stock in several banks in different parts of the state, as well as a number of farm properties in the vicinity of Gatesville. His life has been one of industry, and his transactions have always been characterized by the utmost integrity, so that he retains the respect and esteem of his fellow-men in marked degree. Mr. Bebout was married in Ohio, to Miss Louisa Olive Newell, who was born in the Buckeye State, April 6, 1851, and they became the parents of one son; Gaylord N.

Mr. Bebout received his early education in the public schools of Gatesville, Texas, having been brought to Texas as a lad of four years, following which he attended the schools of Winfield, Kansas, his parents residing at that place for a short time. When his preliminary training was completed, he entered Emporia College, Emporia, Kansas, where he spent three years in that institution, and later spent two years in Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio. Having decided upon a legal career. Mr. Bebout next entered the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and in 1905 was graduated from that institution with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He at once opened an office at Vinita, Oklahoma, having been admitted to the bar of that state as well as to the Supreme Courts of Michigan and Kansas, and in the thriving Oklahoma town continued to be engaged in practice until 1913, at which time be came to Waco and opened an office at 809 Amicable Life Insurance Building. Here he has continued in the enjoyment of a large and representative professional business, making a specialty of real estate, insurance, corporation, bonding and civil law. One of Mr. Bebout's chief characteristics is the careful manner in which he prepares his cases and the accurate and systematic manner in nis cases and the accurate and systematic manner in which he draws up his legal papers. His preparation has been thorough, his study is still continuous, and he is rarely at a loss to find a precedent for any contin-gency which arises. Among his fellow-practitioners he is respected as a legist who follows the unwritten ethics of the profession, and whose courtesy and gentlemanly bearing make him an honored opponent. In his business operations, Mr. Bebout has been very successful, and a this time be has a number of properties, including valuable stock in the Texas Fidelity and Bonding Company of Waco.

Mr. Bebout was married at Dunkirk, New York, September 12, 1901, to Miss Effie Esler Mann, the daughter of Horace A. Mann. Mr. Mann is widely known in amusement circles all over the United States, being manager of the contract department for such great amuse-ment enterprises as Barnum & Bailey and Forepaugh Brothers great circuses, a position he has held for many years. At this time he resides at Syracuse, New York. and is well known in business circles of that city. child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bebont: Gaylord

J. J. Beall.

N., Jr. Mr. Bebout is a member of the Young Men's Business League, and is a prominent Mason, belonging to the Cousistory of McAllister, and the Shrine at Tulsa, Oklahoma. He finds his greatest pleasure in his home, however, and he has never allowed fraternities or politics to lure him therefrom. He and Mrs. Bebout are consistent members of the Congregational church, and she has more than a local reputation as a vocalist, being a leading member of the Eulepica Club, a singing organization.

CRATE DALTON. The pioneer in the stock and bond brokerage business in McLennan county, Crate Dalton has long been identified with the movements and activities which have made Waco one of the leading cities of Texas, and both in the business field and the political arena has displayed characteristics which have commended him to the people. Still a young man, he has accomplished much through enterprise and initiative, and his career since his college days has been one or constant activity and consecutive advancement. Mr. Dalton is a Kentuckian by nativity, but a Texan by training. He was born December 19, 1879, at Mayfield, Kentucky, and is a son of George W. and Cordelia Dalton. George W. Dalton was born in Springfield, Tennessee, in 1843, was there married, and subsequently went to Kentucky, from whence he came to the Lone Star state in 1881 and settled in McLennan county. Here he engaged in agri-cultural pursuits during the remainder of his life and passed away in 1912, at the age of sixty-nine years. Cordelia (Highsmith) Dalton was also born at Springfield, Tennesseee, in 1847, and still survives her husband, being a resident of Coryell county, Texas. They were the parents of ten children, as follows: Alice, Martin V., Marcus P., Tolbert, Crate, Teresa, George W., Jr., Gilbert, Harvev and Leonard.

Crate Dalton began his education in the public schools of McLennan county, whence he had been brought as a child of two years, and subsequently entered Baylor University, from which institution he was graduated in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. One of the foremost pupils of his class, during his last year at college he won the oratorical contest for his school in competition with representatives from six other leading universities of the state. Following his graduation, Mr. Dalton took up educational work, and for six months was engaged in teaching in the public schools and Barton College, but this work did not appeal to him and he eventually turned his attention to other pursuits. In 1910 he became the pioneer of the stock and bond brokergraph users in McLennan country, when he opened offices at No. 301 Amicable building, Waco, and since that time he has built up a large and representative clientele in this field. Mr. Dalton has large landed interests, having two farms in Coryell country, comprising 226 acres, and 1482 acres in Gaines county, the latter being leased and used as ranch land. He is also the owner of his own modern home at No. 2022 Barrett street. Mr. Dalton has long been interested in political matters, and his public spirit and loyal devotion to Waco's best interests brought him favorably before the public in 1914, when he was a candidate for the office of mayor on the Democratic prohibition ticket. Fraternally he is a Mason, and he also holds membership in the Young Men's Business League, of which he was first vice president for one year and a member of the board of directors for four years. With his family he attends the Baptist church, and has been liberal in his support of its various movements. He is fond of fishing and spends much of his spare time at the sport, but finds his greatest pleasure in his home.

Mr. Dalton was married at Oglesby, Coryell county, Texas, June 28, 1903, to Miss Susie C. Isbell, daughter of George P. Isbell, a retired farmer now living in Waco. To this union there have come two children: Lowell, born May 15, 1905; and Lena F., born July 29, 1910.

JAMES M. MILSTEAD entered the realty field as a dealer only in 1912, yet he has already attained prestige in this his chosen field, and through his activities and welldirected operations has served to promote the best interests of Waco and the surrounding territory. To the energies of those who devote their attention to the exploitation of real estate, every community owes much for its growth and development, and the really successful operator and he who gains the most in the long run is he who advances the community's interests while furthering his own. Mr. Milstead undoubtedly belongs to this class, and to his energy and initiative Waco is indebted for the development of several sections. Mr. Milstead was born August 21, 1873, in Smith county, Texas, and is a son of John L. and Mildred (Ragsdale) Milstead.

John L. Milstead was born in Mississippi, but was brought to Texas as a lad and here spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. He passed away February 15, 1912, at the age of sixty-four years, having been born October 10, 1848. Mrs. Milstead was born November 22, 1854, in Cherokee county, Texas, and died May 24, 1893, having been the mother of three children: James M., Jessie T. and Rebecca. James M. Milstead was given ordinary educational advantages in his youth, attending the schools of Tyler until he reached the age of seventeen years. He was industrious and ambitious and made the most of his opportunities, and embarked upon his career among the world's workers in a minor position in a printing establishment, where he learned the printer's trade. There he spent five years. and at the end of that period came to Waco, where he became engaged in newspaper work. This held him for two years only, however, and at the end of that time he began traveling in the interests of R. G. Dun & Company, being associated with this concern for a like period. Mr. Milstead then received his introduction to the realty business as cashier for the American Freehold-Land Mortgage Company, of London, England, with office at Waco, and for twelve years he continued to act in this capacity, all the time gaining valuable experience. In 1912 Mr. Milstead established an office at No. 404 Amicable building, Waco, and here he has since carried on his real estate operations. A man of enterprise, energy and resource, he has been successful in building up a large and representative clientage, and his operations have been extensive in their scope. When not engrossed have been extensive in their scope. When not engrossed in the activities of business, Mr. Milstead may often be found working among his chickens, for he took up poul-try raising several years ago as a hobby and since that time has become somewhat of a fancier. He belongs to the Young Men's Business League and the Waco Advertising Club, and when he can spare time for a vacation takes frequent hunting and fishing trips. Fraternally, he is connected with the Knights of Pythias, in which he has numerous friends, and his political views correspond with those of the Democratic party. He has never been an office seeker, but at all times has been ready to discharge his full share of the duties of citi-

Mr. Milstead was married at Waco, March 15, 1904,

Mr. Milstead was married at Waco, March 15, 1904, Emma (Mizell) Randle and a member of an old pioneer family of Waco, and to this union there have come two bright and interesting children: Randle L. and Mildred F.

THOMAS J. BEALL. One of the best known figures in El Paso, Texas, is that of Thomas J. Beall, the well known lawyer, who in spite of his seventy-six years, and his long and active career is today one of the most energetic men in the business world of El Paso. He is well known all over the state, both in a professional way and through his prominent fraternal relations. He belongs to the type of southern gentleman that the exigen-cies of the Civil war called into being. They were the men who made the bravest soldiers and then when the cause was lost, returned home and devoted the energies that had heretofore been expended on the battlefields of Virginia to building up a devastated South, and the honor and chivalry that is associated with the military caste has always found its truest exponent in this class of which Captain Beall is one of the few remaining members.

Thomas J. Beall was born in Thomaston, Georgia, a son of Doctor Jeremiah Beall, a native of Georgia. Dr. Beall was a prominent physician in Thomaston and Macon, but removed in 1851 to Texas, locating at Mar-shall. Here he was actively and successfully engaged in the practice of his profession a few years when he retired. He served as surgeon during the Creek Indian wars, and spent the last years of his life on his ranch near Comfort, Texas, dying in 1887. He married Susan V. Neal, a native of Georgia. She also is dead and is interred in Talbotton, Georgia.

Captain Beall received his earlier education in the schools in Georgia, although he was only a youngster when his father came to Texas. He later attended Tulane University in New Orleans and then entered the law department of Cumberland University in Tennessee. He was graduated from this institution with the class of 1858 and immediately located in Marshall, Texas. Here he practiced until the Civil war broke out and in 1861 he joined the Confederate army as a member of the company commanded by Captain Van Zandt, who was later to become Major Van Zandt. This company was known as the Marshall Guards and saw active service during the war. Captain Beall participated in the battles around Vicksburg, and then was wounded and cap-tured in the first battle of Fort Donelson, in which the fort surrendered. This was on the 16th of February, 1861, and he was held a prisoner at Johnston's Island until September of that year, when he was exchanged. He then took part in the defense of Vicksburg when the city was assaulted by General Sherman, the result being the defeat of the latter officer. After the surrender of the city General Gregg was commissioned a brigadier general and Captain Beall was appointed on his staff, with the rank of captain. In October, 1864, Captain Beall took part in the battle of Chickamauga, where General Gregg was seriously wounded. After his recovery the general was assigned to the command of Hood's Brigade which was then on the march to join General Captain Beall remained with the general until he Lee. Captain Beall remained with the general until ne was killed on the James river near Richmond, during the Wilderness campaign. The captain participated in most of the battles leading up to the surrender of Richmond, among these being the battle of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Courthouse, Cold Harbor, and finally the engagements near Richmond and Petersburg. In the battle of the Wilderness Captain Beall had his horse shot from under him and he was again wounded, but after the ball was extracted he rejoined his regiment, for in those last terrible days, every man was worth ten Federals, for they were fighting with their backs to the wall and with the courage of despair. Captain Beall fought through the last campaign and after the surrender returned to Texas to once more take up his law practice. He located in Bryan, Texas, and there remained until 1880, gaining a wide reputation as a brilliant and able lawyer. In 1866, during the campaign of Governor Geddings, he was offered the nomination for Congress, which at that time was equivalent to an election, but he refused the offer, having no aspiration towards political honors. He was one of the eight electors who east their votes for Samuel J. Tilden for president in 1876.

In 1881, after a very successful career as a lawyer in Bryan, Texas, he removed to El Paso where he organized the firm of Davis and Davis. This firm became the leading law firm in the city and did a large and lucrative husiness. In 1884 Captain Beall accepted the attorneyship for the Gould and Santa Fe Railroad system and removed to Fort Worth where he made his headquarters until 1887. He then resigned his position and returned to El Paso where he established the firm of Beall and Kemp, which in its turn became one of the most prominent and successful firms in the city. Since this time he has been engaged in practice here and his firm numbers among its clients such powerful and influential corporations as the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad Company, the Western Union Telegraph Company and the State National Bank. He was elected president of the State Bar Association in 1887, and served his term with distinction.

Captain Beall takes an active part in the affairs of the fraternal associations of which he is a member. chief interest is in the Masons, of which he has been a member since the war. He is a Knights Templar and was honored with the office of grand commander of the order of Knights Templar of the state of Texas. He was the prime mover in the organization of the Benevolent, Protective Order of Elks in El Paso and was the first Exalted Ruler of the order.

Captain Beall has been twice married. His first marriage was in 1866, to Miss Laura Wilson, a daughter of Colonel Thomas Wilson, of Brazos county, Texas. She died in 1867. His second marriage was to Miss Margaret Ragsdale, a daughter of Daniel Ragsdale, of the state of Mississippi. Mrs. Beall is living, and is the mother of four children. The captain has one daughter, Mary Beall, by his first wife. Susan, the eldest of the children of his second marriage, is the wife of E. E. Neff, of the firm of Neff and Niles, of El Paso. Nancy married Joseph F. Williams, who is cashier of the City National Bank, of El Paso. Florence became the wife of John A. Covode of the Bank of Grand Rapids, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and his one son, Thomas, who lives in El Paso.

WILLIAM R. SAUNDERS, JR. One of Waco's very successful attorneys in civil practice is W. R. Saunders. In five years he has won his spurs in many cases, and ranks alongside many older men at the bar.

What Mr. Saunders is in the law is an illustration of the old saying that as the twig is bent so is the tree inclined. From childhood he was accustomed to the admonishing of his father to take up a legal career, and his early ambitions having thus been cast in a definite direction and with a liberal helpfulness on the part of his father he began practice soon after reaching majority. William R. Saunders was born in Winona, Mississippi, May 10, 1887, a son of William R. and Francis (Allen) Saunders. His father, who was born in Starksville, Mississippi, in 1852, was a merchant, and in 1892 located at Forreston, in Ellis county, Texas. The mother was born at Selma, Alabama, in 1859. Of the two children, the daughter, Clyde, died in 1884.

The junior Saunders in 1908 was graduated Bachelor of Science from Baylor University, and remained in Waco to read law in the office of Judge George Clark. On June 21, 1909, he was admitted to the bar, and about the same time received his license to practice in the Federal courts. His work has been entirely confined to the civil law, and he makes a specialty of damage and personal injury cases. He is the junior member of the firm of Witt & Saunders, who have their offices on the fif-teenth floor of the Amicable building. Mr. Saunders from 1909 to 1913 was assistant city attorney of Waco. Mr. Saunders is unmarried, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Royal Order of Moose. In politics he is a Democrat, and is an active member of the Young Men's Business League of Waco. His church home is the Austin Avenue Methodist. When he gets away from his profession it is usually for a fishing trip, since that is his favorite recreation.

DB. JORN MANGUM, one of the leading and most successful exponents of the osteopathic system of treatment, has been in active practice of his profession in Waco since he was graduated from the Still College of Osteopathy at De Moines, Iowa, in 1907. Dr. Mangum was born in Raleigh, Smith county, Mississippi, on March 19, 1853, and is a son of Arthur and Celia E. (Caraway) Mangum. The father was a farmer and one time sheriff of Smith county, Mississippi, and in his later years was a merchant at Silver Creek, Mississippi. He died there in 1898, when he was seventy-two years old. The mother, who was also a native daughter of Smith county, Mississippi, died in 1858, after which Mr. Mangum married a Mrs. Dixon, a widow with one child. Five children were born of the first marriage,—Eugenia, Frances, John, Margaret, and William.

John Mangum was scantily enough educated in his boyhood days, for he was only permitted to attend school a few days at a time up to his twentieth birthday. He began clerking in a store then, and continued in that work until the fall of 1885, when he came to Texas, setting in Burnet county, and until 1893 he was cashier and bookkeeper for F. H. Halloway & Company. Then he was engaged as a cotton buyer for two years, and in 1896 he came to Waco as manager and head of the ginning department of the McFadden Cotton Busines. In 1995 he resigned from that position and going to Des Moines, lowa, entered the Still College of Osteopathit, tution. He established himself in Waco soon thereafter and he has since been active in the practice of his profession, meeting excellent success in his work and drawing to him a wide and ever growing elientele.

Aside from the regular practice of the Doctor, he has given some attention to the preparation and manufacture of a remedy for exerma, burns and skin diseases of every order, which he puts on the market under the name of Zee-Ma-Lol, and by the Dr. Mangum Medicine Company, of Waco. This preparation, though but lately placed on the market, has already gained a deal of popularity, and is regarded as a reliable and efficacious remedy for the ills for which its manufacturers offer it. Dr. Mangum has made a specialty of diseases of the skin, and has met with excellent success in his treatments of those disorders since he identified himself with his profession.

On April 4, 1876, Dr. Mangum was married to Miss Jane Gibert, daughter of Rev. Joseph and Mary (Stanley) Gibert, of Mount Olive, Covington country, Mississippi. They have two children,—Bertha S. and Mary S. Mangum. The first named is the wife of C. R. Sherrill, a lumber merchant of San Antonio, and the mother of two children,—Charles M. and Eugenia, and Mary is married to C. L. Maule, a bookkeeper in San Antonio, Dr. Mangum is a member of the Pretorians, and he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

WILLIAM F. COLE, M. D. Numbered among the leading specialist of Teass in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, is Dr. William F. Cole, who has returned to the scene of his former successes at Waco, after five years passed in other localities of the state. Doctor Cole eame to Waco more than twenty years ago and rapidly rose to the leadership among the practitioners engaged in specializing in his line, his thorough preparation, his inherent skill and his deep and comprehensive knowledge bringing him a large practice and high distinction in his calling, and today he is repeating his former achievements and again rapidly forging to the forefront.

Dottor Cole is a Georgian, born in Franklin county, January 24, 1557, a son of Jacob L. and Frances P. (Herndon) Cole. His father was born at Westminster, Pickins District (now Oconee county), S. C., in 1826, and grew up on a plantation, adopting the vocation of farming when he attained his majority. At the outbreak of the war between the South and the North, he enlisted as first lieutenant in Company I, of the Georgia infantry, and served until the close of hostilities, when he returned to his Georgia plantation. In 1895, more dever, he came to Texas, and here continued as a fixed and a cattle raiser until his death in 1850. Mrs. Cole, who was also born in Pickins District, South Carolina, in 1858, passed away in Texas in 1913, having been the mother of mine children, as follows: Dr. William F., of this review, Salina, who is now the wife of Dr. J. W. James, a practicing physician of Cal Allen, Texas; David H., a practicing physician of Cal Allen, Texas; David H., a prosperous merchant and farmer of Aline, Texas; Lucy, who is deceased; Clandius, who is successfully engaged in farming at Kent, Fexas; Burdes, a successfull farmer of Sweetwater, Texas; and Samuel, of Lake Charles, Texas, Wene he is a prosperous farmer.

William F. Cole was eleven years of age when he accompanied his parents to Texas, and here he attended the public schools of Jacksonville and Sherman. Following this he became a student of the University of Nashville, Tennessee, where he was graduated in 1882, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and he next entered George Washington University, at Washington, D. C. He was graduated from that noted institution in 1889, and at once took a post-graduate course at Georgetown University, succeeding which he went to Europe and studied in clinics and hospitals in London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna, from 1891 until 1893, in the latter year returning to the United States and establishing himself in practice at Waco. Here he continued in active practice as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat until 1909, when he was generally accounted the most eminent and successful specialist in his line in Central Texas. Giving up his practice because of impaired health, due to too constant devotion to the duties of his calling, he went to Brownsville, in the vicinity of which city he was engaged in farming until 1912, and then again started practice, at Brownsville. There he continued until January 24, 1914, when he returned to Waco, and here he has continued to maintain offices at No. 902 Amicable Building. He is a member of the McLennan County Medical Society, the Texas Central Medical Society, the Texas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has done much scientific research work, and his hobby consists of inventions along the line of his calling. During his vacations Doctor Cole takes frequent trips accompanied by rod or gun, and seldom returns without some trophy of the field or stream. In political matters a Democrat, he served as county commissioner of Cameron county from November, 1912, until March, 1913, although he has not cared for public office. That he was popular, however, is shown by the fact that the voters gave him 355 ballots to 5 for his opponent. Doctor Cole has been successful in a business way, and is the owner of 240 acres of valuable land in Cameron county. He was for some years a director of the old Business Men's Association. Fraternally, he is connected with the Masonic Fraternity, a member of Gurly Lodge of Waco.

JOHN T. DOLLINS. In popular government the tendency of the choice of the people falling upon men best fitted for the special duties of the particular office is well illustrated in the case of John T. Dollins, who is now commissioner of the police and fire departments, of water and lights, in the eity government of Waco. Mr. Dollins has been an active business man at Waco for many years, was a patrolman and for eight years chief of the police department, and the people of the eity recognize that there is no better equipped member of the community for supervising and looking after the important duties lodged in this department of municipal af-

faire

His first eight years were spent as a farm worker, and in 1887 he moved to Wace and after six months' experience in a butcher shop opened an establishment of his own in that line. He continued to sell meats to the local trade from 1887 to 1894 and then took a place on the local police department, spent four years in the ranks, and for eight years was chief of the department. Since resigning in 1906, Mr. Dollins has given his active attention to his large retail meat business, and is one of the successful business men of Waco.

Mr. Dollins takes a just pride in a capable, efficient and competent administration of the department of public service entrusted to his care and devotes almost as much attention to his official duties as to his private business and his home and family.

R. L. RANDOLPH. The record of R. L. Randolph, sheriff of Wichita county, is that of a man who has by his own unaided efforts worked his way upward to a position of independence in material things and prominence in public life. His career has been one of industry and perseverance and the systematic and honorable business metods which he has followed have won him the support and confidence of many. His election to the office of heriff, in 1912, by the largest majority ever a high tribute to his personal worth and popularity. Mr. Randolph was born at Nashville, Tennessee, October 15, 1974, and is a son of John H. and Harriet (Davis)

He has always been a supporter of democratic principles. who resides in this city.

JOSEPH RAMSEY FERRELL, M. D. A number of the most talented and learned members of the Texas medical fraternity have devoted their attentions to specializing, believing that in this manner they are better able to accomplish a greater measure of good than in the line of general practice. Among the foremost is found Joseph Ramsey Ferrell, M. D., widely and favorably known as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, who for more than twenty years has been located in practice in Waco, where he now has offices at No. 49 and 50 Peerless Building. Doctor Ferrell was horn in Tenessee, December 2, 1800, and is a son of Jesse R. and Lucy (Ramsey) Ferrell. His father, born in 1854, in Cannon county, Tennessee, came to Texas with his family in 1883 and here passed the remainder of his life as a nurseryman, passing away in 1891. He was a good and reliable citizen, industrions in his labors and thoroughly progressive in his citizenship, and won the respect and esteem of those with whom he came into contact by reason of his many admirable traits of character. He married (first) Lucy Ramsey, who was born in 1836, in Washington county, Tennessee, and died in 1862, the mother of two children: Jesse and Joseph Ramsey. Mr. Ferrell married (second) Mrs. Deater, a widow of Lebanon, Tennessee, who passed away in 1896.

The public schools of his native locality furnished Dector Ferrell with his preliminary educational training, and he early displayed a predilection for a professional career. Accordingly, he entered Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tennessee, and subsequently became a student in the University of Tennessee, where he was graduated in 1852 with the degree of Dector of Medicine. In that year he embarked in practice in Bedford county, Tennessee, where he remained one and one-half years, and following this spent eight mouth in Nashville, with Dr. J. G. learning and sympathy, and since 1907 has been exam-ining physician for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, and has held a like position for the St. Louis & Southwestern Railway since 1912. In the latter year he was elected to the position of general inspector of the school children of Waco for the Board of Education, the pupils being examined twice annually. Doctor Ferrell has never ceased to be a student and generally takes his vacations in trips to New York for post-graduate courses, when he is accompanied by his wife. He is a valued member of the various organizations of his calling, and his strict adherence to professional ethics have given him established standing among his fellow-practioners in the state. Fraternally, he is connected with the Woodmen of the World, and he was also a member of the Waco Light Infantry for four years. In a business way he has been successful, and at this time he is a stockholder in the Lumbermen's Security and Trust Company of Waco and owns several pieces of real estate in this city. Progressive in all things, he has given his support to the new political party of that name since its organization in 1912. With Mrs. Ferrell, he attends the Christian church.

On April 2, 1893, Doctor Ferrell was married at Carlisle, Kentucky, to Miss Marie Fisher. They have no children.

Francis M. Maxwell. Among the strong and able members of the McLennan county bar, one who has won merited distinction in the field of civil law is Francis M. Maxwell, who for twenty years has been located in practice at Waco. The predilection which he manifested at an early age for a professional career seems to have had a good basis in his natural tendencies and abilities, for in the calling to which he has devoted his life he has won substantial success and his position among the leading legists of his adopted city is firmly established. Mr. Maxwell was born in Coosa county, Alabama, March 4, 1861, and is a son of Francis M. and Alabama R. (Jordan) Maxwell. His father was born in Elbert county, Georgia, in 1826, and was a farmer and planter through out his life, passing away in 1891 as one of the substantial men of his community. The mother, who was born in Coosa county, Alabama, in 1835, still survives and makes her home at Waco. There were twelve children in the family, namely: Reuben, who is deceased; Annie; Willie E.; Francis M.; Eugene; Thomas, Mary and Ora, who are all deceased; Cecil K. and Charles M., twins; Otis A. and Sidney T.

Francis M. Maxwell received his early education in the public schools of Coosa county, Alabama, which he attended until he was twenty years of age, and early developed a strong desire for a professional career. Ac-cordingly, he began to read law in the offices and under the preceptorship of Col. W. D. Bulger, at Dadeville, Alabama, and at that place was admitted to the bar in 1884. After spending eighteen months there he removed to Waxahachie, Texas, where he spent eight years, and while there acted for two years as county attorney of Ellis county. On leaving Waxahachie he went to Portland, Oregon, where he remained two years, and in 1895 came to Waco, which city has continued to be his field of practice. He has confined himself to a general practice of civil law, and has been very successful in this department, at all times displaying a comprehensive knowledge of law and unfaltering fidelity to the interests of his clients. He maintains offices at No. 403 Amicable Building. Mr. Maxwell belongs to the various organizations of his profession, and devotes much time to study, being thoroughly devoted to his vocation.

On June 6, 1902, at the home of his bride, in Fayette county, Texas, Mr. Maxwell was married to Miss Lucy Drisdale, daughter of William E. and Judith (Matthews) Drisdale, and four children have been born to this union; Edith, Edward D., Eunice and Francis M., Jr.

ROBERT SHERMAN VAUGHAN. Among the prominent business men of Waco, Texas, may be mentioned the name of Robert Sherman Vaughan, who is the successful manager of the McLennan County Abstract Company. Mr. Vaughan has spent practically the whole of his life within the boundaries of the state of Texas and is well known and highly respected as a business man throughout the state. He has devoted much of his life to the work in which he is now engaged and there is no man in this section who is more thoroughly capable of holding the position which Mr. Vaughan now occupies. Robert Sherman Vaughan was born in McMinn county, Tennessee, on the 27th of October, 1864, the son of Robert Y. and Martha A. (Tripplett) Vaughan, both of whom were born in Tennessee. The paternal grandfather of Robert S. Vaughan was a native of Virginia and came to Tennessee about the time of the Revolutionary war. He became register of deeds for McMinn county and in other ways was prominently identified with the public affairs of this section of Tennessee. Robert S. Vaughan's maternal grandfather was Joel Tripplett and he died in 1877 at the age of eighty-eight. Robert Y. Vaughan left his native state in 1857 and came to Hayes county, Texas, where he became in time a large stockman and land owner. at the outpreak of the Civil war he returned to Tennessee and entered the engineering corps in the Federal army. He served in this department of the army throughout the war, his entire service being in the state of Tennessee. He remained in this state after the close of the war until 1877, when he again came to Texas and settled in Grayson county, later moving to Bosque county. It was in 1880 that he came to McLennan county and here he lived for many years, widely known and highly respected. He always took a prominent part in local affairs, both political and civic, and his death on January 12, 1912, was a serious loss to the village of West, where he was then living. He was eighty-eight years of age. His wife was born in 1836 and died in 1893, the mother of ten children, eight of whom are living. Those deceased are Thomas and Sallie J., who was the wife of E. W. Neilson. The living children are John M., Joe M., Robert S., Iradell Tennie, Flora, the wife of H. V. Aderhold, Mary, the wife of T. B. Terry, Barsha, who married R. E. Cook, and Mattie, who became the wife of W. J. McFarlen.

Robert Sherman Vaughan received his education in the public schools of West, being an attendant at the high school of the village. He came to Waco in 1888 and there engaged in the abstract business, being one of the first to compile the abstracts of property in McLennan county. He was appointed deputy county clerk shortly after taking up his residence in Waco, and was reappointed at different times, his term of office covering in all a space of fourteen years. He was in charge of a court department during this time and in the course of his duties in this line he became fairly well acquainted with the law in the matters under his charge and by making it a special study he was an expert in this line when he resigned from this office. During 1900 and 1901 he was traveling inspector for the American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, and carried out the duties of his office so successfully that he was brought to the notice of the officials of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, in consequence of which he was appointed claim agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in the state of Texas. He held this position from 1903 until August, 1912, when he came to Waco to become manager of the McLennan County Abstract Company, resigning from his former position. This abstract company has compiled the fine book of abstracts of the county which are now in use.

Mr. Vaughan was married on the 6th of December, 1903, to Miss Corinne Foreman, a daughter of the late W. Z. Foreman, of Waco, and they have one daughter, Derothy.

J. H. Spunous. The city of Waco since its very beginning has had no more influential nor beneficent civic factor than those furnished by the Sturgis family. That the straint was the state of the straint of the straint of the straint of one man's or one family's life of activity is perhaps the highest possible tribute that can be paid to human enterprise. None would dispute that the city of Waco, especially during its earlier years, was deeply impressed with the character and influence of the late Edwin A. Sturgis, as in later years the city has also had among its most progressive citizens the son of this pioneer business builder and civic leader.

James Henry Sturgis, who has been actively identified with business affairs in Waco for more than a quarter of a century, was born in this city January 26, 1867, a son of the late Edwin Anson and Rosalie P. (White) Sturgis. The father was born in Maryland and the mother in Virginia. James Sturgis, the paternal graud-father, moved from Maryland to Hillsboro, Texas, during the early fifties. The late Edwin A. Sturgis attained his education and was reared in Maryland, whence he accompanied the family to Arkansas and subsequently to Hillsboro. He became a citizen of Waco in 1859, a year Hillsboro. He became a cirizen of watch in 353, a year which practically marks the beginning of growth and business enterprise in that town. He was married in Texas, and brought his bride to Waco, and began his career there as a general merchant. He had all the qualities of a successful business man and at the same time was a civic leader, whose name and support were considered necessary to the success of every general movement for the upbuilding or welfare of a community. He was also frequently honored with the conspicuous offices at the gift of the community. He served as one of the first Mayors of Waco. Nearly all the early public schools were built under his supervision, and on his own account he organized a fire protection service, an almost unique example of civic service, since the matter of fire protection rests more immedately upon community cooperation than almost any other public necessity. He was also the originator of the beautiful Oakwood Cemetery, and was the active spirit in a number of less important enterprises. His death occurred in 1895 at the age of sixty-three years, after a life of long and honored usefulness. His wife passed away in 1882 at the age of thirty-eight. Of their children, besides James H. the following survive: Edwin A., Jr., of Waco; Littleton; Rowena S., wife of A. B. Cowan of Waco; and John N.

of Lexington, Missouri.

Mr. James H. Sturgis received his early education in a private school at Waco, and subsequently studied in Baylor University of this city, and from here went east and matriculated in the Washington & Lee University at Lexington, Virginia. He was graduated from this old institution in 1886, and soon afterwards returned to his home in Waco, where his residence and business activity have since been centered. He engaged in the fire insurance business, and also for some time was general book-keeper in the Provident National Bank at Waco. Since 1966 his cuttre time has been devoted to the real estate loan business, and has a large record of important transactions and a steady patronage through these avenues of commercial practice.

Mr. Sturgis in 1887 married Miss Jennie W. McCrumb, whose death occurred in 1899. The one daughter of their narriage is named Rowena. The present Mrs. Sturgis was before her marriage Miss Lulu Carroll of Waco, Their three children are James H., Jr., Carroll White and Anna Elizabeth. Mr. Sturgis is a member of the Y. M. B. L.

JAMES S. KONE. A prominent attorney at Denison since 1897, Mr. Kone has enjoyed a large private practice, and has served several years in the office of city attorney.

Mr. Kone, who was born July 24, 1874, at Chetopa, Kansas, is of Scotch-Irish descent, and the only one of his immediate family in the state of Texas. His parents were O. B. and Nora S. (Standifer). Kone. His mother was a sister of I. M. Standifer, one of the noted political leaders of Texas. She was related to the family of Mad Anthony Wayne, of Revolutionary and Indian war fame. The father was born in Maryland and the mother in Mississippi. The former served as a soldier in the Confederate army, and was all through the war and fought in many of the best known battles. Later he was engaged in the insurance business for a number of years, and had previously represented as traveling salesman a wholesale house in St. Louis. His death occurred in January, 1913, while his wife passed away in 1883. There were three children in the family of the parents, and the Denison lawyer was second in order of birth.

With his admission to the bar in 1897 he began active practice, and has since built up a large clientage in Grayson county. In 1902 he was elected city attorney, an office which he held for two years. In 1905, he was appointed to fill out an unexpired term in the same position, and again in 1911 the city council appointed him city attorney, and he performed the duties of that office until Apri, and he performed the duties of that office until Apri,

In political affairs Mr. Kone has been a worker for the Democratic party since attaining his majority. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of the saffiliated with the Woodmen of the World. On June 7, 1905, at Sherman, he married Miss May Evans, a daughter of J. F. and Lizzie Evans. Her father is in the real estate business in Sherman. Mr. and Mrs. Kone have one child, James S., Jr., seventeen months old at this writing. Mr. Kone is a lover of fishing and hunting and spends his vacations as a rule in pursuit of those sports. His home is at 819 West Gandy Street, and his office in the Security Building in Denison.

