History of West Virginia

DR. ISRAEL C. WHITE received his Bachelor's degree from West Virginia University in 1872. In the interval of half a century his work has brought him a reputation among America's foremost scientific scholars and greatest authorities in the field of geology. West Virginia is proud of him not only as a native son, but for the fact that, so frequently associated with labors in other states, under the national government and foreign governments, he has regarded Morgantown as his home, and for much the greater part of fifty years has been officially connected with the faculty of West Virginia University or as state geologist.

While the investigation has been the result of labors of others, Doctor White is one of the few men who present a connected genealogical account of his family running back through twenty-eight consecutive generations. A volume published in 1920, entitled "Genesis of the White Family" furnishing a connected record of the White family beginning with 900, at the time of its Welsh origin, when the name was Wynn. Briefly this lineage of twenty-eight generations is given in the following paragraphs.

1. Otho, living in the time of Edward the Confessor, 1042-65; 2. Walter Fitz Otho, whose name appears in Domesday Book; 3. Gerald Fitz Walter, married Nesta, daughter of Rys ab Tewdwdwr (Rhys ab Tudor), Prince of South Wales, slain in 1093; 4. Maurice Fitz Gerald; 5. Walter White (Whyte), of Wales, was made a knight by Henry II. His descendant: 6. Thomas de Whyte, was assessed in Martock in 1333; 7. Robertus White, mentioned as Robert Whyte de Alnewyk, in the Knights of Yorkshire, 31 of Edward I., 1303, as of Agton (the present Egton in North Riding), in Chapter House, Westminster; 8. Willelmus White, living in Yorkshire in 1339; 9. Adam White, living in 1365; 10. Johannes White, of Yorkshire, living in 1390; 11. Johannes White, Jr., Alderman and Grosinor of York, living in 1394; 12. Johannes White, of North Colyngnam, Nottinghamshire, is named in the list of landed gentry of Nottinghamshire, drawn by order of Henry VI, 1428; 13. Robert White, "merchant and maior of the staple of Calais, b. at Yatley, in Hampshire, his dwelling (sic) was first at Sandwich, in Kent and after at Farnham, in Surrey where he deceased, hee purchased the mannor of Southwamnbourne, of Sr. Foulke Pembridge, knt., hee had a wiffe Alice." He was living in 1461 or 1462. 14. John White of Swanborne, died 1469-70, married Eleanor Hungerford; 15. Robert White, born about 1455, married Margaret Gainsford; 16. Robert White of Swanborne, married Elizabeth Englefield; 17. Henry White, father of "The Chancellor;" 18. Henry White, born about 1514; 19. John White, married Isabel Ball; 20. Stephen White, married Marie Waterhouse (he died 1629); 21. Stephen White, of Maryland, came in 1659, married Anne Rochold; 22. Stephen White, died 1717, married Sarah —; 23. John White, died November 14, 1737, married 1722, Mary Rencher (Renshaw); 24. Stephen White, born January 26, 1723, died 1754, married January 1, 1751, Hannah Baker; 25. Grafton White, born 1752, died July 15, 1829, married Margaret Dinney; 26. William White, born August 15, 1783, died 1860, married Mary Darling; 27. Michael White, married Mary Anne Russell (Rischel); 28. I. C. White.

The first American ancestor was Stephen White, who, as noted above, came over in 1659 and settled in Anne Arundel County, near Baltimore, Maryland. Dr. I. C. White is a son of Michael and Mary Anne (Russell) White. His father was a farmer and one of the commissioners who divided Monongalia County into districts after the formation of West Virginia and gave the name to Battelle District. He served in the Federal Home Guards during the Civil war.

Israel C. White was born in Monongalia County, November 1, 1848, acquired a private school education, graduated with honors from West Virginia University in 1872, received the Master of Arts degree in 1875, and took post-graduate work in geology at Columbia University in 1875-76, and in 1880 was awarded the degree of Ph. D. by the University of Arkansas. West Virginia University in 1919 conferred upon him the degree of LL. D., and in 1921 he was made a Doctor of Science by the University of Pittsburgh.

The services upon which his reputation is based are suggested rather than described in the following itinerary of his experience: He began the practical study of geology in 1875 as field aid to Dr. John J. Stevenson, assistant geologist on the second geological survey of Pennsylvania. Subsequently he was assistant geologist of the second geological survey of Pennsylvania in 1875-83; professor of geology in West University, 1877-92; assistant geologist of the United States geological survey, 1884-88; chief geologist of the Brazilian Coal Commission, 1904-06, when he visited Brazil at the request of that government to make studies and an official report on the coal fields of Southern Brazil; and has been state geologist of West Virginia since 1897. Doctor White resigned his position in the University of West Virginia in 1892 to take charge of a large petroleum business which he had developed for himself and associates through scientific discoveries made in connection with his studies of the occurrence of petroleum, natural gas and coal, in all of which he is an expert specialist. He discovered in 1882 the anticlinal theory of petroleum and natural gas, and was the first one to apply it practically in locating new oil and gas pools. He has written extensively on his discoveries and investigations, being the author of eight volumes of reports on the second geological survey of Pennsylvania from 1875 to 1884. While assistant geologist on the United States survey in 1884-88 he prepared and published "Bulletin 65" on the "Stratigraphy of the Appalachian Coal Field." As state geologist Doctor White has also prepared and published five of the volumes of the reports, which include "Petroleum and Natural Gas," "Coal," and "Levels and Coal Analyses." He has also supervised and edited thirty other volumes published by the West Virginia geological survey. His report on the Brazilian coal fields was published in 1908 in a quarto volume, in both English and Portuguese, and that same year he also delivered an address on "The Waste of Our Fuel Resources," at the First White House conference of governors.

Doctor White is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and was vice president of section E of that association in 1896-97. He was president of the Association of American State Geologists in 1913-15, and a Fellow of the Geological Society of America, which he served as treasurer in 1892-1907, vice president, 1911-12, and its president during 1920. He has been vice president of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, and also its president for 1919-20.

Aside from his profession he has taken an active interest in civic affairs, having been vice president for West Virginia of the International League for Highway Improvement, president of the West Virginia Board of Trade and president of the Morgantown Board of Trade. He was president of the Union Utility Company in 1902-05, and has been a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Morgantown since 1895 and president of the Morgantown Brick Company since its organization in 1890. His only military experience was as member of the West Virginia University Cadet Corps in 1867-72, where he was graduated as a captain. He has held but one political position, that of delegate to the Minneapolis convention which renominated Benjamin Harrison for president in 1892. Doctor White is a member of the Cosmos Club, Washington, D. C., the Rocky Mountain Club of New York, the American Philosophical Society, the American Geographical Society, in addition to numerous other scientific bodies in which his presence is so highly esteemed.

Doctor White has been twice married. On July 27, 1872, he married Emily McClane, daughter of James Shay, a merchant tailor and postmaster of Morgantown. The only child of this union is Emily McClane, wife of Dr. R. W. Fisher, of Morgantown. Mrs. White died in 1874. On December 4, 1878, he married Mary, daughter of Henderson H. Moorhead, a merchant of New Castle, Pennsylvania, and of this union were born five children: Nell Moorhead, wife of C. W. Maxwell, of Elkins, West Virginia; Fanny Russell, wife of H. P. Brightwell, of Charleston, West Virginia; Edith Nina Miller, deceased wife of K. L. Kilbith, of Denver, Colorado; Charles Stevenson, purchasing agent of the New York Central Railway Company at New York City, who married Miss Helen Todd; and Mary Gertrude, wife of E. R. Wise, of Cleveland, Ohio. Doctor White is the happy grandfather of nineteen grandchildren, ten boys and nine girls, one of his grandsons being named I. C. White, II.

ROBERT JEFFERSON ALEXANDER BOREMAN, one of the most estimable citizens of Parkersburg, who died June 24, 1922, was very actively associated with business affairs in this city for half a century.

He was a great-grandson of John Boreman, who was a native of Manchester, England, and ran away from home at the age of sixteen, coming to America on a sailing vessel. He landed at Havre de Grace, Maryland, and eventually became a merchant at Fifth and Arch streets in Philadelphia. He served his apprenticeship there until he was twenty-one, and then continued in business on his own responsibility. With the beginning of the Revolutionary war he joined the Colonial forces as a private in a Pennsylvania regiment. His superior penmanship attracted the attention of his officers, and he was made adjutant of his company, then adjutant of the regiment, then chief clerk to the paymaster general of the army, with headquarters in New York City, and finally was assistant paymaster general of the army, with headquarters at Pittsburgh, and had the duty of paying off the troops in Pennsylvania. With the close of the struggle for independence he established a home in Western Pennsylvania, and when Greene County, that state, was organized he was made probate judge and clerk of the courts, and served as such during the remainder of his life. John Boreman married Betty Kenner. Their son, Kenner Seaton Boreman, became a merchant. He was a whig in politics and a member of the Methodist Church. He married Sarah Ingram, and their family consisted of six sons and one daughter, namely: William, Kenner Seaton, Arthur Ingram, James Mason, Thomas Ingram, Jacob Smith and Agnes Mason, who married James M. Stephenson. With the exception of Jacob, who was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, these sons had only a common school education, and their subsequent prominence in business and public affairs was largely due to their native ability. It was this generation of the family that became identified with West Virginia and particularly with Wood County. The son William was a lawyer at Middlebourne, and served many years in the House and Senate. The son Arthur Boreman was the first governor of West Virginia, and a appropriate sketch of his career is given elsewhere, and also his name figures in the accounts of the formation of West Virginia found in the general historical narrative. The son James Mason Boreman was a merchant, and was appointed postmaster of Parkersburg by President Lincoln and held that office for twenty-three years. The son Thomas I. Boreman devoted all his active life to merchandising at Parkersburg. Jacob S. Boreman at one time published the Kansas City Star and later, under appointment from the President, was judge of the United States Court in the Territory of Utah for forty-two years. He presided at the trial of John D. Lee, convicted and executed for participation in the historic Mountain Meadow massacre.

Kenner S. Boreman, Jr., a brother of Governor Boreman was also a man of more than ordinary intelligence and capacity. He was born at Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, April 19, 1819. Nature especially equipped him for a career as a lawyer and politician, but owing to impaired vision which eventually terminated in blindness, he became a merchant at Parkersburg and finally an insurance man, and was widely known for his success in business and the probity of his character. He began voting as a whig and later as a republican. On January 30, 1850, he married M. Theresa Alexander, who was born at St. Clairsville, Ohio, September 5, 1832, daughter of Robert Jefferson and Ann (Jennings) Alexander. Her father was a lawyer.

Robert Jefferson Alexander Boreman was the only child of his parents and was born at Parkersburg November 2, 1850. His well informed and disciplined mind was rather the result of self training than because of long contact with schools and educational institutions. He entered business for himself at Parkersburg when a youth, later was in the insurance business, also a wholesale dealer in china and house furnishings, and took a prominent part in banking affairs as one of the executive officers of the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank, now the First National Bank. He was a republican, but showed little disposition to get into politics. The one office which he held and in which he did distinctive service was as president of the Board of Education of Parkersburg for two years. During that time he succeeded in providing a large sum for school buildings and a complete reorganization of the school system, and after retiring from office kept in close touch with educational interests. He was also a member of the State Debt Commission.

Mr. Boreman never married. He was a Scottish Rite Mason and held chairs in the Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter and Knight Templar Commandery. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

ARTHUR I. BOREMAN, first governor of the State of West Virginia, was born at Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, July 24, 1823, son of Kenner Seaton Boreman. A nephew of Governor Boreman was the late Robert J. A. Boreman of Parkersburg, and under his name will be found a more complete account of the family as a whole, one of the most distinguished in West Virginia.

Governor Boreman was a child when taken to Tyler County, Virginia, where he attended common schools. He began the study of law under his brother William and his brother-in-law James M. Stephenson at Middlebourne in that county, and was admitted to the bar in May, 1845. In the fall of that year he moved to Parkersburg, where in a few years he had earned a reputation as an able jurist and lawyer. In 1855 he was elected to the Virginia House of Delegates from Wood County, and continued in that office by successive election until 1861. He was still a member of the Legislature at the time of the extra session of 1861 to consider the matter of secession. He took an active stand against secession.

In the trying times which followed, during the formative period of the new state, his integrity, clearness of understanding, quickness of decision, persistence and definiteness of purpose, his force of will and indefatigable energy placed him in the very forefront, among the leaders. Being a man of the most positive convictions, he was inevitably a devoted partisan. When the threat of civil strife was impending over our country in 1861, and when the north-western part of Virginia determined to maintain a place in the nation and to hold allegiance to the flag, Mr. Boreman's peculiar innate qualities of untiring energy and industry, indomitable will and intense purpose fitted him to be a successful leader in the great crisis, and were undoubtedly the causes impelling the people to call him into a high and commanding position in the councils of the new state.

After the extra session of the Virginia Legislature in 1861 he presided over the convention held at Wheeling for the purpose of reorganizing the state government. In October, 1861, he was elected judge of the Circuit Court under the restored government of Virginia. He presided over this court until his unanimous election, in 1863, to be the first governor of the new State of West Virginia. The wisdom with which he wielded the executive power and his rare, accurate conception of the needs of that critical time are apparent in the success of the effort to form and the movements to develop the state, but his personal bravery and fearlessness can be appreciated only in the light of a full understanding of the conditions and circumstances attending that interesting and complicated portion of our history. In 1864 and in 1866 Mr. Boreman was re-elected to the office of governor; in 1868 he declined to be again a candidate. The Legislature of West Virginia at its session in 1869 elected Arthur Inghram Boreman to the United States Senate, in succession to Hon. Peter G. Van Winkle; and he took his seat in that body March 4, 1869, and served the state with great efficiency. He was a member of the committee of manufactures, the committee on territories, and the committees on political disabilities. During the Forty-third Congress he was chairman of the committee on territories and a member of the committee on claims.

Probably no truer aspect of the personality of the man as he was can be given than that in the following description, quoted from a former historian: Viewing Governor Boreman as a partisan leader in those times that tried men's souls even his opponents in after years conceded that he possessed many high and generous qualities of both head and heart. If he struck hard blows, he did not shrink from receiving hard blows in return; and when the strife was ended he was ever ready to extend a hand and to sink, if not to forget, the past. And while he never gave up a partisan advantage, he was ever ready to perform a personal act of kindness or friendship to a political adversary, as well as to a political friend; and the admiration, love and affection of those who stood nearest to him in those dark days of the past could then, as now, attest that warmth and strength of his own affections. His record is before the people of the state. From it no fair-minded man would blot out a single page. It is easily understood—bold, fearless, direct, distinct. There is no evasion or darkness in the definitions of his principles or policies. As the bold, fearless, loyal president of the Wheeling Convention that reorganized the government of Virginia, and as the first governor of the new State of West Virginia, his heroic, manly conduct gave him a place in the affections of the Union people of the state that will not soon be forgotten.

At the expiration of his term as United States senator, West Virginia, having become a democratic state, he resumed law practice at Parkersburg. In 1858, as an unsolicited tribute, he was nominated and elected as judge of the Circuit Court, and began his term January 1, 1859. He had just completed a term of court at Elizabeth in Wirt County when he was seized with a fatal illness that took him off April 19, 1896.

Governor Boreman was a loyal Methodist and in 1888 was chosen a lay delegate by the State Conference to attend the General Conference at New York. November 30, 1864, he married Laurane Tanner, daughter of Dr. James Tanner, who was a physician of high standing at Wheeling. Her first husband was John O. Bullock. Governor Boreman was survived by two daughters: Maud, wife of G. H. Cotton, and Laurane, wife of Abijah Hays, of Parkersburg.

C. TALEOTT HITESH W. a business man of many interests at Parkersburg, is by profession a banker, having been in the service of Parkersburg's banks for thirty years. He was honored with election as president of the West Virginia Bankers Association in 1910-11, having previously served four years as secretary.

Mr. Hiteshew was born at Parkersburg September 30, 1872, oldest of the four children of Isaac Wesley and Columbia Ann (Bradford) Hiteshew. His father, a native of Maryland, was during the Civil war a division superintendent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. After the war he removed to Parkersburg, where he was engaged in the milling and feed business until about 1875. He then retired and for a number of years was an invalid. He died in 1889, and is remembered for his success in business and for his kind hearted, generous nature.

C. Talbott Hiteshew has spent the whole of his busy and useful life in his native city. He graduated from the Parkersburg High School in 1889, following that with a course in Eastman's Business College in Poughkeepsie, New York. On returning to Parkersburg he was a clerk, first in the wholesale hardware establishment of R. L. Neal & Company and then in the Citizens National Bank. Later he was assistant cashier of the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank and subsequently promoted to cashier. In 1917 this bank was consolidated with the First National Bank, the second oldest national bank in West Virginia. With the consolidation Mr. Hiteshew became cashier and upon the death of W. W. Van Winkle, was elected managing vice president of the First National Bank, which position he still occupies.

During the World war he was chairman of Liberty Loan drives for ten counties in this section of West Virginia. Of his extensive business interests he is director and vice president of the Imperial Ice Cream Company, director and vice president of the American Creamery Company, director and treasurer of the Walker Oil Company, treasurer of the Mingo Block Coal Company, a director in the Gilmer Fuel Company, director of the Grande Oil Company, operating in the Oklahoma fields, and a director in the West Virginia Metal Products Company of Fairmont. Mr. Hiteshew is a vestryman and junior warden of the Episcopal Church at Parkersburg and a democrat in politics. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and a member of the Blennerhassett Club and Parkersburg Country Club.

April 26, 1917, Mr. Hiteshew married Miss Mary Van Winkle, only daughter of the late W. W. Van Winkle, one of the foremost lawyers and men of affairs of West Virginia, whose biography follows.

WALLING WALENSON VAN WINKLE at the time of his death on April 15, 1921, had been a member of the Parkersburg bar almost fifty-five years, being the oldest active practitioner in Wood County. He was one of the foremost business lawyers of West Virginia, and in many ways he exerted a great and helpful influence in the affairs and development of Parkersburg throughout most of the city's history.

The late Mr. Van Winkle stood in the eighth generation of the Van Winkle ancestry in America. The founder of the family was Jacob Walling Van Winkle, who arrived at New Amsterdam from Holland in 1636, and subsequently moved over to New Jersey, where the name has been a distinguished one for nearly three centuries. The grandfather of the late Mr. Van Winkle was Peter Van Winkle, whose wife, Phoebe Godwin, was of Revolutionary ancestry and of prominent literary connections in the East.

The distinguished West Virginian, Peter Godwin Van Winkle, was an uncle of the late W. W. Van Winkle of Parkersburg. Peter G. Van Winkle was born in New York City in 1808, and died at Parkersburg April 15, 1872. He became noted as a man of deep scholarship, was a poet and wrote verse as a diversion from the busy activities of a life devoted to legal, commercial and political affairs. He settled at Parkersburg as early as 1835, when it was a village of 200 inhabitants. He finished his law studies and for several years practiced law with Gen. John J. Jackson, but after 1852 his time was chiefly devoted to the promotion and building of railroads and other large affairs. He was the first president of the Little Kanawha Navigation Company, and was also president of the Northwestern Virginia Railroad Company and the Parkersburg Branch Railway Company. Of his public life the following is a brief account: "His political career began early in the development of Parkersburg, with membership in the town council, and he was president of the board for several years. For many years active in local affairs, he was soon called to a wider field. In 1850 he was elected a member of the constitutional convention of Virginia, in which he served with distinction, performing arduous work on important committees of that body. Some ten years later he was a delegate to the convention at Wheeling, called to reorganize the government of Virginia. In 1862 he was a delegate to the convention assembled to frame a constitution for the proposed new state of West Virginia, and he was a member of its first house of delegates. In August, 1863, he was elected one of the first United States senators from the new state, and drew the long term. He was one of the seven republican senators who voted for the acquittal of President Johnson in the impeachment proceedings. In all these various positions of public trust he performed his duties with laborious attention, conscientiousness, exactness, devotion and ability. In his case honorable position sought the man invariably and no office was obtained by personal solicitation, but because of his integrity and capability. Pure and incorruptible, he was a noble specimen of that highest type of a true manhood, a Christian gentleman."

Wallington Wallenson Van Winkle was born November 19, 1845, at Lodi, Bergen County, New Jersey, at the homestead standing on land that had been acquired by the Van Winkle family as early as 1684. He was a son of Adolphus Walling and Petrina (Van Winkle) Van Winkle, his mother being also of a collateral line of the same Van Winkle ancestry. W. W. Van Winkle was educated in the schools of Jersey City and the University of New York, and after partly qualifying himself for the practice of law came to Parkersburg in October, 1864, where he completed his legal studies under his uncle, being his uncle's secretary while the latter was in the United States Senate. He was admitted to the bar December 1, 1866, and was in continuous active practice until his death. On June 1, 1875, he formed a partnership with B. Mason Ambler, under the name of Van Winkle & Ambler, a firm which attained a very high standing in the profession.

Much of his legal talent was devoted to large and constructive business affairs. He was acting secretary of the Northwestern Virginia Railroad Company until May, 1865, when the company was reorganized as the Parkersburg Branch Railroad Company, and he continued to be officially identified with its affairs as secretary until 1899, when he became a director. He was also a director of the Ohio River Railroad Company, the Huntington & Big Sandy Railroad, the Ravenswood and Mill Creek Valley Railroad, the Ravenswood, Spencer & Glenwood, was the first secretary of the Little Kanawha Navigation Company, and in 1886 was one of the projectors of what is now the Parkersburg, Marietta & Interurban Railway Company and for many years its secretary and director. He was identified with the Baltimore & Ohio Railway from 1864, being a member of its legal department from 1870 until his death.

Mr. Van Winkle succeeded C. C. Martin as president of the First National Bank of Parkersburg. He was also president of the Peerless Milling Company, a director of the Parkersburg Industrial Company, the Shaffer Oil & Refining Company of Chicago. He was a trustee of the sinking funds of the City of Parkersburg for forty years, but was never active in politics. He was a member of the American, County and State Bar associations, the Dutel Reformed Church, the Union League Club of Chicago, and at one time was president of the Blennerhassett Club and the Parkersburg Country Club. He was an honorary thirty third degree Mason and a member of the Holland Society of New York.

Among the many tributes paid to his character and activities at the time of his death the following expresse some of the qualities outside of his character as a lawyer: "His chief characteristics were his indomitable courage his unswerving loyalty to his friends and clients, an even unruled temper which no stress or storm of controversy could disturb; a kindness and courtesy which often won his opponents to his views. He possessed unusual abilities as an executive, and his learning and clear common sense had much to do with his success in corporate matters."

October 21, 1868, Mr. Van Winkle married Miss Hannah Cook, daughter of Paul Cook of Parkersburg. Mrs. Van Winkle died August 26, 1902. Their only surviving child is Mary, now Mrs. C. T. Hiteshaw of Parkersburg.

HON. EPHRAIM F. MORGAN, sixteenth governor of the State of West Virginia, has done much to exemplify while in office the virile efficiency and manhood that is his inheritance from pioneer trail blazers and Indian fighters at the very onset of civilization into what is now West Virginia.

Governor Morgan is in the sixth generation from Col. Morgan Morgan, a native of Wales, who was educated in London, came to America during the reign of William III first locating in Delaware and in 1727 removed to the vicinity of Winchester, Virginia. He is credited with having made the first white settlement and having built the first church in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia. From his time to the present the Morgans have been a historic family, men of constructive ideals and activities in every generation. A son of Colonel Morgan was Zackwell Morgan, a colonel in the Continental Army in the Revolution and founder of the Town of Morgantown. Another son was David Morgan, from whom the present governor directly descends. David Morgan was a surveyor, with his brother Zackwell moved to the Monongahela Valley, Zackwell settling at the present site of the City of Morgantown while David settled near the present City of Rivesville in Marion County, where he is buried. The paternal grandfather of Governor Morgan was James Morgan. This is only brief reference to an ancestry that contains many notable names, some of which are more adequately treated elsewhere in this publication.

Governor Ephraim F. Morgan was born at Forksburg in Marion County, January 16, 1869, son of Marcus and Virginia (Wymer) Morgan. Marcus Morgan was a Union soldier throughout the Civil war, serving in the Sixth West Virginia Infantry. There have been Morgans in all the wars. Governor Morgan was a volunteer in the Spanish American war, being a member of the First West Virginia regiment.

Ephraim F. Morgan attended public schools in Marion County, the Fairmont State Normal School, and graduated in 1897 from the law department of the University of West Virginia. As a youth he taught school, and continued his work as an educator in the public schools of Marion County for nine years. In 1898 he began the practice of law at Fairmont, and had demonstrated his sound abilities as a lawyer before he accepted the honors and responsibilities of public office. He served as judge of the Intermediate Court of Marion County for six years, from 1907 to 1913. On leaving the bench he resumed private practice, from which he was called by appointment of Governor Hatfield as a member of the Public Service Commission of West Virginia for a term of four years, and was reappointed for two additional years to fill out the unexpired term of Hon. Elliot Northeott, resigned. He began his duties June 1, 1915, and soon afterward removed to Charleston. He resigned November 15, 1919, to become a candidate for the republican nomination for governor, was nominated and had a sweep ing victory in the November election of that year.

Governor Morgan married Miss Alma Bennett, daughter of Albert Bennett, of Monongalia County, a prominent family in the Monongahela Valley. The only daughter of Governor and Mrs. Morgan, Lucile, died at the age of fifteen months. They have a son, Albert Marcus Morgan, born July 29, 1912.

DANIEL BOARDMAN PURINTON, Ph. D., LL. D., president emeritus of West Virginia University, enjoys an impressive accumulation of the honors and attainments of scholarship. His ancestors were college men and able ministers of the Gospel, so that though born in a section of West Virginia where education and culture were not generally diffused, his early inclinations were thoughtfully cherished and encouraged. His own children have gained notable recognition in the world of arts and letters.

Doctor Purinton was born on Buffalo Creek, seven miles south of Roseburg, in Preston County, West Virginia, February 15, 1850, son of Rev. Jesse M. and Nancy (Alden) Purinton. His great-grandfather, Rev. D. Purinton, was a New England Baptist minister. The grandfather, Rev. Thomas Purinton, D. D., was a native of Massachusetts, and early gained fame for his eloquence and ability as a churchman and scholar. He was pastor of Baptist churches at Coleraine and Shelburne Falls, Massachusetts, and subsequently was editor and managing head of the Watchman and Reflector, the official Baptist periodical of New York State. Some years before his death, which occurred in New York State, he made a trip into Western Virginia, and while here purchased upwards of a thousand acres of wild land in Preston County. It was this land that influenced the following generation to locate in West Virginia.

Rev. Jesse Martin Purinton, D. D., was born at Shelburne Falls, Massachusetts, August 12, 1809. He was educated at Madison, now Colgate, University, and was both a minister and educator. He held the same pulpits at Coleraine and Shelburne Falls as his father, and was also an instructor at Shelburne Falls Academy. In 1849 he settled on a portion of his father's land in Preston County, West Virginia, but subsequently removed to Morgantown, and was pastor of the First Baptist Church of that city for two years. He died at Morgantown in 1869. His wife, Nancy Alden, was born in Central New York, July 2, 1814, daughter of Deacon Aaron Lyon. She died at Morgantown in 1902. Her children were: Edward Lord, who died at the age of fifteen; Daniel Boardman; Aaron Lyon, Ph. D., M. D., who at the time of his death was professor of chemistry in the University of Nashville, Tennessee; George Dana, Ph. D., M. D., formerly a professor in the University of Missouri and at the time of his death was a practicing physician at St. Louis.

Daniel Boardman Purinton acquired his early education in Georges Creek Academy at Smithfield, Pennsylvania, attended the West Virginia University Preparatory School, and graduated A. B. from West Virginia University in 1873 and received the Master of Arts degree in 1876. In 1889 Denison University of Ohio conferred upon him the degree LL. D. and his Bachelor of Philosophy degree was bestowed by the University of Nashville in 1892. Doctor Purinton received his Bachelor's degree at Morgantown nearly half a century ago, and of that long and interesting period of ripening honors he has devoted nearly four decades to the service of his alma mater. He was teacher in the University Preparatory School from 1873 to 1878. He was then successively professor of logic, 1878-80, of mathematics, 1880-84, of metaphysics, 1885-89, and in the meantime, during 1881-82, was vice president and acting president. Doctor Purinton left West Virginia University to become president of Denison University in Ohio, and held that post of duty from 1890 to 1901. He then returned to his alma mater and was president of the university from 1901 to 1912, and since that year has been president emeritus, always deeply interested in University affairs.

Doctor Purinton is a member of the National Education Association, the American Association of State University Presidents, the Ohio Educational Association, the Southern Association of College Sunday Schools, and is one of the most prominent Baptists of the state. For years he has been a member of the executive committee of the Northern Baptists Convention, also active on its apportionment conference, and for eight years was president of the Baptist General Association of West Virginia. For six years he was moderator of the Goshen Baptist Association. For many years he has been a member of the executive committee of the International Sunday School Association and for some years chairman of its educational committee. He was for several years president of the West Virginia Sunday School Association, and is now chairman of its executive committee. For twenty years he has been president of the Oak Grove Cemetery Association at Morgantown.

Doctor Purinton married Florence Alden Lyon, who was born in Chautauqua County, New York, August 26, 1854, daughter of Professor F. S. Lyon, former president of Broadus College in West Virginia, and Amanda (Johnson) Lyon, his wife. Mrs. Purinton is a descendant in the ninth generation of John and Priscilla Alden of the Mayflower. Her descent comes through the marriage of Armilla Alden to Aaron Lyon. Aaron Lyon was the only brother of Mary Lyon, leader of the first successful movement for the higher education of women in America and founder of Mount Holyoke College, the first institution for the advanced training of women in the world.

Of the children of Doctor Purinton and wife the oldest is Edward Earl, who was born in Morgantown, April 24, 1876. He did some of his collegiate work in West Virginia University, graduated A. B. from Denison University, and is a recognized international authority on subjects of efficiency. He is author of "Triumph of a Man who Acts," which was published in several editions, to a total number of over 3,000,000 copies. Fifty thousand copies were purchased by Gen. Lord Kitchener of the English army for distribution among his officers. This and other works on efficiency have been published in many different languages. E. E. Purinton is now dean and director of the American Efficiency Foundation, an alliance of noted educators for the advancement of the study of personal and business efficiency. The business headquarters of the foundation are in New York City, but Mr. Purinton still regards Morgantown as his home.

The second child, Mary Lyon, born November 30, 1879, is the wife of Robert R. Green, who at one time was editor of the Morgantown Post and is now a resident of New York City.

John Alden Purinton, born July 27, 1884, graduated A. B. and LL. B. from West Virginia University, practiced law at Morgantown, and gave up his practice to become the leading civilian member of the Claims Board at Washington, District of Columbia, and is now continuing his practice in that city as a member of the law firm Brown & Purinton.

The youngest child, Helen Elizabeth, born September 21, 1893, graduated A. B. and A. M. from West Virginia University, and is a teacher in the English Department of the University. Her husband, Harry Alford Pettigrew, recently returned from service in France to complete his medical education at Morgantown.

HON. ARETAS BROOKS FLEMING. As a lawyer, jurist, public official, promoter of industrial progress and exemplar of the finest ideals of citizenship there have been few who have more significantly honored their native state than Hon. A. Brooks Fleming, former governor of West Virginia and now one of the most venerable and distinguished members of the bar of this commonwealth.

Governor Fleming was born on a farm near Middletown, Harrison County, Virginia (now Fairmont, Marion County, West Virginia), on the 15th of October, 1839, and is a son of Benjamin F. and Rhoda (Brooks) Fleming, the latter a daughter of Rev. Asa Brooks, the family lineage tracing back to Scotch-Irish origin. William Fleming, great-grandfather of the former governor of West Virginia, was one of four brothers who came to America in 1741 and took up land in the Pennsylvania colony of William Penn.

Reared on his father's old homestead farm in what is now Marion County, the future governor profited fully by the advantages of private and select schools, and in 1859 he entered the University of Virginia, where he completed the course of law lectures under the distinguished Dr. John B.

Minor. He taught school in Marion and Gilmer counties, and in 1861, after his graduation in the law department of the University of Virginia, he engaged in the practice of his profession in Gilmer County. While waiting for clients he opened and conducted a private school at Glenville, the county seat. His law business soon demanded so much of his time that he called upon his brother, Robert F., to take charge of the school, this brother having later become judge of the Circuit Court in that circuit. Upon the inception of the Civil war, Governor Fleming returned to Fairmont, and here he served from 1863 as prosecuting attorney of Harrison County, in the newly created State of West Virginia. After the close of the war he formed a law partnership with the late Judge Alpheus F. Haymond, and in 1873 he was elected representative of Marion County in the State Legislature, re-election having followed in 1875. He served on important committees of the House of Delegates, including the judiciary and the committee on taxation and finance, of which he was made chairman. In 1878 he was appointed judge of the Circuit Court of the Second Judicial Circuit, and thereafter he was twice elected to this bench, the circuit at that time having comprised Marion, Monongalia, Harrison, Taylor, Wetzel and Doddridge counties. In his election to the circuit bench, as a democrat, his personal popularity and distinctive ability enabled him to win victory in counties giving large republican majorities at that time. After his election to the bench of the new circuit, composed of Marion, Monongalia and Harrison counties, Judge Fleming continued his service until the autumn of 1888, when he received the unanimous nomination of his party for the office of governor of West Virginia, his election to this office having occurred February 6, 1890. He resigned his position on the bench September 1, 1888. The record of his election to the position of chief executive of the state has become an integral part of West Virginia history, and it is not necessary to review the same in this abridged article. The following statements, however, are worthy of reproduction in this connection:

"Governor Fleming, as a leader of his party during his term of office, was very successful in holding his party together and rendering to it valuable service; but his greatest service to his party, as well as to his state, was in his efficient administration of the duties of his office, his insistent policy of executive economy, and his constant effort to induce capital to enter the state for investment and the building of railroads, opening of mines, and developing of timber lands and oil and gas fields."

In the active career of Governor Fleming from 1874 forward he was actively identified with the coal development of the Upper Monongahela Valley, in association with his father-in-law, the late James Otis Watson, who was the pioneer coal operator in this region. The Governor, with the sons of Mr. Watson, was concerned in the organization of the early coal companies which have acquired vast acreage on the Monongahela and West Fork rivers, and he played a large part in the development of the great coal industry of his native state, his connections having been with the Gaston Gas Coal Company, Montana Coal & Coke Company, West Fairmont Coal Company, New England Coal Company, Briar Hill Coal & Coke Company, and others. He was identified also with the building of the Monongahela River Railroad, which brought about the opening of large and important coal mines. As the coal, oil and gas industries developed and railroads were built Governor Fleming was actively concerned in all the efforts for advancement, both in the Upper Monongahela Valley and other parts of the state. When the Fairmont Coal Company was organized, in 1901, he became one of its directors and also its attorney in the purchase and consolidation of other companies into it. This company later developed into the Consolidation Coal Company, which owns vast properties in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Kentucky. Governor Fleming continued a director of this great corporation until he retired from active business, but he still serves as general counsel for the company in West Virginia. He was a director of the Cumberland & Pennsylvania and the Monongahela River Railroads, and his son, A. Brooks Fleming, Jr., is his successor as a director of the various corporations. The Governor was actively concerned also with the building of electric traction lines in Fairmont and Clarksburg, and the inter-urban lines connecting the two cities. He was one of the organizers of the National Bank of Fairmont, and was long a director of the same, he being still one of its stockholders, as is he also in the Watson Company, which owns the fine stone bank and office building, ten stories, known as the Watson Building, in the City of Fairmont.

Governor Fleming was one of the founders of what is now the State Normal School at Fairmont, and has otherwise done much to promote advancement in educational affairs in West Virginia. In recognition of his distinguished services to the state along many lines the University of West Virginia has twice conferred upon him honorary degrees.

The following estimate is entitled to preservation in this review: "As legislator, judge and governor, Hon. A. Brook Fleming has served the state and his native county with fidelity, and reflected credit upon himself and the people whom he served. Public-spirited as a citizen, he carried his enthusiasm for righteousness and efficiency into the offices he held. He attracted the attention, especially while governor of the whole country to the then almost undeveloped miners and timber resources of West Virginia, by public addresses and published articles in trade and other papers."

In his profession Governor Fleming has long been recognized as one of the foremost and most influential corporate lawyers in West Virginia, and though in October, 1921, he celebrated his eighty-second birthday anniversary, he still gives attention to his important law business, as legal representative of divers and important commercial and industrial interests. The Governor, as he is familiarly known, is in every sense "the grand old man" of Fairmont, and of him it has consistently been said: "No better loved man lives in his native town, where for him tender regard is manifested by all, from his oldest friends to the children, who are all his friends. All are unanimous in their declaration 'to know him is to love him.' For eighty-two years he has lived a life guided by honor, truth and fidelity."

Governor Fleming is a member of the West Virginia Board of Trade and is the oldest member of the Marion County Bar Association, which passed sentence upon him in these words: "That Governor A. B. Fleming be incarcerated forever and a day in the hearts and affections of the members of the association as their idol and ideal."

September 7, 1865, recorded the marriage of Governor Fleming and Miss Caroline Margaret Watson, daughter of James Otis Watson and Matilda Watson, and their devoted companionship has been one of idyllic order. Robert, the first of their children, died in childhood. Ida W. became the wife of Walton Miller, president of the National Bank of Fairmont, her death occurring in 1906, and her one surviving child being a daughter, Helen. Gypsie W. is the wife of Charles E. Ward, of Charleston, this state, and they have two children, Margaret F. and Caroline B. George W. and Virginia W. are twins, the former having wedded Doris Underhill and Virginia being the wife of Charles Baird Mitchell, of Fairmont. George W. is president of the Elk Horn Coal Corporation. A. Brooks, Jr., youngest of the children, is assistant to the president of the Consolidation Coal Company. His first wife, whose maiden name was Amy Dodson, died in 1897, and in 1910 he married Marie Antoinette Boggess, their children being Caroline, Virginia, Ida Watson and Sarah.

HON. GEORGE COOKMAN STURGISS. One of the prominent men of West Virginia of the present generation is Judge George Cookman Sturgiss of Morgantown, who has been identified with the history of the commonwealth since before the Civil war period, and has rendered distinguished service in the State Legislature, the Federal Congress and on the Bench of the Circuit Court of Monongalia County.

Judge Sturgiss was born at Poland, Mahoning County, Ohio, August 16, 1842, a son of Rev. Alfred Gallatin Sturgiss and Sabra Lucinda (Miner) Sturgiss, who were married July 26, 1837. Rev. Alfred G. Sturgiss died November 4, 1845, and is buried at Uniontown, where four generations of his paternal ancestors are interred. He was graduated from Madison College in his native town, entered the Methodist Episcopal ministry, afterward holding charges in Pennsylvania and Ohio, his ministerial labors being ended only by his death at Uniontown at his father's home. He left three sons, aged one, three and five years, all of whom later served in the Union Army during the war between the states. The older and younger sons died some years ago.

The mother of Rev. Alfred G. Sturgiss was Hannah Lincoln Sturgiss, who was of a collateral branch of the Lincoln family of which the martyr president was a member. She was born July 11, 1792, at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and died April 4, 1872. John P. Sturgiss and Hannah Lincoln were married May 14, 1912.

The mother of George C. Sturgiss was a daughter of Hori and Pemelia (Re-d) Miner natives of Connecticut, where they were married. They migrated to the Connecticut Reserve in the Ohio Western Reserve in Ashtabula County, driving across the country in a two horse Conestoga wagon and carrying the family and household effects. This was a journey of six weeks. Sabra Lucinda Miner was the oldest of the children, and it fell to her to take special care of a brother, the youngest child, then one year old. Sabra Lucinda Sturgiss lacked one day of attaining the age of eighty years. The three sons were at her bedside when she died and she was buried the day after her eightieth birthday, having remained a widow fifty years.

George C. Sturgiss after the death of his father lived with his mother in Ashtabula County, Ohio. He began earning his living at fourteen, and from the spring of 1856 to the fall of 1859 he worked as a furniture varnisher at points in Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York, and November of the latter year found him in the City of New York, possessed of $300 in gold that he had managed to save from his earnings. With this gold concealed in a belt around his body he made his way to Fayette County, Pennsylvania, to the home of his older brother, and after reaching there the brothers decided to pay a visit to their uncle, Col. Addison S. Vance, who had married their father's sister and resided near Morgantown, Virginia. They reached Morgantown, November 11, 1859, and that date Judge Sturgiss claims as the beginning of his permanent residence in the city, whose population was then only 500. The Monongahela River was spanned by a wire suspension bridge. Through the influence of Rev. J. R. Moore, then principal of the Monongalia Academy, George C. Sturgiss remained and entered the academy, paying his way through school by teaching and tutoring, assisted by his gold savings fund. He studied law with Hon. W. T. Willey, a college classmate of his father, and in 1863 was admitted to the bar. Judge Sturgiss never graduated from any college or university except the "school of hard knocks."

The war between the states was still in progress and the young lawyer saw no immediate opportunity to secure practice. In 1864 he was appointed paymaster's clerk in the Union Army, and served as such to the end of the war. In the meantime he had become widely acquainted in Monongalia County, and under the new law providing a public school system was chosen the first county superintendent of schools of that county and served two terms of two years each.

Judge Sturgiss was three times elected a member of the House of Delegates, serving from 1870. The sole purpose of his election to the Legislature was to secure the Federal Land Grant for the benefit of the future State University at Morgantown. When recently asked what he regarded as the greatest service he had rendered Morgantown Judge Sturgiss promptly replied: "Securing from the Legislature the United States Land Grant for the future university." He voted for locating the penitentiary at Moundsville, the insane asylum at Weston and the capitol at Charleston, upon condition that the representatives of all these interests vote for the land grant for the incipient university at Morgantown, believing that the latter would be worth more than all the others combined, and time has vindicated his judgment.

In 1872 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Monongalia County and re-elected in 1876, holding office until 1880. In 1880 he was the republican party's candidate for governor, but met defeat with the entire state ticket that year. In 1889 President Harrison appointed him United States attorney for the district of West Virginia, an office he held until the incoming Cleveland administration.

All the important questions of the day and problems of state government claimed his close attention and study, but especially was he interested in the Tax Reform movement. In order to gain a wide audience for views he deemed of paramount importance he purchased and edited the Morgantown Daily Post, through the medium of which he explained his tax reform plans with telling argument. After this question was settled he sold the newspaper. In 1906 Judge Sturgiss was elected to represent the Second West Virginia District in the Sixtieth Congress and was re-elected in 1908, serving from 1907 to 1911. He was re-nominated in 1910, but shared in the general defeat of his party that year. In 1912 he was elected judge of the Circuit Court of Monongalia County for the Twenty-third Judicial Circuit, serving eight years, until December 31, 1920. He was not a candidate for re-election.

In 1867 Judge Sturgiss became the secretary to the first Board of Trustees of the newly organized University of West Virginia, and served until 1897, when he was appointed a member of the Board of Regents and, by the board was unanimously chosen president and served four years.

Judge Sturgiss has been associated with many enterprises for the upbuilding of Morgantown and vicinity. He was largely instrumental in bringing to the city its first telegraph line and its first railroad. He made possible the establishment of Morgantown's first electric light plant and its first street car line. He was builder of the first eighteen miles of the Morgantown and Kingwood Railroad. While in Congress he secured the appropriation for the United States Post Office building at Morgantown, completed soon afterward, but already too small for the rapid growth in population and business of the city.

He located in the Valley of Decker's Creek the Sabraton Works of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, the Woven Wire Glass Plant, the Pressed Prism Plate Glass Works and other factories that in 1919 paid out for labor $250,000 a month or $3,000,000 a year. These works are all in Sturgiss City, a municipality adjoining Morgantown, created and named by the affirmative vote of ninety-five to six voters, without the solicitation of Judge Sturgiss.

Judge Sturgiss served as a lay delegate in 1896 to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a member. He is a trustee of the American University at Washington and the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buchanan. He was first president of the West Virginia State Board of Trade and has been president of the Morgantown Board of Trade. Judge Sturgiss is the oldest member at Morgantown of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity both in length of membership and in age. He is the oldest in length of membership and in age of Monongalia Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which now has a membership of 450. He has been a delegate twice to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the United States and is the holder of the Past Grand Master's Jewel, voted to him by the State Grand Lodge November 20, 1906.

September 22, 1863, Judge Sturgiss married Sabra J. Vance, of Morgantown. She died May 22, 1903. He married Charlotte Cecilia Kent, of Alameda, California, on the 25th day of November, 1908. Judge and Mrs. Sturgiss have four children: Katherine Kent, Helen Marie, Roberta Cecilia and Elizabeth Arabella.

A man of strong conviction and great will power like Judge Sturgiss inevitably makes enemies, but time softens such asperities, and the principle of forgive and forget has all but effaced these enmities from the consciousness of Judge Sturgiss.

MATHEWS FAMILY OF GREENBRIER. From the early years of colonial adventure along the James River men of the Mathews name have had a distinguished part in the affairs of Virginia. The scope of their action was extended beyond the Alleghenies before the Revolution, and from about that time they have constituted one of the most notable families of old Greenbrier County, and from here have gone into the larger life of the state and even that of the nation. In the following paragraphs several individuals of the Greenbrier County lineage are selected for special mention with incidental reference to some others who have made "history."

The first American of the family was Capt. Samuel Mathews, who came to Virginia in 1622, was a leader in an Indian campaign the following year and in 1624 was one of the commissioners appointed by the king to investigate the condition of the colony. In succeeding years he figured prominently in Colonial affairs, and on March 13, 1658, became governor of the colony, was disposed by the House of Burgesses, but immediately reelected, and he died while still in office, in January, 1660.

Another member of this family was Thomas Mathews, who was created an admiral in the British Navy in 1718, and died in 1751. His son, John Mathews, came from England and settled in Augusta County, Virginia, in 1730, and later permanently located in Rockbridge County, on Mill Creek, a tributary of Buffalo Creek, which empties into North River. Here he operated a large plantation of over 1,600 acres granted him by George the Second, under patent from Governor Dinwiddie. This patent is carefully preserved in the possession of his descendant Charles Gardner Mathews, of Lewisburg, Greenbrier County. John Mathews married Ann Archer, and they were the parents of seven sons and four daughters. Five of the sons, it is recorded, followed Braddock, on his ill fated campaign in 1754. One of the sons, George Mathews, was particularly active and efficient in protecting the early settlers from Indian depredations, and at the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774, commanded a company under Gen. Andrew Lewis. It was his company that by a forced march up Crooked Creek turned the enemy's flank and saved the day for the Virginians. George Mathews likewise had a conspicuous part in the Revolutionary struggle, and received special mention for his service in the battles of Monmouth and Brandywine. At the close of the war he held the rank of brigadier general, and, removing to Georgia, was twice elected governor of that state, in 1786 and in 1794, he was also a member of Congress from Georgia.

However, the branch of the family in which this article is more particularly interested is through another son of John Mathews, Joseph Mathews. Joseph Mathews married Mary Edgar, daughter of James and Mary (Mason) Edgar. They were married April 17, 1794. Of their six children the fifth was Mason Mathews, one of the most notable citizens of Greenbrier County in the last century.

Mason Mathews was born at Lewisburg, December 15, 1803, and died September 16, 1878. His early career was one of hardship and self denial. He was a boy when his father died, and other misfortunes befalling the family at that time he loyally accepted obligations that left him no time for personal leisure or selfish plans. He worked in a store at Lewisburg, and for a number of years turned over his earnings to the rehabilitation of the family fortunes. He was deputy to the high sheriff of the county, and in 1828 was elected commissioner of revenue, a position he held many years by reelection. In 1827 he married Miss Eliza S. Reynolds, member of one of the best known families of Lewisburg. Soon afterward he removed to Frankfort, Greenbrier County, and became a merchant, and in the course of years laid the solid foundation of his personal fortune. Subsequently he returned to Lewisburg, and was justice of the peace until the entire judicial system of the state was changed by the convention of 1849-50. For years he was treasurer of the Board of Commissioners of Free Schools. Because of his judicial temperament he was often called upon to arbitrate differences arising among his neighbors. He was a veritable father to his people. He opposed secession, favoring the Union, but when the state passed the ordinance of secession he cast in his lot with the Confederacy, for which he made many sacrifices. From 1859 to 1864 he was a member of the Virginia Legislature. Mason Mathews was a gentleman of the old school, unflinching in his courtesy, which was given to those of high as well as low estate. He was honest and upright, devoted to his family, and few men enjoyed the love and esteem accorded him.

Mason Mathews was the father of eight children, and lived to see seven of them grown, married and successfully established in life. The most noted perhaps of them is Henry Mason Mathews, who became one of the great lawyers of West Virginia, served as attorney-general, and also as governor of the state.

Another son of Mason Mathews was Capt. Alexander F. Mathews, who added to the prestige of the family name in Greenbrier County. He was born at Lewisburg in 18 and died December 17, 1906. At the age of fifteen he entered the University of Virginia, and graduated two years later with high honors and the degree Master of Arts. For a time he taught school, and at the beginning of the Civil war he espoused the Confederacy and was commissioned captain, and served as aide-de-camp on the staff of General Wise and afterward was in service in North Carolina. When the war was over he returned to Lewisburg, with physical energies unimpaired, but impoverished in fortune. He married in 1865 Laura Gardner, of Christiansburg, Virginia. He taught school, and though he had studied law in the University of Virginia he was debarred from practicing that profession because of having taken part against the United States. Later he formed a partnership with his famous brother, Governor Henry F. Mathews, and was also a partner for a time of Judge Adam C. Snyder. Capt. Alexander Mathews steadfastly refused to hold office. Along with the legal profession he was a banker for many years, being president of the Bank of Lewisburg. This was the oldest bank between Charleston, West Virginia, and Staunton, Virginia. He was a man possessed of high ideals, and made those ideals effective in his every day life. Intellectually he was one of the best equipped lawyers of his time.

Capt. Alexander Mathews and wife had seven children: Mason; Charles Gardner; Mary M., deceased wife of D. L. T. Davis; Eliza P., the only surviving daughter; Maude M.; Florence V.; and Henry A.

Mason Mathews, son of Capt. Alexander F. Mathews, was one of West Virginia's ablest bankers and financiers. He was born at Christiansburg, June 29, 1867. He was reared in Lewisburg, and that city has always been his home. He had a public school education, attended a military academy at Bethel, Virginia, and studied law until failing eyesight compelled him to relinquish professional ambition. He soon afterward entered the Bank of Lewisburg as a teller, and has been with that institution thirty years or more. Since 1906 he has been its president.

His financial ability has brought him a wide field of service. He helped organize the Richwood Bank and Trust Company. He was a director for ten years and later elected president of the First National Bank of Ronceverte, and is still its president. He is now vice president and was the first president of the Virginia Joint Stock Land Bank at Charleston, which succeeded the Virginia Rural Credit Association, of which Mr. Mathews was also president. He is a director of the West Virginia Mortgage and Discount Corporation of Charleston, which was organized in 1921. He has also been extensively interested in land and oil developments.

Mason Mathews married Jane C. Montgomery, of Lewisburg. Their children are: Florence M., wife of Buford Hendrick, Jr.; Alexander F.; and Elizabeth M.

A soldier of the great war, an air pilot, who lost his life in France, was Alexander F. Mathews, only son of the Lewisburg banker. He was born August 23, 1895, and was educated in the Greenbrier Presbyterian Military School and graduated in 1914 from Culver Military Academy of Indiana, with the rank of first lieutenant. He also spent year in Purdue University, and in 1915 entered Cornell University. He was one of the young men of universal training and technically equipped who volunteered at the very beginning of the war when America entered the struggle. He volunteered for the aviation service in March 1917, was in training at Miami, Florida, and in July, 1917, ordered to France. He was commissioned first lieutenant in the American Air Force on September 29, 1917, and was then sent to England for special training with the Royal Flying Corps. April 1, 1918, he returned to France, and though an American aviator was assigned to duty with the Fifty-fourth Squadron Royal Flying Corps. Having downed 3½ enemy machines, he lacked only a fraction of the work required of an "Ace." On the night of August 24, the day after his twenty-third birthday, he was killed by a German bomb dropped during a raid over the section in which he was engaged. His death was instant. His captain wrote as follows:

"I have known Alex. ever since he joined the squadron and have done a great deal of work with him over the lines, and there was nobody I would sooner go into a scrap with. He was an excellent pilot and was very keen, and had become one of the tried and trustworthy pilots who are the backbone of a fighting squadron. A chap like Alex. is awfully hard to replace, for although only with us for five months he has been in dozens of fights and was a very experienced and scientific Hun fighter."

The body of Lieutenant Mathews was subsequently returned to America, and was laid to rest in the National Cemetery at Arlington.

Charles Gardner Mathews, a brother of Mason Mathews, the Lewisburg banker, was born at Lewisburg February 14, 1869. He was educated in private schools in Virginia and the University of Virginia, where he studied law. Though admitted to the bar, his active years have been devoted to private business affairs. In 1907 he married Miss Harriet B. Tompkins. Their two children are: Jane Graves and Charles G., Jr.

JOHN WILLIAM MASON, who is engaged in the active practice of his profession in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, is consistently to be designated as one of the able and representative younger members of the bar of his native state. He was born at Grafton Taylor County, April 9, 1885, and is a son of Judge John William and Rebecca Elizabeth (Wallace) Mason. Judge Mason was one of the most distinguished and influential members of the bar of West Virginia, served as commissioner of internal revenue in the City of Washington, as judge of the Circuit Court, and later as judge of the Supreme Court of West Virginia. Judge Mason was born on a farm in Monongalia County, this state, January 13, 1842, a son of John Mason, the maiden name of whose mother was Casey. She was a descendant of Nicholas Casey, who was a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution. Judge Mason read law under the preceptorship of the late Judge Hagans of Morgantown, and after admission to the bar he established himself in practice at Grafton. In 1889 President Harrison appointed him United States commissioner of internal revenue, and he continued the incumbent of that office until 1893. Returning from the national capital to West Virginia, Judge Mason was engaged in the practice of law at Fairmont until 1900, when he was elected to the bench of the Circuit Court of the circuit then comprising Marion, Harrison and Monongalia counties. His service on the Circuit bench continued until January 1, 1913, and thereafter he was engaged in private practice at Fairmont until November, 1915, when Governor Hatfield appointed him a judge of the Supreme Court of the state. He continued his service as a member of this tribunal until January 1, 1917, and thereafter he was engaged in the practice of his profession, in a restricted way, until the time of his death, which occurred at Fairmont on the 23d of April of the same year. Judge Mason by his character and ability honored both the bench and the bar of his native state and was a man who ever commanded unqualified popular confidence and good will. His high place in the esteem of his professional confreres was shown in his election to the presidency of the West Virginia Bar Association. The wife of Judge Mason was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, December 21, 1842, a daughter of John and Mary (Manser) Wallace, both of Scotch lineage. Mrs. Mason did not long survive her husband, as she died on the 10th of April, 1919, her memory being revered by all who came within the sphere of her gentle and gracious influence.

John William Mason, who bears the full name of his distinguished father, supplemented the training of the Fairmont schools by attending the State Normal School, and afterward continued his studies in the University of West Virginia. Later he entered the law school of Yale University. He received from the State University the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1908, and from Yale the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1910, the same degree having been conferred upon him in the preceding year by the University of West Virginia. While at Yale he was a member of the Board of Editors of the Yale Law Journal. He was admitted to the bar at Fairmont, February 22, 1909, before he had received his law degree, and in 1910 he engaged in the practice of his profession at Fairmont, in partnership with A. C. Merrill, the firm of Merrill & Mason continuing until the following year, and for somewhat more than a year thereafter Mr. Mason was associated with his father in practice.

December 20, 1914, Mr. Mason was commissioned captain in the Quartermaster Department of the West Virginia National Guard, and June 18, 1916, he was called into active service in connection with troubles on the Mexican border. He was on active duty as assistant camp quartermaster under Maj. Charles R. Morgan in the City of Charleston until the following November, and thereafter continued his law practice at Fairmont until August 1, 1917, when he was mustered into the United States Army, with the rank of captain, and was assigned to service as assistant to the constructing quartermaster at Camp Sheridan, near Montgomery, Alabama. On the 14th of the following December he became assistant to the camp quartermaster, and on the 19th of January, 1918, he was assigned to duty as salvage officer at that Camp. On the 12th of the following October, Captain Mason was transferred to Camp Fremont, California, where he served as camp salvage officer until the 1st of the following February, when he was assigned to duty as assistant salvage zone officer at Fort Mason, in the City of San Francisco. On the 19th of the following June he was made zone salvage officer, and in this capacity he served until October 16, 1919, when he received his honorable discharge. Thereafter he continued in the private practice of his profession at Fairmont until January 1, 1921, when he was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney of Marion County. In his profession and as a loyal and public-spirited citizen he is well upholding the prestige of the honored family name.

Captain Mason is a member of Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., is a Knight Templar and an eighteenth degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Wheeling. He is also a member of the American Legion, Elks and Odd Fellows and is a member of the Country and Automobile clubs of his home city.

Captain Mason married Miss Josephine Colbert, daughter of Henry Clay Colbert, of Martinsburg, this state, and their one child is a son, John William (III), born May 25, 1914.

ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE, who for three terms was a member of Congress from West Virginia, his last term coinciding with the period of the war, with Germany, earned a distinctively high place as a lawyer as well as a statesman, and he was still enjoying an undiminished prestige in his profession when overtaken by death June 29, 1921.

Adam Brown Littlepage was born in Kanawha County April 14, 1859, son of Adam and Rebecca T. (Wood) Littlepage. His father was born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, where his French-Scotch ancestors had settled. In 1840 he built salt works near Kanawha Saline, where he engaged in salt manufacturing and contracting, removing from there in 1845 to a farm near Kanawha Two-Mile. He possessed business qualifications of a high order and became a man of large estate. During the unhappy Civil war he suffered great losses, many of which he claimed to be unjust, and he subsequently gave up his life in a duel at Dublin, Virginia, in an effort to substantiate his right to a valuable property. Although the larger part of the fortune which he had acquired was not preserved to his family, they were able to retain 900 acres of land, little of which, however, was contributive to the comfort or maintenance of his immediate family. Adam Littlepage married Rebecca T. Wood. She was born in Kanawha County, Virginia, and died at Charleston, West Virginia, in 1898, aged seventy-one years. Seven children were born to this marriage, several of whom died in infancy. One son, Alexander, became a noted physician, while Adam B. and Samuel D. both became lawyers and both gained prominence as members of the Charleston bar.

Adam B. Littlepage attended the public schools in Kanawha County. The death of his father in 1862 had brought about domestic changes, and the advantages that might have been accorded the children of the family were measurably limited. When the youth decided to study law he went to his uncle, who was a resident of Lodi, Indiana, and remained with him until the latter's death, after which for a time he was employed in settling up his uncle's large estate. In his early endeavors to secure an education in law that would admit him to practice Mr. Littlepage met with many discouragements which to a man of less determination would have caused his turning to some other means to gain a livelihood. Fortunately he had faith in himself, an important factor in the pursuit of any ambition, and struggled on until he attained his desire. In painful measure in his early years of law practice at Newport, Indiana, in which state he had been admitted to the bar, he was hampered by lack of means, increased somewhat by the desire as well as necessity of contributing to the support of those dear to him. In this connection it may be mentioned that when his income was $50.00 a month he sent thirty-five dollars of this amount to his mother. Also, in Indiana he found himself not altogether in touch with the people and conditions which surrounded him, and after two years of trial a natural feeling of homesickness perhaps had its influence and he returned to Kanawha County, opening an office at Charleston.

Mr. Littlepage as a lawyer was equally at home in the civil and criminal branches of the law, and gained distinction not only by individual cases but through the great volume of important litigation he handled. At one time he was general counsel in West Virginia for the United Mine Workers of America. He was a member of several law partnerships at Charleston. In 1907 he became senior member of the firm Littlepage, Cato & Bledsoe. This was succeeded in February, 1911, by the firm Littlepage & Son, and still later by the firm of Littlepage, Littlepage & Littlepage.

The late Mr. Littlepage was a loyal democrat, but seldom allowed his name to be associated with candidacy for office. At one time he was defeated by forty-nine votes for the office of prosecuting attorney, and a recount of the votes was settled by a compromise dividing the office between the two candidates. In November, 1906, he was elected a member of the State Senate from a district 3,000 votes normally republican. During his term in the Senate he was a member of the finance and other committees. In November, 1910, he was elected to the Sixty-second Congress as a representative of the Third West Virginia District. The normal political complexion of the district was republican by a majority of 6,000, and he received a margin over his competitor by nearly 2,000 ballots. He was re-elected from the Third District in 1914, and in 1916 was elected to the Sixty-fifth Congress from the Sixth District, his third term ending in March, 1919. He served for some time as a member of the committee on military affairs, but at the special request of Secretary Daniels he resigned his membership in this committee and was made a member of the naval affairs committee during the World war.

On April 8, 1884, Mr. Littlepage married Eva Collett, daughter of Stephen S. and Jane (Dunlap) Collett. Her parents were natives of Vermillion County, Indiana, where her father was president of a bank. Mr. and Mrs. Littlepage had two children: Clara Frances, who became the wife of R. F. Irwin, and S. Collett Littlepage, whose career is sketched in biography following.

Mr. Littlepage was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, an Odd Fellow, a Knight of Pythias, an Elk and a Red Man.

As an individual, as a lawyer, and as a legislator Adam B. Littlepage stood exemplar of those principles which tend towards the better life. While manifesting and practicing towards others the utmost measure of kindness and charity, he maintained for himself a rigid adherence to the principles of absolute equity and fairness. Scrupulously honest in all of his dealings with his fellow men, he could never countenance, much less practice, the petty tripping which too often pass current in the business and political world. Kind hearted and generous, almost to a fault, he possessed an affability and charm of manner which won and held friendships, and marked him a man among peers.

STEPHEN COLLETT LITTLEPAGE became an active member of the Charleston bar in 1908, for a dozen years actively associated with his distinguished father, and has been ably carrying on the great and important volume of the practice of the old firm since the death of his father.

His father was the late Hon. Adam Brown Littlepage, one of Charleston's most distinguished citizens. He was born near Charleston, April 14, 1859, son of Adam B. and Rebecca T. (Wood) Littlepage. He was educated in the public schools near Charleston, and in his professional career held the offices of prosecuting attorney, member of the State Senate, from 1906 to 1910, and represented the Charleston District in Congress, elected in 1910, the only democrat ever chosen to Congress from this district since the Civil war. He was general counsel in West Virginia for the United Mine Workers of America. Adam B. Littlepage died June 29, 1921. He married Eva Collett, of Newport, Indiana, April 8, 1884. She was born at Newport, a daughter of Stephen S. Collett, a banker, and a niece of Joseph and John Collett. John Collett was distinguished as the builder of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad, and was its first president. Joseph Collett was state geologist for the State of Indiana.

Stephen Collett Littlepage was born at Charleston in 1887, was educated in the grammar and high schools of his native city, attended Kentucky Military Institute, Washington and Lee University, and graduated LL. B. from the University of West Virginia in 1908. He at once returned to Charleston, and has since been in active practice and his personal abilities have won him much of the prestige given his honored father.

Mr. Littlepage early in 1918 volunteered as a private in the infantry service, and was assigned to duty with the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Depot Brigade at Camp Lee, Virginia. While there he was recommended by officers of his company and battalion to enter the line of officer's training school. He was one of only three men who were commissioned first lieutenants at Camp Lee, all the other candidates attending school having to be satisfied with the grade of second lieutenant. Mr. Littlepage is still a first lieutenant of the Reserves. He married November 22, 1919, Marguerite E. Payne, of Charleston, West Virginia, only daughter of Charles K. and Emma E. Payne.

Mr. Littlepage is a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity, Theta Nu Epsilon fraternity, Edgewood Country Club. He is also a member of numerous hunting and fishing clubs, including the Alleghany and Cheat Mountain clubs and the Paul J. Rainey Fox Hunters' Association and the National Fox Hunters' Association. In fraternities he holds membership in the Elks Lodge and the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

HON. NATHAN GOFF. In the public service of state and nation perhaps no West Virginian had longer and more distinguished service than the late Nathan Goff. He was one of the first volunteers in the war for the Union, in which he rose to the rank of major. From the close of the war he practiced law, was an officer of the state and federal governments, a cabinet officer, congressman, federal judge and United States senator, and in these varied responsibilities was almost continuously active until a short time before his death.

He was born in the City of Clarksburg, which always remained his home, on February 9, 1843. His first American ancestors were New England settlers. His grandparents were Nathan and Mary (Potter) Goff, who were married at Coventry, Rhode Island, in 1746. His grandfather, Job Goff, was born at Coventry, Rhode Island, November 22, 1760, and was reared in Vermont. He was one of the volunteers from Vermont to the American forces in the Revolutionary war. Subsequently he removed to Otsego County, New York, and in 1804 settled in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia. He lived there until his death on December 8, 1845.

The parents of the late Judge Goff were Waldo Potter and Harriet Louise (Moore) Goff. His father was born in Otsego County, New York, and died at Clarksburg, September 17, 1881. He was a farmer and merchant, held several county offices and was a member of the Virginia Senate. At Clarksburg in 1839, he married Harriet Louise Moore, a daughter of Thomas Preston and Rachel (Pindall) Moore. Their children were named: Gay, Henry Clay, Nathan, Thomas Moore, Charles James, May, Flora, Lizzie and Hattie.

Nathan Goff acquired a liberal education, attending Northwestern Academy at Clarksburg and the Georgetown College in the District of Columbia. He left Georgetown College to enlist as a private in Company G of the Third Virginia Infantry at the very beginning of the war, and remained in service until the close. He was promoted to lieutenant and finally to major, and at his discharge was brevetted a brigadier-general of volunteers. He received his honorable discharge January 20, 1864. He was once a prisoner of war and spent four months in Libby Prison. After leaving the army he studied law in the University of the City of New York, from which he received his LL. B. degree. Georgetown College conferred upon him the honorary degree LL. B. in 1889. He was admitted to the bar in 1866, and began practicing that year at Clarksburg. In 1867 he was elected a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates and reelected in 1868. In 1869 President Grant appointed him district attorney for the District of West Virginia, and he held that office for twelve years, until 1881, when, toward the close of the administration of President Hayes, he resigned to become secretary of the navy in President Hayes' cabinet. In the meantime he had been one of the prominent republican leaders in his state; was candidate for Congress in 1870 and 1874, and for governor in 1876. During 1881-82 he was again United States district attorney. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, serving three terms, from 1883 to 1889. In 1888 Judge Goff was again his party's candidate for governor, and on the face of the returns was elected by a plurality of one hundred and thirty votes, but the election was contested by the democratic candidate, who was seated by a majority vote of the Legislature. In 1884 and in 1888, Judge Goff was chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

In 1892 he was appointed by President Harrison judge of the United States Circuit Court, Fourth Division, and he was on the bench for a period of nineteen years and during 1912-13 was judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. In 1913 Judge Goff left the bench to become United States Senator from West Virginia, and served out his six year term, ending in March, 1919. He had been in some branch of the public service for over half a century, and had earned some of the finest distinctions as soldier, lawyer, judge and statesman.

Through all these years he was exceptionally loyal as a citizen of Clarksburg. A monument to his enterprise as a business man and as a citizen include his splendid residence in that city, the Goff office building and the Waldo Hotel.

November 7, 1865, Judge Goff married Laura Despard. Two sons were born to this marriage, Guy D. and Waldo Percy Goff. Guy D. Goff took up his father's profession, and is now assistant United States attorney-general. Waldo P. Goff is a prominent physician and business man of Clarksburg. On August 28, 1919, Judge Goff married Miss Katherine M. Penney. She survives him and lives at Clarksburg. Judge Goff died April 23, 1920, at the age of seventy-seven.

JAMES A. BRYAN. The serviceableness of good citizenship has a most splendid example in the career of James A. Bryan of Parkersburg. While a busy and successful manufacturer, Mr. Bryan at all times has been ready to put the interests of the community first in importance. While so well known and loved in his home community, he is widely known all over the state for his prominence in Masonry.

He was born at Parkersburg February 14, 1858, son of William and Margaret (Wreath) Bryan. His father was one of the early engineers on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, running trains over the branch to Parkersburg. He was also at one time a captain of the Mount Clare transport steamboat.

James A. Bryan was reared in Parkersburg, attended public and private schools there, and has been in business since the close of his school days. He is one of the principal owners of the National Woolen Mills, with its numerous subsidiary establishments.

For twenty years, ending in 1906, Mr. Bryan was a member of the Board of Education, serving without remuneration. The last four years he was president of the board. During his administration the McKinley School Building was erected, at a cost of $90,000; $25,000 were expended in rebuilding the Willard School, and $8,000 in the remodeling of the Sumner High School. The Carnegie Public Library Building was also erected, at a cost of $34,000, the gift from Mr. Carnegie being secured largely through the personal efforts of Mr. Bryan. As president of the Board of Education, it may be safely asserted that Mr. Bryan accomplished more than any other citizen ever has in behalf of local educational progress. While he was on the board a system of free text books was adopted, teachers' salaries were increased, and a four year high school course adopted.

Mr. Bryan is a prominent Methodist and has been identified with that church since early youth. He served as steward and treasurer of the Board of Stewards for thirty years, served as secretary of the Sunday School, for five years was superintendent of the Sunday School, and is still treasurer of the church. When the Parkersburg Y. M. C. A. was organized on a permanent basis he was unanimously chosen as first president of the Board of Directors. During the three years he held that office, the Y. M. C. A. Building was erected and equipped at a cost of $85,000.

His many services as a Mason are well known, and may be only briefly outlined. He was made a Master Mason of Mount Olivet Lodge No. 3, in 1879, filled various chairs in that lodge, was its worshipful master in 1882-84, and for many years past has been its secretary. In 1879 he was exalted to the Royal Arch Degree, was high priest of Jerusalem Chapter No. 3, in 1885, and since 1895 has been secretary of the chapter. In November, 1900, he received the order of High Priesthood. He also was elevated in 1879 to the rank of Knight Templar in Calvary Commandery No. 3, and was chosen its eminent commander in 1885, and has been its recorder since 1895. Besides his responsibilities in connection with the York Rite bodies at Parkersburg, he has had many honors in the state organizations. In 1907-08 he was grand master of the Grand Lodge of the State of West Virginia. He is now Captain of Host, Sojourner of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, and in 1902-03 was grand commander of the Grand Commandery of the state. He has also been representative of these Grand Bodies. Up to the nineteenth degree of the Scottish Rite he holds membership in Parkersburg, and acts officially in all the various proceedings. The remainder of the Scottish Rite degrees he holds in West Virginia Consistory at Wheeling. In 1907, at a meeting of the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite held in Washington, D. C., he was elected a Knight Commander of the Court of Honor and later was made a thirty-third degree, Honorary. Mr. Bryan became a charter member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine after having previously been a member of Osiris Temple at Wheeling. He is present recorder of the local Shrine.

In 1884 Mr. Bryan married Miss Lulu Kendall, daughter of Dr. J. E. Kendall. Of their two children the daughter, Margaret, died at the age of eighteen months. The son, James K. Bryan, is a member of the senior class of the Ohio Wesleyan College at Delaware, was senior class president, a member of the Boosters Class, on the staff of the college paper, received his athletic Letter in basket ball, and was one of the ten men and ten women students elected to the distinction of having been one of the most serviceable to their college. This son was for twenty-two months in the hospital service during the World war, attached to the Thirty-seventh Ohio Regiment and spent eleven months overseas, being at the front during the Argonne battle.

GILBERT L. WATSON. Practically all the experiences of his mature career have identified Mr. Watson with the great industry of oil production. Oil circles know him as a veteran, and his activities have extended from the East to the West. He first became identified with oil production in West Virginia thirty years ago, and for a quarter of a century his home has been at Parkersburg, where he is president of the Citizens National Bank.

Mr. Watson was born at Olean, New York, May 26, 1855, son of Hiram and Melvina (Freeman) Watson. The Watsons were an old New England family, coming from Scotland about 1629 and settling in and around Hartford, Connecticut. The great-grandfather of Gilbert L. Watson was Simon Watson, a soldier of the Revolution.

Gilbert L. Watson while a boy spent several years in Northern Illinois, but otherwise his early life was passed in New York. He completed his education in the Olean Academy, and from the age of fifteen to twenty he was employed as an operator and manager of the Olean office of the Western Union Telegraph Company. In 1875 Mr. Watson opened for the Enterprise Transportation Company, the first pipe line office for the purchase of oil at Bradford, Pennsylvania. About two years later this business was taken over by the Standard interests, but he continued in the producing end of the Enterprise Transportation Company until 1884.

In that year he became an oil producer on his own responsibility, his first efforts being made in the Bradford field. Gradually his operations extended down through Butler and Washington counties, Pennsylvania, and during the Belmont excitement in 1891 he came into West Virginia. During the past thirty years Mr. Watson has operated in nearly every oil producing county in West Virginia, and also in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois and Oklahoma. He moved his family to Parkersburg in 1896. As an oil producer his endeavors have been attended with a remarkable uniformity of success. This has been due no doubt to his long experience and also to his well balanced mind and detailed practical knowledge of every feature of the business. His interests as an oil producer are still scattered over five states.

Mr. Watson is a Knight Templar Mason, a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and an Elk. He is a member of the Congregational Church and is president of the Union Mission and member of the Rotary Club, Blennerhasset Club and Chamber of Commerce.

April 9, 1884, Mr. Watson married Miss Charlotte Bushnell, and he began his career as an independent oil producer shortly after his marriage. Her father, Cornelius S. Bushnell, lived for many years at New Haven Connecticut, and was a man of distinction. He helped the famous engineer, John Erickson, build the Monitor during the Civil war. Later he was actively identified with the construction of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. and Mrs. Watson had one daughter, Emily, who died at the age of nine years. Their only surviving child is Cornelius B. Watson, now assistant to the president of the Pure Oil Company of Columbus, Ohio.

GRAY SILVER. What promises to be the most significant and important move ever made for the advancement and welfare of American farmers and necessarily by virtue of that fact benefiting the entire nation as well, was the organization of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which is now in its third year and which at the close of 1921 was a national organization representing through its local constituencies every state in the Union except two and comprising nearly a million members distributed among the approximately fifteen hundred county farm bureaus and the forty-six state farm bureau federations. The Federation in its plan for practical work has nine administrative divisions, one of which, with official headquarters at Washington, is the legislative. The man in charge of this legislative department, located in the Munsey Building at Washington, is a West Virginia farmer and fruit grower, member of an old and distinguished family of Berkeley County, and who has expressed his chief life enthusiasm in practical farming and fruit growing and all the problems incidental thereto.

James Silver, colonist to America, was one of the first permanent settlers in the Cumberland Valley of Pennsylvania (about 1725.) He gave the site for Silver Spring Presbyterian Church, six miles from Carlisle, and was a leading spirit in securing the creation of Cumberland County, and served with the rank of captain in the French and Indian war. He died in 1776. His son, Francis Silver, born in 1740, was a large owner and operator of mills in the Cumberland Valley, and took his father's place in business and in ecclesiastical affairs. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and his mills helped feed the Continental Army. In 1798 he removed with his family to Berkeley County, Virginia, where he died in 1820.

Francis Silver, Jr. (1775-1852), lived at Bunker Hill, acquired a large landed estate, operated several mills, was a soldier in the War of 1812, and a force for good throughout his community. He married in 1802 Anne Beall, daughter of Capt. Zephaniah Beall, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, son of William and Sarah (Magruder) Beall, the latter a descendant of the Scotch clan McGregor.

The only son of Francis and Anne (Beall) Silver was Zephaniah Silver, grandfather of Gray Silver. He was born at Bunker Hill May 24, 1805, and lived at White Hall, Frederick County, where he dispensed a generous hospitality. He married in 1834 Martha Jane, accomplished daughter of Captain Hiram and Mary (McConnell) Henshaw. Spring Hill, her birthplace, was founded by her great-grandfather, John Henshaw, in 1766. The first chapter of the D. A. C. in West Virginia, organized in 1899, was named in honor of her grandfather, Capt. William Henshaw. Martha Jane Silver, a granddaughter of Mrs. Martha Jane Henshaw Silver, was a charter member and regent of the chapter 1901-04 and 1914-19. Hiram Henshaw was a captain in the War of 1812.

Col. Francis Silver 3d, familiarly known as G. Frank Silver, was born near White Hall, Frederick County, May 10, 1836, was educated in private schools, and was a Company B of the First Virginia Cavalry from the outbreak of the war until the surrender at Appomattox, being severely wounded at Roods Hill. He was reared a federalist in politics, but after the war voted as a democrat, was a Presbyterian, and was a gentleman of the old school, courtly manner, handsome and generous. Like most Valley Virginians of his day, his business interests were mainly that of a farmer. He was a director of the Old National Bank and of the Shenandoah Valley Agriculture Society of Winchester. He took an active part in the reconstruction of his native state. He died at his home in Berkeley County April 28, 1885.

November 6, 1867, he married Mary Ann Gray, who was born on the Gray homestead, later known as Grayville, Berkeley County, December 19, 1841. She was a descendant of John Gray (1746-1816), who came from Scotland in 1735 and settled in Berkeley County, was a government surveyor, acquired a large landed estate, and in 1787 laid out the village of Gerardstown. His oldest son, James William Gray, born in 1811, married Martha Jane Gilbert, daughter of Edward Gilbert, Jr., and their oldest child was Mr. Ann.

The parents of both Colonel Silver and his wife, Mr. Ann Gray, were representatives of the best type of Valley Virginians of protestant faith, intelligent and prosperous, living on large plantations of considerably more than a thousand acres and until after the War of 1861-5 surrounded by a large number of well cared for and contented servants. This property was devastated, or entirely swept away, by that dreadful conflict between the North and South. The Silver and Gray plantation homes were both situated in the fairest part of the beautiful and far famed Shenandoah Valley, the immediate scene of the fiercest conflict between the contending armies during those four years of dreadful warfare.

It was of such traditions and ancestry and under the foregoing circumstances that Gray Silver began the battle of life. He was born, February 17, 1870, at White Hall, Frederick County, Virginia. In his early infancy his parents removed from the Silver homestead at White Hall to Mrs. Silver's paternal estate near Gerardstown, Berkeley County, West Virginia, where the family thereafter made their home, where their younger children were born, and where Colonel Silver spent the remaining years of his life and where his five children grew to maturity. With later additions this estate, now comprising about 900 acres, is the well known "Silver Hill Farms" of Inwood, Berkeley County, where the family hold large orchard and other interests.

Gray Silver was educated in the private and public schools of Berkeley County, being graduated from the latter in the class of 1885, when but fifteen years of age. Having lost his father at an early age, he soon learned to assume leadership and responsibility, consequently we find him in the business world when most youths are in school. His occupation has been largely that of an agriculturist and horticulturist since the beginning of his business career, and he has also been interested in the breeding of live stock and the growing of wool. He was a pioneer in bringing ranch sheep to the East for breeding purposes. He was invited to attend the conference of the tariff board to discuss the effect of free wool in the sheep industry. He had been active in the development of the Appalachian apple belt, and is a large owner of orchards at the present time.

He has been a member of the Board of Directors of different local banking institutions. At present he holds a directorship in the Merchants and Farmers Bank at Martinsburg. He was appointed commissioner on inland waters by President Taft. During the World War he was appointed by President Wilson as chairman of the County Liberty Loan Board, as well as controller of food and fuel and representative of labor distribution.

In the selection of Mr. Silver for his present important responsibilities with the American Farm Bureau Federation his qualifications rested not only upon his very close touch with the practical side of American agriculture, but also upon his familiarity with and experience in the public affairs of his home state. For eight years he was a member of the State Senate of West Virginia and a leader in that body. He was elected to the Senate in 1906, beginning his work in the session of 1907. The district he represented embraced Berkeley, Jefferson, Morgan and Hampshire counties. He was president of the Senate, being thereby ex-officio lieutenant governor of the state.

Mr. Silver is a member of the Masonic fraternity with a thirty-second degree, a Knight Templar, Scottish Rite and a Shriner; Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; the following patriotic and hereditary societies: National Society of Sons and Daughters of Pilgrims, with forty-two ancestral gold stars to his credit; the American Clan Gregor Society, Deputy Chieftain for West Virginia; the National Society Sons of the American Revolution; Sons of Confederate Veterans; the Imperial Military Order of the Yellow Rose. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church; holding the office of Deacon.

Because of the interests he represented and also for his leadership he was one of the group of American farmers who were most active in the organization of the American Farm Bureau Federation in 1919. He had been interested in all farmer movements, particularly the Grange, and state lecturer in his home state for that organization.

He was active in the work which began and led up to the organization of local Farm Bureaus. Some 850 County Farm Bureaus had been organized into their respective state federations, and these were the units which made the American Farm Bureau Federation in 1919. When the organization was completed he was put in charge of the legislative department at Washington. This Washington office is designated as a general aid agency to all farmers' activities in the national capital, and has been particularly helpful in furthering the Federation's program of national legislation affecting the farm industry in general, and in providing a nucleus of influence to bring agricultural questions to the attention of Congress. Undoubtedly the legislative office shares to a large measure the credit for the extensive program of legislation passed during the year 1921, including such vital measures as those increasing the capital and the working efficiency of the Federal Farm Loan system, the limitation of foreign immigration, the regulation of grain exchanges and packing houses. Mr. Silver not only understands the farmers' immediate problems, but his long contact with men of affairs and his experience in politics makes him familiar with the avenues of approach to Congress and higher Government officials.

Mr. Silver and his wife, Kate (Bishop) Silver, have five young children, as follows: Mary Gray Silver; Gray Silver, Jr.; Anne Beall Silver; Francis Silver 5th; Catherine du Bois.

Mrs. Kate (Bishop) Silver was educated at Randolph Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Virginia, class of 1907, is an accomplished musician, and is an active member of the Wednesday afternoon Music Club of Martinsburg. She is a member of the Alumnae Association of Randolph Macon Woman's College; member of the American Association of University Women's College Club, a Chi Omega; is a member of the Martinsburg Golf Club, and of the following patriotic and hereditary societies: National Society of Sons and Daughters of Pilgrims, and by an interesting coincidence is entitled to forty-two ancestral stars, exactly the number accredited to her husband by the same society, indicating that they have the same number of Pilgrim ancestors. Mrs. Silver is also a member of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Society of United States Daughters of 1812, the United Daughters of the Confederacy and an associate member of the American Clan Gregor Society.

SAMUEL FULLER GLASSCOCK, of the law firm of Glasscock & Glasscock at Morgantown, has been distinguished for his ability and very successful work as a lawyer, and while well known in the public life of his state, his chief ambition has been in his profession, in which for a number of years he has been associated with his brother, former Governor W. E. Glasscock.

The Glasscock family of Monongalia County was established here more than a century ago by John Glasscock. John was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and he and his brother Hezekiah settled on Indian Creek in Monongalia County. One of the grandsons of John Glasscock was Arthur C. Mellette, the first governor of South Dakota.

Charles Glasscock, son of the Revolutionary soldier, was born in Virginia July 20, 1775, and was a young man when he came with his father and uncle to Monongalia County. He was a miller in Grant District of that county, and died in February, 1840. His wife was Mary Arnett, who was born in 1794 and died in 1878.

Among the children of Charles Glasscock was Daniel Glasscock, father of the Morgantown lawyers. Daniel Glasscock was born at Arnettville in 1828 and spent a long and industrious life as a farmer. He died in 1910. He was one of the early members of the republican party in the state and was a member of the Methodist Church. In 1859 he married Prudence Michael, who died in 1904. Her children were: Stephen A. D., William E., Louverna, Samuel Fuller, James F., Sarah, Mary J., Alice and Zana.

Samuel Fuller Glasscock grew up on his father's farm, acquired his early education in the public schools, and was a successful teacher for several years. He graduated in law from the West Virginia University in 1893, was admitted to the bar the same year, and at once began his professional work in Morgantown as a member of the firm of Moreland & Glasscock. About nine years later he became associated with his brother William E. in the firm of Glasscock & Glasscock, and they have practiced law together except for the four year period when William was governor of the state. As a law firm it stands in the front rank both in point of ability of the members and the importance of its clientele. Among other corporations whose legal affairs they have handled are: General counsel for the Morgantown & Kingwood Railway Company, now part of the Baltimore & Ohio System; general counsel for the Elkins Coal & Coke Company and its successor, the Bethlehem Coal Company; attorneys for the Bank of Morgantown, Glascock Collieries Company, the Cheat Canyon Coal Company and others.

Mr. Glascock is a past grand of Monongalia Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was the first president of the Morgantown Rotary Club and a delegate to the National Convention of Rotary Clubs at Atlantic City in 1920. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a member of the County and State Bar associations. July 29, 1908, he married Mabel C. Reynolds, daughter of Dr. P. B. Reynolds, who for many years was professor of metaphysics in the University of West Virginia, of which Mrs. Glascock is a graduate.

HON. WILLIAM ELLSWORTH GLASCOCK, governor of West Virginia from 1909 to 1913, is a member of the Morgantown law firm of Glascock & Glascock, and a brother of Samuel Fuller Glascock.

He was born on his father's farm in Monongalia County, December 13, 1862, was reared on the farm, and is a product of West Virginia environment and institutions. He attended the public schools, later the University of West Virginia, and for a number of years devoted his time to teaching. He taught school in Iowa and Nebraska as well as in his native state, and during 1887-90 was superintendent of schools for Monongalia County.

He was admitted to the bar in 1902, and in the same year joined his brother S. F. Glascock in the practice of law at Morgantown. His interests as a lawyer are described in the sketch of his brother.

He was a member of the Republican State Central Committee from 1900 to 1908 and was its secretary and chairman at different times. From 1905 to 1908 he was United States collector of internal revenue for the District of West Virginia, resigning that office to become candidate on the republican ticket for governor. He was elected, and his term as governor was from March 4, 1909, to March 3, 1913. In 1912 he was delegate at large from the state to the Republican National Convention in Chicago.

August 15, 1888, Governor Glascock married Mary Alice Miller, of Monongalia County. She is a descendant in the sixth generation from Col. John Evans, one of the prominent leaders in the settlement of the Monongahela Valley of West Virginia.

CHARLES JAMES FAULKNER. In that broad zone of interests and affairs where the life of the community merges with that of the state and nation and the local citizen becomes a power and influence in the web of a larger destiny, one of the most interesting figures supplied by West Virginia was the late Charles James Faulkner of Martinsburg. In his varied experience as lawyer, legislator, diplomat and soldier he was of a rank and character that puts his name easily among the first in the "Great Men of the Virginias." Hardly less distinctive, though wrought in the medium of a later and less turbulent age, is the career of his son and namesake, familiarly known in Martinsburg, his home, as Senator Faulkner.

Charles James Faulkner, Sr., was born at Martinsburg in 1806, son of Maj. James Faulkner and Sarah (Mackey) Faulkner. The grandfather was a native of County Armagh, Ireland, whither the family had settled on leaving England during the reign of William and Mary. Maj. James Faulkner was born April 2, 1776, and served as a major of artillery in the War of 1812, and was in command of the fortifications and American forces that defeated the British at Craney Island, near Norfolk, Virginia. He was a merchant by occupation, and spent his last years in Martinsburg, where he died in 1817. Major Faulkner married in 1803 Sarah Mackey. Sarah Mackey, who died in 1808, was a daughter of Capt. William Mackey, who lived from 1758 to 1819, and his wife, Ruth Cromwell. Ruth Cromwell was the daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth (Murray) Cromwell. Elizabeth Murray, whose second husband was Samuel Chenoweth, was the daughter of Josephus Murray by his second wife, Ruth Hawkins. Josephus Murray was the son of James Murray, of Baltimore County, Maryland, and his wife, Jinima Morgan, who married secondly Thomas Cromwell. Jinima Morgan was the daughter of Captain Morgan. Capt. William Mackey commanded a regiment in the Revolution at the battle of Brandywine, was a member of the Order of Cincinnati, and his membership diploma is now in possession of his great-grandson, the oldest male descendant.

Charles James Faulkner was only two years of age when his mother died and about eleven at the death of his father. With no relatives in this county, he was reared among strangers. The village doctor gave him a home. At an early age he began the study of law under Chancellor Tucker at Winchester, and he was also a graduate of Georgetown University, near Washington. He was admitted to the bar in 1829, and almost from the first was accorded recognition in his profession and in politics. His first public effort was in behalf of the Constitution of 1830, and he led the campaign in his district for its adoption, where Tom Marshall was bitterly opposed to it. In the court Marshall had the advantage of wit and eloquence, but Mr. Faulkner by his industry secured for the constitutional large majority in Berkeley County. Two years after his admission to the bar, in 1832, he took his place in the Virginia House of Delegates. He was then a boy in age and appearance, but a man in mind. While in the Legislature he introduced a measure for the gradual abolition of slavery in Virginia, upon what was known the "post nati" principle, declaring that all children born of slave parents after July 1, 1840, should be free. The proposition was defeated and it was used against him the following year when he was a candidate for the Legislature, but he was re-elected by a unanimous vote. In 1833 he declined re-election and was appointed a commissioner on behalf of Virginia to examine and report on the disputed question of boundary line between Maryland and Virginia. He was successful in settling this dispute and won a clear title for Virginia. During the next fifteen years he applied himself steadily to his profession, and from his practice acquired a fortune. However, there were some interruptions even during this period of abstention from politics. In 1841 he was elected state senator, but resigned the following year. In 1843 he was an advocate of the annexation of Texas and in 1846 a warm supporter of the Mexican war. In 1848 he was elected to the House of Delegates, and during the following session he introduced a series of resolutions which were passed by the Legislature and transmitted to Congress, where the bill became the basis of the famous fugitive slave law passed by Congress in 1850. He was a member of the Convention for the revision of the State Constitution in 1850, and worked hard for the interest of Western Virginia, gaining for that section the position of the Council of States to which it was entitled. The compromise of 1850 changed the political affiliations of many men, and Mr. Faulkner drifted to the side of the Union and in 1851, when he was a candidate for re-election, this was an issue against him, but he won by a good majority. He was elected a member of Congress and in 1852 left to whig party, joining his political fortunes with the democrats, by whom he was re-elected, and served four successive terms, from December 1, 1851, until March 3, 1857. During his first term he delivered a speech in Congress entitled "The Compromise—The Presidency—Political Parties." This was a big effort in behalf of Franklin Pierce for the presidency, and more than 125,000 copies of it were printed and distributed. He also took to stump and carried his district for Pierce. He was an active opponent of the "know nothing" party and worked for the election of Buchanan in 1856. Buchanan on becoming president in 1857 offered Mr. Faulkner the position of Minister to France. But as he was in Congress and Hon. John Y. Mason, a personal friend, was then Minister to France, he declined in favor of Mr. Mason. On the death of Mr. Mason in 1859 Mr. Faulkner was nominated to fill his place and accepted. He was recalled in 1861 by President Lincoln, and on his return he was arrested and confined as a disloyal citizen. He demanded of the Sec-ry of War upon what charge he had been arrested and detained, and received the following message from Simon Cameron, secretary of war: "You are held as a distinguished citizen of Virginia, as a hostage for James Mcraw, State Treasurer of Pennsylvania, who while searching for the dead body of a friend on the battlefield of Bull Run was taken and thrown into prison by the people of your state now in rebellion against the authority of the government, and, so help me God, you shall never be released until James McGraw and his party are set at liberty and are safe." He was confined in Washington one month, then transferred to Fort Lafayette, and while there was offered his liberty if he would take the oath of allegiance to the United States. This he refused, saying that he had been guilty of no offense and that he would submit no conditions for his release. Soon after this he learned that McGraw of Pennsylvania had been set at liberty, and again wrote to the Secretary of War, whose answer was: "You are no longer in my custody. You have been transferred to the Secretary of State as a political prisoner." The charge against Mr. Faulkner now was that he had refused the oath of allegiance. Soon afterward he was removed to Fort Warren in Boston Harbor and finally as "exchanged" for a Mr. Ely of New York, a congressman who had been captured while a spectator at the Battle of Bull Run.

Though then nearly sixty years of age, and exempt by law from military service, as soon as he was released he entered the army as a member of the staff of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, ranking as senior adjutant general and lieutenant colonel. General Jackson referred to him as being of great service to him in the making of his reports. There were only twenty of these reports now in existence, and they were all written by Colonel Faulkner. During his absence in the war his old home was ordered to be burned by Gen. David Hunter, and an officer appeared to put the command into effect, giving the ladies of the household one hour in which to take their clothing and leave. During that hour Mrs. Faulkner sent a telegram of appeal to President Lincoln and received an answer in time to save her property. Some years after the war Colonel Faulkner has debarred the rights of citizenship on account of having borne arms against the Government, but in 1872 his political difficulties were removed. He was deeply interested in the affairs of the new State of West Virginia and exercised a powerful influence in favor of incorporating the two rich counties of Jefferson and Berkeley in the new state. He was the leading counsel for West Virginia in this matter when the case was argued before the Supreme Court of the United States in February, 1871, and decided in favor of West Virginia. He was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1872, and in 1874 was elected to Congress for the term which expired March 3, 1877. He declined re-election in order to become a candidate for the United States Senate, but was defeated in the Legislature by a combination of republicans with some of the democrats. Later he was mentioned as candidate for governor. His last years were spent in retirement, and he died November 1, 1884, at Boydville, West Virginia, and was buried with Masonic honors.

In 1833 Charles James Faulkner, Sr., married Mary Wagner Boyd, daughter of Gen. Elisha Boyd and Ann (Holmes) Boyd. Ann Holmes was the daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Hunter) Holmes. Joseph Holmes was a son of Hugh Holmes. Rebecca Hunter was the daughter of Paul Hunter, who was a son of William and Martha Hunter. William Hunter was a son of Andrew Hunter, of Cloghan farm in County Londonderry, Ireland, and was born in 1640 and died in 1733. He was a descendant of the Hunters of Ayrshire, Scotland.

CHARLES JAMES FAULKNER, distinguished son of a distinguished father, Charles James Faulkner, Sr., was born at Martinsburg, September 21, 1847. When he was about twelve years of age he accompanied his father when the latter went abroad as Minister to France, and while in Europe he attended schools in Paris and Switzerland until returning to America in 1861. Then, in his fifteenth year, he entered as a student the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington. When, during the desperate fighting in 1864 the little battalion of cadets was rushed into service and rendered such heroic assistance in the battle of New Market, there was no further talk of schooling, and from that time until the end of the war he was on duty first as an aide on the staff of Gen. John C. Breckenridge, and later on the staff of Gen. Henry A. Wise, and was with General Wise when Lee's army was surrendered at Appomattox. Following his return home after the war he studied under his father until October, 1866, and then entered the law department of the University of Virginia, graduating in June, 1868, and being admitted to the bar the following September, when he was just twenty-one years of age. Entering practice in his native town, he quickly justified the brilliant promise of his university career and his family prestige. He devoted himself with scarcely any interruptions to the general practice of law for twelve years before answering a call of public duty.

In 1880 he was elected and served a term of six years as judge of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia, composed of the counties of Jefferson, Morgan and Berkeley. In 1887, before he was forty years of age, but with reputation thoroughly established as an able lawyer and judge, he was elected to the United States Senate to succeed Johnson N. Camden. Though formally he was elected by the Legislature, he was in a peculiar sense the choice of a great majority of the people, who had unlimited confidence in the integrity as well as the intellectual strength of Judge Faulkner. He entered the Senate at a time when party feeling ran high, and speedily made a reputation as one of the strong men on the democratic side. He served with distinction for six years, and in 1893 was honored by re-election and was in the Senate until the beginning of 1899. During his second term his party was in the majority in the senate, and he was made chairman of the committee on territories. During the twelve years he was a member of many of the most important committees, including judiciary, appropriations, District of Columbia, Pacific railroads, territories, Indian depredations, claims and others. One of the great contests staged on the floor of the Senate and in which he took a leading part was the Blair Educational Bill, in which he organized and led the contest in the Senate against its passage, and was successful in securing its defeat. He was also the conspicuous figure in the filibuster used to defeat the iniquitous Force Bill. In that contest the late Senator Gorman of Maryland was floorleader of the democrats, and Senator Faulkner one of his ablest lieutenants. At the request of his party associates Senator Faulkner kept the floor, speaking from 10:00 P. M. on one evening until 10:00 A. M. of the next day as a necessary means of meeting a move of the republicans which would have forced a vote on the main question which, had it succeeded at the time, would have carried the bill.

After his retirement from the Senate in 1899 Senator Faulkner devoted his time to the practice of law, to his large agricultural interests in the Eastern Panhandle and on a number of occasions to important public affairs and interests. He is a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, a member of the American Society of International Law, the National Geographic Society, the Committee of One Hundred of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and a trustee of the Alumni Endowment Fund of the University of Virginia. In the democratic party he was permanent chairman of the Democratic State Convention of 1888, both temporary and permanent chairman of the Convention of 1892, and was chairman of the Congressional Committee in 1894, 1896 and 1898.

While he was in the Senate he was appointed in 1898 a member of the British-American Joint High Commission for the adjustment of differences in respect to the Dominion of Canada. Senator Faulkner enjoyed the distinctive honor of being chosen grand master of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia Masons in 1879. He was initiated into the society of The Ravens of the University of Virginia in 1909, and into the society of Phi Beta Kappa of Virginia, June 12, 1912. He is a member of the Metropolitan and Cosmos Clubs of Washington, the Delta Psi of the University of Virginia, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In November, 1869, he married Sallie Winn, daughter of John and Ann Winn, of Charlottesville, Virginia. She died in March, 1891, the mother of five children. On January 3, 1894, Senator Faulkner married Virginia Fairfax Whiting, daughter of H. C. and Martha Whiting, of Hampton, Virginia. There is one child by the second marriage.

ROBERT ALLEN ARMSTRONG has achieved many of the genuine honors and attainments of scholarship, but with them has gone a devoted service in the cause of education, social and intellectual ideals, so that it is not difficult to understand the appreciation and admiration given him throughout the State of West Virginia.

Doctor Armstrong, who for many years has been head of the English Department of West Virginia University, was born at Frenetown, Upshur County, West Virginia, September 23, 1860, son of Jared M. and Eliza (Bennett) Armstrong. His father was born in Highland County, Virginia, in 1814, son of John and Elizabeth (Wilson) Armstrong, who in 1840 moved over the mountains to Lewis County, now Upshur County, West Virginia. Jared Armstrong died in June, 1899. His wife, Eliza, was the daughter of David and Mary (Stuart) Bennett.

Robert A. Armstrong is an alumnus of West Virginia University, having graduated A. B. in 1886 and received his Master of Arts degree in 1889. From 1886 to 1893 he was principal of the West Liberty State Normal School. When he entered teaching he regarded it as a temporary vocation until he could qualify as a lawyer, and in 1890 he was admitted to the West Virginia bar, though it is probable he has never represented a single client. Since 1893 Doctor Armstrong's services have been with West Virginia University. He was professor of English from 1893 to 1901, was vice president of the university during 1897-99 and since 1901 has been professor of English language and literature and head of the English department since 1903. In 1921, during the summer term, he served as exchange professor of English in the University of Missouri.

Doctor Armstrong in the course of his career has utilized a number of vacation and absence periods for post-graduate study. He attended the University of Chicago in 1898, was a student in Columbian, now George Washington University, in 1900, and during 1902-03 was in Harvard University, where he received the Master of Arts degree in 1903. Allegheny College bestowed upon him the L. H. D. degree in 1908.

Doctor Armstrong has been chaplain of the university since 1910. Since 1886 he has been an instructor in Teachers Institutes of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. He was secretary of the West Virginia State Board of School Examiners from 1899 to 1909, was editor of the West Virginia School Journal from 1904 to 1921, was democratic nominee for state superintendent in 1900 and again in 1916, was a member of the West Virginia School Book Commission in 1917-22, was a member and president of the School Board of Morgantown Independent School District in 1912-17, was president of the West Virginia Sunday School Association in 1902, president of the West Virginia Educational Association in 1907-08, a delegate to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1900 and 1904, is president for 1921-22 of the local branch of the American Association of University Professors, and is a member of the National Educational Association and the Kappa Alpha and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities.

With all his other duties Doctor Armstrong has found time for original and constructive literary work. He is author of a Geography of West Virginia—supplement to the National Geography, published in 1899; Life out of Death, 1906; The Law of Service, 1907; Historical and Literary Outlines of the Bible, 1907; Dramatic Interpretations of Shakespeare's Tragedies, 1907; Mastering the Books of the Bible, 1916. He was editor of a volume of Eclectic English Classics, published in 1912, and has contributed many excellent articles to educational journals.

For six years he was in the military service of the state, being a captain in the National Guard from 1887 to 1889 and major of the First Regiment from 1889 to 1893, when he resigned. He is a Knight Templar Mason and Knight of Pythias.

December 28, 1900, Doctor Armstrong married Crieda Louise Dent, of Grafton. She died in 1903, leaving a daughter, Virginia Dent Armstrong, who was born in 1901. On June 11, 1914, Doctor Armstrong married Myrtle Shank, of Auburn, New York. They have three children: Roberta Jean, born in 1915; Barbara Allen, born in 1917; and Keith Stuart, born in 1919.

HON. FRANK COX. One of the native sons of Monongalia County whose private life and public career have reflected credit upon himself and upon his birthplace is Hon. Frank Cox of Morgantown, who has won prominence at the bar and on the bench and today is recognized as one of the ablest lawyers and fair-minded jurists in West Virginia.

Judge Cox was born on the old Cox homestead in Cantonsville, Monongalia County, West Virginia, June 18, 1826, a descendant of one of the old pioneer families of the county. This branch of the Cox family, which is of Scotch-Irish stock, was founded in Maryland about the middle of the eighteenth century by Abraham Cox, who was the American ancestor. From Maryland he came to Virginia and settled on 300 acres of Government land near Morgantown, and there spent the rest of his life. His son Moses, who was born near Harts-town, Maryland, in 1780, came with his parents to Monongalia County, and later located his home on Indian Creek in Grant District. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, was a justice of the peace and county sheriff, and died in 1861. He was twice married, first to Jane Musgrove, and second, to Mrs. Charlotte (McDermott) Foster.

Henry L. Cox, son of Moses and Charlotte (Foster) Cox and father of Judge Frank Cox, was born in Monongalia County, in 1836, and became a man of wide influence and worth. From Monongalia Academy he entered Waynesburg College, which he attended for two summers, in the meanwhile teaching school during the two winters in Grimes County, Pennsylvania. In 1867 Henry L. Cox was elected superintendent of the Monongalia County schools, was subsequently re-elected, and served in this office for fifteen years. He was active also in the political field and in 1880 was elected a member of the West Virginia Legislature and was returned in 1882. On February 28, 1861, he married Miss Elizabeth Matilda Boydston, a daughter of Boaz Boydston, of Greene County, Pennsylvania. Judge Cox was their only child.

In the class of 1853 Frank Cox was graduated from the University of West Virginia with the degree of LL. B., was admitted to the bar in the same year and immediately entered upon the practice of law at Morgantown. In 1883 he was elected prosecuting attorney and re-elected in 1900. He appointed George C. Baker of Morgantown his assistant, and in 1892 Mr. Baker succeeded Mr. Cox as prosecuting attorney, and he appointed Mr. Cox as his assistant. A law partnership had been formed in 1889, and this professional association has continued to the present, with the exception of the interim while Judge Cox served on the bench.

In 1904 Mr. Cox was elected judge of the Superior Court of Appeals of West Virginia, a position for which he was singularly well qualified, but in 1907 he resigned and resumed private practice at Morgantown. In numerous other capacities he has been equally prominent and trustworthy. He served as judge advocate general on the staff of Governor Atkinson, was a member of the West Virginia World's Fair Commission, and during the World War was active and influential both publicly and personally, serving as chairman of the Second Liberty Loan drive in Monongalia County, and giving generous assistance to all the local patriotic movements.

On March 5, 1855, Judge Cox was united in marriage with Miss Mattie J. Weaver, a daughter of George and Margaret Weaver. Judge and Mrs. Cox have two children, Stacy Rhey and Margaret Elizabeth. Stanley Rhey Cox was born March 23, 1889. He was graduated from the University of West Virginia, entered into the practice of law at Morgantown and subsequently was elected prosecuting attorney of Monongalia County, and since the expiration of his term, January 1, 1921, has engaged in private practice. Judge Cox's daughter, Margaret Elizabeth, was born June 15, 1898. She was educated in the University of West Virginia and in private schools, and is now the wife of Charles Burke Morris, Clarksburg, West Virginia. Judge Cox and family belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church at Morgantown, and he is a member of its Board of Trustees. For a number of years he has been a member of the School Board in this city and is president of the Board of Trade. He belongs to the Masons, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America.

Frank Cox

STANLEY RHEY COX. To interpret the law properly in all its complexities and to apply its provisions unerringly to establish human rights and defeat injustice demands such a comprehensive knowledge not only of books but of life itself that he who reaches a high plane in this profession must command more than negative consideration in the minds of his fellowmen. History evidences the fact that a kind of law has always been upheld by savage peoples, but when explained it resolves itself into the old axiom that "might makes right," and in modern, civilized life it becomes the task of the exponents of the law to overcome this only too prevalent idea. Hence, on a solid educational foundation must be built up a thorough knowledge of what law means to the present-day man, and how it can be applied to circumvent evil, protect the helpless and bring happiness and safety to the deserving. Of the members of the Monongalia County bar who possess the qualities necessary for the successful practice of their calling and the gaining of a place in public confidence and esteem, one who has made rapid strides during the comparatively few years that he has practiced law is Stanley Rhey Cox, of Morgantown. Mr. Cox comes naturally by his predilection for the law, being a son of Judge Frank Cox, of Morgantown.

Stanley R. Cox was born March 23, 1889, in Grant District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, and as a youth attended the public schools of Morgantown, being graduated from the high school with the class of 1907. He then entered the University of West Virginia, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1911, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts and following this took up the study of law in the law department of the University of West Virginia, being graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, class of 1912. Admitted to the bar of West Virginia during the same year, he entered practice at Morgantown in association with his father, and continued to be identified with the elder man until November, 1916, when the partnership was dissolved by the election of Mr. Cox to the office of prosecuting attorney of Monongalia County. He assumed the duties of that office January 1, 1917, for a term of four years, and when he retired from that office, December 31, 1920, resumed practice, this time alone. He has met with excellent success in his calling, has the names of a large number of important concerns on his books, and is held in general esteem by his clients as well as by his fellow-practitioners. Mr. Cox has applied himself almost exclusively to the duties of his profession, and has found little time for outside activities. However, he has not neglected the responsibilities of citizenship, and has shown himself fond of the companionship of his fellows by his membership in several social and fraternal bodies.

In 1912 Mr. Cox married Esther Jean Gilmore, daughter of S. W. Gilmore, of Battell District, Monongalia County, and to this union there have been born a son and a daughter: Frank G. and Elizabeth Jane.

ALBERT BLAKESLEE WHITE, who was governor of West Virginia from 1901 to 1905, exercised his first occupational choice in the newspaper business, and conferred distinction both on himself and his vocation during his long and arduous devotion to that calling. It was as a newspaper man that he came to West Virginia, locating at Parkersburg forty years ago, and virtually creating the State Journal as a newspaper of wide influence and a successful business institution. Governor White has the gift of versatility, and has succeeded in several fields to a degree that would satisfy the ambitions of most men who concentrate their energies along one particular line.

Governor White has behind him an American ancestry dating back nearly three centuries, and there have been many men of great distinction in the various branches. Governor White stands in the ninth generation of the American family. The first American of the family was Thomas White, who was born in Ireland in 1599, was a lawyer by profession, settled at Weymouth, Massachusetts, in 1632, was prominent in the affairs of that colony, and died in 1679. Joseph White was born at Weymouth in 1635, was known as Captain Joseph, and died at Mendon, Massachusetts, in 1706. Thomas White was born at Mendon in 1665. Deacon Samuel White was born at Uxbridge, Massachusetts, in 1700. Capt. Paul White was born at Uxbridge in 1744, and died at Douglass, Massachusetts, in 1796. Calvin White was born August 30, 1771, and died August 31, 1838, and about 1800 moved to Ware, Massachusetts. Jonas White, born November 18, 1795, founded this branch of the family in the West, being an early settler of the Ohio Western Reserve, where he followed farming. He died in Portage County, Ohio, August 29, 1876. In 1819 he married Sarah McGregory, and they were the grandparents of Governor A. B. White.

Emerson Ellbridge White, son of Jonas and Sarah White, gave his life to the cause of education, and his name and achievements are permanently associated with the history of educational development in Ohio and in fact in the nation. He was born January 10, 1829, at Mantua, Portage County, and died at Columbus, Ohio, October 21, 1902. He was educated in common schools and academies, and for several years was a student of Cleveland University. He was a teacher and principal in the Cleveland public schools, was superintendent of schools at Portsmouth, Ohio, and in 1861 moved to Columbus and for fifteen years conducted the Ohio Educational Monthly, which he made one of the foremost educational journals in the country. In connection he also published the National Teacher for several years. He was appointed state commissioner of the common schools of Ohio in 1863, and during his three years in that office was instrumental in securing the laws establishing a teachers' institute system in Ohio, also created a State Board of Examiners and required more adequate qualifications for teachers. In 1876 Doctor White was called to the presidency of Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana. He was president seven years, increased the attendance more than sevenfold, and laid the foundation for the broad educational program of Purdue, which for many years has ranked as one of the foremost technical and professional universities in the country. In 1886 Doctor White was appointed superintendent of schools for Cincinnati, and served two terms. In 1891 he returned to Columbus, where he continued his literary labors. An entire generation of school children recall his name in connection with the text book White's Arithmetic, and he was the author of a number of other works on pedagogy and school management.

To quote a paragraph from his biography, "He was often styled 'the grand old man' of the educational profession. Scholarly, accurate in speech and writing, a man of philosophical force, professional devotion and experience, he reaped well deserved honors. In 1863 he was president of the Ohio Teachers' Association, in 1868 of the National Superintendents' Association, and of the National Educational Association in 1872, also of the National Council of Education in 1884 and 1885. He was the mover, in 1866, in a paper read before the National Superintendents' Association in Washington, for the formation of a national bureau of education, and he framed the bill which created it. In the study of educational work and in lecturing Doctor White traveled extensively. He was lecturing at Asbury Park, New Jersey, when he was taken with his last sickness. In the Presbyterian Church he was for nearly fifty years a ruling elder, and for many years he was president of the Board of Trustees of Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati. He was an earnest church worker, and sometimes lectured on moral and religious subjects, these lectures being, like his educational works, of unusual excellence."

July 26, 1853, at Hudson, Ohio, Emerson E. White married Mary Ann Sabin, who was born in Cuyahoga County, Ohio, October 15, 1827, and died July 19, 1901. She was a daughter of Henry W. and Clarissa (Church) Sabin, and was in the eighth generation from William Sabin, a French Huguenot who went to England and settled at Rehoboth, Massachusetts, in 1643.

Albert Blakeslee White, son of Dr. Emerson Elbridge and Mary Ann (Sabin) White, was born at Cleveland, Ohio, September 22, 1856. His journalistic experience began at the age of fourteen, while he was private secretary to his father, then publishing the Ohio Educational Monthly and the National Teacher. Governor White graduated as valedictorian of the class of 1878 from Marietta College, Ohio. He then returned to the home of his father at Lafayette, Indiana and became a third owner of the Daily Journal of Lafayette. For three years he was managing editor. Largely on account of the adverse influence of the climate on his health Mr. White gave up a promising career in Indiana and in December, 1881, purchased the State Journal of Parkersburg, West Virginia. This was then a weekly, printed on a hand press, and in making a real newspaper Mr. White showed to good advantage his abilities as a journalist as well as a business executive, though in the light of his subsequent career it ranks as one of his minor achievements. In July, 1883, with Mr. S. B. Baker as his partner, he began publishing the State Journal as a daily, and thus broadened the power and influence of a paper that for many years ranked as one of the first in West Virginia. It was a republican paper, and through its columns Mr. White first exercised a potent influence in West Virginia politics and in developing the majority party in the state. Governor White was identified with the fortunes of the State Journal nearly twenty years, selling his interest in June, 1899. He served at one time as president of the West Virginia Press Association, and in 1887 was elected president of the National Editorial Association.

For many years Governor White has been prominent in banking and manufacturing at Parkersburg. After he left the office of governor he helped organize and became vice president and agency director of the Southern States Mutual Life Insurance Company of Charleston, now the George Washington Life Insurance Company. He is still vice president of the present company. He resigned as agency director of the life insurance company in the spring of 1907, and in April of that year entered upon his duties as state tax commissioner, serving until December 31, 1908. In July, 1909, he was elected president and cashier of the Parkersburg Banking & Trust Company, now known as the Commercial Banking & Trust Company. He resigned his presidency in 1914 in order to give his entire time and attention to the Parkersburg Ice and Coal Company. He has also been president of the Briar Mountain Coal Company, vice president of the Ohio Valley Bending Company, a Parkersburg corporation, president of the Parkersburg Chair Company, and interested in many other industrial and banking corporations.

In the opinion of his friends and associates few men have so great a capacity for work as Governor White. To express his talents in some form of useful service is undoubtedly his chief ambition, since the accumulation of wealth has apparently not been one of his chief incentives. A man of such initiative, tremendous energy, actuated by a public spirited disinterestedness, is the class of citizen best fitted to adorn a public office and perform its functions. His first important public office was as collector of internal revenue for the District of West Virginia. On the walls of his office at Parkersburg, Governor White has three framed certificates, one signed by Benjamin Harrison, the second by William McKinley and the third by Warren G. Harding, each document being an appointment as internal revenue collector of West Virginia. His first four year term began in July, 1889, the second in July, 1897, and in May, 1921, he was nominated by President Harding and commissioned internal revenue collector for the District of West Virginia.

In July, 1900, Mr. White was unanimously nominated by the republican party for governor, and in the following November he was given the largest majority ever given a candidate for the governorship up to this time, approximately twenty thousand. He was governor of West Virginia from March 4, 1901, to March 4, 1905. His was a businesslike, systematic and efficient administration, but its outstanding feature was the remedying of long standing abuses and inequalities of the state tax laws. The first substantial reform in these old laws was made by the Legislature of 1901, followed in 1904 by the enactment of a system of tax laws and the creation of the office of state tax commissioner. As noted above, Governor White two years after leaving the office of governor accepted appointment as state tax commissioner, serving about eighteen months.

In 1916 Governor White was candidate in the primary for United States senator, but the honor went by a small margin to the present senator, Howard Sutherland. Governor White in 1918 was accepted upon physical examination as a Y. M. C. A. war worker overseas, and in the fall of 1918 sailed for France, where he was in service about six months. While overseas he supervised the construction of a rest area at Ancey, one of the largest and best equipped Y. M. C. A. rest areas in France. He held the position of division secretary.

Governor White is as deeply interested in political problems and in politics today as at any time in his bus career. He has probably made more political address on behalf of his party than any other individual in West Virginia. For thirty-eight years he has been exceptionally active in every biennial campaign.

Governor White is prominent in Masonry, and in 191 was one of the organizers of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine and was the third potentate of that Temple. He has attended the Imperial Council for ten years and in 1921, at Des Moines, was elected a life member of the Imperial Council, entitled to all the rights and privilege thereof. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Parkersburg.

At Marietta, Ohio, October 2, 1879, he married Agnes Ward, daughter of William Skinner and Catherine (Clark) Ward, of Marietta. She is a descendant in the eight generation from William Ward, who was on record as freeman at Sudbury, Massachusetts, in 1643. Mrs. White is a member of the Colonial Dames and the Daughter of the American Revolution. Her Revolutionary ancestor was Gen. Artemas Ward. Her grandfather, Nahum Ward, settled at Marietta, Ohio, in 1811.

Governor and Mrs. White have five children, Katherine Vaughan, Ethel Sabin, Grace Rolston, Ward Emerson and Albert Blakeslee, Jr., all of whom are living.

WILLIAM ELI BAKER. For a quarter of a century on of the leading lawyers of Randolph County, William E. Baker had the distinction of being the first Federal judge appointed by President Harding. He was selected by the new President as judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of West Virginia, and his appointment was confirmed by the Senate and he entered upon his duties on the bench on April 3, 1921, less than a month after the President was inaugurated. Judge Baker brought to the bench the qualifications and experience of a long and successful practice and a record of prominent participation in the republican politics of the state. He retains his home at Elkins, and that is one of the five cities in the Northern District in which he holds session of the Federal Court.

Judge Baker was born at Beverly in Randolph County, February 25, 1873, son of Eli and Margaret Ellen (Sexton) Baker, and a grandson of Isaac and Maria (Stalnaker) Baker. Isaac Baker was a native of old Virginia, was an early settler in what is now Randolph County, and followed the trade of saddler at Beverly. His wife, Maria Stalnaker, was born in Randolph County. Her father, Adam Stalnaker, Jr., was a native of the same county and was led by the Indians. Eli Baker, father of Judge Baker, was born in Randolph County, December 31, 1835, was a farmer and merchant, served for twenty-four years as postmaster at Beverly, and lived there until his death on October 12, 1898. He was twice married. His first wife, Rebecca Sexton, became the mother of a daughter, Jessie. He then married his first wife's sister, Margaret Ellen Sexton, who was born in Upshur County, West Virginia, January 14, 1848, and died at Beverly April 21, 1916. Her father, William Sexton, was a New Englander and a pioneer in Upshur County. She was mother of the following children: William Eli, Charles C., George C., Anna and Randolph. The last named died in infancy, but the other children are still living.

The family of Judge Baker in both lines represents sturdy stock, of patriotic ideals and a long record of participation in the republican party. His mother was a Presbyterian, and reared her children in the same faith. William Eli Baker spent his early life at Beverly, and left his home there until 1900, when the county seat of Randolph County was transferred to Elkins. Judge Baker, transferring his own residence in the same year. He acquired his early education in private schools at Beverly, and he was one of four boys who was favored with special permission to attend the Randolph Female Seminary at Beverly. In 1890, when he was seventeen years of age, he was the eighth young man to register as a student in what was then the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and entered that institution at its opening and graduated in the class of 1893, in the scientific course. From there he entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, and graduated with the Bachelor of Arts and Law degrees in 1896. Judge Baker was admitted to the bar at Beverly in 1896, and practiced there until 1900.

The year he was admitted to the bar he was nominated for the republican ticket as candidate for county prosecuting attorney. Randolph County then had a normal democratic majority of 1,200, but his democratic rival that year had to be satisfied with a margin of only fifty-one votes. Judge Baker was a skilled campaigner, had been interested in politics for several years, and his father had also in his time been an able man in local politics. However, after this campaign Judge Baker applied himself assiduously to the practice of law, and had built up a reputation as an able lawyer before he again became a candidate for office. His father was not a wealthy man and had helped the son through college at considerable sacrifice. The son had repaid this aid by hard work and rigid economy in completing his college career, and he began practice as a lawyer with a view to establishing himself professionally before he could take up any of the side lines and side issues of the law.

About the time he removed to Elkins Judge Baker was retained as counsel by the Elkins and Davis interests, and for years, in fact until he went on the bench, he represented those interests and was also closely associated with United States Senators Elkins and Davis. He was a valuable supporter of Senator Elkins in his aspirations for reelection to the United States Senate. In 1912 Judge Baker again expected the nomination of his party for prosecuting attorney, and again had about the same majority to overcome, and this time was defeated by only thirty-seven votes. In 1920 he was prevailed upon to become state chairman of the republican party, and he took a very prominent part in the campaign that year and for four months spent practically all his time in the national campaign headquarters at Chicago.

Judge Baker is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner. In 1906 he married Martha R. Davidson at Evansville, Indiana. She was born and reared in that Southern Indiana city, daughter of William and Elizabeth Davidson. Her father was for years a prominent citizen and manufacturer at Evansville. The only child of Judge and Mrs. Baker is Miss Janet.

LUTHER SAMSON BROCK, M. D., has been closely identified with the history of the City of Morgantown for upwards of half a century, during which time he has won success and prominence both in the profession of medicine and in business circles, and is today recognized as one of the leaders in the public affairs of the community, as well as one of the worthwhile men of West Virginia.

Doctor Brock was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, December 19, 1844, a son of Fletcher and Rachel Stephenson Brock. This branch of the Brock family is descended from Burbridge Brock, who came to America from England, settling in New Jersey in the middle of the seventeenth century. His son William, who was born in New Jersey in 1760, married Margaret Dunn, and brought his family to the borderland of Virginia, where he settled on land lying on each side of the "Mason and Dixon Line" in Pennsylvania and Virginia (now West Virginia). Fletcher Brock, son of William and father of Dr. Luther S. Brock, was born in Virginia May 5, 1807. He built his home practically upon the spot where he was born, on land touching and overlapping the "Mason and Dixon Line," and became a prominent citizen of his section. While his business was in Virginia, his home was in Pennsylvania and he was always a citizen of the Keystone State, which he represented in the Legislature. In 1829 he was united in marriage with Miss Rachel Stephenson, of Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, and four sons and five daughters were born to them, two of the sons dying in infancy. Of the five daughters, three are now living: Mrs. Cynthia B. Glenn and Mrs. Harriet B. Showalter of Kansas City, Missouri, and Miss Martha Brock of Morgantown.

Living on the border line between the states of Pennsylvania and Virginia (now West Virginia), Luther S. Brock attended the free schools of Pennsylvania and the subscription schools of Virginia. At the age of fourteen he entered the Monongalia Academy at Morgantown, an institution of very high grade and standing, where he completed the full classical course. He read medicine under the preceptorship of his brother, Dr. Hugh Workman Brock, who after the death of their father had taken upon himself the care and education of his younger brother and sisters. After his graduation from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, in 1874, Dr. Luther S. Brock entered the general practice of medicine in partnership with his brother, Dr. Hugh Workman Brock, a distinguished physician and surgeon of Morgantown, an association which was terminated by the death of the latter in 1882. Since the above year he has been a senior member of the firm of Brock and Wade of Morgantown, the junior member being Dr. Spencer S. Wade. During the more active years of Dr. Brock's professional labors his practice extended over a broad area of surrounding country, often reaching beyond the borders of the neighboring states.

For a number of the years Dr. Brock served as a member of the United States Board of Examining Surgeons, and under the administrations of Governor A. B. Fleming and Governor William E. Glasscock, served as a member of the State Board of Health of West Virginia. He likewise was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Fairmont Miners' Hospital, in the locating of which institution he was largely instrumental. He also served as president of the West Virginia State Medical Society, and was one of the founders of the Monongalia County Medical Society, and for several years was its president. He is still a member of these societies and of the American Medical Association. He served for at least fifteen years as a member of the Morgantown School Board, and still retains a keen interest in educational affairs. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has been for many years one of its trustees.

Doctor Brock has been one of the Board of Directors and vice-president of the Bank of the Monongahela Valley since its organization in 1888, and is now its president. He was one of the founders of the Morgantown Brick Company, and has been its vice-president since its organization.

In 1891 Dr. Brock was united in marriage with Miss Agnes Lauck, daughter of Rev. William and Sarah (Benny) Lauck, of Beaver, Pennsylvania, and to their union two daughters and one son have been born: Rachel Stephenson, who is deceased; Eleanor, who has won national distinction as a singer; and Robert Luther, a graduate of the West Virginia University, who served during the World War with the rank of lieutenant, and is now married and living in Morgantown.

ROBERT LUTHER BROCK, son of the well-known physician and banker, Dr. Luther S. Brock, is an interesting example of the vigorous young American who loses no time after leaving college to connect himself with the important responsibilities of business. Mr. Brock is treasurer of the Mon-Scott Fuel Company and treasurer of the Sesame Coal Company of Morgantown.

He was born at Morgantown May 26, 1896, attended city schools, graduating from high school in 1914, and then entered the West Virginia University. He was a student there when the World war came on, and in June, 1917, he joined the West Virginia National Guard, and later attended the Third Officers Training Camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. He was commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry and from Fort Oglethorpe was sent with other officers to Camp Gordon, Georgia, thence to Camp Pike at Little Rock, Arkansas, and subsequently, to secure a better prospect of getting overseas, joined the Tank Corps at Camp Polk, Raleigh, North Carolina. He was assigned to duty with the Three Hundred and Fifth Battalion of the Tank Corps. Orders came for the embarkation overseas only a few days before the signing of the armistice. Mr. Brock received his honorable discharge at Camp Polk on January 8, 1919.

After returning to Morgantown Mr. Brock resumed his work in the university, was granted his A. B. degree in 1920, and continued a student in the law department, but after a year abandoned these studies to enter business. He was one of the organizers of the two coal corporations of which he is treasurer, and is now giving his full time to the executive responsibilities of this business.

Mr. Brock is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity, the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, and Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. May 25, 1921, he married Miss Esther Bair, a native of Greensburg, Pennsylvania, and daughter of Edward H. and Esther Bair.

GEORGE JACKSON ROGERS has been a Wheeling lawyer for the past twenty years, with an extensive civil practice. He belongs to a family of lawyers, his father having been one of the prominent members of the West Virginia bar.

The grandfather of George J. Rogers was Alexander Rogers, who was born at Newry, County Armagh, Ireland, in 1801. He came to America when a young man, about 1830, settled at Wheeling, and was prominent in business, at first as a merchant tailor and later as owner and operator of an iron foundry. He died at Wheeling January 5, 1887. After coming to Wheeling he married, in 1836, Miss Elizabeth Johnston, who was born at Wheeling September 28, 1815, and died in that city February 24, 1897. Of her five children three reached mature years: James P. Rogers; Margaret Johnston, wife of Frederick H. Lange, who is president of the Home Outfitting Company at Wheeling and manager of the Alexander Rogers estate; and Thomas Johnston Rogers, who died at Wheeling in 1864, at the age of twenty-four. Elizabeth Johnston, the mother of these children, was a daughter of Thomas Johnston, who became identified with the Village of Wheeling about 1798 and was one of the leading merchants of the town in early times. He died at Wheeling in 1849. Thomas Johnston married Miss Mehlin, who was born in Harrison County, Ohio, and died at Wheeling.

James Patterson Rogers, who was born at Wheeling April 29, 1838, spent all his life in his native city, graduated A. B. from Jefferson College at Cannonsburg, and for about forty years was engaged in an extensive law practice. He was one of the leaders in the democratic party, and shortly after the Civil war served as prosecuting attorney. He was Municipal Court judge in 1874-75, and always after that was known as Judge Rogers. He died at Wheeling January 24, 1904. He was one of the founders of St. Luke's Episcopal Church at Wheeling, and was senior warden from 1881 until his death. He also belonged to the Masonic fraternity. Judge Rogers married Martha Joanna Jackson, who is still living in Wheeling. She was born at Cedarville, Ohio, January 9, 1850. George Jackson Rogers is her oldest child. Elizabeth Johnston Rogers is the wife of James W. Ewing, a Wheeling lawyer. Ladora Kerr Rogers is the wife of Newton Waltz, who is engaged in the carriage and automobile manufacturing business at Wheeling. Minerva Townsley Rogers, the youngest child, died in April, 1882, at the age of seventeen months.

George Jackson Rogers was born at Wheeling March 1876. He acquired a public school education at Wheeling, graduated in 1894 from Linsly Institute, and was major of a battalion of cadets while in the institute. With its preparation he entered the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, graduating A. B. in 1897, and did his law work at Harvard University, graduating LL. B. in 1901. Since then he has been steadily engaged in the practice of law at Wheeling, and has confined his attention to civil cases and has almost altogether an office practice. His offices are in the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building. Mr. Rogers is a member of the Ohio County Bar Association, is a vestman in St. Luke's Episcopal Church and votes as a democrat. At Bellefontaine, Ohio, September 11, 1912, he married Miss Clara E. West, daughter of John E. and Eleanor (Johnson) West, residents of Bellefontaine, where his father is one of the leading lawyers of his district. Mr. Rogers is a graduate with the A. B. degree from Wooster University of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have four children: Elizabeth Johnston, born July 15, 1913; John West, born December 2, 1914; James Patterson, born November 6, 1916; and Eleanor Johnson, born December 1920.

WILBERT S. MILLER is president of The Wheeling Real Estate Company. This is an organization amply financed and with a number of years' record of successful handling of both large and small properties, city and agricultural, with number of large transactions to its credit in the transfer of industrial properties. It is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Real Estate Board. Mr. Miller is a member of the Lions Club.

He represents some of the prominent land holding families of Eastern Ohio. His great-grandfather, Daniel Miller was born in Maryland in 1788, and was eighteen years of age when his parents came west and settled in Harrison County in 1806. The Millers acquired Government land. Daniel Miller married Susanah Lowmiller, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1796 and was four years of age when her parents, John and Katherine Lowmiller, settled in Harrison County. John Miller, grandfather of Wilbert S. Miller, was born in Harrison County February 22, 1818; grew up under pioneer conditions and was a prosperous and well-to-do farmer of the county. He was especially active in the affairs of Harrison County, and held the office of county commissioner. In 1849 he married Susan Mikes representing another old family of Harrison County, where she was born in 1824. John Miller and wife had nine children, and seven of them are still living: Oscar B., a resident of Ironton, Ohio, and one of the oldest teachers in the state, both in length of service and in age; Andrew Miller; Rev. Daniel D., a Lutheran minister at Smithville, Pennsylvania; Joseph, a farmer in Hancock County, West Virginia; Samuel H., formerly professor of science at The College in Pennsylvania, now in the insurance business; Clement E., who operates the homestead farm in Harrison County; and Rev. Andrew B. Miller, father of Wilbert S., is still active a farmer in Harrison County, where he was born December 9, 1852. He had a good education in public and normal schools and for half a century has devoted his time to grain and stock farming. He has been a life-long democrat and a leader in the Lutheran Church. Her parents live on their farm in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Miller studied music in Philadelphia and finished her musical education in the Dana Institute at Warren, Ohio, and she and Mr. Miller were married in the latter city. They have two children: Frank R., born April 14, 1920, and Flora Margaretta, born September 18, 1921.

JOEL E. MOSS has become one of the most influential industrial leaders in Wheeling within a comparatively few years. He has developed one of the principal industries of the city, the J. E. Moss Iron Works, of which he is president. While this is his main business, he is interested in a number of financial and industrial organizations, and at all times has kept in close touch with the civic welfare.

Mr. Moss was born in New York City January 19, 1887. His father, Julius Moss, was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1852, and was reared in his native country, where he learned the trade of ornamental iron worker. About 1875 he came to the United States, and for a number of years followed the trade in New York City, where eventually he became superintendent of the Prince & Kinkel Iron Works. In 1895 he moved to Wheeling, and organized and started the Architectural Iron & Wire Works, a business he conducted by himself until 1900, after which for two years his brother-in-law, E. A. Reich, was his partner. Two years later Julius Moss retired, and he died at St. Louis in 1904. He was a democrat in his political affiliations, was a member of the Eoff Street Temple and was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Ancient Order of United Workmen. He married Celia Reich, who was born in Austria in 1860, and died at Wheeling in 1912, she having come to the United States with her mother when a girl. Julius and Celia Moss had seven children. The oldest, Julius, is an advertising manager in the theatrical business at Chicago; Jerome A. is a general contractor at Chicago; Joel E. is the third; Edward A. is a steel contractor at Cleveland; Miss Rosa is engaged in a social service work at Cleveland; Jeannette is the wife of Samuel Orenstein, in the bakery business at Steubenville, Ohio; Miss Sarah Leah is a teacher in the kindergarten department of the Cleveland public schools.

JOEL E. MOSS was eight years of age when the family moved to Wheeling. He first attended school in New York City, and was a pupil in the Wheeling High School until 1901. By home study through the International Correspondence School of Scranton he perfected his technical knowledge of structural engineering. While thus studying he was doing practical work as an employee of the Architectural Iron and Wire Works until July, 1910, and he then engaged in business for himself as a contractor and quickly had an extensive business involving contracts all over the state. After a year he started a small shop on Eighteenth Street as an auxiliary to his contracting business, this shop employing only ten men at the beginning. Within a year the quarters were outgrown, and in 1913 he secured a piece of ground on Twenty-eighth Street and built a modern plant, while the following year he bought the plant of the Architectural Iron & Wire Works. This is the industry now known as the J. E. Moss Iron Works, and by subsequent extensions the plant now covers six acres of ground and employs 500 men. The annual business is in excess of $2,500,000. This plant is equipped for the manufacture of structural and ornamental steel products of all kinds and these products are shipped all over the country. The plant and officers are at Twenty-eighth and Chapline streets.

While this is a business constituting heavy cares and responsibilities for Mr. Moss, he is also a director in the Quarter Savings & Trust Company of Wheeling, the Wheeling Axle Company, the North Wheeling Glass Bottle Company, and is president of the Compo Tile Fire Proofing Company. He is a director in the Industrial Relations Association of Wheeling, a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and his counsel is sought in all matters affecting the industrial welfare. He is a republican, a member of the Eoff Street Temple, is a past president of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and is affiliated with Nelson Lodge No. 30, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, Osiria Temple of the Mystic Shrine and Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E. Mr. Moss owns considerable improved real estate in Wheeling, including his modern home on Hilltop, overlooking the Pike District, where he has a modern country home. On September 14, 1914, at Ashtabula, Ohio, he married Miss Sarah Thomas, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Thomas, residents of Wheeling, where her father is foreman of the La Belle Mill of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company. Mr. and Mrs. Moss have four children: Joel Kenneth, born October 13, 1915; Jerome Leo, born February 15, 1918; Cecil Reich, born August 23, 1919; and Jay Eea, born on Mr. Moss' birthday, January 19, 1922.

EDWARD SAMUEL BIPPUS, M. D., has been engaged in his steadily broadening service as a physician and surgeon for the past fifteen years. Doctor Bippus is also a member of the city council.

He was born across the river at Bellaire, Ohio, November 26, 1884, son of Christian Bippus, who was born in Strassburg, Germany, in 1826, and at the age of seventeen came to the United States and settled at Bellaire. He was a stationary engineer by trade, and several of his sons have followed the same occupation. A republican in politics, he was twelve years a valuable member of the school board of Bellaire and was closely identified in membership with the Presbyterian Church. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Christian Bippus died at Bellaire in 1902. He married Sophia Fauple, who was born in Essen, Germany, in 1838, and is still living, at the age of eighty-three, in Bellaire. She came to this country with her parents at the age of thirteen and was reared and educated in Cumberland, Maryland. The children of Christian Bippus and wife are: Catherine, wife of Frank Rieley, a retired lumber dealer at St. Paul, Minnesota; William, president of the Joyce Cridland Company at Dayton, Ohio; George and Jesse T., stationary engineers, the former at McMechen, West Virginia, and the latter of Bellaire; Harry T. is also a stationary engineer at Bellaire; Howard is proprietor of the Bryan Bippus Boiler Works at Bellaire; and Edward Samuel is the seventh and the youngest, and the only one of the children to take up a professional career.

He acquired a public school education in his native city, attended high school there, completed the work of the sophomore year in Franklin College at Franklin, Ohio, and in 1902 graduated in the pharmacy course from Scio College. Without making use to any important extent of his profession as a pharmacist Doctor Bippus soon afterward entered the Ohio Medical College, which he attended two years, and in 1906 received his M. D. degree from the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore. He is a member of the Phi Chi college fraternity.

On graduating in 1906 Doctor Bippus located at Wheeling, and has since been engaged in general practice. His offices and home are at 77 Sixteenth Street. In 1910, at Wheeling, Doctor Bippus married Miss Margaret Beckett, daughter of John and Margaret (Young) Beckett, the latter still living at Wheeling, where the father died. He was a wagon maker by trade. Mrs. Bippus finished her education in the Sweetbriar College of Virginia. Four children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Bippus; William, born in 1911; Margaret Jane, born in 1914; Helen Catherine, born in 1917; and Edward S., born in November, 1920.

HARRY SHAW, a prominent and successful member of the bar of Marion County, is established in the practice of his profession at Fairmont, the county seat, and is one of the liberal and progressive citizens of this city. He was born on a farm in Union District, this county, on the 15th of February, 1872, and is a son of Joshua and Emily (West) Shaw, the former of whom was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1829, and the latter in what is now Marion County, West Virginia, in 1834, her parents, Zacheus M. and Sarah (Layman) West, having been early settlers in this county. Joshua Shaw, whose death occurred at Fairmont in 1910, was a son of Samuel Shaw, who was of Scotch and English lineage and who was a pioneer settler in Western Pennsylvania, whence he came with his family to Marion County, West Virginia (then Virginia), when his son Joshua was a boy. Joshua Shaw was a carpenter by trade, and was also actively identified with farm industry in Marion County for many years. He served three years as a loyal soldier of the Union in the Civil war as a member of Company F, Twelfth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He was wounded while participating in the battle of Winchester, Virginia, was captured by the enemy and was held a captive in historic old Libby Prison about four months. He was a stalwart republican, served as a member of the County Court of Marion County, and for forty years he held the office of justice of the peace. Both he and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On the old home farm which was the place of his birth Harry Shaw was reared to the age of fourteen years, his educational advantages in the meanwhile having been those of the rural schools. At the age noted he became a clerk in the general store conducted by his older brother at Homestead, Pennsylvania, and there he continued his studies in the public schools. Later he was a student in Duquesne College at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, after which he attended the West Virginia State Normal School at Fairmont, for two years. Thereafter he made a record of successful work as a teacher in the rural schools of his native county and in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. In 1893 Mr. Shaw entered the University of West Virginia, from the law department of which he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws in the year 1895, also receiving in 1898 the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He was admitted to the bar in 1895, and he served his professional novitiate by obtaining desk room in the offices of Judge William S. Haymond, of Fairmont, against whom, it is interesting to record, he appeared as the unsuccessful candidate for judge of the Circuit Court in the election of 1912. He gradually and surely extended the scope and importance of his law practice, and from 1901 to 1905 he was chief clerk of the Lower House of the West Virginia Legislature. In 1896 and again in 1904, he was the republican nominee for the office of prosecuting attorney of Marion County, and in 1912, as previously noted, he was a candidate for judge of the Circuit Court. In that year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and a member of the Committee on Credentials which had to consider the Roosevelt-Taft contests. During the administration of Governor Dawson he served as a member of the State Prison Board of West Virginia. In the World war period Mr. Shaw was most zealous in patriotic service, and he was one of the vigorous "Four-Minute Men" in delivering speeches in furtherance of the Government war loans. In the campaign for the first Liberty Loan he stood in front of the Marion County Court House on a Sunday morning in a downfall of rain and sold bonds to the amount of $36,000, and in the final bond campaign, from the vantage place of the proverbial soap-box, in front of the courthouse he sold bonds to the amount of $100,000 in twenty-five minutes, making a virtually unequaled record in both instances. He also helped to put them "over the top" in every section of the county. Mr. Shaw is a member of the American Bar Association, the West Virginia Bar Association and the Marion County Bar Association. His law business has long been one of substantial and representative order. He is a member of the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Protestant Church at Fairmont, and has been several times a delegate to the annual conference of his church in West Virginia, as well as to two of its general conferences. He had the distinction also of being a delegate to the fifth Methodist Ecumenical Conference held in London, England, September 6-16, 1921.

October 10, 1896, recorded the marriage of Mr. Shaw and Miss Willa M. Berry, who was born and reared in Marion County, a daughter of Thomas L. and Nancy L. (Ross) Berry. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Shaw is a son, Victor Harry, who was born in 1897, and who was graduated from the University of West Virginia as a member of the class of 1922.

EDWARD A. ARKLE. Beginning when he was about eighteen years of age and soon after leaving school, the almost continuous experience and service of Edward A. Arkle has been represented by work in the newspaper and publicity profession. Mr. Arkle is proprietor of the Wheeling News and Advertising Bureau, and has earned for himself a place of exceptional esteem in his native city.

He was born at Wheeling June 10, 1876. His grandfather, Robert Vincent Arkle was born in England in 1818, and was an early settler in the country around Wheeling and also lived at Wheeling for many years, being a merchant there. He died in 1888. Robert V. Arkle, father of Edward A., was born in Ohio County and died at Wheeling at the age of forty-seven. He lived at Wheeling practically all his life, and for many years was a merchant. He also served a number of years as assistant chief of the fire department under the late Chief James Dunning. He was a member of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and was noted as a tenor soloist and was director of the church choir. He was a democrat in politics and was affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Robert V. Arkle married Miss Barbara Anne Habig, a native and life-long resident of Wheeling. Their children were: Joseph M., who succeeded to his father's hardware business and died at Wheeling aged forty-seven; Harry V., who for many years was editor of the Wheeling Register, died at Wheeling also aged forty-seven; Miss Ella, who died at the age of twenty-two; Robert A., a jeweler with John Harry Shaw.

Becker & Company and a resident of Warwood; Edward A.; and Vincent J., who was a jeweler and died at Wheeling at the age of thirty-seven.

Edward A. Arkle attended the parochial and public schools, graduating from the public schools in 1894. His first journalistic experience was acquired with the Wheeling Intelligencer, where he served what might be termed his apprenticeship for three years. Later he was one of the organizers of the Wheeling Telegraph, and was city editor three years. He was a member of the staff of the Wheeling News three years, and then went back to the Telegraph as editor until 1918. For about a year Mr. Arkle was news editor for the Wheeling Majority. Then, in 1919, he established the Wheeling News and Advertising Bureau, of which he is sole proprietor. He has facilities for every class of publicity work and advertising, one feature being a newspaper clipping bureau. His offices are in the Mutual Bank Building. Mr. Arkle is also secretary of the Terminal Storage Company of Wheeling. He is a democrat, a Catholic, and is affiliated with Reliance Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Lions Club. His home is on Avenue A, Edgdale, Wheeling. During the war he responded to all the demands and performed some useful service as a member of the several publicity committees.

In 1908, at Wheeling, Mr. Arkle married Miss Helen H. Perkins, daughter of Benjamin F. and Sarah Elizabeth (Eglington) Perkins, residents of Wheeling. Her father is a general contractor and is president of the Terminal Storage Company. Mr. and Mrs. Arkle have one son, Benjamin F., born in July, 1909.

FRANK C. KIRKPATRICK, of Wheeling, is one of the vigorous and successful exponents of the oil-producing industry in this state. He was born at Parkersburg, West Virginia, August 14, 1873, and is a son of Columbus B. and Lucy B. (Oakes) Kirkpatrick, both natives of Belpre Township, Washington County, Ohio, where the former was born in 1838 and the latter in 1839. The father of Columbus B. Kirkpatrick was born in one of the New England states, in 1805, became a cabinetmaker by trade and was one of the pioneer settlers of Belpre Township, Washington County, Ohio, where he remained until his death in 1885. His wife, whose family name was Cole, was born and reared in that township, and there she died at a venerable age. She was the author of a very popular book of poems pertaining to the Civil war, in which struggle she lost three of her sons, including Mortimer and Henry. The original American progenitors of the Kirkpatrick family came from the north of Ireland and settled in New England in the Colonial period of our national history.

Columbus B. Kirkpatrick was reared and educated in his native township, where his marriage was solemnized, and shortly after the close of the Civil war he established his home at Parkersburg, West Virginia, where for several years he gave his attention to contracting and building. His ambition led him to devote much of his leisure hours to the study of architecture, and he became a successful architect at Parkersburg. In the '70s he drew plans for an addition to the first West Virginia State Hospital for the Insane at Weston, these plans being accepted. In 1879, while supervising construction on this addition to the hospital, he fell from one of the higher points of the building, and so injured his spine and brain that he was confined from that year until 1881 in a private institution at Dixmont, Pennsylvania. He was then returned to the institution he had designed, and there he remained until his death, at the Weston Hospital for the Insane, February 27, 1917. Mr. Kirkpatrick was a man of fine mind and moral fiber, and gained high place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow men, so that the tragedy of his life brought sorrow to a host of loyal friends as well as to his immediate family. He was a democrat, served many consecutive terms as a member of the city council of Parkersburg, was a Knight Templar Mason and was an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Kirkpatrick was a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war as a member of an Ohio regiment of volunteer infantry. His wife continued to reside at Parkersburg until her death, February 18, 1916. Charles R., eldest of their children, became a skilled machinist and molder, and died at Parkersburg in 1912; Estella is the wife of Dennis Flint, a business man at Parkersburg; George has active charge of the Baptist Banner, a newspaper published at Parkersburg; Frank C., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Belle is the wife of Bernard Cannon, foreman in extensive glass works in the City of Cleveland, Ohio; and Josephine is the wife of James Whittaker, superintendent of a foundry at Orville, that state.

Frank C. Kirkpatrick attended the public schools of Parkersburg until he was fifteen years old, when he entered the employ of a merchant tailor in that city. Three years later he entered the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, where he completed a thorough course of study. In 1892 he took a position in the office of the Adams Express Company at Parkersburg, and in October of the year 1894 he entered the employ of the Ohio River Railroad Company, the line of which is now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio system. He continued in the train service of the railroad until 1916, with headquarters at Parkersburg, and then was granted a furlough of indefinite length, owing to his seriously impaired health. In the same year he became an oil producer in Pleasants County, this state, where he still retains his interests in this line. Mr. Kirkpatrick has visited virtually all important oil fields in the United States, and he is now vice president and general manager of the Southland Oil Company of West Virginia. He also holds under lease 1,000 acres of very valuable oil land in Simpson County, Kentucky. He maintains his office headquarters in the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company Building.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is independent in politics, he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in the Masonic fraternity his basic affiliation is with Kenova Lodge No. 110, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Kenova, this state. At Wheeling he is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of Masonry in West Virginia Sovereign Consistory No. 1. He is affiliated also with the Lodge of Elks in the City of Huntington and with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

June 12, 1912, at Wheeling, recorded the marriage of Mr. Kirkpatrick and Miss Ione M. Cassidy, daughter of Isaac and Clara (Lawrence) Cassidy, the former of whom died at Wheeling in 1913, and the latter now resides in Washington, District of Columbia. Mr. and Mrs. Kirkpatrick have no children of their own, but in their home have reared from the age of six years Grace, a sister of Mrs. Kirkpatrick, she being now a member of the class of 1923 in the Wheeling High School.

JOHN A. MOORE is a native son of the City of Wheeling and has become an influential figure in the industrial and commercial life of this metropolitan District of West Virginia, where he is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Warwood Tool Company. The modern manufacturing plant is established in the suburb of Warwood.

Mr. Moore is a scion of one of the sterling pioneer families of Wheeling, in which city his father, James B. Moore, was born in the year 1838 and died in 1907. William Moore, great-grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in the north of Ireland, came to the United States in the early part of the nineteenth century, resided for a time in Western Pennsylvania, and thereafter became a pioneer settler in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, where he passed the remainder of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Purviance, likewise was born in the north of Ireland, and she was a resident of Wheeling West Virginia, at the time her death, her remains being interred in a cemetery here.

John Moore, grandfather of him whose name initiates this review, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1810, and died at Wheeling, West Virginia (then Virginia), in 1860. He came to Wheeling about the year 1827, learned the plumbing trade, and owned the leading plumbing shop of the town in the early days. He established the first water-works of Wheeling, and continued as superintendent of the same a number of years. In the '30s and '40s he served as steamboat inspector, and later he became the owner of a machine shop, to the conducting of which he gave his attention until his death. He married Sarah Irwin, who was born at Wheeling, and they reared a family of two sons and three daughters, of whom only one is living in 1921—Elizabeth Irwin, who is the widow of Rev. J. R. Moore and who resides at Morgantown, Monongalia County. Rev. J. R. Moore a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, attained distinction in educational work in West Virginia. As a young man he was a member of the faculty of Linsly Institute at Wheeling, and later conducted the Monongalia Academy at Morgantown, from which was eventually developed the University of West Virginia.

Mrs. Sarah (Irwin) Moore, paternal grandmother of the subject of this sketch, was a daughter of William Irwin, who settled at Wheeling when the future metropolis and capital of West Virginia had only thirty houses. He was born in what is now Harrison County, this state, and was one of the incorporators of the village of Wheeling, besides which he served as a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, as representative of Ohio County, in what is now West Virginia. He was prominent and influential in connection with business, civic and political affairs in this section of Virginia in the pioneer days. He reared a large family of children, and many of his descendants still reside in Wheeling and vicinity. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Snodgrass, was a daughter of John Snodgrass, who came to Ohio County in the pioneer days and settled in the Short Creek District where he reclaimed and developed a farm. He came to this county from the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. His daughter Elizabeth was born on this old homestead on Short Creek, and both she and her husband were residents of Wheeling at the time of their deaths.

James B. Moore, who passed his entire life in Wheeling, was a skilled mechanical draftsman and was actively associated with business activities in his native city for many years. He was a republican, and he and his wife were zealous members of the Presbyterian Church. He served as a member of the State Militia in the period of the Civil war, but was not called to the front. He married Louisa S. Craig, who was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, in 1840, and whose death occurred at Wheeling in 1910. Of the children John A., of this review, is the elder, and the younger son, J. Craig Moore, is in the employ of the Warwood Tool Company, of which his brother is general manager.

In the public schools of Wheeling John A. Moore continued his studies until he was seventeen years old, and then entered the employ of J. A. Holliday & Son, lumber dealers, with whom he remained until 1893. He then became associated with the Warwood Tool Company in the position of bookkeeper, and he has continued his connection with this concern to the present time, in the meanwhile having become its secretary, treasurer and general manager. The plant and offices of the company are situated at the foot of Nineteenth Street in Warwood, and here are manufactured picks, mattocks, hoes, wedges, sledges, crowbars, dills and other tools used in coal mines. The concern is one of the largest of its kind in the state, its products are sold in all sections of the Union, and for fully a quarter of a century its foreign trade has been of appreciable volume. The officers of the company are as here designated: B. W. Peterson, president; and John A. Moore, secretary, treasurer and general manager.

Mr. Moore is staunchly aligned in the ranks of the republican party, and he is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is a past master of Wheeling Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is affiliated also with Wheeling Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; Cyrene Commandery No. 7, Knights Templars, of which he is a past commander; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in which he has received the thirty-second degree; and Osiris Temple of the Mystical Shrine. He also holds membership in Welcome Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Fort Henry Club and the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce. He is treasurer and general manager of the Warwood Water & Light Company. In the World war period he was a loyal and vigorous supporter of patriotic agencies, was chairman of the till industry committee for war production and devoted much of his time and energy to the perfecting of this important part of war service. Mr. Moore's name remains on the roster of eligible bachelors in his native city.

JOHN MARSHALL JACOBS has shown much initiative and administrative ability in connection with business enterprises of important order, and is one of the most loyal and progressive citizens of Fairmont, judicial center of Marion County. He was born near Pleasant Valley in Clinton District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, July 16, 1860, and is a son of Jacob and Mary (Steele) Jacob, the former of whom was born near the Summers Church, Clinton District, Monongalia County, January 18, 1818, and the latter of whom was born in the same district, August 2, 1834, a daughter of John and Nancy (Mills) Steele. Mrs. Jacobs still survives her honored husband and resides in the home of her son Charles, a few miles distant from the place of her birth, her entire life having been passed in Clinton District and she being now one of the most venerable native citizens, at the age of eighty-eight years.

Jacob Jacobs, a son of Elijah and Mary Jacobs, was reared under the conditions marking the pioneer period of the history of Monongalia County, and he was a representative of farm enterprise in that county at the outbreak of the Civil war. He served as a soldier of the Union from August, 1862 until the close of the war, his honorable discharge having been received at Wheeling, West Virginia, July 3, 1865. He took part in many engagements, including the battles of Cloyd Mountain, Lynchburg, Carter Farm, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek, and all of the battle of General Sheridan's army in the historic Shenandoah Valley campaign. He was well advanced in years at the time of his death.

John M. Jacobs gained his early education in the public schools of his native county, and among his instructors were E. Trickett and M. H. Steele, who were among the first graduates of the State Normal School at Fairmont and also Dr. Fleming Howell, A. L. Purinton and W. J. Joliffe, of the University of West Virginia. Mr. Jacob has often maintained that through the effective teaching of these able instructors and splendid men he may well claim to be a graduate, by their proxy, of both of the institutions mentioned. From 1879 to 1884 Mr. Jacob was a successful teacher in the public schools of Monoi alia County. In the latter year he engaged in the mercantile business at Little Falls, that county, as junior member of the firm of Hutchinson & Jacobs. He there continued as a prosperous merchant, besides being postmaster and railroad station agent, until 1895, in which year he removed with his family to Fairmont, where he became manager of the Fairmont Planing Mill Company. He is now president of the Fairmont Mold & Foundry Company, of which his son Melville is treasurer. He is also manager of the Jacobs-Hutchinson Hardware Company, of which his son Melville is assistant manager and his daughter Jessie is bookkeeper; he is treasurer of the Stevenson Company; and is a director of the National Bank of Fairmont. He is an active and valued member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, of which he has served as president, and was director of each the Fairmont Hotel Company, the Fairmont Business Men's Association and the local Young Men's Christian Association, besides which he was vice president of the Cook Hospital and of the Greater Fairmont Investment Company. He was a member of the building committee of the Young Men's Christian Association and also of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, in connection with the erection of two of the finest buildings of their respective denominations in this section of the state, while few cities of the size in the entire state can claim better buildings than his church edifice and the Young Men's Christian Association Building in Fairmont. Mr. Jacobs and his family were the largest single contributors to the building fund of this church, of which all are active members. Mr. Jacobs was active in the recent Billy Sunday religious campaign in Fairmont, and is a member of the Billy Sunday Business Men's Club, which is doing good work in his part of West Virginia. In the World War period Mr. Jacobs served on the Draft Board of the City of Fairmont, and he received in this connection a selective service medal, of which he is very proud. He places high estimate also on a letter written to the Local Draft Board by President Wilson and General Crowder, in which the members of the board were specially commended for the splendid work which they did, and that without financial compensation, in behalf of the National Army which acquitted itself so admirably in the greatest of all wars. Mr. Jacobs was liberal and active also in supporting other patriotic activities and service during the war period. He is a staunch republican, and in recent campaigns has made many speeches in behalf of the party cause, principally in Marion County. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 14th of April, 1883, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jacobs and Miss Mary Alice Selby, daughter of Thomas P. and Salina E. Selby. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs have three children, all of whom were born at Little Falls, Monongalia County. A. Melville was born January 17, 1889; Edna May was born May 21, 1891; and Jessie O. was born February 14, 1893. All three were graduated from the Fairmont High School and the State Normal School at Fairmont, and the only son graduated from the University of West Virginia as a member of the class of 1910, he having there given special study to history under the preceptorship of Professor Callahan.

Mr. Jacobs' civic loyalty and stewardship found excellent expression in his service as a member of the house of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature in 1907 and in the special session of 1908. He did much to further effective legislation of constructive order, and was influential in the work of the various house committees to which he was assigned, including some of the most important of that body.

LEE C. PAULL. As an underwriter of insurance in virtually all lines except that of life, Mr. Paull owns and controls what is undoubtedly the most important agency of its kind in his native city of Wheeling, his insurance business having been so expanded that it now extends into sixteen different states of the Union, and its general offices occupy the entire building at 1136-38-40 Chapline Street.

Mr. Paull was born at Wheeling on the 12th of May, 1889, and is a son of Alfred and Lee (Singleton) Paull, both likewise natives of Wheeling, where the former was born October 17, 1854, and the latter in June, 1856. The Paull family has been one of prominence and influence for many years in what is now the State of West Virginia. James Paull, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born at Wheeling, became one of the most distinguished members of the bar of Virginia, of which West Virginia was still a part, and after the forming of the new state he served many years as a judge of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. The closing years of his life were passed at Wellsburg, Brooke County.

Alfred Paull has long been one of the leading insurance men in Wheeling, where he is now state agent for a number of the prominent fire-insurance companies of the country, with offices in the Court Theater Building. He is a republican in politics, and he and his wife are honored members of the Vance Memorial Presbyterian Church, in which he is serving as an elder. Mr. Paull is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and is a citizen of prominence and influence in his native city, where he is vice president of the Bank of the Ohio Valley. Of the children of Alfred and Lee (Singleton) Paull the eldest is Mary I., wife of A. G. Hubbard, a retired manufacturer of Wheeling; Lydie is the wife of L. B. Kirkpatrick, a representative real-estate broker in the City of Rochester, New York; Alfred S. is associated with his father in the insurance business at Wheeling.

Lee C. Paull is indebted to the public schools and the Linsly Institute of Wheeling for his earlier education, which was continued in the Pennsylvania Military College, at Chester. After leaving the latter institution he was a student in Princeton University, New Jersey, until he had partially completed the work of his sophomore year. He left the university in 1907, and for one year thereafter was associated with his father's insurance business. He then became identified with the insurance business conducted by Maj. D. E. Stalnaker, and this alliance continued until the death of Major Stalnaker in July, 1913, when he purchased the business of the deceased and assumed full control of the same. He has since continued the enterprise with unqualified success, with a large and representative clientele.

Mr. Paull takes loyal interest in all that concerns the civic and material well being of his native city, is a republican in politics and holds membership in the Vance Memorial Presbyterian Church. He is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Fort Henry Club, of which he is a director. He is a director also of the University Club and is a member of the Wheeling Country Club. In the realm of business he is a director of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company; is vice president of the Liberty Transit Company of Wheeling; is vice president of the Camden Coal Land Company of this city; a director of the Arizona Mossback Mines Company in the State of Arizona, and a director of the McClaskey Company, incorporated, of Wheeling. He owns his attractive residence property in the beautiful Highland Park District of Wheeling, and also the building in which his insurance offices are established.

April 6, 1910, recorded the marriage of Mr. Paull and Miss Mary Glessner, daughter of the late William L. Glessner, who was one of the principals of the Whitaker-Glessner Company of Wheeling. Mrs. Paull received excellent educational advantages, including those of the Campbell-Hagerman Seminary in the City of Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Paull have two children: Lee C., Jr., who was born December 10, 1911, and William Glessner, who was born January 10, 1915.

JOHN B. GARDEN is the only survivor in Wheeling of the group of Wheeling business men who started the pioneer enterprise of the Wheeling Electric Company nearly forty years ago. For nearly twenty years the Wheeling Electric Company was an individual and independent organization, supplying electricity for commercial use in the Wheeling District. With the rapidly increasing use of electricity it became impossible for a company supported by local capital to keep pace with the requirements, and about that time the Wheeling Electric Company merged into a great corporation known as the American Gas and Electric Company, with headquarters in New York City. The public utilities owned and operated by this corporation cover a large section of the Middle West. The Wheeling District embraces many of the cities and industrial towns on both sides of the Ohio River, and Mr. Garden is general manager for this district. There was recently completed at an expense of over $10,000,000 one of the largest electric generating plants in the country at Beech Bottom, some miles above Wheeling, and this plant, with its steam turbine generators, represents practically the last word in a continuous electrical development that has been going on at Wheeling and vicinity for nearly forty years, and in which Mr. Garden has had an uninterrupted participation.

Mr. Garden was born at Wheeling February 27, 1860, son of Alexander T. and Mary M. (Bankard) Garden and grandson of David Garden, a native of Scotland, who settled at Wheeling as early as 1816. He was a tanner, and he established and operated a tannery at North Wheeling until 1858. He then returned to his farm at Glen's Run, above Wheeling, where he died in 1886, at the age of sixty-five. Alexander T. Garden, his son, also became a tanner, and was associated with his father's industry for many years. Alexander T. Garden, as well as his son John B., was also associated with the establishment of the Wheeling Electric Company during the '80s. His home was in Wheeling from about 1870, and at one time he was a member of the city council.

The mother of John B. Garden was Mary Bankard, who was born May 24, 1834, and died May 24, 1902. Her father, James Bankard was of the firm Stackton, Bankard & Company, window glass manufacturers, owning and operating one of the first glass factories in Wheeling. Mary Bankard was educated in Wheeling and was married to Mr. Garden in 1852. Her three children were: Mrs. John M. Sweeney, John B. Garden and David A. Garden. The latter for a number of years was with the Whitaker-Glessner Company, and is now living in St. Louis, Missouri.

John B. Garden acquired a public school and business college education, and as a young man became absorbed in the progress of electrical development, which at that time had hardly extended to any practical or commercial purposes. A few years later he became an associate with his father and with A. J. Sweeney and John M. Sweeney in installing a small plant to furnish electricity for electric lighting at Wheeling. This plant was installed in the shop of A. J. Sweeney & Son on Twelfth Street, opposite the Hotel Windsor. Sufficient electricity was generated for about forty lights, used at first in stores only. About two years later the incandescent system of lighting came into use, and the men in the company secured an old skating rink at Twenty-second and Chapline for a larger plant. Wheeling was the fifth city in the United States to use alternating machines. Here a 650 light machine was installed. Gradually the original capital of $15,000 was extended to $20,000, but the dividends were paid on the stock for ten years. All the increasing capital and surplus was reinvested in equipment, and after several years a new location was bought at Thirty-sixth Street and McCulloch Avenue. The facilities there sufficed only twelve years, and the next location was at Forty-second and Water streets, where a building was provided five times as large as that at Thirty-sixth Street, yet in three years' time it was too small. Then in 1915, a large tract of ground eleven miles above Wheeling, at Beech Bottom, was purchased, the selection of the site being due to the combination of an adequate water supply with an inexhaustible supply of coal for fuel.

It should also be noted that Mr. Garden and his associates in the Wheeling Electric Company put in operation the first electrically operated cars at Wheeling, and this was also a pioneering work, since there were only a few cities in the entire country with electric transportation.

Mr. Garden served some years as a member of the Wheeling Board of Education, a member of the Board of Trade, the Second United Presbyterian Church, and is a director in the Community Savings Bank.

June 17, 1885, he married Miss Mary Ralston Sweeney, daughter of Andrew James and Maria Elizabeth (Linn) Sweeney. A review of the life of Andrew J. Sweeney and his family is given on other pages. Mrs. Garden formerly has been one of West Virginia's most prominent club women, and she is now president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. She is also prominent in the Daughters of the American Revolution, having served as regent of the Wheeling Chapter; and she is active in other organizations. Mr. and Mrs. Garden have two children, George Alan, a graduate of West Virginia University and a Wheeling attorney, and Gertrude, who was one of the West Virginia delegates sent by the General Federation of Women's Clubs to France during the World war. She is the wife of L. H. Throp.

ANDREW J. SWEENEY. The family of which the late A. J. Sweeney was in some respects the most conspicuous representative has for nearly a century been identified with the manufacturing, industrial, civic and cultural affairs of the Upper Ohio Valley.

Thomas Sweeney, father of Andrew J., came to Wheeling from Pittsburgh in 1830. Thomas Sweeney was a native of Ireland. He married Rosanna Mathews, of Pittsburgh, who was the mother of the following children: Andrew J., Rebecca, Thomas Campbell and Robert H. At Wheeling he bought the shops and property of the North Wheeling Manufacturing Company, and with his brothers and sons he continued this industry until about 1874, being succeeded by his son A. J. Sweeney. This industrial enterprise comprised a period of half a century manufactured a large and varied line, consisting of engines, mill machinery, foundry castings and also steamboats. Andrew J. Sweeney was admitted to a partnership in the firm in 1858. He in turn, in 1874 took in his son, John M. Sweeney. The industry was gradually broadened after the accession of Andrew J. Sweeney to full control in 1875, extending to the manufacture of rolling mill, steamboat and other machinery and also agricultural machinery and implements.

Andrew J. Sweeney was born at Pittsburgh, January 1, 1827, and died February 14, 1893. He was not only a unusually vigorous and successful industrial leader, but also a Wheeling's most devoted citizens, and held the office of mayor for a longer time than any other one man. He was first appointed to fill an unexpired term in 1855. He was elected in the years 1861, 1862, 1865, 1867 and 1875 and served from the latter year until 1881. He was a colonel of militia during the Civil war, in addition to being held in the municipal government. In 1876 President Grant appointed him commissioner for West Virginia to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. He was also appointed in 1873, by President Grant, as a commissioner to the Vienna Exposition and in 1878 to the French Exposition at Paris. He was prominent in all the Masonic bodies at Wheeling.

Two quotations from Wheeling papers at the time of his death will indicate some of the other qualities in this man of genius. "Colonel Sweeney was an inventor of no small renown, a number of valuable patents having been granted him and his intimacy with all forms of machinery and his knowledge of applied mechanics was second to no man in this community. A proverbial hard worker, it was almost his invariable custom to close a day of toil as grimy as the humblest man in his employ, and it was conceded that even at his age few men could stand more hours of labor unaided. For a generation he was intimately connected with all that went to benefit this community, and all such improvements as to street railway, the electric lighting company, the paid fire department, the fire alarm telegraph, and the many new bridges and shipping facilities found in Colonel Sweeney a staunch and powerful friend.

"In his career Mr. Sweeney saw many vicissitudes politically, in the country's history and in a business way, and no man was ever more equal to an emergency than he. Some of his official acts will long be remembered to his credit, as they showed promptness, courage and intelligence as well as independence. Many people yet remember the stormy scenes one night in 1879 when he was mayor of the city and the Pittsburgh, Wheeling & Kentucky Railroad Company was granted the right of way for its Benwood extension. The Baltimore & Ohio Company opposed, and, realizing that increased facilities were for the city's good, Mr. Sweeney with customary decision of character threw the whole force of his authority in favor of carrying out the rights granted by the city and personally supervised the all night work of laying the 'Pevky' track."

In 1848 Andrew J. Sweeney married Mary R. Moore. Her father was John Moore, for many years superintendent of the city waterworks and at one time head of the machine shop of John Moore & Company, an industry that became amalgamated with the industrial interests of the Sweeneys. Mrs. Mary Sweeney died in 1860, at the age of thirty years. She was the mother of four children. The oldest, John M., for a number of years associated with his father as a steamboat builder, also interested in the Wheeling Electric Company and associated with the building and operation of Wheeling's first electric street car, has had a long and prominent career as a mechanical engineer, lived for many years in Chicago, was an expert engineer for the Government during the World war, located at Pensacola, Florida, and is now living retired at Los Angeles. He married Miss Julia Garden, a sister of John B. Garden of Wheeling. The second child, Nellie B., had a wide reputation as a vocalist in concert work, and died at Washington City, widow of David Palmer. Miss Rose M. Sweeney, the third child, also cultivated the family gift for music to a degree of high excellence, was a student abroad at London and Paris, was at one time dean of the College for Women at Richmond, Virginia, and later assistant dean at Lindenwood College at St. Charles, Missouri, and at West Virginia University at Morgantown. The youngest child of Andrew J. Sweeney's first marriage was the late Andrew Thomas Sweeney, who died September 18, 1918, shortly after completing four years of consecutive service as sheriff of Ohio County. He had also been mayor of Wheeling six years, married Kate B. Lukens, who with their one daughter, Eleanor M., survive.

In 1861 Col. A. J. Sweeney married Maria E. Hanna, who died at Wheeling October 8, 1909. She was born at Cadiz, Ohio, in 1838, daughter of Rev. Thomas Hanna, a prominent minister and for many years pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at Cadiz. Mrs. Sweeney was a devoted member of the same faith, and at the time of her death was active in the Second Church at Wheeling and had served as president of the Women's Missionary Society of the Wheeling Presbytery. Her mother was a daughter of Robert Patterson and a descendant of the historic Van Meter family which made the first settlement near West Liberty, West Virginia, about 1763, building Fort Van Meter four miles from West Liberty.

Mrs. Maria Elizabeth Sweeney was the mother of nine children, and six of them survive her. The oldest is Mary R., who is Mrs. John B. Garden of Wheeling. (See J. B. Garden's sketch on other pages.) Sarah Patterson, who has gained distinction in musical circles, is the wife of Charles O. Roemer of Cumberland, Maryland. They have two children, Andrew S. and Dorothy D. William H. Sweeney, who is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College and Virginia University, is associated with the Duquesne Light and Power Company of Pittsburgh and is a director of an orchestra in that city. He married Miss Mullen, of Wisconsin, and has four children, Frank M., Marian E., Mary A. and Virginia M. Frank B. Sweeney is in the telephone business at Los Angeles, California. He married Elizabeth Vorhees, of New Jersey. Col. Walter C. Sweeney is the military figure of the family, served in the Spanish American war, in the Philippines and in the Regular Army, was an American officer in France, was decorated by both the French and American governments, received special mention by the British Government, and is now stationed at Boston. He married Anne E. McConnell, a daughter of N. W. McConnell, of Helena, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney have three children, Elizabeth J., Anice E. and Walter C. The youngest of the family is James Edgar Sweeney, who is chief clerk of the Laughlin plant of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company. He lives at Wheeling, and married Stella, daughter of Capt. John H. Crawford. They have one daughter, Mary Elizabeth.

WILLIAM M. DUNLAP, who has been for half a century actively identified with the handling of real estate and whose operations in West Virginia have been of broad scope and importance, maintains his residence at West Alexander, Pennsylvania, near the West Virginia line, and his long and worthy association with affairs in the latter state justify his special recognition in this publication.

In an historic way it may be recorded that James Curtis took up one of the first three farms in Ohio County, West Virginia, as now constituted, he having come here in 1773, in company with James Hardesty and James Morgan, whose names became associated with the other two pioneer farms. The old Curtis homestead farm is in the center of Liberty District, on Buffalo Creek, and the property remained in the possession of the Curtis family until about 1900. Salathiel, a son of James the pioneer, became one of the early lawyers of this section, when members of the bar rode the circuit in their professional work. He resided on the old home farm and was one of the leading men of his day in this section of West Virginia. He had marked ability, and was the author of a book of poems and also a book of music. He died in 1868, when about eighty-eight years of age. He was one in a family of ten children, all born on the old homestead, and all except one of the number lived to pass the age of eight years, John, an enterprising farmer, having been ninety-six years of age at the time of his death. James Curtis was a great hunter and well equipped for the hardships of pioneer life on the frontier. After settling in what is now Ohio County he went forth as a patriot soldier in the Revolution from Frederick County, Maryland. He became the owner of about 400 acres of land in Ohio County. His son John lived and died on the ancestral homestead, and was about ninety-three years old at the time of his death. Joseph, another son, died when about eighty, he having been a large landholder. James, another son, went to Jacksonville, Illinois. The daughter, Ruth Eliza, was born in 1812, on the old homestead, and as a young woman she became the wife of Samuel Dunlap, who was born on an adjoining farm in 1801, a son of William Dunlap, who with four of his brothers came to this locality from Martinsburg, Virginia. Joseph Dunlap, one of the brothers, later went to Indiana; another brother went to Peoria County, Illinois; and Salathiel Dunlap established his home at Mount Pleasant, Ohio. Another brother settled in Kentucky. William Dunlap died about 1851, and of his four sons it may be recorded that James went to Crawford County, Ohio, and was a resident of Columbus, that state, at the time of his death; Mason, who died at West Liberty, Ohio County, aided in establishing the old academy at that place, where he also built the large hotel which he conducted until his death; Samuel remained in Ohio County until his death; William resided at West Liberty and died in 1883, at the age of eighty-two years, his wife having died three years previously. Samuel Dunlap was the owner of the Pleasant Hill Nurseries, which he made one of the best in this section. The Curtis men were old-time Virginia democrats, and the Dunlaps were originally whigs and later republicans. Early representatives of the Dunlap family owned slaves, but set them free prior to the Civil war, "Aunt Polly," one of the number, being well remembered by old settlers in Ohio County. Of the nine children of Samuel Dunlap eight attained to maturity; Virginia died at the age of twenty years; Eugene died in 1913, at Washington, Pennsylvania, where he had served a number of years as county recorder; William M., to whom this sketch is dedicated, was the next in order of birth; Emma became the wife of Lewis B. Morgan; Florence O. married Cambell Rice and after several years of pioneer experience in Nebraska they returned to Wheeling; Matilda is the wife of Samuel Ullum and resides at Wheeling; Eudora is the wife of Calvin Hare and lives at Wheeling; Frank died in infancy; John was a merchant at Claysville, Pennsylvania, where he died in 1916.

William M. Dunlap was a boy when he earned his first five dollars by mowing eight acres of hay with a scythe.

At the age of sixteen years he went forth as a soldier in the Civil war. He enlisted in Company D, Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, under Captain William B. Curtis, who later became colonel of the regiment and still later brigade commander in the Second Division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps. Mr. Dunlap's company made an enviable record, and of the 300 medals issued by Congress in the war period three were gained by members of this company. Mr. Dunlap first served under General Milroy in the Valley of Virginia, and he took part in many engagements in the course of his loyal service as a gallant young soldier of the Union. After the war he studied law at home, his admission to the bar, at Wheeling, having occurred November 2, 1870. In 1871-2 he had an office in Wheeling, West Virginia, and in the latter part of 1872 was on the home farm. He continued in the practice of law for a number of years, mainly in Ohio and adjoining counties. He has ever been a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, and has long been affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. He has dealt extensively in coal lands throughout West Virginia, as well as in Pennsylvania and Ohio. He gave fourteen years to the handling of 6,000 acres in the Wheeling District, and he paid a total of $26,000 in options on this property before he sold it. He is now engaged in coal operations on a tract of 600 acres, but has been primarily a dealer in coal lands rather than a coal operator. He has maintained his residence at West Alexander, Pennsylvania, since 1897. As administrator and executor he has settled many estates, and in his extensive real-estate operations, involving millions of dollars within his fifty years of activity, none of his clients have lost a cent through his interposition, the result being that his reputation has ever been unassailable. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church in his home village.

Mr. Dunlap's first wife, who was Harriet Hare, of Washington County, Pennsylvania, continued as his devoted companion and helpmeet for twenty-three years, when the gracious ties were severed by her death. They had six children: Herbert E. is a representative member of the Wheeling bar and a patent attorney in this city; Olive D., widow of John Wallace, resides at Woodlawn, a suburb of Wheeling; Charles E. has a position in the office of the Wheeling Steel & Iron Company; John H. is engaged in the undertaking business at West Alexander; Amy C. is a professional nurse employed in the Ohio Valley General Hospital at Wheeling; and Alverda L. is employed in the X-ray department of that institution. For his second wife Mr. Dunlap married Mary Yates, who died ten years later, leaving no children. His present wife, whose maiden name was Mary E. Truesdell, is a daughter of Joel Truesdell, who was a prominent merchant at West Alexander.

WALTER KENNETH BARNES, one of the younger members of the bar of his native city and county, was born at Fairmont, Marion County, on April 6, 1891, and is a scion in the fifth generation of the Barnes family in what is now Marion County. Mr. Barnes is a descendant of William Barnes, who came to this section from George's Creek, Maryland, some time prior to 1782 and settled on the Tygart's Valley River, near where the City Pump Station of the City of Fairmont is now located. There William Barnes, one of the pioneers of this section, built one of the first water mills in this locality, and followed his trade of millwright. For several generations the land originally occupied by this William Barnes, together with a large part of the land now known as Pleasant Valley, were owned and occupied by the Barnes family and their connections. Abraham Barnes, the eighth son of William Barnes, was born in 1782 at the Pleasant Valley home of William Barnes. He married Mary Ann Hall, daughter of Jordan Hall, of Pleasant Valley. Among their children was Peter T. Barnes, born September 3, 1828. During his young manhood he was a teacher, but later engaged in the mercantile and milling business, he together with his brother, Thomas H. Barnes, owning and operating the Palatine Mills near Water Street of Palatine (now Fairmont) for several years. March 11, 1852, Peter T. Barnes married Mary Vandervort Martin, a widow, to which union several children were born, one of them being James Walter Barnes, born September 3, 1862.

J. Walter Barnes, the father of the subject of this sketch, engaged in teaching during his early manhood. In 1882-3 he studied law at the University of Virginia, and in September, 1883, he was admitted to the bar of Marion County. He practiced law at Fairmont until 1885, when he accepted a position as teacher in the Fairmont State Normal School, and in 1892 he was made president of this institution, in which capacity he served until 1901. In 1902 Mr. Barnes became general manager of the Consolidated Telephone Company, and made it one of the strongest independent telephone companies in the country. He retained his connection with this company until it was absorbed by the Bell System in 1915. From 1914 to 1919 Mr. Barnes was commissioner of finance and public utilities of the City of Fairmont, being one of the four city commissioners in charge of the governmental affairs of the City of Fairmont. During the World War he served as Federal fuel administrator for the State of West Virginia, having charge of the enforcement of the orders and rulings of the Federal fuel administrator within the state. In March, 1920, Mr. Barnes was appointed by Governor Cornwell, a member of the State Board of Control for a term of six years, which position he still holds, being the treasurer of the board. On June 3, 1884, Mr. Barnes married Miss Olive Cooper, a daughter of Maj. William P. Cooper, who was the founder and publisher of the Fairmont Index. To this union were born six children, Hugh Cooper, George Roscoe, Walter Kenneth, Fay Evans (died May 17, 1903), Homer Francis and Mabel Irene.

Walter Kenneth Barnes, the third son of J. Walter Barnes and Olive (Cooper) Barnes, was educated in the public schools of Fairmont, graduating from the grades in 1905 and from the Fairmont High School 1909. He then became associated with his father in the telephone business for a while in the plant department, later having made commercial manager of the Consolidated Telephone Company and associated companies, and having supervision of the commercial affairs of thirty-four telephone exchanges, covering eleven counties in the northern part of West Virginia. He remained in this position until September, 1912, when he resigned and entered the College of Law of the West Virginia University, from which school he was graduated in June, 1915, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. The following month he was admitted to the bar in Marion County, and has engaged in the practice of law at Fairmont ever since, with the exception of the period in which he was in active service during the World War. In May, 1918, he enlisted in the United States Naval Reserve Force and reported for duty at St. Helena Training Station, being later transferred to the Naval Operating Base at Hampton Roads, Virginia. There he was made a company commander by reason of his cadet training while at the university, and was assigned to the duty of training new recruits. He was discharged on January 4, 1919, and then returned to Fairmont, where he resumed the practice of law. In August, 1919, Mr. Barnes formed a law partnership with Herschel H. Rose, of the same city, under the firm name of Rose & Barnes.

Mr. Barnes is a Presbyterian, as his family has been for the past five generations, his father having served as an elder in that church since 1890 and as superintendent of the Sunday School for thirty years. Mr. Barnes has been for the past seven years secretary-treasurer of the Board of Trustees of the same church. He is also a member of Fairmont Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Fairmont Lodge No. 294, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He also follows the leadership of his ancestors in his political allegiance, as his is a member of the democratic party.

While in active service in the navy Mr. Barnes met Miss Margaret Rogan Millar, of Norfolk, Virginia, who became Mrs. Barnes on July 3, 1920. Mrs. Barnes is a daughter of William H. and Margaret (Rogan) Millar of Norfolk, Virginia, where Mr. Millar is engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business. Mrs. Millar is a scendant of Hugh Patterson, of Eastern Tennessee, and moved to Norfolk from Russellville, Tennessee, at the time of her marriage to Mr. Millar. On December 2, 1921, a daughter, Margaret Cooper Barnes, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Barnes.

W. Kenneth Barnes

WILLIAM J. RODGERS. Among the oil operators of the Huntington District of West Virginia who have won success and prominence, one who has depended upon his own abilities and judgment in the accumulation of prestige and prosperity is William J. Rodgers. His has been an active career, filled with achievements, and at present he occupies a position not only high in the business world of his adopted community, but in the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Rodgers was born at Silver Creek, New York, February 27, 1867, a son of David R. and Julia A. (Porter) Rodgers. The Rodgers family originated in Ireland, whence it was transplanted to the United States by the great-grandfather of William J. Rodgers. His grandfather, son of the immigrant, was born in 1787, at Franklin, Pennsylvania, where he passed his entire life in the pursuits of the soil and became a prosperous and extensive agriculturist. A man of excellent education, he possessed oratorical powers beyond the ordinary, and as he was a strict temperance man and a great Abolitionist, and as he did not hesitate to air his views on any and all occasions, in the most aggressive way, he was often in the midst of turbulent scenes and experiences. He died at Franklin, Pennsylvania, in 1872, and while he had made numerous enemies because of his outspokenness he also left behind him many friends and admirers who had been attracted to him because of his fearless stand in support of his own convictions.

