Codicil I Charles Alexander do make this Codicil to my last will and Testament.

It is my will and desire that the Executor and Executors of my last will and Testament ^{and my wife, my son Amistead, my brother William} instead of selling personal property to defray my just debts, do after giving reasonable notice in the public Newspapers proceed to sell such part of my lots or town property as may be found necessary to discharge all such just debts and that they shall allow such credits upon the sale thereof as they may deem necessary provided nevertheless that they shall not sell more than half the Lots belonging to me on any one square, the residue being reserved for the benefit of my heirs and assigns - At the same time it is not my intention to preclude them from selling such part of my personal estate as may be sold without prejudice to the interest of my heirs, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding. In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and seal this 28th day of September A.D. 1812.

C. Alexander (S)

Codicil 2^d I give unto my wife Mary for ever my Carriage, a pair of Carriage horses and the Driver, also my Household furniture, wearing apparel &c and to my son Amistead my library, secretary and Bookcase - and to each of my children a neat folio Edition of the Holy Scriptures