Jours Wesley Downs. A soldier, planter, journalist, Major Downs has had a long and active career in central Texas, and is one of the most eminent citizens of Waco has been his home for nearly sixty years, and be is probably the oldest living resident in point of years of this splendid city of central Texas. He is one of the few men now living who have witnessed its growth from a pioneer community on the banks of the Brazos River, until it has now become a center of many railroads and great commercial, educational and citie enterprise.

John Wesley Downs was born at Mount Hope, Alahama, November 15, 1838, a son of William W. and Henrietta (Sparks) Downs. His father was a native of North Carolina and his mother of Georgia. They moved to Alabama in 1820, and in 1854 brought their family to Texas, coming up into what was then the frontier border and locating at Waco. For many years his father was the proprietor of the largest general merchandies store in that town, and also conducted a blacksmith shop, and was a leader among business men and citzens of this locality. He was a strong man, had the quality of true leadership, and it was natural that many followed his example implicitly, with complete confidence of the success of any undertaking to which be put his hand, the accumulated a large amount of property, and lived to hope the success of any come and the general esteem paid him by to law how his life. He and his estimable wife attained the age of ciptly years, and they reared a family of twelve children, among whom Major Downs was the seventh, and he is one of the three now living.

Eighteen months after the family moved to Wace, John Wesley Downs, in company with L. S. Ross, who subsequeutly became noted as a general and as governor of Texas, set out on horseback and made the trip across the country through rough and uncertain ways to Florence, Alabama, where both these young Texans entered college and pursued four years of instruction in the Wesleyan University. Major Downs graduated from that institution in the college of the college that institution in July, 1860, and returned home to Waco for a short time before the troubles of Civil war devastated the country. During this brief interim, he was a member of the mercantile firm of S. C. Downs Brother & Company. The father devoted his time to other pursuits, such as the supervision of his plantation and large other enterprises, while the sons had active management of the store. Only a few months were allowed for this quiet mercantile enterprise, and then the war was precipitated and every civil condition and relation and occupation disturbed and thrown into confusion in which it remained for four years. Major Downs re-signed his home business interests to his father, joined an independent company, and from October, 1862, gave two years of faithful and efficient service to the Confederacy. In the engagements at Corinth, Mississippi, in the famous charge at Battery Robenet, he was wounded in the groin, and so disabled that he was soon afterwards discharged. However, he was appointed under the Confederate government to office as an assessor and tax collector, and in this way continued his service in behalf of the South until the close of the war.

Upon his return home, Major Downs received from his father a gift of three thousand acres of land. As this relieved him from the necessities of close attention to business and the hard work of providing for the necessities of living, he was somewhat free to give his time to the satisfaction of his literary inclinations and tastes. He therefore established at Waco the leading Democratic paper in north Texas for many years, the Waco Examiner, which in time became the official organ of the party in this section of the state, and one of the most influential newspaper organs, especially among stockmen and farmers, in the entire southwest, and the official paper of the Stockmen's Association. The Waco Examiner, both as a business enterprise and as a great journal, must always be considered a monument to the best years of Major Downs' career, since for thirty years he was proprietor and active manager of the Examiner. The wounds inflicted during the Civil war eventually compelled him to retire from the desk as manager of this publication, and he gave up active newspaper work in 1903. Since then, so far as he has been able, he has devoted his time to the management of his plantation and farm, but as a matter of fact, is living practically a retired life in his home in Waco, Major Downs some forty years ago acquired much note in political and agrarian circles of Texas as the official organizer for the State Grange. Major Downs married Miss Fannie L. Sparks, a daughter of C. A. and H. (McCann) Sparks, of Waco. Their children are John Wesley, Latham and Grace, all of Waco.

DANIEL AUSTIN KELLEY. Forty years of active practice have constituted Mr. Kelley not only one of the pioneers of the Waco bar, but one of the oldest and most esteemed representatives of the legal profession in the state of Texas. Mr. Kelley was not only one of the early lawyers, but among the early settlers of the present city of Waco, which he has witnessed developed from a small town, before the days of the railroads. He has always enjoyed a high prestige and influence as a lawyer, for many years has had his choice of the better class of legal business, and at the same time has exercised a public-spirited and worthy influence in the life and affairs of his community and state.

Daniel Austin Kelley is a native of Wharton, Texas, and his parents were John and Anna (Moore) Kelley, natives of Georgia. The parents were among the early settlers of south Texas, locating at Wharton in 1846. Subsequently, when their son Daniel Austin was a small boy, they moved into Grimes county, where the parents spent the remainder of their lives. Daniel A. Kelley attained his education largely from private schools, and subsequently entered the University of Virginia at Charlottsville, where he studied law and was graduated B. L. in 1871. Fresh from college and with all the ideas and ardor of the novitiate in law, he came back from the east and chose the town of Waco as the scene for his practice and achievements. It has been his fortune in subsequent years to cap the aspirations of that early period with much distinctive and creditable achievements. Waco when he first located there was a town of thirty-five hundred people, and its chief landmarks in those days were the old suspension bridge across the Brazos river and the McClelland Hotel. Practically every change in the town and every improvement which has marked the subsequent history of this locality, Mr. Kelley has witnessed, and as a good citizen has done his most to promote. Mr. Kelley has during his many years of practice at Waco given very limited attention to criminal law, and has confined himself largely to civil practice and counsel, and it is in this field of jurisprudence that his special achievements have been. He has also served as special county and district judge.

In 1874 Mr. Kelley married Wiss Georgia Townsend, and the children of their marriage were John T. of Waco; James T. of Bryan; and Daniel A. of Brown county, Mrs. Kelley, the mother of these children, passed away in 1902. Mr. Kelley afterward married Miss Anna West of Waco.

Herman, who is deceased; and Alfred. Bernhard H. Schroeder attended the schools of his native land until reaching the age of eighteen years, and at that time became a correspondence clerk, a capacity in which he acteu from 1883 to 1886. In the latter year he was made manager of a colonial banking company in Holland, occupying that position until 189 when he accepted the office of manager for an industrial concern, and from that time forward until 1908 filled similar positions. During this period he had for seventeen years served as consul from Japan to Holland, with headquarters at Amsterdam. He still retains, and on occasions wears, a decoration presented to him by the Emperor of Japan as an appreciation of his excellent services in that capacity. Mr. Schroeder came to the United States in 1908 and settled at .. aco, in the vicinity of which city he was engaged in prospecting for something more than a year. In 1910 he founded the Central Texas Loan and Investment Company, of West McLennan county, with a capital of $25,000, and in 1911 this capital was increased to $100,000. In 1913 the company's business was assumed by the Bankers' Trust Company of Waco, and Mr. Schroeder was made treasurer, a position which he has continued to hold. Mr. Schroeder is widely known in financial circles of Central Texas, and in addi-tion to being a member of the directing board of the Bankers' Trust Company, is a stockholder in the Southern Traction Company and the National Bank of the West. His religious connection is with the Holland Lutheran church. A man of education, culture and refinement, he takes much pleasure in travel, and has visited many of the countries of the earth. He has found no time to engage in political activities, but has shown his willingness to contribute to the general welfare in beneficial movements and to shoulder his full share of the duties of citizenship in his adopted land.

Mr. Schroeder was married in Holland, in 1889, to Miss Marie De Neufville, who was born in Holland in 1866, and she died in France in 1909, having been the mother of one child, Hermance.

BIRCH DUGGAN EASTERWOOD. Though established in business but a short time, Mr. Easterwood is regarded as one of the ablest young architects of central Texas. His offices are in the Amicable building at Waco. His career in Texas began as a farm hand, and by various promotions won at his own initiative and by his own efforts he advanced from one thing to another, always getting a little further towards the goal of his ambition, and after a thorough course of private study of architecture engaged in practice for himself.

Birch Duggan Easterwood was born in Calhoun county, Alabama, January 2, 1888. His father, Pink Almond Easterwood, was born in Alabama in 1858, followed merchandising as his business, and died in 1893. The mother's maiden name was Nannie Duggan, who was born in Tennessee in 1868 and died in 1890. Their three children were Birch D., Hoyle S., and Eva. Hoyle married Cora Smith, has two children, Grace and Bernarr, is a dairyman in El Centro, California; while the daughter, Eva, is unmarried and lives at the home of her brother in Waco.

Mr. B. D. Easterwood had a common school education in Alabama, which state remained his home until he was eighteen, and on coming to Texas his first location was at Bartlett in Milam county. The first summer was spent in farm labor, followed by a clerkship in a general store for a year and a half, after which he rented a hundred acres of land and got his start by three years of successful farming. All the time not employed in look-ing after his crop was devoted to the study of architecture and drawing, and having exceptional natural talent in this line he made rapid progress, and on moving to Waco in 1911 engaged in business for himself.

On September 5, 1909, Mr. Easterwood married Pearl Barker, a daughter of Mrs. Delia Barker of Milam county. They have one child, Kenneth. Mr. Easterwood is a member of the Baptist church, and was president of the Baptist Young People's Union. He takes considerable interest in political affairs, and during his residence in Milam county was road superintendent one term. Since engaging in his present profession it has been his chief hobby and pleasure, and his success in his chosen field is assured.

CAPTAIN ROBERT B. SHAW. A record of a long and eventful life has been that of Captain Shaw, now living retired at Kemp in Kaufman county. For sixty years he has had his home in Kaufman county, where he was one of the early settlers and his span of recollection and reminiscence covers probably more varied and interesting events and personalities in this section of Texas than that of any other living citizen. He has exemplified the spirit of real citizenship, has given all his services to the public weal, and has participated in the commercial and agricultural affairs of the county during a long

Captain Robert B. Shaw came to Texas in 1853 from Chickasaw county, Mississippi. He was born in Perry county, Alabama, July 19th, 1833. His father, James Shaw, was a North Carolina man by birth, and a son of Benjamin Shaw. James Shaw acquired a moderate deducation, and followed the calling of his father as a farmer and planter, and in Mississippi became a man of influence and financial prestige. He owned stave property which he brought with him into Texas, and suffered its loss by the emancipation during the war between the states. James Shaw, in 1851, made a prospeeting trip to Texas, and bought fifteen hundred acres of land in Kaufman county. Two years later with his family he came across the country in wagons, a month's journey being required to reach his destination. Transplanting his residence in the west he enlarged his scope of activity, and besides opening up a farm he multiplied his stock and combined that industry with grain growing. He lived through the strenuous political times of ante-bellum days and added his moral support to the cause of the South, one of his sons being sacrificed on the battlefield as a Confederate soldier. James Shaw died in 1866 at the age of eighty years, just at the dawn of a new era with the restoration of peace between the states. He professed no religion, but was everywhere known for his strict honesty and integrity. James Shaw married Katherine Elliott, who was reared an orphan, and who died in 1875. Their children were: Shaw married Katherine Elliott, who was rearen an orphan, and who died in 1875. Their children were: Smith Shaw, who lived in Mississippi, and left a family there at his death; Fox, who died in Kaufman county, Texas; Julia, who married Jesse Franklin, and died in Kaufman county; Rhoda, who became Mrs. Henry Carlisle, and died in Kaufman county; James F., who left family at his daoth. William A. who died leaving a femilie at his daoth. William A. who died leaving a Isic, and died in Katanan county, sames r., who circle a family at his death; William A., who died leaving a family at Clarksville, Texas; John A., who was killed in the Red River Campaign against Banks, during the war, and Captain Robert B. Shaw.

Robert B. Shaw brought from Mississippi all the education he ever acquired from schools. His youth was passed in the days when schools were conducted in log passed in the days when schools were conducted in log cabins, with the crude and primitive equipment which has been so often described, and when the curriculum consisted of the teaching of the fundamental principles of reading and writing, and figuring, and when the teachers themselves were most meagerly equipped for the work of instruction. He remained with his father, and aided in the management of the varied responsibilities of the farm until 1859, when he married and moved to a tract of land which he bought five miles south of Kaufman. Only one year was spent at that home when the war broke out, and the call to arms brought him out as a volunteer as a Confederate soldier. He enlisted in company G of the Twelfth Texas regiment, commanded by Col. Bill Parsons, who subsequently became a brigadier general. The regiment was rendezvoused at Houston, and was ordered north into Louisiana and Arkansas. It participated in the preliminary maneuvers prior to the campaign in which the engagement at Mans-field, Cottonplant, and Yellow Bayou were conspicuous. He was in the two latter battles, and also was in the operations against General Banks along the Red River. When the war ended he was attending the court-martial of Lieutenant Col. Burleson as a witness at Hempstead, Texas. He was mustered out with the rank of lieutenant, having held that official place since 1865. Through the four years of the war he went without wound or imprisonment, and returned to his wife and home in May, 1865. Captain Shaw then took up farming under the changed conditions and made a crop the first year following the war. He was soon approached with a proposition from the sheriff of the county to take a deputyship under him, and thus be in line for election to the office in 1866. Sheriff Alexander Wilson did this because he wished to make some sacrifice to the men who had exposed their lives and fortunes for the welfare of a lost cause, and he selected Robert B. Shaw as the proper person upon whom to bestow this confidence and honor. In 1866, the captain was elected sheriff of Kaufman county, and he continued in that againty of twelve years, excepting the periods when removal from office by the military regime occurred, which occurred twice, and at each recurring opportunity he was promptly re-elected by the citizens. In 1867, Captain Shaw engaged in merchandising at Pratrieville, and continued there until in 1888, when he came to Kemp, and conducted business in his new location until 1897. His attention to mercantile affairs did not divert him from farming, and all the while his large country estate was being improved and brought under cultivation by tenants. Of the fifteen hundred acres he owned six hundred were made productive by the plow, and the rest has been for many years pastured for his stock. Captain Shaw has been one of the largest stock raisers in Kaufman county. His retirement from merchandising gave him opportunity to relax from the vigilant prosecution of business which had absorbed him for so many years, and since then he has lived at Kemp, watching the varied rural interests at the old home visible from the upper gallery of his village residence. Here there passes in review before him the entire panaroma of the personalities and achievements of his long and active career, and few of the old men of Texas can enjoy with greater satisfaction the life of memory than Captain Shaw. He has in his possession a book that contains the memoirs and a sort of diary that Mrs. Shaw wrote in 1858, containing poetry and verse. Also dates of arrival and departure of her soldier boy husband. She was only 17 years of age at the time, and had only been married about a year, when he went away to the war. He regards and holds this diary above everything else that he owns, and money will not buy it.

In June, 1859, Captain Shaw barried Miss Susan Vannoy, a daughter of Jesse Vannoy, who came to Texas from Tennessee, and settled in Anderson county. Captain Shaw and wife took into their home Florence, a little orphan girl, whom they learned to love as their own, and whom they educated and cared for nutil she became the wife of William A. Taylor of Kaufman, and later visited her foster-father, bringing her own generation with her. The Captain's own children are two sons, Fred and Bernard. Mrs. Captain Shaw died in 1909, after baving lived with her busband fifty years, and having impressed her individuality upon her community and her Methodist church to which they both belonged.

In San Antonio, Texas, on June 6th, 1912, Captain R. B. Shaw married Mrs. Mary E. Green, whose father came to Texas from Kentucky. Mrs. Mary E. Shaw, who was born in June, 1866, in Gerard, Ill., was only ten years of age when her father settled in McLennan county, Texas. By her first marriage Mrs. Shaw had two daughters. The oldest is Mrs. Joe Muney, of San Antonio. Her husband, Mr. Percy P. Muney, an Englishman, died in Chieago, Illinois, in 1908. QUIMAN FINIAY. A native Texan, Quitman Finlay has been engaged in the practice of law, in the railway service, and the varied interests of a successful carer for the past thirty years. As a lawyer, he ranks at the head of the McLennan county bar, and is a citizen deeply interested in matters of social welfare in his home city of Waco.

Quitman Finlay was born in Jackson county, Texas, July 21, 1865. His father, George P. Finlay, who was born in Rankin county, Mississippi, in 1828, was a prominent attorney, practiced law for more than balf a century, and died in 1911. His mother, whose maiden name

Quitman Finlay was educated in private schools as a boy, and in 1883 graduated from the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas. His college career was in-terrupted by ill health, and his study in the University of Texas was broken off in order that he might recuperate, and two years were spent in Old Mexico working as a cowboy. Returning to Galveston, he took and energetically pursued his studies of the law in his father's office until admitted to the bar in 1886. Mr. Finlay practiced law from 1886 to 1900, and then entered the railway service with the Santa Fe Company for two years, and for eight years was with the Texas Central Railway. When he resigned in 1908 he was head of the claim department of the latter company, and since then has applied himself closely to his practice as a lawyer at Waco. Mr. Finlay is a member of the Episcopal church, is a Democrat who has been at various times interested in party affairs, and from 1893 to 1897 served as special deputy collector of customs in Galveston. In 1898 he joined the Texas Volunteer Guards, and was a member two years of that organization. He belongs to the two years of that organization. He belongs to the Young Men's Business League of Waco, and has interested himself especially in the Y. M. C. A. and the City Mission, and through those organizations has done a great deal of religious and philanthropic work. Mr. Finlay owns his own residence at 602 S. Fourth street in

JAMES W. EDENS. There are good reasons for the success of James W. Edens as a real estate dealer at Waco. He knows Texas as a lifelong resident and son of one of the first families. A number of his years were spent as a practical agriculturist and on his farm in McLennan county he has raised some very fine staple crops and knows all that is profitable to know about Texas soil, seasons and crops. Besides farming and business, his experience also includes educational work, and he was an exceptional teacher in his time.

James W. Edens was born in Houston county, Texas, January 19, 1855. His father, John Silas Edens, who was born in South Carolina in 1821, was brought to Texas when a small boy by his parents, and grew up and followed the occupation of agriculture. He was in Texas at a time so early that he was one of the boy volunteers in the Texas army which fought off the Mexican forces sent to subdue the rebellious province. He bears a name which is familiar to those who have read the early Indian annals of Texas, and one of the tragic events during the early days of Honston county was what was known as the Edens or Madden massacre. At the time of that calamity John S. Edens was away from bome at school, and for that reason he escaped the slaughter meted out to other members of the family. His death occurred in 1892. When the Edens family came to Texas they settled in Honston county seventeen miles north of Crockett. John S. Edens married Amanda G. Adams, who was born in Indiana in 1825, and the Adams family likewise found an early residence in Texas. Her death occurred in 1863, and her husband subsequently married Mrs. Sarah Thompson about 1865, and she died in 1870. The eight children by the first wife were: John N., Mary C., Geor-gia A., James W., Silas B., Amanda E., Lucinda G., and one that died in infancy.

James W. Edens spent his early years in Houston country, and the second school he attended was taught in a little log house which had been put up by his father and James Miller, largely to afford educational advantages to their own families. In 1868 the family moved to McLennan country, and here he continued attending school, the teacher being paid by the patrons of the school according to the old subscription plan of school support. Subsequently he was in the public schools in Houston country, and had one year in Baylor University of Waco. Some years of his carlier career were actively employed in the work of the schoolroom, and it was while teaching and partly from the money earned in that way that he bought his first land, comprising one bundred acres, and spent ten years upon it as a successful farmer. On account of his 'father's health he finally returned home and spent several years in the management of the old farm, after which he moved to Waco and in 1907 engaged in the real estate business as an immigrant agent. He represented a corporation for the colonization of vacant Texas land for three years, and then opened an office for himself and in 1912 took as a partner O. J. Hadden, and the two together now conduct a flourishing business.

Mr. Edeco on October 14, 1896, at Crockett married lizzie Ellina of daughter of J. B. Ellis, a Houston cound the Ellina of daughter of J. B. Ellis, a Houston cound the Ellina of the Checket of the Chec

JOHN F. ROWE. Among the progressive and enterprising citizens of Waco, none have contributed in greater degree to the advancement and progress of this thriving and prosperous city than has John F. Rowe, a real estate broker with offices at No. 611 Amicable building. During his long and industrious career he has been engaged in a variety of pursuits, all tending to promote the prominence of whatever community he has found himself in, and his versatile talents have enabled him to make a success of each of his undertakings. The growth and development of any locality is largely dependent upon the exertions of those individuals who devote themselves to the exploitation of real estate. Without their energy, perseverance and progressive ideas no section will move out of the rut of mediocrity; outside capital will not be attracted to it, and property will find little incentive for increasing in value. It is invariably found that with the advent of an enterprising, experienced man, well versed in the realty business and realty values, comes a growth that is remarkable. Many years have passed since the initial work in this line was done in Waco, but the needs of this growing city have made necessary a constant expansion of the outlying territory, while a maintenance of the value of property already built is extremely important. So it is that the work of the realty dealer is counted as being among the potent factors in the life of this city. One of the men who have been most prominent in this work of recent years is Mr. Rowe, who is widely known as a business man of energy and

John F. Rowe was born at Campbill, Tallapoosa country, Alabama, June 24, 1861, and is a son of John F. and Elizabeth (Heard) Rowe. His father, a native of Forsyth country, Georgia, was born in 1828, and was reared in a rural community, where he early adopted the vocation of agriculturist. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the army, but contracted sickness in camp, and dided in August, 1801. Mrs. Rowe was born at Daderville, Alabama, about the year 1831, and surface 1811, and surface 1811. They were the parents of three children, as follows: William E., Alfred A., and John F., of this review.

The public schools of Daderville, Alabama, furnished John F. Rowe with his preliminary educational training, but at the age of sixteen years he entered West Point College, in Lee county, Alabama, and there he spent two years. On leaving this institution he found it necessary that he make his own way in the world, and he accordingly entered the brokerage business at Atlanta, Georgia, thus receiving his introduction to an occupation in which he was later to meet with his greatest success. After two years spent in Atlanta, in 1882 he came to Texas, and here, having decided to take a venture into the vocation of agriculture, rented a farm. After two years he decided that the stock business offered better opportunities for his abilities, and accordingly for the next five years he was engaged in raising cattle and mules, with some degree of success. Following this, he embarked in business as a merchant, opening a general store at Elm Mott, McLennan county, but after three years disposed of his enterprise at that place and removed to Montealm, Hill county, where he also engaged as a merchant. Four years later Mr. Rowe sold his Montcalm establishment and made his advent in Waco, here engaging as credit man for the Rotan Grocery Company, a concern with which he remained until October 5, 1912. During his connection with this business he was constantly advanced because of his fidelity, his energy and his industry, and when he resigned he was acting in the capacity of secretary, a position which he had held for several years. Mr. Rowe then again entered the brokerage and real estate business, and in this has continued to the present time, making a specialty of lands, brokerage and mercantile jobbing. Mr. Rowe's abilities are of much more than ordinary character, and are versatile in their nature. Among his associates he is accounted shrewd, far-sighted and level-headed, instantly conscious of the presence of an opportunity—openly alert to grasp it. He has various extensive business connections in Waco and elsewhere, and is secretary and manager of the Farmers Investment Company of this city and a stockholder and director of the First National Bank of Montealm. He is the owner of his own residence, a modern structure at Fourteenth and Bernard streets, and here finds his greatest pleasure, although he is distinctively a "man's man," enjoys the companionship of his fellows, and is a popular member of the Knights of Pythias, the Masons and the Woodmen of the World, as well as several social organizations. Along the line of business, he belongs to the Commercial Cub and the Young Men's Business Club. His realty holdings are large, including 1000 acres in Bosque county, $19 acres in Hill county, 293 acres in the southern part of McLennan county, fifty acres in the northern part of that county, and 20,000 acres of plains in different parts of the state. In political matters he is a Democrat, but public life has not tempted him, and he has been too busy with his private affairs to enter the political field, although on numerous occasions he has proved his good citizenship and willingness to promote the welfare of the community. With his family he is connected with the First Baptist church, where he is serving as a deacon, and as superintendent of the Sunday school. For twelve years he has been a trustee of Baylor University.

On March 20, 1888, Mr. Rowe was married at the home of the bride, in McLeman county, to Miss Addie L. Rice, daughter of Jonathan Rice, a farmer of that county, and to this union there have been horn two children, namely: Herman, a successful practicing attorney of Waco, who married Nonie Jones and has one child, Mabel E.; and John F., Jr., who is studying medicine at Vanderbit! University, married Ethel Alexander.

APPILIE MACAETHER PRESCOTT. As chief of the Waco fre department since December 10, 1886, until the present time, Mr. Prescott has a record of public service probably not excelled for length of years nor for efficiency in the state, and there are few parallel cases anywhere in the country. He belonged to the old volunter fire department years ago, when the apparatus was drawn by hand, and has witnessed and been influential in installing the many successive improvements by which the expeditions handling of fire has been brought to a maximum of efficiency. The Waco fire department has no superior in Texas, either in the personnel of its members, or in in dividual and organized effectiveness. This fact is well illustrated by the records of insurance rates prevailing at Waco, which are as low as any to be found in the state, and indicate a minimum of fire losses.

As organizer and present chief of the modern fire department of Waco, Mr. Prescott has a civic and personal record that belongs in any history of the state.

Arthur MeaArthur Prescott was born in San Antonio, Texas, February 27, 1854. His parents were William and Rachael (MacArthur) Prescott. His father, who was born in Lancaster, England, in 1818, came to America; was one of the pioneer settlers in Florida, where he was granted land from the government, and saw active servtice during the Seminole war in that state. About 1847 he moved west and settled at San Antonio, Texas, which was then on the extreme southwestern frontier, and conwas the most of the state of the service of the servi

Arthur MacArthur Prescott, like many southern boys of his age, had very limited opportunities to train for life except through the most practical schools of experience. The period of the Civil war covered some of the years of his boyhood, and altogether his school training might have been comprised within a few months. During the progress of the war he and his brother were kept to work "pinching cartridges" for the Confederate army, and received a very meagre wage for the work. After the war for one year he was employed in a photographic shop; then learned the tinner's trade, and about two years later went out to the frontier and became a homesteader and settler for nine years. Mr. Prescott has lived in Waco since 1876, and is really one of the oldest residents of this thriving central Texas metropolis. While cultivating a tract of land in McLennan county, he was also a member of the volunteer fire department of that time, and was honored with all the positions in the volunteer service up to 1886, when he was elected chief of the Waco Fire department. Mr. Prescott is now in the twenty-eighth year of his continuous service as chief, and his interesting recollections of experience as a fire fighter would fill many pages,

In 1876, at Wace, Mr. Prescott married Fannie Hart, who died in 1898. The six children of their marriage are: Mary L, now Mrs. Ripley Hendricks of Wace; Aurora, now Mrs. John Flemister of Dallas; Arthur MacArthur Jr., who is a printer at Wace; Thomas H.
Prescott, in the printing business at Fort Worth; William W.; and Francis L.

Mr. Prescott is prominent and well known in fraternal and social circles. His affiliations are with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Independent Order of Old Fellows, the Knights of the Maccabees. He attends the Episcopal church and is a Democrat in polities. He is a member of the International Association of Firemen Engineers, of the Texas Volunteer Firemen's Association, and the National Firemen's Association. He is the owner of a comfortable resilience in Waco, and is a stockholder in of his official service his chief orthwisten in He, and of his official service his chief orthwisten in He, and of his official service his chief orthwisten in He, and of his official service his chief orthwisten in He, and the seadquarters of the fire department and his own home.

D. W. ODELL. As a principal in each of three distinct law firms, D. W. Odell is easily one of the busiest attorneys in Fort Worth and vicinity. His career in law has been one of unusual brillance and has brought him into touch with much of the important legal business that has been transacted in this section of the state, as well as introducing him into the politics of the state and rendering him a force to be reckoned with in the legislative body and in political circles generally. He has been acting counsel for some of the big interests of the state, as well as for the state itself, and in all his professional activities, has carried away the honors by reason of his consummate skill, his far-reaching legal knowledge and his adroitness in managing his case in all their varied aspects. No more successful lawyer of public men might be mentioned in this section of the state than Mr. Odell, and his achievements are in every way worthy of him.

D. W. Odell was born in Crockett, Houston county, Texas, on December 30, 1867, and is the son of J. M. and Arabella (Murchison) Odell, both natives of Ten-

nesse

In the public and private schools of Cleburne, Texas, young Odell received his early schooling, but his training did not extend so far as graduation from the high school of the place. He left school to enter the office of Judge Ramsey at Cleburne, where he gave himself up to diligent and telling study under the direction of the worthy judge, there continuing for some years. He was admitted to the bar in 1890, and very soon thereafter began the practice of law on his own responsibility, his long experience with Judge Ramsey fitting him for independent practice as soon as he had obtained the necessary license. In 1892, he was elected county attorney for Johnson county, and served one full term; he was re-elected to succeed himself and when his second term of two years was within a year of expiring, he resigned at the solicitation of Judge Ramsey and formed a business partnership with that gentleman, who was loth to dispense entirely with the association of the younger man in his practice. This union, it is needless to say, was a most successful one, and endured for twelve years, during which time Mr. Odell was elected to the State Senate in four years and served four years in that important capacity. Thereafter he had an important place in the political activities of the district, and was delegate-at-large, to the Kansas City Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1900, District Delegate to the National Convention at Chicago in 1896 and served as president pro tem in the state senate.

Mr. Odell is a member of the following law firms: Odell & Turner, of Fort Worth and of Odell, Johnson &

Harrell, at Cleburne.

Mr. Odell has been employed as counsel in a great many important connections during the past fifteen years. In 1907 he was counsel for United States Senator Bailey of Texas, in the investigation before the Texas State Legislature. He was counsel for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the Penalty and Ooster suit instituted by the state, and he represented the House Committee in the Jake Walters Contemnt proceedings before the Texas legislature in 1911. He was counsel for the state of Texas in the celebrated Sneed trial for the texte of Texas in the celebrated Sneed trial for the murder of Albert G. Boyce, and was counsel for the Rev. Dr. Norris, of Fort Worth, charged with the burning of his own church. These citations comprise a few of his more noted legal activities, and will serve to indicate in some measure the prominence he has in the state as legist, as well as legislator.

On December 31, 1893, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Odell to Miss Birdie G. Murchison, daughter of D. M. Murchison, of Houston county, Texas, where the family is one of the best known in that vicinity. To them have been born four children, as follows: Arabella, Mary, Francis and Weldon.

The family is one that is accorded the highest regard of all who share in their acquaintance, and they move in the most select circles of society in the city.

JOHN B. YOUNG. No one, perhaps, knows and understands the west as well as those early pioneers of civilization, the locomotive engineers, who served in the davs when the iron borse traveled for hundreds of miles through country desolate of human habitation. Many memories of these days are hoarded in the mind of John B. Young, of Toyah, Texas. Although he is now a merchant and the most successful in his line in the town of Toyah, yet for years he was a railway engineer, and the life of the road still holds its appeal for him. John B. Young was horn on the 4th of October, 1861, in Canada, the son of the Rev. Thomas A. Young and Charlotte L. (John's), Young, both of whom are now deceased. The Rev. Mr. Young was a clergman of the Episcopal church, and devoted his life to the work of the church in Canada. He died at Coteau Landing, in Canada, at the age of sixty-four years, and now lies buried in the cemetery at Quebec. Mrs. Young died at the age of sixty-one and is buried in Hamilton, Ontario. There were nine children born to the Rev. Mr. Young and his wife, two of whom are deceased,

Of the living children of his parents' family, John B. Young is the fourth. He was educated in the Bishop's College at Lenoxville, in the Province of Quebec, but left school at the age of sixteen to enter the business world as a check clerk in a railroad office. As a youngster he had had as his pet ambition that of becoming a railway engineer, and he had at no time relinquished this plan, so new he determined to enter the brotherhood. He first obtained a position as a fireman and then was promoted to that of engineer. He received his first engine while an employe of the New York and New England Railroad, and after years of service with this road be came Here he entered the service of the New Mexico and Arizona Railroad, running out of Benson, Arizona. This was in the pioneer days and life was not the routine for the locomotive engineer that it is today. His last service as an engineer was in the employ of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, in the years from 1884 until 1908. During his entire service as an engineer he never had an accident until the month of July, 1908, when he re-ceived a broken limb in a wreck at Midland, Texas. After this accident persuasion was brought to bear on the veteran engineer by his wife and friends and he was persuaded to give up his seat in his beloved engine.

In February, 1909, Mr. Young therefore entered the mercantile field, as the proprietor of a small dry goods and notion store in Toyah. With the assistance of his wife he has succeeded in building from this modest beginning the largest business of its kind in Toyah. The pleasant manner and genuine worth of the proprietor has helped to make this store the most popular in Toyah and everyone is a friend of Mr. Young's. He owns a pleasant home in Toyah and is also the owner of four sections of fine Reeves county land.

In the fraternal world Mr. Young is a member of the Masons, belonging to the Knights Templar and also being a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He has been made an honorary member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. In religious matters, Mr. Young is a communi-cant of the Protestant Episcopal church. He is a Demoerat, politically, and takes a keen interest in local polibeing a member of the aldermanic council.

Mr. Young married Miss Agnes Van Gieson, who was born in New York state, a daughter of Virginius Van Gieson, her father serving in the Federal army as a lieutenant during the Civil war.

ROBERT McCLELLAND WALKER, M. D. Many of the men in the medical profession today are devoting themselves to the prevention of disease, as well as its cure. They are endeavoring to persuade people to use better methods and are spending their time in the search for more satisfactory methods of handling disease. Among this class of medical practitioners in Texas is Dr. Walker, of Amarillo, who in his position as city health officer for the past five years has been able to accomplish much for the improvement of public sanitation and the health and welfare of the community. Dr. Walker is a successful young physician, who has been a resident of Amarillo since 1904 and enjoys a large and distinctive private practice in this city.