David R. Rodgers was born in 1838 at Franklin, Pennsylvania, and was reared and educated in Venango County, that state, where he became a pioneer operator in the oil fields. During the war between the states he became a captain in the Eighty-third Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, of the Union army, with which he served throughout the struggle. Among the more serious engagements in which he participated was Gettysburg, and at Little Round Top he had the distinction of capturing Col. R. M. Powell, the famous Texas ranger. In later years, about 1900, Captain Rodgers, as a matter of courtesy, returned Colonel Powell's sword and revolver to him. After taking part in all the engagements of his regiment and establishing a splendid record for bravery and faithful performance of duty, Captain Rodgers received his honorable discharge and returned to the Venango County oil fields. Later he extended his operations to West Virginia, whither he came in 1901, locating at Parkersburg and carrying on his operations from that point, although he maintained his residence at Pittsburgh from 1906. In 1918 he met with an accident in the oil fields, and was taken to his home, where his death occurred. He was a man of high principles and of the strictest integrity, and in all the relations of life was worthy of the respect and esteem accorded him. At Pleasantville, Pennsylvania, Captain Rodgers married Miss Julia A. Porter, who was born in 1845, at Pleasantville, and who survives him as a resident of Pittsburgh. They became the parents of the following children: William J., of this notice; Marshall C., who is an oil operator and resides at Pittsburgh; LaVerne, who married Stephen H. Hinselton, also an oil operator of Pittsburgh; and Clara A., unmarried, an artist, who resides with her mother at Pittsburgh.

William J. Rodgers was educated in the public schools of Greenville, Pennsylvania, where he graduated from the high school in 1886, and at that time entered the oil fields at Butler, Pennsylvania, operating with his father at various places in Butler County. Later he moved on to the fields at Findlay and Marietta, Ohio, and in 1894 came to West Virginia, where he operated out of Parkersburg until 1907. In that year he changed his location to Huntington, which has been his home since that time, and where he has continued to be active in the oil business as an operator. Mr. Rodgers is secretary, treasurer and manager of the Hamlin Oil Company of Huntington, secretary and general manager of the Transylvania Petroleum Company of Huntington, a director in several other oil and gas companies, president of the Branchland Supply Company of Huntington, a company dealing in oil well supplies, and a partner with F. S. Figley in oil well drilling. His offices are situated at Nos. 501-502 Day and Night Bank Building. In politics Mr. Rodgers maintains an independent stand, preferring his own choice of candidates and admitting no party allegiance. He is interested in civic affairs in his adopted city, and is an active member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce.

On February 10, 1893, Mr. Rodgers was united in marriage with Miss Mary Bailey, of Panama, New York, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Bailey the latter a resident of Panama, where the father, a farm owner, died. Mrs. Rodgers, a graduate of the Panama High School, took an active part in the local movements during the World war, being executive secretary of Huntington Chapter of the American Red Cross, and devoting her entire time for three years to this work. Mr. Rodgers also assisted the activities in various ways. Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers have no children.

D. T. PRITCHARD. In the coal industry of the Huntington District of West Virginia, a name that is well and favorably known is that of Pritchard, which has always been identified with large operations carried on in an honorable manner. A worthy representative of the name is found in D. T. Pritchard, who belongs to the younger generation of business men, and who within recent years has made rapid strides toward a commanding position in the business world, particularly in the line of enterprises connected with the mining and distribution of coal.

Mr. Pritchard was born at Algoma, West Virginia, April 3, 1894, a son of William J. and Ann (Thomas) Pritchard. His father was born March 19, 1864, at Thrandrovy, Wales, where he was reared and educated, and about the time that he attained his majority, in 1885, came to the United States and settled first at Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania, where he was employed as a coal miner. In 1888 he removed to Cooper, Mercer County, West Virginia, where he became a mine foreman, and in 1890 to Algoma, this state, where he was made superintendent of the Algoma Coal and Coke Company. Mr. Pritchard subsequently became interested in this company as a partner, being associated with W. H. Thomas, but in 1900 disposed of his holdings, and since then has been extensively interested in coal operations on his own account. In 1902 he removed to Bramwell, Mercer County, and that has continued to be his home to the present. Mr. Pritchard is general manager, a stockholder and a director in the Thomas Coal Company and the Crystal Coal Company, of Bramwell; a director in the Flat Top Fuel Company, of Bluefield, West Virginia; president of the Burnwell Coal and Coke Company, of Sprigg, West Virginia; president of the Long Flame Coal Company, of Lundale, West Virginia; president of the Algoma Block Coal Company, of Lothair, Kentucky; president of the Superior Harlan Coal Company, of Evans, Kentucky; and president of the Virginia Fuel Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The main offices of the last five mentioned companies are situated at No. 619-620 First National Bank Building, Huntington. The career of William J. Pritchard is indeed a remarkable one, including as it does all the elements of self-made manhood. Starting a humble miner, through sheer perseverance and ability he has forced his way upward to a position where he is justly accounted one of West Virginia's leading coal operators. His ability is freely acknowledged by his associates, who at all times accept his judgment as final and his advice as valuable. Mr. Pritchard is a republican in politics, but politics has played but a small part in his career, which has been devoted to his business affairs. He is a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he officiates as a deacon, and as a fraternalist is identified with the Masonic order. Mr. Pritchard married Miss Ann Thomas, who was born in Wales, April 9, 1865, and to this union there were born the following children: Marjorie, the wife of Newton T. Roberts, a coal operator of Bramwell, West Virginia; William, of Huntington, who is general manager of the Burnwell Coal and Coke Company, the Long Flame Coal Company, the Algoma Block Coal Company, the Superior Harlan Coal Company and the Virginia Fuel Company; Elizabeth P., the wife of Joseph H. Bowen, a coal operator of Bramwell, West Virginia; D. T., of this review; Daniel H., of Cincinnati, Ohio, general manager of sales of the Pritchard interests, a veteran of the World war, who was trained at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, and Camp Grant, Illinois, and was assigned to training negro troops, having the rank of first lieutenant; Robert C., of Lundale, West Virginia, superintendent of the Long Flame Coal Company, who during the World war was stationed in the training camp at Lexington, Virginia; and Thomas H., residing with his parents at Bramwell, a student of mining engineering in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, Virginia.

D. T. Pritchard was educated in the public schools of Bramwell, and was graduated from the high school of that place with the class of 1914, following which he enrolled as a student at the Wyoming College of Business, Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania, and was graduated in 1915 in a general business course. Since leaving this institution Mr. Pritchard has been associated with his father in his various coal operations, and has been a resident of Huntington since September, 1920, his well-appointed offices being situated at 619-620 First National Bank Building, he being in charge of the offices in which the Pritchard interests are cared for. Mr. Pritchard is secretary and treasurer of the Burnwell Coal and Coke Company, the Long Flame Coal Company, the Algoma Block Coal Company and the Superior Harlan Coal Company, and vice president of the Virginia Fuel Company of Cincinnati. He is widely and favorably known in the coal industry, and is regarded as a young man of pushing energy and aggressiveness, marked ability of a sound nature, excellent judgment and executive capacity.

Mr. Pritchard is a republican in his political leanings, but has devoted his attention to business and has had no aspirations for public preferment. However, he takes a public-spirited citizen's interest in civic affairs, and gives his support to all worthy civic measures, as he does also to those movements which have for their object better educational, religious and charitable conditions. He belongs to the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington. Fraternally Mr. Pritchard is affiliated with Bramwell Lodge No. 45, A. F. and A. M.; Bramwell Chapter No. 15, R. A. M.; Ivanhoe Commandery No. 10, K. T., of Bramwell; and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Charleston. He likewise holds membership in the Guyan Country Club, the Guyardot Club and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. He owns a modern residence at No. 724 Thirteenth Avenue, one of the fine homes of Huntington.

On January 1, 1920, Mr. Pritchard was united in marriage with Miss Glenna Pack, of Bramwell, daughter of John C. and Emma (Johnson) Pack, residents of Bramwell, Mr. Pack being an extensive coal operator in the West Virginia fields and a man well and prominently known in his community. Mrs. Pritchard, a woman of numerous attainments and graces, is a graduate of the Peabody Conservatory of Music at Baltimore, Maryland, and a talented pianist.

EDWARD B. RAIGUEL. The profession of civil engineering undoubtedly offers a great future to those equipped by nature and training for this calling. It demands, however, perhaps a more thorough technical knowledge of more subjects than almost any other vocation in which an individual may engage, but if its demands are severe its rewards are commensurate with its difficulties, and on the pages of history the names of civil engineers who have accomplished the seemingly impossible appear with other benefactors of mankind. A leading consulting engineer of Huntington, who is chief engineer for W. H. Cunningham, is Edward B. Raiguel. He is a native of Reading, Pennsylvania, and was born December 13, 1883, a son of A. Harper and Sarah Louise (Albright) Raiguel.

Abram Raiguel, the great-grandfather of Edward B. Raiguel, was born in Southern France, and in middle life immigrated to America, settling in Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, where he took up farm lands, married and spent the remainder of his life. His son, A. Harper Raiguel, the elder, was born in Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, and spent practically all of his life at Philadelphia, having an independent income from fortunate investments. A republican in politics, he took an active part in party affairs and held several minor offices. He died at Philadelphia in 1870, while his wife, who had been a Miss Boyer, passed away at Reading.

A. Harper Raiguel, the younger, was born at Philadelphia, February 22, 1850, and was reared in that city until young manhood, when he removed to Reading, in which city he was married. He secured a clerkship in the First National Bank of Reading, in which institution he rose to assistant cashier, and after thirty-five years of faithful service retired from active life with a splendid record. He was a republican in politics and a Knight Templar Mason, and belonged to the Presbyterian Church, in the faith of which he died at Reading in March, 1918. Mr. Raiguel married Miss Sarah Louise Albright, who was born July 28, 1852, at Reading, and survives him as a resident of that city. They became the parents of three children: Susan Albright, the wife of George Beggs, assistant sales manager for the Narrow Fabric Company of Reading; Edward B., of this record; and Helen Louise, the wife of Carl Moyer, engaged in the insurance business at West Reading, Pennsylvania.

The public schools of Reading furnished Edward B. Raiguel with his primary educational training, and after his graduation from the Reading High School with the class of 1900 he attended the Reading Classical School. He next enrolled as a student at Cornell University, attending two years, and at once commenced work at Reading, being employed by W. H. Dechant, a civil engineer. Mr. Raiguel spent one year with Mr. Dechant and then for a few months was a civil engineer with the New Jersey Short Line Railway Company, next being identified with the Batcheller Pneumatic Tube Company of Philadelphia in the capacity of assistant engineer. In July, 1906, he accepted a position with the Temple Ornamental and Structural Iron Company at Temple, Pennsylvania, as assistant draughtsman, but remained only two months. During 1907 he was with the Acme Motor Company of Reading as assistant superintendent, and in April, 1908, came to Huntington as draughtsman for the W. G. Wilkins Company of Pittsburgh in the Huntington offices. He remained in this position for one year and for another year was chief draughtsman, and then became assistant engineer for the same concern, remaining until December, 1913. He was then made chief engineer for the Partridge Woodrow Company of Ocala, Florida, a concern with which he remained one year as chief engineer. From December, 1914, to November, 1915, Mr. Raiguel conducted a general engineering business at Huntington, and was then made engineer in charge of field parties for W. H. Cunningham, a well-known consulting engineer, from which position he was advanced to that of chief engineer January 1, 1918. He holds this position today, his offices being situated at No. 802 First National Bank Building. Mr. Raiguel has become well and favorably known in his profession, and his name has been connected with a number of large and important enterprises.

Politically Mr. Raiguel is a democrat, but has found little time from the duties of his calling to engage in public matters or the game of politics. He belongs to the Lutheran Church, and holds membership in the Guyardotte Club and the Guyan Country Club of Huntington and the American Institute of Mining Engineers. He is the owner of a modern home at No. 440 Thirteenth Avenue, in one of Huntington's exclusive residential districts. From September, 1915, to August, 1916, Mr. Raiguel was a member of the Second Regiment, West Virginia National Guard, and was honorably discharged with the rank of regimental sergeant-major.

On June 15, 1909, at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, Mr. Raiguel married Miss Ruth Greenwood, a graduate of Fairmont Seminary, Washington, D. C., and a daughter of Raymond and Julia (Brockett) Greenwood, residents of Montclair, New Jersey, where Mr. Greenwood owns and operates a public garage. Mr. and Mrs. Raiguel have three children: Julia, born June 18, 1910; Edward Hervey, born May 1, 1913; and Ruth, born March 1, 1919.

JOHN THOMAS MASTERSON, secretary and treasurer of the Winner Gas Stove Company at Huntington, was born in Gallia County, Ohio, July 17, 1864, and is a son of Bernard and Martha E. (Snowden) Masterson, the former of whom was born in County Cavan, Ireland, in 1838, and the latter of whom was born at Steubenville, Ohio, in 1841. The death of the father occurred in Gallia County, Ohio, in 1893, and that of the mother at Marietta, that state, in June, 1916.

Bernard Masterson gained his early education in the schools of his native land, and was a lad of fourteen years when he came to the United States. At Steubenville, Ohio, he learned the blacksmith's trade, and in 1862 he removed to Gallia County, that state, where he continued in the sturdy work of his trade until the time of his death—a man of sterling character, a loyal and useful citizen. He served in the Ohio militia or Home Guard in the period of the Civil war, and aided in suppressing the raids of the Confederate forces under command of Gen. John Morgan. He was a democrat in politics and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Of the family of twelve children six are living at the time of this writing in the spring of 1922: Elizabeth is the widow of John Howarth, who was a carpenter and builder by vocation and who died April 30, 1913, in Gallia County, Ohio, she being now a resident of Huntington, West Virginia; John T., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Annie G. is the wife of John Scherer, a retired farmer, and they reside at Marietta, Ohio; Homer G., a blacksmith by trade, resides in the City of Huntington, West Virginia; Clara E. is the wife of Herschel V. Brown, a contractor and builder at Marietta, Ohio; Walter L. owns and conducts a restaurant in that city.

John T. Masterson is indebted to the district schools of Gallia County, Ohio, for his early education, which was thereafter continued in the high school at Gallipolis, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1883. Thereafter he continued as a successful teacher in the schools of his native county until 1894, when he engaged in similar service in Madison County, Missouri. After his return to the old home county in Ohio he there continued as a popular teacher until 1901, when he became principal of the schools at St. Albans, Kanawha County, West Virginia. He retained this position until 1905, and thereafter was for one year an instructor in the Huntington Business College. For the ensuing seven months he was here book-keeper for the Huntington Hardware Company, and from 1908 to 1915 he served as assistant city treasurer of Huntington. He next held for three years the position of book-keeper for the Overland-Perry-Curtis Company of Huntington, and in the meanwhile, in 1916, he became financially interested in the Winner Gas Stove Company, of which he has been secretary and treasurer since 1918. This company is incorporated under the laws of West Virginia and manufactures a very superior type of gas heating stoves, the factory and offices being at 927 Second Avenue. The company holds patents on the improved burner which is utilized in its stoves, the business is constantly expanding in scope and importance, and the trade extends from Pennsylvania on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west, and south to the Gulf of Mexico. William E. Deegans is president of the company, and H. C. Daniels is vice president and general manager.

Mr. Masterson maintains an independent attitude in politics and gives his support to candidates and measures meeting the approval of his judgment. In his native county he still maintains affiliation with Gallipolis Lodge No. 861, I. O. F. At Huntington he owns and occupies a modern residence at 1209 Seventh Street, and he has identified himself fully and loyally with the civic and business interests of his adopted city.

At Cornwall, Missouri, in 1886, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Masterson and Miss Mary A. Stephens, and the one child of this union is Alice B., wife of Herman C.

Daniels, of whom individual mention is made in following paragraphs.

Herman C. Daniels was born at Akron, Ohio, June 9, 1887, gained his early education in rural schools of Lawrence County, that state, and in 1901, when but fourteen years of age, he entered the employ of the American Car & Foundry Company. Two years later he went to Louisiana, where he worked in the lumber woods about one year, and the ensuing year he was again in the employ of the American Car & Foundry Company, in the building of steel railway cars. He next passed a year in the employ of the Pullman Company, the great car building concern at Pullman, Illinois, and during the next five years he was again in the service of the American Car & Foundry Company at Huntington, West Virginia. He then became manager of the Columbia Gas Stove Company of this city, a position which he retained until 1918, when he organized the Winner Gas Stove Company, of which he has since continued vice president and general manager. He and his wife are members of the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as are also Mrs. Daniels' parents. They have two children: Louise, born June 17, 1915, and Dorothy, born July 4, 1921.

Thomas Masterson, grandfather of him whose name initiates this review, was born and reared in County Cavan, Ireland, and died in Gallia County, Ohio, at the age of eighty-eight years. The maternal grandfather, James F. Snowden, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1809, and died at Cornwall, Missouri, in 1899. He gained high reputation as an educator, was for several years a teacher in the schools of Steubenville, Ohio, was for two years principal of the Fourth Ward School at Wheeling, West Virginia, and later served as principal in the public schools of St. Louis, Missouri. In that state he became the owner of a valuable farm of 400 acres. He married Ann Jane Stevenson, who was born at Wheeling, West Virginia, and who died at Cornwall, Missouri, at a venerable age. The father of James F. Snowden was born near Mount Snowden, Wales, and upon coming to America settled in Pennsylvania.

Herman C. Daniels, son-in-law of Mr. Masterson, is a son of Frank M. Daniels, who was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, in 1860, and who followed the cooper's trade in Ohio, principally at Toledo and Akron, until June, 1921, since which time he has lived retired at Huntington, West Virginia. He is a democrat and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, whose family name was Lewis, was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, in 1860, and died at Akron, that state, in 1888. Of the children the eldest is Samuel, a resident of Fairport Harbor, Ohio; George S. is a resident of Barberton, that state; Miss Lizzie resides at Huntington, West Virginia; and Herman C. is the youngest of the number. Frank M. Daniels is a son of Morrow Daniels, who was born in Ireland, in 1828, and who died in Lawrence County, Ohio, in 1914, he having been a pioneer farmer in that county.

THOMAS SEDGWICK NEPTUNE, treasurer and general manager of the Fairmont-Sewickley Company, and also secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Clarksburg-Sewickley Company, has his executive headquarters in a well appointed office in the Deveny Building in the City of Fairmont, Marion County. He was born in Paw Paw District, this county, January 26, 1876, and is a son of William H. and Caroline (Prichard) Neptune.

William H. Neptune was born in Marion County in the year 1847, a son of John and Serena (Straight) Neptune, the names of both families having been closely linked with the history of this section since the early pioneer days. William H. Neptune was for many years one of the substantial and representative exponents of farm industry in his native county, and is now living virtually retired at Fairmont. His wife, who likewise was born and reared in Marion County, died in the year 1898. She was a daughter of Thomas and Mahala (Morris) Prichard. William H. Neptune was a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war.

Thomas S. Neptune passed the period of his childhood and early youth on the old home farm and in the meanwhile made good use of the advantages offered in the local schools. In 1902 he severed his alliance with farm enterprise and entered the employ of the Fayette County Gas Company and the Treat & Crawford Oil Company of Pittsburgh, for which corporations he had charge of leases and rights of way in West Virginia. In 1908 he left the employ of these companies and engaged in the real estate business at Fairmont, in which line of enterprise he still continues operations, in the buying and selling of land, principally coal and oil tracts. Mr. Neptune was one of the organizers of the Fairmont-Sewickley Company and the Clarksburg-Sewickley Company in 1917, and much of his time and attention have since been given to his executive service with these important corporations.

Mr. Neptune is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He and his wife and son hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In the year 1899 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Neptune and Miss Rose M. Hibbs, who likewise was born and reared in Marion County and who is a daughter of Alpheus T. and Lydia (Wilson) Hibbs. Mr. and Mrs. Neptune have one son, Harry Alford, born June 2, 1906.

Their entire lives were passed in their native county, where the death of the father occurred in 1913 and that of the mother in 1917. Thomas J. Adams owned and operated a large tobacco plantation in Pittsylvania County, was a scion of an old and influential family of that section of the Old Dominion commonwealth, was a democrat in politics, served as a gallant soldier of the Confederacy during virtually the entire period of the Civil war, and was a man whose character and ability gave him no small measure of influence in connection with community affairs. In religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, while his wife was a member of the Baptist Church. Of their children the eldest is James S., who is a retired farmer and resides in the vicinity of Richmond, Virginia; John A. died at Roanoke, that state, at the age of forty-eight years, he having been in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad; Selena B. is the wife of John Motley, a merchant at Shockey, Virginia; Patsy is the wife of John Thompson, a farmer in Pittsylvania County, Virginia; Virginia Rosa is the wife of William T. Smith, of Christiansburg, Virginia, he being a grower of and dealer in live stock.

In the rural school near his birthplace Arthur H. Adams acquired his youthful education, after having previously been instructed by a private tutor, but he was only fourteen years of age when his boyish ambition led him to leave the parental roof and take a position in the general store of W. P. Hodnett at Danville, Virginia. He was thus employed three years, and he supplemented his education by a course in the Danville Business College. In 1897 he was suddenly called upon to settle the affairs of the estate of Thomas J. Watson, his brother-in-law, in Mississippi, a work that engrossed his attention one year. He then returned to Danville, where he was employed in a retail grocery one year and the following year in a dry goods establishment in that city. He next passed a year in the wholesale grocery house of Overbey-Swanson Brothers at Danville, and in 1900 he there engaged in the general merchandise business on Union Street, as a member of the firm of Adams & Allen. Three years later his impaired health compelled him to retire from active business, and two years passed ere he recuperated sufficiently to resume his activities. In 1905 he became a traveling salesman for Clifford Weil, of Richmond, distributor for the American Tobacco Company, and in 1907 he came to Huntington, West Virginia, and took the position of bill clerk in the offices of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. He was promoted to chief bill clerk, and upon resigning this position in 1909 he took a place in the shipping department of the wholesale grocery house of the Sehon Stevenson Company. He was eventually advanced to the post of shipping clerk, and after remaining two and one half years with this company he became shipping clerk for the Loar-Berry Company, likewise engaged in the wholesale grocery trade at Huntington. He gained comprehensive knowledge of the various details of the business and in May 1913, upon the reorganization of the Loar-Berry Company under the title of the Huntington Wholesale Grocery Company Mr. Adams became buyer and sales manager for the new corporation. In 1914 he became vice president of the company, of which office he has since remained the incumbent, the offices and warehouse of the company being established at the corner of Eleventh Street and Second Avenue. F. C. Pritchard is president of this vital and progressive corporation, and H. S. Ivie is its secretary and treasurer. The concern has the most modern equipment and facilities, and is one of the important commercial corporations contributing to the prestige of Huntington.

Mr. Adams is aligned loyally in the ranks of the democratic party, he and his wife are zealous members of the Baptist Church and he is specially active in the work of its Sunday school. His Masonic affiliations are with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., and the local Masonic Club. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and also of its club in his home city.

At Richmond, Virginia, in 1907, Mr. Adams wedded Miss Florence Forbean, who was born at Bristol, Tennessee, and whose death occurred in 1911, the one surviving child of this union being a son, Hamilton Joe, born October 20, 1911. The public schools of Baltimore afforded Raymond H. FRANCIS GUY ASH, prominently connected with real estate, insurance and other business organizations at Morgantown, is a native of Tennessee, but represents two West Virginia families that have been in the state for four generations. Mr. Ash has an interesting record of service as a military man, beginning with the National Guard of West Virginia before the World war and continuing throughout the period of those hostilities.

In the paternal line the founder of the family in Doddridge County, West Virginia, was Jacob Ash, who acquired nearly twenty thousand acres of government land comprising a large portion of the northern edge of Doddridge County, the eastern part of Tyler County and the south-eastern part of Wetzel County. His son, William Ash, was born in Doddridge County and married Nancy Swiger, also a native of that county. The father of Francis Guy Ash was the late Benton Ash, who was born at Ashley, a town named for the family in Doddridge County, January 26, 1866. He was educated in an Ohio college, being trained for the civil engineering profession, and was county surveyor of Doddridge County, with home at West Union. In 1891 his professional services as an engineer on railroad construction took him into Eastern Tennessee, and he died at Elizabethton in Carter County of that state June 22 1894.

The mother of Francis Guy Ash was Hattie Virginia Jeffery, who was born at West Union, Doddridge County, October 18, 1872, daughter of Elias and Mary F. (Hickman) Jeffery and granddaughter of Neely D. and Delia Ann (Davis) Jeffery. Delia Ann Davis was a daughter of Rhuama Randolph, of the famous Virginia Randolphs. After the death of Benton Ash his wife returned with her family to her old home at Ashley, West Virginia, and later removed to Morgantown.

Francis Guy Ash was born at Elizabethton, Tennessee, November 13, 1893, but spent his boyhood in Doddridge County. He was educated in the public schools, graduated from West Union High School in 1912, and in the fall of that year located at Morgantown and enrolled in the university, being a student therein for two years. After leaving the university he had some good business training and experience in the office of Judge George C. Sturgiss. He then joined the real estate and insurance organization of Howard L. Swisher. At the same time he performed some duties in the office of Mr. Cassius McCarl Lemley, the geologist of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway.

Mr. Ash was commissioned a second lieutenant in the West Virginia National Guard May 1, 1916, and promoted to first lieutenant June 1, of that year. On March 28, West Virginia National Guard was called for duty in the war with Germany. They mobilized at Camp Cornwell, Fairmont, where he was mustered into the Federal service as first lieutenant of Company L, First West Virginia Regiment of Infantry. April 12, 1917, his company was ordered for guard duty at the Pittsburgh Storage and Supply Depot in the Quartermaster's Department, and remained there until July 22, 1917, when it returned to Camp Cornwell and on September 14th was ordered to Camp Shelby, Mississippi. At Camp Shelby Lieutenant Ash entered the "one pound platoon" of Headquarters Company, 150th Infantry. March 28 1918, he was ordered to the Infantry School of Arms at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, where he remained in intensive training until September 4, 1918, and then rejoined his outfit, taking command of Headquarters Company. On Friday, September 13, 1918, he left Camp Shelby with his company for Camp Mills, Long Island, and soon afterward the regiment embarked and sailed for France, October 2d. On the day of sailing Lieutenant Ash entered the camp hospital a victim of appendicitis, and when he received his discharge from the hospital at Camp Mills, November 14th, the war had been ended three days by the signing of the armistice. On leaving the hospital Lieutenant Ash was ordered to Camp Merritt, New Jersey, where he was a casual officer in charge of returning wounded soldiers until January 26, 1919. He was discharged at Camp Lee, Virginia, January 28, 1919, and then accepted a captain's commission in the Reserves.

On returning to Morgantown Captain Ash resumed his business relations with the H. L. Swisher Company, in real estate and insurance, and is also secretary of the Morgantown Building Association, secretary of the Labor Building & Loan Association, and is treasurer of the Peerless Smokeless Smithing Coal Company. Captain Ash was secretary of the Morgantown Business Men's Association until it was converted into the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and continued his duties as secretary until his successor was elected. FREDERICK O. BLUE. The example of a lawyer who makes his profession a direct source of benefit to the public is the case of Frederick O. Blue of Charleston, recognized as one of West Virginia's far-seeing public men. Some years ago he was a member of the State Senate, has served as state tax commissioner, and is especially well known for the aggressive fight he made in enforcing the laws relating to taxation and public accounting and the state prohibition laws.

Frederick Omar Blue was born at Grafton, West Virginia, November 25, 1872, son of George Frederick and Mary Martha (See) Blue. He was educated in the public high school and under private tutors, and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one. He began practice at Philippi in 1893 and Philippi remained his home until 1911, when he removed to Charleston. During the last three years there he practiced law with Arthur S. Dayton. He was a banker as well as a lawyer. Mr. Blue is now a member of the firm Blue & McCabe at Charleston, and is a director of the Kanawha National Bank and the George Washington Life Insurance Company.

His term in the State Senate ran from 1906 to 1910 and he represented the Thirteenth District, embracing the counties of Upshur, Randolph and Pendleton. Mr. Blue served as a member of the West Virginia Mining Strike Commission in 1912-13. His service as state commissioner of prohibition was during the years 1914-17. After the state prohibition law was passed he had charge of the legal and administrative forces endeavoring to execute that law. Especially noteworthy was the litigation conducted by him under the Webb-Kenyon Federal Law against the distillers and express companies for the purpose of prohibiting interstate shipment of liquors into West Virginia. He carried this contest to the United States Circuit Court and finally to the Supreme Court at Washington, where he won a favorable decision. He has written an interesting little book based upon his experiences, under the title "When a State Goes Dry," published in 1916.

Mr. Blue is a trustee of Broadbush College at Philippi. EGBERT E. YOUNG, who is one of the best attorneys in the bar of Huntington, has practiced law a number of years in the state, and came to Huntington from Lincoln County, where he achieved particular notice through his efficient work as prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Young's grandfather was Isaac Young, who was born in Noble County, Ohio, in 1831, and finally came to West Virginia and bought a farm in Lincoln County, where he lived until his death in 1899. He married Lizze Harris, who lived in Noble County, who also died in Lincoln County.

Frank M. Young, father of the Huntington lawyer, was born in Noble County, Ohio, in 1855, was a farmer there until 1896, when he established his home in Lincoln County, West Virginia. He continued farming there, and since 1910 has been a carpenter and builder at Logan. He is a democrat and a very active member of the Church of Christ. Frank M. REUBEN S. PRINDLE. From the time he finished his university education more than thirty years ago, Mr. Prindle has been actively associated with the mercantile and other business interests of Huntington. He has been in this city during its greatest period of growth, and his work has undoubtedly impressed itself for good on the welfare and progress of the community.

Mr. Prindle was born at Lancaster, Ohio July 8, 1863. The Prindle family is of Scotch origin, and was established in Connecticut in Colonial times. His grandfather, William Prindle, was born at Hornellsville, New York, in 1795, and was an early settler and farmer near Lancaster, Ohio, where he lived until his death, in 1882. He married Elizabeth Beecher, a native of Connecticut, who died near Lancaster. She was a second cousin of the famous preacher, Henry Ward Beecher. Myron Beecher Prindle, father of the Huntington business man, was born at Canisteo, New York, in 1834. He was reared there, went to Lancaster, Ohio, when a young man, married and settled down on a farm. In 1893 he came to Charleston, West Virginia, and though now well on toward ninety years of age he is still interested in the general merchandise and furniture business there. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Myron Beecher Prindle married Delia Shellenbarger, who was born at Lancaster, and died there in 1881. Elizabeth, the oldest of his children, is the wife of Frank Claypool, a farmer near Lancaster; Alice, is the wife of David A. Alsbaugh, a merchant of Huntington; Reuben S. is the third in age; William is in business at Huntington; and Myron B. is associated with his brother Reuben.

Reuben S. Prindle acquired a public school education at Lancaster, graduating from high school in 1884. Following that he was for three years a student in the Ohio Wesleyan University of Delaware, and finished his scholastic career in Otterbein University at Westerville, Ohio, where he graduated in 1888. Soon after graduation he came to Huntington, became a general merchant, and has been in that line of business ever since. He also conducts a storage warehouse, the offices and warehouse being located at 911 Second Avenue, and for a number of years he has done a large business in the buying, selling and development of real estate. Besides his office and warehouse building he owns six other business buildings in Huntington, and twenty-three residences in the city, including his modern home at 547 Adams Avenue.

Mr. Prindle is a republican, is a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, a member of Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E., and in the line of public service is a member of the city council six years and on the school board four years.

At Paris, Kentucky, in 1888, Mr. Prindle married Miss Jennie Carpenter, daughter of Squire John J. and Lydia (Hoy) Carpenter, now deceased. Her father was a farmer near Lancaster, Ohio. Mrs. Prindle, who died at Huntington in 1910, is survived by one child, Elizabeth, born September 1, 1909. In 1914 Mr. Prindle married Gertrude Callahan, daughter of Daniel and Sallie (Willis) Callahan, both natives of Kentucky.

JOHN THOMAS HARRIS. His uninterrupted service since 1895 as clerk of the Senate of West Virginia makes a name of John T. Harris probably as well known as that of any public official of the state in the present generation.

Mr. Harris was born in the Village of Harrisville, Lincoln County, Virginia (now in West Virginia), April 7, 1851. He reached manhood with a liberal education, though he first attended the subscription schools of the day, later the public schools of Washington, Pennsylvania, and during the year before the consolidation of Washington College with Jefferson College he was for a short time a student in the preparatory department of the former. In 1870 he entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, graduated Bachelor of Science with the class of 1873, and a few years later was honored with the Master of Science degree. In the meantime, as a boy he had learned printing in an old time country printing office. Following his college career he spent several years as newspaper work. In 1877 he went West, and was connected with railway service from 1878 to 1883 at Peoria and Detroit, in general office work and as private secretary to superintendents and general managers. He held a similar position with one of the lake lines in 1884 at the early part of 1885. Then, returning to his old home in West Virginia, Mr. Harris took up the profession of a shorthand law reporter. In 1887 he established himself in the City of Parkersburg, where he followed this work for more than twenty-five years. In that capacity he reported in Federal and State Courts, in some of the heaviest cases ever tried in the state.

January 8, 1895, Mr. Harris received the republican caucus nomination for clerk of the Senate of West Virginia. At the organization of that body on the following day he was duly elected, and since then he has been elected thirteen times. Beginning in 1901, at every biennial session up to and including that of 1921 he has received the unanimous vote of the Senate, the democrats seconding his nomination. For twenty-seven years therefore without a break he has filled the office of clerk of the Senate, and it is said that no other man in the United States has to his credit so long a continuous service record in a similar legislative position.

Ex-officio in a sense, Mr. Harris has performed an important routine of duty in related capacities, serving as secretary and official reporter of the Legislative Mine Investigating Committee, of a committee raised by the Legislature to visit and report upon the public institutions of the state, and also of the Virginia Debt Commission. To work, however, by which he is widely known throughout the state is as compiler, editor and publisher of the West Virginia Legislative Hand Book and Manual and Official Register. He brought out the first Hand Book in 1916. It was adopted in 1917 as an official publication of the Legislature, and has since then been issued yearly under his management and direction. Mr. Harris still keeps his home at Parkersburg. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

THOMAS E. EVANS, secretary and treasurer of the West Virginia Paving & Pressed Brick Company, which represents one of the important industrial enterprises in the City of Huntington, was born at Clarksburg, Harrison County, this state, on the 16th of February, 1893. He is a son of Thomas Evans, who was born in the State of Pennsylvania, in 1859, and whose death occurred at Huntington, West Virginia, in 1911.

Thomas Evans was a son of Thomas Evans, Sr., who was born and reared in Pennsylvania, a representative of a family of Welsh ancestry, that was there founded in an early day, and he became a pioneer farmer in Harrison County, West Virginia, where he continued his residence until his death.

Thomas Evans, Jr., was a boy at the time of the family removal from Pennsylvania to Harrison County, where he was reared on the home farm and gained his youthful education in the schools of the period. His marriage was solemnized in Gilmer County, and there he was engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock for a few years. He then returned to Harrison County, where he became the owner of a large and well improved farm estate and engaged in the raising of and dealing in cattle and horses upon an extensive scale. In the autumn of 1902 Mr. Evans came to Huntington, and here he became associated with George F. Miller in establishing the West Virginia Paving & Pressed Brick Company, of which he became the general manager and which under his able direction developed a substantial and important industrial enterprise. He continued general manager of the business until his death. Mr. Evans was a republican in political adhesion, was affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E., and was a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Huntington, as is also his widow, who still maintains her home in this city. Mrs. Evans, whose maiden name was Virginia Dent, was born in Gilmer County in 1850, her father having been a representative farmer of that county. Dora Grace, eldest of the children, remains with her widowed mother in the pleasant home at Huntington; Margaret May is the wife of Richard Murphy, of Cereal, Oklahoma, who is actively identified with operations in the oil fields of that state; Dorsey D. is vice president and general manager of the West Virginia Paving and Pressed Brick Company; Florence remains at the maternal home; and Thomas E., of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

As a boy and youth Thomas E. Evans made excellent educational advancement under the direction of private tutors engaged by his father for such service at the family home, and thereafter he entered Marshall College at Huntington, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1911, the year in which occurred the death of his honored father. At the age of fourteen years he had initiated his service in connection with the brick company of which his father was the general manager, and the experience which he had gained in the practical details of the business proved of great value to him when, in 1913, he was made secretary and treasurer of the company, of which dual office he has since continued the efficient incumbent. The company is incorporated under the laws of West Virginia, and Charles M. Gohen is its president, the names of the other two executive officers having already been noted in this context. The offices and yards are situated at the corner of Sixteenth Street and Fourteenth Avenue, and the extensive plant has a capacity for the production of 75,000 brick daily, the concern being now one of the largest of its kind in the state and its business being of most substantial order.

Mr. Evans holds the principles of the republican party as worthy of his unqualified support, he is a member of the Guyan Country Club, and is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E.

At Hot Springs, Virginia, on the 8th of February, 1913, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Evans and Miss Ida McClintic, a daughter of Jacob McClintic, a retired stock dealer residing at Hot Springs, his wife being deceased. Mrs. Evans is a graduate of Lewisburg Seminary at Lewisburg, Greenbrier County, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have no children.

CLAUDE GILBERT LeMASTERS conducts a representative business as a certified public accountant in the City of Huntington, where he is president of C. G. LeMasters & Company, of which his only son, Earle H., is secretary and treasurer, the offices of the concern being established in suite 915-916 First National Bank Building, besides which offices are maintained also at 835 Munsey Building in the City of Washington, D. C.

Mr. LeMasters was born at Brownsville, Oregon, March 6, 1876, and is the only child of William F. and Lucinda (Simons) LeMasters, the former of whom was born at Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1840, and the latter of whom was born at Knoxville, Illinois, August 16, 1850. William F. LeMasters gained his early education in the schools of his native city, and was a lad of about twelve years when he accompanied his parents across the plains to Oregon, in 1852, the long and perilous journey having been made with wagon and ox team and he having rode a horse and driven a small herd of cattle on this eventful pioneer trip. The family home was established at Brownsville, Oregon, where he was reared to manhood and where eventually he became a representative merchant, as a dealer in boots and shoes. He was a democrat in politics, and both he and his wife were most earnest and active members of the Christian Church. Their marriage was solemnized at Brownsville, and both were residents of Oregon until their deaths, William F. LeMasters having passed the closing years of his life at Salem, that state, where he died in 1912. He served as a member of an Oregon regiment in the Civil war.

In the public schools of Oregon Claude G. LeMasters continued his studies until his graduation in the high school at Amity in 1895. For a year thereafter he was a student at Mineral Springs Academy at Solvay, that state, and he then completed the work of the junior year in the University of Oregon, at Eugene. He next passed two years as a student in the Eugene Bible University, in preparation for the ministry of the Christian Church. In 1901 he became pastor of churches of this denomination at Corvallis and Dallas, Oregon, and he continued his ministerial service until 1904, when he made a radical change of vocation and became a telegraph operator on the Sacramento (California) division of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Two years later he was promoted to the position of cashier and chief clerk for the same company at Reno, Nevada, and after thus serving two years he was for six months paying teller of the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Reno. He then effected the organization of the Carson Valley Bank, at Carson City, that state, and of this institution he served as cashier until 1911. During the ensuing year he was cashier of the Richmond National Bank and of the Richmond Savings Bank, allied institutions, at Richmond, California. He then purchased the plant and business of a weekly newspaper at Amity, Oregon, and he continued as editor and publisher of this paper until 1918, in March of which year he went to the City of Washington, D. C., where for one year he held the post of chief auditor of the coal section of the excess profits tax division. In March, 1919, he removed to the City of Chicago and engaged in the public accounting business, as a member of the firm of Crawford & LeMasters, in which his associate was P. L. Crawford. He remained thus engaged in the great metropolis at the foot of Lake Michigan until November, 1920, when he established his present business as a certified public accountant in the City of Huntington.

Mr. LeMasters is a staunch advocate of the principles of the republican party, and he and his wife are active members of the Christian Church in their home city. At Turner, Oregon, he still maintains affiliation with Pearl Lodge No. 66, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he is a member also of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Guyandotte Club of Huntington and is an active member of the National Association of Certified Public Accountants.

At Amity, Oregon, in June, 1895, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. LeMasters and Miss Myrtle Hamilton, a daughter of James K. and Sadie E. (Towner) Hamilton, both now deceased, Mr. Hamilton having been a successful farmer near Amity, Oregon. Earle H., the only child of Mr. and Mrs. LeMasters, was born in Oregon, July 24, 1900, and after his graduation in the Lincoln High School in the City of Portland, that state, he furthered his education by a course in the accounting school of Northwestern University, in the City of Chicago, later completing a course of similar and advanced line at Pace Institute, Washington, D. C. where in 1921 he received his degree of Certified Public Accountant. He has since been associated with his father in business, as noted in an earlier paragraph of this review. Earle H. LeMasters enlisted in the United States Navy in September, 1918, attended the Officers Training School maintained at George Washington University, in the national capital, where as a member of the Naval Reserves he was stationed at the time when the great World war came to a close.

WELLINGTON EARL WEIDLER is a chemical engineer by profession and for a number of years, except during the war, has been identified with oil refining, and is now both an executive as well as a technical expert of the Elk Refining Company, being manager of the Charleston offices.

Mr. Weidler was born at Erie, Pennsylvania, in 1890. He acquired a liberal education, attending Allegheny College at Meadville, Pennsylvania, and prepared for his profession in the technical schools of Cornell University, where he was graduated with the degree Chemical Engineer in 1912. Following that for several years he was employed in the export department of the Standard Oil Company.

The active service he rendered at the time of the World war was as a captain in the Quartermaster's Corps, U. S. A. For a time he was stationed at Camp Merritt and later transferred to New York City. Captain Weidler received his honorable discharge in January, 1919, and in 1920 came to Charleston to become manager of the Elk Refining Company. Mr. H. A. Logan, of Warren, Pennsylvania, is president of this company, which owns and operates the Elk Refinery at Falling Rock in Kanawha County, while the executive offices are in Charleston, with Mr. Weidler in charge as manager and technical expert supervising all the refinery processes. The Falling Rock plant is one of the largest and best equipped refineries in West Virginia, producing various grades of refined oil from the crude production in the nearby fields. The normal output of the refinery is a thousand barrels per day.

Although a young man, Captain Weidler has earned a high reputation as a chemical engineer and an expert in oil refining. He is a popular citizen of Charleston, a member of the Edgewood Country Club, the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce. He married Miss Helen Fawcett, of Oil City, Pennsylvania. They have one son, Wellington Earl, Jr., and one daughter, Suzanne.

Captain Weidler is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having been initiated into the order as a member of the Zion Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Johannesburg, South Africa. He is also a member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity, Delta Chapter, Cornell University.

C. L. TOPPING. The office of state fire marshal is one that in the hands of such a capable man as C. L. Topping involves an enormous and vital service to every interest of the state. Besides the routine service involved in the office Mr. Topping has made his department of primary value through the educational campaign he has carried on in the direction of fire prevention.

Marshal Topping prepared and had distributed throughout the schools of the state, 50,000 copies of a manual entitled "Safeguarding the Home Against Fire." This manual contains full and explicit directions for preventing fires, and sets forth in plain but impressive manner the enormous waste and financial disaster that annually result in this state simply from carelessness and lack of thought in observing the most elemental precautions that would avoid fire. The matter in the booklet is arranged and presented in the most attractive manner, accompanied by striking illustrations, so that the subject is easily understood by everyone from the oldest to the youngest. It read some of Mr. Topping's strongest appeals are to the young people, and the propaganda he carries on through the Boy Scouts is particularly forcible. Mr. Topping is therefore doing a work of much wider scope than would be measured by the formal nature of his jurisdiction, and has already succeeded in winning the cooperation and approval of public bodies and individuals throughout the state.

While Mr. Topping is not a native of West Virginia his parents moved to the state when he was a child and he has spent the greater part of his life at Charleston. He has been in public affairs for a number of years, and has perhaps as wide a circle of friends and acquaintance throughout the state as any other man. Mr. Topping was clerk of the House of Delegates in the State Legislature from 1907 to 1909 and again in 1919. He was made state fire marshal in June, 1921.

He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, Shriner, and a life member of the Charleston Lodge of Elks. Mr. Topping married Miss Mary E. Wyatt, who was born and reared in Kanawha County. Their three daughters are Mrs. J. M. McVey, Mrs. H. T. Lyttleton and Mrs. F. S. Stone.

ARNOLD B. MCCUTCHEON. In the City of Richwood Nicholas County, Mr. McCutcheon owns and conducts a undertaking and funeral directing establishment of the best modern equipment and service, and he is known and valued as one of the representative business men and liberal and progressive citizens of this fine little industrial city.

Mr. McCutcheon was born on a farm near Hominy Falls, Nicholas County, September 18, 1853, and is a son of John W. and Ann (Amick) McCutcheon, both likewise natives of this county, where the former was born in 1832 and the latter in 1828—dates that indicate clearly that the respective families were here founded in the pioneer days. After their marriage the parents settled on the farm near Hominy Falls, and there they passed the remainder of their lives of noble character and given to the constructive industry that ever conserves communal prosperity, both having been earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Mr. McCutcheon having been unflinching in his allegiance to the democratic party. Of their eight children five are living at the time of this writing, in 1922, and of this number the subject of this review is the eldest; Peter B. is a resident of Wyoma, Mason County; Sarah is widow and resides in the City of Columbus, Ohio; Isa is the wife of A. O. Odell; and John is a resident of the State of Kansas.

He whose name initiates this review gained his initial experience by aiding in the work of the old home farm, and in the meanwhile profited by the advantages afforded in the local schools, he having remained at the parental home until he attained to his legal majority, when he married and began his independent career as a farmer. The energy and resourcefulness which he manifested in his farm enterprise have been equally effective in connection with the business which he now conducts in the City of Richwood, and he commands unqualified confidence and esteem in his native county, his loyalty to which is unstinted and marked by full appreciation of its advantages and attractions. He has never had any desire for public office, but is a loyal supporter of the principles of the republican party, and a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Loyal Order of Moose. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his wife likewise was a devoted member.

Mr. McCutcheon was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Nicholas, and the supreme bereavement in his life came when she passed to eternal rest, her death having occurred February 7, 1919. Of their nine children all but one survive; the devoted mother: Cynthia C. is the wife of D. P. Odell; Anna is the wife of E. P. Carter; Bertha is the wife of Henry Pittsenbarger; William B. resides in the City of Charleston; Martha is the wife of Kellis Morris; Theresen is the wife of L. H. Boor; Osie is the wife of Robert Eckert; and Lottie is the wife of W. W. McChung.

A.B. McIntcheon

REV. CLOYD GOODNIGHT has been president of Bethany College since 1919. This institution, founded more than eighty years ago by Rev. Alexander Campbell, who was its president until his death in 1866, has been one of the most influential among the smaller colleges of the nation. While in a sense it has been the chief center of culture for the traditions and principles of the founder of the Church of the Disciples, it has also educated many men who have become prominent in other professions and walks than the ministry, and the prominent men who have regarded it as a distinction that they were at some time students of old Bethany would comprise an impressive list both in length and in volume of achievement.

Cloyd Goodnight was born at Michigantown, Clinton County, Indiana, December 2, 1881, son of John and Ida (Layton) Goodnight. His grandfather, William Goodnight, was born in Hardy County, West Virginia, and as a young man removed to Indiana. Rev. Cloyd Goodnight finished his education in Butler College of Indianapolis, graduating A. B. in 1906 and with the Master of Arts degree in 1907. He was also a special student in the University of Chicago in 1912. He was ordained to the ministry of the Christian or Disciples Church in 1907, and for two years was pastor of a church at Danville, Indiana, and from 1910 to 1913, of Shelbyville, that state. In 1913 he accepted the pastorate of the Central Christian Church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and remained there until he took up his duties as president of Bethany College on July 17, 1919. Bethany College under his administration is one of the efficient units in the higher educational institutions of the state. It enrolls about three hundred pupils, has twenty-four members of the faculty, and two-thirds of the student group represent other states than West Virginia, a condition that has been quite uniformly characteristic of Bethany since its founding. Rev. Goodnight gives his entire time to his duties as president and as a member of the faculty. He is well qualified for his office, has a strong and pleasing personality, and has a record of splendid work as a minister. He married Miss Anna Hussey, of Carmel, Indiana, November 20, 1907. They have two children, John Thomas and Ida Frances.

HENRY CLAY WELLS is one of the progressive agriculturists and stock-growers of his native state, and is a scion of one of the honored pioneer families of West Virginia, his post office address being Beechbottom, Brooke County. His father, Robert M. Wells, was the second son of Basilcel Wells, whose father was Absalom Wells, a descendant of one of three brothers who came from Wales to America in an early day, one of the number having settled at Steubenville, Ohio, which place, as Wellsburg, was originally named in his honor. Absalom Wells was a resident of what is now Brooke County, West Virginia, at the time of his death, and his remains here rest in the old family cemetery on the farm of his son, Basilcel, a part of this property being still in the possession of the family. On this old pioneer homestead Basilcel Wells was born and reared, and there he passed his entire life, as one of the representative farmers of this section of the present State of West Virginia, his landed estate having comprised about eleven hundred acres. He married Nancy McIntire, and the remains of both rest in the old family cemetery above mentioned. Both were devout and influential members of the Christian Church in their community. In the Wells home, about seven miles from Bethany, Rev. Alexander Campbell, the founder of the Christian or Campbellite Church, frequently visited, he having been a close friend of the family. The children of Basilcel Wells were eight sons and three daughters. Absalom passed his entire life in Brooke County and was one of its venerable and honored citizens at the time of his death, aged seventy-eight years; Robert M. will be mentioned in later paragraphs; the daughter Michael became the wife of Rev. Thomas V. Berry, a clergyman of the Christian Church, and they removed to Illinois, her death having occurred at Mounmouth, that state; Elizabeth, who was a prosperous farmer near the old homestead, died at the age of seventy-six, a man of unassuming worth of character; Milton attended Bethany College, was a successful teacher as a young man and became a pioneer clergyman of the Christian Church in Wisconsin, his published memoirs giving interesting record of his work in that Commonwealth, and further distinction having been his by reason of his loyal service as a soldier of the Union, in a West Virginia regiment, in the Civil war.

Robert M. Wells was born and reared on the old home farm and, as a young man he married Eliza Ann Carle, a daughter of John Carle, a member of a leading manufacturing firm at Wellsburg. Robert M. Wells finally sold his original farm and purchased another, near West Liberty, Brooke County, where he remained until well advanced in years, when he removed to Wellsburg, where he died at the age of eighty-seven years. He was a man who was just and upright in all the relations of life, imbued with excellent judgment and much business ability, and contributed his share to civic and material advancement in his native county. He survived his wife by eighteen years, both having been zealous members of the Christian Church. Of the children who attained to mature years the elder was Virginia Ella, who became the wife of Edgar Wells (no family kinship). He was a leading architect and builder in the City of Wheeling at the time of his death, he having been drowned in the Ohio River. His wife died at the age of fifty-nine years. The younger of the two children is Henry C., immediate subject of this review.

Henry Clay Wells was born on his father's farm, not far distant from his own farm of the present day, and the date of his nativity was October 27, 1853. His early education included a course in the West Liberty Normal School, and his entire active career has been marked by close successful and progressive association with farm industry. His home farm comprises 200 acres, and he owns also 295 acres of the ancestral homestead, both places being excellently improved. His home farm is that formerly owned by his uncle, Ezrahi Wells, on the Ohio Valley Road, twelve miles north of Wheeling and five miles south of Wellsburg. He is a stockholder in the West Penn Railroad and the West Penn Power Company, is a director and vice president of the Farmers State Bank at Wellsburg and a director of the Commercial Bank at that place. He has done much to advance the standards of agricultural and live stock industry in his native county and state, and in all of the relations of life has upheld the high honors of the family name. He is a republican in politics, but has had no desire for political office. He has shown his civic and communal loyalty, however, by service as a member of the Board of Education and also the County Board of Equalization. He and his family retain the ancestral religious faith, that of the Christian Church.

Mrs. Jennie Walker (Hedges) Wells, the first wife of Henry C. Wells, was a daughter of the late Buky Hedges, who was a prosperous farmer near West Liberty. The marital companionship of Mr. and Mrs. Wells continued forty-five years and was broken by the death of the loved wife and mother. The two children who survive her are Lena O. and Carl Walker. The son, the maiden name of whose wife was Berlin Underwood, is operating a dairy farm and business near the home place of his father, and his five children are: Virginia, Ira Emerson, Esther Carle, Henry Robert and Elvina Catherine.

On December 6, 1916, Henry C. Wells married Elizabeth Maude Smith, who had been for twelve years a successful kindergarten teacher at Washington and Beaver, Pennsylvania. She is a daughter of John E. Smith, a representative farmer of Brooke County, and is a great-niece of the late Dr. Edward Smith, who was one of the able, honored and loved physicians of this section of West Virginia for many years.

EDWARD SMITH, M. D., gave nearly sixty years to the practice of his profession in Brooke County, where he passed his entire life and where he was a scion of an honored pioneer family that was here founded when this section was little more than a frontier wilderness. His father, William Smith, from New Jersey, here established the family home in 1796, and here reclaimed a farm from the forest wilds, this ancestral homestead having continued in the possession of the Smith family for more than a century. Adequate record concerning this influential pioneer family is given below, in the personal sketch of Edward M. Smith.

Doctor Smith was born on the old home farm and early gained his share of pioneer experience as a farm worker. He made good use of such educational advantages as were here offered, and thereafter broadened his intellectual ken by private study and reading and by his preliminary discipline in preparing himself for his chosen profession. After becoming a physician and surgeon of marked skill he continued to reside on the farm and follow his profession many years. He then removed to Wellsburg, the county seat, and later he established his home at West Liberty, where he died at a venerable age. In his profession he had a high sense of stewardship, and no labor or personal sacrifice was too great to deter him from ministering to those in affliction or distress, his genial presence and unflinching kindness, as well as his able professional service, having made him one of the most revered and loved men in Brooke County. He was a member of the Virginia House of Delegates at the time of the secession of West Virginia and the organization of a new state under this name. He was an implacable opponent of human slavery and had been a strong whig to the climacteric period culminating in the Civil war. He thus naturally became a local leader in the republican party, and he utilized his fine powers as a public speaker by doing vigorous campaign service for his party, his two sons having inherited much of his ability along this line. The son, Robert, became a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church and also president of a college in the State of Ohio. The son, Ebenezer, achieved success as a teacher and as a public speaker, and he likewise established his home in Ohio. Mrs. Hervey, a daughter of the Doctor, became the mother of Hon. Clay Henry Hervey, who attained to prominence as a teacher, lawyer and jurist in West Virginia and who served about sixteen years on the bench of the Circuit Court. He retained this position until his death, at the age of fifty-six years, and his sisters are still residents of Wellsburg.

In his character and achievement Doctor Smith honored his native county and state, and added new laurels to the family name.

EDWARD M. SMITH has been for nearly twenty consecutive years county assessor of Brooke County, and this fact affords ample evidence of the high estimate placed upon him in the county of which he is a native and a representative of an honored pioneer family.

On the old homestead farm of the Smith family, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Wellsburg, the county seat, Edward M. Smith was born August 2, 1863, a son of John E. and Permelia (Green) Smith. On the same ancestral homestead John E. Smith was born on the 12th of March, 1838, and he met a tragic death, November 30, 1917, when he was drowned in the Ohio River. He had attended church services, and in a terrific storm that was raging at the time when he left the church he became confused in directions and thus met his death, he having been a resident of Wellsburg during the last five years of his life. The old Green homestead farm, inherited by his wife, is now in the possession of their son, Edward M., the home of the family having there been maintained for many years. John E. Smith was a son of Andrew Smith, who was born on the same old homestead in 1802, a son of William Smith, who came from New Jersey in 1796 and secured the land on which he here settled in the following year, he having been somewhat more than thirty years old at the time. The land, 288 acres, was covered with timber, and the first domicile of the family was a log cabin, which William Smith later replaced with a commodious brick house erected on a hill and constituting one of the first brick structures in this section. This historic landmark continued as the farm home of the Smith family for fully a century and was finally destroyed by fire in 1914. The ancestral homestead later was sold to one not a member of the family. Andrew Smith married Jane Green, and as a successful and influential farmer he became the owner of a landed estate of 1,600 acres, for which he gave a farm to each of his children who attained to maturity. On his farm Andrew Smith introduced and bred the famous Plenapose horses, and one horse, which he sold for \$500, was later sold in Philadelphia for \$30,000. On the old Smith homestead farm the Pierces Run Stone Chapel was built in 1837, Andrew Smith having given the land for this purpose and having served as a trustee of the church until his death, when he was succeeded by his son, Andrew, Jr., who served until his death and who in turn was succeeded by Edward M. Smith, the immediate subject of this sketch. This ancient stone chapel is still in use and is one of the prosperous rural churches of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Brooke County. The liberality of the early and later members of this church is betokened by the fact that the little edifice was gladly opened for the services of other religious denominations. Andrew Smith, Sr., passed his entire life on the old homestead and died at the age of eighty-one years, his wife having passed away seven years previously. William, eldest of the children, continued his residence in Brooke County until his death, at an advanced age; Sarah, who died at the age of ninety years, was the wife of Nathan Hunter, their four children having died young; Rose became the wife of Job Castner, and after the Civil war they removed to St. Charles County, Missouri, where they passed the remainder of the lives; Mary Ann married John Hunter, and two of the sons became clergymen of the Methodist Church. Reuben Andrew Smith Hunter being now a resident of St. Petersburg, Florida, and Rev. James J. being a resident of the State of Wyoming; John E., father of the subject of this sketch, was the fifth of the children born to his parent. He gave his entire life to constructive farm enterprise, as he was loyal and liberal as a citizen. He was not a church member, but gave financial support to churches of various denominations. He commanded unqualified popular esteem and was one of the venerable native sons of the county at the time of his death in 1917, as previously noted. His widow will celebrate her eightieth birthday anniversary in 1922. She likewise was born and reared in Brooke County, the farm on which she was born having been land granted to a member of the Lucas family, who came here before the arrival of the first representative of the Smith family, a member of the Lucas family having married a Green and the property having thus come into possession of the parents of Mrs. Smith. Of the children of John E. and Permelia (Green) Smith seven attained maturity, and the number the subject of this sketch is the eldest; Frank E., who became a successful business man and the owner of valuable real estate at Wellsburg, died in that city at forty-nine years; Elizabeth M. is the wife of Henry Clark Wells, who is individually mentioned on other pages of this work; John E., as a boy became associated with the meat-market business of his brother Frank, at Wellsburg, where he still is engaged in this business; Miss Catherine remains with her venerable mother; Pearl Virginia, a talented musician who has had three years of musical study in Germany, is the wife of Alfred L. Cochran, of Rochester, New York; Robert W. has long been identified with the Atlas Glass Company.

Edward M. Smith, who owns the fine old Green homestead farm and has made the place known as the stage of vigorous and successful agricultural and live-stock enterprise, has here maintained his home from the time of his birth, his early education having been acquired in the schools of his native county. He is now serving his fifth term, of four years each, as county assessor, and, as matter of course, he maintains his official headquarters at the courthouse at Wellsburg. He is a stalwart in the local camp of the republican party. At the age of twenty-eight years Mr. Smith was so injured in a railroad accident at Wheeling as to necessitate the amputation of his left arm and thereafter he supplemented his education by attending the West Liberty Normal School. He was a successful teacher for some time thereafter, and since 1896 he has been active in political work and in official service in his home unity. He and his family reside on the home farm, and that community he is a trustee of the old Stone Chapel Methodist Church, as previously noted.

Mr. Smith wedded Miss Mina Forse, who was born in Brooke County, but who was reared in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. They have five children: Emory (assistant county assessor under his father), David F., Edward M., Jr., Mariana V. and John E. III.

HON. LEE OTT was the first and has been the only state compensation commissioner of West Virginia, and it is fitting only a consensus of opinion to say that the admirable workings of the Compensation Act and the official administration created thereby had been primarily due to the exceptional executive ability, the broad vision and unselfish interest of Mr. Ott.

West Virginia was the seventh state in the Union to put compensation laws into effect, though such laws had been enforced in European countries for years. Similar legislation has since been enacted by nearly all the states of the Union. These compensation laws to a large degree supply the object of old liability insurance and substitute a process of orderly administration for the old system of damage suits and other costly litigation. When a candidate for Governor in 1912, H. D. Hatfield incorporated into his personal platform a plank advocating the passage of such a compensation law. The first law providing for the Public Service Commission was in the nature of a compromise and faulty in many directions. The amended law providing for the office of state compensation commissioner became effective in May, 1915, and the law was again amended in 1919. The present law and system are regarded as among the very best found in operation in any of the states. It is the duty of the state compensation commissioner to administer the compensation fund as created and provided for by these laws.

Mr. Ott has had a life-long and very sincere and heartfelt interest in the welfare of miners and their families, the class that is most largely benefited by the compensation laws of West Virginia, since coal mining is the state's greatest industry. He was a leader in having enacted the present compensation law, and in order to constitute himself a reliable reference authority to the legislators who had the responsibility for the legislation he made a thorough study of the compensation laws of Belgium, Germany, England and other European countries as well as those already in force in the United States. After the passage of the original legislation Governor Hatfield appointed him a member of the Public Service Commission on July 19, 1913, and he was chairman of that body until June 30, 1915, when he was again appointed and express choice of Governor Hatfield he became state compensation commissioner. His first term expired in June, 1921, and Governor Morgan then reappointed him for a second term of six years.

Mr. Ott was born at Hopewell, Bedford County, Pennsylvania, January 5, 1859, son of John and Liddie (Weimer) Ott. He acquired a common school education, spent his early life on a farm, and at the age of sixteen went to work in the mines of his home county in Pennsylvania. He worked as a miner and in various positions in mines leading up to mine foreman, superintendent and general manager. In the meantime he took a course in mining engineering, and until he was induced to accept public office mining and mine operation were his sole business. He came to West Virginia in June, 1898, being appointed superintendent of the Thomas plant of the Davis Coal & Coke Company, filling that position until April, 1900. At that time he was transferred as superintendent to the Elk Garden mines, but returned to Thomas November 1, 1907, as general superintendent of all the mines of the Davis Coal & Coke Company, having charge of the twenty-nine mines of this corporation in Randolph, Tucker, Grant, Barbour and Mineral counties. Under his management these mines and coke ovens were brought to a fine state of efficiency and economical production, and he also had charge of the great improvements inaugurated by the corporation. It was therefore a genuine sacrifice financially and otherwise when Mr. Ott was induced to become compensation commissioner, and in time it was one of the best moves made by Governor Hatfield in his vigorous administration of the state.

For many years Mr. Ott has been actively identified with business and enterprise, particularly in the eastern section of the state. He is now president of the English Ott Lumber Company of Charleston, lumber manufacturers with a lumber mill in Bland County, Virginia. He has been a director of the Davis National Bank of Piedmont.

Under his wise and skillful administration the State Compensation Department has been a source of genuine benefit to the miners and their families. When the present compensation law was amended in 1915 there was a liability deficit of $795,000 in the compensation fund, due to the inadequate provisions of the first law. By October, 1919, Mr. Ott had been enabled to bring about such changes and improvements in the law and its operation that there was an actual surplus of something over $750,000. The compensation to injured persons had increased, and up to the fall of 1921 there is a pension pay roll of $85,000 a month. Under the direction of the office more than $5,000,000 have been paid in lost claims. When working conditions are normal in the state this office handles about 100 accidents per day, with a total pay roll for compensation premiums (medical and funeral service, etc.), of about $225,000 per month. There are on the pay roll today 1,400 widows and about 3,700 children under the age of fifteen.

Mr. Ott is a member of the executive committee of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards, is an official of the affiliation board of the Coal Mining Institute of America, and a member of the executive board of the West Virginia Coal Mining Institute. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, being a life member of Logan Lodge No. 490 of Altoona, Pennsylvania, and his Consistory and Shrine affiliations are at Wheeling. He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Charleston. He has always been a republican, but his chief interest in politics has been in the activities and the office already described. Mr. Ott married Miss Elizabeth Jenkins, of Pennsylvania.

GUY ALLEN SHUTTLEWORTH, a veteran of the Spanish-American and Philippine wars, and postmaster at Nutter Fort (Norwood), is a member of a family of distinction in Harrison County, and his own career since he left the army has involved some active interests in the business life of the community.

Mr. Shuttleworth was born on a farm in Harrison County, July 3, 1879, son of Samuel Adams and Martha Elizabeth (Stuart) Shuttleworth. His father's birthplace was the sheriff's residence in Harrison County. At that time the grandfather, Nottley Shuttleworth was sheriff. The mother of Guy A. Shuttleworth was born in Barbour County, West Virginia. Her father, Robert Stuart, was a native of Old Virginia. Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Shuttleworth is now eighty-two years of age, lives at Romines Mills in Harrison County, and her home has been in the same locality there for over sixty-eight years. For a period of forty-five years the leading merchant at Romines Mills was the late Samuel Adams Shuttleworth, who died there in 1903 at the age of seventy-eight. He was a very capable business man, and besides his store had farm interests. He was deeply interested in the public welfare on political affairs, though he never held a political office, was a republican voter, and of his twelve children nine are still living.

Guy A. Shuttleworth spent his early youth at Romines Mills, attended public school there and for two years was a student in the West Virginia University. He was not yet eighteen when the Spanish-American war broke out and he volunteered and soon afterward entered the regular army service, and had a service record of six years to his credit before he received his discharge. For two years of this time he was in the Philippine Islands. Mr. Shuttleworth came out of the army with the rank of sergeant, and after a brief visit at the old homestead and a period of work on the farm, he removed to Clarksburg and for several years was active in the mercantile business. His home since his marriage has been at Norwood or Nutter Fort Post Office, and in July, 1921, he was commissioned postmaster there.

Like his father he has always been a staunch republican in politics. He is an Odd Fellow and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Shuttleworth married in 1916 Miss Rosa A. Kester. Their two children are named Jack Carr and Martha Louise Shuttleworth. Mrs. Shuttleworth is a daughter of William Granville and Louise E. (Carr) Kester. Her father was born in Harrison County, March 30, 1854, son of William J. and Sarah N. (Nutter) Kester, natives of the same county. The paternal grandfather of William G. Kester was Peter Kester, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was founder of the Kester family in Harrison County. Jacob C. Nutter, maternal grandfather of William G. Kester was a Harrison County pioneer, and Nutter Fort was named in honor of this family.

Louise E. (Carr) Kester, mother of Mrs. Shuttleworth, was born in Harrison County, a daughter of James Madison and Elizabeth (Cost) Carr.

FRANK C. SHRIVER. The Monongahela Supply Company, of which he is president and general manager, and several other corporations in which he is an official, represent the important business relations of Frank C. Shriver to the commercial life of Morgantown and vicinity. His business career covers only about twenty years and he has achieved a successful position in affairs in advance of most men of his years. He had a good inheritance, and his ancestral history connects his family with pioneer times in this part of West Virginia.

His family record begins with Abram Shriver who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, September 6, 1768. March 31, 1791, he married Mary Keckley, who was born in Frederick County, April 19, 1770. Of the ten children of these parents the first three were born in Frederick County, Virginia, and the others in Monongahela County in what is now West Virginia. The record is: Catherine, born April 16, 1792, was married to Jacob Horner and they settled in Monongahela County; Adam, born September 7, 1793; Elias, born August 9, 1795; Jacob, born in July, 1797, the first of the children born in Monongahela County; Christiana, born April 12, 1799, became the wife of Michael Core of Monongahela County; Elizabeth, born April 5, 1800, was married to Ezekiel Morris; John, born April 30, 1801, and died in 1885, having married Sarah Morris; Benjamin, born May 27, 1805; Isaac, and Abraham.

Isaac Shriver, the ninth of these children, was born in Monongahela County, May 27, 1807, and died March 30, 1880. He married Minerva Sine, who was born in Monongahela County, February 2, 1820, daughter of Moses and Sarah (Kelley) Sine. She died October 1, 1899. The children of Isaac and wife were: William Henry, born May 8, 1840, was a Union soldier in the Third West Virginia Cavalry, spent six months as a prisoner in Libby prison and died April 27, 1920; Jasper Newton, born October 4, 1841; Elizabeth A., born July 8, 1844, became the wife of Titus Remley; Lee Roy; George W., born September 24, 1848; Moses L., born July 11, 1851; Mary J., born August 28, 1853, and died in 1908; Simon L., born March 24, 1856, now deceased; John L., born August 26, 1858, deceased; and Alfred, born December 2, 1860.

Lee Roy Shriver, father of Frank C. Shriver, was born June 24, 1846. In early life he was a farmer, later in the lumber business, but kept his home on the farm until 1910, when he removed to Morgantown. For the last fifteen years he has looked after a number of responsibilities and interests. He has secured the rights of way for a number of railroads, has bought and sold coal lands and to some extent has been interested in coal mining. He is justly credited with being a pioneer in the development of the coal resources of Monongahela County. He and his associates in the Scott Run Coal Company opened up the first mine in the Scott Run district, and to him as much as to any other individual is due the honor for this development. He has bought and sold more coal land in this district than any other and though now seventy-five years of age he is still a thorough business man, and on duty nearly every day. He was one of the promoters of the building of the Wheeling & Morgantown Railroad, a road that contributed in large measure to the growth of Morgantown and the county. For many years he has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Lee Roy Shriver married Margaret A. Clovis. They were the parents of three children, Ernest E., born November 13, 1867, now a partner in the Monongahela Supply Company of Morgantown; Alice, who was born July 8, 1869, and died January 14, 1870; and Frank C.

Frank Clovis Shriver was born on the Shriver farm near Wadestown, Battelle District of Monongalia County, November 8, 1881. He grew up on the farm, was educated in the public schools, and began his business career as a lumber merchant. Selling his lumber interests in 1911, in July, 1913, he was one of the organizers of the Monongahela Supply Company, Incorporated, and has since been president and general manager. This company started business in a modest way as manufacturers agents, at first occupied the basement of the Rightmeyer Building on the wharf. The trade and service rapidly expanded so that the company took the entire floor space of that building, and it is now known as Warehouse No. 1 of the company. In 1919 the company erected a three-story concrete building on Wall Street, known as Warehouse No. 2 and used principally for heavy machinery, and pipe. In 1921 the company took its next step in progress, establishing its manufacturing offices and retail stores in the business block at the corner of Front and Walnut streets, leasing this building from its owners, Frank C. and Ernest E. Shriver. The company was originally capitalized at $5,000. This capitalization has been raised successively to $25,000, to $50,000 and now to $100,000. The business is an extensive one, handling builders' supplies, mine, mill and farm machinery, and electric equipment. They have built up an extensive trade all over Monongalia, Preston, Marion, Harrison and part of Barbour counties, West Virginia, and portions of Greene and Fayette counties in Pennsylvania.

While the prospering affairs of this company receive the greater part of his time and attention Mr. Shriver also president of the Marteny Coal Company, vice president of the Shriver Coal Company, secretary of the Scott Run Coal Company, and a director in the Labor Building and Loan Association. Socially he is affiliated with the Elks, Knights of Pythias, and the Country Club, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club. 1902 Mr. Shriver married Pearl Coburn, daughter of the late C. C. Coburn of Monongalia County. They have one son, Leroy, born February 14, 1904.

THOMAS J. MAHAN, who is now living retired at Follarsbee, Brooke County, West Virginia, a town situated on the old homestead farm which came into the possession of the Mahan family more than a century ago, is one of the venerable and honored citizens of his native county and well merits recognition in this history.

In the year 1814 William Mahan, who was born in Wales, in 1804, came, as a lad of ten years, with his parents to the frontier wilds of what is now Brooke County, West Virginia, where the family home was established, the embryonic farm which became the site of the present vigorous industrial town of Follarsbee, the original owner of the property having been a pioneer named Wells. Of this ancestral farmstead, reclaimed and developed by representatives of the Mahan family, William Mahan continued to reside until his death, at the age of seventy-five years. His wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Jones, was born in England, and she survived him by several years. On the site of their old home, on the bank of the Ohio River, now stands the substantial brick residence that was erected by Thomas Mahan in 1865. The father of William Mahan was a soldier in the War of 1812, his service having been principally at Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, Maryland. Of the four sons and five daughters of William and Nancy (Jones) Mahan the eldest of the sons was Thomas, father of the subject of this sketch; William, Jr., was a resident of Brooke County until his death and attained a venerable age, he having developed and owned one of the largest and best orchards in the county; John lived in Ha-ek County until his death, when advanced in years; and James was a resident of Missouri at the time of his death. Thomas Mahan bought the interests of the other heirs and came into full ownership of the old homestead farm, comprising more than three hundred acres. He erected the brick house now occupied by Follansbee Brothers as an ice building, and there he continued to reside until his death, at the age of seventy-six years. In his farm operations he gave special attention to the raising of sheep, and was one of the substantial and honored citizens of the county. He married Judith Brenneman, daughter of Christian Brenneman, who came from Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and established his residence near the present village of Arroyo, Hancock County, in 1785. Mrs. Mahan was born and reared in this county, and here she died at the venerable age of ninety-six years. She was a woman of fine mentality, a reader and student, and a most gracious and lovable personality, she having been a most zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as was also her husband. Of the children the daughter, Elizabeth, is the widow of James Hamilton and is a resident of Brooke County; Emily is the widow of William Fisher and resides at Follansbee; Nancy died when a young woman; Barbara, who died at the age of seventy years, was the wife of William Hervey, he having been a successful farmer near Wellsburg, Brooke County; William was a farmer in Brooke County at the time of his death; Richard, who was a soldier of the Union in the Civil war, was a sergeant in the Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, took part in numerous engagements and was held a prisoner of war at Danville for seven months, before having been a merchant at Steubenville, Ohio, but having passed the closing period of his life near the old home in Brooke County; Thomas J., of this review, is the youngest son; and Herman is president of the Citizens Bank at Follansbee.

On the ancestral homestead in Brooke County, Thomas J. Mahan was born November 26, 1846, and his early educational advantages included a course in Mount Union College at Alliance, Ohio. Thereafter he became associated with his brother, Herman, in the management of the old home farm, and their progressiveness was shown in their setting out of a fine apple orchard of fifty acres. Mr. Mahan has kept pace with the march of progress in this section, has been a successful dealer in real estate and has erected several houses at Follansbee. In 1879 he here erected his present attractive residence, before the town of Follansbee was thought of. He has served as president of the Board of Education, and had the distinction of being the first mayor of Follansbee, an office in which he served two terms. He was actively identified with the organization of the village and has been one of the loyal aids in its development and upbuilding, especially in connection with providing adequate water, sewer and electric-lighting systems. In 1903 the town of Follansbee was platted on 200 acres of land sold by Thomas J. and Herman Mahan to the Follansbee Brothers of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who here established a plant for the dipping of steel plate. At first Follansbee Brothers employed about one hundred men, and the company now gives employment to fully one thousand. The Follansbee Company has developed a large and important industrial enterprise, with a modern manufacturing plant at Follansbee, has here erected many houses and has urgently encouraged employes in becoming owners of homes a second mill having been established by the company at Toronto, Ohio. The brothers, Benjamin and William U. Follansbee, have been valuable acquisitions to Brooke County and are numbered among the representative "captains of industry" in this section of the state.

In 1919 Mr. Mahan, as nominee on the republican ticket, was elected to the Lower House of the State Legislature, where he was assigned membership on various important committees, including those on cities and towns and agriculture. He has frequently been a delegate to the state conventions of his party, he was active in patriotic service in the World war period and is still continuing his service as chairman of the local Red Cross. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is a trustee in the same. They were charter members of this church in Follansbee.

At the age of thirty-one years Mr. Mahan wedded Miss Miriam Browning, daughter of Lender and Elizabeth (Steeleman) Browning, she having been born on her father's farm near the old homestead of the Mahan family. In conclusion is given brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Mahan: Mabel is the wife of F. E. Watson, of Follansbee; Bessie Allen became the wife of Harry C. Irwin and died at the age of thirty-four years; Cornelia is the wife of John Brady, of St. Petersburg, Florida; Judith B. died at the age of nineteen years; Lucille is the wife of James Banfield, superintendent of the Follansbee Mill at Toronto, Ohio; Elizabeth Browning is the wife of D. R. Rooke, of Steubenville, Ohio; Thomas Wesley resides at Follansbee, as does also Orlando Stewart, the youngest son, who here conducts an automobile garage.

HERMAN B. MAHAN, president of the Citizens Bank at Follansbee, Brooke County, was born in the old family homestead that was later replaced by a brick residence that is still standing and is now in the village of Follansbee, which is situated on a part of the old homestead farm of the Mahan family—property that has been in the possession of the family for more than a century. Of this sterling and influential pioneer family detailed record is given above, in the personal sketch of Thomas J. Mahan, an elder brother of Herman B., these two brothers having become associated in the ownership of the old home farm, a part of which they sold to the Follansbee Brothers as the site of the present vigorous little City of Follansbee. Here Herman B. Mahan was born November 6, 1852, and here he was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm, the while he profited by the advantages of the schools of the locality and period. He and his brother, Thomas J., made the old home farm the stage of progressive and successful agricultural and live-stock enterprises, besides there planting an orchard of fifty acres, now one of the largest and best in this part of the state, with many choice varieties of apples. The brothers have been actively concerned also in the development and upbuilding of Follansbee, where the pleasant home of Herman B. is situated on a part of the ancestral estate of the family. At Follansbee Mr. Mahan has erected several houses and has otherwise been active in the real-estate business. He was one of the organizers and is now president of the Citizens Bank at Follansbee, of which specific mention is made in following sketch. He is a republican in political allegiance, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Mahan married Miss Martha Everett, daughter of Thomas Everett, of Wellsburg, and the two children of this union are: Herman Lee, who is assistant cashier of the Citizens Bank, and is a graduate of Bethany College; and Walter E., a student in the University of West Virginia.

THE CITIZENS BANK at Follansbee, Brooke County, was founded in 1906, about three years after this thriving little city had been established, and it has played an important part in the stable development and advancement of the community. Operations were based on a capital stock of $25,000, and the original Board of Directors of the new institution had the following personnel: William Banfield, of Follansbee; Herman B. Mahan, now president of the bank; and W. W. Beal, John T. Douglass, H. C. Meyer, J. S. Liggett and F. A. Chapman, all of Wellsburg, the county seat. The membership of the directorate in 1922 is as here noted: Herman B. Mahan, president; Charles L. Wilson, vice president; J. V. Balch, cashier; H. L. Mahan, assistant cashier; William Banfield, L. A. Diller, J. W. Walker, and F. A. Chapman. H. C. Meyer was the first president of the bank and continued as its chief executive until July, 1913, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Herman B. Mahan, who had previously been, from the beginning, its vice president. The first cashier, C. B. Crawford, continued his service until 1915, when he was succeeded by Frank Zihler. Upon the death of Mr.

Zihler in 1919 J. V. Balch was chosen cashier, an office of which he has continued the efficient and popular incumbent. The Citizens Bank now has resources of $650,000, it has paid regular dividends to its stockholders and its affairs have been carefully and successfully ordered along conservative lines. In 1912 the institution erected its present modern and attractive building, the appointments and equipment of which are of the best standard, and include a burglar-alarm system. Of the president of this substantial bank individual record is given in preceding sketch.

C. P. FORTNEY is a civil engineer by profession, and in April, 1921, was selected by Governor Morgan as chairman of the State Road Commission of West Virginia. The two other members of this commission are N. Price Whitaker and E. B. Stephenson. While the subject of roads is dealt with in much detail by Doctor Callahan in the historical volume, something may be said here as to the official interest taken by the state in the subject.

The beginning of state road supervision dates from 1872 at the adoption of the new constitution, when all road work was turned over to the respective counties, except that of the New Cumberland Road, which was in the hands of the Board of Public Works. The first attempt at the codification of road laws came in 1906. The following year a highway inspector was named, who worked under the Board of Agriculture and in close association with the State University. In 1909 a commission was provided for, and Governor Glascock appointed Charles F. Light, Edward D. Baker and Ray C. Feter. A levy of 1 cent was raised as state aid to roads. Two years later the law was modified, and funds which had accumulated to the amount of something over $226,000 were distributed to the counties without provision as to its ultimate use. No accounting was ever made of this money.

In 1913 a State Road Bureau was created, Governor Henry D. Hatfield naming A. D. Williams as chief road engineer, with George D. Cortland and J. W. Lynch, associates. No provision was made for financing their work except from university funds. Road schools about that time were established as part of the university extension work.

In 1917 a bi-partisan board of two members was created, with C. P. Fortney as chairman and James K. Monroe as secretary and treasurer. In 1921 the membership was increased to three, permitting the minority party to be represented by one member. This commission organized with a division engineer in each of the five divisions of the state, and with three departments—road construction and maintenance, autos and traffic, audits and purchase. Bonds to the amount of $15,000,000 were authorized, though only $50,000 could be disposed of at one time. The road fund also has the vehicle license fees, which now aggregate about $2,000,000 a year. A state system of road construction has been adopted, and at this writing contracts to the amount of about $5,000,000 have been let.

C. P. Fortney has been closely associated with highway developments for a number of years. He was born in Harrison County, June 30, 1879. His grandfather, Jacob D. Fortney, moved to Harrison County from Preston County. His father, E. R. Fortney, has spent his life in Harrison County as a farmer. C. P. Fortney attended preparatory school at Fairmont, and graduated as a civil engineer from West Virginia University in 1907. In 1909 he married Jessie Jenkins, of Pennsylvania. They were classmates in the university. They have four children.

JOHN H. HENDERSON, osteopathic physician, president of the State Osteopathic Association, has been in practice for about fifteen years at Charleston. His has been a distinctive service in the medical profession, and out of his experience and studies he has written several valuable books on health and right living.

He was born in Lincoln County, West Virginia, in 1877, and acquired a thorough academic education, but he is a man whose insatiable intellectual curiosity would never be satisfied and he is a student now and has covered an astonishingly wide range of subjects both within and without his profession. He graduated in 1905 from the New York School of Osteopathy, soon located at St. Albans Kanawha County, but remained there only a brief time when he established his permanent home in Charleston. Doctor Henderson since graduation has taken numerous post-graduate courses in medical colleges of nearly all the recognized schools, including the allopathic and homeopathic, and through hard study and investigation has acquired and put into practice an exhaustive knowledge of the human body, its ailments and their treatment. Both as a physician and as a citizen Doctor Henderson has earned exceptional esteem in Charleston. His home is on the south side, one of the beautiful places of the city.

He was elected president of the West Virginia Osteopathic Association at the annual convention in Huntington in October, 1921.

He married Miss Frances Kathleen Henley, a native of Kanawha County. Her father, the late C. W. Henle, achieved substantial fame as a tunnel builder and railroad contractor, and did most of the tunnel construction on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad in West Virginia.

Doctor Henderson devoted several years of hard study to the chemistry of the body. One of the results was his discovery of a method of isolation of the various elements of the blood and a method of treatment by which he can supply these elements to the person in whose blood any of the elements may be lacking, as in cases of anemia and in brain, nervous, muscular and bone disorders. Medical authorities have pronounced it a distinctive scientific achievement.

Doctor Henderson chose a profession as a means of satisfying his great ambition for human service, and his ambition has led him into many activities far beyond the scope of the average physician. He has written and published a number of books on the physical and mental life that afflict the race, with full outlines and directions for their treatment and cure, accompanied by illuminating illustrations. The first four of these books bear the following titles: "Apoplexy, Paralysis, High Blood Pressure and Nervous Diseases, Prevention and Cure;" "The Science of Food Selection;" "How to Eliminate Uric Acid Toxins and Body Poisons;" "How to Adjust Mental Maladjustments." These books are all small in size, the subject matter brief and concise, are written in the plainest and most understandable English, with complete avoidance of technical or scientific words and phrases, thus making the available for use and profit by all persons possessed of an ordinary education. His work on Mental Maladjustment is undoubtedly the only one that has ever made the psychopathic sciences understandable and of real benefit to persons of ordinary education.

G. F. DAUGHERTY who has to his credit a veteran service as a locomotive engineer with the Norfolk and Western Railway, was called in the spring of 1921 by appointment of Governor Morgan to the duties of state commissioner of labor, with headquarters at Charleston. He has charge of the Bureau of Labor and is ex-officio commissioner of weights and measures. The State Bureau of Labor has been in existence officially for many years, but only within recent years has it become a vital and important part of the state government. This development of the office itself is directly due to the remarkable development of the state's industries, manufacturing. The bureau has charge of the inspection service over factories, mercantile establishments, mills and workshops, looks after all the measures providing safeguards and sanitary precautions for workers, and also has the enforcement of the child labor law. Under Commissioner Daugherty are five factory inspectors and two sealers of weights and measures besides a numerous force of minor employees. The responsibilities of the bureau have been greatly enlarged through the enactment of the new child labor law of the state in 1919. This child labor law is directly modeled after an largely conforms to the Federal law on the same subject.

Mr. Daugherty was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, in 1869, son of Rev. David and Nannie (Moore) Daugherty, of Irish and Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father, who was a Methodist minister, was born in the Valley of Virginia.

J. P. Harty.

nia, his grandfather having come from Ireland to that isle. The Moores are an old family of Virginia, having fought in the Indian wars in Colonial times.

G. F. Daugherty was reared on a farm, but his entire life service has been as a railroad man and with one company, the Norfolk & Western. Before he reached his majority he was doing duty as a brakeman, subsequently a locomotive fireman for three years, and in 1897 was promoted to locomotive engineer. He had filled that post of duty continuously for nearly twenty-four years when he was called to the state capitol as commissioner of labor, but still holds his seniority rights as locomotive engineer for a company. Since 1892 his home has been at Bluefield, and his family still live there, though his official headquarters are in the state capitol. All of his railroad service has been on the Pocahontas Division of the Norfolk & Western, the division headquarters being at Bluefield. For several years before becoming a commissioner of labor he had charge of one of the great electrically driven locomotives of the Norfolk & Western.

Mr. Daugherty for many years has been a prominent member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. He is a loyal Arch Mason, Knight of Pythias and Elk and a member of the Methodist Church.

He married Miss Mary Walker, also a native of Virginia. Their six sons are James S., Hubert A., William C., Elmo, Leslie and Paul. All the people of the state as well as Mr. Daugherty find reasons for pride in the record of his three oldest sons, all in the service of their country in France during the World war. Hubert and William were hunters after America entered the war with Germany. James S. had been in the Regular Army for about three years previously, was on the Mexican border during 1916, and was a member of General Pershing's bodyguard in the punitive expedition into Mexico in the fall of that year. Mr. Daugherty is one of the comparatively few men in the state who had three sons represented overseas in the late war.

CARD J. PATTERSON finds ample demand upon his time and attention in the discharging of his several scholastic and executive functions. At West Liberty, Ohio County, he is one of the oldest of the state normal schools.

West Virginia, he is principal of the high school and secretary of the Board of Education, besides which he is doing effective service also as superintendent of the schools of Liberty District.

Mr. Patterson was born in Belmont County, Ohio, November 15, 1894, and is a foster son of Harrison and Lovina Patterson, in whose home he was reared with all the loving solicitude and advantageous privileges that could be accorded to the most devoted of parents, with the result that he owes to them most loyal filial affection and has attributed to their teachings and high ideals much of the success and advancement which he has won in later years. The home of the Patterson family was at McMechen, West Virginia, and there the foster son acquired his preliminary education at the public schools. That he made good use of his advantages is shown by the fact that when he was fifteen years old he proved himself eligible for and was admitted to the West Virginia State Normal School at West Liberty. It was ambition, even at that time, was to fit himself for teaching, and to defray his expenses he worked in factories and on farms, in mills and at other employment that would aid him in completing his education. He was graduated in 1915 at West Liberty Normal School as a member of the class of 1915, and has since been actively engaged in educational work in the same community. He is, in 1922, serving a second year as principal of the West Liberty High School, has been for two years secretary of the local Board of Education, and about two years also have marked his administration as district superintendent of schools for Liberty District, in which connection he has supervision of eleven schools and fifteen teachers. As principal of the high school he has two assistant teachers, the enrollment of pupils numbering thirty-five. A new high-school building is under construction and will be completed in the spring or summer of 1922, with modern equipment and six classrooms. Mr. Patterson is identified with various educational associations, including the West Virginia State Teachers Association; he is a past master of Liberty Lodge, No. 26, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in the Scottish Rite of the same time-honored fraternity he has received the thirty-second degree in the Consistory at Wheeling, where also he is a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine. His wife, whose maiden name was Marjorie Smyth, is a daughter of W. B. Smyth, of Morgantown, and she was prior to her marriage a student in the West Liberty State Normal School. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have two children, Robert Bruce and Carl J., Jr.

CHARLES L. WILSON, who is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Builders Supply Company at Follansbee, Brooke County, and who resides at Wellsburg, the county seat, is one of the progressive and representative business men of his native county.

The organization of the Builders Supply Company, in 1904, was virtually coincident with the founding of the town of Follansbee, which was platted in the preceding year. Mr. Wilson has been secretary, treasurer and general manager of the company from the time of its incorporation, and the concern has been one of the important functions in connection with the development and upbuilding of the now thriving little industrial city of Follansbee. The company handles all kinds of building materials, controls a substantial local trade and gives employment to an adequate corps of assistants to the manager.

Mr. Wilson was born on a farm in Cross Creek District, Brooke County, in the year 1879, and is a son of George L. and Rachel (Park) Wilson, both likewise natives of Brooke County, the Wilson family having been established in the pioneer days, and Jonathan Wilson, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, having been a representative farmer and citizen from his young manhood until his death, at advanced age. Robert Park, maternal grandfather of Charles L. Wilson, came to America from Londonderry, Ireland, about the year 1797, and became one of the very early settlers in Brooke County, where he became actively identified with the operation of flatboats used in transporting produce and merchandise up and down the Ohio River. Later he engaged in farm enterprise in Brooke County, and he passed the rest of his life on this farm and attained to the patriarchal age of ninety-one years. His old homestead later became the property of George L. Wilson, and it was on this farm that the latter continued his productive activities until 1900. His death occurred in 1915, at the age of sixty-three years, and his widow died at the age of sixty-four years. It was on this old homestead that Charles L. Wilson was born and reared, and he there remained until he was twenty-one years of age, his early education having been gained in the local schools and supplemented by a course in the high school at Wellsburg and by attending a business college. His first business venture was in the establishing of a feed store at Wellsburg, and this enterprise he continued until he became associated with Robert Scott, J. M. Walker, J. S. Liggett and George L. Wilson, his father, in organizing the Builders Supply Company of Follansbee. The stock of the company is now held largely by local men and J. M. Brady is president of the corporation. Mr. Wilson was one of the original stockholders of the Citizens Bank of Follansbee, and had served as a director of the same prior to becoming its vice president in 1910, when Herman B. Mahan, former incumbent of this office, became president of the institution. Mr. Wilson is a democrat in politics, and in the Masonic fraternity he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite.

Mr. Wilson married Miss Margaret Bucy, daughter of Erasmus Bucy, of Wellsburg, and the two children of this union are George and Margaret.

ARTHUR LANGHANS has been a resident of Wheeling twenty years, going to that city from the Pittsburgh District, where he spent his early life. The name Langhans is associated all over the Wheeling District with the floral trade, and he has developed what is probably the largest retail flower business in this part of the Upper Ohio Valley.

Mr. Langhans was born in the City of Allegheny, now a part of Greater Pittsburgh, July 1, 1876. His grandfather, William Langhans, spent his life in and around the City of Berlin, Germany, and for many years was actively identified with educational work there. He died at the age of sixty-eight. Herman Langhans, father of Arthur, was born at Berlin in 1837 and came to the United States about 1859. He possessed a liberal education and for a number of years was a professor in private schools in Allegheny, Pennsylvania. Ill health eventually forced him out of this profession, and he went into the dry goods business, but for the last ten years of his life was connected with the Equitable Life Insurance Company of Pittsburgh. He died at Allegheny in 1905. He was a democratic voter until Cleveland's second election and thereafter voted as a republican. He was always very diligent in the performance of his duties as a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife, Mary Hallstein, was born at Zelinople in Butler County, Pennsylvania, in 1844, and died at Allegheny in 1886. She became the mother of seven children: Harry J., an artist who died at Pittsburgh at the age of twenty-two; Theodore P., secretary and part owner of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Company; Arthur; Hulda, wife of Alfred Bechtold, a representative of the Maenskey Register Company, living at Bellevue, Pennsylvania; Dora, wife of Edward Taylor, a machinist at Statesville, North Carolina; Rev. Walter S., a Lutheran minister in Pennsylvania; Allen M., an oil operator at Warren, Pennsylvania.

Arthur Langhans acquired a public-school education at Allegheny, graduating from high school in 1892. The year following he spent in the Pittsburgh office of R. G. Dun & Company, and for six years was shipping clerk for the Kaufmann Department Stores Company. With the benefit of this general business training Mr. Langhans entered the flower business as a retail florist at Steubenville, Ohio, remaining there for three years, and in 1901 sought a larger field at Wheeling. In this city he established his first retail flower shop at 1404 Market Street. He moved to a larger store at 1157 Market Street in 1905, and with the continued growth of his business he finally moved to 1217 Chapline Street, where he has a store and offices in which he directs the largest retail floral business in this part of the state. He employs as high as forty-two hands in the business. The freshest of flowers come from "Langhans the Florist," and shipments are made from his store to hundreds of towns around Wheeling. Mr. Langhans is also a director in the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company, is a republican, is a trustee of the First United Presbyterian Church of Wheeling and is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 5, F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E., the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Wheeling Country Club. During the Spanish-American war he was a member of the Pennsylvania State Guard and was mustered into service with the Naval Reserves. Mr. Langhans has a very attractive home on Hawthorne Court, Woodsdale, Wheeling. The house itself is one of the beautiful ones of that attractive residence suburb, but the distinctive features are the grounds and flower gardens maintained by Mr. Langhans.

In 1899, near Bellevue, Pennsylvania, Mr. Langhans married Adah Blanche Taylor, daughter of Samuel and Agnes M. (Oakley) Taylor, her mother still living at Bellevue, where her father died. He was a farmer. Mrs. Langhans finished her education in a business school.

EMMET L. BAILEY, mayor of Bluefield, can probably claim the distinction of being the oldest native son of that industrial and commercial city, and both as a business man and citizen has made a career that honors his birthplace. Mr. Bailey for a number of years was in the railroad service, until his manufacturing and other industrial interests demanded his entire attention. He is president of the Bailey Lumber Company and president of the Bluefield Garage Company.

His birth occurred within what is now the city limits of Bluefield, at Beaverpond Springs, April 20, 1865. His parents were Capt. John Madison and Sarah Antoinette (Kerr) Bailey. John M. Bailey was a native of Tazewell County, Virginia, and served throughout the entire Civil war in a Confederate Army, being captain of his company, and to his brothers lost their lives in the war. Captain Bailey was a prosperous farmer, but in later years lost his property through paying security debts. His death was due to an accident at Bluefield when a freight yard engine ran over him. He was active in politics as a democrat, and was a member of the Christian Church. His home was a second house erected in Bluefield. He was of English ancestry and of a very sturdy race of people. His wife, Sarah Antoinette Kerr, was born in Berlin, Germany, and was thirteen years of age when her family settled in Tazewell County, Virginia. She died in 1915, at the age of eighty-four. Of her ten children eight are living, Emmet L. being the sixth in age.

Emmet L. Bailey finished his education in Mulligan College near Johnson City, Tennessee, but left school at the age of sixteen to become clerk in a store at Lowell, West Virginia, on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. A year later he became a brakeman in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad between Radford and Pocahontas. Mr. Bailey was very competent in railroading, evidence of which is found in the fact that eight months after he became a brakeman he was promoted to freight conductor, and the years later was a passenger conductor on a run between Roanoke, Virginia, and Bluefield and from Bluefield to Kenova. He was conductor of the first passenger train run over the division between Bluefield and Kenova. At that time the operation of trains over this road was attended with difficulties and numerous hazards. He continued to work as a passenger conductor for twelve years and became personally known to a large part of the citizenship patrolling the road from Roanoke to Kenova, and is still referred to by them as Captain Bailey.

In 1898, while still in the service of the railroad, Mr. Bailey became a member of the partnership Suddith & Bailey, operating circular saw mills in Scott County, Virginia, and McDowell County, West Virginia. At one time the firm had three mills in operation in McDowell County, one in Scott County, while Mr. Bailey personally operated one in Mercer County. He gave up his position with the railroad in 1901 to give his entire time to his lumbering and other interests. Early in November, 1912, the Bailey Lumber Company was incorporated, of which he has since been president. The main plant of this company was erected on land belonging to Mr. Bailey at Bluefield. The plant is equipped with modern machinery, making up one of the most efficient lumbering plants in the southern part of West Virginia. The product comprises a large and important line of construction material. Only recently a large amount has been expended on new equipment and enlargement. Mr. Bailey is also president of the Bluefield Garage Company. He is a director of the Flat Top National Bank of Bluefield, of which he was one of the original organizers. He is also a director of the Bluefield Supply Company, of which he was also one of the organizers. This is a $500,000 corporation. In 1903 he assisted in organizing the Williamson Coal & Coke Company, and had an active part in its early management. He also opened the Suddith Mine at the Bailey Mine on Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky. Mr. Bailey sold his coal interests in 1920. Since 1903 he has been an influential factor in the building up of Bluefield, both from the material and civic point of view. He has had complete faith in the community where he was born, and his good citizenship has caused him to be urged many times for the post of mayor, but he declined the honor until recently. The City of Bluefield is to be congratulated on the able man it now has in charge of its municipal affairs.

June 20, 1893, Captain Bailey married Mabel Gertrude Kutz, daughter of James A. Kutz, of Allentown, Pennsylvania. Their four children are Paul H., Loraine, Glas and Richard. Mrs. Bailey and her children are members of the Lutheran Church, while he is affiliated with the Christian Church. He is a member of the Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter and Knight Templar Commandery of the Masons at Bluefield, West Virginia Consistory at Wheeling, and also the Shrine at Charleston. He still retains membership in the Order of Railway Conductors and is a member of the Kiwanis Club and Country Club.

ROBERT MILLIGAN ADDLEMAN during an incumbency of six years has made an impressive and dignified record as a judge of the First Judicial Circuit of West Virginia at Wheeling. Judge Addleman has allowed no large outside aspirations to interfere with his success within the strict field of the legal profession. He has practiced law at Wheeling a quarter of a century, and the official honors he has enjoyed have been only those for which members of the bar are qualified.

Judge Addleman was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, July 21, 1866. There were three Addleman brothers who came from Germany and settled in America shortly after the Revolutionary war. One of them became a resident of Pennsylvania, another of Ohio, and the third went still further west. Judge Addleman belongs to the Pennsylvania branch. His father, Solomon Addleman, was a lifelong resident of Greene County, where he was born in 1836 and died in 1906. He owned extensive farming interests, and throughout his farming career was a leader in the rural affairs of Southwestern Pennsylvania. He served as a member of the School Board, voted as a republican, and for many years was a faithful member of the Christian Church. He married Nancy Hill, who was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1841, and died in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1889. Of their children Elizabeth is the wife of James K. Gayman, a farmer of Washington County, Pennsylvania; Deedra, living in Washington County, is the widow of James R. Hawkins, a farmer; James Curtin, a farmer in Greene County; Thomas Stewart was a farmer and died in Greene County at the age of forty; Robert M. was the only son to take up a professional career; Ella, who died in Washington County at the age of thirty-five, was the wife of William Wise, a farmer still living in that county; Cora was accidentally killed at the age of fourteen; and another daughter died in infancy.

Robert M. Addleman spent his boyhood on a farm, enjoyed its healthful work and pastimes, attended rural schools, and finished his literary education with a year and a half in Waynesburg College in Pennsylvania and completed his junior year in Bethany College at Bethany, West Virginia. Mr. Addleman took his law course at the University of Michigan, graduating LL.B. in 1895. In the fall of the same year he came to Wheeling, where he soon won for himself a place of secure advantage in his profession, and where he was successfully engaged in general practice until his elevation to the bench. Judge Addleman had been in practice more than ten years before he accepted any of the public duties of the profession. From 1908 to 1912 he was city solicitor of Wheeling, and was the prosecuting attorney for Ohio County from 1912 to 1914. It was by appointment from Governor Henry D. Hatfield that he went on the bench as judge of the First Judicial Circuit of West Virginia. In the fall of 1916 he was elected by popular vote to fill out the unexpired term, and in November, 1920, was elected for a full term of eight years, this term expiring in December, 1928.

Judge Addleman is a well-known member of the Ohio County and State Bar associations. He is a republican, and in Masonry is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 5, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He also belongs to Wheeling Lodge No. 4, Knights of Pythias. His home is an attractive residence at Birch Lynn, Wheeling.

October 1, 1896, in Washington County, Pennsylvania, Judge Addleman married Miss Margaret Jobes, daughter of Rev. Alexander Campbell and Phoebe (Mitchell) Jobes, the latter deceased. Rev. Mr. Jobes is a retired minister of the Christian Church and lives with Judge and Mrs. Addleman. Mrs. Addleman is a graduate of Bethany College.

RICHARD ROBERTSON has been a resident of Wheeling more than seventy years. As a youth he learned the printer's trade, for a long time was identified with the printing business and at times had a part in the fortunes of several newspaper ventures. Mr. Robertson is now practically retired, though still financially interested in one or two banking organizations.

He was born at Hagerstown, Maryland, November 7, 1845. His grandfather was of Irish descent, spent most of his life at Hagerstown, and enjoyed a great reputation as an earnest and eloquent minister of the Presbyterian Church. He finally came to Wheeling, where he died. William Robertson father of Richard, was born at Hagerstown, where for a number of years he was a merchant, and in 1849 moved to Wheeling and added his enterprise to the mercantile interests of the city about the time the first railroad came. He conducted a prosperous store at Market and old Union streets. He died at Wheeling at the age of sixty years. He was an old-line whig in politics, filled the office of alderman in Wheeling for a number of terms, and was a very liberal contributing member of the First Presbyterian Church. He married Elizabeth Clark, a native of Hagerstown, who died at Wheeling. They had a large family of twelve children, and several of the sons became soldiers during the Civil war: John, who was a Union soldier, left this community soon after the war and was never heard of again by his family; Mary, his twin sister, never married and died at Wheeling; William went into the Confederate Army, was killed in the Virginia Valley early in the war; James, a Union soldier and a mill worker in civilian life, died at Wheeling soon after the war; Clagget, a Union soldier, died at Wheeling at the age of thirty-five; Richard; Edward, twin brother of Richard, was also a printer, had a record as a Union soldier and died at Wheeling; Harry, a mill worker, died at Wheeling; Marsh, who also worked in the mills, died at Wheeling; George died at Wheeling in early life; Sallie, of Wheeling, widow of William S. Meek, who was a printer; and Miss Helen of Wheeling.

Richard Robertson acquired a public-school education at Wheeling, but left school at the age of fourteen and entered a printer's office. He learned the printing trade according to the old-time standards of that profession, and for many years was recognized as one of the experts. In 1875 he established a printing office of his own, and conducted it for several years and also established The Wheeling Sunday News Letter, which he edited. He became associated with Mr. Ogden in printing an evening paper, but eventually sold his interests to Mr. Ogden. He continued in the job printing business for a number of years, but has been practically retired since 1903. Mr. Robertson is a director in the Center Wheeling Bank, of which he was one of the founders, and is also one of the founders and a director of the Community Savings & Loan Company.

He was twice elected and for twelve years held the office of clerk of the Court of Ohio County. He is a republican, has for many years been a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E. FRANK RANDOLPH LYON, vice president in charge of operations of the great industrial corporation known as the Consolidation Coal Company, with headquarters at Fairmont, Marion County, was born in Bradford County, Pennsylvania, on the 27th of September, 1871, and is a son of the late Locke L. and Sarah (Bowman) Lyon, both likewise natives of Bradford County. In the earlier part of his career the father was engaged in mercantile business in Bradford County, and later, when the son Frank R. was a boy, removal was made to the State of Colorado, where the father was for a number of years interested in mineral properties and mining developments, his death having occurred in the City of Denver, that state, in 1909, when he was sixty-five years of age. Mrs. Lyon also passed away in Denver, her death occurring in 1898.

Frank R. Lyon did not accompany his parents on their removal to Colorado, and for a number of years thereafter resided in the home of one of his uncles in Pennsylvania. He supplemented the discipline of the public schools by a course in the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Mansfield, in which he was graduated in 1889 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Aside from his regular studies he also took up the study of engineering, under the preceptorship of Professor Ewing, a member of the faculty of the normal school, and in his vacation periods he gained practical experience through employment in the engineering offices of the Blossburg Coal Company at Arnot, Pennsylvania. After leaving the normal school he found employment as transit man in the employ of the coal company mentioned, and later he came to West Virginia and assumed a position under Chief Engineer Tyler, of the Monongah Coal Company, near Fairmont. Upon his return to Pennsylvania he joined the survey and location corps in charge of the construction of a broad-gauge railroad which was being constructed in connection with the development of lumbering industry. After being thus employed about eighteen months Mr. Lyon passed four years at Evansville, Indiana, as chief engineer in charge of the Sunnyside Coal Company. He next became chief engineer for the Rock Hill Iron & Coal Company of Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, and his service in this connection continued about four years. In 1901 he engaged independently in practice as an engineer, opening an office at Somerset, Pennsylvania. In the following year he became identified with the Somerset Coal Company, at its organization, and was made district superintendent. Shortly after the organization of the Somerset Coal Company the Watson interests became interested in this company. Six months later Mr. Lyon was advanced to the position of assistant general superintendent, and in the fall of 1904 he became assistant general superintendent of the Consolidation Coal Company at Frostburg, Maryland, this likewise being a Watson interest. A year later he became general superintendent of the Somerset Coal Company, of which he was made manager in 1906. In 1913 Mr. Lyon established his headquarters at Fairmont as general manager of operations of the Consolidation Coal Company, and in April 1919, he was made vice president of the company, in which office he has since continued, with effective functioning in charge of operations.

Mr. Lyon is affiliated with the Masonic Order, and a Thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Knight Templar, and a Shriner. JOSEPH H. REASS, JR., who was a captain in the arm service during the World war, has been prominent in business affairs at Wheeling for many years. He is secretary and treasurer of the Wheeling Savings & Loan Association.

Captain Reass was born at Wheeling, April 17, 1881. The Reass family has been in Wheeling for seventy years. His grandfather, Mathew Reass, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, in 1822. He was prominent in the republican movement in Germany during the '40s, was president of one of the republican governments in 1848, and because of his prominence as a leader after the collapse of the Revolution he suffered exile, went to Paris in 1849, then to London, and in 1850 settled at Wheeling, where he spent the rest of his life as a carpenter contractor. He died in 1887. His wife was Catherine Limburger, a native of Germany, who died at Wheeling.

Their son, Joseph F. Reass, was born at Wheeling, November 15, 1858, and has spent a busy and honored life in this city. For many years, until he retired in 1913, he conducted a transfer business. Some years ago he made the race for the city council, received the largest majority ever given a candidate for that office, but after one term this service he refused reelection and never again has sought any political honor. He is a republican, a member of Old Valley Lodge Knights of Pythias and John A. Log Cabin Council No. 95, Junior Order United American Mechanics. Joseph F. Reass married Margaret Wilkerson, who was born January 15, 1856, and was reared and educated at Newcastle on Tyne, England. After losing her parents by death she came at the age of twenty to the United States and located at Wheeling. Joseph F. Reass and wife had two children, Joseph H. and George M. The latter represents the Pinkerton Tobacco Company of Toledo and lives at Wheeling.

Joseph H. Reass was educated in the public schools at Wheeling, graduated from Linsly Institute in 1898, and for about two years was a traveling representative for the Bloch Brothers Tobacco Company, covering Pennsylvania

Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. He then entered business with his father, under the name Joseph Reass & Sons, and gave much of his time to this transfer and local transportation concern until 1913.

In the meantime, in 1902, Mr. Reass established the Reass Advertising Company, of which he is still proprietor. Beginning merely as a local auxiliary to Wheeling business, it has grown and developed as an organization with an almost national scope. It makes a specialty of outdoor advertising and card tacking, and is said to be the largest card tacking firm in the United States, its service being availed by firms and business houses in every state of the Union. From 1913 until he entered the army Mr. Reass gave his entire time to the advertising business.

He offered his services to the Government the very day war was declared against Germany. May 13, 1917, he entered the First Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, was commissioned second lieutenant, was ordered to Camp Sherman, Ohio, and there organized the first teamsters' school in the National army. He commanded Wagon Company No. 318, and in December, 1917, was transferred to Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina, with the Twenty-seventh Division as assistant to the commanding officer, A. R. D. No. 307. Next he was at Camp Upton, New York, in March, 1918, and organized and commanded Wagon Company No. 302, known as the New York Gunmen. He had in the meantime been advanced to a first lieutenancy and then to the rank of captain. Captain Reass next organized the Embarkation Remount Depot at Jersey City, and this organization supervised the shipment of every horse and mule that went out of New York Harbor for the American Expeditionary Forces. Captain Reass after nearly two years of army service resigned March 1, 1919.

Soon after his return to Wheeling he organized Wheeling Post No. 1 of the American Legion. He was a delegate to the St. Louis convention of 1919 when the various posts through their delegates organized the National Association of the American Legion. In 1920 Captain Reass organized the Wheeling Savings & Loan Association, of which he has been secretary and treasurer. This association has grown under his direction faster than any building and loan association in the state, and in point of resources and substantial service now stands in the front rank. Its offices are at Fourteenth and Market streets and the officers are: Charles Hartman, president; H. L. Kirk, vice president; and Joseph H. Reass, secretary and treasurer. Captain Reass is also treasurer of the Wheeling Foreign Corporation.

He is allied with the republican party in politics. He has several times been a candidate for alderman-at-large in Wheeling. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, Ohio Lodge No. 1, F. and A. Captain Reass lost his first wife by death in 1914. She was the mother of three children: Julia Margaret, born in 1908; Joseph Loftus, born in 1911; and Rose Catherine, who died at the age of nine months. In 1917 Captain Reass married Miss Viola Winters. She was born at Elm Grove, Wheeling. They have two daughters, Viola Jeanette, born in 1918, and Mary Catherine, born in 1920.

He is general manager of this, one of the strongest and most influential newspapers in Upper West Virginia.

Mr. Henderson was born at Wheeling, January 2, 1881.

This branch of the Henderson family has been in West Virginia for a number of generations. His grandfather, Thomas Henderson, was born in the state, and spent practically all his life at Triadelphia in Ohio County. For a number of years he was captain on Ohio and Mississippi River steamboats, making frequent voyages between Pittsburgh and New Orleans. In later years he devoted his time and energies to the operation of his farm at Triadelphia, where he died about 1877.

David H. Henderson, father of the Wheeling newspaper man, was born at Triadelphia in 1830, lived in that vicinity for a number of years and operated a large farm, and in 1880 moved to Wheeling, but continued the operation and ownership of a dairy farm near the city. This farm was noted for its blooded stock. David Henderson died at Wheeling in 1917. He was a republican, and one of the very active members of the First Presbyterian Church. He married Margaret Garrison, who was born at Wheeling in 1852, and is still living in that city. Campbell H. is the oldest of their children. Thomas is a civil engineer in Orange New Jersey. Campbell H. Henderson attended public school, graduated from the Wheeling Business College in 1899, and soon afterward became circulation manager for the News Publishing Company. He was with the News Company four years, and then joined the recently established Wheeling Telegraph as circulation manager. During the next four years he gave the Telegraph its secure position in circulation, and since then has been general manager of the company and business. The Telegraph is an independent republican paper, published at 68 Sixteenth Street, and has a large circulation throughout the city and surrounding district.

The only important interruption to his newspaper work came in 1917, when Mr. Henderson was appointed chief of police of Wheeling, an office he filled two years. He is a republican, secretary of the First Presbyterian Church, and is a past grand of Wheeling Lodge No. 9, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His home is at 121 Nineteenth Street at Warwood, Wheeling. In 1905 he married Miss Mary L. Kindelberger, a native of Wheeling, and a graduate of the Wheeling High School and the Wheeling Business College. Before her marriage she taught in the public schools for three years and for one year was a teacher in the Linsly Institute at Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Henderson have two children, David, born July 27, 1910, and Louise, born December 15, 1913.

SAMUEL SPRIGG JACOB is one of the most venerable and most highly honored native sons of Ohio County, and is living in gracious retirement at his pleasant home five miles northeast of Wheeling. He was born on the old family homestead on Short Creek, Ohio County, June 23, 1838, and is the eldest son of the late John J. and Mahala (Kidgely) Jacob. Zachariah Jacob, great grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in Wales, of worthy Jewish lineage, and came to America prior to the War of the Revolution, the personal name of his wife having been Susannah, and their children having been Samuel, Ezekiel, William, Susannah, John J. and Gabriel. Gabriel, father of John J. (II), was born July 1, 1759, and died March 20, 1822, he having married Ruth Hurst, of Washington County, Maryland, and their children having been John J., Joseph, Zachariah and Susan (twins), Ezekiel and Samuel. Gabriel Jacob became the pioneer representative of the family in what is now the State of West Virginia. About 1790 he settled on Short Creek, in the present Ohio County, and the old homestead farm continued in the possession of his descendants until about 1919, the last of the family to have owned the property having been Absalom R. Jacob, now a resident of Woodsdale, this county. Gabriel Jacob did well his part in connection with the social and industrial development of this section of the state, and his remains were laid to rest in the pioneer cemetery in connection with the Methodist Church of the Short Creek neighborhood, the ancient churchyard, with its numerous graves, now covering also the site of the original church building. Among the graves are those of the maternal grandparents of the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Ruth (Hurst) Jacob survived her husband by a number of years. Their son Joseph became a physician, but passed his active life on his farm, where he died in 1868; Zachariah, the third son, became a successful lawyer in the City of Wheeling, where he died in 1868, his twin sister, Susan, having become the wife of Rev. James Moore, a clergyman of the Methodist Church, and their home having been in Belmont County, Ohio; Ezekiel, the fourth son, died young; and Samuel became a representative banker and citizen of Wellsburg, Brooke County, where he died at an advanced age. John J., eldest of the children, was born December 26, 1790, and died October 15, 1848. As a young man he wedded Elizabeth Mitchell Petter, a widow and daughter of Alexander Mitchell. They became the parents of five children: Gabriel, Alexander M., Anne Susan, Ruth and Sarah. After the death of his first wife John J. Jacob married Mahala W. Ridgely, and they became the parents of four children: Samuel Sprigg, A. Ridgely, John J. (III), and Drusilla R., the last mentioned, having become the wife of Abram McColloch, a brother of the wife of her brother Samuel S., of this sketch.

Gabriel, eldest son of the late John J. Jacob, was a resident of Wheeling at the time of his death, when thirty-five years of age; Alexander M. married a daughter of Andrew P. Wood and was a resident of Iowa at the time of his death; Anne Susan became the wife of James Montgomery, of Lewisburg, West Virginia; Ruth married the latter's brother, William Montgomery, and they likewise resided at Lewisburg; Sarah married Isaac H. Patterson, and they died at St. Clairsville, Ohio, where two of their sons still reside.

Mahala W. (Ridgely) Jacob, mother of him whose name initiates this review, was eighty-eight years of age at the time of her death, in 1900. She was a daughter of Absalom and Drusilla (Mills) Ridgely, who died at the respective ages of eighty and sixty-six years, the old Ridgely farm being now in possession of the Jacob family. A sister of Mrs. Mahala W. Jacob became the wife of Dr. L. Edward Smith, of Brooke County, and was ninety-four years of age at the time of her death. A. Ridgely Jacob, next younger brother of Samuel S., resides at Woodsdale, Ohio County; John J. lives at Elm Grove, this county; and Drusilla R., the widow of Abram McColloch, is a resident of Elm Grove.

Absalom Ridgely, Sr., was born near Baltimore, Maryland, in 1769, and came to the present Ohio County, West Virginia, about 1790. In 1799 he married Drusilla, daughter of Levi Mills, and eventually he purchased the old Mills farm, on which he died in 1850, his wife, who was born in this county in 1781, having died in 1847. They became the parents of ten children, of whom Mahala W. was the seventh. John J. Jacob, father of the subject of this sketch, was a first cousin of Hon. John J. Jacob, who served as governor of West Virginia and who was a resident of Wheeling at the time of his death.

Samuel Sprigg Jacob gained his early education in the common schools of the middle-pioneer period in the history of Ohio County, and in 1856 he removed with his mother to Wheeling, where for three years he was a student in Linsly Institute. Thereafter he continued his studies two years in the academy at Morgantown, where he boarded in the home of the widow of Thomas P. Ray, on the site of the present State University. After completing his studies Mr. Jacob returned with his widowed mother to the old home farm. In 1914 he sold his fine old farm estate of 300 acres, where he had been especially successful as a wool-grower, and in the same year he established his residence in his present attractive home. Though a staunch democrat in a strong republican district, Mr. Jacob has secure place in popular esteem and has been called to service in local offices of public trust, including that of supervisor under the old system of county government. For eight years he was a valued member of the State Board of Agriculture. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Church, and he has been affiliated with the Masonic fraternity since 1866, when he was "raised" in Liberty Lodge No. 26, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at West Liberty. After serving twenty-nine years as secretary of this lodge he was, in 1916, presented by the organization with a handsome silver loving-cup, and he is now the oldest member of this lodge both in age and in period of consecutive affiliation.

In 1868 Mr. Jacob married Mary L. McColloch, daughter of the late Samuel McColloch, of Ohio County, and of this union have been born six children: Clarence died in infancy; Samuel S., Jr., is superintendent of the Triadelphia district schools; Mary Lillian is a popular teacher in the Woodsdale schools; Frank H. died in infancy; Mahala R., widow of Archibald N. McColloch, resides at the paternal home; and John J. is a civil engineer in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. The loved and devoted wife and mother passed to the life eternal in 1911, after a married companionship of forty-three years. Mr. Jacob is the only surviving incorporator of the Short Creek Cemetery Association, which was incorporated in 1871 and of which he has been the secretary for fifty years.

OTTO JAEGER as a youth learned the art of engraving on glass, has been an expert connected with the glass industry for many years, and has given Wheeling one of the largest industries of its kind in the country, the Bonita Art Glass Company, of which he is secretary, treasurer and general manager.

Mr. Jaeger was born at St. Goar in a Rhine province of Germany, June 26, 1853. His father, Frederick William Jaeger, a native of Germany, was a man of most substantial attainments. He served fifteen years in the Prussian army, retiring with the rank of captain and with a pension, at one time was attorney-general at Cologne, and in 1866 he came to the United States and located in New York City, where he employed his skill as an instrumental musician as a professor of music. He died in New York City. He was a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife, Anna Mary Jaeger, was born in Germany and also died in New York City. They had a large family of children, briefly mentioned as follows: Bertha, of New York City, whose husband, Captain Gehle, was a sea captain; Pauline married H. Meyer, clerk in a large importing house and both died in New York City; Emil was a lithographer and died in New York City; Otto was the fourth in age; Carl was a glider by trade and died at New York; Emmi died at Bridgeport, Connecticut, where her husband, Mr. Merkle, was manager of a department store; Louisa is the wife of Emil Leu, a chiropodist at Bridgeport, Connecticut; Alexander is a train dispatcher with one of the elevator railway companies of New York; Josephine is the wife of a railway conductor living at Jersey City, New Jersey; Arthur is a lithographer at Philadelphia; and Matilda is the wife of Ernst Nauman, who has charge of a large iron works plant and lives at Brooklyn.

Otto Jaeger was about thirteen years of age when he came to America. He attended government schools in Germany and while there studied English, French and his native tongue. After coming from New York City he rounded out his knowledge of English, but left school at the age of sixteen to serve his apprenticeship and learn the trade of engraving on glass. As a young man, possessing special skill in this line, he came to Wheeling in 1877 and took charge of the engraving and other departments of the Hobbs & Brockunier Glass Plant. In January, 1888, Mr. Jaeger was one of the organizers of the Fostoria Glass Company of Fostoria, Ohio, and for three years was the company's chief traveling representative, covering all the United States and Canada. In 1891 he organized the Seneca Glass Company of Fostoria, and was president of this company. In 1901 Mr. Jaeger returned to Wheeling, where he organized the Bonita Art Glass Company and has since been its secretary, treasurer and general manager, and has been the guiding genius in making this a distinctive industry, not only in the quality of work but in size. The plant and offices of the firm are on Bow Street in Wheeling and the business is primarily the artistic decoration of glass and china. The Bonita products go all over the United States and make up a large volume of foreign export, and the firm also does an extensive importing as well as exporting business. George E. House is president of the company, while Mr. Jaeger has other executive responsibilities. The company employs 10 hands, most of them experts.

Mr. Jaeger is a republican in politics, and for eight years served as a member of the City Council of Wheeling. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner. In 1879, at Wheeling, he married Miss Ida Frances Rateliff, daughter of James and Mary Rateliff, both of whom died at Wheeling. The two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Jaeger both died in childhood.

Many of his friends and associates know Mr. Jaeger through his versatile gifts and attainments in other lines than the glass industry. He is deeply versed in the musical arts, for many years has played the violin, flute and violoncello, and as a boy of fifteen he had the honor of playing a violin under the eminent leader, the late Theodore Thomas. For over thirty years he directed the choir of Presbyterian churches, and a number of singers who subsequently became professionals, owed much to him for his early encouragement of their talents.

Mr. Jaeger's early performances as a rifle shot will always be noted in the records of that sport. During 1885 he made the highest score in the United States for rifle shooting at a range of 200 yards, and his feat stood as the high record until tied six months later by a Boston rifleman. This record of ten straight bull's eyes at 200 yards, 96 out of a possible 100, still stands. Mr. Jaeger was formerly a member of the Wheeling Rifle Club, which was never beaten in a match with clubs from other cities. At times he has owned a number of thoroughbred horses, and has himself driven them in races at fairs and other occasions in Ohio and won a number of purses and other honors.

JOHN EDWARD MARSCHNER, M. D., is established in the successful practice of his profession in his native City of Wheeling, where he was born on the 9th of June, 1886. His father, August E. Marschner, who is still a resident of Wheeling, was born in Brussels, Belgium, in 1861, and was about ten years of age at the time of the family immigration to the United States, where the home was established at Cape Cod, Massachusetts. From the old Bay State the family came to Wheeling, West Virginia, about 1877, and here August E. eventually became identified with a glass manufacturing enterprise. In 1893 he engaged in the brewing business, and he continued as president and general manager of the Sehmuebach Brewing Company until 1913. Thereafter he gave much of his time and attention to the affairs of the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company until he retired from active business in 1919. He served several terms as a member of the City Council of Wheeling, and is one of the substantial and highly esteemed citizens of the West Virginia metropolis. He is a republican, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In Wheeling was solemnized the marriage of August E. Marschner and Miss Sophia Roth, who was born in this city in 1858, and of their children Dr. John E., of this sketch, is the elder, the younger of the two, Louis E., being engaged in the plumbing-supply business in Wheeling.

The public schools of his native city gave to Doctor Marschner his early educational advantages, and here also he attended Linsly Institute. Thereafter he continued his studies in a preparatory school at Lawrenceville, New Jersey, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1906. For one year thereafter he was a student in the Worcester Polytechnic Institute at Worcester, Massachusetts, and then, in consonance with his ambition and well formulated plans, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland. In this great institution he was graduated in 1911, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. The doctor is affiliated with the Phi Gamma Delta college fraternity and also with the Phi Beta Pi fraternity of the medical school. He gained valuable clinical experience through one year of service as an interne in Mercy Hospital in the City of Baltimore, and an equal period of similar service in the Maryland Lying-in Hospital in that city. Thereafter he held a position for one year in the Montana State Hospital for the Insane at Warm Springs, Montana, and in 1914 he engaged in the active general practice of his profession in his native City of Wheeling, where the scope and character of his practice attest alike his technical skill and his personal popularity. He held for four years the position of city bacteriologist of Wheeling and was coroner's physician three years. The doctor is an active member of the Ohio County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He gave three years of service as a member of the Ohio County Lunacy Commission, and in July, 1919, he was appointed health commissioner of Wheeling, in which position his loyal and effective service led to his reappointment in July, 1921, for another term of two years. Doctor Marschner is a stockholder in the banking institution known as the Community Savings & Loan Company, and he owns his attractive residence property at 2311 Chapline Street, where he maintains his office also. In 1914, at Fayetteville, this state, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Marschner and Miss Grace V. Hamilton, daughter of Alexander W. Hamilton, who is a member of the representative firm of corporation lawyers, Payne & Hamilton, in that city, and also president of the Fayette County National Bank. His wife is deceased. Mrs. Marschner is a talented pianist, a graduate of the celebrated Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and she is a popular figure in the representative social life of Wheeling. Doctor and Mrs. Marschner have two children: Margaret, born November 7, 1914, and Elizabeth, born in February, 1916.

Reverting to the family history of Doctor Marschner, it is to be noted that his grandfather, Edward Marschner, a native of Brussels, Belgium, there became a successful glass manufacturer, and after establishing his residence in Wheeling, West Virginia, in the '70s, he here became associated with the old Hobbs-Brockunier Glass Works, the business of which is now continued under the title of the H. Northwood Company. In this city Edward Marschner passed the remainder of his life, and here his venerable widow still resides. Of their children the eldest is August E., father of Doctor Marschner; Jennie is the wife of Henry Rithner, proprietor of a glass factory at Wellsburg, this state; Frances is the wife of Nicholas Kopp, president and general manager of the Pittsburgh Lamp, Brass & Glass Company at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Ernest, a resident of Wheeling, is retired from active business.

WILLIAM A. WILSON. The name Wilson has been prominently associated with the commercial life of Wheeling for just a century. There have been three generations of the name represented here, and for more than half a century of this time the senior member of W. A. Wilson & Sons proved a conspicuous source of the energy and enterprise not only affecting his particular line, but the general welfare and progress of the community.

It was in 1822 that William Penn Wilson came to Wheeling. He was born in Delaware, January 1, 1800, of an English Quaker family. In Wheeling he became a builder and contractor, and in 1852 became associated with John McLure and Anthony Dunlevy in the firm of McLure, Dunlevy & Company, steamboat builders and owners. The firm subsequently was Wilson, Dunlevy & Wheeler, which built three of the finest Ohio River steamboats, the Thomas Swan, the Baltimore and the City of Wheeling. William P. Wilson was also one of the pioneer manufacturers of nail kegs in Wheeling at a time when one-third of all the cut nails manufactured in the United States was made here. William P. Wilson for a number of years was a member of the Wheeling City Council, also a member of the board of supervisors, was a whig and later a democrat in politics, one of his sons was killed while a Confederate soldier, and he and his wife were among the faithful members of the Methodist Church.

William P. Wilson married Sarah Pannell, who was born at Wheeling in 1803, daughter of George and Jane Pannell. William P. Wilson and wife went through life together and in death they were not divided, dying on successive days and they were laid to rest in one grave July 26, 1873. They had been married a little over forty years.

The last survivor of their children was William A. Wilson, who was born at the family homestead on Fifth Street in Wheeling, July 8, 1842, and who died at his home on Ma Street, November 24, 1920, when past seventy-eight. He was educated in the public schools, learned business under his father, and in 1866 engaged in the lumber and planing business in association with Clark Hanes, under the firm name of Hanes & Wilson. He also succeeded to the business interests left by his father, including a manufacturing plant formerly devoted to the manufacture of nail kegs and subsequently utilized for the making of packing boxes. In connection with his lumber yards and planing mills W. A. Wilson engaged in contracting, the firm handling many extensive contracts involving large buildings. As a branch of this business there was opened a retail paint and oil store in 1875, and that was the nucleus of what is now the main interest of the firm of W. A. Wilson & Sons, a business that is both wholesale and retail and with a trade extending over five states. The headquarters of the firm for many years have been at 1409-1411 Main Street. Since 1894 William A. Wilson has been a member of the firm and the younger son, Arch A. Wilson, entered the partnership in 1900.

The late William A. Wilson was for some years president of the Commercial Bank, and later this bank was absorbed by the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company. He acted in hearty accord with the public spirited citizens of Wheeling in advancing the commercial and general welfare of the community. Mr. Wilson was one of the most popular of Wheeling's business men. In his personal relations he was characterized by a fine sense of humor. He liked the open air and almost to the close of his life he enjoyed his game of golf at the Wheeling Country Club. He was a stalwart democrat in politics and a member of the North Street Methodist Episcopal Church.

The late W. A. Wilson practiced and exemplified the high ideals of the Masonic Order and he was one of the most prominent Masons in the state, particularly in the Scottish Rite. In February, 1866, he was raised in Ohio Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., and subsequently became a charter member of Nelson Lodge No. 30. He was affiliated with Wheeling Union Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Cyrene Commandery No. 1, K. T., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. In March, 1885, he joined the Scottish Rite organization and became a charter member of West Virginia Consistory No. 1 upon its organization in 1894, and was elected the first treasurer of the four bodies of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, a position he held until his death. At the meeting of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States held in October, 1919, he was elected to receive the thirty-third honorary degree, which was conferred upon him in the Cathedral at Wheeling, April 12, 1920.

June 10, 1867, Mr. Wilson married Miss Texana Arrington, daughter of a prominent Wheeling citizen, Jacob Arrington. Mrs. Wilson survived her honored husband. Of her children the only daughter, Flora C., died January 20, 1901, as the wife of Charles Lamb. The two sons, who continue the business organization of W. A. Wilson & Sons, are William P. and Arch A., both of whom are married and try and their families are socially prominent in Wheeling.

This article may properly close by quoting an editorial from the Wheeling Intelligencer: "The death of W. A. Wilson has removed from the Wheeling community a man of a type that any city can ill afford to lose. Vile and successful in his many business undertakings, he typified his life the spirit and the achievements of Wheeling. Born and reared here, there was ever a great mutual admiration between him and his native city, and he was always a staunch supporter of worthy civic movements. During his seventy-eight years here Mr. Wilson became intimately and prominently connected with practically every phase of Wheeling's activities. As a manufacturer, merchant and banker he helped to lay the solid foundations of the city's prosperity and to build the splendid superstructure. His lodge and church connections were admirable and consistent, and in the midst of all his busy life he found time to be a leader in charitable work. His associates in all of these activities will miss the unassuming support and keen judgment which they were accustomed to rely. Those most closely associated with him will miss his unostentatious acts of kindness."

LLOYD M. STEMPLE is manager of the Service Stores Corporation at Bretz in Preston County, is also postmaster of that village, and is a business man whose responsibilities have been steadily growing during the past fourteen years. He was born near Aurora, Preston County, May 11, 1882. He is a direct descendant of Godfrey Stemple, who settled near Aurora in the early years of the nineteenth century, spent his remaining years as a farmer and is buried in that locality, and a large number of his descendants are still found over Preston County. Lloyd M. Stemple grew up on a farm, attended the public schools, and either through his own efforts or his earnings supplied himself with the equivalent of a liberal education. At the age of twenty-two he began teaching, a vocation he followed altogether for some five or six years. In the meantime he took the course in the preparatory school for teachers at Keyser, and in the summer of 1908 graduated from the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. Following that he became stenographer and claim clerk in the coal billing office of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company at Fairmont, West Virginia. Fourteen months later he resigned and returned to Austen in Preston County, where he taught another term of school and in the spring of 1910 became a clerk in the Austen Coal & Coke Company's general store. After about a year he was transferred to the office of chief clerk to the auditor of the company. With the collapse of the coal industry in 1913 he left the service of the Austen company and went south to Tapleton, Alabama, where he tried farming and merchandising. The conditions of the climate were adverse to his health, and after about a year he returned to his home state and formed a connection with the West Virginia Mercantile Company at Kingwood. This company subsequently sent him to Bretz, where he has been store manager ever since. The West Virginia Mercantile Company sold its interests to the Bethlehem Steel Company, and the Service Stores Corporation is now a subsidiary of the Bethlehem Steel Company. Mr. Stemple's work as manager was unaffected by his change in ownership. He was appointed postmaster of Bretz, August 18, 1916, succeeding Postmaster H. B. Jackson.

Mr. Stemple has usually voted as a republican, though most of the Stemples have been democrats. He and Mrs. Stemple are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At Cumberland, Maryland, February 22, 1907, he married Miss Daisy A. Hovatter, a native of Preston County. Many of the Hovatter family lived around Fairmont, and her parents, A. J. and Helen (Pell) Hovatter, now live near Manown. Mrs. Stemple completed her education in the summer normal at Terra Alta, and taught for several years before her marriage, teaching in the towns of Austen and Newburg and in the village schools of Bretz. Mr. and Mrs. Stemple have two children, Ethel Muriel and Max Lloyd.

JOHN THRUSTON THORNTON, M. D., one of the representative physicians and surgeons engaged in practice in the City of Wheeling, bears the full patronymic of his grandfather, Col. John Thruston Thornton, who was born in Prince Edward County, Virginia, who became colonel of a gallant Virginia regiment in the Confederate service in the Civil war and who was killed while leading his command in the battle of Antietam. Colonel Thornton had been a distinguished member of the Virginia bar and was engaged in the practice of his profession at Farmville, Prince Edward County, at the time when he went forth in defense of the Confederate cause. His wife, whose maiden name was Eliza Carter Baskerville, was a resident of Prince Edward County at the time of her death, both the Thornton and Baskerville families having been founded in Virginia in the early colonial era, and the lineage of both tracing to staunch English origins.

Dr. John T. Thornton was born in the City of Richmond, Virginia, October 21, 1875, and is a son of Dr. William Mynn Thornton and Eleanor Rosalie (Harrison) Thornton, whose marriage was solemnized in New York City, December 22, 1874. Professor William M. Thornton was born in Cumberland County, Virginia, October 28, 1851. In 1868 he received from Hampden-Sidney College the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in 1870 he was graduated in the his-

He was a United States commissioner to the International Exposition held in Paris, France, in 1900, and in 1904 was a member of the jury of awards in civil engineering at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in St. Louis. He is a stalwart democrat, and is a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church. His wife, who was born in Virginia, in 1849, and whose death occurred in 1920, was a member of the Episcopal Church. Of the children, Doctor Thornton of this review is the eldest; Eliza Carter, who now resides in the City of Boston, is the widow of Charles R. Thurman, who was an electrical engineer and a farmer and who died at University, Virginia; Eleanor Rosalie was graduated from the Peabody Conservatory of Music in the City of Baltimore, thereafter continued her musical studies in Berlin, Germany, and as a talented pianist she is engaged in teaching music in the City of Boston, Massachusetts; Janet, the next younger daughter, is engaged in social-service work in New York City; William Mynn, Jr., now professor of chemistry in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, received from Hampden-Sidney College the degree of Bachelor of Arts, from the University of Virginia the degree of Master of Arts, and from Yale University the degree of Doctor of Philosophy; Charles Edward received from the University of Virginia the degree of Civil Engineer, has been successful in the work of his profession but has indulged the wanderlust without moderation, he having been in Honduras at the time of his last communication with other members of the family.

Dr. John T. Thornton gained the major part of his earlier education in private schools at Charlottesville, Virginia, and thereafter was a student in the University of Virginia until he had nearly completed the work of his senior year in the literary department. He taught one year in the public schools of Chattanooga, Tennessee, and one year in the Louisiana Industrial Institute at Ruston, and he next continued his studies two years in the medical department of the University of Virginia. He then entered the Medical College of Virginia in his native City of Richmond, and in this institution he was graduated in 1902, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Thereafter he gained valuable clinical experience by serving as interne in the Old Dominion Hospital in that city until February, 1903, and by similar service in the Polyclinic Hospital of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he remained two years. In the meanwhile, in the summer of 1902, he was a student in Harvard University. After leaving Philadelphia Doctor Thornton gave eighteen months of effective service as superintendent of the Roanoke Hospital, at Roanoke, Virginia, and since 1906 he has been established in the successful general practice of his profession in the City of Wheeling, where he is giving special attention to pediatrics, his offices being at 499-10 in the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company Building. Doctor Thornton served three years as president of the Board of Health of Ohio County, is an active member of the Ohio County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association, the while he is affiliated with Carroll Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity, and the University Club of Wheeling. The doctor is a democrat in political allegiance, and he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church. In the World war period he was a vigorous supporter of patriotic service in his home city and county, was a member of the Board of Medical Examiners for Ohio County, and gave much of his time to the work of this board and to other war activities.

In 1905, in the City of New York, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Thornton and Miss Helen Agnes Thomson, daughter of the late George Thomson, of Trenton, New Jersey. Doctor and Mrs. Thornton have three children: Eleanor Rosalie, born September 4, 1909; John Thruston, Jr., born in March, 1912; and Helen, born October 26, 1915.

JOHN EDWARD OFFNER, M. D., a successful physician and surgeon engaged in practice at Fairmont, Marion County, was born at Piedmont, Mineral County, this state, April 15, 1878, a son of Isaac Henry and Mary Jane (Kalbaugh) Offner. The father was born July 11, 1844, at Romney, Randolph County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and is a son of Reuben and Matilda Jane (Cummins) Offner. Reuben Offner was born at Woodstock, Virginia, in 1804, and died at Romney in 1889, he having been a shoemaker by trade, a democrat in politics and a member of the Methodist Church. Isaac H. Offner gave many years of effective service as a school teacher and he was a valiant soldier in the Confederate service in the Civil war as a member of the Thirty-third Virginia Regiment, in the brigade of Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson. Mr. Offner is now one of the venerable and honored citizens of Mineral County. His wife is a daughter of Alexander Kalbaugh, who was of German ancestry and whose wife was of Irish ancestry, he having been a Union soldier in the Civil war.

Doctor Offner gained his early education in the schools of his native county, and thereafter he followed various vocations of mechanical order, he having been employed on public works, on railroads, in machine shops and in a paper pulp mill, besides which he was for a time a member of a civil engineering corps with the Dry Fork Railroad. In consonance with his ambition he finally entered the Maryland Medical College in the City of Baltimore, in which he was graduated in 1904, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He has since taken post-graduate surgical work in the University of Pennsylvania and in clinics in the City of Baltimore. At the time of the Spanish-American war he served eighteen months in the hospital corps of the United States Army. When the nation became involved in the World war Doctor Offner applied for and was recommended by the governor of West Virginia for a commission in the Medical Corps of the United States Army. He received a commission as Lieutenant, instead of major, for which latter he had been recommended, and he refused to accept the minor commission. He then tendered his services to the navy, in which he was commissioned a first lieutenant of the Medical Corps, but he was not called into active service until after the signing of the historic armistice, when he declined to enter such service. The doctor now holds the rank of assistant surgeon general on the staff of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. He is a member of the Marion County and West Virginia State Medical societies, the Southern Medical Association, the American Medical Association and the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Surgeons Association. Doctor Offner is a staunch democrat, and he was the first member of his party elected to represent the strong republican First Ward of Fairmont as a member of the City Council, of which he continued a member four years.

His initial Masonic affiliation was with Fairfax Lodge No. 96, at Davis, this state, and from the same he was demitted to become a charter member of Pythagoras Lodge No. 128 at Parsons, West Virginia. From the latter he was demitted to assist in instituting Acacia Lodge No. 157 at Fairmont, of which he continues a member. He is also affiliated with the R. A. Taylor, who was a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war. Doctor and Mrs. Offner have two children: Mildred Ruth, born March 23, 1902, and Edward Taylor, born May 13, 1903.

JOHN THOMAS SIMMS, counsel and executive assistant to the state tax commissioner of West Virginia, is the legal representative of the state in practically all matters involving the Tax Department. It is a large responsibility capably performed, and the duties have occupied the time and abilities of Judge Simms for over six years. He is former judge of the Criminal Court of Fayette County and has been a West Virginia lawyer nearly twenty years.

Judge Simms was born at Ansted, Fayette County, W. Virginia, May 10, 1875, son of Robert Clark and Sarah Catharine (Jones) Simms. His paternal ancestors were Scotch and settled in old Virginia prior to the Revolutionary war. One ancestor, Edward Simms, was a soldier in the Revolution. The mother of Sarah Catharine Jones was a Miss Daniel, a cousin of the late John W. Daniel of Virginia.

John Thomas Simms grew up on a farm, attended the local public schools, and through and in the intervals his vocation as a teacher acquired his higher education involving association as a student with the Summersville Normal School, the Fayetteville Academy and the University of West Virginia. He was connected with Fayetteville Academy both as teacher and pupil. Judge Simms graduated in law from the State University in June, 1903, and at once began practice at Fayetteville. His inquiring mind, his great energy and the integrity which he put at the disposal of his clients won quickly for him high reputation as a lawyer.

In the fall of 1910 he was elected judge of the Criminal Court of Fayette County, and served on the bench four years. It should be a matter of justifiable pride to Judge Simms as a lawyer that throughout the period of his incumbency as judge of the Criminal Court he was never reversed by the Supreme Court. There is no chronicle of West Virginia of any other judge having such a record who sat for a full term.

At the close of his term on the bench in January, 1911, Judge Simms came to Charleston as special counsel for the State Tax Commission, the full title of his office being counsel and executive assistant to the state tax commissioner. In this capacity he has rendered legal services of an importance that only those in close touch with the Tax Department appreciate. Representing the Tax Department he has practiced in all the courts of the state and in the Supreme Court of the United States. The problems he has to meet and solve are frequently exacting and require a high degree of sagacity and legal acumen and in many cases he presents the cause of the state against some of the ablest and keenest corporation lawyers. In general, it looks after the interpretation of the tax statutes of the state, also the appeals of public works on matters of taxation, and many of these problems involve the great industrial corporations and highly capitalized public utilities. Until the national prohibition law went into effect, and during the state prohibition law of West Virginia, Judge Simms had as part of his duties the vigorous prosecution of violations of that law. In the course of these duties he formulated and brought into practice the first legal or statutory definition of the moonshine still and a definition that became a part of the state's prohibitive statutes.

Judge Simms is a member of the State and American Bar Associations, is a republican, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and a member of the Knights of Pythias. He and his family are Presbyterians.

December 28, 1903, he married Miss Eugenia A. Alderson, daughter of Hon. John D. Alderson, of Nicholas County, who at one time represented his district in Congress. The family of Judge Simms comprises four sons, John Alderson Philip, Frederick Eugene and Edward Broadus. The oldest John Alderson Simms, has the record of being the youngest graduate in the history of the Charleston High School. He finished his eighth grade work at the age of ten and a half years and graduated from high school just four years later. He is now a student in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Virginia.

A. BLISS McCURM. Though just entering his forties, A. Bliss McCurm has earned and for a number of years has enjoyed a place of conspicuous honor among the attorneys of West Virginia, and has also a record of usefulness in public affairs. He earned his early reputation as a lawyer at Kingwood, but for several years has been a resident of Charleston, and among other duties is executive secretary of the Public Utilities Association of West Virginia.

Mr. McCrum was born at Aurora in Preston County, February 17, 1880, son of Lloyd L. and Emma (Shaffer) McCrum, now deceased. His father was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and a native of Preston County. He died in Grant County in 1895, while the mother passed away in 1882. Both the Shaffer and McCrum families were pioneer settlers in the old Northwestern Turnpike.

A. Bliss McCrum received a common school education in Preston and Grant counties, and was also a student in the grammar schools and the Central High School of Washington, D. C., where his father resided for a time. He took both the academic and law courses in West Virginia University, and by hard, concentrated effort was able to graduate with degrees from both departments in 1901.

He had only recently turned his majority, and with his law diploma he located at Kingwood, where he became associated with the veteran and distinguished attorney P. J. Crogan in the firm of Crogan & McCrum. While establishing himself in the law he was also induced to enter politics, and in 1906 was elected to represent Preston County in the House of Delegates, and re-elected in 1908, serving four years. During the second session he was chairman of the Finance committee. In 1912 Mr. McCrum was elected state senator from the Fourteenth Senatorial District, comprising the counties of Preston, Grant, Hardy, Mineral and Tucker. During his second session in the Senate he resigned to accept appointment as member of the State Board of Control, beginning his duties in June, 1915, at which time he removed from Kingwood to Charleston. He was on the State Board of Control two years, filling the unexpired term of Governor Lawson, one of his closest friends.

Mr. McCrum in 1918 volunteered his services during the war with Germany. He was made a second lieutenant at Camp Joseph E. Johnston, afterward promoted to first lieutenant, and was put in command of Company B, Third Hundred and Fifty-third Labor Battalion, in service at Camp Greene, Charlotte, North Carolina. He received his honorable discharge December 26, 1918.

Soon after leaving the army Mr. McCrum resumed private law practice at Charleston, specializing in corporation law and utility rate cases. He is counsel for a number of well known public service and industrial corporations, including the Western Maryland Railway Company.

His position as executive secretary of the Public Utilities Association of West Virginia is one of broad and interesting responsibilities. This organization embraces the electric railway, electric light, heat and power companies, water companies and independent telephone companies of the state, corporations representing investments running into millions of dollars and providing many of the essential public utilities. The chief object of this organization, and one in which his qualifications as a lawyer enables Mr. McCrum to further, is to bring about better understanding of the serious problems involved in the management, operation and financing of public utility corporations and also providing that mutual relationship of understanding and good will that involves better service to the public and a benefit to all concerned. Outside of his professional work he has been largely interested in Charleston real estate, having developed and built up several well known additions to the city. In 1920 Senator McCrum was elected secretary of the Republican State Committee, and along with Chairman White shared the honors of conducting the successful campaign of 1920.

Mr. McCrum, whose offices are in the Charleston National Bank Building, is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Elks, the Phi Kappa Sigma college fraternity, and is a Unitarian.

WILLIAM O. ABNEY. Men who have attained to real success in the business world do not admit of the existence of the quality known as luck. Long years of experience have convinced them that prosperity and position come only through the medium of persistent application of intelligent methods that require time for their development. To the highest order of organizing sense and executive attainments must be added the confidence of the public and a concise and intimate knowledge of the field to be occupied, the latter only to be attained by gradual and well-timed approaches. Sudden and phenomenal rise to affluence and independence is most uncommon and frequently is followed by failure. Certain it is that none would intimate that William O. Abney, president of the Abney Barnes Company and of the Union Trust Company of Charleston, owes his success to any lucky chance or circumstance. His career has been one of slow and steady advancement. For many years he has occupied a recognized position in business and financial life, and continues to maintain a high standard of principles, which, perhaps, is one of the chief reasons for his success.

Mr. Abney was born at Richmond, Virginia, and his boyhood days were spent upon a farm in Augusta County. After spending a few years in the coal fields of West Virginia he came to Charleston, when a young man of twenty-two years of age, and there he accepted a position as a traveling salesman with the firm of Arnold, Abney & Company, the Abney of this firm being his cousin, Mr. F. W. Abney.

This was one of the old established mercantile houses of Charleston. The business had been founded, shortly after the close of the Civil war, by Mr. E. S. Arnold as a modest retail establishment. With the admission of Mr. F. W. Abney into the partnership the firm name was changed to Arnold & Abney. Still later Mr. E. A. Barnes became a partner, and the firm name of Arnold, Abney & Company was adopted and the business placed upon a wholesale basis exclusively. Some years later, Mr. Arnold having retired from the business, the name was again changed, becoming then, Abney, Barnes & Company. This partnership was subsequently incorporated as Abney Barnes Company, with Mr. F. W. Abney, president, Mr. W. O. Abney, vice president, and Mr. E. A. Barnes, treasurer. Mr. F. W. Abney retired from the business in January, 1906, at which time Mr. W. O. Abney was elected president, which office he has since continuously held.

The Abney-Barnes Company now enjoys the distinction of being the largest wholesale dry goods house in the Kanawha Valley. For several years past Mr. Abney has not been actively identified with the management of the business, he still retains the presidency, and in matters of importance pertaining thereto his counsel and advice are always sought.

When the Union Trust Company of Charleston was organized, in 1913, Mr. Abney was chosen as its president, and he has since been actively identified with the growth and development of this institution into one of the strong banking establishments of the state. The Union Trust Company opened its doors for business, May 5, 1913, with a capital of $500,000, and a surplus of $100,000. The ninth annual statement, issued May 5, 1922 showed combined resources in excess of $4,964,000. It is extremely doubtful if any other bank in West Virginia can show such a substantial growth in so short a period of time. The Union Trust Company owns and occupies one of the finest bank and office buildings in the state, a thoroughly modern and imposing structure of thirteen stories, at the junction of Kanawha and Capitol streets, in Charleston.

In addition to the interests already mentioned Mr. Abney is president of the Charleston Manufacturing Company, is a director in the Charleston Industrial Corporation at Nitro, and has oil and coal holdings.

In political matters Mr. Abney is a staunch adherent to the principles of Jeffersonian democracy, and at the national convention of his party at Baltimore in 1912, which nominated Woodrow Wilson for the presidency, he served as a delegate.

Mr. Abney is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Knight Templar and a Shriner. He is also a life member of Charleston Lodge of Elks. Having for fifteen consecutive years represented as a traveling salesman the firm of which he is now president, he still retains his membership in the United Commercial Travelers Association, and recalls many pleasant incidents of his long service as a "Knight of the Grip." The record of his success is but another confirmation of the fact that opportunity is open to all who are willing to grasp it, and honorably and persistently bend their efforts towards the attainment of an ideal.

ROY H. CUNNINGHAM is a graduate mechanical engineer, and his active services have been given principally to mining corporations, chiefly in connection with the great coal resources of West Virginia. Mr. Cunningham is a resident of Huntington, where he is secretary and sales manager of the Twin States Fuel Company.

His father, the late James Stuart Cunningham, of Charleston, West Virginia, one of the state's most widely known business men and industrial leaders, was born at Eckley, Pennsylvania, September 7, 1856. He was the son of Peter Blair Cunningham, who was born in County Derry, Ireland, 1829. Peter Blair Cunningham, in 1850, married Mary Ann Crawford, who was born in County Derry in 1833. As their wedding journey they came to the United States, settling at Eckley, Pennsylvania. Peter B. Cunningham was a skilled inventor and also a manufacturer. About 1867 he removed to Allentown, Pennsylvania, and lived in that city until his death in 1905, his widow passing away there in 1910.

James S. Cunningham spent his early life at Allentown and graduated with the degree Mechanical Engineer from Lehigh University in 1879. For two years he was a mechanical engineer for the Lehigh & Susquehanna Coal Company, for three years was general manager for the Midvale Ore Company, with headquarters at Everett, Pennsylvania, after which he entered the service of the Berwind-White Coal Company, a corporation with which he was identified the rest of his life. As consulting engineer he had a varied routine of duties for this corporation on its properties in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and other states. In 1900 he removed to Charleston, West Virginia, and remained in that city until his death, December 12, 1921. He was regarded as a leading authority on the value of coal lands in the United States, and his business and professional duties frequently required his presence in many parts of the United States and foreign fields. In behalf of the Berwind-White Coal Company he purchased over 300,000 acres of coal lands. He was president of the Bengal Coal Company and personally interested in a number of other coal companies in Western Virginia and Eastern Kentucky. James S. Cunningham was a republican, and an active member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church of Charleston. He was a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, also a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner, was a life member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the Charleston Rotary Club and a member of social and technical clubs in Philadelphia and other Pennsylvania towns, including the University Club. He served with the rank of colonel on the staff of Governor Glascock of West Virginia. James S. Cunningham was a director of the Union Trust Company of Charleston, a director of the Provident Life & Casualty Company of Charleston.

His wife was Mary Hammer, who was born at Newville, Pennsylvania, in 1860, and is living at Charleston. Her father, George Hammer, was born at Hagerstown, Maryland, in 1811, and as a Presbyterian minister held classes at Newville, Titusville and Upper Lehigh, Pennsylvania. During the Civil war he served two years as chaplain, and was then commissioned a captain in the One Hundred and Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry and served with that rank until the close of the war. He was captured during 1863, and spent several months in Libby Prison, until exchanged. Captain George Hammer, who died at Colfax Springs, Iowa, in 1870, married Catherine Ulmer, who was born in Philadelphia in 1823 and died in that city in 1904. The children of James S. Cunningham and wife were: Walter H., a business man of Huntington, is secretary of the West Virginia Coal Operators' Association, secretary of the Kentucky Mine Owners' Association, a director in several Huntington banks, member of the firm Cunningham, Miller & Enslow, coal lands and real estate, and is vice president of the Gano-Moore Coal Mining Company, Inc. The second child, Florence, is the wife of Dr. Worth Clark, a physician and surgeon at Atlantic City, New Jersey. Roy H. is the third. J. Earl, a geologist by profession, died at Charleston in 1919 at the age of thirty.

Roy H. Cunningham was born at Everett, Pennsylvania, August 2, 1886, and acquired his early education in public schools in different towns in Pennsylvania. In 1905 he graduated from the Mercersburg Academy of Pennsylvania and gained his technical education in Cornell University at Ithaca, New York, where he was graduated with degree of Mechanical Engineer in 1909. He is a member of the Zeta Psi College Fraternity. Mr. Cunningham in 1908 became a resident of Charleston, and during 1909 he was employed in making reports on coal properties in Eastern and Western Kentucky, and in 1910 was employed as a construction engineer with several mining companies in Arizona and old Mexico. During 1911 for six months he was a special mine inspector in the Department of Mines of West Virginia, with headquarters at Charleston. Following that he did work in the land and operating departments of different coal mining corporations of West Virginia and Kentucky. In 1915 Mr. Cunningham joined the Foreign Department of the Berwind-White Coal Company, with residence at San Juan, Porto Rico. He remained there until November 1917, when he entered the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis for a special engineering course. Early in 1918 he was commissioned naval ensign and was assigned to duty as an assistant engineer officer on the U. S. S. Huntington in cruiser and transport service. While in the navy he made several trips to France, and was on duty until honorably discharged in June, 1919. Mr. Cunningham on leaving the navy became field agent for the Kentland Coal & Coke Company, owners of extensive coal properties in Kentucky and Virginia. He remained with those duties until the winter of 1919-20, following which he served as legislative representative for the Kentucky Mine Owners Association, and in April, 1920, was appointed secretary and sales manager of the Twin States Fuel Company. This is the sales organization of the Cunningham, Miller & Enslow firm, with offices in the First National Bank Building of Huntington. Mr. Cunningham is a stockholder in a number of other mining enterprises.

He is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, a member of the Cornell Club of New York City the War Society of the Cruiser & Transport Forces, is a republican and Presbyterian, and belongs to the Guyandott Club of Huntington and Guyan Country Club.

On June 18, 1916, at San Juan, Porto Rico, he married Miss Iraida Ranschemplat, daughter of Adolf and Senor Antonio Guteriz del Arroyo y Rauschemplat. Her parents reside at San Juan, where her father is manager of the Porto Rico Mercantile Company and owner of extensive sugar interests. Mrs. Cunningham was educated in the United States, in the public schools of Boston and in private school at Fortress Monroe, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have two children: Florence Gloria, born October 1, 1917, and Roy H., Jr., born February 13, 1919.

CHARLES PERRY THORN. In recognizing his natural inclinations and having the courage to mold circumstances to enable him to follow them, has, perhaps, brought business success and contentment to many young men, but in scarcely larger degree than to Charles Perry Thorn, one of the leading business men of Morgantown, general manager of the General Woodworking Company, of which he was one of the organizers. Mr. Thorn was born on a farm and came from a long line of farmer ancestors, but this did not make him a farmer. The call of the sea was not insistent in him in youth, and wisely he turned to mechanics, kept steadfast in determination to gain perfection in that line, and today he is at the head of one of the largest manufacturing concerns of its kind in West Virginia.

Charles Perry Thorn was born on his father's estate a Grant District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, November 2, 1880, and is a son of David and Harriet A. (Potter) Thorn. His paternal grandfather, Jesse Thorn, was born in old Virginia and at an early date settled in the farm in Grant District, Monongalia County, on which his son, David Perry Thorn was born in 1843 and died in 1903. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Thorn was Henry Potter, who came to West Virginia from Frostburg, Maryland, and settled on the farm in Grant District, Monongalia County, on which Mrs. Thorn was born.

Charles P. Thorn attended the public schools at Laurel Point, near his country home, and assisted his father on the farm until his nineteenth year, when he came to Morgantown, learned carpentering and worked at the trade as a journeyman until 1903, when he entered a planing mill and remained until he had learned the business. As soon as circumstances permitted, in 1910, he embarked in business for himself, being one of the organizers of the General Woodworking Company, of which he became general manager and has so continued, and largely because of his able management this enterprise has expanded tenfold and is still growing. Mr. Thorn takes enthusiastic interest in his business, devotes himself closely to it and is very adequately rewarded.

In 1906 Mr. Thorn married Miss Olive M. Jacobs, a daughter of Benson and Ellen Jacobs, of Little Falls, West Virginia, and they have two sons: Ralph Benson, born in 1909; and Fred David, born in 1912. Mr. Thorn and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is an active member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and belongs to the Rotary Club, the Elks and the Knights of Pythias. While never unduly active in politics, Mr. Thorn as a reliable citizen and dependable business man, has always kept an open mind and a listening ear in regard to public affairs, and when he casts his vote it is in support of a candidate who by word and act has shown devotion to American principles.

JOHN MELVIN RIGG is a substantial and honorable practitioner at the Huntington bar, and for some years has been a prominent figure in public life. In the field of his profession he has established a wide reputation for unflinching earnestness and effective work, and his official record has always been one absolutely beyond reproach. Mr. Rigg is a native of Wayne County, West Virginia, and was born November 8, 1881, his parents being James H. and Phoebe Ballengee) Rigg.

The Rigg family is of Scotch-Irish origin and was founded in the United States by an immigrant from Ireland, who located in the colony of Virginia prior to the war of the Revolution. Zacharias Rigg, the grandfather of John M. Rigg, was born in 1821, in Kentucky, and was a pioneer into Wayne County, Virginia, whither he went as a young man. While agriculture was his regular vocation, he was known throughout his neighborhood as a noted hunter and a man educated in all the lure of forest, mountain and plain. He died in Wayne County in 1899, aged seventy-eight years. Mr. Rigg married Elizabeth Christian, who was born in Wayne (then Cabell) County, in 1821, and died in the same county in 1901.

James H. Rigg was born April 19, 1844, in Wayne County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and has resided in the same community all of his life. Reared to agricultural pursuits, he has applied himself to farming and stock-raising, and has been successful in both departments of his work, being at present the owner of a valuable modern property. During a long and busy career he has found the time and inclination to serve in a number of public offices, in which he has comported himself with becoming conscientiousness and efficiency, having been constable for seven years and justice of the peace for seven years. Politically he supports the democratic party, and as a fraternalist he holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of the Golden Eagle. With his family he belongs to the Baptist Church, the movements of which always have his co-operation and material assistance. Mr. Rigg married Miss Phoebe Ballengee, who was born in 1843, in Wayne County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and died in Wayne County in 1916. To this union there were born children as follows: California, who married Philip S. Hughes and resides at Ceredo, Wayne County, where Mr. Hughes is a painter and paperhanger; William S., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Wayne County; George W., a commission and feed merchant of Huntington; Minnie, who married first James H. Odell a farmer of Wayne County, and after his death married Mr. Bloss, a farmer of the same county, where they now reside; Levi J., a farmer and merchant of Wayne County; Wellington B., also a farmer of this county; Albert, a railroad employe of Kenova, Wayne County; Viola, who married Laban Workman, a farmer and dairyman of Cabell County; Charles, who is engaged in agricultural operations in Wayne County; John Melvin, of this notice; and James, a traveling salesman, with headquarters at Parkersburg, West Virginia.

Reared in the atmosphere of the home farm, the early education of John M. Rigg was obtained through attendance at the rural schools of Wayne County, this being subsequently supplemented by a course at Oak View Academy at Wayne. Leaving this institution in 1898, he taught school in Wayne County for seven years thereafter, and was then made deputy clerk of the Circuit Court of Wayne County, acting in that capacity for four years. During this time, having decided upon a professional career, he applied himself to the study of law, and eventually entered the West Virginia State University at Morgantown, where he spent one year in the law department. He was admitted to the bar in August, 1913, and immediately began the practice of his calling at Wayne, where he remained until January, 1920, since when he has carried on a general civil and criminal practice at Huntington. His offices are located at Nos. 401-402 Holswade Building, and on his books are found the names of some of the leading concerns of this section of the state.

Mr. Rigg is a democrat in his political affiliation and is accounted one of the influential men of his party. He served two terms as mayor of Wayne while living at that place, was one year assistant prosecuting attorney of Wayne County, and at the present time is acting as city attorney of Kenova, Wayne County. Mr. Rigg belongs to the Baptist Church. He has shown an interest in fraternal work and is a past grand of Fairmont Lodge No. 115, I. O. O. F., of Wayne, and a member of the Encampment of that order. He also has several important civic connections, and his business interests include the secretaryship of the East Lynn Oil and Gas Company, of East Lynn, Wayne County. His pleasant home is situated at Kenova. During the World war he took an active part in all local war activities, being fuel administrator for Wayne County and a member of the Legal Advisory Board. He devoted much time to the cause and was a liberal contributor to the various movements.

In December, 1902, Mr. Rigg was united in marriage with Miss Bertie Frazier, of Wayne County, daughter of George W. and Sarah (Enochs) Frazier, the latter of whom resides at Kenova. Mr. Frazier, who is now deceased, was an agriculturalist and schoolteacher of Wayne County, and served as superintendent of the county schools and as clerk of the Circuit Court of Wayne County. To Mr. and Mrs. Rigg there have come three children: Sarah, born May 29, 1904, a senior in the Ceredo High School; Homer, born October 8, 1913, who is attending the graded school; and Mamie, born June 29, 1916.

F. WITCHER McCULLOUGH, one of the representative members of the bar of the City of Huntington, distinctly advanced his professional prestige by his long and able service as assistant United States district attorney for the Southern District of West Virginia, an office of which he was the incumbent from November, 1913, until December 31, 1921, when he resigned, owing to the exigent demands placed upon him in connection with the large law business controlled by the firm of which he is a member, that of Warth, McCullough & Peyton.

The McCullough family, as the name clearly indicates, is one whose lineage traces back to staunch Scotch origin, and the original representatives of the family in America settled in Pennsylvania many generations ago. In that state, in Washington County, was born Dr. Patrick Henry McCullough on July 12, 1816, and he received excellent educational advantages, both academic and professional. As a young man he became a pioneer physician and surgeon in Cabell County, West Virginia, as now constituted, and he was long numbered among the leading medical practitioners in the City of Huntington, where his death occurred May 30, 1892. His character and service marked him as one of the honored and influential citizens of the county in which he long maintained his home and to the civic and material advancement of which he contributed his quota.

Frank Wither McCullough was born at Huntington, West Virginia, May 3, 1889, and is a son of Frank F. and Alice V. (Witcher) McCullough, the former of whom was born in Cabell County, this state (at that time still a part of Virginia), in the year 1857, and the latter of whom was born in Cabell County in 1861. Frank F. McCullough has been a resident of Huntington from virtually the time of its founding, and has witnessed and aided in the development of this now important industrial and commercial city of his native county and state. He was for twenty-four years clerk of the Cabell County Court, has long been one of the leading members of the bar of his native county, and is still an active member of the representative Huntington law firm of Warth, McCullough & Peyton. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of their children the firstborn was Flora Wither, who was eighteen years of age at the time of her death, on July 18, 1906, her birthday; and the one surviving child is he whose name initiates this review.

The public schools of Huntington afforded F. Wither McCullough his preliminary education, which was supplemented by his attending the Bingham Military Academy, Asheville, North Carolina, for three years. In the autumn of 1908 he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated in the spring of 1910, his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws having been virtually coincident with his admission to the bar of his native state. In the law school he was president of his class in his freshman year, and at the university also he became affiliated with the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. He was twenty-one years of age at the time of his admission to the bar, and in the general practice of his profession at Huntington he has been identified with important cases in the various courts of this section of the state and has clearly demonstrated his powers as a resourceful lawyer in both the civil and criminal departments of practice. The representative law firm of which he is a member maintains offices in both the Ohio Valley Bank Building and the First National Bank Building at Huntington, he being a director of the former institution and also its official attorney. He is vice president and attorney of the Buffalo Thacker Coal Company.

In November, 1913, Mr. McCullough was appointed first assistant United States attorney for the Southern District of West Virginia, under the administration of William G. Barnhart. Upon the resignation of Mr. Barnhart from the office of district attorney, in June, 1917, Mr. McCullough was appointed acting district attorney, in which capacity he served until the following October, when Lon H. Kelly, the present United States attorney, was appointed. Thereafter he continued his service as chief assistant to the district attorney until December 31, 1921, when he resigned, as noted in the opening paragraph of this sketch.

Mr. McCullough has been an active worker in the ranks of the democratic party in this section of the state, has been a delegate to its state, district and county conventions and has otherwise been influential in its councils. He and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church, he holds membership in the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the Guyan County Club, and is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., and Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. He owns and occupies an attractive modern residence at 1500 South Twentieth Street.

On the 30th of January, 1912, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McCullough and Miss Kathleen Guthrie, daughter of Dr. L. V. and Margaret (Lynn) Guthrie, Dr. Guthrie being superintendent of the West Virginia State Hospital at Huntington. Mr. and Mrs. McCullough have two children: Witcher Guthrie, born July 8, 1915, and Frank Wither, Jr., born December 4, 1920.

ROBERT J. WILKINSON, M. D. The professional career of Doctor Wilkinson since he graduated from medical college has been almost entirely in some branch of public and institutional service. For the past several years he has had the responsible duties of surgeon-in-charge of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Hospital at Huntington.

Doctor Wilkinson was born in Campbell County, Virginia, July 12, 1888. His grandfather, Thomas Jasper Wilkinson, was a native of Chesterfield County, Virginia, but when a young man removed to Lebanon, Tennessee. There he married Miss Lucy Wade, and not only led an active business life, but was a prominent whig in early day politics.

Beverly J. Wilkinson, father of Doctor Wilkinson, was born at Lebanon in April, 1844, and was reared in that city. When the war between the states broke out, though but a boy, he enlisted and served under General Jackson in the Valley Campaign, but was seriously wounded and discharged. He then re-enlisted and served under General Morgan for three years. He was a graduate of Cumberland University with an LL. B. degree, and after his university career removed to Campbell County, Virginia, where he made a distinguished name and reputation as a lawyer, being a leader in the affairs of the democratic party of the county. He was twice married, first to Mollie Turner, of Bedford County, Virginia, and later to Jennie Traylor, of Brunswick County, Virginia, who is the mother of Doctor Wilkinson. After retiring from practice he lived with a son, Doctor Wilkinson, in Huntington, where he died in August, 1920.

The early education of Doctor Wilkinson was received from the public schools of Campbell County, supplemented by private tutors. At the age of fifteen he qualified to work as a telegraph operator with the Southern Railway Company. This occupation he followed three years, and when then in the mercantile business until 1908. Abandoning a business career, he entered the Medical College of Virginia at Richmond, and remained there until graduating in 1912. While there he had the honor of being a member of the Omega Upsilon Phi Medical Fraternity, and in his senior year was elected president of the Student Body. After graduation he served one year as an interne in the Memorial Hospital of Richmond, then for two years was associated with Dr. C. C. Coleman, of that city, specializing in general surgery.

In October, 1915, Doctor Wilkinson was appointed surgeon-in-charge of the Chesapeake & Ohio Hospital at Huntington. He is a member of the Cabell County, West Virginia State, American Medical Association, Virginia Medical Society, Richmond Academy of Medicine, Southern Medical Association, and through a special attainment as a surgeon is a Fellow in the American College of Surgeons.

He was among the first to volunteer for service in the great World war, and after receiving his commission was assigned to the Base Hospital at Camp Lee, where he remained until after the armistice.

In April of 1916 he married Miss Elizabeth Richmond, a native of Milton, North Carolina, and with their children, Robert, Elizabeth and Walter, they now reside at their home on Sixth Avenue.

Doctor Wilkinson votes as a democrat, and is a member of Johnson Memorial Methodist Church, South, of Huntington. He is also affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Mohawk Tribe No. 11, Improved Order of Red Men, The Kiwanis Club, Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Crystalline No. 1 of the Scottish Rite of Wheeling, Beni-Ken Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston and the Grotto Branch of Masonry.

GEORGE O. VIA, D. D. S., is numbered among the able and representative dental practitioners of the younger generation in McDowell County, where he is established in successful practice at Maybrey. He was born at Indian Mills, Summers County, this state, on the 19th of June, 1894, and is a son of Anderson Henry Via and Narcissus (Clark) Via, both likewise natives of this state and both representatives of families early founded in the old mother state of Virginia. Anderson H. Via is a stonemason by trade but has long been actively and successfully identified with farm enterprise in Summers County, where he is serving, in 1922, as president of the County Court and where he is otherwise influential in public affairs, he having been a member of the School Board many years and both he and his wife being zealous members of the Baptist Church at Summers, of which he is a deacon and also secretary and treasurer.

To the public schools of his native county Doctor Via is indebted for his preliminary education, which included the curriculum of the high school, and in the meanwhile he assisted in the work and management of his father's farm. He remained at the parental home until 1912, when he began the study of dentistry. In the autumn of 1913 he entered the Ohio College of Dental Surgery in the City of Cincinnati, where he continued his studies two years. He then transferred to the dental department of the University of Maryland, in the City of Baltimore, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1916 and with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. For even months thereafter he was engaged in practice at Petterstown, West Virginia, he next passed five months in practice at Princeton, and in September, 1917, he established his professional headquarters at Maybrey, where in addition to his general private practice he is retained as official dentist for the Pocahontas Fuel Company. In his large and important practice he finds it expedient to maintain branch offices at Keystone and Northfork, at which latter place he has charge of the McDowell County Dental Clinic, with three dentists and three nurses under his supervision.

When the nation became involved in the World War Doctor Via subordinated all personal interests to the call of patriotism. He enlisted May 23, 1917, was examined at Charleston and there received his commission as first lieutenant, on the 23d of September. Upon his return to Maybrey he suffered an attack of measles, which was followed by symptoms of tubercular affliction, which resulted in his exemption from military service and caused his isolation for a period of six months, at the expiration of which he had sufficiently recuperated to resume the practice of his profession. The doctor is a valued member of the Dental Society of the three counties with which McDowell County is included, and is a member also of the West Virginia State Dental Society and the National Dental Association. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, is a member of the Baptist Church, and his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian Church.

At Petterstown, this state, in 1917, Doctor Via wedded Miss Edith May Callaway, daughter of John and Sallie (Sprigle) Callaway. Mr. Callaway had entire charge of the general store maintained by the Pocahontas Fuel Company at Maybrey at the time of his death, several years ago, and his daughter Edith M. (Mrs. Via), was born at his place. Doctor and Mrs. Via have three children: Mildred Merrill, Martha Hunter and Wilda Katherine.

HON. GEORGE COLEMAN BAKER, of Morgantown, one of West Virginia's prominent native sons, represents a pioneer family of Monongalia County, and has won individual distinction at the bar and in the domain of public affairs. His associates refer to him as a conscientious and as an able lawyer, a thorough scholar and a dignified, accomplished and unassuming gentleman. Mr. Baker represents the fifth generation of the American branch of the family, and members of the successive generation are taken up in chronological order in the following paragraphs.

I. Peter Becker, whose descendants adopted the present spelling of the family name, came to this country about 1740 and settled in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. He probably came over on the ship Loyal Judith from Rotterdam, 'Commander Lovell Painter,' November 25, 1740. In the ship's list his age is given as twenty-two.

II. His son, George Baker, who was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1762, was founder of the family in what is now West Virginia. After the Revolution, in which he was a veteran, he traveled westward and southward until he reached what is now known as Cheat Neck, Union District, locating on land at that time partly occupied by the Indians and upon which land are the remains of an old Indian graveyard. He was a gunsmith by trade, and later owned two properties on High Street in Morgantown, one now occupied by Orr's store, the other by W. E. Price's brick business block. George Baker, who died June 27, 1844, at the age of eighty-two, married Elizabeth Norris, who was born January 5, 1771, and died October 13, 1857, aged eighty-six. She was a daughter of William Norris, from whom she inherited the Baker farm. William Norris obtained the original tract of 400 acres under George III of England in 1772, and deeded it to his daughter, Elizabeth Norris Baker, and her husband, George Baker.

III. John N. Baker, one of the twelve children of George and Elizabeth, was born July 17, 1801, died, and was buried July 17, 1894, at the advanced age of ninety-three. He was a man of self reliance, rugged character, intense honesty and untiring perseverance, and recognized widely as one of the strong characters of his generation. This was exhibited in his relationship to the church of which he was a leader, the Methodist Protestant. His early opportunities for education were necessarily meager, yet his native ability made him recognized as the finest mathematician in the county. He lived his long life honored and respected. On June 29, 1823, he married Nancy Norris, who was born June 6, 1801, and died May 11, 1863. They lived on the Baker homestead, to which he fell heir as the oldest son of George and Elizabeth Norris Baker. By his wife, Nancy, he was the father of ten children. After her death John N. Baker, in his old age, married her sister Elizabeth, better known as Aunt Betsey. There were no children by this union. The family of Nancy and Elizabeth Norris were not related to William Norris, whose daughter married the first George Baker.

IV. Andrew Coleman Baker, father of the Morgantown lawyer, was born January 20, 1832, on the old home farm, and died June 14, 1863. He was a man of attainments and high Christian character and possessed many worthy traits. During the Civil war he served for a time in the State Militia, and died while that struggle was in progress. March 6, 1860, he married Hannah A. Vance, who was born August 6, 1841, daughter of the late Col. Addison S. and Mary (Sturgiss) Vance. She was a lineal descendant of John Lincoln, who was a Revolutionary soldier and a distant cousin of President Lincoln. Her father, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, in 1812, and died in Morgantown in 1883, moved to this city in 1835 from Uniontown, Pennsylvania, where he had learned the hatter's trade, and for many years he manufactured hats in Morgantown. From 1847 to 1861 he was owner and proprietor of the old National Hotel (now the Penbody). He exchanged his city property for a farm (now the West Virginia University Experiment Farm) and successfully operated it for several years, until he retired.

George Coleman Baker was born at the old Baker homestead in Union District of Monongalia County March 4, 1862. His father died, as noted, in 1863, and his mother then removed to Morgantown, where his first advantages were secured in the city schools. He continued his education in West Virginia University, graduating A. B. in June, 1883. The following year he read law with the firm of Berkshire and Sturgiss in Morgantown, and then entered the law department of West Virginia University, receiving his LL. B. and A. M. degrees in 1886. Immediately after graduating he passed his examination before the Supreme Court of West Virginia at Wheeling and received his license to practice law from that court.

January 1, 1887, Mr. Baker became a member of the law firm of Berkshire Sturgiss, thereafter known as Berkshire, Sturgiss & Baker until January 1, 1889. At that date he formed a partnership with Hon. Frank Cox. Mr. Cox then assumed the duties of prosecuting attorney and appointed Mr. Baker as his assistant, and when Mr. Baker was elected to succeed Mr. Cox as prosecuting attorney, January 1, 1893, he appointed Mr. Cox as his assistant. Their law partnership has been one of mutual profit and advantage for over thirty-three years, the only interruption being two years when Judge Cox was on the bench of the Supreme Court of West Virginia.

March 4, 1909, Governor W. E. Glascock appointed Mr. Baker judge advocate general of the State of West Virginia, with the rank of brigadier general on his staff, an office he filled four years. In and outside of his profession he had exercised a prominent influence in public life, and has welcomed opportunities to use his abilities in behalf of the welfare and betterment of community and state. Especially noteworthy was his part in the struggle for equal taxation during the period when that important question was before the people. Those familiar with the history of the movement credit his efforts with having had a material bearing on the final settlement. For over a period of three years he participated in the public discussions carried on through the press of the state, and also by his arguments before the state courts, and thus was active in the campaign to educate public sentiment, which finally resulted in the legislative enactment providing for tax reform. This act provided for the taxation of leaseholds for coal, oil and gas which had never before been subject to taxation under the laws of West Virginia, though representing vast millions of untaxed wealth. Mr. Baker has found other important duties and responsibilities in social and religious organizations. He is a member and for many years a trustee of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

September 4, 1889, he married Miss Juliette Boyers. Her father was the late Hezekiah C. Boyers, a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church. Her mother, Elizabeth M. Brock, was the daughter of Rev. Fletcher and Rachel (Stevenson) Brock. Mrs. Baker, who is a graduate of the Morgantown Female Seminary, was prior to her marriage a teacher in the Morgantown High School and in Marshall College at Huntington. In later years, with some relief from the cares and the duties of home and motherhood, she has taken a prominent part in church and social affairs, and is widely known over the state in the Daughters of the American Revolution, having held the office of State Chaplain, Chapter Regent of the Elizabeth Ludington Hagans Chapter D. A. R., and has been a member of various state committees of this organization. Mrs. Baker is the proud possessor of a sixteen hundred hour badge for work during the World war. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have a son and two daughters, constituting the sixth generation of this family.

The son, Charles George Baker, born July 4, 1890, graduated from high school in 1907, then entered West Virginia University as a classical student and cadet, and received his A. B. degree in 1911 and his law degree in June, 1913, and at graduation was also major in the Cadet Corps. For four years he was a partner of Stanley R. Cox in the prosecuting attorney's office, and is now a member of the law firm of Baker & Posten and is assistant prosecuting attorney. For a number of years he has been in active work in the Boy Scouts movement and in other civic organizations, is a steward in the First Methodist Episcopal Church and affiliated with the Odd Fellows and Masons. July 16, 1913, Charles G. Baker married Charlotte Amy Blair. Her father, William F. Blair, of Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, was for several years a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature. Charlotte Amy Blair, who was born February 25, 1892, was educated in Beaver College in Pennsylvania, is a vocal graduate of West Virginia University and continued her musical studies in voice at Boston. Charles G. Baker and wife have two children: Mary Jane Baker, born October 24, 1915, and Betty Sue, born November 27, 1917.

The older of the two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Baker was Grace Juliette Baker, who was born March 21, 1893, she completed her education in the Morgantown High School, West Virginia University and Washington College in the District of Columbia, and life held out its greatest promise to her when, at the age of only twenty-five, she passed away March 26, 1918. She was a member of the Episcopal Church.

The younger and surviving daughter, Marguerite Blair, was born January 20, 1897, graduated from high school in 1914, in June, 1916, graduated from Rye Seminary in New York, and received a degree for work in piano at West Virginia University in June, 1917. She then entered Smith College at Northampton, Massachusetts, the largest woman's college in the United States, and June 14, 1919, graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree and "Most Excellent Honors." She was married to James Offutt Lahr, son of Hon. James S. Lakin, of Charleston, West Virginia, on Wednesday, December 21, 1921.

CHARLES GEORGE BAKER. In the domain of the law he happened not infrequently that the male members of a family will show a predilection for the same calling, a following father in keeping the family name prominent before the people of the community in connection with solving the problems and perplexities of involved court litigation. This applies to Charles George Baker, of the law firm of Baker & Posten, who is one of the prominent younger members of the bar of Morgantown, and whose father, George C. Baker, a sketch of whose career precedes this review, is one of the leading attorneys of Monongalia County.

Charles George Baker was born July 4, 1890, at Morgantown, where he received his early education in the public schools, being graduated from the high school of this city as a member of the class of 1907. Following this he entered the University of West Virginia, from which institution he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1911 and that of Bachelor of Laws with the class of 1913, in which latter year he was admitted to the bar and began practice in the office of Cox & Baker of Morgantown. He served as assistant prosecuting attorney for Monongalia County from 1917 to 1921, and on February 21st of the latter year became senior member of the law firm of Baker & Posten, a combination that has already attracted attention for its capable handling of several important cases. Mr. Baker has always taken an active interest in Boy Scout activities, and served as scoutmaster for a number of years. In 1921 he became scout commissioner for Monongalia County. He is a member of the local lodges of the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Junior Order United American Mechanics and Modern Woodmen of America, is secretary of the Morgantown Kiwanis Club and belongs to the Chamber of Commerce. His college fraternity is Kappa Alpha, and his religious connection is with the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

On July 16, 1913, Mr. Baker married Miss Charlotte Blair, daughter of William F. and Narcissus Blair, of Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, and to this union there have come two daughters: Mary Jane, born October 24, 1915, and Betty Sue, born November 26, 1917.

WILEY MARION HALE. One of the substantial and well ordered financial institutions of Mingo County is the Kismet State Bank, at Kermit, of which Mr. Hale was one of the organizers and of which he has served as cashier from the time of its incorporation. The first president was D. L. Hewitt, who continued the incumbent of this office until his death, in the winter of 1921-2. Floyd Brewer is vice president.

