SHELL, Margaret. "In the spring or summer of 1911 just before I moved from that neighborhood, I stopped off in the Littlejohn's cemetery on my way to Morganton (N. C.) to look for the grave of old Aunt Margaret Shell, suspecting that she must be buried there as she had lived in that neighborhood. While looking for her grave I located also the graves of old grandfather and grandmother, Robert and Elizabeth. I took notes from gravestones which I lost in moving West. I recall that my father told me many years ago that Aunt Margaret was the oldest child and was a tiny baby when the family moved to this country...He told me his grandfather was a weaver by trade, that he was an American sympathizer and that he wove an American Eagle into some of his products, and because of his sympathy for the American colonists had to leave the country to avoid political persecution."