Robert McClelland Walker was born in Montgomery, Grant county, Louisiana, April 25, 1871, being the second in a family of three children born to Henry Clay and Emma (McCain) Walker. His father, who was born in Louisiana, has been a merchant for many years in that state and is still in active life and a resident of Homer. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served with the Ninth Louisiana Infantry, going in as a private when only thirteen years of age, and during the great part of his service, which continued from the beginning to the end of the war, he was a courier. He has been successful as a business man and now enjoys a competence. In politics he is a Democrat and is a member of the Methodist church. His wife, also a native of Louisiana, died

Dr. Walker attained his early schooling in the public institutions of Louisiana, and between the ages of fourteen and seventeen was engaged in clerking in his father's store, an occupation from which he had occasional time to attend to his school studies. He early learned to rely upon himself and to make the opportunities and the means for his advancement along the lines indicated by his ambition. When he was seventeen thes indicated by his amoriton. When he was seventeen years old he began studying medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. H. V. McCain, who was first cousin at Montgomery, Louisiana. After two years, when he was nineteen years old, he entered the medical department of Tulane University, and completed his medical course at Memphis, Tennessee, where he was graduated M. D. in 1894. He practiced for about three years at Duson, Louisiana, and after leaving medical college at Memphis, came out to Texas and for nine years was located at Decatur, in Wise county. In 1904 he established his office in Amarillo and has been in continuous practice here ever since. The doctor is a member of the county and the state medical societies and at the present time is secretary and treasurer of the Potter County Medical Society. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and is a member of the Methodist church,

At Decatur, Texas, on November 23, 1898, he married Miss Emma Miller, a daughter of Captain William A. Miller, who was a veteran of the Civil war and a member of a Louisiana regiment. Mrs. Walker was born in Ar-kansas, but was reared and educated in Wise county, Texas, having come to this state when a baby in her mother's arms. One daughter born to Dr. Walker and wife is Willena, who was born in Decatur, January 11. 1903. The family residence in Amarillo is a beautiful bungalow at 1310 Harrison street. This home and his excellent practice and many other evidences of material prosperity and popular esteem are the fruits of a career in his profession from a beginning some twenty years ago with only thirteen dollars of cash capital besides a horse and bridle and saddle. Dr. Walker used his horse and riding equipment in order to attend his first patient, and had to use most of the capital before he received his first fees.

CYRUS ARTHUR WRIGHT. As one of the most successful as well as one of the most brilliant attorneys of the Panhandle region of Texas, Cyrus Arthur Wright is widely known. Mr. Wright has resided in Amarillo for four years, during which he has been engaged in the general practice of law and has been uniformly successful. Upon learning something of Mr. Wright's family history one can not help but be impressed by the strength of heredity. Mr. Wright is descended from some of the oldest families of the southern aristocracy, and tracing his ancestry back the men have been brilliant scholars and brave soldiers, while the women of the type that made the women of the Confederacy. With such stock as this it is no wonder that Mr. Wright has been successful, and yet when we see many men with just such ancestries, of uo worth to the world, we must give Mr. Wright much credit, for the use to which he has put his

The father of Cyrus Arthur Wright, M. U. F. Wright, was born in Westmoreland county, Virginia. When the Civil war broke out he immediately entered the Confederate service, although he was under age. He enlisted in the Ninth Virginia Cavalry, as a substitute for a cousin whose father had just died, and when his cousin returned a month later, he continued, and served throughout the war. After the surrender at Appomattox closed the chapter, he returned to the old home place and is still living in the old home which was built by mechanstill living in the old none which was built by incomanic lies brought over from England for the purpose. This house was erected by the founder of the Wright family in this country, William Wright, who settled in Westmoreland county, Virginia, in 1725. He brought many slaves and lived the life of an English country gentleman. When the Revolutionary war broke out, the men of the Wright family were brave members of the Colonial forces and later some of them served in the War of 1812. The family was originally of the Anglican or Episcopal faith, but M. U. F. Wright is a member of the Methodist church. He has been a planter all of his life and is a member of the Democratic party. He married Eliza Harding Coles, a native of Virginia and the daughter of Thomas Richard Coles, who was a soldier in the Confederate forces. Her grandfather, James Coles, fought during the War of 1845, with Mexico, as a colonel. Thomas Richard Coles, who was major of the Forty-seventh Virginia Infantry, C. S. A., married a Miss Harding, who was directly related to Commodore Perry. Eliza Coles Wright died at the old home in 1890 at the age of thirty-eight. Five children were born to her union with Mr. Wright and of these Cyrus Arthur Wright is the eldest and the only one who is a resident of the state

Cyrus Arthur Wright was born in Westmoreland county, Virginia, on the 3rth of August, 1873. He received a splendid education, first attending the famous old college of William and Mary, at Williamsburg, Virginia, and later entering the University of Nashville, from which institution he was graduated in 1898, with the degree of B. After leaving the university he taught school for a time, in Tennessee, South Carolina and Texas. He came to the latter state in 1901, first teaching in Arlington, Texas. In 1902 he removed to Itasca, in Hill county, and here he began the practice of law. He had altogether four years of experience as a teacher. He did not remain in Hill county long, soon removing to Brady, McCulloch county, where he opened an office and remained for seven years, enjoying a very successful practice. During this time he served one term as county judge.

In March, 1909, he removed to Amarillo, Potter county, Texas, and here he has resided ever since. His practice is a general one and he has very little spare time, so husy does it keep him. His offices are in the Britis block and he is enthusiastic over the future of Texas, and Amarillo, never expecting to live anywhere else.

WILLIAM S. Roberts. The Panhandle country within the last two decades has proved one of the richest and most fertile areas of the great state of Texas. The most of the land and climate, is the character of the citizenship, in whose bands are entrusted the destinies of this remarkable country. In this respect the outlook for the Panhandle is especially bright, and searching in every corner of the state would not reveal a higher grade of social and civic character than can be found in the extreme northwest. A family that well represents this Panhandle citizenship is that of William K. Roberts, a citizen and well-known business man of Amarillo.

William S. Roberts was born in Hill county, Texas, May 30, 1866, the oldest of ten children in the family of Jesse and Epsie (Williams) Roberts. Louis Gillman. For many years America and her business opportunities have been exploited in other lands, and to her shores have come people of every country to take advantage of these. While a welcome has been extended to all and a large degree of personal freedom assured to them, it has been the solid, thrifty European who has been most acceptable, for in a large majority of cases he has come already prepared for selfsupport, and with aspirations that include the founding of a home, the educating and rearing of his children, and the assuming of the responsibilities of citizenship. Such a man is Louis Gillman, who, as proprietor of the Pan-Handle Furniture Company, at No. 215 East Fourth street, is one of the well-known and substantial business men of Amarillo. Although a resident of this city only since 1908, Mr. Gillman has already firmly established himself as a man of ability and usefulness, one interested in the progress and development of his adopted city and taking pride in its achievements. A self-made man in every sense of the word, his career has been one of steady advancement, and should be of a nature encouraging to the ambitious youth of any land. Mr. Gillman was born April 17, 1878, in Russia, and is a son of Abraham and Katherine (Eyfa) Gillman, farming people of that country, who never left Europe, the ing people of that country, who never left Europe, the father dying in 1908, when sixty-five years old, and the mother in 1907, when in her sixty-third year. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom Louis was the sixth in order of birth.

The son of a moderately successful farmer, Louis Gillman was given a common school education at Visna, but at the age of fifteen years completed his studies and was apprenticed to learn the wood-worker's trade, which he followed for seven years, in the meantime serving for one and one-half years in the Russian army. Like thousands of others of his worthy countrymen who could sea head of them in their native land only a long career of hard labor, with but little chance of achieving independence, he left Russia in 1906, and came to the United States, by war of England. In 1908 he was the serving Annality, Texas statistishment of Green Brothers Farniture Company. At the expiration of that period be decided to enter business on his own account, and accordingly formed a co-partnership with King Brothers, and established with was Known as the Pan-Handle

Furniture Company, Six months later he bought out his partners, and since that time has conducted the business alone, meeting with unqualified success. Despite the newness of the business, and the size of its quarters, the amount of trade handled compares favorably with that of any establishment of its kind in the city. success may be traced directly to Mr. Gillman's good management, honest business policy, thorough knowledge of his chosen calling, and energetic, untiring enterprise. At all times manifesting a desire to please his patrons, he has made many of them personal friends, and at all times has heen popular with his business associates and those who have met him in any way. It is only natural that Mr. Gillman should be satisfied with Amarillo and to have faith in its future, and to manifest this confidence he has invested heavily in city realty. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' Association, and can be counted upon to withhold his support from no progressive movements inaugurated by these bodies. In political matters he is a Republican, but only takes a good citizen's interest in matters of a public nature.

On January 2, 1909, Mr. Gillman was married to Miss Rose Shorr, daughter of Gidalia Shorr, a native of England, and to this union there has come one daughter. Katherine, born at Amarillo, October 17, 1911. The pleasant family residence is located at No. 1211 Pierce street.

HON. D. LEON HARP. A young lawyer of San Apgelo, and a member of the present state legislature, Mr. Harp is very highly regarded as a young man whose ability and accomplishments are certain to take him far in his profession and in the field of polities, and at the age of twenty-seven he has already made an excellent start.

D. L. Harp, who is of Scotch-Irish stock, and a descendant of old families, who for many generations were planters and slave owners in Georgia, was himself born in Texas, October S, 1886. His parents were R. M. and Millie Harp, of Georgia, the former a lumberman of that state. He left Georgia in 1883 and moved to one of the principal lumber districts of Texas, in Cass county. On November 6, 1912, the day following his election to the state legislature, Mr. Harp married Miss Laura Kirkpatrick, daughter of W. A. and Alice Kirkpatrick, of Whitewright, Texas. Her father is a Preshyterian minister, came to Texas from Tennessee about forty years ago, and has been devoted to his profession in Texas for many years. He is now secretary of his preshytery. The mother is also living and their home is at Whitewright.

EMETTE WESTEROOK. Now president of the First State Bank of Sterling City, Mr. Westbrook has been identified with this section of west Texas since the beginning of his business career, and is thoroughly familiar with banking and especially with financial conditions in this part of the country. He was formerly a private banker in Sterling City, and has been identified with the First State Bank as cashier and president from its beginning.

Emette Westbrook was born in Johnson county, Texus, August 5, 1874. His parents were J. B. and Joanna Westbrook, who were of Scotch Irish stock, and the father was an Alabam resident, from which state he moved to Texas, in 1869. The family were known as cotton planters and slave owners in Alabama, before the war. The father had three brothers and one sister, and all of them married and had families. J. B. Westbrook for many years was a farmer and stock raiser in Johnson county, where he died October 15, 1912. During the war he entered the Confederate army, responding to the second call for troops in 1862, and then continuing until the close of hostilities. The mother died in 1883, Of the four children in the first union of the father, Mr. Westbrook is the only one now living, and father, and all now live in Texas.

In the public schools Mr. Westbrook received his early training and later attended the Grayson College at Whitewright, where he was graduated in 1901, with the degree of B. P. His first business experience was in the office of Beall & Beall at Swetwater, and he then took a clerkship with Thomas Tranmel & Company, private bankers at Swetwater. From there he moved to Sterling City and started the private bank, known as the Sterling County Eank, in November, 1904. In September of the following year was organized the First State Bank, and the Sterling County Bank was one of the constituent elements in the new bank. With the opening of the First State Bank, and the Sterling County Bank was one of the constituent elements in the new bank. With the opening of the First State Bank for business, Mr. Westbrook became cashier, and held that position until 1910, since which time he has been president.

During his residence in Sweetwater, Mr. Westhrook for two years served as secretary and treasurer of the city. He has been a Democratic worker, and is affiliated with the Masonic order, in which he has taken the cryptic degrees, and is also affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America.

April 27, 1902, he married Miss Jennie L. Anderson, who was in the furniture business at Weatherford, and was in the furniture business at Weatherford, until his death. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Westbrook. Emette Westbrook, Jr., is eight years old and Miss Madeline Westbrook is four years old. Mr. Westbrook as a banker has been able to contribute much to the development of the North Concho Valley country, and from his business experience here it is his judgment that there is no finer stock raising country in the west than that portion contained in Sterling country.

E. T. MILLER. A native of Texas who has spent nearly all his life in the northwestern counties of the state, Mr. Miller has for several terms served as city attorney for Amarillo, and is one of the rising young members of the bar in that city.

E. T. Miller was born in Johnson. Texas. December 22.

E. T. Miller was born in Johnson, Texas, December 22, 1884, the fourth of six children born to Albert William and Mary J. (Thompson) Miller. The father, a native of North Carolina, came to Texas when a young man, began farming, later transferred his attention to merchandising in Egan, Johnson county, and since 1907 has resided in Potter county, being now retired and sixty-eight years of age. He was in Texas when the Civil war broke out and he served in the Twelfth Texas Regiment and saw much hard service and participated in many battles. For four terms he was honored with the office of tax assessor for Arnstrong county, and has held other positions in public affairs. The mother, who is also living, was born in Johnson county, in 1852, and her father was a veteran of both the Mexican and Civil wars. Besides the Amarillo attorney, the other living children of the family are Marion, W. M. Miller, Claude, Mrs. Margaret Slay and Mrs. Ora May Trice.

Mr. E. T. Miller, when a boy, learned to depend upon himself for his personal advancement, and has followed the leadings of his ambition until he now ranks as a successful lawyer. He attended the public schools, and finished at the high school in Claude, the county seat of Armstrong county. He subsequently was a student in the Polytechnic College and the University of Texas, and for one year was a student in Washington & Lee University of Virginia. After passing a successful ex-amination as an attorney he located at Amarillo, opened his office as a lawyer in September, 1907. Six months later he had progressed so far in his profession and in popularity among the citizens that he was elected to the office of city attorney, and is now serving his third term in office. He also enjoys a large general practice. He is a member of the County Bar Association, and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Woodmen of the World. He is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Methodist church.

At Claude, in Armstrong county, August 11, 1907, Mr. Miller married Miss Agnes Iona Brummett, a daughter of Judge W. H. and Fannie Brummett, the former of Judge W. H. and Fannie Brummett, the former county judge of Armstrong county. Mr. Miller and wife have two children. Mary Frances was born at Amarillo in May, 1908, and Iona Kate was born at Amarillo in April, 1910.

JULIEN LEVY. To have started in business on a modest scale, with a small stock of goods and in limited quarters, and to have built up the largest department store in the Panhandle, all within the space of four years' time, is the achievement in merchandising attained by Julien Levy, of Amarillo, now one of the foremost merchants of that city. Mr. Levy is a young business man who came to America fifteen years ago, began as a clerk, was promoted for efficiency and by fair and square and courteous dealing and on the plan of giving good merchandise at low prices, has acquired a liberal prosperity and an influential position. Julien Levy was born in Brumath, in Alsace, Germany, June 5, 1880. His parents were W. and M. (Meyer) Levy, both parents natives of Alsace, where the father died in 1884 at the age of thirty-nine. He was a merchant. The mother reared her family in her native country, and in 1904 came to America, and remained with her daughter in Bessemer, Alabama, until her death in 1905 at the age of sixty-three. There were four children in the family. Mrs. Rachel Levy lived at Bar Le Duc, France; Bernard, also a resident of France, and Mis. Delphine Schwabacher, of Bessemer, Alabama.

Julien Levy, the youngest of the family, was reared in France, and attended the high school at Nancy. Leaving school when thirteen years of age he began an apprenticeship in the dry goods business and continued in that manner until he came to America. He arrived in this country on October 13, 1898, went to Bessemer, Alabama, where he obtained a clerkship in a shoe store with his brother-in-law, and remained there six years. He was next at West Point, Mississippi, employed in a store there for eighteen months, and from there moved to Augusta, Arkansas, where he was employed in one of the local shops for twelve months. From there he came to Amarillo, and entered the employ of the Famous Store, his connection with that firm continuing for one year. During that time he bought the stock of dry goods, a department which the Famous Store had abandoned, and remained in charge of the stock for six months until he could secure quarters for his independent enterprise. Since then he has developed his business, until, as already stated, it is the largest store of its kind in the Panhandle, and he occupies four large store buildings in Amarillo, and is sole proprietor of the business. One reason of the success of the business is because Mr. Levy goes to New York and other markets twice a year and his manager, Max Goodman, also makes the trip twice a year, both getting new ideas while doing the buying in the Eastern markets.

In politics Mr. Levy is independent, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge of Masonry and the Woodmen of the World. At Trinidad, Colorado, in July, 1906, he mar-ried Miss Blanche Hollander, a daughter of Rebecca Hollander, her mother now residing in California, and her father being deceased. Their one child is Bertram Levy, born at Amarillo, August 21, 1908. Mr. Levy is fond of travel and outdoor life, and when business permits he enjoys nothing better than recreations in the country.

HOUSTON HAYNIE. With a splendid record in business, and as a soldier of the Confederacy, Houston Haynie has been a resident of Kaufman county since 1885, has been identified with farming, for some time has managed a large cotton gin, and has also been interested in banking and in civic affairs in his county and home locality. His career has been one of exceptional in-terest. He fought valiantly as a soldier, and had hardly attained to manhood when the war closed. He began his career as a farmer with practically no capital and by many years of continuous effort and honorable dealings long since acquired a competence, and now lives surrounded with the comforts of material existence, and with a large and happy family of children and grandchildren.

Houston Haynie was born in Pontotoc county, Mississippi, November 7, 1845, and spent most of his life there until he moved to Texas in 1885. From 1878 until he left the state, the portion of Pontotoe county in which he was born was made into a new county, known as Union county. His father was Elijah B. Haynie, who settled in Mississippi from Anderson district in South Carolina. Elijah B. Haynie was born about 1806, and died in 1846, soon after reaching Mississippi. He was at hat-maker and planter, by occupation. In South Carolina he married Jane Caldwell, a daughter of William Caldwell of South Carolina origin. The Caldwell family, it should be noted were not slave holders. There were only two children in the family of Elijah B. Haynie and wife. The older was W. M. Haynie, who died in Kaufman county, Texas, in 1911, and by his two wives, Mary Moore, and Alice Caldwell left a family of children. W. M. Haynie was at one time sheriff of Kaufman county, and for a number of years operated a gin at Kaufman. The mother of Houston Haynie died about 1860. His father had a number of brothers and sisters and among the brothers were Charles, who spent his life in Anderson district of South Carolina; Martin and Britton, both of whom moved to Alabama, and lived there until death; George, who died in North Georgia; Reuben, who probably lived in the same locality; Gideon H., who came to Mississippi at the same time with his brother Elijah and died there. There were three sisters, but their names and facts of their existence are not known.

Houston Haynie grew up in the home of his grandfather Caldwell, and his early career was spent on a farm, during which time he received the advantages of the country schools. When he was seventeen years old in 1862, he callisted in Company G of the Porty-6fith Mississippi Intentry under Captain John N. Sloan and Col. A. B. Hardeastle. Later he was under the command of Col. W. H. H. Tyson, in Lowery's Brigade, Pat Cleyburne's Division of Hardee's corps, Army of the Tennessee, His regiment joined the army at Tullahouther, Tennessee, and took part in many of the famous Atlante campaign. He was at Chickamanga, Mission Right, Ringgold Gap, Ressoa, New Hope Church, Kennesse Monntain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and was in the big engagement of the twenty-second of July, 1864, before see, and captured many Federal prisoners on the way to Franklin.

He was engaged in detail duty at the time of the battle of Franklin, and immediately thereafter his company was disbanded, and its members secured horses and many of them joined Forrest's Cavalry. With famons command, Mr. Haynie engaged in desultory fighting and skimishing until his surrender at Meridian, Mississippi. Only once in his many campaigns and marches and battles was he hit by a ball, and that was at New Hope Church. He kept good health throughout the service, and when mustered out was ready to take

With the close of the war his possessions consisted only of the clothes which he wore home and a dollar bill on an Alabama bank. Twenty years of age he took up farming on his grandfather's place, where he lived three years, and then got married. He set up for himself in Union county, which was still a part of Pontotoe county. He made a little more than a living, and with his increasing family was induced to migrate to Texas by his brother, who had already moved to the Lone Star State. He brought his wife and two children, and in 1885 began his career in Kaufman county. Renting land near Kemp from John T. Rice, he spent two years there, and next bought a lot in Kemp, where he put up a resdience, and continued for two seasons to rent land and farm. At the end of two years he bought eighty acres of improved land, and subsequently added to his estate considerable new land, buying at prices ranging from two dollars to three and a half per acre. He finally accumulated five hundred acres, and having improved it and its value having also increased through the gradual rise in property values in Texas, he eventually sold at a good profit. He invested in the proceeds of land adjoining the town site of Kemp, and some of this property has since become a part of the town. A considerable part of his land is being cultivated every season, and the whole represents a large and profitable investment. In 1901 the family became identified with mercantile enterprise, when the sons engaged in Kemp as general merchants under the title of Haynie Brothers. They are still connected with merchandising there, and among the other family connections are large interests in land in Kanfman and Henderson county. Some years ago Mr. Haynie organized the First National Bank of Kemp, with a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars, and was a director from its start and is now vice president.

In polities, Mr. Havnie has long had an active and influential part. He has attended state conventions in Texas, and assisted in the nomination of Governor Colquitt. He has served on the executive committe of Kanfman county, and previous to his removal to Texas was county treasurer of Union County, Mississippi, for four years, from 1878 to 1882. Immediately after the war be had joined the local democracy in Mississippi, in support of local management of affairs, and with many of his fellow citizens took an earnest and effective part in the movements which eventually brought about the ousting of the earpet-bag rule in the state. He attended various state conventions in Mississippi and helped to nominate Governor Lowrey. This was General

Bob Lowrey in contra-distinction from General M. P. Lowrey, who had been his brigade commander during the war, and who was a noted Baptist preacher in Mississippi. In July, 1913, Governor Colquitt tendered the superintendency of the Confederate Home at Austin to Mr. Houston Haynie, but owing to ill health, he had to regretfully deline the honor. At the present time he is a member of the board of managers. He has been a member of the Confederate Veterans Association, has attended many of their national remnions, and belongs to the Juda P. Benjamin Camp at Kaufman. With the Baptist church his membership has been active for nany years, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a past grand, and has attended the Grand Lodge.

On January S, 1808, Mr. Haynie married Miss Mary, Capilhesson) Carlile. Mrs. Haynie was one in the following family of children; John; James; Thomas; Eliza, who married Presley Caldwell; Martha, who first married William West, who was killed in the army of the south, and for her second husband married William Caldwell; Mary E, and Rebeeae, who married John Haynie. To Mr. and Mrs. Haynie were born the following children: Virgil A., a merchant of Kemp; and Martin Lamar, also in merchandising at Kemp. Virgil A., first married Kat Votton, and his second wife was Miss Ola Boles. Martin L. Haynie married Miss Nettie Holly. Mr. Haynie has grandchildren by both sons. The children of Virgil and wife are: Henry Waterson, cashier of the First National Bank of Kemp; Mary; Clarence W.; Jennie; Mabel; Annie; Charles; and Sibyl. Martin Haynie's children are: May; Roy; John and Donald.

W. H. DOCKEAY. Among the prominent and successful men in Amarillo, Texas, is W. H. Dockray. sense of honor that makes him a popular man to deal with. He has always taken an active part in the development of this section and has given both time and money to improving conditions in this part of Texas. W. H. Dockray was born in Dallas, Texas, on the 6th of February, 1871, the son of I. G. T. and Pamthae (Morgan) Dockray. His father was born in the state of Ahlaama and did not come to Texas until after the close of the Civil war. He settled in Fannin county, Texas, where he became a farmer and a merchant. He was an active member of the Confederacy, serving in an Arkansas regiment. He took part in many of the important battles of the war, among them being Shiloh and Vicksburg. His death occurred in 1896 at Rock Post, Texas, when he was sixty years of age. His wife was a native of Mississippi, who came to Texas in the carly days. She is still living and makes her home in Center Point, Kerr county, Texas.

It was in the above locality that W. H. Dockray was reared. He attended the local schools and when he had outgrown their methods of instruction he entered the University of Texas at Austin, where he took the law course and was graduated in 1892. He never took up the practice of law, however, preferring a business career. He first went to Mexico City, and spent some time there studying conditions with an eye to engaging in business, but did not care for the outlook and so returned to Austin, where he engaged in the real estate business. He made a success of his business and felt free after a time to indulge a desire which had always animated him, that is to take a trip to the Old World. He spent some time journeying through Europe and upon his return re-engaged in business, being interested in building and loan associations. He was on the road for the as-sociation until 1903 when he came to Amarillo and started here in the land business. A member of the strong and successful law firm of Carrigan, Montgomery & Brittsin, with offices in the Kemp-Kell Building in Wichita Falls, Mr. Montgomery has been identified with the legal profession in Texas for thirty years, and as a citizen has witnessed and taken a part in the development of the country of northwest Texas from its pioneer time. He practiced in the country to the west of Fort Worth in the days when a court district comprised from half a dozen to a dozen counties, and when the population consisted almost wholly of cattlemen, with only a sprinkling of farmers and homesteaders. Mr. Montgomery has been in practice at Wichita Falls for nearly twenty years, and is one of the older members of the Wichita country bar.

JUDGE J. STEWART CLEVELAND. Until death laid its restraining finger upon him no man stood higher by the quality of his character and sum of his achievements in Brown county that het Judge J. Stewart Cleveland. While many felt a personal loss in his death, a multitude lad cause to rejoice in his life. Untiring industry great and varied enterprise, conspicuous ablity, conscientious public service, fearless defense of his own rights and scrupulous regard for the rights of others, were the characteristies that made him not alone one of the best known men of his community, but the best beloved. Thirty-six years old at the time of his death on May 6, 1890, he had made his mark in the world, and the regret was not so much for lack of perfection in his own career as for the interruption of an ever increasing beneficent service to his community

Jesse A. H. Cleveland, grandfather of Judge J. Stewart Cleveland, was born at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, about the year 1801, was reared in his native state, and married Sarah Lander. Subsequently he moved to Kentucky, lived for some time on a plantation in that state, then went to Memphis, Tennessee, in 1833, leaving which place he made his way overland to Texas, where he took up a large tract of land in Brazoria county, buying a large number of slaves from African slave traders, cultivating great plantations of cotton, in the fertile region along the lower courses of the Brazos. Later he sold his interest in the country and moved to Galveston, where he was appointed deputy United States Marshal for his district, an office which he held for some years. A man of generous impulse he gave liberally to the poor, but the state has reason to remember his name for other causes than for his private philanthropy. At the time of the great yellow fever epidemic, he gave up his private home for use as a hospital. More than that he lent his personal efforts in caring for and in treating the victims of that dread disease. Three hundred patients were quartered at his home and he took entire charge of the impromptu hospital. His skill as a nurse made him as valuable as any physician, and he also inaugurated a system for caring for yellow fever patients which became known as the "Cleveland treatment," and in time was adopted in many fever districts as one of the surest methods of ameliorating the effects of the disease. By reason of these services, he was frequently called Dr. Cleveland, as well as by his just title through public services, Judge Cleveland. He was a man of great breadth of soul, and charity of temper, and during the war a sick soldier was treated with equal consideration whether he wore the uniform of the blue or of the gray. He was a man of no mean literary attainments and wrote several poems of merit. He continued to be prominently connected with the city of Galveston as a business man, up to the time of his death in 1876.

Charles Lander Cleveland, father of Judge J. S. Cleveland, was born in Kentucky, being brought by his parents to Brazoria county, Texas, when seven years old. In early life he decided upon the law as his vocation, and studied under the preceptorship of Judge T. Branch in the town of Liberty where he was admitted to the bar. He began practice there and continued until 1872 when he moved to Galveston and became law partner of Judge Asa H. Willie, who left his lucrative practice to his partner and represented his district one term in the United States congress. Judge C. L. Cleveland while living at Liberty represented his county in the state legislature for two terms, and for several years held the office of district judge. In 1886 came his appointment as United States federal judge for the special criminal district composed of the counties of Galveston and Harris, over which office he presided with characteristic ability and efficiency until his death on February 9, 1892, His wife, who was a Hardin, and of the family of that name, in South Eastern Texas, where the Hardins were prominent from the days of early settlement, died October 26, 1882, There were nine children in their family, eight sons and one daughter.

J. Stewart Cleveland, born December 18, 1854, at Liberty, Liberty county, Texas, was the third son of Charles Lander and Mary A. (Hardin) Cleveland. The family to which he belonged has had conspicuous members and rendered splendid service to Texas since the years immediately preceding the Revolution which freed this state from the Mexican rule. He received his early education in private schools in this state and subsequently was a student of literature at Roanoke College, in Virginia. He completed his studies in preparation for the law, under his father and Judge Willie at Galveston. After being admitted to the bar he practiced in Galveston until October 31, 1879, when he came to Brownwood and opened office making that city his home during the remainder of his life. About the year 1880 Judge Cleveland was elected county judge of Brown county. It is a matter of biographical interest that each member of the three successive generations mentioned in this sketch bore the title of Judge, and that was a distinction of service, not merely an honorary title. He was three times judge of the Brown county court, and then resigned at the solicitation of his friends, to make the race for the office of District Judge. His straightforward and fearless administration of affairs, and particularly his stand on the temperance and other moral questions had in the meantime aroused strong enmity among the classes of people who profit most by the liquor traffic and from general laxness of law and morals, and that opposition was sufficiently strong to defeat him as candidate for the district judgeship. Judge Cleveland for several years may be said to have lived in constant danger of death by violence, since he was again and again threatened with assassination at the hands of lawbreakers, but he went on undeterred by either threats or actual violence, and continued his general practice as a lawyer up to the time of his death.

Judge Cleveland was always a stanch Democrat in his political views and supported the party in every possible way. Aside from his operations in the field of law he was prominent in business, and socially was one of the best known men in his section of the state. Coming to Brownwood before the railroad reached that place, he became one of the active builders of the community and interested himself actively in every good work for its advancement and improvement.

In common with most families of affluence wine and liquors were always found in the boyhood home of Judge Cleveland, but early in life he decided that the use of intoxicants was destructive to the body and deterimental to the development of his highest ideals of manhood, so he resolutely turned from their use and to the day of his death he kept the vow of total abstinence and not even physicians could induce him to break it. Uniting with the Presbyterian church, he was true to the teachings of the faith and a liberal contributor to all church causes. Devout and resolute in his inner nature, none were more earnest in their support of morality and christianity. With him there could be no middle course; right was right—wrong was wrong. Absolutely fear-less in his support of everything which his judgment told him to be just and beneficial, he incurred the hostility of the lawless class, and especially during the period when he stumped Brown county with the temperance workers in their efforts to put down the whiskey traffic, living hourly in the presence of menace and danger. It was common rumor at the time of his defeat for the district judgeship that many who voted against him had stated as their reason for so doing that "he was too fine a Christian man," Once at least his wife and several times his friends saved his life, and only those who understand the conditions of thirty years ago in West Texas and realize how keen were the animosities separating the different classes of society can appreciate how difficult was the course of such a character.

He possessed a logical mind of keenest mental grasp. Acquainting himself with the world's finest literature, studying his father's and his own extensive law libraries, left him no time for light literature, but important current events were always followed closely. He was a man of unusual grace of carriage and gesture; of such dignity of manner, that though all knew of his ready wit, only his most intimate friends dreamed of his wonderful powers of mimiery. When he did display this talent, giving his old negro mammy's erooning lullaby, or revival hymns, imitating birds, beasts or man his small audiences would be moved to tears or laughter at his will. Children loved him; animals responded to his affection and ran to meet him. His reverence for all good women was marked and his mother, wife and child were almost idolized.

Judge Cleveland made judicions investments from time to time, leaving his family in good circumstances, and no man can say there is taint or blemish on one dollar of it. On November 15, 1877, Judge Cleveland was married in Galveston to Miss Marie Louise Ritchie, daughter of Timothy and Katherine Ritchie. Cleveland's father was a contractor, in several large cities. He possessed the highest classical education, a profound student to the day of his death. Mrs. Katherine Ritchie was a woman of education and culture, receiving her education in Paris and having traveled extensively. She was a woman of extreme refinement and piety. Judge and Mrs. Cleveland were the parents of three daughters: Mary Katherine, and Francis Pearl, who died in infancy; and Yrma Louise, who is the wife of Guy L. Jones, who is engaged in the abstract and loan business in Brownwood, where they reside with Mrs. Cleveland. Like her husband, Mrs. Cleveland has superior education and intellectual attainments, is a woman of culture and is familiar with the world's best literature and art. She belongs to the most exclusive circles of Brownwood society and for years was prominently identified with club work.

Judge Cleveland's funeral was conducted by his pastor at the Brownwood Presbyterian Church, and the services were attended by people from all walks of life. Those who had known him professionally and in a business way; those who had appreciated his services as an honored, upright judge, those who had admired him for the courageous manner in which he had adhered to what he considered right; and last, but not least, those who had benefited by his generosity, his great-heartedness, his benevolence,-widows and orphans who knew in his death they had lost a friend who could never be replaced-all these felt a deep sense of individual bereavement in the death of this sterling and upright lawyer and citizen.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN WHITEFIELD. Among the various commercial enterprises that give special character and prominence to Midland as a trade center, one of the most noteworthy is the Midland Mercantile Company, a large general, store, which has a trade throughout the county, carries an unusually complete stock of goods and maintains as its motto "The Standard of Excellence," The pusiness organization of this company is composed of the ablest commercial talent in the city, and the success of the concern is largely due to the general manager and treasurer, Mr. B. F. Whitefield. Mr. Whitefield has been identified with Midland and vicinity for fourteen years, and has become successful both as a farmer and merchant.