Mr. Hale was born on his father's farm ten miles east of Inez, Martin County, Kentucky, and the date of his nativity was February 21, 1873. He is a son of George L. and Sallie (Farsley) Hale, the former of whom died in 1904, at the age of sixty-one years, and the latter of whom died in the following year, at the age of fifty-six. The father was born in Floyd County, Kentucky, and in addition to becoming one of the progressive farmers of his native state he was also identified with the timber business and was associated with M. H. Johns in the conducting of a general store on Wolf Creek in Martin County, Kentucky. In 1888 he was elected county clerk of Martin County, and re-elected at the close of his first term, and thus held the office eight years. As a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war he was a member of Company K, Fourteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and he took part in many engagements. He was with General Sherman's army in the historic Atlanta campaign and subsequent march to the sea, and at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain he was wounded, though not seriously. He was a republican, was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and he and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Church at Inez, Kentucky, which he served as superintendent of the Sunday School. Of their five children, all sons, John W. is now serving as assessor of Martin County, Kentucky; Robert L. is cashier of the Deposit Bank at Inez, that county; Wiley M., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Julius C. is a merchant at Pilgrim, Martin County, a village near the old home of the Hale family; and Wallace B. is associated with a coal company at Burch, West Virginia.

Wiley M. Hale completed his early school work in the public schools at Barbourville, West Virginia, under the tutelage of G. W. F. Hampton, and for twelve years thereafter he was a successful and popular teacher in the schools of his native county, where his final pedagogic service was in the village schools at Inez. He became assistant to his father in the office of county clerk, and in 1904 was elected circuit clerk for Martin County. In the following year he there became cashier of the Inez Deposit Bank, and of this position he continued the incumbent fifteen years, his resignation taking place when he became one of the organizers of the Kermit State Bank, of which he has since continued the cashier. In his native county he was active and influential in securing leases for those who there carried forward oil and gas development, and the same progressive and loyal civic spirit has animated him since he established his home in West Virginia.

Mr. Hale is a staunch republican, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in the Masonic fraternity he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite as a member of the Consistory at Covington, Kentucky. In connection with his York Rite affiliations he served ten years as master of the Blue Lodge at Inez, that state, besides having been for one year the noble grand of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

The year 1894 recorded the marriage of Mr. Hale and Miss Nettie Spaulding, daughter of John K. Spaulding, of Warfield, Kentucky. Of the children of this union the eldest, George W., is assistant cashier of the Kermit State Bank; Maude is the wife of Elmer Stepp, a member of the West Virginia State Police, their home being at Madison; and the younger children, still of the parental home circle, are Rudolph, Wallace M. and Lewis D.

HARRY G. WILLIAMS has been successfully engaged in the real-estate and insurance business in the City of Williamson, Mingo County, since 1911, and his insurance agency, of general order, is one of the most substantial in Mingo County.

Of English and Irish Ancestry, Mr. Williams is a scion of families founded in Virginia many generations ago, his maternal grandfather having been a prominent civil engineer in that historic old commonwealth. He is a son of Cyrus and Octavia (Davis) Williams and was born at Tazewell, Virginia, August 20, 1880. His father was long a representative farmer and citizen of Tazewell County, and served as a member of a Virginia cavalry regiment under Gen. Jubal A. Early, throughout the Civil war, he having made a splendid record as a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy and having never been wounded or captured.

In 1899 Harry G. Williams graduated from the high school at Richland, Tazewell County, Virginia, and for three years thereafter he was a student in the private academy conducted by Professor Melvain at Bowen Cove, Virginia. He then took a position in the First National Bank of Montgomery, Indiana, where he remained eighteen months. He then came to Williamson, West Virginia, to assume the position of assistant cashier of the First National Bank, a position which he retained until December, 1911, when he resigned and forthwith established his present real estate and insurance business, in which he has achieved unequivocal success. He has been decisively progressive and public spirited as a citizen, and while he has had no desire for public office he gave four years of effective service as a member of the Board of Education at Williamson. In the World war period he was chairman of the local Draft Board, was a vigorous worker in the drives in support of patriotic objects, including the Government war loans, and was treasurer of the local chapter of the Red Cross, a position which he still retains. Mr. Williams is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, is a valued member of the local Kiwanis Club, is an active member of the Williamson Lodge of Elks, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

At Montgomery, West Virginia, a town named in honor of the family of which his wife is a representative in the maternal line, Mr. Williams was united in marriage, in 1906, with Miss Myrtle Smith, a daughter of Green and Willie (Montgomery) Smith, Mr. Smith being a leading contractor and builder at Montgomery. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have a winsome little daughter, Octavia.

JOHN R. LITTLE, the superintendent of Fall River Mines, Fall River Pocahontas Collieries Company at Roderfield, McDowell County, is one of the efficient and popular executives in the coal mining industry in this section of his native state, his birth having occurred near Wyoming, Mercer County, West Virginia, September 24, 1880. He is a son of Hiram and Martha Ann (Hearn) Little, the former of whom was born near Charleston, this state, and the latter near Oakvale, Mercer County. The father died in 1906, at the age of fifty-two years, and the mother now resides at Coaldale, Mercer County, she being sixty-seven years of age at the time of this writing, in the winter of 1921-2. As a young man Hiram Little was a successful teacher in the schools of Mercer and Wyoming counties, and thereafter he was a merchant at Basin and Crumpler, which latter place was then known as Burks Garden. In his progressive business career he became agent for the Flat Top Land Company, in which connection he obtained options and purchased many tracts of timber and coal land in Wyoming, McDowell and Raleigh counties, beside doing a large amount of surveying of lands now owned by representative coal companies. As a boy of twelve years Hiram Little became a member of the Methodist Church, in which he became a local preacher and in the work of which he continued active and zealous until the time of his death, his widow likewise being a devoted member of this church. He was also a vital and enthusiastic advocate of the principles of the republican party, and was an effective campaign speaker. Of the seven children of the family two died in infancy; Thomas Levi is superintendent of a coal company at Herndon, Wyoming County; John R., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Robert S., is a mine foreman at Coaldale; Edgar B. is a farmer and dairyman at Roanoke, Virginia; and Margaret is the wife of John Clendennin, of Roanoke, McDowell County, West Virginia.

John R. Little attended school at Crumpler, McDowell County, and the Billups School in Tazewell County, Virginia, where the family home was maintained two years. When still a boy he began working in the Shamokin mines at Maybeury, where he remained two years. He was next employed in the Elkhorn mine, at the same place, and later for two years he had charge of a general store at Maybeury. He then became a foreman at the Elkhorn Mine, of which he was later made superintendent, and in 1918 he assumed his present executive post, that of superintendent of the Fall River Mine. Like his father, Mr. Little has taken deep interest in educational work, and he served as a member of the School Board of Brown Creek District. He has had no desire for political activity, but is a loyal supporter of the cause of the republican party.

In March, 1906, Mr. Little wedded Miss Cora Taber, daughter of A. J. Taber, of Coaldale, and the children of this union are five sons and five daughters.

SAMUEL W. PATTERSON was one of the first officials on the ground in the development of the coal property of the Bottom Creek Coal & Coke Company at Vivian in McDowell County. He has lived there since December, 1891, and has become a successful and widely known coal operator in that section of the state.

Mr. Patterson was born in Elk County, Pennsylvania, September 24, 1863, son of Thomas N. and Rachel (Spencer) Patterson. The Pattersons were a family of Irish, Scotch and English origin, while the Spencers were English. Mr. Patterson comes of several branches of substantial New England stock, including the Howland and Denison families. He is a member of the John Howland Society. His parents were both born in Pennsylvania, his father at Mauch-Chunk. Thomas N. Patterson took up the profession of medicine, but soon abandoned it to engage in coal mining, and later became manager for J. C. Haydon at Mahanoy City, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, then one of the largest operators in Carbon County, Pennsylvania.

Samuel W. Patterson graduated from high school in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, and at the age of sixteen entered his father's office. There he acquired a thorough knowledge of the coal industry, being afforded every opportunity to familiarize himself with the business and technical branches of the business. His uncle, William Spencer, had acquired an interest in coal lands in West Virginia. With this interest as the basis there was organized in 1891 at Pottsville, Pennsylvania, the Bottom Creek Coal & Coke Company. The company selected and sent as its practical representatives to the field William Spencer and Samuel W. Patterson, the latter as secretary and treasurer of the company. Later he became president and general manager. The Norfolk & Western Railroad was then constructing its main line west into this section, but at the time Mr. Patterson had to walk from what is now Kyle to Vivian, the location of the Bottom Creek Company's property. He has been here ever since and has had active supervision of all phases of the development of the property. He is still at his post of duty as mine manager. With his brother, George S., he organized the Sycamore Coal Company of Cinderella, Mingo County, West Virginia, and is president of that company, and is also vice president of the Majestic Collieries Company, Majestic, Kentucky.

In 1903, at Brooklyn, New York, Mr. Patterson married Miss Mary Cleveland, daughter of Charles W. and M. Isabel (Torrey) Cleveland, both representing old families of Pennsylvania and New York State. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have one son, Thomas Cleveland.

MEREDITH J. SIMMS, now a prominent citizen of Charleston, achieved his conspicuous place in business and public affairs in Fayette County, West Virginia, where for thirty-five years he was active as a merchant, banker and was also president of the County Court.

The Simms family is an old one in America, of an English ancestry running back for four or five centuries. The grandfather of Judge Simms was P. William Simms, who was born on the Gauley River in West Virginia, February 2, 1804, was a farmer and blacksmith by occupation, and died in 1895. He married Elizabeth Dorsey, a native of Greenbrier County. One of their eight children was Franklin Pilcher Simms, who was born on the Gauley River in 1831, and for many years owned and operated a large farm in Nicholas County. He married Eliza Simms, who died in 1910.

Meredith J. Simms, one of the thirteen children of his parents, was born on a farm in Nicholas County, April 9, 1862. After 1873 the family moved to Fayette County, where he finished his public school education, and he began his business career in 1886 at Montgomery as bookkeeper for the Strangham Coal Company. He resigned in 1889 to become postmaster through appointment of President Harrison, and after retiring from that office four years later he engaged in merchandising and in the wholesale bottling business, and gradually his interests took on a wide scope, involving affairs of great financial prominence in that section of the state. He was formerly president of the Montgomery & Cannelton Bridge Company, and was also president of the Montgomery National Bank. He relinquished these various interests when he moved to Charleston.

Judge Simms was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1896 when William McKinley was nominated and to the convention of 1912 when William H. Taft was nominated. He was for four successive terms, twenty-four years, a member of the County Court of Fayette County and was president or judge of the court about twenty years. On account of this judicial service he is always known as Judge Simms. He is a member of the Elk Order.

At St. Albans, West Virginia, January 3, 1887, he married Alwilda Ramson, daughter of William and Mar (DeFore) Ramson. She was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, December 25, 1860, and is likewise descended from a long line of ancestry, reaching back to pre-Colonial days. Mary DeFore was of Huguenot descent, the founders of that family in America having been among that colony of Huguenots who came from France to Charleston, South Carolina, in 1689. The DeFore family later located in Appomattox County, Virginia.

Five children were born to Judge and Mrs. Simms, as follows: Forest DeFore, born December 29, 1887, died February 16, 1914. Ira, born December 22, 1889, married Ruth Shrewsbury, of Charleston, and has a son, Meredith, now five years of age. Ira served with the American army during the Mexican border troubles and following that volunteered for service in the war with Germany, being assigned to the aviation service. Mary Mabel, born January 28, 1892, died September 20, 1894. Maude was born May 13, 1895. Agnes Gene, born June 28, 1897, is now the widow of Dr. Ira M. Derr, whom she married June 1, 1918. Doctor Derr enlisted in the service of his country was commissioned a first lieutenant, and assigned to duty at Spartanburg, South Carolina, where he died in the service, November 6, 1918.

Judge Simms with his family removed to Charleston in 1920 to make his permanent home. His residence occupies a beautiful and spacious site on Columbia Boulevard, at the corner of Vine Street, on the banks of the Kanawha River and overlooking the beautiful valley. It is one of the handsomest homes in the city, with spacious lawns and grounds.

In conclusion the writer cannot fail to draw some significance from the immediate and generous welcome given to Judge Simms and family on their removal to Charleston. This has been in the nature of a tribute to his high standing as a successful man of affairs. Though in the city less than two years, he has served as a member of the Charleston City Council, is active vice president of the West Side Business Men's Club, is a member of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce and the Real Estate Board. While he does not consider himself an active business man, he still has large interests in real estate and to some extent in oil development.

COL. WILLIAM LECKIE was one of the big, strong kindly and generous men of the West Virginia coal fields. A native of Scotland, son of a Scotch miner, he came to the United States when a young man, finished his education in American schools and by private study, worked in and around mines for a number of years, and rose from various positions of responsibility to be a leading mine operator. He developed some of the best coal openings in Southern West Virginia.

William Leckie was born in Ayreshire, Scotland, on October 4, 1857, a son of Samuel and Katherine McClellan Leckie. He was the oldest of fourteen children. As a boy he worked on a farm and in the coal mines of Scotland. At the age of twenty-one he came to America and located in Shenandoah, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania. His father and mother, brothers and sisters followed about six months later. William Leckie entered the mines as repairman, and by industry and economy he earned the money to enter Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, where he was a student for two and a half years. In 1882 he was appointed fire-boss for the Philadelphia & Reading Coal &

W. A. Simmons

Company; a year later he was with the Buck Mountain Company as inside foreman; and as ambition and thfulness won for him recognition and rapid advancement he became, successively, district superintendent for the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company; general superintendent of the Lehigh Valley Coal, York Farm & Blackfoot Collieries; general superintendent of the Webster Coal & Coke Company; and, finally, general manager of the Loyal Hanna Coal & Coke Company.

On November 26, 1881, William Leekie married Annie Kolb, daughter of the Rev. F. H. Kolb, a Presbyterian minister, of Shenandoah, Pennsylvania. An interested worker in his work and witness of his experiences was Mrs. Leekie, and the inspiration of his ambitions and best endeavors. She made it a rule always to be present at each mining, when the first ear of coal was taken out.

In 1901 William Leekie came to the Pocahontas Coal fields as superintendent of the Pocahontas Collieries Company, the pioneer mines of this famous field. He developed and built up these mines, which were later bought by the Pocahontas Consolidated Collieries Company. He remained in this position until 1907, when he went into business for himself and established the following operating companies, which he was president and general manager: The West Virginia Pocahontas Coal Company, with mines at Leekie, West Virginia, and general offices in New York, the Lanthrop Coal Company and Panther Coal Company, mines at Panther, West Virginia, the Leekie Collieries Company, mines at Atlex, Kentucky, and Leekie Fire Creek Coal Company at Douglas Coal Company, with mines at Fireco, West Virginia, the general offices of the last four being at Welch, West Virginia, where Mr. Leekie lived for many years. He is also the chief incorporator and president of several holding companies, the Pond Creek Coal & Land Company, the Leekie-Ramsay Coal Company, the Cub Creek Coal Company, and the Leekie Smokeless Coal Company, the latter company owning a large acreage of undeveloped lands in Greenbrier County, West Virginia. The Leekie Coal Company, a selling agency, with offices at Norfolk, Virginia, and Columbus, Ohio, handles the output of operating companies. Mr. Leekie was president of the first National Bank of Anawalt, West Virginia, of the newfield National Bank at Bluefield, and a director in the first National Bank of Welch.

Colonel Leekie was a life-long Presbyterian, and was an elder in the church at Welch. He was a member of all the Masonic orders, of the Bluefield Lodge of Elks, also of the Star Club, the Chamber of Commerce and the Country club of Bluefield. Only a few short weeks before his death Colonel and Mrs. Leekie moved to their new home on Oak-First Avenue in Bluefield, and it was there that he died on November 16, 1920. Five of a family of six children survive him: Nellie, wife of Dr. S. J. Kell, of Bluefield; Andrew F., of Welch; and William S., of Williamson, who now have the management of the coal properties; Douglas E., who is in the real estate business in Bluefield; and Miriam, who is the wife of Dr. M. B. Moore, of Huntington.

Colonel Leekie never forgot his own early struggles as a miner. He understood the miner's viewpoint, and he made the living and social conditions of his camps one of his first considerations in building up an operation. Much of his success is attributed to his capacity for leadership of his men in his employ. He was a disciplinarian, but not a hip-cracking task-master; he was easy to approach and his sense of justice and generosity won the loyal friendship of his employees and kept his operations free from labor troubles.

He was a broad-gauged, whole-souled man and a good citizen, thoroughly imbued with the highest spirit of Americanism.

MARION TIVIS BALL. An exemplification of self-made manhood is found in the career and person of Marion T. Ball, of Williamson, Mingo County. A man of prominence and influence in his community, he has risen solely through the medium of his own efforts and well-applied industry, or he entered upon his career with nothing but an indifferent education to aid him and was forced to depend wholly upon his own resources.

Mr. Ball was born February 21, 1861, in Pike County, Kentucky, a son of Jesse and Jane (Keith) Ball, natives of Virginia. The Ball family is one that dates its ancestry back to early Colonial days in Virginia, while the Keiths originated in Ireland. Jesse Ball was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal faith, which he followed in Virginia. His nine children were reared in Kentucky.

The youngest child in a large family, with the only means of support the meager and uncertain salary of a country preacher, Marion Tivis Ball had few of the pleasures and advantages that are considered youth's inalienable right in these days. In fact he considered himself lucky to be able to get an education in the country school, which he finished when he was fourteen years of age, with the exception of some irregular attendance during the winter months on several later occasions. When he was fourteen he began to add to the family income by working in a sawmill, and during the six years that he was thus engaged mastered the business in numerous of its particulars. He then took up carpentry as a vocation, and this occupation he followed with success for some twenty years. Next, he accepted a position with the Hurst Hardware Company of Williamson, and while associated with Mr. Hurst in the furniture division of the store, became familiar with the undertaking business. In 1913 Mr. Ball purchased the undertaking department of Mr. Hurst's establishment, and since then has devoted his time to this vocation. Mr. Ball has the tact and diplomacy necessary for his chosen line of work, into which he brings the latest methods for the reverent care of the dead.

In 1881, while a resident of Pike County, Kentucky, Mr. Ball was united in marriage with Dorcas Casbolt, a daughter of William and Lottie Casbolt, natives of Kentucky, and to this union there have been born five children: Robert Edgar, associated with his father in the undertaking business at Williamson, who married Willa Lowther; Virginia Stella, who married Lee Fenton Morris, of Williamson, and has one child, Nancy Lou, born in 1921; Lewellyn Ferne, who married Guy Holson Hughes of Williamson; Goebel Keith and Marion Tabor. The family belongs to the Presbyterian Church except Mr. Ball, who is an adherent of the Methodist Episcopal faith. He belongs to the Kiwanis Club, and as a Mason holds membership in the Blue Lodge and Chapter at Williamson, the Knights Templar at Huntington, the Scottish Rite at Wheeling and is a member of Bent-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Charleston, West Virginia. His support is always given to worthy civic movements, and he can be counted upon to contribute to those measures which have for their object the raising of standards of morality and citizenship.

EDWARD K. MAHAN. West Virginia is still one of the more important states of the Union in the production of hardwood, and one of the largest organizations in the state for the manufacture and handling of such resources is the Peytona Lumber Company, of which Edward K. Mahan, of Huntington, is president.

Mr. Mahan's great-great-grandfather came from the North of Ireland to America in Colonial times and founded the family in Virginia. The grandfather of the Huntington lumberman was Nelson Mahan, who was born in Virginia in 1806, lived for a number of years in Monroe County, West Virginia, in 1842 moved to Kanawha County, and died at Charleston in 1888. His principal business was contracting for public works, and among others he constructed the locks and dams on the Coal River. His wife was Sarah Legg, who also died at Charleston.

John W. Mahan, father of Edward K., was born in Monroe County, March 24, 1841. He was a lumber manufacturer with mills at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, and in Fayette County, West Virginia, where a village grew up around his mills named in his honor, Mahan. From 1891 until his death his home was at Huntington in Cabell County, but he died in a hospital at Charleston August 5, 1905. He had a record of a Confederate soldier of the Civil war, serving throughout that conflict with the border rangers under General Jenkins and General McCauslands.

John W. Mahan married Romaine Myers, who was born at Gallipolis, Ohio, in 1850 and died at Washington, D. C., June 9, 1916. They were the parents of five children: Romaine, wife of Dr. William E. Philes, a physician and surgeon at Washington, D. C.; Edward K.; Mabel F., living at Washington, D. C., widow of George T. Paige, a resident of Sioux Falls, South Dakota; Jane, wife of an attorney, Marion Eustace, at Caldwell, Idaho; and Clara, wife of Arthur B. York, an attorney at Staunton, Virginia.

Edward K. Mahan was born at Madison in Boone County, West Virginia, August 16, 1878. In 1904 he removed to Mansfield, Ohio, and was in the wholesale lumber business. In 1906 he assisted in organizing the Peytona Lumber Company, becoming its secretary, and since 1915 has been its president. This company, with business offices in the Robson-Pritchard Building at Huntington, has mills and other facilities for the manufacture and wholesale handling of hardwood lumber and do an immense business in this line. Mr. Mahan is also a stockholder and director in the Huntington Banking and Trust Company, and is president of the Elk Creek Lumber Company.

His home is at 2678 Third Avenue in Huntington. In March, 1901, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, Mr. Mahan married Miss Victoria Williamson, daughter of Benjamin and Pauline (Taylor) Williamson. Mr. and Mrs. Mahan have one child, Virginia, born May 9, 1902.

JOSEPH N. DOYLE, present county engineer of Cabell County, has had a wide experience and numerous responsibilities in the civil and construction engineering profession. He is a native of Huntington, where his father at one time was a foundryman and manufacturer.

Mr. Doyle was born at Huntington, May 19, 1887. His grandfather was a native of Ireland, and on coming to America settled in old Virginia. James Thayer Doyle, father of the county engineer, was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1844, was reared at Malden, Kanawha County, West Virginia, was married in Huntington, where he owned and operated a machine shop and foundry, and in 1891 removed to Montgomery, where he continued in the same business, his chief output being mining cars. Returning to Huntington in 1893, he went on the road as a salesman for the Ensign Car & Foundry Company, now a branch of the American Car & Foundry Company. From 1900 until his death in 1916 James T. Doyle was a mechanic in the service of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. He was a democrat, and a deacon and very enthusiastic member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Lucy Maupin, who was born in Cabell County in 1849, and died at Baltimore in March, 1921. Of their four children the oldest is James E., a general and road contractor of Huntington; Mary Alice is the wife of H. S. Gresser, in the automobile business at Washington, D. C.; Joseph N. is the third in age; and Caroline Hope is the wife of Robert L. Hooven, also in the automobile business at Washington.

Joseph N. Doyle acquired a public school education at Huntington, graduating from high school in 1905 and almost immediately became an employee of the Lee-Maupin Engineering Company at Huntington. In the service of this firm he acquired a practical knowledge of civil engineering, and worked up to the rank of transit man. Leaving Huntington in 1910, he was for a time located at Indianapolis, where he had charge of an engineering party for the Moore-Mansfield Construction Company. On his return to Huntington he did work for A. B. Maupin, his uncle, then city engineer of Huntington, until 1914. In that year he was put in charge of all the field work for the firm Renshaw & Breece, mining engineers. In 1916 he and his associate, under the name of Stulting & Doyle, succeeded by purchase to the professional business of Renshaw & Breece, and for a year continued the work in civil and mining engineering. Mr. Doyle then sold out to Stulting and formed the firm of Doyle Brothers, his brother James E. being his associate. They continued civil and mining engineering until the winter of 1919, since which date Mr. Doyle has continued alone and is one of the leading authorities on mining engineering in the state. His offices are at 320½ Ninth Street.

Mr. Doyle's position of county engineer came to him by appointment from the County Court of Cabell County April, 1921. He is a member of the American Association of Engineers and the American Society of Engineers. In politics he is a democrat, is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church and is a member of Huntington Lodge No. 313 B. E. O. and Protective Order of Elks. His home is a modern residence at 1612 Third Avenue. He married Huntington in 1911 Miss Beulah Stephenson, daughter of Vinson W. and Nora (Walker) Stephenson, who reside 402 Main Street, Huntington, her father being a retired timber and lumber man. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle have one son, James Thayer, born March 28, 1913.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF MINES. The first law governing the mining industry of West Virginia was enacted by the Legislature in 1883, creating the office of state mine inspector, with one inspector for the entire state. At the session of the Legislature in 1887 the act was amended, providing for two inspectors, and in 1893 it was again amended increasing the number of inspectors to three. At the session of the Legislature of 1897 the original act was further amended by providing for a chief inspector and four district inspectors. This number was again increased by the Legislature of 1901 to five district mine inspectors, and increased again in 1905 to seven district mine inspectors.

At the session of the Legislature of 1907 the Department of Mines was created, the head of the department being given the title of chief of department of mines, with twelve district mine inspectors. This act was again amended: the session of the Legislature in 1915 by a provision for three additional district mine inspectors, making fifteen in all. At the session of the Legislature of 1917 the law was further amended by placing all sand mines, sand pits, clay mines, clay pits, quarries and cement works under the jurisdiction of the department and provided for an inspector for same.

In the year 1919 the Legislature re-enacted the mining law and provided for four district mine inspectors, making a total of nineteen inspectors. The Legislature of 1919 also provided for the establishment of seven mine rescue stations and for a director of mine rescue, who has headquarters at Charleston, and since the office has been created hundreds of men have been trained in first aid and mine rescue work. The stations are established at Charleston, Mount Hope, Fairmont, Elkins, Wheeling, Logan and Welch.

At the session of the Legislature of 1921 the mining law was again amended and three additional district mine inspectors provided for, bringing the total of the department to twenty-two district mine inspectors, one inspector of sand mines, etc., a director of mine rescue and chief of department of mines.

In 1920 the first annual first aid meet was held by the Department of Mines at Charleston. The first contest of West Virginia in the International First Aid Contest resulted in the Scarbro Team of the New River Mine Company carrying off the championship. The Mine Rescue Team from Scarbro took sixth place in mine rescue work and at the International First Aid and Mine Rescue Contest at St. Louis, Missouri, on September 1, 2, 3, 1921, the White Oak Team of the New River Mine Company won the international championship for mine rescue work, thus bringing to West Virginia both championships in successive years.

Logan County first produced coal in 1904, 52,673 tons being mined that year, and it has had the most rapid growth of any coal field in the world, as they produced 9,824.78 gross tons and employed 1,000 men in and about the mine in 1920. Logan County has seventy-three coal companies operating 146 mines.

According to the reports of the United States Geological Survey in 1883, 2,335,833 tons of coal were mined in the State of West Virginia, and this has gradually increased until in 1920 there was mined in this state 89,590,274 tons and at the present time the potential tonnage of West Virginia is 140,000,000 tons.

Total available coal yet remaining in West Virginia is estimated to be 159,814,662,527 short tons. In 1920 there were 882 coal companies operating 1,440 mines and employing in and about the mines 105,000 men.

Robert M. Lambie.

So far there has not been anything discovered that will permanently take the place of coal. It is true we have oil and gas, which have been tried out, but no one has been able to determine the amount in reserve we have of either, but we do know that the amount of coal in West Virginia is almost inexhaustible and that the West Virginia coals are the best quality coals known. It is also true that several coal fields of the United States are rapidly becoming exhausted, therefore it is only natural that West Virginia with her great resources will supply the shortage created by these different sections falling off in production.

The chief of the Department of Mines is Robert Morrison Lambie, a native of Scotland, and trained in the practical and technical business of mining in that country, though nearly all his active career and experience have been in the coal industry of West Virginia.

Mr. Lambie was born at Stirling, Scotland, in 1886, son of Robert and Elizabeth (Morrison) Lambie, representing one of the good families of Scotland that have made that country distinguished for its brain and brawn. After Robert M. Lambie came to America his parents followed him, and they all lived together in West Virginia. Robert Lambie becoming ill, went back to Scotland for his health and died while there. In Scotland he acted as agent for a British Explosive Syndicate. The mother is still living and divides her time between Scotland and West Virginia.

Robert Morrison Lambie was educated in the schools of Stirling, and spent four years in night school in that city, studying mining practice and mining engineering. In 1903, at the age of seventeen, he came to America and located at Stone Cliff, Fayette County, West Virginia. His first employment there was as a driver in the coal mines, and he has performed practically every duty in connection with coal mining from laborer to managing official. His duty for a number of years involved important responsibilities with leading coal mine corporations. For three years he had charge of the operations of the Hovea Mining Company at McDowell County. For three years he was employed in a managerial capacity by the McKell Coal & Coke Company's three operations in Fayette County. He resigned to become district inspector for the State Department of Mines, an office he held two years. He then became division superintendent of the New River Coal Company on the White Oak Branch, having charge of eight operations of that company in Fayette County. Mr. Lambie and family reside in Fayette County, and he is a member of the Ruffner Memorial Presbyterian Church there. He married Miss Annie Hope Thompson, of that county. Their three children are Bessie Morrison, Robert Alexander and Annie Laurie Lambie.

In 1919 Governor John J. Cornwell called Mr. Lambie to the office of chief of the Department of Mines, and he is serving by reappointment in 1921 from Governor E. F. Forgan. The outstanding purpose of the Department of Mines is to safeguard the miners in their work and to eliminate as far as possible the hazards and dangers of their mine operations. Experts have declared the Department of Mines of West Virginia possesses the most scientific and efficient safety devices and equipment of any state of the Union. Costly and very technical instruments for detecting gas, devices to be worn as safeguards from gas effects, are part of the department's regular equipment. Another instrument is the Geophone, invented and used in France during the World war by sappers, so highly sensitive that in a mine where a fire or explosion or falling walls have cut off miners their location can be detected through many feet of solid coal. This safety equipment is so located at strategic points through the coal mining district that it can be rushed to the desired points in the quickest possible time.

Mr. Lambie having made these subjects his life work is eminently fitted for the responsible office he fills, and is constantly making experiments and investigations to increase the usefulness of the department. He is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner.

ELIJAH JAMES STONE, assistant manager of the department store of Stone & Thomas, one of the largest and most popular retail mercantile establishments not only in the City of Wheeling but also in the State of West Virginia, has the further distinction of having been one of the gallant young men who represented this state in the nation's military service in France at the time of the great World war.

Mr. Stone was born at Martin's Ferry, Ohio, March 17, 1890, but he is a representative of one of the old and honored families of what is now West Virginia. His grandfather, Elijah James Stone, whose full patronymic he bears, was a native of Massachusetts and was one of the pioneer merchants of Wheeling, West Virginia, the business which he here established having been the nucleus around which has been evolved the substantial mercantile enterprise now conducted by the firm of Stone & Thomas. He was associated with his brother-in-law, the late Jacob C. Thomas, in founding the business at Wheeling, and here he continued as an honored and representative citizen until his death, which occurred prior to the birth of his grandson and namesake, the subject of this sketch. His wife, Elizabeth (Thomas) Stone, likewise died in this city. Edward L. and Elizabeth (Elson) Stone, parents of him whose name initiates this review, still maintain their home at Wheeling, where the father is living virtually retired, he having been succeeded by his only son in the active supervision of the great department store to the upbuilding of which he gave his splendid energies for many years. He succeeded his father in the business, and has lived in Wheeling and vicinity all his life, his wife having been born in this city and the subject of this sketch being the younger of their two children. The elder child, Katharine Elson, became the wife of J. S. Gibbs, Jr., who is engaged in the insurance business at Wheeling, and she was thirty-one years of age at the time of her death.

After having profited by the advantages of the public schools of Wheeling, Elijah J. Stone here continued his studies in Linsly Institute, and thereafter he attended St. Paul's School at Concord, New Hampshire. He then entered historic old Yale University, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1911 and with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. At the university he became affiliated with the Chi Phi fraternity. After leaving Yale Mr. Stone returned to Wheeling and identified himself actively with the department store of Stone & Thomas, the modern building of which is situated at the corner of Main and Bridge streets. Under the original firm name the business has been incorporated, and its officers are as here noted: W. E. Stone, president; E. L. Stone, vice president; J. S. Jones, secretary; W. E. Rovens, treasurer; and E. J. Stone, assistant manager. Mr. Stone is loyal to his home city, is one of its liberal and progressive young business men and popular citizens, is a republican in politics, and holds membership in the Wheeling Country Club, the Fort Henry Club and the University Club.

In May, 1917, the month following that in which the United States entered the World war, Mr. Stone enlisted and was sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, where he later received commission as a first lieutenant. On the 10th of September of that year he was sent overseas as a casual, and in France he attended the artillery school at Saumur. He then became a member of the Twenty-sixth Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, with which he was in service in the Chemin des Dames sector, northwest of Toul, for three months, next passed two months in the Chateau Thierry sector, and thereafter was in the Meuse-Argonne sector, where he was stationed at the time of the signing of the armistice. In each of these sectors Mr. Stone was with the artillery on the firing line, and in September, 1918, he was advanced to the rank of captain. He returned to the United States in May, 1919, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Devens, Massachusetts. After this excellent record of patriotic service Captain Stone returned to Wheeling and resumed his association with the business of the company of which he is assistant manager.

WILLIAM H. MAGEE, who was born in the country north of Wheeling, is now designer for the Central Glass Works of Wheeling, has concentrated the energy and study of his mature career to the glass industry, and has filled a number of expert and responsible offices with glass plants all over the Ohio Valley.

Mr. Magee was born at Wellsburg, West Virginia, October 15, 1878. His father, Joseph Magee, was born in Donegal, Ireland, in 1841. He lived there until he was twenty, then crossed the ocean to Hamilton, Canada, and for two years was employed as a physician's assistant in a hospital. On leaving Canada he went to Akron, Ohio, learned the tinner's trade, and followed it as a journeyman for seven years. In 1870 he located at Wheeling, and owned and operated a tin shop and store at the corner of Eleventh and Market streets until 1877. In that year he removed to Wellsburg, where he continued the same line of business. From 1888 to 1898 he conducted his business at one of the leading centers of the Ohio oil fields, Findlay. For twenty years following he was in business at Newark, Ohio, and in 1918 retired and now, at the age of eighty, is living at Charleston, West Virginia. He is a republican, a staunch member of the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. Joseph Magee married Hannah Richardson, who was born at Wheeling in 1849. Her father, William Richardson, was a native of England, came to the United States and settled at Wheeling when a young man, and was a merchant tailor for many years. He married in Wheeling, Elizabeth Barrett, who was born in Ireland in 1808 and died at Findlay, Ohio, in 1892. Joseph Magee and wife had three children, William H. dying in infancy and the third son was also named William H., he being the glass maker at Wheeling. The second son, Charles Frizzell, is a clergyman of the Episcopal Church with home at Charleston, West Virginia. There was also an adopted daughter, Hannah Ethel, who died at Newark, Ohio, in 1918, wife of Franz Bahlke, who is now an employe of the Republic Truck Company at Alma, Michigan.

William H. Magee spent the years of his childhood and early youth in Wellsburg, West Virginia, and Findlay, Ohio, acquiring his public school education there. He left school at thirteen, and his labors as boy and man have been entirely devoted to the glass industry. He was a boy worker in the mold department of the Dalzell, Gilmore & Leighton Company at Findlay for seven years. From 1898 to 1902 he was mold maker for the A. H. Heisey Glass Company at Newark, Ohio. He first came to the Wheeling industrial district to take charge of the mold department of the West Virginia Glass Company at Martins Ferry. This plant was abandoned in 1904, and Mr. Magee was then put in charge of the mold department of the Jefferson Glass Company at Steubenville, Ohio, in 1906 went to Rochester, Pennsylvania, to fill a similar position with the H. C. Fry Glass Company, was there two years, and did similar work for the McKee Glass Company at Jeannette, Pennsylvania. He then returned to the Jefferson Glass Company, who had relocated at Follansbee, West Virginia, and was general manager of that plant until 1910. For nearly a year he was in charge of the mold department of the Imperial Glass Company of Bellaire, and on January 1, 1911, he organized and opened the Grafton plant of the Columbia Tile Company. He continued as general manager of this West Virginia industry until January, 1915. From that date until January 1, 1921 Mr. Magee had charge of the mold department of the Libbey Glass Company at Toledo, Ohio. On leaving Toledo he came to Wheeling as designer for the Central Glass Works. This is one of the prominent industries of the Wheeling District, located at Fifteenth and McCulloch streets.

Mr. Magee is a republican in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is well known in glass manufacturing circles and as a citizen of a number of communities. During the war he acted as salesman in every one of the five loan campaigns. He owns a modern home at Park View, Elm Grove, Wheeling. He married at Wellsburg, West Virginia, in 1903, Miss Margaret Frances Spooner, daughter of Samuel and Anna (Carless) Spooner, now deceased. Her father was a rolling mill heater in sheet iron mills. Mrs. Magee was reared and educated in Wheeling, and died at Toledo, Ohio February 23, 1921. She is survived by four children: William Spooner, born at Steubenville, Ohio, May 1, 1904; Nancy Lee, born at Rochester, Pennsylvania, April 7, 1906; Samuel Joseph, born at Follansbee, West Virginia December 11, 1908; and Robert Barrett, born at Grafton West Virginia, November 7, 1912.

HENRY J. HARTMANN. In capital invested and volume business ice manufacture now stands eighth among the industries of the United States. The oldest and largest ice industry of Wheeling is the Wheeling Ice and Storage Company. The efficient manager of this business is Henry Hartmann, a native of Wheeling and with a long and successful experience in local business affairs.

Mr. Hartmann was born in Wheeling, June 12, 1869. His father, William Hartmann, was born in Waldeck, Germany in 1843, was reared and educated in his native country, and on coming to the United States in the Spring of 1868 settled at Wheeling. For a period of forty-six years he was a houseman with the old Hobbs-Brockunier Glass Company after which he retired. He died at Wheeling, October 1915. He was a democrat in earlier years, but became a republican at the McKinley campaign of 1896. He was always one of the faithful members and attendants of the Lutheran Church. Soon after coming to Wheeling he married Miss Elizabeth Bremer. She was also born in Waldeck, Germany, in 1847, and had come to the United States in the spring of 1868 in company with friends. Henry J. Hartmann is the oldest of his parents' children. Charles is a broker at Wheeling and Fred W. is a salesman for the wholesale candy firm of Ellison Helfer Company, with home at Martins Ferry, Ohio.

Henry J. Hartmann was educated in the public schools of Wheeling and attended Frasher's Business College. He left school in 1885, and his first regular work was six month employment in a leather store. For two years he was with the Joseph Speidel Wholesale Grocery Company, and for fourteen years was with Waterhouse Brothers, wholesale grocers. In this establishment he reached the position of head bookkeeper and salesman.

It was in September, 1902, that Mr. Hartmann went with the Wheeling Ice and Storage Company, beginning as clerk, was promoted to assistant manager in 1913 and since October, 1921, has been manager. He is also a stockholder and director of the company. The great prestige and business this company enjoys is fully credited to the hard work and splendid management of Mr. Hartmann. The plant at this office is at 2224 Water Street.

Mr. Hartmann is a republican and has long been prominent in Zion Lutheran Church. He has served as corresponding secretary, has on several occasions been a member of the Church Council and has been president, secretary, treasurer and trustee of the various church benevolent organizations. He is a member of Ohio Valley Lodge No. 131, Knights of Pythias, Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and LaBelle Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen. He owns a modern home at 15 Kentucky Street in Wheeling. He married in that city June 30, 1897, M. Matilda Schenck, daughter of Frederick L. and Catherine (Baumberger) Schenck. Both her parents died in Wheeling, her father having been for a number of years an employe of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Mr. and Mrs. Hartmann have one child, Kathryn, born March 1, 1910. She is a graduate of the Wheeling High School and is now bookkeeper for the Wheeling Ice and Storage Company.

WILLIAM S. STINGER. One of the most successful concerns in West Virginia handling motor trucks and equipment is the Stenger Motor Company of Wheeling, a business founded and built up with steadily increasing prosperity by William S. Stenger, a young business man of great energy, who has had the faculty of doing well anything he undertook. He is a member of a very well known family in the Wheeling District.

He was born in Ohio County, West Virginia, May 1, 1885. His grandfather, John Stenger, was born in 1837 in Pennsylvania, and soon after the Civil war moved to the Northern Panhandle of West Virginia and spent the rest of his life as a farmer in Ohio and Brooke counties. He died at Beech Bottom in Brooke County in 1897. His son, John J. Stenger, was born in Belmont County, Ohio, in February, 1862, spent his early life there, married in Wheeling, and for twenty-five years was employed in the sheet department of iron and steel rolling mills. Since 1907 he has been busied with his farm at Short Creek, West Virginia. He has grown a large acreage in wheat and also has a peach orchard of twenty acres. John J. Stenger is a Catholic, a democrat, and a member of Carroll Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus, at Wheeling. He married Jane Myles, who was born at Wheeling in August, 1862. Of their children the oldest is Catherine, wife of Bernard Baker, a stationary engineer living at Warwood, Wheeling. The second in age is William S. John J., Jr., is associated with the Stenger Motor Company. Vincent J. went overseas with the One Hundred and Eighteenth Engineers and died in England in 1918, at the age of twenty-eight. Herbert M. and Earl are with their father on the farm. Raymond E. is a student in St. Charles College at Baltimore.

John Bond

William S. Stenger acquired his early education in the public schools of Wheeling, graduated from the Cathedral High School in 1904, and during the next five years he managed his father's retail dairy in Wheeling. From 1909 to 1916 he farmed on his own account in Ohio County, and in the latter year he opened at Wheeling a business known as the Sandow Motor Sales Company. In the summer of 1921 he changed the name to the Stenger Motor Company, of which he is sole proprietor. His garage, salesrooms and offices are at the corner of Eleventh and Water streets. The Stenger Motor Company is the local distributing agency for the Gramm-Bernstein Motor Trucks, Pilot cars, sells tires and standard parts for motor trucks, and Mr. Stenger has developed a business that is recognized as an indispensable service to all truck owners at Wheeling.

Mr. Stenger is a republican, a member of the Catholic Church and Carroll Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus. His home is at 118 Twenty-first Street in Norwood. November 24, 1909, at Wheeling, he married Miss Sadie E. Smith, daughter of John E. and Mary Catherine (Raab) Smith, of Short Creek, where her mother lives. Her father was a farmer and died at Short Creek. Mrs. Stenger completed her education in the West Liberty Normal School. To their marriage have been born six children: Ralph, born in September, 1910; Sarah, January 13, 1912; Gertrude, in May, 1913; Ruth, in November, 1914; Blanche, in August, 1917; and Angela, in September, 1919.

MAJ. JOHN C. BOND, state auditor of West Virginia, is a comparatively young man but with a record of activities that constitute real distinction. He began earning and paying his own way when a youth. He has been a teacher, newspaper editor and manager, and prior to his election as state auditor had served as adjutant general of West Virginia and is an ex-service man and officer of the World war.

Major Bond was born in Pendleton County, West Virginia, in 1880, son of William H. and Rebecca (Judy) Bond. His grandfather, Capt. John S. Bond, was a native of Pennsylvania, settled in Pendleton County in the early 50s, and during the Civil war was a captain of Home guards.

John C. Bond was reared on a farm, worked in the fields, in lumber mills, as a railroad brakeman, and in the meantime was acquiring his education in public schools and finally in the Fairmont State Normal from which he graduated in 1902. After teaching he took up newspaper work, became editor and general manager of the Fairmont Times, and left that city in 1907 to come to Charleston as editor and general manager of the Charleston Daily Mail. Living up the heavy routine of this responsibility in 1909, he became a general correspondent and political writer, and became widely known for his knowledge of state politics and political personalities.

In the meantime for several years Major Bond was active in the affairs of the National Guard. His first military experience came during the Spanish-American war of 1898, when he joined the First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. In the National Guard his reputation was based on his expert skill with the rifle. He represented the West Virginia National Guard in various rifle tournaments at Camp Perry, Ohio, Seagirt, New Jersey, and Jacksonville, Florida.

In 1914 he was appointed adjutant general of West Virginia, with the rank of brigadier general of the National Guard. As adjutant general it devolved upon him in 1916 to mobilize the National Guard for service on the Mexican border. Later, when the National Guard was mustered into the United States service, in April, 1917, he resigned and soon afterward was accepted for service in the National army with the rank of major. He was assigned to duty as assistant adjutant of the Thirty-eighth Division at Camp Shelby, Mississippi. There he was one of the three officers detailed by the War Department from the Thirty-eighth Division to attend the Army General Staff College, A. E. F., at Langres, France. He left for overseas on this assignment early in February, 1918. Major Bond graduated from this college with a diploma from the general staff recommending him for general staff duty with troops—the highest recommendation given by the general staff and most unusual honor for a soldier from civil life. He graduated May 29, 1918, and from that date was in constant service on the various battle fronts until the armistice. Major Bond was with the First Division in the Montdidier-Noyon sector, and was transferred about July 1st to the Thirty-fifth Division, on duty in Alsace, near the Swiss border. Later, with the same division, he engaged in the St. Mihiel drive, which was the American army's first major offensive, and subsequently was with the Thirty-fifth Division in the Meuse-Argonne battle. Major Bond's Victory Medal has four bars, indicating that he was engaged in three major offensive operations and one defensive. His defensive work was in the Somme-Dieu in Lorraine and in the Kruth sector in Alsace.

Major Bond returned home early in 1919 and was discharged at Hoboken in February. He had devoted practically five years to the National Guard or National army service. He soon afterward became a clerk in the office of the secretary of state at Charleston, and early in 1920 announced his candidacy for the republican nomination for state auditor. He won this honor at the primaries and was elected in November, 1920. Major Bond is a man of military training, has the military habit of efficiency, knows West Virginia affairs and politics, and his skillful administration of the auditor's office so far has fully justified the confidence reposed by his election. He has one of the most important of the executive offices at the capitol, the state auditor having general supervision not only of state accounts in general but such special departments as that of fire marshal, sheriff, corporations, warrant, insurance, lands.

Major Bond is a Scottish and York Rite Mason and Shriner, and is a member of the Methodist Church. He married Miss Blanche Hume, and they have a son, Paul Hume Bond.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE BRICE is the present general manager of the Wheeling Register. He became manager under his uncle, the late James B. Taney. He therefore continues the distinctive relationship maintained by the Taney family to this old institution of journalism.

The Wheeling Register was established during the Civil war times, in 1863, and has been published continuously for over half a century. Lewis Baker was one of the founders, and continued the management as principal owner until 1884. At that time the Register was acquired by Taney Brothers, and the Register has been owned and published by the West Virginia Printing Company since that year. The Register was managed first by James B. Taney, from 1884 until 1893, when Mr. Taney was appointed consul-general to Ireland under President Cleveland in his second term of office. His brother, Charles Henry Taney, succeeded him as general manager of the Register, and continued in same capacity until his sudden death on February 20, 1912. James B. Taney again became manager upon the death of his brother Charles, and at the same time the subject of this sketch was made assistant general manager and continued until the death of James B. Taney in May, 1915.

William Lawrence Brice was born at Wheeling, August 15, 1874. He is a great-grandson of a prominent pioneer character in this section of West Virginia, John Brice, a native of Pennsylvania, who was the founder and first pastor of the historic "Stones Church," a Presbyterian society organized at the "Forks of Wheeling" as early as 1787. The material of the old Stone Church is still part of the structure known as the Stoue Church at Elm Grove. John Brice died at West Alexander, Pennsylvania. His son, John Brice, Jr., was born in Pennsylvania in 1796, and subsequently removed from Ohio County, West Virginia, to Belmont County, Ohio, where he was a farmer. He died in Belmont County in 1881. His wife was Nancy Byers, a native of Washington County, Pennsylvania, who died in Belmont County, Ohio.

Sylvester L. Brice, father of William L. Brice, was born in Belmont County, February 19, 1840, and finished his education in the Normal College at Lebanon, Ohio. In 1861 he joined Company F of the Fifty-second Ohio Infantry, and was all through the Civil war, participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge and in the campaign of Sherman to the sea. Following the war he located at Wheeling, studied pharmacy, and from 1867 to 1893 conducted a successful drug business in the city. After that he lived retired until his death on December 26, 1910. S. L. Brice was for several terms a member of the City Council in both branches, was city collector of taxes, was an influential republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. His wife was Ella Taney, a sister of Charles H. and James B. Taney. She was born at Newark, New Jersey, but has lived in Wheeling since infancy. William L. Brice is the oldest of three children. His brother, Malcolm Taney Brice, is news editor of the Wheeling Register. The only sister, Eleanor, is the wife of a prominent Wheeling attorney, Henry M. Russell.

William Lawrence Brice was educated in the public schools, in Linsly Institute, and in 1893, at the age of nineteen, entered the newspaper business as a reporter on the Register, under his uncles. He has given his full time and service to this fortune and prosperity of the Register for nearly thirty years.

Mr. Brice, who is unmarried, is a democrat in politics, a member of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. F. O. E., Wheeling Country Club, Fort Henry Club, and on many occasions has found and exercised the opportunities to be a useful citizen of the community. He is a director of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, a director of the Citizens People's Trust Company, and during the World war was a member of various committees and employed the full force of the Register's influence in behalf of the Government. Mr. Brice resides at 930 North Main Street.

ROY BENTON NAYLOR. Perhaps no other name has been more steadily identified with the commercial history and development of the City of Wheeling since the middle of the past century than that of Naylor. One of the largest wholesale houses in the Ohio Valley is the John S. Naylor Company. Roy Benton Naylor is a son of the founder and for many years active head of this business, and while he chose a distinct field of enterprise he has for a number of years been recognized as one of West Virginia's ablest and most public spirited citizens, having gained a great deal of prominence during his long connection with the Wheeling and West Virginia Boards of Trade.

Mr. Naylor was born at Wheeling, July 22, 1871. His family has been in this section of the Ohio Valley considerably more than a century. His great-grandfather was John Naylor, who was born near Baltimore, Maryland, of Quaker stock and English ancestry. He settled in Ohio at the beginning of the nineteenth century, and his occupation was that of a farmer. The grandfather of Roy Naylor was Joseph R. Naylor, who was born in Ohio in 1817 and in 1848 moved to Wellsburg, West Virginia. He became a merchant, and under appointment from President Cleveland was serving as postmaster of Wellsburg when he died in 1887. He was a democrat, and a member of the Christian Church and the Masonic fraternity. Joseph R. Naylor married Hester Kimberland, who was born in Ohio in 1817 and died at Wellsburg in 1887, having been born and having died in the same years as her husband.

The late John S. Naylor was born at Pennsville in Morgan County, Ohio, in 1843, and was about five years of age when his parents moved to Wellsburg, where he grew up and acquired the greater part of his education. He attended the old West Liberty Academy, and in 1869, as a young man moved to Wheeling. In later years his mercantile activities developed into the John S. Naylor Company, one of the largest wholesale dry goods houses in the state. He was for many years its active executive head, and gave his time to the business until his death in 1916. His citizenship in every sense was thoroughly constructive. He served on the city council and school board, was one of West Virginia's commissioners to the Chicago World's Fair in 1893, and was also interested in democratic politics, serving several years as chairman of the County Committee of Ohio County. He was a member of the Christian Church and the Masonic fraternity. John S. Naylor married Anna Wendelken, who was born at Marietta, Ohio, in 1853, and is still living at Wheeling. Roy Benton is the oldest of four children. His brothers have all had an active part in the business founded by their father. Allen Gerd died at Wheeling in 1918. The other sons are Joseph R. and Wilson, Joseph being the present executive head of the John S. Naylor Company.

Roy Benton Naylor attended the public schools, Linsly Institute, and Marietta College in Ohio. He left college as his sophomore year and was first attracted into the newspaper profession and was connected with the Wheeling News for some years. Mr. Naylor founded the Wheeling Telegraph, selling that paper in 1904.

In 1905 he was elected secretary of the Board of Trade at Wheeling. He held that office ten years, and during that greater part of that time the power of the Board of Trade and its affiliated organizations was largely exercised through the executive abilities of Mr. Naylor. Shortly after he was elected secretary of the Wheeling board he organized the West Virginia Board of Trade, and was its secretary for ten years. After carrying these official burdens so long he resigned in the fall of 1915 to take up the insurance business with the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford and is now district agent for the Wheeling District, with offices in the National Bank of West Virginia Building. In 1917 he was president of the West Virginia Life Underwriters Association and is still a director of the association.

Mr. Naylor departs somewhat from the family tradition in the matter of politics, being a republican, though he has not sought prominence in partisan politics, but rather public matters permitting opportunities for constructive work, particularly in affairs of community benefit. He was a member of the city council in 1901-02, was park and playground commissioner in 1912, and since 1921 has been on the City Recreation Commission. Mr. Naylor lives at Woodsdale where he completed his beautiful modern home in 1919. He was mayor of Woodsdale three years, until that community was consolidated with Wheeling in 1919. He is a member of the Christian Church, the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, Wheeling Country Club, Fort Henry Club, Twilig Club and Rotary Club. He is a director of the Community Savings and Loan Company, director of the Wheeling Savings & Loan Association, a director of the Associated Charities and a trustee of Marietta College, for which he received the honorary degree of A. M. in 1912. During the war was a "Four Minute" speaker, and was chairman of the Publicity Committee for all the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives.

January 15, 1902, at Bridgeport, Ohio, Mr. Naylor married Miss Nancy Dent, daughter of James C. and Millie (Clayton) Dent, now residents of Los Angeles. Her father is a retired merchant. Mrs. Naylor is a graduate of Mount Chantal Academy of Wheeling. They have one son, John S., born March 28, 1906.

ANDREW GLASS is one of the very active and influential younger men in the industrial and commercial life of Wheeling, and his practical field of experience since leaving school has been the iron and steel industry.

He was born at Wheeling, June 25, 1881, son of Woc-

ward W. and Mary C. Glass. His grandfather, Andrew Glass, was one of the original stockholders of the LaBelle Iron Works, one of the pioneer iron industries at Wheeling, established seventy years ago, and now a subsidiary of the Wheeling Steel Corporation.

Mr. Andrew Glass acquired most of his public school education in Chicago, and as a youth became a salesman in the Chicago store of the Wheeling Corrugating Company. Later he was made general manager of the Portsmouth, Ohio, works of the Whitaker-Glessner Company, and for several years past has been president of the Whitaker-Glessner Company and vice president of the Wheeling Steel Corporation and his business offices are in the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building.

Mr. Glass is a republican, a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and a member of the Elks, and belongs to the Fort Henry Club, Wheeling Country Club and the Columbus Athletic Association. August 2, 1920, he married Dorothy Varner, and they have an infant son, Alexander Glass.

WALTER L. DANKS, whose technical and executive ability need no further voucher than the statement that he is the efficient superintendent of the Parkersburg Iron & Steel Company, at the metropolis and judicial center of Wood County, West Virginia, claims the State of Nebraska as the place of his nativity and is a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families, though it is to be recorded that his father, a man of independent means and marked resourcefulness, did not consent long to endure the ravages wrought by grasshoppers and drought in the pioneer period of Nebraska history, but soon left that state, in which many other pioneers were compelled to remain, as they had no financial resources that permitted them to flee from the desolation wrought by the pioneer scourges.

Walter L. Danks was born at Cozad, Dawson County, Nebraska, on the 11th of November, 1875, and is a son of John G. and Elizabeth (Vance) Danks, the former of whom was born at Mount Savage, Maryland, and the latter at Muncie, Indiana. Samuel T. Danks, grandfather of him whose name initiates this review, was a native of England, where the family has been one of not minor prominence, among its representatives in the past having been one or more distinguished musicians and composers, one of whom composed music for many of the beautiful chants of the Church of England. Samuel T. Danks was reared and educated in his native land and there acquired his fundamental knowledge of the iron industry, of which he became a prominent and influential pioneer exponent after coming to the United States. He came to this country about the year 1847, and in 1849 he became one of the argonauts of California, where the historic discovery of gold had just been made. He made the long and perilous overland trip to California and became one of the first to utilize hydraulic power in connection with gold mining in that state. He did not long remain on the Pacific Coast, however, but established his home at Mount Savage, Maryland, where he became prominently identified with the iron industry, as a pioneer in its development in this country. He was the inventor of the rotary puddling furnace that bore his name and that did much to advance iron production industry in the United States. Both he and his wife continued to reside in Maryland for a number of years, and thereafter he became superintendent of an extensive iron manufacturing plant in Cincinnati, Ohio, in which state he and his wife passed the closing years of their lives.

John G. Danks seems to have inherited a predilection for the iron industry, with which the family name had been prominently identified in England for many generations. He was reared and educated in Maryland, where he early gained practical experience in connection with iron industry under the effective direction of his father. As a young man he became mechanical engineer for one of the large iron corporations at Cincinnati, Ohio, where his father was simultaneously serving as an executive in connection with the same line of enterprise. After the father invented the Danks puddling furnace John G., the son, went to England to superintend the installation of these improved devices in that country, and after his return to the United States he continued such installation service, in which he met with much opposition and had many remarkable experiences on account of the opposition of the historic organization in Pennsylvania known as the "Molly Maguires." In the early '70s he made his venture in connection with pioneer ranching enterprise in Dawson County, Nebraska, but the adverse conditions previously mentioned in this sketch led him to abandon his activities there and to return to Cincinnati. After his retirement from active business affairs he removed to Los Angeles, California, and there his death occurred in 1914, his wife having preceded him to eternal rest, and two children survive them.

Walter L. Danks, the immediate subject of this sketch, passed his boyhood days principally on a farm owned by his paternal grandfather near College Hall, a suburb of the City of Cincinnati, and his early educational discipline included that of the high school and also of a business college, which later he attended at night. He gained under the direction of his father and grandfather his early experience in connection with the iron and steel industry, and in this connection he has well upheld the prestige of the family name, as his entire active career has been one of close and effective association with this important branch of industrial enterprise. He was for five years in the employ of the Inland Steel Company at Indiana Harbor, Indiana, and with the same won promotion to the position of assistant master mechanic. In 1906 he came to Parkersburg, West Virginia, to take the position of master mechanic with the Parkersburg Iron & Steel Company, and this alliance has since continued, while he has served as superintendent of the company's extensive plant since 1913.

Mr. Danks is found aligned loyally in the ranks of the republican party, and is vital and progressive in his civic attitude. He takes deep interest in all that touches the welfare and advancement of his home city, and during the nation's participation in the World war he was able to give valuable patriotic service both through the medium of his industrial association and through his personal efforts in support of the various local war activities. He and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in the Masonic fraternity he has completed the circle of the York Rite, in which his maximum affiliation is with the Parkersburg Commandery of Knights Templars, besides having received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and being also a member of the Mystic Shrine.

The year 1902 recorded the marriage of Mr. Danks to Miss Hannah Stephens, of Indiana Harbor, Indiana, and they have one son, Walter L., Jr.

ARTHUR BURKE KOONTZ was born at Kessler's Cross Lanes, Nicholas County, West Virginia, January 29, 1884, son of John and Alice Groves Koontz. John Koontz was of German extraction, having descended from the German settlement in Pennsylvania. He was born, reared and spent his entire life as a farmer and stock raiser in Nicholas County, West Virginia. For many years he was one of the leaders in local democratic politics, and served one term as sheriff of his county. He died at the age of seventy-six, July 4, 1911. Alice Groves Koontz, who is seventy-six years old, is living at the old homestead.

Mr. Koontz's grandfather, James Koontz, married Rebecca Longenecker. They moved from the German settlement of Pennsylvania to Virginia, and from there to that part of Greenbrier County, West Virginia, which afterward was formed into Nicholas County, West Virginia.

Mr. Koontz's grandfather on his mother's side was John Groves, who married Catharine Duffy. John Groves was of Scotch descent, and Catharine Duffy, of Irish descent, having been born in Ireland, a daughter of Hugh and Judith McMahon Duffy, but came to America when she was sixteen years old.

Arthur Burke Koontz has been one of the able members of the Charleston bar for more than ten years. His reputation as a lawyer has been spread widely over the state, but he is perhaps best known in popular opinion throughout West Virginia in general because of his candidacy in 1920 for governor of the state.

In the present generation the name Koontz is widely and favorably known in the professions, in educational affairs, banking and politics. Arthur Burke Koontz received his early instruction in the public schools of Nicholas County. He attended the Summersville School, graduated from Marshall College at Huntington, and subsequently entered Yale University Law School, where he was graduated with an LL. B. degree in 1910. Mr. Koontz began to practice law at Charleston in 1911, and has appeared in connection with important litigation in practically all the state courts. Aside from his law practice he is interested in a number of business enterprises and is vice president of the Union Trust Company of Charleston, which he was instrumental in organizing in 1913.

Nominated by the democratic party as candidate for governor in 1920, he made a most creditable campaign and won a flattering vote in the general republican landslide of that year. Mr. Koontz is a member of the Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity, a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner. He married Miss Mary Watson Sipe, of Fairmont. Her father, the late Conrad Albert Sipe, is well remembered as former president of the Fairmont State Normal School. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Koontz are Mary Watson and Arthur Burke, Jr.

Associated with Mr. Koontz in his law practice is his younger brother, Patrick Duffy Koontz, who was educated in Marshall College, in the University of Michigan, and in Harvard University Law School. During the World war he saw service in France, and attained the rank of captain.

Another brother, Luther Vaughan Koontz, lives at Clendenin, where he is president of the First National Bank and extensively interested in the enterprises of that town. He brought about the incorporation of Clendenin and was its first mayor.

Another brother, Louis K. Koontz, lives in Goldfield, Nevada, where he is interested in mining, and the two living sisters, Mrs. W. T. Burdette and Mrs. J. D. Peck, live on farms in Nicholas County.

An older brother, James William Koontz, who died in 1917, was a well known physician in Western Kentucky, having practiced his profession in Muhlenberg and surrounding counties for twenty years. Two older sisters, Rouena Catharine, who married Dr. A. L. Morris, and Lola Gertrude, who married L. S. Tully, are now deceased. Two other children, Cora Belle and Hubert, died in infancy.

Arthur Burke Koontz is therefore a member of a family of eleven, nine of whom grew to maturity. He happens to be the only one of the nine who never taught school.

ELMO AUSTIN MURRAY. Some men possess not only the ordinary and conventional virtues, which they exemplify in a greater or lesser degree in their every-day life, but have in addition exceptional qualities which bring about achievements and attract to them the admiration and respect of their co-workers. Simple dignity, evidences of human sympathy, ceaseless application and habits of thrift, will bring about a successful career, and continued advancement will be noted invariably when to the qualities just named are added power of initiative and quick decision, shrewdness, force of character, confident judgment and resourcefulness. These qualities have been noted in the career of Elmo Austin Murray, now shop superintendent of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway at Huntington, and a man who has won his own way up the ladder of success from the bottom round.

Mr. Murray, who is of Scotch descent and belongs to a family which was founded in Colonial Virginia prior to the Revolution, was born at Staunton, Virginia, September 1, 1876, a son of Robert P. and Mary Elizabeth (Whitlock) Murray. His father was born in 1833, in Rockingham County, Virginia, where he was reared and educated, and as a youth went to Louisa County, Virginia, where his marriage occurred. Following that event he was a resident of Staunton, and from 1852 was a fireman for the Virginia Central Railroad until the outbreak of the Civil war. In 1861 he enlisted in the Confederate Army and served throughout the struggle under Captain Kemper in a Virginia volunteer infantry regiment. On receiving his honorable discharge he resumed work as a fireman on the Virginia Central, and was later promoted to locomotive engineer, remaining with that road when it became the Chesapeake & Ohio and continuing as one of its most trusted employes until his death at Clifton Forge, Virginia, in 1889. He was a democrat in politics, and a regular member and strong supporter of the Baptist Church. Mr. Murray married Mary Elizabeth Whitlock, who was born in 1833, at Frederick Hall, Virginia, and died at Clifton Forge in 1912. They became the parents of five children, as follows: Alice, who died unmarried at Clifton Forge at the age of twenty-one years; James, who died at the same place when twenty years of age; Elmo Austin, of this review; Robert F., who is engaged in the dry goods business at Clifton Forge; and Virginia, the wife of Harry E. Blaine, of Clifton Forge, a freight conductor for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway.

Elmo Austin Murray was educated in the public schools of Clifton Forge, which he left at the age of fourteen years to enter the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, starting at Clifton Forge, where he served his apprenticeship as a machinist. He was made gang foreman there, and subsequently was sent to Covington, Kentucky, as general foreman of the company's shops in 1903. In 1910 he was again promoted and sent to Lexington, Kentucky, in the capacity of master mechanic. In 1911 he was transferred to Clifton Forge, where he remained as master mechanic until 1920, at that time being promoted to the post of shop superintendent of the company's shops at Huntington, his present position. Under his supervision there are 2,500 employes, his offices being situated at Twenty-seventh Street and Eighth Avenue. Mr. Murray maintains an independent stand in regard to political matters, voting for the man rather than the party and using his own judgment as to principles and policies. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Allegheny Lodge, A. F. and A. M.; Clifton Forge Chapter, R. A. M.; Stevenson Commandery No. 8, K. T., of Staunton, Virginia; and Aeca Temple, A. O. N. M. S., of Richmond, Virginia. He owns a modern and attractive home at No. 1227 Tenth Avenue, located in one of the preferred residence sections of the city.

In September, 1901, in Botetourt County, Virginia, Mr. Murray married Miss Willie Carper, daughter of William B. and Rebecca (Allen) Carper, the latter of whom still resides in Botetourt County, where Mr. Carper, who was an extensive agriculturist, died in 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Murray are the parents of two children: Aline, a student at Stuart Hall, Staunton, Virginia, and Elmo Austin, Jr., who attends the Huntington High School.

CHARLES TRUEHEART TAYLOR, M. D. For half a century the name Taylor has been prominent in Huntington in connection with the law and medicine. Doctor Taylor is one of the leading surgeons of Huntington, and has practiced medicine and surgery there for over twenty years. He is one of the owners of the Huntington General Hospital and the Kessler-Hatfield Hospital, and is associate surgeon in both these institutions.

Doctor Taylor was born at Weldon, North Carolina, August 8, 1872, but his home since early childhood has been at Huntington. His grandfather was born in old Virginia in 1817, spent the greater part of his life there as a planter and was a slave owner before the Civil war. For a number of years he lived at Oxford, Virginia, and he finally retired to Huntington, West Virginia, where he died in 1897. He married a Miss Harrison, a native of Virginia, who died near Oxford in that state. The Taylors are a Scotch-Irish family who settled in Virginia in Colonial times.

Thomas Wallace Taylor, father of Doctor Taylor, was born in Virginia in 1833, was reared and married there, and for four years lived at Weldon, North Carolina, on a farm. He left the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill during his junior year to enter the Confederate army, and was in active service about a year. He was severely wounded at the battle of Malvern Hill, and incapacitated for further field duty. Subsequently he graduated from the law department of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, and in 1874 established his home at Huntington, West Virginia, where he has since become one of the leading lawyers of the state. He was judge of the Criminal Court of Cabell County for twelve years, from 1907 to 1919. He is a democrat and an elder in the Presbyterian Church. Thomas Wallace Taylor, whose home is at 1134 Sixth Avenue in Huntington, married Miss Maria Trueheart, who was born at Prince Edward Court House, Virginia, in 1843. Charles Trueheart Taylor is their oldest child. Mattie F., of 1136 Sixth Avenue, Huntington, is the widow of Rollo M. Baker, who was a Huntington attorney and general attorney for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway and a member of the law firm of Enslow, Fitzpatrick & Baker. The third child, Thomas Wallace Taylor, died at the age of seventeen, Powhatan died at the age of fourteen, and William died at the age of four years. Harvey C., the youngest, is in the real estate business at Huntington.

Charles Trueheart Taylor attended the grammar and high schools at Huntington, Marshall College in that city through the junior year, and for three years was a student in Center College at Danville, Kentucky. He pursued his medical studies in the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, where he graduated M. D. in 1897, and again did post-graduate work there in 1899 and 1905. In 1897 he was an interne in the Gray Street Infirmary of Louisville. On returning to Huntington instead of beginning practice Doctor Taylor served a year as city clerk, but since 1899 has devoted himself completely to his growing practice. His offices are in the First National Bank Building. Doctor Taylor is president of the Cabell County Medical Society and a member of the State and American Medical Associations. He is president of the Sovereign Gas Company of Huntington and a director in the Huntington-Oklahoma Oil Company. Besides his modern home at 1665 Fifth Avenue he has an interest in the Beverly apartment building on Sixth Street.

Doctor Taylor is a democrat, a member of Huntington Lodge No. 53, F. and A. M., Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Scottish Rite, Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Modern Woodmen of America, Reese Camp No. 66, Woodmen of the World, and is a past exalted ruler of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

During the war Doctor Taylor was chief examiner for the Cabell County Draft Board, a very important and burdensome responsibility, and he also gave his active influence to other patriotic causes at the time.

In 1900, at Huntington, he married Miss Bernice Stevenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Stevenson, who were farmers and died at Beverly, Ohio. Mrs. Taylor died at Huntington in 1910, survived by two children: Bernice, a student in the National Cathedral School at Washington, D. C., and Charles Trueheart, Jr., born September 11, 1906, now in the Huntington High School. In 1912, at Newark, New Jersey, Doctor Taylor married Miss Stella Moore, a native of that city. They have a daughter, Jane, born December 11, 1913.

ELI C. MORRIS. In the old Keystone State Eli C. Morris was born March 14, 1845, in Washington County. He was a son of Samuel Morris, a representative of one of the sterling old Pennsylvania families long identified with that gracious and noble religious organization, the Society of Friends, more commonly known as Quakers. In Pennsylvania Eli C. Morris was reared to manhood, received such educational advantages as were offered in the schools of the period, and in his youth learned the trade of millwright, in connection with which he assisted in the erection of many flour mills, besides eventually becoming a successful mill operator. In connection with his vocation he came to West Virginia, where for a time he operated a mill at Elizabeth. Thereafter he built and equipped a mill at Morristown, which was named in his honor, and after operating this mill for a time he removed with his family to Washington County, Ohio, where he passed the remainder of his life and where he died at Lower Salem in 1914. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and in his unostentatious career he exemplified the sterling characteristics ever associated with the name of Quaker. His father was implacable in his opposition to the institution of slavery, and the Morris home in Pennsylvania was made a station on the historic underground railway which enabled many slaves to escape bondage in the period leading up to the Civil war. Though the customs and teachings of the Society of Friends deprecate war in all forms, the youthful patriotism of Eli C. Morris was such that he transcended these teachings when the Civil war was precipitated on the nation. He believed the preservation of the Union was of greater importance than his observance of the tenets of the faith in which he had been reared, and accordingly he enlisted in Troop B, Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry, with which he saw active service under command of General Sheridan in the historic Shenandoah campaign. His first wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth McDonnell, is survived by one son. His second wife, Eliza J. (Winland) Morris, still resides in Washington County, Ohio. Of this union there are two sons and two daughters, and of the number James G. is the only representative in West Virginia.

James G. Morris is a native of West Virginia, his birth having occurred at Morristown, Wirt County, but he was reared and educated in Washington County, Ohio. He is now president of the Arrow Lumber Company, one of the important industrial and commercial concerns of Parkersburg.

Mr. Morris has completed the circle of Scottish Rite Masonry, in which he has received the thirty-second degree, besides being affiliated with the Mystic Shrine. He takes deep interest in all that concerns the welfare and advancement of his home city and is essentially progressive and public spirited. Mr. Morris wedded Miss Jennie E. Watson, and they have one son, Harold W.

RUSSELL WRIGHT is consistently to be designated as one of the vital and representative young captains of industry residing in the City of Parkersburg, and he is not only a man of marked progressiveness and energy in connection with business enterprise of broad scope, but is also one of the loyal and vigorous advocates of measures and undertakings tending to advance the interests of his home city and native state. Mr. Wright is president of the Wright & Loper Oil Company, and also of the Shawnee Oil & Gas Producing Company, important corporations identified with the oil industry in West Virginia fields.

Mr. Wright was born on the homestead farm of his parents in Doddridge County, West Virginia, and the date of his nativity was August 5, 1878. He is one of the four children of William L. and Ella (Allen) Wright, who still reside in Doddridge County, where the father was born and reared and where the Wright family made settlement in the pioneer days. Russell Wright gained his youthful education in the public schools of his native county, and continued his association with the work of the home farm until he was sixteen years old. He then began working in the oil fields of Doddridge and Tyler counties, and as he had the versatility that made his services of value in all manner of work and positions he gained a wide and varied experience. Eventually he began to assume a larger share of independent activities and in this way he both made and lost money, according to the results attending his various exploitations. He extended his experience by association with oil-production enterprises in the fields of Oklahoma, Indiana and Illinois, but after an absence of two years he returned to West Virginia, where his operations have since been largely staged, though he has had and continues to have interests in connection with oil production in Ohio. He has maintained his residence and business headquarters at Parkersburg since 1912, and since 1913 his business operations have been confined to the West Virginia and Ohio oil fields. He well merits the expressive American title of hustler, and has made himself known as a vigorous and progressive factor in the great oil industry. He is a valued and influential member of the Parkersburg Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with the Parkersburg lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Blennerhassett Club and is popular in both business and social circles in his home city, where his name remains on the list of eligible bachelors.

FRED WILLIAM BARTLETT has been an oil operator thirty years, most of the time as an independent, and is one of the best known and most popular citizens of Marion County. His home during the greater part of his life has been at Mannington.

Mr. Bartlett was born at New Martinsville, Wetzel County, West Virginia, July 29, 1867, son of Martin and Sarah Ann (Beatty) Bartlett, both now deceased. His father was born at Clarksburg, West Virginia, in 1842, and was a Confederate soldier during the last two years of the Civil war. The father's brother, Capt. Fred W. Bartlett, for whom Fred William Bartlett of this review was named, organized a company in Clarksburg for service in the Confederate Army, and served until the close of the war. Martin Bartlett was a blacksmith and machinist, and was in that business at New Martinsville when he died in 1868. A short time before his death he had assisted in drilling the first oil well in the Mannington District. He was a Scottish Rite Mason. After his death his widow returned to Martinsville, where she was born in 1846, daughter of Jeremiah Beatty, an early settler of Mannington. She died in 1916.

Fred W. Bartlett grew up at Mannington, acquired a common school education, and as a youth became a bread winner for himself and his widowed mother. At the age of nine he was selling papers on the streets of Mannington, and has had some active connection with serious business ever since. He has dealt in real estate, has been an oil and gas operator, and also well known as a hotel proprietor. Mr. Bartlett has accumulated two fortunes, and still retains the second and larger.

He began his career as an independent operator in oil in 1892. His work has been as an independent except for ten years, during which time he was president and sole owner of what was then known as the Home Gas Company, which supplied gas for manufacturing and domestic purposes at Mannington. He finally sold this company to the Standard Oil interests. Since then he has been extensively interested in the production of crude oil.

In 1896 Mr. Bartlett bought what was then the Commercial Hotel of Mannington. He rebuilt and remodeled the property and renamed it the Hotel Bartlett. This is now one of the best hotels in the state, second in size only to the hotels of the larger cities, to which it yields nothing in its equipment and service. With fifty rooms, all with hot and cold running water, and many with private baths, with a fine dining room, and a spacious and beautifully decorated lobby, the Hotel Bartlett is both a surprise and delight to those making their first visit to Mannington.

October 8, 1892, Mr. Bartlett married Miss Harriet Brownfield Walker, who was born in Fairmont, November 19, 1871, daughter of the late Kephart Delyvare and Josephine (Wiggenton) Walker, of Fairmont. The Walker family is of Scotch origin and has been in Pennsylvania for five and in West Virginia for two generations. The American ancestor was Donald Walker, who married a Lane. Their son, Peter Walker, was born in Washington County, Maryland. He became a wealthy farmer of Somerset County, Pennsylvania. His son, John P. Walker, removed from Pennsylvania to Loudoun County, Virginia, and later to Ohio County, West Virginia, and died in the City of Wheeling in 1852. He married Margaret Lane, and of their children Kephart D. Walker was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, February 14, 1838, and died at Fairmont in 1919.

Kephart D. Walker entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway as construction camp clerk in 1853. During the next eighteen months he utilized his leisure opportunities to acquire some knowledge of telegraphy, was then assigned to the telegraph department of the Baltimore & Ohio, and subsequently became a brakeman and still later a conductor. During the Civil war for a time he was in the secret service, in the armies of Gen. Stonewall Jackson and Gen. John B. Walker, the latter being a relative. After the war he resumed railroad work for the Baltimore & Ohio, and for ten years was station agent at Fairmont, was superintendent of the Fairmont Division, and when the Fairmont Morgantown & Pittsburgh line was undertaken he was assigned the task of securing the right of way between Fairmont and Morgantown. During the construction he was purchasing agent. He had charge of the first train run over this line into Pittsburgh. After this service he resumed his work as a passenger conductor until 1906, when he was retired on a pension.

Kephart D. Walker became a Mason in 1870, and in 1877 was chosen grand master of West Virginia Grand Lodge and at the time of his death was a supreme honorary thirty third degree Scottish Rite Mason. He married in 1859 Josephine Wiggenton, daughter of Presley and Sarah Wiggenton, of Loudoun County, Virginia.

THOMAS L. SHIELDS was distinctively a man of ability and of those sterling attributes of character that ever beget popular confidence and esteem. Through his own efforts he achieved substantial success in connection with the practical affairs of life and by his character and achievement he honored his native state. He died at his attractive suburban home at Parmaco, near the City of Parkersburg on the 28th of January, 1904, and had been retired from active business for some time prior to his demise.

Mr. Shields was born in Taylor County, West Virginia on the 18th of December, 1856, and was a son of Zaddock and Penelope (Asbury) Shields, both likewise natives of Taylor County, where they passed their entire lives and where the respective families settled in the pioneer period of the history of that section of the state. Zaddock Shields became a merchant at Pruntytown, Taylor County, and was influential in public affairs in that part of the state, which he represented in the State Legislature, besides which he served as sheriff of his native county, each of these official preferments having come to him after he had been a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war. Both during and after the close of the war his pleasant home was a favored stopping place for his old comrades in arms.

Thomas L. Shields was but thirteen years of age at the time of his father's death, and thus he did not attend school with any appreciable degree of regularity after that time, as he found it incumbent upon him to find employment that should enable him to aid in the support of his widowed mother and the younger children, he having been a member of a large family of children. His broader education was that gained through self-discipline and through the lessons gained in the school of practical experience. After the death of his father Mr. Shields found employment in a machine shop at Grafton, the county seat of his native county and his receptiveness enabled him to acquire marked skill as a mechanic, the while his executive ability and his trustworthiness led to his eventual advancement to the position of superintendent of this establishment. Later he became district superintendent of a chain of water stations on the line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in the service of which he continued some time. About the year 1891 he removed with his family to Parkersburg and became proprietor of the old Commercial Hotel, which he conducted with marked success as did he later the Jackson Hotel, which under his management gained high repute and was a favored stopping place for commercial travelers and others who visited the city. He finally retired from active business and, as already stated, he passed the closing period of his life in the suburb of Parmaco, where he had purchased a tract of ten acres of land and developed one of the most attractive homes of this beautiful district.

While a resident of Grafton, Taylor County, Mr. Shields became one of the organizers and charter members of the lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at that place, and he continued in active affiliation with this fraternity until his death. At Parkersburg he was an appreciative and popular member of the lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, and he was a member of the First Baptist Church of Parkersburg, of which his widow likewise is an earnest member. She remains in the attractive home at 215 teenth Street, the same being under her care a center of gracious hospitality.

On the 21st of May, 1885, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Shields with Miss Grace M. Dudley, daughter of the late John W. Dudley, to whom a memoir is dedicated on other pages of this publication. Mr. and Mrs. Shields have the parents of five children: Dudley L. is the subject of individual mention in the sketch that immediately follows this review; Inez is the wife of Frederick Hopkins, D.; Emma P. is the wife of Lee Powell; Mildred is the wife of Nowrey Smith; and Thomas L. is the youngest of the number.

DUDLEY L. SHIELDS, eldest of the children of the late Thomas L. Shields, to whom a memorial tribute is paid in a review immediately preceding this article, was born atrafton, judicial center of Taylor County, West Virginia, on the 28th of August, 1886, and he was about five years of age at the time of the family removal to Parkersburg, in which city he continued his studies in the public schools until his graduation in the high school as a member of the class of 1903. For two years thereafter he was a student in the University of West Virginia, and upon the death of his father he left this institution and assumed active control of the substantial wholesale produce business which his father had established at Parkersburg. Later he was employed a few years as a teller in the Parkersburg National Bank, and in 1917 he engaged in the automobile business, of which he has become one of the prominent and successful representatives at Parkersburg, where he operates a large and well equipped garage and repair shop, in which he handles a full line of automobile accessories, besides which he has developed a prosperous business as distributor in this district of the Buick and Cadillac automobiles. His modern garage is located at the corner of Eighth and Avery streets.

Mr. Shields is one of the alert and progressive young business men of Parkersburg, is a member of the local Board of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club, is a democrat in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the First Baptist Church of their home city. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Shields has attained the Scottish Rite degrees and is a thirty-second degree Mason, besides being affiliated also with the Isis Temple of the Mystic Shrine and with the Parkersburg Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is an active and appreciative member of the Parkersburg Country Club. The first wife of Mr. Shields bore the name of Greek Douglas, and she is survived by one son, Douglas. In his second wife Mr. Shields wedded Miss Lois Partridge, and they have two children, Dudley L., Jr., and Grace.

JOHN W. DUDLEY was a citizen who made for himself a secure place in the confidence and high regard of the people of Parkersburg, West Virginia, in which city he was reared from boyhood and in which he achieved prominence and success as a business man, the while his sterling character and fine civic loyalty caused him to wield much influence, though he was signally averse to all that smacked of ostentation or self-seeking. His life was one of exalted personal stewardship, and his kindness and generosity endeared him to all who came within the compass of his benignant influence. He was one of the well-known and best loved citizens of Parkersburg at the time of his death, which occurred on the 3d of July, 1906.

Mr. Dudley was born in Oswego County, New York, but as a child when his parents came from the old Empire State and established their home in West Virginia. He was reared to manhood in Wood County, and such were the agencies of time and place that his early educational advantages were very limited, but his alert and receptive mind enabled him effectually to overcome this handicap, and he became a man of broad information and mature judgment. As a boy he drove the first milk wagon placed in operation at Parkersburg, later he engaged in gardening, and finally he established himself in the wholesale and retail flour business, in which he built up a substantial and prosperous enterprise. Mr. Dudley was twice elected sheriff of Wood County, and his able administration in this office covered a total period of eight years. He lived a clean, sincere, upright life, was tolerant in judgment and was ever ready to aid those in suffering or distress—those "in any way afflicted, in mind, body or estate." Generous to a fault, he found ample opportunities for helpfulness, and many there were who were by him aided in the time of their misfortune, the while he invariably extended such aid with characteristic modesty, as one who would "do good by stealth and blush to find it fame." He was an earnest member of the First Baptist Church of Parkersburg, and was liberal in the support of the various departments of its work. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party.

Mr. Dudley married Miss Emma Leonard, a daughter of Deacon Albert Leonard, who was the organizer of the first Presbyterian Sunday School at Parkersburg, and their ideal companionship was severed when the devoted wife and mother was summoned to eternal rest in the year 1902. To Mr. and Mrs. Dudley were born thirteen children, two of whom died in infancy and the others of whom still survive the honored parents, namely: William, Grace M. (widow of Thomas L. Shields, to whom a memoir is dedicated on other pages of this work), Charles P., Louise, Helen (Mrs. Lawrence O'Neal), Hattie (Mrs. Frank Coffman), Albert, Emma Gertrude (Mrs. George D. Heaton), Brainard J., Elizabeth (Mrs. Dorsey Evans), and Clara (Mrs. Frederick Wood).

OKEY J. STOUT has for nearly a quarter of a century been a prospering business man of Parkersburg, a druggist and also interested in other lines. He is a brother of Parkersburg's postmaster, Walter E. Stout, under whose name a more complete account of the family will be found.

Okey J. Stout was born at Parkersburg, June 18, 1877, and this city has always been his home. He completed a public-school education and in 1897, at the age of twenty, entered the retail drug business after two years of training as clerk in the drug store of W. E. Skirvin. He has concentrated his efforts along this line and is now interested in two drug stores, and is also associated with his brother, Walter, in the oil business and is a director of the First National Bank.

Mr. Stout is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Shriner, a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belongs to the Rotary Club and is a democrat in politics.

GEORGE McDONALD. Among the many public improvements that have added to the picturesque City of Parkersburg, West Virginia, with its natural beauty, within recent years, none arouse more admiration than the magnificent new high-school building in its beautiful landscape setting. The city is largely indebted for this improvement to the untiring efforts of George McDonald and his associates. Mr. McDonald is the present superintendent of buildings and grounds for the Parkersburg Independent School District.

George McDonald was born on a farm in Marshall County, West Virginia, March 21, 1864, the year following the birth of West Virginia. His grandfather was born in Scotland and was the founder of the family in America, and after coming to the United States practically spent the rest of his life in what is now Marshall County. James Alexander McDonald, father of George, was born and reared in Marshall County. When war arose between the states he was a volunteer in the Union Army and served with bravery and honor through two enlistments. He married Elizabeth Meyer, and they had eight children, three sons and five daughters, George being fourth in order of birth. The parents of Mr. McDonald were members of the Christian Church. They spent their lives in Marshall County and were held in esteem by all who knew them.

George McDonald attended the country schools and grew up on the home farm. His first work after leaving home was as a spike driver with the construction gang building of the Ohio River Railroad, which is now a division of the Baltimore & Ohio system, and when the road was completed he continued with the railroad people and worked as fireman on a locomotive engine for two years, when he was promoted to engineer.

For the twenty succeeding years Mr. McDonald continued his connection with the railroad. In 1884 he located his home at Parkersburg, and in 1900 established his Model Laundry business, at the same time showing such interest in the welfare of the city that in 1915 he was elected a member of the school board. He served until 1917, when he resigned in order to become the first business manager of the board, which, later, was changed as to title and became superintendent of buildings and grounds for this large territory. He has shown executive ability of a high order and business capacity that has been very valuable to the City of Parkersburg. The new high-school building with its modern equipments is the finest structure of its kind in West Virginia and compares well with any in the United States, and Mr. McDonald was indefatigable in his efforts to bring about its completion.

At Marietta, Ohio, in 1887, Mr. McDonald was married to Miss Mary Bishop, of that city, and they have one son, Walter G. McDonald, who during the World war was in military service, being stationed at Alliance, Ohio, and attached to the Ordnance Department. Mr. McDonald was active during the war in all local patriotic movements and gave hearty support to the various relief organizations. He is a Knight Templar York Rite Mason, thirty-second degree, A. A. S. R., and a member of Nemesis Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He belongs also to the Knights of Pythias and to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. In political sentiment he has always been a republican.

NAT T. FRAME, A. B. Among the modern leaders of achievement in the field of agriculture in West Virginia perhaps none are more widely known than Nat Terry Frame, of Morgantown, who fills the important position of director of Agricultural Extension of the West Virginia University. He is a man of college training and versatile gifts, one to whom opportunity offers many paths in which these gifts would crown him with success, but for a number of years he has devoted himself closely to the study of scientific agriculture.

Professor Frame was born at Depauville, Jefferson County, New York, February 25, 1877. He is a son of the late Dr. S. W. and Harriet Antoinette (Terry) Frame, a grandson of Doctor Luke and a great-grandson of Dr. William Frame, his paternal ancestry for generations back being continuously professional. The Frames were known in the Colonial history of New England. Dr. William Frame was a native of Vermont and removed from there about 1810 to Northern New York, settling in Jefferson County, where he spent the rest of his existence pursuing the arduous life of a country doctor.

Dr. Luke Frame, grandfather of Professor Frame, had somewhat better advantages than had his father, whom he succeeded in practice, being a graduate of the Geneva (New York) Medical College, and in turn was succeeded by his son, Dr. S. W. Frame, a graduate of Bellevue Medical College, New York City. He is well remembered in Jefferson County as a farmer and horse breeder, where he became eminent, and practically spent his entire life. He married Harriet Antoinette Terry, who was born in Jefferson County, New York, a daughter of Richard Terry, a country merchant. Her maternal grandfather, John Little, was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, where he received university training and from there came to Jefferson County at an early date, settling there about the same time as did the Frames and Terrys. The early annals of that county mention their importance in its development.

Nat Terry Frame obtained early educational training in village public schools, but in 1890 he entered Union Academy at Bellville, New York, where he completed the entire course in two years, and when he was graduated in 1892 had the distinction of being the youngest graduate who had ever received a diploma from that institution. After teaching school for one year at Rural Hill, Jefferson County, he entered Colgate University, New York, from which he was graduated A. B. with the class of 1899.

After completing his university course Professor Frame became principal of the high school at Black River, New York, where he continued for two years, retiring in order to accept the position of superintendent in charge vocational training at the George Junior Republic, New York, in which work he remained greatly interested for two years. He then turned his attention to other interests for a time, in 1905 becoming identified with the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company in New York, Indiana and Maryland, and during the latter part of 1910 had his headquarters in New York City, where his executive ability was manifested at the head of the company school for the training of agents.

It is some fifteen years ago since Professor Frame came first to West Virginia. He joined with John Stewart in the business of manufacturing and distributing horticultural supplies at Martinsburg, under the style of the American Horticultural Distributing Company. In 1910 he became further interested in association with Alexander Colhan, Gray Silver and C. B. Hart in the development of orchards and farms. This association continued for three years, during which time Professor Frame, in addition to his other duties, served as secretary of the Eastern Fruitgrowers Association and also of the Berkley Horticultural Society, being also actively concerned with the affairs of the West Virginia State Horticultural Society and additionally with civic and community movements in Martinsburg.

On June 19, 1900, Professor Frame was united in marriage with Miss Grace Boomer, who was born at Bellville, New York, a daughter of Edward and Mary (Ovton) Boomer, who belonged to old pioneer families in Jefferson County. Four children have been born to Professor and Mrs. Frame: Luke W., born in April, 1901; Richard N., born in 1902, died in 1907; Robert, born March, 1911; and William, born in May, 1912.

In 1913 Professor Frame went to Louisville, Kentuck, in answer to a call to become county agent in agricultural extension for Jefferson County, but on January 1914, he returned to West Virginia to become state agent in charge of county agents in the extension service, and on January 1, 1919, he was made director of Agricultural Extension in the West Virginia University. He has many associated interests and is one of the busy men of the university and of the city, enthusiastic on the subject of his specialty, but not unmindful of the claims of other important world-wide interests to the attention of scholars, men, and to the real need that may arise for the help of their trained understandings in solving many public problems. He is field secretary of the American Country Life Association; is chairman on Co-relations of the State Social Workers Conference; and is a member of the Morgantown Kiwanis Club and of other organizations, including his old college Greek letter fraternity, the Phi Kappa Psi. He has never been a politician but always a sincere citizen, and naturally is proud of his true American ancestry.

JOHN THOMAS WEST, B. S. The thinking world agrees that knowledge is the master key to unlock the hidden mysteries of life made worth while through achievement. It is the great human leveler, giving to the poor and obscure the same tools to work with as the rich and more fortunate, and rewarding them alike according to the use made of them. Leaders in educational work in the United States, those who have been chosen because of particular fitness to lead, direct and encourage seekers for knowledge throughout the great school system of the country, find themselves, perhaps, more deeply interested than ever before as they see their fields of usefulness growing wider. Like the good soldiers that they are, they keep their armor bright and stand ready to do battle with the cohorts of ignorance and superstition. With the coming of Prof. John Thomas West to Morgantown as principal of the high school this city took a long stride forward.

Professor West was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, May 14, 1882, and is a son of John B. and Sarah Joe (Stewart) West. Looking back along the genealogical line it is found that the first of the West family recorded

Nat J. Frame

America was a soldier in King George's Army who was killed in battle during the Revolutionary war. He left descendants, and after the war other members of his family came from England and established themselves in Greene County, Pennsylvania, where Professor West's father, grandfather and great-grandfather were born as well as himself. John B. West now makes his home at Morgantown, West Virginia. He married Sarah Jane Stewart, who died October 12, 1884. She also was born in Greene County, and was a daughter of James and Lucinda (De Berry) Stewart, the Stewarts being of Irish and the De Berrys of Holland stock.

Losing his mother in infancy, John T. West was reared by her people in Marshall County, West Virginia, where he obtained his early educational training. His talents received recognition, and he prepared for college in the preparatory department of the West Virginia University, after taking the full course and was graduated in the class of 1907 with his B. S. degree, continuing at the university during 1907-8 for special work. In the latter year, in association with Prof. Lawrence B. Hill, principal of the university, he opened a county high school at Middlebourne, Tyler County, a most creditable enterprise, the first of its kind in West Virginia and one of the first county high schools east of the Mississippi River. In this school Professor West was an instructor from 1908 until the fall of 1913, during the last year being principal. At that time he was made acting principal of the Morgantown High School, and a few months later, at the beginning of 1914, became principal in fact and so continues.

On December 31, 1908, Professor West married Miss Mary Elizabeth Sturgiss, who was born at Morgantown and is a daughter of A. Howard and Elizabeth (Pretzman) Sturgiss, the former of whom is deceased. Professor and Mrs. West have four young daughters: Margaret Sturgiss, born November 15, 1909; Ruth Elizabeth, born March 2, 1913; Mary Jane, born December 24, 1914; and Anna Eleanor, born August 8, 1919. Professor West and his family belong to the First Baptist Church at Morgantown. He is a Mason, a member of Middlebourne Lodge No. 34, F. and A. M., and of Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 6; belongs to the Chamber of Commerce; the Kiwanis Club; his old college fraternity, the Sigma Phi Epsilon, and is a member of the National Teachers Association and of county and state bodies. As an educator he occupies foremost position, and his broad-minded policies have proved him exceptionally able as an executive.

SAMUEL JOHN MORRIS, M. D. The distinguishing services of Doctor Morris in the medical profession have been as one of the most popular members of the faculty of instruction in the medical school of the University of West Virginia, where he is professor of anatomy.

Doctor Morris was born at Morgantown, August 3, 1887, son of Samuel Hall and Elizabeth D. (Morrison) Morris. One of his forefathers, a native of Maryland, moved to Western Pennsylvania prior to the Revolution and settled in Fayette County, where the place of his settlement became known as Morris Cross Roads. Here the great-grandfather of Doctor Morris, Thomas Morris, was born. It is also the birthplace of his son, John Jarrett Morris, who was born in 1825 and subsequently became a farmer in Monongalia County, West Virginia, and spent his last years at Morgantown, where he died in 1900. Samuel Hall Morris was born on the Morris farm in Fayette County, October 22, 1850. His mother was Eliza Ann Hall, who was born at Hopwood, a settlement at the foot of the Allegheny Mountains near Uniontown in Fayette County. She was born there in 1826 and died in Morgantown in 1902. Her father, Samuel Hall, was a Quaker and was born in 1799 at Kenneth Square, now a part of the City of Philadelphia. He was a stone mason by trade and went to Western Pennsylvania to work during the construction of the National Road. In Fayette County he met and married Margaret Kendall, and they settled at Hopwood, where after giving up his trade he followed farming the rest of his life. Samuel Hall Morris married Elizabeth Delia Morrison, who was born in Morgantown, September 7, 1852, daughter of Robert and Delia Thomas (Watts) Morrison. Robert Morrison was a bridge builder, and was the engineer who constructed the bridge from Grafton to Fetterman over Tygart's Valley in West Virginia. This was built for the Baltimore & Ohio, and was the first railroad bridge in that part of the state. Later for many years he was a well-known contractor and builder at Morgantown. The two children of Samuel Hall and Elizabeth Morris were Samuel John and Mrs. Nellie M. Rider.

Samuel John Morris was reared and educated in Morgantown, attending the public schools, the preparatory department of the university and in 1906 entered the university proper. He spent two years in general courses and two years in medicine, receiving his M. D. degree in 1912, and in the same year he also graduated with the M. D. degree from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. This was followed by one year in Mercy Hospital at Baltimore, and after his return to Morgantown he became an instructor in anatomy at the University. In 1916 he was promoted to associate professor of anatomy in charge of that department, and since 1920 has held the chair of anatomy.

Doctor Morris is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations and the Phi Sigma Kappa college fraternity. June 12, 1912, he married Edna Leyman, daughter of Michael Leyman, of McKeesport, Pennsylvania. They have one son, John D., born February 27, 1919.

JOHN NATHAN SIMPSON, M. D. To some individuals are given diversified talents which they have the ability to utilize for the benefit not only of themselves but humanity at large. With a broader field in which to labor such men are able to direct their efforts along several lines of usefulness, while their own sympathies are broadened and their characters strengthened. Among the men whose undoubted gifts have made their names familiar to the present generation of West Virginians, one who is accomplishing a great and good work along professional lines is John Nathan Simpson, A. B., M. D., dean and professor of medicine of the University of West Virginia at Morgantown.

Doctor Simpson was born at Mason, Mason County, West Virginia, March 19, 1869, a son of the late George Perry and Phoebe (Kennedy) Simpson. The American ancestor of this branch of the Simpson family was Andrew Simpson, who was of Scotch-Irish stock and who came to the American Colonies from near Belfast in about 1728, locating first at Boston, Massachusetts, and later removing to Nottingham, New Hampshire. His son, Josiah Simpson, the great-grandfather of Dr. John Nathan Simpson, served as a soldier during the American Revolution, and in 1778 came West, settling in Meigs County, Ohio.

Judge Nathan Simpson, son of Josiah Simpson, the Revolutionary war soldier, was born in Meigs County, Ohio, graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, and for many years was a leading jurist at Pomeroy, Ohio. At the close of the Civil war he removed to Mason, Mason County, West Virginia, where he practiced law and was prominent in the public affairs of the state. George P. Simpson, son of Judge Simpson, was born at Rutland in Meigs County, Ohio, February 12, 1829, and attended the University of Ohio at Athens, that state, subsequently reading law under his father and practicing at Pomeroy. He accompanied his father to West Virginia in 1865 and was located at Mason eight years, and later at Point Pleasant, the county seat of Mason County, where he practiced law until his death in 1892. Both father and son were members of the republican party while living in Ohio, but on coming to West Virginia found that they could not subscribe to the conditions of reconstruction then in progress and left the old organization, espousing the cause of the democratic party. They were strongly opposed to the Frick Amendment, which provided for the disfranchisement of all sympathizers of the Southern cause. George P. Simpson, an eloquent speaker, who loved campaigning, never failed to take the stump during periods of electioneering, not for political preference, but because of his fondness for going before the people in support of a favored issue or in opposition to one which he deemed a menace.

Phoebe Kennedy, the wife of George P. Simpson and mother of Dr. John N. Simpson, was born at Pomeroy, Meigs County, Ohio, March 30, 1844, and died at Point Pleasant, West Virginia, in 1896. She was a daughter of James and Margaret (VanSchriltz) Kennedy. The American ancestor of the Kennedy family came to this country from Scotland in early days, and the family was later founded in Pennsylvania, when it moved to Ohio and settled in Meigs County. The VanSchriltz family probably came from Alsace-Lorraine, where its members were of the nobility. The American ancestor of this branch of the family came here in about 1790 and were among the first settlers at Gallipolis, Ohio.

Dr. John Nathan Simpson was graduated from Peabody Normal College, Nashville, Tennessee, in 1891; from the University of Tennessee, Nashville, class of 1893, A. B.; and from Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, class of 1902, M. D.; and in 1904 studied in the universities of Paris, Vienna and Berlin. In 1902 he organized the School of Medicine of the University of West Virginia, of which he was dean and professor of physiology until 1920, since when he has been dean and professor of medicine. It was through his labors that the new medical building, with its splendid modern equipment, was secured for the institution. Doctor Simpson was director of the Hygiene Laboratory of Health of the State of West Virginia Department of Health from 1913 to 1917; was surgeon of the Cadet Corps of the University of West Virginia from 1902 to 1917; and August 5, 1917, was commissioned captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, N. A. During the World's war he was examiner for Northwest Virginia for the United States surgeon general's office for the recruiting of medical officers for the United States. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Medicine, Fellow of the American Academy of Physicians, Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and Fellow of the American Medical Association. He is also a member of the Phi Beta Pi, Theta Nu Epsilon and Phi Sigma Nu fraternities, is a Presbyter in his religious belief, and in politics is a democrat.

On December 20, 1906, Doctor Simpson was united in marriage with Miss Grace Emily Donley, of Waynesburg, Greene County, Pennsylvania, and to this union there have come a son and a daughter: John Nathan, Jr., born March 25, 1910; and Patricia Donley, born December 21, 1914.

ROSCOE PARRIOTT POSTEN, one of the successful younger members of the Morgantown bar, and prosecuting attorney for Monongalia County, has been engaged in practice since 1915, with the exception of the time that he spent in the army during the World war, and his general popularity and the confidence in which he is held were evidenced in 1920, when he was elected to his present office by the largest majority ever accorded a candidate in this county.

Mr. Posten was born May 22, 1889, at Newburg, Preston County, West Virginia, a son of Dr. Smith J. and Emma Georgia (Parriott) Posten. His paternal grandparents, Nicholas and Rosana (Graham) Posten, were descended from two old Virginia families, while his maternal grandparents, William E. and Sarah Elizabeth (Crawford) Parriott, were also of old Dominion stock. Dr. Smith J. Posten attended West Virginia University in 1882, and was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Baltimore, Maryland, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1888. From that year he practiced at Newburg, Preston County, West Virginia, until 1894, when he removed to Morgantown and spent the rest of his life in practice at this place. In 1888 he married Emma Georgia Parriott, who was born in Marshall County, West Virginia, July 14, 1863, and who still survives him as a resident of Morgantown.

Roscoe P. Posten attended the public schools of Newburg until he was thirteen years of age, and was graduated from the Morgantown High School with the class of 1908. He then entered the University of West Virginia, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1912, and as a member of the graduating class of 1915 was given the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In July of the same year he was admitted to the bar of West Virginia and entered practice at Morgantown. During the next several years he made rapid progress in his profession, but his career was interrupted by the World war and May 28, 1918, he volunteered and went with the drafted men to Camp Lee, Virginia, where he was shortly afterwards assigned to the Central Officers' Training School. The following October 15th he was commissioned second lieutenant and ordered to Camp Upton, New York, where, until his honorable discharge January 31, 1919, he was engaged in drilling detachments for overseas service. Upon leaving the army he returned to Morgantown and again engaged in practice, and at the November 1920, election was chosen as prosecuting attorney for Monongalia County on the republican ticket. As now his majority was the largest ever given a candidate for Monongalia County, and he has thus far vindicated the confidence and faith of the voters by giving them excellent service in his official position.

Mr. Posten is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Morgantown Commandery of 18, K. T.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, R. and S. O. Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.; the Morgantown Masonic Club; Morgantown Lodge No. 411, E. P. O. L. and the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY YOST. Among the offices which are for the demonstration of ability, judgment and clear-headed courage by the incumbents, one that in particular demands the possession of these qualities is that of sheriff. The shrewdness is generally conferred upon an individual who in the past has demonstrated his fitness for the handling of grave responsibilities, for the duties of the office include the possibility of necessity for quick thinking and immediate action in times of crisis. Monongalia County is favored in having as the incumbent of the office of sheriff so capable and energetic a young official as William McKinley Yost, an overseas veteran of the World war and a native son of Monongalia County, where he is greatly popular.

Sheriff Yost was born on the home farm at Coal Springs, Monongalia County, July 1, 1894, a son of Thomas and Mary (Mason) Yost, natives of the same county. His paternal grandfather, Jacob Yost, was an early farmer of this county, as was also his maternal grandfather, John W. Mason. Thomas Yost, father of the Sheriff, followed agricultural pursuits until 1911, in which year he removed to Morgantown, this city now being the family place of residence.

William McKinley Yost was reared on the home farm, and as a lad attended the public schools. When his parents removed to Morgantown he remained on the home farm, where he was still carrying on operations at the time the United States entered the World war. With youthful enthusiasm and patriotism young Yost decided that his country was in need of his services, and accordingly left the farm and went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where, December 1, 1917, he enlisted in the United States Marine Corps. Subsequently he was sent to the Paris Island, South Carolina training camp, and after eleven weeks of intensive training was sent overseas. On May 6, 1918, he disembarked at Brest, France, from which point he and his comrades were ordered to St. Aignan. Five days later he was in a training camp at Grandchamps, whence after two weeks of further training he was sent to the front, where he was assigned to the Seventy-ninth Company, Sixth Regiment, Second Division of United States Marines. He arrived at the Chateau-Thierry front June 8 of that year and remained there from that date until July 4, when he was ordered to the reserve in the rear. On the 14th of the same month he was ordered to Soissons, where he was in the thick of the fighting on the 18th and 19th, and in which desperate engagement his battalion came out numbering less than a full company. He was then returned to Mantreuil, on the Marne, where, August 1, he was ordered for Nancy, from which point a few days later he went to the Marbach sector, directly in front of Metz. Mr. Yost was in the fighting on the front August 7, 8 and 9, and on the morning of the last-named day was wounded by a high explosive and sent to Base Hospital No. 3 at Montpont, France, where he remained until November 1, 1918. On that date he was ordered to the replacement camp at Le Mans, reaching that camp on the 4th of the same month and was still located there when the armistice was signed. He was then ordered to join his company in Belgium, and with it marched to the front of the German lines at Luxembourg. On December 13, 1918, they came to the Rhine at Brohl, and on the following day crossed that historic stream. They were stationed at Rheinbrohl, Germany, until June 18, 1919, at which time they marched to within approximately two miles of the neutral zone, and there remained until the peace treaty was signed June 28. Mr. Yost started for home July 18, 1919, embarked at Brest on the 25th, and reached New York City August 3. The company was then ordered to Camp Mills, but on the morning of the 9th the entire division paraded in the streets of New York City, and in the evening of the same day was on its way to the Quantico, South Carolina, Marine Training Station. On the 12th of that month Mr. Yost took part in the parade at Washington, D. C., and on the following day, August 13, 1919, was honorably discharged at Quantico.

Returning to his old home, Mr. Yost resumed farming and was thus engaged when, May 25, 1920, he received the republican nomination for the office of sheriff of Monongalia County in the primaries. In the ensuing election he was placed in office by an approximate majority of 1,800 votes, a gain over the normal republican vote of nearly 1,000. He assumed the duties of the sheriff's office January 1, 1921, and in that position is as faithfully serving Monongalia County as he faithfully served his country overseas.

Sheriff Yost is a member of the American Legion and of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and as a fraternalist is affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men and the Junior Order United American Mechanics. He belongs to the Methodist Protestant Church and to Baraca Sunday school class. He is unmarried.

JOHN SHRIVER. Eighteen years of consecutive service as clerk of the Circuit Court of Morgantown has been sufficient to make John Shriver one of the best-known citizens of Monongalia County. Moreover, Mr. Shriver represents one of the oldest families in this section of the state, is a lawyer by profession and has also been actively identified with banking and other affairs.

The Shriver family settled in Monongalia County before the close of the eighteenth century. The head of the family at that time was Abram Shriver, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, September 6, 1768. May 31, 1791, he married Mary Keckley, who was born in Frederick County, April 19, 1770. The brief record of their children, the first three of whom were born in Frederick County and the others in Monongalia County, is as follows: Catherine, born April 16, 1792, married Jacob Horner, and they settled in Monongalia County; Adam, born September 7, 1793; Elias, born August 9, 1795; Jacob, born in July, 1797; Christiana, born April 12, 1799, became the wife of Michael Core; Elizabeth, born April 5, 1800, was married to Ezekiel Morris; John, born April 30, 1801, died in 1885; Benjamin, born May 20, 1805; Isaac, born May 27, 1807, died March 30, 1880, having married Minerva Sine; and Abraham.

This branch of the family record is carried through John Shriver, who, as noted above, lived to the age of eighty-four. He married Sarah Cannon, and their children were: Eunice, who became the wife of Peter A. Tennant; Abraham, who married Prudence Moore; Sarah, who was the wife of Daniel V. Moore; and Cannon.

Cannon Shriver, of the third generation of the family in Monongalia County, was born there September 29, 1831, and was a prosperous farmer and stockman in the Clay District, where he died in 1888. He served as a constable during the Civil war, was a republican in politics and a Methodist. He married Minerva Meyers, who was born in the Clay District, September 30, 1831, and died in 1908.

Her father was John Meyers. Cannon and Minerva Shriver were the parents of eight children: Elizabeth, deceased wife of Jacob Shanes, who was a native of Pennsylvania; Prudence, who married Elihu Yost, of Monongalia County; Edgar, who married Nancy Yost; Martha M., wife of D. L. Hamilton, living in Monongalia County, West Virginia; John; Mark, who married Minta Wilson; Mary E., wife of Grant Wilson; and Laura, wife of Lemley Tennant.

John Shriver therefore stands in the fourth generation of this prominent old family of Monongalia County. He was born on his father's farm in Clay District, July 11, 1870. He acquired a liberal education at first in the public schools and later in West Virginia University. He graduated with the law class of 1901, and was admitted to the bar the same year. He began practice in Morgantown, but soon answered a call to other responsibilities. While living on the farm in 1896 he was elected justice of the peace, and filled that office $2\frac{1}{2}$ years, until he removed to Morgantown. Mr. Shriver was elected clerk of the Circuit Court in 1902, and his eighteen years of service terminated January 1, 1921. Since leaving the office of circuit clerk he has been deputy sheriff. Mr. Shriver was one of the organizers and is a director of the Bank of Morgantown, and was also identified with the organization of the Monongalia Building and Loan Association, of which he is a director. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Junior Order United American Mechanics, and is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

February 3, 1892, he married Iva Nora Wilson. She was born in Clay District, daughter of John N. and Lucinda (Moore) Wilson. Her father is now deceased. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Shriver, representing the fifth generation of the family in Monongalia County are: Goshie M., born April 9, 1894, died November 18, 1921, as the wife of J. F. Smith, of Morgantown; Nellie Irene, born February 24, 1901; Beulah Ruth, born April 20, 1903; and Dorothy, born February 15, 1909.

JAMES SCOTT STEWART. One of the veteran figures in West Virginia educational affairs, and familiar as an instructor and in other official capacities to the student body of the university at Morgantown for more than forty years, James Scott Stewart has made an enviable record of service and is one of the greatly admired citizens of Morgantown.

He was born in Jefferson County, Ohio, January 5, 1854. Both his grandfathers were natives of Scotland. His paternal grandfather, Alexander Stewart, a son of James Stewart, left Scotland early in life and, going to London, England, became what is known as flour factor or a whole sale dealer in flour. Prior to 1820 he left England and came to the United States, and somewhat later settled at Steubenville, Ohio, where he lived out his life. He had a considerable fortune, and one of his investments was a good farm in Jefferson County about twelve miles from Steubenville. He was instrumental in instituting the first Lodge of Masons at Steubenville and became a charter member.

His son, James R. M. Stewart, was born in London and was only a boy when his parents came to the United States. He grew up in Jefferson County, Ohio, inheriting the Stewart farm there, and in addition to the responsibilities of its management he was for years a lumber manufacturer, operating lumber mills. He died in Ohio in 1881, at the age of seventy-three. James R. M. Stewart married Cordelia K. Scott, also a native of London, England, and brought as a child to the United States, her parents settling in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The Stewart and Scott families had not been acquainted while living in London. Cordelia Stewart died in 1895, at the age of seventy-seven.

Her son, Prof. James Scott Stewart, grew up on the old homestead in Eastern Ohio. His interests were largely identified with the farm until after attaining his majority. His apt scholarship gave him a good record in the common and high schools, and in August, 1873, he enrolled as a student in West Virginia University. He was graduated with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1877, and three years later received the Master of Science degree. After his graduation Mr. Stewart remained as an instructor in the preparatory department of the university, and continued through the various grades of instruction until he was promoted to professor of mathematics in the university in 1891. During the school year 1894-95 he was superintendent of public schools at Fairmont, West Virginia, but without exception he continued to perform his duties as professor of mathematics until June, 1907. Since leaving the faculty of instruction Mr. Stewart has continued with the university in an official capacity as manager of the University Book Store, which is an important adjunct of the university and a business of no small proportions measured in the commercial scale.

During his long residence at Morgantown Mr. Stewart has acquired other business and civic interests. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers and Merchants Bank and has been a director since the early years of the institution. He is vice president and a director of the Morgantown Savings & Loan Society and is examiner for the real estate offered the society as basis for loans. He is also a member of the Board of Directors and secretary of the Board of the Chaplin Collieries Company of Morgantown. Mr. Stewart for forty-three years has been an elder in the First Presbyterian Church at Morgantown.

He married Louisa M. Hayes, daughter of Alexander Hayes, of Morgantown. Following the death of his first wife Mr. Stewart married Sara Meredith, daughter of the late John Q. A. Meredith, of Fairmont, West Virginia.

ALBERT KENNETH MILLER. Though he spent his early life on a farm in Pendleton County, Albert K. Miller has devoted practically all his mature years to commercial lines, beginning as a retail merchant, and has been an executive official in several of West Virginia's prosperous wholesale grocery houses. He is now an honored resident of Morgantown and secretary, treasurer and manager of the Morgantown Grocery Company.

He was born on a farm in Pendleton County, January 6, 1873, son of John H. and Eliza (Day) Miller, natives of the same county and now deceased. His grandfathers were early settlers in Pendleton County, grandfather Jonas Miller coming from Germany and grandfather Leonard Day, from Ireland.

Albert K. Miller learned some of the practical duties and discipline of the farm while a boy, also attended district schools, but in 1892, at the age of nineteen, left the farm and during the following six years was in the general merchandising business at Alexander, Upshur County. In 1898 he became a stockholder and one of the managers of the Upshur Grocery Company, a wholesale house at Buckhannon. He left Buckhannon in 1912, and for the following four years was manager of the Burnsville Grocery Company at Burnsville in Braxton County. He is still a stockholder in that company.

Mr. Miller has been one of the business men and citizens of Morgantown since 1916, when he took charge of the Morgantown Grocery Company as secretary, treasurer and manager. He is also a director of the Commercial Bank of Morgantown. He is affiliated with the local business men through the Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the First Methodist Church.

November 12, 1896, he married Julia Cheuvront. She was born at Good Hope, Harrison County, West Virginia, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary Anna (Brooks) Cheuvront. Mary Anna Brooks was the daughter of a Methodist minister who in his time was a power for good throughout Western Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are the parents of six children: Dwight C., born in 1898, now associated with his father in the Morgantown Grocery Company; Ruth, born in 1900, a member of the class of 1922 at West Virginia University; John H., born in 1902; Worth W., born in 1904, a student in the Morgantown High School; Lois I., born in 1906; and Albert Kenneth, Jr., born in 1910.

JOSEPH DONLEY MILLER, D. O. The marvelous progress made in medical science during recent years must interest every normal individual, be his own condition of health what it may. Among the different schools of medicine as a healing art perhaps none have made greater strides forward in the last decade than that of Osteopathy. It is almost fifty years since its founder, the late venerated Dr. Andrew Taylor Still, first announced the principles of this science, and for many years afterward its benefits had to be demonstrated in the face of what may be denominated fanatical opposition. Changed, indeed, is its present status, when a successful practitioner is found in every progressive community all over the world, when its richly endowed colleges offer unsurpassed advantages in the way of higher scientific medical training, and its beneficent results may be found in the practical banishment of the most dreaded foes of health that have so long afflicted misguided humanity. For fourteen years Morgantown, West Virginia, has been the home of a very able Osteopathic practitioner, Dr. Joseph Donley Miller, who may justly be called the pioneer in his school of medicine here, being preceded only by several practitioners whose stay was very short. The success that has attended Doctor Miller's efforts has firmly established Osteopathy in this community.

Doctor Miller is a native of West Virginia, born in Cass District, Monongalia County, May 4, 1862. His parents were James E. and Ruhama (Donley) Miller. His paternal grandfather was Amherst Miller, who settled at Osage, Cass District, at an early day, where he built and operated the first flour and carding mill in Monongalia County. He married into the prominent Locke family, and left descendants.

James E. Miller was born in Morgantown and grew to manhood there. He operated his father's mill at Osage for several years, but in 1876 removed to Mount Morris, Greene County, Pennsylvania, where he built a flour mill of his own and operated it for many years. He married Ruhama Donley, who was born at Mount Morris, where she still resides, being now in her eightieth year. Her father, Joseph R. Donley, was well known in Greene County. The father of Doctor Miller died at Mount Morris, where he was held as a citizen of sterling worth.

Joseph Donley Miller was fourteen years old when his parents moved to Mount Morris, Pennsylvania, where he continued his public school education already under way at Osage. It was in 1903, while residing at Core, West Virginia, that he became enough interested in Osteopathy to begin serious study of the science, and later became a student in the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, from which institution he was graduated in 1906, with the degree of D. O. He entered upon the practice of his profession at Mount Morris, but in April, 1907, removed to Morgantown, West Virginia, which city has been his field of professional work ever since. In recognition of his skill as an exponent of Osteopathy Doctor Miller has been highly honored on numerous occasions by representative organizations of his school of medicine. He is ex-president of the West Virginia State Osteopathic Association, is a member of the American Osteopathic Association, the Pennsylvania State Osteopathic Association, and of the Western Pennsylvania Osteopathic Association.

In 1890 Doctor Miller married Miss Mary Tennant, a daughter of John and Phoebe (Mason) Tennant, of Greene County, Pennsylvania, and they have one son and one daughter: Harry Irving and Lois Lynn, the latter of whom was born October 3, 1899, attended the Morgantown High School, and at present (1921) is a student in the University of West Virginia.

Harry Irving Miller, D. O., was born at Core, West Virginia, August 29, 1891, attended the common schools, the high school at Morgantown and the normal school at California, Pennsylvania, and later became a student in the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, from which college he was graduated in January, 1914, with the degree of D. O. He entered into practice at Lebanon, Missouri, where he remained until August, 1918, when he answered the call of the Government for medical men for service in the World war, and from that date until his honorable discharge on December 1, 1918, was stationed at Camp Lee, Virginia. He returned then to

Joe. S. Miller D.C.

Lebanon, Missouri, but in May, 1920, came to Morgantown to become his father's partner in Osteopathic practice, and since that time the professional style has been Miller & Miller. He is a member of the West Virginia State, and the American Osteopathic associations, and like his father, belongs to the Greek letter college fraternity, the Phi Sigma Gamma. He also is active in the Chamber of Commerce and belongs to the order of Elks at Morgantown. Doctor Miller and his family are members of the Methodist Protestant Church. As a citizen deeply interested in the welfare and progress of his home city, he is an active factor in the Chamber of Commerce. His fraternal connections include the Odd Fellows and the Order of Maccabees.

W. C. WICKHAM RENSNAW is a leading member of the bar at Huntington, former representative in the Legislature, and is a man of unusual gifts and accomplishments. Prior to becoming a lawyer he was in the civil engineering profession.

Mr. Renshaw was born of American parents but his birth occurred in a foreign land. He was born at Oratava, Tenerife, Canary Islands, November 19, 1882. His grandfather was William Renshaw, a native of Madrid, Spain, of English ancestry. For many years he was in the British diplomatic service, and some of the more important posts which he held were in Spain and Venezuela. He married a Spanish lady, Miss Beatrice De Medeiros. Robert H. Renshaw, father of the Huntington lawyer, was born at Bristol, Pennsylvania, in 1833, but was reared at Caracas, Venezuela, where he acquired his early education. He graduated A. B. from Harvard University in 1855, and for several years practiced law at Baltimore. During the Civil war he was a captain in the Confederate army, and following the war he settled down to farming in Clarke County, Virginia, where he remained until 1900 and then retired to Charlottesville, where he died in 1910. He was a democrat, a member of the Episcopal Church and the Masonic fraternity. His first wife was Miss Lucy Carter, a native of Virginia and their only child, Charlotte, died in infancy. His second wife was Maria Carter, of Philadelphia. To this union were born two children: Charles C., now sales agent for a coal company in Philadelphia, and Maria, deceased. The third wife of Robert H. Renshaw was Anne Carter Wickham, who was born in Hanover County, Virginia, in 1851. W. C. Wickham Renshaw is their oldest child; Frank is a civil engineer at Huntington; Robert is a road building contractor in Snow Hill, Maryland; and Julia is the wife of Alfred R. James, an architect at Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Renshaw was married in 1920 to Dr. W. E. Byerly, retired professor of mathematics of Harvard University, and now lives in Waverly, Massachusetts.

W. C. Wickham Renshaw grew up in Virginia, attended private schools, including the Clay Hill Academy in Clarke County, and in 1902 graduated Master of Arts in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. He is a member of the Alpha Tau Omega Greek letter fraternity. For three years he taught at Chattanooga, Tennessee and then followed his career as a civil engineer, a profession that engaged him in various districts of Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia. He first came to West Virginia in 1899.

Mr. Renshaw continued his profession as a civil engineer until 1914, in which year he was admitted to the bar and since then has been busy with his work as a lawyer. He is a member of the firm Vinson, Thompson, Meek & Renshaw, with offices in the Holeswade Building.

Mr. Renshaw was elected to represent Cabell County in the House of Delegates in November, 1916. During the session of 1917 he was chairman of the taxation and finance committees, and a member of the judiciary, mines and mining, labor and other important committees. He was elected as a democrat. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, the Kiwanis Club of Huntington, the Guyandotte Club, Gyan Country Club of Huntington, the West Virginia and American Bar associations, and is a director in the Huntington Development and Gas Company and president and director of the Guyan Big Ugly & Coal River Railroad.

His home is at 1105 Eleventh Street. In November, 1911, at Richmond, Virginia, Mr. Renshaw married Miss Martha Chaffin, daughter of Richard B. and Sarah (Harvie) Chaffin.

ARTHUR N. MCKEEVER is dean of the dental profession at Romney, and in his professional work and as a citizen has been prominent in that community since May 1, 1895. His name has been associated with several of the movements to give Romney a place among the progressive cities of the state.

He was born at Edom, near Harrisonburg, in Rockingham County, Virginia, February 6, 1874, but represents an old family of Hardy County, West Virginia. His great grandfather was one of three Scotch brothers who came from Scotland and settled in New Jersey. The grandfather, Hugh McKeever, was born in New Jersey in 1802 and as a young man settled in Hardy County and was a farmer and tavern keeper at Wardensville. He died there in 1880. Hugh McKeever married a Miss Ogden, who died at Wardensville in 1888, at the age of eighty-four. They reared the following children: Isaac, who was a common merchant in Washington, D. C., when he died; John, who died at Wardensville after many years of work as a physician in Hampshire and Hardy counties; William, who was in business with his brother Benjamin and died at Wardensville; Ezekiah, a Confederate soldier killed in battle at Richmond; Benjamin Warden; Rebecca, who married Asa Cline and died at Yellow Springs, Hampshire County; Amanda, who lives at Wardensville, wife of Tibbry Orndorff; Lydia, who married David Kue and died at Wardensville; and Jennie, who married David Dinges and died at Wardensville.

Benjamin W. McKeever, father of Doctor McKeever, was born in the Wardensville community in 1842, and early in the Civil war joined the Confederate army as a member of the Thirty-third Virginia Cavalry, under General Imboden. Among other engagements he was in the battle of New Market. He served as a private and after the war followed merchandising at Edom in Rockingham County, but finally returned to his native county and established his home at Wardensville. He was a member of the Hardy County Court, was a democrat and a Lutheran, and died at Wardensville in 1903 at the age of sixty-one. Benjamin W. McKeever married Mattie Neff, who was born in Shenandoah County, Virginia, in 1854, on her father's farm between Mount Jackson and New Market. She is now living, at the age of sixty-nine. She is the mother of three children: Doctor McKeever; Bernice, of Wardensville, widow of James A. Heishman; and Irene, Mrs. R. L. Husong, of Buffalo, New York.

Arthur N. McKeever was seven years of age when his parents left Rockingham County and established their home at Wardensville, the rural village on the east side of Hardy County, where he grew to manhood. He laid the foundation for his literary education in the village schools then spent two years in Roanoke College at Salem, Virginia, pursuing a literary-business course, and from there entered the University of Maryland at Baltimore, graduating from the dental department in the summer of 1895. He at once established his office at Romney, and was the first resident dentist to practice there, and has been the leader in his profession for nearly thirty years.

Doctor McKeever is a former mayor of Romney. During his administration the water system was installed and the first concrete sidewalks constructed. He also organized and was president of the Romney Improvement Company, which installed the sewer system for the town. He was one of the organizers and the first president of the First National Bank.

During the World war he was designated by the governor as dental examiner for the Local Draft Board. Governor A. B. White commissioned him a member of the Board of Regents of the Keyser branch of West Virginia University and he was one of the committee for the building of the school at Keyser and served four years as regent. Governor Glascock appointed him a notary public, and he was recommended by Governor Cornwell. He served with the rank of colonel on the staff of Governor Hatfield throughout his four-year term.

Doctor McKeever is a republican, casting his first vote for Major McKinley for President, and in former years attended numerous party conventions and is still a member of the Second District Congressional Committee. He is a past master of Romney Lodge of Masons, a past district deputy grand master, a member of Keyser Chapter, R. A. M., the Knight Templar Commandery at Martinsburg, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and belongs to Martinsburg Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

At Frostburg, Maryland, September 20, 1904, Doctor McKeever married Miss Katie Keller, daughter of Joseph and Susie (Brooke) Keller. Her father was connected with a mining company. Mrs. McKeever was born at Frostburg in December, 1873, and her musical talents were thoroughly trained, and she finished her education in the Peabody Institute at Baltimore. She was a teacher of music before her marriage. Doctor and Mrs. McKeever have two daughters, Martha and Josephine.

THOMAS W. GOCKE, one of the substantial business men of Piedmont, has been identified with the history of Mineral County for a quarter of a century, and is the representative in this region of the J. C. Orrick & Son Company. He was born at Howesville, Preston County, West Virginia, May 13, 1864, a son of John J. and Catherine (Wesling) Gocke, natives of the province of Brandenburg, Germany, who were married in the United States, to which the father had come in 1840. He first lived at Cumberland, Maryland, and later at Tunnelton, West Virginia, being there until after the completion of the first tunnel. Soon afterward he bought a farm at Howesville, and continued to conduct it until his death in 1892, when he was sixty-eight years old. He was married after coming to Preston County, and the mother survived him until 1910, when she passed away at Clarksburg, West Virginia, aged eighty-seven years. They had thirteen children, eight of whom grew up, were married and reared families, but only four are now living, they being: Thomas W., whose name heads this review; James B., who is a resident of Los Angeles, California; Vincent E., who is a resident of Clarksburg, West Virginia; and Emma S., who is the wife of John E. Mattingly, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Growing up on his father's farm, Thomas Gocke attended the local schools and learned habits of industry and thrift from his watchful parents. Taking upon himself the responsibilities of manhood, he went to Cumberland, Maryland, and became a salesman for the J. C. Orrick & Son Company, and has remained with this corporation ever since. While at Cumberland Mr. Gocke covered a territory including Preston and Mineral counties, West Virginia, and Garrett County, Maryland, but in 1900 was transferred to Piedmont, where his company opened a branch in this region, and was given his present territory, which includes the Piedmont, Keyser and Georges Creek districts. Investing in the stock of his company, he now is one of the large stockholders and a member of its board of directors.

The J. C. Orrick & Son Company, one of the most reliable concerns in the East, was established in 1863, at Cumberland, Maryland, by J. C. Orrick, who remained at its head during the remainder of his active life, and saw it develop from a small wholesale house to a corporation with many branches, doing a business of $1,000,000 annually. For a time a branch house was maintained at Grafton, West Virginia, but the business is now done by the Piedmont and Cumberland houses. The president and general manager of the company is William Gulland, the Orricks having all passed away.

Mr. Gocke has taken an active part in civic affairs at Piedmont, as he did at Cumberland, and is very active in politics. Casting his first presidential vote for Grover Cleveland, he has followed the fortunes of the democratic party ever since, and has been his party's delegate upon numerous occasions to the congressional and state conventions, and was particularly zealous in the campaigns of his old boyhood friend, Junior Brown, for Congress, and was his close advisor during his entire career. On February 22, 1914, Mr. Gocke received a reward to which he was entitled in his appointment as postmaster of Piedmont, to succeed George T. Goshorn, and was re-appointed after a service of four years, filling the office until he resigned, August 29, 1921. While he was postmaster he continued his connection with the Orrick Company, and felt that the burden was too great for him to continue the responsibilities of both positions. He has also served as a member of the Piedmont City Council, and was responsible for the inauguration of the system of sewers. An enthusiastic advocate of the good roads movement, he was instrumental in securing the issue of the $100,000 bond fund for the building of permanent roads, and it is a recognized fact that had he not exerted himself in behalf of this movement it would not have been successful. Public improvements and the public welfare of his home city and county have always been of vital moment to him, and he has always been willing to devote much time and attention to whatever he has believed would work out for the best interests of the majority. During the late war his position as postmaster of Piedmont placed him in the front ranks in all of the drives for all purposes, and he exerted himself to the utmost to aid the administration in carrying out its policies. Mr. Gocke is a member of the Knights of Columbus, of which he has been grand knight, and he has represented the local council in the state council and has held the office of advocate in the latter body.

On November 20, 1889, Mr. Gocke married at Baltimore, Maryland, Mary F. Kessler, who was born at Butler, Maryland, a daughter of Peter and Kate (Merryman) Kessler, natives of Switzerland, and Baltimore, Maryland, respectively. Mrs. Kessler was a distant relative of Johns Hopkins, founder of the famous University of Baltimore, Maryland, which bears his name. Mr. and Mrs. Gocke became the parents of the following children: Dr. William T., who is a graduate of the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons, is engaged in a practice of his profession at Clarksburg, West Virginia; Joseph J., who is connected with the Kenny House at Piedmont; Paul F., who is manager of the above mentioned hotel; Thomas V., who is a student of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Mary Catherine, who is attending the Piedmont High School. The Gockes are all Roman Catholics. Paul and Joseph Gocke volunteered for service during the World war at the entry of this country into the conflict, and served in the One Hundred and Seventy-third Engineers. They were sent overseas, were for five months in France, and for two months with the Army of Occupation on the Rhine River in Germany. During their period of service they were hospital attaches, and returned home uninjured. Both are members of the American Legion. The youngest son, Thomas V., was a S. A. T. C. student, and was in a training camp in Kentucky, preparing for army life, when the signing of the armistice put an end to the necessity for further troops. Like their father, the Gocke sons are admirable men and good citizens, and valuable additions to any community with which they see fit to connect themselves.

HON. ROBERT McVEIGH DRANE, mayor of Piedmont, and an attorney of note, is one of the leading men of Mineral County, and one whose fame is not confined to local boundaries. He was born at Frederick City, Maryland, October 15, 1885, a son of Robert H. Drane, born in the '50s in Virginia and reared in his native state, but who completed his educational training at Rockhill College, Maryland, and for some time was a merchant of Cumberland, Maryland. In 1889 he came to Piedmont and established the mercantile house he is still capably conducting. Very active in democratic circles, he has served on the County Central Committee of his party, and was elected on its ticket a member of the Piedmont City Council. As a communicant of Saint James Episcopal Church of Piedmont he is a leader in parish work, and in it, as in everything else he undertakes, he is zealous in behalf of what he considers to be for the best of the majority.

The marriage of Robert H. Drane occurred at Frederick City, Maryland, to Emma Virginia Keller, a daughter of John H. Keller and a native of Frederick. Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Drane became the parents of the following children: Harry K., who resides at Piedmont; Eleanor E., who married Dr. George B. Gilbert, of Colorado Springs,

H. C. Powell

Jorado, and died in that city; and Robert McVeigh, whose me heads this review.

Only four years old when brought to Piedmont by his parents, Robert McVeigh Drane has spent practically all of his life in this city, and acquired his preliminary education in its public schools. Graduated from the high-school course the age of seventeen years, he became a student of the West Virginia University at Morgantown, and was graduated from its legal department in 1907 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Although he began his practice at Piedmont, his first case was tried in the Maryland courts in Cumberland. He is engaged in a general criminal and civil practice and has never taken a partner. For six years he served Piedmont as city attorney, and is counsel for the Davis National Bank of Piedmont and one of the directors of this institution. In the spring of 1917 Mr. Drane was first elected mayor of Piedmont to succeed Mayor H. H. Shaw, and was re-elected in 1918, 1919 and again in 1921, having declined the nomination in 1920, to become a candidate for the office of prosecuting attorney of Mineral county on the democratic ticket. Although he made a bad campaign, he was defeated in the landslide in favor of the republican candidates. During the time he has been mayor he has succeeded in decreasing the bonded indebtedness, and has issued bonds for the establishment of a filtration system for the city. Mr. Drane prepared the charter for the City of Piedmont which was passed upon at the session of 1913 of the State Assembly. Casting his first presidential vote for William Jennings Bryan in 1908, Mr. Drane has continued a firm advocate of democratic principles ever since, and supported Woodrow Wilson during his administration, although he went to the democratic state convention of West Virginia as a Clark delegate.

In his fraternity work Mr. Drane was made a member of Kappa Alpha at the university, and he is a Scottish-Temple Mason, a member of Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, the Knights of Pythias, and Martinsburg Lodge, B. P. O. E. He is a communicant of Saint James Episcopal Church of Piedmont. Mr. Drane is unmarried. During the late war he rendered service to the drafted men in filling out their questionnaires, and encouraged the purchase of Liberty Bonds by making Four Minute talks all over the county. Under the draft he was classified as "A-1," and was exempted to be called when the armistice was signed. As a lawyer Mr. Drane is able, skilled and resourceful, and his success is unqualified. As a public official he has demonstrated his ability to handle in a capable manner the various problems of civic life, and is one of the most popular of those to hold the office of chief executive of the City of Piedmont.

HARVEY C. POWELL, M. D. Included among the medical men of Monongalia County who have attained recognition and professional success within a comparatively short span of years is Dr. Harvey C. Powell, engaged in practice at Morgantown. He entered his profession with the most thorough and comprehensive training, and his subsequent experience has included labors both at home and abroad, for he is a veteran of the World war and saw active service as a member of the Medical Corps on the battlefields of France.

Doctor Powell was born at Flemington, Taylor County, West Virginia, March 16, 1881, a son of James F. and Mary V. (Allen) Powell, natives, respectively, of Taylor and Tyler counties, West Virginia. His paternal grandfather, Elijah Powell, was born near Winchester, Virginia, and married Sarah Cather, of West Virginia. The Powells are of Welsh stock and the family was founded in this country by the great-grandfather of Doctor Powell, a native of Wales. The Allens are of Scotch-Irish stock and came to what is now West Virginia, then Virginia, from Pennsylvania, where the original American ancestor of this branch had settled on his arrival in this country. Mrs. F. Powell was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1904, in which year he retired and moved to Morgantown, where he died in 1911. The mother survives, in her eighty-eighth year. She is a devout Baptist, this denomination having been always the family faith.

The only child of his parents, Harvey C. Powell, spent his early days on the home farm in Tyler County, where he attended the public school. He took one term at Fairmont (West Virginia) Normal School, and finished his preparatory and pre-medical work at the University of West Virginia. In 1902 he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the Baltimore Medical College, and at that time became house physician at Hinkins Hospital, Wheeling, West Virginia. Later he became associated with Doctor Rau at the North Wheeling Hospital, Wheeling, after which he spent a year in the West recuperating his health. In the spring of 1905 he commenced practice at Morgantown, where he made rapid strides in his profession and gained a large and lucrative practice. His career was interrupted by the outbreak of the World war, and, putting aside his personal interests, he enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army in 1917, on August 4 of which year he was commissioned a first lieutenant. On October 4 he was sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, to the Medical Officers' Training School and December 15, 1917, was transferred to Camp McClellan, Anniston, Alabama, and assigned to the One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment of Infantry, Twenty-ninth Division. He left the latter camp June 9, 1918, for overseas, sailing from Hoboken, New Jersey, June 15, and arriving at Brest, France, June 28. Doctor Powell was with the infantry throughout his service, and took part in the various engagements and skirmishes in the Haute Alsace sector from July 25 to September 23, and the sector north of Verdun, in the Argonne Forest, October 18 to October 29. His command was out of the line, stationed at Robert Espagne, France, when the armistice was signed. Doctor Powell was commissioned captain February 22, 1919, and sailed for home May 11, 1919, from St. Nazaire, France, arriving at Newport News, Virginia, May 24. He was mustered out of the service at Camp Meade, June 12, 1919, and returned to Morgantown, resuming his practice, in which he has been highly successful.

Doctor Powell is a member of the Monongalia County Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society. As a fraternalist he belongs to Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Morgantown Chapter, R. A. M.; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, thirty-second degree, R. and S. M.; and Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Wheeling; Morgantown Lodge No. 411, B. P. O. E.; and Athens Lodge No. 36, K. P. He also holds membership in the Morgantown Kiwanis Club.

On August 3, 1916, Doctor Powell married Miss Mary Ottoff Sigwart, daughter of Otto and Margaret (White) Sigwart, of Morgantown. Mrs. Powell was born at Cumberland, Maryland.

ROBERT WOOD DAILEY, J. A., M. D., representing a prominent family of Hampshire County, is a son of the venerable jurist Robert Wood Dailey, who has spent a third of a century on the Circuit bench. The life of his father and other members of the family is reviewed at length on other pages.

Robert Wood Dailey, Jr., was born at Romney, October 12, 1883, and was educated in the Old Potomac Academy, whose building is now part of the group of buildings for the West Virginia Deaf and Blind School. After leaving school Doctor Dailey became an employee of the Davis Coal and Coke Company in their mines at Thomas, West Virginia, remaining there four years. For a similar period he was connected with the Consolidation Coal Company at Myersdale, Pennsylvania. He then returned to West Virginia and was employed on the construction of the Baltimore and Ohio branch through Romney to Petersburg, continuing until this portion of the road was finished.

About that time he determined to follow a professional career, and entered the medical department of Loyola University at Chicago in 1911. He graduated M. D. in 1916, and during his senior year was president of the local chapter of the Phi Delta fraternity. After graduating he was a physician for a year in St. John's Hospital at Fargo, North Dakota, and then returned to Romney and for a time was medical examiner for the Draft Board and for eight months was on duty in State Hospital No. 2 at McKendree. With this extensive preparation he returned to Romney and has since been engaged in general practice and is also physician to the State School for the Deaf and Blind.

Doctor Dailey served as a member of the Romney Council, is a democratic voter and a Master Mason.

GEORGE W. ARNOLD has been a citizen of Romney who could be depended upon for effective co-operation in every movement for the real welfare and advancement of the town and county. He is a banker, cashier of the Bank of Romney, has been identified with the public service, though he is not a politician, and for a number of years has been perhaps one of the strongest individual influences and workers in behalf of Sunday School and religious activity in Hampshire County.

He represents a family that has been in Hampshire County for several generations. In the early generation the Arnolds were members of the Primitive Baptist Church. His great-grandfather, William Arnold, was a minister of that faith and assisted in organizing and maintaining church work in that denomination all over Hampshire County. The grandfather of the Romney banker was George Arnold, a native of Virginia, who spent his active life on the farm. George B. Arnold, father of George W., was born in the same locality and on the same farm as his son, and when about twenty-five years of age he became a miller, operating the Ely Mill near Higginville on Little Capon, and remained there until his death in 1890, at the early age of forty-three. He was a son of George and Sarah Powell Arnold. Sarah Powell Arnold lived past the age of four score and was the mother of Joshua, James, George Benjamin, William, Millard, Elizabeth, who married John B. Powell, and Jane, who became Mrs. W. J. Shanholtzer.

George Benjamin Arnold married Margaret B. Shelly, daughter of David and Jemimah (Bolton) Shelly. The Shelly family is of German ancestry and was established in the United States by the great-grandfather of George W. Arnold. Mrs. Margaret Shelly Arnold died in 1884, leaving seven children: Millard L.; George W.; Minnie J., who married J. C. Corder; David J.; Edward C.; Cora R., wife of George Hunter; and Agnes L., wife of Page Saunders. The father of these children married for his second wife Virginia Corder.

George W. Arnold was born in Hampshire County, nine miles from the county seat, September 13, 1872. He was a farm boy on Little Capon until the age of eighteen, acquiring a country school education. He began teaching, subsequently attended the Normal School at Reliance, Virginia, then taught two years more in Hampshire County, and left the school rooms to take up a business career.

Mr. Arnold was a clerk in the Farmers Exchange at Romney until 1903, when he was promoted to manager. Then, in 1906, he was asked to take the cashiership of the newly organized First National Bank of Romney. However, before the bank opened for business arrangements were made to consolidate it with the older bank of Romney, and Mr. Arnold thus became assistant cashier of the Bank of Romney, and at the beginning of 1907 was elected cashier, an office he has now filled for fifteen years.

The Bank of Romney was established in August, 1888, its promoters being community leaders including John T. Vance, and the prominent lawyers and jurists, Judge Dailey and H. B. Gilkeson. The original capital was $25,000, increased to $50,000 at the time of the consolidation, and in 1913 increased to $75,000. This bank has been a dividend payer from the time of its organization, ten per cent annually with one exception through all these years, in addition to some special dividends. The officers of the bank are: Former Governor John J. Cornwell, president; Charles W. Haines, vice president; George W. Arnold, cashier; Blair M. Haines, assistant cashier; while the directors include the president, vice president and cashier and Thomas G. Long, D. A. Daughtery, T. F. Henderson, B. T. Racey, W. L. Tharp, R. S. Kuykendall, Jo S. Pancake, C. E. Reiley, A. L. Ewers and George S. Arnold.

Mr. Arnold's public service was on the City Council at Romney during the paving era. At the time of the World war he was chairman of the bond drives in the county, an also treasurer of the county chapter of the Red Cross and enlisted his active interests in all patriotic causes. He was one of the original incorporators and a director and treasurer of the Romney Improvement Company, which had for its purpose the construction of a sewerage system for the town. Mr. Arnold is a charter member and a past noble grand of Romney Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church and was affiliated with other churches until his own denomination built its house of worship. In the religious field, however, most of his time and energy have been taken up with promoting Sunday Schools in the rural communities around Romney. He was associated with other Sunday School workers in plans for more efficient co-operation an intensive campaign for taking the Bible to the country youth. For several years it was Mr. Arnold's practice to make Sunday trips to some school house or church in the country and conduct a class and otherwise assist in carrying on an enthusiastic Sunday School organization. His general interest in all plans for community betterment caused him to join with William N. Baird, Dr. F. J. Brool John J. Cornwell and J. Sloan Kuykendall as the first guarantors of a Chautauqua course of Romney, and for nine years he has been financially and otherwise interested in this annual event that is now on a college basis of financial support.

On April 6, 1892, Mr. Arnold married in Taylor County West Virginia, Miss Mary Walker Beery, daughter of Benjamin and Malinda (Moore) Beery. She was born in Gratton, was educated in the public schools there, and is the youngest in a family of five daughters and one son: Mr. Sarah E. Leith, of Gratton; Mrs. Margaret Byers, of the city; Mrs. Anna Best, of Los Angeles; Miss Etta Beery, of Gratton; and William Beery.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold have two daughters and one son. Their daughter Margaret Catherine is the wife of Lester N. Inskeep, of Washington, D. C., and they have two children, Lester Arnold and William Carter. Helen Lois is student in Bethany College, of Bethany, West Virginia, and the son, Eugene Russell, is a junior in the Romney High School.

J. BURR SAVILLE, sheriff of Hampshire County, was born and reared in this locality, and though a young man he built up a large and loyal following who ardently support him when a candidate for sheriff. Mr. Saville is a merchant and has been a factor in the business affairs of the county for over ten years.

He was born in Sherman District, March 21, 1891. His grandfather, James H. Saville, is also a native of Hampshire County in Gore District, followed farming, was Federal soldier in the Civil war, always voted the democratic ticket and was a leader in the Methodist Church. James H. Saville, who died at the age of eighty-two years, married Miss Caroline Yost, who died about six months after her husband, when about seventy-eight years of age. They were the parents of six children: John Letcher; Bell Powell, widow of Dade Powell; Jennie, who married Mordcai Cheshire; Imboden Saville, of Sherman District; an Amanda, wife of Charles Van Pelt, of Piedmont.

John Letcher Saville, who was born in Hampshire County in 1864, has for many years been one of the leading farmer and stockmen of the Augusta section of the county. He had a public school education, was reared on his father's farm, and for a number of years has been a feeder of livestock and a shipper to the Baltimore markets. He is democrat, has served as a member of the Board of Education of his district and is a member of the Methodist Church. John L. Saville married Rosa Miller, daughter of George W. and Jane (Haines) Miller. Her father was born in Hardy County, West Virginia, a farmer, and was also Union soldier in the Civil war. The children of John L. Saville and wife are: G. Floyd, a farmer of Sherman District; J. Burr; and Guy E., who joined the Three Hundred and Twelfth Field Artillery, and saw active service with his organization on the fighting front in France, and since its return home has been in business as a merchant at Piedmont.

J. Burr Saville attended school in the Sherman and Gore localities of Hampshire County, also busied himself with the work of the farm and assisted his father in the stock business. After reaching majority he engaged in business as a merchant at Vanderlip, and the firm of J. B. Saville and Company, in which his brother Guy is a partner, is a very popular one in that locality and handles a large volume of business annually.

Mr. Saville was urged by his many friends to get into the race for sheriff in the summer of 1920. He was nominated against two competitors, and in November defeated the republican opponent and succeeded Sheriff James L. Hugh. Since taking up his duties it has devolved upon him to arrest a man who was subsequently convicted for murder, but aside from this incident the principal work of his administration has been chasing moonshiners and enforcing the prohibition laws. Mr. Saville is a member of the Masonic Order.

At Cumberland, Maryland, in November, 1914, he married Miss Mary E. Friend, daughter of John B. and Harriet Friend, of Garrett County, Maryland, where Mrs. Saville was born in August, 1894. Her family is descended from an old one in Philadelphia, and were originally Quakers. The children of John B. Friend and wife are: Fred, Walter, John, Gilbert, Bessie (wife of William Warneck), Mrs. Saville and Robert. Mr. and Mrs. Saville have two children, Jules Byron and Vernon.

JAMES W. SHULL, M. D. Few citizens of Hampshire County have made their individual activities and influences such and benefit a broader range of interest than Doctor Shull of Romney. He has been a practitioner of medicine in the county for nearly fifty years, has expressed his interest in public affairs in various ways, and has also been a leader in the business life of the county.

Doctor Shull was born at Marlboro Post Office on Cedar Creek in Frederick County, Virginia, September 25, 1847. The battle of Cedar Creek raged over the scene of his birth seventeen years later. His father, Daniel Shull, was also a native of Frederick County, born within a half mile of the birthplace of his son. He was a militia captain before the war, and entered the Confederate army as captain of a company while Jackson's army was campaigning around Romney in January, 1862. He died in 1868, at the age of fifty-six years, from ailments brought on by exposure during his war service. He lies buried at Walnut Springs, four miles north of Strasburg. Daniel Shull married Mary J. Brown, daughter of James C. and Sarah (Sherman) Brown. He died at the age of sixty-four, in 1884, and of their five children three came to mature years: Josephine, who died as the wife of Lemuel Emswiler; Doctor Shull; and Annie, wife of Theodore Courtney, of Puyallup, Washington.

James W. Shull was reared on the family farm near Strasburg, and acquired a primary education in the county schools and in the Strasburg Academy. Until past his majority he was a farmer, and, deciding upon medicine as a career, he read the subject four years with Dr. I. H. Baldwin, of Marlboro. Doctor Baldwin was a nephew of resident James Madison, and a school book belonging to resident Madison is now one of the prized possessions of Doctor Shull. From his private study he entered the University of Maryland at Baltimore, and on completing the course there began practice near the town of Strasburg.

A short time later he came to West Virginia, and in April, 1874, located in Hampshire County and began practice near Rio at Smith's Gap on North River. After four years, in 1878, he moved to Pleasant Dale, where he continued his work as a physician for twenty-three years, and on May 17, 1901, established his home and office at Romney, and is still active in his profession. For the past twenty years he has been county health officer, and has performed long and able service as a practitioner of medicine and surgery. He is a member and former president of the Grant-Hamphrey-Hardy-Mineral County Medical Society and is a member of the West Virginia State Medical Association.

Doctor Shull's interest in politics has been aroused largely from his desire to find opportunity to make his influence count in the betterment in social and economic conditions. He was a member of the People's party during the lifetime of that organization, since then has been a democrat, and in former years attended a number of party conventions. He was twice a candidate for county superintendent of schools, being defeated by fifty votes in each election. During the World War he was chairman and examiner of the Local Draft Board, and examined more than twelve hundred men, more than four hundred of whom went into the service. He found them a particularly clean and promising body of our junior citizenship. Doctor Shull is a member of the Church of Christ and is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge.

In the line of business his most active connection has been with that important institution of Romney known as the Farmers Exchange. He was one of its organizers as an instrument for carrying out the economic policy of the old Farmers Alliance, and he canvassed the county to promote an interest in the establishment of the store at Romney. He has been secretary and one of the directors of the business since it was founded in December, 1892. He is also financially interested in and is secretary of the Farmers Electric Company of Romney, which until recently was the electric department of the Farmers Exchange.

Doctor Shull's first wife was Florence V. Daniels, only child of Alpheus and Eliza (Wilson) Daniels. She died without issue. In Hampshire County Doctor Shull married for his second wife Miss Etta V. Wolford, daughter of Richard and Phoebe (McGuire) Wolford. She died in 1887, mother of the following children: Florence, wife of Frank Baker, of Fremont, Ohio; Claude Leroux, who died while a law student in the University of West Virginia, within four months of graduation; Jenner, a wood worker living at Detroit, Michigan; McGuire, who served a number of years in the United States Cavalry of the Regular Army, was at the Presidio at San Francisco early in the World War and is now in the aviation service. In 1889, at Paw Paw in Morgan County, West Virginia, Doctor Shull married Miss Margaret Hyett, daughter of Walter and Margaret (Largent) Hyett. The children of this union are: Mrs. Ione Cookus, of Winchester, Virginia; Gemeth, wife of the evangelist Hiram Van Voorhis, of Bowling Green, Ohio; Worth, wife of Rev. Earl Biddle, of Cincinnati, Ohio; James, now living at Romney, and a member of the Naval Reserve, was on the battleship South Carolina and made four trips across the Atlantic during the World War; and End O., who is a graduate of the Romney High School.

JOHN BASSEL was admitted to the bar while the Civil War was still in progress. With the lapse of years his abilities gave him rank as one of the able lawyers of West Virginia, and his career closed in honor and ripe achievement more than half a century later at Clarksburg, the city with which practically his entire life was identified.

He was born in Harrison County June 9, 1846, and was in his seventy-fifth year when he died at Clarksburg, December 28, 1914. He was a son of Benjamin and Lucinda Bassel. After the common schools he spent two years in Moore's Academy at Morgantown, subsequently was an honor graduate from Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pennsylvania, and began the study of law in the office of John J. Davis. After one year of private study he entered the Cincinnati College of Law, of which he was a graduate. Mr. Bassel was admitted to practice in the courts of Harrison County, January 8, 1864. He looked upon the law as a great profession worthy of his utmost devotion, and never regarded it merely as an occupation. He handled a general practice, though he also handled some special legal business and for many years was counsel for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company.

His character as a lawyer is described in the History of the Bench and Bar of West Virginia, from which the following sentences are taken: "He was noted for his diligence, mental acuteness, and power of analysis; hence it was not long until he received recognition as an attorney and his success was therefore early assured. He ranked among the able lawyers of his day, always conducting his cases with admirable effectiveness and superior judgment. He had a comprehensive and accurate knowledge of the law, and never failed to exalt his profession, in which it was his ambition to excel, and lamented the tendency in later years to lower its ideals. He never failed to keep in mind the advice of Lord Coke, that 'he that knoweth not the reason of the law knoweth not the law.' At the trial of causes he was alert, adroit and untiring. In the argument of cases he reasoned well and convincingly. He was a dangerous opponent in debate, but was never spectacular nor offensive. He possessed a remarkably retentive memory and could cite cases with marvelous precision. He was always a student and remembered what he read, and his mind was accordingly stored and enriched not only by a knowledge of the law itself, but by the history of events culled from the classics and from profane and sacred writers as well, which he often used with telling effect in his arguments before courts and juries."

Mr. Bassel gave little time or thought to politics, though he was a democrat. The only office to which he was ever elected by the people was as a delegate to the state convention that prepared the constitution of 1872. His thorough knowledge of the law made him a valued adviser in that body, and the document bears the impress of his judgment. He was elected president of the State Bar Association in 1901, and for many years was a faithful attendant upon the annual meetings of the organization. The association was in session at Parkersburg the day of his death, and as a mark of respect twenty of its members were appointed to attend his funeral.

Mr. Bassel was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He was domestic in his traits and habits, and enjoyed the associations of an extensive friendship over the state. His first wife was Miss Martha Lewis, and by this union he was the father of six children. Mr. Bassel is survived by his second wife, who was formerly Miss Alice Bean. She continues to live at Clarksburg.

JOHN D. BLUE is one of the oldest men in the service of the Farmers Exchange of Romney, a business institution with a very interesting history.

The Farmers Exchange at Romney was founded in 1892, and the leading spirits in its organization were Dr. J. W. Shull and J. W. Thompson, both of whom have been on its Board of Directors from the beginning, and Mr. Thompson is now its president and Doctor Shull its secretary. Associated with them was the late George H. Johnson. The present Board of Directors comprise E. H. Blue, E. J. Fox, G. R. Hamilton, A. L. Ewers, the executive officers including Mr. John D. Blue. The business of the Farmers Exchange is merchandising, milling and the manufacture of ice. Prior to 1922 the Exchange also generated the electricity for Romney, but at the beginning of that year a new company was formed to take over that end of the business, called the Farmers Electric Company, of which J. S. O'Hare is manager and electrician.

The Farmers Exchange in its origin is reminiscent of the old semi-political organization known as the Farmers Alliance. It was one of a number of similar enterprises established under such auspices in Hampshire County, is the only one to survive and assume a permanent form and enjoy continued prosperity. The original investment in the enterprise was about $2,000.00, and the business was exclusively merchandising. In order to raise the original capital for the opening of the store about one hundred men signed the note as security for the money. This successful business has had three managers, the first being C. W. Haines, the second, G. W. Arnold, and the third, John D. Blue, who has served longer than either of his predecessors. The Farmers Exchange also has the controlling interest in the stock of the Romney Grocery Company, a local wholesale house.

John D. Blue was born near Wappocomo in Romney District of Hampshire County, December 30, 1877, and has lived within a few miles of his birthplace all his life. His grandfather was Garrett I. Blue, who was born and spent his active life as a farmer in Hampshire County, and died about the close of the Civil war. He married Miss Long, and among their children were Susan, Sallie, Ursula, Jo and Marcellus.

John Blue, father of the Romney merchant, was born in Hampshire County, acquired his education in that country, and after some years as a farmer he became county official twelve years before his death, being elected county assessor, and he was in that office when he died, 1903, at the age of about seventy. The first year of the Civil war he joined the Confederate Army as a member of the Eleventh Virginia Cavalry, and was in some of the severest battles of the war. Several times he was captured by the Federals, and finally was sent to the Federal prison on Johnson's Island in Lake Erie, and for a time was at Fort Delaware, being held until the close of the war. After the war he was much interested in the proceedings of the Confederate veterans, attended a number of reunions, and was an ardent democrat, working for the interest of the party and its candidates.

John Blue married Miss Ann Eliza Fox, whose father was Voss Fox and her mother, a Miss Harness. She died in 1899, at the age of sixty-eight. Their children consisted of Miss Sallie V.; Edwin H., present county assessor of Hampshire County; William F., who was accidentally killed while logging in the woods; George C. was with a coal company Fairmont when he died in 1901; Rebecca, now Mrs. George H. Johnson, Jr., of Hampshire County; John David; a Mary Elizabeth, wife of Martin T. Hooper, who lives in Sacramento, California, and is a mechanical engineer.

John D. Blue spent the first eighteen years of his life on the farm, and while there attended country schools. He left the farm to become delivery boy and clerk in the Farmers Exchange Store at Romney, and in that service he continued steadily through all the years and has been responsible in no small degree for the prosperity of the institution. He has been manager of the Exchange since 1901. Mr. Blue is also a stockholder in the Bank of Romney, has served on the Romney Council, is a democrat in politics, affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Masons and the Modern Woodmen of America, and is a Presbyterian. He assisted promoting the success of the various drives and campaigns in behalf of the Government during the World war, and he registered under the draft law.

In Mineral County, September 24, 1902, he married Mary D. Rinehart, a daughter of John W. and Helen (Hovson) Rinehart. She was born on Patterson Street in Mineral County, was reared on a farm and supplemented her country school advantages in the Shepherd College Normal, and was a teacher before her marriage. She is the oldest of six children, the others being Elijah, Mrs. Helen Herriott, Mrs. Ann Kuykendall, deceased, John Rinehart, a resident of Alberta, Canada, and Miss Minnie, who lives at the old homestead in Mineral County. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Blue are: Helen, a graduate of the Romney High School and now a teacher in Hampshire County; Jean R., a high school student; and Cathleen.

HON. ROBERT W. DAILEY. In length of continuous service Judge Dailey is one of the oldest Circuit Court judges in the state. For thirty years he has presided over the courts of the Twenty-second Circuit, comprising Hampshire, Hardy and Pendleton counties, a record which has throughout been adorned by his sound abilities as a lawyer, his impartiality as a judge and the integrity of his personal character.

Judge Dailey, whose home is at Romney, was born in Hampshire County, April 18, 1849. His paternal grandfather, James Dailey, came to Virginia from Pennsylvania when a young man and achieved a creditable position as farmer, banker and man of affairs. He died about 1870, when about fifty years of age. His first wife, and mother of a large family of children, was a daughter of Colonel Andrew W. Woodrow, who had served as clerk of the court at Romney. The second wife of James Dailey was Cecelia Wood, whose grandfather, Colonel James Wood, was the founder of Winchester, Virginia, naming the place in honor of his native city in England. The children of Colonel Wood Dailey were: Dr. Robert Wood; Jean W., who became the wife of Charles Lohb; Harriet, who died in married; Thomas, who was a physician, practiced at Clarksburg, and at the beginning of the Civil war joined the Confederate Army, but ill health would not permit him to serve and he died at Winchester, Virginia.

Dr. Robert Wood Dailey, father of Judge Dailey, was born at Romney, but spent his early life at Winchester, Virginia, and read medicine with a celebrated physician of that city, Doctor McGuire. He also attended medical lectures in the University of Pennsylvania, graduating there, and for sixty years he carried on an extensive private practice, beginning at Romney and finally returning to that city, where he was a dignified and very respected member of the profession. He was opposed to secession, and at the beginning of the Civil war he lived in Cumberland, Maryland, but when Virginia finally seceded he joined the cause of his neighbors and friends and did what he could to aid the Confederacy. He served as a surgeon in the army, and remained in the service until the close of the war, when he returned to Romney as the home and scene of his active practice. He died in 1902, at the age of eighty-one.

Doctor Dailey was devoted to his profession, having little concern with business, was a man of strong convictions as a democrat and while orthodox in religion was not a member of any denomination. He married Rebecca Taylor, of Winchester, Virginia, daughter of Benjamin and Eliza (Howland) Taylor, whose family consisted of five sons and two daughters. Mrs. Rebecca Dailey died at the age of seventy-one. Her children were: Benjamin, who was a practicing lawyer at Moorefield, where he died; James, a commercial salesman and later a merchant at Romney; Judge Robert Wood; Comfort Wood, who became a lawyer and practiced at Keyser and Elkins, and was serving as general counsel for the Western Maryland Railroad in behalf of the Davis and Elkins interests when he died; Griffin Taylor, who was a physician in Romney where he died; Howland, who became an Arkansas farmer; Sarah Cornelia, who died at Romney, the wife of William N. Baird; and Miss Jean Dailey, of Romney.

Judge Robert W. Dailey until after the close of the Civil war lived with his parents and attended school for several lengths of time in Cumberland, Maryland, then at Winchester, Virginia, and was educated in private schools at Cumberland and Winchester, and at the age of nineteen began the study of law in the office of White and Jacob at Romney. He was admitted to the bar from their office in August, 1870, after passing an oral examination before Judge Joseph A. Chapline and a committee comprising Andrew W. Kercheval and Gen. Joseph Spriggs. Judge Hoke, after at Moorefield with Judge Chapline, signed his license.

Judge Dailey began practice in association with James D. Armstrong, afterwards judge of the Twenty-second Circuit, and the firm continued until Mr. Armstrong went on the bench. Following that Judge Dailey was associated with his brother, Wood Dailey, in the firm of Dailey & Dailey. His brother moved to Elkins about the time Robert Dailey was chosen to the bench. Judge Dailey for twenty-two years carried on a general practice before the courts of Hampshire, Mineral, Hardy and Grant counties, and for a similar length of time served as prosecuting attorney, holding that position until he went on the bench.

When Judge Armstrong resigned as circuit judge Governor Fleming appointed Robert W. Dailey as his successor until the next general election, and Judge Dailey was then elected and has never been opposed in succeeding elections. At the expiration of his present term he will have served thirty-seven years. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, frequently attending Presbyteries, occasionally the Synod, and three times was a delegate to the General Assembly, those at Birmingham, Alabama, Greenville, South Carolina, and Bristol, Tennessee.

In Prince Edward County, Virginia, in February, 1874, Judge Dailey married Miss Louisa Booker, whom he had met at Romney some time before. She was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, daughter of John and Lucilla (Elliot) Booker, being one of a large family of children. Her father was a native of Virginia and a merchant. Judge Dailey's children were properly educated and trained and have become well established in their respective spheres.

His son, John B., is general manager of stores of a coal company in Huntington, West Virginia. Nellie is the wife of William L. Walker, of Spartanburg, South Carolina. William T. lives at Morgantown. Miss Rebecca Howland is a resident of Romney. Robert W. is a physician representing the fifth generation of the family in that profession and is practicing at Romney. Lucilla is the wife of Dr. James K. Guthrie, of New Hampton, Iowa.

OLIVER MORTIMER RIZER is one of the popular and representative citizens of his native city of Piedmont, Mineral County, his birth having here occurred November 16, 1839. He is a son of George W. and Mary Jane (Jarboe) Rizer, the latter a native of Petersburg, Virginia, and a daughter of Washington Jarboe, who was born and reared in France.

George W. Rizer was born in Allegany County, Maryland, in 1829, and became one of the pioneer telegraph operators in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He was stationed at Cumberland, Maryland, during the period of the Civil war, and at one time was forced to leave his post and take his telegraph instruments into hiding from encroachment by Confederate forces. Through exposure which he endured in one of these flights from his office he contracted a severe cold, as a sequel of which his death occurred in November, 1864. His marriage occurred in 1855, at Piedmont, the father of his wife having been proprietor of the old Sims Hotel. Mrs. Rizer was born in 1832, and long survived her husband, her death having occurred in 1918. Frank, eldest of the children, died in 1894, at Wheeling; Oliver Mortimer, of this sketch, was next in order of birth; and Ella Elsworth is the widow of Lewis C. Nolte, of Wheeling.

Luther Rizer, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born and reared in Germany, was a skilled mechanic, and after coming to America established his home at Crisps town, Allegany County, Maryland, where he passed the remainder of his life. His children were six in number: Charles, Luther, Jacob, George W., Rosa (Mrs. Robert Courts), and Lizzie (Mrs. Joseph McLendon). The son Charles was a Union soldier in the Civil war, was captured and confined in Andersonville Prison, and his death occurred soon after his return home.

Oliver M. Rizer was but seven years old when he became a messenger for the telegraph office at Cumberland, Maryland, and in that city he attended the public schools for a time. He learned telegraphy, but never followed the trade. He found employment in a rolling mill at Cumberland, and later returned to Piedmont, his native place, where he learned the trade of boilermaker in the shops of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He suffered the loss of his right eye shortly before completing his apprenticeship, and he thus abandoned this trade also. For seven years thereafter he was engaged in mercantile business in this city, and thereafter he was a traveling commercial salesman for F. W. Damast & Company of Baltimore until 1918. Ill health then led to his retirement, but a few months later he became a traveling representative for J. J. Lansburgh & Company, dealers in all kinds of sea foods, fruits and vegetables, with which he is still connected, with assigned territory along the lines of the Baltimore & Ohio, the Chesapeake & Ohio, and the Western Maryland Railroads in West Virginia and Maryland. He is financially interested in the Rizer Electric Company of Piedmont, of which his son Charles H. is manager, and is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Piedmont. He is a republican, and is a member of the local lodge and also the uniformed rank body of the Knights of Pythias, both he and his wife being affiliated with the Pythian Sisters.

September 25, 1883, recorded, at Piedmont, the marriage of Mr. Rizer and Miss Theresa W. Huth, who was born at Weston, this state, February 29, 1864, and who was reared and educated at Piedmont. She is a daughter of the late James Charles Huth, who was born and reared in Saxony, Germany, where his birth occurred April 2, 1833, and where he learned the baker's trade. In 1851 he came to the United States and found employment at his trade in Wheeling, Virginia (now West Virginia). In 1869 he established a bakery at Piedmont, and he successfully continued the enterprise until his retirement in 1901, his death having occurred in November, 1920. He was a staunch republican, served as justice of the peace and as a member of the city council, and his religious faith was that of the Lutheran Church. His wife, whose maiden name was Rose Monahan, was born in County Mayo, Ireland. Her parents came to America and settled in New Orleans, where her mother died of cholera. Thereafter she came with her father to Wheeling, where her marriage was solemnized. She died in February, 1890, when about sixty years of age. Of her children five are living at the time of this writing, in 1922. In conclusion is entered brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Rizer: Harry F., who is engaged in the plumbing business at Piedmont, married Elsie Tomlinson, and they have five children, Oliver M., Jr., Addie, Theresa, Ruth and Gardner. Gardner, the second son, died in 1901, at the age of twelve years. Mary Louise is the wife of Albert B. Clark, of Thorold, Canada, and they have four children, Robert, Sue, Dorothy and Margaret. Frank G., who was a soldier in the World war, is now in the employment of the Government as an auditor at Baltimore, Maryland. Charles H., who was a member of the Motor Transport Corps of the Seventy-ninth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, was in active service in France one year at the time of the World war, and received his discharge July 25, 1919. He is now the executive head of the Rizer Electric Company at Piedmont, as previously noted. He married Mary Margaret Johnson, and they have one child, Christine Louise. Elsie is in the service of the United States at Washington, D. C.

JAMES FORSYTH HARRISON, now serving as magistrate of Piedmont, and a veteran of the war of the '60s, is one of the highly respected men of Mineral County, and one who has taken an important part in its history for many years. He was born at Cumberland, Maryland, January 26, 1848, a son of George Harrison, who was born at Bath, Somersetshire, England, August 10, 1808, a son of George Harrison. One of the uncles of James Forsyth Harrison, Charles J. Harrison, was engaged in the wholesale drug business at London, and so prospered that he extended his trade over a wide area and conducted branches at Bombay and Calcutta, India, and Melbourne, Australia, and when he died was a man of distinction in the commercial world.

George Harrison, father of James Forsyth Harrison, was a highly intellectual man, educated at Rugby, Eaton and Oxford, and was graduated from the university with honors. He was commissioned a barrister, but instead of entering upon the practice of the law came to the United States in search of good health, and not only secured it but became one of the notable men of his adopted country.

Landing at New York City, George Harrison left the vessel, Lord Ashburton, on which he had made the trip, traveled first to Baltimore, Maryland, and from thence went west over the old road to Wheeling, West Virginia, it being his intention to become an Indian trader on the frontier. However, at Wheeling he met a lady who so attracted him that he changed his plans, settled at Wheeling, in order to woo her, and established himself in business as a dealer in books. He continued to live at Wheeling after his marriage until 1846, when he moved to Cumberland, Maryland, and in that city opened up connections as a forwarding and commission merchant, under the name of Calhoun & Harrison, remaining there until 1852, when he returned to Wheeling, continuing there until about the middle of the war period, when he came back to Cumberland, and this city continued to be his home for the remainder of his life. He was a delegate to the convention from Ohio County, which formed the convention that divided the Old Dominion, creating the new state of West Virginia. As mayor of Cumberland he did much for the city, but he was equally zealous in its behalf in a private capacity. Following the close of the war he engaged in the wholesale flour and feed business in partnership with his son, and was so engaged when he died, November 10, 1870.

During the war George Harrison held a civilian appointment in the Quartermaster's Department of the Union army in this region, and was not only personally acquainted with many of the leaders in West Virginia, but with President Lincoln himself. Until the outbreak of the war he was democrat, but in 1860 cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln for the presidency, and thereafter gave the republican party his hearty and effective support. From the time he came this country he was a strong Union man, and thoroughly believed in the abolition of slavery. While he was an active participant in public affairs, he possessed none of the qualifications of an orator, but he could deliver himself from manuscript convincingly and to the point. He was a Knight Templar Mason. In England he belonged to the Established Church, and after he came to this country he became a communicant of the Episcopal Church, its prototype in America.

On December 27, 1833, George Harrison married Wheeling, West Virginia, Miss Clerimond Smith Woodrow, a daughter of Simeon Woodrow, and through her mother's side belonged to the Adamson family. Mrs. Harrison was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, in the eleventh house that city, which her father erected. He was born in Cla County, Virginia, but his father was born on the Woodrow farm near Chester, Pennsylvania, where the battle of Brandywine was fought. This grandfather of Mrs. Harrison was also named Simeon Woodrow, and he served from Pennsylvania in the American Revolution. The younger Simeon Woodrow took a company of soldiers from Morgantown to fight in the second war with England. By profession was a civil engineer, and built the first furnace in the Alleghany Mountains between Morgantown and Kingwood the ruins of which are still standing. He died at Wheeling, West Virginia, at the home of his son, also named Simeon Woodrow, when he was nearly 100 years of age, prior to the outbreak of the war of the '60s. He, too, served in the American Revolution with an official rank. Mrs. George Harrison, his daughter, died at Piedmont, West Virginia, 1886, when seventy-five years old. The children born to George Harrison and his wife were as follows: Virginia E., who married Andrew White of the old Northwest Bank of Wheeling; Capt. George W., who died at Piedmont when nearly seventy-five years old; Victoria Mary Brown who married Capt. George W. Jenkins, of Wheeling, and died in that city in 1870; Capt. Charles J., who is president of the Somerset County Trust Company, of Somerset, Pennsylvania; James Forsyth, whose name heads this review and Samuel Buel, who lives at Piedmont, West Virginia.

James Forsyth Harrison attended a private school taught by a Mrs. Radcliffe of Wheeling until he went into the Union army. At the outbreak of the war his father belonged to the Senior Home Guards, was secretary of it, and made a list of its members in 1861, secured their individual signatures to the minutes, and left one of the neat records now in existence of this exciting and momentous period of the country's history. This historic and valuable document is now the property of James Forsyth Harrison and the penmanship shows the artistic capabilities of the author. It is so perfect that it bears a close resemblance to copperplate. Living in the midst of such intense loyalty to the Union it is little wonder that James Forsyth Harrison should have been fired with the determination to serve in it in spite of his youth, and this resulted in his enlistment in July, 1862, in the Quartermaster's Department. He participated in the engagement at Williamsport, Virginia, being in command of the little company which met the enemy, and all who were not killed or fatally wounded were taken prisoners. Mr. Harrison was sent to Libby Prison, Richmond, Virginia, and was held there for nine months and three days as a hostage for Private Lynn, Confederate soldier, who subsequently escaped from the Union prison at Fort Delaware, where many of the Confederate prisoners were kept. Mr. Harrison was finally released from Libby Prison through the influence of I. Hunter McGuire, a surgeon on the staff of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, who was personally acquainted with George Harrison. On account of disability Mr. Harrison was honorably discharged from the service in May, 1864, and, returning home, entered the Alleghany County Academy at Cumberland, Maryland, under Professor Pryor, and was graduated therefrom. He then studied law under Judge George Pearre, and was admitted to the bar.

F. H. Beece

Entering upon the practice of his profession, Mr. Harrison remained at Maryland until 1881, when he went to Arizona as a member of the regular army, and was stationed at Williams, Flagstone, Volunteer Prairie and other points, and he continued his law practice in these places. Returning to the East, after a year's practice at Emporia, Kansas, he located at Piedmont, West Virginia, and has continued to make this city his place of residence ever since, and during this period has been connected with the practice of law and court work.

Mr. Harrison cast his first ballot as a republican, and has continued faithful to that party ever since. He has been especially active in convention work, and knows intimately all of the leaders of the Second Congressional District. During the campaign of Judge Dayton for the nomination for Congress from Elkins, West Virginia, Mr. Harrison played a very important part. President McKinley appointed him postmaster of Piedmont, and he continued to serve under the Roosevelt administration until his successor was appointed.

The marriage of Mr. Harrison took place at Stewart, Athens County, Ohio, when he was united with Miss Meta Byron, a daughter of Capt. Charles and Ruth (Stewart) Byron. Captain Byron was a veteran of the Union army, and an extensive woolen manufacturer. Mrs. Byron was a daughter of the man who, with John W. Garrett, built that part of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad from the vicinity of Athens to Parkersburg. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison became the parents of the following children: Lucile, who is the widow of Landen Heskitt, who died in 1918 as a victim of the influenza epidemic, while serving during the World war; and Mildred B., who married George Boyd, superintendent of the Blaine Mining Company of Potomac Manor, West Virginia, and has one son, George, Jr.

Mr. Harrison has resided at Piedmont for practically a third of a century, but his connection with this locality dates back to the time when as a soldier he was stationed at New Creek, now Keyser, and doing his duty as a defender of his country's flag. He has worked steadily and long to advance the interests of Piedmont and Mineral County, and is proud of the fact that he has been associated with so much of its development. As a lawyer he is sagacious, resourceful and learned, and as a magistrate, wise and purposeful, and his decisions are seldom reversed by the higher courts. In every phase of life Mr. Harrison has proven his worth as a man and a citizen, and no one in all this region stands any higher in public regard and affection than he.

FRANK R. BELL. After twenty years in business and with twenty years measuring his residence in West Virginia, Frank R. Bell stands in the front rank of insurance men in this state. An interesting honor to him and to the state was paid at the annual convention of the National Association of Fire Insurance Agents at Los Angeles in September, 1921, when Mr. Bell was elected a member of the executive committee of the association.

Mr. Bell, whose business home is at Charleston, was born at Staunton, Augusta County, Virginia, son of Frank R. and Cynthia Estelle (Trotter) Bell. He grew up there, attending the public schools of Augusta County and the Augusta Military Academy. As a young man in 1902 he came to West Virginia. The insurance business of which he is now the head was founded at Thurmond, West Virginia, in 1907, with Mr. Bell in charge of the office. In 1911 he removed the business to Charleston, and in the past ten years it has enjoyed such growth and expansion that it is now rated as one of the largest insurance agencies in the state. Quite recently the Bell-Crane Company, as the corporation is known, has absorbed and taken over the business of the Scheer Agency, a prominent insurance organization in the Charleston field. Mr. Bell is president of the Bell-Crane Company. The company occupies quarters in the Kanawha National Bank Building, and has a complete organization in various departments, including fire, casualty, accident, bonding and surety. The company represents only the largest and best companies in the United States. While it is a general insurance business, practically eighty-five per cent of its fire insurance service is with the coal mines and mining industries of West Virginia. This is a service demanding peculiar technical facilities, and for that purpose the company maintains a staff of experts and engineers.

Mr. Bell, though one of the younger men in Charleston's commercial affairs, has assumed his share of community work, and for several years has been a prominent member of the Chamber of Commerce and is one of its directors. He is a member of the Edgewood Country Club and Charleston Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He married Miss Judith Gassaway. She represents an old West Virginia family, one of whose members was the late Henry Gassaway Davis. Mrs. Bell was born in the City of Washington and reared in Brooklyn. Their two children are Sallie Lee and Frank R., Jr.

WILLIAM HENRY BOWDEN is a young man in years but old in the service of one of the largest industrial corporations in America, the E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company of Wilmington, Delaware. Faithful work and successive promotions recently brought him to Huntington as headquarters for his duties as sales manager over an extensive district.

Mr. Bowden was born at Lonaconing, Maryland, October 26, 1886. The several generations of the family before him were chiefly represented in the coal mining industry. His grandfather, John Bowden, was a native of England, brought his family to the United States in 1869, settled at Lonaconing, and was a mine worker for the American Coal Company until killed there in a mine accident.

His son, Richard Bowden, was born in England in 1861, and was about five years of age when the family came to America and settled in Lonaconing, Maryland, where he was reared and married and where for a number of years he was employed as a track layer around the coal mines. His home since 1904 has been at Pittsburgh, where he has been associated as an employee of the Westinghouse Electric Company, being now a department superintendent. He is a republican. Richard Bowden married Mary Dick, who was born at Lonaconing in 1861. They have two sons, William Henry and John. The latter is an employee of the Westinghouse Electric Company of Pittsburgh.

William Henry Bowden acquired a public school education at Lonaconing, graduated from high school in 1901, spent one year in the State Normal School at Frostburg, Maryland, and in 1903 removed to Pittsburgh and became a clerk in one of the departments of the Westinghouse Electric Company. He was with the Westinghouse Electric Company about a year, and on January 5, 1905, at the age of eighteen, entered the service of the E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company. He was a clerk in the Pittsburgh office until January 1, 1916, though in the meantime he had risen by successive promotions until he was third in rank below the manager. He was then transferred to the main offices of the corporation at Wilmington, Delaware, was chief clerk of the sales department, August 1, 1916, was made assistant director of sales, on November 1, 1920, was again transferred to the Pittsburgh District and put in charge of the office of sales manager, and on November 1, 1921, became a resident of West Virginia as sales manager at Huntington for the West Virginia District. This district is one of the most important in respect to volume of business originating in the territory, which is a great mining section requiring an enormous volume of powder, dynamite and other explosives manufactured by the DuPont Company. The district includes the southern part of West Virginia, Eastern Kentucky, old Virginia and North Carolina. Under Mr. Bowden's supervision are eleven traveling salesmen covering this territory, and there are thirteen employees in the office in the Robson Pritchard Building.

Mr. Bowden is a republican, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. June 22, 1916, at Pittsburgh, he married Miss Mary Beck, daughter of Charles J. and Margaret (Gearing) Beck, residents of Arnold, Pennsylvania, where her father is a building contractor. Mrs. Bowden is a graduate of the Pittsburgh High School. They have two children: William, Jr., born April 11, 1917; and John B., born January 12, 1920.

JOHN F. JAMESON. Webster Springs, the judicial center of Webster County, has been fortunate in enlisting the services of Mr. Jameson as superintendent of its public schools, the standard of which has been materially advanced under his able administration.

Mr. Jameson claims the old Buckeye State as the place of his nativity, his birth having occurred on the old homestead farm in Holmes County, Ohio, July 13, 1877, and both his paternal and maternal ancestors having been pioneer settlers in that county. In Holmes County Robert and Rebecca (Hersh) Jameson, parents of the subject of this review, passed their entire lives, the father's entire career having been one of close and effective association with farm industry save for an interval of three years. Robert Jameson was born in the same house as was his son John F., and the date of his nativity was January 17, 1845, his wife having been born June 9, 1854. He was one of the substantial and representative citizens of his native county at the time of his death, was a democrat in political allegiance, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Presbyterian Church. Of the three children the subject of this sketch is the elder of the two surviving, his sister, Mildred, being the wife of Cloyse O. Dailey, of Elm Grove, Ohio County, West Virginia.

Reared on the old homestead farm, John F. Jameson acquired his preliminary education in the district schools, and in 1897 he graduated from the high school at Londonville, Ohio. After having been a successful teacher in the schools of Ohio about six years he entered Wooster College, Ohio, in which he continued his studies one year. Later he graduated from the Ohio Northern University, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and in the meanwhile he continued teaching in the vacation periods and at other intervals. Later he received from Bethany College the degrees of Bachelor of Philosophy and Bachelor of Pedagogy, after effective post-graduate courses in this institution. He taught in turn in the public schools of Cameron and Tunnelton, West Virginia, and thereafter was for four years in similar service in the public schools at Webster Springs. In connection with the nation's participation in the World War Mr. Jameson was in the government service for several months, as a member of the Federal Board of Vocational Education in the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, and since the completion of this service he has continued his effective regime as superintendent of the public schools of Webster Springs, his wife being supervisor of music in the schools, a position in which she had previously served at Benwood, this state. At Webster Springs Mr. Jameson is affiliated with Addison Lodge No. 116, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with the camp of the Modern Woodmen of America, both he and his wife being zealous members of the Christian Church.

In 1911 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jameson and Miss Hallie Jones, who was graduated from the Thomas Training School in the City of Detroit, Michigan, and who is a specially talented musician. Mr. and Mrs. Jameson have no children.

WILLIAM SIDNEY WYSONG has brought most excellent equipment to his profession, is engaged in the successful practice of law at Webster Springs, judicial center of Webster County, and has distinct status as one of the representative members of the bar of this section of his native state.

