

It is the pleasure of our hospitable people to show.

Rome Female College.

The death of Mrs Caldwell, who for many years occupied a prominent position among the most useful educators of the South, has given rise to the inquiry, whether the Rome Female College will be suspended. The greatness of the loss it has sustained is mournfully recognized, and yet its halls must be kept open. Her son, Prof. S. C. Caldwell, with competent assistants, will have charge of the educational work of the college, and his wife, with him, will have control of the boarding department, and of the social life of the young ladies of the institution.

It may be well for me, as President of the college, whose great bereavement necessitates this change, to say that my son, Prof. S. C. Caldwell, who graduated at Princeton in 1868, has been associated with me as a principal teacher for eighteen years. He has been quietly giving instructions, unsurpassed in accuracy, thoroughness and efficiency, and now occupies a prominent position among the distinguished educators of the State. He has been secretary, and also president, of the Georgia Teachers' Association. He has served as one of the instructors in the Teachers' Institute for several years, and is filling an important position in the Teachers' Institute now in session in Atlanta.

Mrs. S. C. Caldwell, a gifted and cultivated lady, who has lived in the college lot and been intimately associated with the faculty, sometimes as a teacher, is well fitted for the position she will occupy.

The exercises of the college will, therefore, be resumed with competent assistants on the first Monday of September, under this new arrangement, which, I trust, will be satisfactory to the trustees of the Synod of Georgia and to our patrons.

J. M. M. CALDWELL,
President.