Benjamin F. Whitefield was born in Ellis county, Texas, September 15, 1876, a son of George and Eliza (Brack) Whitefield, both of whom were natives of Tennessee, and came to Texas before the Civil war. Judge Brack, the father of Eliza (Brack) Whitefield, was the first judge of Ellis county. Mr. George Whitefield, the father, was a farmer and stockman, and during the Civil war served four years in the Confederate army under General Beall. He located at what was known as Mackey Springs, in Ellis county, and spent thirty-five years as a farmer and stock raiser in that locality. He owned several hundred acres of land near Waxahachie, in Ellis county, and was engaged in the improvement of one thousand acres of this land at the time of his death. He was sixty-eight years of age when he died and during his life time he had built up a generous material prosperity and was a man of influence and leadership in Ellis county. His widow still resides at a comfortable home in Waxahachie. There were seven children in the family and two are now deceased. John W. Whitefield, is owner of the old homestead in Ellis county; the Midland merchant, is the next in order; Albert; Sidney Whitefield lives on a ranch at Waxahachie; George W. is at home with his mother; Charley, who is now deceased. Lucy was the wife of W. D. Morton, of Glen Rose, Texas, who is now deceased.

His boyhood days were spent in Ellis county, and Benjamin F. Whitefield attended the public schools and later the high school in Midlothian. took a course in the Metropolitan Business College, and then in 1899 came out to Midland. The first year was spent in cattle raising and he then came into town and established a store known as the Midland Grocery & Dry Goods Company in 1900. After he had earried on a successful business at that location for ten years, a destructive fire occurred which destroyed his store and several other places of business in Midland, an entire block of the city being wiped out. Despite the heavy loss thus occasioned him Mr. Whitefield, almost before the ashes had cooled had organized the Midland Mercantile. Company, of which he was one of the principal stockholders and general manager and treasurer. This company built a fine new brick block with about fifteen thousand square feet of floor space, and in those quarters installed the most complete stock of merchandise to be found anywhere between El Paso and Fort Worth. Fifteen employees are required to attend to the various branches of the business, and it is a very prosperous and growing concern. A successful man of business, Mr. Whitefield has always shown his readiness to enter into any co-operative undertaking for the advancement of Midland. Besides his mercantile interests he owns a large amount of land in Midland county, comprising an estate of six hundred acres of improved farm land in which he takes special pride. His beautiful home is one of the most attractive and comfortable in Midland. Mr. Whitefield is vice president of the Commercial Club, and is in every respect one of the most energetic boosters of this community. In politics he is a Democrat. In 1900, Mr. Whitefield married Miss Ada Earl Wolcott, who was born in Texas, a daughter of Andrew J. and Ida (Mc-Cartney) Wolcott. The Wolcott family were among the pioneers of Ellis county, hecame especially prominent as stock raisers, and are now residents in Oak Cliff at Dallas. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Whitefield are Franklin Wolcott, Ina Beth and Eulalia. Each year Mr. Whitefield takes two vacations; one month in the spring he devotes to fishing, and during another month of the year he visits his mother's home, and the latter vacation he never fails to take for any reason whatsoever.

CHARLES ALFRED CLAPF. For many years one of the well known men in the public service at Dallas was the late Charles Alfred Clapp, whose death occurred in 1899. He came to Dallas as a building contractor, but was later for a long time connected with different departments in the municipal service.

Charles Alfred Clapp was born in Montgomery, Alahama, in 1855, one of eight children born to Nelson and Harriet (Cowan) Clapp. His father was a contractor and rebuilt the capitol of Alabama, after it had been burned. Charles Alfred Clapp was the only one of the family who came to Texas. He married at the age of twenty, and then started out in life for himself, and soon afterwards came to Texas, where he became a contractor, a business which he had learned under his father. For ten years he was on the police force of Dallas, and then entered the fire department. During a fire while in the performance of his duty he was injured and was then transferred to the water department, with which be continued until his death. The late Mr. Clapp was never a politician, though an active supporter of the Democracy, and a good citizen in every time and place. His church was the Catholic and he was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Ancient Order of Workmen, His residence, where his widow now resides, is at 1911 Park avenue.

On February 17, 1874, Mr. Clapp married Miss Mary Hennement, who was born in Alabama, a daughter of Henry and Hannah (Holmes) Hennement. She was one of ten children, and the oldest in the family. Her father was a native of Germany, while her mother was born in Ireland. By occupation her father was a merchant. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Clapp are: William H., connected with the railroad service in Louistana, has three children, Morine, Eleanor, and James W.; Biralle and Dallas, and has three children, Alma, Mary and Charles D.; Nellie, a business woman, resides at home with her mother.

LOUIS WORDLAW TITTLE. As finance commissioner of the Prison System of Texas, Louis Wordlaw Tittle has one of the most responsible positions in the state government. He began his service in that capacity in January, 1911. Mr. Tittle became a resident of Huntsville at that time, coming from Rusk, where he had just closed a term of eight years as county clerk of Cherokee county. He has long been active in political and business affairs, and his family has been identified with Texas since the beginning of its statehood.

Louis W. Tittle was born at Alto, Texas, September 3, 1859, a son of James B. and Jane U. (Findlay) Tittle. James B. Tittle, who came to Texas in 1845, from Yazoo City, Mississippi, and became an early settler of Cherokee county, was born in Abheville district of South Carolina, in which locality his wife was also horn. He acquired a good education and belonged to a family of planters and slave holders. The Tittles are of German origin and were among the early settlers in South Carolina. James B. Tittle had a brother, Louis, who died in Bastrop county, Texas, with a family; a sister, Mrs. Skinner, of Yazoo City, Mississippi; a brother Archie, who died in South Carolina. James B. Tittle taught school in Mississippi and in Texas, and in the war en-tered service with Hood's old Texas regiment and died on the battle field of Mansfield, Louisiana, in 1864. His wife was a daughter of John F. Findlay, a farmer, and after her husband's death she supported her family by teaching school. She died in 1872, and was the mother of two children: Sam Houston Tittle, of Mangum, Oklahoma; and Louis W.

Louis W. Tittle was educated by his mother, who at the same time was teaching other children in order to support herself and her two sons. After her death, Mr. Tittle went to work on a farm in the community of Alto. His has been a varied experience. On leaving the farm he went to Clay county in northwest Texas in 1876, spent two years as a cattleman, then in the employ of Mr. Hensley, a rancher, went to the Pease. River, and remained at the mouth of that stream about one year. Returning to Cherokee county, he married and took a position in a store in Alto for some months during the year 1880, after which he opened a stock of groceries for himself and continued in business until 1992, when he sold out. In the meantime he had twice suffered the calamity of fire, but in the end retired from merchandising the world.

On retiring from business, Mr. Tittle took an active part in practical politics, became candidate for the office of county clerk, and was elected, receiving the nomination in competition with three other men. He succeeded J. W. Chandler in the office, and by re-election three terms continued as an office holder until the close of 1910. Since his early years he has been active in Democratic state politics. His first state convention in which he sat as a delegate was in 1884, when Governor Ross received his nomination in Galveston. Since then only two or three conventions have been missed by him. He was a delegate at the famous car-shed convention, in which he supported Mr. Hogg for governor, and in later years has always been a warm admirer and supporter of Senator Bailey. It was from Governor Colquitt that he received his first appointment as penitentiary commissioner, and was reappointed in May, 1912. His first service was on the board with B. E. Cabbell and R. W. Brahan, and the new board comprises himself and W. O. Murray and S. J. Bass.

Mr. Tittle was married March 10, 1881, to Miss Virginia Wood, whose father, John W. Wood, came from Tennessee and was a farmer at Alto. He married Elizabeth Boyd. Mr. and Mrs. Title have the following children: Daisy, wife of W. H. Shook, of Rusk, and the mother of three children, Harold W., John L., and Virginia: Elizabeth, wife of F. M. Priest, of Rusk; Sallie L.; Myrtle M.; Lois D.; Pauline; and Janie Joyce. Mr. Tittle is a past master of his Masonic bolge, a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, belongs to the Knights of Honor, and has served as a delegate to its grand lodge several times, and is also affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. His mother was a devout Baptist, and his wown family are of the same fatth.

HENRY ALLEN HOOKS. While Hardin county belongs in the great Texas pine belt, and its timber resources have been, until recent years, the prime factor in its wealth, it has also contained from the early days families of agricultural and stock-raising prominence, and one of the most representative of these bears the name just mentioned. Henry Allen Hooks represents the second generation in this part of Texas, and while successful as a farmer, has also extended his activities to circles other than the agricultural. He comes of a pioneer family, his parents having been identified with Hardin county from the time of its organization until their death, having settled there before the creation of Hardin county.

Henry Allen Hooks was born on his father's farm in Hardin county in 1868, a son of William and Martha (Collier) Hooks. The family history is given in more detail under the name Joseph L. Hooks, a brother of Henry Allen. The latter grew up on his father's farm, and since 1892 has maintained his home in Kuntze, the county seat. His business prosperity has been chiefly derived from his farming operations, in which he has been engaged since reaching manhood. His farm is very advantageously located, adjoining the town of Kuntze on the southwest. The place comprises six hundred forty-three acres, and though only a portion of it is now under cultivation Mr. Hooks is gradually extending his fields, putting them in pecans, and when the heavy pine forests have been cleared off he will have a splendid pecan grove, since it has been discovered that the cut-over lands of southeast Texas are among the most productive in the entire state. His crops up to the present time have been chiefly cane, potatoes and corn, and some of the best varieties of pecans are now bearing in the grove.

Mr. Hooks has taken a prominent part in public affairs in both his home town and county, and has been honored by election to various public offices, in all of which he has rendered worthy service to the people. For four years he was county tax assessor, from 1906 to 1910, and in the latter year was elected county commissioner. In 1912 he was re-elected for another term of two years, and is still one of the men upon whom devolves the responsibilities of managing the county's fiscal affairs.

Mr. Hooks married Miss Esther Seale, who was born in Tyler county, and belongs to one of the pioneer families of east Texas. Their three children are: William Arden Hooks, Clara Allen and Esther Orlou Hooks.

FRANK CARR. One of El Paso's well known business men and popular citizens was called by death on July 28, 1911. Mr. Frank Carr had for upwards of twenty-seven years been a resident of this city, was at one time county jailer, and during most of his local business life was in the undertaking business. He was highly respected for his personal integrity and good citizenship, and had a large circle of friends. Mrs. Carr still resides in El Paso art their old home at 515 Prospect Avenue.

Mr. Frank Carr was born in the state of Ohio, in Brown county, in 1860, representing an old family of that state. His great-grandfather had come from Ireland and had become one of the early settlers of Ohio, founding a family which is still numerously represented in the old state. Mr. Carr attained his education in the public schools of his native county, and spent his early life on a farm. His first business was that of eattle raising, in association with his brother Charles Carr in eastern Texas, his brother still being engaged in that occupation. In 1887, twenty-five years ago, when El Paso was still almost a frontier village, Mr. Carr located here and for several years was county jailer during the time when Mr. Hildebrand was sheriff of El Paso county. He then engaged in the undertaking business with J. E. Nagley, under the firm name of Nagley & Carr, subsequently selling his interests to Mr. Nagley, and forming a partnership with McBean and Simons, continuing in that association until his death.

Mr. Carr was a Republican in politics, having been brought up in the Republican state. He was fraternally affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Beavers, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was especially popular in the local lodge of Elks. He was laid to rest in Evergreen Cemetery under the auspices of his brother Elks. He was reared in the Preshyterian church. Mr. Carr was married March 27, 1886, at Valentine, Texas, to Miss Nellie O'Connor of that place, a daughter of Patrick and Matilda O'Connor, who were farmers of Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Carr had two children, namely: Harry, twenty-five years of age, and now engaged in the grocery business at Fort Stockton, Texas; and Mrs. Ella Sherman, wife of L. A. Sherman of El Paso.

ALBERT STEVES. In a commercial center like San Antonio successful business men are not rare. The city itself is a monument to business enterprise, and its creators are those whose collective energies have concentrated the huge volume of trade and industry at this one point. With a permanence which is proved by nearly half a century of successful existence, and with a scope and volume of trade relations which make the name familiar throughout the state, the firm of Ed Steves & Sons, wholesale and retail lumber dealers and manufacturers, have probably contributed as much as any other single industry to the commercial prestige of the Alamo eity. As it is a business of no ordinary importance, it is not merely a material achievement, but at its foundation will be found the rugged integrity and unfailing enterprise of men. The members of three generations of the Steves family have contributed their resources and ability to the founding, maintenance and extension of this splendid Texas concern,

Edward, who was always known as Ed, Steves, the founder of the business at San Antonio, was born in 1829 at Barmen, Prussia, and came to Texas when a young man in 1848. He was one of the German col-onists of that period who located at New Braunfels, in Comal county, and his first work was as a farmer on the Guadalupe River above New Braunfels. Subsequently his farm and stock ranch were moved to Cypress Creek, in Kerr county, between the present towns of Comfort and Kerrville. Until some years after the Civil war, that district was one of the most exposed to Indian raids. and the Steves family in those years had their full share of frontier hardships, dangers of hostile red men, and the difficulties of pioneer life. In 1857 Ed Steves married Miss Johanna Kloepper, who was born in Hanover, Germany, and is still living in San Antonio. Their three sons, Ed Steves, Jr., Albert and Ernest, all of whom subsequently became closely identified with the lumber industry, were born on the Cypress Creek Ranch, in Kerr county. It should also be mentioned that Ernest Gruene, an uncle of these sons, recently died (April 2, 1914,) at the age of ninety-five. He had long occupied his old homestead, a fine farm on the Guadalupe river a few miles above New Braunfels, in Comal county, and was a splendid type of the sturdy early German col-onists in southwest Texas. Mr. Gruene was born at Netze, Germany, and settled in Comal county in 1845, having spent nearly seventy years in that locality.

The late Ed Steves was a man of exceptional energy and enterprise, and a prominent figure both in the community of Kerr county and of San Antonio, and his name is associated with other things than the lumber business. He had the distinction of introducing the first threshing machine into his part of the state. The machine was landed at the old port of Indianola early in 1861, only a short time before the Texas coast was blockaded by the Northern navy. For a number of years his threshing outfit was relied upon over a district covering many square miles for all the threshing, and it did much to lighten the burdens of farm life during the war period. During the period of the war Ed Steves helped to guard the Texas frontier against Indian raids as a member of the Home Guards.

When Ed Steves came fo San Antonio in 1806 he established a lumber yard at the corner of Blum and Bonham streets, at the rear of the Menger Hotel. It was subsequently moved to Alamo streets, on the site now occupied by Joske's department store. That was its location during the years when San Antonio was isolated from railway connection with the outer world. On the completion of the Southern Paeific lines to San Antonio in 1877, Mr. Steves moved his yards to the old Southern Paeific depot on Walnut street on a block of ground bounded by Hayes, Walnut, Lamar and Cherry streets. The completion of the International & Great Northern railway to San Antonio in the spring of 1880 caused Mr. Steves to establish his yard and business on the west side of the city, at the corner of Buena Vista and South Medina streets, near the depot, where it is still located.

The business as first established was for some years conducted under the name of Ed Steves. In the Summer of 1877 Albert Steves and Ed Steves Jr., the two oldest sons, entered the employ of their father, and in the following year Ernest Steves, the other son, also joined the staff. When Ed Steves retired from the heavier responsibilities of the business in 1882, the lumber yards were continued under the firm name of Ed Steves & Sons, its present title. Subsequently Ed Steves & Sons, its present title. Subsequently Ed Steves Ir. also retired, leaving Albert and Ernest Steves in the active management. In 1906 Ernest Steves was elected president of the Texas Lumber Men's Association.

The most important and largest addition to the Steves lumber industry was completed in 1913, and consists of the sash and door plant, located on a block of ground bounded by South Medina, Frio, Monterey and Matamoras streets, in the adjoining block of the west side lumber yard on the International & Great Northern railroad. This mill manufactures sash, doors, interior finishings, and millwork of all descriptions, on a very large scale, and is one of the largest industries in Southwest Texas. The two-story mill building is of concrete fire-proof construction. Adjoining it is the new wholesale building of the same construction and also two stories with basement. The dry kiln, wholesale lumber sheds, and other facilities of the business are also to be found on the west side, while, as already stated, another yard is on the east side near the Southern Pacific Depot. From the wholesale department of Sash, Doors, Blinds and Mouldings more than one hundred and fifty lumber yards throughout Southwest Texas are supplied with their material, and this fact better than anything else indicates the extensive scope of this business. Manufacturing & Wholesale Sash plant is in charge of Albert Steves Jr., with Mr. Ernest Steves as manager of the I. & G. N. Railroad Yard and Albert Steves Sr. having charge of the Sunset Yard on East Converse St.

The death of Ed Steves on April 20, 1890, bereaved the city of San Antonio of one of its ablest business men and citizens. During the seventies he had served as an alderman, and his public spirit was always ready to back up any worthy new enterprise for the improvement of his home community. Among those men who during the last half century did most to promote San Antonio commercially and as a civic center, the name of Ed Steves should always have a conspicuous place.

The senior member of the firm of Ed Steves & Sons, Albert Steves, was born in Kerr county. Texas, and through practically all his career has been identified with the city of San Antonio. The noted old St. Mary's College afforded most of his education, while a boy, and his Alma Mater is the Washington & Lee University of Lexington, Virginia. For more than thirty-fire years he has been one of the men chiefly responsible for the growth and development of the great business of which he is a part, and among lumber merchants of the Southwest his record has few equals.

The energy and skill which have characterized his business relations have also been brought into public affairs for the corresponding benefit of local velfare. In May, 191I, Mr. Steves was elected an alderman-at large, taking office in June of that year. In April, 1913, on the death of Mayor A. H. Jones, the city council elected him as mayor to fill the unexpired term. Again in the regular city election of May, 1913, he was re-elected to the office of alderman-at-large for another two years. Both as alderman and mayor Mr. Steves has discharged his duties with splendid ability and unselfish concern for the public welfare.

By his marriage at San Antonio to Miss Pannie Baetz, Mr. Steves has four children: Albert Jr., mentioned above as one of the active members of the firm; Estella; Walter; and Edna. Mr. Steves has many associations in his home city, belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, the Cusino Association, the Beethoven Singing Association, is an honorary member of the Turner Society, and is a member of the San Antonio Rilde Club, the Travis Club and the San Antonio Club and the O. D. H. S., No. 172, Friedrich Ludwig John or Turner Lodge.

ROBER STILMAN. Excelling in achievements, and commanding success in his special lines of endeavor, Robert Stillman, of Brownsville, has won prestige in the agricultural and business circles of Southern Texas, not only as one of the more active and prominent ranchem and stockmen, but as a member of the famous Stillman family, who were, practically, the founders of Brownsville, Texas, and of Matamoras, Mexico. A son of the late Cornelius Stillman, he was born, in 1853, in Cleveland, Ohio, of honored New England stock.

His grandfather, Captain Francis Stillman, was born and reared in Wethersfield, Connecticut, the New England state in which his immigrant ancestor settled on coming to America from Holland, in early colonial days. Engaging in scafaring pursuits when young, he sailed the seas as master of a vessel, and eventually established an extensive business in the mercantile marine service, owning a fleet of sailing vessels engaged in trade in England and other foreign ports. Sometime during the 40's he, as captain of one of his own vessels, sailed into the port of Bagdad, Mexico, at the mouth of the Rio Grande river, on a trading expedition. That was an adventurous experience of his, as he knew absolutely nothing about the country, it being in fact so perfectly isolated that it had never been explored. The venture proved highly successful, and Captain Stillman was so pleased that he withdrew his ships from foreign ports and put them in the Mexican trade. He established a large commercial house at Matamoras, Mexico, then a mere hamlet, and subsequently induced his four sons, Charles, Cornelius, Chauncey and Frank, to join him in Matamoras, where they all took part in the conduct of the business. Captain Stillman afterwards opened a branch house in Brownsville, Texas, just across the river, making Charles Stillman its manager. Thus it was in reality the business enterprise of the Stillmans that elevated Matamoras and Brownsville to positions of commercial importance, making them the founders of the two towns. The Stillmans likewise acquired vast bodies of land in the southwestern Texas territory contiguous to Brownsville, principally in Cameron, Hidalgo and Nueces counties, these lands forming the nuclei for several of the noted ranches of this part of the state, among which are the Lauralas and Kennedy ranches, purchased from the Stillmans. Returning North in his later years, the Captain established a home in New York City; but his death occurred in In-dianapolis, Indiana, while he was visiting a daughter in that city.

Charles Stillman, the eldest of the Stillman brothers, and who for many years was extensively engaged in commercial and cattle enterprises in Brownsville and vicinity, was the father of James Stillman, a cousin of Robert Stillman, the subject of this sketch. James Stillman was born in Brownsville, but reared and educated in

New York. For several years he was president, and is now chairman of the Board of Directors, of the National City Bank of New York, one of the strongest financial institutions of America, Mr. Stillman ranking with the

A native of Wethersfield, Connecticut, Cornelius Stillman, foreseeing the possible advantages in a newer country, went as a young man to Ohio, locating in Cleveland, where he built up a large business as a wholesale grocery merchant. In 1852 he joined his father and brothers in Brownsville, Texas, and was here successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits for many years. When ready to retire from business life, he returned to the old Stillman home in Xew York City, where he resided until his death, in 1894. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Robertson, was born in Connecticut, of Scotch ancestry.

As a boy and youth Robert Stillman attended school in Massachusetts, and later was a resident of New York City, where be was connected with the well-known importing house of Fairfield & Trask. Since 1883 he has resided in Brownsville, Texas, where he is managing the extensive interests of himself and the other members of the Stillman family, having charge of two very fine and very valuable cattle ranches lying in Cameron and Hidalgo counties, these forming the basis of his activities in the industrial and commercial world.

Mr. Stillman married Miss Kate Case, of New Jersey, and they have two sons, Lucius Stillman and Joel Stillman.

Albert G. Jovee, one time postmaster of Dallas, is a member of one of the oldest families in the state of Texas. He was born in San Antonio, in 1872, and is a son of Rev. William J. and Lauta (Mitchell) Joyee, both of whom are living. The mother is a daughter of Ass Mitchell, who was among the first American settlers in Texas. He was a member of Austin's colony and was among the prominent pioneer American citizens of San Antonio, where he was a large property owner. His name is intimately interworen with the early history of that city. Mrs. Joyee was born at Old Washington, Washington county, the first capital of Texas.

Albert G. Joyce was educated in Coronal Institute in San Marcos, where he was reared and spent his boyhood days. In 1891 he came to Dallas, and this city has since been his home. In the year 1893 he entered the Dallas postoffice as a clerk under Postmaster John S. Witwer. Later he became assistant postmaster under W. M. C. Hill, who is elsewhere mentioned in this work, and he also served in a similar capacity under Mr. Hill's successor, Major William O'Leary. On the death of Major O'Leary, in May, 1903, Mr. Joyce became acting postmaster, and served as such until he was succeeded by David A. Robinson on July 17, 1904. He was in the postoffice for twelve years of continuous service, and has been highly commended for the praiseworthy service he gave to the city in those years. Since 1904 Mr. Joyce has been in other lines of business in Dallas.

in Dallas, in 1900, he was married to Miss Nancy Elliott, of this city, a daughter of James T. Elliott, a pioneer citizen of Dallas.

L. L. LACEY, M. D. A Texas physician and surgeon whose practice extends over forty years, and whose life and services have placed him in the front ranks of the profession, is Dr. L. L. Lacey, whose carlier career was spent in Rusk county, who for some years was located at San Antonio, and for the past fifteen years has lived in the capital city of Texas—Austin. While enjoying a very extensive and profitable practice, Dr. Lacey has always been an originator and a progressive factor in his work, has done much to promote the welfare of the profession at large, and his inducence for good has not been confined entirely within the technical limits of his vocation.

Born near Selma, Alabama, April 29, 1852, Dr. Lacey is a son of Andrew Franklin and Margaret (Aiken) Lacey. His father, who was one of the early manufacturers of cotton gins, came to Texas and settled in Rusk countr in December, 1852, when Dr. Lacey was seven months old. In that section of the state his father acquired large landed possessions, became an influential planter, and for several years filled the office of sheriff of Rusk county. The mother belonged to the prominent family of Aiken, for whom the town of Aiken in South Carolina was named. She is now living with her daughter, Miss Luella Lacey, at San Antonio, Texas, and is ninety-four years of age. Andrew F. Lacey died in 1888 when seventy years of age.

The schools of Henderson, Texas, gave Dr. Lacey the foundation of his literary training, and immediately after his graduation with the degree Doctor of Medicine from the University of Virginia in 1874 he entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College of New York City for post-graduate work. His general practice began at New Salem, in East Texas, and after six years his office was moved to Henderson, both places being in Rusk county. His patronage grew rapidly from the start, and extended over a large section of Rusk county. During his first year Dr. Lacev had a practice which netted him more than five thousand dollars, and for fifteen years he stood in the front of his profession at Henderson. For nine years after leaving Henderson Dr. Lacey practiced at San Antonio, and for the past fifteen years has had his home in Austin. His prominence in the profession caused him to be one of the first doctors appointed on the State Examining Board. He has membership in the American Medical Association, the District Medical Association, and all the local medical societies

In 1874 Dr. Lacey married Miss Alice Meredith of Lawrenceville, Virginia, an accomplished young lady of an old and distinguished Virginia family. The last fifteen years of her life were saddened by invalidism, and her death occurred at San Antonio in 1893. Dr. Lacey was devoted to his companion through all those years, and her death was the greatest sorrow of his life. Because of the influence of her Christian character he was led to join the Methodist Episcopal church soon after their marriage, and subsequently persuaded twenty-fonr business men of Henderson to follow his example. In 1894 Dr. Lacev was united in marriage with Miss Forney L. Beaumont of Austin and one of the prominent church and club women and her home is the center of a gracious hospitality which is extended to a large social circle. She was the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. G. N. Beaumont. Dr. Beaumont was horn in Ohio, but was a southern sympathizer and served as surgeon in the Confederate Army and practiced his profession many years after the war, but for more than twenty years before his death was connected with the General Land Office of the state. Mrs. Beaumont's father is a member of the Lacey household. To this marriage have been born four sons, Lewis, Bryan, George and Vernon, now being educated and growing up towards promising careers of usefulness.

Dr. Lacey is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. In 1878, with Dr. Swearingen and Dr. Manning, Dr. Lacey was one of the Texas physicians appointed by the Howard Association to go to the relief of sufferers of the yellow fever plague at Memphis, Tennessee, and bravely risked his life in a service that was as hazardous as that of the army in time of war. Dr. Lacey has recently invented a sanitary mouthpiece for the telephone, which has been patented and is regarded by the scientific world as an invention certain to be of great service in preventing communicable diseases that may be placed to the present common monthpiece, and it is the first successful invention of the kind ever made. Dr. Lacey has four brothers who are residents of Texas, namely: J. S. and Calvin, whose homes are in San Antonic; Telephns, in Henderson, and Samuel Houston Lacey, of Dallas. Calvin and Telephus were both soldiers in the Confederate army, Calvin being with the army of Lee in Virginia. Dr. Lacey's home is at 2211 Speedway, and his office at 700 Congress avenue.

J. H.M. Carthy

Cot. PATRICK ANDERW MCCARTIN, civil engineer and builder of railroads and one of the best known men in Texas in engineering circles, was born in Champaign county, Illinois, on March 3, 1859. He is a son of Daniel and Catherine (Fitzgerald) McCarthy, both natives of Ireland. The father was a railroad contractor, who was killed by lightning in 1876, when the subject was a young boy, and thus he was thrown upon his own resources at an age when other boys are being carefully looked after by solicitous parents.

Col. McCarthy got a start toward his profession by working as a youth for the engineers who were engaged in building the old Indianapolis, Decatur & Western Railway across Illinois, and for several years he worked on tailroad and bridge construction in Indiana, Illinois and Minnesota. He located in Lufkin, in Angelina county, in 1901, and this place he has since designated as his home. He has done much of the railroad engineering that has made Lufkin a notable railroad center in Texas, particularly in the construction of the Eastern Texas, the Groveton, Lufkin & Northern and the Texas Southeastern Railroads. He was city engineer of Lufkin for six years, and the engineer of Lufkin's sewer system, consisting of nine miles of mains and laterals, with two aseptic tanks, which plant was completed in 1913. For two years Col. McCarthy was consulting engineer on new railroad work in Houston territory, and he has surveyed several projected lines throughout Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico. For some time he has been engaged in the investigation of a very extensive new trunk line project, aggregating about one thousand miles in length, for the Interstate Development Company, of which he is consulting engineer. He is also examining and consulting engineer for financial interests located in both London and Paris.

A man of immense popularity, he is known everywhere as Col. McCarthy, deriving his title through his connection with a semi-military organization in 1902.

Col. McCarthy was married in Minnesota to Miss Margaret T. O'Donavan in 1884, and they have three sons and one daughter. Frank McCarthy, the first-born son, now engineer for the Magnolia Oil Co., was formerly district engineer of the Texas & Pacific Railroad at Shreveport, Louisiana; Joe McCarthy is construction engineer in interurban lines for Stone & Webster, and is now located at El Paso, Texas; George, the youngest son, is associated with his father at Lufkin, and will in time take his place among the engineers of the district, as his brothers have already done. The daughter, Agnes, makes her home with her parents,

R. T. Canox, M. D. The medical profession of east Texas has one of its ablest representatives in Dr. R. T. Canon of Lufkin. Dr. Canon is a man of broad experience, widely traveled, and splendidly equipped professionally, has acquired success and high standing in Lufkin and as a citizen is a loyal believer in the greatness and possibilities of his native state. One fact that makes his career of unusual interest is that he is the third physcient in as many successive generations of the Canon family, and all of these have practiced in Texas. His grandfather, Dr. John Canon, not only practiced

His grandfather, Dr. John Canon, not only practiced medicine, but preached the gospel as a Methodist minister, and died in Polk county, Texas, at the veneralble age of eighty years. He married a Miss Weining, and their children were: Val C., of Plainview, Texas; Dr. John J.; Robert, who died during the Civil war; and Edward, who resides in Polk county.

Dr. R. T. Canon is a son of Dr. John J. Canon, who settled in Polk county, Texas, in 1858, coming from Florida, where he spent his childhood, and was married. He was born in Georgia in 1834, was educated largely in the city of Macon, took his courses in medicine at Atlanta, and began practice in Florida. On coming to Texas he settled at Big Springs, in Polk county, and was in practice there until 1872, when he moved to Moscow, and spent the remaining years of his active career there His death occurred in Lufkin in 1910. Dr. John J. Canon was in the Confederate army, and at the close of his service held the rank of lieutenant colonel. At Vicksburg he was wounded, and was again marked for Yankee bullets during the Mansfield campaign. His affiliation as a veteran of the war was with the Ike Turner Camp at Moscow. He lived a purely professional life, as a citizen voted the Democratic ticket, and was a man of religious convictions and a Methodist. Ontside of his work as a physician, perhaps his chief social interest was in the Masonic fraternity, and he served as district deputy grand master of the order, and also belonged to the Knights Templar Commandery. He married Mary Schmidt, a daughter of Patrick Schmidt, and his widow semmen, a magnet of Fatrice Semment, and his widow still survives. Their children are: A. S., a merchant at Calvert; Dr. R. T.; Mary, wife of J. W. Leggett, of Moscow; Benjamin M., of Minden, Louisiana; Dr. M. B., of Jacksonville, Texas; and Mrs. Nellie Victory, of Keltys, Texas.

Dr. R. T. Canon got his literary education in the high school at Moscow, and studied medicine in Galveston, and later in the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, one of the oldest and most distinguished medical schools in America. His graduation at Jefferson came in 1893, and possessing his degree of M. D. he began practice in Moscow, which city remained his residence until 1908. In that year he came to Lufkin, after taking a post-graduate course in the Chicago Polyclinic, and a course in surgery at the Mayo Hospital in Rochester. Minnesota. The doctor has identified himself with local medical society work, wherever he has practiced, and has been honored with the office of president and secretary in the societies of both counties. On March 13, 1895, Dr. Canon married in Moscow, Miss Ruby, a daughter of J. H. Johnson, of Long View, Texas. Her brothers and sisters are: J. P. and J. R. Johnson, of Staples, Louisiana; Pearl, who married Dr. M. B. Canon, of Jacksonville, Texas; Mrs. Addie Vickery, of Grove-ton; Miss Fannie and A. T. Johnson, of Long View, Texas; and Mrs. James Goodman, of Woodville, Texas. Dr. and Mrs. Canon have the following children: Otis. Maurine, and Mildred. Outside of his practice as a physician, Dr. Canon's public service has been in the capacity of trustee of the Lufkin public schools. The new thirty-eight thousand dollar high school, completed in 1913, stands as a monnment to the public spirit of Lufkin, as well as to the taste and business acumen of the board of education, one of whose members is Dr. Canon. He has taken degrees in both the Scottish and York Rites of Masonry, belongs to the Galveston Con-sistory, and was Grand Visitor for a time and is past master and past high-priest of Blue Lodge and Chapter respectively at Moscow and Lufkin.