Mr. Wysong was born at Hamlin, Lincoln County, West Virginia, February 13, 1876, and is a son of William M. and Bertha M. (Holt) Wysong, both natives of Virginia, where the former was born November 30, 1845, and the latter was born at Newcastle. Their marriage was solemnized in 1873. The family name of the first wife of William M. Wysong was Smith, and she was survived by one son, Creed M., who became an officer in the United States army. The subject of this review is the eldest of the four children of the second marriage; Georgia, next in order of birth, is the wife of Charles F. McGhee, of Hamlin, Lincoln County; Lillian is the wife of John T. Day, of Hinton, Summers County; and Joseph H. is a resident of Chicago, Illinois. The death of the father occurred August 9, 1903, and the widowed mother is still living (1922).

William Sidney Wysong attended the public schools of Greenbrier County, this state, until he was eleven years old, and thereafter continued his studies in an academy until he had attained to the age of fifteen years. He later received from Hampden-Sidney College, Virginia, the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in preparation for his chosen profession he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1898 and with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In the same year he was admitted to the bar at Webster Springs, and the county seat of Webster County has since continued the central stage of his successful professional activities, his clientele being of representative order.

Unflinching in his advocacy of the principles of the democratic party, Mr. Wysong has been influential in its local councils and campaign work, and he served two terms as representative of Webster County in the State Legislature, besides which he was mayor of Webster Springs during one term and gave a most progressive administration of municipal affairs. He is a past master of Addison Lodge No. 116, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

Mr. Wysong's wife, whose maiden name was Mattie Wooddell, is a twin sister of William L. Wooddell, and record concerning the Wooddell family will be found in personal sketches elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Wysong graduated from the Glenville State Normal School and the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. Mr. and Mrs. Wysong have one son, William P., who was born October 17, 1903, he being a graduate of the high school at Webster Springs and being now (1922) a member of the sophomore class in the University of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Wysong hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

JOSEPH B. KIRK, M. D. A highly trained and efficient physician and surgeon, Doctor Kirk has devoted his professional work to a service that presents perhaps the greatest opportunity for usefulness, practice in the coal mining districts of West Virginia. For a number of years his home has been at Bluefield, where he has been equally distinguished for the high quality of his citizenship and liberal attitude toward every movement in which the welfare of the community was concerned.

Doctor Kirk was born in Giles County, Virginia, September 19, 1863, son of Joseph and Sarah (Strader) Kirk. His father was also born on a Giles County farm. The Kirk family originated in England, moved to Scotland, and thence a branch came to America in Colonial times. In later generations one branch of the family went to Missouri, and the Town of Kirkville is named in their honor. The grandfather of Doctor Kirk was John Kirk, a native of Eastern Virginia, and one of the first settlers in the New River Valley. John Kirk was a soldier in Washington's army, fighting in the battles of Trenton and Brandywine. He was in the service two years, and in a signed statement he let it be known that he was serving his country as a duty rather than for pay. This example of lofty patriotism has been emulated by many of his descendants. John Kirk married Elizabeth O'Bryant, of a family who has spelled their names O'Bryant, O'Briant and Bryant.

Joseph Kirk was a Virginia farmer, and did an extensive business in horses. He was well educated. Joseph Kirk was born in 1800 and died in 1880. He married late in life Sarah Strader, who was many years younger than he. She died in 1879. They were members of the Methodist Church. Of their six children Dr. Joseph B. was the sixth. John S. has a grain and stock ranch in North Dakota; Lizzie is the wife of John A. Neil, of Tazewell, Virginia; Mrs. L. C. Thorne lives at Princeton, West Virginia; Nancy J. Meadows died at Lerona, West Virginia, February 23, 1916; Mrs. Josie Lilly is housekeeper for her brother, Doctor Kirk.

Joseph B. Kirk received his education at his home through a private teacher whom his father engaged. At the age of twenty-one he taught a term of free school, and from his earnings bought his first medical books. During 1884-85 and 1885-86 he attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. Doctor Kirk located at Princeton, West Virginia, in 1886, and a year later took up his mining practice at Bramwell, where he remained until 1905, when he moved to Elkhorn, West Virginia, still continuing mine practice, and since 1916 has been a resident of Bluefield. Before locating at Bluefield he did post-graduate work, specializing in dermatology in the Bellevue Hospital in New York.

Doctor Kirk in 1918 received the commission of captain in the Medical Corps and was assigned to duty at the Post Hospital of Fort Myers. He was at Fort Myers, Virginia, Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and then had charge of the first and second floors of the Elizabeth McGee Hospital at Pittsburgh. He received his overseas assignment with the Fifty-sixth Evacuation Hospital Corps, Expeditionary Army, and was awaiting orders at Allentown, Pennsylvania, when the armistice was signed. The call of his country has ever made a deep appeal to him. He was a charter member of Bluefield Post No. 9, American Legion, and acted as chaplain of the same.

In 1889 Doctor Kirk married Sallie S. Frazier, daughter of Rev. J. T. Frazier, of Tazewell, Virginia. Doctor Kirk was bereft of his wife in a tragic automobile accident July 30, 1916, when she was killed and their son and daughter were injured. Two schoolmates of the children were also in the party, and one of them was killed. The son of Doctor Kirk is Joseph L. Kirk, who was a member of Company G of the Twenty-ninth Engineers, and had overseas service as field engineer. He was trained at Camp Myers, Virginia. The daughter of Doctor Kirk is Hazel Virginia, wife of John V. Warren, a lumberman who came from Utica, New York.

Doctor Kirk is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, is a democrat and a member of the Methodist Church. He was a leader in securing the commission form of government for Bluefield, is one of the present city directors, and has been for the past two years democratic chairman of Mercer County. Doctor Kirk was one of the organizers and is a director of the Ennis Coal and Coke Company, operating in Mercer County. He is also a stockholder in the American Coal Company, and has coal interests in Kentucky. His son, Joseph L., married Grace Seaver, of Marion, Virginia. Doctor Kirk purchased a 250-acre farm adjoining the City of Bluefield, and there Joseph L. Kirk is conducting a modern dairy farm.

MARTIN VAN BUREN GODBEY, M. D. A prominent Charleston surgeon, Dr. Godbey is distinguished for his wide knowledge and experience of affairs outside his immediate profession. He is one of the recognized authorities on the intricate subject of taxation, and is one of the valuable members of the State Senate and at different times has accepted official service both in the Legislature and on appointive bodies dealing with important matters affecting the welfare of the state.

Doctor Godbey was born in Raleigh County, West Virginia, December 19, 1879. His father was a native of Pulaski County, Virginia, of English ancestry. The first of the family came to America and landed at Blount's Point, Virginia, in 1608. The father of Doctor Godbey settled in Raleigh County in 1863. There Doctor Godbey was reared on a farm, and his early educational advantages were exceedingly limited, though he made the most of them. By the time he was fifteen he was teaching school and thus in a position to earn the means to advance his own education. By teaching he was able to attend Marshall College at Huntington three years and Grant University at Chattanooga, Tennessee, two years. After completing his literary education he entered the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore, where he was graduated in 1905.

Doctor Godbey began practice in Boone County, and while there first became interested in politics. In 1906 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates from that county and served during the sessions of 1907-08. Although a republican, he received a good majority in Boone, a county that had been solidly democratic since 1863.

Since 1909 Doctor Godbey has been a leader in his profession at Charleston. He has enjoyed splendid success in every way. While he is in general practice here for several years, his work is now largely confined to surgery.

In 1909 Governor Glascock appointed him a member of the State Board of Health and in 1910 he was made secretary of the State Examining Board of Surgeons. He was a leader in the movement to combat tuberculosis and a member of the commission which selected the site for the State Anti-Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Terra Alta. He has also served as president of the Kanawha County Board of Health. He is a member of the County, State, Southern and American Medical associations, and during the World war was a surgeon with the rank of captain in the Medical Corps, assigned to duty at Camp Johnston, Florida.

In 1914 Doctor Godbey was elected state senator for the Eighth Senatorial District, comprising Kanawha, Boone and Logan counties. He served one term in that body and in 1920 was again elected. He is a member of the finance and several other committees, and chairman of the committee on medicine and sanitation. His special efforts in the State Senate have been directed toward tax reform and in behalf of measures that will correct the present gross inequalities and exemptions. He prepared and introduced in the Senate a bill providing for a tax board of equalization to reclassify, revalue and reassess all property on the basis of physical valuation and to have all matters relating to taxation and assessing carried out on strictly scientific and business principles, such as obtain in the management of any large corporation. For years Doctor Godbey has studied taxation in West Virginia, and his discussion of this subject in the Senate revealed a special knowledge that cuts through many of the difficulties confronting any adequate solution of taxing problems.

Doctor Godbey married Miss Florrie Smoot, of Madison, West Virginia. Their three children are named Ella, John and Elizabeth Martin.

CHAUNCEY WILLIAM WAGGONER, B. S. in electrical engineering, A. M., Ph. D., is an acknowledged scientific authority in the glass making industry and for a number of years has been associated with the University of West Virginia as professor of physics.

A native of Ohio, he represents two old Virginia families, and his father was born in what is now West Virginia. Doctor Waggoner was born at Rockbridge, Ohio, February 23, 1881, son of William W. and Eliza Jane (Goss) Waggoner. His grandfather, Joseph C. Waggoner, was a native of Virginia and was associated with Doctor Caldwell in establishing and publishing the Palladium, one of the leading newspapers of a generation ago. Joseph C. Waggoner married Sarah Breckinridge Venable, daughter of James Venable. She was born in old Virginia, and represented the prominent Venable and Breckinridge families of that state.

William W. Waggoner, father of Doctor Waggoner, was a native of Greenbrier County, West Virginia. He served as a Confederate cavalryman in General Stuart's command during the Civil war. After that war he removed to Ohio and became a prominent railroad contractor. For a number of years he was senior member of the firm Waggoner & Douglas, which built several sections of the Hoeking Valley Railroad and a portion of the Little Miami road near Dayton. W. W. Waggoner died in 1885, at the age of forty-three. His wife, Eliza Jane Goss, now living at Sugar Grove, Ohio, was born at Rockbridge, Ohio, daughter of John Goss, who owned the Goss farm, a property secured direct from the Government by the Goss family, the original patent bearing the signature of Andrew Jackson. This farm remained in the family as late as 1920.

Chauncey William Waggoner was reared in Ohio, graduating from the Sugar Grove High School in 1898. He received the Bachelor of Science degree in electrical engineering from Ohio University at Athens in 1904. The Master of Arts degree was given him by Cornell University in 1905, and from 1905 to 1909 he was instructor at Cornell, being awarded the Bachelor of Philosophy degree by that university in 1909. During the summer of 1907 Doctor Waggoner did research work for the Western Electric Company. For the past six years he has been associated with the glass industries of West Virginia, and is a specialist in this industry and has taken out a number of patents covering improved processes invented by him. Some of his scientific investigations as represented in public works are described by the following titles: The physical properties of a series of iron-carbon alloys; the preparation and decay of phosphorescence in certain salts of cadmium and zinc; hysteresis loss in iron at varying frequencies; non-corrosive glasses.

Doctor Waggoner is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, for the past five years has been a member of the sectional committee of that association; is a Fellow of the American Physical Society, Fellow of the Institute of Radio Engineers, and a member of the Illuminating Engineering Society. He belongs to the Gamma Alpha graduate fraternity and the Sigma Xi honorary fraternity.

Doctor Waggoner is one of Morgantown's popular citizens and is well known outside of university circles. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, and for nine years has had charge of the University Students Class in the Sunday school of that church. September 4, 1907, he married Cornelia Gaskell, of Lisbon, Ohio, daughter of Charles R. and Clarinda (Harvey) Gaskell. They have two sons, William Gaskell Waggoner, born January 15, 1911; and Chandler Whittlesey Waggoner, born July 21, 1917.

JOHN H. MORGAN, a hardware merchant at Morgantown, Monongalia County, is one of the representative business men and progressive citizens of this thriving little city. He was born at Scotch Hill Preston County, West Virginia, and is a lineal descendant of David Morgan, one of the very early settlers of Monongalia County and a brother of Zackwill Morgan, in whose honor the City of Morgantown was named. This branch of the Morgan family was founded in America by Col. Morgan Morgan, in the reign of Queen Anne of England. Col. Morgan Morgan first settled in the province of Delaware, and soon after his marriage to Catherine Garrison he removed from Delaware to the valley of Virginia and settled at Winchester. He had received holy orders as a clergyman of the Church of England, and he established a church at Winchester, where he served as its rector for a long period and where he was succeeded in the pastoral charge by his son and namesake, Rev. Morgan Morgan, Jr., the other children having been Anne, Zackwill Evan and David.

David Morgan was born in Delaware, May 12, 1721, and accompanied his parents on their removal to Virginia, where eventually he became the owner of a farm near Winchester. He was a surveyor and was appointed by the Colonial government of Virginia to assist in surveys and explorations of the southwestern part of the great territory then controlled by Virginia. Later he was appointed one of the Colonial commissioners assigned to discover and establish the northern boundary of the estate of Lord Fairfax in 1748, this boundary to constitute the dividing line between Virginia and Maryland. David Morgan was so greatly impressed with the country west of the Alleghany Mountains that he moved in 1769 to the mouth of Redstone Creek in Pennsylvania, and two years later, in 1771, he came to what is now Marion County, West Virginia, where he settled on the banks of the Monongahela River, about six miles north of Fairmont. He reclaimed and developed much of his land and there passed the remainder of his life. He married Sarah Stevens, a member of a Pennsylvania Quaker family.

Evan Morgan, son of David and Sarah (Stevens) Morgan, served as a patriot soldier in the Revolution and was a resident of Morgantown at the time of his death, in 1850, at the patriarchal age of 102 years, 3 months and 18 days. His son, Thomas, grandfather of him whose name initiates this review, settled on a farm in Clinton District, Monongalia County, where he continued his association with farm industry until his death. His son, Charles, was born April 27, 1834, on this old homestead, and there he still resides, in the best of health and in active charge of the farm and other business interests. He served as a loyal soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, principally in Texas, his brother, Milton, having likewise been a Confederate soldier, while two other brothers, Elza and Hiram, were Union soldiers. After the close of the war Hiram Morgan went to Bogota, capital of Colombia, South America, where he later became governor general of that republic, an office of which he continued the incumbent until his death.

After the close of the Civil war Charles Morgan went to California, and was for several years there engaged in placer mining for gold. He thereafter devoted about two years to whale fishing off the Columbia River bar at Astoria, Oregon, and he returned to West Virginia to wed the gracious young woman of his choice, his expectation having been to return with her to the Pacific Coast. He was persuaded to remain in his native state, and here he purchased what was known as the old Kern Mill at Uffington, Monongalia County. He operated this mill until slackage of power from the Monongahela River interfered with the enterprise, and he then established his residence on the old Morgan homestead farm, which has been in the possession of the family for more than a century.

Charles Morgan wedded Miss Marion Henry, who was born in Gatehead, Scotland, in 1837, and their idyllic companionship continues to the present day. Mrs. Morgan is a daughter of the late Lawrence Henry, an expert mining engineer who brought with him to the United States 146 of his skilled miners and assumed charge of the mines of the Newburg-Orrel Coal Company, the headquarters of which were at Baltimore, Maryland. Of the children of Charles and Marion Morgan the eldest is Thomas, a railway engineer; Lawrence is deceased; John H. is the immediate subject of this review; Charles, Jr., is United States marshal of Montana and resides in the City of Helena; Frank, a railway engineer, was killed in a railway accident while in charge of his engine; Miss Mary remains with her parents.

John H. Morgan was born December 5, 1877, and upon completing his work in the public schools he went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and learned the trade of car finishing. In 1892 he came to Morgantown and became part owner and general manager of the Morgan Hardware Company's store, and this alliance continued until 1911, when he became buyer for the Deacum Hardware Company of Portland, Oregon. In 1912 he took the position of storekeeper for the Pacific Electric Railway Company at Los Angeles, California. In 1913 he returned to Morgantown and purchased the stock and business of the Lemont-Jackson Hardware Company, and he has since continued the enterprise with unqualified success. He is a director of the Union Bank & Trust Company and of the Labor Building & Loan Society, is a member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club, and he and his wife hold membership in the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Morgan is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 31, Free and Accepted Masons; Morgantown Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templars; Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling; and Monongahela Lodge Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

September 9, 1897, recorded the marriage of Mr. Morgan to Miss Anna Glover, daughter of the late Abram Glover, she having been born in Marion County, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have one son, Frank Holmes, who was born at Mannington, Marion County, March 28, 1901.

PHILIP JAMES COCHRAN, of Morgantown, represents one of the most prominent names in the coke and coal industry of America. His grandfather was James Cochran, who is credited with having made the first coke in the United States. He was known familiarly as "Little Jim Cochran, the Coke king," and was one of the outstanding figures in that industry in the Connellsville District. His wife, Clarissa Houston, was of the same family as Gen. Sam Houston, the statesman and soldier of Texas.

William Hazen Cochran, father of Philip J., was born at Dawson, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, July 11, 1856. He received his Bachelor of Science degree from Otterbein University in Ohio. In later years one of the buildings on the campus of his alma mater was named Cochran Hall in his honor. Following in the footsteps of his father, he became one of the leading coke and coal men of the country, was also a banker, and had many widespread business inter-ts. He died August 3, 1914. William H. Cochran married Gertrude Reed, who was born at Smithton in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and who survives him. She is a daughter of James Monteith and Nancy (Crise) Reed. Her mother was born at Fairmont, West Virginia, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Brown) Crise. William H. Cochran and his wife had four children: Philip James; Anagrace Bell, who is the wife of Clarence Roby, a Morgantown attorney; William Hazen, Jr.; and Regina June.

Philip James Cochran was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, May 11, 1897. He began his education in the borough schools of Dawson in his native county and graduated from the Dunbar County High School in Fayette County in 1916. In the same year he entered West Virginia University at Morgantown. His student career was interrupted by the World war. In June, 1918, he joined the camp at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, but later was transferred to Camp Hancock, Georgia, where he was in the Officers Training School and volunteered for machine gun duty. He was in training when the armistice was signed. After his discharge Mr. Cochran resumed his work at West Virginia University. He received his A. B. degree with the class of 1922, and is now continuing his studies in the law school.

Mr. Cochran is a member of James Cochran Lodge No. 114, F. and A. M., at Dawson, Pennsylvania, a lodge named for his grandfather. He is affiliated with Uniontown Lodge of Perfection, Pennsylvania Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Morgantown Chapter No. 35, R. A. M., Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T., Syria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Pittsburgh, and the Morgantown Masonic Club. He belongs to Omar Commandery No. 330, Knights of Malta, at Dawson. He is a member of Milton J. Newmyer Post No. 183, of Dawson, Pennsylvania, of the American Legion, and at University is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. He is on the Official Board of Cochran Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church at Dawson, Pennsylvania.

SAMUEL ALLEN PHILLIPS is one of the representative business men and loyal and progressive citizens of Morgantown, Monongalia County, and takes lively interest in all that touches the welfare of this city, the seat of the University of West Virginia. He was born at Waynesburg, Greene County, Pennsylvania, August 15, 1876, a son of James E. B. and Anna M. (Engle) Phillips. The father was born in Whitley Township, Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1855, of Welsh lineage, and was but a boy at the time of his father's death. After his mother contracted a second marriage young James left home, and most of his early life thereafter was passed in and about Masontown, Pennsylvania. His marriage occurred at Waynesburg, that state, and after there working a few years in a planing mill he engaged in mercantile business at Sycamore in the same county. After selling this business he engaged in quarrying stone in the same county, and after selling his quarries he returned to Waynesburg and entered the employ of the Waynesburg & Washington Railroad Company. He continued his active connection with railroad service twenty-six years, and in 1911 he retired from his position, that of conductor, and assumed charge of a moving-picture theater, of which his son Samuel A. was part owner, at Grafton, West Virginia. Later he became chief of the police department of Grafton, and while in the discharge of his official duties as such he was killed by an assassin, Jacob Lutz, February 10, 1919. The assassin was later convicted of murder in the first degree, after two trials, and July 22, 1921, expiated his crime on the gallows in the State Penitentiary of West Virginia at Moundsville. Mrs. Anna M. (Engle) Phillips was born at Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, in 1858, a daughter of Solomon Engle, of English ancestry. Mrs. Phillips still maintains her home at Grafton. Of the children the eldest, David C., still resides in his native City of Waynesburg, Pennsylvania; Samuel A., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; William died in infancy; George W. resides at Brownsville, Pennsylvania, and is baggage master on the Monongahela division of the Pennsylvania railroad; Joseph H. resides with his widowed mother at Grafton, West Virginia; and Mrs. Mary Blood resides at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Samuel A. Phillips passed the period of his boyhood and early youth at Sycamore and Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, and in the meanwhile profited duly by the advantages of the public schools. He early gained practical experience in connection with his father's farming and quarrying operations, and in 1894 he found employment in a jewelry establishment at Waynesburg. In 1896 he there initiated his independent business career by opening a photographic studio. In 1895 he became a member of the Pennsylvania National Guard, and upon the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898 he gave up his business to enter the nation's service as a member of Company K, Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. This was the only Pennsylvania regiment assigned to service in the Philippine Islands, and it landed in Manila shortly after the famous victory of Admiral Dewey in that port. The regiment later became known as "The Fighting Tenth," was associated with the forces of Dewey and took part in the battle of Manila, which city capitulated. By general orders August 13, 1898, the Tenth Pennsylvania was retained in service in the Philippine Islands and became a part of the land forces operating against the insurgent natives upon the insurrection which began February 4, 1899. During this campaign the regiment took an active and important part in operations, and on one occasion it was on duty seventy days without relief. In July, 1899, it was relieved from active duty and ordered home. The return voyage was made by way of Japan to San Francisco, from which port the original voyage had been made, and at San Francisco the regiment disbanded in August, 1899, Mr. Phillips having been mustered out with the rank of corporal. Upon the reorganization of the regiment as a part of the Pennsylvania National Guard he became first sergeant of Company K, of which office he continued the incumbency until his removal to West Virginia.

In 1902 Mr. Phillips came to Morgantown, this state, and established a dancing academy, and he built up a prosperous and representative business in the teaching of dancing. He continued his academy until 1906, and he had entered the music business also, this enterprise having grown to such proportions that he found it expedient to give it his undivided time and attention. His original music store was in a room 15 by 30 feet in dimensions on Pleasant Street, near High Street, and here he installed Baldwin pianos and a stock of Victor and Edison phonographs. In 1905 the business had so expanded that he found larger quarters imperative. He removed to the Grand Theater Building on Walnut Street, and in 1911, for the same reason that had prompted his former change of location, he removed to the White apartment building on High Street. In 1915 further increase of business led to his removal to his present fine headquarters at 374 High Street, where he has one of the most attractive and well equipped music stores to be found in any city of comparative population in the South. Here he utilizes more than 5,000 square feet of floor space, and an enlargement is contemplated at the time of this writing, in 1921. Mr. Phillips still represents the same high-grade musical instruments as at the beginning of his enterprise, and by reason of his remarkable record in the sale of the Edison phonographs he had the distinction of being chosen chairman of the Edison Dealers Phonograph Convention held in New York City, June 9 and 10, 1921. In the banquet incidental to this convention he and his wife occupied seats of honor at the same table with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, 1,500 Edison dealers having been present at the convention.

Mr. Phillips was elected a member of the City Council of Morgantown in 1920, and was instrumental in bringing about the adoption of the new city charter in 1921. During the campaign to effect this action he served as chairman of the general committee in charge of the same, and under the new charter he was made chairman of the Board of Equalization and Review, in which capacity he is now serving. During the World war period he took active part in all local patriotic service, including that of the Red Cross. He is a vital and valued member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, is a member of the local Kiwanis Club, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Elks and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

September 7, 1905, Mr. Phillips wedded Miss Blanche M. Meeks, who was born and reared at Morgantown, a daughter of the late John W. and Josephine (Low) Meeks, the former of whom was born in this state, a son of Joseph Meeks, his wife having been born in a western state, a daughter of William Low. Mrs. Phillips is an active coadjutor of her husband in his business enterprise, to which she devotes the major part of her time and attention. She is an active member of the Methodist Church in her home city. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have one son, Samuel Allen, Jr., born August 29, 1911.

SYLVESTER P. ALLEN, M. D., has the sterling personal characteristics, the professional ability and the substantial practice that mark him distinctly as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Webster County, where he maintains his home and professional headquarters at Webster Springs, the county seat.

Doctor Allen was born in Doddridge County, this state, on the 20th of April, 1872, and is a son of Stephen and Mary (Frum) Allen, both representatives of honored pioneer families of that part of Virginia which now constitutes the State of West Virginia. Stephen Allen was born in Doddridge County, January 24, 1836, and his wife was born in Taylor County, March 16, 1838. The parents were reared under the conditions that marked the pioneer period in the history of what is now West Virginia, their marriage was solemnized in Taylor County, and thereafter they established their home on a farm in Doddridge County. In 1874 removal was made to Harrison County, and in 1880 the family home was established in Braxton County, whence removal later was made to Webster County, where the father continued his association with farm industry until the time of his death. He was a republican in politics, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Baptist Church. Of their eight children four are living (1922): Rebecca is the wife of Daman Ash; Samantha F. is the wife of James W. McCray; Sylvester P., of this sketch, is the next younger; and S. M. P. is the wife of David F. Heafner.

Sylvester P. Allen was reared to the invigorating discipline of the farm, attended the local schools in the different counties in which the family resided during the period of his boyhood and youth, and in the furtherance of his higher education he entered the Central Normal College of Kentucky, in which excellent institution he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He depended entirely upon his own resources in defraying his expenses at this college and also at the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1901 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

On the 11th of July, 1901, Doctor Allen opened an office at Webster Springs, and here he has since continued in the successful general practice of his profession, in which he has shown both marked ability and a fine sense of professional and personal stewardship. In his various activities of study and research that have kept him in touch with advances made in medicine and surgery he has taken an effective post-graduate course in the medical department of the University of Louisville. He is a member of the Webster County Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society. The doctor is a stalwart republican, and in Webster County, which is strongly democratic, he was elected county clerk by a majority of 166 votes, he having retained this office six years and having given a most effective administration. In the time-honored Masonic fraternity Doctor Allen is affiliated with and is a past master of Addison Lodge No. 116, A. F. and A. M., at Addison, Webster County; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M., at Sutton, Braxton County, where he is a member also of Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templars, besides which he is a Noble of Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston and the Scottish Rite Consistory at Wheeling. Both he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church in their home village.

In 1904 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Allen and Miss Lenora Miller, who had attended both the State Normal School at Fairmont and the University of West Virginia and who had been a successful and popular teacher prior to her marriage. The only child of Doctor and Mrs. Allen died in infancy.

SAMUEL MILLER WHITESIDE, who, under the title of S. L. Whiteside & Company, conducts at Morgantown, Monongalia County, one of the largest establishments in the city devoted to the handling of ladies' misses' and children's apparel, was born at Benwood, Marshall County, this state, December 31, 1865, a son of Robert J. and Amanda (L. Moss) Whiteside, both now deceased. The parents were born and reared in Maryland, where their marriage was solemnized, and whence they came to West Virginia and established their home in Marshall County.

Samuel M. Whiteside received the advantages of the public schools of his native city, and was a lad of fourteen years when, in 1880, he found employment in the department store of George E. Stifle & Company in the City of Wheeling. He continued in the employ of this representative mercantile concern for twenty-six years, worked his way through various departments and by faithful and efficient service gained eventual advancement to the position of buyer in charge of the important departments of the establishment. He resigned his position in 1906 and came to Morgantown where he opened a small store on the site of the present building of the Bank of the Monongahela Valley, on Hill Street. A year later the increase of his business led to removal to larger quarters in the Wiles Block, at 333 Hill Street, where he has since continued his substantial and prosperous business. When he removed to his present location Mr. Whiteside at first utilized only 1,400 square feet of floor space, and an idea of the splendid expansion of his business is conveyed in the statement that at the time this writing, in 1921, after three additions, the establishment utilized 4,900 square feet of floor space.

Aside from the representative business enterprise that has thus developed Mr. Whiteside takes loyal and helpful interest in the civic and social affairs of his home city, and is known and valued as one of its liberal and progressive citizens and business men. He is an active member and former director of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, holds membership in the local Kiwanis Club, and is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Whiteside married Miss Bertha L. Zevely, of Wheeling, she being a daughter of John H. and Margaret (Conniahn) Zevely, of that city.

WILLIAM HARRISON ASHCRAFT, cashier of the Commerce Bank of Morgantown, at the judicial center of Monongalia County, was born in this county, on a farm near Halleck, Clinton District, October 12, 1879, and is a representative of two of the old and honored families of this section of West Virginia. His paternal grandfather, Harrison Ashcraft, a native of Wales, came with his parents to the United States, and eventually established his home in Marion County, West Virginia. Rollo Trickett, the maternal grandfather, is supposed to have been born in America, and of English parentage. He became a farmer in Preston County, West Virginia, which was at the time still a part of Virginia, and at the time of the Civil war he removed to Monongalia County, where he passed the rest of his life.

Dextroous T. Ashcraft, father of William H. of this review was born in Marion County, this state, December 14, 1845, and in his youth he learned the carpenter's trade, to which he continued to give his attention in Marion County until marriage. He then engaged in farm enterprise in Monongalia County, where he has continued as a prominent and substantial representative of farm industry. His wife, Amanda, was born in Preston County, January 14, 1853, a daughter of Rollo Trickett, mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

William H. Ashcraft so fully profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native county that he proved himself eligible for pedagogic service. After five years of successful work as a teacher he entered the University of West Virginia, but before completing the full course in the same he withdrew to enter business. September 1, 1901, Ashcraft became bookkeeper in the Second National Bank of Morgantown, in which he was promoted to teller in 1903 and assistant cashier in 1906. He continued his connection with this institution until September 15, 1920, when he resigned to accept his present post, that of cashier of the Commercial Bank, which was then in process of organization. He had active charge of the opening of the new bank March 26, 1921, this being the youngest of the financial institutions of the county but its solidity and representative personnel of its executives and stockholders give it secure place in popular confidence and support. Mr. Ashcraft is a member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and he and his wife are zealous members of the First Baptist Church, of which he was treasurer for more than twenty years.

June 15, 1906, recorded the marriage of Mr. Ashcraft with Miss Alice Maude Gilmore, daughter of Col. T. J. and Sarah (Epper) Gilmore. Colonel Gilmore came to Morgantown from Albermarle, Virginia, and became a prominent railroad contractor.

JOSEPH KERR BUCHANAN, manager of the West Virginia Utilities Company, and one of the younger prominent business men of Morgantown, was born April 22, 1883, at Clinton, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, the son of the Rev. Aaron Moore Buchanan, D. D., now of Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

The Buchanan genealogy appears on record as follows:

Washington and Jefferson College gave him the D. D. degree in June, 1899; he served as chaplain of the First Regiment of Infantry, West Virginia National Guard, from July 24, 1894, for twenty years. On June 23, 1882, he was united in marriage with Sarah Wiley, of Washington, Pennsylvania, the daughter of John and Margaret (McLain) Wiley, and granddaughter of William Taylor and Martha (Harbison) Wiley. Her maternal great-grandparents, John and Massy (White) Harbison, figure in the early history of Western Pennsylvania, both John Harbison and Edward White having served in the American Revolution. Massy (White) Harbison was twice captured by Indians, and all of her children except a baby in arms were killed by savages.

Joseph K. Buchanan was reared in Morgantown, where he was prepared for college and entered West Virginia University. He left the university before completing his junior year in 1904 to enter the employ as meter reader and general utility man of the then Union Utilities Company at Morgantown, and has continued with that corporation through its different reorganizations, having been made manager in 1910 and continues in that position with what is now the West Virginia Utilities Company. He is president of the Morgantown Hardware Company, president of the Rieger Oil Company and a director in the Morgantown Savings and Loan Society. He is first vice president of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce and a member of Morgantown Rotary Club and of the Kappa Psi Psi fraternity, of which fraternity his father is also a member.

Mr. Buchanan married Frances Louisa, daughter of Hugh Craig and Pauline (Davis) Allison, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and they have one daughter, Mary Buchannan, born December 26, 1919.

ROY CLARK SMITH. Few figures are better known in the educational profession of Monongalia County than Roy Clark Smith, who since 1913 has been superintendent of the public schools of Morgantown. Identified with educational work since the beginning of his career, he has been located at Morgantown since 1909, constantly filling places of trust and responsibility, and during this time has impressed himself upon the life and institutions of the community in a manner alike creditable to himself and productive of lasting benefit to the city.

Mr. Smith was born at Cambridge, Maryland, December 4, 1883, and is of English-French-Irish stock, being descended from three of the oldest families of Maryland, the Smiths, Harpers and Clarks. His grandfather, Henry Smith, a native of Maryland, married Martha Harper, a daughter of Edward Harper, who was an extensive landholder of Dorchester County, Maryland, owning land which came to the Harper family by grant directly from Lord Baltimore. He married Miss Beauchamp, who was born in France. The father of Roy C. Smith was Marcus H. Smith, who was born in Dorchester County, Maryland, in July, 1857, and was in early life a farmer, later a mill owner and operator at Denton, and finally a merchant at that place. He married Sarah Matilda Clark, who was born in Caroline County, Maryland, in December, 1861, a daughter of John W. Clark, who at the time of his death in 1899 was probably the largest land holder in Caroline County.

Roy Clark Smith was born at Cambridge, Maryland, December 4, 1883, and secured his primary education in the public schools of Denton, Caroline County, Maryland. Graduating from the high school at that place in 1902, he entered the Western Maryland College, from which he was graduated as a Bachelor of Arts in 1906. At that time he commenced teaching, but did not give up his studies, as later he was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1911, with his Master of Arts degree, and in 1916 he took post-graduate work at Columbia University.

Mr. Smith entered public school work as principal of the schools of Preston, Maryland, and next became teacher of mathematics and history at Friends Academy, Long Island, New York, in the fall of 1907. In 1908 he was head of the department of mathematics of the Westchester (Pennsylvania) High School, and in the fall of 1909 came to Morgantown to become principal of the high school here. He continued to act in this capacity until elected superintendent of city schools in the fall of 1913, and has occupied that position ever since. Superintendent Smith has made education and the organization and direction of educational activities his life work, and has been remarkably successful. In almost every field of the work from the primary to teaching classes in a university, from grade to superintendent of schools, he has left the mark of an earnest student and apt instructor, an intelligent organizer and a judicious director. In a professional way his connections include membership in the West Virginia State Educational Association and the department of superintendents of the National Educational Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, F. and A. M.; and Lodge of Perfection No. 6, R. and S. M. He belongs likewise to the Morgantown Rotary Club and the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church.

On June 16, 1913, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Charlotte Wade, daughter of Clark Wade, of Monongalia County, and granddaughter of Alexander Wade, one of the most prominent of West Virginia's public school educators.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith have one son, Robert Wade, born June 5, 1918.

HON. KREIDER H. STOVER. As a young man from college Kreider H. Stover took up railroading. He left that after a few years and was in the wholesale lumber business, becoming one of the very influential men in this industry in West Virginia. But the call of the railroad service was strong and clear, and for the past twelve years his energies have been definitely committed to railroad work. He is now Baltimore & Ohio agent at Keyser.

Mr. Stover was born at Coburn, Pennsylvania, July 12, 1873. His people were an old family of Pennsylvania, and for a number of years lived in Bucks County. His grandfather, Jacob Stover, was a native of that state, an only son, and was killed in early life in an explosion while on public road building. George W. Stover, father of Kreider H., spent his life on his farm at Coburn, where he died in 1887, at the age of sixty-one. His wife was Malinda A. Kreider, who was born in 1828 and died in 1912. Her father, Philip Kreider, was a hotel man at Lebanon, Pennsylvania, and died in early life. The children of George W. Stover and wife were: Perry H., of Elkins, West Virginia; Elmira, wife of Thomas B. Motz, of Millheim, Pennsylvania; Calvin J., who died at Coburn, survived by his widow, Olivia J., and two sons, George S. and Guy Z. Stover, and the daughter, Myra, wife of Robert Breen of State College, Pennsylvania; Oscar, who died in infancy; and Kreider H.

Kreider H. Stover lived on his father's farm the first fourteen years of his life. He then spent two years in Palatinate College, and in 1890, at the age of seventeen, became an office employe of A. Pardee & Company at Pardee, Pennsylvania, and in 1893 was promoted to superintendent. Soon afterward he resigned to complete his education in Franklin-Marshall College at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and left that institution in his junior year, in 1896. At that date he began railroading with the Pennsylvania Railway Company, and served until 1900, in different capacities.

Mr. Stover came to West Virginia in 1900 and became manager of the Hosterman Lumber Company at Hosterman in Pocahontas County. He was there until 1904, when he moved to Elkins and engaged in the wholesale lumber business under the name Stover Lumber Company. While there he founded and for four years published the West Virginia Lumberman and National Wholesaler. From 1904 to 1908 he was also president of the West Virginia Sawmill Association.

Mr. Stover resumed railroading as joint agent at Roaring Creek Junction for the Western Maryland Railway Company. He was in the service of that railroad for ten years, performing the duties of operator, agent and yardmaster at Ridgely, Hendricks, Henry, Elkins and West Virginia Central Junction. He resigned from the Western Maryland in 1920, and in September of that year accepted the agency of the Baltimore & Ohio at Keyser, as successor to Agent Terrell, who is now warden of the West Virginia Penitentiary at Moundsville.

For a number of years Mr. Stover has been one of the moulders of political thought and legislation in West Virginia. He cast his first vote for Major McKinley in 1896, and was a delegate to the Republican County Convention in Pocahontas County in 1902. For a number of years he has been regarded as a conservative labor man, and for six years he was general chairman of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers. The public service that particularly distinguishes him came in the House of Delegates, to which he was elected in 1918 as a representative of Mineral County, succeeding Newton Moore. His service was under Speaker Luther Wolf. In the regular session of 1919 he was made chairman of the labor committee, and was a member of the railroad, printing and contingent expenses committee. Some of the important legislation of that session bears the impress of his work and influence as chairman of the labor committee. Two bills came out of that committee, both of which he introduced. One was Bill No. 50, increasing the powers of labor. Another bill that became a law was the West Virginia Child Labor Law. He also actively supported the ratification of the eighteenth and nineteenth amendments, providing for federal prohibition and woman suffrage. He was opposed to the creation of a state constabulary, his ground of opposition being that his constituents in Mineral County did not need such a police force. Mr. Stover made an unusual record of useful service during his one term in the Legislature. In 1920 he was candidate for the republican nomination for congressman of the Second West Virginia District. In 1922 he is again a candidate for Congress.

In 1898 he joined the lodge of Masons at Center Hall, Pennsylvania, is affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter of Ronceverte, the Knights Templar Commandery of Lewisburg and the Shrine at Charleston. He is affiliated with Olive Branch Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, at Keyser. He was reared in the Reformed Church of America.

At Coburn, Pennsylvania, September 28, 1898, Mr. Stover married Bertha J. Young, daughter of William and Mary (Kurtz) Young. Her oldest sister is Mrs. T. G. Hosterman, of Akron, Ohio. The mother of Mrs. Stover is now Mrs. Mary Weiser and lives with her daughter at Keyser. Mr. and Mrs. Stover have no children of their own, but have an adopted son, Allen Graham Stover.

BERNARD JOSEPH PETTIGREW is one of the younger men rising to prominence in the affairs of West Virginia. He has substantial connections at the bar of Charleston and enjoys a large criminal practice, and has also had the advantage of experience in the State Legislature.

Mr. Pettigrew was born at Summersville, Nicholas County, West Virginia, December 23, 1887, son of S. S. and Margaret Adelaide (Thornton) Pettigrew. Some of his early years were spent at Springfield, Ohio, where he attended school, and he also acquired part of his education in Washington, D. C. Mr. Pettigrew attended the law school of the University of West Virginia, and began the practice of his profession at Charleston in 1914.

For four years he was a member of the Charleston City Council, and was one of the youngest members ever elected to that body. In the summer of 1918 he was chosen by the republican party as a candidate for the House of Delegates in the State Legislature and was elected in November. At the regular session in 1919 he was designated by the speaker of the House as a member of committees on taxation and finance, and forfeited and unappropriated lands.

Mr. Pettigrew is member of the prominent and successful law firm of Barnhart, Horan & Pettigrew, with offices in the Coyle and Richardson Building at Charleston. Mr. Pettigrew married Miss Marie Harwood, of Elkins, West Virginia. Their four children are William S., Bernard Joseph, Jr., Thomas E. and Margaret Kathleen.

ROY T. WRIGHT, general manager of the Pawama and Algonquin mines, vice president of the Bank of Matoaka and president of the Wright Drug Company, came into this district in 1902 as a member of the First Engineering Corps for the Pocahontas Coal & Coke Company, and his initiative and ability have since advanced him to a leading place in the affairs of this part of Mercer County.

He was born near Princeton, that county, July 24, 1882, son of E. C. and Mary S. (Ellis) Wright, the former a native of Wythe County, Virginia, and the latter of Monroe County, West Virginia. E. C. Wright came to Mercer County in 1866 with his father, Thomas Wright, who settled on a farm near Princeton and spent the rest of his life as a farmer and cattle raiser. Thomas Wright was a veteran of the Confederate army. He was killed by accident while working in the timber at the age of eighty-four. E. C. Wright followed farming for many years, but since 1907 has been a resident of Matoaka and is in business as a funeral director. He is a Methodist, much interested in Sunday School work, is affiliated with the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Moose and other societies, and is a democrat. His family consists of two sons and three daughters, the other son L. A. Wright being in charge of the Wright Drug Company.

Roy T. Wright acquired his early education at Princeton, finishing school at the age of eighteen, after which he spent a year on the farm. His first connection with the coal industry was in the service of the Sagamore Coal Company in Crane Creek, following which he went with the Pocantons Coal and Coke Company, and since his first work at Matoaka he has enjoyed increasing responsibilities, serving as superintendent, manager and engineer, and has been connected with the Winonah, Hiawatha, and Smokeless companies, the Springfield Colliery Company, and since 1918 has been in active charge of the coal properties above mentioned and has other interests in the coal industry as well. Besides he Bank of Matoaka and the Wright Drug Company, he is manager of the Matoaka Electric & Power Company, is resident of the Mercer Hardware & Furniture Company, resident of the Matoaka Insurance Agency.

Mr. Wright in 1900 married Miss Mary Harriet McLaugherty, who was born at Princeton, daughter of James McLaugherty. They have three children: Bernice, a student in the Martha Washington College at Abingdon; Harry and Agnes, both in high school. The family are Methodists, and Mr. Wright is affiliated with the Elks and Knights of Pythias, is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Mercer County Country Club.

WILLIAM SMITH DOWNS, a civil engineer of Morgantown, a division engineer of the West Virginia State Road Commission. He is a native of West Virginia, born at Martinsburg in Berkeley County, March 15, 1883, a son of the late Joseph A. and Caroline J. (Evans) Downs. This branch of the Downs family was established in what is now West Virginia by Henry Downs, who came into Berkeley County in 1812 from Prince George County, Maryland, five generations removed from the present. Davenport Downs, grandfather of William S. Downs, removed from Berkeley County, West Virginia, to Iowa, in 1852. He served in the war between the states and died in Iowa shortly after its close.

The Evans family was established in what is now West Virginia by John Evans and his wife, Mary, who came to America from Wales and settled in Berkeley County before the Revolutionary war. He built the old Evans fort which stood on what is now the Winchester Turnpike, about two miles south of the present City of Martinsburg. Tillotson Fryatt Evans, the maternal grandfather of William S. Downs, was born in Berkeley County, as was also his wife, Jane Orr. He spent his life there engaged in farm pursuits.

Joseph A. Downs was born at Wapello, Louisa County, Iowa. His mother having died when he was an infant, he was reared by her people, received a collegiate education and became a teacher by profession, practically spending his entire life in the schoolroom and dying at Martinsburg, West Virginia, in 1900. He married Caroline J. Evans, daughter of Tillotson Fryatt and Jane (Orr) Evans.

After graduating from the high school of Martinsburg, William Smith Downs entered the West Virginia University, from which he was graduated in 1906 with the degree of B. S. C. E., and from that institution in 1915 received his C. E. degree. Since leaving the university Mr. Downs has been continuously identified with engineering concerns and interested in the development of the state. During 1906-1907 he was chief draughtsman for the Morgantown & Kingwood Railway, and from then for several years was associated professionally with Julius K. Monroe at Kingwood. From 1911 to 1915 he was engineer in charge of foundation investigation and resident engineer of the Hydro-Electric Company at Cheat Haven, West Virginia. From 1915 to 1917 he served as county road engineer for Monongalia County, and since 1917 has filled the office of division engineer of the West Virginia State Road Commission.

On June 22, 1910, Mr. Downs married Miss Nellie J. Albright, who is a daughter of L. M. and Jennie (Gibson) Albright, of Kingwood, West Virginia, and they have three children: William Richard, born December 27, 1912; James Albright, born February 18, 1914; and Jane, born September 25, 1918.

Mr. Downs has never cherished political ambitions but, nevertheless, is an earnest, well informed citizen who gladly cooperates with others in advancing the interests of his native section and state. He is well known in engineering circles here and elsewhere and is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

LONNA DENNIS ARNETT. A member of an honored pioneer family of Monongalia County, Lonna Dennis Arnett has been identified with library work for more than twelve years, and since 1910 has held the position of librarian of the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. A man of wide experience in his field of endeavor, he is likewise a close and careful student and thorough investigator, and the benefit of his research and study is always at the disposal of those who come into contact with Mr. Arnett in his courteous and efficient discharge of the duties of his office.

Lonna D. Arnett was born near Arnettsville in Grant District, Monongalia County, May 14, 1870, and belongs to a family which was established in this county by James Arnett, a native of Loudoun County, Virginia, of English parentage. Following the close of the American Revolution James Arnett came to Monongalia County and settled on about 400 acres of land in Grant District, near where the present Village of Arnettsville is situated, and there passed the rest of his life in the pursuits of agriculture. A part of his original farm is still held by his descendants. Andrew Arnett, a son of James the pioneer, was born in 1760, and died in 1820. He married Elizabeth Leggett. Thomas Arnett, a son of Andrew and Elizabeth, was born on the farm in Grant District August 9, 1816. He followed farming and also operated water-power grist mills on Indian Creek for a time. He married Zarilda Price, a daughter of William W. Price.

William C. Arnett, son of Thomas and Zarilda, was born at Arnettsville, March 30, 1840, and died on his farm January 15, 1916. Like his father, he followed farming and to some extent operated mills on Indian Creek. In 1864 he enlisted in Company B, Sixth Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, a regiment with which he served until the close of the war between the states. He was a Methodist in religion and a republican in his political sentiment. In 1868 he married Mary Thorn, daughter of Dennis Thorn, who, with his father, settled near Laurel Point, West Virginia, some time between 1820 and 1830. Mrs. Arnett survives and continues to reside on the home farm.

Lonna Dennis Arnett, son of William C. and Mary, attended Fairmont (West Virginia) Normal School, and was graduated from the University of West Virginia with the degree of Bachelor of Science as a member of the class of 1898. Following this he attended Clark University, Worcester, Massachusetts, from which he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy as a member of the graduating class of 1903, and for several years thereafter was engaged in teaching school. In 1909 he took up library work in the Bureau of Education Library at Washington, District of Columbia, and in the fall of 1910 became librarian of the University of West Virginia, a position which he has since retained. He is a member of the West Virginia State Library Association and the American Library Association, and holds membership also in the Sigma Chi Fraternity. In political allegiance he is a republican, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On August 18, 1903, Mr. Arnett was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Toy, daughter of Powell B. and Marietta (Love) Reynolds, of Morgantown. Her father, who received the degree of Doctor of Divinity and for many years held a professorship at the University of West Virginia, is now deceased, but her mother survives and is a resident of Morgantown.

CLEMENT ROSS JONES. The State of West Virginia owes an important debt to Clement Ross Jones for his long continued service and his splendid work in reorganizing and equipping the engineering department of the University of West Virginia, where for twenty years he has been professor of mechanical engineering and mechanical arts, and for the past ten years dean of the Engineering College.

Professor Jones was born at the old Jones homestead near Knottsville in Taylor County, West Virginia, April 19, 1871, son of Uriah and Pernissa Jane (Ford) Jones. He attended school near home, graduated from the Grafton High School in 1889, and in 1894 received the degree of Bachelor of Science and Civil Engineering from the University of West Virginia. While he has practiced his profession and has acquired several important business and industrial relations, Mr. Jones almost from the first has been devoted to the educational side of his calling. In 1895-97 he was assistant in mechanical engineering and graduate student at the university, receiving the degree of Mechanical Engineer in June, 1897. He was instructor from 1897 to 1899, and assistant professor during 1899-1901. During the summer of 1896 he was a student in the Worcester Polytechnic Institute of Massachusetts, and in the summer of 1897 at the Stevens Institute of Technology in New Jersey, while during 1899-1900 he was in the graduate school of Cornell University, from which he received the degree Master of Mechanical Engineering in 1900.

During the Spanish-American war the head of the department of mechanical engineering was called to active duty with the navy, and Mr. Jones remained as acting head. Soon afterward the old Mechanical Hall, with all its equipment, was destroyed by fire, and as the head of the department did not return, it fell to the lot of Mr. Jones to plan the new building and equipment and reorganize the department. In 1901 he was advanced to the grade of professor of mechanical engineering and mechanical arts, and since 1911 has been dean of the College of Engineering and professor of steam and experimental engineering. Under his direct supervision therefore, the engineering college has been developed as one of the most important adjuncts of technical education in the state. Professor Jones is the author and joint author of a number of text and reference books and notes used in the College of Engineering, and has contributed numerous papers and reports to engineering magazines. He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, American and International Societies for Testing Materials, is former vice president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, is a member of the West Virginia Coal Mining Institute, the West Virginia Engineers Club of Morgantown, a member of the Natural Gas Association of West Virginia and America, is secretary of the engineering section of the Land Grant College Association, and his work and abilities have earned him a high reputation in technical societies both at home and abroad.

He has also done much of the practical work of his profession, and from 1894 to 1898 was a member of the engineering firm of Jones & Jenkins. He is a director in the Federal Savings & Trust Company and of several industrial companies.

During the World war Professor Jones was fuel commissioner for Monongalia County, was chairman of the War Service Committee of the University and educational director of the Students Army Training Corps. When he graduated from the University in 1894 he was first lieutenant and adjutant of the West Virginia University Corps of Cadets and subsequently was appointed first lieutenant in the National Guard and was advanced to captain in 1896. He is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T., and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a member of the honorary scientific fraternity Sigma Xi, the Phi Beta Kappa, Theta Psi, Phi Sigma Kappa and is a member of the Morgantown Rotary Club and the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

July 22, 1915, he married Elizabeth Charles Gambrell, of Parkersburg, daughter of Philip Dodridge and Ione (Kinchloe) Gambrell. They have one son, Ross Gambrell Jones, born September 29, 1917.

No family had a larger share in the great adventure which settled the frontier of West Virginia than that of Professor Jones. He is a descendant of Jacob Jones, who was born near Wilmington, Delaware, in 1732. His mother subsequently married Samuel Lewellen, and about 1770 the Lewellens moved to what is now Monongalia County, West Virginia, and established the old Lewellen Ferry near the Pennsylvania line, where Samuel Lewellen obtained a grant of land in 1771. Jacob Jones accompanied his mother over the Alleghany Mountains and proceeded on to the west side of the Monongahela River, near the present town of Pentres. It was Indian country and the settlements were greatly disturbed by Indian raids, beginning in 1774 and continuing through the Revolution. During the outbreak of 1777 Jacob Jones and other members of his family were besieged in the home of a neighbor, and two of his children, Mary and John Jones, were taken captive. Mary was adopted into the Wyandot tribe of Indians and spent many years with her chosen people near Sandusky, Ohio. John Jones was not satisfied to remain an Indian, and eventually escaped, going to Detroit, was educated in medicine by his adopted father and later visited his father and other members of the family in West Virginia and for many years lived near the Town of Grafton. Jacob Jones made his escape from the Indian besiegers and subsequently removed to a safer situation on Cheat River. He was a frontier soldier until the close of the Revolution, and about 1794 he obtained a grant of land near Knottsville in Taylor County, where both he and his wife died about 1829 at the respective ages of ninety-six and ninety-three. His wife was Dinah Stanton, who was born in Delaware in 1735. They were the parents of eight children. The fifth was William Jones, one of the ancestors of Professor Jones. William Jones was born May 4, 1774, in Monongalia County. Just before his birth occurred the Indian raid of that year. His mother being unable to leave home, the older children were sent on to the nearest fort, and subsequently, following a second warning, Jacob and his wife also started for the fort. The son William was born after they had proceeded about five miles, and a neighbor carried the new-born child while the father supported his wife as best he could until they reached safety. William Jones lived near Knottsville, where he died in 1843. His wife was Sarah Anderson, and they were the parents of ten children. Of these, Samuel, the sixth child, was born February 2, 1808, and was a farmer and shoemaker near Knottsville, where he died in 1897. He married Frances Limber, who was born in 1818 and died in 1888. Their second child, Uriah Jones, father of Professor Jones, was born near Knottsville, January 14, 1839. During the Civil war he was a member of the Seventeenth West Virginia Regiment, and devoted his active years to farming. Uriah Jones married Pernissa Jane Ford, who was born September 22, 1843, daughter of Lanty and Rebecca (Jones) Ford, and a great-granddaughter of William Ford, who is said to have been a soldier of the Revolution and who some years after that war moved from Fanniquer County, Virginia, to the west side of Tygart's Valley River near Webster, West Virginia. His son George spent his active life as a farmer in Taylor County and was the father of Lanty Ford, who was born in December, 1800, and after a long and active career as a farmer in the Knottsville District died in 1881. His wife, Rebecca Jones, was born in 1804 and was a granddaughter of Jacob and Dinah (Stanton) Jones, previously referred to.

The children of Uriah Jones and wife were: Harry H., deceased, Clement Ross, George E., Fannie Rebecca and Ethel Belle.

PERCY JOHN BEAUMONT. For twenty years Percy John Beaumont, vice president and general manager of the Beaumont Company, manufacturers at Morgantown, West Virginia, has been closely identified with the industrial and general business interests of this section of the state. He has borne a leading part in the development of substantial enterprises at Morgantown and elsewhere and as both business man and citizen has won prominence and esteem.

Mr. Beaumont is a native of England and was born in the City of Birmingham, a great industrial center, November 15, 1864. His parents were the late John and Elizabeth (Dowell) Beaumont, natives of England, who came to the United States in 1884 and both died at Wheeling, West Virginia. They had two children, a daughter, who is now the wife of Harry Northwood, an experienced designer in the glass manufacturing industry, and Percy J.

It was in 1882, when eighteen years old, that Mr. Beaumont accompanied his sister to the United States, where she was to be married to Harry Northwood, who at that time was a designer for the Hobbs, Brockumier Glass Company of Wheeling, West Virginia, but formerly had been a member of the firm of Northwood & Company, glass manufacturers at Kingswinford, England. Mr. Beaumont had son educated in the Episcopal schools at Birmingham, and as ready and anxious to acquire knowledge of a trade, and his brother-in-law encouraged him to learn the glass making and decorating business, advice he accepted and became an expert glass worker under Mr. Northwood's supervision.

In 1890 Mr. Beaumont organized the Beaumont Glass Company at Martin's Ferry, Ohio, which was a successful enterprise from the start and soon outgrew its quarters. When it became necessary to seek another location, inducements were offered the company to locate at Grafton, West Virginia, and in 1902 removal was made to that city, where it is still operating as the Tygart Valley Glass Company. Mr. Beaumont disposed of his interests in the Grafton concern in 1905, and became manager of the Union Stopper Company at Morgantown in 1906, and so continued until 1917, in which year that company was reorganized as the Beaumont Company, manufacturers of illuminated glassware and stationers' sundries. Mr. Beaumont at that time became vice president and general manager of the company, and so continues. Although he has numerous other important interests, he has made the manufacture of glass a leading one, and his reputation in this industry is widespread. He is concerned also in the development of coal and oil and is treasurer and a director of the Chaplin Colerics Company of Morgantown; is vice president of the Silver Hill Oil Company; is president of the Seneca Hill Oil Company, and is a director in the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Morgantown. He has been an encourager and often financial helper of many other laudable business enterprises here.

In 1889 Mr. Beaumont married Miss Laura Jefferson Dillon, daughter of Benjamin Dillon. Mrs. Beaumont died in 1918, leaving one daughter and two sons: Catherine Elizabeth, who is the wife of Prof. Eugene C. Auchter, Ph. D., a graduate of Cornell University, who (1922) is a member of the faculty as professor of horticulture in the Maryland State College; John Herbert, who is an A. B. graduate of the West Virginia University, is taking his Ph. D. work at the Chicago University (1922) and at the same time he is an instructor in horticulture at the University of Minnesota; and Arthur Brittingham, who is associated with his father in business. Mr. Beaumont is a member of the First Episcopal Church at Morgantown. Political life has never attracted him nor have fraternal organizations, but he enjoys membership in the Turn Verein Society at Morgantown.

LYNN HASTINGS. Probably there is no profession that demands so much tact, judgment, patience, specialized knowledge and natural executive ability as that of the educator, and the individual who enters into this important field, selecting it as his calling, must be prepared to make many personal sacrifices, to endure numerous disappointments, to often spend himself for others without apparent return, and to give the best years of his life without receiving the emoluments that equal effort would surely bring in any other profession. It is a vocation for which there are no weights and measures. The material with which it deals is rather that life material upon which impressions are eternal and afford the man who would serve the race an opportunity than which there are none greater. One who has dedicated his life to the work of the educator and who has achieved an honored place in his vocation and in the confidence of the public is Lynn Hastings, of Morgantown, superintendent of the free schools of Monongalia County.

Mr. Hastings is a native of Monongalia County and is of the fourth generation of his branch of the family on both sides in the county. The first Hastings settler of record here was Thomas Hastings, the great-grandfather of Lynn, who settled at Cheat Neck in Union District during pioneer days. He married a McGill, and their son, Isaac, was born in the Cheat Neck community and married Elvira Victor. At the time of the war with Mexico he was serving as a captain of Virginia militia and was sworn into the Government service, but did not get to the front. During the war between the states he assisted in raising a company of West Virginia infantry and was commissioned first lieutenant thereof. He was a charter member of the Cheat Neck Methodist Protestant Church.

George B. Hastings, son of Isaac and father of Lynn Hastings, was born at Cheat Neck, February 4, 1836, and died June 20, 1911. In early life he assisted his father in the operation of the ferry over Cheat River, at Cheat Neck, and subsequently learned the trade of woodworker, which he followed for years, in addition thereto farming to some extent. He married Margaret Elizabeth Jenkins, who was born April 22, 1857, in the same neighborhood as was her husband, and survives him as a resident of Morgantown.

The first of the Jenkins family of record in Monongalia County was Bartholomew Jenkins, the grandfather of Mrs. Hastings, who was one of three brothers to come to America from Scotland, two of whom settled in other states. Bartholomew Jenkins settled at Cheat Neck in early days and married Nancy Baker, daughter of George Baker, the Monongalia County pioneer of the Baker family. George Jenkins, son of Bartholomew and Nancy Jenkins, was born at Cheat Neck and married Sophia Beatty, daughter of Robert and Nancy (Conn) Beatty. Robert Beatty was born at Cheat Neck, the son of Irish-born parents who were early settlers in Monongalia County. His wife was a daughter of James and Sophia Conn.

The children born to George B. and Margaret E. Hastings were as follows: Lynn, of this notice; Charles B., born March 20, 1889, a resident of Morgantown, married Rose, daughter of Charles Ilettick, who came from Pennsylvania, and they have one son, Earl; Isaac N., born January 29, 1892, a resident of Morgantown, married Beatrice Miller; Fanny Lou, born December 20, 1896, who is unmarried and resides with her mother; and George D., born May 10, 1898, a resident of Morgantown, married Jeannette, daughter of J. F. Smith.

Lynn Hastings was born at Cheat Neck, Union District, Monongalia County, February 2, 1887, a son of George B. and Margaret E. (Jenkins) Hastings. He secured all of his elementary education at the Wood Grove public school and received his common school diploma in 1903. In 1905 he was granted a first-grade teacher's license, and in that year taught the Bush School in his home locality. He was graduated from Fairmont Normal School in 1911, as valedictorian of his class, which numbered about eighty graduates, and in the same year became principal of the graded schools of Dingess, Mingo County, West Virginia, holding that position also during a part of 1912. In 1912-13 he taught his home school; was principal of the high and graded schools of Sabraton, Monongalia County, in 1913-14-15; and was principal of the Westover schools of the Morgantown Independent School District from 1915 to January 8, 1916, when he resigned to accept the appointment of county superintendent of schools to fill a vacancy, the appointment having been made by the presidents of the various district boards of education in the county. In November, 1916, Mr. Hastings was elected to fill out the unexpired term, and at the general election of 1918 was elected for the full term of four years, without opposition in the primaries or general election. From the start Mr. Hastings has labored earnestly in an effort to better conditions in every way and to advance the standard of education. A thorough student of the science of education and possessed of a natural interest in child psychology, he has made his school system a living, growing organism responsive to the best in the teacher and the pupil.

During the World War Mr. Hastings served as county food administrator and as one of the "Four Minute" speakers, and was active in all the drives and other war work. Like his forefathers, he is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Chapter No. 30, R. A. M.; Monongalia Lodge No. 1, O. O. F. of which he is a past noble grand; and Allen Lodge No. 36, K. of P., of which he is a past chancellor. He is a member of the West Virginia State Educational Association.

On August 16, 1915, Mr. Hastings married La Marion Mercer Mason, who was born at Masonville, Grant County, West Virginia, November 27, 1889, daughter of Samuel Alexander and Louisa (Baker) Mason, the father a native of Petersburg, Grant County, and the mother of Lost River, Hardy County, this state. To Mr. and Mrs. Hastings there have come three children: Lynn, Jr., born July 24, 1916; Grey, born January 22, 1918; and Lyle, born March 27, 1921.

RUSSELL LOVE MORRIS, professor of railway and highway engineering of the School of Engineering at the University of West Virginia, Morgantown, is descended from four old families of what is now the State of West Virginia, namely: The Morris, the Russell, the Love, and the Shelton. His paternal grandfather, Capt. Joseph Morris, raised a company of volunteer infantry for the Confederate army during the war between the states, and served as captain thereof until he met his death during the retreat of General Lee after the great battle of Gettysburg. He married a Miss Russell, who belonged to the old and honored Russell family of the Huntington community.

Capt. John O. Morris, son of Capt. Joseph Morris, and father of Russell L. Morris, was born at his father's home in Teay's Valley, near the present Town of Culloden, in Cabell County, West Virginia. He served as first sergeant in his father's company during the war between the states, and after the elder man's death succeeded to the command. He later was commissioned captain, and served gallantly with General Lee until the final surrender of that great general at Appomattox. After the war he served alternately as deputy sheriff and sheriff of Putnam County for many years, and late in life located at Huntington, where he died. His wife, Eliza Love, who is still living at Huntington, was born in Teay's Valley, a daughter of William A. Love, who was a large land owner of that valley, where he was an early settler, and prior to the war between the states was a slaveholder.

Russell Love Morris was born in Teay's Valley, near the present Post Office of Teay's, in Putnam County, West Virginia, November 4, 1868, a son of Capt. John O. Morris. After attending the free schools of his district and spending one term in the graded school at Alderson he entered the University of West Virginia in 1885, and in 1895 was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering, two years later receiving his Master's degree. Between the time of entering and graduation he spent four years away from the university, engaged at various kinds of employment. He became an instructor in the engineering department in 1895, and from that year on has been a member of the faculty of the university in one capacity or another, continuously, having the distinction of having taught continuously in the institution for a longer period than any other instructor now or ever identified with the University of West Virginia. During the long period of twenty-six years he has been actively engaged, also, in business affairs, principally along the lines of civil engineering and in opening up city property for the market, on his own account chiefly. He has gained something more than a local reputation as an expert in laying out allotments, and in this class of work his services have been in demand in all parts of West Virginia as well as sections of Kentucky and Maryland. Professor Morris owns some city property at Morgantown, and is interested in agriculture and other business enterprises. Fraternally he is identified with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., and with the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity.

On December 21, 1900, Professor Morris married Miss Olive Hite, daughter of Isaac and Catherine (Hennen) Hite, of two old and honored Morgantown families, and to this union there has come one son, John Hite, born in 1911.

DAVIDSON BROTHERS. The branch of the Davidson family to which belong Henry Alexander and George S. Davidson, of Morgantown, Monongalia County, was founded in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, prior to 1800 by Jeremiah Davidson (I), who came from his native Ireland and first settled in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, whence he later removed to Luzerne Township, Fayette County. He was of Scotch ancestry, but representatives of the family left Scotland and established themselves in Ireland several generations before his birth. For many years Jeremiah Davidson operated the old Crawford ferry across the Monongahela River, and late he owned another ferry, besides developing a substantial business in the building of boats both for his own use and for sale. He died at his old home in Luzerne Township, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, in 1850. He married Ann Alexander, and among their children was Henry Alexander Davidson (I), who was born at Davidson's Ferry, Fayette County, in 1805. After his marriage to Elizabeth Gallagher, Henry A. Davidson settled on a farm in Cumberland Township, Greene County, Pennsylvania. His son, Jeremiah (II) was born on this farm May 26, 1834, and after arriving a adult age continued his association with farm enterprises until 1875, when he removed to Carmichaels, Pennsylvania. There he later engaged in the hotel business, and still later in the livery and undertaking business. He held the various official chairs in the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was influential in community affairs. In 1856 he married Selantha Flenuiken, and they became the parents of three children: John Calvin, Franklin Francis and Minnie, the daughter dying at the age of sixteen years. After the death of his first wife Jeremiah Davidson married Mrs. Harriet Jane (Stone) Hatfield, and they had two sons, Henry Alexander and George S. The honored father died in July, 1900, the mother having passed away in October, 1898.

Henry Alexander Davidson (II) was born March 24, 1878, at Carmichaels, Pennsylvania, where he attended the public schools until eligible for admission to the Pennsylvania State Normal School at California. Thereafter he became associated with his father's business, and after the death of his father in 1900 he came to Morgantown, West Virginia, and in April, 1901, engaged in the livery business. March 1, 1903, he added an undertaking department to the business, and in 1914 his brother George S. became his partner, under the firm name of Davidson Brothers. Since 1917 the firm has been engaged also in the handling of automobiles, with a well equipped garage and service station, in which the firm has the sales agency for the Hudson, the Essex and the Marmon cars, and the Republic automobile trucks. The brothers are active members of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce and are affiliated with Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the local Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the Morgantown Commandery of Knights Templars, while each has received the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite, and also holds membership in Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Henry A. is a past exalted ruler of Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; is affiliated with Monongahela Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and is a charter member of the Morgantown Country Club. He married Miss Agnes Miles, of Buckhannon, this state. They have no children.

George S. Davidson was born at Carmichaels, Pennsylvania, January 27, 1884, and in addition to the discipline of the public schools he took a business course in the University of West Virginia. He came to Morgantown, May 1, 1901, and after working for his brother until 1909 he here established an independent livery business in South Morgantown. He sold this business two years later and thereafter conducted a similar enterprise at Morgantown until 1914, when he entered into partnership with his brother, as noted in a preceding paragraph. The Davidson brothers are numbered among the vital and progressive business men and valued citizens of Morgantown. George S. likewise is affiliated with the local lodge of Odd Fellows and is a charter member of the Morgantown Country Club. He married Mary E., daughter of Henry Fenton Rice, the pioneer news dealer of Morgantown.

DAVID CORE CLARK through his private practice and long membership on the State Board of Examiners has been prominent in the profession of dental surgery in West Virginia, is also a former member of the State Legislature, and in many other respects a leader in the civic and social life of his home city, Morgantown.

He was born in Monongalia County and is descended from two old families of this section of the valley. His paternal grandfather, Nehemiah Clark, came from Maryland and was a pioneer in the Cass District of Monongalia County. The maternal grandfather, John Core, was probably born either in Cass or in Clay District of the same county. Doctor Clark's father was William James Clark, who was born in Cass District June 19, 1845, and spent his life as an industrious and frugal farmer and died on his farm April 9, 1916. He married Martha Ellen Core, who was born in Clay District May 20, 1848, and is still living at the old homestead.

David C. Clark was born at the Clark home in Clay District February 4, 1873. He acquired his early education in the district and graded schools, later attended the Fairmont State Normal School, then taught school in the district schools of Monongalia County for a number of years, and in 1898 received his degree D. D. S. from the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery. After his graduation Doctor Clark practiced at Blacksville in Monongalia County until 1917, in which year he removed to Morgantown. He was a member of the West Virginia State Board of Dental Examiners from 1915 to 1920. For a period of fifteen years, from 1906 to 1921, he was treasurer of the State Dental Society, and has taken a prominent part in that organization and several of his addresses and technical papers have been printed in dental publications.

Doctor Clark was elected as a republican to represent Monongalia County in the Legislature in 1915. During the regular session of 1916 he was a member of the committees on prohibition and temperance, education, private corporations, and joint stock corporations, immigration and agriculture, and medicine and sanitation. He faithfully represented the interests entrusted to him, but after his first term he declined re-nomination.

During the World war he recognized no obligation as superior to the needs of the nation, and gave both of his professional effort and his means to the cause. He was a member of the National Dental Preparedness League, and shared in its program of work in preparing recruits for the army by dental examination and treatment. He was also connected with all the Liberty Loan drives in the county.

Doctor Clark is a director of the Bank of Morgantown and financially interested in other corporations. He is an official member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, a worker in the Sunday school, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club of Morgantown, October 6, 1898, he married Miss Joanna Stephens, daughter of Bowen and Ruth E. CLEMENT CONDON HILDEBRAND had made a promising start in a business career when he joined the aviation service in the World war, and since leaving that has resumed his citizenship in Monongalia County, where he is actively identified with business in Morgantown and also in the town of Hildebrand, a little community named for his father.

Hildebrand is in Grant District of Monongalia County, and Mr. Hildebrand was born there December 4, 1891, son of John Marshall and Eliza Jane (Schafer) Hildebrand. The Hildebrands, though of German ancestry, have been in America since Colonial times. The ancestor was Henry Hildebrand, who settled in Massachusetts and was a Minute Man in the days of the Revolution. He married a Miss Coulter. Five generations intervened between him and Clement C. Hildebrand. His son, Henry Hildebrand (II), was born in Massachusetts, married Margaret Lantz, moved to Maryland, later to the vicinity of Richmond, Virginia, and finally to Greene County, Pennsylvania. When he went to Pennsylvania he was accompanied by his sisters, Charlotte and Barbara. Charlotte married a Mr. Lucas, and the Morgantown branch of the Lucas family is descended from her. Louis Launtz Hildebrand, of the third generation of the family in America, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1814. He married in that county Maria Catherine Muhency, and in 1847 they removed to White Day, Clinton District, Monongalia County, West Virginia. L. L. Hildebrand died at the age of eighty-four and his wife at ninety-four. A brief record is entered concerning their twelve children: Samantha, who became the wife of J. W. Stevens and was the mother of eleven children; Margaret, married John H. Smallwood and had six children; Jane, who died in infancy; John Marshall; Sarah Ellen, who had nine children by her marriage to Elias Keener; Hannah Louisa, whose husband was James Smallwood, by whom she had six children; Clark, who married Anna Ellis and had a family of two children; Miranda, wife of John C. John Marshall Hildebrand was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1845, and has been one of the well known and effective citizens of this locality. For many years he has been active in the general mercantile business he established at Hildebrand, where the little community has grown up. In a public way he has been justice of the peace, deputy sheriff, constable, road commissioner and school trustee. He married Eliza Jane Schafer, who was born near Laurel Point in Monongalia County in 1849. To their marriage were born nine children: Carrie Anna, widow of Dr. E. M. Henry, of Laurel Point, and of her three children one is living, Otto H. Henry, a graduate of West Virginia University and now a professor in the New York Polytechnic School of Engineering; Benton M., who married Lela Hess and is manager of the Standard Oil Pumping Station at Summerville, New Jersey; Ella M., wife of Charles Henry and mother of Miffin, Marie and Wilford; Nora F., who died in 1920, unmarried; Grace G., wife of J. F. Dugan, Greensboro, Pennsylvania, and mother of Donovan, Doran and Dorothea; Bert B., who married Nettie Jolliffe and has two sons, Chester and Louis; Louis Launtz, who married Margaret Lambert and has a son, Allan Bryce; John, who died in infancy; and Clement Condon, ninth and youngest of the family.

Clement C. Hildebrand attended common schools, graduated from the Morgantown High School in 1914 and in the same year entered the accounting department of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company at Morgantown. In 1916 he was transferred to the Gary, Indiana, plant of that corporation. The following year, when America entered the war, he enlisted in the air department, and received his training at Indianapolis, at Fort Thomas, Kentucky, and subsequently was transferred to the balloon service at Fort Omaha, Nebraska. He was top sergeant of his company and received his honorable discharge at Camp Grant, Illinois, February 29, 1919.

While his old position with the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company was held open for him he decided to return home to be near his parents, both growing old, and accordingly took charge of the office work of the Delmar Coal Company at Hildebrand and is also junior member of the firm of Hildebrand & Son merchants at Hildebrand. March 1, 1921, E. Reece Baker, a Morgantown contractor, became associated with Mr. Hildebrand as accountant, draftsman and general assistant. Mr. Hildebrand is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., and has taken fourteen degrees in the Scottish Rite. He is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, the American Legion and the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CLYDE BRAND, a progressive young business man of Morgantown, the judicial center and metropolis of Monongalia County, was born in this county August 15, 1880, and is a representative of one of its sterling pioneer families. His paternal great-grandfather Brand settled in this county in the early pioneer days, and here was born the latter's son, James Elliott Brand, who was here reared to manhood and who married Susan Rice. John J. Brand, son of James Elliott and Susan (Rice) Brand, was born in this county on the 1st of September, 1854, and he became a successful school teacher when a young man. He also learned the carpenter's trade, and for five years he followed his trade at Fairmont, Marion County. For the ensuing five years he there operated a planing mill. He then, in 1898, returned to Monongalia County, where he continued his activities as a carpenter and builder until about 1918, since which time he has here lived retired. His first wife, whose maiden name was Mary A. Barbe, died in 1892.

Clyde Brand, son of John J. and Mary (Barbe) Brand, gained his early education in the public schools of Fairmont, and there he initiated his independent career by securing employment in a bottling works. In 1900 he established his residence at Morgantown, where for a time he was identified with the real estate business. He next gave his attention to learning the plumber's trade, and to broaden his practical experience in the same he later worked at his trade in Philadelphia and Atlantic City. Some time after his return to Morgantown he formed a partnership with J. H. Kennedy, under the title of Kennedy & Brand, but a year later, in 1904, he established himself independently in business. His ability and progressiveness have resulted in his building up a most successful enterprise, and he is now at the head of a leading plumbing, gasfitting, and steam and hot-water heating business in this section of West Virginia. He is loyal and public-spirited as a citizen, is an active member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club, is a director of the Union Savings & Trust Company, and his wife held membership in the First Presbyterian Church, and his fraternal affiliations are here briefly noted: Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templars; Lodge of Perfection No. 1, West Virginia Sovereign Consistory of the Scottish Rite; Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling; and Athens Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

April 22, 1903, recorded the marriage of Mr. Brand with Flora Gertrude Niell, daughter of A. M. Niell, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and they have two children: Richard Clyde, born June 14, 1907; and Dorothy Virginia, born December 19, 1909.

JOHN MARSHALL, a busy Parkersburg lawyer, represents the third successive generation of that family in the legal profession, and his ancestry altogether is one that has had a close relationship with the history of the Western Virginia country from earliest pioneer times.

His great-great-grandfather, Aaron Marshall, was a soldier under General Washington during the French and Indian war, lived prior to the Revolution in Southwestern Pennsylvania, and in 1780 moved to Hancock County, Virginia. His son John, who was born in 1782 and died in 1859, spent his entire life in Hancock County. James G. Marshall, grandfather of the Parkersburg lawyer, was born in Hancock County, November 21, 1826, and died October 6, 1902. He was an able attorney and served twenty-four years as prosecuting attorney of Hancock County. He was a republican, and his example in politics has been followed by subsequent generations. He married Lavina Miller, and her two sons, Erastus D. and Oliver S., both became lawyers.

Oliver S. Marshall, whose home is at New Cumberland in Hancock County, was born September 24, 1850. He graduated from Bethany College in 1878, and has for many years served as a trustee of that institution. He was a member of the State Senate three times, being president of the Senate in 1899, and was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1892. Oliver S. Marshall married, September 8, 1880, Elizabeth Tarr, who was born at Wellsburg, this state, daughter of Campbell and Nancy (Hammond) Tarr. Campbell Tarr was one of the historic figures in the formation of the State of West Virginia, and as a delegate from Brooke County withdrew from the secession convention at Richmond. He was a member of the conventions at Wheeling, served as treasurer of the Provisional Government, and was the first state treasurer.

John Marshall, only son of Oliver S. and Elizabeth (Tarr)

Marshall, was born July 28, 1881, at New Cumberland. He finished his literary education at Bethany College, where he graduated A. B. and A. M. in 1902, received his A. B. degree from Yale College in 1903, and graduated in law from the University of West Virginia in 1904. The following year he began his practice at Parkersburg, and has gained prominence both as an able business lawyer and on the public side of his profession. From 1908 to 1912 he was assistant United States attorney of the Northern District of West Virginia. Mr. Marshall was a delegate from West Virginia to the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1920. In 1921 he was appointed special assistant to the United States attorney general to try cases involving alien enemy property seized by the Government.

Besides his work as a lawyer he has been a director of the Smoot Advertising Company, Ohio Valley Publishing Company, Parkersburg Publishing Company, Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Company, United States Roofing & Tile Company, and a director of the Chamber of Commerce. He has been for several years chairman of the Wood County Chapter of the American Red Cross. He was the organizer and first president of the Rotary Club at Parkersburg, is a member of the college fraternities Beta Theta Pi, Delta Chi, Theta Nu Epsilon, and is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Parkersburg Country Club, Blennerhassett Club, and is a member of the Christian Church.

Mr. Marshall married, January 25, 1906, at Wheeling, Miss Rebecca Cooper Paull, a native of Wheeling and daughter of Joseph F. and Emma (Senseney) Paull. Her grandparents were Judge James and Jane Ann (Fry) Paull. The former was a judge of the Supreme Court of West Virginia. Her grandmother was a daughter of Judge Joseph L. Fry, who was a descendant of Colonel Fry, at one time colonel of the Virginia regiment in which George Washington was lieutenant-colonel. Washington succeeded to the command of the regiment when Colonel Fry was killed in action. Mrs. Marshall's father was a prominent Wheeling manufacturer and financier. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have two children: John, Jr., born February 22, 1908, and Joseph Paull, born May 20, 1912.

OLIN V. NEAL. For nearly half a century Olin V. Neal has been in business at Parkersburg, and for the greater part of that time has been head of a prosperous jewelry concern. For four or five successive generations the Neals have been associated with the most substantial interests of Wood County. Olin V. Neal is one of the many descendants of Capt. James Neal, founder of Neal's Station and a leader in the first permanent settlement in Wood County. A more complete story of his career is given on other pages in connection with other descendants.

Capt. James Neal, who died in Wood County in 1822, at the age of eighty-five, married for his first wife Hannah Hardin, and their sixth child was James Hardin Neal.

James Hardin Neal was a man of superior mental attainments for his day. He was born in 1784 and died in 1850. He was elected clerk of the Wood County Court in 1806, having previously served as a deputy county clerk for several years. He knew and was friendly with the Blennerhassets, and was invited but declined to take a part in the ambitious project planned in the island home of the Blennerhassets by Aaron Burr. Later he was summoned as a witness at Richmond at the trial of Burr. He built, in 1824, a large brick residence, which for upwards of a century stood as one of the most attractive of the old resident landmarks in Parkersburg. By his will James Hardin Neal gave his slaves their freedom. He was three times married. His first wife, whom he married in 1810, was Harriet Neale, daughter of Thomas Neale. The youngest of their four children was Hardin Neal.

Hardin Neal, who died in 1855, spent his active life as a farmer at what is now known as Neal's Retreat. He married Elizabeth Collins, and they were the parents of eight children, the five who reached maturity being: James H.; Eva, who became the wife of James Tavenner; Virginia M., wife of J. A. Saunders; Joseph; Olin V. The two still living are Virginia and Olin V.

Clarence Roby

Olin V. Neal was born December 23, 1854, and spent the first eighteen years of his life on his father's farm. He acquired a public school education, and in 1872, when he left the farm, began learning the watchmaker and jeweler's trade in Parkersburg. For over eighteen years he was an employe of J. W. Mather, and finally, in July, 1891, established himself in business and has kept that business growing and prospering through a period of thirty years, having his son, the late Vernon Neal, as his active partner and associate until the latter's death.

April 18, 1878, Mr. Neal married Miss Dora Laughlin, daughter of Adam Laughlin. Of their four children the oldest is Eva Belle, wife of Frank Wolfe. The second daughter is Mabel Hall, wife of A. Clyde McCormack, and the youngest is Miss Chloe Marie.

Vernon M. Neal, only son of Olin V. Neal, was born July 18, 1881, and though he died on May 19, 1921, had earned for himself a most honorable position in the commercial and social life of Parkersburg. He was reared and educated in Parkersburg and as a youth became associated with his father in business. He married Mary Virginia O'Neil. He is survived by Mrs. Neal and six children: Hugh Olin, Dora Margaret, John Vernon, Rose Mary, James Lawrence and Frances Isabel.

CLARENCE ROBY is one of the representative younger members of the bar of Monongalia County, and at Morgantown, the county seat, he is building up a practice that in scope and character gives evidence alike of his technical ability and his secure standing in community esteem. He is a scion in the fourth generation of both the Roby and Feaster families in what is now West Virginia. His grandfather on the paternal side was Aaron Roby, who was born and reared in this state, as was also the maternal grandfather, Sanford F. Feaster.

Clarence Roby was born at Petersburg, Grant County, this state, February 11, 1892, and at the same place were born his parents, Albert Allison Roby and Ida Irene (Feaster) Roby, the former in the year 1866 and the latter in 1871. The parents still reside in Grant County, where the father is a representative agriculturist and stock-grower.

After having profited by the advantages of the public schools Clarence Roby attended and was graduated from the Shepherd College State Normal School at Shepherds-town, Jefferson County. He was graduated in 1914, and for one year thereafter was engaged in teaching in the public schools at Scherr, Grant County. In the autumn of 1915 he entered the University of West Virginia, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1919, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. From the law department of the university he was graduated in 1921, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and with his virtually coincident admission to the bar of his native state he opened an office at Morgantown, which has continued as the central stage of his professional activities since that time.

The call of patriotism had, in the meanwhile, interrupted the university work of Mr. Roby, for when the nation became involved in the World war he determined to do his part, with the result that in May, 1918, he entered the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan, whence, a month later, he was transferred to a machine-gun officers' training camp at Camp Hancock, Georgia, where, in September, 1918, he received his commission as second lieutenant in the department of machine-gun operation. He was in the machine-gun group at that camp until November 1, 1918, when he was transferred to the Three Hundred and Sixty-third Machine Gun Battalion of the Ninety-sixth Division, at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina. There he remained until he received his honorable discharge December 6, 1918, when he returned to Morgantown and resumed his studies in the university. He is a member of the Kappa Sigma college fraternity. His Masonic affiliation is with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he is a Royal Arch Mason, Morgantown Chapter No. 30. In the Scottish Rite he is a member of Lodge of Perfection No. 6, of the West Virginia Sovereign Consistory, at Wheeling, where also he is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. His Masonic affiliations include also membership in the White Shrine and the Order of the Eastern Star. He is a member of Monongalia Post No. 2, of the American Legion. He and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Morgantown.

On the 21st of June, 1921, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Roby and Miss Anagnone Belle Cochran, who was born at Dawson, Pennsylvania, a daughter of William H. and Gertrude (Reed) Cochran. Mr. Cochran is deceased, and his widow and other members of the family reside at Morgantown, West Virginia.

JOHN FRANCIS IHLI. For twenty years John Francis Ihli has been one of the progressive business men and upright, useful citizens of Morgantown, practically helpful in every phase of civic development and deeply interested in philanthropic problems.

Mr. Ihli was born in the Town of Mulsch, Baden, Germany, November 8, 1869, but his grandparents were natives of Switzerland and France. His father, Karl Ihli, was born also in Baden, a linen weaver by trade, and he died when his son was a boy. His mother, Juliana (Kraft) Ihli, was a daughter of a well-to-do farmer in Baden, who was born in France. John Francis Ihli attended the common and also the high school in his native town until he was fourteen years old, when he began an apprenticeship to the tailor's trade, which apprenticeship he completed two years later. In the meanwhile his older brother, Frank Ihli, had immigrated to the United States, and John F. felt anxious to follow his example, but he had journeyman service ahead of him before he could claim trade freedom, so he started out and worked for a time in Carlsruhe and Frieberg, Germany, and in some places in Switzerland.

It was from Switzerland that he returned home on a visit, and when the visit was over he secured a pass to return there, but instead of using it for that purpose made it serve as a means to get him to Antwerp, Belgium, from which port he took ship for the United States and was safely landed in the harbor of New York in January, 1888. From there he traveled to Monongahela City, Pennsylvania, where his brother was residing. In reaching the United States Mr. Ihli realized a great ambition, and very soon afterward he set out on his journeyman travels in the new land in cheerful spirit and with high hopes. He was a careful and skillful workman and found employment wherever he stopped, his travels taking him to towns in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and further south. The year 1900 found him at work in the City of Wheeling, and since that year he has been, to all intents and purposes, a West Virginian.

While working in Fairmont, West Virginia, where he spent five years, Mr. Ihli became a naturalized citizen of the United States. After leaving that city he went to Parkersburg for a short time, and in 1902 came to Morgantown. By this time he had become an expert coat maker, and in that capacity was engaged by the leading merchant tailor of the city, A. K. Smith, with whom he continued until 1907, when he embarked in the business for himself, and for a number of years has conducted the largest and most reliable merchant tailoring establishment here, one that compares favorably in every way with similar houses in larger centers of trade.

On May 5, 1903, Mr. Ihli married Miss Nancy Marsden, a daughter of John and Nancy (Bolton) Marsden. Mrs. Ihli was born in Wigan, Lancashire, England, and she was but a few months old when her parents came to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Ihli have three sons: John Marsden, born May 3, 1904; George Leo, born July 28, 1905; and Carl Bolton, born May 7, 1914. The eldest son was graduated from the high school at Morgantown, and for the last four years has been treasurer of the Episcopal Church Sunday school.

Mr. Ihli has additional business interests here, being a stockholder in the Commercial Bank. He was an early member and a director of the Business Men's Association, and was instrumental in the reorganization of that association into the Chamber of Commerce, which name he suggested. He has taken much interest in Chautauqua work and other educational and uplifting movements and has been particularly concerned in Boy Welfare work. He is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T.; Lodge of Perfection No. 6 (L. T.) of West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Scottish Rite, thirty-second degree, and Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Wheeling. He is a past master of Morgantown Lodge, A. O. U. W., and belongs also to the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and is a charter member of the Rotary Club. Mr. Ithi and his family are members of Trinity Episcopal Church at Morgantown, in which he is a vestryman. During the World war he was helpful in all patriotic work and set an example of unostentatious liberality.

COL. JOHN A. FAIRFAX MARTIN. Martin and Fairfax are names that suggest a wealth of interesting family and other important history in Preston County. Both names were established here some years before the War of 1812, the Fairfaxes soon after the Revolution.

Allen Martin, pioneer of the Martin family, came from Charles County, Maryland, to the Glades of the Valley District in what is now Preston County, and settled in Monongalia County, near Morgantown. From 1806 to 1809 he kept a tavern on the John W. Guseman place. He and his wife are buried at the "bend of the river," near Little Falls. Allen Martin married Arlotta Maddox. Apparently the only son of their union to remain in Preston County was Aquilla.

Aquilla Martin won as a bride the beautiful and distinguished Mary Byrne Fairfax, only daughter of John Fairfax and Mary Byrne, the latter a daughter of Samuel Byrne of Virginia. The only son of Aquilla and Mary Martin was Col. John A. Fairfax Martin, one of the most noted of the house of Martin and whose name has been set at the beginning of this record.

The ancestry of Mary Byrne Fairfax is linked with that of one of the most distinguished and illustrious of early Colonial families. In old Virginia the name has been prominent in nearly every generation for several centuries. However, the origin of the Preston County Fairfaxes was a Maryland branch of the family. This remote ancestor was John Fairfax, who came to America some forty years in advance of Lord Thomas Fairfax of Virginia, and settled in Charles County, Maryland, about 1700. This John Fairfax married Catherine, daughter of Henry Norris. Their only son, John Fairfax, inherited the Norris estate, and married Mary Scott, of Elkridge, where Baltimore now stands. John and Mary Fairfax were the parents of William Fairfax, whose first wife was Benedicta Blanchard, who bore him two sons and three daughters, and after her death he married Elizabeth Buckner, a daughter of Peyton Buckner of Virginia. In 1789 William Fairfax disposed of his Maryland estate and crossed the Potomac River into Virginia, locating in Prince William County, where he died four years later. William's third son and the first by his second wife was John Fairfax, who as the founder of the family in Preston County deserves a more particular account.

John Fairfax was born in Charles County, Maryland, December 10, 1763. In 1783 he accepted an invitation from Gen. George Washington, who had recently relinquished the command of the Continental Army, to become assistant manager of the General's vast estate of 35,000 acres of land. Washington's manager then was his nephew, Lund Washington, but two years later he resigned to accept an office under the Government, and in the meantime Washington had found his assistant manager so capable that he at once advanced him to the office of manager, though Fairfax was then only twenty-two years of age, but had singular qualifications and abilities for handling such an immense property. He continued in this office until 1790, when he resigned to take possession of an extensive tract of land in the Monongalia Glades, now Preston County.

With his family and effects and slaves he moved over the mountains and located about a mile south of Reedsville where at Arthurdale he erected an imposing two-story log house with wide galleries in front and rear and with a semi-circle of slave quarters in the rear. There John Fairfax spent his remaining years, a fine example of the old Virginia aristocrat, and he lies buried in sight of the old mansion. John Fairfax by his first wife, Mary Byrne had the following children: George William, William Buckner, John, Jr., and Mary Byrne, who became the wife of Aquilla Martin.

Col. John A. Fairfax Martin, only son of his parents was born April 22, 1822, and died January 24, 1898. His home was at Kingwood and at Terra Alta, and in his life time his enterprise and influence were associated with many of the important enterprises of the county. He was a man of wide information, a student of the Scriptures, was public spirited and generous, and had business abilities that enabled him to accumulate much property. He was sheriff of Preston County, represented the county in the West Virginia Legislature, and was colonel of the One Hundred Forty-eighth Militia Regiment. His love of humanity and his pronounced affability rendered him personally popular, and the poor especially found in him a trusted friend and counselor.

Colonel Martin married Miss Susan Louisa Fairfax on October 19, 1852. She was born November 17, 1833, daughter of Buckner Fairfax and granddaughter of the pioneer John Fairfax. Susan Louisa Martin died August 25, 1854, just fifteen days after the birth of her only child, Isaac Parsons Martin.

Isaac Parsons Martin from infancy was reared in the home of his grandfather, Buckner Fairfax. His grandparents took great pains with his early training and gave him the advantages of the common schools. For a time he was in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and some of his earlier years were spent on the farm in Dunkard Bottom on Cheat River. After his marriage he established his residence at Terra Alta, but a few years later went back to Dunkard Bottom, and continued farming there until he moved to Kingwood. He was owner of many thousands of acres of land, and some of this brought him wealth because of the coal deposits. At Kingwood he erected a three-story brick business house, in which he and his older son conducted a hardware store. Isaac Parsons Martin was closely associated with the life and affairs of Preston County until his death, which occurred May 25, 1920. On July 21, 1881, at Grafton, he married Nannie Stanton, of Jefferson County, Ohio, who died April 6, 1919. She was a daughter of H. B. and Mary A. (Kimball) Stanton. H. B. Stanton was born in Warren County, Pennsylvania, January 31, 1820, was a boat builder and a soldier in the Civil war, and died July 28, 1864. Isaac Parsons Martin had two sons. The older, Earl Fairfax, born August 25, 1882, died in Philadelphia, February 20, 1920, while in the shipbuilding yards of the American Shipbuilding Company. He married Jessie B. Higgins on September 1, 1909.

The only surviving heir of I. Parsons Martin and wife is John Russell Martin, who was born October 24, 1890. He was reared at Kingwood, educated in the public schools there, and for a time was in the employ of the West Virginia-Maryland Gas Company at Rowlesburg. Returning to Kingwood in 1917, he engaged in the life insurance business as the agent of the Equitable Life of New York, also has the agency for the Wills-Knight car, and these with the supervision of his estate of lands and other properties constitute a very busy program. He is also one of the stockholders of the Bank of Kingwood. Mr. Martin is a Scottish Rite Mason, and he and his family are Presbyterians, which was the faith of his father's people, though his mother was of a Baptist family.

May 10, 1910, John Russell Martin married Miss Jean Brown. Their interesting family of young children are Jean Louisa, born September 11, 1911; Frederick Fairfax, born October 12, 1913; Elinor Brown, born December 14, 1916; and John Russell, Jr., born November 30, 1920.

J. Y. HAMILTON. A wide diversity of affairs, participation in movements connected with the community welfare as well as in business, and a thoroughly trustworthy character and personal popularity have made J. Y. Hamilton, of Fairview, one of the best-known men of Marion County.

He was born on a farm on Salt Run, near Mannington, November 22, 1864, son of Francis and Luvinia (Barker) Hamilton. He is descended from a branch of the Hamilton family that was represented in the American Revolution, and soon after that war was established in Western Virginia. His great-grandfather was Boaz Hamilton, who pioneered in the locality around Fairmont. His grandfather was Fleming Hamilton, who was born on Hamilton Hill at Fairmont and was one of the prominent men of his time, serving a number of years as county clerk. Francis Hamilton was born on Ices Run, near Fairmont, in 1831, and died at Fairview in 1910. He removed from the farm in 1865 to Mannington, where for a number of years he was engaged on his own account as a carpenter, cabinet maker, furniture manufacturer and coffin maker. He was a first-class mechanic and made himself an indispensable factor in the community. In 1878 he removed from Mannington to Fairview, where he remained the rest of his years. His wife, Luvinia, was born at Flat Run, near Mannington, in 1833 and died in 1920. Her father was Aaron Barker, one of the older families of Marion County. Francis Hamilton and wife were members of the Methodist Church.

J. Y. Hamilton grew up at Mannington until his fourteenth year, and since then his home and interests have been centered at Fairview. At the age of sixteen he was fireman in a sawmill, a year later he was put in charge of a saw and remained with the mill for three years. For another two years he operated the combination grist and sawmill, and for three years was on a farm. Returning to Fairview, he was employed in the sawmill a year and in 1895, at the opening of the Fairview Oil District, he began teaming, his outfit at the beginning consisting of a single team. He gradually extended his operations until he was a teaming contractor, and at the end of three years he had ten fine teams and all the other equipment, which he sold. In 1897 he opened a small grocery store at Fairview, and gradually expanded the scope of his business until it represented a large general store, including furniture and undertaking. He was active head of this enterprise for twenty years, and when he sold it he was out of active business for about a year, but he still carries on the undertaking department. In the meantime he began operating in real estate, making a specialty of buying farms, improving and re-selling them. He also kept some of his capital invested in the teaming business, owning about thirty teams, and this department of his business was looked after by his nephew.

In 1920 with his son-in-law, J. E. Sutton, and E. R. Montgomery, both contractors, Mr. Hamilton organized the Marion Construction Company, buying the Haynes Company's planing mill at Fairview. In the fall of 1920 this company, of which Mr. Hamilton is president and manager, built over a hundred houses. For the last eight years he has been vice president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fairview, is president of the Fairmont Builders Supply Company, and has other investments in different sections of Marion County. He was one of the six men who were the original promoters of the Electric Railway from Fairview to Fairmont. Mr. Hamilton also has been the builder of more than one-fourth of the business houses and dwellings in Fairview. When he made his entry into Fairview it had a population of seventy-five people, while now (1922) it has more than one thousand population. He served as postmaster at Fairview for more than three years, under President Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. Hamilton in 1920 was candidate for the democratic nomination for sheriff, but was defeated in the primaries, though he received almost the unanimous vote of the Fairview District. For a number of years he was a member of the Town Council. He and the family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South and he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1854 Mr. Hamilton married Miss Emma J. Amos, daughter of P. B. Amos, member of a leading pioneer family of Marion County. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton have a family of seven children: Carley F., born in 1885, is now in business at Clarksburg, married Mollie Tennant, daughter of J. L. Tennant, and they have a son, Joseph. Etta Agnes, born in 1887, is the wife of M. J. Lynch, of Clarksburg, and their three sons are Bernell, Arthur and Albert Carl. Ossa Gail, born in 1890, is the wife of J. E. Sutton, of Fairmont, and their children are Eugene, Maxwell and Emma Jane. Monroe, born in 1894, is associated with his father in business. He married Grace Snodgrass, and is the father of three children, John; Bettie; and Monroe, Jr. Everett H., born in 1896, lives at Clarksburg and married Madeline Fleming. The two younger children, Verda and Fern, are both at home.

JACOB SPIKER. The career of Jacob Spiker of Preston County has been one of honorable industry based primarily on agriculture, and in later years involving banking and other business connections and an active part in the affairs of his home community of Masontown.

Mr. Spiker was born near Brandonville in Preston County, July 26, 1847. His grandfather, Michael Spiker, was of German ancestry, lived the greater part of his life in Maryland, and died and was buried in the Morgan Glade settlement of Preston County, on the Ringer farm. His children were: John, Henry, George, Mrs. Barbara McElroy of Ohio, Mrs. Ann Ridenour of Pomeroy, Ohio, Sarah Easterday of Ohio; and Samuel, the youngest son, who lived in Ohio for several years and then moved out to Kansas.

George Spiker, father of Jacob, was born on George's Creek, near Frostburg, Maryland, about 1812, grew up as a farmer and when a young man settled in Pennsylvania, and from that time until his death, about 1889, lived on the farm he first purchased in the Brandonville locality. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married in Preston County Nancy DeBerry. Her father, Archibald DeBerry, of French ancestry, was the first to establish a home in the Brandonville locality. Nancy DeBerry, who died before her husband, was the mother of the following children: Jonathan, who was in the State Militia at the time of the Civil war and spent his active life at Brandonville; Jonas, also a member of the State Militia, was a farmer and a resident of the Hazelton locality of Preston County; Hester Ann, who died unmarried; Jacob; Mary Catherine, who died unmarried; Sarah Ellen, who became the wife of Wesley Ringer and lives at Morgan Glade in Preston County; Henry, of Morgantown; George E., who occupies the old homestead of his father at Brandonville; and Emma, wife of John Ringer, living in the Morgan Glade community.

Jacob Spiker grew up on the farm where he was born, and his advantages were confined to the subscription school maintained a few months each year in his locality. He first earned a living by work as a farm hand at wages of $16 a month, that being the highest price then paid for farm labor. He continued working out until he was twenty-four. He returned to the home locality and with his brother bought 100 acres for $800. He subsequently bought a second farm in the same locality, and lived there until about 1895. After selling his land near Brandonville Mr. Spiker bought a farm in Valley District, near Masontown, and it was on that farm that he lived and labored until he relinquished the burdens of agriculture. He sold his farm in 1908, and since then has lived in Masontown. He was one of the original stockholders of the Bank of Masontown and is now a member of its Board of Directors.

Mr. Spiker first voted for president for Horatio Seymour in 1863, and supported every succeeding national ticket except when Bryan was a candidate. He has been mayor of Masontown, a commissioner of elections for his district, and has been one of the election officials for more than a quarter of a century.

Mr. and Mrs. Spiker are Baptists in religious faith, but a number of years ago they helped build the Dunkard Church near Brandonville, and they also contributed to the erection of the Methodist house of worship in Masontown.

At Brandonville, October 14, 1880, Mr. Spiker married Elizabeth A. Herring. She was born near Masontown, June 29, 1853, daughter of Joseph and Eleanor (Jeffers) Herring. Her grandfather, George Herring, came from Bedford County, Pennsylvania, to Preston County about the opening of the War of 1812, and established his home in Pleasant District of what was then Monongalia County. Late in life he moved to Valley District, where he died. He married a member of the Sell family of Preston County, and she died about 1880. They had a large family, and several of them reached extreme age: Daniel, who died when about ninety-five; Sarah, who was the wife of Zarr Kelley and died when past ninety-five; Henry, a farmer, who died at the age of seventy-five; Elizabeth, who was the wife of Amos Moyers and died when about forty years of age; George W., who lived beyond the age of three score and ten; Samuel, who died exceptionally early, at the age of forty-five, of typhoid fever; and Susan, who was the wife of Joseph DeBerry and died when about ninety.

Joseph Herring, father of Mrs. Spiker, was born in Maryland in 1822, and died on his farm in the Valley District of Preston County at the age of fifty-six. He was a democrat and a Baptist. He married Eleanor Jeffers, whose father, Joseph Jeffers, came from old Virginia to Preston County. Eleanor Herring died in 1862, mother of the following children: Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Spiker; Mary J., Mrs. A. J. Feather, living near Bowling Green, Missouri; Melissa, wife of O. C. Carroll, of Kingwood District; George Allen, a Preston County business man; Aleinda, who was the wife of J. M. Strahin and died in Pike County, Missouri; and Elma, wife of H. D. Carroll, of Masontown. Joseph Herring's second wife was Phoebe Spurgeon, and the four children of that union are: Jesse Wilbur of Masontown; Kim, who died at Morgantown; Belle, Mrs. J. J. Fields, of Valley District; and Priscilla, Mrs. U. G. Watson, of Masontown.

The children of Jacob Spiker and wife were: Claude Carl, mentioned below; Ivy May, born October 15, 1885, and died at the age of twelve years; Wilbur Orr, born July 24, 1887, died November 27, 1914, having been a school teacher and later a linotype operator; Elma Etta, born February 25, 1890, wife of Ralph Erhard, of Thomas, West Virginia, and mother of two children, Ralph, Jr., and Anna Martha; and Joseph Delmer, born November 28, 1891, and died October 4, 1910.

Claude C. Spiker, oldest child of Jacob Spiker, is one of West Virginia's most prominent educators. He graduated from the West Liberty State Normal School, took his A. B. and A. M. degrees from the state university, and after teaching for a time went abroad to study French and Spanish. After his return he became a member of the faculty of the University of Delaware, and during the war was in Y. M. C. A. work in Europe for a year. On his return he resumed teaching for one year as instructor in romance languages at Franklin, Indiana, and then returned to his alma mater at Morgantown, where he is instructor in romance languages. Claude C. Spiker married Miss Mabel McMillen, who was born in Preston County and reared in Masontown, being a daughter of A. F. McMillen. Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Spiker have a son, Robert Claude.

ROBERT EDWARD LEE ALLEN. No matter how peacefully inclined and law-abiding a community may be, causes of litigation will arise and legal authority must be consulted, and at Morgantown, West Virginia, a name and personality that stands for able and honorable professional service is that of Robert Edward Lee Allen, a prominent member of the Monongalia County bar. Mr. Allen has always maintained his professional home in this county, where he has important real estate interests, and to some extent is interested in politics.

Robert Edward Lee Allen was born at Lima, Tyler County, West Virginia, November 28, 1865, a son of Osburn and Jane (Langfitt) Allen, with a long line of sturdy American ancestors behind them. Osburn Allen was born in 1826 in that part of Harrison County that is now included in Doddridge County, West Virginia, and died at Lima, West Virginia, in November, 1909. He was a son of Joshua Allen, and a grandson of Barnes Allen, who was the original settler of the family in Harrison County, to which section he had come from Vermont, a member of the same family was Gen. Ethan Allen, commander of the "Green Mountain Boys" in the Revolutionary war. Osburn Allen married Jane Langfitt, who was born in 1826, at Pughtown, near what is now New Cumberland, Hancock County, West Virginia, and died in 1899. Her parents were John and Martha Langfitt, natives of Hancock County.

It is to be regretted, in the interests of accurate historical work, that many pioneer families of this and other sections have permitted the loss of their early records, and Mr. Allen may be congratulated that he has had preserved to him interesting family data illustrating conditions of life on the frontier in early days that will be equally interesting to the general reader. These records have to do with the times when the Indians were a common and constant menace to the settler, who often was but illly prepared for the attacks of the savages. On one occasion William Langfitt, the great-grandfather of Mr. Allen on the maternal side, was returning from the nearest grist mill, some distance from his home, in company with two other settlers. Mr. Langfitt was riding a horse and carrying the bags of flour, but his neighbors were on foot. A party of savages attacked them, killing the men on foot and scalping them, and then turned on Mr. Langfitt and wounded him seven times before he let the bags of grist fall to the ground and escaped by giving free rein to his horse. This attack occurred at a point where now stands the Pitt Hotel in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Barnes Allen, the paternal great-grandfather, also had thrilling experiences. At one time, when the family home was a cabin on West Fork River near Clarksburg, he started out to round up his wandering cattle, after seeing that his wife and two children were shut up in the cabin. Just as Mrs. Allen had succeeded in barring the front door of the cabin a party of Indians attempted to enter, and when they found that impossible applied a torch to the building and while they were so fiendishly engaged Mrs. Allen and her children managed to escape through a back entrance, fled into the woods and climbed a tree, the branches of which concealed them effectively. When Mr. Allen returned he saw the savages leaving with his cabin home in flames, and as he frantically investigated and found no trace of his family he believed them to have been incinerated. Overcome by grief he scarcely knew what next to do, when, all at once he heard a bird call that was familiar, it being in the nature of a secret code between himself and wife, and after some cautious searching he located the tree in the branches of which his family was secreted. All together they hastened to the nearest fort and remained under protection with the families of other settlers until a condition of comparative safety in that region again prevailed. In the enjoyment of the comforts and blessings of modern times it is well, perhaps, to sometimes look backward and remember the debt that civilization owes to the pioneers.

Robert E. L. Allen was reared on his father's farm and in boyhood attended the free schools in the neighborhood. Afterward he spent three years at the Fairmont Normal School and one year in Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee. He graduated with the degree of A. B., in the class of 1894, from the University of West Virginia, and with the class of 1895 with his degree of LL. B. Prior to this and afterward he taught school for a time, but in 1905 was admitted to the Monongalia County bar, and with the exception of about four years, between 1917 and 1921, when he served as deputy collector of internal revenue, he has been in active practice in this county. On October 1, 1921, he was appointed by the City Council as city magistrate or police judge, a position he is capably filling in the faithful discharge of his duties. Ever since the organization of the county he has been a member of the Monongalia County Bar Association.

On January 19, 1893, Mr. Allen married Miss Catherine N. Protzman, who was born in Monongalia County and is a daughter of the late Col. William I. and Ann (Gantz) Protzman. They have four children: R. Ethan Allen, Anna J., Mary Rosamond and Mildred Rebecca. R. Ethan Allen was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, June 22, 1897, and now resides with his family at Los Angeles, California, having married Miss Catherine Virginia Scott, of Charleston, West Virginia. He was graduated from the University of West Virginia with his S. A. E. degree in 1920, and taught agricultural engineering in the university from then until January 1, 1921, when he accepted his present important post of geological engineer for the Pacific Coast Oil Company. Anna J. Allen, the eldest daughter, was born in Monongalia County, August 18, 1900, and is a member of the senior (1922) class, West Virginia University. Mary Rosamond Allen was born January 28, 1905, was graduated from the Morgantown High School in 1921, and is a student in the university. Mildred Rebecca, the youngest of the family, born at Morgantown, March 29, 1907, and is a student in the City High School. Mr. Allen and his family are members of the Baptist Church, and all are factors in the city's pleasant social life. Mr. Allen has recently sold his two farms in Monongalia County, but still owns a valuable farm situated in Tyler County, and in a business way is interested in both city and county realty. He is one of the county's representative business and professional men.

SIDNEY M. BERNARD is the progressive secretary and general manager of the Huff, Andrew & Thomas Wholesale Grocery Company at Bluefield, Mercer County, and his civic loyalty is on a parity with the business ability that has here secured his advancement and success.

Mr. Bernard was born at Union Hall, Virginia, on the 4th of February, 1874, and is a son of William Penn Bernard and Virginia Ann (Newbill) Bernard, both likewise natives of the historic Old Dominion State, where the respective families were early founded. William P. Bernard long held prestige as a representative farmer in Virginia, where he specialized in the raising of leaf tobacco, and where he was influential in community affairs of public order. Both he and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he served many years as a steward.

The public schools of his native place afforded Sidney M. Bernard his early education, which was supplemented by his attending the high school at Stuart, Virginia, until 1892. In that year he became billing clerk in the wholesale grocery establishment of the Huff, Andrew & Thomas Wholesale Grocery Company at Bluefield, West Virginia, and by effective service he worked up through the various departments until he became secretary and manager of the company, of which dual office he has continued the vigorous and efficient incumbent to the present time. Mr. Bernard is one of the vital and progressive members of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, is a democrat in politics, and is affiliated with both the Yerk and Scottish Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity. He and his wife are zealous members of the local Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he is a trustee of the M. and H. College, which is maintained under the general auspices of this religious denomination.

In 1904 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Bernard and Miss Nannie Coleman McCulloch, daughter of John R. and Cornelia (Basham) McCulloch, both natives of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Bernard have three children: Sidney M., Jr., Virginia Cornelia and Margaret Frances.

JOHN A. MICHAEL. In the history of the settlement and development of West Virginia one of the old and honored family names is that of Michael, the members of which family have distinguished themselves in various ways, in business, farming, the professions and good citizenship. A worthy representative of the younger business generation who bears this name is John A. Michael, manager of the Petersburg branch of the Piedmont Wholesale Grocery Company. While listed among the more recent gainers of successful commercial rank, he is well qualified for the position which he holds, the responsibilities of which he is discharging in a thoroughly capable manner.

Mr. Michael was born at Davis, Tucker County, West Virginia, March 10, 1891, and is a son of John Adam and Cornelia (Keller) Michael. His father was born near Westport, Maryland, and as a young man adopted the vocation of engineer, which he followed throughout his life. He was located at various times in numerous communities in Maryland and West Virginia, and his last work was done for the Western Maryland Company. He was a man of progressive spirit and enterprise, and would doubtless have achieved a marked success in life had he been spared, but death called him when he was only thirty-eight years of age, in 1897, when his son was but six years old. Mr. Michael was a democrat in politics, but never sought public office or cared for active participation in political affairs. He was trusted by his employers and respected by his associates, and by all was known as a man of honor and integrity. He married Miss Cornelia Keller, a daughter of Adam Keller, who, like the Michaels, was of German descent. For many years Mr. Keller was a locomotive engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, but is now retired from active labor and a resident of Keyser, West Virginia. During the Civil war he fought gallantly as a soldier of West Virginia Infantry in the Union army. John Adam and Cornelia (Keller) Michael were the parents of the following children: Lillie, the wife of Charles Kight, of Piedmont, West Virginia; John Adam, of this review; and Walter, the rover of the family, who is now a resident of Nebraska.

John Adam Michael, the younger, had not yet reached six years of age when the family was deprived of the father's support, and his widowed mother moved to the home of her father at Keyser, West Virginia. There the public schools gave him a somewhat limited educational training, as he was only eleven years of age when he gave up his studies in order to start upon an independent career and to contribute to his own support. His first employment was as an office boy in the service of the Piedmont Grocery Company at Piedmont, whither his mother had moved from Keyser. He proved enterprising, faithful and capable, and won the attention of his employers, who promoted him to the position of being in charge of one of the floors of the establishment. Subsequently he was made shipping clerk, and when he was but seventeen years of age he was given further responsibilities, remarkable for one of his youth, when he was made a traveling representative on the road for his concern. He followed the road as a salesman for a period of eight years, being retained as the relief man for the house, covering the territories of all the regular salesmen during their vacations or when they were absent through sickness or any other cause. In this position, as in all the others which he had held, he "made good" in every particular, and when the opportunity presented itself his hard and faithful work was rewarded by his appointment, in 1916, as manager of the Petersburg branch of the company, to succeed Mr. Carlson, who had been called else where. This branch was established at Petersburg with the coming of the railroad and has been built up into a large and successful establishment. Under Mr. Michael's energetic management it has increased its score and is now accounted a necessary commercial adjunct to a large territory in Grant and adjoining counties. Mr. Michael has given his time and attention to the work at hand, and no community matter other than the public interest during the World war has been allowed to take his interest from business affairs. However, he possesses a good citizen's public spirit, and lends his moral and financial support to those movements which promise to be beneficial to the community at large. He came to manhood without adherence to any political faith, and is inclined to act independently in casting his ballot, but in national affairs generally votes for the democratic candidates. His religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

At Barton, Maryland, June 28, 1919, Mr. Michael was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Kallaugh Foy, a daughter of Frank and Lyde (Kallaugh) Foy, the two families being also of German descent and from the Alle-gany Mountain region of Maryland, where both are well and favorably known. Mr. Foye spent some years in mining coal in Maryland, but during recent years has been an employe of the Willard Storage Battery Company at Cleveland, where he and Mrs. Foye now make their home. They have been the parents of the following children: John, whose death occurred at Blaine, West Virginia; Gertrude, who is the wife of Harry Seaber, of Westernport, Maryland; Benjamin, a resident of Albright, West Virginia; Ethel, who is the wife of Watson Ross, of Westernport, Maryland; Ella, who is the wife of Oscar Dunn, of Cleveland, Ohio; Elizabeth Kalbaugh, now Mrs. John A. Michael, who was born at Barton, Maryland, November 25, 1892; Persis, who is the wife of Curry Reedy, a resident of Cleveland; Ruth, who is married and resides in Cleveland; and Ensley, who resides at the home of his parents in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Michael are the parents of three children: Louise, Edwin and John Adam, Jr. The family home is a pleasant one, and is always kept open to the numerous friends of Mr. and Mrs. Michael, both of whom are greatly popular at Petersburg.

THOMAS O'J. WILSON grew up at Bluefield, entered business here soon after leaving school, and for several years has conducted one of the leading real estate organizations in this section of the state.

Mr. Wilson was born at Radford, Virginia, February 1, 1890, and his ancestors for several generations have lived in Virginia. His grandfather Wilson served in the Hospital Corps of the Confederate army during the Civil war. Thomas J. Wilson has for a number of years been in the Motive Power Department of the Norfolk & Western Railway, having charge of a coaling station. Thomas O'J. Wilson was a small boy when his parents located at Bluefield, where he attended the common schools and in 1909 graduated from the Bluefield Normal School and Business College. After leaving school until 1914 he was associated with the Hale Land Company at Bluefield, and in the latter year removed to Roanoke, Virginia, and for a year acted as sales manager for the Columbia Trust Company. On returning to Bluefield he organized the Easley & Wilson Real Estate Company, and as secretary and general manager has constituted this a real and indispensable service to the entire commercial community. The company does a large business as brokers and general sales agents for Bluefield properties and real estate throughout Mercer County. Mr. Wilson knows values in real estate, and his painstaking work has entitled him to the confidence so liberally bestowed upon his organization.

In 1911, at Bluefield, Mr. Wilson married Miss Jeanne Blandford, daughter of David and Sarah Blandford, natives of Virginia. They have one daughter, Betty Jeanne Wilson. Mr. Wilson is a member of the Baptist Church, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of the Elks, the Bluefield Country Club, and belongs to the Bluefield Rotary Club and is chairman of boys' work.

GEORGE STEWART STRADER has been a resident of Bluefield for thirty years, and in that time has been a merchant, banker and coal operator, and is one of the executive officials in several of the mining corporations whose headquarters are in this important commercial city of Southern West Virginia.

Mr. Strader is a native of old Virginia and a great-grandson of Adam Strader, who was born in Pennsylvania about 1770 and in 1800 transferred his residence to an old plantation district of North Carolina, Alamance County, where he lived out his life and reared a family of five sons and five daughters. John Strader, grandfather of the Bluefield business man, was born in Alamance County in 1804, and in 1844 moved with his family to Giles County, Virginia. He died in 1877. His wife was Catherine Harvey.

Josiah Strader, father of George S. Strader, was born in North Carolina in 1830, and was fourteen years of age when the family moved to Giles County. In 1853, a youth eager for adventure and excitement, he crossed the western plains with a wagon train and spent three years looking for gold along the Columbia River in Oregon. He returned to Giles County in 1856, by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and resumed farming. At the outbreak of the Civil war he became a private soldier in the Quartermaster's Department of Gen. Jubal Early's Division. With the end of the war he returned to his home farm and lived in Giles County until his death in 1905. In 1857 he married Barbara C. Johnson, daughter of John Johnson, of Giles County. They became the parents of ten children: John A., farmer and real estate dealer at Ottumwa, Iowa; Dr. Harvey W., a physician at Sacramento, California; S. J., a farmer in Giles County; Mrs. H. L. Phlegar, of Giles County; Rev. Tyler D., of the Holston Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mrs. H. B. Shelton, of Giles County; George Stewart; Mrs. L. J. Johnston, of Bluefield; William E., a merchant of Sacramento, California; and Mrs. Fred Scott of Giles County.

George S. Strader was born near Pearisburg, Virginia, March 2, 1870, and was reared on his father's farm. He attended the grade schools and high school in his native county, and his commercial training was acquired as clerk in a general store. At the age of twenty he opened a store of his own at Graham, Virginia, but a year later came to Bluefield, West Virginia. Here he became a factor in the commercial affairs of a town just getting into a place of promise through the railroad and industrial development here. For several years he continued merchandising, and then became interested in real estate and banking. Since 1899 Mr. Strader has had his capital and enterprise engaged in the mining and shipping of coal.

Mr. Strader is a member of the Masonic Order and is a democrat. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is interested not only in the progress of his church, but in all movements for the better social and religious uplift. The State of West Virginia voted statewide prohibition at the 1912 election. Mr. Strader was a member of the state executive committee, and regards the state and national prohibition movement the greatest and most permanent ever made along civic lines.

On October 10, 1901, he married Miss Dillie Jeter, who was born in Botetourt County, near Roanoke, Virginia, July 1, 1872, daughter of Dr. Benjamin and Susan (Bonsack) Jeter. Her father, who died in 1903, was a very successful physician in Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Strader have three children: George S., Jr., born February 4, 1903; Benjamin Jeter, born June 16, 1904; and William Robinson, born January 19, 1909.

BERNARD McCLAUGHERTY. During the past half century no name has enjoyed greater distinction in the legal profession of Mercer County than McLaugherty. Bernard McLaugherty, of the law firm McLaugherty and Richardson at Bluefield, is a son of the late Judge Robert C. McLaugherty, whose career expressed everything that was noble and useful in the legal profession. Bernard McLaugherty besides an extensive law practice is president of the Commercial Bank of Bluefield, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and has been a leader in every commercial and civic development in Bluefield for the past twenty years.

He is descended from an old Scotch family which in 1688 left Scotland and settled in County Down, Ireland. From Ireland James McLaugherty came to America in 1786, locating at Sweet Springs in what is now Monroe County, West Virginia. He married Agnes McGarre. Their son, James McLaugherty, Jr., was a man of most substantial character, noted as a peacemaker, and was appointed executor for many estates. He married Sallie Mullins.

John McLaugherty, grandfather of Bernard McLaugherty, was an extensive land owner and slave holder, and the last of his slaves, George Boxter, died only a few years ago. All the slaves were devoted to the family. John McLaugherty married Phoebe Hale, daughter of a prominent West Virginia pioneer, Capt. Edward Hale. John McLaugherty and wife had six sons, John, Joseph H., Nelson H., Edward, D. W. and Robert C., besides several daughters. Four of these sons were in the Confederate army, Joseph, John, Edward and Nelson. Edward was appointed a lieutenant at the age of seventeen, and lost his life in battle the following year.

Chas. Goodwin

Judge Robert C. McLaugherty was born near Princeton, West Virginia, April 7, 1850. He was the youngest among number of children, and though the family enjoyed more an ordinary material circumstances and had educational traditions, the conditions resulting from the Civil war did permit him to go to college as his older brothers had one. Much of his education was acquired by diligent reading at home by the light of a pine knot torch. Intellectual curiosity was one of his notable characteristics, and it never deserted him, carrying him far afield in the domain of knowledge, and it is said that his proficiency in Latin and Greek was excelled by few college graduates. He particularly enjoyed the resources of an extensive library which he accumulated, and he recognized nearly every book in it as an old friend. For two years he taught school, and at the age of twenty began the study of law with James D. Johnston at Pearisburg, Virginia. At the age of twenty one he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Princeton. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Mercer County in 1876, but so far as possible he confined his work within the strict limits of his profession and eventually he was recognized as one of the foremost lawyers in the southern part of the state. In 1888 he was elected judge of the Circuit Court for the Eighth Judicial District, but declined another nomination from his party. Before going on the bench he was a law partner of Dr. James W. Hale, and after retiring he devoted himself to his practice and a number of enterprises in which he was interested. Death came to him at his home in Bluefield, February 18, 1909, when he had just attained the summit of his professional career. Outside of his profession his chief interest was his home, though he was regular in his attendance and contributions to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to many causes of worthy charity.

June 30, 1874, Judge McLaugherty married Susan Woods, of Giles County, Virginia, daughter of Hudson and Sallie (Jordan) Woods. Their children were: Bernard; Edna, wife of W. M. Cornett; R. Clarence; Trixy, wife of Frank M. Peters, present postmaster of Bluefield; and Ruth, wife of George Richardson, the law partner of her brother Bernard.

Bernard McLaugherty was born at Princeton March 27, 1875, and attended the grammar and high schools of Princeton and finished his literary education in Emory and Henry College and Roanoke College of Virginia. He graduated in law from the University of West Virginia in 1898, and at once joined his father in practice. In 1899 the family removed from Princeton to Bluefield, and the firm of R. C. & Bernard McLaugherty continued until the death of the senior partner in 1909. Among other important interests his firm represented the Virginian Railway Company during its unusual development and construction through the Virginias. On the death of his father Mr. McLaugherty was joined by F. M. Peters, later practiced with George A. Frick and John Kee, under the firm name of McLaugherty, Frick & Kee, but after 1910 he practiced alone until L. G. Scott and George Richardson became associated with him. The firm is now McLaugherty & Richardson, and among other interests they represent the Appalachian Power Company, the American Railway Express and the Norfolk & Western Railroad. Mr. McLaugherty has also a large general practice, and has frequently taken cases in order to secure justice where practically no remuneration was involved. He has been interested in several financial and business corporations, as well as to represent others as attorney. He is chairman of Group 5 of the State Bankers Association. During the World War Mr. McLaugherty was chairman of the loan campaigns in Mercer County and gave much of his time to war work. He is a member of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity, the Bluefield Country Club, the Rotary Club, and has always been deeply interested in athletics. He is now president of the Board of Education and has done much to emphasize the importance of athletics as a feature of education. He and all his interesting family are members of the Presbyterian Church and Sunday school.

June 30, 1903, Mr. McLaugherty married Mary Archer Hooper, daughter of Maj. Henry R. Hooper, of Farmville, Virginia. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McLaugherty, and the four now living are Bernard, Jr., Jack, Elizabeth and Henry Hooper.

CHARLES A. GOODWIN. One of the most forceful citizens of Morgantown, Charles A. Goodwin has always used his fine legal talents in the furtherance of what he has conceived to be for the best interests of the city, merging the two characters of citizen and lawyer into a high personal combination which has been generally recognized as an example well worthy of emulation. In whatever movement he has participated he has stimulated discussion and often bitter opposition, which, beside being a proof of his forceful personality, has, like the elements of an electric storm, resulted in the clarification of the atmosphere and redounded to the general good.

Mr. Goodwin was born at Morgantown, November 19, 1869, and is in the third generation of his family in Monongalia County. His grandfather, Samuel Goodwin, the elder, who settled in this county in the latter part of the nineteenth century, married Eleanor (McBee) Workman. Samuel Goodwin, the younger, son of the pioneer Samuel, was born in Monongalia County and became a business man of Morgantown, where for many years he was at the head of a large foundry business and later a traveling salesman for a leading oil company. During the war between the North and the South he enlisted and served in Company A, First Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry. He was born in 1840 and died November 25, 1908. Mr. Goodwin married Jane C. Reay, daughter of George N. and Elizabeth Reay.

Charles A. Goodwin, son of Samuel and Jane C. (Reay) Goodwin, was primarily educated in the public schools of Morgantown, and subsequently attended the University of West Virginia, which he first entered in 1886, spent one year, and then accompanied his parents to Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Returning to the university in 1893, he was graduated from its law department with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1895. In the same year he was admitted to the bar of West Virginia and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession at Morgantown. In 1900 he was elected prosecuting attorney for Monongalia County, and his first term of service presented such an excellent record that he was re-elected to succeed himself, and remained in that office for two full terms, later acting also as city solicitor for several years.

Mr. Goodwin has been active in civic affairs for several years, and has taken a prominent part in the different movements inaugurated for the improvement and welfare of the city. He has been especially active in those movements promulgated to guard the city rights from encroachment by the corporations behind the city utilities, such as the street railways fares, the cost of gas to consumers and the fight for a new city charter in 1921 in which he was particularly conspicuous. Mr. Goodwin has proven himself absolutely at home in the court room and familiar with its every detail. He has at his finger tips every intricacy of practice and is never at a loss as to which course to pursue. While open and above board himself, he knows how to meet trickery, and his faculty of anticipating and forestalling a move of his opponents has been freely commented upon and greatly appreciated by his adherents.

Aside from his profession Mr. Goodwin has few interests of a business nature save his connection with coal mining. In this industry he has important holdings, and is a director in the Brady Coal Company Corporation. He is an active member of the Monongalia County Bar Association and the West Virginia Bar Association, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He holds membership in the Sons of the American Revolution and in Morgantown Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In political allegiance he is an ardent republican and accounted one of the strong men of his party at Morgantown.

On April 17, 1902, Mr. Goodwin was united in marriage at Morgantown with Miss Frances Sophia Ross, who was born in Switzerland, the daughter of Swiss parents who died in the United States, To Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin there has come one son, George, who was born September 3, 1903.

THOMAS EDWARD PEERY, M. D., has been in practice as a physician and surgeon at Bluefield nearly a quarter of a century. His residence coincides with the important period in the growth and development of the city as a commercial center. Doctor Peery for a number of years has been a noted specialist, and his work has given him a position in the front rank in this state of men who confine their practice entirely to the eye, ear, nose and throat.

Doctor Peery was born in Southwestern Virginia, in Tazewell County, November 1, 1873. Seven days later his mother died, and he was taken to Burkes Garden, Virginia, and reared by his uncle Stephen Peery's widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Repass Peery. He acquired his early education in the Academy at Graham, Virginia, and at Roanoke College, and later, in April, 1892, was graduated from the Commercial College of Kentucky University. In the fall of 1892 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he graduated in the spring of 1895. Doctor Peery immediately registered in West Virginia on his diploma, and after passing the Virginia State Board at Richmond began general practice at Pearisburg, Virginia. A few months later, in December, 1895, he left Pearisburg and traveled through Florida and the western states. While in the West he was licensed to practice medicine by the state boards of Utah and California. Returning to his former home at Burkes Garden, Doctor Peery decided to take special work in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases. To that end he entered the New York Polyclinic, the Northwestern Throat and Nose Dispensary and the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital in New York City, where he remained two years. In November, 1897, he located at Bluefield, and since then has handled a great number of difficult cases in his special field and has a reputation extending out for hundreds of miles around Bluefield.

Doctor Peery is a member of the Mercer County Medical Society, West Virginia State Medical Society, Virginia State Medical Society, Southern Medical Association, Southern States Association of Railway Surgeons, American Medical Association, and the American Ophthalmological Society. He is oculist and otolaryngologist for the Norfolk & Western Railway Company, for the West Virginia State Compensation Commission at Bluefield, the Virginia State Compensation Commission, the Clinchfield Coal Corporation, Virginia Iron, Coal and Coke Company, and is expert examiner for the United States Pension Bureau and United States War Risk Insurance. During the war he was a member of the Medical Advisory Board as expert examiner in eye, ear, nose and throat conditions. Also in the line of his profession Doctor Peery teaches pupil nurses in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases at the Bluefield Sanitarium and St. Luke's Hospital, also at Bluefield.

Doctor Peery is a director in the Flat Top National Bank of Bluefield, is a member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, and is interested in several other corporations in that city. He is a member of the Royal Arch and Knight Templar Masons, the Mystic Shrine, the Elks, and is a Rotarian. He is a democrat in politics.

The Peery family is an old and honored one in Virginia, Doctor Peery representing the fifth generation. The first settlers were Scotch-Irish, who came from County Donegal and settled near Staunton in Augusta County, Virginia. Among these first settlers were Thomas, noted below; John, who died in Augusta County; George, who died at Augusta in 1802, last survivor of the first settlers, one of his sons removing to North Carolina and two to the southern part of Tennessee, their descendants being now found in Tennessee, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Texas; James, who removed to Botetourt County, Virginia, and probably died there, his children moving to Tazewell County and also to Tennessee and Kentucky; and William, probably the William Peery who was a member of the first Continental Congress from Delaware.

Thomas Peery, representing the family line including Doctor Peery, was a soldier in the Indian wars of 1742 as a member of Capt. John Wilson's Militia of Augusta County. Among his children were four sons, John, George, William and Thomas. John and George settled in Tazewell County, William was in the Clarke Expedition to the Northwest Territory, assisting in the capture of Vincennes and Kaskasia, and fought for the Colonies on the eastern slope of the Alleghenies, being present at Alamance, North Carolina, against Tarleton at King's Mountain under acting Capt. Reese Bowen, and died in Tazewell County in 1830.

Thomas, of the second generation, married Miss Denny and his children were: Jonathan, who married Miss Rolerts; James, who married Miss Gillespie; Joseph, who married Miss Gose; Harvey, who married Miss Williams; William, whose first wife was Miss Wynn and second, Miss Kincer; Pamela, who married a Wilson; Nancy, who married a Helms; Polly, who married a Peery; Rebecca, who married a Whitten; and Thomas, noted below.

Thomas Peery, of the third generation, was born November 10, 1786, and died February 17, 1872. He married Ann Gose, born in 1798 and died April 23, 1857. Their children constituting the fourth generation, were: Jesse, who married Angeline Mahood; Stephen, who married Elizabeth Repass; Margaret, who married Rev. J. J. Greever; Archibald, whose record follows; James, who married Miss Mar Spotts; Sophia, who married Elias Foglesong; Sallie, who married Jackson Muncey; Elizabeth, who married Isaac Hudson; and Thomas, who married Sarah Repass.

Archibald Peery, who was born August 9, 1828, was killed August 1, 1878, at the age of fifty. During the Civil war he held the rank of lieutenant in the Confederate army, and served throughout that struggle. Afterward he gained distinction as a lawyer, residing at Tazewell, and was the first prosecuting attorney for McDowell County, West Virginia, and for several years prosecuting attorney for Buchanan County, Virginia. He was a democrat and member of the Lutheran Church. May 23, 1872, he married Mary Elizabeth Daily, who was born January 27, 1855, and died in November, 1873, a few days after the birth of her only son, Thomas Edward.

Dr. Thomas Edward Peery on December 18, 1900, married Miss Emma Mildred Fulcher, of Staunton, Virginia. Their three children, constituting the sixth generation, are: Mildred, born April 2, 1902, Elizabeth, born August 4, 1903 and Virginia, born August 23, 1905.

GEORGE P. CROCKETT was admitted to the bar soon after reaching his majority. He entered the profession with singleness of aim, his primary ambition being to excel in the strict limits of the law, and he has never departed to any extent from that aim and has achieved a reputation as a lawyer of substantial attainments and is member of one of the prominent law firms of Mercer County, at Bluefield.

Mr. Crockett was born at Graham, Virginia, November 6, 1879, son of Robert G. and Margaret Eliza (Witten) Crockett. His parents were both born in Tazewell County, Virginia. The Crockett family is an old and well known one in Western Virginia and Tennessee, and it is said that three brothers came from either England or Scotland and settled in Western Virginia and Eastern Tennessee. Several of their descendants have since become well known in Southern West Virginia. Robert G. Crockett was a farmer and cattleman, a livestock dealer, and served two years as a Confederate soldier in General Fitzhugh Lee's cavalry. He was once wounded slightly in the leg, but fully recovered and after the war he was elected and served several years as sheriff of his county.

George P. Crockett acquired his early education in the Lutheran preparatory school known as Wartburg Seminary, which stood on the site now occupied by the Graham High School. In 1896 he entered the University of West Virginia and pursued his studies there in the academic and law departments until graduating in 1901. He was admitted to the bar the same year, and at once entered practice at Bluefield with his brother, Z. W. Crockett. The firm of Crockett & Crockett continued until 1907, in which year Judge John Sanders, on resigning from the Supreme Court, joined them, and since then Sanders & Crockett has been a law firm of great prestige and with a very important clientele in the southern part of the state. Mr. Crockett has never sought any of the advantages or emoluments of politics. He loves the law as a profession, is a deep and thorough student, and in his practice he has appeared before all the courts. He is a member of the County, State and American Bar associations.

Mr. Crockett, who is unmarried, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, belongs to the Kiwanis Club and to several civic organizations at Bluefield.

WILLIAM J. THOMAS, M. D., is one of the able physicians and surgeons prominently identified with mine practice in the coal districts of Logan County, where he has charge of such professional work for the Standard Island Creek Coal Company at Toplin, as does he also for the Guyan Valley Coal Company and the Low Ash Coal Company.

Doctor Thomas was born on his father's farm ten miles distant from Winfield, Putnam County, this state, October 22, 1872, and is a son of John C. and Roxie (Atkinson) Thomas, the latter being a first cousin of former Governor Atkinson and being now a resident of the City of Charleston, at the age of seventy-five years (1922). John C. Thomas, who died in 1906, at the age of fifty-nine years, was born in Kanawha County, and his wife was born in Ohio, at a point on the Ohio River just opposite Point Pleasant, West Virginia. John C. Thomas studied law under the protectorship of Judge Hoge at Winfield, and became one of the leading members of the bar of Putnam County, he having achieved special success as a criminal lawyer. In earlier years he had been a successful teacher and had also served as county superintendent of schools in Putnam County. He was an active worker in the ranks of the republican party and was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, as is also his widow. The Thomas family was founded in Kanawha County in the pioneer days, and John C. Thomas, great-grandfather of Doctor Thomas, was there serving as a member of the County Court at the time Putnam County was segregated and created an independent county. Doctor Thomas is the younger of the two sons in a family of five children, and his brother, Luther B., engaged in the mercantile business at Cannelton, Kanawha County.

The early education of Doctor Thomas was acquired in the schools of his native county, and as a youth he there made an excellent record as a teacher in the rural schools. After attending the University of West Virginia three years he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, in which he was graduated in 1892, his reception of the degree of Doctor of Medicine having occurred before he had attained to his legal majority. He established himself in practice at Plymouth, Putnam County, where he remained until 1907, and thereafter he was engaged in practice in the City of Charleston until 1913, when he became official physician and surgeon for the United States Coal & Oil Company at Holden, Logan County. Three years later he removed to Aceeville, Logan County, and from that place he came to Toplin, where he has since continued his successful service as mine physician for the companies mentioned in the opening paragraph of his review. He has taken four post-graduate courses in the medical department of Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, and he is a member of the Logan County and the West Virginia State Medical societies and the American Medical Association. At the time of the World War Doctor Thomas was commissioned a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States army, but was soon afterwards a victim of the influenza, after his recovery from which he found full demand upon his attention in treating others similarly afflicted, with the result that he was not otherwise called into active service. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery bodies of York Rite Masonry, as well as the Mystic Shrine, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church.

In 1899 Doctor Thomas married Miss Burton Carpenter, daughter of Thomas P. Carpenter, M. D., of Poca, Putnam County. Doctor and Mrs. Thomas have no children.

FRANK S. EASLEY is president and principal owner of the Bluefield Coal and Coke Company. This is one of the most substantial business corporations in West Virginia. For a number of years it has handled a large part of the valuable coal production in the famous Pocahontas fields. The company owns and operates coal properties of their own, but the chief business is wholesaling coal as sales agents for many groups of mines in the Pocahontas fields. The company has a capital and surplus of $200,000, and its annual business is valued at over $3,000,000. The executive personnel of the company is: Frank S. Easley, president; J. S. Hewitt, vice president; J. E. Anderson, secretary, and W. D. Cooper, treasurer.

Frank S. Easley has been identified with the coal industry for many years. He was born at Pearisburg, Virginia, August 3, 1878, son of John White and Elizabeth Boyd (Pack) Easley. His parents were natives of Virginia, and his father was a very able physician who practiced a number of years at Pearisburg and later moved to Bluefield, where he continued to carry the burdens of his profession until his death in 1909. He was a leader in civic affairs, at one time was clerk of his county in Virginia, was a Mason and was a lover of fine horses.

Frank S. Easley attended the common and high schools at Pearisburg, Virginia, took a normal course at Concord, Virginia, and then studied law, not with a view to qualifying for the profession but as a means of rounding out his general business education. He studied law in the law school of the University of the City of New York.

Mr. Easley became identified with the Pocahontas Fuel Company at Bluefield in 1906, and was with this corporation about eight years. Then, in 1914, he purchased a controlling interest in the Bluefield Coal and Coke Company. He is a director of the First National Bank of Bluefield and president of the Wright Milling Company of Bluefield.

In 1914, at Lynchburg, Virginia, Mr. Easley married Miss Elizabeth Tyler, daughter of Walker W. and Ella (Rucker) Tyler, natives of Virginia. Mr. Easley is a Baptist, is a past master of his Masonic Lodge, a member of the Royal Arch Chapter, is past eminent commander of the Knights Templar, a Shriner, and has also taken some of the Scottish Rite degrees. His favorite diversion is golf, and he is a familiar figure on the links of the Bluefield Country Club. He was one of the organizers of this club and a member of its board of governors. He also belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club, and as a business man of undoubted success, a forceful as well as a popular personality, he is one of the several men with home and interests at Bluefield who rank high among the men of affairs of West Virginia.

LONNIE G. BRAY has proved a forceful figure in connection with the coal-mining industry and also its commercial phases and is one of the prominent representatives of this important field of enterprise in West Virginia, with residence and business headquarters in the City of Williamson, Mingo County.

A scion of a family of Scotch lineage, that was early established in North Carolina, Mr. Bray was born in that state, on the 31st of March, 1883, a son of Henry Winston Bray and Frances Emily (Marley) Bray, both likewise natives of North Carolina, where the father continued his association with farm enterprise until 1895, when he came to West Virginia and became connected with the Pocahontas Coal Company, at Pocahontas, Virginia, from which place he removed with his family to Bramwell in the following year. Lonnie G. Bray left the Bramwell High School when twenty years of age and entered the employ of the Booth-Bowen Coal & Coke Company, as engineer on a mine loco motive. Later he became assistant mine foreman, and he continued in the employ of this company about six years. He next gave about four years of clerical service in the employ of the Caswell Creek Coal & Coke Company. He next became noteman and chairman for R. H. Stowe, mining engineer, and he was with the Pocahontas Consolidated Coal Company, at Switchback about three months. He continued in the same service at Williamson one year, and during the ensuing three years he was a mining contractor with the Williamson Coal & Coke Company. He then met with an accident that necessitated the amputation of his right leg, and after recuperating from his injury he became inspector for the State Mine Department for the Fourteenth District. After serving in this capacity seven months he purchased an interest in the Standard Thacker Coal Company, of which he became general manager, as did he also of the Burning Creek Coal Company. In 1920 Mr. Bray effected the incorporation of the Williamson Pond Creek Coal Sales Company, of which he is president and general manager and which he has developed into an important agency in handling mine products from this district. Mr. Bray was elected a member of the County Court of Mingo County, West Virginia, in 1920, and served as a commissioner one year, when he was appointed president of the court, January 1, 1922, for a term of six years. Mr. Bray is affiliated with York and Scottish Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity and the Mystic Shrine, as is he also with the Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the United Commercial Travelers. He and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At Bristol, Tennessee, in 1906, Mr. Bray married Miss Nora Blankenship, daughter of James and Easley (Shannon) Blankenship, of Bramwell, West Virginia, both having been born in Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Bray have five children: Lyda Virginia, Isabelle Frances, James Winston, Gladys and Madge.

ELBERT ROBERT MULLINS has found in his native county ample scope for effective achievement in connection with business affairs of important order, as is evident when it is stated that he is cashier of the Merchants & Miners Bank at Man, an important industrial village in Logan County. He was born on a farm on Coal River, near Sovereign, this county, March 4, 1888, and is a son of James D. and Mary Helen (Perry) Mullins, both likewise natives of this county. James D. Mullins died in April, 1898, at the age of fifty-eight years. His father, Hiram Mullins, was a pioneer farmer in Logan County, was influential in public affairs in his community and served many years as justice of the peace, besides which he was a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war. He was ninety years of age at the time of his death, and his widow attained to the age of ninety-six years. James D. Mullins was the owner of an excellent farm on Coal River, conducted a general store at Sovereign and there held the office of postmaster for a long term of years, his allegiance having been given to the republican party. His wife was born on a farm on which the Village of Stowe, Logan County, is now situated, and she now resides in the home of her son Elbert R., of this sketch, who is one of a family of five sons and five daughters and who served in the World war as a member of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, as did also his brother, Edgar E., who was a member of a headquarters artillery brigade and who saw active service on the battle front. James Perry, maternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was likewise a Union soldier in the Civil war, and the World war gave evidence that the ancestral military prestige was not lowered by representatives of the third generation of the Mullins and Perry families.

After receiving the advantages of the public schools Elbert R. Mullins was for one year a student in Marshall College. Thereafter he was employed by the Logan Coal Company and the Cleveland Cliffs Coal Company at Ethel, Logan County, where he remained three years, in the capacity of bookkeeper. He next became bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Logan, and while it was his desire to volunteer for service when the nation became involved in the World war, circumstances did not warrant this action, but in September, 1917, he realized his ambition, in being called into service on the first draft. He was sent to Camp Lee, Virginia, and thence to Bordeaux, France, where as a member of a battalion of heavy artillery he was for forty-nine days under fire at the Argonne Forest front. He escaped wounds and continued in active service in France one year and one day. After the close of active conflict, with the signing of the armistice, he returned to his native land, and at Camp Lee, Virginia, he received his honorable discharge, with the rank of corporal. Almost immediately after his return home Mr. Mullins became assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Logan, and upon the organization of the Merchants & Miners Bank at Man he was chosen its cashier, an office in which he is achieving splendid work in the upbuilding of the institution. He is a republican and is affiliated with the American Legion.

COSBY C. COOKE, engaged in coal mining and connected with several coal companies operating in West Virginia, was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, September 18, 1883, and is a son of John G. and Carrie C. (Crittenden) Cooke, both likewise natives of the historic Old Dominion State. The father was there a successful farmer, and his death occurred in 1921, when he was sixty-seven years of age. His widow is now a resident of Clifton Forge, Virginia. Of the seven children the subject of this review was the second in order of birth. William F., another of the sons graduated from Washington & Lee University in 1918, and is now (1922) chief engineer for the Red Jacket Coal Company in Mingo County, West Virginia.

Cosby C. Cooke supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, which he left in 1909. He thereafter was for one year a student in the historic old University of Virginia. After leaving the Polytechnic Institute he made his first appearance in the West Virginia coal fields and became associated with the American Coal Company at McComas, Mercer County. He was next connected with the land department of the Pocahontas Coal & Coke Company at Bramwell, and later was transferred to the company's offices at Bluefield. Thereafter he served as assistant engineer in construction work for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and it was after this service that he passed a year as a student in the University of Virginia. He then became chief engineer for the Lowmoor Iron Company at Lowmoor, Virginia, and in 1915 he came to Kay Moor, Fayette County, West Virginia, where for three years he was an executive in the coal department of the same company. For the ensuing three years he was superintendent of the Rita Mine of the Guyan Mining Company, and since that time he has been the efficient and popular superintendent of the Man Mining Company, his career having been one marked by consecutive advancement through loyal and effective service. He is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers and Metallurgists, is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and his wife holds membership in the Baptist Church.

The year 1917 recorded the marriage of Mr. Cooke and Miss Ella Carpenter Rupert, daughter of Dr. L. B. Rupert, of Kanawha County, West Virginia.

FLOYD D. STOLLINGS, who has been a prominent and influential figure in connection with the timber business in West Virginia and also in the handling of coal lands, has the distinction of maintaining his home in a town that was named in his honor, the attractive village of Stollings, Logan County. He was born near Chapmanville, this county, in January, 1853, and is a son of Nelson and Lurania (Workman) Stollings, the former of whom likewise was born near Chapmanville, and the latter of whom was born in Boone County, where her death occurred in 1890 and where her husband died in 1900, at the venerable age of eighty-four years. Josiah Stollings, grandfather of the subject of this review, owned large tracts of land near Chapmanville, and was one of the representative pioneers of Logan County. The Stollings came from North Carolina and were numbered among the first settlers in the Guyan Valley in what is now West Virginia. Abraham Workman, maternal grandfather of Mr. Stollings, likewise came to this section in an early day, his former home having been in North Carolina, near the Virginia line.

Nelson Stollings finally established his home on a farm in Boone County, about midway between Chapmanville and Madison, and he met with heavy property and financial losses at the time of the Civil war. He became a mail contractor, and transported mail from Logan to Charleston and also between Logan and Wayne, besides which he established a postoffice at Tracefork, a village now known as Manila, in Boone County. After the close of the war Nelson Stollings was prosperous in his activities as a farmer, trader and mail contractor. He was born in the year 1816 and his wife in 1821, both having been earnest members of the Missionary Baptist Church and his political allegiance having been given to the democratic party. Of their seven children Floyd D., of this sketch, is the only one now living. The oldest son, Thomas B., though under age at the time, enlisted for service as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war.

Floyd D. Stollings gained his early education in the schools of Logan and Boone counties, and his initial work of independent order was the service which he gave as postmaster at Tracefork. From 1874 to 1876, inclusive, he was in the panhandle district of Texas, and upon his return to West Virginia he engaged in the mercantile business in Boone County. He next turned his attention to the timber industry and instituted operations on Twelve Pole Creek and Guyandot River. He first bought poplar and walnut timber, which he would raft down to the Ohio River, down which stream the fleets of logs were towed by boats to market points. In his operations, which became of large scope, he maintained his headquarters at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, which was the headquarters for all of the old timber men operating on the Twelve Pole and the Guyandot rivers. Mr. Stollings has bought and sold many thousands of acres of timber and coal lands, has cut the timber from much land that he later sold to coal operators, and among his purchases was 500 acres where the village of Stollings is now situated, this town having been founded in 1900, which was named in his honor and to the development of which he has contributed in general measure, he having here established his home after many years' residence in Boone County. He is a democrat in political allegiance and his wife is a member of the Christian Church.

The year 1873 recorded the marriage of Mr. Stollings and Miss Luella A. Stone, daughter of the late William N. Stone, of Boone County. Of this union were born five sons and five daughters, two of the sons being deceased.

JOHN F. FERRELL. An interesting example of the power of hard work and continuous energy in molding the destiny of the individual and also of other persons and affairs around him is the career of John F. Ferrell, of Logan. The sphere of his activities has been the timber and lumber industry. There was probably no part of the heavy labor involved in logging among these West Virginia hills which escaped his early experience. It is literally true that he has come up from the ranks to the present responsibilities as general manager and one of the owners of the Logan Planing Mill, one of the largest industries of its kind in this part of the state.

Mr. Ferrell was born at his father's farm at Chapmanville, April 23, 1878, son of B. C. and Sarah (Dingess) Ferrell. His mother, who is still living, at the age of sixty-six, was born on Crawley Creek, six miles from Chapmanville, daughter of John Dingess, a native of the same locality who died while a soldier in the Confederate Army. At one time the Dingess family owned all the land from the present location of Logan to the mouth of Big Creek. B. C. Ferrell, who died in January, 1909, at the age of fifty-five, was born at Chapmanville, son of Samuel Ferrell, who came from Russell County, Virginia, in 1841, and acquired a large amount of valuable land in these valleys. The original homestead of the Ferrells is still owned in the family. Samuel Ferrell was opposed to slavery, was a consistent member of the Christian Church, and the camp meeting grounds of that denomination were on his land. He was a strong republican. B. C. Ferrell was a farmer, stock raiser and dealer, and before the days of railroads he drove his stock over the mountains to market in Roane County. He was a member of the Christian Church and was a democrat. Samuel Ferrell had a family of five sons and one daughter. Besides B. C., another son, Squire, died at the age of sixty years. The three living sons are O. F., L. B. and R. L., and the daughter, Nancy Jane, is the wife of John Godby, all prosperous farmers. B. C. Ferrell and wife had a large family of sons and daughters: John F., the oldest; Roxie, wife of O. C. Winter, of Huntington, a traveling salesman; W. V., at the old home place; Sarah Ann, who died at the age of fifteen; Wallace E., traveling representative for the Logan Planing Mill and a resident of Huntington; G. S., in the feed business at Chapmanville; Ruth, wife of E. L. Carter, a traveling salesman with home at Huntington; Mary, wife of A. S. Christian, living at the old Dingess place at the mouth of Crawley Creek; Della, wife of Kyler Porter, an operator for the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad at Chapmanville; Peter M., living with his mother at Chapmanville; and Julia, who died at the age of three.

John F. Ferrell grew up at Chapmanville, acquired his early schooling there, but his better education has been achieved since he married and is due to his application to business and also to studies taken up and carried on in the intervals of other work. He was only fifteen when he went to work in the timber, felling trees, sawing the logs, and his own labor has helped remove the timber from extensive portions from Elk Creek and Big Ugly Creek. Mr. Ferrell has owned probably twenty saw mills, and during the period of the great war he operated five mills of his own. The company owning and operating the Logan Planing Mill was organized January 11, 1916, and acquired the property formerly known as the Lawson Planing Mill. Mr. Ferrell from the first has been active manager of the plant. They are manufacturers of building material, consisting of yellow pine from the long leafed district of the South, fir and fruit from the Northwest, and also native timber. While much of the output is consumed locally, this is one of the firms that do a heavy export business, selling output as far away as Australia.

Mr. Ferrell while a member and chairman of the School Board in Chapmanville district was certainly responsible in no small degree for the fine schools established and maintained there. On May 9, 1899, at the age of twenty-one, he married Miss Della Garrett, daughter of Rev. W. G. Garrett, who was a widely known minister of the Christian Church in this section. Mr. and Mrs. Ferrell are the parents of eight children. The daughter Garrett is the wife of Walter T. Mitchell, an overseas veteran, and they are now at Prescott, Arizona, where Mr. Mitchell is recovering from illness contracted during the war. The other children are all in the home circle and their names are Jane, Ruth, Eloise, Sarah, James, John and Lola. An adopted son, Roy, was killed on the battle front in France, November 9, 1918, just two days before the signing of the armistice.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferrell are members of the Christian Church, and he is a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Logan, belongs to the Elks and is a democrat. He resides at 825 Ninth Street, West Huntington, West Virginia.

Mr. Ferrell at the time of his marriage had a cash capital of only $7.55. Out of this he paid five dollars to the minister for performing the ceremony. They bought their housekeeping outfit on credit, and restricted themselves to the essentials, buying only half a set each of knives, forks, plates and cups and saucers. Their bedstead cost $2.50, and it was equipped with a shuck mattress, while his mother gave them a feather bed. Mr. and Mrs. Ferrell have been real partners in every phase of their married life. For two years Mr. Ferrell did the heavy manual toil of the timber work, also worked inside. At that time he owned four mules, and he would get into the timber with his teams before daylight and continued until long after dark. Mrs. Ferrell fed the team when he returned home and also the following morning before he started out. It was as a result of such co-operation that they got their start.

JOSEPH W. STAYMAN. The president of the Potomac State School at Keyser is Joseph W. Stayman, who for more than a quarter of a century has been actively associated with educational interests in West Virginia. The first year he was in the state he taught a country school, but for the greater part of twenty years his work has been at Keyser, either in the city schools or what is now the State College.

Mr. Stayman was born at Carlisle, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania. His parents were Joseph B. and Mary A. (Shelley) Stayman, the latter a daughter of Daniel Shelley. Joseph B. Stayman was born in Cumberland County on a farm, secured a college education in Dickinson College, and began his business career as a forwarder, with headquarters at Mechanicsburg. He was in that business until late in life, then retiring, and he lived for some years at Carlisle, where he died in 1898. During the Civil war he was a Union soldier as a private in a company commanded by his father. This company saw its chief duty within the state, but had some more serious service during the Confederate invasion which terminated in the battle of Gettysburg. The widow of Joseph B. Stayman died in July, 1914. They reared four children: Daniel, of New York City; William, of Pottsville, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Garrett Stevens, of Cleveland, Ohio; and Joseph Webster.

Joseph W. Stayman lived until he was sixteen with his maternal grandparents near Harrisburg. He was among country people of Pennsylvania Dutch stock and had some excellent intellectual influences. His grandfather, Daniel Shelley, was a well known educator and was the first county superintendent of Cumberland County schools and established the Normal School at Newville, an institution since moved to Shippensburg. After teaching for a number of years Daniel Shelley entered the service of the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company, and was in that work until he finally retired. Joseph W. Stayman attended school at Shiremanstown, Pennsylvania, where his grandparents lived, graduated in 1890 from the Dickinson Preparatory School at Carlisle, and in the same fall entered upon his regular collegiate work in Dickinson College, where he received his Bachelor's degree in 1894. Dickinson College gave him the Master of Arts degree in 1897, and during his individual career as an educator he has taken post-graduate work in the University of Chicago, in Columbia University of New York, and has recently completed the work leading up to the Doctor's degree in Pitt University at Pittsburgh.

In 1896, soon after leaving college, a matter of business brought him to West Virginia, and while here he accepted a proposition to teach a country school at the mouth of Greenland Gap in Grant County. He taught there one term, the following year he was principal of the three-room school at Moorefield, and in 1899 came to Keyser to teach the ninth grade in the local schools. After a year he was called to Terra Alta as principal of the town schools, where he remained three years. Since then his work has been in Keyser, where for nine years he was superintendent of the city schools, and resigned that office to become principal of what was then known as the Keyser Preparatory Branch of the West Virginia University. By act of the Legislature in 1921 the name of this institution was changed to the Potomac State School, with Mr. Stayman as its first president.

He has completed ten years of work as head of this institution. From a secondary school, designed as a feeder to the State University, it is now rapidly building up to the status of a junior college. The school suffered a great handicap in 1917 by the loss of its building by fire. Since then a second year of college work has been added to the curriculum, and graduates from the school are entitled to enter the junior class of any standard college or university in the United States. The teaching force has been improved both in number and in qualifications, and in the way of equipment Mr. Stayman has witnessed the building of two dormitories, the acquisition of a farm where vocational education is taught and the institution of vocational departments, home economics and commerce.

During his many years of residence at Keyser Mr. Stayman has acquired some substantial business interests, and his enthusiasm is especially directed in the line of fruit growing. He first acquired an interest in the Alkire orchard, and in association with four others purchased that property, now known as the Potomac State Orchard, one of the large orchards in this section of the state. There are 15,000 apple trees of bearing age in condition, and under the new management the property has been greatly improved. Mr. Stayman is also a director of and had a part in the organization of the Potomac Farm and Orchard Association, doing a general fruit packing and sales business at Keyser. Plans are now being formulated for the construction of a by-product plant for using the lower grade fruit and converting it into food products.

Mr. Stayman took the initiative and was made chairman of the organizing committee of the Keyser Rotary Club in 1921. In Masonry he served three years as master of Davis Lodge No. 51, A. F. and A. M., was for twelve years secretary of Keyser Chapter, R. A. M., has been captain general of Damascus Commandery, Knights Templar, and is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a republican, and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving fifteen years on its board of stewards.

At Keyser, November 19, 1914, he married Miss Margaret Liller, daughter of William A. and Martha (Kalbaugh) Liller. Her father was a contractor and builder who spent most of his life in the eastern part of the state. Mrs. Stayman was born at Keyser, is a graduate of the local public schools and the Keyser Preparatory School's music department and completed her musical education in National Park Seminary at Washington. She has been a teacher of music in Keyser and is active in musical circles. The only son of Doctor and Mrs. Stayman is Joseph Webster, Jr., born in 1915, and one daughter, Martha Shelley, born in 1921.

FREDERICK R. CHRISTIE has had twenty years since he completed his education in which to lay the foundation of a secure business success. More than half of this time he spent in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railway Company at Vivian and Bluefield, West Virginia, and for the past eight years has been an official in one of the leading financial and business organizations of the city.

Mr. Christie was born at Princeton, Mercer County, West Virginia, July 7, 1884, son of Richard Clark and Elizabeth Pearis (White) Christie. The Christies are of English ancestry and were early converts to the Wesleyan Reformation in the eighteenth century. On his mother's side Mr. Christie is of French Huguenot origin, his ancestors having settled near Charleston, South Carolina. The Pearis in his mother's name represents another branch of her ancestry. Colonels George and Richard Pearis were soldiers of the Revolution and Colonel George donated fifty-three acres of his plantation for the townsite and from him the town known as Pearisburg, Virginia, was named. Richard Clark Christie was born in Monroe County and his wife, Elizabeth Pearis Christie, was born in Mercer County. Richard Clark Christie served eighteen years (three terms) as circuit and criminal clerk of Mercer County, was a graduate of the class of 1876 from the University of Kentucky, established his home at Princeton the same year and achieved prominence as a lawyer in Princeton.

Frederick R. Christie attended the common and high schools of Princeton, graduated from the Princeton Academy in 1902, and on leaving school entered the service of Castner, Curran & Bullitt, coal shippers. He was a clerk in their office two years at Vivian. Since then his home has been at Bluefield, where for ten years he was assistant car distributor on the Pocahontas Division of the Norfolk & Western Railway. Mr. Christie in 1914 joined the Virginia Realty Loan Company, Inc., as secretary and director and is now vice president of that prosperous business. This institution has contributed largely toward the building of the City of Bluefield, having built more homes than any other organization in the city. He is also vice president and a director in the Bluefield Trust Company, a new financial institution recently organized with a capital and surplus of $220,000.

Mr. Christie married at Bluefield, August 14, 1907, Miss Willie Gay Barrow, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. William H. Barrow, of Dublin, Pulaski County, Virginia. Captain Barrow was a gallant soldier of the Southern Confederacy and died a number of years later from a wound he received during the war. The following children were born to Frederick R. and Willie Gay (Barrow) Christie: Frederick R., Jr., fourteen years old, Sarah Elizabeth, ten, and Margaret Gay, five years old.

Mr. Christie is a Master Mason, Royal Arch Mason, Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, active in the Chamber of Commerce, a member of the Bluefield Country Club, and his favorite recreation is hunting and fishing. He is a member of the First Baptist Church, on its Board of Deacons, assistant superintendent of the Sunday School and a zealous worker in all of its endeavors. Mrs. Christie and children are also members of the First Baptist Church. Mr. Christie volunteered for Y. M. C. A. work (being too old for army service) with the American army in France, but was not called into service on account of the sudden ending of the World war. He is treasurer of Bluefield College, a member of the Board of Trustees, also a member of the Building Committee and was instrumental in founding and locating the college in Bluefield. He traces his ancestry through the following genealogy:

The Christie family: James Christie, the original settler, was born in England and came from London to America with John and Charles Wesley and Theodore Whitfield, going first to Georgia and later crossed the Alleghany Mountains in the early days of the colonies and settled where Union, Monroe County, West Virginia, is now located. He became a member of the "Holy Cross," and the motto of this order was, "I swear to cross the mountains."

He was a Methodist preacher and firm supporter of the Wesleyan Reformation. He held a position under the King of England as cup bearer in the King's Court. He resigned the position, however, as a protest against a religious tax imposed upon him by the Church of England.

In the year 1785 he built the first church on the western slopes of the Alleghany Mountains, and it is now known as Old Rehoboth. At the age of 110 years he could mount his horse without assistance, and he rode about the countryside marrying people as long as he was able to sit upon his horse.

James Christie, the settler, had two sons, James and Robert. They enlisted in the War of 1812 but were not called into service. Robert married Margaret Crosier and several children were born to them, as follows: James M., who married Cynthia Peters Clark in the year 1839; Thomas M., who married Catharine Boggess; Catharine, who married James Carpenter.

To James M., who married Cynthia Peters Clark, were born the following children: Danaris Catharine married William S. Hobbs, who was an officer of McComas Battery and distinguished himself as a gallant soldier of the Civil war; Margaret E. remained single in life; Newton J., who was a gunner in Chapman's Battery, was a gallant soldier, was taken prisoner at Camp Lookout and died there; John Wesley and Caroline died at the ages of eleven and two years, respectively; Harvey R., who remained single, distinguished himself as a musician and writer of many beautiful hymns and composed several of the leading hymn books of this country, was a graduate of the University of Tennessee; Thomas H. R., who married a Miss Hunt, was also a very distinguished musician, possessing an unexcelled tenor voice and wonderful skill in instrumental music; Lewis F., who married Linnie A. Lemon, is a cattle grazer and owns about 1,000 acres of Blue Grass land in Monroe County; Samuel M., who married Emma C. Burdett, is also a very prosperous farmer and grazer of Greenbrier County; Milton W., who married Ozella Ruth McKinzie, served as deputy circuit and criminal clerk of Mercer County, also as deputy sheriff for a great number of years. Richard C., who married Elizabeth Pearis White, is a lawyer by profession, having graduated at the University of Kentucky in the class of '76, was elected to the Circuit and Criminal clerkship of Mercer County three successive terms, and received the nomination of the democratic party for the fourth term, but was defeated in the republican landslide of 1896.

To Richard C. and Elizabeth Pearis Christie the following children were born: Henry E. (Hal), Frederick R., Paul C. and James B. Henry E. married Miss Rose Pike, of Kentucky, and to them one child was born, Anna Elizabeth. They live in Winchester, Kentucky, and he is a traveling salesman, as is also his brother James R. Paul C. is a veteran of the World war, was in the great drive of the American Army from Calais, Canada, in the great battle of Somme River, St. Mihiel, and the battle of Verdun and Argonne Forest, went over the top three times in the series of battles and was wounded and gassed in the battle of Argonne Forest.

The Clark Family. Benjamin Clark, born in King and Queen County, Virginia, in 1770, settled in America. He was a son of Jonathan, his wife being Josephine White. The father was the fourth in descent from John, who came from England to James River in 1637. The wife of Benjamin Clark was Elizabeth. Their son Samuel was born in 1764 and died in 1857. He settled near Paris, Monroe County, West Virginia, in 1782, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, and prior to the Revolution he was a soldier for a number of years in the French and Indian war.

Samuel Clark was a near relative of George Rogers Clark, who was born in Virginia in 1732 and who became a great pioneer and woodsman. He was like Washington, a surveyor with chain and compass. With axe and rifle he opened his way far into the lonely forest of the American West. He was one of the scouts of Virginia who aided the governor of Virginia in the expedition against Cornstalk and the one who aided in his defeat at the battle of Point Pleasant at the mouth of the Kanawha River. Later Clark made his way into Kentucky with Daniel Boone. Major Samuel Clark, the Revolutionary soldier, was both a courier and scout, a devoted friend of George Washington. On one sent out once as courier to deliver a dispatch for Washington the Indians chased him so closely he was on one knee, the Indians yelling at him on the other.

Maj. Samuel Clark married Margaret Hamby, and to them the following children were born: James H., born in 1792, died in 1861 and married Catherine Day; William married Nelly Benson in 1808; Alexander married Elizabeth Dieke in 1819; John married Mary Elizabeth Johnson in 1814; Cynthia married Capt. John Peters in 1816.

The children of John Clark, who married Elizabeth Johnson in 1814, were: Peggy, who married Thomas F. Dieke; Mary, who married David Pence; Caroline, who married Granville Smith; Cynthia Peters, who married James M. Christie; Thomas, who married Eliza Smith; Samuel M., who married Martha Ballard.

The children of Cynthia Peters Clark, who married James M. Christie, are given under the caption of the "Christie family."

The White Family was of English origin, coming to America in the early days of the Colonies and settling at the James River in Virginia. William White, who was a Miss Workman, was the progenitor of the family in Tazewell County, Virginia, and Mercer County, West Virginia. He came to this region from Campbell County, Virginia. Benjamin White, his son, was Sheriff of the County of Mercer and represented this county in the General Assembly of Virginia before the states were separated and was prominent in the business and political affairs of the county for more than half of a century. He married Elizabeth Pearis and enjoyed a long and happy married life. He has been married sixty-one years before the death of his wife. He died at the age of eighty-six and his wife at the age of eighty-three. He was a man of very strong mind and sterling character. To them were born the following children: George W., who married Alice Bailey; John H., who married Julia Cunningham; Charles, who was married to Sarah Louisa, who married Andrew J. Hunt; Thomas, who married Richard C. Christie; and three daughters, Bell, Mary and Minnie, died at the ages of fifteen, sixteen and seventeen, all within two weeks from diphtheria.

The Pearis Family. According to tradition the Crest of Paris, France, derived its name from this family. They were descendants of French Royalty, and the members of this family were Huguenots who fled from France, stopping temporarily in Barbadoes, thence about 1711, to Santa Carolina, locating on an island about five miles from Port Royal, to which they gave the name "Paris Island." This name is sometimes spelled "Parris," again "Paris" and "Pearis," the modern spelling being Pearis. The settler was Alexander Pearis (Parris), who became quite a distinguished man in the early days of the history of South Carolina.

Judge McCrady, in his History of South Carolina under the Proprietary Government, 1670-1719, gives considerable prominence to Col. Alexander Pearis, whom he shows to have been commissioner of free schools, commissioner for building churches, member of House of Commons, of which Col. William Rhett was speaker, as a military officer and one of the judges to try pirates, and as commander of militia in the Revolution of 1719. Col. Alexander Pearis had a son, Alexander, who made some conveyance of property in 1722-26. Alexander Pearis, Jr., had a son, John Alexander, who likewise had a son, John Alexander, as shown by his will probated in August, 1752. The last mentioned John Alexander had a son, Robert, who spelled his name, as did his father, John Alexander, "Pearis." This Robert Pearis died about 1781. He had a daughter, Malinda, who married Samuel Pepper, who removed to the New River Valley prior to 1770 and located at the place where, about 1780, he established a ferry, and which place has since been known as Peppers. His two brothers-in-law, George and Robert Alexander Pearis, sons of the preceding Robert, came with him, or about the same time. At the date of the coming of Pepper and the Pearises, in fact before that date, there lived in the neighborhood where Pepper located a gentleman by the name of Joseph Howe, who had some pretty daughters, and it did not take long for these young Huguenots to fall in love with these girls, at least with two of them. An examination of the Pearis Bible discloses that George Pearis was born February 16, 1746 and was married to Eleanor Howe February 26, 1771. Robert Alexander Pearis was probably two years younger than his brother George. He married also a daughter of Joseph Howe, and about 1790 removed with his family to Kentucky and settled in what is now Bourbon County, and from whom it is said the town of Paris in that county is named. He had a son who in the early history of that state was a member of its Legislature. George Pearis remained in the vicinity of Pepper's Ferry until the spring of 1782. Prior to this time he had been made a captain of one of the militia companies of the County of Montgomery.

On the advance of the British Army into the Carolinas, in the fall of 1780, there was a Tory uprising in Surry County, North Carolina, of such formidable proportion as to impell Gen. Martin Armstrong, commanding that military district, to call on Maj. Joseph Cloyd, of the Montgomery County Militia, to aid in its suppression. About the 1st day of October, 1780, Major Cloyd with three companies of mounted men, one of which was commanded by Capt. George Pearis, marched to the State of North Carolina, where he was joined by some of the militia of that state, augmenting his forces to about 160 men, with which he, on the 14th day of the month, attacked the Tories at Shallow Ford of the Yadkin, defeating them with a loss of fifteen killed and a number wounded. Major Cloyd had one killed and a few wounded, among them Captain Pearis, severely, through the shoulder. This fight cleared the way for the crossing of General Green's army at this ford, which the Tories were seeking to obstruct. Captain Pearis returned home wounded, and in addition to his suffering from his wound had the misfortune to lose his wife by death in a few days after his return, she dying on November 14th. Captain Pearis' wound disabled him from performing further military service, and having purchased from Capt. William Ingles, about the year of 1779, for seventy pounds sterling (about $350.00), the tract of 204 acres of land on New River—whereon is now situated Pearisburg station on the line of the Norfolk & Western Railway, and which land was known for years as the Hale and Charleton tracts—he in the spring of 1782, removed thereto, erecting his dwelling house at a point nearly due south of the residence of Mr. Edward C. Hale, and a little to the southeast of where the road from Mr. Hale's house unites with the turnpike. Two or three years after Captain Pearis made his location he had a ferry established across the New River, and kept a small stock of goods, and later kept public entertainment. On October 5, 1784, he married Rebecca Clay, daughter of Mitchell Clay. The children of Col. George Pearis and his wife, Rebecca Clay Pearis, were: George N., Robert Alexander, Samuel Pepper, Charles Lewis; their daughters, Rebecca, Julia, Rhoda, Sallie and Eleanor.

Col. George N. Pearis married Elizabeth Howe, daughter of Maj. Daniel Howe; Robert Alexander Pearis married Miss Arbuckle, of Greenbrier County; Samuel Pepper Pearis married Rebecca Chapman, daughter of Isaac and Elian Johnston Chapman; Charles Lewis Pearis married Margaret Peck, daughter of John and Elizabeth Suidow Peck; Rebecca married John Brown, they went to Texas about 1836, leaving a son, George Pearis Brown, who lived for a number of years in Mercer County; Julia married Col. Garland Gerald; Rhoda married Col. John B. George; Sallie married Baldwin L. Sisson; and Eleanor married Capt. Thomas J. George.

The children of Col. George N. Pearis and his wife, Elizabeth Howe Pearis, were: Capt. George W., who never married, and died in 1898, at the age of nearly eighty-nine years; Col. Daniel Howe, who married Louisa A. Johnston; Rebecca, who married George D. Hoge; Nancy, who married Archer Edgar; Ardella, who married Daniel R. Cecil; and Elizabeth, who married Benjamin White. Robert Alexander Pearis and his wife had no children, and after the death of said Robert Alexander his widow married Colonel McClung.

The children of Col. Garland Gerald and Julia Pearis Gerald, his wife, were: Sons, Thomas, Robert, Pearis, Garland T.; daughters, Rebecca, who married Dr. Edwin Grant; Louisa, who married James M. Cunningham; Mary, who married; Fannie, who married a Mr. Yost; Virginia, who died in Texas, unmarried; and Ophelia, who married

The children of Col. John B. George and Rhoda Pearis George were: George Pearis George, who married Sarah A. Davidson; Jane, who married Judge Sterling F. Watts. The names of the children of Capt. Thomas J. George and wife are as follows: A. P. G. George, Robert, and John; the daughters, Larissa, who married Jacob A. Peck; Matilda, who married a Mr. Austin, and Rebecca, who married George W. Jarrell.

Charles Lewis Pearis and his wife, Margaret Peck Pearis, had but one child, a daughter, Electra, who married Dr. Charles W. Pearis, and they had no children.

As already stated, John Brown and family went to Texas prior to 1836. Some of his older sons were soldiers in the Texan army. He settled in that part of the state that became Collin County. George Pearis Brown, the son of John, remained in Virginia. He married a Miss Mahood, a sister of the late Judge Alexander Mahood, and he and his wife left numerous descendants.

The elder Col. George Pearis, the settler, was long a magistrate of Montgomery and Giles counties, and sat in the courts of both counties, and was for a term the presiding magistrate of the latter county. The first court of the County of Giles was held in a house belonging to him, and the land for the county buildings and town was given by him and the town of Pearisburg took its name from him. He died on November 4, 1810, and his ashes repose in the burying ground on the farm on which he died, on the little hill just southwest of Pearisburg station. His widow married Philip Peters, and she died April 15, 1844. The elder Col. George Pearis' wife, Rebecca Clay, who was the daughter of Mitchell Clay, of Clover Bottoms, was a first cousin of Henry Clay of Kentucky, who was one of the greatest and most honored statesmen this nation ever produced.

EVERETT A. LEONARD, JR., went into business soon after finishing his education, was a merchant for several years in old Virginia, and for the past twenty years has been a resident of Bluefield and a prominent factor in the growth and development, keeping pace with the city itself, of the Bluefield Hardware Company, of which he is president and manager.

Mr. Flament

Mr. Leonard was born in Russell County, Virginia, August 15, 1876, son of Edward A. and Eliza (Reynolds) Leonard, both natives of Virginia, his father of Washington County and his mother of Russell County. Edward A. Leonard was a Baptist minister and was also a Confederate soldier, all through the war with a Virginia regiment. The last year he was captured and was confined in a Federal prison at Rock Island.

Everett A. Leonard, Jr., acquired a common school education, finished his high school course in Russell County in 1893, and about that time his parents moved to Greene County, Tennessee. While there he attended Mosheim College, and took a six months commercial course at Lexington, Kentucky. After completing his education Mr. Leonard determined to seek his opportunities in the Far West, but after about a year as bookkeeper for the Weston Mercantile Company at Weston, Oregon, he changed his mind about the West and returned to Old Virginia. For three years he was employed in the hardware business at Lebanon by Mr. A. Hendricks, and then bought this business and conducted it as proprietor until 1900. On selling out his business at Lebanon Mr. Leonard moved to Bluefield, which was then just coming into prominence as a commercial center of the great industrial district of Southern West Virginia. He connected himself with the Bluefield Hardware Company as one of its traveling salesmen, and for nearly ten years was on the road. By his personal and faithful efforts he contributed in no small measure to the great volume of that company's business, and the confidence reposed in the corporation by a host of retailers. After about ten years Mr. Leonard was made vice president of the company, and for the past six years has been president and general manager. The Bluefield Hardware Company is one of the largest organizations of the kind in the state, has a capital and surplus of $700,000, and does an annual business aggregating $2,000,000.

In 1898 at Castlewood, Russell County, Virginia, Mr. Leonard married Miss Eleanor Fields, daughter of William and Elizabeth Fields. Her father was a Confederate soldier and at the battle of Petersburg was shot through the thigh, a severe wound from which he suffered all the rest of his life. He was by occupation a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have one daughter, Lucille Alton. Mr. Leonard is a Baptist, while Mrs. Leonard and her daughter are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Leonard, while he has kept his mind closely on business, is a man of genial qualities and of wholesome companionship and is identified with several social organizations. He is a member of the Falls Mills Fishing Club, Chamber of Commerce, plays golf at the Bluefield Country Club and is fond of all outdoor sports. He is a Knight Templar and Royal Arch Mason, a Shriner, and a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. In politics he is a democrat.

JOHN FLOOD LAND had the wisdom to identify himself when a young man with the expanding destinies of Bluefield, where he has lived for nearly thirty years, and is owner and director of one of the leading general insurance agencies in this section of the state.

Mr. Land was born in Campbell County, Virginia, March 28, 1874, of old Virginia stock. His father's people came originally from Wales, while his mother's ancestors were English. His parents, C. H. and Sarah E. (Martin) Land, were both born in Virginia, his father being a tanner and farmer. During the Civil war he was in the Confederate Army from the beginning until the end, in the quartermaster's department.

John Flood Land acquired a common school education in Campbell County and attended the New London Academy. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he came to Bluefield and went to work as a clerk for his oldest brother in the Surface and Land Supply Company. This firm did an extensive business supplying merchandise and other materials to the contractors who were then building the streets and railroads in this section. John F. Land had charge of the general supply store. He remained with the firm eight years, and in 1899 entered the insurance business with the

S. M. Smith Insurance Agency in Bluefield. He continued with Mr. Smith about six years, and then became one of the organizers of the Citizens Underwriters Agency of Bluefield. Selling his interest in this in 1912, he organized the Bluefield Insurance Agency, which he now controls and to which he devotes all his business time and energy. This is an agency with an extensive business and handling all classes of insurance service except life, the total aggregate of its annual premiums running to about $6,000,000.

In 1915, at Lynchburg, Virginia, Mr. Land married Miss Ella Victoria Woolwine, daughter of John D. and Ohio Woolwine, natives of Virginia. They have two children, John F., Jr., and Mary Ella. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Land is a Royal Arch, Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and is secretary of the Masonic Trust Association, owners of the Masonic Temple at Bluefield. He is also secretary of the Elks Lodge and a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club.

GORDON S. SEAL, of Bluefield, has had an extensive experience as a coal operator, banker and in other lines. This is one of the prominent names in West Virginia business circles, his father, Capt. John R. Seal, having long been prominent as a banker and coal man at Charleston.

While Gordon S. Seal is a native of New York City where he was born June 23, 1880, his parents were born in Virginia and he represents an old family of Virginian ancestry. He is a son of Capt. John R. and Nannie (Wood) Seal. His father was vice president of the Charleston National Bank, and for many years had extensive holdings and management of coal and railroad properties.

Gordon S. Seal acquired a common and high school education at Charleston, and from there entered Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, where he graduated A. B. in 1902. Since his university career he has given undivided attention to his business affairs, first entering the coal business with his father. In 1913 they sold their interests, and Gordon Seal was then for the following two years associated with the John T. Hesser Coal Company. He removed to Bluefield in 1915, and from 1916 to 1918 was in the real estate and banking business with the Virginia Realty & Loan Company. In August, 1919, he assisted in organizing and incorporating the Curtis-Seal Company, a firm handling general office supplies over an extensive territory in which the important points are Williamson, Bluefield, Welch, Bramwell and Tazewell, but he sold out this business in November, 1921.

Mr. Seal in 1907, at Montgomery, West Virginia, married Miss Inez Austin, daughter of George C. and Jennie Austin. Four children were born to their marriage, and the three living are Lyall Austin, John Ridley and Jane Ann. Mr. Seal and family are members of the Episcopal Church, and he is a Royal Arch, Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, a member of the Elks, the Kiwanis Club, Chamber of Commerce and Bluefield Country Club. He is an outdoor man, fond of strenuous exercise, plays golf and tennis, and his hobby is motor trips to distant points.

WILLIAM H. F. DEMENT. During the ten years required to advance himself from the rank of messenger to cashier of the Huntington National Bank Mr. Dement manifested an unflagging devotion to his work and the ideals of service exemplified by that institution. His influential and useful place in the business community is a reward of merit, a distinction well worth the effort required to achieve it.

Mr. Dement was born at Proctorville, Ohio, June 4, 1889. His paternal ancestry came originally from France and Germany. His grandfather, William Dement, was born in Noble County, Ohio, following the trade of blacksmith in Lawrence County, and died near Wilgus in that state. His great-great-grandfather carried the first mail, in a canoe, from Marietta to Cincinnati, Ohio. Henry E. Dement, father of the Huntington banker, was born near Wilgus in Lawrence County in 1858, grew up there on a farm, became a blacksmith at Bradrick, Ohio, where he married, and since about 1880 has lived at Proctorville. With the development of the automobile he adapted his trade to the requirements of that industry, and for a number of years has owned and operated a public garage. Since 1919 he has owned a farm and large apple orchard in that section of Ohio. He is a republican. His wife, Cora J. Forgey, is a daughter of James Forgey, a captain on the Mississippi River during the Civil war. She is a granddaughter of Gen. A. F. Fuller of the War of 1812. Mrs. Dement was born at Bradrick, Ohio, in 1860. Of their children, Ruby D., a resident of Huntington, is the widow of Charles Heinz, who was a blacksmith; Carl is manager of the home farm at Proctorville; Orla E. is associated in business with his father; Roma is the wife of Charles E. Rose, a millwright at Guyandotte, West Virginia; William H. F. is the fifth child; Velmer is also associated with his father in business; and Valgene is connected with the home farm.

William H. F. Dement graduated from the Proctorville High School in 1907, and soon afterward came to Huntington, graduating from the Booth Business College of that city in 1910. Mr. Dement on October 29, 1911, began his service with the Huntington National Bank as a messenger boy. His increasing experience and ability brought him successive promotions, and he did the work of individual bookkeeper, discount bookkeeper and general bookkeeper, was promoted to assistant cashier and on August 1, 1921, was elected cashier. Besides his executive duties with this large and important bank he is interested in the home farm and orchard.

Mr. Dement is a republican, is affiliated with Proctorville Lodge No. 550, A. F. and A. M., Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Tri-State Credit and Adjustment Bureau. Recently, in 1922, he completed one of the excellent homes in a restricted residential section at 51 Ninth Avenue.

