THE LATE SPRING. BY JOHAN CONDER.

The sleepy Spring was shift in ind,
And to rise was slowly preparing,
When she heard the soft fall of the zephyr's;
Who came to give her an airing. She rose in haste, not dressed in blue,
But clad in her wintry mourning;
ust stuck in her bosom a snow drop or two
Her brow a faintsemile adorning

The rivers ran low through the failure of snow Yet their banks, it seems, never stood firmer; But they longed for the gains which the Spin could theat in,
That again they might babble and murmur.