ALFRED H. EASTERLING, M. D. Worthy ambition and definite purpose have characterized the career of Dr. Easterling and have resulted in making him a physician and surgeon of broad and accurate scientific knowledge and a practitioner whose success is on a parity with his recognized ability, the while his genial and kindly nature has further fortified him in popular confidence and escent. He is one of the representative members of his profession in Athens, the judicial center of Henderson country, where he has resided since he was twenty years conseant his recognition in this publication. He is a conseant his recognition in this publication. He is a conseant his recognition in this publication. He is a short of the production of the production

Dr. Easterling was born in Walker county, Georgia, on the 9th of August, 1865, a son of James M. and Georgia

(Reid) Easterling, both of whom passed the closing years of their lives in Athens, Texas, where the former died in 1886, at the age of seventy-six years, and where the latter was summoned to eternal rest in 1910, at the venerable age of eighty-five years. Mrs. Easterling, a woman of most gracious and gentle personality, was born in Whitfield county, Georgia, and was a daughter of Alfred B. Reid, a prominent and substantial citizen of that state. Mrs. Easterling came to Athens when the native timber was being removed of its present county court house, she having been one of the first white women to become a resident of the now thriving and attractive little city which is the judicial center of the county. She was twice wedded, her first husband having been Cyrus B. Meredith, who was a resident of Henderson county at the time of his death. The children of this union were: A. W. Meredith, who is a prominent banker and man of affairs of Willis Point, in Van Zandt county, where he was a county official for many years; James T. Meredith, who was a resident of Athens, this state, at the time of his death; and Mrs. Palmyra Graham, of Athens, Texas. James McQueen and Georgia (Reid) Easterling, who were married in 1860, became the parents of two children, of whom the elder is Dr. Easterling, of this review, and the younger, Eula Lee, who is the wife of John A. Murchison, of Athens.

James McQueen Easterling, the father of the Doctor, was born at Monroe, Watson county, Georgia, his father having been one of the most extensive planters and influential citizens of that section of the state. He was a son of Henry Easterling, who was born in Georgia, of Irish lineage, and whose wife was of Scotch ancestry, her maiden name having been McQueen. Henry Easter-ling died shortly before the inception of the Civil war, and his will made a careful provision of the distribution of his estate, which included a large number of negro slaves. Of his several children nearly all remained in Georgia until their death. James McQueen Easterling become one of the substantial and representative planters of Walker county, Georgia, and was the owner of a considerable number of slaves within the period of the patriarchal old regime of the South. As may well be sup-posed, he was vitally loyal to the cause of the Confed-eracy when the Civil war was precipitated on the nation, and he was commissioned captain of his company in a Georgia regiment that was commanded by Colonel Culbertson and that was assigned to duty with the Army of the Tennessee. He participated in the great Atlanta campaign and lived up to the full tension of the great conflict, though he was signally favored in that he was never captured or wounded. He was a man of strong mentality and impregnable integrity of character, was well fortified in his views, but had no predilection for the turmoil of practical politics, though he gave unqualified allegiance to the Democratic party, whose every presidential candidate he supported from the time of Polk to that of Cleveland, save during the period of reconstruction in the South, when he, in common with other eitizens, was disfranchised. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and was a citizen who ever commanded the high regard of all who knew him. He came to Texas in 1884 and passed the closing years of his life in Henderson county, as previously noted. He was twice married, and the mother of his son Alfred H. was his second wife. Of the children of the first union two sons, Edward and Archibald H., were valiant soldiers in a Georgia regiment in the Civil war, and both sacrificed their lives in the cause of the Confederacy. While with the Army of Northern Virginia they were captured by Federal forces in Maryland, where the younger brother received a fatal shot in the head. Rather than leave his wounded brother, Edward Easterling submitted to capture, and he was imprisoned at Funktown, Maryland, where he literally died of starvation, both he and his brother having been buried at that place, honored martyrs to the cause to which their loyalty was of the highest type. Of the daughters of the first marriage, Mrs. Mary Little died in Hardeman country, Tennessee, Mrs. Addie Little is a resident of Walker country, Georgia; Mrs. Sallie Jones resides at Wolfe City, Hunt county, Texas; and Mrs. Hunda McDinald maintains her home in the city of Atlanta, Georgia. There is also a brother, Joel C. Easterling, a resident of Mt. Vernon, Texas.

Dr. Easterling was reared to maturity on the old homestead planation in Walker county, Georgia, where he waxed strong in mind and body, but where his early educational advantages were confined to the somewhat ineffective country schools of the period following the close of the Civil war. He was thus far behind other members of his class in the matter of specific scholarship when he entered the old Joseph E. Brown University at Dalton, Georgia. The president of this institution bad appreciation of the ambition and restricted opportunities of the young student, and gave him full latitude for application and scholastic advancement. The ambition and color application of the development of the decidence of the color of the color

Dr. Easterling was twenty years of age at the time of the family removal to Texas, and for a time he was employed in a dry goods establishment at Athens, where he was later identified with other lines of business activity, though he early formed a definite ambition to enter the profession in which he has attained to marked suc-cess and prestige. In consonance with his ambition he was finally matriculated in the medical department of Tulaue University, in the city of New Orleans, and in this admirable institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1897. After thus securing his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine he established an office at Athens, and here his novitiate was of short duration. as he proved himself admirably fortified for the exacting work of his profession, and his personal popularity further augmented his success, with the result that he has long controlled a large and representative general practice, besides which he is known and honored as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Henderson county. He is an influential member of the Henderson county Medical Society, of which he served as president and of which he is now secretary and treasurer, and he is also actively identified with the Texas State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Loyal and progressive as a citizen and vitally interested in all that touches the social and material welfare of the community, Dr. Easterling is unwavering in his support of the generic cause of the Democratic party, and in the furtherance of social welfare he is implacable in his opposition to the liquor traffic and its delevious influences. He affiliates with the Masonic fraternity, the Knights of Pythias and the Order of the Aztecs, in which last mentioned he is supreme medical director of the state organization, the headquarters of which are maintained in the city of Fort Worth. Both he and his wife are popular factors in the leading social activities of Athens.

At Cuero, Dewitt county, Texas, on the 12th of February, 1902, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Easterling to Miss Mitchell M. Wofford, whose father, John T. Wofford, a native of Wharton county, this state, is a citzen of distinctive prominence and influence in Dewitt county. Dr. and Mrs. Easterling have two children, Margaret and James McQueer.

WILLIAM BENNAMIN WYNNE. For more than thirtyfive years William Benjiamin Wynne has been an active member of the Wills Point bar, and by his learning, industry, ability and character has held a high rank in his profession, while he is no less valued in the community as a liberal minded and enterprising citizen. A distinguished Texas family is represented in his person, and the Wynnes have been prominent in law, military affairs and in business in Texas since the family was established here by William Benjamin Wynne, Sr., in 1841. The senior Wynne came to the state from Jackson county, Tennessee, in an ox wagon, bringing his family with him. He was born in Jackson county in 1816, was reared there, and his education came from the country schools of his home community, where his father, whose name was also William Benjamin, was a slaveholder and merchant. There were five sons in the family of grandfather Wynne, namely: James H., Robert H., B. J., Thomas L. and William Benjamin. Of these, James H. and William B. came to Texas, the others remaining in their native state.

William Benjamin Wynne, Sr., on coming to Texas, settled at Old Belleview, in Rusk county, a community later known as Pyrtle, but he located his headright, or government land, in San Augustine county, although he never occupied it. In 1879 he moved from Rusk county to Van Zandt county, and died at Wills Point on March 4, 1904. His active career was devoted to agriculture, and before the war he acquired much slave property. In church matters he was a Methodist and quite prominent, a diligent student of the Bible and of sacred history, while in politics he was first a Whig and later a Demo-erat. A secessionist, three of his sons shared in his A secessions, three of his sons shared in his convictions and gave service in the Civil war as soldiers of the Confederacy. William B. Wynne, Sr., married Miss Mary E. Moore, a daughter of James Harrison and Mary E. (Harrison) Moore. She died April 3, 1858, the mother of Colonel Richard Wynne, distinguished as a Texas lawyer, soldier and politician, who was super-intendent of the Confederate Soldiers' Home at Austin when he died in 1913. Colonel Wynne was a gallant soldier, and during the war was with Proctor's Brigade. James Harrison Wynne, the second son, served four years in the Confederate gray with General Thompson's Brigade, and a member of the same organization was Devereau S. Wynne, who is now a farmer in Kaufman county. Thomas L. Wynne, fourth of the family, died in Palo Pinto county. The next in order of the children is the lawyer, William Benjamin. Mary A. married W. A. Williams and lives in Greenville, and Dionitia E. married J. R. Frisby, of Dallas. The father of these children subsequently married a second wife.

William Benjamin Wynne, or "Buck" Wynne, as he is more generally known, was born April 3, 1858, grew up about Pyrtle, in Rusk county, to the age of eighten, familiarized himself with the "wagoning" business of the early seventies, driving a feam from Hallville, then the end of the Texas & Pacific Railroad, to Henderson, Much of his education was acquired while thus engaged, and at the same time he gave instruction to a young negro. While a youth in his tens he began the study of law with his brother, Colonel R. N. Wynne, in Henderson, and in due time was admitted to the bar before Judge A. J. Booty, in 1878.

Mr. Wynne entered practice in a desultory sort of manner, making a few collections here and there, and for a year doing a little work in the courts. His first case was in the defense of J. P. Morgan, a farmer, who was being prosecuted for malicious mischief. Moving to Wills Point in 1879, his own legal career started practically with the inception of the town, so that he has been the leading lawyer in that community while it was growing to its present importance. Mr. Wynne early manifested an inclination for criminal cases, and as the advocate of those charged with crime came into a considerable reputation. This branch of the law was gradually made his specialty, although civil business of a corporate nature has also claimed his attention. Of the one hundred and eleven men he defended when their lives were at stake, but four verdicts were returned against him, and eight years was the longest term of penal servitude given any of his clients. He has always represented the shippers as against the railroads and has established precedents in a great many cases. Never in all the years of his legal activities has Mr. Wynne represented a corporation, except in the instances of one corporation appearing against another. For twelve years he was a member of the firm of Wynne & Russell, Judge Gordon Russell going into congress from their office. Mr. Wynne has lately taken his son, Angus Wynne, into the office with him, and they maintain an office in Kaufman as well as in Wills Point. The firm represents practically all the corporate interests of Wills Point, including the banks, oil mill and light plant.

In polities Mr. Wynne has never sought an office, nor

In polities Mr. Wyune has never sought an office, nor ever held one. He has been an active Bailey man, has sat in many state conventions, and is a man of some influence in the party in his locality. At the present time Mr. Wynne gives little attention to office affairs, rather devoting himself to the business of recuperating after a nervous breakdown. He fell exhausted at the Mr. Wynne gives have a case of unusual importance in Alaxy, fells, are more affected as case of unusual inportance in Alaxy, fells, profession for a period of ten years without a rest or vacation. He is regarded as one of the noted lawyers of Van Zandt county, and his success has been well merited.

Mr. Wynne's identification with church affairs began when he softled down and established a home and family years ago, since which time he has taken a leading part in the work of the Methodist Episcopal church of Wills Point. For some years he was superintendent of the Sunday school and at different times has been a delegate to church conferences.

In Marshall, Texas, on September 25, 1879, Mr. Wynne married Miss Margaret Welch Henderson, daughter of J. B. Henderson, a Virginian by birth and a farmer. The children born to them are: 'Minerva, wife of Russell Montague, a Wills Point merchant; Angus G., a graduate of literature and law of the Texas University, and now law partner of bis father, who married Miss Mena Sheltmore, daughter of Dr. Shellmore, of Dallas, and they reside the Kunfunan where the son hooks after the wife of Will Harrison, of Fort Worth, Eenjamin J. is a graduate of the Wills Point schools and a student in the University of Texas; and Toddie L., Naney Judson, Ada K. and Gordon Russell are the younger members of this family.

The family home of the Wynnes, located in a most attractive residence portion of the city, is one of the most charming to be found at Wills Point. Its magnificent lawn, with every ornamentation in the way of shrubbery and flowers that the landscape gardener's art could insure, is a feature of the place, and the box hedge and cedars that line the road from house to gate attract the attention and admiration of every stranger in Wills Point.

HOW. WILLIAM E. HAUKINS, associate justice of the supreme court of Texas, is a worthy representative of the dignity and greatness of the state in the domain of the law which he has honored for trenty-seven years. He comes of a family whose members have long been distinguished at the bar and on the bench, especially in Tennessee, where an uncle, Alvin Hawkins, served three terms as a member of the supreme court, and later was governor of the state; another uncle, Albert O. Hawkins, was for many years chancellor of the district including Carroll county, Tennessee, while a third uncle, Jo Hawkins, was forient judge and afterward for many years a practitioner at Huntington, Carroll county, Tennessee, Judge Hawkins was born at Greenwood, Caddo parish,

Judgė Hawkins was born at Greenwood, Caddo parish, Louisiana, September 26, 1863, and is a son of Rev. Samuel J. and Emmeline (Burke) Hawkins. His father, a native of Tennessee, was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and as such came to Texas in 1865, here helping to organize the North Texas Conference, as the Trinity Conference, at Sulphur Springs in that year. He was presiding elder of the Sulphur springs district, associate editor of the Texas Christian idvocate, and curator of Southwestern University at Georgetown, at the time of his death at Sulphur Springs, in 1888. An extremely pious man, thoroughly devoted to the work of his Master, his life was one of usefulness to his fellow-men, and his influence, always for good, was felt in whatever community he was located. The mother, who was born in Ohio, of Virginia parentage, still survives at the age of seventy-eight years, and is making her home with her son in Austin. William F. Hawkins secured his education in various schools of Texas, his father's calling making it necessary that the family frequently move from point to point. He later attended the University of Louisiana (now Tulane University), and finished his collegiate course at the Southwestern University at Georgetown, where he spent two years. He then taught school in Dallas county and afterwards in the city of Dallas. He was the first teacher of mathematics in the Dallas high school. Being financially unable to attend the law school of the University of Texas, he read law under the preceptorship and in the offices of Shepard & Miller, of Dallas, the firm being composed of Judge Seth Shepard, now chief justice of the United States court of appeals in the city of Washington, and the late T. S. Miller. With this excellent preparation, Judge Hawkins was admitted to the bar at Dallas in ISS7, and in that year began practice in that city as a member of the firm of McKanuny & Hawkins. Subsequently with his brother, he formed the firm of Hawkins & Hawkins, and still later became associated with John R. and C. P. Haynes, under the firm name of Hawkins & Haynes. This latter association continued until 1905, when Judge Hawkins was appointed first assistant attorney general of the state of Texas, under attorney general R. V. Davidson, and held this position until December 31, 1909, when he resigned. Shortly thereafter he was appointed commissioner of insurance and banking of Texas, and retained that office until July, 1910, when he moved to Brownsville, Texas, and became associated with Frank C. Pierce, in the general practice of law, under the firm style of Hawkins & Pierce, this partnership continuing until September, 1912.

In July, 1912, while living at Brownsville, Judge Hawkins was nominated in the state Democratic primary for the office of associate justice of the supreme court of Texas, by a majority which was officially reported as exceeding eighty-nine thousand, and in November, 1912, was elected to the position for the unexpired term of two weeks, and qualified January, 1913. There has never been cause for anyone to question Judge Hawkins' mental breadth and strength, or his determination, resolution and steadiness, in whatever field of activity he has elected to enter. As a jurist his decisious have indicated a strong mentality, careful analysis and a thorough knowledge of the law, and although personally a man of positive views, it has yet to be found that, as a judge, he has ever been influenced by his private inclinations. He possessed that self-control so requisite to the true judicial temperament, the power to put aside all personal feelings and prejudices in order that he may impartially dispense justice. Judge Hawkins is a member of the Masonic order and the Kappa Alpha fraternity, as well as the Town and Gown Club of Austin. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of this city.

On November 11, 1886, Judge Hawkins was married to Miss Ella Dickason, a native of Tennessee, but a resident of Dallas, and daughter of John S. and Mary L. Dickason. To this union there have been born five children, four of whom are living, as follows: Lyndsay D. of Dallas, a member of the legal fraternity, who recently returned to Texas from Phoenix, Arizona, where he was in partnership with his uncle, ex-Texas State Senator Albert S. Hawkins; Evelyn, who is the wife of Stafford G. Helm, a stockman and merchant of Dundee, Archer county, Texas; and two unmarried daughters, Marion and Eudora, who reside with their parents at 212 West Forty-third street, Austin.

William A. Watkins, M. D. With a name honored and distinctive through nearly eighty years of Texas History, Dr. Watkins represents the third generation of the family in the republic and the state, and has for forty years been prominent as a physician and citizen. During most of his professional activities his home has been at Kemp in Kaufman county. In the family membership will be found doctors, ministers of the gospel, farmers, solders, judges and lawyers, and all have made useful records in their relations with state and society. The grandfather of Dr. William A. Watkins was Dr.

Jesse T. Watkins, likewise a physician, born at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and established his residence at Nacogdoches, Texas, about 1836. He was a man of strong intellect, of virtuous purposes and righteous life, and was selected by General Houston to make treaties with the Indians whose hunting grounds were adjacent to the white men on the Texas frontier. In 1836, he set out from Nagodoches on this mission, with a pack train of twenty Auadarko Indians. From the day of his departure to the west no news came from the little band, but in after years it was ascertained on reliable information that all the party had been slain by Mexicans. Dr. Jesse Watkins married Mary McCorkle, who died at Nacog-doches in 1862. There was a family of five sons and two daughters, namely: Rev. Archibald H., who was a minister of the gospel and labored for his church in Texas more than forty years, dying in Rusk county about 1888; John M., who settled in Kaufman county in 1852, and left a large family at Kemp when he died, having served his county as judge from 1856 to 1860; Rev. Richard O., father of Dr. William A. Watkins; Robert, who died at Nacogdoches and left a large family; and Hon. Jesse J., who died at Douglas, Texas, in 1911, having served his county in the legislature and as county judge; Sallie, wife of Col. Robert Smith of Henderson, where she died; Mary, who married Col. Wynne of Rusk county, where she died.

Rev. Richard O. Watkins, father of Dr. Watkins, was born near Murfreesboro, Tennessee, in 1816. His education was received at Shannon, Mississippi, and in Lebauon, Tennessee, and he entered the ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. For many years he was prominent as a pastor in Texas, and was stationed at different times at Austin and Waco, and was also closely identified with the work of the church school at Tehnacana. He was a member of the hoard that located that noted old Trinity University, which now has its home in Waxahachie. The University was founded at that noted of Thinly choice in Waxabachia. The University was founded at Tehuacana in 1868. Rev. Watkins gave liberally to it for endowment purposes, among his contributions being the dormitory of twenty rooms for the housing of young men studying for the ministry. Rev. Watkins preached all over the inhabited part of Texas, and was active in the work for forty-five years. While the war between the states was in progress, he carried on his ministerial duties, and at the same time showed his loyalty to his south by his active advocacy of its cause, and through the service of his own sons. He fed the wives of those fighting under the "Stars and Bars" and was a friend and counselor during the dark hours of trouble. He did a splendid work in every field of intellectual activity, and passed on the sceptre of the church to those who came up under some influences he had set in motion.

"In 1855, Rev. R. O. Watkins followed his brother to Kanfman county, and there maintained his home. Of his family of six sons two served in the Confederacy as soldiers and are now deceased, while four are active and successful men of business or of professions. Rev. Watkins married Miss Amanda Polk, a daughter of John

Wawaskins MA

Polk of Memphis, Tennessee. They were married at San Augustine, Texas, where the Polk family has been among the most prominent in that section of the state. Mrs. Watkins died at Kemp in 1912 at the age of ninety-two, having survived her husband for many years. Their children were: John P., who belonged to Col. Parsons? Twelfth Texas Cavalry, lived the life as a farmer, and died at Kemp at the age of sixty-nie; Jessea Auswebserved in the same command with his brother, was a farmer and died at the age of sixty-sight, Richard O., a successful farmer near Kemp; William A.; Robert S., who lives retired at Waxahachie, Texas, and whose the top is given in greater detail, elsewhere; and Judge A. B., of Athens, Texas, who was born in 1858.

Dr. William A. Watkins was born at Nacogloches, June 4, 1849. Since 1855 his bome has been at Kemp, and he grew up on a farm, received probably more than ordinary educational advantages, and graduated from the old Trinity University at Tebuceana in 1870. Choosing medicine as his profession, he graduated from Tulane University in 1873, and his first years of practice were spent at Prairieville. In the course of forty years many changes have been introduced into the science of medicine and its practice, and Dr. Watkins has been one of the progressive men who has endeavored to keep pace with all improvements. He has taken several post-graduate courses in the New Orleans Polyclinic, and has fraternized with the various medical associations. He belongs to the County and State Medical Societies, the Daltas District Clinic, and the American Medical Asso-

While his zeal and efforts have been chiefly bestowed upon his profession, Dr. Watkins has likewise also been prominent in democratic politics in Texas. He served as chairman of the county executive committee twice, attended many state narty conventions, and was a delegate to the framous Hogg-Clark convention, to which he went as a supporter of Mr. Clark, but returned a champion of Governor Hogg. In local affairs he did a helpful part in assisting to locate the public school at Kemp, and for twenty years served the cause of public educations are also as the control of t

Hon. Ole Edwin Olander, D. D. President of the Texas Wesleyan College of Austin, Hon. Ole Edwin vol. IV-34 Olander has from early manhood been constrictingly identified with the ministry of the Swedish. Methodist church. He began his career in the ministry that age of twenty-three, immediately after his ordination that in the pointments since that time, each succeeding charge bringing added duties and responsibilities until he reached his present position of service that brings his influence as a Christian educator to hundreds of young men and women preparing for useful careers.

Dr. Olander was born in Norway on December 31, 1888, a son of Andrew Olavson, a Methodist minister. The change of the surname was made after the family emigration to America. The father came to America in 1868, settling in Minnesota, and in that state Ole Edwin Olander was rearred and had his early training.

After finishing with the public schools, he entered the Swedish Methodist Theological Seminary at St. Paul, Minnesota, an institution since moved to Evanston, Illinois. Owing to lack of means, he was unable to finish his course until graduating, but has since received his diploma from the seminary, and on account of his faithful and splendid work for the Methodist church and its institutions several colleges throughout the country have since rewarded him with honorary diplomas and with the title of D. D.

Dr. Olander was ordained to the ministry at the age of twenty-three, and his first call was to the church at Escanaba, Miebigan, and his second was at Trade Lake, Wisconsin, where he served a pastorate of two years. Then going out to Seattle, Washington, he was made presiding elder of the district, in spite of his youth, a post he continued to hold for six years, discharging its duties in a manner that won him high praise from the officials of the church. For twelve years Dr. Olander was pastor of the Central Swedish Methodist church of Austin, Texas, and for the past twelve years has been district superintendent of the Austin district of the Southern Swedish Methodist Conference. During the first six years of his term he was both pastor and district superintendent. These duties have since been increased by the addition of his work as president of the Texas

Wesleyan College, of which he was the founder.

The history of the Texas Wesleyan College is, in brief, as follows: On August 9, 1907, a meeting was held in Central M. E. church in Austin, attended exclusively by men who were interested in plans for a school to be located in Texas, and designed principally for young people of Swedish birth or ancestry. Among those present at this meeting were the pastors of the Southern Swedish Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church,

The deliberations at that meeting took form in resolutions to found an academy or college in Texas. Trustees were elected and various committees appointed, and it was decided to lay the matter before the Swedish people of the state. The appeal to the people was not made in vain. There was an immediate and hearty response. Not only did the Swedish people of the state show a healthy interest in the project, but many others, and especially the citizens of Austin, looked with favor on the plan. Austin was wisely selected as the most suitable place for the location of the institution, and Dr. Olander undertook, on his personal responsibility, to purchase for the sum of six thousand three hundred dollars a twenty-one acre tract of land in the city of Austin for a building site. The money was raised almost immediately by the business men and other citizens of Austin, through the Business League. Work on the school was commenced in the summer of 1911, and on January 1, 1912, the work was completed. On January 9, 1912, Texas Wesleyan College opened its doors, with ten teachers on duty and in readiness for class work. At the close of the first semester, on May 11, 1912, the school had a total enrollment of forty-seven pupils, an excellent record for an institution in the first year.

The college is most advantageously located, and with its twenty-one acre campus presents an attractive appearaire. The campus itself is a natural park, covered with groves of ancient oaks and pecans, is situated about a mile and a half from the main business section of the city, and less than a mile from the capitol building, while it is only four blocks from the campus of the University of Texas.

To Dr. Olander is due much of the credit for the organization and present existence of this ideal denomina-tional school. The plan had its conception in his mind, and his hand guided the affairs of the institution from conception into materialization, and the position of president, which he has held from the beginning, is one for which he is especially well fitted by nature and training. His life has been one of the highest devotion to duty, and his influence has been the inspiration of many a young Scandinavian who has set out to reach a high mark in life, taking the work and precepts of Dr. Olander as his guide and ambition. Dr. Olander's work as a Christian teacher and minister has brought him a host of friends, and no better evidence of this could be cited than his election to the Thirty-third Legislative Assembly of the State in 1913, in which office he is now serving, and through bim the best interests of his district and the state are being well considered.

HEMAN ROWE. The ordinary, everyday man in the business arocation which brings him his means of livelihood is fairly representative of the nation's citizenship. In the professions, and especially in the law, the opportunities for public usefulness and personal advancement depend almost entirely upon the individual, natural endowment being as essential as is thorough preparation. The bar of Waco, a representative body of the state, has its full quota of able men.

Mr. Rowe is a native son of Texas and of McLennan county, where he was born June 20. 1888. His father, John P. Rowe, was born at Camphil, Tallapoosa county, Alabama, June 24, 1861, and for a number of years has been prominent in business circles of Waco, where he is at the head of an extensive brokerage enterprise. His mother, Addie L. (Rice) Rowe, is a native of McLennan county. A complete review of the parents' lives appears on another page of this work. They had two children: Herman and John F., Jr.

The early education of Herman Rowe was secured in the public schools, following which be became a student in Baylor University, an institution which he attended until he was sixteen years of age. At that time he entered Trinity University, where he spent two years, and then, having decided upon a legal career, he entered the law department of the Cumberland University, and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1913, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Almost immediately he began practice in Waco, and this city has continued to be the seene of his labors. He holds membership in various organizations of his calling.

Mr. Rowe was married at Waco, September 23, 1908, to Miss Nonie Joues, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Jones. The father, who served as county elerk of Mc-Lennan county for several years, died in 1901, at Waco. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rowe: Mabel E., born October S, 1909. Mr. Rowe is a devotee of hunting and fishing, but rarely finds time from the duties of his calling to induge in his favorite sports. He is of his calling to induge in his favorite sports. He is cameron Park Terrace. He and Mrs. Rowe are consistent members of the First Baptist Church of Waco, where they have numerous friends, as they have also in social circles of the city.

The present county engineer for McLennan county is an expert in his line, was at one time instructor in the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Bryan, and has had a varied career in practical work of his profession, in the federal service and on raifroads and state and local public works. Like a number of other progressive counties in Texas, McLennan has undertaken a campaign for a large number of public improvements, including improved highways, bridges, a promotion of suitable drainage and other works that will enable the county to realize to the best advantage its fine resources, and the county was fortunate to secure the services of so able an engineer as Mr. Windrow to give his technical skill and experience in carrying out the many improvements which are now being planned. Rollen J. Windrow represents one of the old families in southern Texas, his great-grandparents having come from Tennessee to Texas when children. NORTY O, WORPHIM. Among the county officials of McLoman county, none has performed his duties with the county of the has performed his duties with the county of the county for the county for the county for his property of the county frequency. Worksham, Notly O, Wortham, whose administration of the county frequency for the county frequency and salive in McLemana county for nearly half a century, was at one time a cattle herder, as a result of industry and sticking to his job acquired a good farm, was in business at Waco many years, and his record in every capacity has been such as to entitle him to the confidence displayed by his fellow citizens in electing him to his present office.

Notly O. Wortbam was born in Graves county, Kentucky, March 8, 1848, a son of David D. and Amelia P. (Kelly) Wortbam. The father, who was born in Virginia in 1804, and came to Texas in 1862, was a farmer by occupation and died in 1872. The mother was born in Tennessee about 1820 and died in 1882. Their twelve children are named as follows: Elizabeth, deceased; Minerva, deceased; Charity; Susan; Patrick K., deceased; Ohn, deceased; Emily, deceased; Notly O.; Eliza, deceased; Addie; May; Warren, deceased.

Mr. Wortham was about fourteen years old when the family moved to Texas, and his education was largely acquired in the common schools of his native state of Kentucky. His first employment away from the home farm was as a cattle herder for one year, followed by a situation as ranch manager or foreman for a similar time, and he then invested his modest capital in two hundred acres of land in McLennan county. This land was cultivated under his management in cotton and corn for five years, and he then sold out and moved to the city of Waco. For twenty years Mr. Wortham was associated with W. K. Pink in the general merchandise business, and in that time became one of the most popular citizens of McLennan county. In 1908, during his first election to the office of county treasurer, and by the votes of the people his administration has been continued down to the present time.

At Waco, on September 15, 1891, Mr. Wortham married Miss Hannah Hopkins, of that city. Their three children are Ruth, Notly H., and Clarence K. Mr. Wortham has long given active support to the dominant political party in Texas, and outside of his public and political work and his business, his chief interest is centered in the Christian church, of which he is an elder. His home, which he owns, is a comfortable residence at the corner of Fifteenth and Henry streets.

BACON SAUNDERS, M. D. The limits assigned to this brief review of one of the most eminent surgeons of Texas and the southwest make it necessary that the biographer confine himself to tracing the origin and progress of a rare professional career; to present briefly the life of a prominent citizen as it has been seen by the mass of unprofessional people among whom it has been spent; to note the high professional honors which it has received; to give but the outline of a life that can only be justly and adequately considered by the professional writer and appreciated by the reader who has a thorough knowledge of the subjects which have engaged his activities, and can follow the line of original investigation which it has been his fortune to make in some im-

It can be stated without the possibility of gainsaying that Bacon Saunders is today one of the surgeons of first rank in the United States. Twenty years ago when he first located at Fort Worth he had a reputation for skill and ability of more than local measure, and his services have since then been brought into a constantly enlarging field so that for a number of years he has had scarcely a peer in the entire southwest. One of the most coveted honors of the profession was given him recently at the institution of the American College of Surgeons, when Dr. Saunders was made a Fellow of the College. This organization, patterned after the Royal College of Surgeons in England, is designed to afford some method of clear distinction for those members of the medical profession who are specially equipped for surgical work, and membership in the American College of Surgeons is an index of high proficiency in surgery even more than membership in the American Medical Association indicates standing and ability in the general field of medicine. A son of a pioneer Texas physician, whose career received some special attention in the following paragraph, Bacon Saunders was born at Bowling Green, Kentucky, January 5, 1855. When he was two years old the family came to Texas, settling first at Dallas, where they lived until 1869, and then moving to Bonham in Fannin county. His education was begun in private school at Dallas, and when the family moved to Bonham he entered Carlton College, a noted institution of its day, where he was graduated in 1873, receiving his degree of Bachelor of Arts when only eighteen years old. The following two years were spent in teaching at Bonham, and at the same time he was a diligent student of medicine in his father's office. He then entered the Medical Department of the University of Louisville, where he was graduated M. D. March 1, 1877, the honor man of a class of one hundred and ninety members. Returning to Bonham, he entered upon the practice of his chosen calling, and did a successful professional business there until January, 1893. He was the partner of his father at Boham, and it was the surgical branch of the firm's practice to which he gave special attention. His removal from Boham to Fort Worth was due to the many calls upon his ability as a surgeon, and the superior railroad facilities at Fort Worth enabled him to attend distant cases with greater convenience. For several years Dr. Saunders was a partner of the late W. A. Adams, and later with F. D. Thompson, and while with them paid some attention to general medical practice. During the past fifteen years, however, Dr. Saunders has confined himself to the practice of surgery, and his achievements have been such as to place him at the head of his profession in the state.

Dr. Saunders was one of the founders of the medical department of Fort Worth University, and is now president of the faculty of the Medical Department of the Texas Christian University, and professor of surgery and clinical surgery in that institution. He has considered his position as a teacher of young men in preparation for the responsible duties of medical life, a duty higher than any private interest, and has frequently sub-ordinated personal welfare to his sense of public obligation. However, he has received the emoluments as well as the honors of the profession since his skill has brought to him some of the most remunerative practice in north Texas. Dr. Saunders is chief surgeon of the Fort Worth Reas. Dr. Saunders is enter singeon of the for worth & Denver Railway, of the Trinity & Brazos Valley Railway, the Wichita Valley Railway, and local surgeon for the Texas and Pacific, the International and Great Northern, the St. Louis & Southwestern, and the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe. He is consulting medical di-rector of the Fort Worth Life Insurance Company. Dr. Saunders is essentially a professional man and has no political aspirations. He is a director in the American National Bank of Fort Worth, president and director of the Commonwealth Bonding and Casualty Insurance Company of Fort Worth, a director in the International Fire Insurance Company of Fort Worth. He has never been indifferent to the duties of citizenship, and at all times has taken an interest in matters that affect his home city or its people. Dr. Saunders was one of the founders and an ex-president of the North Texas Medical Association; is an ex-president of the Texas State Medical Society; is a former official of the International Railway Surgeons' Association, and is a past vice president of the Southern Surgical and Gynecological Society, a body whose membership is restricted to those who have attained acknowledged skill in surgery. The greater part of his local hospital work has been done as surgeon in charge of St. Joseph's Infirmary in Fort Worth. Dr. Saunders among his professional associates has always been noted for his enormous energy and vitality, and those constitutional resources have stood him in good stead in the long and arduous practice to which he has devoted himself for more than twenty years.