The only important interruption to his service with the Huntington National Bank came in the World war. June 14, 1918, he enlisted, was sent to the Training Detachment Public Schools at Hughes High School in Cincinnati, was there two months and was then transferred to the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Depot Brigade at Camp Meade, Maryland. On August 14, 1918, he was assigned to Company H of the Seventy-first Infantry in the Lafayette or Eleventh Division and later was transferred to the Headquarters Company of the same regiment and assigned to the personnel office. He received his honorable discharge January 31, 1919, with the rank of corporal. Mr. Dement is unmarried.

WADE H. POST, M. D. For sixteen consecutive years Doctor Post has applied himself to the practice of medicine and the varied service demanded of a capable and high minded physician in the Masontown community of Preston County. He came here as successor to the old physician, Doctor Coburn, who had carried most of the burdens of local practice.

Doctor Post was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, April 8, 1877. His grandfather, John Post, spent his active life in Lewis County, and married a Miss Cookman. Of their eight children six are still living. William F. Post, father of Doctor Post, was a native of Lewis County and married Elizabeth Jane Young, of Harrison County. Her children were: Scott, of Seattle, Washington; Birdie, wife of W. E. Rhodes, of Lewis County; Wilda, wife of Dr. C. L. Cookman, of Buckhannon, West Virginia; Wade H.; Ansel B., of Lost Creek, West Virginia; and Porter W., who was killed in an automobile accident at Morgantown in June, 1919, leaving a wife and a daughter, Jane Porter Post.

Wade H. Post lived on his father's farm during his youth and continued to call that his home until he was about twenty-five years of age and qualified for professional work. He was educated in the country schools, in Union College at Buckhannon one term, then in the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and prepared for his profession in the Baltimore Medical College, where he graduated in 1901. Doctor Post first practiced at Jane Lew in Lewis County, remaining there a year, and then at Dellglow in Monongalia County. When he located at Mason-town he moved only a short distance across the county line from Dellglow. Doctor Post has served a year as president of the County Medical Society, is a member of the West Virginia State and American Medical associations, is a local surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, and a member of the Railway Surgeons Association of the Baltimore & Ohio system.

Aside from his busy days as a physician Doctor Post was one of the organizers and is first vice president and one of the directors of the Bank of Masontown. He is also president of the Reed Run Coal Company, and has had other business interests but has disposed of them. He avoids too many of the honors and responsibilities of politics, but is a member of the Executive Committee of the democratic party in Preston County. His first national vote went to Mr. Bryan in 1900. Doctor Post is affiliated with Preston Lodge No. 90, A. F. and A. M., Royal Arch Chapter No. 30 at Morgantown; Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling; and he is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

In Harrison County, October 7, 1902, Doctor Post married Miss Mary Eleanor Eib, a native of that county and sixth and youngest child of James M. and Arminda (Arnold) Eib. Her father was a farmer of the Lost Creek community and member of an old family of German origin. Doctor Post lost his first wife by death. She was survived by three children: Mary Christine, James William and Helena Arminda. At Rockville, Maryland, April 8, 1915, Doctor Post married Miss Grace Clayton, daughter of T. M. and Josephine (Trickett) Clayton. The only child born to Doctor and Mrs. Post died in infancy.

EVERETT A. LUZADER, superintendent of the schools of Valley District in Preston County, is one of the forceful young men engaged in the modern educational program of West Virginia, and his life so far has been devoted either to getting an education himself or teaching and school administration.

He was born at Auburn, Ritchie County, West Virginia, March 2, 1884. His grandfather, Daniel D. Luzader, was born at Grafton, West Virginia, son of the founder of the family in this state, who came from Germany. Daniel D. Luzader was a Union soldier at the time of the Civil war, enlisting from Taylor County. He married Martha Newlon, of Grafton, and the oldest of their nine children was Winfield Scott Luzader. The latter was born at Grafton in October, 1853, and has spent his active career as a teacher and farmer. He taught in Ritchie County for ten years, but is now devoting his time to his farm. He married Clara Davis, whose father, John Davis, enlisted as a Union soldier in the State of Minnesota, and after the war returned East and spent the rest of his life as a farmer near Berea in Ritchie County. Mrs. Scott Luzader died June 10, 1900. Her children were: Lucretia, wife of Mr. Woodzell, of Hot Springs, Virginia; Everett A.; Flossie, wife of E. E. Brown, of Auburn; May, a teacher in the Auburn schools; Gladys and Thyra, twins, and Otis, all living on their father's farm. Scott Luzader has always kept in touch with educational affairs, and for twelve years was a member of the Board of Education of Union District. He has given an active support to the republican party, and the family record is that of men interested and more or less active in politics. He and his family are Baptists.

Everett A. Luzader is, therefore, representative of a family long identified with the cause of education and agriculture. He spent his early life on a farm, attended country schools, and completed the normal course of Salem College in 1909, but had already taught two years before graduating. The next three years he devoted his time consecutively to the duties of the schoolroom. The following year he was a student in the University of West Virginia, and then returned to Salem College, where he finished his literary education and graduated A. B. in 1915.

After graduating Mr. Luzader was principal of the Salem High School for four years, was principal of the Newburg High School one year, and came to Masontown as principal of the school of that village, but a year later, in July, 1920, was elected superintendent of Valley District. As supertendent he has supervision of seventeen schools, two of them being high schools, and a staff of thirty-one teachers. He has done something constructive and progressive in the local educational program, including the completion of the Masontown school building, the improvement of its campus, adding a course in citizenship to the school curriculum and also increasing by a year the time devoted to the study of agriculture, economics and sociology.

Mr. Luzader is affiliated with Salem Lodge, Knights of Pythias. At Tunnelton, December 10, 1914, he married Miss Gail Hensworth, formerly of Harrisville, Ritchie County, where she was reared. She was born May 26, 1892, graduated from the Harrisville High School and the normal department of Salem College, and at the age of sixteen began teaching. She is the mother of three children, Brooks, Morgan and Ralph, but at the same time she keeps up her educational work as one of the teachers in the Valley District High School at Masontown.

MILES H. ORR, an honored Union veteran of the Civil war, for half a century a farmer in the vicinity of Masontown, represents a family that was established in that part of Preston County late in the eighteenth century, and the name has been one of honorable associations in that community ever since.

The great-grandfather of Miles Orr was John Orr, a native of Ireland, who came to America about 1758. His son, John Dale Orr, took part as a soldier in the American Revolution. He was with the American forces at the surrender of General Cornwallis at Yorktown. Soon after the close of the war he left McClellantown, Pennsylvania, and came to Preston County, West Virginia, establishing his home on Sand Ridge near Independence. Here he cleared the land and spent the rest of his active years farming. He died about 1840, and is buried in the cemetery on Scott's Hill. His wife, Elizabeth Johns, lies besides him. Their children were: Catherine, who became the wife of Elisha Fortney and lived in Harrison County; John, whose life was spent as a farmer in Preston County; Ruth, who became the wife of William Meneer and died at Scott's Hill; Hiram, whose record follows; George, who lived near Independence and is buried on the home farm; and James, who became a Baptist minister, moved to Illinois, and died in that state.

Hiram Orr was born in Preston County, near Independence, in 1803, and his effective work and most of his years were spent in the Scott's Hill locality, where he died in 1856. His wife, Keziah Meneer, was born near Gladesville and died in 1845. Her father, John Meneer, was a farmer and died while visiting in Ohio. Of the children of Hiram Orr and wife, Major Uriah was an officer in the Sixth West Virginia Infantry during the Civil war, was for many years in the lumber business as a mill man and spent his last years retired at Kingwood. Martha became the wife of A. B. Meneer and died at Kingwood. Eugenius lived near the old homestead. Morgan D. was a Union soldier in the Third West Virginia Infantry, and spent his last days at Fairmont. Miles H. is the next in age. Keziah is Mrs. Monroe Martin and a resident of Reedsville, West Virginia. A half brother of these children, W. Lee, spent most of his life at Baltimore, where he is buried.

Miles H. Orr was born December 17, 1844, was an infant when his mother died, and only twelve at the death of his father. He lived among his uncles and acquired a subscription-school education, and at the same time was trained to farming. On August 15, 1862, at the age of eighteen, he enlisted from Preston County in Company B of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry. His two captains were Clinton Jeffers and John D. Elliott, while the regiment was first commanded by Colonel Core and then by Col. D. D. Johnson. The regiment rendezvoused at Wheeling, went thence to Clarksburg, then to New Creek, now Keyser West Virginia, and was ordered to Gettysburg, but arrived too late to take part in the great battle. His command then went into camp at Romney, moved from there to Petersburg, and the regiment took part in the Salem raid as far as McDowell, where the Confederates blocked the way. Returning to Petersburg and then to Keyser, the regiment from the latter point marched to Burlington, where it lay during the remainder of the winter. In the spring of 1864 they went on the Dublin raid, and stopped at the battle of Cloyd Mountain and New River Bridge, and then dropped back to Meadow Bluff and then to Lynchburg, Virginia, and finally to Camp Pratt. From there they marched to Martinsburg, and soon afterward joined in the Shenandoah Valley campaign. They fought in the minor engagement at Stephenson's Depot on the 19th of September and in the battle of Winchester on the 24th. Thence they fell back to Harpers Ferry, and from that point moved up to Cedar Creek, but was forced back to Bolivar Heights. About this time General Sheridan brought reinforcements from the Army of the Potomac into the Valley, and the troops moved on, striking the Confederates under old Jubal A. Early at Hallowtown. They then fought the battle of Fisher's Hill, soon after which occurred the conclusive battle of Cedar Creek, in which Sheridan made his famous ride and which cleared the Confederates from the valley. Afterward the Fourteenth West Virginia was assigned duty guarding different points on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad way, and Mr. Orr was in that service until discharged. When he heard of the surrender of General Lee's army he was one of thirty men guarding a division train three miles north of Winchester. He was discharged at Cumberland but mustered out at Wheeling. His regiment had a record of twenty-four battles and skirmishes and he participated in twenty-one of them. His clothing was riddled by bullets, but he escaped without a shot.

When he resumed the life of a civilian Mr. Orr returned to the farm and soon bought a tract of land in Valley District. He was occupied with the duties of that farm until the early '80s and since 1883 has been a resident of Masontown. He bought other lands in this vicinity, and farming has constituted the bulk of his business responsibilities. He was one of the promoters and is a director of the Bank of Masontown.

Mr. Orr cast his first ballot for President Lincoln while in the field as a soldier in 1864, and has never failed to support the republican candidate at presidential elections since then. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Grand Army of the Republic. He attended the National Encampment at Washington in 1902, and has met and visited with his old Colonel Johnson several times and in 1915 had the good fortune to meet his old commander, General Duval.

December 24, 1867, Mr. Orr married Miss Elizabeth Ashburn, daughter of Aaron and Hannah Ashburn. She was born in the Valley District of Preston County, January 31, 1845, and died November 25, 1913, forty-six years after their marriage. The children of their union were: Birnie M., wife of George M. Coburn, of Morgantown; Olive M., wife of N. J. Seaman, of Paden City, West Virginia; Lucy May, at home with her father; and Forest U., who died unmarried at Morgantown.

MAHALA JANE ELLIOTT, a business woman of Kingwood, is a native of Preston County and a member of an old and well connected family near Newburg.

Her grandfather, Thomas Shay, founded the family near Newburg. He was the grandson of an Irishman who established this branch of the Shay family in America. Thomas Shay served as a soldier in the War of 1812. Otherwise his life was devoted to his farm, and he never sought the distinctions of public service. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was about eighty years of age when he died. Thomas Shay married Phoebe A. Sidwell, who survived him three years. Their children were: Ezekiel, a blacksmith, who died in Monongalia County; Mary, who became the wife of Alfred Moreland and died in Barbour County; Rees, a farmer who died in Preston County; Benjamin, who died on his farm in Lyon District of that county; Hugh, who spent his life as a farmer in Preston County; Jesse, a farmer of Preston County; Debbie, who died in Preston County, the wife of William Shannon; and James.

James Shay, youngest of the children and the father of Mrs. Elliott of Kingwood, was born near Newburg, October 7, 1829. He became a farmer, and besides cultivating the soil raised stock on a rather extensive scale. His entire life was spent on the farm where he was born. He died there in May, 1878. He participated in politics only to the extent of voting, and, like all the other members of the Shay family, was a staunch republican. James Shay married Mary Hanway, daughter of Samuel and Mahala (Cox) Hanway. Samuel Hanway was a resident of Reno District of Preston County, but in the early '70s removed to Kansas and settled in Bourbon County, and he died at Barnsville. His children were: Mary, George, Ezekiel, Mrs. Sarah Bishop, Mrs. Rachel Bishop, Mrs. Jane Thomas, James Madison, Holton, Mrs. Rebecca Shaw, John, who died during the Civil war at Camp Chase, Ohio, Robert, and Joseph, a resident of Howard, Kansas. Three of the children, Ezekiel, George and Mrs. Sarah Bishop, died in Bourbon County, Kansas. Mrs. James Shay died April 5, 1892, mother of the following children: Mrs. Mahala Elliott; Thomas R., of Tunnelton; Carmac and George L., of Kingwood; Elizabeth E., whose first husband was Walter B. Garner and she is now the wife of Elmer Christopher, of Kingwood; Della A., wife of Waitman T. Newcomb, of Kingwood; and Ella, wife of Charles A. Fletcher, of Washington, D. C.

Mahala Jane Shay was born at Newburg, March 1, 1860. She and the other children had only the advantages of the common schools, and her years were spent at the old homestead until her marriage on December 20, 1891, to James M. Elliott. Mr. Elliott was born and brought up on a farm within three miles of Kingwood. His father was John Elliott, and he was the youngest of the children to reach mature years, the others being Isaac, William, Mrs. Rebecca Bailey, Mrs. Nancy Forker, Samuel, John Dougherty and Mrs. Minerva Bailey.

When Mr. and Mrs. Elliott were married they established themselves on the old Elliott farm, and lived there until Mr. Elliott's death, which occurred January 12, 1912. Mr. Elliott was chiefly interested in the efficient conduct of his farm, and outside of this he worshiped as a Methodist and voted as a staunch republican. The only child born to Mr. and Mrs. Elliott was named John Shay, and he died at the age of three years.

Mrs. Elliott in 1919 removed to Kingwood, and has since engaged in the grocery and confectionery business. She cast her first ballot in 1920, and the head of the ticket bore the name Warren G. Harding.

ROBERT LANLEY ARCHER, vice president of the First National Bank of Huntington, has been through every department of that bank's service beginning as messenger. His record of over thirty years constitutes him one of the older active bankers of the state. Mr. Archer is one of the best known of West Virginia's financial leaders, and has been honored with the offices of secretary, treasurer and president of the State Bankers Association and he also served as a member of the Executive Council of the American Bankers Association.

He was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, August 24, 1871. His father, Thomas Archer, was born at Penrith, Cumberland County, England, was reared and educated there, married his first wife in England, and his career throughout was merchandising. About 1861 he came to the United States and located at Cleves in Hamilton County, Ohio, and in October, 1871, came to Huntington, where he established and built up his successful mercantile enterprise, and was active in its management when he died in 1876. He was a very devout Presbyterian. His second wife was Frances Mathew Richey, who was born in 1833 at West Point, New York, and died at Huntington in 1917. Her three sons were: Richard M., a newspaper editor at Wheeling; Robert Lanley; and Frank M., a wholesale merchant at Bluefield, West Virginia.

Robert Lanley Archer was reared from early infancy in Huntington, attended the public schools there, and after leaving high school at the age of fifteen was employed for three years in an insurance office and then became clerk in the lumber agent's office of the Ensign Manufacturing Company, now the American Car and Foundry Company. Leaving there in 1890, Mr. Archer entered the First National Bank of Huntington as messenger and collection clerk, and subsequent promotions gave him a definite working acquaintance with the duties of individual bookkeeper, general bookkeeper, teller, assistant cashier and cashier and in 1920 he was elected vice president. Mr. Archer is also president of the Huntington Roofing Tile Company, treasurer of the Huntington Orchard Company, and has other business interests.

For nine years he was a member of the Huntington Board of Education. He is a republican, a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, the Rotary Club, Guyan County Club and Guyandotte Club, all of Huntington. His home is at 1505 Sixth Avenue. During the World War Mr. Archer was chairman of the Huntington committees for the prosecution of the first and second Liberty Loan drives, and then received appointment from the secretary of the treasury to act as state director of War Savings. In this post he thoroughly organized the state, establishing committees in every county, made many speeches and gave personal direction to the campaign, and altogether his organization effected the sale of $20,000,000 worth of War Savings Stamps in the state.

In 1893, at West Columbia, Mason County, West Virginia, Mr. Archer married Irma Louise Knight, daughter of Dr. Aquilla L. and Susan Frances (Willis) Knight, now deceased. Her father was an honored and capable physician and surgeon at West Columbia. Mrs. Archer is a graduate of Marshall College of Huntington.

ALCINUS F. McMILLEN, of Masontown, is an old-time educator and surveyor and civil engineer, but for a number of years past his studious energies have been directed along the line of scientific as well as practical farming. Mr. McMillen has been a leader in the modern agricultural movement in this section of Preston County, and his farm is interesting as a practical experiment station for the testing out of methods and crops best suited to this region.

The family history of the McMillens in Preston County runs back to 1790. In that year Robert McMillen, who had served as a soldier on the American side in the Revolutionary war, patented 500 acres of the virgin soil near Friendship Schoolhouse in Valley District. His old cabin stood near the residence of William H. Everly, now one of the prominent old residents of the county. It was close to the river where fishing was good and where game was plentiful, and the climate somewhat milder than further up the valley. Robert McMillen was one of the first to begin the cultivation of the soil in that locality. He was buried not far from the scene of his labors and activities. Among his numerous children were William, James, Robert and Elizabeth.

William McMillen, representing the second generation of the family in Preston County, was born in the wild and somewhat romantic spot where his father settled. He grew up with little knowledge of books but became skilled in the arts of woodcraft and frontier accomplishments. While still a youth he learned to handle a gun expertly, and was the chief dependence of the family for its meat supply. When he settled down he located at Masontown, on the farm now occupied by his grandsons, Newton W. and Alcinus F. He married Sarah Coburn, daughter of Simon Coburn, and member of another early pioneer family of Preston County. William McMillen and wife lived out their lives on the Masontown farm and are buried in the cemetery on said farm, half a mile from the village. Their children were: Robert; James, who served in the Union Army during the Civil war, reared his family near or on the patented land of his grandfather and is buried in Mount Zion Cemetery; and Sabra, who became the wife of William Anderson, and both are now at rest in the cemetery on the home farm near Masontown.

Robert McMillen was born October 24, 1824, and lived just half a century, passing away October 24, 1874. His education was such as could be obtained from the schools of that day. He was a good farmer and was constant and devoted to the life and leadership of the community. For many years he was one of the most ardent workers in the Methodist Church, and exerted a constant influence in behalf of education and morality. He helped build school houses and churches and had a kindly interest in the welfare of the younger generation as well as that of his own. He could make an effective speech when the occasion demanded, and he usually led the singing at church. Physically he was a man six feet one, weighed about one hundred fifty pounds, and had a florid complexion and red hair.

Robert McMillen married Nancy Hartley, of Masontown. Her father, Edward Hartley, founded this numerous and prominent family in this vicinity. Nancy Hartley was born November 23, 1826, and died October 9, 1901, at the age of seventy-five. Her children were: Newton W., a farmer a mile north of Masontown; Alcinus Fenton; Rev. Edward W., a Methodist minister at North Platte, Nebraska; John L., of Masontown; Dr. Robert M., of Wheeling; Charlotte, wife of John S. Miller, of West Liberty, Ohio County, West Virginia; and Emily Bell, who married O. D. Sims, of Short Creek, near West Liberty.

Alcinus F. McMillen was born December 4, 1853, and his home through practically all his life has been at the place where he was born. He attended the free schools, took a course in the Fairmont State Normal, and at the age of twenty began teaching. His service as a teacher, covering a period of twelve years, was in the schools of Masontown, Reedsville, Kingwood, Rowlesburg and elsewhere. The intervals of teaching he employed in farm work and in surveying. Mr. McMillen had the mathematical and mechanical gifts required of an expert civil engineer. His reputation in this field brought him engagements so that he was employed in the surveying of timber and coal lands in Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina as well as in his home state. For sixteen years he was county surveyor of Preston County, and was also the first county road engineer, serving from 1909 to 1911. The duties of his office were especially strenuous when coal development began in the county, and while preparations were under way for the milling of timber lands. After his long and effective service with his surveying instruments he was quite able to be relieved and retire to the less arduous pursuits of agriculture.

As a farmer he has not kept strictly within commercial lines and with commercial objects in view, but has frequently done a season's work with every prospect of failure in order that he might demonstrate a new principle or method. The methods of former years in farming were much different from those practiced by him today. The shovel plow was the common implement then, and the harrow was seldom used to pulverize the soil. Harvesting progress has been marked by the successive introduction of the sickle, the cradle, the self binder, and, finally, the tractor has enormously increased the power and effectiveness of all farming machinery. In early times when the soil was new it was exceedingly productive, and the scratching of the surface was all that was required to produce crops. It was many years after the Civil war before the need of fertilizer appeared, and with fertilizer came the new invention of manure spreader and the use of lime to sweeten the soil, especially for grass crops. Clover and timothy have been the standby crops for hay, but Mr. McMillen was one of the first to experiment with alfalfa, which required special treatment and conditions to secure a permanent stand. With the use of extra lime and inoculation alfalfa has proved its money-making qualities here as elsewhere, and Mr. McMillen has frequently cut three crops a year, with an average yield of about three tons per acre. His success has encouraged his neighbors in the same direction. Mr. McMillen has also done much practical experiment work with seed potatoes, until he has found the variety and strain best adapted to this region and is now regarded as the foremost authority on potato culture in this section of the state.

Mr. McMillen has been ready with personal work, influence and his purse to promote the institutions of school and church. The erection of a high school and the building of a new Methodist Church were both accomplished through popular subscriptions, and the McMillen donation to both was ample and unstintingly made. Mr. and Mrs. McMillen for many years have been faithful workers in the Methodist denomination.

March 22, 1887, he married Miss Christie Guseman, who was born in Monongalia County, April 29, 1859, daughter of John W. and Carrie (Snider) Guseman. Carrie Snider was a daughter of John and Julia (Hess) Snider. John W. Guseman was descended from Abraham Guseman, and was a son of Jacob Guseman. Abraham came from Germany and located at Baltimore in 1776. John W. Guseman and wife had fourteen children, and the nine still living are Samuel R., Mrs. Christie McMillen, William A., Mrs. Ida Ashburn, Robert, Mrs. Ida Smith, Ames E., Pryor and Stanley Guseman.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. McMillen the oldest, Herbert, was born December 25, 1887. He was a graduate of the University of West Virginia, for a time was in the employ of the National Carbon Company at Niagara Falls, but is now at home farming during a leave of absence. He married Edith Protzman, of Monongalia County, and they have two children, Jean and Christine. The second child, Mabel, a graduate of the West Liberty Normal School, is the wife of Claude C. Spiker, of a well-known Preston County family and professor of romance languages in the University of West Virginia. Professor and Mrs. Spiker have a son, Robert Claude. The third child, Harry McMillen, is actively associated with his father on the farm. He married Mary Long and has three children: Byron, James and Kyle Clinton. The youngest of the family is Frank Vincent, connected with the farming interests of Manitoba, Canada.

ROGERS PHARMACY. The Rogers Pharmacy at Morgantown is one of the most perfectly appointed establishments of its kind in West Virginia. The proprietors are two brothers, Paul M. and William M. Rogers. Western men by birth, although their father at one time lived at Morgantown, and their mother was born in West Virginia.

Their father, Daniel R. Rogers, was born at Connelville, Pennsylvania January 8, 1855. He attended public schools, the State University of West Virginia at Morgantown, where he began his medical studies, and later graduated from Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia with the class of 1880. For four years he practiced at New Martinsville, West Virginia, where his wife, Margaret E. Martin, was born June 20, 1858. They were married September 15, 1886. After leaving West Virginia Doctor Rogers moved to Nebraska, and for forty years has carried the duties and burdens of an active practitioner at Iagan, that state. Of their children the oldest is Anne E., the widow of Dr. B. B. Cox, one of Morgantown's honor men in the World war. He was attached to Base Hospital No. 1003 at Dijon, France, when he was killed. The one child in this family is Margaret Evelyn Cox. Thomas C., the second oldest, is cashier of the Bank of Ragan. He married Jean McKee, of Alma, Nebraska, and has two children, Daniel and Everett. The next in age is Paul M. He and William M. are proprietors of the Rogers Pharmacy. The two youngest of the family are Margaret N. and William M., who are twins. Margaret N. is a member of the faculty of Mannington, West Virginia, High School, and is a graduate of the University of West Virginia.

Paul M. Rogers was born in Ragan, Nebraska, August 13, 1891. He attended public schools there, graduated from the Kearney Military Academy at Kearney, Nebraska, and took his professional work in the University of Nebraska, graduating in pharmacy. He then left Nebraska and for three years was employed as a pharmacist in Pennsylvania, first at Brownsville, then at East Liverpool, Ohio, and then at Charleroi, Pennsylvania. From there he came to Morgantown.

William M. Rogers was born at Ragan, Nebraska, October 27, 1896, attended the same schools as his brother, graduating from the Military Academy and receiving his degree in pharmacy from the State University in 1917. After graduation he went West instead of East, and for three years was a pharmacist at Las Vegas, New Mexico, and while there organized a transfer business consisting of a fleet of trucks operating to points within 200 miles of Las Vegas. This is still a flourishing business at Las Vegas. In 1921 the Rogers Brothers opened their present place of business at Morgantown. Both are thorough pharmacists and also able young business men as well, and they have left nothing undone that will afford the most complete service in the preparation of drugs for physicians, and they have introduced into Morgantown as complete stock of surgical supplies as is seldom found in a city of this size. While they emphasize the thoroughness of the service as pharmacists and druggists, they have also given their store other features that attract the public, including the serving of soft drinks. Their fountain is one of the most elaborate and costly made, the base being of pure Italian marble. It is a business highly creditable to the proprietors and to the city as well.

WILLIAM LAWSON MITCHELL, D. D. S., of Mannington, was born in Bellville, Wood County, West Virginia, September 8, 1883, the son of the late Horace and Ella (Williamson) Mitchell.

Horace Mitchell was one of the leading business men and popular citizens of Wood County for many years. He was born in that county in 1853, and died at his home in Bellville, June 6, 1914. He was the son of Henry and Ann (Hupp) Mitchell, natives of Wood County, whose parents came from old Virginia and were pioneers in that section of what is now West Virginia. His wife, Ella Williamson, was born in Wood County in 1860, and died November 11, 1902. She was the daughter of Anthony and Sarah Williamson, natives of West Virginia and Pennsylvania respectively.

Henry Mitchell, grandfather of our subject, was an early merchant of Bellville, and when his son, Horace, was a boy of only eight years the latter went to work in the store, he having been so small at that time that he stood upon a box to wait upon customers. Horace continued in his father's store, and following the death of his father he and his brother succeeded to the business, conducting it until the death of Horace in 1914.

Horace Mitchell was probably as well known and highly esteemed, especially among traveling men, as any man in the Ohio Valley. He, like his father and grandfather, was an ardent democrat, though he never sought or held public office. He was a member of the different Masonic bodies, including the S. R., thirty-second degree, K. T., also a member of Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, Wheeling, and was active in civic and social affairs.

Doctor Mitchell was reared in Bellville and acquired his early education in the public schools. He was a student at Marshall College in 1901-2, and then entered the Ohio College of Dental Surgery at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was graduated D. D. S., class of 1907.

He practiced at Parkersburg, West Virginia, from 1907 to 1909, from 1909 to 1912 at Follansbee, West Virginia, and then located at Mannington, where he has established himself as a successful dentist and a worth-while citizen.

Doctor Mitchell is a member of the Masons, including the Consistory (thirty-second degree S. R.) and Shrine. He has been a member of the Elks since he was twenty-one years old, and is a charter member of the Mannington Kiwanis Club and also a member of the Presbyterian Church.

On October 20, 1915, Doctor Mitchell married Nell Jackson Burt, who was born in Mannington, the daughter of William and Rose (Prichard) Burt, the former of whom is deceased.

GEORGE ROBERT MILLER, M. D. The community of Fairview, Marion County, expresses its appreciation of Doctor Miller not only by saying that he is the oldest physician in the town in point of years of service, but likewise has special qualifications for his profession and is never behind in the exercise of public spirit when something needs to be done requiring the co-operation of all local citizens.

Doctor Miller after completing his medical education returned to what is practically his home neighborhood. He was born on a farm in Lincoln District, about six miles from Fairview, on December 23, 1871, and except when away to school has kept quite constantly in touch with old friends and neighbors there. His father, a son of John Miller, was born on a farm at Boothsville in Marion County in 1838, and the duties of agriculture engaged him until his death in 1873. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mary Prichard Miller, mother of Doctor Miller, was born on the old Prichard homestead in Lincoln District in 1840, daughter of John Prichard and representative of a pioneer family. She died in 1912.

George Robert Miller was only two years old when his father died. He spent his boyhood on the farm, alternating between its duties and his lessons in the district schools. For three years he supplemented this early education in the Fairmont State Normal School. Teaching was his first active service for humanity, and the five years he worked in the district schools of his home county also furnished him part of the capital needed to gain his medical education. While teaching he likewise carried private studies that furnished the equivalent of preparatory work for college. Doctor Miller graduated M. D. from the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati in 1901. Following a year of practice at Blacksburg, West Virginia, he returned to his home district, and his continued work here, besides being highly successful, has made him the oldest physician in years of practice at Fairview.

He keeps in touch with his profession through membership in the Marion County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations and also in the National Eclectic Medical Association. His public spirit has led him to assume the responsibility of service on the Town Council. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, member of the Masonic Club of Fairview, the Knights of Pythias, and on the Board of Trustees of the Fairview Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1900 Doctor Miller married Harriett Phillips, a native of Greene County, Pennsylvania, and daughter of Lindsey and Ellen (Fordyce) Phillips. Doctor and Mrs. Miller have three sons and a daughter: Thomas Byron, born in 1902, now a high-school student; Aldene, born in 1903, now teaching in the public schools of Granttown; George Robert, Jr., born in 1906, in high school; and William Edward, born in 1910.

A. M. HEWITT. That all men do not find the niche for which they consider themselves especially fitted is largely due to their inability to fit themselves for those niches which they could occupy with profit and honor. They do not concentrate themselves upon that which they understand and for which nature and training have made them ready, but diffuse themselves over too wide a territory, and in the end accomplish little or nothing. The successful man in any line is he who develops his latent strength by the use of vigorous fitness, innate powers and expert knowledge, gradually attaining to a proficiency not possible in the beginning. Each line of endeavor demands certain special qualifications. Some men are born executives, being able to direct others to carry out plans which are formulated in the active brain of the leader; while others can only follow. A man who does possess this power to promote and direct is wise indeed if he bends all his energies to attaining an executive position, for in it he can reach heights he could attain in no other way. Among the able executives of Huntington who have made their mark in the business world by concentrating upon a given line of endeavor, one who demands more than passing attention at this time is A. M. Hewitt, president and treasurer of the D. E. Hewitt Lumber Company.

Mr. Hewitt was born at Conneautville, Pennsylvania, December 5, 1886, a son of Daniel Elmer and Cora M. (Walton) Hewitt. His grandfather, Francis Marion Hewitt, who is of English descent and still a resident of Conneautville, was born July 26, 1838, probably in Ohio, but for the greater part of his life has made his home at Conneautville, where he was a lumber manufacturer in pioneer days. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having fought as a Union soldier all through the struggle between the North and the South. Mr. Hewitt married Penelope Lampson, who was born at Pierpont, Ohio, and died at Conneautville.

D. E. Hewitt

Daniel Elmer Hewitt was born May 23, 1865, at Conneautville, Pennsylvania, and was reared and married in his native community, where he learned the lumber business with his father. That business he followed throughout a long and eminently successful and useful career. In 1888 he removed to Butler, Pennsylvania, where he became head of the firm of R. F. Wilcox & Company, wholesale lumber manufacturers, but in 1890 moved back to Conneautville, although retaining the same position with the same concern. Mr. Hewitt came to Huntington in 1903 and founded the Hutchinson Lumber Company, of which he was president until 1908, then disposing of this company and founding the D. E. Hewitt Lumber Company, of which he was president until his death, and which he developed into one of the leading lumber enterprises in West Virginia, dealing in hardwoods as a wholesale manufacturer. Mr. Hewitt was president of the Kermit State Bank of Kermit, West Virginia, and president of the Buck Creek Coal Company. In politics he was a republican, and his religious connection was with the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Huntington, the movements of which always received his hearty and generous support. He held membership in the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar Mason, and also belonged to Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. Mr. Hewitt married Miss Cora M. Walton, who was born November 11, 1865, at Conneautville. She still survives at Huntington, while Mr. Hewitt died at Columbus, Ohio, December 1, 1921. They were the parents of three children: A. M., of this notice; Irene, the wife of George H. Parker, manager of the Kentucky Actuarial Bureau at Louisville, Kentucky; and Lina, the wife of Robert J. Foley, a coal operator of Huntington.

A. M. Hewitt attended the public schools of Conneautville, Pennsylvania, and after his graduation from the high school there in 1903 entered his father's office at Huntington and began to learn the lumber business from the bottom. He worked his way up the ladder to the position of secretary and treasurer, and at the death of his father became president and treasurer of the D. E. Hewitt Lumber Company. This concern manufactures a line of West Virginia hardwoods, and at present is operating 17,000 acres of forests. It is incorporated under the state laws of West Virginia, and maintains offices at 1003-4-5-6 First National Bank Building, Huntington. The officers are: A. M. Hewitt, president and treasurer; G. H. Parker, vice president; and E. F. Sticklen, secretary. Mr. Hewitt is also a director in the Kermit State Bank of Kermit, West Virginia, and president of the Buck Creek Coal Company of Huntington.

Mr. Hewitt is a republican, but save as a good citizen has had little to do with political affairs. He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Huntington. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T.; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Wheeling, thirty-second degree; and of Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. He has several other connections, among them the Guyan-dotte Club, the Guyan Country Club and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Hewitt owns a modern residence at No. 1116 Twelfth Avenue, in a desirable residence district of Huntington.

On November 17, 1915, at Huntington, Mr. Hewitt was united in marriage with Miss Ruth Campbell, daughter of Hon. Charles W. and Mrs. (Ratcliff) Campbell. Mr. Campbell is one of the distinguished attorneys of the Cabell County bar, and at present is serving as mayor of Huntington. A review of his career appears elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Hewitt is a graduate of Belcourt Seminary, Washington, D. C., and of the Conservatory of Music, Cincinnati, Ohio, and is talented in both vocal and instrumental music. She and her husband are the parents of three children: Nancy Frazier, born September 30, 1917; Marion, born January 13, 1920; and Ruth, born September 20, 1921.

RICHARD B. PARRISH is known as a banker all over the great coal and industrial district of Southern West Virginia. He has been an official in several prosperous banking institutions in this part of the state, and is now president of the Bluefield National Bank, an institution with upwards of a million dollars in resources.

Mr. Parrish was born at Malden, Kanawha County, West Virginia, August 15, 1876, son of John W. and Lena (Putney) Parrish. His parents were natives of West Virginia and his great-grandfather on his mother's side was a member of the House of Burgesses in old Virginia, while a great uncle was a patriot soldier in the Revolution. John W. Parrish spent the greater part of his life as a merchant, and took a keen interest in public affairs. For many years he was on the local school board and he was also a member of the State Legislature at the time of the Goff contest, one of the notable events in legislative annals in West Virginia. While he was in the Legislature his son Richard served as page in the House.

Richard B. Parrish began his education in the common schools of Malden. In 1889 his parents removed to Huntington, where he continued through grammar school and high school, leaving high school to go to work as clerk for the Ensing Manufacturing Company, now American Car and Foundry Company. He was with that concern two years, and since then his experience has been almost entirely in banking. His early training for banking was acquired in the First National Bank of Huntington, which he entered as bookkeeper and collection clerk, and was teller when he left in 1906. In that year Mr. Parrish became assistant cashier of the Mingo County Bank of Williamson, now the National Bank of Commerce. He left this in 1907 to become cashier of the newly organized First National Bank of Northfork, West Virginia. Mr. Parrish while living at Northfork served one term as mayor, and he was also secretary of the Masonic Lodge there. In 1911 he returned to Williamson with the Mingo County Bank, and when it was reorganized in 1912 as the National Bank of Commerce he remained with it at the post of cashier.

Mr. Parrish was one of the organizers in 1916 of the Bluefield National Bank, which opened its doors for business in March, 1917. Mr. Parrish was the first cashier, and was made president in January, 1921, to succeed Mr. William Leekie, deceased. Mr. Parrish in 1918 organized and became the first president of the First National Bank of Matoaka, and is still a director. While at Williamson he was secretary of Group 6 of the West Virginia State Bankers Association.

In 1909, at Peterstown, Monroe County, West Virginia, Mr. Parrish married Miss May Callaway, daughter of Lewis and Wilda (Hunter) Callaway. Her father for many years was county clerk of Monroe County. Mr. and Mrs. Parrish have one daughter, Althea Hunter Parrish. They are members of the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Parrish being an elder. He is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a director in the Chamber of Commerce, a member of the National Advisory Board of the Old Colony Club, and he organized the Rotary Club at Bluefield and was its first president, holding that office two and a half years. He is a member of the Bluefield Country Club and the New Mercer County Country Club, one of his recreations being the game of golf.

W. S. PHELPS has had a long and active commercial career, and for a number of years has been a merchant at Bluefield, where he is proprietor of the Phelps Furniture Company.

Mr. Phelps was born October 14, 1867, at Boone Mills, Virginia, son of A. J. and A. A. (Boone) Phelps, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Boone Mills. All his ancestors were early Virginians, some of them being in the Revolutionary war. On his mother's side Mr. Phelps is descended from the family that comprised the Boone settlement in Virginia in early Colonial times. A. J. Phelps served as a Confederate soldier four years, all through the war, and the rest of his life was devoted to farming.

W. S. Phelps acquired a common school education at Boone Mills and as a youth went to work for the Fishburn Brothers, tobacco manufacturers and dealers at Roanoke, Virginia. He continued in the tobacco business for sixteen years as a salesman, covering practically the entire Middle West, with headquarters at Memphis. On leaving the tobacco business he chose Bluefield as the city with the greatest opportunities for the future, and entered the furniture business. He has built up a splendid enterprise in that line, and in 1909 incorporated the Phelps Furniture Company, in which he has the controlling interest.

November 17, 1897, at Roanoke, Virginia, Mr. Phelps married Miss Eula Richardson, daughter of D. P. Richardson, who is living in the same house where she was born at Roanoke. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps are members of the Baptist Church. He is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the United Commercial Travelers, the Chamber of Commerce and the Falls Mills Fishing Club.

FRENCH MCCRAY, LL. B. (West Virginia University) 1909, LL. B. (Ohio State University) 1910, is established in the successful practice of his profession in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, is one of the representative lawyers of that community and Divorce Commissioner of Marion County.

He was born at Fairmont, February 21, 1883, and is a representative of families whose names have been long and prominently identified with the history of the northern part of West Virginia. His mother, whose maiden name was Martha Virginia Prichard, was a daughter of the late Thomas and Mahala Prichard and a niece of the late Capt. Amos N. Prichard, of Mannington. His father, Charles Edward McCray, one of Fairmont's oldest, best-known and most prosperous citizens, was born in Harrison County, Virginia, (now West Virginia), as were also the latter's parents, John Elliott and Rebecca (Cunningham) McCray, the latter a granddaughter of John Drago, a pioneer settler of that section.

French McCray was graduated from the Fairmont High School in May, 1904, and thereafter continued his studies at the Fairmont State Normal School during the year 1904-05. The following fall he entered the Ohio State University (Columbus), which institution he attended during the four years 1905-08, 1909-10, College of Arts-Law, and received the degree Bachelor of Laws in June, 1910. During 1908-09 he attended the West Virginia University, College of Law, from which school he was graduated in June, 1909, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws.

Mr. McCray was admitted to the bar of his native state April 8, 1910. On the 28th day of June, 1910, he was admitted to the bar of the State of Ohio, an honor earned by the successful passing of the rigid bar examination required by that state; and likewise, on November 5, 1910, he was admitted to the bar of the State of Indiana. In November, 1917, he was also admitted to the bar of the United States District and Circuit Courts. Since November, 1910, he has been actively engaged in the general practice of his profession at Fairmont, with a record of excellent achievement as a resourceful trial lawyer and able counselor. During the 1911 and 1913 sessions he was special counsel for the Standard Oil Company at the West Virginia Legislature. At present Mr. McCray holds the position of Divorce Commissioner for Marion County to which place he was appointed by the Circuit Court of said county July 12, 1922.

He is a member of the Southern Club (Ohio State), Sphinx Fraternity (West Virginia), "Sons of the Revolution," Knights of Malta (Fairmont), Marion County and West Virginia Bar associations. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and he and his wife hold membership in the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Fairmont.

April 28, 1913, was the date of Mr. McCray's marriage with Miss Mary Rhea Flinchbaugh, who was born in Columbus, Ohio. She is a daughter of John H. and Alice (Alexander) Flinchbaugh, of Columbus, both natives of the State of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. McCray have a daughter, Alice Ann, who was born in the spring of 1921.

FRANK JOHN WILLFONG has shown much discrimination and resourcefulness in the work of his profession, that of civil engineer, has served as county surveyor of Marion County, and is at the present time the county road engineer of this important county, with residence and official headquarters in the City of Fairmont.

Mr. Willfong is a representative of one of the old and influential families of what is now the State of West Virginia. His paternal grandfather, George Willfong, was born in one of the Virginia counties east of the Alleghany Mountains and was a boy at the time of the family removal to the present Upshur County, West Virginia, where his father became a pioneer farmer and substantial citizen. The paternal grandfather of George Willfong was born and reared in Holland, and upon coming to America became a member of one of the Dutch settlements in Virginia. George Willfong continued his residence in Upshur County until about the year 1855, when he removed with his family to Opekiska District, Monongalia County, where he continued his association with farm enterprise and where both he and his wife remained until their deaths.

Frank John Willfong was born at Opekiska in Clinton District, Monongalia County, February 12, 1885, and is a son of Charles and Margaret (Hildebrand) Willfong, the former of whom was born in Upshur County, in 1848, and the latter was born on the old Hildebrand homestead farm in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, across the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, the year of her nativity having been 1850 and her parents having been John and Mary (Wooster) Hildebrand. Both the Hildebrand and Wooster families were founded in America in the Colonial period of our national history, and representatives of the latter were patriot soldiers in the war of the Revolution, on which score the subject of this review is eligible for membership in the Sons of the American Revolution. The original progenitors of the Hildebrand family settled in New England, and members of the family later removed from Plymouth, New Hampshire, and became pioneer settlers in Western Pennsylvania, on land across the river from the present City of Pittsburgh. It is interesting to record that near Plymouth, New Hampshire, there is an old homestead that is still known as the Hildebrand place. Mrs. Margaret (Hildebrand) Willfong was seven years old when her parents came from Pennsylvania and settled in Monongalia County, West Virginia, as now constituted, her father having then become the owner of 500 acres of land, in Opekiska District, at the head of White Day Creek, he having been compelled to retire from the work of his trade, that of glassblower, on account of impaired eyesight.

Charles Willfong was a lad of seven years at the time of the family removal from Upshur County to Monongalia County, in which latter he was reared on the home farm, the while he duly profited by the advantages of the common schools of the locality. He became a successful exponent of farm industry in that county, and was also in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at Opekiska until 1918, since which year he has been living retired at Fairmont, both he and his wife being well-known and highly esteemed citizens of this city.

Frank J. Willfong gained his early education principally in the public schools of Opekiska, and as a youth he manifested a distinct predilection for civil engineering, his interest in which was such that he determined to prepare himself for the profession. He procured textbooks and devoted himself earnestly to the study of the technical details of his chosen vocation, the while he gained coincident experience of practical order by serving as a rodman in connection with surveying work for the Davis Coal Company of Thomas, Kanawha County. By this fortunate combination he was enabled to make substantial progress in civil engineering, and he continued in the employ of the Davis Coal Company for two years. He then entered the employ of the Fairmont Traction Company as chain man and instrument man in engineering work, and after continuing this connection six years he served two years as assistant city engineer of Fairmont under S. B. Miller. In 1913 he was elected county surveyor of Marion County, and upon assuming his official duties he was also made county road engineer through appointment by the County Court. He continued his efficient services as county surveyor until the expiration of his term, on the 1st of January, 1921, and has since retained the post of county road engineer, an office in which he has been able and still continues to give valuable service, as the construction and maintenance of good roads is one of the most important phases of progressive enterprise in any section or community.

In 1909 Mr. Willfong wedded Miss Audra Louise Kennedy, who was born and reared in Monongalia County and who is a daughter of Coleman and Susan Kennedy. Mr. and Mrs. Willfong became the parents of three children: Albert Kennedy, aged eleven years (1922); Alfred Lee, who died in 1918, aged two years; and Anna Lee, three years of age in 1922.

CHARLES EDWARD BISHOP, PH. D., head of the department of Greek at West Virginia University, has been a prominent figure in American classical scholarship for many years, and has guided many successive generations of college and university classes so as to inspire in them an enduring affection for the language and literature of ancient Greece and Rome.

Doctor Bishop was born May 19, 1861, at Petersburg, Virginia. His father was Carter R. Bishop, a businessman and banker of Petersburg, and for many years a citizen who enjoyed leadership because his character and integrity commanded it. As a banker he held the unqualified confidence of his fellow citizens, a confidence that was repaid to him during the great panic of 1873, when his bank was the only one in Petersburg to weather that disastrous financial storm. He was too old for active military duty during the Civil war, but became a member of the Reserves. He was born on the James River in Virginia in 1820, of the old Carter family of that state. He died in 1875. His wife, Mary Elizabeth Head, was a native of Rhode Island and of New England ancestry. She died in 1863.

Charles Edward Bishop was only fourteen years of age when his father died. However, he was accorded the advantages of the best schools of his native state, attending the McCabe School at Petersburg, spent two years in the University of Virginia, where he was appointed instructor in Greek for the second year, and for two years was a teacher in the McGuire School at Richmond. In 1885 Doctor Bishop went abroad and for four years was a student of Greek, Latin and Sanskrit at Leipzig University, where he was offered the post of Famulus in Sanskrit. As was his custom among classical students there, the spoken language in all class work was Latin. Doctor Bishop received his Ph. D. degree from Leipzig University in 1889.

In that year, on his return to the United States, he became professor of Latin at Emory and Henry College in Virginia, where he remained three years. In 1892 he took the chair of Greek and modern languages at William and Mary College in Virginia. Doctor Bishop was ordained to the Presbyterian ministry in 1900 and is now a member of the Grafton Presbytery of West Virginia. He has been professor of Greek at West Virginia University at Morgantown since 1912.

Doctor Bishop is a noted authority on many subjects of the Greek Syntax. His Doctor's thesis in Germany was on the Greek Verbal in Teos in Aeschylus. He prepared a paper on "Greek Verbal in Teos in Sophocles" for the American Journal of Philology, and is also author of a series of contributions on "The Verbal in Teos from Homer to Aristotle." He is a member of the American Philological Association, and of the Classical Association of the Middle West and South, having been appointed vice president of the same for West Virginia, a member of the Pittsburg Philological Association, and is a charter member of the Phi Beta Kappa honorary scholarship fraternity, his membership dating from the reorganization or revival of that fraternity. He is also a member of the American Archaeological Society.

In 1892, in England, Doctor Bishop married Alice M. Hensley, of London, daughter of a London physician. Her uncle, Sir Robert Hensley, was knighted by King Edward. Doctor and Mrs. Bishop have three children: Charles Eric, now a business man of New York City, Ernest Edward, M. D., a practicing physician at Cincinnati, and Carter Richard, who is a teacher in West Virginia.

GRADY VEER MORGAN, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, is a representative of a family whose name has been one of distinctive prominence in the history of Northern West Virginia, the City of Morgantown here perpetuating the family name and prestige.

Doctor Morgan was born at Downs, Marion County, December 26, 1893, a son of Lloyd E. and Virginia (Parish) Morgan, both likewise natives of this county, where the former was born in 1854 and the latter in 1856, a daughter of the late Edward Parish. Lloyd E. Morgan was engaged in mercantile business at various points in his native county until 1910, and he and his wife now reside at Fairmont, where he is living retired.

After having attended the high school at Mannington, Doctor Morgan entered the preparatory department of the State Normal School at Fairmont, and in this institution he continued his studies until his graduation, in 1912, in the academic course and his completion of the normal course in 1913. In 1918 he was graduated from celebrated Eclectic Medical College in the City of Cincinnati, one of the oldest Eclectic institutions in the West, and after thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he was given charge of the Government Emergency Hospital, located between Metuchen and New Brunswick, New Jersey, where the Government had several hundred men at work in the building of an arsenal in connection with the nation's preparations for participation in the World war. Doctor Morgan has been engaged in active general practice at Fairmont since 1919, and his ability and personal popularity are attested by the scope and representative character of his clientele. He is a member of the Marion County Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society.

July 1, 1916, recorded the marriage of Doctor Morgan and Anna Lulu Thomas, who was born at Grafton, this state, February 10, 1894, a daughter of Martina P. and Isabel C. (Rosier) Thomas. Mr. Thomas was born at Grafton, August 19, 1859, a son of Garrett E. and Lavara (McGill) Thomas, and a grandson of Garrett Thomas and James McGill, early settlers at Grafton. Mr. Thomas taught school several years and thereafter was for twenty-three years in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. In 1912-13 he served as city collector of Grafton, and he and his wife have been residents of Fairmont since 1914. Dr. and Mrs. Morgan have two sons: Grady Thomas, born March 22, 1917, and William Richard, born December 3, 1919.

THOMAS KING JONES, secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Fairmont, one of the leading insurance concerns of the state, has been a substantial farmer as well as a business man, and the environment and experience of his life have given him every qualification for handling problems of business incident to agriculture.

He was born at Dent's Run, Grant District, Monongalia County, August 31, 1866, son of John L. and Maria J. (Morris) Jones, natives of the same county. His grand parents were Henry and Mary (Lough) Jones, and the former was born in Monongalia County in 1800, spending all his active lifetime on a farm in that county, where he died in 1876. John L. Jones rendered his active service in the vocation of agriculture. He was born on Little Indian Creek in Monongalia County in 1831, and his wife, Maria J. Morris, was born March 3, 1835, and died August 6, 1917. She was a daughter of Barton and Comfort (King) Morris, natives of Monongalia County.

Of the four children of John L. Jones and wife Thomas King is the only survivor. The oldest, Barton M. Jones, was born in Monongalia County, August 18, 1853, acquired his education in the free schools and the University of West Virginia, and for ten years was a farmer and teacher in the county schools and for a term of eight years was assessor of the Western District in Monongalia County. For one term he was sheriff of the county. He died in 1893, being survived by a widow and five sons. The second child, H. Clark Jones, was born in Monongalia County, September 14, 1858, had a public school education, attended the State University, and devoted his active years to farming. He died in 1917, and is survived by his widow and ten children. The only daughter of the family, Mollie E. Jones, was born April 30, 1856, finished her education in the Fairmont State Normal School, and was a successful teacher for a number of terms. She died October 2, 1893.

Thomas K. Jones acquired a free school education in Monongalia County, and as a youth went to work on his father's farm. From that he progressed to the ownership of a farm of his own, which he extended in acreage and in productive improvements and remained steadily at work on this property for forty-five years. He only left the farm in 1912, when he moved to Fairmont to assume the office of secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

March 15, 1888, Mr. Jones married Miss Emma Bowers. She was born October 26, 1867, in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, daughter of Peter and Rachel Bowers. Her father was also a native of Indiana County, where he spent his active life as a farmer, and during the Civil war he was a Union soldier. His death occurred in 1896.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have two daughters: Ollie Maria Fairchild, who was born December 7, 1888, was married September 30, 1916, to M. L. Portney, of Preston County, West Virginia, and they have one child, Rachael Fairchild, born May 6, 1918.

Martha Laura Cordelia, the second daughter, was born January 28, 1891. She is the wife of Robert M. Morgan, of Fairmont, manager of the Fairmont Motor Car Company. They have a daughter, Emma Belle, born April 19, 1914.

FRANK EMORY FURBEE has been actively associated with the business life of Mannington for over three decades, is head of the very prosperous establishment known as the H. R. & F. E. Furbee, extensive dealers in men's and women's wearing apparel and also is president of the Furbee Furniture Company, and through his substantial resources and influence he has contributed to the upbuilding of the little city, especially in its educational institutions.

This is one of the oldest American families in West Virginia, and in all the generations the name has stood for progress and advancement. The Furbrees are of English descent. Benjamin Furbee was born in 1693, on the Delaware-Maryland Peninsula. His son was named Bowers. Caleb, a son of Bowers, and the ancestor of the West Virginia branch of the family, was born at Kent, Delaware, November 22, 1752. As a young man he enlisted with the Delaware troops to serve the cause of independence in May, 1775. He was promoted to lieutenant in 1776, and in May, 1777, was in command of a detachment of troops in Captain Caldwell's company under Colonel Pope. Among other battles he was at Brandywine in 1777, and continued with the patriot armies until independence was achieved.

Caleb Furbee about 1790, with his wife, Sarah, and four sons, Waitman, John, George and Caleb, came to what is now West Virginia, settled near Morgantown, made large purchases of land on Paw Paw Creek, now in Marion County, and lived in the midst of and participated in the development of that section for years, but spent his last days in Tyler County, where the life of this Revolutionary patriot came to its close on April 16, 1837.

Three generations intervene between him and the Mannington merchant first named above. George Furbee, son of Caleb, was born in Delaware, spent his active life as a farmer and stock-raiser on Paw Paw Creek, and died in 1844. In 1796 he married Elizabeth Prichard. Their children were James and Elizabeth, the latter marrying Jeremiah Beatty.

James Furbee is the most prominent name associated with the early history of Mannington. He was born in the Paw Paw Creek district, and after some years as a farmer there he bought 800 acres, including the site of the City of Mannington. He founded the town, opened its first store, and guided his personal interests to the welfare of the community ever afterward. For many years he was a leading stock dealer. James Furbee in 1823 married Mary Ann Lindsay, daughter of Lindsay and Nellie (Jones) Bogges.

Their son was the late Hon. James Hilary Furbee, who was born at Basnettsville, Marion County, October 18, 1827. He found interesting duties in connection with his father's early enterprises at Mannington, and upon the completion of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad through that town in 1852 he was appointed station agent. These were his official duties until 1862, when he was appointed United States revenue collector. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil war he had raised a company for state service, became its captain, and was with the command in repelling threatened invasions from the South.

James H. Furbee in 1878 was elected a member of the West Virginia Legislature, and in 1880 was chosen to seat in the State Senate. However, on account of a technicality, he was not seated. In 1886 he was again elected by a large majority, and was also elected in 1892. Perhaps his most useful service in the Senate was rendered the cause of state education. That was his dominating public motive. He was chairman of the committee on education in the Senate. Hardly less important was the twenty years he served as president of the Board of Education of Mannington District. During this period his work contributed largely to the establishment of the free school system, and introduced something more than nominal standards for the management and conduct of the local schools. His long devotion to the cause culminated in his election as a lay delegate to the General Conference of 1900.

James H. Furbee, whose life of usefulness closed on November 9, 1899, married on October 7, 1855, Sarah McCoy, of Tyler County. Her grandparents, John and Esther (McCarty) McCoy, came from the North of Ireland in 1801, settling first in the Shenandoah Valley and subsequently removing to Middlebourne, Tyler County. The son, James McCoy, married in Tyler County, Jane Marti and they were the parents of Sarah J. Furbee, who survived her husband, passing away July 12, 1921.

This brings this interesting family narrative down to Frank Emory Furbee, who was born at Mannington, October 11, 1867. Both at home and in school he was well trained for the responsibilities that awaited him. After the public schools he attended the Fairmont State Normal School, and in 1890 graduated from Duff's Business College of Pittsburgh. He forthwith entered his father's business, known as J. H. Furbee & Sons, dealers in clothing, shoes and furnishings at Mannington. Since 1896 this prosperous business has been continued under the title of H. R. & F. E. Furbee. Mr. F. E. Furbee in 1910 became associated with the organization of the Furbee Furniture Company.

Mr. Furbee succeeds to the responsibilities so long held by his father as a guiding hand in the educational affairs of Mannington. He was chosen president of the Board of Education in July, 1919. He is a Knight Templar, thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, an Elk and a Modern Woodman, and is a charter member of the Kiwan Club.

October 4, 1899, Mr. Furbee married Virginia H. Hagdorn. She is of New England ancestry, and was born at Troy, New York, daughter of Charles H. and Charlot Hagdorn, of Bennington, Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Furbee have two children: Robert Dater, born November 10, 1900 and Martha Virginia, born March 11, 1912.

DANIEL CLINGSMITH TABLER is one of West Virginia's best known school principals and superintendents, due to his active service of more than thirty years. Mr. Tabler is now superintendent of the Mannington public schools.

He was born July 18, 1864, at Orion in Richland County, Wisconsin, son of William and Elizabeth Ann (Barne) Tabler, the former a native of Maryland and the latter of Ohio. William Tabler in his early life was a teacher, teaching in Wisconsin for a time, and from that state he removed with his family to Ohio and finally to West Virginia, where for a number of years he was engaged in the tobacco packing business. He finally went back to Ohio, where he died.

Daniel C. Tabler acquired his early education in the public schools of Ohio and West Virginia, and received his Master's

C. W. McCutcheon.

Arts degree from Ohio University at Athens. When he is about twenty-one, in 1885, he received his first teacher's certificate in Ritchie County. It was in that county that he won his first laurels as an educator. He remained there five years, the last two years as principal of the Ellensboro school. Mr. Tabler in 1890 went to Noble County, Ohio, to teach for a year at Dexter City, and in 1891, on returning to West Virginia, located at Parkersburg and for two years taught an out of town school. In 1894 he was elected supervising principal of the old Park School at Parkersburg, and was a factor in the educational life of that city for the following thirteen years. In 1906 he was elected superintendent of the Parkersburg schools, a post of duty he held for two years.

Following that he was principal of the Ravenswood High school in Jackson County, spent one year as superintendent of city schools at Davis, and at the end of that year he was elected superintendent and at the same time was elected superintendent of the Spencer schools, and in the meantime did receive a call as principal of the McKinley School at Parkersburg. After some consideration he resigned from the Davis schools, declined the call to Spencer, and returned to Parkersburg and for the following ten years was principal of the McKinley School. From Parkersburg Mr. Tabler came to Mannington as superintendent of the city schools, an office to which he was elected in 1919.

For about ten years Mr. Tabler was widely known over the state through his services as an instructor in teachers' institutes. He cancelled all engagements for this kind of work when he assumed charge of the Mannington schools. He is a member of the West Virginia State and National Educational Associations, and of the Monongahela Valley Round Table. Mr. Tabler is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, an Odd Fellow, a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and belongs to the Mannington Kiwanis Club.

Mr. Tabler married Miss Ella Hall Core, of Ellensboro, Ritchie County, daughter of the late Gen. Andrew S. Core, who was a Federal officer in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Tabler became the parents of four children, all of whom graduated from the Parkersburg High School. William Ray, oldest, born in 1891, is now in the auditing department of the Gulf Refining Company at Pittsburgh. The two younger children are Robert Allen, born in 1897, and Maude Sabella, who is a student in the West Virginia Wesleyan college at Buckhannon.

A special paragraph should stand as a brief memorial to the son of Mr. Tabler, who was born in 1894. After finishing high school he entered Marietta College in Ohio and when the World war came on he joined the French army and for six months was a camion driver in France. When America entered the war he secured a discharge from the French army and enlisted in the aviation service. He was promoted to first lieutenant at the Somme. He continued on duty until after the signing of the armistice, and on May 6, 1919, he met death when his ship crashed.

CLARENCE WATKINS McCUTCHEON, a civil and mining engineer of marked ability, is the executive head of the McCutcheon Engineering Company at Morgantown, Monongalia County, and is a young man who has to his credit a fine record of practical achievement in his profession.

Mr. McCutcheon was born at Winona, Fayette County, West Virginia, on the 27th of January, 1896, and is a son of John Floyd McCutcheon and Mary L. (Hagerman) McCutcheon, both of whom were born in Pulaski County, Virginia. Perry McCutcheon, paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, likewise was a native of the Old Dominion commonwealth, the family lineage tracing back to staunch Scotch origin and the original American pioneers having settled in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history. John Hagerman, the maternal grandfather of him whose name introduces this review, was one of five brothers who emigrated from their native Germany to the United States, four of the brothers settling in Western Maryland and establishing the settlement that eventually was developed into the present City of Hagerman, which perpetuates the family name. John, the youngest of the five brothers, settled in Virginia, and there he married Sarah Watkins Weigal.

John Floyd McCutcheon was born in 1862, and his death occurred in 1898. He was actively engaged in mercantile business in West Virginia until within a few years of his death. His widow is now a resident of Morgantown and Clarence W., of this sketch, is their only child.

Clarence W. McCutcheon was about two years of age at the time of his father's death, and was five years old when he accompanied his widowed mother on her removal from his native City of Winona to Richwood, Nicholas County, where he was afforded the advantages of the public schools, the discipline of which he later extended by about one year of study in Morris-Harvey College near Huntington, this state. He then entered Marshall College at Huntington, where he continued a student about one year, principally in high-school work, which likewise he had pursued in Morris-Harvey College. In 1911 he was graduated from the high school at Richwood and thereafter he was for one year a student in the Concord Normal School of West Virginia. In 1914 he matriculated in the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, in which he was graduated December 18, 1917, he having been, however, a member of the class of 1918 and having thus returned to the university to receive in that year his degree of Bachelor of Science and Civil Engineer.

On New Year's day of 1918 Mr. McCutcheon began practical service as a civil engineer at Kanawha Falls, and in June of that year he returned to the university for the reception of his degrees, with other members of his class. He then entered the employ of the Monongahela Valley Engineering Company at Morgantown, and in the same year was assigned to the limited-service class in connection with the nation's entrance into the World war. In September, 1918, he became an instructor in the College of Engineering of the University of West Virginia, as a representative of war-preparation work, and there he continued in constructive field instruction service until after the signing of the historic armistice that brought the war to a close.

After leaving the nation's service Mr. McCutcheon entered the employ of the Bertha Coal Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, with headquarters at Morgantown, West Virginia, and he continued his professional and executive service with this company until September, 1920, when he organized the McCutcheon Engineering Company, of which he is the executive head and which is developing a substantial and representative general engineering business in connection with industrial enterprise and public improvements in this section of the state.

Mr. McCutcheon is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and while in the university he was active in the affairs of "The Mountain" fraternity of that institution.

October 1, 1919, recorded the marriage of Mr. McCutcheon with Miss Ada Margaret Fletcher, daughter of Mrs. Jennima Fletcher-Mulvihill. The one child of this union is a fine little son, Donald Fletcher McCutcheon, born September 12, 1920.

RUSSELL L. FURBEE, who was in the navy during the World war, is member of a prominent Marion County family, and has already gained recognition as a lawyer practicing at Fairmont.

His home is at Mannington, where he was born January 15, 1898, son of Howard R. and Sarah Jane (Atha) Furbee. His mother was born at Mannington, November 12, 1867. The grandfather of the Fairmont lawyer was Senator James F. Furbee, a native of Marion County, who was elected as a republican and served one term in the West Virginia State Senate. Senator Furbee married Sarah McCoy. The late Howard R. Furbee was born at Mannington, February 28, 1866, and in early life was a lumberman, later an oil operator, and in 1904 was elected sheriff of Marion County. Just before the close of his four year term in that office he was chosen to the House of Delegates by being elected as a republican, and was reelected. At the close of his second term he retired from public affairs to devote all his time to his oil business, and so continued until his death on December 23, 1919. He was an active member of the Elks, Knights of Pythias, Moose, Modern Woodmen and Woodmen of the World.

Russell L. Furbee acquired a public school education at Fairmont and Mannington, graduating from the Mannington High School in 1914. For seven years he was a student in the University of West Virginia, and completed both the classical and law courses, receiving his A. B. degree in 1918 and his law degree in 1921. Mr. Furbee was an able student and took a prominent part in student affairs, being a member of the fraternities, literary societies and doing his part in athletics. In April, 1918, he left the university to enlist in the navy, and was in training at Norfolk, Virginia, for four months. He was then transferred to the Naval Aviation Ground School at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston, where he remained until December 21, 1918, being honorably discharged with the rating of chief quartermaster.

MARTIN LUTHER BROWN, cashier of the Fairmont State Bank, one of the substantial financial institutions of the judicial center of Marion County, was born on a farm in Clinton District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, on the 20th of March, 1867, and is the eldest son of Jabez A. and Mary V. (Gallier) Brown. The father was born in Monongalia County in the year 1844, and his entire active career was marked by close association with farm enterprise, his death having occurred in 1903. He was a son of Jabez Brown, Sr., who was born at Brown's Mills, Harrison County, in 1802, a son of Jabez, who was too young for service as a soldier in the War of the Revolution, but whose patriotism was expressed in his service as a teamster with General Washington's army. After the close of the war Jabez Brown (I) came to what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, where he reclaimed a farm at the place now known as Brown's Mills. He was born in New Jersey, where representatives of the family, including, probably, his father, settled upon removal from Connecticut. The father of the subject of this sketch was a republican, and he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Brown was born in Marion County, a daughter of William Gallier, whose wife was a member of the Miller family that became prominently identified with the pioneer history of this country.

Martin L. Brown was reared on the old home farm that was the place of his birth, and his youthful educational advantages included those of the University of West Virginia. At the age of seventeen he became a successful teacher in the rural schools, and at the age of twenty-three years he was appointed county superintendent of schools for his native county, to fill out an unexpired term, in 1890.

Thereafter he was regularly elected to this office for a term of two years. In Monongalia County he also served as deputy clerk of the Circuit Court for two years, and for several years he was chief clerk in the post office at Morgantown. He next held for three years the position of teller in the Farmers & Merchants Bank at Morgantown, and later served for a time as assistant cashier of the Citizen's National Bank of that city.

In 1906 he organized the Bank of Morgantown, and of the same he continued the cashier until January 1, 1911, when he resigned to accept the office of warden of the West Virginia Penitentiary. He held this position for four years, and for the ensuing three years was engaged in the insurance business at Morgantown, West Virginia. He had given eleven years of service as a member of the Morgantown Board of Education, of which he was secretary during this period.

In 1917 Mr. Brown was elected cashier of the Fairmont State Bank, and he has since been numbered among the progressive business men and honored citizens of the county seat of Marion County, where also he is a director of the Fairmont Tool Company. He is treasurer of the local Re Cross, a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club, and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and the Odd Fellows. In political matters he has been an active member of the republican party. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The first marriage of Mr. Brown was with Miss Sallie R. Duncan, who was born in Clinton District, Monongalia County, a daughter of Charles H. Duncan, and whose death occurred in 1899. She is survived by two children, Nellie G. and Ross D. For his second wife Mr. Brown wedded Miss Cora B. Duncan, daughter of Joseph R. Duncan, of Pittsburgh, and the child of this union is Joseph T.

HERSCHEL LAYMAN SATTERFIELD, D. D. S., a popular and representative member of the dental profession in Marion County, is established in successful practice in the City of Fairmont, where he was born at Palatine, now in the First Ward of the city, on the 8th of September, 1882. He is son of Samuel Layman and Virginia Catherine (Wilson) Satterfield. Samuel L. Satterfield was born on Pharo's Run this county, August 5, 1846, a son of Francis M. and Susan (Layman) Satterfield, the family genealogy tracing back to English origin, and the first representatives of the Satterfield family in what is now West Virginia having come from Pennsylvania in 1790 and made settlement at the present site of Colfax, on the Tygart's Valley River. Francis M. Satterfield was a pioneer settler on Pharo's Run, Marion County. He served three years as a soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and his son Samuel L. ran away from home in 1862 and enlisted in Company C, Tenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, in which he gave three years of gallant service as a loyal young soldier of the Union. Francis M. Satterfield became one of the prosperous farmers of Marion County, but was a resident of Holt, this state, at the time of his death.

Samuel L. Satterfield was reared on the home farm and later learned the carpenter's trade at Holt. After his marriage he removed to Palatine, now a part of Fairmont, and his death occurred July 31, 1903. His wife was born at Fairmont, December 12, 1849, a daughter of Arza D. and Catherine (Shriver) Wilson, the father having been for many years a cabinet maker at Fairmont. Mrs. Satterfield still resides at Fairmont, as one of its venerable and revered native daughters.

After having attended the public schools and the State Normal School at Fairmont, Doctor Satterfield entered the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, in which Maryland institution he was graduated in 1912, with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. He has since been actively and successfully engaged in practice at Fairmont, and in the meanwhile he has taken effective post-graduate work in the City of Pittsburgh. Doctor Satterfield wedded Miss Helen McClure, who was born at Wheeling, this state, a daughter of James H. and Belle McClure. Doctor and Mrs. Satterfield have three children: Martha Jane, born September 8, 1915; James McClure, born May 2, 1917; and Betty Ann, born March 31, 1921.

EDWARD CLIFFORD JONES, a representative merchant and citizen of the City of Fairmont, Marion County, was born at Castleton, Maryland, November 10, 1872, and is a son of Hugh A. and Cornelia (Touchstone) Jones, the former of Welsh and the latter of English lineage. The original

Wm. L. Lusk

American representatives of the Jones family came from Wales to this country at least seven generations ago and made settlement in Maryland. The Touchstone family, allied with the English peerage, likewise has maintained a branch in America for many generations.

Hugh A. Jones was born on the family homestead farm near Castleton, Maryland, November 22, 1842, his father, Hugh Jones, having been born in that state in 1791, and having there died in 1864. Hugh Jones was a builder of old-time flour mills, many of which he erected in his native state. In 1837 he purchased a farm on the Susquehanna River, near the Pennsylvania line, and from stone quarried on this Maryland farm was constructed the fine old Jones house at Castleton which still stands as one of the well preserved landmarks of that section of Maryland. This venerable mansion is now owned and occupied by Fred C. Jones, brother of the subject of this sketch. Hugh Jones married Ann Kidd, a member of the old and influential Maryland family of that name. Hugh A. Jones was engaged in the study of law at the time of his father's death in 1864, when he abandoned his plans for a professional career and assumed charge of his father's estate. He became successfully identified with various lines of business enterprise, and was the owner of a large and valuable estate at the time of his death, May 19, 1910. His wife, who was born at Port Deposit, Maryland, February 27, 1845, passed to eternal rest on the 7th of August, 1907, she having been a daughter of James and Virginia (Owens) Touchstone, the former of English parentage. James Touchstone was a citizen of prominence and influence in his community and served as quartermaster of the Sixth Maryland Volunteer Infantry (Union) during the entire period of the Civil war. Captain Owens, maternal grandfather of Mrs. Cornelia Jones, was for many years master of sailing vessels on Chesapeake Bay, and had his home at Perryville, Maryland. The children of Hugh A. and Cornelia A. Jones were: Minnie, who died in infancy; James Touchstone, engaged in the commission business at Darlington, Maryland; Edward C., the next in order of birth; Hugh Roy, who is engaged in the hardware business at Cumberland, Maryland; Fred C., who owns and occupies the old homestead at Castleton, Maryland, and Virginia Alice, who married E. Charles Wilson, of Darlington, Maryland.

Edward C. Jones was reared on the old home farm and gained his early education in the public schools at Castleton. In 1891 he began his mercantile career in a store at Darlington, not far distant from the home place. In September, 1894, he came to West Virginia and became manager of the store of the Beaver Creek Mercantile Company at Davis, this corporation being a subsidiary of the Beaver Creek Lumber Company. In 1896 he was made manager of the large general-merchandise establishment which the firm opened at Hambleton, Tucker County, and four years later he resigned this position to engage in business in an independent way. On the 13th of October, 1900, Mr. Jones formed a partnership with A. N. Gorrell, and the new firm of Gorrell & Jones opened a dry goods and women's apparel store at Mannington. Eighteen months later Mr. Jones became sole owner of the business and he conducted the same successfully until January, 1906, when he sold the same to his brother, H. R., and bought the department store of George G. Yeager at the corner of Adams and Madison streets, Fairmont. In the autumn of 1912 he removed the stock and business to the American Building, where he developed a large department store. In 1917 he removed to 208 Adams Street and converted his department store into an establishment devoted to the handling of the finest grades of women's ready-to-wear garments and millinery. He has made this the largest and leading store of its kind in Fairmont—one of the largest in Northern West Virginia, and caters to a substantial and representative patronage. Mr. Jones is a director of the People's National Bank and the Community Saving and Loan Company, both of Fairmont; is president of the South View Realty Company (real estate and coal operators); and is a director of the Jerry Run Coal Company, which conducts mining operations near Clarksburg.

Mr. Jones has been active and influential in civic affairs during the period of his residence at Fairmont, and has been identified with virtually every local movement tending to advance the social and material progress of the city. He was one of the organizers of the Fairmont Business Men's Association, was its first president and is still a member of its board of directors, and is likewise active in the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce. He was one of the organizers of the Fairmont Country Club and served as a member of its board of governors until 1921.

On May 5, 1897, Mr. Jones married Miss Mary Florie Eckess, who was born at Rock Cave, Upsher County, this state, a daughter of J. C. and Lucy (Henderson) Eckess. Her parents removed to Florida, establishing their home on St. John's River, near Jacksonville, in 1910. Her father still lives there, and her mother died there in 1916. The oldest son of Mr. Jones is Edward C., Jr., who was born March 6, 1899, and is now associated with his father in business, in a partnership which was formed in 1921. He is a graduate of the grammar and high school, the State Normal College at Fairmont, and during the World war period he served in the Two Hundred and Twenty-first Field Signal Battalion, Signal Corps, at Camp Vail, New Jersey. After his discharge from the army service he completed courses in advertising, card writing and decorating at the Koester School of Chicago, where he graduated in 1919. The second son is Hugh Eckess, who was born November 29, 1900, and is a member of the class of 1923 in the engineering department of the University of West Virginia. John Paul, the youngest son, was born November 18, 1902, and, like his brothers, is a graduate of the Fairmont High School, and is a member of the class of 1924 in the engineering department of the State University.

WILLIAM JEFFERSON SNEE, a well-known Morgantown attorney, also referee in bankruptcy, is a native of Southwestern Pennsylvania but finished his law course in West Virginia University and for the past twenty years has made an enviable record in his profession.

He was born on a farm in Washington County, Pennsylvania, January 28, 1873, son of Thomas Jefferson and Sarah Jane (Rue) Snee, the former also a native of Washington County, while his mother was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather was Thomas Jefferson Snee, who was a native of Pennsylvania, the family having been established in that state by his father, Thomas Snee, who came from Ireland. The father of the Morgantown lawyer was born in 1831 and died in 1881, devoting his active career to farming, and when his son, William J., was a boy he moved over the line from Washington into Allegheny County. The mother was born October 12, 1844, and is still living. Her father, Alexander Rue, was a native of Pennsylvania.

William J. Snee grew up on a farm near Pittsburgh, acquired his early education in the public schools and for several terms attended the Pittsburgh Academy and also the Grove City College in Pennsylvania. He taught several terms in Allegheny County and thus worked his way and paid his expenses while a student of law. He graduated in law from the University of West Virginia in 1900, the same year was admitted to the state bar and began his professional work at Morgantown. Soon afterward he was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney of Monongalia County, but resigned in about a year to look after his rapidly growing clientele. He also served two terms as city recorder of Morgantown and was elected to fill an unexpired term as sheriff and treasurer of the county, November 18, 1918. He was appointed referee in bankruptcy by Judge Dayton of the Federal Court.

Mr. Snee was president of the Monongalia County Bar Association in 1919-20. His learning and industry have earned him a specially honored position in his profession. Fraternally he is a past grand of Monongalia Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He belongs to the Morgantown Masonic Club, is a member of the Kappa Alpha college fraternity, and the Methodist Episcopal Church.

August 28, 1901, Mr. Snee married Miss Grace Martin, daughter of J. Ami and Mary C. (Snyder) Martin. Her parents formerly lived in Preston County and later in Morgantown.

HOWARD M. MARTIN. Farming, carpenter work, contracting and school teaching have been the useful and busy program of activities with which Howard M. Martin has been concerned in his mature years. He is one of the honored residents of Masontown in Preston County.

He represents one of the very old American families in this section of West Virginia, and is a descendant of Daniel Martin, who went into the war for American independence as a hostler for his uncle, Col. John Martin. Subsequently he became a soldier in the ranks and served seven years and six months, practically throughout the entire war. Daniel Martin was a native of Germany. He married Elizabeth Wynne. His first settlement was in New Jersey, whence he removed to Pennsylvania, and finally came to Preston County, West Virginia. He lived beyond the century mark, and some declare he died at the age of 105. His wife died of cancer about 1837. Their children were: Abigail, who married George Sypolt; Jacob, whose record follows; John, a stone mason who married Sarah Sypolt; Isaac, a cripple, married Susanna Metheny and followed shoemaking as a trade throughout his life; and Sarah, who became the wife of John McNair and lived near Valley Point in Preston County.

Jacob Martin was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1793. He was a pioneer in the Valley Point district of Preston County, establishing his first home in the woods there. He lived out his life in that section and is buried in the Mount Moriah Cemetery. He married Mrs. Mary (Metheny) Miller, widow of Peter Miller. Her two children by her first husband are Susanna and John P. Mrs. Miller became Mrs. Jacob Martin, February 7, 1816. By her second marriage she was the mother of James, who became a Baptist minister and school teacher, married Minerva Rogers and died June 14, 1896 and Daniel T.

Daniel T. Martin, who was born near Valley Point, January 6, 1819, died near Kingwood, June 1, 1887. His first wife was Elizabeth Teets and his second, Mary M. Kirkpatrick. The children of the first marriage were Simon R., Phoebe (who married Pulaski Messenger), Jasper and Jacob Tucker. The children of the second marriage were Sarah Jane, Sampson, Rachel, Josiah F. and Margaret Virginia, who lived in one of the states west of the Mississippi River.

Simon R. Martin, who continues the ancestral record and was the father of Howard M. Martin, was born in the vicinity of Valley Point, December 22, 1838, and except for a few years when his parents lived in Wetzel County he remained in his native county all his life. He started with the education that could be acquired in the district schools of the country, and he and two brothers and his father were Union soldiers in the Civil war. He was in Company H of the Third Maryland Infantry in the Army of the Potomac. He was once taken prisoner, but was exchanged and he was in the service almost from the beginning until the close of the war. He was taken captive and held for some time and then exchanged. Simon R. Martin died June 14, 1915. He married Sarah A. Liston, daughter of John and Nancy (Smith) Liston. She died July 3, 1914. Of their children Howard M. is the oldest. Mintie Victoria was first the wife of B. B. Miller and her second husband, Harry Green, lives in Preston County. Anna is the wife of M. H. Taylor, of Masontown. Sabina Jane was married to Sherman Pell, of Masontown. Granville Boss married first Blanche Greathouse and for his second wife married Bessie Broyle, and both are deceased. He married for his third wife Ella Neely, and they live at Masontown. Atlanta Lura is the wife of I. W. Spencer, of Masontown.

Howard M. Martin was born at Bruceton Mills, April 16, 1862, and when he was about eight years of age his parents moved into the Masontown locality, where he came to manhood. He attended the public schools, took normal courses at Masontown and about the time he reached his majority he began teaching. This profession formed an important part of his life for sixteen years. He was a teacher in the winters and worked in the fields on the farm during the summers. After teaching and farming he took up mechanical work, at the bench as a carpenter and later as a contractor. He did much work of this character in the locality, but eventually surrendered that business to concentrate his time upon his farm. After his marriage he established his home at Masontown for seven years, then lived for two years at Albright, again was for four years at Masontown, and from there went to Colorado to benefit his wife's health. She yielded to the progress of the disease and died a few months later. Mr. Martin then returned to Preston County, and in 1918 bought his present farm, almost against the townsites of Masontown, and continued its cultivation until his own health compelled him to desist. Among other improvements he erected a substantial eight room house on the farm.

Mr. Martin cast his first vote for president for James G. Blaine, and has never failed to vote at national elections in the republican faith. He was a justice of the peace for one term, was the first mayor of Masontown, and also served as recorder and councilman several terms. He has for many years been active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, has served as steward and trustee of the Masontown congregation, was one of the building committee at the erection of the new house of worship and for about ten years was superintendent of the Sunday school.

On June 5, 1889, Mr. Martin married Anna Fay Jackson, daughter of Richard Philip and Sophia (Heidelberg) Jackson. She was born near Albright, Preston County, March 10, 1871, and died February 3, 1904. She is survived by her daughter, Estella S., wife of Charles Malcolm, of Petersburg, West Virginia, and they have a daughter, Anna Lee. On July 12, 1905, in Preston County, Mr. Martin married Mrs. Etta O'Bryon. Her father, Zachaeus G. Smith, married Sue E. Wilhelm, a daughter of John Wilhelm. Mrs. Martin was born in Preston County, January 10, 1878, one of a family of twelve children. By her marriage to Charles O'Bryon she had two children, Sarah R., wife of Arthur Pell, and Opal M., wife of Ferris Taylor. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have four children: Glenn F., born April 14, 1906; Simon Harold Gibson, born March 23, 1908; Dana Ray, born May 7, 1912; and Susan Ruth, born April 7, 1915.

PAUL G. ARMSTRONG has been engaged in the practice of law at Fairmont, judicial center of Marion County, since 1909, and his record attests alike his professional ability and his personal popularity, for he has built up a successful general practice and is one of the loyal and progressive citizens of Fairmont.

Mr. Armstrong claims the old Buckeye State as the place of his nativity, his birth having occurred at Bannock, Belmont County, Ohio, March 24, 1884. He is a son of John and Martha (Trussel) Armstrong, the former of whom was born in Belmont County, Ohio, in 1850, and the latter was born at Dallas, West Virginia, in 1855. Warden Eliza Armstrong, paternal grandparents of the subject of this review, were of English ancestry the respective families having been founded in America prior to the War of the Revolution.

Paul G. Armstrong acquired his early education in the district schools of his native county, and in 1904 was graduated from the high school at St. Clairsville, Ohio. In the following year he entered the University of West Virginia, in the law department of which he continued his studies two years. He then became a student in the law department of the Ohio State University, in the City of Columbus, and there he was graduated as a member of the class of 1908. February 2, 1909, marked his opening of an office at Fairmont, where he has since continued in active practice and where he has gained status as one of the representative members of the Marion County bar. He is a member of the Marion County Bar Association and the West Virginia Bar Association. He is also a member of Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., of Crusade Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, of the Mystic Shrine, and of McDaniel Lodge of Perfection in the Scottish Rite of Masonry at Wheeling, West Virginia. He holds membership in the Cheat Mountain and Allegheny clubs and the Fairmont Shrine Club, and is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Fairmont.

THOMAS D. CRAIG. Craig is one of the prominent family names of Preston County, and some space is given on other pages to a formal record of the family, while here particular attention is devoted to one of the individual members, Thomas D. Craig, a native son of Preston County, and for many years expressing his service as a teacher, farmer and merchant.

He was born on Morgan's Run, two miles south of Kingwood, March 1, 1870, son of Charles C. Craig who is one of the surviving members of the Civil war still living in this community. Thomas D. Craig was reared on his father's farm and alternated between its duties and the work of nearby coal mines. He did his first work in coal mines as early as ten years of age. Subsequently he was a mine operator. He acquired the advantages of the country schools, attended the old Normal School at Kingwood, and at the age of twenty-two began teaching in rural districts. Altogether he taught for sixteen years, his last school being Snyder's School in the Kingwood district. While teaching he also operated a coal mine and a farm. About the time the World war began Mr. Craig had to give up business because of a physical breakdown, and, selling his property, he sought renewed health in Florida and Alabama. After a period he was thoroughly recuperated, and then returned and resumed farming, and since December 1, 1921, has conducted a store at Snyder's Crossing.

Mr. Craig has done his duty as a citizen as a republican voter, and in 1900 and again in 1910 was one of the census enumerators in Preston County. He was a delegate to the Berkeley Springs Convention when George W. Bowers was nominated for Congress by the Second Congressional District. Mr. Craig has filled various chairs in the Knights of Pythias Lodge, and represented the Kingwood Lodge in the Grand Lodge for two years. He and Mrs. Craig are almost life-long members of the Methodist Church, and he has been superintendent of the Sunday school.

In Preston County, February 12, 1896, he married Miss Cora M. Savage, daughter of David Harrison Savage. Some account of the Savage family should appropriately be given at this point.

They represent an original line of people who established their homes in the United States in Colonial times, and the family was represented in the Revolutionary war. Farming has been with few exceptions the regular vocation of the different generations. More than a hundred years ago the grandfather of David H. Savage, John R. Savage, settled in Garrett County, Maryland, seventeen miles northeast of Oakland, near Friendsville. The Savages and the Friends were among the first settlers in that section of Maryland. John R. Savage was a man of intelligence, capable in business and farming, and spent his life in Garrett County in the development and improvement of his estate. He married into the Friend family, his wife being Miss Caren, as they called her. They had five daughters and one son: Mrs. Lavina Winger, Mrs. Lydia Savage, Mrs. Savilla Friend, Mrs. Elizabeth Friend, while Mary died unmarried. The only son, Thomas Savage, was born in February, 1823, and grew up near Friendsville. He acquired a good common school education and was a prosperous farmer in that community. In 1863 he enlisted in the Third Maryland Infantry, under Captain Ambrose, and was a soldier until the end of the war. He was in the Army of the Potomac, and among other engagements was at the battle of Monocacy. He received his discharge at Baltimore in the spring of 1865, and then resumed the work of the farm where he had left off. He was never in official life, voted as a republican and was a Methodist. Thomas Savage married Elizabeth Evans, a native of Wales, coming to the United States at the age of fourteen with her parents, who first located at Mount Savage, Maryland, and later in the Friend settlement in Garrett County. Mrs. Thomas Savage died on the home farm where she had spent her married life. She was the mother of thirteen children, and those who survived infancy were: David Harrison, of Kingwood, West Virginia; Martha, who married Alfred Jenkins, of Friendsville;

George, of Somerset, Pennsylvania, William and Benton, who died unmarried; Arthur, who became a commercial traveler and died at Pittsburgh; Emily, who died young, Freeman, who owns the old Garrett County homestead, where he reared his family; and Edlie, wife of Frank Thomas, of Markersburg, Pennsylvania.

David Harrison Savage, whose home for over forty years has been in Preston County, was born in Garrett County, Maryland October 17, 1818, and finished his education in West Virginia University at Morgantown, but left before graduating. For ten years he was a teacher in the public schools of Preston County. He established his home two miles west of Kingwood, and his last teaching was done in the home district there. While still teaching he began cultivating and improving his farm, and was one of the very progressive exponents of agricultural endeavor in this section. He did diversified farming, growing the various cereals, raising livestock, making butter at home, marketing poultry, fat hogs and cattle. His present home is almost against the townsite of Kingwood, where he has lived since November, 1917, and where he still cultivates half of the eighty acres he owns.

David H. Savage served as deputy assessor under Assessor Summers. He cast his first presidential vote for General Grant in 1868, and since early manhood has been an active member of the Methodist Church, and has been on the official board.

In Preston County in June, 1872, Mr. Savage married Miss Jerusha Cale a native of the county, and daughter of Amos and Mary (Wishell) Cale. She was one of a family of one son and four daughters, and the others still living are Emory Cale and Mrs. Lucy Burk. Mr. and Mrs. Savage have one son and four daughters: Cora M., wife of Thomas D. Craig; Gertrude, Mrs. William Morris, of Tunnetton; Grace, who died as the wife of Walter Wilson; John M., who is unmarried and a farmer near Kingwood; and Lucy, wife of Charles Evick, of Kingwood. The only two grandchildren of Mr. Savage were born to his daughter, Mrs. Gertrude Morris.

IVAN DAVIS is a banker at Kingwood, being cashier of the Kingwood National Bank. He acquired his early business training at Morgantown, where he was connected with the glass industry for many years.

Mr. Davis succeeded W. A. Schaeffer as cashier of the Kingwood National Bank and is also one of its directors. This bank was organized in 1902 by local capitalists, the moving spirit being James W. Flynn. Other associates were Ira Robinson, of Grafton, Senator Stephen B. Elkins and S. H. White. The capital has always been maintained at $25,000, and the surplus and undivided profits now stand at a similar figure. The officers are: Mr. Flynn, president; C. A. Craig and George A. Herring, vice presidents; Mr. Davis, cashier; and Charles Manow, bookkeeper.

Mr. Davis represents one of the older families of West Virginia, both his father and grandfather having been born in the state. His great-grandfather more than 100 years ago came from New Jersey and established his home in Doddridge County, where he lived out his life as a farmer. His son William was a Doddridge County farmer all his life, and the third generation of the family here was represented by William G. Davis, father of the Kingwood banker.

William G. Davis was born in 1834, and has now reached venerable years, his active life having been devoted to farming. He was a Confederate soldier and was in the army until the close of the war. He was a private, and though in many battles he escaped wounds or capture. That has been practically his only service outside of his farm and home community. Like most of his ancestors he has been satisfied to vote as a democrat, and he is a member of the Baptist Church. William G. Davis married Miss Martha Hall, who died in June, 1921, at the age of sixty-eight. Her father was Lemuel Hall, of Auburn in Ritchie County. William G. Davis and wife had seven sons and one daughter: Newton F., Lewis T., William L., Cyrus A., Marshall, Fred, Ivan and Lydia, the latter the wife of W. Lewis of Doddridge County. All the sons are farmers but William L., who is a Baptist minister, and Ivan.

Ivan Davis was born near Salem, Doddridge County, November 7, 1882, and he grew up near the county seat and was a factor on the farm until about eighteen. He then supplemented his common school education by attending Salem College three years, and at the age of twenty-one completed the course of the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. With this education and training Mr. Davis became an office man for the Mississippi Glass Company at Morgantown, and was continuously with that corporation fifteen years, seeing it grow from a plant employing about seventy-five men to an industry with a pay roll of 300. He was assistant manager of the company when he resigned in July, 1917, to remove to Kingwood and enter upon his duties as cashier of the Kingwood National Bank.

Mr. Davis is a member of the minority party in Kingwood, a democrat, and only once has been a candidate for office. He was on the ticket in 1920 for county clerk of Preston County, and made a splendid showing in spite of the inevitable defeat of that year. He is a Methodist, and a member of the Masonic Lodge. Mr. Davis and his wife planned their very attractive home at Kingwood, which is of English style of architecture and was completed in 1921.

Mrs. Davis before her marriage was Miss Isa Lynne Bucklew. She was born in Preston County in 1892 and was married at Kingwood, December 25, 1912. Her father, George H. Bucklew, represents one of the pioneer families of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have two sons: George William and Delroy Richard.

LOUIS BLACK, director of the West Virginia University School of Music, has a reputation not short of national for his musical gifts and attainments. For a number of years he has been a tenor soloist in choir work and on the concert stage, doing that in connection with his teaching.

Mr. Black was born at Franklin, Venango County, Pennsylvania, August 10, 1872. His father, Ephraim Black, was born in the same county, September 23, 1841, son of Thomas Black, whose family moved from old Virginia to Pennsylvania and were pioneers in Butler County. Ephraim Black had a long and useful career in the Pennsylvania oil fields, and for many years was superintendent of the Franklin Pipe Line Company. He is now living in well earned retirement in his eightieth year. His wife, Sarah McCoy, was born March 10, 1841, in Butler County, and has likewise passed the age of fourscore. Her father, Hon. Hiram Francis Craig McCoy, was for many years prominent in the business and public life of Butler County, represented that county a number of times in the Legislature, was also postmaster of Anandale and a justice of the peace.

Prof. Louis Black was reared in Franklin, graduated from the high school of that city, and early manifested the talents which were cultivated by study at home and abroad in some of the best schools and under some of the finest masters of the musical art. He graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston in 1898, where he came under the instruction of William M. Whitney. During 1902 he studied in Naples, Italy, under Vincenzo Lombardi, and was a pupil under Oreste Bimboni in the New England Conservatory Opera School at Boston in 1903-05. For eight years Professor Black was an instructor in the New England Conservatory at Boston. When William M. Whitney founded the International School for Vocalists he became associated with his former master, and at the same time was director of the vocal department of the East Greenwich Academy and tenor soloist in Grace Church at Providence, Rhode Island, during 1905-06. He was teacher of voice culture and the art of singing at Beaver College in Pennsylvania in 1906-1909. While at Beaver he had charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church choir and was tenor soloist at Christ Methodist Episcopal Church in the City of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Black's service with the University of West Virginia as director of its School of Music began in 1909. His individual attainments have brought the school a tremendous amount of prestige and he has surrounded himself with a group of gifted men and women in the various departments of musical art so as to strengthen this department and make it one of the most popular of the various schools of the university.

Professor Black is a charter member of the Sinfonia Greek letter students fraternity. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order at Franklin, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Black is also a distinguished musician. Before their marriage she was Miss Ethel Boardman Jenney. She was born at Brockton, Massachusetts, daughter of Joshua Milton and Sarah (Mosher) Jenney. Her father was born at Little Compton, Rhode Island, and was a lineal descendant of John Jenney, a French Huguenot who came over on the ship James, the first ship to follow the Mayflower, and served as a member of the staff of Governor Bradford of the Massachusetts Colony. Sarah Mosher, Mrs. Black's mother, was born at North Dartmouth, just out from New Bedford, Massachusetts, and is still living at New Bedford. She is a Quakeress, having been baptized in the Quaker Church.

Mrs. Black graduated from the high school of Brockton, Massachusetts, and from the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston and for a number of years was a teacher of music. Since 1918 she has been head of the piano department of the West Virginia School of Music.

WOOD FAMILY. The records that follow are not only an authentic account of an important branch of the Virginia family of Wood and its allied connections, but abound in references to names and events that make up much of the real history of the western part of old Virginia. A representative of the family in the present generation, Dr. Amos D. Wood, has for a number of years been a prominent physician and specialist at Bluefield.

I. JOHN WOOD (1745-18—), the first of this family of which we have any definite knowledge, lived in Franklin County, Virginia. He was twice married, one of his wives being named Nellie. He had two sons of whom we have record, Henry and Richard. Henry moved with his family to Missouri. Richard married and lived at the top of "Wood's Gap" in Patrick County, near the Floyd County line.

II. RICHARD WOOD (1769-1859), the son of John Wood, of Franklin County, married Rachel Cocran, of Patrick County. Two children were born to them, John R. and Annie. After the death of his first wife he married ——— Brommer, and to them were born Alexander, Jeremiah, Peter, German, Edward and Henry.

Alexander was for many years captain of militia, being an expert drill master. He and German moved with their families to West Virginia. Jeremiah, Peter, Edward and John R. lived in Patrick and raised large families. Henry never married. Annie married David Cochran and lived in Floyd County.

Richard Wood was a farmer of considerable means, owning many slaves and a large body of land. He died at the age of ninety in the year 1859.

III. JOHN RICHARD WOOD (1799-1886), the son of Richard Wood of Patrick County, was born in the year 1799. He married Lucinda DeHart, a daughter of James, the emigrant, and Ellen (Dennis) DeHart and to them were born Annie, Stephen H., Mary, Richard J., Delilah, Rachel and Leah. Stephen H. married Rachel Thomas, a daughter of Joseph and Annie (Turner) Thomas, and had a family of six boys and three girls. Annie married Rev. John Hubbard and moved to Summers County, West Virginia; their children were two sons and four daughters. Mary married Perry Slusher, a son of Jacob and Tilda (Hylton) Slusher; their children were five sons and five daughters. Richard J. married Judith Anne Shortt, a daughter of John and Judith (Thomas) Shortt; they had two daughters and seven sons. Delilah married Richard Hatcher and had six children. Rachel married Samuel F. Turner, a son of Francis and Nancy (Thomas) Turner; they were the parents of two sons and four daughters. Leah married George Slusher, a brother of Perry, and unto them were born three daughters. John R. Wood lived at the foot of "Wood's Gap," where he owned a large body of land. He owned no slaves, being conscientiously opposed to slavery.

IV. RICHARD JOHNSON WOOD (1828-1917), the son of

Louis Black

John R. and Lucinda (DeHart) Wood, was born on the 27th day of October, 1828. His educational advantages were limited. He attended several private schools, and always looked back with pride to the fact that for a short season he had as his teacher Nathaniel Henry, a son of Patrick Henry of Virginia. His early years were spent on his father's farm and in the drygoods store of James Moir at "Old Charity." On the fifth day of February, 1853, he married Judith Anne Shortt, a daughter of John Y. and Judith (Thomas) Shortt. They lived first on a farm given him by his father in Patrick County, where they resided up to and during the Civil war, after which they moved to the County of Floyd, settling on a farm five miles east of Jacksonville, now the town of Floyd. Richard Wood was a captain of militia for seven years, succeeding Capt. Alexander Wood when the latter moved to West Virginia. When the war broke out he volunteered in the company of Capt. D. L. Ross, which was Company D, Fifty-first Regiment, Virginia Infantry. He saw service in the western campaign, and while in the City of Memphis, Tennessee, came near losing his life from typhoid fever. After the close of the war he, like so many other soldiers of the South, returned to their rundown farms and faithfully began anew. He devoted himself to farming and stock raising, was long a consistent member of the Baptist Church, and serving for forty years as deacon and clerk. In politics he was no less loyal, being a Jeffersonian democrat. His example to his children and neighbors was one of thorough unselfishness and high moral living. His children are: Emeline and Susan E., both of whom died in infancy; Jefferson P., Daniel H., George B., Greenville D., Amos D., Sparrel A. and Doc R. Wood. Jefferson P. Wood married Belinda Brammer, a daughter of Jonathan and Juliana (Burnett) Brammer. Their children are: Stanton H., Dora, John E., Benjamin Frederick, Gertrude and Ethel. He is a farmer and long a justice of the peace. His address is Floyd, Virginia. Daniel H. (Hillsman as he is called) married Ruth Corn, a daughter of Rev. Peter and Tiny (Turner) Corn, and they were the parents of George C., Della, Katherine and Mae. Hillsman's occupation is farming, but he finds time for politics and public service of his county. He has served as school commissioner, justice of the peace, and one term as a member of the House of Delegates of Virginia. George B. married Elizabeth Brammer, a daughter of Jonathan Brammer. They have one son, William Jefferson Wood. George is a farmer, merchant, constable, and has served as steward of the poor. Greenville D. married first Melissa Graham, a daughter of Andrew and Sonora (Turner) Graham, and after her death he married Lillie Barnard, a daughter of John and Mary Elizabeth (Turner) Barnard. They have children as follows: Dr. Richard Hugh; Susan Lee; Elizabeth; Greenville and John. Greenville is a merchant and farmer. Amos D. (see below). Sparrel A. married first Fessie Seales, of Martinsville, and after her death India Goodwyn, a daughter of Judge Goodwyn, of Nottaway, Virginia. He is a teacher by profession, holding the chair of Latin and German in one of the high schools of the City of Washington, D. C. They have one daughter, Judith. Doc R. married Gertrude Howard, a daughter of Peter L. and Belle Howard, of Floyd. He is a banker by profession, having organized the Floyd County Bank, and for many years its cashier. He is now holding the responsible position of national bank examiner. He lives at Martinsville, West Virginia. They have children: Rodley D., Virginia Howard and Catherine.

V. DR. AMOS DE RUSSIA WOOD (1869-), the son of Richard J. and Judith Anne (Shortt) Wood, was born in Floyd County May 16, 1869. He worked on his father's farm and attended the public schools of the district and Floyd Academy and Oxford Academy, the latter under the tutelage of the Rev. John K. Harris, long a distinguished teacher and educator of Floyd. After leaving Oxford Academy he engaged in teaching and reading medicine preparatory to entering the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Baltimore, from which institution he graduated a medicine in the year 1893. For twelve years he followed the general practice of medicine, mostly at Rocky Mount, Franklin County, Virginia. Giving up the general practice in 1906, he spent two years in New York City, making a specialty of the eye, ear, nose and throat, after which he located in Bluefield, West Virginia, where he has a good practice. He is engaged as a diversion and as a "labor of love" in writing the history of his native county of Floyd. He is a Baptist in religion and a democrat in politics. On the 29th of June, 1909, he was united in marriage with Annie Chapman Johnston, youngest daughter of Judge David E. and Sarah Elizabeth (Pearis) Johnston, of Portland, Oregon, and formerly of Bluefield, West Virginia. Three children have been born to them: Sara Pearis; Richard Johnston and John David. Sara Pearis died at the age of four years and John David died in infancy.

Mrs. AMOS DE RUSSIA WOOD is the daughter of the late Hon. David E. Johnston, of Bluefield, West Virginia. Judge Johnston was a lawyer widely known in the Pocahontas coal fields. Besides practicing law Judge Johnston was both an author and a promoter of business enterprises. His "History of the Middle New River Settlements" is a standard historical and biographical work, while "The Story of a Confederate Boy in the Civil War" has been widely read as a clever presentation of the experiences of a man in the ranks. When the Pocahontas coal fields first attracted wide attention he was among the organizers of the Flat Top Coal Company, the New River Railroad, Mining and Manufacturing Company (later acquired by the Norfolk & Western), the Bluefield Telephone Company, State Bank of Bluefield, Bluefield Hardware Company, and the Flat Top Grocery Company. When a young man Judge Johnston rapidly rose to prominence in his profession. He was attorney for the Norfolk and Western Railroad for seventeen years, commonwealth attorney for Mercer County, state senator and later was elected judge of the Eighth Judicial District, which position he held for two terms of eight years, and in the year 1898 achieved the unusual in winning the place of congressman from the Fifth District of West Virginia, running on the democratic ticket, which previously had recorded a large republican majority. It was in 1908 that he went to the Pacific Coast and became prominent in business and legal circles in Oregon.

Mrs. Wood through her parents, Johnstons and Pearises, is related to the following prominent Southwest Virginia families: the Frenches, the Gillespies, the Harrisons, the Hoges, the Chapmans, the Bailles, the Cecils, the Snidors, the Straleys, the Sanders and the Georges.

DAVID E. JOHNSTON was born in Pearisburg April 10, 1845. His ancestry was Scotch-Irish. His grandfather, David Johnston, was the founder of the immediate family in this country. The latter was born in 1726 in Fernanagh County, Ireland, and displayed remarkable courage as a very young boy in taking the step which brought him from the old country to the Colony of Virginia, at an age when most boys would have preferred the advantages of home and friends. He was only ten years old when he obtained a place as cabin boy on a ship which was sailing for America, and turned away from the old scenes to cast his lot with the many older persons of his own country who were creating homes across the water. The several generations that succeeded the adventurous young cabin boy have given evidence of the possession of an initiative which may be regarded as an inheritance. David Johnston, Jr., born in 1768, married Mrs. Sallie Chapman Miller. Of their three children the oldest was Oscar Fitzalan Johnston, the father of Judge David E. Johnston. David Johnston, Jr., was a member of the House of Delegates of Virginia from Giles County, as was his son, Oscar Fitzalan Johnston, later. The Johnstons have always been found among the leaders of their community.

THE PEARIS FAMILY, from whom Mrs. Wood's mother, Sarah Elizabeth (Pearis) Johnston, is descended, was a French Huguenot family. Her great-great-grandfather, Capt. George Pearis, married Eleanor Howe, a daughter of Joseph Howe, of Giles County, Virginia. He was captain of a company who marched against an uprising of the Tories in Surry County, North Carolina, in 1780. His company was a part of Major Cloyd's force. In an engagement with the Tories at Shallow Ford of the Yadin they defeated them with the loss of fifteen killed and a few wounded; Major Cloyd had one killed and a few wounded, among them Captain Pearis, severely wounded through the shoulder. This fight cleared the way for the crossing of General Greene's army at this ford, which the Tories were seeking to obstruct. Colonel George, the settler, was long a magistrate of Montgomery and Giles counties, and sat in the courts of both counties, and was for a term presiding magistrate of the latter county. The first court of the County of Giles was held in a house belonging to him, and the land for the county buildings and town was given by him and the town of Pearisburg took its name from him. The parents of Sarah Elizabeth (Pearis) Johnston long resided at Princeton, West Virginia. Their home and hotel belonging to them were burned by the soldiers during the Civil war, and in the home were destroyed three officers' uniforms belonging to three different generations of the family, including the one belonging to Colonel George, the settler, which had a bullet hole through the shoulder.

CHARLES ARCHER BRADSHAW, general manager of the Flat Top Insurance Agency at Bluefield, Mercer County, was born in Highland County, Virginia, March 10, 1878, and is a son of Stephen B. and Mary J. (Graham) Bradshaw, both natives of Virginia. Stephen B. Bradshaw became one of the substantial farmers of Highland County, besides having marked ability as a civil engineer, and having done a large amount of general surveying work in his section of Virginia. He also served as county surveyor of Highland County.

Charles A. Bradshaw gained his early education in the public schools of his native county, and thereafter he completed a two years' course in the Staunton Business College at Staunton, Virginia, in which he was graduated as an expert stenographer and bookkeeper. Upon coming to Bluefield he became stenographer and bookkeeper in the offices of the Flat Top Insurance Agency, with which he has since continued his alliance and with which he has gained advancement through effective service. He acquired an interest in the substantial business in the year 1905, and since 1908 has been the efficient general manager of the business.

Mr. Bradshaw is a loyal and valued member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of the Masonic fraternity, as well as the Mystic Shrine, and is a member of the Bluefield Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Bluefield Country Club. He is a democrat in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church.

In the paternal line the genealogy of Mr. Bradshaw traces back to sterling English origin, and on the maternal side to Scotch-Irish. The Bradshaw family was founded in Virginia in the Colonial days, and John Bradshaw, great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a leading citizen of Pocahontas County, with residence at Huntsville, where he donated to the county the ground on which the Court House and Jail were erected.

In 1904 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Bradshaw and Miss Martha Coles, daughter of Albin and Antoinette (Barnes) Coles, of Bluefield. The parents were born in Maryland, and Mr. Coles, who is now living retired, was formerly engaged in the coal business at Bluefield. Mr. and Mrs. Bradshaw have no children.

OSCAR WALLACE FRAZER is one of the progressive and influential business men of the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, where he is sales manager for the wholesale dry-goods and notion house of the Abney-Barnes Company, of Charleston, West Virginia, and he is also president and general manager in active supervision of the business of the Ulvah Coal Company, Bluefield, West Virginia, with which he has been thus connected since 1918. The mines of the company are situated at Bluefield, Kentucky.

Mr. Frazer was born at Beaver, Nicholas County, West

Virginia, September 17, 1880, and is a son of Benjamin F. R. and Laura H. (Williams) Frazer, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. The lineage of the Frazer family traces back to Scotch origin, and representatives of the family came to America in the Colonial period of our national history. Benjamin F. R. Frazer became one of the substantial exponents of farm industry in Nicholas County, West Virginia, and while active in public affairs of local order he never consented to accept any official position except that of trustee of his school district.

Oscar W. Frazer was afforded the advantages of the public schools of Summersville, judicial center of his native county, and thereafter he learned the art of telegraphy, and for twelve years was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company as operator and station agent at various points, including Monongah, Marion County. For four years thereafter he was a traveling salesman for the Christian Peper Tobacco Company of St. Louis, Missouri, and he then passed three years as a traveling representative of the F. H. Hammond Notion Company of Charleston, West Virginia. Since severing this connection he has been continuously identified with the Abney-Barnes Company of Charleston, West Virginia, at Bluefield. He is one of the progressive members of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with the local York Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity, including the commandery of Knights Templar, also the Beni-Kedem Temple of the Shrine at Charleston, West Virginia, is a member of the Bluefield Country Club, and he and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

At Charleston, this state, in 1907, Mr. Frazer wedded Miss Laura B. Dyer, daughter of Homer M. and Margaret A. (Woodell) Dyer, and the three children of this union are Margaret Lucile, Ruth Laura and Oscar Wallace, Jr.

JOHN HILL WRIGHT, secretary and treasurer of the Home Insurance Agency, one of the leading underwriting corporations in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, was born in Campbell County, Virginia, February 4, 1874, and is a scion of an old and honored family that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history, one of his great-grandmothers on the paternal side having been a first cousin of Gen. William Henry Harrison. Mr. Wright is a son of James William and Amanda (Walshall) Wright, both natives of Virginia, where the father became a representative member of the bar of Campbell County and where he was also identified with mercantile enterprise, with high standing as one of the leading lawyers and influential citizens of that section of the state. He was a staunch supporter of the Union in the period of the Civil war, in which two of his brothers served as gallant soldiers of the Union, and while he was a republican in a strong democratic county, such was his high place in popular esteem that he was called upon to serve sixteen years as a member of the Board of County Commissioners, besides which he was a member of the Board of Supervisors.

The youthful education of John H. Wright was acquired in the public schools of his native county, and from the age of eighteen years until he attained to his legal majority he was associated with the work and management of his father's farm. At the age of twenty-one Mr. Wright came to Bluefield, West Virginia, and assumed the position of chief clerk to the master mechanic of the Norfolk & Western Railroad. He continued in this service nine years and in the meanwhile became interested in the insurance business. Upon leaving railroad service he turned his attention exclusively to the insurance business. In 1916 he assumed active charge of the business of the Home Insurance Agency, of which he is now secretary and treasurer. This agency was organized in 1912, is incorporated under the laws of the state, and the volume of its general insurance business now averages $5,000,000 annually. Mr. Wright is an active member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club and the Bluefield Country Club. He is a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine, and a pastmaster of Bluefield Lodge No. 85, F. and A. M., besides being affiliated also with the Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Loyd Order of Moose. He and his wife are communicants of the local parish of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

E. E. White

The year 1900 recorded the marriage of Mr. Wright and Miss Daisy Kingsbury, daughter of L. D. and Miriam (Lamb) Kingsbury, of Bluefield, both parents having been born in North Carolina. Mr. and Mrs. Wright have no children.

EDWARD E. WHITE. The White family of Monongalia County, West Virginia, was established here at an early date almost one hundred and fifty years ago, and from that time until the present its members have been honorably identified with its development, both agricultural and otherwise. A prominent representative of this old and important family is Edward E. White of Morgantown, formerly sheriff of Monongalia County and at present county assessor. Mr. White was born on the White homestead in Battelle District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, August 19, 1879, and is a son of Eli and Martha (Hennen) White.

The West Virginia branch of the White family was founded in Monongalia County in 1774 by Grafton White, who settled as a farmer at Madsville, near Morgantown. He was a descendant of Stephen White, the American ancestor, who settled in Maryland in 1695. Grafton White was born in 1752, in St. John's parish, Baltimore County, Maryland, a son of Stephen (3) and Hannah (Baker) White, and from there came to West Virginia, married Margaret Dinney and became the father of eight children. William White, son of Grafton and Margaret White, was born August 15, 1783, married Mary Darling, and settled in the western part of Monongalia County, where he reared a family.

John White, son of William and Mary (Darling) White and grandfather of Edward E. White, became a prosperous farmer, married and reared a family of sons and daughters, and died on his own estate, and was succeeded by his son, Eli White, who spent his entire life at farming in Battelle District. Eli White was a man of more than ordinary capability for his time. A staunch republican of democratic ancestors, he was one of the few men in his neighborhood who stood for the Union Cause, and so voted when the time of splitting the State of Virginia came to hand. He stood firm for all that makes for good citizenship and was a devout and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He and his father were the prime movers in the building of the Oak Forest, West Virginia, Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Martha Jane Hennen, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania a daughter of Enoch and Lucinda (Stafford) Hennen, who then lived near Stafford's Ferry on the Cheat River. Enoch Hennen was a son of William Hennen, who was born in 1812 and was a son of Matthew Hennen, who came to the United States from County Down, Ireland, and settled in Virginia.

Edward E. White grew up on the home farm and attended the district schools, continuing to make the farm his home for a number of years even after the duties pertaining to public office demanded the greater part of his time. He was brought up to have great respect for the laws of his country, and from early manhood took a good citizen's interest in public affairs. From 1907 to 1909 he served as deputy sheriff and tax collector under Sheriff T. W. Barker, and in the same capacity under Sheriff William H. Brand from 1909 to 1913. On January 1, 1914, he became chief deputy sheriff and jailer under Sheriff J. B. Wallace, moving then to Morgantown, in which office he served until August 2, 1915, and following the death of Sheriff Wallace in that year, was appointed to fill out his unexpired term. He was then appointed a member of the County Board of Review and Equalization, and served two years, when he resigned. In 1921 the confidence of his fellow citizens was still further shown by his appointment to the office of county assessor.

For sixteen years Mr. White has been continuously in the lime light as a public official, and it is not too much to say that the county has profited greatly by the courage, efficiency and scrupulous honesty that have been manifested in his sincere performance of duty. While serving as deputy sheriff of Battelle District, and later as sheriff, he showed a recognition of public responsibility that was greatly appreciated by his fellow citizens. He made a notable record in the matter of tax collections and accounted for more than the face tickets that were placed in his hands for collection for the years 1915-16 the collections for those two years amounting to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars, and the interest collected by him amounted to more than the amount lost on account of uncollectable taxes.

At the time when Mr. White took office as chief deputy sheriff under Sheriff John B. Wallace, a man of far more than ordinary resourcefulness, and of the highest honor and integrity, Morgantown was presumably "dry" territory, but he found the complaints of reputable citizens that the town harbored many "hootleggers" and "blind tigers" justified and he was not slow in making preparations for a municipal "cleanup." On May 29-30, 1914, a raid was made, Chief Deputy Sheriff White being in charge, and about one hundred and fifty violators of the law confessed and fined, and about three car loads of beer, whiskey, etc., were confiscated and destroyed, being emptied into the sewers. Mr. White's record since assuming his present official duties has been in keeping with that of other years, and he has won the admiration and respect of the best citizens of Morgantown.

Mr. White married Miss Rosa Lemmon, daughter of Salathiel and Nancy (Renner) Lemmon, of Greene County, Pennsylvania, an old and honored family, the father being one of the heaviest land holders in his section. They have one son, Stanley R., who is a senior in the West Virginia University and is a Mason and Shriner. In 1918 he volunteered for service in the World war, received an honorable discharge and is now a member of the American Legion.

EDWARD TAYLOR TYREE, second vice president of the Flat Top National Bank in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, is a vigorous and self-reliant man who had depended upon his own resources not only in making his way to the plane of substantial material success but also in earlier years in paying the expenses of his educational work. He is a son of a family that was founded in Virginia many generations ago, but his paternal grandfather left the Old Dominion State when the subject of this sketch was a child of two years and established his home in Indiana, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Edward T. Tyree was born at Martinsville, Virginia, September 16, 1869, and is a son of Joseph Peter and Mary Elizabeth (Jamerson) Tyree, both likewise natives of that state. Joseph P. Tyree was a skilled machinist and long conducted a machine shop at Martinsville, Virginia. He served as a loyal soldier of the Confederacy during the entire period of the Civil war, and was a member of a Virginia regiment in the brigade commanded by Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson.

After attending the public schools of his native village Edward T. Tyree completed a course in the celebrated Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York, in which he was graduated in 1892 as a well qualified bookkeeper and accountant. For eighteen years thereafter he was in the service of the People's National Bank of Martinsville, Virginia, and he was its assistant cashier when he severed his connection in 1909 and accepted the position of cashier of the Flat Top National Bank at Bluefield, West Virginia. He has been a resourceful factor in the progressive functioning of this substantial and representative financial institution, and continued his service as cashier until he was elected to his present office, that of second vice president. He is an active and valued member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, and is a member of the Bluefield Country Club. He owns and occupies one of the attractive homes of Bluefield, and aside from business affairs he finds his chief diversion in gardening and the cultivating of flowers. His political allegiance, never marked by office-seeking proclivities, is given to the democratic party, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1898, in his native town of Martinsville, Virginia, Mr. Tyree wedded Miss Nannie Dickenson Stone, daughter of Clack and Cassie A. (Barrow) Stone, both natives of Virginia, where the father was a prosperous merchant in Pittsylvania County. Mr. and Mrs. Tyree became the parents of four children: Edward T. died in 1910; Alvah L. is a college student at the time of this writing; Mary Helen died at the age of eight months; and Harry Stuart is the youngest autocrat of the parental home circle.

WAITMAN C. GIVEN established his residence in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, in the year 1911, and here engaged in the real estate and insurance business. He continued to give his attention primarily to this line of enterprise until the spring of 1917, when he became associated in the organization and incorporation of the Commercial Bank of Bluefield, of which he has since served as cashier and to the development of the substantial business of which his careful and progressive executive policies have contributed in large measure. Mr. Given has identified himself most completely with local interests, is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club, and holds membership in the Bluefield Country Club and the Falls Mills Hunting and Fishing Club, his chief diversion being found in hunting and fishing. He is a democrat in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1911, at Bluefield, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Given and Miss Bess McCulloch, daughter of John R. McCulloch, and the two children of this union are Elizabeth and Waitman C., Jr.

Mr. Given was born in Braxton County, this state, December 28, 1884, and his parents, Reynold and Virginia (McMorrow) Given, still reside on their homestead farm in that county. Both the Given and McMorrow families were early founded in Virginia, and the parents of the subject of this sketch were born in that part of the Old Dominion State that now constitutes West Virginia. The genealogy of Mr. Given traces back to stanch Scotch and Irish origin. Reynold Given and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a brother is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Waitman C. Given supplemented the discipline of the public schools by a course in the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, in which he was graduated in 1909. Thereafter he engaged in the insurance business, continued for a time to be associated with farm enterprise, and he had also gained a record of successful work as a teacher in the rural schools prior to establishing himself in business at Bluefield.

ELDER JOHN GREEN MCNEELY. For many years a local minister of the Christian Church, Elder McNeely has developed his special talents as the need for their exercise has appeared, and he has probably made himself useful to as large a number of individuals as any citizen in Logan County. His home is at Man, where he is a merchant and funeral director. He is also a member of the County Court.

Mr. McNeely was born at the mouth of Peach Creek, two miles west of Logan, on the old McNeely homestead, October 29, 1871. He is one of the few men active in the affairs of this locality who are of native stock. His parents were Elliott and Susie (White) McNeely. His grandfather, Samuel McNeely, was a son of Samuel McNeely, Sr., and the former was a boy when the family came into the Guyandotte Valley and settled on land now including the site of Stollings. Elliott McNeely was born at the mouth of Peach Creek in 1847, and he now lives at Aracoma, just across the Guyandotte from the City of Logan. For a number of years he was a farmer, but later he and his son John G. opened a store at Logan, the son soon turning over his share of the business to the father, who still continues it. This business was started in 1900, before a railroad was built, and their stock of goods was hauled from Dingess on the Norfolk & Western Railroad. Mrs. Elliott McNeely died in 1921, at the age of sixty-six, her two children being John G. and Mary. The latter is the wife of Lewis McDonald, and they live on Crooked Creek.

John G. McNeely acquired his early education in home schools, and the temple of learning was a log house both on Peach Creek and also on Mill Creek. When he was twenty years of age he joined the Christian Church, and at the age of twenty-one began holding services as a local minister. He has directed the work of a number of churches and has built many houses of worship. In 1907 he was a student of theology at Bethany College. In the meantime, in 1900, he opened a store at the mouth of Crooked Creek, and he kept in stock every article and commodity which he thought would be required by the demands of the local trade. He also bought all kinds of country produce. From there in 1918 Mr. McNeely moved to Man and opened a furniture and undertaking business. He completed a course in Clarke's School of embalming at Cincinnati in 1914. For three years following he had charge of the undertaking department of the Logan Mercantile Company at Logan.

Mr. McNeely was elected in 1906 county assessor, serving four years, and the duties of that office brought him the acquaintance of every voter in the county at the time. In 1919 he was appointed a member of the County Court to serve the unexpired term of Bruce McDonald, who had resigned. He was regularly elected to the office in 1920. While he has been on the board a great deal of attention has been paid to the highway system of Logan and the construction of permanent roads. Mr. McNeely is a member of the board of directors of the Merchants and Miners Bank of Man.

He married in 1901 Miss Yantus Hale, daughter of David Hale, of Logan. To their marriage were born three sons and three daughters: Luther, in the mines of Durfee, West Virginia; Wilha, wife of H. V. Suiter, mine electrician; while the younger children are Tracy, Bethel, Ruth and James. Mr. McNeely is affiliated with the Lodge of Masons at Williamson, Logan Chapter, R. A. M., belongs to the Subordinate and Encampment degrees of Odd Fellowship and has sat in the Grand Lodge, and is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Redmen and the Moose. In politics he is a democrat.

THOMAS J. FARLEY, M. D. In the ten years since he graduated in medicine Doctor Farley's working experience has been chiefly in mining practice. For several years his home has been at Lorado in Logan County, where he has charge of the medical practice for Mines Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the Lorain Coal and Dock Company.

The medical profession has had distinguished service from the Farley family. Doctor Farley is one of five brothers who dedicated themselves to this great calling. They all grew up in Mingo County, and with one exception they are still practicing in this part of the state.

Their parents were Thomas B. and Nancy Jane (Pinson) Farley, the former a native of Virginia and the latter born on John's Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, sister of Pepper Jim Pinson. Thomas B. Farley died in 1919, at the age of eighty-one, and his wife in 1921, age seventy-eight. At the time of the Civil war the Farley family lived just below the present site of the City of Williamson. Thomas B. Farley was a Confederate soldier in General Farley's cavalry. He was taken prisoner at Cedar Creek in the Shenandoah Valley, and spent the rest of the war as prisoner at Point Lookout. In one battle while lying on the ground shooting at the enemy he was hit by a bullet that passed through his chin and lodged against his chest. After the war he moved to Burch on Elk Creek, a tributary of Pigeon Creek, and owned a tract of land in the Elk Valley extending for about two miles. He was a prosperous farmer and a widely known and influential citizen. He served many years as justice of the peace, and was elected and served eight years as county assessor. In the race for county assessor he had four competitors, and came within a few ballots of receiving a majority of the total votes. He was a member of the Christian Church and his wife, a Baptist. In politics he was a democrat.

B F Blackshem

The family of this old couple comprise fourteen children, thirteen of whom reached mature years. The five sons that became physicians were all school teachers when young men and earned the money necessary to defray their medical college expenses. The physician brothers were: W. F. Farley, of Holden, Logan County; Dr. A. A., who was in practice at Huntington when he died in 1913; Dr. H. H., associated with the Logan Hospital; Dr. Thomas J.; and Dr. R. F., who is located at Burch and was in command of Base Hospital No. 66 in France during the World war. All these sons attended medical college at Louisville, Kentucky. Another son, James A., was deputy United States marshal, and is now deputy sheriff of Mingo County. Two other children were John and Anne, twins, now on the old homestead on Elk Creek.

Dr. Thomas J. Farley was born at Burch in Mingo County, November 2, 1884, and acquired his early education in the Rock-House High School and the Concord State Normal at Athens. He taught five terms of school in Mingo and McDowell counties. The first school was at the mouth of Elk Creek, and while teaching he walked two and a half miles to and from school, which was held in a little log house. He received a salary of $25 per month as teacher, and he fed the stock on the farm before and after school hours. For a time he worked as a freight handler in the depot at Williamson. In 1909 Doctor Farley took up the study of medicine, and graduated in 1913 from the University of Louisville. During 1914 he was an interne in the City Hospital there. He passed the examination before the State Medical Board of Kentucky as well as West Virginia. For about six months he did relief work in the absence of the regular physician at Holden in Logan County, and then for a time was located at Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, for the United States Coal and Oil Company. From there he returned to Holden and had charge of the practice for Mines Nos. 3 and 4 two years, and since then his service has been as mine physician at Lorado in Logan County.

Doctor Farley began his career as a physician with a burden of $2,700 debt contracted for his medical education, but in a few years he had paid off that obligation.

On January 16, 1918, he married Mary Katherine Jackson, of Virginia. Her mother was in charge of the Mine Club House at Pond Creek, Kentucky. Mrs. Farley is a graduate nurse of the City Hospital of St. Louis, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. They have two sons, Thomas J., Jr., and James Albert. Doctor Farley is affiliated with the Redmen, Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Masonic Order.

BENJAMIN F. BLACKSHERE. A proper history of the Mannington community in Marion County could not be written without repeated reference to the enterprise of members of the BlacksHERE family connection. They were not only early settlers in point of time, but they were leaders in point of progress. One of the best known and most prosperous of the family was the late Benjamin F. BlacksHERE, who spent his entire life in that locality.

Benjamin F. BlacksHERE was born in Marion County March 1, 1844. His father was named Elias BlacksHERE and his grandfather Ebenezer BlacksHERE. Ebenezer BlacksHERE was a New Jersey man, fought as a soldier in the war of 1812, and in 1830 brought his family to West Virginia and established a home in what later became Marion County. It was due to his enterprise that the first store was built and opened for business on the site of what is now Mannington. For several years this was the only point at which merchandise could be bought between Fairmont and Pine Grove. Elias BlacksHERE was born in New Jersey, and was a youth when he came to Marion County in 1830. His sons Benjamin F., and John BlacksHERE, organized the first bank in Mannington.

The late Benjamin F. BlacksHERE had only the advantages of the common schools of his day and an Academy at Morgantown, and when his education was finished he returned to the old homestead and engaged extensively in farming and stock raising. He was active in this business for many years. About thirty years ago oil was discovered on his land, and the oil development there has to an important extent interfered with the regular farming operations. During his lifetime many wells were sunk and even at this writing there are about sixty wells still producing oil on the old farm.

Benjamin F. BlacksHERE who died February 27, 1913, married on April 17, 1878, Miss Luella M. Mapel. She was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, daughter of Andrew J. and Ruhama (Taylor) Mapel, natives of the same county. Her father was a merchant at Dunkard, Pennsylvania, but about 1873 moved to Mannington, where he conducted the store but subsequently moved to a farm near the BlacksHERE place where his daughter Luella lived until her marriage.

The only child of the late Benjamin F. BlacksHERE is Harry Franklin BlacksHERE, one of the permanent young citizens and business men of Mannington. He was born at the old homestead April 19, 1879. He is interested in many phases of the community's life and affairs. His father was a Scotch-Rite Mason and Shriner. Harry F. BlacksHERE married on March 21, 1908, Miss Flora Conway Koen of Mannington. They have a daughter Patricia Ann, born July 6, 1921.

RAYMOND F. MACPHAIL has performed probably every detail of work involved in the practical operation of coal mines. He has used a pick on the face of a coal seam, has run pumps, has been mine boss, has handled the instrument of a mining engineer, and has directed an entire coal plant from production to sales. He is one of the well known operators of Logan County, where he is general manager of the Logan Island Creek Coal Company, whose operations are at Crites Station, Latrobe Post Office, on the Buffalo branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

This mine was opened in 1917 by the Logan Eagle Coal Company, and was acquired by the present owners from Bay City, Michigan, in 1921. Mr. MacPhail is a native of Pennsylvania, born in the southwest part of Westmoreland County, November 27, 1888, son of Hugh and Mary MacPhail. His father was a native of Scotland, and at the age of twenty-four came to America and entered coal mining in Pennsylvania, and continued that vocation there until his death in 1898, at the age of fifty-nine. He was father of a family of eight sons and four daughters. The following sons have become practical mining men: Joseph, superintendent of the MacPhail Coal Company at Middletown, Ohio, George, vice president of the Logan Island Creek Coal Company; Hugh, Jr., a contractor for brick work in mines at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, and a resident of Uniontown, that state; Raymond F.; and Donald, who is superintendent of the Logan Island Creek Coal Company. All these men were self educated, and have become successful in different phases of the mine industry.

Raymond F. MacPhail attended school briefly during his boyhood, and he early began earning his living as a newsboy and as a worker in the mines. At the age of fourteen he was operating pumps in Hecla Mine No. 1, owned by H. C. Frick. He remained there three years, and from pumpman became a chainman with the Engineer Corps. It was at this stage of his life that he realized the necessity of a better education to advance him still higher. He, therefore, accepted the terms prescribed by the state permitting him to enter the State Normal School at California, Pennsylvania. For the privilege of attending this school he obligated himself to teach for two years. Instead he taught for three years, and his last work was as principal of the First Ward Building at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania. Mr. MacPhail also attended the Grove City College in Pennsylvania one year.

After he left school work he removed to Dorchester in Wise County, Virginia, and successively performed the duties of trainman, payroll clerk, transitman and then superintendent for the Wise Coal and Coke Company. After three years with that corporation he was for one year assistant mine foreman of the Stonega Coal Company in Wise County, from that joined the Clinchfield Coal Corporation as assistant foreman at Wilder, and was promoted to general foreman. After two years he came to the Logan field as general foreman for the Main Island Creek Mine No. 4, and six months later he became superintendent at Mullins for the Virginia Smokeless Coal Company. After six months he returned to the Logan field, beginning as superintendent of the Cora Coal and Coke Company on Island Creek, and then as general manager of the Cora Mine and the company's mines at Taplin. Following this he was superintendent on Coal River for the Maxine Coal Company's property at Maxine. Just before performing his duties as general manager of the Logan Island Creek Mine he was general manager and part owner of the MacPhail Coal Company at Middlesport, Ohio.

In 1917 Mr. MacPhail married Maxie Rogers, daughter of Mrs. George Rogers, of Norton, Virginia. They have one son, Philip Ray. Mr. MacPhail is a Presbyterian, his wife, a Methodist, and fraternally he is a Scottish Rite Mason, junior member of the lodge at Madison, West Virginia, and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, and is a republican in politics.

HENEY CLAY THRUSH, of Piedmont, Mineral County, was long and successfully established in the mercantile business in this city, but since 1911 he has here lived virtually retired, though he is president of the First National Bank of Lonaconing, Maryland, on the opposite side of the Potomac River from Mineral County. For the past fifteen years he has been a director of the First National Bank of Piedmont, West Virginia, and is also a director of the First National Bank at Keyser, West Virginia.

Mr. Thrush is a representative of one of the sterling pioneer families of what is now Mineral County, West Virginia, which was still a part of Hampshire County, Virginia, at the time of his birth, which here occurred July 27, 1857. His grandfather, Richard Thrush, was reared in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, where the family home was established upon immigration from Germany. As a young man Richard Thrush accompanied his father into Western Virginia and settled in that part of Hampshire County that is now included in Mineral County, he having become a successful farmer at a point about midway between Headsville and Keyser and having there remained until his death, about 1880, at the venerable age of eighty-six years. He married Fannie Rogers, and of their family of five sons and three daughters, John S. was the first born.

John S. Thrush was born in Hampshire County, Virginia, March 1, 1825, and he passed his entire life in the community of his nativity, his activities having been those of a substantial farmer. He was a loyal supporter of the cause of the Union during the period of the Civil war, though not called into military service, and he was a staunch republican in politics. He served three terms as county commissioner of Mineral County, and was a member of the county board at the time of the construction of the first bridge across the Potomac River from Piedmont to Westernport, Maryland, besides which he officially aided in advancing other public enterprises of great value to Mineral County. He and his wife held membership in the United Brethren Church. He was one of the honored and influential citizens of Mineral County, and here his death occurred on the 15th of April, 1910, his wife having passed away July 20, 1879, at the age of forty-eight years. The maiden name of Mrs. Thrush was Margaret Jane Rollings, and she was a daughter of Benjamin and Jane (McNamar) Rollings. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Thrush the subject of this review is the eldest; Aaron L., a farmer in the vicinity of Burlington, Mineral County, married Sallie Taylor, and they have two sons and two daughters; John Oliver, who is a Congregational minister, with his wife resides at Spencer, Iowa, and they have one son and two daughters; James A., of Keyser, Mineral County, is still identified with farm enterprise, the maiden name of his wife having been Grace Taylor; William V., a prosperous farmer in the locality where he was born and reared, married Mary Whip, and they have one child, a son.

Henry Clay Thrush is indebted to the free schools of what is now Mineral County for his early education, and as a boy and youth he had full fellowship with the work of the old home farm, his connection with which continued until he was twenty-three years of age. He then took a clerical position in the general store of George T. Carskadon, of Keyser, who was one of the representative men of Mineral County, and later he served in a similar capacity for the successor of his former employer. He next passed eighteen months in clerical service in the Piedmont office of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and he then took a position in the mercantile establishment of Doctor Daily at Piedmont, who a year later advanced him to the position of head clerk, which he retained four years. He then purchased the stock and business of the doctor, and for the ensuing nineteen years here conducted a substantial and prosperous enterprise in the handling of dry goods, notions, carpets, house furnishings, etc., his retirement from this business having occurred in 1911. In 1905 he became one of the organizers and incorporators of the First National Bank of Lonaconing, Maryland, which bases its operations on a capital stock of $25,000. He served as vice president of this institution several years and was then, in 1917, elected its president, as successor of M. A. Patrick. As chief executive he is ordering the policies of the bank with marked discrimination and ability.

Mr. Thrush is a loyal republican, his first presidential vote having been cast for Gen. James A. Garfield. He has served as president of the school board of Piedmont for two years, and was city auditor one year. He and his wife are earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At Piedmont, on the 1st of March, 1891, Mr. Thrush married Miss Catherine J. Carr, a daughter of Thomas and Jane (Mundy) Carr, whose mortal remains rest in the cemetery at Westernport, Maryland. Mr. Carr was born in England and came with his brother Rosey to the United States, where both entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, Thomas having eventually become superintendent of the line between Keyser and Grafton. Mrs. Thrush was born at Oakland, Maryland, February 21, 1868, and is a member of a family of two sons and five daughters: Rosey, eldest of the children, met an accidental death while in the service of the Maryland Coal Company. He had married Jane Lancaster, who, with one daughter, survived him. Lee is the wife of Hardin Parr, of Westernport, Maryland. Victoria R. is the widow of J. William Davis, of Piedmont. Miss Ella resides at Morgantown. Mrs. Thrush was the next in order of birth. Margaret is the wife of Jesse Colehawk, of Fairmont. Mr. and Mrs. Thrush have one child, Beulah Jane, who is the wife of A. L. Waters, a business man of Indianapolis, Indiana, and they have two children, Henry Clay and Jane.

ALLAN L. LUKE, at Piedmont, Mineral County, is a representative of the fourth generation of the Luke family in the paper manufacturing industry in America, and is manager of the large and important business of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Company, of which his father, the late John G. Luke, was the organizer and the president for many years prior to his death, which occurred October 15, 1921, at St. Luke's Hospital, New York City, following an operation for appendicitis. From the issue of the Paper Trade Journal of October 20, 1921, are taken the following extracts, with minor elimination and paraphrase:

"In the death of Mr. Luke the book-paper industry has lost one of its most splendid ornaments, for he was indeed one of God's own noble men. He was a pioneer in the book-paper industry. It might truthfully be said of him that he was born and reared in the environment of a paper mill, for his father and grandfather before him were engaged in the same occupation. Mr. Luke was born in Springfield, Massachusetts, April 29, 1857. Like many successful business men, Mr. Luke was thrown on his own resources early in life. His first effort in the paper industry was at the age of sixteen years, when he was employed in the mill of the Jessup & Moore Paper Company at Rockland, Delaware, of which his father was superintendent at the time. Here he served for some seven years. Later he became superintendent of the paper mill of the Mead & Nixon Company, of Dayton, Ohio; then of the Morrison & Cass Paper Company, of Tyronne, Pennsylvania; later of the Bremaker-Moore Paper Company, of Louisville, Kentucky; and later still of the Richmond Paper Company at Providence, Rhode Island. In the aggregate he served some fifteen years in these several mills. During these years of service his splendid character developed; his active and first mind absorbed an intimate knowledge of the paper industry; and his ambition to do something big in that industry became intensified—an ambition splendidly realized in later years of his life.

"With this splendid experience as a foundation, and urged on by this laudable ambition, he in conjunction with his father and brothers organized a company and built a mill at Piedmont, West Virginia, in 1889 for the manufacture of sulphite pulp. This was but a modest beginning, but by the exercise of a genius seldom equalled, by untiring industry and stern courage, by conforming at all times to be dictators of truth and honor, and by the splendid co-operations of his brothers and other business associates his great ambition was realized at last in the splendid company of which he died as the president and of which he was so justly proud.

"Of Scotch ancestry, Mr. Luke was clear-minded, forceful, industrious, determined, successful; yet no man was more generous, more modest, more gentle. To have known him intimately was at once an honor and an inspiration. He had a splendid confidence in human nature. He trusted his friends and associates with a faith that could not be shaken. His friends trusted him without reserve. With him from a friendship once formed there was no turning."

The foregoing appreciative estimate indicates how gracious is the paternal heritage resting upon Allan L. Luke, the immediate subject of this sketch, and it is gratifying to note how thoroughly and well he is upholding the prestige of the family name in character and achievement. His paternal grandfather, William Luke, was born near Crook of Devon, Scotland, about the year 1826, and as a young man came to the United States and first located in New England, as a workman in a paper mill. After leaving New England he entered the employ of the Jessup-Moore Paper Company at Rockland, Delaware, and he continued for many years his connection with this concern, his death having occurred at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1911. He married Rose T. Landsay, and of the children of this union John G. was the eldest; William A. is a resident of Covington, Virginia; Mrs. Isabel Hopkins resides in Baltimore; David L. is a resident of New York City; James L. died at Luke, Maryland, in January, 1905; and Adam K. and Thomas are residents of New York City.

At Greenville, Delaware, John G. Luke married Miss Ella Hope Green, daughter of Charles and Susan (Wilson) Green, and she passed to the life eternal in 1899. Of the children of this union Allan L., of this sketch, is the first born; Rose H. is the wife of George E. Nelson, of Englewood, New Jersey; Charles W. resides in New York City, with interests also at Cass, West Virginia; William G. lives in New York City. After the death of his first wife John G. Luke wedded Miss Grace Bulkley, of Arlington, New Jersey, who survives him, as does also their one child, Grace Virginia.

Allan L. Luke was born at Rockland, Newcastle County, Delaware, February 12, 1881, and he places high valuation on the discipline that has been his in connection with the paper-manufacturing industry from the time of his boyhood to the present, his father having developed one of the largest and most important paper manufacturing enterprises in the United States. He attended school at Piedmont, West Virginia, where his interests are largely centered, though he maintains his residence at Luke, Maryland, a place named in honor of the family of which he is a representative. Mr. Luke later was a student in the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, Brooklyn, New York, and the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. He learned the pulp and paper business from the ground up, familiarized himself with all departments and details by active service, and is now the manager of the great plant of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Company at Luke, Maryland, nearly opposite Piedmont, West Virginia, on the Potomac River. He is also president of the Davis National Bank at Piedmont and a director of the Citizens National Bank at Westernport, Maryland. Like his father, he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the republican party, but he has had no desire for political activity or office. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which he is a member of the vestry of the parish at Westernport, Maryland.

On the 12th of October, 1904, at Covington, Virginia, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Luke and Miss Nello Roeke, who was born and reared in that state and who is a daughter of Thomas M. and Fannie (Scott) Roeke. Mr. and Mrs. Luke have six children: Ella H., Allan L., Jr., John Guthrie, Christine Grey, Helen F. and Charlotte M.

CLAY A. WILCOX, who is now giving effective service as postmaster of the City of Piedmont, Mineral County, has previously made a splendid record as a teacher in the public schools of this section of West Virginia. He was born in Doddridge County, this state, December 23, 1888, and there passed the formative period of his life on the old homestead farm which was the place of his birth. After the discipline of the rural schools had measurably fortified him he became a student in Salem College, in which he was graduated in June, 1913. In the meanwhile he had taught school at intervals, and in the autumn of 1913 he became a teacher in the graded schools of the Piedmont District. Here he continued his successful pedagogic service eight years, and his summer vacations were devoted to clerical work of varied types. In 1921 he was appointed acting postmaster of Piedmont, and on the 30th of January of the following year he received regular commission as postmaster, by appointment of President Harding.

Mr. Wilcox cast his first presidential vote for William H. Taft, and has since continued his unflinching allegiance to the republican party. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, in which he is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Wheeling, with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

At West Union, Doddridge County, on the 3d of September, 1913, Mr. Wilcox wedded Miss Lelia Britton, who was there born February 6, 1889, a daughter of Marcus and Susan (Bee) Britton. The two children of this union are Mary Helen and Clay A., Jr. Through the maternal line Mrs. Wilcox is eligible for membership in the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The Wilcox family was early founded in Virginia, and in that historic old commonwealth was born Nicholas J. Wilcox, father of the present postmaster of Piedmont, West Virginia. Nicholas J. Wilcox served as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, as a member of a West Virginia regiment, and in later years he vitalized the more gracious memories and associations of his military career by maintaining affiliation with the Grand Army of the Republic. He was a stalwart supporter of the cause of the republican party, and was an honored citizen of Canton, Doddridge County, at the time of his death, May 20, 1913, when sixty-eight years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary J. Knight, was born and reared in Doddridge County, a daughter of Henry and Jennie (Sanly) Knight, and she was fifty-eight years of age at the time of her death, December 17, 1909. Their children are Mrs. James Ash, William H., Asa W., Daniel R., James O., John L., Clay A. and Miss Susan C.

Rev. William B. Wilcox, grandfather of him whose name introduces this article, was a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a resident of Doddridge County at the time of his death, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Temperance Van Dyke.

B. WARING PARTRIDGE, JR. The successful operator in insurance must possess qualities which differentiate him from the handler of almost any other commodity. It is a peculiar field of endeavor, and the men who devote themselves to this line must of necessity have specialized knowledge and an inherent gift for their task. Of the insurance men who have made a success during recent years, one who has come rapidly to the forefront is B. Waring Partridge, Jr., of Huntington, until recently general agent for the Reliance Life Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, whose territory covers Cabell, Putnam, Logan and neighboring counties.

Mr. Partridge was born at Monticello, Florida, October 15, 1881, a son of Benjamin Waring and Mary (Denham) Partridge. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Partridge, John Partridge, was born in England in 1790 and as a young man immigrated to the United States and became a pioneer planter of Monticello, Florida, where he was also a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He passed his entire career at Monticello, where he died in 1851. He married Eliza Waring, who was born at Edgefield, South Carolina, and died at Monticello, Florida, at the age of eighty-three years. She was nine years of age at the time General LaFayette visited the United States, and when the distinguished Frenchman arrived at Columbia, South Carolina, little Miss Waring was one of the flower girls who welcomed him. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Partridge, Andrew Denham, was a Highland Scotchman, born at Dunbar. He died at the age of sixty-three years at Monticello, Florida, where he had also been a pioneer, and was agent for the Florida Railway and Navigation Company, a position in which he was later succeeded by his son-in-law, Benjamin Waring Partridge, although the name of the railway has changed several times since. Andrew Denham married Adaline Gossen, who was born at Baltimore, Maryland. She was only sixteen years of age at the time of their marriage, and she lived to be ninety-four years old, passing away at Monticello.

Benjamin Waring Partridge, who still resides at Monticello, Jefferson County, Florida, was born in that county, February 15, 1846, and has spent practically his entire life at Monticello. He was only fifteen years of age at the outbreak of the war between the states, but offered his services to the Confederate Army, was accepted, and fought bravely all through the four years of struggle. At the present time Mr. Partridge is railroad agent for the Seaboard Air Line, and is the oldest man in point of service in the employ of the company. He likewise owns a farm in the vicinity of Monticello, which is operated by tenants. A staunch democrat in politics, Mr. Partridge has been identified with public life to some extent, having served as county treasurer of Jefferson County for ten successive terms, or twenty years, and as a supervisor of the county high school and of the township schools for ten years. He still takes an active interest in civic affairs and those of his party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and religiously he and Mrs. Partridge are two of the main pillars of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Monticello. Mr. Partridge married Miss Mary Denham, who was born at Bellaire, Leon County, Florida, September 29, 1851, and they became the parents of the following children: John A., pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of McDonough, Georgia; Sarah W., a woman of unusual ability and special aptitude, who during three different state administrations, covering a period of six years, has been in charge of home economic extension work for the State of Florida, is unmarried and a resident of Tallahassee, Florida; Mary E., who has assisted her father since 1893, is now in charge of a depot for the Seaboard Air Line; Isabelle E., who died at the age of two years; B. Waring, Jr., of this record; Adaline D., the wife of W. Austin Smith, a general and consulting engineer of Huntington; Eliza W., principal of the high school at Monticello, who resides with her parents; and Jessie P., the wife of John B. McCall, of Monticello, the owner of an ice plant, a farmer and a heavy commission broker in pecan nuts.

B. Waring Partridge, Jr., attended the public schools of Monticello, Florida, until he reached the age of sixteen years, at which time he entered the service of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Tampa, Florida, as a telegrapher and continued in the profession from 1898 until 1910, at various points in Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and North Carolina, and at Washington, D. C., Cincinnati, Ohio, and Baltimore, Maryland. Mr. Partridge was identified with the Western Union until 1901, following which he joined the Associated Press, spending two years in handling newspaper matter, and finally became an operator in brokers' offices. On July 1, 1909, Mr. Partridge came to Huntington, and June 23, 1910, gave up telegraphy. On July 1 he embarked in the real estate business on his own account, and this he still follows, although recently only as a side line, his insurance business having grown to such proportions as to demand practically all of his attention. In 1913 Mr. Partridge became general agent for the Reliance Life Insurance Company of Pittsburgh, a position which he held till June 22, 1922, his territory covering Cabell, Putnam and Logan counties, as well as several others adjoining. He is now general agent for West Virginia for the National Life Insurance Company of the U. S. A. of 29 S. La Salle St., Chicago. He is accounted one of the best informed and most capable insurance men in this section. He is likewise interested in the coal business as secretary and treasurer of the Oriole Coal Company of Huntington. Politically he is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he is a Sunday school teacher. He owns a modern residence at No. 2934 Staunton Road, Huntington.

On December 21, 1904, Mr. Partridge married at Atlanta, Georgia, Miss May Garnet Asbury, daughter of Charles Wade and Ada H. (Huggins) Asbury, residents of Atlanta, Georgia, out of which city Mr. Asbury travels as the representative of a large wholesale house. Mr. and Mrs. Partridge have two children: May Denham, born September 22, 1906; and Benjamin Waring, III., born March 9, 1915.

DANIEL M. BRICKEY, M. D., who resides at Manbar, Logan County, and controls a large general practice as official physician and surgeon in the neighboring mining district at Earling, was born at Willard, Carter County, Kentucky, December 30, 1881, and is a son of Samuel P. and Mary (Baker) Brickey, the former of whom now resides at Ashland, that state, and the latter of whom died in 1913, at the age of fifty-one years. The marriage of the parents was solemnized in Scott County, Virginia, where the bride was born and reared, and in 1879 they established their residence in Carter County, Kentucky. The farm owned by Samuel P. Brickey lies partly within the City of Ashland, and there he raises garden truck for the city market. He has given a number of years of effective service as a clergyman of the Baptist Church, and is a democrat in politics.

Doctor Brickey, the eldest in a family of ten children, attended the public schools of Ashland, and as a youth he worked at the carpenter trade and also as a coal miner. He carefully saved his earnings in order to realize his ambition, that of entering the medical profession. He began the study of medicine in 1905, and thereafter paid the expenses of his course in the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which he was graduated in 1911, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He initiated practice at Princess, Boyd County, Kentucky, where he remained eighteen months, after which he practiced for a similar period in the City of Ashland. His next professional work, for nineteen months, was at the coal mines in Letcher County, Kentucky, and thereafter he indulged in a five months' vacation, which he largely passed in a fishing excursion along the Licking River in Kentucky. Since that time he had been successfully established in mine practice in Logan County, West Virginia, where he is official physician and surgeon for the Logan Mining Company at Earling, and the Manbar Mining Company at Manbar, at which latter point he is giving similar service with the Gyan Mining Company and the Rich Creek Coal Company, which latter corporation he also represents at Lyburn. He has an important and heavy practice, and in his work has incidentally given special attention to the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. The doctor maintains affiliation with the Logan County and the West Virginia State Medical societies and the American Medical Association, his political support being given to the democratic party and he and his wife being members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

December 25, 1905, recorded the marriage of Doctor

Brickey and Miss Naoma Horne, daughter of John Horne, of Ashland, Kentucky, and the four children of this union are Orpha, Clarence, Gladys and Margaret Louise Brickey.

FRED A. OHLINGER is functioning in a constructive way through his effective service as superintendent of the Manbar Mine of the Manbar Coal Company in Logan County. This mine, at Manbar, was opened in 1910 by P. J. and J. S. R. Riley, of Huntington, these brothers having been pioneers in development work in the coal field in Logan County.

Mr. Ohlinger was born at Sewell, a coal town in Fayette County, West Virginia, on the 14th of November, 1884, and is a son of Michael and Katharine (Hohenstott) Ohlinger, both natives of Pomeroy, Ohio, and both of stanch Holland Dutch ancestry. Michael Ohlinger was first identified with coal mining in the Ohio field, but became a pioneer in the mining of coal in West Virginia, to which state he came fifty years ago. He worked in mines opened in the New River field at Nettleburg, and continued his active association with mining industry in this state until 1914, since which time he has maintained his home on his fine little farm in Fayette County, he being now (1922) seventy-four years of age. His wife passed away December 30, 1914, at the age of sixty years. He was a Union soldier during the last year of the Civil war, is a democrat in politics and is a sincere member of the Presbyterian Church, as was also his wife. They became the parents of ten children, of whom three of the four sons are living. Edward H. is mine foreman with the Cabin Creek Consolidated Coal Company at Kayford, Kanawha County and John is with the Maryland Coal Company at Winona, Fayette County.

The schools of his native county afforded Fred A. Ohlinger his youthful education, and in 1912 he completed a commercial course in the Dunsmore Business College at Staunton, Virginia, he having paid his expenses by the medium of money which he had earned in mine work, with which he became identified when he was a boy of fourteen years, his initial service having been as a trapper at the mine with which his father was connected. At Lookout, Fayette County, he continued for some time in the employ of the Bloom Coal Company, later was with the Keeneys Creek Collieries Company at Winona, and thereafter was in service with the Lookout Coal Company until 1912, in which year he attended business college, as noted above. After leaving this school he came to Manbar, where he is mine superintendent, store manager and payroll clerk for the Manbar Coal Company, besides having supervision of the local postoffice. He is actively affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

EARL JENKINS, the efficient superintendent of the Earling mines of the Logan Mining Company at Earling, Logan County was born at Viga, Jackson County, Ohio, on the 12th of July, 1873, and is a son of Cyrus and Ann (Jenkins) Jenkins, both likewise natives of Jackson County, where they still reside on their fine old homestead farm, the former being, in 1922, seventy-five and the latter seventy-one years of age, and both having been for many years earnest and active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cyrus Jenkins was a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he served under General Sherman and took part in many engagements, including a large number of major battles. He is a man of independent thought and action, well fortified in his convictions, and has long been numbered among the substantial farmers of his native county.

Earl Jenkins, second in a family of three children, was reared on the home farm and profited by the advantages of the public schools of the locality. At the age of seventeen years he became associated with railroad construction work, and later he was for five years in the employ of the Wellston Coal Company at Wellston, Ohio. At the time when the first coal mines were being opened in Raleigh County, West Virginia, Mr. Jenkins came to this state with T. J. Morgan, and as a miner assisted in opening the mines of the Raleigh Coal & Coke Company, with which corporation he there continued his connection nine years, during two of which he was employed in its general store. He was next associated with the same company in the opening of the Buffalo Thacker for which he is now superintendent at Earling, he having in 1916, entered the service of the Logan Mining Company, mines at Clothier, Logan County, where he held the position of mine superintendent. Thereafter he opened mines for the Coal Valley Mining Company on Spruce Fork of the Little Coal River. He there remained four years, and then, previously served for a time as manager of the company's general store. To fortify himself further for his chosen vocation Mr. Jenkins completed a number of years ago an effective course in mining engineering through the medium of the International Correspondence Schools at Scranton, Pennsylvania, and he has continued a close student of matters pertaining to the mining industry, in all practical details of which he has had wide and varied experience. He was on the field at the time of the industrial conflict in the mining district of Raleigh County, and has had heavy responsibilities also in connection with the recent troubles with the miners' union, which attempted to invade the Logan and Mingo fields. He is consistently to be designated as a pioneer in connection with coal mining enterprise in West Virginia, and has here made a record of splendid achievement. He is a republican with somewhat independent proclivities, he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Church, and in the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge at Madison, the Chapter at Logan, the Commandery of Knights Templars in the City of Huntington, and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.

In 1911 Mr. Jenkins wedded Miss Letitia Ward, daughter of William Ward, of Logan County, and the four children of this union are Earl, Jr., Grace, Lucile and Carl.

WILLIAM T. MCCLELLAN, M. D. At Ethel, Logan County, Doctor McClellan is the resourceful and popular physician and surgeon in charge of the mine practice of the Samsam Coal Company, the Fort Branch Coal Company, the Logan Mining Company, the Western United Corporation, the Argle Coal Company No. 2, and the Georges Creek Coal Company.

Doctor McClellan was born at Hale's Mill, Scott County, Virginia, October 17, 1873, and in the same county were born his parents, Edward and Martha (Smith) McClellan, the former on the 12th of February, 1852, and the latter July 30, 1856. In 1878 Edward McClellan came with his family to Lincoln County, West Virginia, where he rented land and applied himself indefatigably to farm enterprise. He eventually purchased a farm, and the passing years have prospered him in his activities as an agriculturist and stock grower. He is a democrat, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Baptist Church in their home community, near Branchland, Lincoln County. Of their four children, Dr. William T., of this review, is the eldest; Robert E. is in the rural mail service at Branchland; Sarah E. is the wife of Henry Shuff, a farmer near that place; and Grover C. is in the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company.

The schools of Lincoln County afforded Doctor McClellan his preliminary education, which was supplemented by his attending the excellent school maintained under the supervision of Professor Elam at Blaine, Lawrence County. At the age of twenty years the doctor engaged in teaching school, and through the returns from his effective service of ten years as a teacher in the schools of Lincoln and Wayne Counties he defrayed the expenses of his course in the medical department of the University of Louisville, Kentucky, in which he was graduated in 1905. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he engaged in practice in his home town of Branchland, and two years later he became mine physician for the United States Coal & Oil Company at Holden, Logan County, where he remained two years. For the ensuing four years he was engaged in practice at Wayne, in the county of the same name, and he then returned to Holden, whence eight months later he went to the Pond Creek coal district of Pike County, Kentucky, where he was engaged in mine practice until he returned to Logan County in 1915 and formed his present important professional alliances as a mine physician and surgeon. In 1912 he did effective post-graduate work at his alma mater, the medical school of the University of Louisville, and he is a close student who keeps in touch with advances made in medical and surgical science. He is identified with the Logan County and West Virginia State Medical societies and the American Medical Association, is a democrat in political allegiance, he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church, he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and in the Masonic fraternity he is a member of the Blue Lodge at Hamlin, the chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Logan, the temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, and the Scottish Rite Consistory at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree.

Christmas day of the year 1905 recorded the marriage of Doctor McClellan and Miss Lulu Thompson, daughter of Samuel H. Thompson, of Hamlin, this state, and the two children of this union are Ernest and Lillian.

He was born at Milton, Cabell County, West Virginia, July 17, 1893. FRANK W. CRANE, a well known business man of Albright, represents one of the old and prominent families of Preston County in the Crab Orchard community.

He is a descendant of Calvin Crane, who came to the American colonies and settled at Elizabeth, New Jersey, in 1640. A great-great-grandson of this American immigrant was Joseph Crane, who died in 1778. His widow subsequently removed to Ohio with her oldest sons, and died in that state at the age of ninety. Calvin Crane, a son of Joseph, came to West Virginia in 1790, and was founder of a family now widely distributed over this and other states. The Cranes by intermarriage are connected with nearly every other family of prominence in Preston County today. Calvin Crane located a tract of 2,545 acres on Beech Run Hill in Preston County. It is said that his first marriage was solemnized by Bishop Asbury, the first bishop of the Methodist Church in America. Calvin Crane served as a soldier in the War of 1812 in Col. Jonathan Crane's regiment. His three sons were John, Jacob and Calvin Crane, all of whom lived in Preston County and proved themselves substantial citizens.

Calvin Crane was the founder of the family at Albright, owning the Crane farm at Crab Orchard, where he also conducted a saw and grist mill. Calvin Crane married Jane Elliott, of another old family of Preston County. Both are buried in the Lutheran Cemetery at Crab Orchard. Their children were: Louisa, who married James Rigg, proprietor of the Ruthbel brick house as a tavern and who finally moved to Terra Alta and is now a resident of Oakland, Maryland; Elliott, who was born at Matheny Mill, spent the greater part of his life on a farm near Albright, and his last days at Terra Alta; Samuel, who was a farmer near Corinth in Preston County, and died there; Polly, who became the wife of Jehu Woodring, and moved to Michigan and died at Adrian in that state; Martin L., who was born and reared at Crab Orchard and died at Terra Alta in old age; John C.; Betsy, who became the wife of Peter Cramer and lived all her life in the Crab Orchard community; and Jarvey, who died in camp while training for a soldier in the Civil war.

John C. Crane, father of Frank W., was born on the farm at Crab Orchard and, like all his brothers, was a soldier in the Union army, being sergeant in Company B of the Fourteenth Virginia Cavalry. He was one of the escort of General Duvall and was in service more than three years. He was never wounded, but suffered ill health after the war, which he ascribed to his military service. He died at the farm near Albright in 1907. In the years following the war he was a farmer and stock dealer and bought up much live stock, which he drove to market at Uniontown and Cumberland, and after the coming of railroads shipped to more distant markets. Though he was rather well known in business, he always made his home on the farm three miles east of Albright. In politics he voted the republican ticket, and he and his wife were prominent Methodists, and for twenty-five consecutive years he was superintendent of the Sunday School at Albright.

John C. Crane married Mollie Bishop, daughter of William and Catherine (Snider) Bishop. She is still living at Albright. Her four children were: Dec, of Morgantown; Cloyd M., of Terra Alta; Spencer, a farmer near Albright, who died leaving two sons by his marriage to Myrtle Welch; and Frank W.

Frank W. Crane, who represents the present generation of this old family in Preston County, was born on the home farm March 31, 1881, acquired his education in the country schools and the high school at Terra Alta, and followed the occupation he learned as a youth, farming and stock raising, until he was thirty-nine years of age. In 1920 Mr. Crane left the farm, bought property at Albright, and opened the Cheat Valley Inn, a high class house of entertainment of which he is the genial landlord. He was also active in the incorporation of the Preston County Bus and Garage Company on May 1, 1921, and is manager of this business. The president is Dr. E. E. Watson, who formerly as an individual owned and operated the line carrying passengers from Albright to Tunnelton. This company has erected one of the best garages in the county.

Mr. Crane is the present auditor of the Town of Albright. He is a republican, having cast his first vote for Roosevelt in 1904. He is recording steward of the Albright Methodist Church, Mrs. Crane being church organist and teacher in the Sunday school.

In Preston County, June 15, 1902, Mr. Crane married Miss Myrtle Strawser, who was born at Albright, daughter of Alpha and Jennie (Welch) Strawser. When she was six months old her parents moved to Wyoming, and she spent her girlhood at Wheatland in that state, and still later the family moved to Wentworth, Colorado. Her father was a farmer and stockman. Mrs. Crane was born June 15, 1885, the oldest of two daughters and three sons. Her living brothers, Dee W. and Frank, both reside at Waumega, Kansas. Her brother Ira W. was killed while training as a soldier at Camp Funston, Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Crane have one daughter, Virginia F., a student in the Albright High School.

DAVID J. GIBSON has been a resident of Preston County, an active working service, nearly half a century. He has been a merchant, has figured in the official life of the county, a banker, and for a number of years past has lived at Kingwood and conducted an insurance business.

He was born at Cumberland, Maryland, October 21, 1846, and before he was a year old his parents moved to West Virginia and established their home a mile east of Brandonville, where his father, Joseph H. Gibson, opened a small store. In association with Captain Hagans he also erected a grist mill, foundry, tannery and sawmill, built his home here, and continued a factor in this considerable industrial community until during the Civil war the mills were burned, but the time the Jones raiders passed through Preston County. Following this Joseph H. Gibson moved to the Alight locality and built a dam across Dockery Creek, and in association with Joseph G. Cressler built a sawmill. The dam operated the mill and Joseph H. Gibson remained there until his death in 1876, at the age of fifty-six. Joseph H. Gibson was a native of Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, orphaned when a boy, and was a bound apprentice to a tailor at Shippensburg. After reaching his majority he moved to Shippensburg with his clothing tied in a handkerchief, crossed the Allegheny Mountains on foot to Bedford, Pennsylvania, and opened a tailor shop and later removed to Brandonville, Maryland, where he was in the grocery business. Then, accepting an invitation from friends, he moved to West Virginia, now West Virginia, and settled at the Willett farm a mile east of Brandonville, from which point his career has been briefly sketched.

At Shippensburg, where he learned the tailor's trade, Joseph H. Gibson also found his wife, Miss Jane Turner, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, related to the Rudasill and other people of Pennsylvania extraction. She survived her husband many years and died at Kingwood. Her children were: Elizabeth, who became the wife of Rev. T. W. Chister and died at Buckhannon; David Joseph; and Jennie, the wife of L. Morris Albright, of Kingwood. Joseph H. Gibson was a very useful man in every community where he lived. He was a local Methodist preacher, was active in republican politics and had the gift of speechmaking, though he possessed little book education. He represented Preston County in the Legislature after the Civil war, when the state capital was at Wheeling. During the war period he also represented Preston County as recruiting officer at Grafton, and was quartermaster of the militia organized to protect the state.

David J. Gibson shared in the varying turns of fortune of the family from the time they moved to West Virginia. He secured his early education in the schools about Brandonville, and when still in his teens began working in his father's store there. In 1870, after his marriage, he moved to St. Joseph, where he and his father conducted a mercantile business. In 1876 he accepted appointment as deputy sheriff of Preston County for the four east side districts, under Sheriff Elisha Thomas. After four years in those ties he moved to Newburg, West Virginia, and became associated with his brother-in-law, Mr. Albright, as a merchant. For twenty-seven years Mr. Gibson remained a resident of Newburg, though not all the time was spent as a merchant. Here again he became deputy under his old friend, Sheriff Elisha Thomas. He helped organize the first National Bank of Newburg, and is the only survivor of the original board of directors and is its vice president. He is also a stockholder in the wholesale grocery business Rowlesburg, West Virginia. Disposing of his property at Newburg, Mr. Gibson in 1905 moved to Kingwood, building a substantial home on Beverly Hill, and since then he and Mr. Albright have been in the fire insurance business.

Mr. Gibson learned his early political principles from his father and cast his first presidential vote for General Grant. When the prohibition party rose to meet a great issue he espoused the cause, and gave his support to the party until its object was accomplished in a nationwide prohibition, after which he returned to the republican ranks. For many terms Mr. Gibson was elected mayor of Newburg. He has been a member of the Masonic Order fifty-two years, joining at Kingwood, is past master of the Newburg Lodge and is also affiliated with the Royal Arch Chapter and Knights Templar Commandery at Grafton, West Virginia. He was rocked in the cradle of Methodism and for a quarter of a century was superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School at Newburg.

October 28, 1868, Mr. Gibson married Miss Clara O. Cressler, of Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, daughter of John Cressler. Mrs. Gibson was born at Shippensburg, October 28, 1848. Her father had been a banker at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, but spent his last years on his farm near Shippensburg, where he died at the age of eighty-six. While a resident of the latter place he organized the First National Bank, becoming one of its directors in which capacity he served until his death. Also for many years he was secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and was for many years a director of the Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, National Bank. Mrs. Gibson's mother bore the maiden name of Turner, and she was Mr. Cressler's second wife. Mrs. Gibson is one of two children by her mother, as her father had five other children. Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Laura Minnie, of Washington, District of Columbia, are the only survivors of this family. The two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are both deceased.

FELIX ELLIOTT was at one time perhaps the youngest postmaster in the State of West Virginia. He has performed his share of public duty, but for many years past has been thoroughly devoted to his essential public service as a banker, as cashier of the Bank of Kingwood.

This is one of the oldest banks in this section of West Virginia, and its history is notable in many ways. In 1865 a bank was started at Kingwood under the National Banking Act, the promoters being William G. Brown, Sr., and James C. McGrew, who owned practically all of the stock. Mr. Brown was the first president and Mr. McGrew the first cashier. The bank's original capital was $125,000, and it was the first bank of this entire region, and probably the first one west of Cumberland. Upon the death of Mr. Brown, Mr. McGrew succeeded to the presidency, with Francis Heermans, cashier. In 1888 the national charter was surrendered and a state charter taken out. The Bank of Kingwood has since had a capital stock of $75,000. Following the administration of Mr. McGrew and Mr. Heermans, the latter was succeeded as cashier by J. W. Parks, and on the death of Mr. McGrew, William G. Brown, Jr., became president. It is appropriate to state that Mr. McGrew was the active president of the bank and looked after its affairs until he was ninety-five years of age. The administration of William Brown, Jr., as president continued until his death. While not strictly a part of the history of the bank, it is interesting to note that three bank presidents, the two Browns and McGrew, were all members of Congress at different times, representing the Second West Virginia District. Mr. Brown, Jr., was succeeded as president by P. J. Crogan, the prominent Kingwood lawyer, who is still head of the bank. The Bank of Kingwood now has surplus and undivided profits equaling its capital stock, with deposits of over $600,000, and the assets passed the million dollar mark soon after the close of the World war.

Mr. Felix Elliott was born in Kingwood, March 16, 1868. The Elliott family was established in Preston County in pioneer times by Robert Elliott, who moved from Pennsylvania and lived out his life on a farm in Portland District. Felix Elliott, father of the Kingwood banker, was born in Preston County, August 16, 1820. In early life he began his medical practice, and only in late years did he retire from his profession and become a Kingwood merchant. He was also a Baptist minister and preached regularly during the Civil war period. He was an ardent republican in politics. Doctor Elliott died in August, 1905, his widow surviving him only a few weeks. Her maiden name was Mary Startzman, and she was from Aurora, Preston County, daughter of Jacob Startzman, who was of German ancestry. Doctor and Mrs. Elliott had ten children, but only five grew to mature years: Flora, wife of D. C. Hughes, of Buckhannon; Mrs. Lillie Coffman, who died in Marion County, West Virginia; Edward S., who died in New York City, where he was practicing law; Felix; and Mrs. Emma Werner, of Bowling Green, Ohio.

Felix Elliott as a boy and youth attended the public schools of Kingwood, there being no high school then. On leaving school he became a merchant's clerk, and it was shortly after his twenty-first birthday that he was appointed postmaster of Kingwood by President Harrison, taking over the duties of the office in 1889, as the successor of Capt. J. E. Murdoch. Mr. Elliott was postmaster until Mr. Cleveland's return to the White House in 1893, and from that year until 1900 he was engaged in merchandising. He was then selected to manage the stores of the Irona Coal Company, and discharged those duties for six years. He then resigned to engage in banking, and entered the Bank of Kingwood as teller, but in a few months was made assistant cashier and since 1911 has been cashier, as the successor of J. W. Parks. He has, therefore, given almost fifteen of the best years of his life to the bank. He has not been in politics, though he has served the town as a member of the common council.

In Preston County, August 2, 1893, Mr. Elliott married Florence D. Vickery, daughter of Charles E. and Gregg P. (Fairfax) Vickery. The Fairfax is another old family of this section. Mrs. Elliott was born at Terra Alta, Preston County. Her father was a telegraph operator with the Baltimore & Ohio, and later a merchant there, and finally at Kingwood. From 1893 to 1905 he was storkeeper in the Treasury Department of the Government at Washington, and died at Kingwood in 1905. His children were Mrs. Elliott and Rupert E. Vickery, who is in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company at Keyser.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have two children, Kathleen and Felix, Jr., the latter attending the grade schools at Kingwood. Kathleen is the wife of Capt. K. F. Hanst, an army officer stationed at Camp Benning, Georgia. They have two children, Rose Mary and Kenneth. The Elliott home is identified closely with church work at Kingwood, Mr. Elliott and his wife being of the Presbyterian faith, and he is superintendent of the Sabbath school and a member of the church session.

CHARLES ARNOLD CRAIG forty years ago was a farm boy in Preston County, and later, when he left home to go out into the world, he had a varied experience in railroading, in the lumber and timber business. But finally he returned to the occupation of his youth, and is now proprietor of a fine dairy farm that is one of the assets of the Kingwood locality and besides his farming his interests have extended in a financial and directing way to a number of business institutions in Preston County.

Mr. Craig was born on a farm in Preston County, December 15, 1865. His grandfather, John Craig, was a native of Ireland, came to America when a youth, grew up and lived for a number of years at Germantown, Pennsylvania, where he married into one of the old Pennsylvania Dutch families, and in 1848 he came farther west and settled at Morgan's Run in Preston County, West Virginia, where his subsequent years were devoted to farming. Of his two sons and two daughters the only survivor is Charles C. Craig, who is now completely retired from activity and lives at Kingwood at the age of eighty-seven. Charles C. Craig grew to manhood in Preston County, had a country school education, and during the Civil war he became a wagon master in the Union army. After the war he returned to farming, and subsequently employed his special talents in the profession of auctioneer, continuing both vocations. His history as an auctioneer covered a period of forty-five years, and during that time he cried sales over the section around Kingwood. That profession was in a sense a public office, but otherwise he has kept out of office, though carrying a part of the burden of local politics as a republican.

Charles C. Craig married Elizabeth Castle, who was born at Frederick, Maryland, September 18, 1840, and was nine years of age when her father, James E. Castle, brought his family to West Virginia. Thereafter she lived in the Kingwood locality until her death. Her children were: John James, L., of Garrett County, Maryland; Charles A.; Mar A., who died as the wife of E. W. Thomas; Amanda E. who died in childhood; Thomas B., of Kingwood; Sarah F. wife of M. G. Wilson, of Pittsburgh; Richard Edward, of Rowlesburg, West Virginia; Francis M., of New Philadelphia, Ohio; Miss Argenette, of Kingwood; Bertha, wife of W. E. Bolyard, of Keyser, West Virginia; Louella, who died in infancy; and Nora E., wife of E. W. Fizer, of Morgantown, West Virginia.

Charles Arnold Craig grew up on his father's farm at Irona, near Kingwood, and the common schools provided him with a fair education. When past his majority he left home and for two years was in Ohio with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, engaged in the train service out of Newark. His next definite locality was Pontiac, Illinois, where he did farm work for a season, and before returning home he saw something of Missouri and Iowa, and his travels altogether have taken him to thirteen states of the Union.

After his adventures and experiences in the West Mr. Craig returned to the old homestead and became a factor in the lumber industry, operating saw mills and buying and dealing in lumber and timber lands. For eleven years this was his main business. When he left it he settled down on his farm near Irona and became a high class stock farmer, a role in which he is still engaged. On the Irona farm for a number of years he was a breeder of Durham cattle, Polan China hogs and Shropshire sheep. Quite recently he bought a farm near Kingwood, where he maintains his residence and, where the essential industry is dairying. He breeds and handles the Holstein and Jersey cattle. The Kingwood farm consists of eighty-three acres, and his farm at Irona contains 213 acres, and these interests constitute him one of the substantial men in the agricultural community of Preston County.

Of his public record and more extended business connections the first item of interest is that he began voting as republican and supported Benjamin Harrison as a candidate for President. He served four years as deputy assessor of Preston County under J. Ami Everly. Since then farm and other business interests have claimed his time to the exclusion of official service. Mr. Craig is one of the vice presidents of the Kingwood National Bank, a director of the Roseburg Wholesale Grocery Company, a stockholder in the Masontown Bank, a director of the Preston County Lumber Company, is financially interested in the Lick Run Collieries Company and the Barnard Coal Company of Kingwood, and is a stockholder in the Hilltop Orchard Company of Romney, West Virginia, a corporation owning and operating one of the fine peach orchards in that horticultural section of the state.

September 30, 1891, in Preston County, Mr. Craig married Miss Mary Avis Martin. She was born in Preston County, September 15, 1873, second among the children of W. D. and Mary Elizabeth (Shahan) Martin. The other children of her parents are Lloyd, of Pittsburgh; Guy M., of Arizona; Lula, wife of Norman Cale, of Tunnelton, West Virginia; Sadie M. and Harry J., of Tunnelton. The Martin home is a farm at Irona, where the mother of Mr. Craig died in May, 1918. Mrs. Craig had a very good education in the public schools, and has always kept in touch with the intellectual interests of the community. She and Mr. Craig have reared a splendid family of children, namely: Charles W.; Virgie, wife of Jack Everetts, of Morgantown; Ella, Mrs. J. Ross Manown, of Kingwood; Mabel G.; Lula, who married H. H. Carrioe, of Tunnelton; West Virginia; Harold A.; Bertus M.; Juanita and Thomas Lantz. The oldest son, Charles W. Craig, who was born September 24, 1892, graduated with the honors of his class of 1911 and as class president from the Kingwood High School, graduated in 1912 from the Elliott Business College in Wheeling, and became bookkeeper and assistant cashier of the Kingwood National Bank. For a time he was general manager of the store and bookkeeper for the Gibson Lumber company, and then became a coal operator on his own account, opening and eventually selling five mines near Kingwood. At this stage of his promising business career came his call of patriotic duty, and he entered the Officers Training Camp at Camp Lee, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was detailed to go to France as a coal inspector, but the signing of the armistice prevented him from going overseas. On resuming civilian life he became a traveling salesman for the John S. Naylor Company of Wheeling, but has since resumed the coal business and is now operating three different mines near Kingwood.

WILLIAM P. BLACK, M. D. A physician and surgeon whose home and practice have been in Charleston for half a dozen years, Doctor Black is filling the office of county coroner of Kanawha County.

A native of West Virginia, he was born in Meadow Bluff district, Greenbrier County, in 1883, son of S. T. and Laura (Bivens) Black, natives of the state and members of old families in Greenbrier County. Doctor Black's uncle, Rev. Sam Black, was one of the prominent men in his section of the state, a Methodist minister, known and revered in many localities.

Doctor Black spent his early life on the farm. He had no different school advantages while there, and after leaving home at the age of eighteen he earned the money for his better education. He attended the Smoot Normal school and graduated from the Dunsmore Business College in 1906, at Staunton, Virginia. He studied medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, now the medical department of the University of Maryland, where he graduated in 1914. For the first two years he practiced at Blakely, and in 1916 removed to Charleston. Doctor Black is skillful and noted for the thoroughness of his work and consequently has a high standing in the medical profession.

Particularly he has won general approval by the judgment and consideration with which he has discharged his duties as coroner, an office to which he was qualified in January, 1920. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations, is a York and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Doctor Black married Miss Grace Royston, of Baltimore. Their two children are Eva D. and William P., Jr.

STALEY D. ALBRIGHT is one of the group of enterprising men and public spirited citizens who have been responsible for the development of the Village of Albright as a center of commerce and trade in Preston County. He is a merchant there, and is also interested in the coal mining industry of this vicinity.

He was born in Cranessville, Preston County, October 7, 1878. His great-grandfather was Daniel Albright, probably a native of Germany, who settled in America at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Some years later he moved from Pennsylvania to West Virginia. He was a tailor by trade. Among his children was Michael Albright, who was reared at Cranessville in Preston County and spent his life there as a farmer. He owned a large amount of land and was a prosperous and substantial citizen in every way. He was a republican in politics. He married Miss Bishop, and their children were: Henry B., who served as a Union soldier in the Civil war; Edward, also a soldier on the Union side; Mary, who became the wife of Michael Feather; Eli G.; Malinda, who was married to Hiram Ringer; and Clinton.

Eli G. Albright, father of the Albright merchant and banker, was born at Cranessville in 1852, and is still living in that community. He finished his education at Flemington, and as a young man taught school around Cranessville. He finally settled down to farming and stock raising, and was formerly a drover to Eastern markets, and has done a very successful business as a dealer and feeder of livestock. Eli G. Albright married Isabel Frankhouser, a daughter of Israel Frankhouser. Her father was a farmer in Maryland, near Brandonville, West Virginia. Mrs. Eli Albright died in February, 1919. She was the mother of three sons. Burr Albright was for several years a merchant at Hovensville, served as sheriff under Sheriff Copeman in 1921 and is now farming the homestead at Cranessville. The second son is Staley D., and the third is Floyd V., a farmer at Cranessville.

Staley D. Albright, who has never married, grew up on his father's farm at Cranessville, attended the common schools, and after leaving home was for five years in the employ of the Davis Coal & Coke Company. He then removed to Albright and became successor to the local merchant, B. F. Huggins, and has been active in general merchandising there since 1907. In addition he has been engaged in the coal business as an operator, and has assisted in the development of the properties of the Albright Coal Company. He was one of the founders of the First National Bank of Albright, and is a director and vice president of that institution. He is also one of the company which constructed the garage at Albright in 1921.

Mr. Albright comes of a republican family and cast his first vote for Major McKinley in 1900. He has never missed a national election and voting for his party ticket since then. Fraternally he is a Mason and Knight of Pythias, and is a member of the Methodist Church, though reared in the Evangelical faith.

REV. PETER FLYNN, pastor of St. Francis Catholic Church in Morgantown, has been a consecrated worker in the diocese of West Virginia since he took his orders as a priest and came to the United States.

He was born in County Westmeath, Ireland, January 29, 1876, son of James and Kate (Kilian) Flynn, Irish farming people. Early in his life it was decided that he should be educated for the priesthood, and with that in view he attended the Christian Brothers school in his native county, also the diocesan seminary there, and followed this with the training of the theological seminary in County Wexford. Here he was graduated in 1904, and in October of the same year arrived in the United States.

Father Flynn's first post of duty was the cathedral city of Wheeling. For seven years he was located at Parkersburg as chaplain of the DeSales Heights Academy, following which for fifteen months he was pastor of the church at Mannington in Marion County.

He has been engaged in his pleasant and useful labors at St. Francis Church in Morgantown since 1914. The church, on McLean Street, near Sixth, was built in 1898. The parish has enjoyed a steady growth during Father Flynn's pastorate, and the congregation now numbers over six hundred souls. Among other substantial improvements during the last eight years should be mentioned the building in 1918 of the two-story and basement parochial school, while in 1920 was completed a convent for the Ursuline Sisters, who have charge of the school. There are seven of these Sisters, the headquarters of the Ursuline Order being at Louisville. The parsonage is also a creditable building, and was purchased by the parish as it stands.

SWAN A. GUSTAFSON has had an interesting experience since coming to America thirty years ago, has worked in the timber and in lumber mills, in steel mills, for many years has been connected with merchandising, and now has the general store of Rothbel, near the village of Albright, in Preston County, and has been one of the influential men in that community since 1913.

Mr. Gustafson was born in the Province of Wermland, Sweden, August 4, 1868. His father was Gustav Matson and his mother, Lena Swanson, Swed-lish farmers. Their ancestry runs back many generations in Sweden. The forefather of Gustav Matson were the Shulstroms, a people who had decided artistic talents, and some of them were noted sculptors and painters. The Lutheran Church, built 1733, in the parish of Svanskog in Wermland was decorated by Mr. Gustafson's great grandfather, Shulstrom, who served his apprenticeship in art in Italy and other parts of Southern Europe.

Swan A. Gustafson was the oldest of the family of three daughters and two sons. His brother, John, died unmarried.

ried in Erie, Pennsylvania. His sister, Amanda, is the wife of Axel Nelson, of Sweden; Augusta lives with her widowed mother in the old country; and Axelina is the wife of Hjalmar Gustafson, living near the old Swedish homestead. The father of these children, Gustav Matson, died July 9, 1921. He had military training as a youth, but was never called to active duty, since Sweden has had no war since the Napoleonic era.

Swan A. Gustafson attended the public schools of his home locality, and after leaving home he followed farming for a time in the central part of Norway. He was reared under a limited monarchy, one of the best governments in Europe, but he early had yearnings for a life in the Republic of America. In April, 1891, he left Europe, sailing from Gothenburg, Sweden, on a steamer of the Wilson line to Liverpool, thence the Cunard liner Gallia carried him over the ocean, and after a voyage of ten days he landed at Castle Garden, April 26th. On landing he had about $10 in cash and a railway ticket to Ridgeway, Pennsylvania. Soon after reaching Ridgeway he secured work in a sawmill at Mill Creek, remained there three or four months, and then secured better pay and a steadier job in a mill at Ridgeway. This mill closed in November of the same year, but he found a place in another mill. After about two years he went to Pittsburgh and secured work in the converting department of the steel mills at Homestead as a helper on the vessels. These mills shut down as a result of the panic of 1893, and he then returned to the lumber camps at Ridgeway.

