11. Answer: C The patient is exhibiting signs of hypoxemia, including tachypnea, tachycardia, and cyanosis. The most likely cause of these symptoms is a pulmonary embolism, which is a blood clot that has traveled from the lower extremities to the lungs. The other options are less likely: aortic dissection would typically present with severe chest pain; a myocardial infarction would typically present with chest pain and ECG changes; and a stroke would typically present with neurological deficits.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 male employees from a large manufacturing company who had been employed for at least one year. They were divided into three groups based on their job type: manual laborers, machine operators, and office workers. Data were collected through self-administered questionnaires and interviews. Results showed that manual laborers had the highest prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders, followed by machine operators, and then office workers. This suggests that physical demands are a significant factor in the development of these disorders.