On October 31, 1877, Dr. Saunders was married to Miss Ida Caldwell, a native of Tennessee, and the daughter of Rev. Tillman A. Caldwell, who located with his family at Bonham, Texas. Mrs. Saunders was one of the women members of the Texas World's Fair Commission in 1904. They are the parents of two children: Roy F., who has followed in the footsteps of his father, and is a rising young physician and surgeon of Fort Worth; and Linda Ray, who married Mr. Charles D. Reimers, president of Exline-Reimers Company of Fort Worth.

PAUL DEWITT PAGE. A member of the Bastrop county bar since 1896, Judge Page has gained prominence both as a lawyer and as a business man, being president of the Citzens State Bank of Bastrop. His fellow citizens have further shown their confidence in his ability and integrity in choosing him again and again for positions of honor and trust.

Paul DeWitt Page was born at Evergreen, Conceuh county, Alabama, in 1868, a son of Patrick Donovan and Anna DeWitt (Mitchell) Page. His father, a native of Alabama, was educated in that state for the profession of law, was married there, and in 1872 moved to Texas, settling in Bryan, Bracos county, where he successfully practiced law until his death in 1880. The mother died at Bryan in 1885.

Judge Page was four years old when he came to Texas, received his early education in the schools of Bryan, was a student at the University of Texas, and read law in the office of Orgain & Garwood in Bastror, where he was admitted to the bar in December, 1896, where he was admitted to the bar in December, 1896, the state of the St one of the profession partnership with E. F. Higgins, who is now associate justice of the 8th court of civil appeals at El Paso. This firm was Page & Higgins, a partnership which continued with motual satisfaction until 1899, when Judge Higgins removed to Houston. In 1898 Mr. Page was elected country attorney of Bastrop county, and consented to continued service in that position for three successive terms or six years, until 1994. In that year he was elected county judge of Bastrop county, and looked after the fiscal administration of the country for two terms until 1998. In 1909 Judge Page joined in partnership with J. H. Miley under the firm name of Page & Miley, and they were partners in a large practice until 1993. Thereafter Judge Page was alone until April, 1913, when he and James 8. Jones made the firm of Page & Jones. Judge Page in a quiet way has had a very prominent part in politics and civic affairs, it being a characteristic of his to perform much public service but in such inconspicuous manner that he attracts less attention than many men of less ability. In 1908 he served as a delegate from the Ninth congressional district of Texas to the Democratic national convention at Denver; was a member of the Texas state Democratic executive committee in 1910, serving until 1912; and since 1909 has been chairman of the Bastrop county Democratic executive committee. At this writing, in 1914, he is a candidate for state senator from the Nineteenth senatorial district. Judge Page has been president of the Citizens State Bank of Bastrop since its organization in 1909, State Bank of Bastrof since its organization in 1999, and is also president of the Bastrop Abstract Company, Fraternally he has affiliations with Gamble Lodge No. 244, A. F. & A. M.; Bastrop Chapter, R. A. M.; Smithville Commandery, K. T.; El Mina Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine; the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias. In July, 1899, occurred his martiage to Miss Blanche Garwood, daughter of Major C. B. Garwood, of Bastrop, and sister of H. M. Garwood, of Houston. Mrs. Page died in April, 1911, leaving two children: Paul D. Page, Jr., and Wilmer Garwood Page. On April 16, 1913, Judge Page married Miss Mary R. Higgins, daughter of W. T. Higgins, of Bastrop, and a sister of his former law partner, Judge E. F. Higgins.

WALTER W. JENKINS. Descended from old and honored families of Virginia and North Carolina, William W. Jenkins, county auditor of Williamson county, Texas, has displayed in his character and his public service many of the traits which made the Jenkins family prominent in the various avenues of life in which their activities were maintained. PROFESSOR HENRY F. TRILETT. One of the foremost cluentors in Texas is the present city superintendent of schools at Beaumont, Professor Henry F. Triplett, who has been continuously identified with the work of the school room and the supervision of schools in Texas for the past twenty-one years. He is doing much to give vitality and increased efficiency to the school system of Beaumont, and is an important contributor to the modern progress of education in his part of the state. Preticulty all of his active career has been spent in educational work and in affairs of scholarship. Henry F. Triplett was born in London county, Virginia, in 1854, a son of Thomas Mason and Vianna (Silcott) Triplett. Both parents were members of old-time families of Vir-His father served throughout the war in the Confederate army, was by profession a musical director, but his practical work was in the field of stock raising and farming. In 1870 the father brought his family to Missouri, locating near Sedalia, in Pettis county.

Henry F. Triplett, until he was sixteen years of age, lived in Loudon county, Virginia, and accompanied the family on its removal to Missouri. There he grew to manhood on a farm, and in 1880 was graduated with the degree of B. Pd., from the state normal college at Warrensburg, and has been almost continuously identified with educational activities since then. Throughout his career he has been specializing so far as possible in science, and he studied in the Missouri School of Mines and Metallurgy at Rolla, and in the Illinois Medical College at Chicago, specializing in bacteriology and chemistry. His home has been in Texas since 1893, and during his residence in this state he pursued his studies in the Fort Worth University, where he received the degree of B. S. in 1900, and the degree of M. S. in 1903. Before coming to Texas, he had been superintendent of the city schools at Sweet Springs, Missouri, for seven years, and for three years at Harrisonville, Missouri. In 1893 he became superintendent of schools at Ennis, Texas, a position he held for ten years, and since that time has been superintendent of schools at Beaumont. He is an ex-member of the State Board of Normal Examiners and of the State Board of Examiners, and was an instructor in the Texas University Summer School several sessions. As superintendent of schools Professor H. F. Triplett has done a large and distinctive work. He has kept up the effi-ciency of the school system to its very highest mark, and has made the schools the co-ordinate factor in the institutional life of the city. During this decade the local school system has improved in every way to a greater degree than could be claimed by any previous decade. There has been a notable increase in the school population and in the school facilities. There are now seven school buildings for white pupils and four for colored children. The four latest buildings, completed in 1910, are the Pennsylvania Avenue School, the George O'Brien Millard School, the Averill School, and the Fletcher School, all of the most modern construction, and among the best of their kind anywhere. The school attendance for the year 1913-14 was 4,450,

Professor Triplett has membership in the Texas State, the Southern, and the National Educational Association. He is a former president of the State Association, and has been a member of its executive committee since 1904, He is the author of several books, among them being "Civics: Texas and Federal," the adopted text on civics for the schools of Texas, 1914-1920.

Religiously he belongs to the Methodist church, and is prominent in Masonry, having taken the Knights Templar degrees in the York Rite, thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and is affiliated with Galveston Consistory, and with El Mina Temple of the Mystic Shrine in Galveston.

Mrs. Triplett before her marriage was Miss Amanda Wheeler, who was born in Loudon county, Virginia. Her family came to Missouri at the same time with the Tripletts in 1870. The four children in the family of Professor and Mrs. Triplett are: Mrs. Lena Milam, Mrs. Olive Brock, Mrs. Juanita Alexander, and Mason Triplett. Mason Triplett, the only son, is engaged in the lumber business at Beaumont.

TEMPLE DOSWELL SMITH. The standard of every community is measured by the character of its financial institutions, for unless they are stable, the credit of the municipality and its people is impeached. The Bank of Fredericksburg, Texas, is an institution which grew out of the needs of its locality, and was organized by a man of exceptional standing, whose interests have been centered in it, and whose honor and personal fortune are bound up in its life. Under such desirable conditions, a bank is bound to maintain a high standard, and make money for its stockholders, and at the same time to safeguard the interests of its depositors. For more than a quarter of a century, Temple D. Smith has been one of the leading financiers of Gillespie county, Texas, and has been president of the Bank of Fredericksburg since he organized that institution in 1887. He is a native of Hanover county, Virginia, where his birth occurred August 22, 1846, and is a son of J. Snellson and Paulina Thilman (Doswell) Smith. The former was a son of Snellson Smith, who married Martha Bickerton Lewis, a member of the eminent Lewis family in Virginia. The Smith family is of English ancestry. Mr. Smith's father was a planter in Hanover county, Virginia, prior to the outbreak of the struggle between the North and the South. In 1860 he removed with his family to Marion county, Indiana, establishing a home near Indianapolis. His wife was a member of a prominent Virginia family. She was a daughter of Paul T. Doswell, a son of James Doswell, who was a captain of infantry during the Revolutionary war and who married Jane Thilman. Paul T. Doswell married Fannie Gwathmey, of Welsh ancestry, and Major Tom Doswell, his brother, was also a prominent member of this family.

Temple D. Smith was fourteen years of age when the family moved to Marion county, Indiana. Later he accepted a business position in Indianapolis. The early part of his education was secured mostly in the public schools, then under the tutelage of his father, who was educated at Randolph-Macon College and the University of Virginia, he continued his studies. In the Indiana capital, Mr. Smith received his introduction to the mercantile business, and for some years was connected with a wholesale iron and steel concern, filling positions in both the office and on the road and becoming thoroughly familiar with every detail of the trade; later he was associated with the once noted heavy hardware firm,

Fowler & Sons, of Buffalo, N. Y.

In 1884 he made his advent in Texas, going into the banking and mercantile business in Jones county, in the western part of the state. He came to Fredericksburg, Texas, in 1887, and here established the Bank of Fredericksburg, of which he has remained the president and principal owner to the present time. This is a private institution, and enjoys a place of the highest standing, not only at home but in the financial centers of the East. Mr. Smith is also president of the First National Bank of Carthage, Texas, and of the Cotton Belt State Bank, of Timpson, Texas, which institutions he organized in 1894 and 1897 respectively. He has directed the policies of the three banks in a safe and conservative manner, thoroughly gaining and holding the full confidence of the public. A fact worthy of most creditable mention in connection with Mr. Smitht's career as a banker, is that all three of his banks, during the financial panic of 1907, placed no limit whatever on withdrawal of deposits; the banks carried on their business during the crisis, paying all valid checks when presented.

Mr. Smith was married to Miss Mary Alice Francis, who was born at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, and one daughter has been born to this union, Miss Estelle Francis Smith, who, after receiving preparatory training in Mulholland's School in San Antonio, Texas, was sent to Wellesley (Massachusetts) College, where she took a B. A. degree, and now resides with her parents. In public matters, Mr. Smith has always evinced a commendable spirit of willingness to assist in all matters making for progress. Thus he rendered especially valuable services and dis-played his public spirit, in 1913, when he contributed liberally and helped to raise the bonus for securing a railroad line to Fredericksburg. For himself he has never desired public office, but his support and influence are much sought by those running for positions of preference, and he is known as a man who will loyally adhere to and courageously fight for the principles which he deems just. Essentially a financier, he has found his chief pleasure in his business ventures, but he has not been indifferent to the social amenities, and in a wide acquaintance is able to boast of a number of sincere friends. For the past fifteen years Mr. Smith and family have divided their time between their home in the south and New York city.

JOHN SMITH SAUNDERS, M. D. As already stated, Dr. Bacon Saunders is the son of an eminent pioneer Texas physician, and some notice of his career is appropriate in this connection. John Smith Saunders, who was one of the best of old-school physicians, was born at Glasgow, Kentucky, and in 1857 came to Dallas, which was then situated almost on the frontier. As a pioneer doctor in that city, in the years immediately preceding the war he became known over a wide surrounding territory. His visits across the sparsely settled country, bearing cheer and healing to the isolated families, often penetrated into Tarrant county. To the easy-circumstanced dweller of city or town of the present day, imagination alone must picture the hardships which the good doctor encountered on these horseback journeys with his medicine packed in his saddle-bags, or the joy with which he was hailed by the suffering who had perhaps awaited his coming for days, whereas in this age the same number of hours would seem long, and who would not see him again on his rounds for several weeks. Filling the place of friend, counselor, and helper, his part in the life of that historical epoch is none the less important because it was unostentatiously performed. He thus continued to practice at Dallas until the war came on. A Kentuckian, it is not strange that his admiration for his fellow citizen, Henry Clay, made him an adherent of oldline principles, and when the question of secession came up for settlement, though a firm believer in state rights, he opposed the separation from the Union. But, like Lewis T. Wigfall, whom he so admired, and like hundreds of conspicuous and eminent southerners, his loyalty to Dixie, when the issue came to settlement, aligned him without hesitation with the Confederacy. Enlisting in 1862, he was appointed brigade surgeon on the staff of General R. M. Cano, and as such served until the close of the war. On his return to Dallas he decided to give up the practice of medicine, and for several years during that period of industrial prostration took a prominent part in business affairs. He built and operated the first steam mill at Dallas, and was also in the mercantile business until the failure of his health obliged him to retire. His children were then at the age when they needed better educational facilities than were afforded at Dallas, and this was the prime consideration that induced him to move to Bonham in 1869. There he built up a large general practice and lived until his death in 1891. His wife was Sarah Jane Claypool, who was born at Bowling Green, Kentucky.

At one time Dr. John S. Saunders served as president of the North Texas Medical Association, following his son in that position. Noteworthy and successful though he was as a physician, his character was such that men were more interested in the man than in his work. Of firm and positive conviction, he commanded respect and wielded influence among men as a leader, although he never used the qualities for any kind of political preferment, and the most important position he held was as brigade surgeon during the war. In the Christian church he took a very active part, and was a devoted member until his death. Though his energies were almost constantly directed to serious affairs, yet he possessed the social qualities which attached men to him through affection as well as respect. He was an engaging storyteller, and was especially fond of pointing a serious principle with an illustrative anecdote. Schools of a primitive time supplied him with only the barest fundamentals upon which later study and observation reared a most intimate knowledge of literature, men and events. His love for the classics in literature never deserted him, and even in camp, when surrounded by all the stern realities of military life, he was wont to read his Shakespeare aloud to his fellow officers, and such was his sympathetic acquaintance with that author that it is said he knew half the plays by memory,

Dr. W. NEAL WATT. No family in Texas today, perhaps, has a wider family record for military activity through several generations than has the Watt family, of which Dr. W. Neal Watt, of Austin, is a representative member. Dr. Watt first came to Texas in 1882, and in the year 1894 he identified himself with this city in his professional capacity, since which time he has been active and prominent in his work. Dr. Watt was born on December 31, 1856, in Charlotte, North Carolina, and is a son of Rev. J. B. and Louisa A. (Neal) Watt. The ancestry of Dr. Watt is a most interesting one, and though lack of space will not permit any great detailing of the family, it may be said that members of the Neal and Watt families have played important parts in the making of American history, from Colonial days down to the present time.

Rev. J. B. Watt was for a number of years pastor of the Steele Creek Old School Presbyterian church, and he was a son of James Watt, who lived at Winnsboro, South Carolina, for years, and was a very successful farmer there. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and a direct descendant of James Watt, the inventor of the steam engine, the family having emigrated from Scotland in the sixteenth century. Members of the families from which Dr. Watt, of this review, comes, namely,—the Neals, Watts, Griers and McDowells, figured prominently in the Revolutionary war as participants, and Dr. Watt is especially proud of the fact that he is a native son of Mecklenberg county, where the Declaration of Independence was first voiced on May 20, 1775.

General W. H. Neal, the maternal grandfather of the subject, owned and operated a number of cotton and grist mills in the vicinity of Charlotte, North Carolina, and in his day was reckoned a big man. The family was especially active in Civil war times, and eight members of the Neal-Watt-Grier family who met death on battlefields of the Civil war in the service of the Confederacy, lie buried in Steele Creek cemetery. Larkin Neal, another of the family lies in an unknown grave on the field of Antietam. Captain Mathew Peeples, an uncle of Dr. Watt by marriage, was killed in the seven days battle at Richmond. After being wounded and carried off the field, he was killed by the explosion of a shell. A half brother of Dr. Watt, Frank Watt, and another named Charles, were very active in the service of the Confederacy. Frank Watt was a gallant lieutenant in the First South Carolina Cavalry, attached to General J. E. B. Stuart's command. Just before the battle of Antietam he was shot above the right ear, the bathe of Anderdam le was such above the right carrying with it particles of the brain. He fell from his horse and was reported dead. When Stuart was beaten back by a division of Federal infantry, the body of Frank Watt was captured. When it was discovered that he was still alive he was lodged in prison, and after six months there he was exchanged and returned home, sound and well. He returned to the service in a short while and took an active part in the second battle of Manassas. A few weeks after that battle he fell ill of typhoid fever, and died in a Confederate hospital. Charles Watt passed through the entire war period without being wounded, and he is still living. It is a notable fact that the First North Carolina Regiment, of which he was a member, was in thirty-two pitched battles, besides numerous skirmishes, Mr. Watt participating in them all. He was captured at Petersburg in D. H. Hill's division, and for several months after the close of the war he was a captive in a northern prison. The mother of Dr. Watt was Louisa Angeline Neal, a daught ter of Gen. William H. Neal, of the Confederate army.

Dr. Watt had his early education in the schools of Charlotte and Shelby, North Carolina, attending the D. McNeill Turner high school of the latter place, after which he entered the medical department of the University of New York, and on March 10, 1877, was graduated. Soon after that event the young doctor began practice with Dr. Thomas Kell at Pineville, North Carolina, and for a year he remained there. He came to Burton, Texas, in February, 1882, and he continued there in practice until 1894, when he came to Austin. Since that time he has been definitely and worthily engaged in medical practice in this city.

Dr. Watt has kept up his professional studies during the year and in 1907 he took post graduate courses in medicine and surgery in the Chicago Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital. In addition to his private practice, he was engaged as Division Surgeon of the Austin & Northwestern Railroad from 1894 to 1902, and prior to his coming to Texas he was surgeon of the North Carolina State Militia for one year. At the present time he is Chief Medical Examiner & Nominator of the Equitable Life Assurance Company of the United States, medical examiner of the Provident Life Assurance Society of New York, medical examiner of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and of the Order of Railroad Trainmen and also medical examiner for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and of the Woodmen of the World. He is the medical representative of the Austin Aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles; Surgeon of the Union Casualty and Insurance Company of St. Louis, Missouri; of the Michigan Commercial Travelers' Association; of the Mutual Accident Association of Utica, New York, and of Maryland Casualty Company of Bal-timore, Maryland. He is a member of Travis County, Austin District and the State and American Medical Associations, and is an active member and worker in each of them.

His private practice in the city is an extensive one, which, coupled with his many professional activities, combine to make him one of the busiest men of the city.

On September 27, 1882, in Burton, Texas, Dr. Wat was married to Olivia Jordan Elliott, a daughter of B. F. Elliott, of that place, and five children were born to them. William Elliott Watt is now twenty-two years of age and is a student in the medical department of the University of Tennessee in his third year. Maude Winited, aged inneteen, a graduate of the Austin high school, will attend a girl's college, where she will fit herself for the teaching profession. Stuart, aged seventeen, is an apprentice in an automobile shop. Terrence Neal Watt, eight years old, is a pupil in Bickler's school, in East Austin. Watter Slade Watt, the youngest, is now three and a half years old.

The family residence is maintained at No. 309 East Eighth street, while the offices of the doctor are in the Littlefield Building.

JAMES J. PARGETT. The ups and downs of life have about equally alternated in the business career of James J. Padgett, who has been identified with business in one form or another in Texas since his earliest advent into the state in the year 1872. Since then he has been active in agriculture, mereantile ventures and in public service. Success has attended some of his enterprises and on numerous occasions he has been unfortunate, but he is, in the main, a fairly successful man, and takes his place among the foremost men of Waco, where he has been a resident since 1897.

James J. Padgett was born in Calhoun county, Georgia, on September 27, 1850, and is a son of Elijah Padgett and Lydia (Davis) Padgett. The father was born in Fayette county, Georgia, in 1821, and was a prominent man in Calhoun county for a good many years. He was sheriff of the county for thirteen years and judge of the superior count of the county for six years, as well as being otherwise prominent in that district. He died in 1855. The mother, who was born in 1831, died in 1865, leaving one son,—James J. Fadgett his review.

James J. Padgett attended the common schools of Calhoun county to the age of nineteen years, after which he was employed in the farming communities near his home until he was twenty-two, when he left the work and with his father opened a general store in Whitney. They continued until 1872 and sold out the business and came to McLennan county, Texas, where they took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. They lived on the place for six years, then sold it and invested the proceeds in a farm implement business at Perry, associating themselves with a Mr. Henchman in the enterprise. After two years they withdrew and, going south to Bosque, McLennan county, hought another farm of one hundred and sixty acres, for which they paid $3.50 the acre. After three years James J. Padgett, attracted by the opening of the town of McGregor, moved to that place and built the third house that was erected there. He put in a line of furniture and stoves, also a full line of farm implements, and continued successfully in business until 1885, when he burned out, and the business was a total loss. While in business there Mr. Padgett had been appointed postmaster under the first Cleveland administration, and he served for three and a half years, when he resigned. After the disastrous fire, crippled in his resources and almost ruined, Mr. Padgett again engaged in the implement business and continued for two years, when he sold out, and again bought land at South Bosque, where he lived for two years. In 1897 he came to Waco and for a year was occupied in the feed business. but his next venture was in carpentering and contracting, in which he continued for three years. For the next years he was in the employ of the city in various capacities, and in 1912 he was elected justice of the peace from the First Precinct, which office he still retains.

It will be seen that Mr. Padgett has known ill fortune, as well as good, but he has always taken his losses philosophically, and after each misfortune has come up smiling, ready to begin over again, and today, after fortytwo years of residence in Texas, he may be said to be one of the reasonably successful men of the place.

Mr. Padgett, in addition to his service as justice of the peace, served as deputy sheriff of McLennan county for ten years, and he was constable of Moody precinct for one term. He is a member of the Young Men's Business League of Waco, and attends the Baptist

churcl

On February 7, 1887, Mr. Padgett was married to Martha L. Davis, daughter of John Davis, a real estate man of Calhoun county, Georgia, and to them have been born nine children. Lydia, the eldest, is a widow; Lenora is the wife of J. C. McKathan; John married Lula Miler, and is a farmer; James, Jr., an expressman at Waco, married Jennie Raysdale; Alice M. is the wife of William Elliott, of Okhahoma; Lollie married D. T. Pierce, a minister and teacher of Kingsville, Texas. Tommie, Roger and an infant are deceased.

DR. JAMES EDWARD SNEED has been a resident of Teague and a practicing physician here since the town started on its way to the dignity of the name of city, coming here as a young physician fresh from his alma mater at New Orleans. He is a Texas product, born in Fairfield, on December 17, 1881, and he was reared for the most part in the community of his birth. He is a son of Dr. Wm. N. Sneed, who still practices medicine in Fairfield, and concerning whom it is eminently fitting and proper that some mention be made at this

Dr. William N. Sneed came to Texas from Thomasville, Georgia, where he was born in 1844. He had his education in Tulane University, in New Orleans, and from Texas, where he came as a youth, he entered the Confederate army from Freestone county, in the regiment of Colonel Bradley. He served in General Pemberton's army in Mississippi and was captured and paroled at Vicksburg. He then returned to the service in Texas and served in and about Galveston during the remainder of the war. He was never wounded, and when the long struggle was ended he turned at once to when the long struggle was chard at tunied at one to his professional studies, and was a graduate from the medical department of Tulane University. His service in a public capacity has been confined to membership on examining boards and other work pertaining to the making of fledgling doctors. He has attended the clinics and done post graduate work from time to time, keeping himself as fresh and up-to-date in the knowledge of his profession as he felt himself on the day he left college. Dr. Sneed has taken no active part in politics. He is a Democrat, and though prominent and popular with his fellow men, he has never shown any desire to hold office. He is a man of striking appearance, weighing about 190 pounds, and with a figure as erect as that of an early North American Indian. He is a man of pleasing personality, and is a natural leader, so that had he permitted himself to deviate from his chosen career, he would have undoubtedly won high honors in the political field. Dr. Sneed has given some time to agriculture, and he is the owner of a vast tract of land in Freestone county. He has brought much of his land under cultivation and has introduced blooded horses and cattle iuto the section where he carries on farm-ing activities. He is also interested in banks in both Fairfield and Teague, and his investments have extended to other fields as well. He never makes public speeches, but among a company of friends, Dr. Sneed is an interesting and instructive conversationalist.

Dr. Sneed came to Texas with his father, Kit W. Sneed, who died in Fairfield, as a farmer. He became a large planter there and owned many slaves, and the colored Sneeds of the present day are, for the most part, descendants of his former holdings of blacks. He was a strong Secessionist, and a ranker as was shown no quarter. Kit W. Sneed married a Miss Davis, and their children were seven in number. were Dr. W. N., Dr. J. A., Walter E. and Dr. Kit W., of Wortham, Texas; Mrs. J. B. McInnis, of Teague; Mrs. J. H. Oliver, of Buffalo, Texas; and Mrs. Ella

Johnson, of Fairfield, now deceased.

Dr. William N. Sneed married Miss Alice Johnson, a daughter of Col. J. B. Johnson, a Confederate Colonel, and an ante-bellum settler of Freestone county. He was an extensive planter and slave owner and the famous old "rock house" of the Fairfield community was his home, and was of his own construction. His children were Edgar, of Waco; William P., a large planter near Fair-field; Mrs. W. F. Moore, who died in Mexia, Texas, and Mrs. Sneed. The issue of Dr. Sneed and his wife were Berta, wife of G. P. Davis, of Fairfield; Dr. Wm. N. Jr.; Dr. James Edward of this review; Mrs. John F. Fryer of Fairfield and Miss Alice Sneed, also of Fair-

Dr. James Edward Sneed spent his boyhood acquiring his common school training, and when he was a high school senior he entered the A. & M. College at Bryan. There he did the work of the Junior year in the engineering course, and when he left that institution he set about his preparation for a medical career. He had his medical training in Tulane University at New Or-leans, and came fresh from his studies there to take up his professional duties at Teague, and here he has since continued successfully in his work.

Dr. Sneed is a member of the local medical societies, and he is also a member of the State and National Associations.

On November 6, 1906, Dr. Sneed was married in Camden, Alabama, to Miss Sallie Belle Bonner, a daughter of Irvin H. Bonner of Fairfield, Texas, and an old Confederate soldier and comrade of Dr. Sneed's father. Mr. Bonner came to Texas before the war and married Miss Jane Robinson, the daughter of a pioneer family of Freestone county. Mrs. Sneed is one of the two daughters of her parents, the other being the wife of Dr. Ernest Bonner of Camden, Alabama, Dr. and Mrs. Sneed are without issue.

Dr. Sneed is a Mason of the Blue Lodge and Chap ter, and is also fraternally affiliated with the Elks and the Knights of Pythias. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church of Teague, and take an active part in its work.

JOSEPH T. LARUE. A native son of the Lone Star state who has attained to distinctive success and prestige as one of the representative business men and influential citizens of Henderson county is Joseph Thomas LaRue, the popular president of the Athens National Bank, at Athens, the attractive and thriving judicial center of the county, where he has also other important capitalistic interests. His status in the community sets at naught any application of the scriptural aphorism that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country," for he claims as his native heath the county that is now his home.

Mr. LaRue was born on a farm near Murchison, Henderson county, Texas, on the 18th of November, 1864, and is a representative of the honored pioneer families of this favored section of the state, hesides which the name has been worthly lined with the annals of American history since 1685, when three brothers came from France and settled in Virginia. The lineage is thus traced back to stanch French origin and representatives of the family having aided in blazing the path of civilization on the "dark and bloody ground" of Virginia and Kentucky, when that commonwealth was still on the frontier. Joseph M. LaRue came from Bedford county, Tennessee, to Texas in 1852, and first settled near Lovelady, Houston county, but in the following year he removed to Henderson county, where he acquired a tract of wild land and instituted the reclamation and improvement of the same, this county continuing to be his home until his death, and his having been secure prestige as one of the honored pioneers and progressive citizens of the county, to the development and upbuilding or which he contributed his full quota,

Joseph M. LaRue was born in Bedford county, Tennessee, in the year 1825, and there his father, John C. LaRue, died very shortly after the close of the Civil war, at the age of seventy-seven years. John C. LaRue was born in Kentucky, whence he removed to Tennessee in the early pioneer epoch of the history of that state, and he became one of the extensive planters and slaveholders of Tennessee, where he well upheld the prestige of the family name, which is perpetuated in the title of LaRue county, Kentucky, a county named in honor of one of the distinguished members of the family who was prominent in the early history of the fine old Bluegrass state. John C. LaRue was a soldier in the war of 1812 and the maiden name of his wife was Hardin. Of their several children, Joseph M., father of the subject of this review, was the youngest. Joseph M. LaRue was reared under the somewhat patrician regime in the old south and was afforded the advantages of the schools of his native state. Upon leaving the parental home and instituting independent operations as a planter in Tennessee, his father presented him with a few slaves, whom he employed on his plantation, which was one of modest order, and whom he brought with him to Texas, where they continued in his service until the Emancipation Proc-lamation led to their freedom. Mr. LaRue continued his agricultural operations in the vicinity of Murchison, Henderson county, until 1886, when he removed with his family to Athens, the county seat, where he died in the following year, honored by all who knew him. He was a loyal supporter of the cause of the Confederacy during the Civil war, in which he served in the command of General Magruder, the greater part of the time being given to service in the quartermaster's department. While thus giving his aid in the support of southern arms Mr. LaRue acknowledged conversion to the Christian faith and became a member of the Baptist church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted adherent. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and his life was guided and governed by the highest principles of integrity and honor. As a young man he wedded Miss Mary F. Oliver, who was born in the state of Tennessee, and who survived him by several years. Concerning their children following brief data are available: Clara is the wife of General J. Eads, a prosperous agriculturist near Athens, Henderson county; Penine became the wife of William Rhodes and now is deceased; Joseph T., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Squire B. resides at ElCampo, Wharton county; Ella is the wife of James O. Denton, of Murchison, Henderson county; William J. died in the city of Galveston, in 1902; and Anna is the wife of John H. Towery, of Athens.

Joseph T. LaRue was reared to maturity on the old homestead, which was the place of his birth and in connection with which he gained his initial experience in the practical duties and responsibilities of life. After completing the curriculum of the rural school, he continued his studies for a time in Hubbard College, at Overton, and later he attended the high school at Comanche. That he made good use of his scholastic opportunities is shown by the fact that for two years he was a successful and popular teacher in the country schools of his native county, but in the light of events it cannot be regretted that he deflected his attention from the pedagogic profession to identify himself with practical business activities. At the age of twenty-two years Mr. LaRue established his residence in Athens, where he assumed a clerkship in a mercantile establishment. He continued in the employ of others for eight years and then engaged in business as a merchandise broker, in the handling of heavy groceries and farmers' supplies, cotton-gin products, etc. Mr. LaRue continued successful operations in this line actively about fifteen years and then turned his attention to other fields of business enterprise, in which his success has been of equally unequivocal order. In 1902 he effected the organization of the Athens National Bank, which was incorporated with a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars. He has been a potent factor in the development and upbuilding of this substantial and popular financial institution of which he has been president since 1904, the other members of the official corps being as here noted: Dr. C. R. Johnson, vice-president; B. Sigler, eashier; and Isaac P. LaRue, assistant eashier. The bank now has a sur-plus of thirty-five thousand dollars, its undivided profits are five thousand dollars, and it has proved a beneficent agency in conserving the civic and material welfare of Henderson county. Mr. LaRue is president also of the First State Bank of Murchison, which was organized in 1912, is secretary and treasurer of the Farmers' & Merchants' Gin Company of Athens, is a stockholder and director of The Citizens' Ice Co., and is president of the Athens Business Men's League, a well organized and representative commercial body with high civic ideals and progressive policies. Mr. LaRue is ever ready to give his influence and tangible co-operation in the support of measures and enterprises projected for the general good of his home city and county and has done much to further the material development and upbuilding of Athens, where he is the owner of much valuable realty and where, in 1912, he erected a row of attractive and substantial brick business places on the south side of the courthouse square. The town of LaRue, thirteen miles southeast from Athens, on the T. & N. O. R. R., was named for him.

In politics Mr. LaRue was reared in the faith of the Democratic party, and from the same has never permitted himself to be deflected. He served several years as a member of the city council of Athens and he is one of the leading men of affairs in Henderson county, with a circle of friends that is limited only by that of his acquaintances, as his sincerity, integrity and purpose and genial personality have gained and retained to him unqualified popular confidence and esteem. He is affiliated with the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias and both he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist church in their home city.

On the 16th of March, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. LaRue to Miss Stella Parsons, daughter of the late Dr. H. L. and Margaret (Richardson) Parsons. who were prominent pioneers of the village of Terrell, Kaufman county, Mrs. LaRue being said to have been the first white child born at that place. Dr. Parsons was a native of the state of New York, received from Yale University the degrees of both Bachelor of Arts and Doctor of Medicine, and he long held prestige as one of the most distinguished and honored representatives of the medical profession in northern Texas; Mrs. LaRue is the elder of his two children, and the younger, Homer L. Parsons, is a representative citizen of Athens. Mr. and Mrs. LaRue have had the following children,-Eldred Bailey, Isaac Parsons, Margaret, Mary F., Joseph C., Frank E. and Stella. The eldest of the children was born in January, 1893, was graduated in the Athens high school, after which he was for two years a student in Baylor University, at Waco, and he is now engaged in the merchandise brokerage business under the firm name of LaRue & Borrou. Isaac P. LaRue is assistant eashier of the Athens National Bank, as above

CHARLES S. TAYLOR. This early Texas pioner had a very prominent part in the events which preceded and followed the establishment of Texas independence, and for reason of his public service, the fact that he was one of the signers of the Texas Decharation of Independence, and for many other causes which will later appear, his life has a peculiar appropriateness in the biographical annals of Texas. The following article, briefly describing his life and services, has been kindly prepared for this publication by his son, Lawrence Taylor, one of the venerable residents of Nacogdoches, in which city the family have had their home for nearly a century.