In October, 1895, Mr. Gustafson came into West Virginia, first stopping at Harmon in Randolph County, where he worked in lumber camps. In the spring of 1896 he went to Horton, and for five years was employed by the Condon-Lane Boom Lumber Company. In the spring of 1900 he moved to Elkins and entered the service of B. Golden, a merchant, and was one of Mr. Golden's most trusted men for ten years. Though he worked on a salary for a large part of the time, he had the real responsibility of running the business. On leaving Elkins Mr. Gustafson became manager of the store of Richard Chaffee at Williams in Tucker County, remaining there three years. Mr. Chaffee formed the Ruthel Lumber Company and built the mill at Cadisich, near Albright, and Mr. Gustafson went there to take charge of the company store. From 1913 to August, 1917, he continued under that management, and after the sale of the business he remained as the manager for the Cadisich Lumber Company.

Mr. Gustafson is also a stockholder and director of the First National Bank of Albright, a stockholder in the Bank of Kingwood, and is identified with coal operations in Kentucky. He has held a commission as notary public in Preston County, and he took out his first citizenship papers at Ridgeway, Pennsylvania, in September, 1891, his final papers being awarded him in Parsons, West Virginia, in October, 1906. He began voting as a republican, followed the Roosevelt element into the progressive party in 1912, and subsequently resumed his old affiliation. Mr. Gustafson is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and is a past master of Elkins Lodge of Masons. He was reared a Lutheran but is now a Presbyterian.

In Tucker County, West Virginia, in August, 1910, he married Miss Lephia Hope Werner, a native of Michigan, who was reared near Eglon in Preston County. She is a graduate of the Ohio Northern University at Ada and before her marriage was a teacher in Preston and Tucker counties. Mr. and Mrs. Gustafson have two sons, Carl Werner and John Augustus.

WILLIAM HAWKER BILLINGSLEA, who has been a factor in the public and business life of Marion County over thirty years, is a resident of Fairmont, and has an extensive business throughout this district as a dealer in coal and mineral lands.

He was born July 20, 1864, in a log house built by his paternal grandfather, a house still standing in the Lincoln District of Marion County. His grandfather, Silas Billingslea, was born in the Paw Paw District of Marion, then Monongalia County, and married Ann Morgan, a native of Monongalia County and member of the pioneer family of Morgan for whom Morgantown was named.

James S. Billingslea, father of William H., was born in the log house just mentioned on June 6, 1837. After many years devoted to his farm he moved to Worthington, Marion County, where he lived retired until his death on March 10, 1919. He was a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, Nancy Hawker, daughter of William Hawker, a pioneer farmer of Marion County, was born in Mannington District and is now in her eighty-second year.

William H. Billingslea as a boy on the home farm attended the common schools, taught several terms in country districts, and in 1855 went to the newer country of the West. In Hamilton County, Kansas, he pre-empted a farm, and subsequently was in the real estate business at Kendall in that county. From Kansas a few years later he moved to Salt Lake City, where for a year he was in the abstract and title business.

In 1890 he returned to West Virginia, and in 1896 was elected county assessor of Marion County, being the only republican candidate on the county ticket elected that year. He justified the confidence of his friends by the efficient record he made during the four years he was in office. Later he was nominated for the State Legislature, but declined in favor of a friend to whom he had pledged his support in convention. After leaving the office of assessor Mr. Billingslea entered the furniture business at Fairmont, but retired from that to give his attention to the coal business, and he handles coal lands, buying and selling coal acreage in the Fairmont District. He was one of the organizers and incorporators of the Fairmont & Cleveland Coal Company, and is still a director in the corporation.

Fraternally Mr. Billingslea is a member of Fairmont Lodge No. 9, F. and A. M., Orient Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., Crusade Commandery No. 6, K. T., and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a charter member of Evergreen Lodge No. 14, Knights of Pythias, at Worthington, and at a recently called meeting of the lodge he was one of the six members presented with a gold medal as token of twenty-five years of membership in good standing. Mr. Billingslea participates in the activities of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the First Baptist Church.

He married Miss Florence Snodderly. She was born in Fairmont District in 1872, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Ice) Snodderly, both parents still living. Her mother is descended from that historic character, Abraham Ice, who was the first white child born west of the Allegheny Mountains in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Billingslea have two children, Paul and Jean. Paul, who graduated in civil engineering from Valparaiso University, Indiana, is chief engineer for the Brady Coal Company of Fairmont, and married Octavia Hunt. Jean, a graduate with the A. B. degree from the University of West Virginia with the class of 1919, is a teacher in the Fairmont High School.

OSCAR F. PAYNE. Becoming a resident of Charleston thirty years ago, Oscar F. Payne first devoted himself to the achievement represented by a successful business career, but for a number of years past has associated with his banking and business affairs a notable interest and leadership in the civic and social advancement of the community. Such men as Mr. Payne constitute a powerful nucleus of means, instrumentalities and influence which in all times have built cities and made communities great and prosperous.

Mr. Payne was born at Palmyra, Virginia, in 1873, son of Collin Patton and Beatrice (Clark) Payne. His grandfather Joseph Payne, was a Confederate soldier and at one time sheriff of Fluvanna County. Collin Patton Payne for many years has been a resident of Charleston, West Virginia. His first wife, Beatrice, died in 1885, Oscar F. being her only son.

Oscar F. Payne acquired a public school education and as a youth entered the service of the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad Company. He was in that service twenty-three years, and had he chosen to remain he might have become a prominent figure in the transportation life of the nation. In 1903, after many consecutive promotions, at the age of thirty, he was made general agent of the freight department of the Kanawha & Michigan. He served as general agent eight years, resigning January 1, 1911, to look after other business connections he had formed. Mr. Payne has been a resident of West Virginia since 1886 and a resident of Charleston since 1891.

When he left the railroad he became associated as treasurer and traffic manager with the Steele & Payne Company, rokers and commission merchants at Charleston. This business was incorporated in 1903 as the Steele & Brown Company. It is now Davis, Payne & Company, brokers and commission dealers in produce, hay and grain, one of the largest firms of its kind in the state, the aggregate of its transactions running to annual figures of several millions.

In addition Mr. Payne is president of the Security Bank & Trust Company, one of the strongest and most rapidly growing banks of the city and also a director in the Bank of Dunbar. He is president of the Empire Savings & Loan Company, also president of the Commercial Savings & Loan Company and is a director of the Community Savings & Loan Company. In 1913 he served as president of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, and is now chairman of the transportation committee of that body.

Among a number of civic honors and responsibilities he has enjoyed, doubtless Mr. Payne derives the greatest satisfaction from his connection with Charleston's unique organization known as the Union Mission. He has the honor of being president of the board of directors of this mission. The title of this institution in no wise describes the manifold activities and directions of useful service. In fact here is no institution quite like it in the country nor one that excels it in practical helpfulness in its equipment of buildings and staff of teachers, nurses and physicians; in the amount of money it has raised for carrying on its work, and in its vocational, educational and recreational facilities. From this mission like missions have been established in many places in West Virginia and in a number of other states. The mission is governed by a board of directors representing all the different denominations in Charleston, two members from each church, this board electing the president.

Mr. Payne is a vestryman and treasurer of St. John's Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Rotary Club, Elks and United Commercial Travelers. He is the type of citizen who honors any party by a place on its ticket. In 1916 he was elected as a democrat to the House of Delegates in the State Legislature, serving in the sessions of 1917-18. While in the Legislature he was a leader in the prohibition enforcement measures, and another object to which he devoted his earnest effort was the good roads legislation under which the state began the construction of its present good roads system.

Mr. Payne married Miss Mary R. Ruffner. She was born in Charleston in 1873, daughter of Henry D. and Salie (Patrick) Ruffner. Mr. and Mrs. Payne have one son, Ruffner Roger Payne, who was born March 12, 1899.

LEE R. HOWELL, superintendent of the mines of the Wood Coal Company on Dingess Run, Logan County, with the Village of Ethel as his headquarters, was born at Fairfield, Kanawha County, this state, March 28, 1876, and is a son of John W. and Lucinda (Jones) Howell, who came to this state from Floyd County, Virginia, shortly after the close of the Civil war, the overland trip having been made with team and wagon, before the construction of railroads through this section. John W. Howell had much skill as a blacksmith and worker in wood, but he became an exponent of farm enterprise in Kanawha County, where his farm, on the Great Kanawha River, had an excellent deposit of coal. He later sold the property to coal companies, and when the line of Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad was under construction he was employed in the building of its bridges. He was a member of a Virginia regiment in the Confederate service in the Civil war, and took part in many engagements, including the battle of Gettysburg. He was captured several times but on each occasion contrived to escape through the aid of friends. In later years he delighted in recalling his experience in trading tobacco to Union soldiers for coffee. He was a staunch republican after the war, was affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans and was one of the well known and highly honored citizens of Fayette County at the time of his death, November 3, 1900, when sixty-four years of age. His widow is now past eighty years of age and a resident of Montgomery, that county. Both early became active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Their children were twelve in number, and two of the sons, Lee R. of this sketch, and Homer G., are identified with coal mining, the latter being superintendent for the American Eagle Colliery Company at Colcord, Raleigh County.

Lee R. Howell attended the schools of his home county, and since identifying himself with the coal-mining industry he has been indefatigable in advancing his technical and practical knowledge of the same. He has studied constantly, and also took an effective course in mining engineering through the medium of the International Correspondence Schools, Scranton, Pennsylvania. He remained on the home farm until he had attained to his legal majority, and then entered the employ of the Powelton Coal Company, at a wage of $1.25 a day. His experience has since covered all phases of coal mining operations, and he has gained high standing as a mining engineer of much ability and discrimination. He did blacksmith work in the mines, was made a foreman in the coal mines of his native county, and finally became a mine foreman for the George A. Laughlin Coal Company at Brilliant, Ohio. He also served as mine superintendent at St. Clairville, that state, and after his return to West Virginia he was mine foreman at Burawell, later at Christian, and made a record of splendid production in the mines. Since October 15, 1916, he has been a valued and efficient executive with the Wood Coal Company in Logan County. In a basic way Mr. Howell is a republican, he is affiliated with the Lodge and Encampment bodies of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he is a deacon.

April 7, 1897, recorded the marriage of Mr. Howell and Miss Zettie Toney, daughter of Jeremiah Toney, of Racine, this state, and they have one son and three daughters: Carrie, Grace, Ora and Carl, the oldest daughter having achieved marked success and popularity as a teacher in the public schools.

LESTER EARL SCHOLL learned the technical side of coal mining largely under his father, and both have been prominent in the coal fields of this state. L. E. Scholl is now superintendent of the Steel & Tube Company of America, with mines at Dehue on Rum Creek in Logan County. The coal from this mine is used for by-products by the Milwaukee Coke & Gas Company, a subsidiary of the Steel & Tube Company of America.

Mr. Scholl was born at Roseville, Muskingum County, Ohio, October 29, 1889, son of Sherman E. and Mary Elizabeth (Patch) Scholl, who now live at Huntington, West Virginia, and both of them are fifty-three years of age, the mother being just eleven days younger than her husband. Sherman Scholl was born at Washington Court House, Ohio, and his wife in Hocking County in the same state. Sherman Scholl learned the blacksmithing trade in a railroad roundhouse in Ohio. His mechanical ability he eventually turned to the service of the mining industry in Ohio District and became master mechanic, then mine superintendent, and in 1901 moved to Fayette County, West Virginia, where he was connected with several companies. Leaving there, he was with the Ozark Coal Company at Spadra, Arkansas, and after being in the West for two years returned to West Virginia and had charge of four mines for the M. B. Coal and Coke Company at Kimberly, Fayette County. His next work was at Lubrig, Ohio, as mine superintendent, and he was then made general superintendent of the Avon Coal Company at Accoville, Logan County, West Virginia. At that time his son Lester E. was mine foreman in the same place. Sherman Scholl had charge of the six mines in this vicinity. He is now superintendent of mines near Rainell in Greenbrier County. His long experience has brought him an authoritative position with regard to all the details of construction work required in opening and developing mines. He taught his son Lester E. Scholl, and the latter in turn taught his brother Franklin R. Franklin is now mine foreman for the Richereek Coal Company at Wilburn in Logan County. There is also a daughter, wife of a Mr. Watkins, superintendent of the Richereek Coal Company at Wilburn.

Lester Earl Scholl acquired his early education in the schools at Bremen, Ohio, and for two years was a student in Ohio University at Athens. His higher education came to him long after he had begun his experience in the mines. He was a trapper boy at the age of nine, greased cars, drove mules, operated motors and also mining machines; he was made mine foreman at Luhrig, Ohio, and for five years was foreman for the Avon Coal Company at Accoville in Logan County. In 1916 he was promoted to superintendent of these mines, which later were taken over by the Deegans interests. Mr. Scholl came to his present duties as superintendent at Dehue in January, 1921.

During the World war he did double work and sometimes even more, and though he was superintendent he personally operated the mine machinery, ran motors, worked on the tipples and in the store as well as in the office, thus supplying in a measure the vacancies when men were taken into military service. Mr. Scholl is a republican, and is affiliated with the Lodge and Royal Arch Chapter of Masons at Logan, the Rose Croix Chapter of Huntington, and his father is a York Rite Mason and Shriner. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

On August 14, 1919, Mr. Scholl married Susie Gore, daughter of Joseph F. Gore, of Man, Logan County. They have a son, Lester E., Jr.

ROBERT THOMAS CUNNINGHAM, secretary and treasurer of the Monongah Glass Company, one of the important industrial concerns of Fairmont, Marion County, was born at Masontown, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, August 13, 1874, and is a son of Andrew J. and Rachel (Williams) Cunningham, both likewise natives of that county. The father, who was for many years actively engaged in manufacturing business, is now living retired at Masontown, his wife having passed away in 1902.

After the public-school discipline which he received in his native place Robert T. Cunningham continued his studies in the Pennsylvania State Normal School at California, and in his native state he gained also his initial business experience. In 1894 he came to West Virginia and took a position in the office of the Montana Coal & Coke Company at Fairmont. He remained with this concern after its title had been changed to the Fairmont Coal Company, and when it became a part of the Consolidation Coal Company he served as auditor of the latter corporation. In 1914 he resigned this position to assume the dual office of secretary and treasurer of the Monongah Glass Company, of which he had previously become a director. He is also vice president of the Fairmont Building & Investment Company, treasurer of the Greater Fairmont Investment Company and the Acme Land Company, and president of the Marion County Securities Company, which publishes at Fairmont the daily newspaper known as the West Virginian. He is a director of the Hartford-Fairmont Company, the Fairmont Building & Loan Association, the Fairmont Hotel Company, and the Fairmont State Bank. He is an active member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, and during the World war period was a member of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Mr. Cunningham is a Knight Templar Mason, and in the same fraternity has received the eighteenth degree of the Scottish Rite at the time of this writing. He is a past exalted ruler of Fairmont Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Protestant Church. He is one of the aggressive and thoroughly representative business men of Marion County, and his civic loyalty is shown in action as well as sentiment. The maiden name of his wife was Cecil Peters, and they have two daughters Jane and Joann.

HON. WILLIAM STANLEY HAYMOND, a former judge of the Circuit Court of the Fourteenth District, and long recognized as one of the distinguished members of the bar of his native state, is now engaged in the practice of his profession in his native City of Fairmont, Marion County, his birth having here occurred on the 26th of August, 1852. Judge Haymond is a lineal descendant of John Haymond who came from England to America in 1734 and settled in Maryland, and whose son, Maj. William Haymond, was as a lad of fifteen years, in the command of General Braddock in the unsuccessful march against Fort Duquesne. At a later period Major Haymond served in the command of General Forbes when the latter made a successful expedition against that fort. In 1759 he enlisted in a Virginia company in the regiment commanded by Col. George Washington, who later became the first president of the United States. Upon his removal from Maryland to Virginia Major Haymond settled in the district of West Augusta, at what is now Morgantown, West Virginia. In 1784 he removed to Clarksburg, where he passed the remainder of his life. At the beginning of the war of the Revolution he was appointed captain of a militia company and was in service at Prickett's Fort in 1777. He was promoted to the office of major in 1781, and served in that capacity as a patriot soldier until the close of the war. His son, William (II), served during the latter part of the Indian wars along the Monongahela River frontier. Thomas S., son of William Haymond (II), served as a member of Congress from Virginia. The maiden name of his wife was Harriet Franklin, and one of their children was Alpheus F. Haymond, father of Judge Haymond of this review.

Judge Alpheus F. Haymond was born in what is now Marion County, West Virginia, December 15, 1823, and died at Fairmont, this county, December 15, 1893,—the seventieth anniversary of his birth. He was educated in the common schools, the Morgantown Academy and William and Mary College at Williamsburg. In the last named institution he continued his studies one year and he then began the study of law at Morgantown. He was admitted to the bar in 1842, and forthwith engaged in practice at Fairmont. In 1852 he was elected a member of the Virginia Legislature, of which he again became a member in 1857. In 1861 he was a delegate to the convention called to determine the part which Virginia should take in the impending conflict between the states of the North and the South. With voice and vote he opposed the secession of the state, but when the Civil war was precipitated he was loyal to his native state and in 1862 entered the military service of the Confederacy. For nearly four years thereafter he served in the brigade of General Early, in the army corps commanded by Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson. At the close of the war he was paroled and returned to Marion County. However, the test oath required of lawyers under the conditions of the so-called reconstruction period could not be conscientiously taken by him, and he was thus unable to resume the practice of his profession until an enabling act was passed in his favor by the West Virginia Legislature in 1868, this having been the first special act passed by that body prior to 1870. Judge Alpheus F. Haymond soon regained his substantial law practice at Fairmont, and when the democratic party again came into power in the state he was naturally drawn into public service. He was elected a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, in which he assumed much of leadership. In the election following the adoption of the new state constitution Judge Haymond was elected one of the four judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals, and by lot was assigned one of the four-year terms. He was thereafter elected for the full term of twelve years, and for six years of this period he served on the bench of the Court of Last Resort in the state, and at the close of the years 1882 he resigned the office and resumed the private practice of his profession at Fairmont. In 1884, however, he yielded to the importunities of his friends and was elected a member of the State Legislature, in which he was made chairman of the judiciary committee of the House. While on the bench of the Supreme Court of Appeals he served several years as president of that body.

November 18, 1847, Judge Haymond married Maria Jancaea Bogges, who was born in Marion County, November 25, 1828, a daughter of Thomas Lindsay Bogges, who was born at Fairfax Court House, Virginia, and who came to the present Marion County, West Virginia, in 1810, his father, Lindsay Bogges, having become one of the pioneers of this section, then on the frontier. Judge and Mrs. Alpheus F. Haymond became the parents of eleven children, of whom Judge William S., of this review, was the third in order of birth.

William S. Haymond received the advantages of the common schools and thereafter attended the normal school at Fairmont until ill health compelled him to abandon his studies. As a youth he learned telegraphy, he having previously served as messenger boy for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad telegraph office at Fairmont. He continued as an operator in the employ of this railroad company for ten years, and worked for a time also for the Western Union Telegraph Company. He finally became operator and switchman at the west end of Kingwood Tunnel, where he remained four years. In this period he devoted his spare hours to reading law, and by his independent self-application he fitted himself for the profession that his father had so signally honored. On the 12th of April, 1881, he passed the required examination and was admitted to the bar at Fairmont. His was the unusual experience of coming direct from a telegraph office to the bar without having had instruction of any kind save his own study of law books. He resigned his railroad position April 1, 1881, and twelve days later was admitted to the bar. He immediately opened an office at Fairmont, and his character and ability, together with the prestige of the family name, on him distinctive recognition in his chosen profession. He naturally received much of the law business of his father, Lindsay B., whose death occurred about this time, on the 5th of February, 1881, he having been elected prosecuting attorney of Marion County the year prior to his death.

Judge Haymond continued in successful practice at Fairmont until May 1, 1890, when he was appointed, by Governor McKim, judge of the Intermediate Court of Marion County, a newly established tribunal created for the purpose of relieving the docket of the Circuit Court, and Judge Haymond was the first to preside on the bench of this new court. Judge Haymond continued on this bench until 1894, when in the general election he was defeated for the office, as a result of normal political exigencies that defeated the democratic ticket in the county. He resumed the private practice of his profession and controlled a large and important law business when, in 1912, he was elected judge of the Circuit Court of the fourteenth Judicial District, comprising Marion County. He continued his able and effective service on the Circuit bench until January, 1921, he having been defeated for re-election in the preceding November. The Judge is now associated in active general practice with his son, Frank C., under the firm name of Haymond & Haymond, the firm, as a matter of course, having a representative clientele of important order. Judge Haymond is a member of the West Virginia State Bar Association and has twice served as president of the Marion County Bar Association.

January 29, 1879, recorded the marriage of Judge Haymond and Miss Agnes B. Cruise, who was born in Preston County, this state, a daughter of Thomas and Mary Cruise, who settled in that county in 1848, both having been natives of Ireland. Of the children of Judge and Mrs. Haymond the firstborn, Mary Helen, died at the age of sixteen months; Lucy May is the wife of Edward F. Holbert, of Fairmont; Laura Lee died at the age of one year; Frank C., associated with his father in the practice of law; Paul, who served in the mechanical department of the aviation corps in the period of the World war, now resides in his native city; Mary Josephine is the wife of Charles G. Hood, of Fairmont; Genevieve is the wife of John M. Wolfe, and they reside at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Maria B. is the wife of Kenna Clark, of Fairmont; and Mildred S., Martha L. and Frances F. remain at the parental home.

It may consistently be recorded that in November, 1862, a few months after his tenth birthday anniversary, Judge Haymond became a messenger boy or courier with the Imboden Brigade of the Virginia troops commanded by Gen. John D. Imboden, and with this brigade he was present at the Battle of Gettysburg, in the summer of 1863. He thereafter was with his command on its raids into Maryland and Pennsylvania, and his loyal service to the Confederacy covered a period of eighteen months, he having returned to his home in the spring of 1864.

WILLIAM BRUCE BORROR, M. D. It was the brilliant essayist, Addison, who advised those in his day who would find success in life, that perseverance, caution and hope be made their cherished companions. Undoubtedly these elements are necessary, but in modern days they must often be supplemented by hard, grinding industry, and a flame of ambition that ever burns. In the interesting story of Dr. William Bruce Borrer, who is well established in the practice of medicine at Morgantown, an apt illustration may be found. From a boyhood of comparative country seclusion, a young manhood of manual labor, long and especially honorable service in the schoolroom, he made his way forward until the height of his ambition was reached in his admission to the profession of which he has ever since been an able member. Doctor Borrer is a member of the Monongalia County and the West Virginia State Medical societies, and is a Fellow of the American Medical Association.

Doctor Borrer was born May 25, 1879, on the old family homestead on Brush Run, in Pendleton County, West Virginia, where his great-grandfather had settled when that entire section was but a wilderness. His parents were Daniel and Louisa (Mowery) Borrer, the latter of whom survives. She was born near what became known as "Upper Tract," in Pendleton County, West Virginia, where her people were pioneers.

The Borrer family was established in West Virginia by the great-grandfather of Doctor Borrer, who came from York, Pennsylvania, and took up 400 acres of wild land on Brush Run in Pendleton County, and with the aid of his sons reclaimed the same and established a comfortable frontier home for his family. His son Simon, grandfather of Doctor Borrer, accompanied his father to West Virginia and lived and died on the homestead. There his son Daniel was born in 1855, later removed to Randolph County and died there in 1911.

William Bruce Borrer grew to the age of twelve years on the old home farm which was situated forty miles distant from a railroad. He attended the country schools, but educational progress was not notable in that section at the time and totally inadequate to satisfy the developing mind of young Borrer, and when his parents decided to remove to Randolph County, he gladly accompanied them. For some years, however, after this change his education was advanced only through his own efforts, for until he was eighteen years old daily work in a sawmill was his portion, and study was possible only at night. In this way he prepared himself for a teacher's examination, in 1897 receiving a No. 2 license, following which he taught a country school for one year. In the spring of 1898 he made use of the money he had earned to take a course in the Fairmont Normal School, and afterward taught country schools for another year. During the three following years he alternated work and study, spending the summers working in sawmills and lumber yards and his winters as a student in Buchanan Seminary, from which institution he was creditably graduated in 1903, and in that year had the satisfaction of securing his well-earned teacher's state certificate.

In the fall of the above year Doctor Borrer was appointed principal of the West Union High School, a well merited promotion, and he continued in charge there until 1917, when he was elected superintendent of the schools of Davis, West Virginia, from which position he retired in 1920 to become principal of the high school at Cameron, West Virginia, and from 1910 to 1913 he was principal of the graded schools of Grafton. During all these years he attended summer schools during vacation time.

In 1914 Doctor Borror completed the academic course in the West Virginia University, four years, with the exception of a few weeks, and in the same year entered the medical department of the University of Maryland at Baltimore, from which he was graduated with his medical degree in 1918. In sympathy with his aims and in recognition of the hard fight Doctor Borror had so resolutely made for years, Dr. G. B. Puriton, who was then president of the West Virginia University, proffered professional assistance at this time which Doctor Borror gratefully acknowledges. On leaving medical college he was appointed as a civilian, in 1918, to have medical charge of the construction of the Government army supply base at Norfolk, Virginia, where over ten thousand men were employed for fourteen months. In November, 1919, Doctor Borror took the examination of the West Virginia State Medical Board, was granted his license, and on January 1, 1920, entered into general medical practice at Morgantown. He enjoys the good will of his professional brethren and the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens.

On August 11, 1911, Doctor Borror married Miss Almonta Durrett, who is a daughter of John and Hester Durrett. They have four children, two sons and two daughters: John William, Hester Louisa, Anna Margaret and James Clark, aged respectively seven, five, three and one years. Doctor and Mrs. Borror are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has never been particularly active in politics, but as a citizen is greatly interested in the welfare of Morgantown and is a valued member of the Chamber of Commerce. He is a thirty-second degree and Knights Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of Monongalia Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.

J. FRANK FOX, M. D. Though thirty-five years have elapsed since he graduated in medicine, Doctor Fox has as yet relaxed none of the intense devotion he has given to his profession, and his service has been such as to place him on a plane with the most eminent men of his calling in West Virginia. Doctor Fox for thirty years has been a resident of Bluefield, and is one of the founders and heads of the splendid Bluefield Sanitarium, one of the finest private institutions of the kind in West Virginia.

Doctor Fox was born in Lincoln County, North Carolina, April 7, 1863, son of A. J. and Lydia (Bost) Fox, also natives of the same state. Doctor Fox no doubt acquired some of his spirit of service from his father, who was both a physician and a minister of the Lutheran Church, and devoted his life to a work that was in every sense an intimate and essential service to humanity.

J. Frank Fox attended the common schools of Lincoln County, also the Kings Mountain School, a military institution of very high standing in its day. From there he entered the University of Virginia, taking the medical course during 1882-83, and finished his professional preparation in New York at the University of the City of New York, where he graduated M. D. in 1886. In the case of a man like Doctor Fox a degree is noteworthy only as marking the time he was first qualified for professional work. His attainments have been accumulating through every year, not only as the result of his individual experience, but through his constant effort to keep in contact with the great men and the great new ideas of the profession. Practically every year he has devoted some time to post-graduate work, attending such institutions as the New York Polyclinic and New York Post-Graduate College, the clinics of the Mayos at Rochester, Minnesota, and other leading schools throughout the country.

Doctor Fox did his first regular practice in his home county of Lincoln in North Carolina, but after three years he went to Waynesborough, Virginia, remaining there six months, and from that time until 1892 was located at Basic City, Virginia. It was in 1892 that he removed to Bluefield in the capacity of division surgeon of the Norfolk & Western Railroad. About 1895 the railroad company centralized its medical work, and Doctor Fox has continued since then as assistant surgeon. About the time he retired from his duties as division surgeon Doctor Fox and Dr. Wade St. Clair made the first modest beginnings of the Bluefield Sanitarium. These two very able and progressive physicians and surgeons have been closely associated in this institution ever since, and it stands as a monument to their labors. From time to time the accommodations of the sanitarium were enlarged, and in September, 1921, the Bluefield Sanitarium was incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000. Recently the building has been doubled in size, and there is nothing lacking in the way of modern equipment and service to give this favorable comparison with any hospital in the state. The staff consists of Dr. J. F. Fox, Wade St. Clair, R. O. Rogers and Charles T. St. Clair.

Doctor Fox is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and member of the Mercer County Medical Society, the State Associations of West Virginia and Virginia, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He and Mrs. Fox and son Edwin are members of the Lutheran Church, while their son Francke and his wife are members of the Episcopal denomination. Doctor Fox has a life membership in the order of Elks. He is member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club and Bluefield Country Club, and has always loved a fine horse, though the motor car has been a source of convenience to him in his profession.

In 1893, at Staunton, Virginia, Doctor Fox married Miss Minnie Fulcher, daughter of Edwin A. Fulcher. Doctor Fox is properly proud of his two sons, Francke Fulcher and Edwin Alfred, both of whom are ex-service men. Edwin, on account of his age, did not get into the service until September, 1918, when he enlisted in the Marines, and was trained at Parris Island, South Carolina. About October 15, 1918, he went overseas, and was in France about two weeks before the signing of the armistice. He was sent to Germany with the Army of Occupation, returning home in June. Among other duties before he returned he participated in a 200 mile hike.

Francke F. Fox enlisted in April, 1917, as soon as war was declared, and entered the First Officers Training School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana. Three months later he was commissioned a second lieutenant and in September was assigned to duty at Camp Sherman. May 10, 1918, he received sailing orders with the First Battalion of the Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Infantry, Eighty-third Division, and sailed June 6th, landing in London June 26th, and went to La Havre, July 1st. In the meantime he had been advanced to first lieutenant. About July 10th he entered the Officers Training School at Châtillon sur Seine, and on August 15th returned to Le Mans in command of Company C of the Three Hundred Twenty-ninth Infantry. He was on the move with this company, in intensive training and preparation, until December 22d, when he was transferred to and made rifle inspector of the Sixteenth United States Infantry, First Division, at Dernbach, Germany. He remained with the Army of Occupation there until June 24, 1919, when he went to Brest and landed at Hoboken July 5th. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Dix July 9, 1919.

BENJAMIN GARRISON. The Garrison family of Monongalia County, West Virginia, has belonged to this county for over three-quarters of a century, and from pioneer days to the present generation members of this family have been identified with its development and important history.

The American ancestor of the Morgantown Garrisons was Leonard Garrison, the great-great-grandfather, who came to the United States from Scotland, settled on the Monongahela River in Greene County, Pennsylvania, married Elizabeth Gray, and one of their sons, David by name, was the first of the family to come to Monongalia County, West Virginia.

David Garrison was born on his father's river homestead in Greene County, Pennsylvania, November 8, 1807, grew man's estate there and then married. After that he moved to Perry County, Ohio, where he acquired land which he lived for a time and then returned to Greene county, but subsequently went back to Ohio, where he is a farmer in Guernsey County until 1842. In that year settled in the Clay District of Monongalia County, West Virginia, where he resided until 1860, when he removed to Tyler County, and his death occurred there February 1, 1878. He married Catherine Engle, who was a daughter of Peter Engle, a native of Germany. Peter Engle was a gunsmith by trade and had come to America prior to the Revolutionary war, in which his skill and knowledge of military equipments were utilized in the office of inspector of arms in the Patriot Army. David Garrison became the father of five sons and three daughters, one son bearing the name of Alpheus.

Alpheus Garrison was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, February 26, 1833, accompanied his parents in the various family removals, and ultimately became one of the prominent men of Monongalia County, a leader in its public affairs and a private citizen of unusual worth. In early manhood his fellow citizens elected him to local offices because of his stability of character, and he served as constable and deputy sheriff of Clay District. In 1861 he was appointed deputy United States marshal, and later was appointed one of the first two revenue assessors of the county. In 1863 he helped to recruit Company C, Third West Virginia Cavalry, of which he was commissioned captain; in 1864 he went to the front with Company E, seventeenth West Virginia Infantry, of which he was second lieutenant and later promoted to the captaincy.

When the convention met at Wheeling to take up the question of organizing the State of West Virginia, in 1863, Mr. Garrison was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention and gave aid in establishing the new state, taking an active part in the deliberations that resulted in withdrawal from old Virginia. He was mustered out of the army in June, 1865, and in the fall of that year he purchased and brought into the county the first portable sawmill ever operated in Monongalia County. In February, 1866, he was appointed assessor of the Second District of the county, and later was elected to this office. In 1868 he was elected a member of the West Virginia Legislature, two years later was elected sheriff of Monongalia County, and in 1890 became a member of the Upper House of the State Legislature. He conferred honor on every public office he held. This statesman and representative citizen died January 21, 1917. On April 4, 1853, Alpheus Garrison married Charlotte Henderson, who was born on the old Henderson farm near Core, West Virginia, March 10, 1832, and still survives. She is a daughter of David Henderson, who was born in Monongalia County in 1806, a son of James Henderson, a native of England and a pioneer to this section. One of the six children born to this marriage bears the name of Marion Simon.

Marion Simon Garrison was born on the old Garrison homestead in Clay District, Monongalia County, June 4, 1854, and for many years was prominent in public affairs in the county. He served in such political offices as assessor, deputy sheriff and sheriff, having been elected sheriff in 1896 and served four years. Until 1897 Mr. Garrison continued to reside on his farm, but since then his home has been at Morgantown. He married Miss Martha Ammons, daughter of Anthony Ammons, of Monongalia County, and they have four children: Harry A., who is a surgeon in the United States Navy, is an overseas veteran of the World war, and was surgeon on the ship that conveyed General Pershing and his staff in health and safety to France; Olive, who is the wife of Prof. W. H. Kendrick, Morgantown; David C., who is in the banking business at Morgantown; and Benjamin, who is prominent in business circles at Morgantown.

Benjamin Garrison was born on the old family homestead in Monongalia County, West Virginia, December 20, 1888, and was educated at Morgantown. He early developed a leaning toward mechanics, and acquired such skill in this field that he built one of the first aeroplanes constructed in this county. For many years he has been identified with the automobile industry, has considerable capital invested, and became one of the incorporators of the Central Automobile Corporation of Morgantown, of which he is a director and service manager, and stands deservedly high in business circles.

Mr. Garrison married Miss Carry Hemsley, who was born in Virginia. He is a member of Morgantown Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar; West Virginia Consistory, thirty-second degree; and Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine. He belongs also to the Odd Fellows and to other social bodies and civic organizations.

CHARLES ELLIOTT CORE. In the agricultural, business and public history of Monongalia County members of the Core family have participated actively since the very beginning of history here. Charles Elliott Core is a well-to-do farmer and business man of Cass District, his home being ten miles west of Morgantown.

His farm here on Scott Run is his birthplace, where he was born February 5, 1865, son of Barton Core, grandson of Christopher Core and great-grandson of the pioneer, Michael Core, who settled on Dolls Run and who was killed by the Indians, his estate being inherited by his oldest son. Christopher, familiarly called Stoffel, located on the farm now owned by Charles Elliott Core, and the deed to that place is over a hundred years old and is carefully kept by Charles E. Core. Christopher Core died in extreme old age. He married Hannah Snyder. All the old buildings on the homestead are now gone. Christopher Core was born May 20, 1770, and died May 20, 1861, while his wife, Hannah Snyder, was born March 5, 1750, and died March 22, 1868. Their children were: John, who left a son, David Clark; Moses, whose sons were David, John, Christopher and Barton, and whose daughter was Drusilla; Michael; and Barton.

Barton Core was also born at the old homestead, November 2, 1820, and spent his life there, buying the interests of the other heirs and extending his investment until he owned about six hundred acres at the head of Scotts Run. He was devoted to his farm and home, never sought a public office, was a republican, and a member of Zoar Baptist Church. The last ten or twelve years of his life he lived retired at Cassville, where he died at the age of eighty-four on September 29, 1905. Barton Core married Nancy Fleming, who was born October 7, 1821, and died in 1912, at the age of ninety-one. They were married December 23, 1841, and had lived together as man and wife nearly sixty-four years. Of their family of eleven children ten reached mature years and seven are still living. The family record in brief is as follows: Martha, wife of Oliver P. Wade, of Maryville, Missouri; Mary Willie, who married James S. Lough and died at the age of seventy-five; Hannah, widow of Corbin H. Alexander, of Topeka, Kansas; Moses Levin, of Morgantown; Christopher Columbus, who died at the age of sixty-eight; William Perry, of Buckhannon, West Virginia; Salina Jane, who died in childhood; Rebecca Arvella, who died in middle life, the wife of William A. Loar; Lydia Elmera, who became the wife of Calvin Cordray, of Monongalia County; Lewis Addison, who was for thirty years a Methodist missionary in India and is president of the Bariletti Theological Seminary; and Charles Elliott Core, youngest of the family.

Charles Elliott Core spent his life on the old farm and owns about four hundred acres, including much of his grandfather's original holdings. He took charge of this farm as a youth, and has been a successful stock and grain farmer. He and his sons recently organized the Core & Conway Coal Company for developing the Waynesburg vein of coal on their farm. The vein has been opened, but at this writing the company has not begun the shipment of coal.

At the age of twenty-two Mr. Core married Laura Price. They were married September 15, 1887. Laura Virginia Price is a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Tennant) Price. Elizabeth Tennant was a daughter of Richard Bland and Rebecca (Tennant) Tennant. George Price was a son of William and Catherine (Brown) Price, while Catherine Brown was a daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Core) Price. This last named, Elizabeth Core, was the only child of Michael Core, a son of the Michael Core who was killed by the Indians, as previously noted.

Mr. and Mrs. Core have a family of seven children: Rebecca, wife of E. D. Conway, of Mannington, West Virginia; Addison Leigh, who lives on part of his father's farm; Earl Fleming, a miner; Barton Dayton, who died at the age of twenty-three, while in the army service at the Pittsburgh arsenal; William McKinley, a miner; and Rose Belle and Jessie Louise, both teachers, and the former a junior and the latter a sophomore in West Virginia University.

Mrs. Core was liberally educated, supplementing her public-school work in the Female Seminary at Morgantown. For seven years she taught school in the county, and her deep interest in education and other affairs has brought her interesting and perhaps unique honors in the state. It is said that she was the first woman to serve on the school examining board. She is now a member of the Board of Education of Cass District, and it is said that she was the first woman ever chosen to an elective office in the state.

His paternal grand parents were William and Lydia (Watson) Reed, the latter attaining the age of ninety-six. The maternal grand parents were Enoch and Elizabeth (Miller) Ross. John Reed was born in Monongalia County in 1822, and died on his farm in Union District in 1903, at the age of eighty-one, having devoted all his active years to his farm and to the discharge of his duties as a good citizen. His wife, Harriet Ross, now living at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, in her ninety-eighth year, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, but was brought as an infant to Monongalia County. They were active members of the Methodist Protestant and Church of the Brethren, respectively. To their marriage were born ten children: Ross E., a resident of Monongalia County; Josephine, who died in infancy; James Quinter, who died in August, 1917; Newton, who died as a child; Omizine W., of Uniontown, Pennsylvania; Belle Olive, wife of James P. Brand of Salem, West Virginia; Miller W.; Idella, whose first husband was Elliot Stewart, and she is now the widow of Jefferson Wallis, of Uniontown; Boud, who died at the age of twenty-one; and H. Clara, the wife of John G. Gibbs, of Uniontown.

Miller Watson Reed grew up on the home farm and had a common-school education. When he left home at the age of twenty-one he learned the trade of carpenter, started as a journeyman, and in 1896 located in Morgantown, and has since performed an important service and done a large business as a building contractor. He was one of the organizers of the Athens Lumber Company in 1904, was a director, and since 1905 has been its president. Mr. Reed served one term as a member of the Morgantown City Council, and he is a trustee of the Church of the Brethren.

At Markleysburg, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, Mr. Reed was united in marriage with Miss Susanna Thomas, a native of Fayette County. Three children were born to this union, but all died in infancy.

RUSSELL AUBRAY WILBOURN. What is probably the largest single plant and enterprise devoted to cold storage handling of produce and the manufacture of ice and ice cream in West Virginia, is owned by the R. A. Wilbourn Company, Incorporated, of Morgantown. The president and general manager of this corporation is Russell Aubray Wilbourn, a man of remarkable energy who has been stepping upward from the ranks since early boyhood and has exhibited a wonderful resourcefulness and initiative at every successive stage of his commercial career.

Mr. Wilbourn was born on a farm in Nelson County, Virginia, March 29, 1881. His father, Robert Willis Wilbourn, was a native of the same county and spent his active years in commercial lines. Robert W. Wilbourn married Elizabeth Hill, a native of Nelson County. Her family was an old and wealthy one in Virginia, but its fortunes were wrecked by the Civil war. She died in 1905.

Russell A. Wilbourn was the youngest child of his parents and lived on their farm until he was ten years of age. He acquired only such education as was afforded by the common schools. His commercial instinct was aroused at an early date, and at the age of fourteen he and a brother were partners in a retail grocery business. Thus, though only a little past forty years of age, Mr. Wilbourn has spent fully a quarter of a century in active business life.

He has been a resident of Morgantown since 1901. In the fall of that year he engaged in the retail grocery business, and sold out his store in 1907. He then took up the wholesale produce business, starting on a modest scale and with only such capital as he could individually command. His experience and training enabled him rapidly to reach out for business and develop a growing concern, and in 1913 the R. A. Wilbourn Company was incorporated. At that time the plant was erected, probably the largest and best equipped produce and cold storage, ice and ice cream manufacturing plant in the state. The company buys by car-load lots and employs a number of traveling representatives, who cover the adjacent territory of Monongalia and Preston counties in West Virginia and Greene and Fayette counties in Pennsylvania. The business of this firm is essentially a monument to Mr. Wilbourn's business acumen and the remarkable concentration of his efforts over a period of years.

He is one of Morgantown's popular citizens, a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and of Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Wilbourn married Bess Gregg. She was born in Morgantown, daughter of the late Thomas Gregg and sister of John M. Gregg, banker and county official. Mr. and Mrs. Wilbourn have three children: Robert Gregg, born in 1905, graduated from high school in 1921 and is now attending the University of West Virginia; Margaret, born in 1912; and Russell Aubray, Jr., born in 1918.

WILLIAM HARVEY BRAND, president of the County Farm Bureau of Monongalia County and a former sheriff, has been closely and influentially identified with the agricultural and public interests of this section of West Virginia for many years. He was born in the county, represents one of its old and honored families, and his activities and services have made him a conspicuous figure.

His great-grandfather, John Brand, married Jane McCray, and of the eight children of their union one was James Brand, who was born October 5, 1788. He married Elizabeth Wade, and they became the parents of twelve children.

Edmond Warren Brand, father of William H. Brand, was born at Laurel Point, Grant District, Monongalia County, January 20, 1838. His business was farming, but he also participated in local politics, was deputy sheriff, justice of the peace, and for two terms a member of the County Board. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was a devout Baptist. He died December 25, 1899, and his wife, on September 2, 1910. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Shafer, daughter of Jacob Shafer, of Monongalia County. Their four children were Frank, now deceased; Anna B., wife of S. D. Furman; Ella M., who was married to James W. Scott; and William Harvey.

William Harvey Brand was born on his father's farm at Laurel Point in Grant District, October 23, 1867. His education was attained in the local schools and he had a good training in agricultural pursuits at home. In 1888, at the age of twenty-one, he became a salesman for farming implements, his territory being Monongalia County. In 1897 he was appointed deputy sheriff, filling that office one term. He was elected high sheriff in 1908, and spent one term in that office. Mr. Brand was also elected a member of the County Court for a term of six years, but after two years he resigned in order to give his full attention to his farming interests. A leader in agricultural matters, he was the general choice for the office of president when the County Farm Bureau was organized in 1916, and has since continued in office for five years. He was for four years president of the School Board of Morgantown District. Mr. Brand in 1901 bought and moved to a farm in Union District, but he sold this property in 1911 and acquired his present fine farm in Morgantown District. He is a general farmer and livestock raiser, and thoroughly progressive in all his methods. He is also a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank and the Bank of Morgantown. He and the family are members of the Baptist Church.

June 14, 1893, Mr. Brand married Inez Lough, daughter of Ellery J. Lough. They are the parents of four children: Everett W., born December 19, 1894, married Clara Wilbourn; Dessie, born April 1, 1898, is the wife of Carl Kinnan; Archie Camden, born September 16, 1902, married Bessie Matson; and Willis Delmont, born January 22, 1904, the youngest, is attending Fork Union Military School in Virginia. He is quite an athlete being a regular player on the football, basketball and baseball teams.

AUGUSTUS ALLEN HAMILTON, JR. While he carries about as heavy a burden of practical and technical responsibilities as any mining superintendent in Logan County, Mr. Hamilton is widely known over the southern district of the state for his effective leadership in civic and business lines.

Mr. Hamilton is general superintendent of the Lyburn and Wilburn mines for the Richcreek Coal Company in Logan County. He came to the Logan coal fields from the New River fields on November 1, 1906, and his first active connection here was with the Yuma mines controlled by the Robertson Interests of Shamokin, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hamilton was born on his father's farm at Keslers Cross Lanes in Nicholas County, West Virginia, June 1, 1886, son of Augustus Allen and Ada Ann (Campbell) Hamilton. He was only an infant when his mother died. His father, now seventy-three and living at the old home-stand, is a son of Col. David R. Hamilton, who was a Confederate veteran in the war between the states and a member of an old family of Rockbridge County, Virginia. A. A. Hamilton, Sr., has been a prosperous farmer, has a fine home, and is very much interested in the democratic politics of his section of the state. A. A. Hamilton, Jr., has a brother, John David, who remains at the old home-stand. Mr. Hamilton acquired a good general education in the public schools and the normal at Summersville. His early ambition was to enter the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, and he prepared for the examination, but at that stage his father objected and in consequence he prepared for a business career by taking a commercial course at Charleston in 1904. On leaving college he had a clerical position with the McKell Coal Company on Loup Creek, and then in 1906 came to Logan County for the Yuma Coal and Coke Company as pay roll clerk. He also was book-keeper and assistant superintendent, was promoted to superintendent, and in 1917 became general superintendent for the Lyburn and Wilburn mines.

On August 14, 1910, Mr. Hamilton married Eunice Brooke McComas, daughter of Albert McComas, of Mount Gay, Logan County. Their two children are Edith Ann and John Wallace. Mrs. Hamilton is a Methodist. He is a past master of Aracoma Lodge No. 99, A. F. and A. M., is a member of Logan Chapter No. 41, R. A. M., belongs to Kanawha Commandery, K. T., the West Virginia Consistory of Scottish Rite at Wheeling, and the Shrine at Charleston. He is associated with Frank Martin and Naaman Jackson as the other members of the building committee to erect a Masonic Home in Logan. Mr. Hamilton had an active part in the recent troubles in this coal field due to the invasion of union miners from the North. He is a democrat in politics. As superintendent his relationship with his employees has always been cordial, and the men have the confidence and respect for him based upon the understanding that he recognizes their point of view. Mr. Hamilton is a director of the Bank of Logan.

JOSEPH WALTER THORNBURY, M. D., is a pioneer in the profession of medicine and surgery in the Triadelphia District of Logan County, though he still commands all the vigor of the years of comparative youth. His home is at Man, where he located in 1909. The dozen years since have sufficed to cover practically the entire period of development in this region. He was here before the Chesapeake & Ohio built its railroad line into this section and, naturally, the development of the coal deposits following the coming of the railroad.

Doctor Thornbury was born at Glen Hays on Tug River in Wayne County, West Virginia, August 9, 1881, son of Dr. James Harvey and Nancy Isabel (York) Thornbury. Several of his family were physicians before he entered that profession. His mother is a sister of Dr. L. H. York, of Louisa, Kentucky. She died in 1895, and was a daughter of James D. York. Dr. James Harvey Thornbury was born on Marrowbone Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, and is now in active practice of his profession at Stowe, Logan County, West Virginia. As a young man he taught school, and in 1885 began attending medical lectures in the Cincinnati Eclectic College, and graduated there in 1889. In 1890 he located at Dunslow in Wayne County, and remained there twenty years in the performance of his professional duties, since which time he has looked after his mining practice at Stowe. He did much organization work for the republicans party in Wayne County, and is a member of Vinson Lodge of Masons at Fort Gay. Of the five children born to his marriage four are living: Florence, wife of Dr. Everett Walker, of Wayne; Jane, wife of Dr. B. D. Garrett, of Kenova, Wayne County; Joseph Walter; and Sadie, wife of Samuel Peters, of Kenova.

Joseph Walter Thornbury attended school at Dunslow and was also a student under Professor McClure at Wayne. He attended the State University in 1898, and for two years following was assistant postmaster of Dunslow, and for one year was at Yukon, Oklahoma. Then he spent another year in the postoffice at Dunslow, and also clerked in a store there. With this varied business training and experience he entered the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College in 1903, and graduated in 1907. For one year after graduating he practiced at Kermit in Mingo County, and one year at Genoa in Wayne County. From there he came to Man and has had official relations as mine physician to the Man Mining Company, the Eagle Island Bengal Coal Company at Kesler and a large general practice besides. He was one of the organizers of the Merchants and Miners Bank at Man.

Doctor Thornbury is a leader in his section in behalf of better educational facilities. He served six years on the Triadelphia School Board and a large number of the good modern schools of the district were built during his term, including the District High School at Man.

On July 3, 1907, Doctor Thornbury married Bertha Hegner, daughter of Philip Hegner, of Wyoming, Ohio. The five children born to their marriage are James H., Jr., Frances Virginia, Lawrence, John and Nancy Isabel. Dr. Thornbury is a member of the Baptist Church. Fraternal he is affiliated with Aracoma Lodge No. 99, F. and A. M., at Logan, Logan Chapter, R. A. M., Dunslow Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in politics he is a republican.

FRED V. COOPER has proved his business progressiveness and efficiency in his effective service as cashier of the Bank of Athens at Athens, Mercer County and is one of the popular and representative young business men of his native county. He was born at Bluefield, Mercer County, on the 17th of July, 1895, and is a son of Elijah F. and Irene E. (Vermillion) Cooper, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of West Virginia. The father was long a successful contractor and builder and is now a resident of Beckley, Raleigh County. The Vermillion family was founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history and numerous representatives of the same have been successful physicians and surgeons.

Mr. Cooper gained his early education in the public schools at Athens, where he thereafter continued his studies in the Concord State Normal School, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1915. He then entered the University of West Virginia, but after pursuing a course in electrical engineering for one year impaired health compelled him to leave the university. Upon recovering his physical health he became, in 1917, assistant cashier of the Bank of Athens, and in 1919 he was advanced to his present executive office, that of cashier of this substantial and well ordered institution. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, is a member of the Mercer County Country Club, through the medium of which he finds opportunity for indulgence in his favorite recreation, that of lawn tennis, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1917, at Athens, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Cooper and Miss Pearl Preston, whose father, S. V. Preston, is now a successful coal operator at Harland, Kentucky. The attractive home of Mr. and Mrs. Cooper is brightened by the presence of their two children, Irene E. and Harry Fred.

CHARLES M. SCOTT, M. D., began practice at Bluefield twenty years ago. During the last ten years his time and skill have been predominantly devoted to surgery. His rank as a surgeon is among the best in the entire state.

Doctor Scott was born at Graham, Tazewell County, Virginia, October 3, 1878, son of James and Nannie (Hale) Scott, being their only child. His parents were natives of Virginia and his father was a farmer. The grandfather, Matthew Scott, was a jeweler and gunsmith, and repaired guns for the Confederate army during the Civil war.

Charles M. Scott acquired a common school education, attended Princeton Academy, the University of West Virginia at Morgantown and Richmond College at Richmond, Virginia. In 1897 he entered the University College of Medicine at Richmond, from which he graduated M. D. in 1901. The following year he began practice at Bluefield, where he is handling a general practice, but every year he did special work in surgery and other post graduate courses in the New York Polyclinic, and in 1910 began specializing in surgery, which now comprises eighty per cent of his professional work. In the line of his profession Doctor Scott gave Bluefield a modern institution in St. Luke's Hospital, which he built and established in 1905, with accommodations for fifty patients and with every type of modern hospital equipment. Doctor Scott is a busy professional man, has reached a position of ripe achievement, is kindly and generous and one of Bluefield's most useful citizens. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons. Doctor Scott is a Baptist, a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club and Bluefield Country Club, and is an Elk.

November 10, 1912, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, he married Miss Hazel Morton, daughter of Dr. W. W. and Edith (Hill) Morton. They have two children, Helen and Charles Scott.

WILLIAM JOHN BRADDOCK is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Wheeling Bronze Casting Company, a well ordered concern that contributes its quota to the industrial and commercial precedence of the West Virginia metropolis. He is one of the representative young business men of his native city his birth having occurred in Wheeling on the 17th of April, 1882. Mr. Braddock is a son of John and Ellen (McGrail) Braddock, the former of whom was born at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in 1859, and the latter was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, in that same year, she being still a resident of her native city, where her husband died in the year 1891. John Braddock was reared and educated in the old Keystone State, where the family was founded in an early day, and he was a young man when he came to West Virginia and engaged in the work of his trade, that of iron-moulder, at Wheeling. Here he passed the remainder of his life, an upright and loyal citizen who commanded unqualified popular esteem. He was a democrat in politics and was a communicant of the Catholic Church, as is also his widow. Of the two children, William J., of this review, is the elder, and Mary is the wife of Haven Robb, of Wheeling.

The early education of William J. Braddock was obtained in the parochial schools of St. Mary's Church, in the Eighth Ward of Wheeling, and at the age of fourteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship to the moulder's trade at the Riverside Mills, Benwood, Marshall County, an establishment now owned and operated by the National Tube Company. Here he continued to be employed eight years, and in the meanwhile he became an expert artisan at his trade.

In 1904 Mr. Braddock established a modest brass foundry of his own at 205 Twenty-ninth Street, Wheeling, and after continuing the enterprise in an individual way until 1917 he incorporated the business under the present title of the Wheeling Bronze Casting Company. The business has become one of substantial order, and in the autumn of 1921 it was removed from its original location to the fine new plant erected for its use at the corner of Thirty-sixth and McCulloch streets. Here is occupied a modern industrial building that was erected by the company and that is 200 by 100 feet in dimensions. The company gives special attention to the rolling of bronze rods for non-corrosive use, and its products are shipped into most diverse sections of the Union. The executive officers of this progressive corporation are as follows: President, J. W. Milard, of Martins Ferry, Ohio; secretary and treasurer, William J. Braddock.

Mr. Braddock takes lively interest in all that concerns the welfare of his native city, is independent in politics, is affiliated with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church.

In the World War period the plant of the Wheeling Bronze Casting Company was given over largely to the manufacturing of special parts for use in the equipping of submarine chasers, in the service of the International Ship Building Company and for the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, and Mr. Braddock himself gave loyal support to the various patriotic activities centered in his home city and state.

On April 6, 1904, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Braddock and Miss Virginia Baumann, daughter of John and Lizzetta (Steusel) Baumann, of Wheeling, where the father is a retired dairyman. Mr. and Mrs. Braddock have three children: Lizzetta, who was born in 1905, and who is now a student in Mount de Chantal Academy at Wheeling; John, who was born in 1907, and who is, in 1921, attending the Columbia Commercial College at Wheeling; and William, who was born in 1915. The family home is the attractive and modern residence property owned by Mr. Braddock at 212 Pierce Street.

WILLIAM J. COLE has standardized, systematized and put on a commercial basis one of the oldest arts known to mankind, that of baking bread, and in the Bluefield Bakery, of which he is proprietor, has one of the largest plants of its kind in West Virginia, capable of producing the staff of life for many thousands of people every day.

Mr. Cole was born at Marion in Smith County, Virginia, November 12, 1883, son of L. C. and Elizabeth (Wolf) Cole. The Coles have been in Virginia for a number of generations. His grandfather, William Cole, was a Confederate soldier in the Civil War.

William J. Cole acquired a common school education at Marion and Graham in his native state, and at the age of seventeen began learning the baker's trade with the Virginia Confectionery Company at Graham. He remained there two years, and then entered the mercantile business for himself. He conducted this business successfully for about nine years, finally selling out in 1911.

In was in 1912 that Mr. Cole bought the Bluefield Bakery, and since then has given his entire time and attention to developing the plant and business. He has installed automatic machinery throughout, and the plant now has a capacity of producing 3,000 loaves of bread per hour or 48,000 in a full day's run. The Bluefield Bakery was originally started in 1900 by M. Stean, who was succeeded by Captain Barger and from him Mr. Cole bought the business.

Mr. Cole married in 1905, at Graham, Virginia, Miss

Mary Holbrook, daughter of John and Marie Holbrook, natives of Virginia. Her father was one of the leading merchants and citizens of Graham. Mr. and Mrs. Cole had six children, William Paul, Elizabeth, Holbrook, Carlyle, Kenneth and William J., Jr. William J., Jr., died in 1920. Mr. Cole and family are members of the Lutheran Church. He is a Knight Templar and Royal Arch Mason and Shriner, a member of the United Commercial Travelers, the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club and the Bluefield Country Club. He has been in business and earning his own way since he was seventeen, and all his prosperity has been gained by hard work and close adherence to the fundamental principles of sound business.

THURMAN ELMROY VASS, M. D. A highly accomplished physician and surgeon at Bluefield, Doctor Vass enjoys a secure prestige in his profession. He possesses the personality and the ability that inspire confidence, and in addition to the good work he has done at Bluefield he has a record as a medical officer with the army, having served in home camps and abroad nearly two years.

Doctor Vass was born in Summers County, West Virginia, January 27, 1889, son of Philip Edward and Eliza (Green) Vass. His parents were born in Monroe County, West Virginia, and his father was a contractor and builder who did a great deal of construction work in McDowell and Mercer counties and, in fact, all through the southern part of the state.

Doctor Vass attended the graded schools of McDowell County, graduated in the academic course from the Concord Normal School in January, 1909, and for three years was in West Virginia University, the first year in the preparatory medical course and two years in the regular course. From there he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he graduated M. D. in 1914. Doctor Vass practiced the first year at Princeton and then moved to Bluefield, where he was well established before the war came on. He is now a member of the staff and assistant surgeon of St. Luke's Hospital.

Almost as soon as America declared war against Germany he enlisted and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps. He spent five weeks in the Medical Officers' Training School at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, was then assigned to duty at General Hospital No. 14 at Fort Oglethorpe, a month later was sent to the Base Hospital at Camp Travis, Texas, remaining there three weeks, then one month at General Hospital No. 1 at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, and for three weeks was at Base Hospital at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Alabama. Ordered for duty overseas, he spent six days at Camp Mills, New York, and October 7, 1918, sailed from Hoboken, landing at Liverpool, October 19th, crossed England and the Channel to La Havre, and was assigned to Rimaucourt Base Hospital Center, where he remained until January 5, 1919. From that date until January 25, 1919, he was at Base Hospital No. 13 at Limoges, and was then sent to Melun to join the Third Ordnance Battalion as medical officer. February 8th this detachment moved up to San Loubes and thence to Geni Court, and from there to Bassen docks, where the command sailed for home, reaching port March 5, 1919, and proceeding to Camp Merritt. From there Captain Vass went to Camp Dix, where he received his honorable discharge May 9, 1919, and then returned to Bluefield and resumed his private practice after an absence of practically two years.

While still doing duty in France Doctor Vass was apprised of the death of his wife. He had married Miss Nena Beatrice Sell, of Charleston, West Virginia, in February, 1918, and she died a little more than a year later, on March 9, 1919. She was a daughter of L. A. Sell. Doctor Vass is a member of the Episcopal Church, a Royal Arch and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner at Alzarfa of San Antonio, Texas, a member of the County, State and American Medical associations, and belongs to the American Legion and Kiwanis Club. While in college he was pitcher in the baseball team, and retains an active interest in all outdoor sports.

DUDLEY IRVING SMITH, of Huntington, has been a resident of Cabell County from the time of his birth and is now one of the more venerable native sons residing in the vital county seat city, whose inception and upbuilding have been matters of familiarity to him. He was born at Guyandotte, now a part of the City of Huntington, on the 29th of October, 1845, and is a son of Dudley D. Smith, who was born on a farm near Lowell, Washington County, Ohio, and who received excellent educational training for his day. He taught school in Ohio when a young man and finally, in company with P. S. Smith, came to what is now Cabell County, West Virginia, and the two established themselves in the general merchandise business in the Village of Guyandotte. Within a short time thereafter Dudley D. Smith married Eleanor Miller, of Lawrence County, Ohio. A man of superior intellectuality and sterling character, he became an honored and influential figure in the community, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Church. He was a staunch Union man during the Civil war, and his freely expressed views led to his becoming disliked in the community, which was strongly Confederate in sentiment, with the result that he found it expedient to return to Ohio, where he found more congenial surroundings. Later he returned to Guyandotte, and he was one of the few Union sympathizers not taken captive in the town when it was invaded by a band of Confederate soldiers, who later evacuated the place, when its capture by Union forces seemed imminent. The occupation by Union soldiers led to the burning of thirty-five houses at Guyandotte, and in this both Union and Confederate sympathizers suffered alike, the action having been taken, doubtless, more in reprisal than as a "military necessity" for which claim was made. Mr. Smith and his wife continued their residence in Cabell County until their deaths, and of their eight children only two are now living.

Dudley I. Smith, the third child, was attending what is now Marshall College, when the unsettled conditions incident to the Civil war caused him to go to Washington County, Ohio, where he followed farm work in the summer season and attended school during the winter. After a year he returned to the parental home, his father having at the time been conducting a small general store at Proctorville, Ohio. After a year or more of work on farms and in a brick yard Mr. Smith took a course in a business college at Cincinnati, Ohio, and thereafter he clerked a few months in a store at Gallipolis, that state. He next became clerk on a steamboat plying the Upper Ohio River, and thereafter he built and operated a wharf boat at Guyandotte, West Virginia. About a year later he sold this business and became associated with his father in mercantile pursuits at Guyandotte.

In 1870, as a democrat, Mr. Smith was elected sheriff of Cabell County, and after he had served two years of his four-year term a new election was called, by legislative enactment, and he was again elected for a full term of four years. He thus served six years, and it was within this period that the Younger-James band of desperadoes robbed the Bank of Huntington. After a strenuous pursuit one of the robbers, Budd McDaniels, was killed, one, Clod Miller, captured, and the remaining two, Cole Younger and Frank James, escaped.

When the new Town of Huntington was founded its rapid growth attracted to the community all sorts of people, and as sheriff of the county Mr. Smith found ample call upon his attention in the suppression of lawlessness and crime. In the meanwhile he had retained his interest in the store at Guyandotte, and had also engaged in the buying and selling of land. After retiring from the office of sheriff he turned his attention especially to the real estate business, and of this line of enterprise he has continued a representative to the present time. In 1902 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, and by successive re-elections he retained this position eighteen years, during the greater part of which he was president of the board. Upon the organization of the First National Bank of Huntington, Mr. Smith became one of its stockholders and directors, and for many years past he has been vice president of this substantial institution. He is a Royal Arch Mason and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1870 Mr. Smith wedded Miss Hannah C. Miller, and they have three children: Mayme C. (widow of Dr. A. T. Cherry), George Colford and Dudley Irvin.

ELBERT F. PETERS, M. D. Considering the energy and initiative displayed by Doctor Peters it is probable he would have made a success of any vocation, yet his gifts led him naturally into medicine and surgery, and in this line his service has had a growing scope of benefit and usefulness throughout the southern section of the state.

Doctor Peters, whose home is at Princeton, Mercer County, was born at Dunns Post Office in Summers County, West Virginia, January 10, 1878, son of Joseph and Mary Alice (Ellison) Peters. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, his father born in Virginia and his mother in West Virginia. Joseph Peters was a farmer, a teacher in his early life, and always kept in touch with educational affairs and public matters in general. He knew Mercer County and the Mercer County people thoroughly, and when the county was revalued he was made assessor for the assessment of all property, coal and timber lands in the county.

Elbert F. Peters acquired a common school education, attended the Normal college at Athens, and following that taught school four years. He took up the study of medicine in the Maryland Medical College of Baltimore, graduating M. D. in 1902. Doctor Peters throughout his professional career has done a great deal of industrial practice. His first practice was in McDowell County as physician and surgeon for the Pocahontas Consolidated Collieries Corporation, now the Pocahontas Fuel Company. He is still physician and surgeon for this corporation, and supervises the medical and surgical service for five large coal operations. He maintains a main office at Maybrey in McDowell County, where he has complete operating room and four beds for emergency cases. There is a branch office at Switchback, where he has an assistant.

His natural qualifications and the early success he achieved in his practice did not tend to quiet Doctor Peters' aggressive ambitions for the highest possible attainment in his chosen career. He has associated with many of the greatest men in surgery, and has kept in touch with the advancement of the science in various schools. He attended the New York Polytechnic in 1906, in 1908 spent six months at the University of Maryland at Baltimore, pursuing a general course in medicine and surgery; spent several weeks in the Northwestern University at Chicago in 1911, six weeks in 1912 at the New York Post Graduate School and Hospital, three months in 1916 in the same school, and during the World war he volunteered for active service, and while not called out, he has his certificate as a volunteer.

Doctor Peters was from September, 1918, to December, 1921, a member of the Memorial Hospital Corporation of Princeton, West Virginia. This is a private hospital formerly owned by Dr. C. C. Peters, Dr. G. L. Todd and Dr. E. F. Peters. Doctor Peters was one of the principal figures in the organization of this hospital and an active member of the hospital staff.

In 1899 Doctor Peters married at Camp Creek, Mercer County, Miss Rose Elizabeth Shrewsbury, daughter of L. C. and Nancy (Rose) Shrewsbury, the former a native of West Virginia and the latter of North Carolina. Doctor and Mrs. Peters have five children, named Bernard Purcell, Nellie French, Gladys Mae, Joseph Ellwood and Rose Rowena. Doctor and Mrs. Peters are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a member of the McDowell County, West Virginia State, American Medical and Southern Medical Associations, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, an Elk and Knight of Pythias, and is a charter member of the Princeton Country Club. The recreations and interests that refresh and take his mind from his daily duties are hunting, fishing and motor ing.

HOMER WISEMAN is one of the younger business men of Charleston, but enjoys that substantial element of success due to associations in an executive capacity with one of the most substantial of the city's industries, the West Virginia Brick Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer.

The West Virginia Brick Company is a local industry of some years' standing. Through the special quality of its product "Charleston Brick" has a reputation among building engineers as being one of the highest grade fire brick manufactured anywhere. It has proved superior to the usual product, as shown by the most rigid tests. This brick fuses only at the exceedingly high temperature of 3146 degrees. It is made from a superior clay which the company mines on its own property. The plain brick is used mostly for boiler room construction. The pressed face brick has a widely distributed sale in many cities, chiefly New York, and many architects give it first choice for exterior brick in the most beautiful modern structures.

Mr. Wiseman was born at Elliott in Fayette County, West Virginia, in 1887, son of Benjamin F. and Elizabeth (Crist) Wiseman, natives of this state. He grew up in Fayette County, attended public schools there, and when past the age of fifteen he came to Charleston and attended business college. For some five or six years he was in the employ of the firm Crawford & Ashby and with the South Charleston Land Company.

Mr. Wiseman in 1912 went into the brick manufacturing business as a member of the West Virginia Clay Products Company, which had been founded in 1910 and which has since become the West Virginia Brick Company. As secretary and treasurer he is also active head of the company, since the president of the corporation lives at Louisville. The West Virginia Brick Company has a modern plant adjacent to Charleston, at Elk Two Mile, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Mr. Wiseman has devoted his best efforts to the building up of this essential industry, and his part therein is a record of which many ambitious business men might well be proud. He is a member of the Charleston Kiwanis Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Wiseman married Miss Elizabeth Crookshanks, also a native of Fayette County. Their two children are Homer Clyde and Claude Franklin.

DAVID H. THORNTON, M. D. Engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Mercer County for nearly thirty years, and for twenty years at that time a specialist in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases, Doctor Thornton has in addition to his character as a high minded and proficient doctor exerted a helpful influence in community affairs and particularly in behalf of the simplicity of original Christianity and the application of the Bible to the common life and affairs of mankind.

Doctor Thornton was born in Mercer County, June 30, 1865, is of English and Irish descent and of Virginia stock, both his parents, William M. and Eliza J. (Hatcher) Thornton, being natives of Virginia. His father was a farmer, served as a soldier in the Civil war with a Virginia regiment under Colonel French, and was all through the fighting to the end. In the battle of Clark, near Princeton, he was wounded in the arm, but recovered and rejoined his command. After the war he returned to his farm, and lived there, manifesting a commendable interest in public affairs, and was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church, but before his death became attracted to the study of the Bible with his son, Doctor Thornton.

David H. Thornton acquired a common school education, attended the State Normal at Athens, and, leaving there, went to Janesville, Wisconsin, to the Valentine School of Telegraphy. After mastering the technique of the telegraph key he entered the service of the Norfolk & Western Railway as clerk of the Clinch Valley Division while it was under construction. Doctor Thornton was a railroad man for three years, and following that bought a store from his brother at Elgood and was in the general mercantile business two years. He sold out and used his capital to prepare himself for the profession of medicine.

In 1893 he graduated M. D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and began practice at Athens, where he remained twenty years, and since then has had his home and professional headquarters at Princeton. Doctor Thornton began specializing in 1902 in the eye, ear, nose and throat, taking in that year a post-graduate course at the Chicago Post-Graduate School and also a private course on the ear under Albert Andrews and on the eye under R. S. Pattillo. In 1912 he did other work along his special lines in the New York Post Graduate School and Hospital; and for a number of years his practice has been limited to his specialties.

In 1889, at Graham, Virginia, Doctor Thornton married Mary Jennings, daughter of William H. and Isabel (Shanklin) Jennings, natives of West Virginia. Doctor and Mrs. Thornton had six children: Chauncey Bryan, Eunice Janetta, Mabel Clara, Paul Benson, Joseph Harry and David Jennings. Two of them are now deceased, Eunice and Joseph H. The daughter Mabel is the wife of C. J. Moore, an employe in the general office of the Norfolk & West Virginia Railway. The son Chauncey, who is an electrician with the Appalachian Power Company at Bluefield, married Hattie Meadow, daughter of Attorney J. H. Meadow. His son David is an electrician in the navy on the battleship destroyer Davis No. 65.

Doctor Thornton many years ago was attracted to the independent religious movement of Pastor Russell, and has been an enthusiastic member of the International Bible Students Association and for several years has conducted a class for the study of the Bible, which is outside of all denomination and free from creeds, concentrating upon the essential teachings as presented by Christ and his followers. Some years ago, before the World war, in prosecution of his study of the Bible and his interest in Old World affairs, Doctor Thornton and his brother J. T. of Bluefield made a long and interesting trip abroad through Asia, Africa, the Holy Land, Germany, Italy and France.

Doctor Thornton is a member of the Business Men's Club at Princeton, belongs to the County and State Medical Society, is a Fellow of the American Medical Association, and was formerly active in Masonry, being a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner. He served as master of his Lodge and as high priest of his Chapter.

FRANK ROACHE SROGGINS, proprietor of the White Swan Laundry in the City of Wheeling, is one of the progressive and successful business men of his native city, his birth having occurred in Wheeling on the 17th of January, 1868. His father, George Washington Sroggins, was born at Wheeling in 1843 and here passed his entire life, his death having occurred in 1896. George W. Sroggins initiated his productive career by serving as a water boy around the local boat yards, and in the Civil war period he aided in the manufacturing of bullets. He became an expert stationary engineer, and served sixteen years as engineer of the city waterworks of Wheeling, of which position he was the incumbent at the time of his death. In his young manhood he was a member of the volunteer fire department of his native city. He was a democrat in politics and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as were both his first and second wives. Mr. Sroggins first wedded Caroline Nidick, who was born at Trail Run, Monroe County, Ohio, and whose death occurred in 1873. Of the children of this union the eldest is William J., foreman in his brother's White Swan Laundry; Allen C. likewise remains in Wheeling, and is steward for the local Theatrical Club and for the Fraternal Order of Eagles; Frank R., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Charles Scott is a foreman in the White Swan Laundry. For his second wife the father married Lovenia Loveage, and she now resides at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Daisy, first child of this second marriage, died at the age of twenty-eight years; George is a resident of the City of Pittsburgh, where he is engaged in the trucking business; and Reed B. is a stationary engineer in the city waterworks of Pittsburgh.

The public school of Wheeling afforded Frank R. Sroggins his early education, and he was but eleven years old when he found employment in a local glass factory. After the passing of five years he began an apprenticeship to the trade of machinist, and his service in this connection continued from the time he was sixteen until he was twenty years of age. From 1888 to 1891 he was stationary engineer in the employ of Lutz Brothers, and for sixteen months thereafter was in charge of the washing department and also served as engineer of the Troy Laundry. From 1892 to 1895 he was general manager of the Wheeling Laundry, and he then established the White Swan Laundry, of which he has continued the executive head during the intervening period of more than a quarter of a century and which he has kept at the highest standard in equipment and service. The offices of this popular laundry are at the corner of Ninth and Market streets. Mr. Scroggins started his independent laundry business on a modest scale, in a basement at his present location, and his original corps of employees consisted of one man and one woman. He has built up one of the leading enterprises of this kind in the state, the mechanical equipment and all accessories of the White Swan Laundry being of the most modern type and the establishment giving employment to seventy persons. On the National Turnpike, in the Tenth Ward of Wheeling, Mr. Scroggins purchased a fine lot, 140 by 330 feet in dimensions, on which he erected a modern laundry building 100 by 200 feet in dimensions, the only building in existence, so far as is known of that dimension, whose interior is not supported by a single post. It is a one-story and basement structure, with a separate building for the power plant. Here he will have one of the most complete and modern laundry plants in West Virginia, in fact one of the show houses in modern laundry construction in this country, and in connection with the general laundry business he will establish an up-to-date dry-cleaning and rug-cleaning department. His success has been well earned, as he started in business with a capital of only $212, has been progressive and energetic, has ordered his business with utmost integrity and fairness, and has developed an enterprise in 1920 represented gross earnings of $150,000. His new laundry plant represents an investment of an amount equal to this.

Mr. Scroggins is independent in politics, is affiliated with the Royal Arcanum, and is one of the loyal and vigorous members of the local Rotary Club, in which he is chairman of the boys' work committee and takes lively interest in its work. The family home is an attractive modern house at 757 Market Street.

Mr. Scroggins was zealous in the local patriotic activities during the World war period, aided in the campaigns in support of Government loans, Red Cross service, etc., and supplied to the United States Navy a valuable set of binoculars, which were eventually returned to him, together with $1.00 and a certificate as reward of merit from the Navy Department. It is needless to say that he prizes both the certificate and also the binoculars, the latter of which were in active use in the navy.

Although Mr. Scroggins left school when a mere boy, is alert mind and his appreciative instinct have enabled him through reading and study at home, which he still continues, and through other effective self-discipline, to round out a symmetrical education of practical order. His paternal grandfather, John Peyton Scroggins, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was one of the pioneers of Wheeling, where he served a long period as bank messenger and where he died occurred, he having been a native of Ireland.

In 1889 Frank R. Scroggins wedded Miss Catherine E. Neimer, daughter of the late Philip and Margaret Neimer, of Wheeling. Mr. Neimer was a seaman in the local sheet-iron mills, in which he met his death in an accident. Mr. and Mrs. Scroggins' only child, Franklin Pierce, died at the age of 4½ years.

JAMES ROBERT LAIRD. In a business way James Robert Laird is widely known both in West Virginia and old Virginia through his active associations as an organizer and executive in some very successful and financial organizations. Business responsibilities have accumulated rapidly for Mr. Laird during the last fifteen years of his life, while the period before that was evidently one of intensive training and preparation for these duties. He is also conspicuous as a lay member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Mr. Laird was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, June 21, 1879, son of Samuel H. and Rachel (Witten) Laird, natives of Virginia, where his father was a farmer and school teacher, and identified with the educational affairs of Tazewell County for many years.

James Robert Laird was reared in a home of modest comforts and had to make practical use of his talents before he finished his education. He left high school in 1896, and then took up the general insurance business at Tazewell, a business line he followed for several years. It was in 1911 that he began widening his scope of efforts, in which year, in addition to his insurance work, he established a mortgage loan and real estate agency at Bluefield, West Virginia, and an automobile sales agency at Tazewell, Virginia, each of these concerns requiring separate offices. Mr. Laird is a prominent factor in the automobile business, having established the Tazewell Motor Company and several other motor sales companies and wholesale gas companies, and is vice president of all these growing and prospering concerns.

Mr. Laird has been a resident of Bluefield since 1911, in which year he organized the Virginia Realty Loan Company of which he is president. He is also president of the Federal Lumber Company of North Tazewell, Virginia, and has recently organized and become the first president of the Bluefield Trust Company.

In 1901, at Tazewell, Mr. Laird married Miss Eva St. Clair Tynes, daughter of Maj. A. J. and Harriett (Fudge) Tynes, natives of Virginia. Major Tynes established the first woolen mill in Tazewell County, about 1865. He was an officer in the Confederate Army during the Civil war, his regiment being commanded by General McCausland. Mr. and Mrs. Laird have four children: Houston T., a student in Washington and Lee University; Mary and Frances, twins; and James Robert, Jr.

Mr. Laird is a member of the Masonic Lodge, Chamber of Commerce, Bluefield Country Club and the Old Colony Club. One of the causes nearest to his heart is the Mission Schools for the mountain boys and girls, and he has given liberally not only of his money but his time to this great work of education. As a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he had the honor of being elected on the first ballot as delegate for the General Conference of the Church held at Hot Springs. This was the quadrennial conference in which is formulated the general policy of the business side of the church and its laws and rules governing the churches, and the election of Mr. Laird as a lay delegate is an honor that comes to but few men in a lifetime.

WADE HAMPTON ST. CLAIR, M. D., has from the first been the associate organizer and founder with Dr. John F. Fox in the Bluefield Sanitarium, one of the best institutions of the kind in the state. These very capable physicians and surgeons have kept adding to the facilities of the Sanitarium from time to time until it now represents a large and complete modern hospital, and its clinics are attended as part of the professional training routine by an increasing number of physicians and surgeons from this and adjoining states.

Doctor St. Clair was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, April 18, 1877, son of Alexander and Maria (Tiffany) St. Clair. He is of Scotch and Irish ancestry, and his people have been in America for a number of generations. His parents were both born in Virginia, and his father at the age of eighteen enlisted in the Confederate Army and served with a Virginia regiment two years. After the war he followed farming and planting, was a banker, and a man of great influence in Tazewell County.

Wade Hampton St. Clair attended the common and high schools of Tazewell County and completed his literary education in Randolph-Macon Academy at Bedford City and in Emory-Henry College at Emory, Virginia. He took his preliminary medical course in the University of Virginia.

graduating M. D. in 1900. For about two years following he was in New York City as an interne, specializing in surgery at the New York Polyclinic Hospital. Following that he located at Bluefield and entered general practice, soon becoming associated with Doctor Fox in the building of the original Bluefield Sanitarium. In September, 1921, the Bluefield Sanitarium was incorporated with a capital of $200,000. Doctor St. Clair is known for his great thoroughness and skill as a surgeon, and while he has been steadily engaged in practice for twenty years he has never lost contact with the progressive ideas and methods being worked out in the great medical centers of the world. Each year he has attended some clinics or professional course in such cities as New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and the Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota. Doctor St. Clair has a personality that supplements his professional skill. He is a wholesome, genial gentleman, and his fine character has been a distinct asset to the sanitarium and to the community of Bluefield.

Doctor St. Clair is a member of the County and State Medical Societies of Virginia and West Virginia, the American Medical Association, and the American College of Surgeons. At Bluefield he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club and Country Club.

At Peterborough, Ontario, Canada, in 1906, Doctor St. Clair married Elizabeth Armstrong, daughter of George W. and Bell (Boyd) Armstrong. They have two children, Wade H., Jr., and Alexander Armstrong St. Clair.

ALEXANDER ST. CLAIR. Though his home was always over the state line in Tazewell County, Alexander St. Clair was associated in many of his interests with the industrial district of which Bluefield is one of the most prominent centers. Bluefield is also the home of his sons Drs. Wade H. and Charles T. St. Clair.

Alexander St. Clair was born at Jeffersonville, now Tazewell Court House, April 15, 1845, son of Alexander and Martha (Tabler) St. Clair. His father died while the Civil war was in progress and the mother survived him over thirty years. Alexander St. Clair found his work within a close radius of his birthplace, and for many years was one of the prominent farmers and cattlemen of Southwestern Virginia, and practically always had some active interests in merchandising, banking and other affairs. He was one of the organizers of the Bank of Clinch Valley at Tazewell, served as president of the institution, was connected with the First National Bank of Pochontas, and at one time he owned the land on which the town of Pochontas was built.

Alexander St. Clair was a boy when the war came on, but he served during the last two years of the Confederate Army as a member of Company I, Forty-fifth Virginia Cavalry, under Colonel Graham, whose son, W. R. Graham, is now a resident of Bluefield. Mr. St. Clair left his studies at Roanoke College to join the army at the age of eighteen, and finished his education in that institution before taking up his business career. Mr. St. Clair was a consistent member of the Methodist Church and was affiliated with the Masonic Order.

September 26, 1871, he married Miss Maria J. Tiffany. They were married at the old Tiffany homestead on Bluestone in Tazewell County, and they lived there until about fifteen years ago, when they moved to a handsome home on the edge of Tazewell Court House. Here on September 26, 1921, they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, and it was less than a month later that a wide circle of friends and business associates who had learned to esteem Alexander St. Clair as a safe business guide and adviser felt an intimate personal loss in his death, which occurred October 21, 1921. Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair were the parents of eleven children, two of whom, Rosalinda and Janie, died in childhood. The nine who with their widowed mother survive are: Drs. Charles T. and Wade H. St. Clair, of Bluefield; John, Frank and Alexander, of Bluestone; Glen M. and Roy, of Tazewell; Otis, of Welch; and Miss Maria, of Tazewell.

JAMES LEWIS CALDWELL. The First National Bank of Huntington is the largest bank in point of resources in the State of West Virginia. It was organized in 1884, the leading spirit in its organization being James Lewis Caldwell, who at that time was in the lumber business at Guyandotte, a suburb of Huntington. Mr. Caldwell was the first and has been the only president of this institution, and men in touch with its affairs are free to say that its great and solid prosperity is due in no small measure to the effective guidance and oversight of its honored president.

Its officers and directors comprise a number of the best known men in the commercial and professional life of Huntington. The vice presidents are R. L. Archer, D. I. Smith and L. V. Guthrie and the cashier is G. D. Miller. The First National Bank of Huntington has a capital stock of $1,000,000, surplus and profits of $600,000, deposits aggregating $5,500,000, and the total resources are over $8,000,000. It is a great financial institution, and appropriately enough it is housed in the largest and finest business building in Huntington, a modern brick and terra cotta twelve story building, the lower floor devoted entirely to the bank and the upper floors to offices.

James Lewis Caldwell is one of the most youthful of the surviving veterans of the Civil war, and his career since the war has been closely identified with the State of West Virginia. He was born at Elizabeth, in what is now Wirt County, West Virginia, May 20, 1846. His father, John T. Caldwell, was a native of Steubenville, Ohio, spent his early life in Kentucky, and was a life-long farmer. A few years before his death he retired to Parkersburg and lived with his son Charles T. in that city, where he died at the age of seventy-five. He began voting as a whig, later became a republican and was a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, whom he married at Letart, Meigs County, Ohio, was Regina M. Burns, a native of that community, and she died there at the birth of her youngest child, at the age of forty-five. Her children were: William B., who helped operate the home farm and was a merchant at Letart, where he died at the age of seventy; Alfred B., who also assisted in conducting the homestead and died at Letart at the age of sixty. George H., who was superintendent of the Dingess-Run Coal Company and died in Logan County, West Virginia, aged sixty-five; James Lewis; and Charles T., an attorney who died at Parkersburg in 1912.

James Lewis Caldwell was educated in the rural schools of Meigs County, Ohio, receiving the equivalent of a high school education. In the closing months of 1862, before he was seventeen years of age, he enlisted in Company F of the Sixtieth Ohio Infantry, and thereafter served until the rebellion was put down. He was in General Grant's army, participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, at the mine explosion in front of Petersburg, and thereafter was with the troops on Grant's right wing through the engagements at Weldon Railroad and minor battles until Appomattox.

Following the war Mr. Caldwell for a year and a half represented the Peabody Insurance Company of Wheeling, traveling over the state establishing agencies and paying claims. He then established his business headquarters at Guyandotte, now included in the City of Huntington, and for eighteen years conducted a prosperous lumber business. His home has been in Huntington since 1887, removing here three years after the establishment of the First National Bank.

Banking has been only one of Mr. Caldwell's varied enterprises in the business field. In 1892 he organized the Huntington Electric Light and Street Railway Company and built that pioneer electric railway line, but sold it soon after it was put in operation. He organized and built the Guyandotte Valley Railway, now a branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio system. He was president and is still a director of the Consolidated Light & Railway Company at Republican, Illinois. He is president of the Dingess-Run Coal Company, which owns 30,000 acres of coal lands, with twenty active mines. He is secretary and treasurer of the Logan Cannel Coal Company, is secretary and treasurer of the Warehouse Land Company, and is a director and member of the executive committee of the Huntington Land Company, which owns a large number of vacant properties in the city, acquired from the estate of the late Collis P. Huntington for $350,000.

Mr. Caldwell has been one of the standard bearers and leaders in the republican party in the state for many years. He was delegate at large to the Republican National Convention of 1904 and a member of the committee notifying President Roosevelt of his nomination. He has been in many county and state conventions, and one time was proposed as candidate for the United States Senate, but he withdrew early from the race. Mr. Caldwell is a loyal member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with West Star Lodge No. 12, F. and A. M., at Huntington, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

In 1871, in Kanawha County, he married Miss Mary T'Bannon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Smith, now deceased. Her father was a merchant at Louisville and also at Guyandotte, West Virginia. Mrs. Caldwell finished her education at Louisville. Seven children were born to her marriage. Ida Regina is the wife of William P. H. McFadden, a cattleman, rice grower and owner of rice mills at Beaumont, Texas. Ouida C. is the wife of Charles W. Watts, a wholesale dry goods merchant at Huntington, member of the firm Watts, Ritter & Company. Foree Dabney Caldwell, the oldest son living, was educated under the direction of the noted schoolman, Col. Robert Bingham, at Asheville, North Carolina, graduated from the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, and has since been actively associated with his father, being treasurer of the Dingsess-run Coal Company and of several other business organizations. George J., the second son, now in the insurance business at Huntington, is a graduate of the high school of that city. James L., Jr., graduated from West Virginia University at Morgantown, and for one year was in service as a lieutenant, being stationed near Houston, Texas, and is now secretary of a mining, car factory and foundry corporation at Morgantown. Smith Caldwell, the youngest of the family, helped organize the noted machine gun company at Huntington, was commissioned a second lieutenant and had a year and a half of service, chiefly in Texas. He now handles the collection of rents and other business interests of his father.

ARCHY S. BOOKER. A practical business man, whose organizing ability has been a factor in promoting some of the great coal mining, handling and shipping concerns located at Bluefield, Mr. Booker is also a polished gentleman, widely informed, in touch with life in many phases, and is one of the very prominent Masons of the state.

Mr. Booker was born at Waynesborough, Augusta County, Virginia, October 20, 1871, son of John Davis and Mary Susan (Brooke) Booker. His parents were born in Virginia, and the Booker ancestry runs back into the early history of the Old Dominion. In the record of Colonial affairs in old Virginia there were several Bookers of prominence as soldiers, burgesses and men of affairs, particularly in Amelia County. Mr. Booker of Bluefield is named for Archy Stuart, his great-grandfather on his mother's side, who was a law partner of Patrick Henry, and is said to have composed many of the great speeches of that famous Virginia orator.

John D. Booker before the war was one of the largest tobacco planters in Virginia. Hundreds of slaves were employed in his fields. During the war he was for three years and eleven months in the Confederate Army, most of the time on scout duty. He had a number of very narrow escapes. At one time he and two others, while being pursued by Federal troops, came to a fence barricade built by he enemy across the road, and from this trap there was no escape except to leap the fences. His two companions met death, while John Booker jumped his horse over the fence and escaped. He was under the command of Colonel McClusky. He was once wounded, but fully recovered, and after the war he resumed planting, though on a greatly reduced scale.

Archy S. Booker attended the common schools in the Valley of Augusta County, spent two years in the Military Academy at Pishburno, Waynesborough, and after leaving school he was appointed assistant to the first postmaster of Basic City, Virginia. He did this work six months and for six months was in the hardware business at Waynesborough. Mr. Booker first joined the Bluefield community of West Virginia as shipping clerk for the Pocahontas Coal Company. For three years the duties of this position required night work, and altogether he remained with the company four years. When he resigned he returned to Waynesborough and took charge of the construction of a new home on the old family plantation. After completing that he became assistant roadmaster on the Norfolk & Western Railway, with headquarters at Vivian, West Virginia, and was in that service two years. While at Vivian he became shipping agent for the Pocahontas Coal Company, and held this position two years. He then bought stock in the Bluefield Coal & Coke Company, and this brought him again into active connection with the industrial affairs of Bluefield. In 1898 he became treasurer of the company, and continued with that corporation until 1904, when he resigned and organized the Flat Top Fuel Company, now one of the largest operating and selling organizations in the South West Virginia coal fields. He sold his interests in the Flat Top Company in 1906, and then for several years did a very prosperous real estate business at Bluefield. Mr. Booker in 1914 was appointed assistant postmaster, and he was in the postoffice until April 1, 1920, and for the last two years virtually was postmaster, owing to the death of the incumbent. In 1920, on leaving the post office, he became agent for the West Virginia Coal Company at Bluefield, but resigned April 1, 1921, and is now in business for himself as a wholesale shipper of coal.

During the war in his official capacity as acting postmaster Mr. Booker had charge of the War Savings Stamp campaign and sold over $100,000 worth of these Government securities in Bluefield.

In October, 1903, at Verdon, Virginia, Mr. Booker married Miss Corinne C. Crosier, daughter of J. H. and Virginia C. (Cady) Crosier. They have one son, Arley S. Booker, Jr., who graduated from the Bluefield High School at the age of sixteen and is now a student in the Roanoke College of Virginia. Mr. Booker is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is active in the Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, and is a member of the Elks.

His hobby is Masonry, and he is one of the best informed Masons in the state. He is a member of the Royal Arch Chapter, Knights Templar, the Shrine, and in the Scottish Rite has recently been elected to receive the thirty third degree. Mr. Booker was one of the organizers of the Lodge of Perfection at Bluefield on May 16, 1921, and was the first master.

EUGENE J. KING, who is vice president and active head of the Huntington Development & Gas Company, began his career as a telegraph operator, and before entering business for himself had reached the responsibilities of a division superintendent of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. He is very well known throughout the territory covered by that railway system, and his duties first brought him to Huntington thirty-two years ago.

Mr. King was born in Union County, Ohio, December 8, 1859. His father, Eugene King, was born in 1825 in County Kerry, Ireland, where the grandfather was a prominent and wealthy contractor. Eugene King was therefore not under the necessity of achieving financial independence for himself. Soon after his marriage he came to the United States, living at New Orleans for a time, then in Delaware, Ohio, and in 1872 established his home at Miamisburg, Ohio, where he lived until his death in 1873. He was not engaged in business after coming to the United States though he bought a farm in Union County. He was a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. Eugene King married Miss Johanna Sheehan, who was born in County Kerry in 1827, and died at Jackson, Tennessee, in 1906. Of their children the oldest was Patrick, who was a retired farmer when he died at Milford Center, Ohio, in 1918; John was a locomotive engineer and died at Russell, Kentucky, in 1913; Julia, living at Springfield, Ohio, is the widow of Daniel Clifford, a farmer who died at Milford Center, Ohio; Mary, who died at Marysville, Ohio, in 1887, was the wife of Michael Desmond, a retired locomotive engineer, also deceased; William S. is in the railway supplies business with headquarters at Chicago, and a resident of Green Bay, Wisconsin; and the sixth and youngest child is Eugene J. King.

After his father's death Eugene J. King lived with his mother at Marysville, Ohio, attended public school there, left high school at the age of fifteen and soon afterward was assigned his first duty as a telegraph operator on a railroad that is now part of the Big Four System. In 1887, when he was eighteen years of age, he was made clerk in the general manager's office of the Big Four Railway at Cleveland, Ohio. He was there two years, and in 1889 was promoted to assistant train dispatcher for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Cincinnati. A year later he was transferred to Marysville, Kentucky, as ticket agent, and in 1891 came to Huntington as train dispatcher. Mr. King was on duty in that capacity at Huntington for ten years, and in 1901 was transferred to Richmond, Virginia, as chief train dispatcher one year, train master six years, and following that was promoted to superintendent of the Richmond Division. He was division superintendent at Richmond four years and in 1912 returned to Huntington as superintendent of the Huntington Division.

On February 1, 1914, Mr. King resigned, after having spent thirty years in the railroad service, and after a vacation of about seven months, became assistant to the president of the Huntington Development & Gas Company. June 1, 1916, he was made vice president, and is now the active manager of the main offices of this corporation at Huntington. The offices are at 918 Third Avenue. The company is a Delaware corporation, and the other executive officers are: G. L. Estabrook, of Philadelphia, president; W. B. Kurtz, of Philadelphia, vice president; Frank T. Clark, of Philadelphia, secretary; and G. A. Northcott, of Huntington, treasurer. This is one of the important corporations in this section of the country producing and distributing natural gas, and from its sources of supply it distributes gas in Huntington, Kenova, West Virginia, and Ashland, Kentucky. Besides his connection with this corporation Mr. King is manager of coal properties in West Virginia for the Commonwealth Power, Railway & Light Company of New York City.

He is essentially a business man, but at all times has sought to make his business a source of benefit to the public. He is independent in politics, a member of the Catholic Church, is president of the Guyan Country Club of Huntington, a member of the Guyandotte Club and Huntington Chamber of Commerce. He owns considerable real estate in Huntington, including his modern home at 1203 Eleventh Street. In 1909, at Huntington, Mr. King married Miss Lide McClung, daughter of Mason and Janet (Alderson) McClung, now deceased. Her father was a farmer in Greenbrier County, West Virginia. Mrs. King finished her education in Marshall College of Huntington.

WILLIAM OLIVER DICKEY controls in the City of Huntington a representative business as a certified public accountant, and has been a resident of this city since his boyhood, though he claims the old Keystone State as the place of his nativity. His paternal grandfather, Marmaduke Wilson Dickey, passed his entire life in Pennsylvania, was for many years in the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, but retired a number of years prior to his death, which occurred at New Florence, that state, in 1887.

William O. Dickey was born at Altoona, Pennsylvania, March 13, 1875, and is a son of John C. and Elsie May (Rhodes) Dickey, both likewise natives of Pennsylvania, where the former was born in 1852. local plant of which he became identified when the business was here conducted by the Ensign Manufacturing Company, later merged into the great corporation known as the American Car & Foundry Company. He is an active member of the local Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club, and holds membership in the Guyandotte Club and the Guyan Country Club.

GEORGE WARDER KELLER, who is one of the successful oil and gas operators in the West Virginia fields, is actively identified also with the coal-mining industry in this state, his residence and business headquarters being maintained in the City of Huntington.

Mr. Keller was born at Massanetta Springs, Rockingham County, Virginia, on the 8th of September, 1880. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Keller, was born near Toms Brook, that state, in 1780, and died at Newmarket, Virginia, in 1840, his entire life having been passed in Shenandoah County, where he was a successful planter. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Baxter, was born in Spottsylvania County, Virginia. The ancestral line of the Keller family touches Dutch, German and French strains, and the first American representatives settled in Pennsylvania in the Colonial era. One of the members of the family was an aide on the staff of General Washington in the War of the Revolution. John Henry McLeod, maternal grandfather of George W. Keller, was born at Milton, Nova Scotia, in 1812, and was a young man when he removed to Virginia and became a farmer near Dayton, where he remained until his death, in 1892. John Henry McLeod organized the Wann Springs Turnpike Company and built one of the first macadam roads ever constructed in that state. He married Elizabeth Fishburn, who was born near the "Old Stone Church" on Middle River, Augusta County, Virginia, in the year 1813, and who died at Dayton, that state, in 1893.

George W. Keller, Sr., father of the subject of this review, was born near Toms Brook, Shenandoah County, Virginia, in 1840, and died at Massanetta Springs, Rockingham County, September 1, 1880. As a young man he removed to Rockingham County and engaged in farm enter-rise, of which he there continued a successful representative during the remainder of his life. He was a democrat, was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and he served three months as a Confederate soldier, in Captain Sipes' company, in the Civil war. He married Elizabeth Rebecca McLeod, who was born at Dayton, Virginia, in 1844, and who died at Bridgewater, that state, in September, 1913. Their eldest child, Clara McLeod, became the wife of Erasmus R. Harrison, of Elkton, Virginia, where she died at the age of fifty-six years. Mr. Harrison being still a resident of that place; Stella Everett is a teacher in the Masonic school at Oxford, North Carolina; Margaret Bruce is the widow of J. A. Raum and resides at Elkton; George W., of his sketch, is the youngest of the number and is the only one.

The public schools at Bridgewater, Virginia, afforded George W. Keller his early education, and thereafter he attended Washington & Lee University one year, and specialized in economics and chemistry. There also he became a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity. He had previously worked as a pharmacist, in 1903, at Harrisonburg, Virginia, and after leaving the university, in 1904, he was a pharmacist four years at Lewisburg, West Virginia. He then, in 1903, purchased an interest in the Frederick Pharmacy at Huntington, which was then one of the largest retail drug stores in the state, and he continued his active association with this enterprise until 1916. In the meanwhile he had become interested in oil and gas production in the West Virginia fields, and he was one of the leaders in the organizing and the development work of the Sovereign Gas Company, which has become one of the largest independent operators in the natural-gas fields of the state. Of this corporation he is secretary and office manager, the offices of the company being in suite 14, 15, 16 Miller-Ritter Building, Huntington. Mr. Keller was one of the organizers also of the Huntington-Oklahoma Oil Company, which is engaged in development work and which has a fair oil production in Western Kentucky, besides being engaged in development work in Osage County, Oklahoma. Mrs. Keller received the advantages of the Lewisburg (Virginia) Female Institute and the National Park Seminary at Forest Glen, a suburb of Washington, D. C. Mr. and Mrs. Keller became the parents of two children, Katherine Elizabeth, who was born April 2, 1910, and whose death occurred September 6, 1912, and George Simms, born June 26, 1921.

R. P. DeVan was educated as a civil engineer, but instead of practicing that profession has utilized his business talents successfully in real estate and the stock and bond business, and during the past half dozen years has built up the largest general insurance agency at Charleston.

Mr. DeVan, one of the popular citizens of Charleston, and present exalted ruler of the Elks Lodge, was born in Kansas City but represents an old New Orleans family of French origin. His father was a native of New Orleans. R. P. DeVan was born while his parents were temporarily living in Kansas City, and was reared and educated in New Orleans. He attended McDonough School No. 23 on Carrollton Avenue in that city, and finished his preparatory education in Brown's School at Charlottesville, Virginia. Mr. DeVan graduated in 1907 with the degree Civil Engineer from the University of Pennsylvania, but instead of seeking opportunities in the engineering field he engaged in the stock and bond business. For three years he was at Oklahoma City in the real estate business.

Mr. DeVan located at Charleston, West Virginia, in 1911, and for one year was secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. Since 1915 he has been in the general insurance business, at first as a member of the firm Scherr, Morton and DeVan, but in 1917 he bought out his partner's interests and founded the DeVan & Company agency. This is an organization handling all branches of general insurance, fire, casualty, life, etc. It is no small achievement that under Mr. DeVan's direction this has become the largest and best equipped agency in Charleston. He has made it a business vitally and essentially a part of the commercial and industrial life of the city.

Mr. DeVan was elected exalted ruler of the Charleston Lodge of Elks in March, 1921, beginning his official duties in April. He has been prominent in the national affairs of the organization. He organized the company which built the Rialto Theater, Charleston's leading playhouse, and is president of the theater company. He is an active member of the chamber of commerce and the Elgwood Country Club. Mr. DeVan married Miss Louise McCosh, of Hanover, Pennsylvania. Their three children are William Todd, R. P., Jr., and Nancy Elizabeth.

CASSIUS CLAY BROWN, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Morgantown, Monongalia County, was born at Brown's Mills in Clay District, this county, September 23, 1863, and is a son of the late Dr. Alpheus Wilson Brown and Anna (Nicholson) Brown. Mr. Brown is of the fourth generation in direct descent from Wendell Brown, who, with his son Manus, was one of the first white settlers west of the Allegheny Mountains in Pennsylvania. Adam Brown, great-grandfather of the subject of this review, married in 1784, in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, a sister of Jacob Statler, and in 1796 they settled near the site of Brown's Mills, Clay District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, as now constituted. Andrew Brown, grandfather of Cassius C. of this sketch, became a prosperous farmer and miller in this county, served as justice of the peace from 1832 to 1851, and in 1846, as a whig in a strong democratic district, he was elected to the Virginia Legislature or house of delegates, to which he was reelected in 1859. He built and operated Brown's Mills, long a landmark of Monongalia County, and also had the supervision of his fine farm property in that locality. July 5, 1821, he married Martha Worley, and they became the parents of five children, all now deceased.

Dr. Alpheus Wilson Brown was born at Brown's Mills, August 9, 1822, and died February 22, 1890. In his youth he attended Greene Academy at Carnichaels, Greene County, Pennsylvania, and thereafter he continued his studies for several years at Monongalia Academy, which eventually was developed into the University of West Virginia. Thereafter he studied medicine in the office of his uncle, Dr. Ashbury Worley, at Washington Court House, Ohio, after which he attended lectures at Philadelphia and further fortified himself for his chosen profession. He initiated practice at Washington Court House, Ohio, where he also conducted a drug store. He remained in Ohio ten years and then, at the request of his father, returned to the old home in Monongalia County. Here he built up a large and representative general practice and gained prestige as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of his native county, besides which he was an honored and influential figure in public affairs of a local order. He was a delegate to the Wheeling convention at which the new State of West Virginia was organized, and later he served two terms as a member of the Legislature of the new commonwealth, besides having been a member of the Board of Supervisors of Monongalia County, which under a new law was in time supplanted by the Board of County Commissioners, of which latter he was a member ten years, his death having occurred while he was the incumbent of this office. He and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in the same he served as steward, trustee and Sunday school superintendent. Shortly after he located at Washington Court House, Ohio, Doctor Brown married Elizabeth Dorsey, of Morgantown, West Virginia, and her death occurred eleven months later. November 25, 1862, recorded his marriage to Anna Nicholson, who was born near Geneva, Greene County, Pennsylvania, and whose death occurred at the old Brown homestead, August 13, 1902. She was a daughter of Thomas and Mary A. Nicholson, and a great-granddaughter of Commodore James Nicholson, who served as a captain in the Revolutionary war and as the first commodore of the American navy. The commodore's daughter Hannah became the wife of Albert Gallatin, the celebrated American scholar and statesman. The father of Commodore Nicholson was a native of Berwick-on-Tweed, Scotland, and immigrated to New Baltimore, Maryland, where he received a grant of land which became known as Nicholson Manor.

Cassius Clay Brown was reared on the old home farm and supplemented his public school discipline by attending the University of West Virginia. He left the university in his junior year, thereafter taught school for some time, and for thirteen years he owned and operated the historic old Brown's Mills, erected by his grandfather. He sold the mill property after recovering from a long illness, during much of which he was confined in a hospital, and he then took an executive position in the Dunkard Valley Bank at Blacksburg, Monongalia County. While thus engaged he was appointed to a position in the office of the state tax commission at Charleston, where he remained two years, after which he returned to the bank at Blacksburg. In 1912 he became cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Morgantown, a position of which he has since continued the efficient and popular incumbent.

Mr. Brown is a staunch republican, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Blacksburg Lodge No. 8, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Athens Lodge, Knights of Pythias; Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and with the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

September 16, 1893, recorded the marriage of Mr. Brown with Miss Elizabeth A. Scott, who was born at Blacksburg, this county, a daughter of William F. and Belle (Grimm) Scott. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have two children: Helen Scott is the wife of John Lowe, of Morgantown, and Arthur W. holds a clerical position in the Farmers and Merchants Bank, of which his father is cashier.

ALLEN REED PRICE, senior member of the firm of A. R. Price & Company, dry goods merchants at Morgantown, Monongalia County, has secure standing as one of the representative business men and citizens of his native county and its capital city. He was born on the old Price homestead at Uffington, Clinton District, this county, January 12, 1860, and is a son of the late John C. Price, whose father, Michael Price, was the pioneer representative of the family in this county. Michael Price came over the mountains from Maryland when he was a young man, and his first residence in Monongalia County was near the site of the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. In this county was solemnized his marriage with Susannah Burke, a member of a sterling pioneer family of this section of the state. Mr. Price died in Morgantown in 1937. His children, all now deceased, were George, Peter, Cornelius, John C., James and Sally.

John C. Price was born at Morgantown in 1813, and after the death of his father he and his two brothers and their widowed mother removed to the farm in Clinton District. Later he purchased the interests of the other heirs and became sole owner of the farm, to the management of which he gave his attention until his death in 1892. His wife, whose maiden name was Catharine Reed, was born in Barbour County in 1828, a daughter of Peter and Ruth (Llewellyn) Reed, early settlers in that county, and she survived her husband by about three years, her death occurring in 1895. Of the children the first born was Susan Louisa, who became the wife of Charles H. Holland, of Clinton District, this county, and whose death occurred in 1919; John C., Jr., was next in order of birth; and Allen R., of this sketch, is the youngest of the children.

Allen R. Price was reared on the home farm and supplemented his public school discipline by attending the University of West Virginia. While still on the farm he took charge of a general store at Uffington, a village in the immediate neighborhood, he and his brother John C. having been associated in the ownership of the business. In 1903 the two brothers engaged in the furniture business at Morgantown, under the title of the Price Furniture Company. In 1905 they sold this business, and in the same year Allen R. Price engaged independently in the dry goods business on Walnut Street. In 1910 he purchased the dry goods business of Ridgeway & Company on High Street, and on the 1st of January, 1920, he organized the firm of A. R. Price & Company, in which he took in as partners his son Ira J. and daughter Goldie M., the establishment of the firm being well equipped and the business being one of major importance in the mercantile activities of Morgantown. The firm receives a large and representative supporting patronage and the enterprise is one of most substantial order. Mr. Price is (1921) a member of the Board of Equalization of Monongalia County, and he is a loyal member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is an active member of the First Baptist Church.

In 1884 Mr. Price wedded Josephine, daughter of Silas Powell, of Clinton District, this county, and she died in the following year, their one child, Miss Ruth, being at the paternal home. In 1888 Mr. Price married Miss Nancy Ellen Coombs, daughter of Joseph G. Coombs, of Grant District, this county, and the eldest child of this union is Xa, who is the wife of Benjamin F. McGinnis, of Pennsylvania, Richie County, their children being Frederick, Benjamin Allen, Virginia Ellen and Mary Louise. Goldie M. remains at the parental home and is an active member of the firm of A. R. Price & Company, as previously noted. Ira Joseph likewise a member of his father's firm, was born December 22, 1891, received the advantages of the Morgantown schools, including the high school, and thereafter did effective field work as a civil engineer. In 1915 he entered his father's store, and his association with the business continued until June 6, 1918, when he entered the nation's military service in connection with the World war. He entered service in the quartermaster's department at Camp Joseph E. Johnston in Florida, later was transferred to Camp Merritt, and two weeks thereafter he sailed with his command, an independent unit, for France, where he was stationed at Giervis at the time of the signing of the armistice and until he embarked for the home voyage, he having been mustered out as quartermaster's sergeant at Camp Dix, after having left France, on the 29th of June, 1919. He resumed his active association with his father's business, and January 1, 1920, was admitted to partnership, as already noted in this context. He, like his father, is a member of Monongalia Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, besides which he is affiliated with the American Legion and with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Ottela Beatrice is the wife of Russell K. Bottom, of Morgantown, and they have one child, Russell K., Jr. Mabel Wilma remains at the parental home and is, in 1921, a student in the State University.

WILLIAM BURKHART SCHERR, M. D., is engaged in the general practice of his profession at Morgantown, Monongalia County, and he is one of the representative physicians and surgeons of the younger generation in this section of his native state, besides which he has the distinction of having served in the Medical Corps of the United States navy in the World war period.

The family record of Doctor Scherr is one of interesting order. Joseph Scherr was born and reared in Switzerland and there became colonel in the Swiss army. The family had long been one of wealth and influence in the fair little republic of Switzerland, where representatives of the name had been prominently identified with the tanning industry for many generations. In his native land Joseph Scherr married Gertrude Arnold, a daughter of National Representative Edward Arnold, and in 1857 he came with his family to the United States. He purchased a large tract of land

Minnesota, and it is interesting to record that much of the City of St. Paul is today established on that tract. Mr. Scherr settled on this land as a pioneer, but owing to the everty of the Minnesota winters he finally sold the property and removed with his family to Carver, Minnesota, in which city he built a brewery which was destroyed by fire. Mr. Scherr then came to West Virginia, where he established retail stores at Germania and Maysville, Grant County, and Eglen, Preston County, West Virginia. His long despondency after the death of his wife caused him to turn his business over to his sons and to return to Switzerland, where, amid the scenes and associations of his youth, he passed the remainder of his life.

Julius Scherr, son of Joseph and Gertrude (Arnold) Scherr, was born in Switzerland, February 28, 1849, and was a lad of eight years at the time of the family immigration to the United States. As a youth he became associated with his father's business, and ultimately took charge of the general store at Eglen in Preston County, and also of a woolen mill at Oakland, Maryland. Later he established a store at Thomas, West Virginia, and this he eventually placed in charge of his son, Julius, Jr. Still later he placed his sons Henry L. and Edwin G. in charge of a store at Horseshoe Run, Preston County. After the death of Julius, Jr., the business at Thomas was discontinued, and still later the other stores were closed out.

In 1900 Julius Scherr, Sr., was elected a representative in the Lower House of the West Virginia Legislature, and thereafter he held for four years the position of chief clerk in the office of the auditor general of the state. He then became an inspector of the State Tax Commission, of which office he has since continued the incumbent. The family home was established at Morgantown, Monongalia County, in 1910. At Washington, District of Columbia, Julius Scherr, Sr., married Emelia Sievers, who was born in that city, a daughter of Henry and Barbara (Ossinger) Sievers, both natives of Germany, whence they came to America as young folk, their marriage having been solemnized at Baltimore, Maryland. Mr. Sievers was a cabinet maker, and after having been engaged in business in the City of Washington for many years he came to Eglen, West Virginia, where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. Of the children of Julius and Emelia Scherr the eldest was Julius, Jr., who is deceased; Dr. Arnold A. was graduated from the State Normal School at Preston, thereafter attended the University of West Virginia, and in 1903 was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, he being now engaged in the practice of his profession at Keyser, West Virginia; Gertrude is the wife of J. C. Renniger, a lawyer at Oakland, Maryland; Henry L. is one of the proprietors of the Scherr Book Store at Morgantown; Edwin G., a traveling salesman, resides in Washington, District of Columbia; Milton C. is identified with the Scherr Book Store at Morgantown; Miss Alma B. remains at the parental home; Ethel died in childhood; and Dr. William B., immediate subject of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

Dr. William B. Scherr was born at Eglen, Preston County, this state, September 27, 1893, and his early education was gained in the public schools of that place and the cities of Charleston and Morgantown, in the latter of which he was graduated from the high school as a member of the class of 1914. Thereafter he took a two years' pre-medical course in the University of West Virginia, and December 15, 1917, he entered the nation's service as hospital apprentice. He was assigned to duty on the transport "Susquehanna," and October 26, 1918, he left shipboard and was assigned to duty as student instructor in charge of the medical division navy unit at Cincinnati, Ohio. On the 21st of the following December he was assigned to inactive duty as pharmacist's mate, and he now holds the rank of junior lieutenant in the United States Medical Reserve Corps.

After receiving his honorable discharge Doctor Scherr entered the medical department of the University of Cincinnati, from which institution he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1920. Thereafter he served as resident physician in the City Hospital at Akron, Ohio, where he gained valuable clinical experience, and on the 1st of August, 1921, he established himself in private practice at Morgantown, where he is making a record of effective and successful service. The doctor is a member of the American Medical Association, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the Monongalia County Medical Society. He is affiliated with the American Legion and with the Delta Sigma, the Kappa Alpha and the Alpha Kappa Kappa college fraternities.

Doctor Scherr married, December 14, 1921, Miss Beulah A. Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl C. Davis, of Marietta, Ohio, one of the pioneer families of the Ohio Valley. Mrs. Scherr is a graduate of the nursing and health department, Cincinnati University, she having graduated the same day as her husband.

ROY HUGH JARVIS. Morgantown, West Virginia, could scarcely help being a live, progressive city when its leading young business men are of the type of Roy Hugh Jarvis, abstractor and examiner of titles, who occupies the entire field in this profession here. He has completely identified himself with Morgantown interests since coming here, has met with a hearty welcome and has made a manly, winning personality felt in business, society, fraternal life and politics.

Roy Hugh Jarvis was born at Jarvisville, Harrison County, West Virginia, March 31, 1890, and is a son of William and Susan (Brown) Jarvis, old families of Harrison County. This branch of the Jarvis family was established in what is now West Virginia by Jesse Jarvis, who was born in Maryland, a descendant of William Jarvis, who came to America from England with Lord Baltimore's colony. Jesse Jarvis was nineteen years old when he settled at Clarksburg, and for a number of years served as clerk of the courts of Harrison County and then established himself on a farm at what is now known as Jarvisville, West Virginia, named in his honor. His son, Waringer Jarvis, spent his entire life in Harrison County, and his old saw and flour mill still stands near Jarvisville, where he owned an excellent farm. He was a soldier in the war between the states. He married Elizabeth Rector, also of Harrison County, and five of their ten children are living.

William Jarvis, son of Waringer and father of Roy Hugh Jarvis, was born on the old Jarvis homestead in Harrison County March 15, 1864, and still resides there, engaged in farming and stock breeding. He married Susan Brown, who was born in Harrison County, November 6, 1866, a daughter of Waldo and Elizabeth (Morris) Brown, an old Virginia family. The father of Mrs. William Jarvis, Waldo Brown, still survives, having passed his ninetieth birthday.

The old Jarvis homestead was the birthplace of Roy Hugh Jarvis, and in that section his boyhood school days were passed, preparing him for college and in 1912 he was graduated from Salem College. During 1912-13 he was a student of law in Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. He then embraced a business opportunity and entered the title department of the Pittsburgh Engineering & Construction Company and the Kentucky Pipe Line Company, subsidiaries of the Standard Oil Company, then operating in Kentucky. Later Mr. Jarvis was transferred to the Hope Natural Gas Company, also Standard Oil, at Clarksburg, and it was with that company that he came to Morgantown in 1916. In 1917 he embarked in the abstract and title business on his own account. He finds his time pretty well taken up, as he is the only one in the city devoting himself to this line of business, but he has not abandoned his determination to finish his law course and a course in history at the West Virginia University. He was one of the establishers of the Phi Kappa Chapter of the Kappa Sigma fraternity at the university.

On August 13, 1913, Mr. Jarvis married Miss Frances Saunders, of Hornell, Steuben County, New York, who is a daughter of E. B. and Euphemia (Black) Saunders. Mrs. Jarvis is a graduate of Alfred (New York) University, and of Salem (West Virginia) College. Mr. and Mrs. Jarvis have four children: Jean Eleanor, born September 19, 1914; Rosemary, born June 20, 1916; Roy Hugh, Jr., born September 19, 1918; and Robert Nathan, born August 22, 1921.

Mr. Jarvis is a member of Salem Lodge No. 84, A. F. and A. M.; Adoniram Chapter, Royal Arch, Clarksburg; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar; Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 6, S. R.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, thirty-second degree, and of Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Wheeling. He belongs also to Morgantown Lodge No. 411, B. P. O. E., Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club and the Morgantown Country Club. In his political views a democrat, Mr. Jarvis is serving as secretary of the Monongalia County Democratic Committee, and is a member of the Morgantown Board of Equalization.

HENRY BEDINGER DAVENPORT. Now a resident of Charleston, Henry Bedinger Davenport has earned distinction in two professions, civil engineering and law, has been a successful business man as well, and his activities in the affairs of county and state make him one of the widely and favorably known West Virginians.

His family record contains a number of eminent names. His grandfather, Braxton Davenport, spent most of his life in Jefferson County, West Virginia, and for many years was colonel of militia in that county, also a member of the House of Delegates of old Virginia, and held numerous offices of trust and responsibility. One service gave him much historical prominence, that being as presiding magistrate of the trial at which John Brown was convicted for the Harpers Ferry raid. Col. Braxton Davenport married Elizabeth Bedinger, a daughter of Maj. Henry Bedinger, of Revolutionary fame and for many years a prominent resident of Berkeley County, West Virginia. Henry B. Davenport, father of the Charleston business man, was born in Jefferson County, West Virginia, was educated in the University of Virginia, and served as a lieutenant in the Stonewall Brigade in the Confederate Army. He died in 1901 and is buried at Charles Town. His epitaph is both a biography and a eulogy, being simply "Soldier of the Stonewall Brigade." He was born September 9, 1831. In 1860 he married Martha Clay, daughter of Brutus J. Clay, of Bourbon County, Kentucky. Brutus Clay was a brother of Gen. Cassius M. Clay, at one time envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Court of Russia. Brutus J. Clay represented the Lexington District of Kentucky in the House of Representatives at Washington during two terms, 1861 to 1865, though he had been an extensive slave holder.

Son of Henry B. and Martha (Clay) Davenport, Henry Bedinger Davenport was born at Auvergne, near Paris, Kentucky, February 11, 1865, but spent his early life in the Eastern Panhandle of West Virginia. He was educated in the Charles Town Academy, in St. John's College at Annapolis, Maryland, and graduated with the degree Civil Engineer from the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Troy, New York, in 1886. He also took a special course in applied mathematics at the University of Virginia, and received his law degree from the University of West Virginia in 1894.

From 1886 until 1893 Mr. Davenport practiced his profession as a civil engineer. During this period he was in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, Cleveland, Akron & Columbus Railroad and was engineer of construction of levees on the Mississippi River in Bolivar County, Mississippi. For two years he held the chair of professor of civil engineering in the University of West Virginia. On graduating in law in 1894 he removed to Clay Court House, county seat of Clay County, West Virginia, where he was active in practice for twenty years. Almost from the first his practice took on a permanent and important character and brought him before the Circuit Courts of the state, the Supreme Court of Appeals and the United States Circuit and District Courts of Charleston. As a lawyer he was employed on one side or another of nearly every important case in the Circuit Court of Clay County during his twenty years' residence there. Through the industrious exercise of his natural and acquired talents in the professions and in business Mr. Davenport accumulated a comfortable fortune, and while he is retired from law practice he has employed his time for some years in the development of the oil and gas resources of Clay County, and more recently his interests have extended to the Texas oil fields.

In 1904 he was democratic candidate for Congress from the Third Congressional District, his successful republican rival being Joseph H. Gaines. He served several times as mayor of Clay Court House. On January 1, 1916, Mr. Davenport retired from the practice of law to devote himself to his private business affairs. During the war with Germany he was secretary of the Draft Board for Clay County, and for twenty-three months his time was wholly occupied in the duties of selecting, recruiting and preparing the men from his section for army service. Mr. Davenport is a Knight Templar, thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

He married Alma F. Stephenson, daughter of Thomas Benton Stephenson, on January 22, 1902. They have two sons, Benton Stephenson and Braxton.

GEORGE BOWERS VIEWEG, the efficient and popular assistant manager of the Morgantown plant of the Mississippi Glass Company, was born in the City of Wheeling, West Virginia, March 10, 1885. His paternal grandfather, Christian Vieweg, was a native of Germany and was for many years engaged in mercantile business at Wheeling. The maternal grandfather, George Bowers, likewise was a native of Germany and became one of the early representatives of the meat-market business at Wheeling. Christian Vieweg, Jr., father of the subject of this sketch, was born and reared at Wheeling, where he was for many years engaged in the fire insurance business, of which he is now a prominent representative at Morgantown, where he established his residence in 1919. His wife, whose maiden name was Emma Bowers, likewise was born and reared at Wheeling. Their son George B., of this review, was graduated from the Wheeling High School as a member of the class of 1903, and thereafter held a position in the South Side Bank at Wheeling until 1907, when he entered the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown, from which institution he was graduated in 1912, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science in mechanical engineering. After leaving the university he entered the employ of the Phillips Sheet & Tin Plate Company at Weirton, this state, and later was connected with the engineering department of the Pittsburgh Crucible Steel Company at Midland, Pennsylvania. In 1914 he became engineer for the Pressed Prism Glass Company, later being made assistant manager of that company's plant at Morgantown, and since 1917 has held the executive office of assistant manager of the Morgantown plant of the Mississippi Glass Company. He is one of the progressive young business men of Morgantown, is a member of the West Virginia Alpha Chapter of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity, is an active member of the local Kiwanis Club, and is treasurer and a member of the board of trustees of the First Presbyterian Church.

November 7, 1914, recorded the marriage of Mr. Vieweg with Miss Alfreda Carney, daughter of Stephen A. and Sarah Ellen Carney, of Charleston, this state. Mrs. Vieweg was born at Littleton, West Virginia, was graduated from the West Virginia Wesleyan College and was a member of the junior class in the University of West Virginia at the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Vieweg have a fine little son, George Bowers, Jr., who was born October 15, 1915.

ARTHUR W. BOWLEY. Prominently identified with the business interests of Morgantown and known as a public-spirited citizen of enlightened views and constructive tendencies is Arthur W. Bowley, vice president and treasurer of the Central Automobile Corporation. Mr. Bowley's career was started in the midst of agricultural surroundings, and for a number of years he centered his chief interests in the affairs of the farm. More recently, however, his name has been linked with successful business enterprises, to the prosperity of which he has contributed abilities of a high order and well-tempered judgment and acumen.

Mr. Bowley was born on the Bowley homestead in Cass District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, November 22, 574, a son of the late Joel and Rachel (Evans) Bowlby. His great-grandfather, a native of New Jersey, came to what is now Cass District in 1798 and bought a tract of land from a former settler, who had but recently patented it. In that farm he spent the remainder of his life, dying on his own land and being buried there. He married Lydia Harhart. Robert L. Bowlby, the son of James and Lydia Bowlby, was born in New Jersey, May 20, 1795, and was about three years of age when brought by his parents to Monongalia County. He inherited a part of his father's property and passed his life in agricultural pursuits, dying on his farm. He married Polly Smith.

Joel Bowlby, the son of Robert L. and Polly Bowlby, and father of Arthur W. Bowlby, was born on the old homestead February 9, 1833, and October 17, 1861, married Rachel Ann Evans, who died in December, 1874. His second marriage was with Eliza, the sister of his first wife. Joel Bowlby was a prominent man in his county for many years. He was a member of the County Court when the present Monongalia courthouse was built at Morgantown, and was regarded as one of the best commissioners the county has ever had. He was a large land owner and most prosperous farmer, and was a devout and helpful member of the Baptist Church, in which he served as a deacon. His death occurred July 13, 1907, his widow surviving until May, 1915.

Arthur W. Bowlby was reared on that part of his great-grandfather's homestead which had been inherited by his father and which came to him in the line of succession. His education was obtained in the free schools of his district and as a youth he adopted farming as his vocation, an occupation in which he was engaged until he sold his property in 1918 and removed to Morgantown. He was elected a member of the County Court in 1914, for a period of six years, taking office January 1, 1915, and retiring therefrom December 31, 1920, and during the last two years served in the capacity of president of the court. In 1911 Mr. Bowlby became identified with the Central Automobile Corporation, which is probably the largest concern in this part of West Virginia, and has been a member of the board of directors since that year and since 1919, its vice president and treasurer. He is likewise a member of the board of directors of the Federal Savings and Trust Company of Morgantown. Mr. Bowlby's religious connection is with the Baptist Church, and fraternally he holds membership in Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Morgantown Lodge No. 411, B. P. O. E.; and Monongalia Lodge No. 10, I. O. O. F. He also belongs to the Kiwanis Club.

On December 25, 1893, Mr. Bowlby was united in marriage with Miss Nora Vella Lazzelle, who was born in Cass District, May 29, 1874, the daughter of Cornelius and Mary Prudence (Pope) Lazzelle. Mr. Lazzelle was born in Cass District, the son of Thomas and Rebecca (Bowlby) Lazzelle. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Bowlby: Mary Elizabeth, born November 1, 1901; and Nora Willard, born March 28, 1907.

WALTER HAINES SOUTH. The South family of Monongalia County, of which Walter Haines South, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Randall Gas Company of Morgantown, is a member in the fourth generation in this county, was established here in very early days by Elijah South, who was born on Whiteley Creek, near Mapletown, Greene County, Pennsylvania. His American ancestor was one of three brothers named South, of Suffolk County, England, who came to America prior to the Revolutionary war, one settling in New Jersey, one in Maryland and the third in Pennsylvania. Elijah South was born June 10, 1809, and died December 24, 1865, settled in Cass District, Monongalia County. He married Mary Livingood, who was also a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1799, and she died at the age of eighty years on July 14, 1879.

Justus South, son of Elijah, was born on the family farm in Cass District, March 14, 1842, and died at Baltimore, Maryland, June 8, 1901. He left the home place as a young man and located at Wadestown, Battelle District, in the same county, where he followed farming until 1892, and then removed to Morgantown, where for a number of years he was engaged in the real estate business, handling his own property. He married Mary Haines, who was born in Battelle District, March 30, 1849, and died at Morgantown, June 13, 1921, aged seventy-two years. She was a daughter of William and Martha (Thomas) Haines, who came from near Pittsburgh and settled on Dunkard Creek, Battelle District, in early days.

Walter Haines South, son of Justus and Mary (Haines) South, was born on his father's farm at Wadestown, Battelle District, January 16, 1875. He was reared on the farm until seventeen years old and acquired his early education in the public schools, following which he entered the University of West Virginia, an institution from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1900. He was not only a close student but was likewise active in athletics, and was a member of the varsity football team in 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896 and 1898. Leaving the university, he spent one year at the Baltimore Medical College and one year at Johns Hopkins University Medical School, but at the end of that time gave up his intention of entering the medical profession, returned to Morgantown, and in October, 1905, entered the employ of the Randall Gas and Water Company as manager. He was made secretary thereof in 1906, and in 1913 assumed the duties of secretary-treasurer and general manager, offices which he has occupied ever since. He is a member of the United States Chamber of Commerce and the Natural Gas Association of America, and is a member and director in the West Virginia Oil and Gas Association. As a fraternalist he belongs to Morgantown Lodge No. 411, B. P. O. E., and is a member of the Old Colony Club and the Phi Sigma Kappa college fraternity.

On August 11, 1914, Mr. South was united in marriage with Miss Emma Beall, who was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, a daughter of Grafton B. and Martha M. (Dunlevy) Beall, the former of whom died in July, 1920, while the latter survives. Mr. and Mrs. Beall had six children: A. B., a prominent business man of Sioux City, Iowa, who died December 27, 1921; Grafton A., a lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy; May, now Mrs. Kramer, of Los Angeles, California; Byrd, who lives with her mother; Elizabeth, a nurse in the United States Navy, attached to the hospital ship Mercy; and Mrs. South. Mrs. South is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, being a lineal descendant of Col. Ninian Beall, an officer in General Washington's army during the Revolutionary war.

HARRY ADAMS STANSBURY. Not the least important of the departments of modern educational institutions are those which deal with the matter of keeping the body in the best of condition to meet the daily strains put upon it. For many years athletics were considered but a recreation to be indulged by the faculty as allowing their students to work off their animal spirits. In a way, perhaps, this enters into the case, but of more recent years the enlightened college and university heads have come to a realization that education is in no way complete that does not teach the student how to care for his body and how to build it up through systematic training under skilled supervision. Therefore, it is that the post of director of athletics at a large institution is one of some importance, and the University of West Virginia is fortunate in possessing in this position such an able trainer and experienced athlete as Harry Adams Stansbury.

Mr. Stansbury was born December 9, 1891, at Marshes, Raleigh County, West Virginia, and is descended from three old and honored families of Maryland and Southern West Virginia. His father, Charles Stansbury, was born in the City of Baltimore in 1858, and was of the old Stansbury family of Maryland which figured in the early history of that state. He married Ella Calloway, who was born in Raleigh County, West Virginia, the daughter of George W. and Sarah L. (Hinckman) Calloway. The Calloway and Hinckman families were among the early settlers of Raleigh and Logan counties, West Virginia. Charles Stansbury removed from Baltimore to Raleigh County, where he became the owner of a large landed estate and followed farming until his death in 1964.

Harry Adams Stansbury attended the public schools and was prepared for college at the academy of Westview College at Buckhannon, West Virginia. He was graduated a Bachelor of Science from Wesleyan College with the class of 1915, and for the two following years was director of athletics at that institution. He came to the University of West Virginia in the same capacity in 1917, and during his administration of the affairs of that post has won a reputation both for himself and for the University in college athletics. Mr. Stansbury is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., of Morgantown; Morgantown Lodge No. 411, B. P. O. E.; the Morgantown Rotary Club; the Eastern Graduate Managers' Association; the Athletic Research Society; and the Mountain Society of the University of West Virginia.

Mr. Stansbury married Miss Ada Lillian George, daughter of William T. and Dora (Howell) George, of Phillips, West Virginia, and to this union there have come two sons and a daughter: Harry Adams, Jr., born September 15, 1917; Richard George, born October 30, 1918; and Mary Elizabeth, born May 5, 1920.

WILLIAM GRIFFEE BROWN. Under the original state prohibition law the duties of enforcement were assigned as a separate department of the office of state tax commissioner. The Legislature in 1921, upon the recommendation of Governor Morgan and Tax Commissioner Hallanan, provided that this department should be separated from the state tax commissioner and made a separate department of the executive branch of the Government under the direction of a state director of prohibition. The law became effective on October 1, 1921, and the first man called to the duties of state commissioner of prohibition, by appointment from Governor Morgan, is William Griffiee Brown, for many years a prominent lawyer of Nicholas County.

Commissioner Brown, who thus became an official resident of Charleston, represents a pioneer family of Nicholas County. His great-grandfather, Alexander Brown, patented land in that county in 1803, and also acquired lands in several adjacent counties. The Browns are of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Dr. William Brown, grandfather of Commissioner Brown, and William H. Brown, father, were both natives of West Virginia. However, William Griffiee Brown was born in Meigs County, Ohio, in 1864, son of William H. and Armina (Hypes) Brown. His parents returned to West Virginia in 1869, locating in Mason County, where he first attended school. In 1876 the family returned to Nicholas County. William Griffiee Brown graduated Bachelor of Science in 1889 from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio. For several years he was a teacher and institute worker. His last engagement as a teacher was as principal of the Fayetteville Academy. On resigning that office in 1900 he took up the study of law and in 1901 removed to Oklahoma Territory, establishing his home in Day County, in the extreme western part. In 1902 he was elected superintendent of public instruction for that county, and was also admitted to the bar in the Federal Court of Oklahoma.

Mr. Brown in 1903 returned to West Virginia, locating at Summersville, county seat of Nicholas County, and began practice as a lawyer. In 1904 he was elected prosecuting attorney, holding that office four years. Since then he has commanded a prominent place in the bar of Nicholas County. For ten years he was associated with Mr. L. T. Eddy in the law firm of Brown & Eddy. For three years he was senior member of the law firm Brown, Wolverton & Ayres of Summersville. In accepting the appointment of state commissioner of prohibition Mr. Brown made a considerable sacrifice, involving the loss of much of his lucrative law practice, and only a fine sense of public duty and the urging of his friends prevailed over the many reasons for declining the office. Mr. Brown is a republican, has been chairman of the Republican County Committee in Nicholas County, is active in church affairs, as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his appointment was strongly urged by the temperance forces in the state.

In 1889 Mr. Brown married Miss Margaret R. Groves, member of a pioneer Nicholas County family. They have four children, Heber H., Dama M., Reginald W. and Mabel Evangeline. The two youngest are still in school.

Heber H. Brown joined the colors at Camp Lee in 1917, was made first sergeant, assigned to duty in the Three Hundred and Thirtieth Field Artillery, going overseas with the Eightieth Division, and participated in nearly all the campaigns in 1918, including the battles of the Argonne.

The daughter, Dama M., during the war was in Government service at Washington, and later held a Government position as secretary to the superintendent of the Grand Canyon at Grand Canyon, Arizona. She is now the wife of Charles J. Smith, chief ranger of the Grand Canyon National Park.

JOEL E. PECK. New highways of improvement have been opened through the mental alertness and broad experience of the business men of today, whose standing is conspicuously high, for with competition so strenuous none but the efficient and capable can hope for a full measure of success. These men have risen to their present positions over no royal road to fortune, but rather because of constructive thinking and aggressive action which are gaining for this country an extraordinarily large percentage of the world's business. One of the men whose interests are heavy and whose territory is a large one in West Virginia and adjoining states is Joel E. Peck, president and treasurer of the Ohio Valley Printing and Stationery Company of Huntington.

Mr. Peck was born February 8, 1875, in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, a son of Daniel A. and Caroline (Hill) Peck. Martin Peck, the paternal grandfather of Joel E. Peck, was born in 1800, in Botetourt County, Virginia, where he, with the assistance of his children, cleared a large property and developed it into one of the best farms in the county. He was a prominent citizen and a man held in the highest esteem, and his death, which occurred in 1853, near Fincastle, Virginia, removed a public-spirited citizen from his community. His wife, Ammen, was born in 1802, at Fincastle, and died in the same community in 1854. They reared a family of three sons and two daughters, all of whom are now deceased. The youngest child, Benjamin, was a Confederate soldier during the Civil war and died of wounds received at the battle of Winchester.

Daniel A. Peck was born in 1838, near Fincastle, Botetourt County, Virginia, where he was reared on his father's farm and received a rural school education. In 1861 he went to Nicholas County, now West Virginia, where he resided on a farm until 1874, at that time going to Pocahontas County, this state, where he spent the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits and died at Lobelia in 1904. He was a successful and highly respected man and a good citizen. In his early years he combined with his farming operations teaching in the rural schools for a number of years. Mr. Peck was a democrat, and for several terms while living in Pocahontas County served in the capacity of justice of the peace. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for a long period was its chief supporter in his community, of which he was a steward, and it really being through his generosity that the church structure was erected. Mr. Peck married Miss Caroline Hill, who was born in 1840, near Hillsboro, Pocahontas County, and died in that county in 1876. They were the parents of the following children: Lucy H., the wife of Thomas A. Bruffey, of near Lobelia, a schoolteacher and farmer, who at present is acting in the capacity of deputy sheriff of Pocahontas County; Fannie L., the widow of Adam C. Young, who died on his farm near Jacob, Pocahontas County, where Mrs. Young makes her home; and Joel E., of this review.

Joel E. Peck attended the rural schools of Pocahontas County and the Summersville (West Virginia) Normal School, and entered upon his active career as an educator. From 1894 to 1898 he taught in the rural schools of Pocahontas County, and in the latter year turned his attention to farming, which, with mercantile pursuits, furnished him with an occupation until 1905. Removing then to Greenbrier County, he spent four years in agricultural pursuits, and in May, 1910, came to Huntington and engaged in the real estate business. This, however, he abandoned January 1, 1911, when he founded the Ohio Valley Printing and Stationery Company, in partnership with Davis L.

W. G. Brown

Barlow. In the fall of 1912 Mr. Peck purchased Mr. Barlow's interest and remained as sole proprietor of the business until 1916, when the company was incorporated under the laws of the State of West Virginia, the officers being: J. E. Peck, president and treasurer; C. B. Van Bibber, vice president; and W. A. Williamson, secretary. Mr. Peck is the majority stockholder and directing head of the enterprise, which under his supervision has grown to be one of the leading enterprises of its kind in this section of the state. The company does all manner of job printing and handles a complete and up-to-date line of school and office supplies, the plant, office and store room being located at No. 603 Ninth Street and No. 833 Sixth avenue. Mr. Peck has devoted his time without stint to building up of this business, and his record stands without a blemish. His career is a decidedly creditable one, for never has a man's success been due more to his own native ability and less to outward circumstances. His prosperity has been the logical sequence of the natural unfolding and development of his native abilities, and his achievements have been the reward of earnest, honest efforts.

Mr. Peck is a democrat, but has not been particularly active in politics, although a public-spirited citizen who supports worthy ventures. He belongs to Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Huntington, of which he is financial secretary and treasurer, and the work of which he has received great impetus through his support. He was a modern residence at No. 529 Sixth Avenue, which is a comfortable home in a favored residential section, and also has evidenced his faith in Huntington by investing a part of his means in other real estate here.

In April, 1899, Mr. Peck married near Edray, Pocahontas County, Miss Effie F. Barlow, daughter of Henry and Nancy (Castle) Barlow, both deceased. Mr. Barlow was an agriculturist and merchant at Edray for a period of thirty-six years, and a man who was held in high respect and esteem in his community. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peck: Veda Ruth, who is a senior at Marshall College, Huntington; Henry A., a junior at Randolph-Macon College, Ashland, Virginia; and Lee Edward, a sophomore in the High School, Huntington.

HARLOW AUGUSTUS DAVIN has recently rounded out a quarter of a century of consecutive service with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company. As he is still under forty, railroading has claimed nearly all the energies of youth and manhood. For some years past his responsibilities have been of an executive nature, and at the present time he is assistant superintendent in charge of the Logan Division, with home and headquarters at Logan.

Mr. Davin was born at Montgomery, Fayette County, West Virginia, September 7, 1884, son of John and Mary Elizabeth (Montgomery) Davin. The town of Montgomery was named in honor of his maternal grandfather, James Montgomery, who at one time represented Montgomery County, Virginia, in the House of Delegates, and was sheriff of Fayette County, West Virginia. Mary Elizabeth Davin died in 1920, at the age of sixty-one. John Davin was born in County Waterford, Ireland, at the age of five years came to the United States with his parents, who located in Campbell County, Kentucky, and as a young man he came to West Virginia, during the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. He was in the Bridge Department, being first located at Kanawha Falls, then at Montgomery, Fayette County, when that town was still known as Cannellton. He had charge of a bridge force and later of wrecking and repair departments. John Davin, who died in 1912, at the age of fifty-four, was active in democratic local politics, served as a member of the School Board and in other offices, and was a Catholic, while his wife was a Presbyterian, and their children adhered to the faith of their mother. These children were four sons and four daughters. The oldest son, Charles Ashley, died at the age of two years, and all the others came to mature life: Harlow Augustus, being the second; John W., chairman of the Car Allowment Commission at Huntington; T. L., manager of the Davin Drug Company of Montgomery; Florence E., of Montgomery; Lottie L., wife of Dr. H. H.

Smallridge, of Charleston, West Virginia; Anna, wife of L. G. Smallridge, manager of a wholesale dry goods house at Tacoma, Washington; and Margaret R., a resident of Montgomery.

Since he began his railroad service at such an early age Harlow Augustus Davin acquired his education beyond the common schools by earning and paying his own way. He attended public school at Montgomery in Fayette County, took a preparatory course in the Preparatory Branch of the University of West Virginia, and for two years was a student in Hampden-Sydney College near Farmville, Prince Edward County, Virginia. While in college he was on the football team, interested in other forms of athletics, and he seldom misses a year in attending one or more ball games at the University of Virginia. Long before the end of his college career he had performed a great deal of service for the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. His first employment was as a call boy at Handley, a division point two and one half miles from his home at Montgomery. He walked from home to his duties each day. Later he did clerical work in the division offices at Handley, was promoted to assistant yardmaster, then yardmaster at Ashland, Kentucky, was assigned special duties with the Western General Division of the Chesapeake & Ohio, with headquarters at Ashland, and succeeding promotions made him assistant trainmaster of the Handley Coal District, and then trainmaster of the same district. He was next transferred to Raleigh as assistant trainmaster of Laurel and Piney Creek branches.

Mr. Davin has had his duties at Logan since April, 1917, when he was made assistant trainmaster of the Logan Division, the 1st of May of the same year was promoted to trainmaster, and on August 1, 1921, became assistant superintendent in charge of the Logan Division. He entered the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio in 1897, and at the next annual meeting he will be eligible to membership in the Veteran Association of the Chesapeake & Ohio Employees, a membership that carries with it special privileges.

While as his record indicates, he has never neglected his duties with the railroad company, Mr. Davin has also been mindful of his interests as a citizen. While in Fayette County he was a member of the Democratic Committee of Kanawha District, and when Logan adopted a commission form of government he became one of the four commissioners. In his railroad service he has handled a number of critical situations during strikes and industrial wars.

On September 14, 1907, Mr. Davin married Miss Katherine Gwinn Bidgood, of Petersburg, Virginia. They have a daughter, Betty Bidgood, born in 1917. Mr. Davin is a Presbyterian and his wife a member of the Episcopal Church, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge of Montgomery and the Royal Arch Chapter at Logan.

JOHN CLARK PRICE. Perhaps no class of citizens can be of more real, practical use in a community than the substantial retired farmers, who, after years of successful experience as agriculturists and live stock raisers, settle in urban centers and take an active interest in civic, social and business life. They usually have a soundness of judgment that it were well for their fellow citizens to heed, for in profitably carrying on their farm undertakings over a long period they have solved problems that affect business prosperity and community well-being. One of the valued retired farmer citizens of Morgantown is found in John Clark Price, whose investments in city realty are heavy and who still owns a large extent of valuable farm land in Monongalia County.

John Clark Price was born on the old Price homestead in Clinton District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, about four miles from Morgantown, February 3, 1858. His parents were John Clark and Catherine (Reed) Price, the latter of whom was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, a daughter of Peter Reed. John Clark Price, the elder, was born in Monongalia County, West Virginia, and was a son of Michael and Mary (Burke) Price. His life was spent as a farmer in his native district.

John C. Price grew up on the old homestead and through boyhood had country school privileges, entirely sufficient for the times but far fewer than considered necessary at the present day. For fifty years he followed farming, giving close attention to his different industries and meeting with the success that usually rewards determined industry and good judgment. During this long interval Mr. Price saw many changes come about in farm methods, and accepted those he found best adapted to his land, and also witnessed the introduction and took advantage of much modern farm machinery whereby some of the old-time burdens of the general farmer were eased. Although he has been retired from active farm life for a number of years, he has never lost his interest in agricultural matters or his friends in the old neighborhood, and he still owns two excellent farm properties, aggregating 288 acres. His realty in Morgantown includes the substantial brick business block which he erected on Front and Walnut streets.

In early manhood Mr. Price married Miss Sarah C. Kinkaid, a daughter of William and Serena Kinkaid, farming people in Monongalia County, and they have had the following children: George W., who is a major in rank in the United States Army and (1922) is serving on detail in France, is a graduate in law of the West Virginia University, but chose a military rather than a professional career; William Logan, who is a deputy sheriff in Monongalia County, spent three years in the university; Stewart Monroe, whose home is in Warren, Ohio; Bruce, who is an overseas veteran of the World war, spending one year in France, is attached to the county engineering department; Paul Holland, who is a student in the University of West Virginia, was in military training during the World war but was not called from his own country; Ocea May, who is a student in the university; and Chauncey Milton, the youngest of the family.

In 1909 Mr. Price located permanently at Morgantown, led thereto by his desire to give his children superior educational advantages, and also in order to have time to look after various business interests and to faithfully perform the duties entailed by his election to the office of county commissioner. He served out his full term of six years, was re-elected and served his second term, retiring then until in 1921, when he was again called into public life and appointed county commissioner to fill a vacancy and is still serving. In many ways Mr. Price is one of the representative men of Monongalia County, and the esteem in which he is held is universal. In political life he has always been loyal to his party's best interests and faithful in promised support of friends. He and his family are members of the Baptist Church, and fraternally he is an Odd Fellow and sincere in his support of the principles for which the organization stands.

AMOS LOWRIE DEMOSS. The DeMoss family, represented at Morgantown by Amos Lowrie DeMoss, well known and prominent in Monongalia County for many years, originated in France and was founded in America by the great-grandfather of Mr. DeMoss, who accompanied General de Lafayette when he came to the assistance of the American colonies in their fight for independence. He never returned to France but, on the other hand, accepted the liberal grant of land awarded him by the Government in recognition of his military services, and the record is that he spent the rest of his life in peace and plenty on his estates in Virginia. Two generations later his lineal descendant, John DeMoss, removed from the old homestead to what is now Taylor County, West Virginia, and was the first settler on the Creek at Three Forks, five miles above the City of Grafton.

John DeMoss (II), son of John and father of Amos L. DeMoss, was born in Taylor County, West Virginia, in 1822, and died in 1888. He removed from his birthplace just across the line in Taylor County to just across the line in Monongalia County, and followed farming in Clinton District during the rest of his life. He married Rachel Bunner, who was born in Marion County, West Virginia, in 1832, and who survived until 1904. She was a daughter of Amos Bunner, a pioneer in Marion County, for whom Bunner's Ridge was named.

Amos Lowrie DeMoss was born near Halleck in Clinton District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, January 12, 1863, a son of John and Rachel (Bunner) DeMoss. His early education was obtained in the district schools, and later he attended the Fairmont Normal School, paying his way through the same by teaching, and afterward continued in educational work for a number of years, teaching in both Monongalia and Preston counties.

In the meanwhile he had become somewhat active in the political field and subsequently was honorably identified with important business enterprises. In 1892 he was elected county assessor, and served in that office for four years following which he embarked in the mercantile business and operated a store at Uffington in Monongalia County for six years. He served as deputy sheriff from 1900 to 1904, and after retiring from that office, became manager of a cement company, in which relation he continued for some years. In the performance of his public duties as well as in the conduct of his private business he became well and favorably known to his fellow citizens.

On April 1, 1907, Mr. DeMoss entered the postal service as assistant postmaster at Morgantown, and continued in that capacity under Postmasters Posten, Bowman and Hodges. On July 23, 1919, he was appointed acting postmaster, and had charge of the office as such until July 1, 1921, when he turned his responsibilities over to Postmaster Grant and resumed his duties as assistant postmaster as before. At all times he has given faithful service to the public.

On June 14, 1894, Mr. DeMoss married Miss Jennie F. Lanham, who was a daughter of Eugene Lanham, of Preston County, West Virginia. Mrs. DeMoss passed away on August 16, 1916, leaving two children: Bertha Lee and Frederick Eugene, both of whom reside with their father. Mr. DeMoss and his family belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He maintains a lively interest in civic matters and is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce. In fraternal life he belongs to the Odd Fellows, the Junior Order United American Mechanics and the Daughters of America, the auxiliary branch of the latter great organization. Mr. DeMoss has been prominent for years in the Junior Order United American Mechanics, has passed through all the chairs both local and state, is a member of its national council and in official capacity has attended two sessions of the same. Coming into close contact in his everyday duties with his fellow citizens at Morgantown, Mr. DeMoss is as popular as he is efficient, and well deserves the respect and esteem in which he is held.

JAMES VANCE BOUGHNER, M. D., was born in Clarksburg, Virginia, April 9, 1812. He was the eldest child of Daniel and Mary (Vance) Boughner, whose family numbered six sons and three daughters. During his infancy his parents returned to Greensboro, Pennsylvania, where they had been married and where they lived the remainder of their lives. His father had been engaged in general merchandising in Clarksburg, and continued in the same business until his death. He was also manager of the Greensboro Pottery Works, which were at that time in a flourishing condition.

Daniel Boughner was the son of Martin and Anna Rittenhouse Boughner. Martin was born in New Jersey and later resided in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, where he was united in marriage with Anna Rittenhouse. Their children were Anna, Pamela and Daniel. Martin Boughner and family later removed to Fayette County, Pennsylvania, two miles from Brownsville, on Redstone Creek. His wife died there in 1797, and is buried in the old Baptist Cemetery. Daniel was only nine years of age when his mother died and the family abandoned housekeeping. He was thrown upon his own resources at an early age, and when seventeen, went to Greensboro, Pennsylvania, to learn the potter's trade in the works of Alexander Vance. Later he married Mary Vance, the sister of his employer.

Mary (Vance) Boughner was the daughter of James and Amy (Slack) Vance. The Vance family emigrated to Scotland (traditionally from Italy) early in the sixteenth century. The name was originally Del Vance, and family records trace their origin to the nobility of their native country.

The Vance family formed part of the colony sent from Scotland by the English Monarch to colonize the North of

O. V. Bonghmer.

RESIDENCE OF THE LATE DR. JAMES VANCE BOUGHNER, MORGANTOWN, WEST VIRGINIA

Ireland, constituting that strong body of Scotch Irish Presbyterians, so eminent in history. Members of this family participated in the famous siege of Londonderry.

James Vance was born in County Down, Ireland (near Belfast), on April 3, 1753. He emigrated from Porter's Ferry, Ireland, when not quite twenty years of age, and, landing in Philadelphia, lived there awhile before taking up his residence in Flemington, New Jersey, where he enlisted in the Revolutionary army. He was a private in Captain Reddin's Company, Colonel Chambers being in charge of his regiment. He was in the battles of Germantown and Monmouth. He heard Washington reprove General Charles Lee for his retreat at the latter place. He spent the winter with Washington's Army at Valley Forge, where the hardships, privations and suffering endured form record in the annals of our history.

After serving out his time in the army he bought a farm one and a half miles from Morristown, New Jersey, and married Amy Slack about the year 1778. His children were all born in New Jersey, but owing to the scarcity of water there for manufacturing purposes he was induced to migrate to Greensboro, Pennsylvania, where his sons introduced the business of making pottery in that part of the country. James Vance was a man of scholarly tastes and acquirements, and had collected a large library of general literature.

The maternal ancestry of the mother of James Vance Boughner is largely interwoven with prominent families of Colonial America. Thomas Schooley was one of the most notable ancestors of this line. He was the son of John and Alice Schooley of York, England. In 1677 he sailed from Hull in England on the Flie boat "Martha," with 114 passengers on board. He was one of the masters of this ship, which reached New Jersey in August, 1677. Thomas Schooley was a member of the Farnsworth Society of Friends of Yorkshire, England. He was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Parker, of Burlington County, New Jersey, in 1686. They had seven children. Thomas Schooley was granted a concession of 350 acres of land in Burlington County, New Jersey. This included the mountain in North Western New Jersey, which was named Schooley's Mountain in his honor. In this mountain were situated Schooley's Mountain Springs. In our early social life these springs were a celebrated summer resort. Thomas Schooley died in 1724.

Thomas Schooley, Jr., son of Thomas and Sarah (Parker) Schooley of Burlington County, New Jersey, and Hannah Fowler, of Monmouth, daughter of John and Rose Fowler, were married at Chesterfield, New Jersey, March 26, 1720. Their daughter became the wife of Benjamin Slack of Morris County, New Jersey. Amy Slack, their daughter, became the wife of James Vance, and they were the parents of Mary Vance. Daniel Boughner married Mary Vance, May 9, 1811, and their son is the subject of this sketch.

Greensboro is situated on the Monongahela River, less than 100 miles from Pittsburgh. On the opposite side of the river, beautifully situated on a cliff above the stream, is located "Friendship Hill," once the famous home of Albert Gallatin, who built the mansion on a domain of many broad acres. One of the pleasing memories of Doctor Boughner's childhood was his privilege of seeing La Fayette when he visited Albert Gallatin at "Friendship Hill" in 1824.

There were no railroad facilities at that time and navigation on the Monongahela River had not yet been inaugurated. Life in little towns remote from centers of civilization afforded limited educational advantages. Doctor Boughner possessed a brilliant and active mind, which, united with boundless ambition, led him to supplement his technical education by extensive reading of classical literature and works of general history. He thus became a self educated and a well educated man before beginning his professional studies. His first responsible work was begun at the age of sixteen, when his father was appointed post-master of Greensboro. The duties of the office, however, were performed by the subject of this sketch.

He read medicine with Doctor Stephenson. In 1837 he matriculated in the medical department of Cincinnati College as pupil Number Fifty-three. The matriculation card bears the name of James B. Rogers, M. D., Dean. This course included lectures on the theory and practice of medicine by Daniel Drake, M. D. The lectures on chemistry and pharmacy were given by James B. Rogers, M. D. He was also regularly admitted to the lectures by Landon Rivers, M. D. and Joseph N. McDowell, M. D. His uncles, Alexander and James Vance, had removed from Greensboro to Cincinnati in 1817, where they controlled a line of steamboats on the Ohio River. Doctor Boughner lived with his uncles while in Cincinnati, and his life there opened new vistas on his social horizon. Dr. Lyman Beecher was at that time connected with Lane Seminary, and he also preached in the Presbyterian Church there. The Vance family were on terms of intimacy with the Beecher family, and Doctor Boughner considered it one of his great privileges to be admitted to this social circle. Here he met Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Miss Catherine Beecher, who presided over her father's home.

After completing his medical studies he located at Mt. Morris, Greene County, Pennsylvania, on the line between Pennsylvania and Virginia. He practiced medicine in both states. He married on May 8, 1845, Miss Louisa Jane Brown, daughter of Andrew and Martha (Worley) Brown, at Browns Mills, Monongalia County. Their family consisted of the following six children: Rosalie, Mary Lavinia, (Mrs. Melville E. Howe), William LeRoy, Martha, Emma and Andrew Brown.

The ancestry of Mrs. Boughner (now deceased) was exclusively pre-Revolutionary. She was a direct descendant of Wendell Brown, who was born in 1700 in this country.

Judge Veech in his "History of the Monongahela Valley" says that Wendell Brown and his son Manus (Emmanuel) were the first white settlers west of the Allegheny Mountains. For services rendered to the king in border warfare he was granted a tract of land comprising nine square miles in what is now Fayette County, Pennsylvania. The town of Brownsville, Pennsylvania, is situated on a portion of this land, which was sold by Thomas Brown, one of Wendell's sons. Wendell Brown and his sons Manus, Adam and Thomas penetrated this land as hunters, but later returned East and brought back their families with them and made their homes in the wilderness in 1750 or 1751.

According to family tradition Wendell Brown was a descendant of Peter Brown of the Mayflower. He and his sons were loyal friends of Washington, supplying his starving army with beef and chopped flour at Fort Mifflin in 1754.

The paternal ancestors of Mrs. Boughner, whose records of service in the Revolutionary war have been established, are Manus (Emmanuel) and Adam Brown, and Capt. Rudolph Statler. Col. Jasper Cather and Brice Worley are recorded Revolutionary soldiers belonging to her maternal ancestry.

Doctor Boughner represented Greene County in the legislatures of Pennsylvania of 1845-1846 and 1846-1847. On December 15, 1847, he received his degree of M. D. from the Philadelphia College of Medicine. The diploma bears the signatures of John P. Durbin, president, and Robert McGrath, secretary, in addition to the names of six professors in the college.

Soon after his marriage Doctor Boughner removed to Brown's Mills (tentress) in Monongalia County. The arduous duties of a general practitioner of medicine in a country district menaced his health, and in 1859 he removed to Morgantown and retired from the practice of medicine.

The terrible years were now upon the country, and the excitement and agitation preceding the Civil war shook the foundations of our Government. Western Virginia was in the throes of a mighty upheaval, which resulted in its separation from the parent state. Monongalia County was strongly in favor of the union, and intense in its opposition to secession. A large assemblage of citizens convened at the Court House in Morgantown on Wednesday evening, April 17, 1861, to take action on resisting secession. Doctor Boughner was chairman of the committee on resolutions and the real author of the trend of their sentiments. In these resolutions, which were adopted, a strong protest was embodied against the secession of Virginia, with instructions to the delegates to the State Convention to propose a division of the state should the ordinance of secession be passed. After Virginia voted to secede the people in North Western Virginia held a convention in Wheeling on May 13, 1861, "to consult and determine upon such action as the people in that section should take in this fearful emergency." Doctor Boughner was elected a delegate to this convention. He became one of the most enthusiastic advocates of the Union, and exerted all of his powers to maintain the stability of our Government. He was an able and fluent writer, and did much to mould public opinion in his community by contributions to the current newspapers.

In 1864 he was appointed paymaster in the Federal Army with the rank of major, and served in this capacity until the end of the war. He was stationed principally at Detroit, Milwaukee and Indianapolis. In the reconstruction period, after the war, in the adjustment of political sentiments, involving so many new issues, Doctor Boughner joined the ranks of the republican party, although in early life he had been a Jeffersonian democrat.

Early in the history of the new state of West Virginia Doctor Boughner was appointed collector of internal revenue for the second collection district. He was a member of the State Legislature of 1867-68.

He was always an enthusiast in affairs of state, and possessed a profound knowledge of the currents of our political history. He had deep convictions in the problems of his day, and kept in touch with legislation on questions of national importance.

Unschooling in strategy, the arts of diplomacy were foreign to the nature of Doctor Boughner, who retired from active politics and entered a field of usefulness more in accordance with his tastes.

He had always been fond of certain phases of country life, and even when engaged in political activities he was interested in several small farms. His taste in that direction found full bent in later life, when he devoted his time to the supervision of his 500-acre farm near Fairmont, twenty miles from his home. The farm was near a railroad, which afforded a fine opportunity for the shipment of cattle. Stock raising became the principal industry on this fine grazing land, and the cattle were shipped to Eastern markets.

Doctor Boughner always enjoyed splendid health, and had not suffered impaired vitality until his last illness, which was of short duration. At the time of his passing he had not yet manifested any of the failings of elderly life. He was as alert, active and enthusiastic as in youth. His death occurred at his home in Morgantown on February 8, 1882, with interment in Oak Grove Cemetery. He would have celebrated his seventieth birthday on the 9th of the following April.

Coming from a long line of Presbyterian ancestry, and imbibing from childhood the principles of this religion, he maintained throughout life his allegiance to its traditions. Reared in a family of austere piety, his nature, always retained the simplicity and directness characteristic of such an environment. The elements which gave distinction to his character are not easily defined. His individuality lives in the memory of all who knew him, but no special quality can be mentioned as his supreme gift. His personality seemed to be the composite effect of a multifarious mentality. He was an enemy to all sham and pretense, and the keen edge of his sarcasm did not spare the affectations of snobishness. He was a good friend, but could deal heavy blows to an antagonist, though he never harbored malice and suspicion, casting them out as enemies of peace. The spirit of youth always dwelt in him, enabling him to attract and hold friends, whose difference in age from his sometimes measured a score of years. His temperament was essentially optimistic, which, united with his brilliant and scintillating wit, caused him to radiate pleasure in any social circle.

His passion for good literature found food for gratification in a large miscellaneous library he had collected mainly during his life in Cincinnati. He had in his possession many of the classics of the 18th century, including a first edition of the poems of Robert Burns.

With a bright intelligence enriched by culture, he was capable of enjoying any company. He was democratic in his social ideas, and never failed to derive benefit from association with the great mass of the people. At the time of his death it was claimed that he had a larger acquaintance with his fellow men than any other man in the county. His affection for all sorts and conditions of men was one of his predominant qualities.

He was gifted with insight and vision intensified by his life in the open, where all manifestations of nature held his admiration. He thought deeply on the significance and responsibilities of this life in connection with its continuance in the life to come. His musings on the spiritual existence caught the gleam of "the light that never was on sea or land."

HENRY LOUIS CARSPERKEN. When an individual has been identified with the business, financial and civic interests of a community for a period of more than twenty years it would be an anomaly were he not intimately known to the citizens of that place. In the seething, progressive life of a rising, enterprising town or city the man who shows himself interested in the advancement of the public well is bound to be more or less in the public eye, and that eye, as it has often shown itself, is capable of piercing its way into the best-buried secrets. For more than twenty years the record of Henry Louis Carspeken has stood inviolate before the citizens of Morgantown, among whom he is recognized as a capable business man of sound integrity, a financier of ability and a citizen of public spirit and constructive ideas.

Mr. Carspeken was born in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, February 3, 1873, a son of Henry and Mary (Schott) Carspeken. His father was a civil engineer at Pittsburgh for many years, the latter's father was educated for that profession, and his grandfather practiced that vocation. In 1879 Henry Carspeken retired from civil engineering and removed to Oakland, Iowa, where he engaged in stock raising and farming for a number of years, but for the past twenty years has been living a retired life in that town. The mother of Henry L. Carspeken died when her son was an infant but nine days old.

Henry Louis Carspeken accompanied his father and the other children to Iowa, and in that state he attended the public schools, acquiring the equivalent of a high school education. At the age of eighteen years he commenced teaching school in the West, a vocation in which he was engaged for a year, and in the meantime prepared himself for college, with the intention of following the family vocation of civil engineering, as had his father, grandfather and great-grandfather. However, after returning to Pittsburgh and attending a business college he gave up, as he then thought temporarily, his intentions as a civil engineer, and in 1893 entered the glass industry as secretary to the president of the Brownsville Plate Glass Company at New Kensington, Pennsylvania, eighteen miles above Pittsburgh. Upon the death of the president of that company Mr. Carspeken reorganized that business under the name of the Brownsville Glass Company, and became its secretary and treasurer. Later on that concern was merged with the Appert Glass Company, whose plant was at Port Allegheny, Pennsylvania, and general offices in New York City. Mr. Carspeken became manager of the new concern. In 1903 he organized the Brownsville Glass Company, a new company with the old name, and became its secretary and general manager, in which capacities he built the plant at Morgantown, which later was absorbed by the Mississippi Glass Company. Mr. Carspeken continued as manager of the Morgantown plant of this concern, and has remained in the same capacity to the present time. For nearly twenty years he has been identified with the business interests of Morgantown, particularly those dealing with its oil, coal, glass, gas and allied financial interests, and has been an official and director of numerous companies in these lines, all of which have benefited through his connection. He is now vice president of the Bank of Morgantown, one of that city's most important banking institutions. He has at all times taken an active and helpful interest in local civic affairs, formerly served as president of the Morgantown Independent School District Board, is a member of the Morgantown Rotary Club, and served, with the rank of colonel, as a member of the staffs of Governors Glascock and Hatfield.

Mr. Carspecken married Miss May Hutson, daughter of the Rev. J. S. Hutson, a minister of the Baptist Church of Pittsburgh, and to this union there were born the following children: Harold, born in 1905; Margaret, born in 1907; Henry Louis, Jr., born in 1912; and John Frederic, born in 1915.

JAMES H. MCGREW, cashier of the Bank of the Monongahela Valley and who is recognized as one of the able bankers and progressive citizens of the City of Morgantown and of that part of the State of West Virginia, has been identified with this institution since 1891. During the more than thirty years that have passed he has not only worked his way to a substantial position with this concern, but has likewise been a prominent factor in the development of some of Morgantown's leading enterprises, and has also contributed materially to its civic progress and welfare.

Mr. McGrew was born at Morgantown, October 31, 1873, a son of William Clark and Julia E. (Willey) McGrew, and is descended from an old Scotch family which has been in America since prior to the War of the American Revolution and in West Virginia (then old Virginia) for over a century and a quarter. The American ancestors of this branch of the McGrew family came from Scotland in Colonial days and settled first in Virginia, removing thence to Pennsylvania. Patrick McGrew, son of the original immigrant, was born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, and in 1786 came to Preston County, now in West Virginia, settling near what is now Brandonville. His son, Col. James McGrew, was born in Preston County, where he spent practically his entire life. He commanded a regiment of Virginia Militia during the War of 1812. Colonel McGrew married Isabella Clark, the daughter of James Clark, a native of Ireland, who became an early settler of Preston County. James Clark's first wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Ramsey, died in 1770, and he returned to Ireland, where, in 1773, he married Eleanor Kirkpatrick, and later came back to America. James Clark McGrew, son of Col. James and Isabella (Clark) McGrew, was born September 14, 1813, near Brandonville. He began his business life at Kingwood, Preston County, as clerk in a general store, afterward becoming a successful merchant and prominent and influential man of his community. He was a delegate to the Virginia State Convention in 1861, in which body he vigorously opposed the ordinance of secession, and was one of the little band of about twenty men whose opposition to secession resulted ultimately in the erection of the new State of West Virginia. He served as a member of the House of Delegates of the first Legislature of West Virginia and later was elected a member of and served in the Forty-first and Forty-second sessions of the Federal Congress, but declined a re-nomination. He served as a director of the West Virginia State Hospital for the Insane, and was one of the organizers and the first president of the National Bank of Kingwood, being likewise a trustee of the Ohio Wesleyan University. Mr. McGrew was an earnest Methodist and was a delegate to the Methodist Ecumenical Conference held at London, England, in 1881. In that and the following year he traveled extensively in Europe, Asia and Africa. In 1841 he married Persis Hagans, daughter of the Hon. Harrison Hagans of Brandonville, West Virginia.

Hon. William Clark McGrew, son of James Clark and Persis (Hagans) McGrew, was born at Kingwood, Preston County, April 21, 1842, and was educated in select schools and at Preston Academy. He was engaged in the mercantile business at Kingwood from 1862 to 1870, and in the latter year removed to Morgantown, where he made his home until 1919. He was for many years prominent in the affairs of this part of West Virginia, and was frequently honored by election to political positions. He served five full terms as mayor of the City of Morgantown, and in 1878 and 1882 was sent as senator from the Eleventh District to the State Legislature. He was frequently called upon to preside over the deliberations of that body, and served as a member of various important committees. In 1907 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates. He also was active in the building of the Fairmont, Morgantown & Pittsburgh Railway, of which he was vice president and for fifteen years its agent at Morgantown; and was one of the organizers of the Economy Glass Company, and served as its treasurer, vice president and president through a long term of years. In fact, Mr. McGrew was closely identified with about every phase of the civic and business advancement of Morgantown for many years, and probably no other one man did more for the development of that part of West Virginia. In 1864 he was united in marriage with Julia E. Willey, daughter of the Hon. Waitman T. and Elizabeth E. (Ray) Willey. Mr. Willey was the first man sent to the United States Senate from West Virginia. William Clark McGrew died in 1919.

James H. McGrew was educated in the Morgantown public schools and at the University of West Virginia, and in 1891 entered the Bank of the Monongahela Valley as a clerk, having been continuously identified with that institution as boy and man for more than thirty years. He was made teller in 1893 and later promoted to assistant cashier, and in 1903 was elected to his present post of cashier. Mr. McGrew is president of the Monongahela Building Company, organized for the construction of the magnificent new home of the Bank of the Monongahela Valley, which is the largest and the only "sky-scraper" business block in this section of the state. He was one of the organizers and is vice president and treasurer of the Monongahela Building and Loan Association; was one of the organizers and is president of the Sesame Coal Company; was one of the organizers and is treasurer of the Chrisman Foundry Company; was one of the organizers and is treasurer of the Liberty Investment Company; was one of the organizers and is president of the Morgantown Machinery and Supply Company; was one of the organizers and is treasurer of the Dellslaw Coal Company; and is one of the owners of the Union Traction Company, the successor to the Smith Morgantown Traction Company.

Mr. McGrew is receiver for the Monongalia County Circuit Court. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Morgantown Lodge No. 4, F. and A. M., and the Morgantown Country Club, and is an old-time member of the Old Colony Club of Everywhere.

CEPHAS JACOBS became a resident of West Virginia, as now constituted, in the year 1853, and was one of the venerable and honored citizens of Morgantown, Monongalia County, at the time of his death, on the 2d of February, 1903. He was born in Allegany County, Maryland, January 8, 1826, and was a descendant of Zachariah Jacobs, who immigrated from Wales to America in 1740, and who first made settlement in Connecticut. In 1760 he removed to New Jersey, and Colonial records show that his son Jacob Jacobs served as a captain in the Patriot Army in the War of the Revolution, in which he was with General Washington at Valley Forge. Gabriel, son of Capt. Jacob Jacobs, was born in New Jersey, July 7, 1781, and was a young man when he settled in Allegany County, Maryland, where he remained until his death, October 11, 1848. He married Margaret Jackson, who was born May 27, 1783, and died October 20, 1855. Cephas Jacobs, son of Gabriel and Margaret Jacobs, was reared on his father's farm in Allegany County, Maryland, and from that state he came to West Virginia, then a part of Virginia, in 1853 and settled in Preston County, where he engaged in farming and where he built and operated grist and saw mills and a tannery. There he continued his residence until 1869, when he removed to a farm on the west side of Monongahela River in Grant District, Monongalia County, opposite the City of Morgantown. He there continued as one of the substantial exponents of farm industry in the county until 1892, when he removed to Morgantown, in which city he passed the remainder of his life. He was one of the organizers and became president of the First National Building & Loan Association at Charleston, this state, and was a director of the Second National Bank of Morgantown. He was a staunch republican, and he served two terms as justice of the peace in Grant District and one term as a member of the city council of Morgantown. He was affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife were zealous members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Morgantown.

April 10, 1851, recorded the marriage of Cephas Jacobs with Margaret Ann Ravenscraft, daughter of Abner and Nancy (Corbus) Ravenscraft, of Maryland, and she survived him by nearly twelve years, her death having occurred September 13, 1914.

Elmer Forrest Jacobs, son of Cephas and Margaret Ann Jacobs, was born on the home farm of his father on Bird's Creek, Preston County, this state, June 11, 1866, and was three years old at the time of the family removal to Monongalia County, where he was reared to manhood, received the discipline of the public schools and finally entered the University of West Virginia, with the intention of preparing himself for the profession of civil engineering. But upon the advice of Col. T. Moore Jackson, then at the head of the School of Engineering, West Virginia University, Mr. Jacobs decided to take up architecture, Colonel Jackson having given him special instruction along this line. He was impatient at the delay in placing himself in a position to earn a salary, and on this account left the university and entered the office of J. L. Beatty, an architect in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He remained five years with Mr. Beatty and gained a thorough technical and practical training in the architectural art and science. In 1893 he assumed charge of designing and construction with the Pittsburgh firm of W. A. Hoeveller & Company, and later he became superintendent of construction for the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company of Pittsburgh.

In the fall of 1894 Mr. Jacobs opened an office in Morgantown, where he now stands virtually at the head of his profession in this part of West Virginia, as well as being the oldest architect in point of experience and continuous practice at Morgantown. Among many important buildings designed by and erected under the supervision of Mr. Jacobs are the Madeira (formerly the Franklin) Hotel; Woodburn Hall and an addition to Science Hall, of the University of West Virginia; chapter houses of the Sigma Chi, Beta Theta Pi, Kappa Alpha, Phi Sigma Kappa, Phi Kappa Psi and Phi Kappa Sigma fraternities at the State University; Farmers and Merchants Bank; the old post office at Morgantown, which was the first fire-proof building in this section of the state and is now occupied by the Union Savings and Trust Company; the plant of the Seneca Glass Company; plant of the Union Stopper Company; Fourth Ward school building; First Methodist Protestant Church, Morgantown; First Methodist Episcopal Church, Mount Morris, Pennsylvania; and residences of George C. Baker, William Moorhead, J. H. McDermott, J. C. McVicker, Francis Heermans, J. C. Frazier, and many others of the most modern type in Morgantown and vicinity. Mr. Jacobs is a member of the American Institute of Architects, his affiliation with that organization dating from May 24, 1902.

He married Miss M. Ella Wood, daughter of the late A. C. Wood, of Morgantown, and they have two children. Virginia is the wife of Allen Davis Bowie, of Wheeling, this state, and they have one child, Mary Eleanor. David Wood Jacobs is at the time of this writing, in 1921, a student in the Morgantown High School.

JOHN M. GREGG. One of the widely known, prominent and popular men of Monongalia County is John Morton Gregg, county clerk and president of the Bank of Morgantown. For nearly half a century he has been closely identified with the business, civic and political history of this county and city, a man of initiative and energy, and a moving force for progress and the general welfare.

John M. Gregg was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, November 18, 1865, but has spent all but the first eleven years of his life at Morgantown, to which city he came in 1876 with his parents. He is a son of Thomas M. and Margaret M. (Cooper) Gregg, both natives of Pennsylvania. Thomas M. Gregg was born in Washington County in 1836, and became a farmer there and afterward in Monongalia County, but later became a merchant. He married Margaret M. Cooper, who died June 1, 1911. They had children as follows: Oscar C.; Charles T., who is deceased; Ira L.;

Mary E., who married Taylor N. Dawson; Jesse W.; Roma P.; Bessie, who married R. A. Wilbourne; and John M.

John M. Gregg acquired his education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, attending the university also in the latter state. He early took an interest in public affairs and so won the attention and confidence of those in authority that in 1888 he was appointed deputy clerk of the Circuit Court by Col. R. E. Fast, and served for four years. In 1889 he was elected city auditor of Morgantown, and filled that office with entire efficiency. In 1890 he was a candidate for the republican nomination for Circuit Court clerk, but was defeated by Hon. William E. Glasscock, later governor of West Virginia. Mr. Gregg served as deputy for Mr. Glasscock for two and a half years, when he resigned to become bookkeeper for the Morgantown Union Improvement Company, which later became the Union Utilities Company. On January 1, 1898, while still with the above company, he was appointed secretary of the West Virginia State Geological Survey, which position he resigned January 1, 1903, in order to assume the duties of county clerk, to which office he had been elected in the previous fall. In 1908 he was re-elected county clerk, and has served continuously since his first election. He is very popular in this office because of his sterling integrity, his complete efficiency and his never failing courtesy.

Mr. Gregg has been a very loyal citizen of Morgantown and has given encouragement to many substantial local enterprises. He was one of the organizers of the Bank of Morgantown, an amply financed and carefully managed financial institution, and served as a member of its board of directors until 1919, in which year he was elected president, and so continues.

In 1889 Mr. Gregg married Miss Elizabeth M. Berkshire, a daughter of Nicholas W. and Virginia (Morgan) Berkshire, and they have two daughters and one son: Lucile C., John Morton, Jr., and Margaret. John M. Gregg, Jr., married Miss Stella Duncan, daughter of George H. Duncan, of Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Mr. Gregg and his family are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Morgantown, and they take a prominent part in church affairs and also in the city's pleasant social life. As a public man Mr. Gregg is often called upon to serve on benevolent boards and civic commissions, and fraternally is identified with such representative organizations as the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Junior Order United American Mechanics, warm personal friendship often entering into these relations.

FRENCH D. WALTON has effected a crystallization of his former years of newspaper experience by establishing in the City of Wheeling an important business enterprise, which he conducts under the title of the Wheeling Publicity Bureau. He was born in this city, October 23, 1875, and is a son of John and Allie (Ebbert) Walton. The latter died when French D. was but six weeks old. John Walton was born at Woods-field, Ohio, in 1842, was reared and educated in the old Buckeye State and represented the same as a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, shortly after the close of which he came to Wheeling, West Virginia, where eventually he became a leading member of the bar of Ohio County and where during the last fifteen years of his life he held the office of chief deputy of the Circuit Court for this county. He was a staunch democrat, was an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was long and actively affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. He was one of the honored and well-known citizens of Wheeling at the time of his death in 1898.

At the inception of the Civil war John Walton enlisted in the Twenty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and his active service covered virtually the entire period of the war, save for the intervals when he was incapacitated by wounds. His regiment took part in the various engagements of the Army of the Potomac, he was twice wounded, and as a result of the severe wounds he received at the battle of Gettysburg he suffered the loss of a part of his left foot. He vitalized his interests in his old comrades by his affiliation with the Grand Army of the Republic. Of his three children the first, William, died in childhood; Lotta is the wife of Edward S. Campbell, a traveling salesman, and they reside in Wheeling; and French D., of this sketch, was an infant at the time of his mother's death, as previously noted.

In the public schools of Wheeling French D. Walton continued his studies until he was sixteen years of age, and then took a position in the tea store of the C. D. Kenny company, where he continued to be employed three years. He then initiated his career in connection with newspaper work by becoming a reporter on the Wheeling News, with which he continued his connection five years. On account of ill health he next entered the service of the Baltimore Ohio Railroad Company, in a position that did not list heavily against his physical powers, but as soon as he resumed his active alliance with newspaper work as a reporter for the Wheeling Intelligencer. He continued with this paper until 1905, when he accepted the post of cashier in the freight office of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad. In 1907 he resigned this position to take that of court reporter for the Ohio State Journal at Columbus, Ohio, but one year later he returned to Wheeling and became a reporter on the staff of the Daily News. Hereafter he served in turn as city editor and telegraph editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer, and later was telegraph editor for the Wheeling Daily News. In 1918 Mr. Walton became assistant general manager of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, and of this executive office he continued the incumbent until 1920, on the 5th of August of which year he established the Wheeling Publicity Bureau, of which he is the sole owner and the active manager. This bureau has the best of modern facilities for the effective conducting of publicity campaigns in connection with commercial, industrial and mercantile enterprises and for other promotive service of the first grade. Here are prepared and issued booklets, folders, form letters, etc., and Mr. Walton specializes also in writing publicity articles for newspapers, magazines and trade journals. The Wheeling Publicity Bureau is a center for well directed general advertising and promotive service, has a department devoted to addressing and mailing commercial letters, with a complete multigraphic equipment. In short, Mr. Walton has capitalized his long and successful newspaper experience in prosperous and valuable business enterprise of his own. He maintains his well appointed office headquarters at 5-206 Court Theater Building.

Mr. Walton is aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church in his home city, besides being assistant superintendent of its Sunday School, is past chancellor of Mystic Lodge No. 24, Knights of Pythias, and is an active member of the local Kiwanis Club. He owns his attractive home property, in the Edgedale District of Wheeling. In the World war period Mr. Walton gave characteristically earnest and effective service in the furtherance of local patriotic objects, was publicity secretary in the Government loan drives, Red Cross campaigns, etc., in Wheeling and Ohio County, and did all in his power to advance the work to which he thus set himself.

February 28, 1898, recorded the marriage of Mr. Walton and Miss Edna R. Watkins, daughter of the late Charles and Anne (Marsh) Watkins, of Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Walton have three children: John Marsh, who was born November 26, 1900, is a graduate of the Linsly Institute at Wheeling, later continued his studies in the University of West Virginia, and there, at the age of eighteen years, became a member of the Students Army Training Corps when the nation became involved in the World war, he is now in the employ of the Clarke Paper Company of Wheeling; French D., Jr., who was born November 10, 1901, is an assistant in his father's offices; and J. Elwood, born October 23, 1904, is, in 1921, a student in the Triadelphia District High School.

GARFIELD DAVIES. In the impersonal discharge of their official duties a large majority of the incumbents of public office appear to feel that they have fully fulfilled their responsibilities. In a way this may be true, but, and this is a fortunate thing for various of our communities, there are others who are not satisfied merely with taking care of their duties by rote and rule, but are constantly seeking opportunities by which they may benefit their communities and add to the value of their services. In this latter class undoubtedly stands Garfield Davies, clerk of the Circuit Court of Monongalia County, and a public-spirited citizen whose ideals of citizenship have found an outlet in his identification with a number of constructive and beneficial civic movements.

Mr. Davies was born August 14, 1855, in Wales, and is a son of William A. and Mary (Phillips) Davies, both also natives of that country. His father, an ironworker in Wales, brought the family to the United States in 1892, and was one of the first expert workmen to come to this country when the steel industry was beginning to assume important proportions through expansion. He located at Gas City, Indiana, where he was employed in the mills until 1905, in which year he removed to Morgantown, where he has since been living.

Garfield Davies received his early education in the public schools of Gas City, where he had arrived as a lad of four years. From 1902 to 1904 he attended the Marion (Indiana) Normal School, and his business experience was commenced in the latter year as bill clerk for the Vonnegut Hardware Company of Indianapolis, where he advanced by promotion to the position of credit man of that company, with which he continued for eight years. During that period he applied himself at night to the reading of law, and was admitted to the Indiana bar in 1909, at the age of twenty-one years. He entered the University of West Virginia in the spring of 1914, taking parts of the arts and science course and a part of the law course.

In the winter of 1917-1918 Mr. Davies worked at the Bertha Mine near Morgantown, and five months later was called to the main office of that corporation at Pittsburgh. After two weeks he left that concern and returned to Morgantown, where he accepted a position as court reporter. He thus became well known to the people because of his daily attendance at court proceedings, and this, in connection with his knowledge of the law, his general popularity and his known all-around ability, caused him to be considered as good material for public office. In the spring of 1920 he was successful in the republican primaries for the nomination for the office of Circuit Court clerk of Monongalia County, and in the ensuing election was put into office by a large majority for a term of six years, starting January 1, 1921. His record thus far has been an excellent one and his conscientious and energetic service has won him the esteem of his fellow-officials and the confidence of the public.

