Data:

William Walker was a Lollard or follower of John Wyclif. From 1533 to 1538 Mary I, Queen of England, so severely persecuted the Protestants that William Walker with his family fled to Scotland. This indicates that he was of sufficient prominence to attract the attention of the persecutors, and as his grandson became a priest in the Anglican Church, it is probable that he was a member of that church. His property at Colney Hatch was confiscated, and in the record of the legal proceedings to recover this are the data given in the genealogy of the Walkers. After Queen Elizabeth came to the throne and caused the Parliament to repeal the Acts that gave authority for the persecution of the Protestants, William returned to England and made his home in Yorkshire where his son married Mary Clayborne. Her relatives by descent appear in the genealogy of the Walkers for more than two centuries, and at least one of them served in the Continental Army in the American Revolution.

James Riley, the son of Robert Edward and Kenith Walker, became a solicitor-at-law in London, and made legal papers for several of his kindred in Maryland. His cousin, Thomas, preserved the genealogy of the Walkers.

34 a company had been assembled by Lord Baltimore to colonize and, and James Walker joined this company, which arrived in the Chesapeake Bay in March 1634, accompanied by the Deputy Governor, Leonard Calvert, brother of Lord Baltimore. Calvert bought an Indian house, and the colonists moved into the huts which the Indians had, thus establishing the first settlement in Maryland, which they called St. Mary's. The Virginians held Kent Island and a post at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, which were in territory granted in the charter of Maryland. Governor Calvert detailed James Walker and others tooust Virginians from this territory and hold it for Maryland. Because of the satisfaction James Walker gave in doing this work Lord Baltimore granted him large holdings of land located on the Eastern Shore of Chesapeake Bay, in what was afterwards known as Somerset County, Maryland.