Speaking for himself to his family at Nacogdoches, which includes his son Lawrence S., he said: "I was born in the city of London, England, and an orphan in the care of an uncle with whom I could not agree; on becoming of age, and free to follow my own inclinations, drew from the bank there the money left me by my parents and came to the city of New York. Not being satisfied there, I came to Natchitoches, Louisiana, there purchased a horse and took the king's highway from that place in the direction of Nacogdoches, Texas. A few miles out, the horse sickened and died. The remainder of the journey to Nacogdoches I walked, carrying my bundle across my shoulders, arriving there in good health and spirits and stayed there."

Colonel Horton, speaking through a newspaper article, said: "When the volunteer soldiers from San Augustine Municipality arrived near Nacogdoches they were joined by the young men of this place, including Charles S. Taylor, and together attacked the Spanish troops doing garrison duty and routed, driving them to the Angelina river in the direction of San Antonio, where they, four hundred strong, surendered. This was in aid of Mexican independence against Spain."

Charles S. Taylor met Mary Rouff, a daughter of John E. Rouff, an immigrant from Wuertemberg, Germany, at her sister's home in Nacogdoches, the latter having married Hon. Adolphus Sterne. He married her and en-gaged in the mercantile trade, with Mr. Sterne as a partner, but quit that trade and with his wife went over and lived on Ayish bayou in or near the town of San Augustine. There he became an alcalde under the government of Coahuila and Texas, and in all trials by jury and convictions had with the death penalty this alcalde had the sentence executed accordingly without delay.

Charles S. Taylor returned to Nacogdoches and was appointed under a decree of the legislature of the Mexican State of Coahuila and Texas a land commissioner to issue titles to the colonists, his official place of business being at Nacogdoches, and he collected from the colonists quite a sum of money, which he dispersed by direction of the Committee of Vigilance and Safety at Nacogdoches, and adjunct to the government of the Republic of Texas, and to the collectors appointed by the Consultation in 1835. His work in this department is now embodied in a printed pamphlet as collected and preserved by himself and copied verbatim by his son, Lawrence S. Taylor.

Charles S. Taylor with Sam Houston, Thomas J. Rusk and John S. Roberts represented the Municipality of Nacogdoches in the Constitutional Convention of 1836. and at Washington on the Brazos river signed the Declaration of the Indepedence of Texas.

Charles S. Taylor, with others from that place, joined General Houston's army and participated in the battle at San Jacinto. His wife and three children remained at Nacogdoches until Santa Anna's army reached the vieinity of San Jacinto battlefield, when she with her small children joined in the historical "Runaway Scrape" in 1836, and fled across the Sabine river into the State of Louisiana, U. S. A., where all her children died from the exposure and hardship of this flight for safety. She always remarked to her children born to her afterwards in a sad way: "I shall surely stay at home with you in a sad way: I shan sately act at the should another 'Runaway Scrape' occur hereafter.'' Charles S. Taylor was appointed by the Congress of the Republic of Texas as the first Chief Justice of Nacogdoches county, and in conjunction with county commissioners under a law then in force, settled by sale all land titles to lots within the old corporate limits under Mexican and Spanish law and claimed by the new government as vacant domain as the successor to those governments. Now, we have a "Constitutional" or "Principal" square, and a church (Catholic) square or plaza. On the front of the village church are dedications to the people at large, and are so recognized by the government and the judicial tribunals of Texas as successors to the Mexican government.

Charles S. Taylor was appointed District Attorney for the district including his home county, Nacogdoches, and did good work in protecting the public domain of Texas from the numerous "land sharks" so called at that time, as also from the other criminals large and

Charles S. Taylor was appointed by the State of Texas a commissioner to investigate and report the legal status of land grants on the border Rio Grande, and after his return from that border, he sent two of his sons, Charles Irion and Milam (named for Ben Milam) to that border as rangers in the service of the State of Texas, and they chased Indians there in 1860.

Charles S. Taylor was Chief Justice of Nacogdoches county during the war (Civil) and attended to that office with its many additional burdens by reason of the war.

Charles S. and Mary Taylor's sons, Charles I., Milam, Lawrence S., William and Adolphus, joined the Confederate army. William died in the service and was buried on the bank of the Atchafalaya river in Louisiana, Lawrence S. was wounded at the battle of Mansfield. Louisiana, and was reported at home as killed, but his father, Charles S. Taylor, came to the hospital at Mansfield and brought him home alive, and not badly hurt, only disabled in both legs. And now let me at this time, January 15, 1914, draw the line distinguishing the Confederate soldiers from the Mexican soldier as relates to conduct and procedure with wounded and captured adversaries in war. Lawrence S., as stated, was wounded and disabled at Mansfield, and while waiting his turn for his wounds to be dressed, the captured Federals were marched quite near and this Confederate soldier ob-served a wounded Federal soldier by the blood flowing from his body, and called to him to fall out of the marching line and lie down beside him, and asked the surgeon to give this wounded man attention in his turn as he could wait and the other could not. Soon darkness came over the field and obliterated all but the groans of the wounded, and I never saw again this friend in distress, and I am not wrong in saying this was not a single instance of this kind, but was a general rule of conduct with Confederates under like circumstances. Our Captain, H. C. Hancock, a northern born and reared man, lately from the north, was of this kind, and taught his soldiers mercy by his own example. This captain was killed at Mansfield and his soldier boys will remember him until called to join him, as we hope, not in hell, as Sherman would say as a preferable place to Texas, but in the shade and in a cool place.

In concluding this sketch I will say Charles S. Taylor named his son Milam to do honor to Ben Milam, the patriot who lost his life in battling for the independence of Texas. I, Lawrence S., also named a son Milam for the same reason, that the name Ben Milam be in this way remembered in our family. His mother (Mrs. Lawrence S. Taylor) was Harriet D. Irion, a daughter of Dr. Robert A. Irion, who was Secretary of State under Gen. Sam Houston, and Anna Raguet, the latter a pioneer family previous to 1836. Some of the brothers and father took part in the early history of Texas, as also in the Confederacy, and as appropriate here, my son Robert Irion Taylor, joined the United States army in the late war with Spain, and thus obliterated in a measure the old Mason and Dixon line between the north and south. Now I am past seventy-two years, and have lived and learned that war is pretty near "hell" as General Sherman said, and do hope that our president, Woodrow Wilson, and Congress will not involve us in a war with Mexico at this time. I guarantee the truth of the facts stated herein.—L. S. Taylor, Nacogdoches, Texas, Jan-

BOB RYAN MASON. Long familiarity with the cotton gin as a salesman of cotton gin machinery made it possible for Bob Ryan Mason to engage in business on his own responsibility in that line of enterprise. In 1913 he organized the Texas Gin Company, and today, less than a year from the date of organization, the company operates twelve gins in the state. The young firm is already well established and is enjoying a fine success, under the management and direction of Mr. Mason.

Bob Ryan Mason was born in Robiuson county, Tennessee, on September 12, 1868, and is a son of Monroe O. and Melissa (Taylor) Mason, both born in Robinson county, Tennessee, in 1840. The father is a retired stockman and farmer and he now makes his home at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, while the mother died in 1898. They were the parents of nine children, named as fol-Ligy were the parents of nine entitien, named as follows: Harlety O.; Joseph F.; Bob Ryan; Rurie; June L.; Musa; Hope; Doreas and Jessie G. Mason.

Bob Ryan Mason was educated in Robinson county.

Tennessee, in the district schools, attending at such odd season as he found freedom from the work of the home farm, both in Tennessee and in Texas, after the family moved to this state in 1881. They settled in McLennan county, and in 1887 Mr. Mason came to Waco, where he secured employment as a traveling salesman in the implement business. He traveled in that capacity for five years and then changed his line to furniture, continuing as a salesman for another four years, when he reverted to machinery again and entered the service of the International Harvester Company. His next service was with the American Round Bale Gin Company, and he was with that concern for five years. He then, in 1903, became identified with the Continental Gin Company and continued as traveling salesman for that firm until June, 1913, when he organized the Texas Gin Company, with a capital stock of $10,000. The firm is prospering and hids fair to become one of the leading establishments of its kind, already operating twelve gins in various cities of the state.

Mr. Mason is prominent and popular in Waco, where he has long been known, and he is identified with numerous fraternal and other societies that have furthered his popularity and extra societies that have furthered his popularity and extra Among these are the United Commercial Travelers, with which he has been amiliated for the past twenty years; the Texas Travelers' Association, of which he is vice president; and the Young Men's Business League of Waco, one of the valuable and progressive organizations of the city. He is particularly fond of hunting, and that sport constitutes his chief recreation. Generous of heart and mind, Mr. Mason finds a wholesome pleasure in extending timely aid to children and aged people who have need of friends, and he has brightened many a life by his timely assistance along these lines.

A Democrat, he has done good work for the party in the county, and his influence is a worthy one in political circles. He has never been an office seeker. He is a property holder in Waco and also owns property in other parts of the state.

Mr. Mason has been twice married. His first wife was Minne Lee Boyd, whom he married in 1894, and she died in 1909, leaving one child,—Herbert M. Mason, On November 26, 1912, he married Ida Clare Renfro, at Brownwood. Herbert Mason is a student at Daniel Baker College in Brownwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Mason are members of the Presbyterian church, and he is an elder in the church.

AMOS MANSON CURTIS, M. D. One of the oldest active practitioners of medicine and surgery in McLennan county is Dr. Curtis, who attended his first patients and earned his first fees in that county nearly forty years ago. Dr. Curtis has throughout this time had a high standing in the local profession, and during the greater part of his practice gave his attention to a general clientage. A tew years ago, however, in associating with Dr. Witte he established a sanitarium, the second of its kind in McLennan county, and an institution which has done much to keep this section up to the best standards in facilities and methods of treating disease and injury, and the establishment has many times justified itself not only in the patronage insured to its proprietors, but also in its effective service to the general public. The sanitarium contains fourteen rooms, three trained nurses are regularly employed, and this number is occasionally increased to meet the demand.

Dr. Curlis was born in Clay county, North Carolina, January 5, 1854. His father, Watson Curtis, who during his long career acquired prominence in his locality, was born in Buncombe county, North Carolina, in 1813, and ided in 1889, at the age of eighty-five. He was a farmer by occupation, but after his removal to Clay county was elected treasurer and sheriff, and had a very important place in public affairs. The mother was Elizabeth Jones, who was born in North Carolina in 1822, and died in 1862. Her children were: Mary, Sarah, William J.; Columbus W., deceased, Amos M.; Julius; John, deceased; Martha and Lillie.

Dr. Curtis until he was eighteen years of age, attended school in Clay county, and then went across the mountains into East Tennessee and studied medicine for two years with Dr. L. W. Duncan at the town of Philadelphia. After this study under a private preceptor, he entered the Atlanta Medical College at Atlanta, Georgia, where he was graduated M. D. in 1875. Coming to Texas in the following year, Dr. Curiis established himself at Waco, and lived and prospered as a general physician and surgeon up to 1909, when he concentrated his attention to the sanitarium in association with Dr. W. S. Witte. The building is located at Eighth and Washington streets, and is conducted under the firm name of Curtis & Witte.

Dr. Curtis has never married, and in the absorbing work of his profession, in extended travel, and in the many interests which come to a man of his ability and standing, has found sufficient reward and attraction to balance the joys of domestic life. He is a stockholder and director in the National City Bank of Waco, a stockholder and director in the National City Bank of Waco, a stockholder and medical director in the Texas Life Insurance Company, affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, belongs to the McLennan County Medical Society, the Central Texas District Medical Society, the Pexas State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. For one year he served as County Physician, and in politics is a Progressive Democrat.

A. RANDOLPH WILSON. With the organization of the Amicable Life Insurance Company, of Waco, March 8, 1910, A. Randolph Wilson came to this city to accept the positions of secretary and assistant actuary, capacities in which he had had wide and varied experience in the East. He has since continued among the business men of Waco, and has firmly established his right to be accounted one of the progressive and energetic men of this progressive and energetic eity. Mr. Wilson is a native of Richmond, Virginia, born February 28, 1882, a son of George M. and Mary F. (Thweatt) Wilson. He is a direct descendant of Captain Francis Eppes, an immigrant to Virginia in 1625 from England, and Henry Randolph who immigrated to Virginia in 1643 from Northamptonshire, England.

George M. Wilson was born on the Brierfield plantation, in Amelia county, Virginia, January 13, 1842, and has spent his entire life in the Old Bominion state, where he is prominent in business circles as secretary and treassurer of the Tidewater and Western Railway Company, He married May F. Thweatt, who was born on the Eppington plantation, in Chesterfield county, Virginia, 1855, and she died at Richmond, Virginia, in 1908, the mother of six children, as follows: Minnie, who is now Mrs. J. G. Robert, of St. Louis, Missouri, Richard T., of Richmond, Virginia, secretary of the State Corporation Commission; Georgia M., who is now the wife of W. T. Harris, of Richmond, Virginia; Florence E., who is the wife of LeRoy Roper, of Petersburg, Virginia; A. Randolph, of this review; and Edward Ls., of Waco, clerk of the Texas National Exchange Bagk.

A. Randolph Wilson was granted excellent educational advantages in his youth, attending the public and high schools of Richmond, and then entering the Virginia Polytechnic School, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Sciences, in mechanical and electrical engineering. After completing his studies he entered the employ of the Virginia Passenger and Power Company, as switch and motor tester, and after one year went to New York with the Gray National Telautograph Company, as inspector, in 1904. When he resigned his position with that company, three years later, he had been advanced to the position of manager of the Cleveland (Ohio) office. His next connection was with the Life Insurance Company of Richmond, Virginia, where he remained in the actuary department for two years, and he then became secretary and actuary for the Eastern Life Association Company of Virginia, at Norfolk, for one year. On March 8, 1910, he accepted his present position with the Amicable Life Insurance Company when it was organized at Waco, and at this time he is a stockholder and director in the company. From the time of his youth Mr. Wilson has gradually progressed until be now stands as one of the directing heads of an enterprise which figures prominently in business circles throughout the Southwest, and he owes his advancement to the fact that he has thoroughly mastered every task devolving upon him, the readiness with which he has recognized and grasped opportunities and to his adaptation of new conditions evolved in business life to the needs of the present day. WILLIAM H. BROOKS. A very successful architect, whose business headquarters are in Waco, but whose practice has extended into many diverse quarters of the state, is William H. Brooks, who has been a permanent resident of the state during the last thirty years and has devoted most of his time to building construction and to his profession as an architect.

William H. Brooks was born at Tehnacana, in Freestone county, Texas, November 9, 1862. His father, William Brooks, born in November, 1832, came to Texas when a young man, about 1858, and before the war was a ranch man and after the struggle between the states was engaged in merchandising. During the war he fought on the Confederate side as a member of a Texas regiment, and when the Southern troops returned to their homes he moved from Texas to Butler, Alabama, locating at Greenville, where he was an enterprising merchant up to 1879. His health failed in that year, and his oldest son, William, then had to leave school and take charge of the store until 1884. The father passed away in 1888, having been fairly successful as a business man and leaving a worthy name to his descendants. The mother was Mrs. Annie E. McCann, who was born in Butler county, Alabama, in 1844, and who died in 1907. Their six children were named William H., Charles L., Louis, Lillian, Edward and Hubbard, both of whom died in infancy

William H. Brooks was three years old when the family returned to Alabama, and his schooling was acquired in Butler county of that state until he was seventeen years old. He continued a resident there until 1884, having for several years had the actual management of his father's store. On his return to Texas at the age of twenty-two, he located in Falls county, and spent the first five years in agricultural pursuits. planning and construction of buildings has been a natural gift and almost a passion with him since childhood, and at the end of his farming experience he entered actively upon his profession, and has made of it an excellent success. His headquarters were at Marlin, Falls county, up to 1903, in which year he moved to Waco. In that city he was employed by other architects until 1911, when he set up in business for himself, and now enjoys a good practice and a growing reputation. He has been commissioned as architect for a number of public and business structures in outside cities and towns. He drew the plans for the courthouse, the First Baptist church and the high school building at Anson, in Jones county. Mr. Brooks is a single man, is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, a member of the Methodist church, and in politics a loyal Democrat. Besides some property in Waco, he owns his former residence in Marlin, Falls county. With him his business is his chief interest, and he occasionally takes his pleasure in a fishing or hunting trip.

Correct Monroe Hearn. When Mr. Hearn first became a resident of Kaufman county in 1868, he was a boy of about fourteen, and the remainder of his youth was spent in the then pioneer condition of this section of Texas. He eventually became a farmer, a successful one at that, and from prosperity as a tiller of the soil and producer of cropg gradually extended his enterprise to local industry and business, and is now one of the leaders in the community of Mabank in Kaufman county.

Mr. Hearn belongs to a very old and prominent family in southern history. There is sufficient data to prove the family line in consecutive order back to the year 1066, in English history, the date when William the Conqueror beat down the ancient Britons and established a new era in the life of the English Isles. A number of genera-tions later, one of the descendants immigrated to Amer-ica, and established a home during the colonial epoch. Elijah Hearn, the great-grandfather of the Mabank business man, had a family of children at the time the war for independence was fought. Elijah Hearn died in Morgan county, Georgia, the father of sixteen children. He was nearly one hundred years of age when his death occurred, and thirteen of his children reached mature years and spent their lives in Georgia. William Hearn, the grandfather, was born in Essex county, Maryland, in 1791, was married in West Moreland county, Virginia, and early in his married career settled in Georgia, where he died in 1851, in Alabama. He was the youngest in the large family of sixteen children just mentioned, and took part in the war of 1812 in General Floyd's com-mand. He lived a quiet and industrious life, was devoted to agriculture on the one hand, and to the ministry of the Methodist church on the other, until his death. William Hearn married Martha Stephens, who died in Autauga county, Alabama. Their children were Malinda, who married Jephtha Yarbrough, and died in Autauga county, Alabama; Zina, who married D. L. Bunn, and spent her final years in Randolph county, Bunn, and spent her final years in Randolph country.

Thompson, and died near West Plains, Arkansas; Martha, who married Jackson Harris, and also died in the same locality of Arkansas; Jon C., who died in Actuage country, Alabama; Thomas S., who died in Georgia; Elijah, who died in Alabama; William, who died in Alabama; who died in Alabama; who died in Alabama; who died in Alabama; wh Arkansas near West Plains; Benjamin, who died in Arkansas near West Flains; Benjamin, was died in Georgia; Rachel, who spent her last years in Autauga county, Alabama; James Henry, father of the Mabank business man; Sarah A., who died in Georgia as Mrs. Johnson; Lucy Jane, who married Samuel Ware, and died in Autauga county. Rev. Hearn, the father of these children, married for a second time Catherine Snell, who had one son, Joshua, whose whereabouts since the war between the states have not been known.

James Henry Hearn, one of the venerable citizens of Mabank, whose active life as a farmer only closed with ripening old age, was born in Fayette county, Georgia, December 25, 1835. He brought his family to Texas from Elmore county, Alabama, after the Civil war. He was reared in his native county of Fayette in Georgia, and his education came from the old log schoolhouse of the primitive times. His boyhood was spent in Alabama in comfort and without special incident until the death of his father, and at that time the cessity for sof his properties of the farm, and started out independently as soon as he had married. Settling in Chambers county, Alabama, just across the line from Georgia, he lived there three years and then took up his residence in Coosa county, where he lived until after the war. James Henry Hearn made a gallant record as a soldier, during the war between the states. On February 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Confederate army as a private in Captain George E. Brewer's Company A, Col. Mike Wood's Forty-sixth Alabama Infantry, in command of Taylor's Brigade of Tennessee Army. His first fight was a small engagement at Tazewell, Tennessee. He was with the army in the defense of Vicksburg, and took part in many of the engagements leading up to the crucial time of that defense. He was at Baker's Creek, Champion Hill, Big Black River, and then was fighting from within the defenses of the city itself. When the city surrendered to General Grant in July. 1863, the paroled soldiers of the Forty-sixth Mississippi were ordered to Demopolis, Alabama, and were there again equipped for further service, and sent north to reinforce General Bragg's army at Chickamauga. They arrived too late to take part in the battle, but went to Chattanooga, and Mr. Hearn fought at Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and was in the command which faced the Federal advance during the campaign against Atlanta. He fought at Dalton, and other engagements, and at Jonesboro a minie ball from a Yankee gun passed through his right arm into his right side angularly and passed out about four inches to the right of the spinal column. This wound rendered him unfit for further service during the war. He lay in the hospital from the 31st of August, the day he was shot, for two months, at Macon, Georgia. He suffered the torments of gangrene poison, and barely escaped with his life. He was furloughed home as an invalid, and had little capacity for hard labor for some years after the war. At his last battle when he received his wound, he was wearing the stripes of a sergeant, being first sergeant of his company.

At the close of the war James Henry Hearn found himself stripped of all his property, and had a small family to provide for. Like many other brave and resolute men of the south, be adapted himself to conditions as they were, and sought to build up his fortune on his farm. As the outlook was not promising in the old home vicinity he decided to seek friends and fortune further west. He journeyed by way of boat from Wetumka, Alabama, around by New Orleans, and finally arrived at Shreveport, Louisiana, in 1868. From there the family journeyed by rail to Marshall, which was then the terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, and thence by private conveyance reached College Mound in Kaufman county. When he was finally settled and had his program well laid out, Mr. Hearn began investing in land in Kaufman county, at prices ranging from one dollar and a half to three dollars and a half per acre. He lived modestly and quietly, kept aloof from politics, improved his land and premises, encouraged education by aiding the erection of several schoolhouses, during the thirty-two years of residence, and contributed also to the burden of church work and church responsibilities. He saw his children grow to become men and women, and go out into the world as tillers of the soil with educations obtained in their own community. With such a career behind him, it is not strange that James Henry Hearn has the respect and esteem of all who know him and he is one of the best known men in Kaufman county. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and in politics is a Democrat.

Cornelius M. Hearn, who was born in Alabama, December 24, 1854, grew up at College Mound, and at-tended school there. His elementary schooling had been received in his native state. When he married he settled on rented land and lived there two years, and then moved to the locality three miles north of bank, where he bought land and made a farm, When he had gained some independence and much experience he became a stock trader, a dealer, and eventually a shipper. At the same time he conducted farming on a large scale, put two hundred and fifty acres under the plow, and ultimately became owner of many more acres. He continued actively with the farm until 1898, when he engaged in the gin business and moved to "Old Lawndale," from which locality he moved to Mabank, in 1900. At Mabank he erected a gin of four stands, seventy saws, having since improved it to a six-stand eighty saw plant. To the ginning operations he now devotes most of his time. Mr. Hearn has shown his faith and loyalty to his community at Mabank, in the erection of a fine two-story residence, the finest home in the town. An immense barn stands near, and both buildings suggest the substantial character of their owner. Mr. Hearn also assisted in organizing the First National Bank of Mabank,

In polities he is a voter with the Texas Democracy, and belongs to the Baptist church. Fraternally he has been master of his Masonic Lodge at Mabank and belongs to the Knights of Pythias, but takes only moderate interest in fraternal affairs.

On June 2, 1877; Mr. Hearn married Miss Agnes Aly, a daughter of John Aly, Her father came to Tesses from Tennessee and was twice married. Mrs. Hearn was reared in the home of relatives. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hearn are Dr. Robert E., of Mabank, who graduated in medicine at Louisville, Kentucky; Any, wife of E. E. Treadwell of Mabank, and has one son, Lawrence W.; Fannie, Neele and Helen live at home.

THOMAS PIERCE STONE. In a career which has been remitful in accomplishments and the usual rewards of success, Mr. Stone has been the chief factor in shaping his own destiny, and as a hard-working and ambitious individual has progressed from one stage of accomplishments to the next higher until for a number of years he abeen regarded as one of the leading lawyers of Waco and also a man prominent in local and state affairs.

Thomas Pierce Stone was born at Lewisville, Arkansas, May 5, 1869. His father, Andrew J. Stone, was born at Greenville, South Carolina, June 10, 1833. In 1866 he moved to Texas and settled in Milam county. A farmer by occupation, he was a man of considerable enterprise and prominence, was a teacher for five or six years in Texas, and served as treasurer of Milam county for six years. His death occurred January 29, 1893. He may rived Emily F. Butler, a sister of Gen. M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, She was born at Greenville, South Carolina, December 11, 1838, and now lives at the venerable age of severty-five with her son in Waco. The six Culture of the comprising the family were as follows: William B., now deceased; Jessie B.; Thomas P.; Jennie T., deceased; Andrew F., deceased; and Nathaniel C., deceased.

The early education of Thomas P. Stone was limited and his opportunities for acquiring it intermittent. At odd times, sometimes for two weeks, and then for only two or three days consecutively, he attended country schools in Texas until he was seventeen years of age. As a result of the war between the states his father had been ruined financially, and his health had been so weakened that he was seriously handicapped in prosecuting his business, and in consequence his children had to take a hand at an early age in earning their own way and contributing to the general family support. Thomas P.

Stone kept hard at work on a farm until he was twenty-Four years of age. Moving a tarin much see was twenty four years of age. Moving to Cameron, in Milian county, he then began the study of law in the office of Judge P. S. Ford. In ISSS he was granted a license to practice in the state courts, and received his admission to the Federal courts in ISSS. Even his law education came as a result of hard study in spare time, his days being devoted to business, and his nights to the reading of his law books. While during the twenty-five years of his practice Mr. Stone has tried cases involving all the general principles of jurisprudence, he has specialized in civil law and land titles law, and in that field is regarded as an attorney possessing peculiar qualifications and especial strength, so that he is a valuable ally to his clients. In 1889 Mr. Stone moved to Waco, and has had his home and his business in that city. While his practice has always been the main consideration with him, he has at different times worked for the public welfare, and has acquired some business interests, including a position as stockholder in the Citizens' National Bank of Waco. Mr. Stone has never married and has been devotedly loyal to his mother, who resides with him.

In politics a leader of the local Democracy, he represented his district in the State Senate from 1904 to 1908, during the twenty-ninth and thirtieth legislature. For that office he was nominated and elected without opposition, and his work as senator was highly creditable and of a quality that might well be emulated. Mr. Stone is one of the meu who regard the body of Texas statutes on special laws as sufficiently large, except as special issues arise requiring further extension, and for this reason his work as a legislator consisted chiefly in keeping a close watch upon current legislation, preventing and cutting out any corrupt measures being added to the statute books, and at the same time perfecting and simplifying the laws already written therein. In religious affairs he is an Episcopalian, is affiliated with the Masonic order, the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Brotherhood, Mr. Stone was Commander-in-Chief of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans of the South, having been elected to that office at the Dallas Reunion in 1902, and served until the Reunion at New Orleans in 1903.

WALTER B. ALLEN. One of the concerns to which the eity of Amarillo owes its prestige as a center of commercial activity is the Waples-Platter Groeer Company, wholesale dealers in groceries and grocery specialties. The manager of the concern, Walter B. Allen, has made himself a distinct factor in the business life of the city, and he has resided here since 1905. He is a Texan by nativity, born at San Felipe, Austin county, August 3, 1872, a son of Benjamin and Catherine (Penn) Allen. On the paternal side of the family Mr. Allen is of Scotch ancestry, and is a grandson of Benjamin Allen.

On the paternal side of the family Mr. Allen is of Scotch ancestry, and is a grandson of Benjamin Allen, Sr., a pioneer settler of Austin county, Texas, where his son Benjamin was born. The latter was for many years a prominent stockman and farmer, and is now living at Fort Worth, Texas. During the Civil war he fought in the coast defense service. In politics he is a Democrat, and his religious faith is that of the Mothodist church, He was first married to Catherine Penn, a direct descendant of William Penn and a daughter of Columbus Penn and sister of Mrs. A. M. Ireland, whose hashand, Mrs. Allen was born in Virginia, due gentror of Jessac Mars. Allen was born in Virginia, due gentror of Jessac Mars. Allen was born in Virginia, due gentror of Jessac taken to Mississippi, coming to Texas as a child with her parents, who settled at the old town of Rutersville, near LaGrange. Her death occurred in 1576, when she was thirty-two years of age. She was the mother of two children, Leila L. and Walter B. Two years after the death of this first wife Benjamin Allen married Miss Elizabeth Parker, a daughter of W. A. Parker, who resided near the present town of Brookshire, in Waller county, Texas, and to this union there were born three daughters and one son. Both Mr. and Mrs. Allen still survive, enjoying the fruits of their early years of toil, and honored and respected by all who know them. Walter B. Allen was but three years of age when his mother died, and during the two years that followed he made his home with an aunt, Mrs. R. L. Penn, but after his father's second marriage he returned to the home farm and was tenderly reared by his stepmother, whom he will ever hold in fond remembrance. Until he was seventeen years of age he attended the public schools of Austin and Fort Bend counties, and his first employment was on his father's farm. After leaving the parental roof he went to Georgetown, where for three years he was employed as a clerk in the establishment of W. Y. Penn, dealer in jewelry, books, and stationery, subsequently going to Fort Bend county with his father, where for one year they conducted a saw mill, its product being shipped to Houston. Mr. Allen next went to Fort Worth, where for four years he was in the retail grocery business in the employ of others, after which he took charge of the eigar stand in the Delaware Hotel, Fort Worth, for the wholesale grocery and eigar firm of Waples-Platter Grocer Company. After one year his faithful and able services won him a position on the regular sell-ing force of this concern, and he continued as house and traveling salesman until July 1, 1911, when the com-pany opened a wholesale branch of their grocery business at Amarillo, in the Savage Building, at the corner of First and Lincoln streets. At this time Mr. Allen was made manager of this branch, with a traveling force of five men, the equipment of the firm being modern in every detail, with railway facilities and switches and a floor space of about 11,000 square feet. On September 1, 1913, the company leased and moved into the Blair & Hughes Building, at the corner of First and Filmore streets, where they have much larger quarters, their floor space covering about 14,000 square feet. The firm not only has a large and constantly growing trade at Amarillo, but a large tributary business as well, and much of the success of the enterprise may be attributed to the untiring energy and business ability of Mr. Allen, who has brought to his work an enthusiasm that he has been able to instill in those working with him. Among his associates he is recognized as a man of more than ordinary acumen and judgment, and the success he has achieved has been most gratifying to the officers of the main house, who have placed the most implicit confidence in him. He has been interested in other ventures of a commercial nature, and at this time owns a onehalf interest in the firm of Horn & Allen, general mer-chants at Channing, Texas. As a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Amarillo Business Men's Association he has done all in his power to forward the interests of his adopted city, and he has on every occasion shown himself an enthusiastic "booster" for Amarillo and the Panhandle in general. In politics he is a Democrat, but he has found no time to enter into public affairs. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian church.

On October 29, 1902, Mr. Allen was married at Weatherford, Texas, to Miss Manie Buster, who was born in Washington county, Texas, a daughter of W. G. Buster, and a stellar of Washington county. Mr. Buster died at his home in Weatherford March S, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Allen became the parents of three children: Catherine Edwina, who was born at Fort Worth, Texas, June 44, 1904; Walter Buster, born at Amarillo, Texas, August 13, 1907, and who died in this city December 13, 1912; and Frank Penn, born at Amarillo, June 13, 1910. The family home of the Allens is situated at 1700 Van Buren street, Amarillo.

DR. HORATIO L. TATE, a retired physician of Lindale, Texas, has been a resident of Smith county for more than three score years and has contributed his part in the progressive activities of this locality.

Dr. Tate was born in Elbert county, Georgia, September 4, 1841, and in 1850, when a boy of nine years, was brought to Texas. His father, Zimri Tate, emigrated to Texas that year. They made the journey via New Orleans, where they transferred to a Red River boat for Shreveport, Louisiana, the head of navigation of that river, and at that point Mr. Tate bought a team and with his family started across country to Dallas. Private conveyance was the only mode of travel for a ramily here in that day. When they reached Grand Saline, a break-down in their traveling equipment brought a change in their plans, and instead of going on to Dallas they made settlement in Smith county.

Dr. Tate's father, his grandfather and his great-grandfather were named Zimri. The first Zimri Tate was a Revolutionary soldier and was with Washington's army at Valley Porge during that memorable winter noted for its severity. The second Zimri Tate, a native of Virginia, moved to Georgia, where he was twice married, He was the father of ten children, among them being Zimri, James, Horatio, Jacob and Elias.

Zimri Tate, the father of Horatio L., was liberally educated, was a close observer of affairs and a participant in local matters. He was a Bible student and an ardent Methodist, and he contributed materially to church and school support in Smith county. For several years he served on the board of County Commissioners, During the latter part of the Civil war he was a quartermaster and assistant commissary in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and he furnished a son for the Confederat army. He was born in 1833 and died in 1907. His first wife, Rebecca (McKinley) Tate, a daughter of Robert Wekinley, died in 1863. Their only child is Horatio L. For his second wife he married Mrs. Nancy Terry. By this marriage there was no issue. His third marriage was to Mrs. Mag Riolehoober, by which union there was also no issue.

Horatio L. Tate spent his childhood at the old home his father established north of Lindale. He attended the public schools near his home and later the Tyler school and the reputable school at Rusker Hill, Texas. After this he taught school a few months, and then began the study of medicine. In January, 1862, he enlisted in Captain Hamilton's company of infantry, Bates' regiment, and served with it three months. Then he joined Company E of Colonel Brown's battalion of cavalry, the was in the fight at Matagorda, Texas, where attempt was made to relieve some Confederates threatened with capture, and when the war closed he was with his company and the subject of the control o mand at a point near Brenham, Texas.

