Pursuant of an order of the Court of Cumberland we have examined the accounts & vouchers of the actings and doings of William Armistead and Jacob L. Abrams Administrators of John Armistead son of William deceased & find them true, as stated in the annexed accounts, in which there appeared after allowing compensations as herein stated, a balance of seventeen pounds nine shillings & six pence due to Jacob L. Abrams, which we thought best to transfer to the account of William Armistead, he having in his hands all that appears to us to remain of the Estate, which leaves in the hands of the said William a balance of one hundred and two pounds nine shillings and seven pence three farthings in uncollected bonds, to be accounted for on a distribution of the estate. we well observe that we have made no calculation of Interest on those bonds, deeming it best for that to be referred until a final settlement & distribution takes place, there appearing to be only two bonds on hand uncollected, viz, Mary Armistead for a balance of twenty pounds five shillings & six pence with Interest from the day of 1799 & James A. Armistead's for ninety five pounds one shilling payable on the twenty eighth day of January 1798 from whence it appears that William Armistead disbursed more than he has actually received. The mode of Compensations proposed by us, to be allowed to Jacob L. Abrams, is by adding the two accts. together and allowing 5 p^{ts} on the receipts and 2 1/2 p^{ts} on the disbursements, which by our estimate amounts to fourteen pounds six shillings & six pence, we were induced to allow him Commissions on William Armistead's account by the consent of the said William, who disclaims any Compensation as Jacob L. Abrams has borne the chief burthen of transacting the business of the Estate, altho' it appears by those accts. that William Armistead was the most ostensible person.