During the World war, being prevented by physical disabilities from entering the United States service as a soldier, Mr. Davies became secretary to the Advisory Board of Monongalia County, which body worked in conjunction with the Draft Board and performed other valuable service. Mr. Davies is secretary of Monongalia Lodge No. 10, I. O. O. F.; secretary of Orphans' Friend Chapter No. 14 of that order; manager of Camp No. 6931, Modern Woodmen of America; and an active member of Monongalia Lodge No. 264, Loyal Order of Moose. He has been associated with several local movements for the welfare and recreation of boys and young men, and is director of the Sunday School choir of the First Baptist Church of Morgantown, of which he is an active member. Energetic, enterprising and public-spirited, he is a force for advancement and progress in his city, where his acquaintance is wide and his friends are legion.

On August 5, 1920, at Morgantown, Mr. Davies was united in marriage with Miss Martha Elizabeth Snyder, a daughter of Allison W. Snyder, a well-known agriculturist carrying on operations on his valuable property located in the vicinity of Kingwood, Preston County, West Virginia.

IRVIN HARDY, M. D., F. A. C. S. Among the prominent men of Morgantown, using the term in its broadest sense to indicate high professional skill, sterling character, public beneficence and upright citizenship, is Dr. Irvin Hardy, owner and surgeon in charge of the City Hospital and Training School for Nurses. Doctor Hardy is a native of Dunbar, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and was born July 4, 1873, a son of James and Elizabeth (Keffer) Hardy.

The branch of the Hardy family to which the doctor belongs traces its genealogy to William Hardy, the great-grandfather of Doctor Hardy, who came with troops, either from Virginia or Maryland, into Pennsylvania to suppress the historic "Whiskey Rebellion," a local insurrection occurring in opposition to the excise law passed by Congress March 3, 1791. In addition to the general objections urged against the measure the inhabitants of Western Pennsylvania considered the tax an unfair discrimination against their region and raised an insurrection, causing President Washington to call out an army of 15,000 militia. This show of an unsuspected vigor and resource on the part of the Government forced the insurgents to disperse without bloodshed. At the close of this fiasco William Hardy settled at Dunbar, where he spent the remainder of a long, useful and honorable life, and reached the remarkable age of 103 or 104 years.

Isaac Hardy, son of William Hardy, was born, reared and always lived at Dunbar, Pennsylvania, and also attained advanced age, although not reaching that of his father. His son, James Hardy, father of the doctor, was born in 1842, at Dunbar, where was born also his wife, who was a daughter of Adam Keffer, another life-long resident of Dunbar. She died in 1917.

After attending the public schools of Dunbar Irvin Hardy entered Milton Academy at Baltimore, Maryland, and when he had completed his course in that institution enrolled as a student in the Maryland Medical College in the three-year course, graduating with the class of 1899 as a Doctor of Medicine, following which he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the same city under the four-year plan. He also spent one year in the study of general medicine at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. Even after he had commenced practice, Doctor Hardy continued his studies, and in 1909 was graduated with the degrees of Doctor of Medicine and Master of Surgery from Queens University, Kingston, Ontario, Canada. In 1905 he established the Allegheny Heights Hospital at Davis, West Virginia, and had charge thereof until 1911, in which year he disposed of that institution and located at Morgantown, where he established what is now the City Hospital and Training School for Nurses, of which he is the owner and surgeon in charge, and to which he gives the main part of his professional attention, although he also occupies the chair of surgery at the University of West Virginia.

Doctor Hardy is a member of the Monongalia County Medical Society, of which he was elected president December 6, 1921, of the West Virginia Medical Society and the American Medical Association and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons. He is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, F. and A. M.; Morgantown Chapter No. 30, R. A. M.; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, R. and S. M., at Wheeling, West Virginia; and a life member of Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., also at Wheeling. He likewise belongs to the Morgantown Masonic Club and is an active member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce.

On September 18, 1895, Doctor Hardy was united in marriage with Miss Nina M. Twyford, daughter of Thomas and Nancy Twyford, of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, and to this union there has been born one daughter, Edith L., who resides with her parents at Morgantown.

ENOCH M. EVERLY. There has always been a strong contention among intelligent men that an individual can have no better training for success in life than that which comes from work as an educator. Certain it is that many of the leading professional men of the country began their careers as teachers, and this applies to Enoch M. Everly, now one of the leaders of the Morgantown bar and senior member of the law firm of Everly & Bowman. Prior to his entrance into his present profession, he had attained standing and reputation as an educator.

Mr. Everly was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, January 28, 1864, a son of Allen and Mariah (Brewer)

Everly. His grandfather, Nicholas Everly, was a pioneer of Greene County, where he settled soon after the close of the War of the Revolution on land secured by grant from the United States Government. He was a son of Ada Everly, a soldier of the War of the Revolution, who served under Capt. George Strickler with the Maryland troop. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Everly were Daniel and Mary Brewer. The father died when Enoch M. was only few months old, while his mother passed away in 1915.

After completing the common school course in Greene County, Enoch M. Everly found it necessary to assist in his own support, and accordingly adopted the vocation of educator and taught in the same school which he had attended as well as in other schools in his home locality. He was graduated in the classical course at Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, in 1892, having in the meantime spent several years in study, teaching and farm work during the vacation periods. Leaving college, Mr. Everly continued to teach. He was principal of the Mount Morris (Pennsylvania) High School in 1895, organized and conducted several large and successful private normal schools for the training of teachers, and during parts of the years 1900, 1904, 1905 and 1906 attended Waynesburg College, where he completed the higher courses, and in 1896 received a degree of Doctor of Philosophy. In the fall of 1896 he accepted the chair of mathematics in the McKeesport (Pennsylvania) High School, in 1897 was appointed principal of one of the ward schools of that city, and subsequently was made principal of McKeesport's largest and most centrally located public school.

In the fall of 1899 Mr. Everly began reading law with the Pittsburgh Law School class, and in 1902 resigned his position as teacher at McKeesport and entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws as member of the class of 1903. Admitted to the bar of the state in the same year, he at once began practice at Morgantown, where he has continued to the present. His practice is limited to general law, specializing in corporation work, a field in which he has met with great success. Mr. Everly is a director in and counsel for several large corporations. He is a member of the Monongalia County Bar Association and his religious connection is with the Baptist Church, of which he is a member of the Board of Trustees. A democrat in his political views, he has long been one of the strong and influential members of his party in this section, and in 1912 was its candidate for circuit judge, but met defeat although running ahead of his ticket. In 1916 he was its candidate for state senator, and although running in a district strongly republican, was defeated by only three votes.

In 1898 Mr. Everly married Eva M. Keener, the daughter of James and Mary (Shroyer) Keener. Mrs. Everly is an alumnus of the California (Pennsylvania) State Normal School and of Waynesburg (Pennsylvania) College, and at the time of her marriage was a teacher in the McKeesport (Pennsylvania) public schools. To Mr. and Mrs. Everly there has been born a daughter, Mary, a member of the class of 1921 at Morgantown High School.

EDWARD GREGG DONLEY. The law is known as a stern mistress, demanding of her devotees constant and unmitigated attention and leading her followers through many mazes and intricacies before they reach the goal of their desires. This incessant devotion frequently precludes the possibility of the successful lawyer indulging in activities outside of the straight path of his profession, especially if his vocational duties are of an extensive and important character. Yet there are men who find the opportunity and inclination to devote to outside interests, and who by the very reason of their legal talents are peculiarly and particularly equipped to perform capable and useful service therein. Edward Gregg Donley has been known for twenty-two years as a close devotee of the law. A master of perplexities and complexities, his activities have been directed incessantly to the demands of his calling. Yet he has found the leisure to discharge in a highly efficient manner the duties dictated by a high ideal of citizenship, and is, therefore, probably as well known at Morgantown as a public-spirited factor in civic affairs as he is as a thorough, profound and learned legislator.

Mr. Donley was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, March 23, 1878, a son of the late David L. and Louisa Evans Donley. This branch of the Donley family was founded in America by James Donley, who came over from Ireland in about the year 1783. While he was not a soldier of the American Revolution, he was with Washington's Army and was with the troops sent to quell the "Whiskey Insurrection" in Western Pennsylvania. Like numerous others of these soldiers, after receiving his honorable discharge from the service at Pittsburgh he went to Greene County, Pennsylvania, where he established a permanent home. His son, Joseph R. Donley, was a storekeeper at Jimtown, Monongalia County, Virginia, in 1830, as shown by the early records of that county.

David L. Donley, the son of Joseph R. Donley, and father of Edward Gregg Donley, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1836, and died at Morgantown, West Virginia, in 1908. He was for many years a successful agriculturist, stock grower and banker in Greene County, and was very active in oil, his farm having been situated in the oil district in Pennsylvania which was the scene of the first big oil strike in 1887. The mother of Edward G. Donley was born in Monongalia County, Virginia, in 1845, and died in Oklahoma in 1911. She was a daughter of Alexander Evans, who owned a farm in Cass District, Monongalia County, as early as 1845. His mother was a daughter of Capt. James Vance of the Continental Army in the revolutionary war, and fifty years after the close of that struggle was granted a pension for his service as a commissioned officer.

Edward Gregg Donley received his early education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Kansas, following which he entered the University of West Virginia, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in the class of 1899. In that year he was admitted to the West Virginia bar and entered practice at Morgantown as a junior member of the firm of Donley & Hatfield, which association continues. His advancement in his calling has been consistent, serving to place him among the leading members of the Monongalia County bar. He has a large, remunerative and representative professional business, and all merits the high esteem in which he is held by his clients and by his fellow-members at the bar.

In 1907 Mr. Donley was elected a member of the Morgantown City Council, serving in that capacity for three years, and in 1910 was elected mayor, an office to which he was re-elected in 1911. His public service was characterized by high conception of duty and a capable and conscientious activity in the discharge of his duties. He is a charter member, president and attorney of the Athens Building and Loan Association, one of the largest institutions of its kind in the city; president of the Blue Flame Fuel Company, a wholesale coal company, was formerly a director of the Federal Savings & Trust Company, is a director of the Rosedale Company, and the Commercial Bank of Morgantown, and is financially interested in other corporations at home and abroad. He belongs to the Phi Kappa Sigma college fraternity, of the Monongalia County Bar Association and of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, in all of which he has numerous friends. He is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Donley married Miss Eleanor Tucker, daughter of Julius Tucker, formerly of Greene County, Pennsylvania, and to this union there has been born one son, Robert Tucker, who graduated from Morgantown High School, class of 1920, and in 1921 is a sophomore at the University of West Virginia. Mrs. Donley's grandmother, Eleanor Rose, was a cousin to President William McKinley, whose mother was a member of the Rose family.

CHRISTIAN STEINMETZ, proprietor of the Steinmetz paper-box manufacturing in the City of Wheeling, was born in the town of Oestrich, on the Rhine, Germany, December 27, 1843, and is to-day one of the veteran business men and honored and influential citizens of Wheeling, in which city he established his home in 1868. He is a son of Christian and Sophia (Steinmetz) Steinmetz, both of whom passed their entire lives in Germany, the father having died when the subject of this sketch was a child and the mother having passed the closing years of her life at Frankfort-on-Main.

He whose name introduces this sketch was the only child of his parents and gained his early education in the provincial schools of his native town. At Frankfort-on-Main he learned the trades of book-binding and paper-box making, to which he continued to devote his attention in his native land until 1866, when he came to the United States and settled at Indiana, Pennsylvania. Later he entered the employ of English & Osgood, book-binders in the City of Pittsburgh, that state, where he remained until 1868, when he came to Wheeling and here engaged in the manufacturing of paper boxes for the Wheeling Hinge Company. From this modest inception he has labored earnestly and effectively in the developing and building of the substantial manufacturing enterprise of which he is now the owner. His former factory was at 1221 Main Street, and November 19, 1919, he removed to the modern factory plant which he erected and equipped for the purpose at the corner of Twenty-fifth and Woods streets, the building being four stories in height and 66 by 87 feet in dimensions. The mechanical facilities and all accessories of the plant are of the most approved modern type, and the output includes not only paper boxes in endless varieties but also various types of wooden boxes, including cigar boxes. The products are sold throughout the trade territory normally tributary to Wheeling for a radius of 100 miles, and in the factory is retained a force on an average of from 75 to 100 employees, many of whom are skilled mechanics. Mr. Steinmetz continued as the active executive head of this prosperous industrial enterprise until January, 1920, when he turned the business over to the control of his three sons and one daughter. He is a director of the Citizens-Peoples Trust Company, is a stockholder in the Wheeling Steel Corporation and various local enterprises, and is one of the capitalists of the city that has long represented his home and had the stage of his constructive activities here. His residence is at 2134 Chapline Street. He is affiliated with the Knights of St. George of America, in which he is a director, and is an earnest communicant of St. Alphonsus Catholic Church.

In 1870 Mr. Steinmetz wedded Miss Amelia Walter, and she died at Wheeling at the age of twenty-eight years. Agnes, younger of the two children of this union, died at the age of one year; George P., the elder, is one of the owners of the business founded and developed by his father.

In 1877 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Steinmetz to Miss Bernadine Schafer, who was born in Germany, in 1855, and whose death occurred in 1914, she having been a young woman when she came from her native land to the United States and became a resident of Wheeling. Of the children of this second marriage the eldest is Sophia, who is the wife of George P. Erb, of Wheeling. Clement A. and Lawrence C. are associated with their elder brother in the Steinmetz box-manufacturing business, which is a closed company, all stock being owned by members of the family only.

Mr. Steinmetz was far advanced in his foresight of the possibilities that the Wheeling District held, and from time to time invested in many industries that have helped make Wheeling one of the prominent manufacturing cities of this country.

FRANKLIN MARION BRAND. Member of one of Monongalia's oldest and most honored families, Franklin Marion Brand has on the score of his individual initiative and abilities gained a high place at the Morgantown bar and as a man of affairs in that community.

Brand is one of the older family names in Virginia. The first ancestor of whom there is definite information was John Brand, who married Jane McCray. Their son, James Brand, was born October 5, 1788, and married Elizabeth Wade. One of their older sons was Hosea Moore Brand, who was born April 3, 1828, near Laurel Point in Monongalia County. He died June 27, 1904. On October 14, 1852, he married Enaretta Weaver, daughter of Jacob Weaver. One of their children was James Clark Brand, who was born in Cass District of Monongalia County, September 16, 1853. Like most of his family he followed farming and as a stock raiser was one of the first to introduce Hereford cattle into this section of the state. In 1877 he married Mary Alice Fleming. Her father, John T. Fleming, was sheriff of Monongalia County prior to the Civil war.

Franklin Marion Brand was the second in a family of eight children and was born on his father's farm in Cass District, March 13, 1880. When he was a boy his father moved to Grant District in 1883, and he grew up on the farm there. He made excellent use of his advantages in the Sugar Grove School, and in the fall of 1899, at the age of nineteen, he took the examination and was granted a No. 1 certificate, though he had had no experience as a teacher. He then taught in his home district, and in the spring of 1900 entered West Virginia University, where he was a student in the classical and law schools for seven years. He earned a large share of his expenses while in university, partly by canvassing during summer vacations and also teaching. He graduated A. B. with the class of 1906 and LL. B. in 1907. He won five different prizes in scholarship while in university, had the highest average in Greek and mathematics in 1902, and in 1906 represented the Parthenon Literary Society in joint debate with the Columbian Society. After graduating in law he accepted the position of principal of the Smithfield School in Pennsylvania, and on November 2, 1907, was admitted to the bar at Morgantown. He began practice April 1, 1908, and shortly afterward was chosen assistant prosecuting attorney, serving four years. During the fall of 1912 he taught criminal law in the West Virginia University. In 1913-14 he was employed in the legal department of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company in their New York City office. At this writing (1922) he is divorce commissioner of Monongalia County. With his increasing responsibilities as a lawyer he has responded to other calls upon his time and ability in the public welfare. In 1918 he was elected to the West Virginia Legislature, and during the regular session of 1919 was ranking member and acting chairman of the committee on public buildings and humane institutions, and was a member of the committee on Virginia debt, counties, districts and municipal corporations, insurance and forfeited and unappropriated lands. Mr. Brand was chosen in 1920 as mayor of Westover, the west side of Morgantown, and filled that office until February 1, 1921.

He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is active in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Monongahela Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, also with the Encampment, and the Junior Order United American Mechanics. He is a prominent member of the Sigma Nu fraternity, was commander of the local Chapter, and is now secretary of the association organized for the purpose of purchasing a Chapter House for the fraternity at the university.

November 12, 1910, Mr. Brand married Myrtle Otella Core, member of one of the prominent old families of Monongalia County and daughter of Benjamin and Catherine Core. They have three children: James Core, born May 3, 1913; Mary Kathryn, born July 12, 1915; and Freda Louise, born July 4, 1919.

CYRUS HAYMOND MAXWELL, M. D. Distinguished as a physician, Dr. Cyrus Haymond Maxwell occupies a prominent place among the medical men of Morgantown, where for twenty years he has devoted his high attainments to the accomplishment of work that has brought him widespread recognition and numerous honors. His professional achievements are based upon an intimate knowledge of the intricate subjects of human anatomy and scientific therapeutics.

Doctor Maxwell was born March 22, 1863, at St. George, Tucker County, Virginia, his birth occurring only a short time before what is now West Virginia, including Tucker County, withdrew from the mother state of Virginia. I is the son of Rufus and Sarah Jane (Bonniel) Maxwell and is in the direct descent from Thomas Maxwell, who married Jane Lewis, of near Germantown, Pennsylvania. After the death of her husband Jane Maxwell and her children, accompanied by her parents, came to Harris County, West Virginia, then Virginia. Levi Maxwell, son of Thomas and Jane Maxwell, was born in Pennsylvania in 1788, and died in West Virginia in 1884. He married Sarah Haymond. Their son, Rufus Maxwell, was born in Westover, West Virginia, October 19, 1828, and died in Tucker County in 1908. Educated for the law, he practiced his profession until the breaking out of the war between the states, but after the close of that conflict devoted himself to the pursuits of agriculture. He married Sarah Jane Bonniel, who was born at St. George, West Virginia, daughter of Dr. Arnold Bonniel, one of the earliest physicians west of the Alleghany Mountains in West Virginia.

Dr. Cyrus Haymond Maxwell attended school at Westover, West Virginia, Valparaiso, Indiana, and Fayetteville, Arkansas. He also attended the University of Colorado at Boulder, and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, class of 1898 from Gross Medical School, a medical department of Rocky Mountain University.

Prior to taking his medical degree he taught school in West Virginia, Oregon, California and Arkansas. He practiced medicine for four years at Aurora, West Virginia prior to locating at Morgantown in 1902. From that year until 1920 he served as chief of the medical department of the Morgantown and Kingwood Railway, and since that road was taken over by the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, 1920, Doctor Maxwell has served as surgeon of the B. & O. system. He is physician on the staff of the Morgantown City Hospital, is an ex-president of the Monongalia Medical Society, of which he has been for a number of years secretary, a post which he occupies at this time, and belongs also to the West Virginia Medical Society, of which he is one of the councilors. He keeps thoroughly informed concerning all that modern research, experiment and investigation are bringing to light bearing upon the practice of medicine and surgery. A well-trained and discerning mind enables him to grasp readily the vital and salient points presented, not only in medical literature but in the discussion of the broad questions which involve the welfare and progress of the individual and country at large.

In 1887 Doctor Maxwell married Miss Melvina J. Adams, who was born at Limestone, Tucker County, West Virginia, the daughter of George W. Adams. Doctor and Mrs. Maxwell have had the following children: Hugh Thurman, born in 1889, who died aged 1½ years; Rut born in 1891; Paul, born in 1894; Ralph, born in 1898; Cyrus, Jr., born in 1899; and a child born in 1900, who died in infancy.

I. M. AUSTIN, D. O. A school of medical science that has gained many enthusiastic adherents in West Virginia in the last decade is osteopathy, a scientific system of healing that has proved marvelously successful in the hands of skillful practitioners. One of these is found in Dr. I. M. Austin, who enjoys a large and lucrative practice at Morgantown, where he is respected and esteemed both professionally and personally.

Doctor Austin is a descendant of solid old families. Monongalia County, and was born on his father's farm in Clinton District, March 26, 1852. His parents were I. N. and Samantha A. (Chippis) Austin, both now deceased. The Austin family was established in Monongalia County by the great-grandfather of Doctor Austin in pioneer days. His son, Hugh Austin, was one of the representative men of the county. He manufactured the first brick in this county, and operated a brick yard on the present site of the West Virginia University. With $600 earned in the brick business, he purchased 600 acres of land in Clinton District, Monongalia County, cleared it and put it under cultivation and spent the rest of his life there. He was a fine, up-standing citizen in all that the term implies. In his religious views he was a Methodist and liberally supported the local Methodist Episcopal Church.

id was equally consistent in political life, his convictions leading him into the republican party on its organization. When the war between the states came on he saw four of his stalwart sons leave home to serve as soldiers in the Union army, and did not restrain them because he believed in a perpetuation of the Union. Two of these brave sons never returned alive, but their sacred ashes rest in the old cemetery at Halleck, brought there by their sorrowing mother from the trenches at Gettysburg and the river at Wheeling. The eldest of the four, Harrison Austin, was seriously wounded during the first day of battle at Gettysburg that he died on the day following. David Austin did not fall in battle, but was accidentally drowned while bathing with his soldier comrades near Wheeling. Henry Austin, the third son, was wounded at Gettysburg and afterward suffered capture and incarceration in the prison pen at Andersonville, Georgia. When finally exchanged he weighed less than ninety pounds, caused by malnutrition. After the close of the war he moved to Pratt County, Kansas, where he still resides, a substantial farmer and at present assessor of Pratt County. The fourth son, John Austin, served all through the war, escaping both wounds and capture. He then removed to Indianola, Iowa, where his death occurred in 1912.

I. N. Austin, son of Hugh and father of Doctor Austin, was born on the old Austin homestead April 11, 1849, and spent his entire life there as a farmer, dying February 9, 1921. Like his father he was a man of fine parts, hospitable and generous, substantial and reliable in every situation in life, a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a conscientious republican in politics. He married Miss Samantha A. Chipps, who was born on the old hipps farm in Clinton District, Monongalia County, November 29, 1849, and survived her husband but a few months, passing away April 23, 1921. She was a daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Frum) Chipps, both of pioneer families of the county. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Austin: Gertrude Gwynn, who is deceased; Hugh, who is a merchant at Morgantown; Harry N., who is a farmer near Little Falls, West Virginia; I. M.; and Jake, who tenderly cared for her parents in their declining years and still resides on the homestead.

Doctor Austin remained on the home farm until twenty years old, in the meanwhile completing the public-school course, and then accepted a clerical position in the store of G. W. John & Company at Morgantown, where he continued for nine years following, retiring from the same in 1900 in order to enter the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, for which he had done preparatory studying, for it is necessary for physicians of this school to be well grounded in all the various fundamental sciences which go to make up a medical education. Doctor Austin completed the course at Kirksville and in June, 1913, received his degree of Doctor of Osteopathy, and in the same year entered into practice at Morgantown, where his professional ability has received generous recognition and where he feels particularly at home, for his fellow citizens have known him almost all his life.

On October 13, 1910, Doctor Austin married Miss Gussie Powell, who is a daughter of Dr. M. T. Powell, a practicing physician at Newburg, West Virginia, and surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company. Doctor and Mrs. Austin have two sons: George M., born August 26, 1912; and Richard W., born November 25, 1920. At the same time as Doctor Austin, Mrs. Austin entered the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, and continued a student there for two years. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In his political views Doctor Austin is a republican and intelligently concerned in public affairs. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and aside from his profession has business interests in this city, being president of the Morgantown Laundry Company, of which he was one of the organizers, and owns considerable city realty. He is a member of the American Osteopathic Association and the West Virginia State Osteopathic Association, and fraternally is identified with the Odd Fellows and the Knights Pythias.

WASHINGTON WATERS STONESTREET, M. D. If there is one thing more than another that native Americans admire in each other it is courage, both physical and moral, and this element stands out in considering the interesting career of one of Morgantown's most valued citizens, Dr. Washington Waters Stonestreet, who has been established in medical practice in this city for thirteen years. Starting out alone and unaided in boyhood to make his own way in unfamiliar surroundings, for years subordinating his natural inclinations to the call of necessity, but finally seizing opportunity, pressing onward and succeeding in his life's ambition, Doctor Stonestreet's career offers an example of perseverance, courage and determination that carries with it a message that surely should hearten and encourage many another.

Doctor Stonestreet is of pronounced American ancestry. He was born at Rockville, the county seat of Montgomery County, Maryland, October 19, 1876, a son of the late Thomas Wilson and Anna Helena Dorothea (Treadwell) Stonestreet. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Thomas Stonestreet, was clerk of the Montgomery County Courts for over fifty years. His father was a graduate of the University of Virginia and of West Point Military Academy, served in the war between the states with the rank of captain, and afterward engaged in the practice of law at Rockville. The mother of Doctor Stonestreet was born in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and was a daughter of Oliver Wetmore and Helena (Krama) Treadwell, both of whom were born at New Haven, Connecticut. The maternal ancestors came to America from Holland.

During early boyhood Doctor Stonestreet attended school at Rockville, where his people were prominent socially. The aims and ambitions of fourteen-year-old boys are not always recognized by their parents, and this was the case when Washington W. Stonestreet quietly slipped away from home and shortly afterward found himself in the great City of New York and entirely dependent upon his own efforts. Perhaps reality may have somewhat dampened his ardor for independence right at first, but he lost no time in securing employment, accepting a position as clerk in a store, with a wage of $3 a week and board. That he proved efficient and reliable is evidenced by the fact that before he was seventeen years old he had become manager of the store.

In 1893 the youth returned home for a short visit, and then established himself as a merchant at Middlebrook, Maryland, where he continued until 1902. From early boyhood he had cherished the ambition to become a physician and surgeon, and during his merchandising years had never relinquished it, diligently furthering his education by private study and managing to secure a course in Rockville Academy, receiving the degree of A. B. By the time he was able to enter medical college he had a capital of $2,000, representing his own earnings. He then entered the University of Maryland at Baltimore, from which he was graduated with his degree of M. D. in the class of 1906, the end for which he had worked so hard for sixteen years.

Doctor Stonestreet immediately entered into medical practice, locating at first in the village of Obiopolis, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, removing in 1908 to Morgantown, West Virginia, where he has built up a large and lucrative practice and enjoys both professional and personal confidence and esteem.

On August 14, 1907, Doctor Stonestreet married Miss Olin Summit Trauty, who was born in the City of Baltimore and is a daughter of Henry G. and Emma (Underwood) Trauty, and a niece of Hon. Oscar Underwood, United States senator from Alabama. Doctor and Mrs. Stonestreet have one daughter, Ouida Emma, who was born May 18, 1910.

On April 18, 1918, Doctor Stonestreet was commissioned first lieutenant in the medical section, Officers Reserve Corps, United States Army, and on May 3, 1918, entered upon his duties at Fort Oglethorpe, Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, taking special courses in sanitary work in preparation for the same. Later he was appointed sanitary inspector at Camp McArthur, Waco, Texas, where he had 1,000,000 prospective soldiers for the World war under supervision, and continued his work there until December 4, 1918, when, with thirty-eight other medical officers of that camp, he was honorably discharged and mustered out of the service. During the whole period of the World war he was active in patriotic endeavor and assisted in many other ways than professional. He is identified with local medical bodies and is a member of the American Medical Association, and on many questions relating to civic health his decisions have been invaluable. He is president of the National Modern Woodmen of America Progressive League, and of the Auxiliary Order of Royal Neighbors, and is examining physician for both, is foreman of the local lodge of the American Brotherhood of Yeomen and its examining physician, and also is president and examining physician of the order of Fraternal Aid Union. In the every-day life of a busy city physician there is comparatively little leisure for many of the lighter occupations and sports seemingly so necessary to bring contentment into the lives of many individuals, but Doctor Stonestreet believes in moderate social relaxation and has a wide circle of warm and appreciative friends.

HARRY S. SANDS. One of the best filled professions today is electrical engineering, due to the enormous development of applied electricity to nearly every phase of life and industry. Thirty years ago, however, the ranks of electrical engineers hardly sufficed to be considered a distinct profession. Harry S. Sands, of Wheeling, proprietor of the Sands Electrical and Manufacturing Company, is one of the veterans of the profession and has been an electrical contractor and engineer at Wheeling nearly thirty years.

He was born at Fairmont, West Virginia, August 3, 1867, and his family has long been prominent in banking and the professional life of the state. His grandfather, Dr. William Sands, was a noted physician of his time, who spent his life at Annapolis and Baltimore, Maryland. He was born at Annapolis in 1804 and died at Baltimore in 1879. His son, Joseph E. Sands, was born on a farm near Annapolis in 1838, spent his early life there and in Baltimore, and as a young man moved to Fairmont, West Virginia. He had extensive farming interests in that locality, and was also a banker, president for many years of the First National Bank of Fairmont. He died in Fairmont in 1913. He was independent in politics, and one of the foremost laymen of the Episcopal Church at Fairmont, serving as vestryman throughout the period of his residence there. He was also a member of the Masonic Order. Joseph E. Sands married Virginia Eyster at Fairmont, where she was born in 1838. She still lives on the old homestead farm near Fairmont. Her father, Dr. George Eyster, devoted the greater part of his life to the practice of medicine at Fairmont. The children of Joseph E. Sands and wife were: Lawrence E., who is president of the First National Bank of Pittsburgh; Sprigg, who was president of the Traders National Bank of Clarksburg, where he died at the age of forty years; Mrs. Lula Vandervort, who died in 1901, at Fairmont, where her husband, also deceased, was assistant cashier of the First National Bank; Harry S.; Oliver J., president of the American National Bank of Richmond, Virginia; Dr. William H., who under the strain of his excessive professional duties during the influenza epidemic lost control of his automobile and in the resulting accident was killed at Fairmont; Emily, wife of W. T. Hartman, a retired wholesale grocer at Fairmont; Anna, wife of H. W. Showalter, a prominent coal operator in the Morgantown District and a resident of Fairmont.

Harry S. Sands attended the public schools of Fairmont, also the State Normal School there, and received his professional and technical training in Cornell University at Ithaca, New York. He was a member of the Phi Sigma Kappa Greek letter fraternity. After his university career he returned to Fairmont and for several years was engaged in installing mining machinery throughout that section. In 1894 he removed to Wheeling, where he established himself in business as an electrical contracting engineer under the name Sands Electrical & Manufacturing Company. This is not only one of the oldest but one of the most extensive firms of its kind in the state, and does a business throughout the Upper Ohio Valley.

Mr. Sands is also president of the Carle Electrical Construction Company of Akron, Ohio, is vice president of the Engineering & Equipment Company of Wheeling, ar is vice president and treasurer of the Penn Mold & Manufacturing Company, a company manufacturing ingot molds in their factory at Dover, Ohio. He is a member of the executive committee of the Security Trust Company of Wheeling. Mr. Sands owns a town home at 209 South Front Street and a suburban residence in Brooke County, West Virginia. Another property, constituting something of a diversion from his profession, is a large stock farm in Ohio County, the specialty of which is the breeding of Holstein cattle. Mr. Sands is an independent in politics and has served as a member of the Wheeling City Council. He is a vestryman of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, is member of the Masonic fraternity, the Country Club at the University Club of Wheeling. In 1892, at Baltimore, he married Miss Helen Turner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Turner.

HARRY FENTON SMITH, who came to Martinsburg as manager of the Western Union telegraph office and he remained in the city and become extensively interested in horticulture and other business affairs, is a member of very old American family and has an interesting lineage.

He was born in Frederick County, Maryland. His father, David Miller Smith, was born near Sharpsburg, Washington County, Maryland, August 26, 1833. The grandfather was Capt. David Smith, who was born near Sharpsburg, January 5, 1796. The great-grandfather was George Smith, born December 21, 1767, near Sharpsburg, and his father was George Smith, Sr., born in the same neighborhood about 1744. The father of George Smith, Sr., was founder of this branch of the family in America and was named Joseph Smith. He was a native of England, and came to America with his brother James. They settled in Washington County, Maryland. In 1749 Joseph Smith patented tract of land known as Elwicks dwellings and Smith's purchase, the two embracing 325 acres. His son George Smith bought property in Sharpsburg in 1765, lived there, and his wife was probated at Hagerstown in 1792. George Smith, Jr. inherited part of his father's estate. On September 4, 1787, he married Julia Ann von Miller, the name being originally spelled Muller. She was born near Sharpsburg March 1, 1771, daughter of David and Catherine (Fleck) von Mille and sister of Col. John Miller, an officer in the United States Army in the War of 1812, and also in the Maryland State Militia. George Smith, Jr., died March 3, 1834, an his wife, on June 3, 1852. Their six children were Joseph Catherine, Rebecca, David, Sarah, Elizabeth.

Capt. David Smith, grandfather of Harry Fenton, owned and operated a farm close to Antietam Station, near the famous battle field of Antietam. He entered the State Militia in his youth, was in the War of 1812 and was commissioned a captain. Late in life he removed to Sharpsburg, and died there August 7, 1869. On September 1, 1820, he married Ann Maria Rohr, who was born in Frederick County, Maryland, August 3, 1797, daughter of Jacob Rohr, Jr., and granddaughter of Jacob Rohr, Sr., who came to America in 1731 and settled in Frederick County, Maryland.

Jacob Rohr, Jr., was postmaster of Frederickburg for several years, and lived there until his death. Capt. David Smith and wife reared four children, named Frisby R. born November 26, 1824, and who became a physician; Joseph Chester, born June 8, 1828; David Miller, born August 26, 1833; and Grafton Finley, who became a druggist.

David Miller Smith was educated at Sharpsburg and the academy at Frederick, was admitted to the bar when a young man and practiced law, and also became one of the owners and editors of the Frederick Examiner and later established the Frederick Times. He was a staunch Union man and republican, and tried to enlist at the first call for troops to put down the rebellion, but on account of a disabled arm was not accepted. He died July 1, 1895, and was ried in Mountain View Cemetery, Sharpsburg, Maryland. October 25, 1865, he married Mary Ellen Piper. She was born at Piper's farm, upon which the battle of Antietam was fought, on November 7, 1842, daughter of Henry Elizabeth (Keedy) Piper, both of whom were born near Sharpsburg. Henry Piper was a son of Daniel and Martha (Brown) Piper, and Daniel was born in Washington County, Maryland, son of Johann Pfeiffer, a native of Holland, who came to America with his brother Jacob in 1763. Johann Pfeiffer was a private during the Revolutionary War in Capt. William Heyser's company of a German battalion commanded by Col. N. Housseger, with which he served the service December 6, 1776. Mrs. David Miller with is still living, at the old home at Sharpsburg. She had three sons: Malcolm Victor, Harry Fenton and Louis Roman.

Harry Fenton Smith attended public school in Sharpsburg, and at the age of fourteen became a messenger with the Western Union Telegraph Company. He soon learned telegraphy, was an operator at Hagerstown and in 1890 went to Martinsburg as manager of the local office of that company. He remained in this service for over twenty years, resigning in 1912, and since then has given his time to farming and horticulture. He has two farms in Hedgesville District and one in Fallen Waters District, and on one of them he has seventeen acres of orchard and fourteen acres another.

In 1899 he married Hannah Orrick Wever, who was born in Martinsburg. Her father, Charles J. Wever, was born on a farm nearby in 1837. Her grandfather, Casper Wever, was born in Berkeley County, December 14, 1791. Her great-grandfather, Jacob Wever, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, son of Sergeant Casper Wever, who came from the vicinity of Hamburg, Germany, to America Colonial times and married Catherine LeFevre, a French Huguenot. Jacob Wever was a pioneer settler in Berkeley county, purchasing a large amount of land, which he later granted with slaves. His residence was known as Maple Creek and was located on Warm Springs Road.

Jacob Wever married Hannah Cromwell Orrick, daughter of Charles and Catherine (Davenport) Orrick and grandchild of Capt. Nicholas and Hannah (Cromwell) Orrick. Nicholas Orrick was a son of John and Susannah (Hammond) Orrick and a grandson of James and Mary Ouch, who came to America in 1665 and patented land in Annapolis County, Maryland. Susannah Hammond was daughter of Col. Thomas and Rebecca (Larkin) Hammond and granddaughter of Maj.-Gen. John and Mary (Howard) Hammond. Charles J. Wever, father of Mrs. Smith, entered the Confederate army at the beginning of the war in Company B, of the First Virginia Cavalry, and was in service until captured by the enemy and spent the last months of the war in a prison in New Jersey. While in the service he was accidentally wounded. After the war he farmed the old homestead in Berkeley County until his death on March 14, 1878. He married Frances Arabella Snodgrass, who was born in Berkeley County, daughter of Robert Verdin and Sarah Ann Snodgrass, a granddaughter of Robert and Susannah (Rawlings) Snodgrass, a lineal descendant of William and Catherine (Patterson) Snodgrass, natives of Scotland and founders of the Snodgrass family in America. Susannah Rawlings was a daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth (Tyler) Rawlings, Elizabeth Tyler being of the same family as President A. Tyler.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, the first being Ellen Orrick, who died in infancy. Their daughter Hannah Cromwell is now a student in high school. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Trinity Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Eureka Lodge No. 105, A. F. and M. Martinsburg Lodge of Perfection No. 7, of the Scotch Rite, and Mrs. Smith is a member of the Shenandoah Valley Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

WILLIAM MACDONALD. One of the distinguished members of the legal profession practicing at the bar of Mineral County is William MacDonald, of Keyser, who fully lives up to the highest ideals of his calling in both professional and private life. He is one of those who early found the work for which he was best fitted, and his practice before the state and federal courts of West Virginia and her neighboring sister commonwealths has been effective in establishing his ability to litigate in all cases with marked success.

William MacDonald was not born in the United States, but under a flag representing freedom and democracy, as he came into the world at Stellarton, Nova Scotia, Canada, October 19, 1865. His father had emigrated to Nova Scotia at the commencement of his career from Dumfriesshire, Scotland, and there was actively engaged as an official in extensive coal-mining operations. He was Norman MacDonald, and was born at Netherpton, Scotland, June 15, 1826. He was reared amid the environment of farm life, and was but sparingly educated, yet sufficiently for his needs through life. When but a youth he entered the mines located near his birthplace, and in them acquired the experience which made him an expert miner and equipped him for superintending mines in which work he was engaged in both Canada and the United States.

It was after locating at Stellarton that Norman MacDonald made the acquaintance of Elizabeth Wilson, who became his wife. She was also of Scotch birth, and died at Harrisburg, Illinois, when their son William MacDonald was nine years old, in 1874. Mr. MacDonald took an important part in the operations in the Illinois coal field until December, 1874, moving then to Maryland and establishing his home at Loneoaning, where he continued his connection with mining until 1882, when he crossed the Potomac River into West Virginia and settling permanently in Mineral County. There he was engaged in superintending mining operations until his retirement. His death occurred at Keyser, May 19, 1908. Four children were born to him and his wife, namely: William, whose name heads this review; Mrs. Isabella Grimes, who resides in Mineral County; James Wilson, who died a few years ago; and one who died young.

William MacDonald has lived in West Virginia since August, 1882. He did not profit much from his attendance at the public schools, because he went with his father into the mines before he reached his eleventh year, and worked in and about coal diggings until in September, 1893, when he began to carry out a long-cherished ambition to prepare himself for the profession of the law, and during that month entered the University of West Virginia. He had read borrowed text books on law for a year and a half before he entered the university, and had accomplished considerable without a coach or guide to aid him in mastering any of the many intricacies of the science. However, such was his perseverance and natural ability, and as he was well-read and grounded in the rudiments of the law when he commenced his course, he was able to carry on his work creditably in the classroom, finishing the prescribed course of two years in one year and graduating in June, 1894, tenth in a class of twenty-three, among whom were Clark W. May, later attorney general of West Virginia, Judge J. C. McWhorter, Judge Warren B. Kittle, of Philippi, West Virginia, and others who have since become attorneys of note in the several communities in which they located.

Mr. MacDonald was admitted to practice at Keyser, September 4, 1894, and on October 5th, following, he established himself in this city and began the practice of a profession which has brought him conspicuously before the public in several states as an able advocate at the bar. His first law suit was tried on the present site of his law office, in a justice court, and he began his practice in the office of the late William C. Clayton, one of the most distinguished lawyers of West Virginia. He has always practiced alone, and for a score of years has taken part as counsel on one side or the other of the more important, first class litigation in Mineral County. In addition to a large local practice Mr. MacDonald has had cases in the state courts of Maryland and Virginia, the Federal Court at Baltimore, Maryland, and the State and Federal courts of West Virginia.

In politics Mr. MacDonald is well known as a democrat, and commenced his record as a voter in 1883, when he supported Grover Cleveland for the presidency of the United States, and he has stoutly maintained his loyalty to his party ever since. He has responded to the call of his party to bear some of the burden and expense of campaign work, and was a member of the Second Congressional District Democratic Committee, and treasurer of the campaign of Col. Thomas B. Davis when the latter was sent to Congress from the Second District. He was chairman of the Mineral County Prohibition Committee when the constitutional amendment for national prohibition was submitted to the voters, and rejoiced in the positive victory that was given the amendment by the ballots cast by Mineral County citizens. Mr. MacDonald was city attorney of Keyser for a number of years and served as a member of the school board when the present high school building was erected.

William MacDonald married at Keyser, West Virginia, November 20, 1900, Miss Nancy J. Lauck, a daughter of Joseph B. Lauck, and aunt of Hon. W. Jett Lauck, a leading labor statistician and a scholarly man of Washington, D. C., appointed on important commissions by President Wilson during the World war, and an authority on labor problems. Mrs. MacDonald was born at Huntington, West Virginia, but grew to womanhood at Keyser, where her father spent many years. Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald became the parents of the following children: Kenneth, who died May 25, 1917, on his twelfth birthday; and Janet, who is a student in the Keyser High School.

During the late war William MacDonald served as one of the zealous supporters of the administration policies. He took part as one of the "Four-Minute" speakers in the campaigns in behalf of all of the drives; assisted many of the drafted men in filling out their questionnaires, and was a member of the Interstate Young Men's Christian Association Committee, and as such had the approval on the expenditures of all monies for educational purposes by that organization in West Virginia after the close of the war, and is still a member of this committee. While the above were the chief duties he so cheerfully performed, he was identified with many others, and did not shirk any responsibility, no matter what personal sacrifice might be entailed. His relation to the church is that of his membership with the Presbyterian congregation at Keyser, and he has had a voice in its spiritual leadership as an elder for some years, and in its finances as treasurer for nineteen years. For seventeen years he has been secretary of its Sabbath school, and has been its superintendent for some years.

EMORY LEDREW TYLER came from the University of Morgantown with a diploma as a law graduate some ten years ago, and began his professional career in Mineral County. He has made an enviable success, largely due to the two terms he held the office of prosecuting attorney, and is now engaged in private practice at Keyser.

Mr. Tyler was born in Doddridge County, West Virginia, March 6, 1885. His grandfather, John Tyler, came into the western county from the Valley of Virginia, was a farmer, and married a Miss Powell near Arthur, West Virginia. Their only child was Conrad Tyler, who was born after his father's death and was reared under somewhat adverse conditions, so that he acquired little education. He was born in Grant County sixty-five years ago, and farming was his steady occupation until he retired to Keyser, where he is now living. He is a member of the Methodist Church. Conrad Tyler married Margaret Veach, who was born in Grant County sixty-three years ago, daughter of John and Margaret (Seymour) Veach. The children of this couple are: Ura, wife of Benjamin Rotrueck; Emory Ledrew; May, who married Howard Arnold; Homer, of Keyser; Erma, of Keyser; Mansfield, of Keyser; Otis, Winona and Jane, all at home.

While Emory Ledrew Tyler was an infant his parents moved to the vicinity of Mount Sterling, Ohio, and when he was seven years of age they returned to West Virginia and located in Grant County, near Maysville, where Emory Ledrew lived until reaching man's estate. He attended the common schools, the Keyser Preparatory School, and at West Virginia University took the literary as well as the law course. He graduated in law in the spring of 1912, and a few weeks later was engaged to try his first case, at Keyser. This case was the prosecution of a man for pist toting, but the decision went against him. Mr. Tyler was elected prosecuting attorney of Mineral County in 1911, succeeding Arthur Arnold, and was re-elected for a second term in 1916. During his eight years in office he made a distinctive record of winning eighty per cent of his cases and gave particular attention to the vigorous prosecution of all violators of the liquor law. With greatly increased prestige he left office in the winter of 1920 to turn his experience to account in private practice. For several years Mr. Tyler was a partner of Charles Ritchie, now assistant attorney general of West Virginia, in the firm of Ritchie & Tyler.

Mr. Tyler's father was independent in politics, while his mother's people were republicans, and he chose the republican party as his own political faith, casting his first vote for William H. Taft. He was a member of the State Judicial Convention of 1920 at Wheeling, and is chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Mineral County. As prosecuting attorney he made his office an instrument upholding the patriotic record of Mineral County during the World war, assisted in recruiting duty and was government appeal agent and counsel for the Draft Board. Mr. Tyler is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America, and the Kappa Alpha College fraternity. He is state lecturer for the Modern Woodmen His church is the Methodist Episcopal.

On September 14, 1915, at Baltimore, he married Miss Pearl C. Compton, who was born at Martinsburg, West Virginia, in December, 1885, daughter of John and Sall (Buzard) Compton. She is a graduate of the high school of her native city, the Cumberland High School, attended preparatory school at Keyser, and is an A. B. graduate of West Virginia University and later took post-graduate work in Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. Mrs. Tyler is one of the best educated women in the state, and before her marriage was a successful teacher of English in the Milt High School and later in the preparatory school at Montgomery, West Virginia. She is one of five living children the others being: Chester, of Pittsburgh; Ada, connected with the Woman's Extension Work in West Virginia University; Eva, in charge of domestic science in the State Normal School at Fairmont; and Vernon C., principal of schools at Berkeley Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Tyler have two daughters, Ruth Winifred and Janet.

While he has had an active career of only about ten years Mr. Tyler has formed some substantial connections with business affairs, being a stockholder in the First National Bank of Keyser, in the Marteller Coal Company, is vice president of the Mineral County Coal Company and Eastern Coal and Mining Company, is attorney for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, the Marteller Coal Company, the Dean Coal Company, and has professional connections with the First National Bank of Keyser, Edgington & Company and other firms.

RICHARD A. WELCH. For considerably more than half century the name Welch has been one of prominence in the Mineral County bar. The record is not quite continuous since Richard A. Welch was not qualified to begin practicing until about a year after the death of his father, who was one of the ablest lawyers and men of affairs in Keyser for about the close of the Civil war.

The first American of this name came to this county in the colony of Lord Baltimore, and for several generations the family lived on the eastern shore of Maryland. Many states and localities have families descended from the original one in Eastern Maryland. The family supplied a number of soldiers to the Revolutionary war, and the ancestor of the branch of the family in Mineral County was in the struggle for independence. Shortly after the close of that war he moved to Allegany County, Maryland. Joe Welch, grandfather of Richard A. Welch, spent all his life in Allegany County, Maryland, where he was a "gentleman farmer."

William M. Welch, the pioneer lawyer of Mineral County was born in Allegany County, Maryland, January 10, 1844. He attended the old Allegany County Academy and re-law for a time under Judge Hunter at Cumberland. He was admitted to practice there in the fall of 1862, but soon afterward left the law to join the army as a Union man. He was commissioned a captain in the Quartermaster's Department, and for a time was stationed at New Creek, now Keyser, then at Wheeling, and finished his service at Clarksburg. He was mustered out soon after the surrender of General Lee.

At the close of the war Mr. Welch came into Eastern West Virginia, about the same time as Judge Francis M. Reynolds, and both located at Romney, county seat of Hampshire County, which then included Mineral County, and they were together in practice. When the party was divided and Mineral created both these young lawyers, destined for great prominence in the future, moved over to Keyser, the new county seat, and they continued to be associated until 1872. After that William M. Welch practiced law alone. He became widely known for his masterful handling of cases at trial, and was undoubtedly one of the best trial lawyers in Mineral County. His successful career in this profession continued until his death on September 5, 1898. His name was also well known in democratic politics. For seven different terms he represented Mineral County in the House of Delegates and was twice Speaker of the House. He was a delegate to two national conventions, that of 1876, when Samuel J. Tilden was named for President, and that of 1884, when Grover Cleveland was nominated. He was useful to his party and to his friends in a number of campaigns, but had no ambition for more of the political honors than were given him. He was not a member of any church, but was a Master Mason.

William M. Welch married Virginia Adams, who was born at Clarksburg, on the same day of the month and the same year as her husband. She is now living at Keyser. Her parents were Josiah and Hannah (Moore) Adams. The Adameses were a Massachusetts family and the Moores came from Delaware. Josiah Adams settled at Clarksburg and secured a patent from Virginia for from 26,000 to 28,000 acres. He was one of the prominent farmers and land owners of that section. The Moore family came into that region about the same time. William M. Welch and wife had the following children: Mrs. T. P. Smith, of Parkersburg; Mrs. Louise B. Martine, of Chicago; Mrs. Ida V. Rathbone, of Parkersburg; W. A., of Keyser; Richard A.; and Ralph P., of Holdenville, Oklahoma.

Richard A. Welch was born at Keyser, April 17, 1878, and during his boyhood and youth he profited from the public schools, and after finishing high school took his academic work in the University of Virginia. He left there at the end of his junior year and enrolled in the law department of West Virginia University, where he graduated LL. B. in 1899. He at once returned to Keyser and began practice, and a considerable part of his father's law business drifted to him. He has continued his professional work alone, and always in general practice. The law has abundantly satisfied him and he has permitted himself no diversion into the field of politics for the sake of office. However, he has done considerable campaign work as a democrat, and until state conventions were abolished he was one of the leaders of his party in this section of the state. He was a delegate to the Denver National Convention of 1908, and in 1912 was a member of the West Virginia delegation pledged to the nomination of Champ Clark at Baltimore, though personally he was a Woodrow Wilson man, and voted for Wilson as soon as the West Virginia delegation was released from its instructions. He also served as a member of the Democratic State Committee for eight years. While a good and loyal democrat, Mr. Welch cast his first presidential vote for Swallow, the prohibition candidate, declining to support the nominee of his own party.

His practical public service has been given to his home town. He consented to serve seven consecutive terms as mayor. During these administrations a large amount of paving was done, sewers laid, concrete walks built, water works installed, and when these improvements had reached a satisfactory stage he felt that his obligations to the community had been discharged and he was satisfied to retire. During the World war he was chairman of the Legal Advisory Committee for Mineral County, of all of the Liberty Loan drives at Keyser, and member of the County Council of Defense.

At Martinsburg, West Virginia, August 16, 1911, Mr. Welch married Miss Mary D. Edwards, a native of Martinsburg. Her father, William G. Edwards, was a business man of that city, and by his marriage to Miss Roush had three children: William G. Edwards, Jr., of Chicago; Mrs. Welch, who was born October 5, 1887; and Mrs. Nell Sherrick, of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Welch have a family of four young children: Virginia, Mary, Louise and Richard A., Jr.

Outside of his profession Mr. Welch has been interested in some business organizations that have contributed to Keyser's advancement. He was associated with Doctor Gerstell in the organization of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, and is a director of and attorney for the bank. For a time he was a director for the Keyser Electric Light Company, and for many years was president and director of the Alkire Orchard Company.

WHEELER H. BACHMAN for a number of years has been a power in the commercial and financial affairs of Wheeling, was formerly in the dry goods jobbing business, and is now member of the investment firm of Speidel & Bachman, Incorporated, of which he is president.

Mr. Bachman, whose citizenship has been distinguished by the broadest cooperation in enterprises for welfare and charity, was born at Wheeling, March 22, 1870. His father, William Philip Bachman, was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1838, and was a boy of ten years when he accompanied some relatives to the United States. He reached Wheeling, the city destined to be his permanent home, about 1853, and in after years he achieved a position as a successful merchant, with associations with other business and banking affairs. He was a staunch republican. He died at Wheeling in 1918. William P. Bachman married Lucy Wheeler, who was born at Dudley Port, England, in 1845. Her father, Simmons Wheeler, was born in Dudley Port, was a shipyard owner there, and was killed when thrown from a horse. He married Martha Simmons, a native of Dudley Port, who came to the United States when her daughter Lucy was fifteen years of age. Thereafter she made her home at Wheeling, where she died. Lucy Wheeler Bachman, who died at Wheeling in 1919, was for nearly half a century an active member of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church. She was the mother of two children, Jessie Martha and Wheeler H. The former is the wife of George Grant Ralston, a resident of Martin's Ferry, Ohio.

Wheeler H. Bachman was educated in the public schools of Wheeling, attended Frazier's Business College until 1888, following which he spent seven years with a retail dry goods store, familiarizing himself with the detail of the business and at the same time making a close study of the jobbing phase of dry goods merchandising. In 1895 he embarked his experience and capital in a wholesale dry goods business, and was active in that line nearly twenty years, until 1914. As a jobber he had an extensive general trade through West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, and in special lines he did a large volume of business over the United States, especially with jobbing houses in New York City and Chicago. Mr. Bachman became a member of the firm Speidel & Bachman, Incorporated, in 1914. This firm acts as underwriters and investment brokers, and the names of the partners are the highest guarantee of their financial integrity and reliability. The offices of this firm are in the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company Building. Mr. Bachman is president, Joseph Speidel, Jr., vice president, and Jesse Speidel, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Bachman is a member of the executive committee and a director of the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company; is secretary of the Carr China Company of Grafton, West Virginia; a director of the United Dairy Company of Wheeling; a director of the Camden Coal & Land Company of West Virginia; and a director and assistant treasurer of the Arizona Mossback Mine Company of Oatman, Arizona. He is also a director of the Equitable Mortgage Company of Cleveland, director of the Fidelity Investment Association of Wheeling, vice president of the Union Mission of Wheeling, formerly secretary and treasurer of the Wheeling Stock Exchange of Wheeling for a period of three years and a member of the Advisory Board of the Lutz & Schraumm Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

In 1908, at Wheeling, Mr. Bachman married Miss Edith Carr, daughter of Thomas and Alice (Stockwell) Carr, residents of Grafton, where her father is president and general manager of the Carr China Company. The Carrs were an old family of New York City, while the Stockwells run back into the Colonial history of Vermont. Mrs. Bachman was educated in public and private schools at Wheeling. They have one son, Wheeler Carr, born September 4, 1911.

For a number of years Mr. and Mrs. Bachman have been closely associated with mutual interests and sympathies in many phases of broad and constructive charity and public spirit. They have helped support all the charitable organizations of the city without respect to creed. Mrs. Bachman is a member of the Board of the Aged and Friendless Women's Home, and is a member of one of the "Hospital Twigs," organizations for the purpose of raising funds for the hospitals. She is a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church, while Mr. Bachman is one of the active supporters of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church and is president of its Men's Bible Class and a vestryman of St. Matthew's Church. He is a republican, is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E., is a member of the Wheeling Country Club, the Fort Henry Country Club and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His home is a fine old residence at Seventh and Thirteenth streets, and he has other real estate in the city and a summer residence at Cambridge Springs, Pennsylvania. During the World War Mr. Bachman was active in the placing of Government securities, and was a working member of all the committees in the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other drives.

AMOS ASBURY WESTRATER, D. D. S. In his native city of Martinsburg, judicial center of Berkeley County, Doctor Westrater has built up a practice that marks him as one of the representative members of his profession in this section of the state. He was born at Martinsburg on the 31st of December, 1878, and on the paternal side is of Holland Dutch lineage. His father, William Westrater, was born in the City of Rotterdam, Holland, and was a boy at the time of the family immigration to the United States, the parents becoming pioneer settlers in the fine colony of their countrymen established at Holland, Michigan, in the early period of the history of that state. At the time when the Westrater family thus settled in Ottawa County, Michigan, that section was virtually a forest wilderness, with deer, bear and wolves much in evidence. The father of William Westrater purchased a large tract of land and reclaimed and improved a productive farm. Both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives in Ottawa County, and their children were five in number, two sons and three daughters.

William Westrater was a sturdy young man at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, and he promptly tendered his services in defense of the Union. He enlisted as a member of Company K, First New York Cavalry, known as the Lincoln Cavalry, and took part in the many engagements in which this gallant command was involved, including a number of major battles. Incidental to his military career he participated in the campaign in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, and he was so favorably impressed with the country in this section and in West Virginia that after the war he settled at Martinsburg, Berkeley County, where he entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. He was soon promoted to the position of train conductor, and he continued as a valued employee of the company nearly forty years. He was finally retired, with a pension from the company, and he continued his residence at Martinsburg, a well known and highly honored citizen, until his death, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife, whose maiden name was Katherine Ringer, was born at Martinsburg and here passed her entire life, her death having occurred in 1919. They became the parents of six children, namely: Martin W., A. Leo, Charles C., Albert E., Amos Asbury, and Mina (Mrs. Charles Vine).

Dr. Amos A. Westrater gained his early education in the public schools at Martinsburg and under the direction of a private tutor. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the department of dentistry in the University of Maryland, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1901 and with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. He opened an office at Martinsburg in the same year, and his technical ability and his personal popularity in his native county have resulted in his building up a large and representative practice. He has the most modern equipment and accessories in both the operative and laboratory departments of his office, and has kept in close touch with the advances made in his chosen profession.

Doctor Westrater is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 94, A. F. and A. M.; is a past high priest of Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M.; and a past exalted ruler of Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, B. P. O. E. He is actively identified with the West Virginia State Dental Society and the National Dental Association. Both he and his wife are active members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

On the 22d of January, 1910, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Westrater and Miss Ethel Smoke, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, a daughter of Dr. Edward B. and Angelina (Armstrong) Smoke, the latter a daughter of Joseph E. and Sarah (Payne) Armstrong. Doctor Smoke was born on the family homestead, Rosedale Farm, in Frederick County, Virginia, a son of John and Lucy M. (Krebs) Smoke. John Smoke removed from Ohio to Frederick County, Virginia, where he became a most successful agriculturist and stock-grower and where he passed the remainder of his life. His wife was born and reared in Virginia and was a daughter of Conrad Krebs, who was a young man when he came from his native Germany and established his home in Frederick County, Virginia, where he became a successful farmer. Dr. Edward B. Smoke graduated from the Virginia Medical College at Richmond as a member of the class of 1868, and at Whitehall, Frederick County, that state, he built up a large and important practice that marked him as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of that section of Virginia. Dr. and Mrs. Westrater have no children.

SAMUEL PAXTON WHITMORE showed in all of the relations of life the same fine spirit of loyalty that marked his service as a valiant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, and he was one of the substantial and honored citizens of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, at the time of his death, when about sixty-five years of age.

Mr. Whitmore was a native of the historic Old Dominion State and a scion of a family that was there founded in the Colonial period of our national history, the lineage tracing back to sterling English origin. He was born and reared in Loudoun County, Virginia, as were also his parents, George and Rachel Priscilla (Wright) Whitmore. George Whitmore was the owner of a large and valuable plantation in Loudoun County, and in the operation of the same he retained a large number of slaves. He was sixty years of age at the time of his death, and his widow attained the venerable age of eighty-five years.

The early education of Samuel P. Whitmore was gained under the direction of private tutors, and he was reared under the influence of the fine old Virginia regime prior to the Civil war. When the great fratricidal conflict between the states of the North and the South was precipitated on the nation, Mr. Whitmore promptly manifested his loyalty to the state and the institutions under influence of which he had been reared, and in the Virginia Confederate regiment in which he enlisted he was commissioned first lieutenant of his company. The regiment became a part of the command of Gen. Thomas ("Stonewall") Jackson, and Mr. Whitmore lived up to the full tension of the conflict, as he participated in many major battles, as well as minor engagements, and continued in service until the close of the war. After the war he resided for a time in Logan County, West Virginia, and after his removal to Morgan County he operated a saw mill about one year. He then removed to Martinsburg, judicial center of Berkeley County, where he had various business interests and where he continued to reside until his death. He married Miss Phoebe Ann Beach, who likewise was born and reared in Loudoun County, Virginia. Her father, John Beach, was born in England and was a young man when he came to America and settled in Loudoun County, where he purchased land and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was sixty years of age at the time of his death. The family name of his wife was Allison, her father having come from England to Virginia and having purchased a large plantation in Loudoun County, where he owned a goodly contingent of slaves. The closing years of life were passed at Martinsburg, West Virginia. Mrs. Phoebe Ann (Beach) Whitmore died at the age of forty years. Her children were eight in number, namely: Ann Elizabeth, George J., Mary Kathleen, William Jasper, Sarah A., Samuel J., John Ashley and Clara Paxton. Mary Kathleen resides at Martinsburg and is the widow of George D. Lambert, whose biography follows.

GEORGE DALLAS LAMBERT came to Martinsburg, Berkeley County, shortly after the close of the Civil war, in which he had given specially gallant and faithful service as a soldier of the Union for over three years, and in this time he passed the remainder of his life, a substantial business man and a citizen whose sterling character gave him inviolable place in the confidence and good will of his fellow men.

Mr. Lambert was born on the old family homestead at the end of Patriek Street in Frederick City, Maryland, and was a son of Frederick and Catherine Lambert, of whom more specific mention is made on other pages of his work, in the personal sketch of his brother Walter. At the schools of his native city Mr. Lambert acquired his early education, and when the Civil war was precipitated on the nation he forthwith manifested his loyalty and patriotism by enlisting in a Maryland regiment of volunteer infantry that entered the Union service. He was with his command in many important battles and innumerable minor engagements marking the progress of the great conflict, he and his brother William having been captured and having started on their way to a Confederate prison further in the South, but he managed to escape, passed through the Confederate lines at Harper's Ferry and rejoined his command. His brother, William, was not so fortunate, and died in Libby Prison.

For several years after the close of the war Mr. Lambert was engaged in the feed and provision business at Martinsburg, a portion of the time in partnership with his brother Charles and later with Andrew Grazier. He here continued his residence until his death, which occurred when he was well advanced in years. His political allegiance was given to the republican party, and he was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Grand Army of the Republic. His first wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Grazier, and who was a daughter of Andrew Grazier, died at the age of thirty years. For his second wife Mr. Lambert wedded Miss Mary Kathleen Whitmore, a daughter of the late Samuel Whitmore, to whom a memoir is dedicated on other pages of this volume. Mrs. Lambert still maintains her home at Martinsburg, where her circle of friends is coincident with that of her acquaintances. She has no children.

GEORGE JACOB EDWARD SPONSELLER, M. D. With home at Martinsburg for twenty years, Doctor Sponseller has performed professional services that constitute an enviable reputation both as a doctor and a citizen in this prosperous section of West Virginia.

Doctor Sponseller was born at New Market, Frederick County, Maryland, May 7, 1873, son of George F. and Sarah (Roberts) Sponseller. His paternal grandfather was Jacob Sponseller and his maternal grandparents were Edward and Rachael (Houck) Roberts. Doctor Sponseller on his maternal side is of Quaker ancestry. He was the second in a family of five children, the others being Clifton, Adelaide, Roy L. and William K.

Doctor Sponseller was educated in Quaker Schools, and acquired his professional training in the Louisville University, where he graduated in medicine in 1894. Doctor Sponseller practiced medicine at Hedgesville for five years, and since 1902 has been in active practice at Martinsville.

In June, 1910, he married Miss Nellie R. Reddig, of Shippensburg, Pennsylvania. Doctor Sponseller is president of the Eastern Panhandle Medical Society, the West Virginia State and American Medical Association, and fraternally is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias and Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Martinsburg Rotary Club.

HON. FRANK LLEWELLYN BOWMAN. The ordinary individual, concerned with the business affairs that secure for him his daily livelihood, is representative of the nation's citizenship. This is the normal type, whose life begins and ends, perhaps with nothing more distinctive than is the ripple on the stream when the pebble is cast into the water. It is the unusual type that commands attention, and it is his influence, exerted on his community, and the record of his life, that are valuable and interesting as matters of biography. In the professions, especially the law, the opportunities for usefulness and personal advancement depend almost entirely upon the unusually gifted individual, and here natural endowment is as essential as is thorough preparation. The bar of Monongalia County, a representative body of the state, has its full quota of brilliant men, and one of its foremost members is Frank Llewellyn Bowman, of Morgantown, who has also been identified prominently with business and civic affairs for the past fifteen years.

Mr. Bowman was born at Masontown, Pennsylvania, January 21, 1879, and is descended from an old Keystone State family which settled in Lancaster County in pre-Revolutionary war days. His father, Josiah A. Bowman, who was born at Masontown, February 13, 1851, removed to Morgantown, West Virginia in 1908, and engaged in the mercantile business. He married Sue, daughter of James Llewellyn, and both parents continue to make their home at Morgantown, where they are held in the highest esteem.

After passing through the public schools Frank Llewellyn Bowman entered the University of West Virginia, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1902, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. His college career was a brilliant one, in which he won the Inter-Society Oration and Debate prize. After his graduation he was appointed teller in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Morgantown, a position he held for two years. He then took a course in the law department of the West Virginia University and was admitted to the bar in 1905, at which time he entered the practice of law at Morgantown and has been engaged therein ever since, with constantly enlarging success.

In 1911 Mr. Bowman was appointed postmaster at Morgantown, and served in that position until 1915. In 1916 he was elected mayor of the city by the largest majority ever given a candidate for that office, and in 1917 was renominated by the convention, but declined to make the race. Mr. Bowman has important business interests, being vice president and treasurer of the Troop Coal Company and a stockholder in and attorney for several other coal companies. He belongs to the Monongalia County Bar Association, the West Virginia Bar Association and the Rotary Club, and also holds membership in the Phi Sigma Kappa college fraternity. He is a Knight Templar, belonging to Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias, in all of which he is very popular. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church.

On June 3, 1904, Mr. Bowman was united in marriage with Miss Pearl Silveus, the daughter of the Rev. W. F. Silveus, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, and to this union there have come two children: Marjorie Virginia, born January 16, 1900; and Frank Llewellyn, Jr., born May 15, 1911.

ROY C. GROVE, of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, represented this county as a member of the House of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature, to which he was elected in November, 1918, and in which office he gave effective service during the legislative sessions of 1919 and 1921, besides having the distinction of being the youngest member of the House. He was assigned to important committees, including that on arts and science, of which he was chairman, and on those of taxation, finance, railroads, unappropriated lands and enrolled bills, besides which he became chairman of the West Virginia and Maryland Bridge Commission. Since 1921 he has been actively associated with the Bowers Realty & Insurance Company, one of the representative business concerns of Martinsburg.

Mr. Grove was born on a farm near Berkeley Springs, in Morgan County, this state, on the 18th of May, 1888. His father, Carson Grove, was born in Frederick County, Virginia, a son of Francis M. Grove, who likewise was a native of that county, as was also his father, Abraham Grove. A well established family tradition is to the effect that three brothers, Abraham, Adam and John Grove, came from England to America in the early Colonial days and first settled near Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and that one of the number was the ancestor of the Groves of Frederick County, Virginia. In that county Abraham owned and occupied a farm six miles west of Cross Junction. Francis M. Grove, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, removed to Morgan County and purchased a farm near Berkeley Springs. He became a successful general farmer and served eight years as a judge of the County Court. He was more than seventy years of age at the time of his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Bohrer, was born on a farm lying along the line of Frederick and Morgan counties, and was a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Shade) Bohrer, both natives of Frederick County, Virginia, and members of pioneer families of that county.

Carson Grove became a progressive and representative farmer and also a successful dealer in live stock. In 1901 he removed to Martinsburg, where he is still engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock. He married Annie S. Gano, who was born near Bloomer, Frederick County, Virginia, a daughter of Daniel Gano. Daniel Gano was born in Gerrardstown District, Berkeley County, where his father, James Gano, was an early settler. In the period of the Civil war James Gano started forth from his home with a four-horse team and wagon, and no trace of him was ever afterward found by his family, the supposition being that he was either drowned while crossing a stream or that he was murdered and his team stolen. Daniel Gano purchased the William Grove farm near Boomer, Frederick County, and on this place he passed the remainder of his life. The maiden name of his wife was Betsy Ann Grove, she having been a daughter of William and Susan (Buzard) Grove. Of this union were born the following named children: William, Susan, Catherine, Simeon, John, Maria, James and Annie. William Gano settled two miles from Parkville, Missouri, and became one of the prominent horticulturists of that state, he having been for twenty years president of the Missouri Horticultural Society and the Gano Apple was named in his honor.

Roy C. Grove attended public schools in Morgan County and at Martinsburg, and after a two years' course in the University of West Virginia he was associated with his father in the buying and shipping of live stock until 1921, when, as before stated, he became associated with the Powers Realty & Insurance Company, but his principal business is real estate and he is manager of three orchard companies in Berkeley and Morgan counties. He is an active member of the Kiwanis Club at Martinsburg, is affiliated with the Phi Kappa Alpha college fraternity; with Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, B. F. O. E.; with Tuscarawas Lodge No. 24, I. O. O. F.; and with Martinsburg Council No. 35, Junior Order United American Mechanics.

The year 1910 recorded the marriage of Mr. Grove and Miss Adda Virginia Geyer, who was born at Martinsburg, and who is a daughter of James P. and Hannah H. Geyer. Mr. and Mrs. Grove have one child, Anna Virginia.

Mr. Grove cast his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft, and has since continued a staunch supporter of the principles of the republican party.

HARRY HOLLIS, representing a family that has been in the Eastern Panhandle of West Virginia for several generations acquired an extensive acquaintance over portions of the adjoining states during his work as a traveling salesman and is now doing a prosperous business as a wholesale merchant at Martinsburg.

He was born on a farm in Mill Creek District, Berkeley County, West Virginia. His great-grandfather, William Hollis, was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and came to Berkeley County in early days from Ohio. He was a farmer in the vicinity of Darkesville, and in the days before the railroad he marketed the produce of his farms by team and wagon. He had two six-horse teams, and would load his wagons and sometimes go to Baltimore and at other times to Tennessee. William Hollis was buried at the Presbyterian Cemetery at Gerrardstown. He married Lydia Dick near Sandusky, Ohio, and both of them lived to old age. Their eight children were: Jane, Joseph, John, Sally, Amanda, Lydia, Bennett and William. Of these John Hollis was born in Berkeley County in 1818, and as a young man bought a farm near Gerrardstown, and remained in Berkeley County until his death at the age of seventy-five. He married Rebecca Thornburg, who was born in Berkeley County in 1824. Her father, Thomas Thornburg, was a farmer living about four miles southwest of Martinsburg. The first wife of Thomas Thornburg was Barbara Byers. Rebecca (Thornburg) Hollis died at the age of eighty-four. Her eight children were named William, James, Parren, Anna, Emma, John, Clarence and Edgar.

Parren Morgan Hollis, father of Harry Hollis, was born at Gerrardstown in Berkeley County, March 13, 1850. As a boy he attended subscription schools during the winter time, and otherwise assisted on the farm. After reaching his majority he began his career by renting land, and he remained in the ranks of the solid and prosperous farmers of Berkeley County until 1896 when he removed to Martinsburg and for one year carried mail between the postoffice and the railroad, for thirteen years was an employee of the Standard Oil Company, and is still keeping up a routine of work as night clerk in the Berkeley Hotel. On November 28, 1878, he married Annie Chamberlain, born in Jefferson County in February, 1854, daughter of John Chamberlain, who was a miller and operated a number of mills, including the Strider Mill on Opequan Creek and the Batch Mill at Lectown. John Chamberlain married a member of the Sharff family, who were pioneers in Jefferson County. Mr. and Mrs. Parren Hollis reared eight children, named Charles, Harry, Lou, Edgar, Fannie, Estella, Ernest and Roy. The mother is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. The father in political matters is a democrat.

Harry Hollis spent his early life on his father's farm and attended rural schools in both Jefferson and Berkeley counties. Later he attended the Martinsburg city schools, and after completing his education he took up a business career and for a number of years was a traveling salesman over an extensive territory in West Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania. In 1920 Mr. Hollis engaged in the wholesale fruit and produce business at Martinsburg, and is one of the enterprising men of affairs of that city.

In 1902 he married Mamie Shaull, a native of Jefferson county and daughter of John Shaull. Mrs. Hollis, who was a active member of the Trinity Episcopal Church, South, died in 1917, leaving two daughters: Helen and Anna. Helen, married Everett Long, and they have one son, William Lee, born May 18, 1922.

JOSEPH H. SMITH. Prominent among the progressive and successfully-representatives of the business interests of Petersburg is Joseph H. Smith, manager of the Kenneweg Wholesale Grocery House. He is primarily a business man, with few outside connections, but has always found time to interest himself in the welfare of his community and has been a supporter of worthy enterprises looking to the advancement and development of his section.

Mr. Smith is a native son of West Virginia, and was born November 17, 1873, in Franklin District, Pendleton County, is parents being Harrison and Nancy E. (Nelson) Smith. His father was born in Highland County, Virginia, in 1836, and as a youth acquired the rudiments of an education in the country schools of his native county. Prior to the outbreak of hostilities in the war between the states Mr. Smith came over the mountains into West Virginia, and in Pendleton County he enlisted in the Sixty-first Regiment, Virginia Volunteer Infantry, in the Confederate army. He served with that regiment until after the surrender of General Lee, and was honorably discharged with a splendid record for brave and faithful service. At the close of his military career he applied himself to agricultural pursuits in Franklin District, Pendleton County, and there continued his residence until his death, April 6, 1921, when he was eighty-five years of age. In politics he was a democrat, but had no public life. He was affiliated with the Church of the Brethren, and as a man of integrity and probity was held in high esteem in his community. Mr. Smith married Nancy E. Nelson, a daughter of Joseph W. and Annie (Nelson) Nelson, the Nelsons also being West Virginia people who followed the pursuits of the soil as their vocation. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith there were born the following children: Palser C., a resident of Hinton, Virginia; W. J., of Ruddle, West Virginia; Mary J., who married C. B. Ruddle, of Harrisonburg, Virginia; Julia F., the wife of J. F. Hinkle, of Franklin, West Virginia; Joseph Harrison, of this review; and Jared B., of Ruddle, his state.

Joseph Harrison Smith spent the first twenty-four years of his life in Pendleton County, where he acquired his educational training in the public schools, and before he was twenty-four years of age he left the parental roof and entered upon his independent career, his first choice of an occupation being that of farmer, as his early training had been along that line of endeavor. Soon Mr. Smith became manager of the stock ranch of G. Eston Harman, of Randolph County, West Virginia, a capacity in which he served for eight years. Butchering formed an important part of that enterprise, and during his stay there Mr. Smith butchered 6,000 head of cattle for the R. F. Whitman Lumber Company, in addition to the younger stock, including sheep and hogs, for the workmen in the lumber camps of the community.

When Mr. Smith gave up ranch life he came to Petersburg, where he accepted employment as a clerk in the retail store of O. M. Smith, with whom he remained for three years. On May 1, 1917, he joined the Kenneweg Wholesale Grocery Company, as manager of the Petersburg branch house, and in this capacity has continued to the present time. This grocery branch of the parent concern was established at Petersburg in 1913, and its salesman over Grant and Pendleton counties and a part of Hardy County. The business has enjoyed a substantial and significant growth during the management of Mr. Smith, who is progressive and energetic, possessed of modern ideas and spirit and capable of attaining results from his well-directed and timely efforts. Aside from his immediate connection with this business Mr. Smith has few other connections, but was the moving spirit in the establishment of the Potomac Valley Bank of Petersburg. At the time of the organization of that institution the cashiership was urged upon him, but the honor was declined, although he has always been a stockholder in the concern. In political matters Mr. Smith has followed in his father's footsteps, and has always supported democratic policies and candidates for public office. He was a candidate for the office of assessor of Grant County in 1920, but lost to his opponent, Grant County being strongly republican in sentiment. As before noted, Mr. Smith has always proven himself a man of public spirit and civic pride, and has willingly supported beneficial movements of a civic, educational or religious character. During the World War he was a member of the Grant County Food Administration, and in this capacity did all in his power to assist in conserving food in order that the soldiers at the front might be well supplied with everything to keep up their physical strength and fighting morale. He did not overlook a single drive for funds to help in the success of American arms. Mr. Smith is without fraternal or club affiliations of any kind.

On August 26, 1899, at Franklin, West Virginia, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Ida M. Teter, who was born in Pendleton County, May 11, 1874, a daughter of George and Mary (Harman) Teter, the latter being a daughter of John Harman and a member of an old-established and well-known family of West Virginia. George Teter was born in Pendleton County, a son of Reuben Teter and a member of one of the oldest pioneer families of this section of the state. George Teter was a soldier of the Union during the war between the states, and went through that struggle without wounds, and with an excellent record. He is now aged seventy-seven years and a resident of Pendleton County, where he has passed an active life in agricultural pursuits. He and his worthy wife had five children: Mrs. Alice Robinson, Charles G., Dr. J. M., Oliver C. and Mrs. Ida M. Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have had the following children: Janet O., the wife of Justin J. Barger, of Petersburg, with one son, Justin, Jr.; Maysell, the wife of D. W. Monse, of Pansy, Grant County, with a daughter, Helen; and Robert T., who is a student at the Lutheran Academy, Petersburg.

EDWARD C. SHEPHERD is one of the veteran merchants and business men of Martinsburg, but his family name connects him intimately with another town of the Eastern Panhandle, the college community founded and named for one of his ancestors. A brief account of the family through the successive generations has an appropriate place in any history of the state.

The pioneer of the family in the Shenandoah Valley was Thomas Shepherd, a son of William Shepherd and grandson of Thomas Shepherd. The grandfather died in Maryland in 1698, and was probably one of three brothers who came from Wales to America in early Colonial times. Thomas Shepherd, the founder of Shepherdstown, was born in 1705, and died in 1776. About 1730 he received a land grant from King George the second, comprising 222 acres south of the Shenandoah River. He settled in that locality in 1732, and was founder of the community first known as Mecklenberg and later called Shepherdstown. A state law of 1765 established a ferry on the land of Thomas Shepherd at Mecklenberg over the Potomac. Thomas Shepherd married Elizabeth Van Metre, daughter of John Van Metre, the Indian trader. She died at Shepherdstown about 1792. They had a large family of children, several of whom settled and lived around Wheeling, West Virginia.

Their youngest son was Capt. Abraham Shepherd, who was born at Shepherdstown, November 10, 1734. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and was lieutenant of a company at the battle of Kingsbridge, New York, in November, 1776. Soon afterward he was made captain of a company of Virginia and Maryland riflemen. It was said that during the war, while he was passing through Berkeley County, he stopped at the home of Capt. James Strode, who owned and occupied an extensive plantation south of Martinsburg. Captain Strode had in his employ at the time two prisoners of war, one a Hessian and the other an Indian. Captain Shepherd overheard their plans to kill Mr. Strode as he went to the spring for water. He placed himself in ambush and as the two men appeared to execute their plan he shot both of them down. In 1780 he married Captain Strode's daughter Eleanor, who was born in 1760. Abraham Shepherd subsequently became owner of the Strode homestead. He died September 7, 1822, and his wife survived until September 23, 1853. They had a family of eight children.

Fifth among these children was Henry Shepherd, grandfather of Edward C. Shepherd, the Martinsburg merchant. Henry Shepherd was born in Shepherdstown, January 4, 1793, was reared in Jefferson County and became a man of prominence in Shepherdstown, where he filled a number of public offices. He was an extensive land holder. On May 7, 1822, he married Fanny E. Briscoe, daughter of Dr. John and Eleanor (Magruder) Briscoe, of Jefferson County. Henry Shepherd died October 12, 1870, and his wife, on July 5, 1881. Henry Shepherd was a very successful stock man, and was a breeder of fine cattle and thoroughbred horses. He and his wife had the following children: Mary Eleanor, Rezin Davis, Ann Elizabeth, Henry, John, Abraham, James T.

The father of Edward C. Shepherd was Abraham Shepherd, who was born at Shepherdstown, March 21, 1836. He was well educated under private tutors, attended St. James College, and after he reached mature years he was presented by his father with a tract of land, including the old race track, and there he engaged in general farming. Soon after the breaking out of the war between the states he entered the Confederate army, and was in several battles, including Gettysburg, at which time he was on detached duty as a courier. Later he was captured and was held a prisoner of war at Fort McHenry nearly a year. Following the war he continued his business as a farmer in Jefferson County, and in 1883 retired to Shepherdstown, where he lived until his death in 1907. He married Elizabeth Williams, who was born in Berkeley County, a daughter of Dr. Edward Cleggett and Sally (Shepherd) Williams. She is now living at Martinsburg, and her six children were named Edward C., James T., Elizabeth, Sally C., who became the wife of Charles Butler, Fannie, who became the wife of John Shaul, and Laura V.

Edward C. Shepherd was born at Shepherdstown, and attended public schools there and also Shepherd College. As a youth he removed to Martinsburg and began clerking in the drug store of his uncle, E. C. Williams. When his uncle finally retired from business he continued in the same store under the new owners, and finally, in 1902, succeeded to the ownership of the business, and for twenty years has conducted a high class and prosperous establishment. Though now in the prime of his years, there are few men in business at Martinsburg who were here when he began. Mr. Shepherd is an attendant of Trinity Episcopal Church.

ANDREW STERRETT ALEXANDER, judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Kanawha County, is a Charleston lawyer and banker, and is one of a number of prominent representatives of this name and family running back into the earliest pioneer times of what is now West Virginia.

He is descended from Archibald Alexander, who came from Scotland in 1737. His son Mathew lived at Waynesboro, Virginia, and by his marriage to Margaret Black was the father of Samuel Alexander, grandfather of Judge Alexander. Samuel Alexander was born at Waynesboro May 17, 1784, and subsequently removed to Mason County, West Virginia, where for many years he was a justice of the peace and was also made sheriff, though on account of age his son William performed the active duties of the office.

The wife of Samuel Alexander was Elizabeth Arbuckle, who was born July 15, 1790, at Fort Randolph, and died July 26, 1860. She was married in 1812. Her father, William Arbuckle, was born in Botetourt County, March 1752 and in 1778 moved to Fort Randolph, now Point Pleasant, West Virginia. He lived there fifteen years and then went to Greenbrier County, but in the winter of 1796-9 returned to the Kanawha Valley and settled on his extensive estate some fifteen miles above Fort Randolph, where he spent the rest of his life. William Arbuckle married Catherine Madison, a daughter of Humphrey Madison, niece of Bishop John Madison and Governor George Madison, and cousin to President James Madison. Her mother Mary Dickinson, was a daughter of John Dickinson, one of the signers of the Constitution of the United States. The first husband of Catherine Madison, William McClanahan, was killed at the battle of Point Pleasant October 10, 1778.

William Arbuckle Alexander, father of Judge Alexander, was born in Mason County November 3, 1816. He was the son who performed the active duties of sheriff under his father, and subsequently became sheriff of Putnam County when it was created from portions of Mason and Kanawha. He received from his father an extensive tract of land in Frazier Bottom, where in 1860 he built a large brick residence and where he lived until his death on April 1, 1885. He was elected to the State Senate in 1871. On December 15, 1860, William A. Alexander married Leonora C. Ruffner, daughter of Augustus and Mary E. (Rogers) Ruffner, and granddaughter of Dr. Henry Rogers of Kanawha County.

Andrew Sterrett Alexander, a son of these parents, was born in Putnam County August 7, 1867. As a youth he attended public schools, worked on the farm, taught school and in 1890 graduated from the law department of the University of West Virginia and in the same year was admitted to the bar at Charleston. Two years later he was elected prosecuting attorney of Putnam County and re-elected for a second four year term in 1896. Judge Alexander was democratic nominee for the Senate in 1900 and 1904, and in 1905 he removed to Charleston, where a large and profitable clientele sought his professional energies. He was appointed city solicitor in 1907 and for a second term in 1911. He was also one of the incorporators and the secretary and treasurer of the Southern States Mutual Life Insurance Company, now the George Washington Life Insurance Company, when it was first organized.

He was elected judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Kanawha County in November, 1916, and began his eight year term January 1, 1917. Judge Alexander is also vice president and director of the Kanawha National Bank of Charleston, was organizer and first president of the Bank of Winfield in Putnam County, and is a director of the Putnam County Bank at Hurricane.

In October, 1921, the rare honor, that of the thirty-third degree in Scottish Rite Masonry, was conferred upon Judge Alexander by the Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masonry for the Southern Jurisdiction at Washington. He is a Knight Templar Mason, a past commander of Kanawha Commandery No. 4, and is a past potentate of Beni-Kodem Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Charleston. Judge Alexander is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church at Charleston, and his father, grandfather and great-grandfather were Presbyterian elders in their time.

Judge Alexander married in Greenbrier County Elizabeth S. Mann, granddaughter of William Mann, a pioneer of that county and daughter of Mathew Mann, who was a farmer and banker. Judge and Mrs. Alexander have three children: Andrew Sterling, Leonora Ruffner and Mathew Mann Alexander.

HENRY SCOTT GARDNER, D. D. S., has had a busy practice as a dental surgeon at Martinsburg at the same time that he has managed some of the extensive property interests long associated with the Gardner family in that city. The Gardners have lived in Berkeley County for a century or more, and have always been people of most substantial character.

The great-grandfather of Doctor Gardner was a native of Berlin, Germany, came to the United States when a young man and was a very early settler in the Martinsburg locality. He bought the land now occupied by the Gardner Building, and also where the Eagle Hotel is situated, on the east side of the 100 block on South Queen Street. He was a pioneer landlord of the city, maintaining a public house for a number of years. In 1833 he served as deputy sheriff and jailer. His son, the grandfather of Doctor Gardner, was Peter Gardner, who was born in Berkeley County, learned the trade of wagon maker, and established his shop and business in Berkeley County and continued active until his death. After he died his widow removed to Martinsburg and bought property at 210 East Burke Street, where she lived out her life.

Her son Allen Gardner, who was born in Berkeley County in 1849, lived with his mother at Martinsburg, but after his marriage moved to his farm near Berkeley Station, and for several years gave all his time to his agricultural affairs. He then returned to the East Burke Street home, and bought other city property, including the hotel building known as the Eagle Hotel, which had formerly been owned by his grandfather. For a number of years these various property interests occupied his attention. He died at the age of seventy-two. Allen Gardner married Mary Elizabeth Couchman, a native of Berkeley County, who died at the age of sixty-three. She reared children named Mabel O., Mary Allen C., and Henry Scott. Mary Elizabeth Couchman was a sister of George William Couchman, who was a Confederate soldier and was killed at the second battle of Manassas.

Henry Scott Gardner was born on a farm near Berkeley Station and was educated in the public schools and in Tinsleys Military Institute at Martinsburg. In 1906 he entered the dental department of the University of Maryland, where he graduated in July, 1909, and since that year has had a large practice at Martinsburg and has the office equipment and facilities for the best class of service.

Doctor Gardner in 1917 erected the Gardner Building on the lot formerly owned by his great-grandfather. This is a handsome brick structure, three stories, the first floor occupied by stores and the second and third floors by apartments. In 1918 Doctor Gardner married Nora Park Chapman, who was born at Darksville, Berkeley County, daughter of Park and Jane Chapman. They have one daughter, named Jane Elizabeth. Doctor Gardner is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery No. 2, Martinsburg Lodge of Perfection, Wheeling Consistory No. 1, thirty-second degree, and Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is also a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and Azhar Temple, D. O. K. K. He and Mrs. Gardner are members of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he is one of the board of stewards.

HARRY M. FISHER. Representing a family that has been associated with milling, mechanical trades and business in the Eastern Panhandle for several generations, Harry M. Fisher is a successful jeweler both by trade and business in the City of Martinsburg, his establishment on South Queen Street being a place where all the popular tastes and demands of the trade are amply provided for.

Mr. Fisher is a native of Martinsburg. His grandfather, John Fisher, for a number of years conducted a flour mill known as Tabbs Mill on the Tuscarora Road, a mile west of Martinsburg. His last years he spent retired in Martinsburg. He married Sally Chamberlain, who was born in Middletown, Jefferson County, and she died at the age of seventy-four. Their son, Noble Tabbs Fisher, was born at Tabbs Mill in 1858, and was educated in the public school in Martinsburg. As a youth he served an apprenticeship to learn the trade of plumber with the firm of Fisher and Fisher, and later he engaged in business as a house furnisher, and had reached a successful stage in his career when he was stricken by death at the early age of thirty. At the age of twenty-two he married Emma Rose Couchman, a native of Martinsburg, daughter of Henry M. Couchman, who was born near Flags Station in Berkeley County, December 11, 1831, and granddaughter of Michael Couchman, also a native of Berkeley County, where his people were pioneers. Michael Couchman was a farmer and died at the early age of twenty-nine. His widow, whose maiden name was Mary Small, also a native of Berkeley County, survived him to the age of sixty-nine. Henry M. Couchman served an apprenticeship as a cabinet maker with William Wilen, but followed that occupation only a short time and then entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company as a carpenter. He became a foreman in the carpenter's shops and continued forty-four years, until he was retired by the company on a pension. He died at the age of seventy-four. His wife was Phoebe Helfestny, who was born near the present site of Tablers Station and died at the age of fifty-one. There were five Couchman children, named Mary Susan, Emma Rose, Nannie Florence, Della and Charles. Mrs. Emma Rose Fisher after the death of her first husband married James Barrick, of Martinsburg. She had two sons by her first marriage, Arthur C. and Harry M.

Harry M. Fisher after finishing his education in the city schools in Martinsburg served an apprenticeship at the jeweler's trade with Frank Smurr, and later took a course in the Philadelphia College of horology. He then started his independent career as a workman on the bench in his mother's store, repairing watches and jewelry. In 1912 he established a business of his own, and now carries an extensive stock of all commodities represented in a first class jewelry store.

He married Miss Kate May League, who was born at Smithfield in Jefferson County, daughter of James J. League. They have one son, Noble James Fisher. Mr. Fisher is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, F. and A. M., Lebanon Chapter, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery, K. T., and Tuscarora Tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men.

JAMES WHANN MCSHERRY, M. D. The highest personal authority on the history of the Eastern Panhandle and its people has been for a number of years the venerable physician and banker of Martinsburg, Dr. J. W. McSherry. He is one of the oldest bank presidents and one of the oldest practicing physicians in the country. He graduated in medicine and began its practice some years before the outbreak of the war between the states, in which he served with the rank of captain.

In the course of his extensive practice Doctor McSherry came to know nearly everyone, high or low, in this part of the Shenandoah Valley. A remarkable knowledge and memory of names and dates have enabled him to systematize this information. Now when in his office he ministers to the great-grandchildren of some of his first patients, he frequently tells them who their grand ancestors were. He is one of the rare survivors into this age of hustle and worry—a cultured gentleman of the old school.

Doctor McSherry was born in Martinsburg, December 7, 1833, son of Dennis Lilly and Susan Hebb (Abell) McSherry and grandson of Richard and Anastatia (Lilly) McSherry. Anastatia Lilly was a daughter of Richard Lilly of Frederick, Maryland, and granddaughter of Samuel Lilly of Pennsylvania. Richard McSherry, grandfather of Doctor McSherry, was born at St. Johns Point in County Down, Ireland, in 1747. At the age of eighteen he and his twin brother, William C., went to Jamaica, and conducted a successful business on that island for a few years. They came to the United States shortly after the close of the Revolution, William settling in Baltimore, while Richard established his home in that part of old Berkeley County now Jefferson County. On a large tract of land he acquired near Lettown he built a fine residence and named the estate Retirement. It was the home of his later years. He reared nine children, one of them being Dennis Lilly McSherry, who was born at Retirement, March 26, 1794. He was educated in Georgetown College, served as an ensign in a Jefferson County company in a Virginia regiment during the War of 1812, studied law with Mr. Fitzhugh at Hagerstown, Maryland, and after being admitted to the bar practiced for a few years in Martinsburg. Later he taught school, served as county clerk, was interested in farming and from 1833 for a few years was associated with his brother Richard in a drug business at Martinsburg. On December 19, 1820, he married Susan Hebb Abell, daughter of Capt. John and Sarah (Forrest) Abell, whose people were early settlers in Charles and St. Marys counties, Maryland.

A sister of Doctor McSherry was a most distinguished woman, the late Martha Gertrude McSherry. The most magnificent tribute that explains her life work is a memorial tablet in the Kings Daughters Hospital, the inscription reading as follows: "In grateful memory of Martha Gertrude McSherry, 1829-1912, Foundress of this Institution. Faithful unto death."

James Whann McSherry was educated in the Martinsburg Academy and at St. Mary College in Baltimore, and graduated from the medical department of the University of Maryland in 1855. For a brief time he practiced in Martinsburg, but in November, 1856, went to Peytona in Boone County, Virginia, and remained there in practice until the outbreak of the war. He was commissioned a surgeon in the Virginia State Troops by Governor Wise, and later, when the State Troops were organized for active service, he was elected captain of Company B, of the Thirty-sixth Virginia Infantry. He commanded that company in many engagements in the early part of the war, and was finally captured and was taken to Malden, thence by way of Charleston to Wheeling, on Camp Chase at Columbus, Ohio, and for a number of months was a prisoner in Fort Delaware, until the close of the war. After the war Doctor McSherry returned to Martinsburg, and immediately took up the burdens of a heavy practice in town and surrounding country. Doctor McSherry is one of those rare men who continue their work and activities beyond the age of four score. His heavy work in the profession was done long before the age of automobiles, telephones or modern highways. He still looks after a considerable office practice. He also has the management of some extensive real estate holdings in Martinsburg, is owner of about 500 acres of farm land and about 800 acres of mountain land. Along with his professional work he has taken a keen interest in public affairs, and at one time was mayor of Martinsburg. He is a member of the Trinity Episcopal Church.

On January 3, 1876, Doctor McSherry married Virginia Faulkner, youngest daughter of Hon. Charles J. Faulkner, the distinguished West Virginian whose career is fully sketched on other pages. Mrs. McSherry went abroad to France when her father was appointed Minister to that country, and finished her education there. She was a fine singer and skilled pianist, and identified with all the organized movements for charity and culture in her home city. She was a member of the Wednesday Evening Music Club and the Travelers Club. She was president of the local organization of the Daughters of the Confederacy, later of the state organization and still later of the national organization of that body. She had a wide acquaintance in the society all over the United States. She died February 25, 1916.

WILLIAM H. THOMAS. While there is probably no city in the state of the size that has a larger number of men with distinctive and important achievements to their credit in the domain of commerce and industry than Bluefield, there is manifest a disposition to recognize and confer by consensus of opinion if not formally a degree of special leadership upon Mr. William Henry Thomas, whose name in that community really suggests all the best elements of power and influence involved in constructive citizenship and commercial enterprise.

Mr. Thomas represents an old family of Roanoke County, Virginia, and he was reared and educated and his early commercial training there. Though his home has been in Bluefield for a number of years, he still feels in touch with the vicinity where he was born and reared. His birth occurred November 13, 1865, at what was then known as Big Lick, now Roanoke City. He is a son of Charles M. and Jane (Crawford) Thomas, natives of Roanoke County.

Giles Thomas, Sr., came to this country from England about 1745, settling near Havre de Grace, Maryland. His son, Giles Thomas, Jr., who was born in 1763 and died in 1842, moved to Virginia in 1796, settling in the county of Botetourt, now Roanoke. He was only twelve years of age when the Revolutionary war broke out, and in his sixteenth year he joined the Maryland Regiment and served until the close. He was under General Thomas in the great campaign of the Carolinas, and witnessed the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown. For these services as a soldier he received a land grant, which was located west of Cumberland in Washington County, Maryland.

On June 4, 1786, Giles Thomas, Jr., married Ann Wheeler. He was a cousin of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Maryland, a venerable signer of the Declaration of Independence. They were married at Carrollton.

Charles M. Thomas, a son of Giles Thomas, Jr., was born July 15, 1790, and died May 30, 1869. He was about six years of age when the family settled in Botetourt County, Virginia. He married Elizabeth Barnett who was born April 1, 1792, and died in November 1875. They were the parents of Charles Marigold Thomas.

Charles M. Thomas was born in 1825 and died in 1866. He was a farmer in Roanoke County and in 1861 moved his family to Big Lick. During the war between the states he was with a Virginia regiment, and on account of physical disability was chiefly employed in the Quartermaster's Department and the Home Guard. Charles M. Thomas was one of ten brothers who were in the Confederate army, and this approaches if it does not establish a record for participation of one family in that or any other war of the nation. In 1852 he married Jane Crawford, who was born July 24, 1831, and died in 1914. She was a descendant of James Crawford, Sr., who was of Scotch-Irish birth and came from Northern Ireland in 1770. His wife was a Miss Wallace, a descendant of Sir John Wallace of Scotland. James Crawford Jr., their son, was five years of age when the family came to this country. He married Eliza Poague, whose family came in 1765 from Scotland and settled in Augusta County, Virginia. This James Crawford, Jr., by his wife, Eliza, was the father of James Crawford, father of Jane Crawford Thomas. The mother of Jane Crawford was Jane Deyerle.

William H. Thomas, who therefore descends from very substantial American stock on both sides, never had any better school advantages than those supplied by the common schools of Roanoke County, and at the age of seventeen he was earning his living as clerk in a retail general store at Big Lick, and the year represented a valuable training to him. He then went on the road as a traveling salesman, and for eight years sold groceries and general merchandise throughout the South and Coast states. In 1889, at the age of twenty-four, Mr. Thomas became associated with three other men, one of whom was his brother-in-law, B. P. Huff, in the firm of Huff, Andrews & Thomas, wholesale grocers. The personnel of this firm has remained the same for over thirty years, though their greatly extended business is conducted under a number of corporate names. The partnership has been maintained as a firm at Roanoke, where they had their first headquarters as wholesale grocers. Mr. Thomas was the man who acquired the business for this early firm as traveling salesman, and for several years he covered the states of Virginia and West Virginia. The first important step in expanding the business came in 1895, when a branch was located at Bluefield, and this is now the main house of Huff, Andrews & Thomas Company. The business at Bluefield has from the first been conducted as a corporation, with Mr. Thomas as president and general manager. In the meantime the partners in 1892 had organized a wholesale dry goods and notion business under the title F. B. Thomas & Company, the active head of which was F. B. Thomas, a brother of William H. and one of the original partners in the Huff, Andrews & Thomas Company. F. B. Thomas & Company is still doing business.

There are now seven wholesale grocery houses representing the expanded interests of the original concern at Roanoke, and Mr. Thomas of Bluefield is connected with all of them as a director. The six houses outside of Bluefield are: Thomas-Andrews Company at Norton, the Bristol Grocery Company at Bristol, Abingdon Grocery Company at Abingdon, National Grocery Company at Roanoke, these all being in old Virginia; and Williamson Grocery Company at Williamson and Mullins Grocery Company at Mullins, West Virginia.

Mr. Thomas has organized and has participated in the management of a large number of successful business undertakings, including the Roanoke Candy Company, of which he is a director, the Bristol Candy Company at Bristol, Virginia, the Bluefield Ice and Cold Storage Company, which he with others organized in 1904 and of which he is president; the Citizens Underwriters Insurance Agency; the Flat Top National Bank of Bluefield, which he and others organized in 1903 and of which he is vice president; the Bluefield Gas & Power Company, of which he is a director; the Southern Investment and Real Estate Company of Roanoke, of which he is a director; the Bailey Lumber Company of Bluefield, probably the largest lumber company in the state; the Mountvale and Company and the Big Clear Creek Coal Company in Greenbrier County.

When his associates speak of his civic record they usually begin and end with unqualified praise of what Mr. Thomas did as member and for many years president of the School Board of Bluefield City. He first went on the board as a member in 1902, and altogether served twelve years, most of the time as president of the board. While he was president practically all of the modern school buildings in the city now in use were erected, both for the white and colored people. Mr. Thomas has some sound ideas on education, but his particular service was due to his great faculty of getting things done, whether it comes to the promotion of a strictly business enterprise or the financing and construction of a group of school buildings.

On November 17, 1891, Mr. Thomas married at Elizabethton, Tennessee, Miss Minnie Folsom, daughter of Maj. H. M. and Elizabeth (Berry) Folsom. Major Folsom, who was a relative of Francis (Folsom) Cleveland, widow of President Cleveland, was one of the able lawyers of Tennessee and had a distinguished war record, going into the Confederate army at the age of seventeen and being promoted to major before he was twenty. He died in 1909. Mrs. Thomas is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and for many years has been president of Bluefield Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have three children: Paul C., who was born in Tennessee in 1892 and finished his education in Washington and Lee University, Florence F. and Grace Elizabeth.

Mr. Thomas is of Scotch Irish ancestry, and his people were among the early settlers of the Valley of Virginia and also identified with the pioneering of Roanoke County. Some of his ancestors were soldiers in the Revolution and one of them was a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. Thomas assisted in organizing the Bluefield Country Club and is one of its Board of Governors. His favorite sport is hunting and fishing, and he particularly enjoys the pursuit of big game in the Maine woods. He is a democrat in politics, is affiliated with the Royal Arch, Knight Templar, and Scottish Rite Masons and Mystic Shrine, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Lions, and he and Mrs. Thomas are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Thomas in 1904 was a delegate from West Virginia to the World's Sunday School Convention at Jerusalem, and during that trip abroad he made an extensive tour all through the Holy Land, Egypt and other Mediterranean countries.

JOHN M. McCONIHAY, M. D. More than forty-five years of the life of Doctor McConihay have been devoted to the profession of medicine and surgery. One of the oldest and best known members of his profession at Charleston, Doctor McConihay has combined with his profession a distinctive service in the order of Masonry, the crowning honor in token of this long service coming in October, 1921, at Washington, when the Southern Grand Jurisdiction conferred upon him the supreme honorary thirty-third degree of the Scottish Rite.

Doctor McConihay was born near Milton, Cabell County, West Virginia, in 1853, son of Ira and Mary (Morris) McConihay, also natives of the state. Doctor McConihay was a boy when his parents moved to a home on the Kanawha River in Mason County, where he was reared and where he attended the public schools. He completed his literary education in Danison University of Ohio, and in 1876 graduated M. D. from the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville. After about a dozen years of arduous country practice at Leon in Mason County and Buffalo in Putnam County Doctor McConihay removed to Charleston in 1889, and for over thirty years has been one of the busy professional men of this city. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations.

His active service in Masonry began in 1880. Among other honors he is a past grand master of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia, a past grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons, was grand lecturer for eleven years, and his activities have covered a wide range of usefulness during forty years. He is also a past potentate of Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and past commander of Kanawha Commandery of Knights Templar at Charleston. For several years Doctor McConihay has been president of the Charleston Alumni Chapter of the Sigma Chi fraternity.

He married Miss Anna Evelith, a native of Tennessee but of West Virginia ancestry. Their five children are Mrs. Evelith Wilkerson, Mrs. Almah Wilson, Mrs. Pauline King, Miss Vivian McConihay and Morris McConihay.

CARL REGER, Morgantown, West Virginia, has celebrity as the home of a great university. It has many additional advantages and cause for civic pride, and not the least of these is that it is the chosen home of professional men of marked ability and country-wide reputation. Among these valued citizens no one enjoys greater confidence or personal esteem than Carl Reger, architect, who during the past six years has contributed greatly to the material improvement and general attractiveness of all parts of Morgantown and throughout West Virginia. His artistic designs appear in business structures in combinations making for utility also, in church edifices, hotels, apartment houses, schoolhouses and magnificent private residences.

Mr. Reger is a native of West Virginia and is descended direct and collaterally, from old Colonial families of what is now West Virginia. The original American settler of this branch of the Reger family was Jacob Reger, who was born in Holland in about 1733. He crossed the Atlantic Ocean to this country in about 1765, accompanied by his wife and their older children. He settled in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, later removed to the south branch of the Potomac River in what is now West Virginia, and in 1782, following the close of the Revolutionary war, he settled near what is now the town of Volga in Barbour County, West Virginia, where he died. His children bore these names: Anthony, Jacob, Philip, John, Abram, Isaac, Elizabeth, Barbara, Annie Mary and Catherine.

Isaac Reger, son of Jacob and great grandfather of the present generation, was born on the south branch of the Potomac River, August 19, 1782, settled on Haeker's Creek in Upshur County and spent his life there. He married Mary Magdalena Brake, daughter of Jacob Brake, who was known in Virginia as "the captive." During an Indian raid in his childhood he was captured by the savages and taken with them to near what is now the City of Detroit, Michigan, where he was detained for eleven years and then was returned to his parents. The children of Isaac Reger and his wife were seven in number: Ruth, Rebecca, Philip, Lydia, Elizabeth, David B. and Maria.

David B. Reger, of the above family, was born in Barbour County in 1822, and with his father moved to Haeker's Creek in Upshur County in 1830, and died on his farm there in April, 1906. His wife's name was Elizabeth Neely, and she was born near Morgantown in 1824, and died June 5, 1904. Their children were: Marion D., Joseph S., Isaac S., Mary and Angela.

Joseph S. Reger, son of David B. and father of Carl Reger, was born on the old family homestead in Upshur County, August 12, 1847, and grew up on the farm. He had educational privileges, attended French Creek Academy, and afterward taught school for a number of years, although farming was his main occupation. He was prominent in republican politics in Upshur County, served two terms as county superintendent of schools, served as a member of the County Court and also on the State Board of Agriculture. He was a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In his death on July 31, 1914, his community lost a man of great worth. On June 6, 1872, he married Miss Sirene Buntin, who was born at Sago in Upshur County, April 11, 1847, and died May 29, 1912. She was a daughter of James and Fanny (Morgan) Buntin, the former of whom had come to Virginia from Dunbarton, New Hampshire. The maternal grandparents of Carl Reger were Zedekiah and Rebecca (Watson) Morgan, the former of whom was born in Connecticut, March 8, 1744, and died at Sago, Upshur County, October 12, 1822. His second wife, Rebecca Watson, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, and died at Sago, Upshur County, May 20, 1846. Zedekiah Morgan was a descendant, four generations removed, from James Morgan, who came from Wales in 1636, settling near what is now Gloucester, Massachusetts. His branch of the family in New England and the Morgantown Morgans unite in Wales with a common ancestor, Sir John Morgan.

Carl Reger was born on the home farm near Buckhannon in Upshur County, West Virginia, October 2, 1878. After attending the common schools he took a preparatory course in the West Virginia Conference Seminary, now the West Virginia Wesleyan College. His tastes and talents led to an early interest in architecture, and before completing his education, as proposed, he had experience in the offices of several architects, following which he entered upon the study of architecture in the University of Pennsylvania, but did not remain to complete his course because of trouble with his eyes. In 1905 he gave them a needed rest and in the following year went to Los Angeles, California.

In the western city Mr. Reger found ready opportunity and appreciation of his talent as an architect and there received a certificate enabling him to practice architecture in that state. During the nine years he resided there he built up an enviable reputation in his profession, and some of the most imposing structures of that city of today stand as testimonials to his artistic conceptions and architectural knowledge. While there he had charge, as architect's superintendent and chief engineer in charge of construction, of the erection of some of the largest and most modern business blocks on the Pacific Coast.

In 1915 Mr. Reger returned to his native state and on August 1st of that year establishing himself professionally at Morgantown, securing two small rooms in the West Virginia Utilities Building, but his quarters soon became entirely inadequate, and at the present time his offices and busy employees occupy the entire floor of that building. He is not only the leading architect at Morgantown but his talents have also been engaged in other sections of the state. He was the designer of the greatly admired Sales and Service Building of the Central Automobile Corporation at Clarksburg, made the plans for the big fire-proof hotel now under way that will be a great improvement to Shinnston, West Virginia, and has many other contracts under way. He is secretary of the West Virginia State Society of Architects, and was the West Virginia delegate to the 1921 convention of the American Institute of Architects held at Washington, D. C.

On September 26, 1909, Mr. Reger married Miss Lara L. Law, who was born in Ritchie County, West Virginia, and is a daughter of Martin L. Law. Mr. and Mrs. Reger have three children: Ruth L., born May 15, 1913; Catherine, born April 24, 1917; and Carl Robert, born May 23, 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Reger are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Morgantown, in which he is a steward. He has long been deeply interested in Sunday school work, and is a member of the State Executive Committee of the West Virginia Sunday School Association and is secretary of the Monongalia County Sunday School Association. He is an active citizen in all that concerns the real welfare of Morgantown, but the political field has not attracted him. He belongs to the Morgantown Rotary Club.

HERBERT VOLNEY KING, M. D. The fearless, questioning attitude of the twentieth century is nowhere more strikingly apparent than among the exponents of the medical profession. The tendency of the latter-day scientific physician to avoid, beyond all things, hasty jumping to conclusions; or too ready dependence upon formulae is rapidly destroying ancient delusions. The heights to which a man with reason and courage may climb are practically limitless, and such men deserve, and in this age of the world usually receive, the hearty co-operation and support of the people of intelligence and worth in their communities. To this class of rational thinkers belongs Dr. Herbert Volney King, whose opportunities along professional lines, and particularly those dealing with diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, have been exceptional and whose use of the same has made him an important factor in connection with professional circles of Morgantown and Monongalia County.

Doctor King is a native of Ohio, having been born at Bellaire just across the Ohio River from West Virginia, January 10, 1883, a son of the late William and Belle (Powell) King, natives of Belmont County, Ohio. Doctor King was but a boy when both his parents died. At the age of eleven years he removed with his guardian to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he attended the city schools, graduating from Humbolt High School of that city in 1901. Entering then the University of Minnesota, he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine as a member of the class of 1905. Doctor King embarked in general practice at St. Paul in the same year, and continued as a practitioner of that city until 1917. He was assistant to Dr. L. A. Schipper, the noted eye, ear, nose and throat specialist of Bismarck, North Dakota, for a time, and later was assistant to Dr. Harry J. Heeb, professor of ophthalmology at Marquette College, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He took further post-graduate work under Dr. H. P. Mosher, now professor of nose and throat diseases at Harvard University. In the fall of 1920 Doctor King entered practice at Morgantown, where he has since been engaged in specializing in the treatment and cure of ailments of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and in the short period of time that he has been located here has established himself firmly in the estimation of the people of the city and its surrounding environs.

Doctor King is a member of the Monongalia County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a man of genial and confidence inspiring personality, a philosopher in his attitude towards the world and a rationalist in his sane and practical purpose.

Doctor King married Miss Abbie Abbott, daughter of J. D. and Sophia (Peterson) Abbott, of St. Paul, Minnesota, her father of Scotch stock and her mother of Swedish ancestry. Five children have come to Doctor and Mrs. King: Edwin and Ethel, twins, born August 1, 1911; Mary Belle, born November 25, 1913; Herbert William, born April 11, 1915; and Dorothy, born August 25, 1918.

PETER DILLE ARBOGAST, M. D. In the passage of time, including the momentous events of recent years in the world's history that have wrecked personal ambitions and overturned thrones, America has never forgotten or failed to pay tribute to that noble and substantial friend of other days, the Marquis de Lafayette of France. In a measure, this interest has clung also to those brave cavaliers who accompanied him to the unknown land across the sea and sheathed their swords to aid the struggling American colonies to secure independence. Not all of these brave lions returned to France, a number of them deciding to remain in the goodly land to which duty had led them. Here they founded families that generations afterward bear their honored names, and through emulating their pious example, they have wiped out the old-time debt on their native soil.

The Arbogast family of West Virginia was founded in America by two brothers who accompanied the Marquis de Fayette from France in 1777 and fought in the Revolutionary war to assist the American colonies. The Arbogast brothers afterward returned to France, but subsequently returned to the state, and both married women of German extraction. The great-grandfather of Dr. Peter D. Arbogast came to what is now Pendleton County, West Virginia, where he became the father of seven sons, of unusual physical development, all being over six feet in stature.

Adam Arbogast, the grandfather of Doctor Arbogast, a leading medical practitioner at Morgantown, was born in Pendleton County, West Virginia, and was one of the first brave men to settle in what is now Pocahontas County, and his brothers assisted in the defense of Fort Seibert when the Indians attacked the settlers, who had taken refuge in that old log fort.

Adam Arbogast, son of Adam and father of Doctor Arbogast, was born in 1792 on his father's farm in Pocahontas County, and died there in 1874. He was a prosperous farmer, and in addition to the old homestead owned another valuable farm. He married Sarah McDaniel, who was born Randolph County, Virginia, in 1841, and survived until 1877. Her parents were born in Scotland.

Doctor Arbogast was born on the old family farm in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, March 19, 1867. He attended the free schools and later Hillsborough Academy, following which he taught school for several years. In 1897 he entered the University of Virginia, where he completed medical course and was graduated from that institution with his degree June 12, 1901. He entered into practice at Durbin, Pocahontas County, removing in 1903 to Gorman, Maryland, but returning in 1904 to Durbin, where he continued until 1911, when, in search of a wider field, he came to Morgantown, where he is now very firmly established in the confidence and affection of the people.

Doctor Arbogast married, January 31, 1894, Miss Hattie Burner, who was born in Pocahontas County and was daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Beard) Burner, being, like the Doctor, to an old pioneer family of this section. Her great-grandfather, George Burner, and Adam Arbogast and Jacob Yeager, all married sisters, and, as the three earliest pioneers, settled for a time in Upper Shenandoah Valley, Pocahontas County, and all became people of importance. Mrs. Arbogast passed away on October 14, 1919, leaving five sons and one daughter and a large circle of attached friends. The eldest son, Harry McDaniel Arbogast, after spending two years in the University of West Virginia, was a member of the United States Army Medical Corps for six months during the World war, being stationed with the hospital at Fort Lee, Virginia. He married Miss Luella Howell, daughter of Charles G. Howell, of Morgantown, and they have one son, Richard Dille, who was born on Easter Sunday, 1921.

The daughter of Doctor Arbogast, Gertie Gale, is the wife of Lester E. Frazier, and they have one daughter, Therine Jane. Mr. Frazier is a graduated chemist of the University of West Virginia. He was born and reared in Greenbrier County, but after his marriage moved to Monessen, Pennsylvania.

Charles Merle Arbogast, who is an overseas veteran of the World war, was a member of the West Virginia National Guard at the outbreak of the World war, and as such went first to Fairmont, then to Pittsburgh, then back to Fairmont and then to Camp Shelby, Mississippi, where he spent a year in practice on the rifle range, following which he accompanied the American Expeditionary Forces to France. There he saw active service until military operations were terminated by the signing of the armistice with the enemy, and he returned to the United States in July, 1919. He is now a member of the West Virginia State Police. The three younger sons of the family are: Lloyd, who was graduated from the Morgantown High School in 1919, and Keith Bailey and Grey, who are yet in the grade schools.

Doctor Arbogast has never been particularly active in political life, although his convictions are sound and reasonable, but he is recognized as a dependable citizen who is justifiably proud of his long line of American ancestry. He is identified with a number of professional organizations and fraternally is a Mason and Odd Fellow. He is a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

GRANT P. HALL, mayor of Charleston, has set some new standards of municipal administration in the State of West Virginia. His life has been distinguished by faithfulness and well executed duties in several fields, education, business and public affairs.

Mayor Hall was born in Roane County, West Virginia, December 21, 1865, son of William and Isabel (Guinn) Hall, also natives of this state. In 1866, the year after his birth, his parents moved to Kanawha County and located on a farm in Big Sandy District. There Grant P. Hall grew to mature years. He started life with a country school education, began teaching at the age of sixteen, and subsequently, in the intervals of teaching, he attended Marshall College at Huntington. He taught altogether for ten years in Kanawha County, and he finished his education in the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware.

Mr. Hall was elected county superintendent of schools for Kanawha County in 1894, serving two years. In 1896 he was elected clerk of the Circuit Court, and filled that office six years. While in office he studied law, was admitted to the bar, and in addition to his private practice he served for a time as assistant prosecuting attorney of Kanawha County and as a member of the County Court. Later, giving up his law practice, Mr. Hall was for several years actively and successfully engaged in the real estate business at Charleston.

He was chosen mayor for the term of four years at the spring election of 1919. He entered the office at a critical time. During the war all except the most indispensable public improvements had stopped and the city was far behind in its program of pavement, sidewalks, sewerage, street lighting and other needed facilities. The execution of well considered and broad plans providing for such improvements has been carried forward with great vigor during Mr. Hall's administration. Millions of dollars have been expended the last four years to make Charleston the modern city that it is. These improvements have had to keep pace with the remarkable growth and expansion of Charleston territorially during the same period. Mr. Hall has won the heartiest commendation and approval for his efficient, businesslike and honest administration. It is an office to which he gives all his time, and he is in every sense the mayor of the city. One great improvement that is likely to be considered a permanent memorial to his administration is the City Hall, constructed at a cost of $650,000.

A republican in politics, Mr. Hall for many years has been an influential and prominent figure in city, county and state politics. In the general election of 1920 he was campaign manager for Ephraim F. Morgan, and the splendid majority rolled up for General Morgan testifies to Mr. Hall's efficiency as a political organizer. During the war with Germany he was a member of nearly all the campaign committees and worked heartily for the success of every local quota.

He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. By his marriage to Miss Anna Steele Mr. Hall has six children: Lucile, wife of J. A. Shanklin; Frank B., Harry A., Grant P., Jr., Marion S. and Isabel.

ROBERT D. HENNESSY, of Morgantown, Monongalia County, has achieved high standing in his profession, that of civil engineer, is actively identified with important industrial and capitalistic interests, and is a scion of one of the old and honored families of this section of West Virginia. He was born at Morgantown, August 17, 1883, and is a son of the late Frederick A. and Ella E. (Coil) Hennen. The father was born at Morgantown, February 26, 1844, a son of Robert P. and Elizabeth (Wilkins) Hennen. Robert P. Hennen was born in the State of Pennsylvania, where his father, Matthew Hennen, settled upon immigration to America from his native County Down, Ireland. Robert P. Hennen later came to Morgantown, in what is now West Virginia, and here engaged in the work of his trade, that of cabinetmaker, in which connection he became one of the pioneer undertakers of this place. He served as a member of the borough council during the '60s, and here his death occurred in 1873. His wife was born in New Jersey and her death occurred in 1871.

Frederick A. Hennen learned the trade of cabinetmaker under the direction of his father, and at Morgantown he followed his trade and engaged in the undertaking business, the enterprise later being amplified to include the furniture business, in which he continued until about 1912, when he retired. He was one of the honored and influential citizens of Morgantown, served about twelve years as a member of the City Council and was one of the most loyal and progressive citizens of his native city and county. His marriage to Miss Ella E. Coil was solemnized in 1882, and the gracious ties were severed by the death of Mrs. Hennen in 1910. He survived her by more than a decade and his death occurred June 5, 1921, both having been earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and having been affiliated with the Independent Order of O. Fellows.

Robert D. Hennen gained his preliminary education in the public schools of Morgantown, and in 1908 he was graduated in the celebrated Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the City of Boston. He received from this institution the degree of Bachelor of Science, and in 1912 the same degree and also that of Civil Engineer were conferred upon him by the University of West Virginia, in which he had taken effective post-graduate work. In 1908 he was appointed civil engineer of Monongalia County by the County Court, and he served in this position four years, within which he did much important work for the county. From 1912 to 1914 he was engineer in chief in the construction of the Morgantown & Wheeling Railroad, and in the latter year he organized the Monongahela Valley Engineering Company of Morgantown, of which he continued the executive head until he disposed of his interests in the corporation in 1920. Mr. Hennen was one of the organizers of the Moore-Tex Oil Company of Morgantown, of which he is vice president, and he was likewise one of the organizers of the Knob Coal Company, of his interest in which he later disposed.

Mr. Hennen is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a valued and progressive member of the local Rotary Club and the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce. He is a member also of the Morgantown Country Club, is treasurer of the Alumni Association of the University of West Virginia, a trustee of the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church in their home city.

Mr. Hennen married Miss Louise Reiner, daughter of Thomas P. and Emma (Porter) Reiner, of Dunbar, Pennsylvania, and she is a popular factor in the representative social activities of Morgantown.

BERNARD JAMES McDERMOTT, civil and mining engineer and coal operator, is one of the progressive citizens and representative business men of Morgantown, county seat of Monongalia County. He was born at Taunton, Massachusetts, February 9, 1882, and is a son of Michael and Mary Ann (Lynch) McDermott, the former of whom was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, and the latter at Cool Springs, New York, both being now deceased.

The parochial and public schools of his native city afforded Bernard J. McDermott his early education, and at the age of nineteen years he entered the engineering department of the Shawmut Mining Company at Byrnedale, Elk County, Pennsylvania, in the capacity of draftsman. His technical ability and effective service led to his promotion to the position of division engineer for the company, in which he continued the incumbent four years. He left Byrnedale in May, 1906, to assume the position of chief engineer of the Elkins Coal & Coke Company at Morgantown, West Virginia. Here he received appointment at once to the post of chief engineer of the Morgantown & Kinwood Railway Company, and of these two responsible offices he continued in tenure eleven years—until August 1917. Within this period Mr. McDermott had charge of the designs and construction of five new mines of the Elkins Coal & Coke Company and the reconstruction of two other mines of the company. He became associated with Joseph Miller, of New York City, and built and placed in operation mines No. 1 and No. 2 at Britz, West Virginia, at mill No. 3 at Kingwood, of which properties he is now the chief operator, under the title of chief engineer and general superintendent, with office headquarters in the Pri Building at Morgantown.

Mr. McDermott is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Branch No. 62, Knights of St. George; and the Council of the Knights of Columbus at St. Mary's, Pennsylvania. He is an active member of the Morgantown Country Club.

Mr. McDermott married Miss Angela De Lisle, and they have four children: Susan Marie, Bernard Joseph, Lou Leo and Mary Ann.

DAVID CHADWICK REAY, who is engaged in the practice of his profession in his native city of Morgantown, as one of the representative members of the bar of Monongalia County, is a scion of the fourth generation of the Reay family in America and of the third generation in what is now the State of West Virginia. John Otho Reay, son of Capt. John Otho Reay, of the Royal English Navy, came to America in 1795, and first settled in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, whence he later removed to Baltimore, Maryland. From the latter city he thereafter removed to Hardy County, Virginia. He was twice married, his second wife having been Elizabeth, a daughter of Capt. John Neville and granddaughter of Gen. Joseph Neville, of Virginia, and of whose marriage were born two sons and two daughters, of whom the son, George M., was the grandfather of him whose name introduces this review.

George M. Reay was born in Hardy County, Virginia, in 1813, and when he was four years of age his widow mother became the wife of David Gilmore. Soon afterward the family came to what is now Tucker County, West Virginia, and in 1833 George M. Reay established his residence at Morgantown, where he continued actively in business until 1870. Here he served as justice of the peace from 1841 to 1859, and within this period served also as captain of militia. December 24, 1840, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Maple, of Greene County, Pennsylvania, and their son, Thomas P., became the father of David C. Reay of this sketch.

Thomas Presley Reay was born at Morgantown, August 30, 1841, received good educational advantages, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period, and he prepared himself for the legal profession. However, he turned his attention from the law and engaged in the coal and oil business, in which he had active part in the development of these productive industries in this section of the state. He served as general deputy collector of internal revenue for the Eleventh Revenue Division, comprising West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, Delaware and the District of Columbia, and this office he resigned in 1895, since which time he has continued his residence at Morgantown and given his supervision to his varied capitalistic and business interests. His wife, Sarah Virginia, a daughter of Dr. Marmaduke Dent, died on the 17th of October, 1920, and her memory is revered by a who came within the sphere of her gracious influence.

David Chadwick Reay, son of Thomas P. and Sarah Virginia Reay, was born at Morgantown on the 21st of November, 1870, and the local schools afforded him his preliminary education. In 1895 he was graduated from the law departnment of the University of West Virginia, and his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws was followed in the same year by his admission to the bar of his native state. In 1896 he was appointed deputy clerk of the Supreme Court of West Virginia, and he continued his service in this capacity until 1902, when he resigned to enter the practice of his profession at Morgantown. Here he was associated in practice with Charles A. Goodwin, under the firm name of Goodwin & Reay, until 1918, when President Wilson appointed him auditor of the treasury for the Department of the Interior at Washington. In this office he gave a most effective and creditable administration, and in October, 1919, he resigned his Government post for the purpose of resuming the practice of his profession, but it was not until October, 1920, that his resignation was accepted and he returned to Morgantown, where he has continued in the practice of law, with a representative clientele. Aside from his law business Mr. Reay has substantial interests in coal mining and oil production, and to these he finds it expedient to give the major part of his time and attention. He is a member of the West Virginia State Bar Association and the Monongalia Bar Association, is affiliated with the Phi Sigma Kappa college fraternity, is a staunch democrat, holds membership in the Morgantown Country Club, and he and his wife are active members of the First Presbyterian Church in their home city. He is a loyal and progressive member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce.

DAVID HOTT, A. B., M. D., who is established in the practice of his profession at Morgantown, Monongalia County, is one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native state and a scion of the third generation of the Hott family in West Virginia, his grandfather, Jacob Hott, of French-Huguenot lineage, having settled in Berkeley County, this state, long before West Virginia had been segregated from the mother state of Virginia. David Hott, Sr., father of the Doctor, was born in Berkeley County in 1831, and his wife, whose maiden name was Rachel Hancher, was born in the same county in 1834, she having been of Irish ancestry. David Hott continued his activities as a farmer in his native county until he purchased and removed to a farm in Frederick County, just across the line from his old farm in Berkeley County. There he continued as one of the substantial exponents of farm industry until his death in 1916. His widow passed away in 1919.

Doctor Hott was born on the old homestead farm in Berkeley County, November 21, 1873, and was reared in Frederick County, to which the family removal was made when he was two years old. After his well directed public-school training he entered the University of West Virginia, and in this institution he was graduated in 1900, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1902 he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and in the same year he engaged in the active general practice of his profession at Morgantown, which city has since continued the stage of his effective professional service, save for the period during which he was a member of the Medical Corps of the United States Army at the time of the World war. He entered the medical corps in October, 1917, and was first stationed at Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, whence he was later transferred to Fort Hamilton, New York, where he remained until he crossed to France with the Fifty-ninth Regiment of Coast Artillery. With this command he departed March 27, 1918, and after landing at Brest, France, the regiment proceeded to Villiers-sur-Meuse, and saw its first active fighting in the St. Mihiel sector. Thereafter it was in service in the great Argonne Forest campaign, proceeded up the River Meuse, and was at Remain when the historic armistice was signed. Upon the return voyage

Doctor Hott landed in the port of New York City, February 15, 1919, and two weeks later he received his honorable discharge, with the rank of captain, his commission as captain having been received when he entered service. He is now a member of the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army, with the rank of major. After the close of his patriotic service Doctor Hott returned to Morgantown, where he has since continued his active professional work, in which his success attests alike his ability and his personal popularity. He is a member of the Monongalia County Medical Society, West Virginia State Medical Society, Southern Medical Society, the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Doctor Hott married Miss Alene Vance, daughter of George and Mary (Scott) Vance, of Morgantown. Their one child, George David, was graduated in the Morgantown High School, and is a member of the class of 1923 in the University of West Virginia.

D., one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Morgantown, and health officer for Monongalia County, was born on a farm on Coper's Creek, Kanawha County, West Virginia, the son of James Madison and Martha (Rogers) Hughart, and grandson of Joseph Hughart, who was born in a log fort in Greenbrier County, Virginia, where his parents, with other settlers, had taken refuge during one of the numerous Indian raids of that day.

James Madison Hughart was born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, in 1820, and during the war between the states served in the Union Army as a member of Company A, Seventh Virginia Cavalry, under General Averil, and as such was captured and confined in Libby Prison for six months. After the close of the war he married and removed to Kansas, where he homesteaded a tract of land, but in 1874 returned to West Virginia and settled in Kanawha County, twelve miles from Charleston. In 1880 he removed to Roane County, this state, where his death occurred in 1881. His wife, Martha, was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, in 1840, and died in 1880. She was a daughter of Robert Jackson Rogers, a full cousin to Gen. Andrew Jackson. The Rogers family were Protestants who came from the North of Ireland.

Joseph Robert Hughart was born April 16, 1871, and was reared on the home farm and obtained his early education in the country schools. At the age of nineteen years he began to teach school and when he had reached his thirtieth year he had taught sixteen terms of school, he having secured a first-class certificate to teach at the beginning. While teaching he applied himself to the study of medicine, having early determined upon a professional career, and in 1903 was granted a license to practice by the State Board of Medical Examiners of West Virginia. He attended the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine from that institution in 1904, and at that time entered practice at Burnsville, Braxton County, West Virginia. In 1913 he went before the State Board and was given another license, and in 1914 entered practice at Morgantown. Here he has risen steadily in his calling, and is now accounted one of the leaders therein in Monongalia County, having a large, representative and lucrative practice and being recognized as a physician whose views accord with the highest and best professional ethics.

While he is not a politician, Doctor Hughart takes an interest in public affairs, particularly those affecting the general civic welfare of his adopted city, its institutions and its people, and public-spirited movements and enterprises find in him a generous and willing supporter.

On February 12, 1898, Doctor Hughart was united in marriage with Miss Russia E. Carper, daughter of Clifton H. and Prussia (Stackhouse) Carper, agricultural people of Roane County, this state, and to this union there have come two children: Robert J., born July 14, 1902; and Joseph M., born March 24, 1905.

WILLIAM A. LUCAS. Among the alert and enterprising men who during the past several decades have utilized the opportunities offered at Huntington for business preferment and attained thereby a full measure of success is William A. Lucas, whose career is typical of modern progress and advancement, and who as a man of affairs ranks among the contributors to his community's betterment. Mr. Lucas, who is engaged in the real estate business, was born at French Camp, Choctaw County, Mississippi, December 6, 1875, and is a son of John and Margaret (Carter) Lucas.

John Lucas was born in 1836, at Chester, South Carolina. When the war between the states came on he enlisted under the colors of the Confederacy, his commanding officer being General Longstreet. Under this leadership he fought throughout the period of the war, establishing a splendid record for bravery and faithful performance of duty. At the close of the struggle he moved to Choctaw County, Mississippi, where he passed the rest of his life in agricultural operations of some extent, and died at French Camp in 1901, when sixty-four years of age, respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He was a stalwart democrat in his political convictions, was fraternally affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belonged to the Baptist Church. Mr. Lucas married Miss Margaret Carter, who was born in 1850, at French Camp, where she died in 1895. Six children were born to this union: Minnie Lee, the wife of Charles A. Torbert, a banker of Ackerman, Mississippi; James Walter, M. D., a physician and surgeon of Moorehead, Mississippi; Rattie, who died at French Camp when but three years of age; William A., of this review; Edna, who died at the age of three years; and Margaret, the wife of Porter W. Berry, superintendent of the agricultural school at Senatobia, Mississippi.

The early education of William A. Lucas was acquired in the public school at French Camp, following which he pursued a course in the academy there, and then enrolled as a student at the University of Mississippi, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1898, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. While attending college he was a member of the Phi Delta Theta Greek letter fraternity. After his graduation Mr. Lucas became an instructor at Jefferson Military College, Washington, Mississippi, and remained with that institution for a period of eleven years. In 1909 he came to Huntington, West Virginia, and embarked in the real estate business, a field in which he has gained something more than ordinary success. His offices are situated at Nos. 1204-1205 First National Bank Building, and he is secretary and treasurer of several land companies and enjoys the full confidence of his associates in his various ventures. In political matters Mr. Lucas supports the principles and candidates of the democratic party. He is a member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, and has been a generous supporter of worthy civic enterprises.

On June 14, 1905, Mr. Lucas married, at Washington, Adams County, Mississippi, Miss Fannie Belle Raymond, daughter of Dr. Joseph S. and Margaret Paxton Raymond, of Rockbridge County, Virginia, both now deceased. Doctor Raymond was for forty years president of Jefferson College. Mrs. Lucas is a graduate of a young ladies' seminary. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lucas: William A., Jr., born May 29, 1906; Margaret Raymond, born August 3, 1908; and Minnie Lee, born May 3, 1913.

REV. THOMAS S. HAMILTON, the able and honored pastor of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, was born at Abingdon, Washington County, Virginia, October 17, 1867, and is a scion of one of the old and influential families of that section of the Old Dominion state. He is a son of John B. and Anna (Bradley) Hamilton, his father having been born and reared in Washington County and having there been engaged in mercantile business at Abingdon for many years. As a lad of fifteen years, John B. Hamilton ran away from home and followed an older brother to join a regiment of Virginia volunteer infantry that went forth in defense of the Confederate cause in the Civil war. The youthful soldier lived up to the full tension of the great conflict, participated in many engagements, including a number of important battles, and the bullet which wounded him in one of his hands remained imbedded in the flesh of the hand until his death in 1905, at the age of fifty-nine years. His widow attained to the age of seventy-three years and passed to the life eternal in 1919, both having been devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which Mr. Hamilton served many years as a steward. John B. Hamilton was a man of fine mentality and sterling character, was a stalwart supporter of the principles of the democratic party and was affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans.

Rev. Thomas S. Hamilton, eldest in a family of five children, received his preliminary education in the public schools of his native place, thereafter continued his studies in Emory and Henry College, Virginia, and later took a law course in historic old University of Virginia. He was admitted to the bar at Abingdon, judicial center of his native county, and there he continued in the successful practice of his profession for a period of twelve years. Mr. Hamilton likewise studied medicine, and thus further broadened his intellectual ken and practical knowledge—a fortification that has been of much value to him in the high calling in which he is now serving. Moved by a fine spirit of Christian stewardship, he finally decided to consecrate his life to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he had become an earnest member in his youth. He was or-

and a clergyman of the church in 1902, as a member of the Holston Conference in Virginia, and his first pastoral service was on the Oldtown Circuit of that conference. He was thus engaged one year, and during the next three years was in similar service on the Cedar Spring Circuit. He then became pastor of the church at Wise, Virginia, where he continued his labors two years. For the ensuing four years he was pastor of the Church at Bluefield, West Virginia, and the next three years found him pastor of Trinity Church in the city of Chattanooga, Tennessee. In 1916 he came again to Bluefield, where he has since served continuously as pastor of the Bland Street Methodist Church. In evidence of the high esteem in which he is held in the community and also of the estimate placed upon him as a citizen and a clergyman, it is interesting to record that the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, every leading organization in the city and all of the other churches of Bluefield recently sent representatives to the annual conference of the Methodist Church with important requests that Mr. Hamilton be returned to his present pastorate, to which he was duly reassigned. He is a forceful and eloquent pulpit orator and an able church executive, so that unequivocal success has attended his work in his various pastoral charges. His intellectual and professional attainments have heightened his influence in connection with civic affairs. He was one of the leaders in the movement which secured Mercer County to "go over the top" in the various lines of patriotic contribution during the nation's participation in the World war, he having been one of the most zealous of the four-minute speakers engaged in furthering such war service in the county, having served on many committees in charge of such campaigns in support of the Government loan, the Cross work, etc. Mr. Hamilton was chairman of a local committee which perfected arrangements for evangelistic campaigns of Rev. "Billy" Sunday in the field. He is a leader in community sentiment and, in addition, is a valued member of the Chamber of Commerce, and of the Rotary Club, in which he holds the office of president of the local club.

On the 26th of February, 1895, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hamilton and Miss Aldens Clark, daughter of Isaac Lewis Clark, a representative citizen of Morgantown, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton have three sons and six daughters. One of the sons, Stokes Hamilton, served with loyalty and efficiency as a soldier in the United States army at the time of the World war, received commission as first lieutenant.

NATHANIEL BARNARD, D. D. S., who is successfully established in the practice of his profession at Morgantown, Monongalia County, is a native of Maryland and a scion of one of the pioneer families in both that state and Pennsylvania, the Barnards being of Scotch ancestry and the Spear lineage tracing back to Irish origin. Nathaniel Barnard, Sr., father of the Doctor, was born and reared in Maryland, became a miller by vocation and owned and operated the Moscow Mills at Moscow, that state. Subsequently he moved to Westernport, Maryland, where he resided until his death. His wife, who likewise is deceased, bore the maiden name of Nancy Ellen Spear and was representative of a family early founded in Pennsylvania. Doctor Barnard was born at Westernport, Maryland, on the 2d, 1884, and in 1903 he was graduated from the high school, after which he took a course in the State Business College at Cumberland, Maryland. After three years of service as a bookkeeper he took a literary or academic course in the Davis and Elkins College at Elkins, West Virginia, and in 1913 he was graduated in the department of dentistry of the University of Maryland. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery he entered the practice at Elkins, West Virginia, where he remained engaged until he entered the service of the nation in connection with the World war. In August, 1917, he was commissioned first lieutenant in the Dental Corps of the United States Army and assigned to the Eighteenth Division, then stationed at Camp Lee, Virginia. When this division was ordered overseas the Doctor was transferred to the One Hundred and Third Field Artillery, with which he was in active service in France one year, within which he was promoted to the rank of captain. Soon after the signing of the armistice further distinction came to him in his promotion to the office of major in the Dental Corps. Upon his return to the United States he was ordered to Fort Sheridan, whence he was transferred to the Maxillofacial Department at Jefferson Barracks, where he remained until he received his honorable discharge, he having been mustered out July 1, 1920. He returned to Elkins, West Virginia, but shortly afterward removed to Morgantown, where he has a well equipped office and is engaged actively in the work of his profession. The Doctor is a member of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Kiwanis Club of Morgantown.

Doctor Barnard married Miss Winnifred Martha Gross, daughter of Cecil Gross, a representative lumberman at Elkins, this state, and they have a winsome little daughter, Nancy Gray.

AUGUST JOSEPH SCHMIDIGER, D. D. S. An accomplished and skillful young dental surgeon at Morgantown, Doctor Schmidiger grew up in this city, was liberally educated, and after completing his preparation for his profession in the East returned here to practice.

He was born at Postoria, Ohio, August 7, 1893, son of Frank and Alice (Schorno) Schmidiger. His parents were natives of Switzerland, but were married in this country. The mother was born in 1873 and died in 1915. Frank Schmidiger was born in 1862, learned the trade of glass maker in Switzerland, and on coming to the United States in 1888 was employed for a time in a glass plant at Cumberland, Maryland, and later went to Ohio. He was one of the organizers of the Seneca Glass Company at Postoria. Due to the exhaustion of the natural gas supply the company in 1900 moved its plant to Morgantown, West Virginia, where the Seneca Glass Company is one of the large and conspicuous industries at this time. Frank Schmidiger has been in the business continually, and now has charge of the company's plant at Starr City, a suburb of Morgantown.

August Joseph Schmidiger was seven years of age when the family came to Morgantown. He attended the city schools and in 1907 entered Rock Hill College at Elliott City, Maryland, where he took the academic and regular college work, graduating A. B. in 1914. The following year he entered Baltimore Dental College at Baltimore, and received his degree in 1918. About the time he finished his college course Doctor Schmidiger volunteered for service in the Dental Corps, but he was not called to the colors prior to the signing of the armistice. In 1919, having returned to Morgantown, he opened an office for practice, and ranks as one of the most skillful men in his profession. He is a member of Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, of St. Francis de Sales Catholic Church and the Psi Omega dental fraternity.

Mr. Kurner was born in Wheeling, July 10, 1859. His father, John David Kurner, was born in Wurttemberg, Germany, in 1832, came to the United States when a young man and settled at Wheeling, was a merchant, and in the course of years achieved an influential place in local business circles. He was a member of the State Militia during the Civil war. He was affiliated with the democratic party and a member of the Lutheran Church. His death occurred at Wheeling in 1891. His wife was Susanna E. Strobel, still living in Wheeling, where she was born in 1838. The children of John David Kurner and wife were: Veronica, now living at Akron, Ohio, widow of Philip Knabe, who was a nail manufacturer at Wheeling; David C.; William, a painter and decorator who died at Wheeling at the age of fifty-five; Charles, a painter and decorator at Wheeling; John David, a resident of Cleveland, Ohio; Harry J., an advertiser at Wheeling; Archibald, who has never contracted the habit of settled residence; Nellie, whose husband, F. knowledge of painting, sign work and graining. He has used this useful mechanical trade as the basis of a permanent business career. In 1886 he established himself in business as a contractor and dealer in decorative materials, starting with a very small capital, and with his own labor, supplemented by a few employees, and during the past thirty-five years has made his business one of the leading organizations of its kind in the state, with offices and store at 1518 Market Street, and he does both a wholesale and retail business in decorative materials as well as contracting for painting and decorating. ROBERT RAYMOND McFALL, general manager and treasurer of the Southern Fuel Company of Morgantown, has had an interesting diversity of experience in business and in educational circles, and since locating at Morgantown has found ample satisfaction not only for his business energies but for the desires for social and civic service.

A native of Northern New York, he was born in the Village of Naumburg, Lewis County, January 29, 1884, son of John and Lillian A. (Eldred) McFall, the former a native of St. Lawrence County and the latter of Jefferson County, New York. His grandparents, William and Mary McFall, were born in Glasgow, Scotland, and were pioneers in St. Lawrence County, New York. John McFall was a carriage maker by trade, an occupation and business he followed for many years at Naumburg, where he died in 1918, at the age of sixty-four. His widow is now sixty-two years of age and lives at Castorland, New York.

Robert R. McFall was educated in the Lowville, New York, Academy, and completed his literary education in Adrian College of Michigan. His first regular business experience was as shipping clerk for the Beaver River Lumber Company at Castorland, New York, in 1902. Following that he was paymaster for the Carthage Tissue Paper Mills at Carthage, New York. During his student career at Adrian, Michigan, he was secretary to the president of the college. On leaving college he spent one year at Valley City, North Dakota, as registrar of the State School of North Dakota. He then returned to Adrian, and for four years was registrar of Adrian College and secretary to the Board of Trustees.

Mr. McFall came to Morgantown in 1914. Here he built and managed the plant of the Barley Foods Company, conducting that business five years. Since 1919 he has been general manager and treasurer of the Southern Fuel Company. He is also secretary of the Morgantown Wholesale Coal Association and a director of the Union Bank and Trust Company. He is a member of the Alpha Tau Omega college fraternity, belongs to the First Presbyterian Church and is affiliated with the Rotary, Masonic and Old Colony clubs, the Morgantown and Pittsburgh Chambers of Commerce. Her father was descended from the Daniel Boone family. Mr. and Mrs. McFall have two children: Anna Gene, born August 8, 1915; and J. S. Robert, born November 5, 1916.

FRANK KIRBY BRETZ, vice president of the Morgantown and Kingwood Railroad Company, is a graduate civil engineer, but for over thirty years has been identified with the operating and executive side of railroading, and the greater part of that time his service has been given to railroads in West Virginia.

Mr. Bretz is a native of Pennsylvania, of a distinguished American family and one that has been represented in nearly all the important wars of the nation. He is a descendant of Ludwig Bretz, who with two brothers, Wendel and Henry, after a voyage from Germany landed at the port of Philadelphia, August 15, 1750. Ludwig bought a farm in Lancaster County, but some years later sold that property and bought land five miles from Millersville in the Lykens Valley of Pennsylvania. That homestead was his residence the rest of his life. Soon after moving to this second farm the Revolutionary war came on, and he enlisted as a member of Capt. Albright Deibler's "Company of Associates" of the Fourth Battalion of Pennsylvania soldiers, commanded by Col. James Burd. This company took part in the battle of Trenton and Princeton and also in the earlier battle on Long Island, where Ludwig Bretz was wounded. He returned to his home in January, 1777, but again entered the army as sergeant of Capt. Martin Weaver's company, and later he fought against the Indians in the West Branch of the Susquehanna Valley.

John Bretz, son of Ludwig, was born December 15, 1771 and died March 26, 1845. He married Catherine Fox, who was born December 21, 1773. Their son, Thomas Bretz, was born January 4, 1798, and died at Newport, Perry County, Pennsylvania, June 2, 1866. His wife was Nancy Huffnagle who was born July 3, 1806.

Mahlon T. Bretz, son of Thomas, was born on a farm near Newport in Perry County, Pennsylvania, July 14, 1843. His wife, Emma Kirby, was born at Williamstown, Gloucester County, New Jersey, October 30, 1850, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Carman) Kirby. Her great-grand father was a soldier in the New Jersey line during the Revolution. Mahlon T. Bretz also contributed to the military annals of the family. August 13, 1862, he was mustered into Company I of the One Hundred and Thirty-third Pennsylvania Infantry. At the battle of Fredericksburg, December 11, 1862, he was wounded by a bullet in his chest and lay on the battlefield until after dark, when he made his way to the Field Hospital. He was discharged February 24, 1863, but in June of the same year re-enlisted, joining the Thirty-sixth Pennsylvania Infantry and later he enlisted in Company C of the One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry. After the war for many years he held the office of cashier for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Kensington, Philadelphia. He was finally obliged to resign because of ill health due to the wound he had received at Fredericksburg. The bullet was never removed, and eventually it seemed to have changed its position, with the result that he was incapacitated for business. Since 1881 Mahlon Bretz has been retired from all active duties, but is still living at his home at Newport, Pennsylvania.

Frank Kirby Bretz is a son of Mahlon T. and Emma (Kirby) Bretz. He was born at Newport, Pennsylvania, August 4, 1872. Energy and initiative seem to have been qualities of his original endowment. While a boy in the public schools he gave his spare time to master stenography and telegraphy. During 1888-89 he was being prepared for college at Cumberland, Maryland, under private tutors, and at the same time was employed as private secretary to his uncle, Calton L. Bretz, of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railway. Mr. Bretz was the first employee of that road whose duties included the operation of a type iter. In September, 1889, he entered Lafayette College of Pennsylvania, where he graduated with the Civil Engineers degree in 1893.

Elliott B. Hopkins

On leaving college Mr. Bretz became private secretary Keyser, West Virginia, to C. Wood Dailey, general counsel of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railway. September, 1894, he was made general manager of what is then the Dry Fork Railroad, now the Central West Virginia and Southern, at Hendricks, Tucker County. This is his responsibility and post of duty until October 16, 1902, when he became general manager of the Morgantown Kingwood Railroad, with headquarters at Morgantown. He has been a resident of Morgantown for twenty years, and is one of its best known citizens, always closely identified with matters of community progress. He has been vice president of the Morgantown & Kingwood Railroad since 1907.

April 9, 1909, Mr. Bretz married Dove Adams. She was born at St. George, Tucker County, West Virginia, September 6, 1881, daughter of John J. and Angelica (Ewing) Adams. Her mother is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Bretz have one daughter, Mary, born January 21, 1920.

WILLIAM NEWTON DAWSON. The good favor Mr. Dawson enjoys in Morgantown as a citizen and business man is due to twenty years of residence, earnest and faithful work as merchant and business man, and an ever prompt public spirit when the needs of the community required its expression.

Mr. Dawson was born on the old Dawson homestead four miles from Uniontown, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, where the Dawsons and Nixons have long been prominent in the affairs of that section of the Keystone State. His paternal grandfather, John Dawson, settled with his family in Fayette County many years ago. William H. Dawson, father of the Morgantown business man, was born on the Dawson farm near Uniontown, June 1, 1833, and is now living, in an eighty-eighth year, retired. He was a merchant and farmer until 1912. He is a very devout Baptist and a republican in politics. William H. Dawson married Pery L. Nixon, who was born on the Nixon homestead at Oliphant Furnace in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, daughter of Moses Nixon. She died in 1912.

William N. Dawson was born December 29, 1862, and made the best possible use of his advantages in the public schools of Fayette County. From his thirteenth to his twenty-third year he was on the farm, sharing in its work and responsibilities, and when he left there he became clerk of a grocery store at Uniontown. Thereafter he was successively a clerk, merchant and traveling salesman, and while on the road spent one year in Kansas.

In 1900 Mr. Dawson established himself in business at Morgantown, and for twenty years owned and operated the most popular confectionery, stationery and periodical store in the city. It was a business that grew and prospered largely because its proprietor made the service worthy of patronage. In 1920 he sold this business, and has since been in the insurance and real estate field, where he is enjoying well merited success.

Mr. Dawson is affiliated with Fayette Lodge No. 228, I. O. O. F., and A. M., at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, Morgantown chapter of the Royal Arch Masons, Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 6 of Scottish Rite, also belongs to West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, and Osiris temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. His first wife was Lola Brown, daughter of John Brown, of First Chance, Pennsylvania. She died in 1890, leaving one daughter, Annie L., who is the wife of F. W. Hussey, living at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Mr. Dawson married for his second wife Maggie F. Walters, daughter of Elisha Walters, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

THOMAS RAY DILLE has been numbered among the very successful lawyers of Morgantown for over twenty years. He has given additional prestige to the name Dille, so long associated with high attainments at the bar of West Virginia. Outside of his profession he is perhaps most widely known over the state through his official leadership in the Knights of Pythias fraternity.

Mr. Dille was born at Walnut Hill, now a part of the Fourth Ward of Morgantown, December 5, 1874, son of Oliver Hagans and Gillie (Evans) Dille, and a grandson of Judge John Adams Dille, one of the distinguished figures at the bench and bar of West Virginia at the beginning of statehood and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

Thomas Ray Dille was educated in Morgantown, also attended school at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and pursued both his literary and law studies in West Virginia University. He received his degree in law in 1897, and graduated with the A. B. degree in law in 1898. Mr. Dille was in practice at Morgantown with his uncle, Clarence B. Dille, under the firm name Dille & Dille, until 1914, since which year he has been alone in his profession. He was deputy circuit clerk in 1899-1900 under William E. Glasscock, and for six years acted as deputy county clerk under John M. Gregg. He is commissioner of chancery for Monongalia County and commissioner of accounts. For fourteen consecutive years Mr. Dille was treasurer of the Monongalia County Bar Association, and was president of the association in 1915-16.

He is a charter member of the Kappa Alpha college fraternity. He was vice president in 1913-14 and president in 1914-15 of the West Virginia Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution, and has been secretary of the State Society Sons of the American Revolution since 1918.

He joined the D. O. K. K. at the institution of Tau Temple No. 169 at Clarksburg, August 24, 1913, and was elected a royal prince of said temple in February, 1917. He represented Tau Temple No. 169 in the Imperial Palace Conventions of 1919-1921. He joined Athens Temple No. 30, Pythian Sisters, at Morgantown, June 6, 1910.

Oliver Hagans Dille, father of Thomas Ray Dille, was one of Morgantown's able and well known citizens for many years. He was born at Kingwood, Preston County, February 20, 1850, and died at Morgantown, November 22, 1914. He graduated from West Virginia University in 1871, read law under his father and was admitted to the bar September 9, 1872. His health would not permit his continuing long in the legal profession, and he sought an occupation that would take him into the open, and thereafter his home was the historic Walnut Hill farm near Morgantown. He was a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and always had the best interests of his community at heart. September 16, 1873, he married Gillie Coleman Evans, daughter of James Evans, of the pioneer family of that name in Monongalia County. The children of Oliver H. Dille and wife were: Thomas Ray; Elisha Merrill, born June 21, 1878; Rachel Jane, born January 23, 1880; Maude Evans, born December 16, 1883, now the wife of Harold E. Campbell; James Evans, born April 6, 1886; and John Adams, born May 20, 1889.

ELLIOTT BUDD HOPKINS, who was a major in the Eighty-ninth Division in France and Germany, was associated as a mechanical expert with the very beginning of production at the Dodge Brothers motor plant in Detroit, but soon entered the sales department, and has been selling the Dodge Brothers cars for many years. He is president and general manager of the Hopkins Motor Company, one of the most complete sales and service organizations at Wheeling.

Major Hopkins was born in Chicago, December 3, 1889. He is a member of a distinguished Colonial American family. The first American ancestor was Edward Hopkins, who reached Massachusetts in the early part of the seventeenth century, and for several years was governor of Massachusetts Colony, alternating in that office with Governor Haynes. Late in life he returned to England, where he died. One of his descendants was the great-grandfather of Major Hopkins. This was Ira Hopkins, who was born at Cassville, New York, in 1791, was a miller, and about 1829 removed to Utica, New York, where he lived until his death in 1866. The grandfather, Charles H. Hopkins, was born at Cassville, New York, in 1819, and spent nearly all his life at Utica, where for many years he owned and operated an extensive flouring mill. He was also postmaster for nineteen years. He was a republican and a staunch friend of Roseoe Conkling. He died at Utica in 1885. His wife was Eliza Budd, who was born at Schodack, New York, in 1826, and died at Columbus, Ohio, in 1905.

Deane finished his education in the University of Illinois, was a member of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, and was general manager of the Hopkins Motor Company when he died at Wheeling, December 9, 1920 at the age of thirty-two.

Elliott Budd Hopkins spent his early life and acquired his early educational advantages at Philadelphia, Syracuse, and Chicago, graduated from the high school of Racine, Wisconsin, in 1909, and following that was chemist for the Tacoma Gas Company at Tacoma, Washington, a year. Major Hopkins is a graduate mechanical engineer, having received his degree in mechanical engineering from the University of Illinois, with the class of 1914. His summer vacations he employed in work for the Mitchell Motor Car Company at Racine. After completing his technical education he went to Detroit with the Lozier Motor Company, remaining until that company went bankrupt five months later. In the fall of 1914 he accepted the position of experimental mechanic with Dodge Brothers at Detroit. He was sent out with the third car manufactured by this company to Cleveland, Ohio, and with that city as headquarters he traveled through Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and West Virginia as technical representative.

His abilities soon became as pronounced in the sales as in the technical department of the business, and at the end of six months he was transferred to the sales department as district salesman covering the same territory. He continued this work until June, 1916, establishing branch agencies for the Dodge Brothers Company. He then selected Wheeling as headquarters for his own territory including the Ohio Valley of West Virginia, and organized the Hopkins Motor Company, Mr. H. S. Sands of Wheeling, being associated with him. The company was incorporated in 1917, at which time Major Hopkins, his brother Deane and George E. Hopkins bought the interest of Mr. Sands. In July, 1917, George E. Hopkins came to Wheeling to take charge of the business during the absence of Major Hopkins, and when he, too, entered the service a year later his son Deane became responsible manager. The present officers of the corporation are: E. B. Hopkins president and general manager; and George E. Hopkins vice president and treasurer. They own the large building, where their salesroom and service station are located at the corner of Fifteenth and Eoff streets, and they handle the sales of their representative line of cars throughout the Panhandle of West Virginia and Belmont County, Ohio.

On August 27, 1917, Elliott B. Hopkins entered the Second Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, where three months later he was commissioned captain of Field Artillery. He was then transferred to Camp Funston, Kansas, with the Eighty-ninth Division under the command of General Leonard Wood. He remained there six months, then accompanied the command to Camp Mills, Long Island, and embarked for overseas June 26, 1918. Ten days after he landed in France he was sent to the French Thirty-second Corps, and remained with that organization six weeks, until the Eighty-ninth Division was sent up front, when Major Hopkins rejoined it. He was with his command through the St. Mihiel drive, the battles of the Argonne, and after the signing of the armistice he went with the Army of Occupation into Germany. He was promoted to the rank of major and remained with the Army of Occupation until the Eighty-ninth Division left for home May 12, 1919. He was then assigned to special duty in Germany, settling up the affairs of the Division in the occupied zone, and continued this work until the latter part of August, 1919 when he returned home and received his honorable discharge at Camp Dix, New Jersey, September 12, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Hawley have three children: Charles Wirt, born June 18, 1907; Ireta Estelle, born May 3, 1909; and Eva Clair, born March 20, 1911.

T. FRANK BURK has gained high standing in his profession of public accountant and is also vice president and auditor of the National Fuel Company at Morgantown, Monongalia County, in which city he is a representative business man.

Mr. Burk was born at Yardville, Mercer County, New Jersey, December 16, 1870, and is a son of the late Benjamin F. and Elizabeth (Peters) Burk. Benjamin F. Burk was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, in 1827. His parents were natives of England, and upon coming to the United States established their home in the Philadelphia District of Pennsylvania. Benjamin F. Burk was reared and educated in the old Keystone State and there learned the trades of carpenter and millwright. About the year 1848 he established his residence at Yardville, New Jersey, where he continued in business a number of years. In 1880 he established his home at Trenton, New Jersey, and there his death occurred on the 30th of May, 1918. He was a republican in political allegiance, and both he and his wife held membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mrs. Burk was born at Bordentown, New Jersey, in 1829, and her death occurred at Trenton, New Jersey, in June, 1900.

T. Frank Burk gained his early education in the public schools of Yardville and Trenton, New Jersey. In 1897 he graduated from the Stewart Business College at Trenton, and for the ensuing ten years he continued as a valued member of the faculty of this institution,—an instructor in penmanship, bookkeeper, banking, mathematics, business correspondence, commercial geography, business forms and business practice. After this record of excellent educational service Mr. Burk passed one year in the offices of the Trenton Rubber Company at Trenton, New Jersey, and thereafter he engaged in independent accounting work in that city. Later he became senior accountant in the offices of John Heims & Company in the City of Philadelphia, where he remained thus engaged for two years.

In December, 1906, Mr. Burk came to Morgantown, West Virginia, to assume the position of auditor of the Morgantown & Kingwood Railroad, and of this office he continued the incumbent until this railroad line was sold and became a part of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad system, in 1920. Mr. Burk served simultaneously as auditor of the Elkins Coal & Coke Company and the West Virginia Mercantile Company until the business of the two corporations changed ownership in 1919. He is now conducting a substantial and prosperous independent business as a public accountant, and is also, as previously noted, the vice president and auditor of the National Fuel Company of Morgantown.

For several years prior to coming to West Virginia, while residing at Trenton and Philadelphia, Mr. Burk had done all of the final accounting or auditing work for the various corporations in which the late United States Senators Elkins and Davis were interested, and this service had involved frequent trips into West Virginia.

Mr. Burk is a member of Mercer Lodge No. 50, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Three-Times-Three Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Trenton, New Jersey, and in the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity he has received the fourteenth degree. He is an active member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, the local Rotary Club and the Morgantown Country Club. He and his wife are zealous members of the First Presbyterian Church of Morgantown, and he is serving as an elder in the same.

July 1, 1897, recorded the marriage of Mr. Burk and Miss Mary Emma Johnson, who was born in the City of Reading, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Irwin and Lydia Johnson. Mr. and Mrs. Burk have three children: Helen Elizabeth, who was born at Trenton, New Jersey, July 8, 1900, is a member of the class of 1922 in the University of West Virginia; Tracy Johnson, who was born at Trenton, New Jersey, January 27, 1903, is, in 1921, a student in the Morgantown Shortland Institute; and Robert Charles, who was born in the City of Philadelphia, December 4, 1905, is a student in the Morgantown High School.

WILLIAM LEROY BOUGHNER was a lad of seven years at the time when the family home was established at Morgantown, Monongalia County, where he was reared and educated and where he had the distinction of being a member of the third class to be graduated in the newly established University of West Virginia. In this city he now resides, gives a general supervision to his landed interests in this state, devotes considerable attention to the real estate business and is the incumbent of the office of justice of the peace. Of the family history adequate record is given on other pages of this work, in the memoir dedicated to the late Dr. James Vance Boughner, father of him whose name initiates this sketch.

William L. Boughner was born at Mount Morris, Greene County, Pennsylvania, on the 31st of May, 1852. After the removal of the family to Morgantown he here attended the old Morgantown Academy, the nucleus of the present University of West Virginia. As previously stated, he was a member of the third class graduated in the university, that of 1873, and received the degree of Bachelor of Science. Among his classmates were Dr. D. B. Purinton, now president emeritus of the University of West Virginia, and Hon. John T. Harris, of Charleston, who is one of the advisory editors of this history. After leaving the university Mr. Boughner read law under the preceptorship of the late Judge W. T. Willey of Morgantown, and though he was admitted to the bar in 1874, he has never engaged actively in the practice of law.

For two years Mr. Boughner was engaged in the lumber business in Preston County, and he then assumed active management of the large farm of his widowed mother, on which are established the present Fair Grounds of Marion County. He remained on the farm until 1904, when he returned to Morgantown, primarily for the purpose of giving his children the educational advantages here afforded, and in 1908 he was elected justice of the peace, of which judicial office he has since continued in tenure. In connection with his real estate operations Mr. Boughner recently sold to the Masons of Morgantown the lot at the head of High Street, adjoining the Masonic Temple, this property having been owned jointly by him and his sister.

In 1898, when the republicans of West Virginia scored a great victory in electing their candidates for the Legislature, Mr. Boughner was appointed and served for ten years as assistant clerk of the State Senate, to which position he was appointed by his old university classmate, Hon. John T. Harris, who had been elected clerk of the Senate. He has continued a loyal and vigorous supporter of the cause of the republican party, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Boughner married Miss Jane Delawder, daughter of Gustave Delawder, of the State of Maryland, and of this union have been born one son and three daughters: Martha Louisa died as Mrs. Herbert S. Payne; Jennie D. is assistant librarian at the University of West Virginia, in which institution she was graduated; May is the wife of Prof. B. Walter King, a member of the faculty of that university; and J. Vance (II) is engaged in newspaper work in the City of Wheeling.

WILLIAM S. FOOSE. Among West Virginia insurance men few have continued their effort of consecutive activities so long as William S. Foose of Wheeling, who has been identified with this essential business for practically half a century, and is still head of the firm W. S. Foose & Company, one of the strongest general insurance organizations in the Upper Ohio Valley.

Mr. Foose was born at Wheeling June 24, 1844. His parents, John Adam Foose and Margaret Fisher, were natives of Hesse, Germany, born in the same year, 1809, and they came to this country on the same boat, landing at Baltimore, and soon afterward came on to Wheeling and were married in the old Grant House of that city. The father of Margaret Fisher was Martin Fisher, who was born in Germany in 1772. He spent practically all his life as a German farmer, and when well advanced in years came to the United States, in 1852, and died within twenty-four hours after reaching Wheeling. John Adam Foose was a tailor by trade, and for many years was active in business as a merchant tailor at Wheeling, where he died in 1861. He was independent in politics, a member of the Catholic Church, and belonged to the German Benevolent Association. His wife survived him ten years, passing away in 1871. Of their children two, a son and daughter, died in infancy, and the five to grow up were: John P., who was a Union soldier in the Civil war, is now eighty-four years of age and holds the nominal title of assistant superintendent of the Soldiers Home at Dayton, Ohio. Adam was a tailor's cutter and died at Louisville, Kentucky. William S. is the third. Joseph P. was a dry goods clerk and died at Wheeling at the age of sixty. Mary, who died at Wheeling, was the wife of the late Richard Green, who was connected with the Co-operative Stove Company of Wheeling.

William S. Foose lived at Wheeling in the years before the war, finished his education in St. Joseph's Cathedral School, and left school at the age of sixteen. For six years he was an employe of his father, and during that time learned the trade of tailor's cutter. For a year and a half he was employed by the dry goods firm of Rouse & Stoner, and for three years, from 1871 to 1874, was deputy to Sheriff Richard Brown.

On leaving the sheriff's office Mr. Foose became assistant secretary of the German Insurance Company. It was with this organization that he gained his detailed and technical knowledge of the insurance business. He served ten years as assistant secretary and then for three years more was secretary of the company. When he resigned he engaged in the general insurance business for himself in 1887. For two years his partner was Alfred Paull, though the business title of the firm was Foose & Company. After that Mr. Foose continued the business alone until his son Raymond A. joined him as partner in 1903, and the firm is now W. S. Foose & Company, with offices at 1219 Chapline Street.

Mr. Foose is independent in politics. He was a member of the first Board of Equalization and Appeals of Ohio County, and performed the responsibilities of that office for four years. Church and benevolent organizations have found in him an interested and liberal co-worker. He is a member of the Catholic Church, was formerly affiliated with Carroll Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus, and for the past thirty-five years has been a member of St. Vincent de Paul's Charitable Organization and is president of the Particular Council of this body. He is also a member of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce. W. S. Foose in 1890 took the lead in organizing the West Virginia Fire Insurance Agents Association, and served as first president of the association for seven years and is still an honored member.

In 1878, at Wheeling, he married Miss Catherine Grubler, who was born at Wheeling in 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Foose are the parents of seven children: Loretta, wife of J. D. Corcoran, living at Cleveland; Bertha, wife of John A. Hack, assistant general yard master for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, living at Cleveland; Adrian F., superintendent of construction for the Crowell-Little Construction Company, with home at Cleveland; Raymond A., partner of W. S. Foose & Company; Ida, who died at the age of twelve years; Miss Irene Zita, at home; and Robert J., a civil engineer with home at Barnesville, Ohio.

Raymond A. Foose was born at Wheeling, July 5, 1886. He was educated in the parochial schools, in the Cathedral High School, and at the age of sixteen launched himself on the sea of practical affairs. For a year he was engaged in civil engineering work, but in 1903 he became associated with his father as a partner in W. S. Foose & Company, and as a salesman has found a satisfying vocation and an opportunity for the exercise of his best talents. Mr. Foose is an independent in politics, is a member of the Catholic Church, is a former member of Carroll Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus, and belongs to the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce.

In 1911, at Wheeling he married Miss Mabel F. Tomlinson, daughter of Joseph and Estella (Waters) Tomlinson, the latter still living at Wheeling. Her father was a farmer and died at Wheeling. Mrs. Foose is a graduate of the Wheeling High School. They have two children: Raymond, Jr., born December 21, 1913, and Richard Tomlinson, born May 19, 1920.

WILLIAM S. DANGERFIELD is a very able and successful lawyer of Princeton, and has gained prominence in the affairs of his city and county, not through politics, the usual avenue of advancement, but through practical business, and he is a banker and associated with several of the strong business organizations of his section of the state.

Mr. Dangerfield was born on a farm about four miles from Princeton, October 13, 1877, son of R. C. and Susan E. (Carr) Dangerfield. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and his people have been in Virginia and West Virginia for several generations. His father was born in this state and his mother in old Virginia. R. C. Dangerfield followed the business of tanner, and was very active in all public affairs, holding such offices as justice of the peace, county commissioner, sheriff of the county and member of the Board of Education.

William S. Dangerfield attended the common schools of Princeton, also the high school, graduated from the Princeton Academy in 1897, and in 1901 received his A. B. degree from Emory and Henry College in Virginia. For one year he was principal of the Jonesville Academy at Jonesville, Virginia. Mr. Dangerfield began the study of law under Mr. Edgar P. Rucker, remaining in his office a year. He then entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown, graduating LL. B. in 1904. Since then he has been in practice at Princeton, and is one of the most successful business lawyers in the county. He is a member of the County and West Virginia Bar associations. Outside of his profession, Mr. Dangerfield has been president of the Virginian Bank of Commerce at Princeton since 1895. The bank was organized in 1911. He is also president of the Allegany Insurance Agency, president of the West Virginia Power Company, president of the Reid Land and Improvement Company and a director in several corporations.

W. Moore

Mr. Dangerfield believes that the Sunday school is one of the greatest agencies for good in a community. He has been peripatetic of the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Princeton, since 1904, and is one of the trustees of the church. In 1909, at Staunton, Virginia, Mr. Dangerfield married Miss Hattie E. Kennedy.

RILEY VARNEY, the efficient county clerk of Mingo county, is one of the popular citizens of his native county and its judicial center, the City of Williamson. He was born at Varney, on Pigeon Creek, this county, January 8, 1892, and is a son of Andrew and Dillie (Spaulding) Varney. Andrew Varney was born on the same old homestead as was his son, the locality having received its name in honor of this sterling pioneer family. Andrew is a son of James C. Varney, who still remains on the old homestead, one of the most venerable of the native sons of Mingo county, he being nearly ninety years of age at the time of this writing, in 1922, and two of his brothers likewise living of patriarchal age,—Alois being eighty-seven and Alexander, ninety-three years old. Samuel, another brother, died at the age of seventy years, and of the sisters, Chloe and Sarah Ann are living and Matilda is deceased. The Varney family has been established in the Pigeon Creek district of Mingo County since about 1840, its first representative having there been granted a large body of land.

James C. Varney, long a representative farmer of Mingo county, was a soldier of the Confederacy during the entire period of the Civil war. Andrew Varney, now fifty-one years of age, is actively identified with coal mining. His life was likewise born on Pigeon Creek, this county, a daughter of Jacob Spaulding, who came here from Peach Orchard, Martin County, Kentucky. Andrew Varney has been identified with coal mining operations for twenty-two years, and is now thus engaged at Norton, Virginia. Both he and his wife have membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his father has long been a member and a trustee, besides having served as school trustee.

From his boyhood, Riley Varney was reared in the home of his paternal grandfather, and the discipline of the local school was supplanted by his attending the high school at Rockhouse and thereafter continuing his studies three years at the Virginia State Normal School at Ripley. At the age of seventeen years he became a teacher in the rural schools of Mingo County, and by his pedagogic service he defrayed the expense of his course in the normal school. He taught his last term of school in Taylor District, near his old home, in 1915. In the meanwhile he had been employed in the mine and the general store of the Red Jacket Coal Company, and for one year he had charge of the company's store at Red Jacket, Jr. In 1914 he was the democratic candidate for county superintendent of schools and was defeated by only 118 votes, he having led his party ticket in the county by 300 votes and his defeat having really been compassed by the theft of the ballot box in Rockhouse precinct. In 1920 Mr. Varney was elected county clerk, his assumption of office taking place January 1, 1921. In this election his opponent was the man who had defeated him in the office of county superintendent of schools in 1914, and his victory was compassed by a majority of 779 votes.

Mr. Varney is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The year 1912 recorded the marriage of Mr. Varney and Miss Katharine Evans, who was born at Chartersburg, this state, a daughter of Harry Evans. Mr. and Mrs. Varney have five children, whose names and respective ages (1922) are here recorded: Clinton, nine; James C., Jr., seven; Donald, five; Reed, three; and Virginia, one.

LUTHER A. DUNN. The rapid rise of Bluefield to a city of commanding importance in the industrial and commercial world is due to men as well as to favorable location and great material resources. One of these citizens who have had a share and exerted an important influence in this development is Luther A. Dunn, whose first working relationship with the community was baggage handler for the Norfolk & Western. Mr. Dunn has since been actively identified with a number of enterprises and is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Standard Fuel & Supply Company.

He was born in Giles County, Virginia, June 5, 1865, son of John Harvey and Sarah Leah (Hale) Dunn, the Harveys being of Irish and the Hales of English ancestry. One of the Hales served as a soldier in the war for independence, taking part in the North Carolina campaign, and after the war settled in Giles County. John Harvey Dunn was a native of Giles County and before the Civil war he and a partner were doing a satisfactory merchandise business. When he left to go into the Confederate army his partner took the proceeds of the store and decamped to Kansas. Mrs. Dunn fortunately had some money of her own, which she used to settle the debts of the firm and after the war the family moved to a small farm in Monroe County, West Virginia. On this farm the parents spent the rest of their days, John H. Dunn dying in 1888 at the age of fifty, the widowed mother surviving until 1916, being then seventy-seven years of age. John H. Dunn was in the Confederate army in Clark's Battalion of Sharpshooters and later in the Twenty-second Virginia Regiment. He was a corporal and then a lieutenant, and was a participant in the campaigns under General Early. He and his wife were both Baptists.

Luther A. Dunn was reared from childhood in Monroe County, West Virginia, where he attended the common schools. For four years he was a teacher and then for five years he was a traveling representative of the Franklin Davis Nursery Company of Richmond, Virginia.

On coming to Bluefield he handled the baggage and express on the Norfolk & Western Railroad for three years. He was then promoted to local ticket agent, and held that office for seven years. In the meantime, he and O. C. Jenkins, the Norfolk & Western freight agent, became associated with their capital and enterprise in handling several commercial undertakings. They have been associated ever since. The firm of Jenkins & Dunn began selling coal at 10 Hoge Street, being local distributors for the Corner, Curran & Bullitt product. Later they incorporated the Standard Fuel & Supply Company and have enlarged the scope of their business to the handling of building material and fuels as well as coal. Their present offices and warehouses were built in 1917. Mr. Dunn and his partner developed the Orinoko Coal Mine on Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, but later sold that. They also developed the properties of the Fall Branch Coal Company, and are still operating these mines.

In August, 1908, Mr. Dunn married Mrs. Ella Jennings. Their four children are Luther A., Jr., Frank J., Elwood Lee and Leah Hale. Mrs. Dunn is a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Dunn is an independent democrat, and is affiliated with the Elks.

WATGH brings to bear excellent technical and practical experience in his operations as a railroad contractor, and he is actively engaged in railroad construction contracting, with the best of modern mechanical facilities. He has maintained his residence and business headquarters in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, since 1918.

Mr. Wagh was born in Orange County, Virginia, on the 22d of January, 1885, and is a son of Goree Edward Waugh and Cora Lee (Jones) Waugh. The father was for many years one of the prominent and successful railroad contractors of the country, and had active part in railway construction in all parts of the Union, besides having been a contractor in connection with the building of the great drainage canal of the City of Chicago. He was born and reared in Virginia and became identified with contracting enterprise when he was a youth of eighteen years. He has lived virtually retired since 1908. He has extensive and valuable farm property in Virginia and takes special delight in the breeding and raising of fine live stock. Aside from his farm properties he has other important commercial and financial interests. He still resides at Orange, Virginia, and is there vice president of the Citizens National Bank. He has taken loyal interest in public affairs in his home community, is a staunch democrat and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His first wife died in 1892, and Harry M. of this review, is the only child of this union.

Harry M. attended the public schools of the various places where his father was temporarily located in connection with contracting work, and after his graduation from high school he completed the curriculum of and graduated from Locust Dale Military Academy in his native state, later having graduated from a business college at Richmond, Virginia. After leaving schools he gained broad and valuable experience through active association with his father's contracting business, and after the father retired from active alliance with this important line of enterprise the son continued in the same and has well upheld the prestige of the family name. He is one of the vital and progressive young business men and loyal citizens of Bluefield, and here he served in 1920 as a director of the Chamber of Commerce, besides which he is an active member also of the local Rotary Club. He and his wife are zealous members of the Bland Street Methodist Church, in which he is serving as a steward.

On the 1st of June, 1912, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Waugh and Miss Gertrude Sleadd, of Shelbyville, Kentucky, and they have four sons: Harry M., Jr., Edgar Sleadd, Goree E. and Philip.

Mr. Schrader was born at Wheeling, April 5, 1869. His father, Charles F. W. Schrader, was born in Germany in 1838, and as a youth learned the carriage maker's trade. GEORGE NATHANIEL HANCOCK is a well known Charleston business man, whose ripe business qualifications are in sense the product of long experience and discipline in railroading. He first came to Charleston as city agent for the Chesapeake & Ohio, and since leaving that service has been a coal, oil and gas operator and is promoter of the Mohler Addition to Charleston.

Mr. Hancock was born in Caroline County, Virginia, in 1867, son of William J. Hancock, who married a distant cousin, Margaret A. Hancock. William J. Hancock a native of Louisa County, Virginia, and for years an educator in Kentucky, served as an officer in Long street's Corps in the Confederate army through the war. He learned telegraphy, became an operator, later station agent, train dispatcher and held increasing responsibilities in the freight and passenger departments of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. Practically his entire service was with this company, though for a few years he was in the West, chiefly in Illinois, Indian Territory and California. Mr. Hancock in 1910 was made general agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio at Charleston, an office he filled until 1917, when he resigned to enter the coal, real estate, oil and gas business. His home has been at Charleston since 1910.

Mr. Hancock is secretary and treasurer of the Big Bottom Coal Company, which operates mines at Tad Kanawha County, on the Campbell's Creek Railway, and is secretary of the Blue Creek Development Company, an oil company he organized in 1912. In the real estate field he is president of the Mohler Realty Company of Charleston, owners and developers of the Mohler Addition. This high class residential addition is on the west side, a half mile below the Kelly Axe Factory and comprises about twenty-five acres of land, divided into 158 lots, fronting on the Kanawha River with paved roads and Interurban Line. The addition was thoroughly developed before being put on the market, the development consisting of modern sewerage construction, permanent sidewalks and city water. JACOB MOORE is a citizen and business man of prominence and influence in Gilmer County, where his activities have included successful connection with farm industry, banking and trading, his home being maintained in the village of Sand Fork. Mr. Moore was born at Mingo, Randolph County, Virginia (now West Virginia), January 8, 1857, and is a son of James A. and Sarah A. Hannell Moore, both likewise natives of what is now West Virginia, where they were reared under the conditions and influences of what may be termed the middle-pioneer period in the history of the county. After a marriage James A. Moore continued his active association with farm enterprise in Randolph County until, in 1863, he enlisted for service as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, after the close of which he returned to his native county and resumed his farming operations. There he was the owner of a farm property of 200 acres, and he was one of the substantial and honored citizens of Randolph County at the time of his death, in 1874, his wife having died in 1872 and having been a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of the eight children six are living at the time of this writing.

Jacob Moore was about sixteen years old at the time of his mother's death, and two years later his father also passed away. He had received the advantages of the rural schools, and after the death of his parents found employment at farm work, his wages being eight dollars a month. He succeeded in saving about $100, and in 1877, with this financial fortification, he came to Gilmer County, where he attended the State Normal School at Glenville until his funds were exhausted. He then found employment as clerk in the general store of S. H. Whiting at Glenville, and from a salary of eight dollars a month he managed to save enough to enable him to continue his studies in the normal school, in the meantime working for his board. He gave for an interim of one year he continued in the employ of Mr. Whiting from 1879 to 1885, and the one-year interval he passed in Texas.

In 1885 Mr. Moore established his residence at Sand Fork, where, with a capital of $250 he became associated with W. T. Wiant in the establishing and conducting of a general store. The enterprise proved most prosperous and the partnership alliance was continued until 1916, when the store and business were sold to Elfe & Wagoner.

In 1897 Mr. Moore was appointed sheriff of Gilmer County, to fill out an unexpired term, and at the next election he was elected to this office, of which he continued the incumbent two years. In 1900 he was again elected sheriff, for a term of four years, and his total service in this office covered a period of seven years and seven days, his connection with the mercantile business at Sand Fork having continued during this interval. In a later candidacy for sheriff he was defeated by twenty-three votes, but in 1916 he was again elected sheriff, in which office he served until December 30, 1920, with characteristic efficiency. The final auditing of his accounts showed them to tally to a cent. His civic loyalty has been further shown in service as road overseer and member of the Sand Fork School Board. He is the owner of a valuable farm property of 400 acres, has stock in the Kanawha Union Bank at Glenville, in which his wife has stock, and he is a stockholder also in the Glenville Banking & Trust Company, besides being interested in oil and coal production enterprise in this state. He is a past master of Gilmer County Lodge No. 118, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, besides having received the thirty-second degree of the Masonic Scottish Rite and being affiliated with the Mystic Shrine. He is also past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and a member of the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Moore is an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and his wife is an active member of the Baptist Church.

September 23, 1886, recorded the marriage of Mr. Moore and Miss Emma Bartlett, who was born and reared in Harrison County. They have no children.

JAMES HENRY BROWN. Standing out as one of the strong figures in the early days of West Virginia, Judge James H. Brown will ever retain a permanent place in the history of the state, not only because of his prominence and earnestness in the movements leading to its formation and the diversity of his contributions to its welfare, but also because of the breadth of his personality and his qualities as a scholar and a statesman. There were other leaders in public life, distinguished as jurists or workers for community betterment, but few in any city or state combined in more marked degree than Judge Brown such qualifications for service in all these three branches of human endeavor.

Although identified with the State of West Virginia at and after its creation, he was a native of the Old Dominion, born in Cabell County, then Virginia, December 25, 1818. He was of English ancestry, a son of Dr. Benjamin Brown, also of Virginia. His mother, Matilda (Scales) Brown, was the daughter of Major Nathaniel Scales of North Carolina.

Although Judge Brown had always been a staunch democrat, nevertheless, when Civil war threatened he strongly opposed the breaking up of the Union and the secession of Virginia, and with others of like view joined in organizing the counties west of the Alleghenies to resist the disruption, thus laying the foundation for the new state, which after two years of bitter strife was duly admitted to the Union. Judge Brown was one of the leaders in the formation of the new state, putting his shoulder earnestly to the undertaking, serving prominently as member of the several conventions and organizations looking to that end and to the upbuilding of West Virginia.

This distinguished lawyer and jurist was a man whose thoughts and acts impressed all those about him. He was also possessed of a striking personality which gave emphasis to any efforts with which he was identified, as he was more than six feet in height, and as erect as an Indian. Sinewy and active, he retained his full powers throughout his career, and up to the time of his last illness, in his eighty-second year, his step was as elastic as that of a man many years his junior.