With the restoration of peace, Horatio L. Tate resumed citizenship at his home in Smith county. Again he took up the study of medicine, and in the spring of 1869 he graduated from the New Orleans School of Medicine. When he began the practice of his profession it was in the neighborhood in which he had been reared, and here his professional work covered a period of thirtyseven years. He aided in the organization of the Smith County Medical Society and the Texas State Medical Society, and while in active practice he frequently read papers at the meetings of these organizations.

Dr. Tate was a pioneer in the truck and fruit industry of Smith county. His entry into that field and the success he attained caused him to relax his hold upon his professional work and devote himself exclusively to horticulture. He became one of the large growers of the county and familiarized himself with the scientific as well as the practical side of it. He identified himself with the thindle Fruit Growers' Union and with such other movements as promised well for the outcome of the new and important venture. He was a contributor to the agricultural and horticultural press, made addresses before East Texas meetings of fruit growers and otherwise exhibited his enthusiasm as a peach and berry man. The canning industry at Lindale followed closely upon the heels of the demonstration of this country as a fruit region, and Dr. Tate took stock in the Lindale Canning Company and is one of the directors of it. Als he is a director of the State Guaranty Bank of Lindale.

In middle life, Dr. Tate was a part of the political machinery of his county. As a Democrat he was elected to the State Legislature for several terms, and he was the originator of the law establishing the reformatory for juvenile offenders, which institution was subsequently located at Gatesville. He was chairman of the committee of the lower house on penientairies and was a member of the committee on State Affairs and of the Public Lands committee.

Fraternally, the Doctor is a Mason; religiously, a Methodist, having been identified with the church for a period of over thirty-five years.

In June, 1861, Dr. Tate and Miss Mary E. Terry were united in marriage, in Smith country, and the children born to them are as follows: Rebecca, who died here as Mrs. W. T. Cannon; Ida, wife of F. M. Boyd, of Lindale; Lula, wife of John S. Ogbarn, also of Lindale, and Horatio, wife of J. N. Perryman, of Emory, Texas. Mrs. Tate is a native of Texas and a daughter of John Terry, who came to this state from Mississippi a few years before her birth.

DATID CULLEN MCNAIR represents a family which has been identified with eastern and central Texas since ante-bellum days. He has been a resident of Kaufman county since 1866, but was born in Madison county, Texas, December 7, 1858. His father was John Roderick McNair, who spent his career in Madison, Navarro and Kaufman counties, dying in the latter in 1874. The grandfather was John Roderick McNair, Sr., a teacher, lawyer and doctor, who came to Texas some years prior to the war and spent the remainder of his career in Madison county, dying in Zultz's Store, Willow Hole Prairie, during the war. He practiced his profession at Madisonville, and was a man of undoubted influence in his community. He was a descendant of the Nootch McNairs, who first settled in North Carolina, from which state branches of the family radiated in many directions.

died in Madison county, the mother of thirteen children. Those to reach maturity were: Martha, who married William Shannon, of Bedias, Texas, Kate, who married George Fullerton, of Brazos county; Alexander, who lived in Navarro county; William T., who spent the most of his career in Madison county; Barbara, who first married a Mr., McDowell, secondly a Mr. Henry, and was a third time married; Effie, who became Mrs. James Henry and still resides in Brazos county; Belinda, who married Mat Burney, a lawyer and later city marshal of Uvalda, Texas; Susanna, Mrs. James Ford, of Houston; Dodson, who died in Madison county. These children were all brought up in the old-school Presbyterian John Roderick McNair, Jr., the father, was born in Mississippi, and was a nephew of Judge McNair, of Smith county, that state. Although his father was a scholarly and accomplished citizen, the son acquired only limited education. Early in his manhood he entered the war as a Confederate soldier, and his three younger brothers served the same cause. He left the army as an invalid after much service, and was at home when the crisis came and the Confederacy collapsed. Removing to Navarro county soon after the war, he remained there several years, raising mules, horses and cattle. A few years before his death he moved to Kaufman county, living at Baker's Prairie when he died. He was still a young man at the time of his death, and most of his years in Kaufman county were spent as a farmer. He was not a church member.

Some time before the war John Roderick McNair, Jr., married Miss Eliza J. Baker, a daughter of John Baker, a pioneer of Texas. He moved from Illinois to this state, first settling in Walker county, then in Baker's Prairie, where his daughter Eliza was born in 1839. John Baker reached Texas in time to take part in military raids against the Indians, and for his part therein received several grants of land. He married a Miss Neely, and their children were Joseph, John William, Mary, Emeline and Eliza J. Mary married a Mr. King and Emeline became the wire of William Langham, Mrs. McNair is still living and is now Mrs. Eliza J. Hall. The children type of the marriage are; D. Cullen, Alexander and Sharp, both of whom died in childhood; George, of Alamoosa, Colorado, Baker D., of Kemp; and John C., a merchant of Kemp. The Hall children are Mrs. Doar Bonner, of Louisiana, and Walter Hall, of Rice, Texas. D. Cullen McNair acquired a little more than the rudiments of an education in the "Old Cedar Log School" at Kemp. His active business experience provided him the rest of his training for life. He learned more while teaching than as a student, and for ten years was one of the well qualified and successful teachers in Kaufman county. His first term was taught at Shiloh and his last at Lone Elm. In 1896 he was elected the county clerk on the Democratic ticket, with which party he and his ancestors have long been identified. He succeeded Frank Gilmore in the office. Before the expiration of his term he bought the lumber yards in Kemp from J. T. Stewart, and handled all the building material, lumber, lime, cement, brick and paints distributed through this section. He also engaged in the coal trade, but on the 19th of January, 1914, he sold his interests to the Rockwell Brothers Company, of Houston, and at this time is not actively engaged in business. Brought up through youth to manhood on a farm, Mr. McNair has never for any length of time been completely divorced from his interests in stock raising. He is the owner of several tracts of land, devoted to crops, in Kaufman county. Politically he has always been a sturdy supporter of the Democratic party, but has not been interested in practical politics since he left the office of county clerk. He is an elder in the Presbyterian church, and has attended the Presbytery as a delegate during the past ten years

At Van Alstyne, Texas, November 15, 1885, Mr. McNair married Miss born Thornton, a daugher of George A, and Martha A. (Mathis) Thornton. Both her parents came from Mississpip. JAMES FRANKLIN NEWMAN, In a large territory about Sweetwater the name of James P. Newman signifies all the best qualities of business success and of good citizenship. Mr. Newman is one of the veteran ranchers of west Texas. Like many others in that field, he started out with only an ability to ride a horse and to work long hours and endure the fatigue and hard-ships of the open range. Mr. Newman first began riding range over forty-five years ago, and has since attracted to himself great holdings of land, of farming and live stock interests, and varied relations with the business community in which he lived. Over the Royal road of hard to commendable degree of public spirit in his employment of means which have come to him. Eighteen years ago Mr. Newman donated some land and a portion of a private race course at Sweetwater for the site of the splendid new high school, one of the finest buildnings of its kind in Texas, and which is a credit both to the civic enterprise of Sweetwater and to the liberality of Mr. and Mrs. Newman. This is only one of many ways in which he has used his means to influence and improve his community.

James F. Newman comes of one of the old families of Tennessee, whose representatives are well known both in that state and in Arkansas. He was born December 20, 1549, in Montgomery, Arkansas, the son of Martin and Elizabeth (Polk) Newman of Arkansas. Martin Newman was a farmer and cattleman and in 1850 moved to Navarro county, Texas, where he continued as a rancher nntil his death on December S. 1911, at the home of his son, James F. Newman. His wife was a daughter of James K. Polk, a near relative of the James K. Polk, the president of the United States from 1845 to 1849. The five children, two sons and three daughters, in the Newman family were as follows:
Prudy Ann, J. F., Sare E., Mary J., and Moses Newman.

James F. Newman was about a year old when the family came to Texas. That part of his youth in which he would naturally have been busy with school attendance was passed during the troubled days of the Civil war, and his preparation for life was largely left to practical experience on the farm and on the cattle range. He early became an assistant to his father, and began riding a pony before he could mount from the ground. During the year his father fought as a Confederate soldier from the beginning to the end, and the son lived at home and helped keep up the work of the farm. About 1867 he went into the cattle business for himself. practically without any funds, and with only a small bunch of cattle. His early operations were in Navarro county, where grazing land was at that time free, and with his cattle he rode the range all over the country between Corsicana and Fisher counties. His attention was given to cattle, and he also raised horses and mules. As long as there was free grass he kept his headquarters in Navarro county, then in 1879 moved out to Fisher county, which was still an unspent range, and with the invasion of wire fences and the farmer settlers in that region he went still further west in 1882, and operated on the open range about Salt Lake in New Mexico. In 1899 Mr. Newman returned all his important interests to Texas, and in Fisher county bought fifty sections of land for ranching and farming. His operations for some years were so extensive as to require much land besides, and he leased large quantities of grazing pasture. Mr. Newman is known as one of the largest and most successful stockmen in Nolan county. His specialty in eattle are the Herefords, and he is one of the men who has witnessed the transition from the old times when the Texas long born was a staple steer until now scarcely a specimen of that old range stock can be found in the entire commonwealth. Mr. Newman has himself been always a little bit in advance of most of his neighbors and associates in this business and that quality has been a large element in his success. In recent years he has combined agriculture with the pastoral industry and at the present time has about two thousand acres under cultivation, raising cotton and small grains of all descriptions. Mr. Newman owns a bank in Fisher county, known as the J. O. F. Newman and Sons, and he and his sons also operate a cotton seed oil mill in Sweetwater. In Sweetwater he is the owner of large quantities of real estate, and besides the private bank mentioned is a stockholder in Sweetwater institutions. Mr. Newman has his fine home and ranch headquarters near Sweetwater, and for a number of years has gratified his tastes in fine horses, his stables containing some of the fastest and best stock in Texas. His own private race course af-forded the necessary facilities for training, and he still takes much interest in his horses.

Mr. Newman, though essentially a business man, has not neglected his responsibilities to the public, and for six years served as sheriff of Nolan county, making a reputation for efficiency and personal bravery, at a time when the duties of the office required the services of cool and fearless men. In politics he is a Democrat, an active member of his party, and a worker for community welfare at every opportunity. Mr. Newman is a firm be-liever in the superiority of West Texas over the rest of the world, and for his own part says he would live nowhere else.

On September 4, 1873, Mr. Newman married Miss Josephine Rushing, a daughter of Calvin Rushing of Navarro county. Her father was a farmer in Navarro county, served during the Civil war in the Confederate army, and died on September 25, 1912, at the old home in Navarro county. His wife died in 1893. Calvin Rushing and wife had four children, all of whom are living and married, except the oldest daughter. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Newman have been born three sons, as follows: Alfred T., born October 17, 1874; Harter S., born October 30, 1876; and Ira M. Newman, born March 27, 1887. Alfred T. Newman, the oldest son, married Miss Keith Fuque of Russellville of Kentucky, and their two children are Horace H, and Queen Elizabeth, aged respectively fourteen and eleven years.

JASON SOWELL. The vital loyalty which Mr. Sowell accords to Texas is based not only on deep appreciation of the advantages and attractions of the Lone Star commonwealth, but also upon the fact that within its gracious borders he has maintained his home since his boyhood days, his parents having come to the state about four years prior to the outbreak of the Civil war. Mr. Sewell is today numbered among the prominent and infinential citizens of Kaufman county, where he has served in various public offices of distinctive trust, and he now resides in the attractive little city of Forney, near which is located his well-improved farm. Sterling character, genial nature, high ideals and worthy achievement designate this popular citizen, and he is well entitled to specific recognition in this publication.

Mr. Sowell was born in Itawamba county, Mississippi, on the 9th of May, 1853, and is a scion of a family that was early founded in the southern part of our great national domain, his lineage being traced back to stanch English origin. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Sowell passed his entire life in North Carolina, and his wife was before marriage a Miss Muse. Their family con-Sinsted of four sons and three daughters, Dempsey, Qnimby, Jason and the Rev. A. M. K. Sowell, and Nancy, Manda and Elizabeth. Of these several children two became residents of Arkansas, Mrs. Sparks Kennedy, who died in Texarkana, that state, and Dempsey, who passed the closing years of his life in the city of Little Rock. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy had children as follows: Margaret, Gather, Ala, Mary, Gus, Lewis, Joe, Acia, William and Tom. This family settled near Texarkana about forty-five years ago. He whose name initiates this article is a son of the Rev. A. M. K. and Mary (Moore) Sowell, and was the sixth in order of birth of their nine children, namely: Hamilton, a lumberman and stock raiser in New Mexico; Mary, who died in Kaufman county, the wife of George Stratton; Sallie, who married Samuel Murphy and spent her life in Kaufman county; Dr. Connor B., of whom mention is made elsewhere in this publication; Alice, who married Dr. Stroud and passed the closing years of her life in Terrell, Texas; Thomas and Marion, both of whom died in Kaufman county; and Emory, who died as a soldier in the Confederate army while in service in the Civil war.

The Rev. A. M. K. Sowell was the head of one of the three families, the Sowells, the Sewells and the Carliles, who came from Mississippi and established homes in Texas in the year 1859, and the names of these families have been most prominently and worthily linked with the history of Kanfman county, this state. The Mississippi migrants to the Lone Star state came in company Vol. IV-35 and formed a more or less stately overland caravan as they made their way onward with teams and wagons and their varied household appurtenances. The father of Jason Sowell secured a tract of land along the line between Kaufman and Dallas counties, and there engaged in the raising of live stock, with which line of industry he continued to be actively identified for many years, his stock in the early days being driven to either Jefferson or Shreveport, from which points it was shipped to the market at New Orleans. When in middle life Rev. Sowell began his zealous service as a local preacher of the Missionary Baptist church, and he served as a missionary preacher in many parts of the Trinity river country, where his name and memory are held in lasting affection and honor. He was one of the early sheriffs of Kaufman county following the so-called reconstruction period after the close of the Civil war. He was born in North Carolina, and in his youth became a resident of Itawamba county, Mississippi, where he remained until his migra-tion to Texas. After many years of residence in Kanf-man county the Rev. Mr. Sowell removed to Mitchell county, and he is accredited with having raised the first bale of cotton grown in that county. He there continned to reside until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-eight years, and his cherished and devoted wife was summoned to the life eternal in 1903. She was a daughter of Joseph Moore and a Miss Dowd, and she had the following brothers and sisters: William, Cornelius, Hugh, Joseph, Henry, Patrick, Hyram, Wellington, Jane, Amelia, Sarah and Siba, Two of the sons of Rey, and Mrs. Sowell were valiant soldiers of the Confederacy in the Civil war: Hamilton H., who is now a resident of Lower Penasco, Chaves county, New Mexico, and Emory, who died at Little Rock, Arkansas, while in the service.

As previously stated, Jason Sowell was a lad of six years at the time of the family removal to Texas, and the period of his boyhood and youth found him identified with his father's agricultural and stock-growing operations in Kaufman and Dallas counties, the while he duly availed himself of the advantages of the common schools of the locality and period. His first definitely independent effort as a "man of affairs" was made when he was about eighteen years of age and was in connection with grading work in Dallas county incidental to the construc-tion of the railway line from Marshall to Dallas. As a young man Mr. Sowell engaged in farming and stock raising in an independent way, and with these lines of industry he has been continuously identified in the immediate vicinity of the village of Forney during the long intervening years, but he has also found requisition for his services in connection with public offices of distinctive local trust and responsibility. He now owns a well-improved and valuable farm of two hundred and forty acres, to which he gives a general supervision, and since the autumn of 1912 he has maintained his residence in the neighboring town of Forney, where he owns an attractive home on Center street, the leading thoroughfare through the residence district of the town.

In polities Mr. Sowell has never wavered in his allegiance to the cause of the Democratic party, and he has been a prominent figure in its councils in Kaufman county. In 1892 he was elected county assessor, and two years later was re-elected, so that he served four consecutive years in this office, the affairs of which he administered with marked discrimination and efficiency. In 1900 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, and in this office he served eight years, with characteristic fidelity and efficiency. He manifested in this connection his abiding civic loyalty and progress. . iveness, and did all in his power to conserve the best interests of the county and its people. He assisted materially in formulating the policies by which the county provided for the payment of the indebtedness incurred in the erection of the courthouse and jail, and within his regime was also instituted the county system of road grading and improving, which forms an important part in the budget of public expenses in the county each year. He is one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of his home county, is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and both he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist church.

In the year 1879 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Sowell to Miss Olive Jackson, who is a daughter of the late Thomas R. Jackson, who came from the state of Georgia and numbered himself among the pioneers of the Beaumont district of Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Sowell have five children: Myrtle, who remains at the parental home and is one of the popular figures in the social activities of the community; Claude B., Roy H. and Thomas W., all of whom are in the employ of the Great Southern Life Insurance Company of Dallas; and Byron, who is attending Austin College at Sherman, Texas.

AUSTIN COLLEGE. Since its establishment in 1849 Austin College has been so closely identified with the culture and general welfare of the state that no history of Texas could omit frequent reference to the institution. Many references in the course of this work have been made to Austin College, and it is here the intention to set down briefly an outline history of Austin College.

From the establishment of American settlement in Texas plans were cherished and efforts made from time to time to establish a school of higher learning under Presbyterian auspices, but the first enterprises, including the "University of Nacogdoches" and "The College of the West," proved failures. It was with the organization of the Presbytery of Brazos in 1840 that a basis of united action was finally agreed upon. However, owing to the unsettled condition of the country, nothing could be done at that time. By request of the citizens of Nacogdoches the Presbytery assumed control of an institution founded in that town, and also appointed a committee to select a location on the Guadalupe River for an institution to be known as "The College of the West." Neither of these enterprises materialized, and the record is interesting only to show that the matter of education was prominent in the minds of Presbyterians at that early day.

The first significant action for the establishment of a college was taken at the meeting of the Presbytery in Washington, Texas, June 21, 1849. A committee was appointed to select a more central location for a college and the committee reported in October of the same year in favor of Huntsville. The college was named in honor of Stephen F. Austin, and another committee secured the signature of Governor Wood to the college charter on November 22, 1849. That old charter, with some amendments, is still operative.

The first board of trustees consisted of Daniel Baker, R. Smither, J. Hume, G. C. Red, H. Yoskun, J. Branch, Sam Houston, H. Wilson, J. C. Smith, A. J. Burke and J. W. Miller. They met and organized in Huntsville April 5, 1850, with Rev. Daniel Baker president of the board pro tem. Rev. Samuel McKinney was elected the first president of the college and Rev. Daniel Baker financial agent. Class work began immediately, as Dr. Mc-

Kinney was already teaching in Huntsville.

Presbyterianism in Texas at this time consisted of eighteen ministers, thirty-two churches and about five hundred communicants. Politically and socially the conditions that prevailed throughout the country were unfavorable to permanent institutional growth, and when the poverty of the people and the numerical weakness of the Presbyterian organization are taken into consideration, the success and survival of Austin College seems remarkable. The ministers who laid the foundation of the college were pioneer missionaries of Presbyterianism, and were men of culture and college training, representing such institutions as Jefferson College in Pennsylvania. Princeton College in New Jersey, and other old schools. After a tour in the east the financial agent, Dr. Baker, secured nearly one hundred thousand dollars for the new school, and the most liberal contributor was Rev. Ben-jamin Chase of Mississippi, who gave ten thousand acres of Texas land to the endowment fund.

The war between the states was disastrous to all Texas institutions, but Austin College was not forced entirely to close its doors, although its treasury was empty and its faculty reduced. In January, 1871, Rev. S. M. Luck-ett was elected president. To him and his co-laborers, J. W. Chadwick of Chapel Hill and Rev. Donald McGregor of Houston, is mainly due the continued existence of Austin College. During this administration a growing sentiment arose for a more desirable location and a committee was appointed looking to the removal of the college to some point in Northern Texas. After a protracted con-troversy, Sherman was selected and the college removed thither in 1876. The present building was begun at once, and its central part completed and occupied during the incumbency of Rev. H. B. Boude, the successor to Dr. Luckett from 1878 to 1881. When the history of the college is written in full Dr. Luckett's name will be associated with that of Daniel Baker, for while Dr. Baker was the moving spirit in the foundation of the college, Dr. Luckett rescued it from the shades of oblivion, and in ten years raised about eighty thousand dollars for its permanent support, added two wings to the building, and increased the number of students to about one hundred and fifty with nine professors.

Austin College stands a monument to the early leaders of the Presbyterian church in Texas, and the influence it has exercised on the lives of its many hundreds of students and graduates is incalculable. It was the first institution in the west to introduce the Bible course into its curriculum and religious instruction has always been an essential factor of the student life. The course of study is the prevailing college curriculum of arts and sciences. The state board of education ranks Austin College among the first-class colleges of the state. Its doors from the beginning to the present time have been open to young men only, and the principle of segregation has been the sustained policy of its founders and directors. For the education of young women there is a coeducational institution at Brownwood, and a college for girls at Milford, both under the control of the Synod of Texas. Many names might well be mentioned besides those already noted as deserving of remark in their important relations with the growth and welfare of Austin College. However, this brief sketch will conclude with a list of the presidents of Austin College from the beginning to the present time, with dates of service: Rev. Samuel Mctime, 1850-53; Rev. Daniel Baker, 1853-57; Rev. A. E. Thom, pro tem., 1857-58; Rev. R. W. Bailey, 1858-69; Rev. A. E. Rev. Sammel McKinney, 1862-1871; Rev. S. M. Luckett, 1871-1878; Rev. H. B. Bonde, 1878-1881; Prof. W. D. Williams and S. Bailey, 1879-1879; Prof. W. D. Bailey, 1979-1979; Prof. W. D. Bailey, 1979-1979; Prof. W. D. Bailey, 1979-1979; Prof. W. D. Bailey, 1979-1979, Prof. Phys. D.

 Rev. Donald McGregor, 1885-87; Rev. S. M. Luckett, 1887-97; Rev. T. R. Sampson, 1897-1900; Rev. T. S. Clyce, 1900-1914.

REV. THOMAS STONE CLYCE, D. D. LL. D. It is in connection with educational work that the Rev. T. S. Clyce is best known to the people of Sherman, Texas. where for fourteen years he has been president of Austin College; yet he is not alone an educator, but has long been identified with the Presbyterian ministry, and in 1912 was elected moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States (Southern) at Bristol, Tennessee, this being the highest honor within the gift of the church. Doctor Clyce was born September 12, 1863, at Kingsport, Tennessee, and is a son of William and Mary Elizabeth (Hagy) Clyce, the former. an architect and contractor, born at Lexington, Virginia, and the latter at Abingdon, that state.

Dr. Clyce was born and reared on a farm, and his boyhood was spent in simple pursuits. He was a studious lad, with a receptive mind, and after he had completed the curriculum of the public schools he entered King College, Bristol, Tennessee, where he received the degree of bachelor of arts in 1887. He graduated from Columbia Theological Seminary, Columbia, South Carolina, in 1890; from Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary in 1894, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Divinity; received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Southwestern Presbyterian University of Clarksville, Tennessee, in 1900, and in 1912 was given the degree of Doctor of Laws by King College. Entering the ministry of the Preshyterian church in the United States, his first charge was at the First Presbyterian church of Decatur, Alabama, where he remained in 1890 and 1891, then becoming pastor of the Woodland Presbyterian church, at Louisville, Kentucky, where he continued from 1891 to 1896. He then was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Jackson, Alabama, and president of the Jackson Agri-cultural College, from 1896 to 1900, and in the latter year became president of Austin College, a position which he has continued to fill to the present time. During the past decade or more the standard of education in Texas has been decidedly heightened. The earliest efforts at realization of a high standard were crude and ineffective; but they paved the way to the marked success of later years, the amount and organization of teaching being now such as will bear the most rigid examination and thorough criticism. It is impossible and unnecessary to trace in detail the various steps in this advance of pedagogical thought: it has been gradual, never revolutionary, and more discernible in the present result than in the stages of its progress. It would be invidious and inaccurate to attribute leadership in this advance to one school or another-all have contributed to it in greater or less degree; but no one will take exception to the assertion that great credit is due, in the general reckoning, to the wisdom, insight and persistence of the president of Austin College. In political matters a Democrat, Doctor Clyce cast his first vote for President Cleveland, and has never given his ballot to any other ticket. His fraternal relation is with the Masons,

On October 5, 1892, Doctor Clyce was married at Louisville, Kentucky, to Miss May De Perrin, and to this union there have been born three children, namely: Wallace Perrin, Dorothy and Edmonia Elizabeth.

HARRY E. HEDEMAN. Harry E. Hedeman is well known throughout Llano county, Texas, as one of the energetic and successful business men of this section. For over thirty years he has been engaged in business in this section of the country, having a share in various enterprises that have meant much to the people of this vicinity. He has taken a prominent part in the civic and commercial life of Llano, and is always among those men who place the welfare of their city and the betterment of living conditions before their own personal comfort.

Harry E. Hedeman was born on the 17th of April, 1859, in New Orleans, Louisiana. His father died when he was thirteen years of age and Mr. Hedeman has been practically earning his own living ever since that time. He first, as a boy, worked in a grocery store at odd moments, when he was not in school, and in this way he earned the money by means of which he was enabled to go to college. He received his elementary education in the public schools of the state and then attended Christian Brothers College. At the age of eighteen he left college and his first two years were spent as a sailor. After these years spent on the sea he went to Boston, Massachusetts, where he remained for two years. During this time he studied engineering and fitted himself for some of the work he was to take up in his future home.

It was in 1882 that he came to Texas and located in Lampasas. Here he took charge of the water-works and for ten years he operated this plant. He then came to Llano, Texas, and established an ice factory, at the same time starting a bottling works. After about five years he sold his ice factory and erected a cotton gin. Three years later he sold out this business and established his present grocery business. In his bettling works he manufactures a full line of soda water and other carbonated drinks, and he does an extensive wholesale business throughout this section of the country. The plant is equipped with modern machinery and the finest sanitary enditions prevail. In his grocery store Mr. Hedeman handles a full line of groceries, hardware, thoware, and similar merchandise. He not only does a general retail business, but he has built up a flourishing wholesale trade with the surrounding country. He also handles chickens and turkeys in wholesale lots, shipping many car loads each season to various markets. He has built up his business entirely by his own efforts, and hard work, the ability to see a good business opportunity, and the courage to take advantage of it, have been the secrets of his success.

Mr. Hedeman is a Democrat in politics and political questions have always had his active interest. He was a member of the school board for many years and was president of this body twice. He has also served several terms as a member of the city council and during all his public service he has been instrumental in many of the improvements that have been made in civic affairs. He is a member of the Commercial Club, and in the fraternal world is a member of the Sons of Hermann and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his religious affiliations Mr. Hedeman is a communicant of the Roman

Catholie church,

Mr. Hedeman was married in Beaumont, Texas, in 1884, to Miss Ada Foster, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Foster, of Columbia, Texas. Three children, two daughters and a son, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hedeman. Leah is married to W. B. Lewis and resides in Hearne, Texas. Ethel is living at home, and Harry, who is unmarried, is associated with his father in the business.

Mr. Hedeman, like most of the men who have lived in Texas during the years in which it has developed from a cattle country into a state of many different interests, is enthusiastic over its possibilities. He says that Texas is a wonderful country and has a great future before it. In his opinion Llano county, in particular, will some day develop into a great mining district, and will grow as it never has grown heretofore.

JONATHAN W. CRUDGINGTON. A prominent attorney and prosperous citizen of Amarillo, Mr. Crudgington has had a varied experience and activities and has supreme confidence in the great resources and opportunities of Texas, particularly northwest Texas, where his home has been for the past ten years.

Jonathan W. Crudgington was born in Roane county, Tennessee, January 31, 1860, a son of Elijah and Carolina (Fender) Crudgington. The grandfather Abram Crudgington was a Revolutionary soldier, having been one of General John Sevier's volunteers from the Carolinas, Georgia and Virginia, and participating in the battle of King's Mountain. Elijah Crudgington, the father, had an even more notable war career. He was born in Sullivan county, Tennessee, and when a young man enlisted in Company F of the Third Tennessee Cavalry in the Union army. He was first lientenant of his company. During one of his scouting expeditions he was taken prisoner, and first placed in prison at Knoxville, in which prison the famous Parson Brownlow was likewise confined, and from there Mr. Crudgington was sent with fifty-five other federals to the Confederate prison in Richmond, Virginia. From the capital city, together with ninety-nine other men, he was started for Salisbury, North Carolina, to be held as hostages for the general good behavior of the United States government. While en route to that place he effected his escape by leaping off the swiftly moving train, and with one other companion wandered about for six weeks in the vain endeavor to reach the federal lines. Finally he and his comrade were captured by Confederates, and after being held for a time he was again placed in prison at Rich-mond. Later he was sent to Salisbury, North Carolina, where on November 26, 1863, he again made his escape with three other prisoners. Of the fifty-six sent from Knoxville to Richmond only four, Mr. Crudgington and three others, lived to see the end of the war. Elijah Crudgington in 1870 came to Texas and located in that part of Kaufman county which has since been cut off and organized as Rockwall county. In that vicinity he engaged in farming, a vocation he continued until 1877, when he removed to Stephens county, where he resided until his death in 1903 at the age of seventy-eight years. The mother of the Amarillo lawyer was also a native of Tennessee, where she was educated and married. Her death occurred in Stephens county in March, 1904, at the age of seventy-three. There were nine children in the family, of whom Jonathan was the second. He obtained his early schooling in this state, and his first important work after leaving the farm was contracting along the route of the Fort Worth & Denver City Railway, in grading the tracks. He next began the reading of law in the offices of William Veale, and was admitted to the bar in 1889 before the district court, and was subsequently admitted by the supreme court. During his practice in Texas for nearly twenty-four years he has enjoyed a liberal share of the business in each community where he has lived. He first practiced at Breck-enridge, where he remained until August, 1902, and then transferred his residence to Palo Pinto, which was his home until 1904, at which date he moved to Amarillo. In this city he has had several partnerships, first with Mr. John W. Veale, which continued until 1907. the election of Mr. Veale as state senator, Mr. R. E. Underwood joined them as partner, a relationship which lasted only a short while. Later Mr. Umphres and subsequently Mr. F. P. Works joined the firm. When Mr. Umphres retired the firm became and has since remained Crudgington & Works. They represent some of the largest clients in this portion of Texas. From 1896 to 1900 Mr. Crudgington was county judge for two terms

In politics he is a progressive Democrat, though independent of party, and has little concern in practical politics. He is a member of the County bar association, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. His church is the

of Stephens county.

On March 4, 1890, at Breckenridge, Texas, Mr. Crud-gington married Miss Alliene Veale, daughter of William and Levenia Veale, both deceased. They are the parents of seven children, who are mentioned as follows: Harvey M., born at Breckenridge, March 21, 1892, a graduate of the Lowry Phillip school and now in the general offices of the Santa Fe Railway; John William, born at Breckenridge, July 6, 1894, a graduate of the Amarillo high school; Charles A., born at Breckenridge, May 16, 1896, a student in the high school; Robert E. and George, twins, born at Breckenridge, August 1, 1899, the former now in school and the latter deceased February 15, 1902: Susan, born at Palo Pinto, September 28, 1903, and now attending school in Amarillo; Kate, born at Amarillo, January 25, 1906 and Alliene, born at Amarillo, February 26, 1908.

Mr. Crudgington was one of the organizers of the Amarillo Street Railway Company, and was vice presi-dent and one of the directors until the property was recently sold to an eastern syndicate. He has been connected with other local enterprises, among which is the Panhandle State Fair Association, and is an energetic, well-informed citizen who does all he can to advance the welfare of his home community and state.

Calvin M. Still, Calvin M. Still's life has been a busy and varied one in its every phase, and his public service of recent years has not been the least of his activities. As mayor of Taylor since 1910 he has proven himself to be a citizen of the finest enthusiasm and the most utter integrity, in his official capacity giving freely to the city of his best energies and abilities, with a result that is so apparent that "he who runs may read." He has been a resident of Taylor since about 1887, and in the years that have elapsed since he has come to entertain the heartiest regard for the city, his enthusiasm therefore knowing no bounds.

Born in Riley county, Kansas, January 23, 1861, Calvin M. Still is the son of William and Katherine (O'Malley) Still, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Ireland, and the father was one of the first settlers of Riley county. Mr. Still was reared in Riley county, receiving there educational advantages commensurate with the possibilities of the community and the position of his parents, and in his early manhood he engaged in the service of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company. For several years he was employed as a locomotive pany. For several years ne was employed as a focomotive engineer. He came to Texas in 1882, locating at Deni-son, from which point he was occupied with railroading on the "Katy." It was in 1886, still in the service of that line, that Mr. Still came to Taylor, in Williamson county, and this city has since been his home. Soon after locating here Mr. Still gave up railroad work and engaged in an independent business, interesting himself in cotton buying and later in fire insurance business, and he has since that time maintained an active and thriving interest in those enterprises.

It was in 1910 that the public-spiritedness and general excellence of the man as a citizen came to be officially recognized by the people in his election to the office of Mayor, and so faithfully did he conduct the affairs of the office that he was re-elected in 1912. In that position Mr. Still has given of his best energies and the city acknowledges an era of public improvement of no slight importance. Under his administration much of the most telling improvement work of the city has been carried on, and especially in this connection should be noted the paving of Main and several other streets with creosoted wood blocks, which gave to Taylor some of the finest streets to be found in any city in Texas.

Mr. Still was married at Denison, Texas, to Miss Bridget Mary Quinn, who was born in Ireland, and six daughters have come to them: Katherine, Mary B., Marguerite, Celesta, Emma and Pauline.