James H. Brown received his education at Marietta College, Ohio, and Augusta College, Kentucky, graduating from the latter institution in 1840. Although his father was a physician, he chose the law as the field for his life endeavors, and the years that brought honors to him and benefit to the state which he served, demonstrated the wisdom of his choice. He read law under John Laidley, Esq., then one of the ablest attorneys of Cabell County, and was admitted to the bar two years after graduation from college. Immediate recognition of his ability reflected the skill of his instructor and the conscientious labor which had marked his preparation. Natural gifts of oratory gave force to his legal knowledge, and he soon held leading rank as an advocate and counsellor, while the demands for his service as a trial lawyer gave him prominence beyond his years.

His standing as a member of the bar brought frequent mention of him as a prospective candidate for the bench, and when opportunity came his rise to the highest court was as rapid as had been his previous progress in the ranks of the profession. Prior to that time, however, he had sought a wider field than that offered in his home county by moving to Charleston on the Kanawha. The change was made after six years' practice among the friends of his early life.

Beginning in the new field, his clientele steadily grew. He was recognized as a wise counsellor, and, grounded in the law, he rarely failed to convince in his presentation of legal principles before the courts. He practiced in both State and Federal tribunals, and his high standards, combined with other qualifications, stamped him as a constructive force in the profession.

It was with such a reputation and with the keen insight into public affairs which he had acquired that he approached the turbulent days of the Civil war, in which clear thinking was needed to perform his share of public duty, and fully meet the trying issues of those times. He was a member of the Wheeling Convention of 1861, which submitted the question of a new state, and was an earnest advocate of the movement. At the same time he was a member of the Legislature, taking active part in both bodies. In all these matters he was a man untiring in his labors, conservative in his views, but prompt in action and content with no halfway measures.

His first judicial position was that in charge of the Eighteenth Circuit of Virginia, and a large part of his service as judge was performed amid the perils incident to the war. The records of the court in several of the counties of his circuit were captured and destroyed as rapidly as they were made, while on several occasions the court itself narrowly escaped capture. Nevertheless, he was uniformly courteous, firm and fearless throughout, and so thoroughly was his work done that no appeal from any of his decisions was ever taken.

Judge Brown's splendid service in the lower court led to his election in 1863 as one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the new state. He was equal to every demand in the higher position, and produced opinions which were models of logic and clarity of presentation. Fitted by nature and education for the law, he possessed in a high degree the power of convincing statement. He was unwavering in his devotion to right and justice, and in his judicial position held that same confidence of the public which had characterized his private practice.

At the close of his term Judge Brown resumed active practice, and continued in it until a short time before his death, which occurred at his home in Charleston, October 28, 1900. He served several times in the Legislature of the state, was twice nominated for the national House of Representatives and later for the United States Senate. He failed on these occasions because his party was in the minority, although he led his ticket each time. His last public service was in 1882, when he was again elected to the Legislature, which gave him opportunity to participate as a leader in the important measures then under consideration.

Judge Brown married Miss Louisa M. Beuhring in 1844, and their union was blessed by a large and talented family. One of the sons, Benjamin B., moved to Colorado, and after a successful career died in France in 1906; the other, James F. Brown, following in his father's footsteps, became one of the leading lawyers of the state.

Judge Brown was active and influential in the Presbyterian Church, and for more than forty years a ruling elder of that denomination, although his broad interest in the welfare of the community was of the kind which brought to all denominations his help and earnest good wishes.

JAMES FREDERICK BROWN, who died December 5, 1921, was distinguished fully as much by his lofty character and broad wisdom as by his achievements in the law and politics. This is the chief impression gained by a study of his career and the many tributes to him as a man and lawyer. His was an outstanding personality in a family of noted men in West Virginia and old Virginia. The family tree goes back to Sir William Brown, mentioned in the Virginia Charter of 1609. Major Henry Brown was a member of the Council of State in 1642. William Browne represented Surry County in the Grand Assembly of Virginia in 1659-60. Maxfield, the youngest of William's three sons, lived from 1675 to 1745, married Elizabeth Newman, and left one daughter, Elizabeth, and two sons, George and Newman. George Brown was survived by his son George Newman Brown, who fought in the Revolutionary war and held broad estates in Prince William County, Virginia. George Newman Brown married Sarah Hampton, first cousin of General Wade Hampton, in 1772; their home was known as "Bloomsbury," where nearly a century later the battle of Bull Run was fought.

The children of George Newman Brown were Margaret, Martha, Henry, John, Richard, Robert, George, Jr., James and Benjamin. Henry Brown, who was the first sheriff of Cabell County, died about 1810. His brothers Robert, John, Richard and James, served in the War of 1812. Robert and John were cavalry captains; Robert died in action in South Carolina. John was a wealthy farmer in Fauquier County when he died in 1849. His wife was Cecilia (Brent) Hutton, widow of General Eppa Hutton. He left no issue. Richard was lieutenant of a troop which saw service under Gen. W. H. Harrison in the Northwest. James died soon after his enlistment. George Newman Brown, Sr., was largely interested in the military grant issued to "Captain John Savage and his men" of 28,627 acres along the Ohio River, from the Guyandotte toward the Big Sandy. After the partition of these lands, about 1805, his sons Richard and Benjamin Brown moved to the part allotted to their father. The land lay where the City of Huntington, in Cabell County, is now located. There they built what is said to have been the first brick house in Western Virginia. Seventh Street in Huntington marks the upper boundary of the Brown estate. Richard sold out his interests to Benjamin and removed to Kentucky, where he lived to an advanced age and was survived by several daughters and a son, George Newman Brown, who was for many years a judge of the Circuit Court in Kentucky, and whose grandson, George B. Martin, has represented the State of Kentucky in the United States Senate.

Benjamin Brown was born at "Bloomsbury" on June 16, 1786, and after moving to Cabell County, as above noted, became a prominent physician, well and favorably known in his own and in adjacent states. He married, on February 16, 1815, Matilda, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary (Frances) Scales, who was born February 16, 1797, in North Carolina. Major Nathaniel Scales, father-in-law of Dr. Benjamin Brown, removed from the French Broad River in North Carolina to the Ohio Valley about 1805 and purchased a large farm known as "Maple Grove," adjacent to the Brown farm and just above what is now Seventh Street in Huntington. Dr. Benjamin Brown died in 1848, and his wife, in 1877. Their children were: Ceres, Vesta, Josephine and James Henry Brown.

Judge James Henry Brown was born December 25, 1818, in Cabell County. He moved in 1849 to Kanawha, where he resided until his death on October 28, 1900. History has named him as one of the founders of West Virginia. He was conspicuous in the debates in the Wheeling Convention which resulted in the plan for West Virginia's creation and in its first state constitution. He was also for several terms a leader in its Legislature. He was an eminent lawyer, a judge of the Eighteenth Judicial Circuit of Virginia, and after the separation of the state he was one of the first judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. He married Louisa Mayer, daughter of Frederick G. L. Beuhring of Cabell County, whose wife was Frances Dannenberg, daughter of Col. Frederick Dannenberg of the Revolutionary war. Six children were born to them—Virginia, who married W. S. Laidley, a lawyer; Lucy, who married T. L. Barber, M. D.; Emma Matilda, who married J. F. Bickmore, of Denver, Colorado, and died December 31, 1913; Nelle D., James Frederick and Benjamin Beuhring. The last named was born De-umber 7, 1863, married Annie Lewis Dickinson, May 3, 1883, and died at Niles, France, December 30, 1906. He was a lawyer and capitalist, and after marriage resided in Denver, being president of the Colorado National Life Insurance Company at the time of his death, and having been one of the ayudantes that first developed the Porphyry Copper mines in Utah, now among the largest producers of the country.

J. F. Brown

James Frederick Brown, a son of James H. and Louisa (Beuhring) Brown, was born at Charleston, March 7, 1852, and throughout his life maintained his home. "The lms," where he was born, although the residence was modeled and rebuilt during his later years. He had a liberal education, having graduated from the Charleston Institute, next became one of the early graduates of West Virginia University, and was Salutatorian of his class in 1873. Besides the degree of A. B. he subsequently received the degrees of M. A. and LL. D. Studying diligently under the guidance of his learned father, he was admitted to the bar in 1875, when he and his father became partners, and from that time on until his death, forty-two years later, he was actively engaged in the practice of the law. In addition to a large and lucrative practice he, by his unusual ability, high character and pleasing personality, built up one of the largest clienteles enjoyed by any lawyer in the state. In 1888 he formed a partnership with Malcolm Jackson, and on January 1, 1892, the firm of Brown & Jackson was augmented by the admission of Edward W. Knight, thus creating the firm of Brown, Jackson & Knight, which continued unchanged for most thirty years, until the death of the senior partner. James F. Brown served as a member of the city council of Charleston for many years. He was a member of the legislature in 1883-84, representing Kanawha County. His father was a member of the same legislature, and they were elected as candidates of opposite political parties. From 1890 to 1901 Mr. Brown, by appointment of different governors, served on the Board of Regents of West Virginia University. He was vice president of the Kanawha Valley Bank, vice president of the George Washington Life Insurance Company, and for many years prominent in movements for the development of the resources of the Kanawha Valley, being a director in the Central Trust Company, the Cabin Creek Consolidated Coal Company, the West Charleston Improvement Company, Charleston Window Glass Company, several coal companies in the New River field, and a promoter of oil and gas development on lands owned by him and associates in the Big Sandy District and in the Blue Creek field. He served as trustee of the City Hospital of Charleston, of the Masonic Temple and the Kanawha Presbyterian Church, was a charter member of Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and associated with a number of other club and civic institutions.

On September 13, 1877, he married Jennie M. Woodridge, of Marietta, Ohio. He is survived by Mrs. Brown, five daughters, one son and five grandchildren, all residents of Charleston. The daughters are Mrs. O. P. Fitzgerald, Miss Jean M. Brown, Mrs. A. W. McDonald, Miss Berice Brown, and Mrs. Briscoe W. Peyton. The only son is Benjamin Beuhring Brown, born March 14, 1893. The grandchildren of J. F. Brown are Jean B., Gwendolyn, and Oscar P. Fitzgerald, Jr., and Gertrude and James F. Brown, Jr.

The sterling qualities of the late James F. Brown and the esteem in which he was held are well expressed in two resolutions. The first is an abstract from resolutions adopted by the Kanawha Bar Association:

"His public services in our city council, in the Legislature, his peculiarly fortunate business ventures and generally his studied interests in his home city, where he spent all of his useful life, are all too well known to need recital here. We leave all these to the grateful memory of his fellow citizens, but with a conscious pride we recall and record now, though inadequately, only an appreciation of his eminent ability and success at our own bar, as well as the highest courts of the land, for his fame as a learned and successful lawyer was not confined to his own state. In fact there was very little litigation of prime importance in our highest courts in which he was not engaged upon one side or the other. His services alone, or as associate, were eagerly secured in our highest courts, many cases coming to him from all over this and other states.

"By our lawyers, who knew him best, he was generally considered, inter pares facile princeps.

"It is difficult in this memorial to enumerate the virtues and just claims to distinction of such a citizen and leading lawyer. As to his personal character he combined a genial attractiveness with an ever courteous and kindly regard for all at the bar, with unaffected simplicity, of a truly democratic nature, with no cant or desire for public office or the plaudits of his fellow men, he was the same in courtesy to all men whether of high or low degree. This, in a measure, was the touchstone of his hold upon all with whom he came in contact. Whether in his office or in court he personified unremitting labor in his cases. Untiring work and loyalty to his clients, which brought such unusual success, seemed his second nature and greatest pleasure. Always modest, and 'in honor preferring others,' no wonder that he had no enemies but a multitude of friends.

"But though always an indefatigable worker and immersed in his private business and in litigation for others, his home life was ideal. No man ever loved his home more than he, and to him it was ever a sweet refuge, where only domestic happiness reigned free from all business or legal cares, which he always threw off upon entering its portals."

The second is from an editorial that appeared in the Charleston Gazette several days after his death:

"It is of the man that we would speak now—the native West Virginian, born and reared here in Charleston, where he spent his life and is laid to rest. Educated at his home state university, he began the practice of the law in his home town in the '70s. The high social position and comfortable circumstances of his family, his early successes and rapidly growing fortune, and his wealthy clients, many being the largest corporations of the country, were calculated to incline him toward the aristocratic view of life and business. But nothing but a well considered principle, maturely applied, ever affected his attitude or course.

"He was democratic in his tastes, habits and principles; sincere and candid in all the relations of life; firm in his convictions and loyal to his friendships and his principles. Added to these were a sunny disposition, an ever present optimism and a presence that beamed with friendship and cordiality. There was never any bitterness in the firm 'no' or 'yes' that came on a matter of duty or principle, regardless of its popularity. And justice must compel the admission that there was always a compelling logic in his position. He was one of those rare men who could think when popular rage or enthusiasm swept others off their feet, and who declined to suspend, for any occasion, a fundamental principle. We doubt if there is anyone whom he ever knew who did not feel at liberty, yes, even a delight, at meeting him. Truly, he pursued the even tenor of his way, with mature knowledge and studied regard of the rights and feelings of others, wanting nothing but his own, conceding to all the same rights that he claimed for himself, avoiding the clashes that lead to unseemly broils, and yet always ready to stand for and maintain his deliberate convictions. He was blessed with worldly success. Fortune smiled upon him and brought large returns from his professional services and business investments. But he lived always the same life that he lived when he came to the bar.

"He never had but one home, and there he was born and lived all his life. And how he loved that home. As the loyal son of a distinguished father, he, as a boy, delighted in the ancestral home, nestled in a beautiful park scarcely a square from the county courthouse and city hall. There he took the bride of his youth, now the inseparable widow; there he reared his popular and lovely family, and there he ever sought the repose so necessary to one of his studious, laborious habits.

"It has often been said that there were but two places to find him—at his office or at his home. He was a home man who believed that character and patriotism are nurtured at the family hearthstone. One had but to cross the threshold to observe that as father and husband he was all in all to his household.

"No one ever thought of his age. He was never boyish but always young; he was long a man but never got old. His courage and his even disposition made it possible for him to endure a fatal illness for months without the public knowing that he was ill. An uneventful life? No. One teeming with great events of brain and will power. It was a life of victories over passion and error; successes after overcoming difficulties; fruition that comes to ability, character and legitimate methods.

"Without aspiring to public preferment, he had all that it can bring from constructive work and public acclaim. No one was better known. His name is now a household word among all classes of people. He wrote it high early in life and so lived and worked as to keep it unsullied and leave it as a heritage to his children and friends."

BENJAMIN BEHRING BROWN, named for his uncle and who remains as representative of the third generation to continue the family traditions in the bar of Kanawha County, became a member of his father's firm, Brown, Jackson & Knight, in March, 1919. He entered law practice with every educational advantage, having graduated from Charleston High School in 1910, from Princeton University in 1914, with an A. B. degree, and from Harvard University Law School in 1917, with an LL. B. degree. In the early years of the World war he attended two summer training camps at Plattsburg, and as soon as America entered the struggle against the Central Powers he volunteered and went to France, where he served for a year with the Marines in the Second Division, A. E. F., whose proud record is written indelibly in the hearts of the American people.

Benjamin B. Brown married Miss Hester M. Newhall, of Lynn, Massachusetts. They have two children, Gertrude Woodbridge and James Frederick Brown, the latter having been born on December 31, 1920, nearly a year before the death of his grandfather, whose name he bears.

As one whose career showed leadership and ability, the late James F. Brown's ideals are well worthy of consideration. He stood for the greatest possible individual liberty consistent with the rights of others, and with the least possible governmental interference. He believed the interests of the people were best subserved by strict adherence to the principles of the Bill of Rights, and in strict limitation of the Federal Government to the powers expressly granted by the states. In regard to the legal profession he believed in greater stability for the laws, that there should be less of experimenting in legislation, and a curb put on judicial legislation under color of "construction." His especial interest was along historical lines, particularly as regards the several systems of government now being tried out, and their practical results in the countries to which they have been applied.

He traveled widely, both at home and abroad, having visited nearly every country in the world, and was a keen observer of all the different peoples and conditions he saw, reasoning deeply into their religious, economic and political aspects. His diligence, perseverance, high character and many contacts with all classes of people made him what he was—an original thinker of the soundest judgment, a master mind in the study of human nature, one of the greatest lawyers his state has ever produced, and a model to be followed in his community.

EDWARD B. JANSMAN. A chemist and veterinarian, former consulting veterinarian under the state commissioner of agriculture, Doctor Jansman is a well known citizen and business man of Huntington, where he is secretary and treasurer of the unique establishment known as "Farmers," the leading cleaning, pressing and dyeing business in that part of the state.

He was born at Covington, Kentucky, August 25, 1885, only child of Benjamin and Catherine (Rune) Jansman. His father, who was born at Covington in 1847 and died in that city in 1890, was for many years a tobacco dealer. The widowed mother is now living at Asheville, North Carolina, and was born at Covington in 1863.

Edward B. Jansman received his education in the schools of Cincinnati, attending high school there, and in 1908 graduated with the degree D. V. M. from the Cincinnati Veterinary College. In the same year he entered the service of the United States Government in the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Animal Husbandry as a research worker, and was in that service for twelve years. The territory in which his duties lay was chiefly Ohio and West Virginia.

Doctor Jansman in 1916 removed to Huntington, and remained two years longer in the Government service. In 1916 he was appointed consulting veterinarian under the commissioner of agriculture by Governor H. D. Hatfield. Doctor Jansman in 1918 bought an interest in the "Farmers," and became chemist as well as secretary and treasurer of the corporation. The business is incorporated under the laws of West Virginia, and the officers are: A. J. Hogan, of New York City, president; Frank Enslow, vice president; and E. B. Jansman, secretary and treasurer. The plant and offices are at 814 Sixth Avenue, and the company employs thirty-five hands.

Doctor Jansman is a member of the Credit Men's Association, the Business Men's Association and the Chamber of Commerce, also the Rotary Club, and the Guyandotte Country Club. He was a leader in local war work, assisting in the drives for funds. Later he devoted much time to training disabled soldiers in the technical processes involved in dry cleaning, so that men suffering total disability for other occupations could earn a living at this work.

In September, 1911, at Cincinnati, Doctor Jansman married Miss Annette E. Phelan, a native of that city. She is a graduate of Notre Dame College of Cincinnati. The only child of Doctor and Mrs. Jansman is Lois Kenrick, born in August, 1912.

HON. ROBERT W. BAKER. There are certain individuals who seem always to have time to carry on progressive enterprises and movements, whether of a private or public nature. Hon. Robert W. Baker is pre-eminently one of this class, and, fortunately for the advancement of his community's best interests, does not stand alone. He belongs to the group of able citizens whose civic interest is equal to their business and professional enterprise and who are devoting every energy possible to the improvement of the public service. A man of broad education and fine, sympathetic nature, as well as of strength and capability, Mayor Baker is admirably fitted to be identified with the progressive guard of such a city as Petersburg.

Mayor Baker was born September 5, 1880, in the house at Petersburg which he now occupies as his home, and is a son of Bernard J. and Mary C. (Welton) Baker. His grandfather, Eli W. Baker, was born in Pendleton County, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1809, and came to what is now Grant County as a young man. Near Petersburg he was united in marriage with Miss Frances Shobe, a daughter of Jacob Shobe, one of the early farmers of this region, and subsequently established a hat shop at Petersburg, having learned the hatter's trade at Franklin. In politics he was first a whig. When the issue of the war between the states came up for discussion, he sympathized with the South, but refused to follow to the extent of secession, although his son James W. went into the Confederate Army and served throughout the struggle in the uniform of the "grey." Eli W. Baker died in 1881, at the ripe age of seventy-two years, the same age as that at which his wife died, although she lived five years longer. They were the parents of the following children: James W., the Southern soldier, who spent his private life as an agriculturist; Catherine, who married George W. Moorman and spent her life at Petersburg; Carrie, who became the wife of William Clark and died at Petersburg; Bernard Jacob, the father of Robert W. Baker; Edward C., a resident of Petersburg; Margaret, who died at Petersburg, unmarried; Henry F., also of this place, a notary public and court commissioner; and Virginia, the wife of Hon. Lewis J. Forman, of Petersburg.

Bernard J. Baker, cashier of the Grant County Bank, born at Petersburg, March 9, 1849, and has spent more than seventy years of life within the limits of this community. He grew up in the home of a hat-maker, but his father abandoned that trade after the close of the war between the North and South and turned attention to merchandising, being at the time of death a member of the firm of Baker & Company, which his son was associated with him. Bernard Baker was educated in the school common to the community of Petersburg, this being supplemented by a commercial course in Eastman's Business College at New York. When he went into business as a merchant in association with his father, and after the elder man's death he continued the business under the firm style of Baker & Company. This enterprise is still in existence and Mr. Baker has been engaged as a business man in that and other fields for more than fifty years, within 100 feet of the bank where he is now on duty as cashier.

Mr. Baker became actively identified with banking affairs when he organized the Grant County Bank, the banking house in Grant County, this being opened in 1902. Prior to this time the banking of this region had been done at Moorefield and Keyser, but the organization of the Petersburg institution concentrated banking largely at this point from far and wide. The bank was originally capitalized at $25,000, and was increased to double that capital in 1908. The first president was Lewis J. Forman, the first vice president, W. Day, and the first and only cashier, Mr. Baker. The presidency, likewise, has never changed, but there have been several vice presidents, A. A. Parks, W. A. Vin and the present incumbent, D. P. Hendrickson. In his politics Mr. Baker voted first for president in 1872, when he cast his ballot in favor of Horace Voseley. In 1876 he voted for Samuel J. Tilden and four years later for Gen. W. S. Hancock, and in 1884 he voted to elect the first democratic president after the civil war. He has continued to support the same ticket without interruption ever since. Mr. Baker was prone to political activity as a young man, and in 1876 was elected to the State Senate, where he spent four active and useful years, being present at the two sessions of the body and a member, among others, of the judiciary and educational committees. In the matter of electing United States senator he supported the candidacy of John McGraw, of Taylor County. Mr. Baker has not aloof from secret orders. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and one of its elders, a capacity in which he has served for many years, and is the most prominent member of the congregation as well as the oldest member of the Official Board in point of service.

On November 25, 1875, at Petersburg, Mr. Baker was married in marriage with Miss Mary C. Welton, a daughter of Solomon and Sarah (Clark) Welton, Mr. Welton having been an early merchant of Petersburg. Mrs. Baker was born in what was then Hardy County, but now Grant County, as was her father. She and her husband are the parents of two sons: Bernard, a merchant and farmer at Petersburg; and Robert W.

After completing the public school course at Petersburg Robert W. Baker enrolled as a student at Potomac academy, Romney, and graduated from that preparatory institution at the age of nineteen years. At that time he entered upon the study of law at Washington Lee University, Lexington, Virginia, and in 1904, satisfactorily passed the bar examination at Morgantown given by the law faculty of West Virginia University, and his license to practice law was issued by the Supreme Court of the state. He began his professional career at Petersburg, among the neighbors and acquaintances of his boyhood and later life, and tried his first case in the Circuit Court. His practice has been largely of a general character, although the defense of those charged with crimes has constituted a considerable proportion of his work, and through his legal qualities as a lawyer and his stable, popular traits as a man he has continued his progress both in the development of a professional reputation and a profitable legal business.

Ever since the attainment of his majority Mr. Baker has been a factor in local politics. As a leading democrat he has been party chairman of Grant County, has been the county's representative on the senatorial and congressional committees, and attended all the conventions of his party while the convention system was in vogue. He was a spectator at the Baltimore convention that nominated Woodrow Wilson for the presidency, as well as the convention at St. Louis that gave the nomination to Judge Alton B. Parker in 1904. Mr. Baker was first elected mayor of Petersburg in 1909, and served for five consecutive terms, during which almost all of the public improvement done in the city was accomplished, including the installing of water and sewer systems and an electric light plant, the building of sidewalks, etc., and all of this at an expense that was worthy of much credit for the administration's economizing power. He left the mayor's office in 1914 and was absent until January 1, 1922, when he was the unanimous choice of the city for the mayoralty. The preceding city administration had voted a bond issue of $12,000 for improvements in the sewers, water and walks, and this money is being expended by the administration in the construction of these various improvements. Mayor Baker is attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company at Petersburg, and has numerous other important connections.

On February 29, 1908, Mr. Baker was united in marriage at Petersburg with Miss Cornelia S. Taylor, a daughter of John E. and Annie (Wilson) Taylor, of Hampshire County, West Virginia, and North Carolina, respectively. Mr. Taylor was a tanner by trade and conducted and for a time operated the Petersburg tannery. Mrs. Baker is one of nine daughters in the Taylor family and was educated in the public schools. To Mr. and Mrs. Baker there have been born the following children: John Bernard; Robert W., Jr.; Wilcox, who died at the age of five years; Bettie; Edward; William, who died at the age of one year; McDonald; Paul; and Cornelia.

CARL BROOKS EARLY. While age and ripened experience are usually assumed in relation to exceptional business responsibilities, it has been proved that they are not absolutely essential in all cases. An example may be cited in Carl Brooks Early, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce at Williamson, West Virginia. Mr. Early in addition to this responsible position occupies numerous others which identify him officially with industries and undertakings of great magnitude in West Virginia.

Carl Brooks Early was born in Giles County, Virginia, August 27, 1890, and is a son of David A. and Sarah (Brooks) Early, one of their family of three sons and two daughters. His father was born in Pulaski County, Virginia, December 20, 1854, a member of an early settled family there of Scotch-Irish extraction. The mother of Mr. Early was born in Giles County, Virginia, June 13, 1859, and now resides at Bluefield, West Virginia.

Carl B. Early had excellent school privileges. His preference was for a business rather than professional life, and his capacity was first tested as a clerk in the employ of the Pulaski Mining Company at Pulaski, Virginia, where he remained until 1909, when he went to Bluefield, West Virginia, as bookkeeper in the First National Bank, which position he resigned in September, 1910, in order to accept that of assistant cashier in the First National Bank at Welch, West Virginia, where he continued until July, 1916, at which time he came to Williamson and entered upon his duties as cashier of the National Bank of Commerce.

By the summer of 1918 Mr. Early had become well and favorably known in banking circles throughout the state, but on August 3 of that year he enlisted for service in the World war, like many other patriotic young men unselfishly setting aside all matters of personal importance in the face of the great calamity that had fallen upon his country. He was given rank as first lieutenant and ordered to Washington, D. C., where he remained until February 1, 1919, and until his honorable discharge performed the duties of disbursing officer at Saltville, Virginia. He returned then to Williamson and resumed his duties as cashier and director of the National Bank of Commerce. Other official positions which claim his time and attention include: Treasurer of the Indian-Peacelontas Coal Company; treasurer of the Indian Fuel Company; treasurer of the Valley Investment Company; vice president and treasurer of Harkins & Company; and treasurer of the Pigeon Creek Realty Company. In the management of the business pertaining to these various important concerns Mr. Early has displayed acumen and foresight that would be creditable to a veteran captain of industry.

In political life Mr. Early is a republican. For several years he has been a member of the Board of Review and Equalization of Mingo County. He is a member of McDowell Lodge No. 112, F. and A. M.; Howard Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Bluefield Commandery, and the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. He belongs to Post Ephraim Boggs No. 49, American Legion, and to the Chamber of Commerce and Kiwanis Club.

CHARLES L. RICE began his career in the great coal mining sections of McDowell County, but for a dozen years past his more extended business connections have been as a lumberman and contractor, and in construction engineering, the headquarters for his operations being in the capital city of Charleston.

Mr. Rice was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1880, and when he was a child his parents, S. G. and Nannie (Green) Rice, native Virginians, removed to Roanoke, that state. Here he grew up and secured his early education, and as a young man entered the coal business, a connection that took him to McDowell County, West Virginia, in 1900. After about ten years in mining operations he removed to Huntington and became a member of the Huntington Lumber and Supply Company, the Minter-Holmes Corporation, extensive manufacturers and dealers in lumber, with main offices at Huntington and plants at Kenova and Williamson, West Virginia, and Jackson, Kentucky. After a residence at Huntington for seven years Mr. Rice removed to Charleston, and was an active factor in the organization of the Kanawha Valley Lumber Company, which began business in February, 1918. Mr. Rice is vice president and general manager of this company, which has an extensive and modern plant in West Charleston on an ideal industrial site along the Kanawha and Michigan Railway and extending west from Patrick Street. It is a general wholesale and retail lumber business, one of the largest of the kind in the state.

Since coming to Charleston Mr. Rice has had a personal and financial interest in the general building and construction business, and in that capacity has been a factor in the remarkable building expansion going on in the city since war time. He organized and is president of the American Engineering and Construction Company, whose special field is business and industrial buildings, coal plant construction and kindred work. The American Clay Products Company, of which he is president, manufactures brick and hollow tile and has created a new and very important industry in West Virginia. The company has a brick plant at Lewis, Virginia, and a plant for the manufacture of hollow tile at Teays, West Virginia.

Mr. Rice is active in various civic and business organizations at Charleston, including the Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis Club, and is a thirty-second degree Mason and Shriner. He married Miss Maud Diskins, a native of Kentucky. Their two children are Daniel E. and Virginia.

JOHN B. GROVE, M. D. Of the men devoted to the science of healing at Petersburg, Grant County, none brings bear upon their calling larger gifts of scholarship and source than Dr. John B. Grove. It has been his fortune have realized many of his worthy ambitions and through the exercise of his native ability and industry to win from his opportunities financial and professional success. Doctor Grove comes of a line of physicians and was born at Petersburg, March 29, 1887, a son of Dr. John and Ann (Welton) Grove.

Dr. Thomas Jefferson Grove, the grandfather of Dr. John B. Grove, was born in 1822, at Sharpsho, Maryland, and about 1842 came to the Petersburg locality. For a time applied himself to mercantile operations, but soon became interested in medicine and, going to Winchester, Virginia, studied for that profession under the preceptorship of Doctor McGuire, thus preparing himself for the practice of his adopted calling. He began his practice at Petersburg in 1847, and was in the field actively until 1900, passing away three years after his retirement. He was one of the pioneers and leading citizens of the Petersburg locality and owned extensive land interests. Some of this property developed into farms, and also began the work of developing orchards, but this did not prove a success on a large scale, for there was no outlet or market for the fruit raised. In the minority politically, as a democrat, he did not hold public office. During the period of the war between the states the home which he had built in 1858 was used as a hospital, with himself in charge, and it is believed that during this time he maintained a strict neutrality. Dr. Thomas Jefferson Grove was married three times. His first wife was Miss Mary Bean, who bore him a son, John, who became the father of Dr. John B. Grove and a daughter, Lissie, who married E. A. Harness. His second wife was Miss Lizzie Neal, who died without issue. His third wife was Miss Jane Seymour, and they also had no children.

Dr. John Grove, the father of Dr. John B. Grove, was born at Petersburg, in 1852, and inherited a love for the medical profession. After a course at Washington at Lee University he took his medical work at what is now New York University, and then spent some time as an interne in Bellevue Hospital. After he had completed his preparation for his profession he returned to Petersburg and here continued in the active practice of his calling until his early death in 1897, when he was but forty-five years of age. Aside from his profession Doctor Grove's real estate interests absorbed him, and no political matters gained much headway in his interest. He voted the democratic ticket, made no public avowal of religious connection and had no fraternal affiliations. Doctor Grove married Miss Annie Welton, a daughter of Job R. and Carr (Seymour) Welton, and they became the parents of three children: Thomas Jefferson, of Petersburg; Carrie G., the wife of Dr. W. C. VanMeter, of this place; Miss Lizzie M. also of Petersburg; and Dr. John B., of this notice.

John B. Grove laid the foundation for his education in the public schools of Petersburg, taking the course as prescribed, and then went to the academy at Romney, where he had the advantage of two years of work. This was followed by a year of college instruction at the Davis and Elkins College at Elkins, his medical studies beginning immediately thereafter in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Maryland, from which institution he was graduated in 1909. Later he took special work in diseases of the chest in the same institution, and during his senior year was employed as an interne in Mercy Hospital of Baltimore. In July, 1909, Doctor Grove took his State Board examination, and in September following opened his office at Petersburg, where his twenty-two years of life had been spent. The general practice of his calling is his field of effort, and he has his office in the same room in which had practiced his father and grandfather for so many years. The name of Grove is indeed indelibly written on the medical history of Petersburg, where those bearing that name have always typified the highest to be found in professional ethics and ability. Doctor Grove has identified himself with medical society work as a member of the society representing Grant, Hardy, Hampshire and Mineral counties, of which he was formerly vice president, and he also holds membership in the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His skill in diagnosis and his successful treatment of a number of complicated cases have created a gratifying demand for his services and laid the foundation of what has already proved a career of exceptional breadth and usefulness. To a thorough professional equipment he adds a kindly and sympathetic manner, a genuine liking for his calling and a ready adaptation to its multitudinous and exacting demands.

As a citizen Doctor Grove has been a factor in the affairs of the local government, having been a member of the Town council. He also assisted in the promotion of the Potomac Valley Bank of Petersburg, and is also one of the men now behind the big project which is building the plant of the Community Power Company of this place. While a democrat in political matters, he has had little hand in practical politics. He cast his maiden vote for William Jennings Bryan for the presidency, and was an original Wilson man or president, sitting in the Baltimore convention when Mr. Wilson secured his first nomination. As a fraternalist he is a past Master Mason and attended the Grand Lodge of the order at Parkersburg. Until he entered the World War as a soldier Doctor Grove was actively identified with the various drives held for the sale of bonds and for other war work. He went over the country arousing the people's spirit and sentiment, as did Mrs. Grove, and in July, 1918, enlisted in the army and was commissioned a first lieutenant, being assigned to Camp Dix, New Jersey, Base Hospital. He was transferred to the Camp Examining Board March 1, 1919, and was honorably discharged from the service July 1, 1919.

Doctor Grove married at Staunton, Virginia, October 11, 1916, Miss Rosalie Sillings, a daughter of Lewis and Caroline V. (Shutterly) Sillings. She was educated in the public schools, being a graduate of the Staunton High School, after completing the course at the Valley Home Seminary. For several years prior to her marriage she was a teacher in the public schools and taught three terms at Petersburg. Doctor and Mrs. Grove are members of the Presbyterian Church. Their home is of their own planning and construction, and is one of the conspicuous and attractive brick residences of Petersburg.

J. EUGENE SHADLE. The Morgan Lumber & Manufacturing Company, of which Mr. Shadle is president, is one of the largest individual enterprises located at Charleston, and the business in its entirety, including the outlying mills, is the direct result of the great energy and extensive ability of Mr. Shadle, who acquired the original plant at Charleston fourteen years ago.

Mr. Shadle came into West Virginia in 1900, and first engaged in lumber milling in Tucker County, with headquarters at Parsons. From there his enterprise branched out to Randolph County, and his operations took on an extended scale, not only lumber manufacturing but as an owner and dealer in timber and timber lands. In the course of a few years he bought and sold over 50,000 acres of timber lands in Tucker, Randolph, Clay and Nicholas counties.

Mr. Shadle, who was born at Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, February 22, 1866, located permanently at Charleston in 1908. Here he bought the plant of the Morgan Lumber Company, then located on the east bank of the Elk River, directly opposite the present plant. With his nucleus he extended the scope of the business, changing the corporate name to the Morgan Lumber & Manufacturing Company, and under his management there has been developed one of the larger lumber industries of the state, with a business output valued at millions of dollars annually and a trade that covers all the Eastern states from Ohio. The primary operations of the industry are several lumber mills in the forests, where the timber is worked up direct from the stump. The output is West Virginia hardwood, of which there is none better in the world. The rough lumber from these outlying mills is shipped to the woodworking plant in Charleston, where it is unloaded direct from the cars into the dry kilns, which have a capacity of half a million feet of lumber. After thorough seasoning the contents of the kilns are discharged from the other end into the mills, undergoing at the same time a thorough and experienced inspection as to quality and grades. The lumber from the kilns is worked up according to the orders on hand, and, passing through the complicated machinery, consisting of saws, planers and rippers, is manufactured into the different grades of hardwood flooring, trim, moldings, base, doors, sash, store fixtures, bank fixtures, shelving and cases suitable for department stores. The trim and flooring is sold both locally and shipped in carload lots to many different states.

Besides the manufacturing department the company carries on an extensive lumber yard business, carrying all sizes and dimensions of common lumber, such as framing, sheathing, subflooring, siding, and a varied line of building supplies. The company generates its own electric power, all machines being electrically driven, each equipped with its individual motor. There are fifty-nine machines, capable of operating as a unit or individually. The plant with its modern buildings constitutes a prominent and impressive feature of the industrial section, and both buildings and yards cover a little over six acres, situated in the heart of the city, on the west bank of the Elk River, bounded by Pennsylvania Avenue, Columbia Avenue and Birch Street.

This business naturally is one demanding practically all of Mr. Shadle's time and energy, but he has none the less identified himself with all worthy movements in the city and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and was one of the organizers and is an enthusiastic member of the new Kanawha Country Club, organized in 1921.

He married Miss Sarah C. Bitter, who was born at Center Hall, Pennsylvania. His only son, Harold B. Shadle, who was educated in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, is the active assistant to his father in the management of the lumber industry and vice president of the corporation.

Mr. Shadle is a Mason and an Elk, a member of the Baptist Church, and is chairman of the building committee in charge of the construction of the new Baptist Temple. He is actively identified with a number of business enterprises in addition to the particular organization heretofore mentioned. He is vice president of the Glade Creek Coal and Lumber Company; vice president of the Ohio West Virginia Company, manufacturers of petroleum products; and is a director of the West Virginia Manufacturers Association and also of the West Virginia Lumber & Builders Supply Dealers Association.

JAMES MASON TETER, M. D. During more than a quarter of a century Dr. James Mason Teter has been identified with the medical profession of West Virginia, and through the faithfulness of his labors and the high quality of his services has entrenched himself strongly in the confidence and esteem of those qualified to judge as to ability and fidelity. On more than one occasion he has worked self-sacrificingly and successfully in combating serious epidemics, and throughout his professional career has maintained a high standard of ethics and professional conduct. For four years his field of active usefulness has been the City of Petersburg and the surrounding community, where he is widely known and greatly respected.

Doctor Teter was born in Union District, Pendleton County, West Virginia, May 11, 1873, and is a son of George and Mary (Harman) Teter. Reuben Teter, the grandfather of Doctor Teter, was born in Union District, Pendleton County, where he became a large landowner and a man of influence, and died at about the opening of the war between the states. He was a devout churchman. Mr. Teter married Miss Margaret McLaughlin, and they became the parents of the following children: John, who spent his life as a farmer in Pendleton County, where his death occurred; Laban, who lived the life of an agriculturist in the same county and is buried there; Ruth, who married David Harman and passed her life in Grant County; John, who was a miller for a time at Harman, Randolph County, but died in Tucker County, this state; David K., who was a plain countryman and farmer and died in Pendleton County, a veteran of the Union Army during the war between the states, as was his elder brother, John; Jennie, who married Job Davis and passed away in Tucker County; Rebecca, who became Mrs. B. F. Bennett, of Tucker County; George, the father of Doctor Teter; Jacob, who is a farmer at Oldtown, Maryland; Bettie, who married Amos W. Bennett, of Harman, West Virginia; and Reuben, a farmer of Tucker County, West Virginia.

George Teter was born in Union District, Pendleton County, January 3, 1846, and secured a fairly good education for his day and locality, being a teacher in young manhood for several years. During the war between the states he served as a member of the Home Guards and was a strong Union sympathizer. He is a republican in politics and was for a number of years one of the county commissioners of Pendleton County, where he now resides, and where he has been engaged successfully in agricultural pursuits during his career. In 1866 he married Mary Harman, who was born in 1848, a daughter of John A. and Hannah (Miller) Harman. The Harmans, like the Teters, were among the first to settle in Pendleton County, and all were rural people and identified with the farm. They were all Union sympathizers on the issues of the Civil war and none of them owned slaves. Mrs. Teter died in 1902, having been the mother of the following children: Alice, who is the wife of Isaac Robinson, of Pendleton County; Charles G., of Riverton, that county; Oliver Cromwell, a farmer of the Mill Run District; Dr. James M., of this notice; and Ida, the wife of Joseph H. Smith, of Petersburg.

James Mason Teter grew to early manhood in the Mill Run District of Pendleton County, where he secured the advantages and opportunities of the farm and district school. When nineteen years of age he secured further experience, as a teacher of the German School in his home district, following which he took up the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. M. Sites, of Upper Tract, with whom he studied for about a year. Being thus prepared for a college course, he entered the Lebanon Normal University for instruction in his chosen calling, and spent a year in that famous Holbrook school. He then returned to his home community and shortly thereafter went to Baltimore, where he completed his medical course in the Baltimore Medical College, graduating April 22, 1896, with his cherished degree. On leaving that institution he sought about for a suitable location for practice and finally decided upon Macksville, Pendleton County, where he spent two years. Subsequently he moved to Riverton, in the same county, where he was identified with the practice of his calling for a period covering twenty years. In the fall of 1918 he came to Grant County, where he has since been busily engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery and where he has not only built up a large professional business, but has gained the confidence of the people and the good will and esteem of his fellow-practitioners. While practicing at Riverton, Doctor Teter was called upon to combat a source of typhoid fever which inoculated that territory with germs carried from the river, and made a winning fight, carrying the community through with but small loss of life. He reached Petersburg in time to assist in fighting the epidemic of Spanish influenza which scourged the country so greatly in 1919, and fought it off with other doctors in 1919. Again, in 1921, he was called upon to act in the same capacity, and in this year the loss of life was small.

Doctor Teter was one of the promoters of the Potomac Valley Bank of Petersburg, and a director thereof for some time. He is still a stockholder therein. With politics he has had little concern. He comes of a family of republicans, and his first presidential ballot was cast in favor of the presidential candidacy of Major McKinley, although two years before he had cast his first vote of importance when he supported Judge Dayton for a seat in Congress. He holds membership in the various organizations of his profession, and as a fraternalist is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. His religious faith, like that of his parents, is that of the United Brethren Church. The work of winning the World war had a warm place in the hearts of both Doctor Teter and his wife, and both labored indefatigably and effectively, the former in a professional way and the latter as a member of the Red Cross Society.

At Riverton, Pendleton County, August 1, 1898, Doctor Teter was united in marriage with Miss Zadie Mauzy, who was born in Union District, Pendleton County, September 7, 1879, and educated in the public schools, a daughter of Jacob and Sarah E. (Teter) Mauzy, farming people of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Mauzy were the parents of the following children: Texie, who died as Mrs. George Harper; Zadio, who is Mrs. Teter; Hattie, who is unmarried and resides in Pendleton County; Wilbur, who died as a youth of sixteen years; Bessie, the wife of Wilbur Harper; Margie, who married Oscar Harper, of Pasadena, California; and Caddie, the wife of Billie Hines, of Pendleton County. Three children have been born to Doctor and Mrs. Teter: Eva Lena, of Huntington, West Virginia, who is a teacher of music; Elsie, who was a victim of the influenza epidemic of 1918, dying at the age of seventeen years; and Macie, who is a student at the Lutheran Academy, Petersburg.

VERNON LOUGH DYER, M. D. Included among the younger members of the medical profession who are making rapid strides in their chosen calling in Grant County is Dr. Vernon Lough Dyer, of Petersburg. To a natural equipment for his calling, which includes inherent ability, a genuine love of his profession and a sympathetic nature, Doctor Dyer has superimposed a long and careful training, and as a close observer and keen student of his profession is still further improving himself for the work to which he has dedicated his life and talents.

Doctor Dyer comes of an old and honored family of West Virginia, and was born April 17, 1892, at Fort Seybert, Pendleton County, this state, a son of William M. Dyer. His grandfather, Allen Dyer, was born in Pendleton County, where he followed the pursuits of farming and raising stock, and was one of the well-to-do and highly esteemed citizens of his community. He passed his entire life within the borders of Pendleton County, and attained the ripe old age of ninety-one years, passing away in the year 1910. He married Miss Martha Miller, and they became the parents of eight children who grew to maturity, as follows: Pendleton; Minnie, who married Charles Switzer, of Philippi, West Virginia; Annie, who married William Judy; Sue, who became the wife of Elias McWhorter, of Jane Lew, West Virginia; Edward, who resides near Philippi and is engaged in agricultural operations; William M., the father of Doctor Dyer; Charles, who died in Pendleton County; and Florence, the wife of I. E. Bolton, of Morgantown, West Virginia.

William M. Dyer was born in Pendleton County, where he received ordinary educational advantages in the public schools and as a young man adopted the vocation of farming. This he has followed with success in the same county ever since, and is now the owner of a good property, with all modern improvements. He is a modern agriculturist, owns a large herd of livestock, and keeps abreast of the advancements being constantly made in the business of agriculture. He has always demonstrated his public-spirited citizenship in his support of worthy civic movements, and educational and religious enterprises, as well as those of a charitable nature, have found him a friend. Politically he is a republican, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Church. Mr. Dyer was united in marriage with Miss Susan Lough, and they became the parents of eleven children, of whom ten survive: Nora, who is the wife of J. P. Cowger, of Fort Seybert, West Virginia; Fred, a resident of Eekman, this state; Dr. Vernon Lough, of this review; and Mary and Willie, twins, Fannie, George, Jasper, James and Anna, who reside at the home of their parents. During the World war Fred and Willie Dyer enlisted in the United States Army, and the latter saw overseas service, while the former was a member of the Officers Training Camp at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Virginia. All of the members of his family have been given the advantage of a good educational training.

his childhood, youth and early years of his manhood passed by Vernon Lough Dyer at Fort Seybert, in which community he attended the public school. As a youth spent his time much after the fashion of other farmers' working on the home place during the summer months. He winters he taught in the country schools of Bethel and, and this continued to occupy his time until he reached his majority, at which time he enrolled as a student at the State Normal School at Shepherdstown, West Virginia. He was graduated from that institution as a member of the class of 1914, and having thus equipped himself from a literary viewpoint he began the study of medicine. The first two years of his medical course were completed at Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana, at which he entered the medical department of Loyola University, Chicago, Illinois. He was graduated June 1, 1917, and after receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he went to Welch Hospital, Welch, West Virginia, where he spent a year in hospital work, being for a time interne of the institution. With this work finished he took up the practice of his profession at Petersburg, where he has since demonstrated his skill and thorough learning in a manner that has attracted to him a large practice of the most delicate kind that can fall to the lot of a young physician. During the period of the World war Doctor Dyer was enlisted at Loyola University, and his name was placed in the United States Medical Reserve Corps, but was not called for duty and his medical studies were uninterrupted.

Doctor Dyer is a close and careful student of his calling, holds membership in several medical organizations, including the Grant County Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society. He is at present serving in the capacity of health officer of Petersburg, an office in which he is rendering capable service. Fraternally he is affiliated with Petersburg Lodge of the Masonic Order. In political matters he is a republican, although he has not been active in political affairs, his entire attention being devoted to his profession. However, as a citizen he has given his support to worthy movements and has expressed approval of advanced educational standards and worthy public and religious enterprises. With Mrs. Dyer he holds membership in the Presbyterian Church.

On June 18, 1919, at Jane Lew, Lewis County, West Virginia, Doctor Dyer was united in marriage with Miss Mary H. Hickel, who was born in Wirt County, West Virginia, of the four children of Rev. Thomas J. and Arnette (Hickel) Hickel, Rev. T. J. Hickel being a well-known divine of the Methodist Protestant Church who has held numerous pulpits in West Virginia. Mrs. Dyer, who is the second of three children, was born March 18, 1895. Her sister is Mrs. Catherine Peterson, who lives at Weston, West Virginia, and her brothers are Fred, of Grantsville, this county; and John. Doctor and Mrs. Dyer have one daughter, Arnette, born October 10, 1921.

HARRY H. McNEMAR. In naming the representative business citizens of Grant County more than passing mention is due the career and accomplishments of Harry H. McNemar, of Petersburg, who, although still a young man, has developed one of the leading industries of his community, a produce business, the trade of which approximates the value of a million dollars annually. This enterprise has been built up within a few years, during which time Mr. McNemar has also found the opportunity to interest himself in other business affairs, as well as in matters affecting the public welfare of his community.

Mr. McNemar was born July 26, 1884, in Grant District, Grant County, and is a son of Samuel B. and Elizabeth (Harris) McNemar. He belongs to one of the most ancient of the early-settled families of West Virginia, which was introduced into old Hardy County four generations ago by Harry H. McNemar, by his great-grandfather, John McNemar. Martin McNemar settled in Grant District, Grant County, as it is now constituted, ten miles from the present town of Petersburg, and there continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits throughout a long, active and useful life, being buried on his farm. Among his children was Joseph McNemar, the grandfather of Harry H., of Petersburg. He spent his life on the estate of his father, agriculture being his chief vocation. He was one of the prominent and influential men of his day, and for forty years served in the office of sheriff of Hardy County, as it was then. His official record was an excellent one, as was that also of his business and private life, and he was held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens. Mr. McNemar was buried at Lahmansville Cemetery, about one mile below Petersburg. In the family of Joseph McNemar there were two sets of children, he having been twice married, and Samuel B. McNemar, the father of Harry H., belonged to the second wife's family.

Samuel B. McNemar was born in 1842, at the old family home in Grant District, Grant County, and was liberally educated. He early demonstrated intellectual attainments that directed his career along the line of the educator's profession, and throughout his life he was a teacher in various parts of the state, and never ceased to be a student. He was one of the best-known educators in his part of West Virginia, and was popular as well as efficient, having the happy faculty of being able to impart his own knowledge to others. At the outbreak of the war between the states, while a strong supporter of and sympathizer with the Confederacy, Mr. McNemar was found physically unfit to withstand the rigors of participation in the hard and strenuous life of the soldier, and his connection with the war activities therefore was limited to his moral and financial support of the Southern cause. He was a well-known democrat of Grant County, and was frequently seated in conventions of his party. Mr. McNemar was a devout member of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a member of the Board of Trustees of the church of that denomination at Williamsport.

Samuel B. McNemar married Miss Elizabeth Harris, of Goodhope, Illinois, where she was born, although her parents were formerly West Virginia people and agriculturists here. She is now a resident of Petersburg, aged seventy-seven years and highly esteemed. Mr. McNemar, after one year of retirement from the schoolroom, died in September, 1912, when his community lost a reliable and worthy citizen. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: Miss Daisy D., who holds a life certificate to teach and was engaged in school work for some years, but who for the past four years has occupied the position of postmistress of Petersburg; Edward S., who is engaged in agricultural pursuits near Williamsfield, Illinois; Harry Hennen, of this county; W. V. and J. V., twins, the former an attorney at law of Logan, West Virginia, and the latter a resident of Akron, Ohio.

Harry Hennen McNemar received his early education under the tuition of his father, and later completed his training in the public schools. In his young manhood he adopted his father's vocation of teaching, being a country school teacher when only sixteen years of age, and continued his school work for eight years, terminating it as principal of the Petersburg schools. When he left the schoolroom he was appointed the first railway agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Petersburg, and served in that capacity for eleven years. When he resigned he did so to embark in the produce business, establishing the first exclusive business of that kind at Petersburg. This he has developed to considerable proportions, for the year 1921, an average one, showed a business of $200,000 passing through the McNemar house alone. Naturally, a man with the ability to build up an enterprise of this kind is in demand by other enterprises, and Mr. McNemar is a director of the Central Tie and Lumber Company, a stockholder in the Grant County Bank, and a director in the Community Power Company, a hydro-electrical company, organized to furnish electric power for Petersburg and Moorefield. The organization of this project was effected in 1921, the plant site being at the twenty-foot dam across the south branch of the Potomac River, above Petersburg.

Mr. McNemar's politics is democratic and his first presidential ballot was cast in favor of the candidacy of William Jennings Bryan, in 1908. He has been on his party's ticket for the office of county superintendent of schools, and later for that of sheriff, in which latter campaign he reduced the republican majority of his opponent from 1,500 to less than 500 votes. As a fraternalist he is a Master Mason and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, and is popular in all three lodges.

On June 30, 1909, at Petersburg, Mr. McNemar was united in marriage with Miss Mary B. Clark, a daughter of William and Carrie (Baker) Clark, the latter being a sister of Bernard J. Baker, the well-known banker of Petersburg. Mrs. McNemar is the youngest of three children, the others being Mrs. D. G. Marshall and Mrs. Frances Stamp, both of Romney, West Virginia.

MANASSAH S. JUDY. When the citizens of Grant County elected Manassah S. Judy to the dual office of circuit and county clerk in 1920 they placed in this responsible position a representative of one of the oldest families native to this region of West Virginia. He descends on both sides from native parents of Grant County, and their fathers were likewise born in Grant County, so that he can justly lay claim to being a genuine West Virginian. In the discharge of his official duties he has displayed the possession of marked efficiency and a conscientious desire to improve the public service and give a good account of his stewardship.

Mr. Judy was born on a farm in Grant County adjoining the townsite of Petersburg, September 23, 1892, and is a son of George F. and Mattie E. V. (Sites) Judy. Manassah Judy, the grandfather of Manassah S. Judy, was born in Grant County, where he passed his life as an agriculturist and was greatly esteemed and respected. He married Sarah Dyer, and they became the parents of the following children: Jennie, who married Andrew Trumbo, and resides in Bedford County, Virginia; William A., a resident of Petersburg; Fena, who died as Mrs. W. H. Cola, at Monterey, Virginia; H. Seymour, of Petersburg, a retired farmer; George Franklin, the father of Manassah S.; Edward D., a retired farmer of Petersburg; Rebecca, who is the wife of Jared A. Hiner, of Doe Hill, Virginia; and Manassah Parren, who is a farmer at North Manchester, Indiana.

The maternal grandfather of Clerk Judy was Rev. Sampson G. Sites, a Dunkard preacher who gave his life after middle age to active church work and the farm. Reverend Sites was born and passed his life in Grant County, where he was widely known and universally esteemed for his sterling excellencies of mind and heart. He was the father of thirteen children, of whom eleven grew to maturity: Mattie E. V., who became the wife of George F. Judy and died December 7, 1907; James, who died at Idaville, Indiana; B. Harvey, one of the prosperous and extensive farmers and stockmen of the vicinity of Hoopston, Illinois; George E., a well-known citizen and prosperous agriculturist of Monticello, Indiana; Charles, a railroad man of Salem, Illinois; Mrs. M. P. Judy, of North Manchester, Indiana; Mrs. M. A. Judy, also of that city; Sampson G., Jr., of Monticello, Indiana; I. William, a farmer operating the old Sites homestead near Petersburg; D. Eston, a traveling salesman of Kansas City, Missouri; and Edgar C., a student of medicine at the University of Indiana.

George Franklin Judy was reared on his father's farm in Grant County and received the usual country school education of his day. When he attained years of maturity he chose farming for his life work, and for some years carried on agricultural operations near Petersburg, a community in which he had an excellent reputation for integrity in business affairs and as a public-spirited citizen. He died in 1896, at Petersburg, West Virginia. He and Mrs. Judy were the parents of the following children: Edna R., who married W. H. Judy, of Peru, West Virginia; Manassah Sampson, of this review, named for both of his grandfathers; and Sarah Elizabeth, who married Clyde Ours and resides at Fisher, Hardy County, West Virginia.

The first fifteen years of the life of Manassah Sampson Judy were passed in his home neighborhood near Petersburg, where he attended the public school, following which he entered Bridgewater College, at Bridgewater, Virginia. After spending one year at that institution in the fall of 1908 he went to Indiana and attended North Manchester

College until 1912, where for three terms he taught penmanship and assisted in the commercial department. He also supervised penmanship in the public schools during the years. During the summers of 1910, 1911 and 1912 he was a student at the Zanerian Art College, Columbus, Ohio. In the fall of 1912 he became principal of the commercial department of the high school at Cambridge, Ohio, and the spring of 1913 returned to West Virginia, locating at Petersburg, where he was engaged in the stock business on the old home farm. While thus engaged Mr. Judy became interested in politics, and eventually was persuaded by his friends to make the race for the office of county circuit clerk of Grant County. In the primaries of 1913 he became a candidate for this office against one of the ablest clerks of West Virginia and one of the ancients among the state officials, and won the nomination as a republican. He defeated his opponent in the primary election by 355 votes, and in the general election defeated his opponent by 2,200, or 200 votes ahead of the ticket. When he took office, succeeding the veteran D. P. Hendricks, whom everybody delights to honor, he became the third clerk Grant County has ever had. In his official position Mr. Judy has "made good" and has lived up to his election promises. He has entrenched himself firmly in the confidence of the people of the community, who have recognized and appreciated his efforts in their behalf. Mr. Judy was one of the organizers of the Potomac Valley Bank at Petersburg, in which he is a member of the Board of Directors and its secretary. He belongs to the Blue Lodge Chapter of Masonry, and is a past master of Petersburg Lodge No. 145, in addition to which he holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His religious affiliation is with the Presbyterian Church, in the work which he is active, being a teacher in the Sunday School.

On June 9, 1912, at Bowers, Montgomery County, Indiana, Mr. Judy was united in marriage with Miss Lillian E. Dunbar, who was born in Montgomery County, Indiana, as was her father and paternal grandfather, both of whom were agriculturists. She is a daughter of E. P. and Emma (Parker) Dunbar, the latter being a native of the State of Delaware. To Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar there were born six children: May, who is the wife of L. V. Halliday, of Belmont, Ohio; Lillian E., now Mrs. Judy, who was born February 22, 1891; Joseph E., of Colfax, Indiana; Austine, a farmer near that place; Harvey M., of Bowers, Indiana; Willard P., who is attending high school at Kokomo, Indiana; and Roscoe and Theodore, who are students at Blaine Ridge College, New Windsor, Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. Judy have no children.

HARRY R. STAPP early distinguished himself as a capable and skillful factor in the insurance business, and his experience in that line eventually led him to Dayton, Ohio, where he became associated with the Deleo Light Corporation. For the past five years he has been manager of the Deleo Light Corporation at Charleston, and has general supervision of the entire business of that corporation in that state. He is a leader in Charleston affairs, and is one of the prominent officials of the Kiwanis Club.

Mr. Stapp was born at Columbus Junction, Louisa County, Iowa, in 1880. This branch of the Stapp family is descended from the original Germans who founded the first colonies from that country in Pennsylvania. The grandfather of Harry R. Stapp was Reuben Stapp, who moved from his home at Allentown, Pennsylvania, in the late 17th century to the territory of Iowa. He was one of the first settlers of what later became Louisa County, on the eastern border of the state. The Stapp family have been for many years and still are large owners of rich Iowa farm land in Louisa County. The father of Harry R. Stapp is John Jacob Stapp, who married Miss Ogier.

Harry R. Stapp was reared and educated in Iowa, and in 1898, as a young man of eighteen, volunteered for service in the Spanish-American war. He was in the Fifth Regiment of Infantry from Iowa. After his honorable discharge he taught school in his native state for about two years, and then for two years lived in Chicago and secured his training and early experience in the insurance business.

Afterward Mr. Stapp was sent to London as a special representative of the New York Life Insurance Company to institute a change in the mode of accounting of the company's executive offices in England. The first object of a mission having been accomplished, he remained in the British metropolis as a special representative of his company, and altogether spent three years in London and on the European continent.

When Mr. Stapp returned to America in 1906 he was appointed manager at Indianapolis for the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford. He remained at Indianapolis a few years, leaving there to take charge of the local life insurance company at Dayton, Ohio. The factory and general offices of the Delco Light Corporation are at Dayton, and Mr. Stapp gave up the insurance business to become associated with this nationally known industry, manufacturing electric lighting plants. Mr. Stapp came to Charleston in 1917 as manager of the Delco distributing plant of the city, and from Charleston has general direction of the Delco light products' distribution and business throughout the state. He regards Charleston as his permanent home, has bought property in the city, and is one of the active, progressive and public spirited members of the community.

Mr. Stapp sponsored the original organization of the Kiwanis Club in West Virginia, which began with the organization of the Wheeling and Charleston clubs in 1918. The district of West Virginia was formed in September, 1919, and Mr. Stapp was elected and served as the first district vernal of the Kiwanis Clubs for this state. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order, holding the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine, the Elks and the Chamber of Commerce. While in London, England, he married Miss Kathleen Beeston. This is a family of distinction in London, and her brother, L. J. Beeston, is a well-known English author.

WILLIAM R. HIGGINS. The production of coal in commercial quantities in the Scotts Run section of Monongalia county is largely a matter of recent years. A pioneer coal miner and operator in that section and the man to whom credit is due than to anyone else for this development is William R. Higgins. Mr. Higgins has lived in Cass District most of his life, has been a miner as well as a farmer, and his practical work as a miner early took the direction opening up and working new and unexploited fields.

Mr. Higgins is proprietor of the Oak Hill Mining Company and is secretary of the Higgins Coal Company. The Higgins Coal Company has been producing coal since 1917, and the Oak Hill Mining Company opened its first mine in 1920, and now has a capacity of four cars per day. Mr. Higgins has 200 acres of land bordering Scotts Run, which is underlaid with coal, and altogether five companies are producing from the several veins, the upper one being the Waynesburg, eight feet thick, and it is Waynesburg coal that is being produced by the Oak Hill and Higgins companies. The second vein is the Sewickley, and most of that is still owned by Mr. Higgins. The Pittsburgh vein was sold many years ago and is being worked on an extensive scale by the Purslove Coal Company. The fourth lowest vein is known as the lower Sewickley, and has not as yet been touched by the mining operations. The Waynesburg vein is comparatively new coal, but has many superior qualities as steam coal, while the others may be better for coke ovens. The Waynesburg coal is sold largely for heating purposes, and the two mines have been distributing their products to twenty markets and the use has been maintained in almost every instance in repeat orders. Only one other man could claim priority over Mr. Higgins in the pioneer work of mining and disposing of the Waynesburg coal in this region. Scotts Run coal development is still in its infancy, but proves to be one of the most productive and valuable coal fields in the state. The Morgantown and Wheeling Railroad traverses the entire length of the Run, affording readily accessible transportation to markets both near and far.

Mr. Higgins was born in Cass District of Monongalia county in 1856, son of John Higgins, who also spent most of his life here as a miner and farmer, and died at the age of seventy-six. He was a native of Greene County, Pennsylvania, where his father died when he was an infant and the widowed mother then brought her children to Virginia. John Higgins from boyhood had to look after himself. He married Sarah Lawless, of Cass District, daughter of James Lawless, a farmer there.

William R. Higgins had limited advantages in the common schools, and at the age of eleven began working for wages. He worked in mines, and also assisted his father in clearing away the timber to open fields for cultivation. He worked in a number of different mining localities and for several years was a teamster in the oil fields. Forty years ago he began buying land, his capital at the time permitting only small purchases, but he has kept adding until he now holds a large acreage, particularly valuable because of its mineral resources. The Christopher Mine and the Bunker Mine are on his land.

Mr. Higgins married Miss Delia Alice Cole, of Cass District. They have one daughter and two sons, L. J. and John M., both associated with their father in the Higgins Coal Company, and Miss Jessie, at home.

HUBERT GARRET CROGAN is one of the popular and successful younger members of the Preston County bar, and has been practicing law at Kingwood for the past ten years. He is a nephew of the distinguished Kingwood lawyer and banker, Patrick J. Crogan.

His grandparents were James and Rose (Doyle) Crogan, natives of County Roscommon, Ireland, who were married in Maryland and on moving to West Virginia settled on a farm near Newburg, where James Crogan died in 1858. John F. Crogan, father of Hubert G., was the oldest of four children and was only eight years of age when his father died. He had to become the chief reliance of the family in the matter of labor required for operating the farm. He was born in Maryland, but practically all his life has been spent in Preston County, where he had only the advantages of the country schools during and after the war. He is a farmer, has been employed on public works and is still living at the old homestead at Newburg. John Crogan has done his duty as a public-spirited citizen and has been a member of the County Court and a member of the Board of Education of Lyon District. He is a republican. He married Catherine Frances Wilson. Her father, Eugenius Wilson, was born in Monongalia County, West Virginia, and followed the pursuits of farmer, cabinetmaker and operator of a feed and flouring mill, the scene of these activities being in Reno District, south of Tunnelton. Eugenius Wilson married Julia Jeffreys, and of their thirteen children the survivors are: Mrs. Amanda Bolyard, of Reno District; Mrs. Melissa Portney, of Independence, West Virginia; Mrs. Adaline Shaw, of Morgantown; Mrs. Samantha Spring, of Fairmont; Sarah, wife of Jacob Bolyard, of Grafton; and Mrs. John F. Crogan. John F. Crogan and wife had the following children: Addie, wife of Thomas E. Pyles, of Newburg; Hubert G.; Lloyd F., of Hiawatha, Utah; Walter G., of Grafton; Bessie M., widow of Oliver M. Bell, of Newburg; and John Dewey, a student at Toledo University in Ohio.

Hubert G. Crogan was born on the old homestead at Newburg, April 3, 1880. He attended the country schools, and as a boy showed a faculty of rapid mastery of subjects of knowledge. When he left home he became a country school teacher, and out of his earnings advanced his education by attending the West Liberty State Normal School, where he was graduated in 1907. Then for a little more than a year he was assistant postmaster of Tunnelton, and resigned to enter the law school of West Virginia University at Morgantown. Mr. Crogan graduated in law in June, 1910, and then located at Kingwood and began practice with his uncle. His practice embraces cases both in the civil and criminal branches of the law, and he is a member of the Preston County Bar Association and a leader in the republican politics of the county.

Mr. Crogan cast his first presidential vote for Colneel Roosevelt. He has been secretary and is now chairman of the Republican County Executive Committee.

December 14, 1919, Mr. Crogan married Miss Hazel

Snyder, daughter of Allison W. and Laura (Jenkins) Snyder, farmers near Albright in Preston County. Mrs. Crogan is one of six children. To their marriage was born on October 8, 1920, a son, Patrick Richard Crogan.

JOSEPH G. BROWN, assistant editor of the Preston County Journal at Kingwood, has had intermittent associations with the practical side of journalism for a number of years. He has also been a farmer, and has usually made a success of whatever he has undertaken. His career is the more interesting because it serves to recall one of the very earliest families of Preston County.

His ancestor, James Brown, was a native of Ireland and became prominently identified with some of the Irish secret societies against England. This activity becoming known, a reward of 100 pounds was placed upon his head, dead or alive, and he sought safety by fleeing to America. Thus in 1786, only a few years after the close of the Revolution, he established his home in Preston County, near Kingwood, and his descendants have lived here now for 135 years and through many avenues have contributed to the substantial growth and prosperity of the community. James Brown lived out his life as a farmer at what is still known as the old Brown homestead near Kingwood. This pioneer married Rachel Hawthorne. A brief record of their children is as follows: Robert, who lived at Kingwood, and was the grandfather of the late Senator Dolliver of Iowa; Thomas, who spent his life at the old homestead; John, who moved to Cincinnati; Joseph, who was sheriff of Preston County before the Civil war and also lived at Kingwood; William G., Sr., who became a Kingwood lawyer, was for several terms prosecuting attorney, was elected and served several terms in Congress, was first a democrat and then a republican, with rather liberal views, and was father of the late William G., Jr., who died while a member of the House of Representatives at Washington. Mrs. Jane Bowen, who left West Virginia and moved to Wisconsin; and Anna, who married Elisha M. Hagans and moved to Chicago.

The second generation in this branch of the family is represented by Joseph Brown, who was born at the old homestead at Kingwood and was sheriff of the county and lived a long and useful life here. He died in 1870, at the age of seventy-one. His wife was Mary Stone, who came from the vicinity of Richmond, Virginia. Their children were: James W., Elisha M., Mrs. Anna M. Elliott and Mrs. Julia R. Smith.

James W. Brown, who was born at Kingwood, March 30, 1832, took up merchandising and farming as his business vocation, and he was deputy sheriff under his father before the Civil war. While in the State Militia he was commissioned colonel, and ever afterward was known as Colonel Brown. In 1864 he moved out to Des Moines, Iowa, and for four years was a merchant in that city, as a member of the firm LeBoskett, Rude & Brown. He then returned to West Virginia, and his home was on a farm near the old homestead until his death in May, 1902. Colonel Brown was a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church, and was affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows. He married Miss Martha Brown, who was descended from John C. Brown, a son of the pioneer James Brown. She is still living at Kingwood, at the age of eighty-seven. Colonel and Mrs. Brown had five daughters and four sons: Mrs. C. M. Fleck, of Janesville, Wisconsin; Mrs. John W. McDonald, of Tampico, Mexico; Mrs. C. F. Copeman, of Irwin, Pennsylvania; Mrs. B. L. Brown, of Kingwood; Albert A., of Albright, West Virginia; John C., who died at Rowlesburg in 1912; Miss Emma V., who died in 1915; Joseph G.; and Elisha Sargent, who is still on the family homestead.

Joseph G. Brown, the editor, was born at Terra Alta, Preston County, November 12, 1859. From the age of five to nine he was with his parents in Des Moines, Iowa, and he first attended school there. Most of his early life, however, was spent on the home farm, and he took part in its work. In 1878, at the age of nineteen, he gained his first acquaintance with the printing business, with the West Virginia Argus at Kingwood, whose proprietor was the late Henry Clay Hyde. Later he again took up farming for ten years, and when he resumed his association with the printing art it was at Philippi and later at Parsons, West Virginia. The death of his father in 1902 called him to the management of the home farm. He has been assistant editor of the Preston County Journal since 1918. Mr. Brown, who has never married, is a democrat in line with his ancestry, and cast his first vote for General Hancock for president. He has always been deeply interested in the church of his choice and is an elder in the Presbyterian congregation at Kingwood.

JAMES D. BROWNING, who recently retired from the office and responsibilities of sheriff of Preston County, has been a farmer for the most part, and the duties and obligations that have come to him from time to time have been discharged each and all so earnestly and faithfully as to make him one of the conspicuous men in this section of the state.

Mr. Browning is not only a native son of Preston County but belongs to one of the first families to acquire a claim in this portion of the frontier. The founder of the family and his ancestor was the famous hunter, Mesach Browning who was one of the advance couriers of civilization, preceding most of the Trans-Allegheny pioneers. He was a great hunter, a master of all the arts of the frontier, and fortunately possessed the literary accomplishments that enabled him to leave the details of his experience and many pictures of frontier life in a volume entitled "Forty four Years of a Hunter's Life." For the benefit of his numerous posterity who have never seen this interesting volume it may be recalled that the frontiersman was born in Frederick County, Maryland, in 1781, son of Joshua and Nancy Browning. His parents were small farmers, homes and industrious people, and their unsullied names were about all they could pass on to their sons. The Browning home was in Garrett County, Maryland, subsequent to its removal to Frederick County, but when the boundary between Maryland and West Virginia was finally surveyed it was found that the Browning estate was in Preston County, West Virginia. Mesach Browning married Mary McMillan, and their old home was at Sang Run, about four miles east from the West Virginia state line. The old hunter is buried at Hoyes, Maryland. He was the father of six children, and his son, James, was grandfather of Sheriff Browning of Kingwood.

James Browning possessed some of his father's pioneer spirit and also participated in the hunting expedition that were an essential part of the life of his time. His real occupation was that of a farmer, and he established his home in Preston County and is buried at Terra Alta where many of his relatives and members of his own family are buried. His wife, Minnie Benard, had lived in the vicinity of Keyser, West Virginia. The children of this couple were Mesach, Notley, Isaac, J. Ferdinand, Rebecca who married John H. Feather, Mary, who is the wife of a Smith Kelley, Susan, who became Mrs. Adam Parsons; Minnie, who was married to Dr. M. Fichtner, Louise, Mrs. Charles Jackson. All the daughters married Preston County men, and many of their descendants are still in the county.

Notley Browning, father of James D. Browning, was born in Preston County in December, 1839. He grew up in a district yet untamed, and had much of his grandfather's disposition to hunt. He killed a great many bears and other big game, and his hunting and trapping excursions were source of profit as well as a diversion from the other care of life. He farmed rather extensively, owned thousands of acres of land, and made many real estate deals. His interests in politics was that of a republican voter. Mesach Browning, the pioneer, was of a family Catholic in faith but later generations sought membership in the Protestant church and Notley became a Methodist. The wife of Notley Browning was Susan C. Fichtner, whose father, Daniel Fichtner, a physician, moved from Somerset County, Pennsylvania, to Preston County, West Virginia, and lived out his life there. Notley Browning died February 14, 1917.

C. O. Whitten

en well on toward fourscore, while his widow passed away July, 1919. This couple had only two sons, James Daniel and B. Franklin. The latter is a farmer and merchant at Bra Alta.

James D. Browning, who therefore represents the fourth generation in the history of Preston County, was born near Cranseville, September 19, 1866. He attended the country schools, had an increasing part in the labors of his father's farm, and since reaching his majority his business has been in farming and merchandising at Cranseville. Since leaving from the office of sheriff he has resumed farming, and plans to make that the principal vocation of his remaining years. He had been out of merchandising for a time when it was suggested that he enter the race for sheriff of the county. It was a gratifying surprise that he secured nomination practically without effort, and in the fall of 1916 was elected as the successor of Sheriff H. Foster. His official term included the war period, and there were some crimes due to strikes and labor unrest, but on the whole his term of four years was without notable incident and he showed himself a firm master of every emergency. Mr. Browning was elected as a republican, and has been an active member of that party since he cast his vote for Harrison in 1888. He has represented the county as a delegate to numerous local and state conventions, and is the acquaintance of some of the state party leaders. Mr. Browning is affiliated with the Independent Order of Fellows and Knights of Pythias and his family are Methodists.

In Preston County he married Miss Effie Van Meter, who was born near Cranseville, December 4, 1877, daughter of Robert and Martha (Feather) Van Meter, her mother having a daughter of James and Christina (Summers) Van Meter. Robert Van Meter was an Evangelical minister, and was born in Mason County, West Virginia, while his wife was born near Cranseville. Mrs. Browning, the only child of her parents, was educated in the common schools. Mr. and Mrs. Browning have four children: Nellie, Harold, Percy and Hugh Browning. Nellie is married, being the wife of Forest Cuppett, of Cranseville.

CHARLES O. WHITTEN is proprietor and active head of the Whitten Paint Company of Charleston, the only extensive paint supply house in the capital city. This is a prosperous business recently organized, but Mr. Whitten has been in business as a painting contractor, handling the best class work, for many years, and is one of the most successful men in his line in the state.

Mr. Whitten was born in Monroe County, West Virginia, 1881, son of J. A. and Margaret (Campbell) Whitten, residents of Hinton, West Virginia. His father was also a native of Monroe County, and represents an old Virginia family. The original seat of the Whittens in old Virginia was Botetourt County.

Charles O. Whitten acquired his early education in the public schools of Monroe County, and in that county learned trade as painter and also at Bluefield, West Virginia. He has been working as a painter at Charleston at intervals since 1901, and as a journeyman his experience has covered many states, particularly in the Southwest.

Soon after his return to West Virginia in 1916 Mr. Whitten entered business on his own account as a painting contractor. During the war with Germany he did much government work, the most important job being as boss painter on the great naval ordnance and armor plant at Charleston.

The Whitten Paint Company of Charleston was organized by Mr. Whitten and incorporated June 8, 1921, and he is practically the entire owner. The establishment is located at 119 Court Street, and carries a complete stock of paints, varnishes, colors, painters' supplies and painters' specialties.

As the largest painting contractor in Charleston Mr. Whitten has handled many contracts involving thousands of dollars. The work of his organization extends to many towns and cities of the state. While a complete list of his work would be too long, it will suffice to give a comprehensive idea of the style and class of the contracts he handles by noting some of the contracts performed by him during 1921. These include the residences of John Malone, William Klinger, the Boham residence on Quarrier Street, the Brawley, Doctor Davis, Hughes, Clyde Swinburn and other modern residences; a number of the large apartment houses, such as the Barkus apartments, the Cohen apartments, the Schwabe and May apartments, the Lipske twenty-four apartment house on Donnelly Street, the Shields apartment house on the south side, the Soloff Hotel and the store building of the Wagner Candy Company. Mr. Whitten is in every way an expert in the painting business and is a thoroughly able business man as well.

He married Miss Catharine Selby, of Charleston. They have one son, Charles O., Jr. Mr. Whitten is a member of Charleston Lodge No. 153, A. F. and A. M., a Knight of Pythias and a D. O. K. K. He is also a member of the Baptist Church of Charleston.

P. F. KING, present county clerk of Preston County, has an interesting career that, in the main, has been one of essential public service, first as a teacher and latterly as a public official. Not from liberal advantages bestowed upon him when a youth or by any specially favoring fortune, but out of his quiet determination and persistence Mr. King has demonstrated his worth and usefulness.

He represents one of the older families of West Virginia and was born near Aurora in Preston County, March 16, 1884. His remote ancestor came to America from England several generations ago. It is said that he belonged to a family of wealth in England and had a fortune in his own right. It was for religious reasons that he left the old country, abandoning his fortune, and his American heirs have never made a determined effort to secure their share of legacies that might properly be theirs. The old ancestor located in Frederick County, Maryland.

It was in Frederick County, Maryland, that Mr. King's grandfather, Nathan J. King, was born, and he married there Miss Hale. He was a blacksmith by trade, also owned a farm, and lived for some years near Fellowsville in West Virginia and also at Stemple Ridge. He died at the home of his son, John W. King, and is buried in Carmel Cemetery at Aurora. He died at the age of seventy-five. His son, Francis, was a soldier in a West Virginia regiment and was killed in the battle of Antietam. Nathan J. King had the following children besides Francis: Christians who married P. S. Fike, of Eglon, West Virginia; Daniel J., who was a blacksmith at Eglon; Joshua M., who lived for many years and died at Ogden Center, Michigan; Lydia A., who became the wife of J. N. H. Woodring, a farmer near Aurora; Alice, who married Phenix Miller and died in Preston County; Luther, who has lived for several years in Michigan and is connected with an automobile factory; and John W.

John W. King, father of the county clerk, is still living on the King farm near Aurora where he has had his home for nearly forty years. He was born in Preston County in November, 1861, grew up on a farm, learned the blacksmith's trade under his father, and worked at the trade until almost forty years of age, since which time he has concentrated his efforts upon the farm. He belongs to a republican family and has always acted with that party, though he had no ambitions for public service.

Page Franklin King lived during boyhood and early youth on the farm at Aurora. During that period of his life the chief encouragement held out to him was to make use of his physical strength, and beyond the common schools there was no thought of a higher education. His labors seemed necessary as a means of sustaining himself, and the most available employment was in the lumber woods and about the sawmills. While the years were adding strength to his body, his mind had little nourishment from the knowledge sealed up in text books, and his days were being spent in strong-arm and strong-back work at a small wage. He continued this routine until he attained his majority. It was then that he returned to school in the fifth grade, determined to make up for lost time. He had the native qualities of intelligence which when spurred and supplemented by his great determination enabled him to finish the term with record grades, and with this encouragement he pressed on to greater achievements. He attended the summer normal school at Terra Alta and later completed a correspondence course. After successfully passing an examination for a teacher's license he began teaching in rural districts, and altogether was a factor in educational affairs for twelve years, part of the time in grade schools and finished as principal of the Corinth schools.

Mr. King left the schoolroom when appointed deputy sheriff under Sheriff J. D. Browning. He served with him through his term of office and then became a candidate for clerk of the County Court. There were three candidates aspiring for the nomination, but Mr. King secured the right of way at the primaries, and at the following general election it seemed that the people of the county were almost unanimous with regard to his special qualifications and fitness. He defeated his competitor by a ratio of three to one, and a majority of almost 5,000, securing more votes than the normal vote of the entire county. Mr. King entered the office in January, 1921, as the successor of E. C. Everly. One improvement he is installing is the Russell system of indexing, known as the L. M. N. R. T. system, which will make the deed records one of the most complete found in any county clerk's office in the state.

On December 25, 1913, Mr. King married Miss Lesta Fries. She was born near Terra Alta, August 29, 1895, daughter of John and Mary Cramer Fries, farmers near Terra Alta. Her father grew up at his father's mill, was a millwright by trade, but in later years has devoted his time to the farm. Mrs. King has a sister, Mabel Fries, and a brother, Jesse Fries. Mr. and Mrs. King have a daughter, Bernice, born December 7, 1916.

Mr. King is affiliated with Preston Lodge No. 90, A. F. and A. M., the Scottish Rite and the Shrine, and is also a member of Brown Lodge No. 32, Knights of Pythias, and Kingwood Lodge No. 1515 of the Loyal Order of Moose. He and Mrs. King are members of the Methodist Church and Mrs. King is active in all church causes, including the Ladies' Aid Society.

SCOTT HARTER WILSON became a resident of Kingwood while he was in the railroad service, and when he resigned his post as a conductor he established a drug business, and has since been active in merchandising and is one of the public spirited men of that prosperous community.

Mr. Wilson represents one of the old and prominent families of Preston County, some of its members being represented on other pages of this publication. He was born in Portland District, October 28, 1877, son of Nathan and Sarah (Schaeffer) Wilson.

Scott Wilson grew up on the home farm, attended the common schools and accepted the duties of the farm until he was twenty. He then entered the service of the Virginia and Northern Railroad, and was with that company nineteen years, serving through the ranks until he reached the position of conductor. For several years he had maintained his home at Kingwood, and when he left the railroad he established a new business, The Korner Drug Store, of which he is proprietor.

Mr. Wilson has never been active in politics, though he has always voted at local and general elections, and has exercised an independent choice though nominally a republican. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, being a past master of Preston Lodge No. 90, F. and A. M., and has represented it in the Grand Lodge. He is past grand of his lodge of Odd Fellows, has been district deputy grand master, and is a member of the Encampment Degree of Odd Fellowship. He is a member of the Methodist Church and Mrs. Wilson is active in Home Mission work and in the Ladies' Aid Society.

In Preston County, June 8, 1904, Mr. Wilson married Eula Menefee, who was born in this county in April 1884, daughter of James and Jane (McMackin) Menefee. Her father was a soldier in the Civil war, and his civil life was spent as a farmer, his death occurring near Albright. There were six sons and six daughters in the Menefee family, and the survivors are: Mrs. Ollie Fenton, of Idaho; Frank, of California; Mrs. Ella Smith, of Albright; Robert, of Terra Alta; James Walker and Wesley, of Morgantown; Mrs. Wilson; Mrs. Anna Morgan, of Morgantown; ar Clint, Mrs. May Phillipet, and Mrs. Lella Waterbury, residents of California. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have two daughters: Genevieve and Syrota Mae Wilson.

GAY E. WILSON is active head of the Kingwood Hardware Company. He has been a merchant in Preston County for a number of years and is a member of one of the old and prominent families of that section of the state. His father was Nathan A. Wilson, and a more extended record of the family is published on other pages.

Gay Elbert Wilson was born in the Whetsell settlement of Preston County, five miles east of Kingwood, April 2, 1883. The common schools gave him his early advantage. At the age of eighteen he left home and went west Springfield, Illinois, where he was employed as a merchant clerk. For five years he remained in the city which is the shrine of Abraham Lincoln, and interested himself in better knowledge of the modest president, sitting in the chair of the great lawyer and familiarizing himself with many local incidents of Lincoln's career. From Springfield Mr. Wilson returned to Preston County and established a general store at the lumber camp at Caddell. He was in business there eight years, until the camp was 'cut out,' when he closed his store and since then has been identified with the commercial life of Kingwood. Here he became successor to the hardware firm of Martin & Company, his business being known as the Kingwood Hardware Company in which his brother, Lawrence S. Wilson, is his only partner. This is the sole hardware concern in Kingwood and has an extensive retail business over the county.

Mr. Wilson comes of a democratic family and has been similarly aligned in his political action. He is secretary of the Business Men's Association of Kingwood and at times is ready to work for the welfare and progress of the community. In the way of permanent improvements nothing makes a stronger appeal to him than good highways. Practically all the permanent roads out of Kingwood have been built since he moved to the town, and he has done his part in furthering that commendable work. During the World war he invested his funds liberally in Government securities, helped in the sale of Liberty Loans among the laboring classes, and was an active member of the Red Cross. Mr. Wilson is a trustee of the Kingwood Presbyterian Church, for three years was superintendent of the Sunday school and is secretary of the Monroe Bible Class. He has been affiliated with the Masonic Order at Kingwood since 1911, being a member of Preston Lodge No. 90, A. F. and A. M., which he served as master in 1916, and is also member of Royal Arch Chapter No. 33, at Terra Alta, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling and is a member of the Scottish Rite Guard of Perfection at Morgantown. He belongs to the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias Lodges at Kingwood.

In Preston County, February 20, 1908, Mr. Wilson married Miss Rheua Copeman of Bruceton Mills. She was born in the northern part of Preston County. Her father, Fred Copeman, was a native of Germany, came to the United States in 1871 to escape enforced military duty, and he devoted his active life to farming. His first wife was Miss Cale, who was the mother of Mrs. Wilson, born January 8, 1884; Isa, wife of Ross Spiker, of Preston County, and Henry, a farmer near Brandonville. Fred Copeman married for his second wife another Miss Cale, and she was the mother of a daughter, Matha, now Mrs. Harry Orew of Akron, Ohio. The third wife of Fred Copeman was Jennie Wolfe, and they have a son, Paul. Mrs. Wilson grew up on a farm near Bruceton and was educated in the schools of that locality. She and Mr. Wilson were married by Rev. Ramsey at Kingwood. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson had an infant daughter, Willard, who died before she was two years of age.

BRUCE SPINDLER, a brother of Charles Spindler and member of a pioneer family in Preston County, the family record ing a subject presented on other pages, is an active business man of Kingwood, where he is the only licensed underwriter and also conducts a furniture business.

J.B.F. Shepherd

Mr. Spindler was born in Grant District, Preston County, December 4, 1873, one of the family of five sons and five daughters of Andrew and Nancy (Haines) Spindler and was the youngest of the children to grow up. He lived until adulthood on the home farm and began his career with a common school education. After leaving the farm Bruce Spindler was in the livery business at Fairhance, Pennsylvania, a year, and then took up the work of the carpenter's trade, which he had learned from his father. He was a turneyman carpenter and also did some minor contracting. In course of time his activities and inclinations lead him to engage in the undertaking business at Kingwood, in February, 1914, and he has since devoted his whole time to the furniture and undertaking line.

Mr. Spindler inherits his politics from his father, is a publican and cast his first presidential ballot for Major McKinley in 1896, but in local affairs is somewhat independent. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, and a member of the Methodist Church.

July 22, 1914, near Chalk Hill, Pennsylvania, he married Miss Margerie Wishing. She is survived by a daughter, Lettie Elmyra. On July 19, 1920, at Grafton, Mr. Spindler married Estelle Evick, daughter of Pendleton and Florence (Lough) Evick of Franklin, West Virginia, where Mrs. Spindler was born in August, 1896, being one of a family of three sons and two daughters.

HIRAM FRANCIS SHEPHERD. The Motor Car Supply Company of Charleston, of which H. F. Shepherd is organizer and president, is a wholesale concern exclusively, dealing in automobile supplies, accessories, parts, garage machinery and equipment. Its home is a modern five-story brick structure at 908 Kanawha Street, the entire building being occupied for salesroom and stock. Though the company has been in existence less than two years, its growth has brought it a magnitude that gives it favorable comparison with many of the largest wholesale establishments of Charleston, a city in which are grouped some of the leading wholesale interests of the state. This success is an special tribute to the keen, alert and conservative management of its executive, who has exhibited business ability of the very first order.

Mr. Shepherd was born at Coffeen, Montgomery County, Illinois, and as a boy he attended the local schools there. He finished his education in Valparaiso University in Indiana, and on leaving school went to Chicago. He entered business life as a bookkeeper, later becoming a credit man, and remained in Chicago for ten years. As a credit man he removed to Des Moines, Iowa, and while in that city came actively interested in the automobile business, a field in which his experience has been continuous since about 1909. Early in 1919 Mr. Shepherd came to Charleston, and was associated with the Baldwin Supply Company until he organized the Motor Car Supply Company, which began business in Charleston January 1, 1921.

Mr. Shepherd is a member of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, the Kanawha Country Club, Lions Club and is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Charleston. He married Miss Bessie A. Robertson, of Moberly, Missouri. Their two children are Robert F. and Nancy Elizabeth.

HENRY ASA ALT. Among the highly popular and strongly efficient officials of Grant County is found Henry Asa Alt, of Petersburg, deputy sheriff, who is now serving as chief deputy under Sheriff Kimble. During a long and active career Mr. Alt has been engaged in various business ventures, in which he has maintained a reputation for integrity and capability, and at the present time is the owner of a good farm, although he does not apply himself to its operation personally, his official duties requiring all of his attention.

Mr. Alt was born in Pendleton County, West Virginia, in Hill Run District, August 27, 1868, and his life was passed in his native community until he was twenty-five years of age, his education coming from the country, where he attended the old-fashioned log cabin school, although the punchon bench with pegs for legs was absent. His father had been a schoolboy in the same locality when the primitive schoolhouse with its crude equipment was the only means of public education to be secured. Mr. Alt's father was Asher Alt, likewise a native of Pendleton County, and throughout his life a farmer. He died when but thirty-seven years of age, about 1876. He was a Union man, being a member of the Home Guards and not a participant in the war between the states, save for a time as a civilian prisoner of the Confederate forces. Asher Alt married Emily Hedrick, a daughter of Jacob Hedrick, who was a native of Pendleton County, but a son of German parents. Mrs. Alt was born in Pendleton County and died when her son, Henry A., was but four years old. There were four children in the family: Rebecca J., who died as Mrs. A. S. Landis, in Grant County; Henry Asa, of this review; Christina, who married George W. Sites and resides in Grant County; and Emily S., who is unmarried and a resident of Pendleton County.

The father of Asher Alt and grandfather of Henry Asa Alt was Jacob Alt, who came out of old Virginia or from Pennsylvania and was of German stock. He was a lifelong agriculturist and died in Pendleton County, where he lies buried in the Mill Run District near his old home. He married Mary Goodnight, and they became the parents of six children: Hannah, who married George W. Borror; Michael, who passed his life as a farmer and died in Pendleton County; Isaac, who spent his life on the farm in that county; Asher, the father of Henry Asa; Christina, who married Henry Hedrick and died in Pendleton County; Letitia, who became Mrs. John W. Hedrick and died in Grant County, where she had passed her married life.

After the death of his father Henry Asa Alt went to live at the home of an uncle, in the rural districts of Pendleton County, and there grew to man's estate. He was given an ordinary public school education in the country, and as a youth began teaching school, a vocation which he followed for fifteen years, in the meantime advancing his own education by attendance at Shenandoah Normal College, Basic City, Virginia. During the summer months, when school did not keep, he engaged in farming. His last school was taught at Thorn Run, and when he gave up the educational profession he engaged in the milling business at Williamsport, Grant County, where he purchased a mill property from J. W. McDonald. For five years he conducted this enterprise, making flour and doing custom work, but eventually sold this business and purchased a half-interest in the flouring mill at Petersburg. He was first associated with Abel A. Parks, and later with Mr. Park's son, John A. Parks. When he sold his interest to the latter he invested his means in a farm near Lahmanville, which he conducted for some years himself, and of which he is still the owner. This is a successful grain and stock raising proposition and is still owned by Mr. Alt, who, however, has not engaged personally in farming since coming to Petersburg.

Mr. Alt was appointed deputy sheriff by Sheriff Kimble January 1, 1921, and succeeded W. D. Trenton in his present office. His politics have always been republican. His first presidential ballot was cast in favor of Benjamin Harrison, in 1892, and he continued his affiliation with the party until 1912, when he supported Colonel Roosevelt for president on the progressive party's ticket. With the dissolution of that party Mr. Alt resumed his relations with his former political home, the republican party. In addition to acting as deputy sheriff Mr. Alt has served Grant District of Grant County as justice of the peace four years. He is a past master of Petersburg Lodge No. 145, A. F. and A. M., and has represented it in the Grand Lodge. He is also a past master of Odd Fellowship, and his religious connection is with the United Brethren Church.

On April 12, 1894, in Pendleton County, Mr. Alt was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Kimble, a daughter of Wesley and Fannie (McDonald) Kimble. Wesley Kimble, now eighty-two years of age and an agriculturist of Grant County, was a member of the Home Guard during the latter part of the war between the states. He is a brother of the father of Sheriff John A. Kimble, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work in the review of Sheriff Kimble's life. The following children of Wesley and Fannie Kimble reached years of maturity: George W.; John W.; Harness, now deceased; Ulysses Grant; Adam; Jasper; Mary E., who is now Mrs. Alt; Edward; Minnie, who died as the wife of Isaac Alt; Rosa, who is now Mrs. C. W. Smith, of Mineral County, West Virginia; Annie, who married H. F. Borror, of Petersburg; and Irving, of Crestmont, Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Alt there have been born the following children: Sadie, who is the wife of M. H. Roby, of Petersburg, and has two children, Frederick and Donald; Theodore, an agriculturist operating near Forman, West Virginia, who married Clarice Frye; Raphael H., an agriculturist of Grant County, who married Gienna Freye, deceased, and has a son, Roswell; and Vernon May, Geneva and Norma, who reside with their parents. Theodore Alt was a soldier during the World war, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Meade, his regiment not having been ordered overseas.

ELISHA BOYD FAULKNER, who was a resident of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, at the time of his death, honored the State of West Virginia by his distinguished service as a lawyer, jurist, public official and citizen of fine character and high ideals. He was born in the community known as Boydville, near the present city of Martinsburg, West Virginia, on the 24th of July, 1841, and was a son of Charles James Faulkner and Mary W. (Boyd) Faulkner. He received excellent educational advantages in his youth, including those of Winchester Academy, Georgetown College and the University of Virginia. While an attaché of the American Legation in the City of Paris, France, he there attended lectures on constitutional law, and he became one of the authorities in this phase of law in West Virginia. After serving as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war he refused to take the test oath required in West Virginia, and from 1867 to 1872 he was engaged in the practice of law in Kentucky. In the latter year he returned to Martinsburg and resumed the practice of law. In 1876 he was elected to the House of Delegates of the State Legislature, and in 1878 to the State Senate, the presidency of which body he declined. He was appointed a member of the committee chosen by the Legislature to revise the laws of the state, and in 1884 he was defeated for nomination for the office of governor of West Virginia at the State Democratic Convention in Wheeling. Under the administration of President Cleveland Judge Faulkner was tendered and declined appointment as consul general at Cairo, Egypt, and also that of minister to Persia. He was appointed to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial District of West Virginia, he having been at the time attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio and the Cumberland Valley Railroads, as well as other important corporations. By successive re-elections he continued his service on the bench for more than twenty-one years, and then declined again to become a candidate for re-election. He was a trustee of the Berkeley Springs Corporation, and politically was a stalwart democrat. His initial military service was with the Wise Artillery, later he was a member of the Rockbridge Artillery and thereafter he became a member of the military staff of Governor Letcher of Virginia. When the Civil war came he was appointed a captain in the Provisional Confederate Army, and in June, 1864, he was captured at the battle of Piedmont. For a year thereafter he was held a captive at Johnson's Island. He took part in many engagements, fought loyally and gallantly in defense of a cause which he believed to be just, and at the first battle of Manassas he received wounds in one of his ears from the fragment of an exploding shell.

February 11, 1868, recorded the marriage of Judge Faulkner and Miss Susan Campbell, daughter of John P. Campbell, a leading citizen of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, in which locality he had large landed interests and also important financial investments. Mr. Campbell, of Scotch lineage, died at the venerable age of eighty years. The maiden name of his wife was Mary Buckner, and she was an aunt of Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner. Judge and Mrs. Faulkner became the parents of two daughters, Mary Buckner and Nannine Holmes, the latter of whom died in 1883.

GUSTAVUS HITE WILSON has played an active role in the affairs of Preston County as a teacher, a banker, a progressive leader in all civic movements, and was a former captain of the National Guard.

This branch of the Wilson family has been in Preston County for more than a century. His great-grandfather came from Scotland and settled in Taylor County, West Virginia, more than 100 years ago. His sons were Jacob, Thomas, Edgar, Ham and Coleman, and his only daughter, Harriet, became the wife of Luke Lewellen. Of these sons, Jacob Wilson, grandfather of the Kingwood banker, was born in Taylor County and married Nancy Meanes. Their children were: Nathan A.; Alonzo; Rebecca, wife of Dr. S. H. Harter; Isaac; William E.; and Belle, who became the wife of Harter Stout, of Bridgeport, West Virginia.

Nathan A. Wilson, father of Captain Wilson, was born near Grafton in Taylor County, was reared and educated in the country and though a boy at the time of the Civil war he was employed as a Government teamster at the close of hostilities, though not enlisted in the army. He spent his active career in business and as an interested participant in public affairs, and was a democrat in politics. He married Sarah Scheffer, daughter of Israel Schaeffer and a sister of William M. Schaeffer, former sheriff of Preston County. She died in Preston County in May, 1900, at the age of fifty. Her children were: Israel S., a farmer of the Whetsell community of Preston County; Gustavus Hite; John E., a farmer in Preston County; Scott H., a druggist at Kingwood; Gay E., in the hardware business at Kingwood; Troy A., a farmer and railroad man; and Lawrence S., in the hardware business at Kingwood.

Gustavus Hite Wilson was born near Grafton, April 5, 1873, but grew up on the home farm five miles east of Kingwood. He acquired a country school education there, and when he left home he began teaching. He was active in that profession nineteen years, though during an interval of several years he was connected with banking. For six years he was principal of the Kingwood graded school, and at the same time did duty on the County Examining Board. His last work as a teacher was done in the Grafton schools.

For three years he was connected with the Kingwood National Bank, and then resumed teaching. Later he entered the Farmers and Merchants Bank at Reedsville in Preston County, and for a brief time was assistant bank commissioner of the state. Since then he has been in the service of the First National Bank of Albright, of which he is cashier. The Albright Bank was organized in 1914 by local interests and has a capital of $25,000. E. E. Watson, of Albright, is president; the vice presidents are M. F. Walls and S. D. Albright, and the cashier is Mr. Wilson. This bank has resources of $200,000, with undivided profits and surplus of $6,000. Its directors are S. A. Gustafson, Marshall Morgan, Mr. Watson, Mr. Walls, S. D. Albright and Mr. Wilson.

In February, 1896, in Preston County, Mr. Wilson married Miss Maggie L. Calvert, who was born in that county and represents an old family of this section. Her father, Enoch Calvert, was born in Preston County, on the Jesse Childs farm, was a soldier in the Civil war, but otherwise lived as a private citizen and was a substantial farmer. He died in 1901, at the age of sixty-five. His wife was Mary E. Syplot, of Irish ancestry, who was born in Preston County and died in 1913. Her father was William H. Syplot. Enoch Calvert and wife had the following children: William Jasper, of Chicago; Louisa Virginia, wife of I. J. Whetsell, of Preston County; Minnie A., wife of J. D. Wright, of Preston County; Horace S., of Howesville, West Virginia; M. John, of Kingwood; Cecil M., a farmer in the Whetsell community; Nora E., wife of Edgar Jeffreys, of Kingwood; Mrs. Wilson; and Chester A., a farmer in the home community. Mrs. Wilson was born October 13, 1880, and was reared on her father's farm and acquired a public school education. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have a son and a daughter. The son, Raymond, is a student of engineering in West Virginia University and during the World war was a member of the Student Army Training Corps. The daughter, Alice, is the wife of John C. Varner, of Kingwood, and they have a son, John Clair Varner, born April 23, 1921.

Mr. Wilson cast his first presidential vote for William J. Bryan, and has been secretary of the County Democratic Executive Committee and has frequently attended district and state conventions. During the World war he was a member of all the Liberty Loan committees and assistant county chairman in the Victory Loan drive. He was president and secretary of a Red Cross organization, and Mrs. Wilson labored faithfully as a private in Red Cross work.

Mr. Wilson was for fourteen years active in the National Guard in Company G of the First Infantry. He entered as private and at the end was captain of the company. He is still in the service when America entered the war with Germany, and after a Federal examination he was commissioned major in the Quartermaster's Department, but was not called to active duty though, as noted, he was one of the leaders in home war work.

LEROY S. BUCKLEW. In 1812 William Bucklew, a native New Jersey, established his home in Preston County, in the Whetsell settlement southeast of Kingwood. A hundred and ten years have passed, and in all these years the Bucklew family, acknowledging William Bucklew as their pioneer West Virginia ancestor, have been actively and usefully distributed in the county, carrying on their work as agriculturists, in the mechanical trades, some in the professions, and maintaining high standards of civic usefulness and honor. One of his descendants is Leroy S. Bucklew of Kingwood, well known as a substantial business man, and a man of exceptional gifts and cultivated tastes, who has used his spare time and time for extensive study in scientific research and the collection of data and material that illustrate the history of the earth and the races of mankind therein.

William Bucklew was of Scotch-Irish origin, and there is a family of the same strain in England who spelled the name Buccleuch. William Bucklew on leaving New Jersey came to Selbysport, Maryland, and from there came to Preston County and bought land from the Butlers. The deed of the transaction bears the date of the year in which the second war with Great Britain was started. He cleared his land and was an industrious cultivator thereof until death, in 1844. He married Mary A. Michael, at Selbysport, Maryland. Twelve children were born to this pioneer couple. William, born in 1793, spent his life on the farm in the Union Schoolhouse settlement and died in 1885; James, who in a measure filled his father's place as a farmer and lived on Briery Mountain; James, born in 1800, lived on Three Forks in Preston County, where he is buried; Philip, who in addition to the family vocation of farming assisted with his sons a grist mill on Elza Run and is buried on Briery Mountain; Sarah, who became the wife of George Funk, and they lived above Rowlesburg, where she died; Andrew, noted in the succeeding paragraphs; Jonathan, who was a farmer in the Whetsell community; Elizabeth, who became the wife of a Mr. Postlethwaite and lived in Wetzel County; Anna, who was married to William Moore and lived near her sister Elizabeth; and John, born in 1809, lived on Briery Mountain. Sarah lived on the homestead until her mother died.

Andrew Bucklew was born probably in the same year as his brother James, in 1800, and spent his life on a farm in Union Schoolhouse, where he died in 1845, at the age of forty-five. By his first wife, Martha Hardesty, he had no children. His second wife was Susan Jackson, and she was the mother of Jonas, born in 1823 and died in 1893; Philip, who spent his life in Preston County and died about 1892; and H. H. Harriet, born in 1830 and died in 1873 as the wife of Martin Ridenour.

John H. Bucklew, representing the third generation of the family in Preston County, was born in 1829 and died in 1881. He acquired a liberal education and had some of the mental faculties that distinguished his son Leroy. He went to school as a young man, and when he settled down he worked at his trade as a blacksmith and carpenter. He also studied medicine, and became very skilled in the concoction of herbal medicines, and applied his remedies with much success. He sought an opportunity to serve the Union at the time of the Civil war, but was rejected for physical reasons. He began voting as a whig, and from that party became a strong republican, and was also an enthusiastic Methodist.

The wife of John H. Bucklew was Epaline Ridenour, daughter of Martin Ridenour. She died in 1872, the mother of the following children: James B. was born in 1849, a resident of Kingwood. He married first Rachel Thomas, who died leaving four children: Annie, deceased; Joseph T., of Cumberland, Maryland; Elizabeth, deceased; and Virginia, living on Briery Mountain. He married for his second wife, Keturah Goff, of Rowlesburg, and they have children as follows: Charles, Elmer H., and A. C. Sevilla C. married for her first husband David Uppole, for her second, W. G. Garner, and she is now the wife of James S. Myers. Mary M. married William M. Wilburn and died in Tucker County. Henry C. is a railroad man with home at Whitaker, Pennsylvania. He married Mary Rowley. Leroy S. is mentioned below. Letitia became the wife of Grant Whitehair and died in Kingwood.

Leroy S. Bucklew was born April 23, 1861, on the home farm on Briery Mountain, where he was reared. He had the routine discipline of the schools for a few terms, but his real education he has gained by the study of books and nature and has always embarked enthusiastically in the quest of knowledge. He early showed a taste for mechanics, learned the trade of blacksmith from his father, and also acquired skill with woodworking tools. Among other gifts his father was a musician, one of the old-time fiddlers. Leroy learned to play his father's violin, and achieved some virtuosity with that instrument. He played the violin as a source of financial gain, and he taught violin music in Kingwood for some years as a side issue. For many years he was a cornetist in the Kingwood Brass Band, having joined the organization some thirty years ago, when he first came to the city. As a collector of rare articles of various kinds he has accumulated several violins, one of them a real Stradivarius, which came from Europe and was once the property of the Royse Family, a member of which was the first man buried in the Kingwood Cemetery. That burial occurred in 1814.

On removing to Kingwood Leroy Bucklew for several years followed his trade as a journeyman carpenter. He made a study of the mechanics of building and architecture, and finally took up contracting, hiring some of the men who in former years had hired him. Mr. Bucklew built the Doctor Rudasill home for Mr. Parks, one of the splendidly finished and expensive homes of the town, the Henry Flyth home, the John Ford residence, and the H. T. Lincoln bungalow, doing the work on this house with his own hands. These and many other structures in and around Kingwood testify to his skill as a builder. For several years he was also in the business of handling slate roofing, and he did much work of installing slate blackboards in schoolrooms.

Mr. Bucklew has never married, though from a safe distance he admires the happiness and perfect beauty of congenial matrimony and domestic companionship. This freedom from home cares has enabled him to follow his strong bent as a nature student. For a number of years it has been his habit to spend his Sunday afternoons strolling over the hills of Preston County, looking for something new to himself and gathering specimens for his collections. Some professional scientists have been glad to claim acquaintance with Mr. Bucklew, and he is undoubtedly the supreme authority in his locality on birds, flowers, rocks and the processes of nature in general. His interest is not altogether absorbed in geology, botany and ornithology, but in anthropology as well, and in his home he has a rare and interesting collection of tools, implements, furniture and useful and ornamental objects associated with the changing tastes and habits of mankind. His collection includes firearms, old furniture, old pieces of art. He has an old time spinning wheel, copies of old American newspapers running back seventy or eighty years, and one copy of a London newspaper of 1758 printed on the fine durable print paper of that time.

His cabinets contain a rich exhibit of the instruments of warfare, including those used by the aboriginal tribes of America. The stone bludgeon, tomahawk and flint tipped and French steel-pointed arrows; the battle ax of the middle ages in Europe; and also an array of fire arms that practically illustrate all the processes in their development from the introduction of gunpowder from China. These firearms include the Chinese match-lock rifle, then the guns of the flint lock period, including the pill-lock, the fuse-lock and the old Revolutionary flint-lock; variations of the pistol grip and the gun-stock blunderbusses; then the breech-loading rifles of the Civil war time and, finally, several types of the improved models of army rifles. Hanging from some of these pieces are the accoutrements used in firing and cleaning them and in making ammunition for them. His collection of pistols ranges from the gaping horse pistol along the line through the pepper box, derringer, pocket pistol, Colt's revolver and the modern army revolver used in the World war. He has two war drums from India, one a wooden and the other a clay drum, both with heads and lacings intact but out of use forever save as an object lesson for those interested in the age-long warfare among the individuals and races of mankind.

Another exhibit illustrates the development of methods of illumination, beginning with the flint, steel and punk, the old tallow candle, the oil lamp fed with hog lard, and finally the kerosene lamp. There is an old "turnkey," an instrument used by our forefathers for pulling teeth before forceps were invented; also a perfect specimen of the "hackle" upon which the flax was partly prepared for the spinning wheel. He has an old money belt once worn by John Rowley, a Pennsylvania forty-nine California bound. A little sack he wore in his childhood days, made by his mother, is especially treasured by Mr. Bucklew. His geological collection contains specimens from all over America and some from afar, and fills several shelves of a cabinet. His collection of coins and money tokens of the world contains some rare pieces of gold and silver money, besides the different denominations of American paper money and some of foreign countries. Among old books he has a reader and speller used by an earlier generation of American school children, and also a Bible that was one of the early publications of the English translation.

Mr. Bucklew since youth has given a strong allegiance to the republican party, but office holding is a matter foreign to his taste and his only service that can be regarded in the nature of a public duty has been in his Sunday School. Some years ago Mr. Bucklew learned to appreciate the great truths of Christianity, and has since been one of the enthusiastic Sunday school and church workers. He is identified with the Methodist congregation. He wears a twenty-five year jewel of the Knights of Pythias and is regular in his attendance of this lodge as of his church. He has taken three degrees in Masonry. Mr. Bucklew is a stockholder in the Kingwood National Bank. During the World war he invested in bonds and stamps, and he made all the Red Cross boxes in which goods were shipped from Kingwood to France. SAMUEL DUNLAP BRADY, an influential operator who is one of the prominent representatives of the West Virginia coal mining industry at Fairmont, Marion County, was born at Bradys, Maryland, in 1869, a son of the late John Copsey Brady and Caroline (Seymour) Brady. The father was born at Mountain View, Bradys, Maryland, April 29, 1843, and his death occurred July 10, 1906. He was a son of Samuel Dunlap Brady and Susan Foreman (Parsons) Brady, born respectively April 1, 1798, and March 4, 1809, the death of the former having occurred January 18, 1870. Caroline (Seymour) Brady was born November 17, 1844, and died December 31, 1905. She was a daughter of Felix Renix Seymour, born February 1, 1810, and died November 7, 1887, and Elizabeth Ann (Welton) Seymour, born April 17, 1815, and died May 1, 1885. The Seymour family was early established in that part of Hampshire County, Virginia, that now constitutes Mineral County, West Virginia. John C. Brady came to West Virginia in 1888 and established the family home in Mineral County, where he was engaged in farm enterprise until his death, both he and his wife having been earnest members of the Presbyterian Church.

This was part of the George Gould and Joseph Ramsey scheme of connecting up a coast to coast trans-continental line, on which all construction work was abandoned in 1903 on account of the lack of finances.

Through Col. J. M. Schoonmaker about 1913 the Little Kanawha Syndicate properties were sold to the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Company, a New York Central interest, and afterward the ownership was divided, with the Pennsylvania Railroad owning one-fourth interest, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad one-fourth, and the New York Central owning the other half. Soon afterward the Baltimore & Ohio interests were purchased by the Pennsylvania Railroad interests. The construction of the line known as the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad was completed to Fairmont on November 24, 1914. The Buckhannon & Northern Railroad and the Monongahela Railroad were consolidated under the name of the Monongahela Railway, and that part of the line was placed in operation in West Virginia, September 1, 1915.

From 1903 to 1915 Mr. Brady was chief engineer and in charge of construction of the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad Company, one of the Little Kanawha Syndicate properties, and the only line which was partly constructed paralleling the west bank of the Monongahela River from the West Virginia-Pennsylvania state line through the counties of Monongalia and Marion to Fairmont, West Virginia thereby opening up and developing the Pittsburgh and Sewickley vast coal deposits lying west of the Monongahela River.

During this period Mr. Brady was senior member of the firm of S. D. Brady & Brother, consulting engineers and president of the Brady Construction Company. In 1914

M. C. A. director; Morgantown Country Club; a director of Fairmont Country Club; Fairmont Shriners Club; Allegheny Club; Cheat Mountain Club; and Trough Club. Mr. and Mrs. Brady had one daughter, Margaret Louise Brady, who was born April 5, 1904, and died April 3, 1914.

JAMES A. LENHART. The name James A. Lenhart is one that bulks large in the affairs of Preston County, where during his active life he has been a merchant so long that he is well known as the dean of the Preston County merchants, is a banker at Kingwood, is a former sheriff and in the republican party holds a state-wide prominence. Mr. Lenhart was one of the members of the commission for the settlement of the West Virginia-Virginia debt controversy.

He was born near Valley Point in Pleasant District of Preston County, March 15, 1860, son of Aaron and Catherine (etzel) Lenhart, natives of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, whence they removed about 1840 to Preston County, West Virginia. Aaron Lenhart depended upon honest industry as a means of providing for his family and achieving a home. He was a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in Company B of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry, and for three years fought for the flag of the Union. He was private, was in many battles, but always escaped wounds and capture. He died in 1890. He and his wife had the following children: Henry, of Portland District, Preston County; Mary, who died as the wife of Sam Nedrow; and Anna, who died in Preston County, wife of Lewis Cale; Ned Albert; William L., of Kingwood; Frederick, a merchant in Preston County; and Etta Jane, wife of P. S. King, of Kingwood.

James A. Lenhart was thirteen years of age when his father died, and he soon afterward left home and lived at Albright, where he continued to attend school until he was fifteen. He was then qualified for teaching a country district and for some time taught and then attended a term in Fairmont Normal School. That closed his schooling. One of his chief ambitions as a boy was to secure a college education, but failing to achieve that through lack of money he changed his plans and at Albright became clerk in a mercantile establishment. He was there two years, and for ten years conducted a business of his own at Valley

Point. On leaving Valley Point he removed to Kingwood, and is still active as a merchant of that city, and altogether has devoted forty years of his life to mercantile business, a longer time than any of his contemporaries. Mr. Lenhart for twenty-five years has been a director and is now the active vice president of the Bank of Kingwood.

He was elected sheriff of the county in 1900, as successor of L. C. Shaffer. He served in that office four years. As a young man becoming interested in political factions he gave his allegiance to the republican party, and his first vote for president went for James G. Blaine. In 1904 he was presidential elector at large, and cast his ballot at Charleston for Roosevelt.

Governor Hatfield chose Mr. Lenhart as one of the commissioners to negotiate the long standing questions involved in the Virginia debt with the commissioners of Old Virginia. This commission was organized at Charleston, where preliminary sessions were held and plans formulated for the general conference between the commissions of the two states held in the Willard Hotel at Washington. In the preliminary conferences there developed a great difference of opinion as to West Virginia's just share of the state debt before the separation of West Virginia. Some contended that West Virginia owed the mother state nothing at all, while Mr. Lenhart was the first to announce as his conviction that West Virginia should pay substantially the amount previously found by the Master of the United States Supreme Court. Only one other member of the commission shared in Mr. Lenhart's convictions. He announced that he preferred to pay the whole debt rather than prolong the struggle and pay the interest accumulations which would have amounted to $6,000,000 more. Later it developed that the attorneys for the state in making up their briefs for West Virginia had failed to include items of expense that the state had incurred, all of which might properly serve as an offset to the obligations, and when this angle of the situation was taken before the Supreme Court it was requested and the result was that the offset was allowed, representing a saving to West Virginia of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. In all these negotiations Mr. Lenhart took an active and useful part, and his colleagues came to respect not only his integrity and impartial sense of justice, but also the sound business ability that prompted all his suggestions.

For some sixteen years Mr. Lenhart was a member of the Preston County Executive Committee, and during that time the republican majority in the county increased from 1,800 to 2,700. For twenty years he was a member of all the West Virginia State conventions, and in them he helped nominate among others Governors Dawson, White, Swisher and Hatfield.

In Preston County in 1880 Mr. Lenhart married Miss Ella King. Her father was Col. William H. King, a California forty-niner who crossed the plains and returned by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and spent the latter part of his life in the milling business. During the Civil war he was a colonel of the State Militia. Colonel King represented one of the old and prominent families of this section of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Lenhart have four daughters: Nina; Mrs. Mabel Jackson, a widow with a son, Leslie; Miss Bernice; and Helen, wife of Professor F. R. Yoke, of Piedmont, West Virginia.

His grandfather was Jacob Schaeffer, who came from Germany and founded the family in West Virginia in pioneer times. Israel Schaeffer, father of William Morgan, was born probably in Tucker County, West Virginia, was a carpenter by trade, following that occupation in younger years, and thereafter lived on a farm near Kingwood. Though self educated, he became a teacher and was regarded as one of the best in the county in his day. He was a republican, a member of the Methodist Church and active in the Sunday school, and was well versed in the Bible and also in secular knowledge. He could deliver a good speech before an audi-

William M. Schaeffer was born in the rural community near Kingwood, February 4, 1847. He grew up on a farm, with only the advantages of country schools, and before reaching his majority he went West and for two years clerked in a store at Paducah, Kentucky. On returning to West Virginia he was soon afterward made deputy sheriff, and performed the duties of deputy under Sheriffs Shaw, Shaffer and Lenhart. In 1904 Mr. Schaeffer was elected county sheriff, and gave an effective administration of the duties of that office for four years.

On leaving the courthouse Mr. Schaeffer bought a farm, and until he practically retired made farming his regular business. He has always been a republican. In 1868, while in Kentucky and not long after his twenty-first birthday, he cast his first vote for President Grant. He has been active in the various campaigns, has attended conventions as a delegate and cast his ballot for the nomination of Congressman Dayton. Mr. Schaeffer is one of the old-time members of Alpine Lodge No. 35, Knights of Pythias, and has the veteran's jewel as a token of twenty-five years' membership. He has filled the chairs and has represented Alpine Lodge in the Grand Lodge.

January 2, 1881, in Preston County, Mr. Schaeffer married Miss Nancy C. Whetsell, daughter of Isaac and Ellen (Felton) Whetsell. Mrs. Schaeffer was born in Preston County, where her ancestors settled several generations ago. Her father was a farmer, enlisted from Preston County in the Union army, and died soon after the war. Mrs. Schaeffer was born January 6, 1862, and is the second of three children, her brothers being Elias W. and Isaac C.

HON. THOMAS WALTER FLEMING has played a large and benignant part in the development and progress of his native city of Fairmont, Marion County, and the broad scope and importance of his civic and business activities and his public service mark him as one of the representative men of West Virginia. He was born at Fairmont on the 16th of December, 1846, a son of Allison and Martha Lowmyer Fleming. Allison Fleming was born on a pioneer farm near Fairmont, July 25, 1814, a son of Thomas, who was a son of Nathan, the latter having been a son of William Fleming, who immigrated to America from the North of Ireland in 1741. For many years Allison Fleming was engaged in the marble business at Fairmont, where he served a number of years as mayor, besides having been treasurer of the county one term. He was a staunch Union man during the Civil war, and he and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Protestant Church, in which he served as trustee, and class leader, besides having been for many years a teacher in the Sunday school. January 19, 1837, he married Mary Vander-vort, who died November 2, 1842. April 11, 1844, he wedded Martha Louchery, who was born July 30, 1822, a daughter of James and Margaret (Keefore) Louchery.

Thomas W. Fleming was reared at Fairmont and received good educational advantages, in select and private schools. He gained his initial business experience by clerking in a local mercantile establishment, and in 1871 he became a member of the firm of Ridgeley & Fleming, the title of which was changed in 1876 to T. W. Fleming & Brothers, upon the retirement of the senior member of the original firm. Mr. Fleming continued as the head of this representative mercantile concern until 1890, when he sold his interest in the business. He then turned his attention to the real estate business, in which he became prominently identified with the handling and developing of coal and oil land in Marion, Monongalia, Harrison and Doddridge counties, he having opened up the important Fairview oil fields. He was one of the organizers and became president and secretary of the company which obtained the franchise for the first street car line in Fairmont, this line later becoming a part of the Fairmont & Clarksburg electric system and being now controlled by the Monongahela Power and Railway Company. He organized also the company which constructed the Fairmont & Manington street railway, now a part of the Monongahela Power and Railway Company's system, and he was one of the promoters of the Farmers Bank of Fairmont, besides serving also as a director of the People's Bank. He was one of the organizers of the Fairmont Ice Company, of which he became vice president, as did he also of the West Chester Realty Company. He was one of the organizers and became a director of the Fairmont Development Company.

Mr. Fleming has been for many years a leader in the councils of the republican party in his state. In 1891, on a progressive independent ticket, he was elected mayor of Fairmont, and his administration was marked by vigorous promotion of local interests. Many important public improvements were initiated within his service as mayor, notably the first paving of streets, the installing of a waterworks system, at a cost of $20,000, the construction of a large viaduct, and the improving of all streets and sidewalks. Mr. Fleming served one term in the State Legislature, and by joint resolution of its two houses he was appointed inspector to examine the various state institutions. At the time when Hon. James G. Blaine was serving as national secretary of state he offered to Mr. Fleming his choice of three ministerships abroad, but on account of the exactions of his business interests Mr. Fleming declined this honor. In 1916 he was the republican candidate for representative in Congress from the First Congressional District of West-Virginia, but he met defeat with the rest of the party ticket. In 1920 he was a delegate from the same district to the Republican National Convention in Chicago, and there was selected as a member from West Virginia on the committee on permanent organization, and there, on each of seven ballots, he cast his vote for Warren G. Harding, present President of the United States. Mr. Fleming is past master of Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., past high priest of Orient Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., past eminent commander of Crusade Commandery No. 6, and a member of Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. at Wheeling.

February 1, 1877, recorded the marriage of Mr. Fleming and Miss Annie Sweeney, daughter of the late Col. Thomas Sweeney, of Wheeling. Colonel Sweeney was born in the City of Armagh, Ireland, March 6, 1806, and died at Wheeling, March 9, 1900. He was second lieutenant of the Pittsburgh Blues at the time when that fine organization received and acted as escort to General La Fayette when the gallant French officer of the American Revolution visited Pittsburgh in 1824. Colonel Sweeney brought the first colony of glass blowers into the present State of West Virginia, and at Wheeling he operated large iron works. He served as mayor of that city and also as a member of the State Senate of Virginia. His second wife, Jane McFarran (mother of Mrs. Fleming), was a daughter of Lieut. John McFarran who served in defense of Baltimore when the British attacked Fort Henry in 1814, and Mrs. Fleming treasure as a valued heirloom the sword which her maternal grand father carried at that time. Mrs. Fleming is the author of a family chart entitled "Family Record of William Fleming onto the Fourth Generation," brought out in 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Fleming had three children: Allison Sweeney Fleming received from Yale University the degree of Bachelor of Arts and from the University of West Virginia the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Though a member of the bar he gives much of his time to his various business interests, including the Fairmont Auto Supply Company, which he has developed into one of the largest and most prosperous concerns of its kind in the state. Jean Ferran, the second in order of birth of three children, is the wife of George M. Wiltshire, and they now reside at Fairmont, their two children being Thomas Fleming Wiltshire and Jean Fleming Wiltshire. The third child, Thomas W. Fleming, died at the age of eleven months.

CHARLES OLIVER HENRY, M. D., has been engaged in the successful practice of his profession in Marion County for forty years, and since 1903 has been one of the leading physicians and surgeons in the City of Fairmont. He was born in this city, then a mere village, on the 3d of December, 1856, and is a son of Lawrence and Mary Ann (Holmes) Henry, both natives of Scotland. Lawrence Henry was born July 22, 1810, in Ayrshire, and died at Newburg, West Virginia, March 7, 1887. Upon the death of his father, in 1828, he became virtually the head of the family, he being the eldest of the children, five sons and three daughters. As a young man he was employed in the coal mines of his native country, and by this means he aided in the support of the other members of the family. In 1845 he came to the United States and became identified with coal mining operations at Mount Savage, Maryland. Later he worked in the old Elkhart coal mines near Cumberland, that state, and in 1851 he entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, by which he was assigned to prospect for coal in the Hampshire hills of what is now West Virginia. In that year he opened a vein of coal near Piedmont, and March 18, 1852, he became superintendent of McGuire's Tunnel, in supervising the arching of the same, for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. In May of the same year he opened a vein of coal over the Kingwood Tunnel, and this supplied the requisite coal in connection with the completion of that railroad tunnel. In August, 1852, Mr. Henry opened the Palatine Mines, and in May of the following year he shipped an eight-ton gondola car of coal to Gen. Columbus O'Donnell, of Baltimore, who was then president of the Baltimore Gas Company. This figures in the history of the coal industry of West Virginia as the first shipment of coal from this state. During the winter of the same year Mr. Henry furnished coal for the third and fourth divisions of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, besides making shipments to Baltimore. In 1854 the railroad company sold the Palatine Mines to General O'Donnell, by whom Mr. Henry was retained as superintendent of the mines. Two years later he took charge of the Newburg coal properties purchased by General O'Donnell, and he continued as superintendent of these mines about thirty years. On the 16th of March, 1860, he was run over by a 1,250-pound coal car, and though the injury crippled him to a certain degree, he was still able to continue his active executive service. He was a man of fine character and of marked technical ability in connection with coal mining, and his name is written large in the history of the developing of the great coal industry of West Virginia. He was one of the founders and served as an elder of the Presbyterian Church at Newburg, and in a fraternal way he was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His marriage to Mary Ann Holmes was solemnized June 16, 1837, his wife having been born at ryn, Scotland, December 16, 1817, and her death having occurred October 9, 1899.

Dr. Charles O. Henry gained his early education in the public schools of Fairmont, and thereafter was here a student two years in the State Normal School. He continued his studies three years in the University of West Virginia, and his initial study of medicine was prosecuted under theceptorship of Drs. Hugh W. and Luther S. Brock, of Morgantown. In 1882 he graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and after receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he was for twenty-one years engaged in successful practice at Shinnston, Harrison County. He then, in 1903, established his residence and professional headquarters in his native city of Fairmont, where he controls a substantial and representative general practice. He served six years, 1904-10, as health officer of Marion County, and in his home city he is now a member of the medical staff of Cook Hospital. He is one of the honored members of the Marion County Medical Society, of which he was president in 1919, and of the West Virginia State Medical Society, of which he served as president in 1911. He is an active member also of the American Medical Association. In 1918 Doctor Henry volunteered for service in the Medical Corps of the United States Army in connection with the World war, and his service was accepted by the Government. He was one of the six members of the West Virginia State Committee of Medical Defense, and gave to the work of the same much of his time. In 1921 he was appointed assistant superintendent of State Hospitals No. 3 at Fairmont, in which position he is giving characteristically loyal and effective service. The doctor is president of the Lambert Run Coal Company, and in the Masonic fraternity his affiliations are with St. John's Lodge No. 24, F. and A. M., at Shinnston, and Orient Chapter No. 9, F. and A. M., at Fairmont. He and his wife are active members of the First Baptist Church of Fairmont, in which he is a pastor.

May 6, 1885, recorded the marriage of Doctor Henry and Miss Virginia Lee Hood, who was born in Marion County, August 4, 1862, a daughter of William and Hannah (Coombs) Hood. Mr. Hood was born at Grenada, Pennsylvania, and from West Virginia went forth as a soldier of the confederacy in the Civil war. He was captured and for a time held as a prisoner of war. In conclusion is given brief record concerning the children of Doctor and Mrs. Henry: Edith Holmes, born July 6, 1886, was afforded the advantages of the State Normal School at Fairmont, and she is now the wife of Milton R. Frantz, of this city, their two children being Miriam Browning and Virginia Lee. Agnes Lee, the second daughter, was born August 28, 1887, and after taking a special course in kindergarten work at Washington, District of Columbia, she became a popular teacher in the public schools of Fairmont. She became the wife of Edwin V. Duffy, of Sydney, Australia, and they now reside at Fairmont, their two children being Bertha Virginia and Edwin V., Jr. Ruth O'Donnell, the third daughter, was born August 16, 1890, graduated from the Fairmont State Normal School and also attended Randolph-Macon Seminary. She is now the wife of William E. Brooks, who completed an engineering course at Cornell University and now resides at Fairmont, West Virginia. Mary Ellen, born January 16, 1894, graduated from the Fairmont Normal School and is now a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of Fairmont. Robert McKenzie Henry was born August 22, 1896, was graduated, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, from the University of West Virginia, class of 1917, and was student in the law department of the university when he entered the Officers Training Corps at Camp Sherman, Ohio, where he gained commission as first lieutenant. Thereafter he was in service in turn at Camp Lee and Camp Hancock, and though several times selected for overseas service he was retained on duty in the drilling of soldiers at Camp Hancock until the signing of the armistice brought the World war to a close. He received his discharge in December, 1918, and he is now sales agent for the Standard Garage at Fairmont, besides being a stockholder in the Henry Coal company. Andrew Luke Henry was born August 6, 1899, attended Bucknell College two years and Columbia University one year, and is now a salesman for the Fairmont Wall Plaster Company. His wife, Katherine W., is a daughter of T. W. Arnett, of Fairmont. As all six of his children were graduated from the Fairmont High School Doctor Henry claims an unparalleled record in this respect for his family, no other one family having equalled the record in the local high school.

PHOEBIA G. MOORE, M. D., of Mannington, is the only woman graduate physician practicing in Marion County, and one of a comparatively small group in the entire state. While a pioneer of her sex in this profession, her work represents a finished standard fully in keeping with the best standards of the profession.

Doctor Moore was born on a farm near Mannington, daughter of Theophilus and Prudence (Varney) Moore. Her father was born at Mineral Wells, near Parkersburg, in 1844, son of Joseph and Nancy (Tennent) Moore, and he served in the Civil war as a member of the Seventh West Virginia Infantry. After the war he located in Monongalia County, where he met and married Prudence Varney, who was born at McCurdyville in that county in 1851, daughter of William and Eleanor (Wilson) Varney. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Moore settled in what is known as the Flint Run district of Marion County, and were among the first to improve the land and build a home in that section. They introduced the first cooking stove to their community, and this utensil was an object of great curiosity to their neighbors. They are still living on the old homestead and are active members of the United Brethren Church.

Phoebia G. Moore grew up on this farm, attended the common schools, also the Fairmont State Normal School, and having determined to make her talents available for the medical profession she registered for the course in the medical department of West Virginia University. She was the first woman to register there and remain, all others becoming discouraged by the obstacles arising from the general prejudice existing against women medical students and a more or less active persecution on the part of the male students, who resented the presence of a woman in that department. Doctor Moore received her credits for a year's work in West Virginia University, and to finish her course she then entered the Bennett Medical College of Chicago, where she was graduated with the class of 1903. Since then Doctor Moore has taken special laboratory work in Baltimore and Chicago. She began practice at Mannington in 1903, and has specialized in obstetrics and gynecology. A large practice has come to her in successive years, in appreciation of her marked ability and skill. Her practice is not only localized in Marion County, but extends to the cities of Fairmont, Clarksburg and Morgantown as well.

Doctor Moore is a member of the Marion County Medical Society, West Virginia State Medical Society and American Medical Association, and is chairman of the committee on social hygiene of the West Virginia State League of Women Voters and is the Red Cross physician of Mannington Chapter. She is also a member of the Women's Club and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Mannington.

CHARLES HOWARD LONG has been a resident of Mannington since 1905, identified with the business life of the city and for a dozen years an independent merchant.

He was born at Dayton, Ohio, February 2, 1879, son of John and Ella (Heffner) Long. His grandfather, Amos Long, was a native of Maryland, and as a young man removed to Pennsylvania. John Long while living in Dayton, Ohio, was extensively engaged in the nursery business for a number of years, and there met and married his wife, a native of that city. She died at the birth of her son, Charles Howard. Failing health subsequently caused John Long to return to Bedford County, Pennsylvania, in 1888, and he died there in 1890.

C. Howard Long was reared in Bedford County from the age of nine, attended public schools there, and in 1896 began his business career as a clerk in a store at Everett, Bedford County. A few years later he returned to Cumberland, Maryland, subsequently spent two years in New York City, where he continued clerking in a large leather belting manufacturing concern.

When Mr. Long came to Mannington in 1905 he entered the service of H. R. and F. E. Furbee, merchants, as a clerk, and remained with that firm until 1909. He then resolved to put into effect the long cherished purpose to become a business man on his own account. With limited capital he opened a small clothing and men's furnishing goods store, and the business has steadily grown from year to year until now it is the leading establishment of its line in Mannington. The business occupies two floors and basement in a substantial three-story brick building which Mr. Long owns having purchased the property in 1911.

He keeps in close touch with the commercial affairs of the state, being a member of the West Virginia State Retail Clothiers Association. He is a charter member of the Mannington Kiwanis Club and is affiliated with the Elks and Odd Fellows. He and Mrs. Long are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1907 he married Miss Grace Prichard, a daughter of Charles Prichard of Mannington. Mr. and Mrs. Long have two children: Nancy, born in 1909, and John, born in 1915.

DAVID A. BURT. As president of the LaBelle Iron Works David A. Burt has one of the most distinctive posts in the industrial affairs of the Upper Ohio Valley. The LaBelle Iron Works was one of the pioneer iron and steel industries of the Wheeling District, has been in business seventy years, and is now a great corporation with thousands of employes and owning and controlling not only two great manufacturing plants, but iron ore mines and coal and coke resources.

The Burt family has been in the Northern Panhandle of West Virginia considerably more than a century. The great-grandfather of David A. Burt was William Burt, who was born near Philadelphia and at the beginning of the nineteenth century entered the district around Wellsburg in Brooke County, Virginia, where he lived out his life as a practical farmer and business man. The grandfather of David A. Burt was David Burt, a lifelong resident of Wellsburg, where he died when little past thirty years. He was an Ohio River pilot. John L. Burt, father of the Wheeling industrial leader, was born at Wellsburg in 1839, was reared and educated there, and as a youth ran away from home to enlist in a Pennsylvania regiment. He served all through the Peninsular campaign, was severely wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, and after several months in hospital was discharged for physical disability and did not entirely recover for several years. About 1866 he located at Wheeling, where he married and where he entered the iron industry with the LaBelle Iron Works as sales manager. Later, in a similar capacity, he was with the Benwood Iron Works, and continued in the service of that industry until his death in 1887. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1875 John L. Burt married Martha McKelvey, who was born in Belfast, Ireland, in 1850, and is still living at Wheeling. David A. is the oldest of their children. Jeannette is the wife of Arthur L. Irwin, of the firm Lippincott & Irwin, real estate and investments, at Cleveland, Ohio; William T. is comptroller of the Wheeling Steel Corporation and is unmarried; Helen, twin sister of William, is the wife of Raymond S. Clark, partner in William Skinner & Sons, silk importers and manufacturers of New York, their home being at Great Neck, Long Island.

David A. Burt was born at Wheeling, December 25, 1876. He graduated from the Wheeling High School in 1892, when he was sixteen, and soon afterward became an office boy in the Whitaker Iron Works under Senator Nelson E. Whitaker. That employment was practically an apprenticeship in the iron and steel industry. He worked in the mill and office, was paymaster, and in 1898 went with the Aetna-Standard Iron & Steel Company at Bridgeport, Ohio, as shipper. He remained in the service of this corporation five years, and in 1903 joined the LaBelle Iron Works in the Steubenville, Ohio, plant as general bookkeeper. He was successively promoted to auditor, treasurer and vice president, and since the spring of 1920 has been president and director of the LaBelle Iron Works, comprising all the plants and industries of this corporation. The corporation offices are in the Steel Corporation Building at Wheeling. The oldest plant is the Wheeling plant on Thirty-first Street, manufacturing steel cut nails and steel plates. Normally 400 hands are employed in the Wheeling plant. A still larger plant is that at Steubenville, which employs 3,500 hands. The corporation also owns and operates iron ore mines in Minnesota, employing 350 hands, and its coal mines and coke ovens in Pennsylvania furnish employment to approximately four hundred.

In addition to being executive head of this business Mr. Burt is vice president, treasurer and director of the Wheeling Steel Corporation; director of the Woodward Iron Company at Woodward, Alabama; director of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company of Wheeling; director of the Wheeling Bank & Trust Company; director of the Fidelity Investment Association of Wheeling; director of the Farmers State Bank of Wellsburg; treasurer and manager of the W. T. Burt Company of Wheeling; and is interested in a number of other business undertakings.

Mr. Burt has one of the fine homes of the suburban district of Wheeling at Echo Point, and also a country home near Wellsburg in Brooke County. In politics he is a republican, but has been too busy for politics. He is a trustee of the Presbyterian Church, a member of Wellsburg Lodge No. 2, A. F. and A. M., is a fourteenth degree Scottish Rite Mason in West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and is a member of the Duquesne Club of Pittsburgh, Fort Henry Club, Wheeling Country Club, Steubenville Country Club, Twilight Club of Wheeling, and belongs to the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, the American Academy of Political Science, and is a director of the Ohio Manufacturers Association and of the West Virginia Manufacturers Association. Mr. Burt concerned himself chiefly with war activities in his native county of Brooke. He was on the War Board of the county, which had control of all war drives for the county, and was chairman of the Liberty Loan work and also active in the Red Cross drives.

In 1901, at Wheeling, Mr. Burt married Miss Elizabeth McLain, daughter of Thomas B. and Sidney (McMeehan) McLain, residents of Wheeling. Her father is now practically retired, but still owns what is known as the McLain Dental and Surgical Depot, doing a state wide business in dental and surgical supplies. Mr. and Mrs. Burt are the parents of four children: David A., Jr., born February 22, 1903, now a student in Yale University at New Haven, Connecticut; Martha S., born February 11, 1907, a student in the Triadelphia High School District of Wheeling; Elizabeth M., born in December, 1908, and died November 7, 1921; and William L., born in June, 1910.

HARRY STANLEY KEISTER, M. D. A talented young physician and surgeon, Doctor Keister enjoys a successful practice at Fairmont, and was in service with the Medical Corps during the World war.

He was born at Upper Tract in Pendleton County, West Virginia, son of Eugene and Christina (Smith) Keister. His parents were both born in Old Virginia, his father in Rockingham County in 1850 and his mother in Franklin, Pendleton County, in 1860. Both his grandfathers were soldiers in the Confederate army, his maternal grandfather losing his life in battle. The paternal grandfather, Henry Keister, was a native of Virginia and of German ancestry, and was a lieutenant in the Confederate army. Eugene Keister as a man removed to Pendleton County, and until he retired was active in business as a building contractor. He and his wife are still living.

Doctor Keister graduated from high school in 1902, and in 1905 received a degree in pharmacy from the Valparaiso University of Indiana. For two years he followed the profession of pharmacist in Morgantown and Fairmont. He then entered the Chicago College of Medicine and Surgery at Chicago, where he graduated M. D. in 1912. He also had a year of special work as an interne in the American Hospital of Chicago, and began his active practice at Chiefton in

L. A. Pursh

Fairmont County, and three years later removed to Fairmont. During the summer of 1916 Doctor Keister took postgraduate work at the Johns Hopkins University Medical School at Baltimore.

As soon as America entered the war against Germany promptly volunteered and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, assigned to the Twentieth Division. He was on duty at Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina, and then at Camp Hancock, Augusta, Georgia, where he continued his duties until the armistice was signed. After leaving the army Doctor Keister resumed his professional work at Fairmont. Besides his growing practice he was in the staff of the Cook Hospital as chief of the department of genito-urinary surgery.

Doctor Keister is a member of the Marion County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations. He is affiliated with Acacia Lodge, A. F. and A. M., at Fairmont, and the West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, and the Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a member of the American Legion and the Presbyterian Church.

ION, MATTHEW MANSFIELD NEELY, who represented the first Congressional District in Congress from 1913 to 1921, a lawyer of Fairmont, where he has practiced his profession with notable success for twenty years. He is also former mayor of his home city.

Mr. Neely was born on a farm near Grove, Doddridge County, Kentucky, November 9, 1874. His first American ancestor was John Neely, who came with his parents from England and he was quite young. As a youth in the colonies he helped construct the forts Crown Point and Ticonderoga, and subsequently the scene of two of the most brilliant exploits of the early part of the Revolutionary war. The son of a Colonial settler, and grandfather of the ex-Congressman, was Matthew Neely, who was born in New York State, and established his family in West Virginia, arriving in the latter state more than a century ago.

The father of Matthew Mansfield Neely was Dr. Alfred Neely, a most generous, self-sacrificing and noble type of old pioneer country doctor. He was born at Morgantown on the old Northwestern Turnpike in Doddridge County, 1830, and died in 1906. For two years he attended Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, studied under a noted physician of that time in New York City, and then earned home and lived in Doddridge County the rest of his life. From his home he practiced over at least half a dozen surrounding counties. His skill was extraordinary, and he was credited with many remarkable cures. He was a physician who was in every way a friend of humanity, and in the service he rendered attending the sick at any time, day or night, in winter or summer, the thought of pay was never an incentive. He carried his own medicines, according to the custom of pioneer doctors, in his saddle bags. When his patients could remunerate him he accepted compensation, but there were countless cases in which his work was without material reward. He did more than render professional service; instances are recalled when he furnished his patient a cow to supply milk for the underfed children. Notwithstanding the great extent and constant work of his professional career, it is not strange that he led a comparatively poor man. The nobility of Doctor Neely's character and the striking example of his busy life of service to humanity proved a great inspiration to his son, who, nevertheless, had to learn self-reliance and gently make his own way in the world.

Doctor Neely married Mary Morris, who was born near Grove in Doddridge County, and, now in her seventy-first year, is a woman of unusual intellectual vigor and accomplishments. Her memory is extraordinary. She can still read without error entire chapters of the New Testament and countless poems, such as "The Cotter's Saturday Night," and Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," under the influence of his mother's example Mr. Neely learned the habit of committing to memory the gems of literature.

Mrs. Neely's father was an early settler of Doddridge (then Harrison) County, and at the beginning of the Civil war he entered the Union Army, was captured in the second battle of Bull Run and later starved to death in Andersonville Prison. Doctor Neely and wife had three children: Dagmar, wife of J. E. Keyser, who is now at the head of the Kano & Keyser Hardware Company, wholesale hardware merchants at Belington in Barbour County, and vice president of the Belington National Bank; Matthew Mansfield; and Delmond, wife of Charles H. Jones, secretary and treasurer of the Kuno & Keyser Hardware Company of Belington.

In 1879 the Neely family removed from Grove to the nearby village of Market, and on the family farm in that locality Matthew Mansfield Neely spent the next thirteen years of his life. Soon after going there he was assigned a share of the farm labors, of which he performed an increasing part with each succeeding year. He attended the country school situated more than half a mile from his home, and separated from it by the muddiest of roads, for a period of four winter months of each year until he was seventeen. After ten weeks' training in a summer school he in the year 1893 successfully passed an examination and received a teacher's certificate, and in the fall of that year took charge of a short school term at Windom, a mining town in Mineral County, near the summit of the Allegheny Mountains. He remained there teaching two years. In his third year he became principal of the school at Nettikenville near Elk Garden, where he taught during 1895-96. After his first term as teacher he attended the spring term of Salem College, West Virginia, and resumed his studies in that institution three successive springs terms, paying his way out of his meager savings from teaching and by working Saturdays.

In the fall of 1897 Mr. Neely entered West Virginia University. Early in the following year the Spanish American war began, and at the first call for volunteers he enlisted as a private in Company D of the First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He was with that command seven months and five days, when he was mustered out of the service by reason of the termination of the war. In the Spring of 1899 he resumed his work at West Virginia University. While in the university he was obliged to earn a large part of the money with which to defray his expenses, improving every opportunity that was offered to him to earn an honest dollar. In spite of the fact that he was largely working his way through school he was one of the most popular members of the student body, and when graduated with the degree of A. B. in 1901, he was president of his class. In 1902 he received the LL. B. degree from the University Law School. During his senior year in college he and a fellow student "split" the Wiles oratorical prize of $100; while in the same year he and a fellow student won a debating prize of $50 for the Columbia Literary Society, of which they were members. During the year 1899 Mr. Neely was active in the Cadet Corps of the university, and won the gold medal for being the best drilled cadet in the Corps. The year he graduated in law he was chosen in a competitive contest to represent the West Virginia University in the Central Oratorical League, composed of Cornell, University of Pennsylvania, Ohio State, Ohio Wesleyan University, Indiana University and West Virginia University. In this contest he gained third honors for his alma mater.

Mr. Neely began the practice of law at Fairmont in 1902, and the following year formed a partnership with Henry S. Lively, a school and fraternity mate, under the firm name of Neely & Lively. This has been one of the prominent law firms of Fairmont and Marion County for nearly twenty years.

Mr. Neely did not enter politics as a candidate until his prestige was securely established in his profession. In 1905 he was elected mayor of Fairmont for a term of two years on a dry ticket. From 1911 to 1913 he served as clerk of the House of Delegates of West Virginia. When the Hon. John W. Davis of West Virginia was appointed solicitor general of the United States and resigned his seat in Congress, Mr. Neely entered the race for his unexpired term, and was elected October 14, 1913, as a member of the Sixty-third Congress. He was re-elected to the Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth congresses, and served continuously as representative of his district, the First, composed of the counties of Brooke, Hancock, Marion, Marshall, Ohio, Taylor and Wetzel, until March, 1921. This district is normally republican by from 2,500 to 5,000 votes, but Mr. Neely was repeatedly elected and served the district faithfully until the republican landslide of 1920, in which he was defeated, despite the fact that he ran more than thirteen thousand votes ahead of his ticket.

Mr. Neely was one of West Virginia's congressmen during the critical period of the World war. One cause in which he was especially interested was proper provisions for the veterans of former wars, including members of the G. A. R. During the Sixty-fifth Congress he secured the passage of seventy-two private pension bills for veterans or their dependents of the Civil or Spanish-American wars. He secured by special enactment more pensions for old soldiers than any other man who ever represented a West Virginia district during the same length of time. In the World War Mr. Neely worked unceasingly for the soldiers, especially those of his district, and at the beginning of America's participation in the struggle he proffered his services to the President for active military duty in any capacity, with or without a commission, expressing his willingness to resign his seat in Congress. The President declined his offer, stating that he could best serve his country in Congress. Mr. Neely was one of the hardest working members of the national Legislature. He was very active in the study and disposition of labor problems, and had the complete confidence of organized labor all over the country. He is a finished orator and able debater, and whether in public or private life he has a great following of enthusiastic admirers throughout his native state.

His success as a lawyer has been due to his indefatigable and earnest labors in any case in which his talents have been engaged. He possesses great power as a pleader before a jury. As a citizen he is broad-minded, progressive and liberal, with a genuine desire to fulfill to the utmost his obligations to his fellow men. Mr. Neely is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, an officer of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, a life member of Fairmont Lodge of Elks, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He also belongs to the Phi Sigma Kappa, Delta Chi and Phi Beta Kappa college fraternities.

October 21, 1903, Mr. Neely married Miss Alberta Clare Ramage, of Fairmont, daughter of B. F. Ramage. Her father was for two terms clerk of the Circuit Court for Marion County. Mr. and Mrs. Neely have three children: Alfred, born October 5, 1904; John Champ, born January 14, 1910; and Corinne, born December 18, 1915.

Mr. Neely was a member of the National Guard of West Virginia from 1900 to 1911, rising from corporal to the rank of major; and it is due to this fact that he is widely and commonly known as "Major Neely."

GEORGE MILTON ALEXANDER, president of the Monongahela Power & Railway Company, and one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Fairmont, judicial center of Marion County, was born on the old family homestead farm in Cass District, Monongalia County, this state, November 10, 1867, and is a son of the late John and Caroline (Conn) Alexander. John Alexander likewise was born in Cass District, Monongalia County, and was a son of George Alexander, who was a native of Pennsylvania and who became the pioneer representative of the family in West Virginia, as now constituted. He reclaimed and developed one of the productive farms of Monongalia County, and continued his residence in that county until his death. John Alexander became one of the substantial farmers of his native county, and long continued as one of the successful exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in that section of the state. He finally removed from his farm to Morgantown, the county seat, and there his death occurred in 1914. His wife was born near Laurel Point, in Grant District, that county, and was a daughter of Rev. George F. C. Conn, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, near the West Virginia line, and who became a prominent clergyman of the Baptist Church, he having established a home at Laurel Point, Monongalia County, in an early day. Mrs. Alexander passed to the life eternal in the year 1901.

George M. Alexander passed the period of his childhood and early youth upon the old home farm which was his place of his birth, and in the meanwhile profited by the advantages offered by the rural schools, after which, in 1886, he entered the University of West Virginia. In that institution he was graduated in 1892, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and also that of Bachelor of Law. He was admitted to the bar in the same year, and in October, 1892, entered upon the practice of his profession, opening an office at Fairmont. He soon proved his power as a resourceful trial lawyer and well fortified counselor as in 1896 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Marion County. Upon completing his official term of four years he resumed the private practice of his profession, and later he became attorney for the Fairmont and Clarksburg Traction Company, which was the parent company of what is now known as the Monongahela Power & Railway Company. He also became attorney for the Consolidation Coal Company. Of the former corporation he is now the president. He has high standing in his profession and has been especially well known as a successful corporation lawyer.

On the 11th of April, 1918, Mr. Alexander volunteered for service in the United States Army. He was commissioned captain in the ordnance department and was on duty at Washington, D. C., until he resigned his commission December 23, 1918, and returned to Fairmont. In the following month he was chosen president of the Fairmont & Clarksburg Traction Company, now the Monongahela Power & Railway Company, and he has since given all of his time to his executive duties as head of this important corporation.

Mr. Alexander is a member of the Fairmont Country Club and the Maryland Club in the City of Baltimore. He is affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Fairmont Lodge No. 2, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Fairmont Lodge No. 294, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and the Phi Sigma Kappa college fraternity. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and he and his wife hold membership in the Christian Science Church. Mrs. Alexander, whose maiden name was Gertrude Jamison, is a daughter of James M. and Elizabeth (Boyers) Jamison, of Monongalia County. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander have two children: Virginia, who is the wife of Robert E. Barnes of Parkersburg, this state, and Edward E., who is a student in a preparatory school at Lawrenceville, New Jersey.

CAPT. WARD LANHAM. Now a part in the growing responsibilities of his law practice at Fairmont, Captain Lanham is probably one of the best-known younger citizens of West Virginia. He has a great following among college and university men, has been a successful athletic coach but his most distinguishing record so far was made as gallant American officer during the World war.

Captain Lanham was born at Newburg in Preston County West Virginia, May 17, 1889. His grandparents were Jame and Mahinda (Lowe) Lanham. The former was born on the east side of the mountains in Old Virginia, and when a boy his parents settled in the Bakers Creek neighborhood, within the present limits of the City of Morgantown. Captain Lanham is a son of Dr. Thomas Fleming and Alberta May (Shaffer) Lanham. Doctor Lanham was born on his father's farm about six miles from Fairmont, in Marion County, in 1847, was graduated from the Fairmont Normal School, and received his M. D. degree from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore. For many years he enjoyed a wide, extended and successful practice in Preston County, but for several years has made his home at Grafton in Taylor County. Doctor Lanham while in Preston County had a large practice as a mining physician, chiefly for the mines owned by Martin L. Shaffer. Doctor Lanham married the daughter of this prominent coal operator, Alberta May, who was born in Preston County in 1847.

Capt. Ward Lanham attended school at Newburg, grad-

Chas R. Windsor

d from the Grafton High School in 1903, received his Bachelor of Science degree from Wesleyan College at Buckhannon in 1912, and for about five years was successfully engaged in educational work. He taught school at Grafton, coached the athletic team two years, and was then instructor and coach in the Fairmont High School one year, during which he was teacher and coach in the Buckhannon High School.

In 1916 Captain Lanham entered West Virginia University, and had carried his studies about a year when America declared war on Germany. He was one of the first university men to enter the active service of the Government. He immediately sent his application to the War Department for appointment to the Officers Training School, and on May 10, 1917, he entered the camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis. He was commissioned first lieutenant and on August 15, 1917, was ordered to Harvard University to receive special instruction in trench warfare. French instructors sent over for that purpose by the French Government. He was detailed for duty at Camp Sherman, Ohio, where he was assigned to the Three Hundred and Twenty-ninth Infantry in the Eighty-third Division, Headquarters Company. Lieutenant Lanham left Camp Sherman in April, 1918, sailed from New York City, landed at Liverpool, crossed England to Southampton, thence over the English Channel to LaHavre, and was immediately assigned to the Twenty-eighth Infantry, First Division. He was with the division in service until they crossed the River Rhine, when he had the honor of being the first American officer to cross the River Moselle into German territory and also the first to cross the River Rhine. Immediately following the battle of St. Mihiel he was commissioned captain in September, 1918.

His high lights in his service can best be described in quotations and abstracts from the army records. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross by Brigadier General G. C. Barnhart, and was awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French Government.

WELLSBURG BANK AND TRUST COMPANY. As one of the early points of commerce and trade in the Upper Ohio Valley Wellsburg early became a banking town, and ninety years ago a branch of the Northwestern Bank of Virginia was established there. In 1871 there was organized the Wellsburg Bank, better known as the S. George Bank, a private institution and owned by him. S. George, Sr., was the first president of the institution. This was succeeded in 1903 by the Wellsburg Bank & Trust Company for the purpose of providing an institution for strictly commercial banking and one more adapted to the methods and needs of modern times. The late S. George became the first president of the Wellsburg Bank & Trust Company, with F. A. Chapman, vice president; Charles R. Windsor, treasurer and secretary. S. George died the same year the bank was organized and was succeeded by his son, S. George, Jr., as president. This company in twenty years has set a high standard of commercial banking. The bank has resources of $1,500,000, deposits of over a million, and the undivided surplus and profits exceed the capital stock. The company has never passed a dividend and for several years the dividends have been on a ten per cent basis. All the stockholders are local men. Since 1903 the bank has been housed in a building specially erected for the purpose.

One of the charter members of the institution, and the secretary and treasurer, is Charles R. Windsor. Mr. Windsor was born in Brooke County, on a farm that is now included in the site of the town of Windsor, including the great electric power plant. His father, Joshua R. Windsor, was born on the same farm, and the grandfather was T. T. Windsor, one of the pioneers of that section. Joshua Windsor died at the age of seventy-four. He had spent his life as a farmer and merchant. The mother of Charles R. Windsor was Mary J. Williams, who was also born in Brooke County, and died when in middle life.

Charles R. Windsor acquired a common-school education and attended a business college. In 1892 he entered the service of the old Bank of Wellsburg, and about ten years later took part in the reorganization of that bank. He is also a director in the George-Sherrard Paper Company of Wellsburg. Mr. Windsor, who is unmarried, is a republican in politics, is a trustee of the local lodge of Masons, and is affiliated with West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite.

JOHN C. GILMOUR is one of the prominent men in the coal industry of Logan County, and from his progressive record so far his many friends are justified in predicting for him a splendid future. He is mine superintendent at Chauncey on the Chesapeake and Ohio, about eight miles from Logan and a mile and a half from Omar Post Office.

Mr. Gilmour was born in Scotland May 5, 1886, son of John C. and Harriett (Hutton) Gilmour, also natives of Scotland. His father was an experienced coal miner in the old country, and made his first visit to the United States in 1884. Subsequently he secured properties and became an operator in the New River Coal District in 1902. He was one of the pioneers in developing the Cabin Creek coal field, opening the Cherokee Coal Company's property at Leewood in that district. For many years he was one of the leading operators in this section.

John C. Gilmour, Jr., acquired a common school education in West Virginia, his mother coming with him to this country when he was an infant. He also attended city schools and spent two years in Marshall College at Huntington, and in 1904 completed a commercial and bookkeeping course in the Sadlers Bryant and Stratton Business College at Baltimore. From 1904 to 1910 his work was bookkeeping and store employment. In 1910 he became superintendent at Quincy, West Virginia, for the Quincy Coal Company, remaining there two years, for one year was superintendent for the Hughes Creek Coal Company, and for fifteen months was with the Virginia Coal Company at Coal Fork, West Virginia. Then followed an interval of seventeen months when he was out of the coal industry and was business manager and auditor for Sheltering Arms Hospital at Hanford, West Virginia.

On September 6, 1916, he began his duties at Chauncey, as superintendent of mines for the Litz-Smith Island Creek Coal Company. He offered his services to the Government during the World war, but he was told that he could do the best possible work by remaining at the mines and keeping up coal production.

In 1913, at Charleston, he married Miss Irene Johnson, daughter of J. W. and Annie (Harris) Johnson, both West Virginia people. Her father is connected with the Transfer Company at Logan. Mr. and Mrs. Gilmour have one son, William C. Mr. Gilmour is a Royal Arch Mason, also a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite-Mason and Shriner.

JAMES B. AGE is a prominent young coal man of Logan County, with home at Logan. He is superintendent of the Shamrock Coal Company, whose operations are at the coal village of Shamrock. This is one of the mine properties of the Litz-Smith Coal Company.

Mr. Agee was born at Jacksboro, Tennessee, February 24, 1887, son of James W. and Lassie (Hollingsworth) Agee, also natives of Tennessee. His father for a time was in the railroad service, and for three years had charge of the station at Logan for the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway. Otherwise practically his entire active life was spent in some county office in Campbell County, Tennessee, where he was sheriff and also clerk of the Chancery Court. James B. Agee secured a common school education at LaFollette, Tennessee, and at the age of seventeen began work as clerk in a local store, and some three years later came to West Virginia, in 1907, and became clerk in the commissary for the Turkey Gap Coal and Coke Company. He was there about three years, and then came to Shamrock as store manager and pay roll clerk for the Litz-Smith Company, owners of the Shamrock Mine. For one year he was still manager and pay-roll clerk, and since then has been superintendent of the mines. During the World war it is literally true that Mr. Agee worked night and day in order to stimulate increased production of coal.

In December, 1910, at Delorme, West Virginia, he married Miss Lena A. Fletcher, daughter of James H. and Media Fletcher, natives of Kentucky. Her father has been a railroad trainman during his active life. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Agee are Arnold B., Raymond H. and Doris Ruth. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Agee is an Elk, and in Masonry is a member of the Royal Arch Chapter and the Knight Templar Commandery, the Mystic Shrine, and recently has completed the route of the Lodge of Perfection.

LONZO EDWARDS STEELE, M. D., is established in the active general practice of his profession at Logan, judicial center of the West Virginia County of the same name, where for the past ten years he has had a heavy professional practice in connection with leading coal mining corporations in this section. He was also one of the founders of the admirably equipped Logan Hospital which has proved of inestimable value in providing proper hospital facilities in connection with mining operations.

Doctor Steele was born on a farm east of Williamson, Mingo County, on Tug River, June 2, 1880, Mingo County at that time having been still a part of Logan County. He is a son of Harrison and Nancy (Hatfield) Steele the father having been a successful farmer and also identified with the timber industry in this section of the state, and his father, John Steele, having been a loyal soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war. Valentine Hatfield, maternal grandfather of Doctor Steele likewise gave valiant service as a soldier in the war between the states. Doctor Steele has one brother and one sister: S. E. is a farmer on Tug River, and Eliza is the wife of Scott Browning, a merchant at Meador.

Doctor Steele is indebted to the public schools for his early education, and at the age of seventeen years he became a teacher in a rural district in Mingo County. He continued teaching four years, and in the meanwhile substantially advanced his own education through the medium of private study and attending select school during the summer vacations. In 1900 he entered the medical department of the University of Nashville, Tennessee, and in this institution he was graduated in 1904 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For a year thereafter he served as an interne in the City Hospital of Nash, Kentucky, and thus fortified himself further by valuable clinical experience. He has since taken effective post-graduate courses in the Hospital College at Louisville, the celebrated New York Polyclinic, as well as in the New York Post-Graduate Medical College. He has availed himself also of the clinics of the great Mayo Brothers Hospital at Rochester, Minnesota and those of leading hospitals in the City of Chicago.

In 1906 Doctor Steele established himself in practice at Holden, Logan County, as physician and surgeon to the United States Coal & Oil Company, now known as the Island Creek Coal Company. In the same year he established his residence and professional headquarters at Logan, the county seat, where he has since continued his able and loyal service as a skilled physician and surgeon. In 1915 he became associated with Doctor Farley in rebuilding and thoroughly modernizing the Logan Hospital, which they have since conducted with unequalled success. Doctor Steele is identified with the Logan County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and in the Masonic fraternity he has received the thirty second degree of the Scottish Rite.

JAMES DIX TURNER, M. D. The duties of a physician and surgeon have engaged Doctor Turner at Chapmanville in Logan County for over twenty years. He is located there in advance of the first railroad, and has been one of the most useful members of the community.

Doctor Turner comes from a notable family of professional people. He was born at Matville, Raleigh County, West Virginia, August 2, 1874, son of William

In a business way his active life was spent as a farmer and lumberman, as trader and surveyor, and he also participated in the coal development in his section of the state, where he owned a large acreage of land. He sold these interests in 1901 and moved to Barboursville, and since 1911 his home has been in Washington. He has been a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Among the children one daughter, May, is a physician, and had charge of a Red Cross Hospital in the Balkans, married an English colonel, and she is now in Constantinople. Mr. Simeral was born at Beallsville, Ohio, February 21, 1871. Beallsville is in Monroe County, Ohio, and in that section of the state the Simerals settled in pioneer times, coming from Pennsylvania. Mr. Simeral's grandfather, John Jackson Simeral, spent all his life at Beallsville, where he was born in 1832 and died in 1902. For many years he was connected with H. Miller & Company, tobacco merchants. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. John J. Simeral married Lucretia Owens, who was born in Maryland in 1834, and died at Wheeling in 1914. They had seven children. One of them was John Labary Simeral, who for a number of years owned and operated the Palace Hotel at Decatur, Illinois, and died at Toronto, Canada, at the age of sixty-seven. His sister, Alice, is now living at Oberlin, Ohio, the widow of John Jeffers, who was connected with the sales department of the American Agricultural Chemical Company at Cleveland.

Hamilton O. Simeral, father of Glenn D., was born at Beallsville in 1861, was reared there and became a general merchant, and in 1907 moved to Wheeling, where he was associated for several years with the W. A. Driehorst Company, retail merchants. He died at Wheeling in 1918. He was a democrat, always interested in local politics, especially at Beallsville, though not an office seeker for himself. He was a deacon and for many years an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally was affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows. Hamilton O. Simeral married Rosella Potts, now living at German town, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She was born near Sumnerfield, Ohio, in 1864, and was reared at Atlanta, Illinois, where she was married. She is a niece of the late John B. Driggs, judge of the Circuit Court and a very highly respected citizen of Eastern Ohio. Of her children Glenn D. is the oldest. Ella Mae is the wife of Glenn O. DuBois, manager of the Zanesville, Ohio, office of the Bradstreet Company; Wilfred H. is a student in the Wheeling High School.

Glenn D. Simeral graduated from the Beallsville High School in 1905, was a student one year in Oberlin College in Ohio, and was twenty years of age when he accompanied his parents to Wheeling. Here for three years he was connected with Edward Wagner, a wholesale grocer, and then for four years was with the Joseph Speidel Grocery Company. After this general training in business Mr. Simeral organized the company and established the Owl Print Shop, and is now sole proprietor of that prosperous business at 917 Market Street. The shop has all the facilities for expert and high class typographical work and does a general job printing business. Mr. Simeral is also exclusive agent in the Panhandle of West Virginia and Eastern Ohio for Art Metal Steel Office Equipments.

October 6, 1917, Mr. Simeral married at Wheeling, Miss Ethyl Cooper Montgomery, daughter of George and Mary Elizabeth (Ridgely) Montgomery. Her father, a merchant, died at Wheeling. The mother, who is still living at Wheeling, represents the old Colonial family of Ridgelys, who for several generations lived in Old Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Simeral have one daughter, Mary Elizabeth, born July 3, 1921.

C. McDONALD ENGLAND. The development of trade and commerce throughout the Guyan Valley is part and parcel of the experience and life work of C. McDonald England. In earlier years he traveled over the valley selling goods to the retail merchants, and has been established at Logan since the first line of railway reached that town. The institution with which most of his business history is concerned is the Logan Hardware & Supply Company, of which he is vice president, treasurer and manager.

Mr. England has been active manager since the organization of the company in 1904. For a number of years the company did a wholesale and retail business in several lines, but in recent years for a more efficient handling of the business two subsidiary companies have been formed. In 1919 the W. F. Bevil & Company was organized to take over the retail hardware business of the older company. Another subsidiary, established July 1, 1922, is the Logan Wholesale Furniture Company.

The president of the Logan Hardware & Supply Company is J. W. Ruff of Bluefield, and C. W. Beckner is secretary.

Mr. England was born at Covington in Alleghany County, Virginia, March 19, 1882, a son of Dr. J. R. and Anna (McAllister) England. His mother was born at Covington, where she is still living. Dr. J. R. England, was born in Carroll County, Maryland, in 1842, served as a Confederate soldier in a regiment organized in West Virginia, and after the Civil war he studied medicine in Baltimore. He practiced in Alleghany and Bath counties, Virginia, in Greenbrier and Monroe counties, West Virginia, and was engaged in the arduous duties of his profession for a number of years. The last twenty-five years of his life he was retired from practice and lived on his farm at Covington, where he died in 1912. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, was a Master Mason and a democrat. Doctor England and wife had a family of four sons and three daughters.

C. McDonald England graduated from the Covington High School at the age of nineteen, and soon afterward he located at Bluefield, West Virginia, where he began his career in the hardware business as an employee of the Bluefield Hardware Company. He remained with that concern for three years, making acquaintances that proved valuable to the early progress of the Logan Hardware and Supply Company when he helped organize that industry, about the time the railroad was built to Logan. Mr. England is also vice president of the First National Bank of Logan.

He is a public spirited citizen, has served several terms on the City Council, has been president of the Chamber of Commerce, is past master of Aracoma Lodge No. 99, A. F. and A. M., high priest of Logan Chapter, R. A. M., a member of Charleston Commandery No. 4, K. P., has taken the Scottish Rite degrees in Huntington and in the Wheeling Consistory, and is a member of the Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. He is president of the Rotary Club of Logan.

In 1910 Mr. England married Miss Alma H. Hines, daughter of J. W. and Emma Hines. She was born at Danville Virginia. They have three children: Kathryn McAllister, Anne Elizabeth and C. McDonald, Jr. Mr. and Mrs. England are members of the Presbyterian Church and, like his father, he holds the post of elder in that church. In politics he is a democrat.

HARRY S. GAY, JR. Some of the most extensive operations in the Logan County field are conducted by the Gay Coal & Coke Company, whose headquarters are known as Mount Gay, near Logan. The active manager of this industry for several years has been Harry S. Gay, Jr., himself a mining engineer with a successful experience in all the technical phases of coal mining here and elsewhere. The company is in an important degree a result of the cumulative efforts and enterprise of three generations of this family.

The founder of the family in America was Samuel Gay, grandfather of Henry S. Gay. He was born in England, and from an early age worked in the coal fields of his native country. Coming to America, he became a miner in the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania. In the early days of the coal development in Southern West Virginia he was attracted to this field with William McQuail. For a time they conducted operations under the name of the Turkey Gay Coal Company in the Pocahontas District. Samuel Gay, served as mine inspector of the Eighth Anthracite District for fifteen years, holding this position until the time of his death. Finally he returned to Pennsylvania. He possessed the physical strength of an English coal miner, was a man of resolute will, had little education himself, and his greatest ambition apparently was to train his own children by the best advantages obtainable so that they might be in a position to continue his line of work but on a higher plane, though his own success was by no means negligible. He, therefore, sent his sons through the best technical schools.

H. S. Gay, Sr., a son of the pioneer and one of the founders of the Gay Coal and Coke Company in Logan County, was born at Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania. He finished his higher education and technical training at Lafayette College, and as a mining engineer he handled some of the most complicated technical problems in his profession. Most of his professional work was done in the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania. At a time he was general manager for J. Landon & Company of Elmira, New York, and also general manager of the Thomas A. Edison Iron Ore Mines in New Jersey. He was consulting engineer for several mining corporations at Shamokin, Pennsylvania. He paid his first visit to the coal fields in Logan County in 1903 as an engineer to report on coal lands for some Shamokin people. While here he located the Monitor-Yuma Lease and incidentally acquired for himself a lease of eight hundred acres, land on which the mines of the Gay Coal and Coke Company are situated.

H. S. Gay, Sr., deserves the record of history as one of the pioneers in the development of this district. He shipped the first car load of coal from the district on Thanksgiving day, 1904. This coal was hauled in wagons from the mine to Logan and there loaded on car and sent out over the recently completed railroad into the valley. The mine of the Gay Coal and Coke Company is the only one in this field of any consequence that has remained under the same management from its opening, a period of eighteen years. In 19 the company shipped two million tons of coal from the operations. Another feature of the record for this year is that not a single man was killed in the operations. This company has maintained a splendid record in the handling and treatment of their employees, and this has contributed in no small measure to the success and continued prosperity of the company. In the early years they gave preference to local men in their mine until the period of the war made it necessary to bring in miners from other fields.

H. S. Gay, Sr., while still vice president and general manager of the Gay Coal & Coke Company, has spent little time at the mines since 1912. He is now virtually retired and lives at Baltimore. When he made his first trip to the Logan field there was no railroad, and he left the train at Dingess on the Norfolk and Western and the rest of the journey of about thirty miles was made by horseback over the mountains. As an operator and as a mining engineer H. S. Gay, Sr., has been associated with operations in every field in West Virginia including the New River, Pocahontas, Paint Creek and Cabin Creek districts. There is nothing in the multi-industry with which he has not come in contact of practical experience. The first work he ever did around the mine was running a pump in the anthracite field of Pennsylvania. At one time he had charge of the deepest mine in the United States, located at Shamokin, Pennsylvania, and owned by the Nielson Colliery Company. This mine was 2,000 feet deep.

H. S. Gay, Sr., married Lallia J. Batdorf, a native of Tremont, Pennsylvania. Their family consisted of two sons and two daughters. The other son, Leslie N., a physician at Baltimore, and was a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps during the World war.

Harry S. Gay, Jr., who is the active representative of the third generation in this notable family of miners and mine operators in America, was born at Lyken, Pennsylvania, April 7, 1889. He was of age for active military duty during the great war, and it was his sincerest desire to get overseas with the troops, but the authorities would not permit him to leave his essential duties in the mining field. Mr. Gay is a graduate of the Shamokin High School with the class of 1906. The school, located in a great industrial district, offered unsurpassed facilities for technical training and gave him the foundation of his technical training as an engineer.

From high school he entered Lehigh University without examination, and graduated in 1910 with the degree of Mining Engineer. For six months following his graduation he was employed by the Tremont Water and Gas Company, of which his father was president. He was then a constructing engineer with the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad at Frackville, Pennsylvania, and left that to come to Logan as mining engineer for the widely known firm of Pittsburgh engineers, W. G. Wilkins & Company. Six months later, in June, 1912, Mr. Gay became assistant to his father in the Logan Coal and Coke Company operations. Since 1914 he has been general superintendent of the plant, and was the responsible executive in charge throughout the period of the World war.

As a mining engineer he has been identified with other important work in these mining fields. He assisted in building the Rum Creek Branch Railroad, assisted in laying out the Logan Mining Company's operations, the Amherst Mines at Amherstdale, the McGregor Coal Company's operations at Shlagel, West Virginia, also Monitor No. 3 Mine, and he surveyed all the mines on English Run, and other mines on Buffalo Creek.

When Mr. Gay came to the Logan field in 1912 there were forty-two mines in operation, and at the present time there are one hundred and thirty-five. Mr. Gay, who is unmarried, is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge and Chapter at Logan, the Elks and his College fraternity is the Sigma Nu. He is an active member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

JAMES GARFIELD HUNTER is a young man in years, but with a business experience running back to the time when he was just entering his "teens." If every man is born with an aptitude that fits him for some form of useful service, it is evident that Mr. Hunter had a generous inheritance, since he has done a number of things well, and that without any endowment of financial means or special opportunities. His activities have been largely identified with the town of Logan since that town was in the early stages of its development.

Mr. Hunter was born October 7, 1853, eight miles east of Charleston, in Kanawha County, son of Samuel and Mary (Abbott) Hunter. His father, who was born in Giles County, Virginia, died in 1895, at the age of sixty-seven. His wife was a native of Kanawha County and died there January 15, 1920, at the age of seventy-six. Samuel Hunter was a carpenter by trade, and served as a Union soldier in the Home Guards during the Civil war, was also a millwright, and bought the first flour mills on Rock River and at Charleston. For a number of years he was river foreman for the Campbell Creek Coal Company, and did an extensive business building tipples, barges and steam boats for that corporation. He lost his life through an accident caused by a slipping ladder. In addition to the above named activities he owned and lived on a farm on Elk River, in a community that was practically a wilderness when he moved there. That land is still in the family.

It was in this country district that James Garfield Hunter spent his early boyhood. He attended the common schools near home, and was only twelve years of age when his father died. That created the necessity that he get out and find some occupation that would contribute to the support of his widowed mother and the other children. He has two brothers, James, a farmer living near the old homestead, and Luther, an employe of the Campbell Creek Coal Company. James J. Hunter earned his first money in the timber, and for two years drove a mule team before he was strong enough either to load or unload a wagon. He also did farm work, and for eighteen months after reaching his fifteenth birthday he was employed in a saw mill belonging to the Donaldson Lumber Company on Blue Creek. For another two years he was in the Coal River District with the firm of Anderson and Bentley, in their saw mill, and for the next two years was sawyer for the Donaldson Lumber Company. Probably no work around a saw mill could be enumerated in which Mr. Hunter has not had practical experience.

At the age of twenty-one he married Miss Ella Brockell, daughter of J. C. Brockell. The first six months after he married he lived on a farm, and then removed to Cabin Creek, where for five years he was manager of two saw mills owned by Charles Cabell. The next formed a business association with his father's old company, the Campbell Creek Coal Company, having a contract to supply mining timber to that corporation. On leaving the Campbell Company Mr. Hunter moved to Logan, which was then a comparatively new town. For eighteen months he was engineer for the Wilson Coal Company, and then engaged in the taxi business, owning the second automobile in the town. He was in this work two years, then opened and conducted a restaurant for three years, and following that he bought a block of stock in the Deere Undertaking Company, and has since been manager of that establishment. Through these various changes Mr. Hunter has steadily promoted himself to something better and has been one of the really prosperous citizens of Logan.

He and Mrs. Hunter have five children: Averill, Marie, Mary, Belle and Jean. Averill is now attending Stewart College. Mr. Hunter is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Elks, the Moose, has taken the Rose Croix degree in Scottish Rite Masonry at Huntington, and is a member of the Masonic Lodge and Chapter in Logan. Politically he is a republican.

RAY E. MATTICKS is the authorized Logan County representative in the sale of the Ford cars, tractors and accessories. He has been with the Ford Company several years, beginning in the large plant and offices at Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Matticks has the record of an ex-service man in the great war.

Mr. Matticks was born at Newark, Licking County, Ohio, December 28, 1891, son of David and Gertrude (Legge) Matticks. His father, a native of Kentucky, died in 1907, at the age of forty-eight at Newark, Ohio, where for a quarter of a century he was in the job printing business. The firm Matticks and Company was a very prosperous one and had a reputation for the very highest class of work in printing. David Matticks was active in republican politics, and for a number of years was in the City Council. He was the father of two children, Ray E. and Mrs. Roy Brenholts of Columbus, Ohio.

Ray E. Matticks was educated in the Newark grammar and high schools, and for a time attended Ohio State University. While in university he had an active part in athletics and was a member of the freshmen football team.

A large part of his business experience has been in the field of machinery and automobiles. In 1912 he was employed by the Jeffery Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of locomotives and mining machinery at Columbus, in their offices and auditing department. Later he was a commercial salesman in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois for J. H. Swisher and Company of Newark, stogie manufacturers. Following that he was with the Moore Oil Company at Columbus.

He entered the service of the Ford Motor Company with the J. Renner Auto Sales Company, the Ford representative at Columbus. He left that concern and on May 17, 1917, a few weeks after America declared war against Germany, and volunteered in the Ohio National Guard. He was assigned to the Ordnance Department at Camp Sheridan, Alabama, and continued in service until discharged in January, 1919. He entered the army as a private, was promoted to first sergeant, and at his discharge had recommendations for a lieutenant's commission.

On leaving the army he at once resumed his connections with the Ford Motor Company in the assembly plant at Columbus. Three months later he was made assistant chief clerk, in charge of the Columbus offices.

On September 11, 1920, he came to Logan, West Virginia, to take over the Ford agency. Mr. Mattieks knows automobiles thoroughly, and is also a past master salesman.

In July, 1919, he married Miss Garnett, a daughter of William and Elizabeth Wright, of Columbus. They have one daughter, Margaret Jane. Mr. and Mrs. Mattieks are members of the First Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with Columbus Lodge of Elks, No. 37, Franklin Post No. 1, American Legion, at Columbus, and is a member of the Phi Delta Theta College Fraternity.

CHARLES ALEXANDER MARTIN, M. D. Some of the most important service rendered by the medical profession in West Virginia is that given by the physicians and surgeons who attended the cases of illness and injury among the population grouped around the mines. That has been the service of Doctor Martin practically ever since he graduated from medical college, and since 1913 his home and headquarters have been at Amherstdale in Logan County.

Doctor Martin was born in Dawson, Greenbrier County, December 5, 1879, son of Obediah C. and Sallie (Lowry) Martin. Obediah C. Martin, who died in 1893, at the age of sixty-eight, was a native of Greenbrier County, son of Joseph Martin, and followed farming and the carpenter trade as his life's occupation and became very well to do. He was a democrat in politics. Doctor Martin has two brothers, Joseph L., in business at Charleston, and William L., at Springdale. The mother of these sons died in April, 1880, at the age of thirty-five years.

Doctor Martin was five months old when his mother died, and he was reared in the home of her uncle, Thomas Lowry, at Springdale. He attended public school in Fayette County, and he had to make every opportunity count to provide for his own living and secure a higher education. At the age of eighteen he became a teacher, and he taught six terms of school in Fayette County, at $35.00 per month. During 1900 he attended Marshall College at Huntington, and from 1904 to 1908 pursued his medical studies in the University of Louisville. In 1919 he again returned to his alma mater for post graduate study. After graduating in 1908 he practiced four and a half years around the mines at Harvey and Fayette County, and then came to Amherstdale, about the time the mines were being opened in this section of Logan County. His practice as a mining physician and surgeon has associated him with the Amherst Coal Company, Proctor Coal Company, Buffalo Eagle Coal Company, Madco Coal Company and Proctor Eagle Coal Company. At one time he had charge of the practice for about eleven mines.

Doctor Martin in 1913 married Beulah Thrash of Roane County, West Virginia, daughter of C. C. Thrash. They have two children: Bess and Shirley. Mrs. Martin is a member of the Methodist Church. Doctor Martin is affiliated with McDonald Lodge No. 103, F. and A. M., at Mount Hope, the Royal Arch Chapter of Thurmond, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, and Beni Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is a member of the Logan County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations. Doctor Martin has been a personal witness of nearly all the important phases in the development of Buffalo Valley. In 1899 he drove a wagon down the valley, long before a railroad was built or before the operation of the mines was considered.

WALTER WALLACE JOHNSON has effectively demonstrated his executive ability and progressive business policies in his service as manager of the Welch Sales Company, of Welch, McDowell County, this corporation being local representative in the sale of the Ford automobiles and the Fordson trucks and tractors, the business having been established by him and his elder brother, J. Frank Johnson, Jr.

Mr. Johnson was born at Peerville, a village now known as English, in McDowell County, and the date of his nativity was March 13, 1878. He is a son of J. Frank and Marinda (Compton) Johnson, the form of whom was born at Bristol, Tennessee, in 1830, at the latter in Buckhannon County, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1858. The parents were for many years residents of McDowell County, and here the father died in 1908 and the mother in 1917. J. Frank Johnson was reared in a home of comparative affluence and received a liberal education. He was in his young manhood successful teacher in the schools of McDowell County and he was called upon to serve in various local office of public trust, including those of county sheriff and county clerk, of which latter he was the incumbent twenty-six years. As a soldier of the Union in the Civil war he took part in many engagements, was captured by the enemy on more than one occasion and was to have been shot, but contrived to make his escape. He was a life-long democrat, but his two sons have been republicans from the time of casting their first votes. Besides the two sons the family circle includes four daughters, all of whom survive the honored parent.

Walter W. Johnson continued to attend school until he was twenty-two years of age, and thereafter was for a short time engaged in the teaming business. He then became associated with his brother in establishing the Johnson Printing Company, through the medium of which they were for sixteen years editors and publishers of the McDowell Record, which they made an effective exponent of local interests and also of the cause of the republican party. After their retirement from the newspaper business they formed the present Welch Sales Company, and erected a garage which in general facilities and equipment is conceded to be one of the best in Southern West Virginia. The McDowell Record was the first newspaper established in McDowell County and was founded by the father of the subject of this sketch. He first published the paper at English and later removed the plant and business to Welch, the county seat, where his sons eventually succeeded him in the ownership and management of the business. The elder of the two brothers, J. Frank Johnson, Jr., is now a member of the County Court of McDowell County and is extensively interested in coal development in this section of the state, besides which he has served as county sheriff and as mayor of the City of Welch.

As previously stated, Walter W. Johnson is a republican in political allegiance. He is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic Fraternity and also with the Knights of Pythias, and his wife is an active member of the Baptist Church.

August 1, 1907, recorded the marriage of Mr. Johnson and Miss Bessie Beard, who was born in Gates County, Virginia, a daughter of James E. Beard. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have two children, Elizabeth and Thelma.

THOMAS EDWARD HODGES was one of those rare men who seem able to translate broad and generous ideals into deed of practical and useful service. It was not any one achievement that distinguished him, but rather a lifetime of consecutive work and performance of duty. He was a popular figure in the sense that he lived with and worked among the people and exerted a constant influence and helpfulness in whatever relationship he was placed. This quality of his character should be emphasized even beyond the fact that he gained some of the highest offices in his native state.
