How to Prevent Ague.

The President of the New York Farmers' Club read a paper with the above title, referring to alluding to the great development of malarial about New York last season, and referring to experiments to prevent ague, which had failed, the paper proceeds substantially as follows:

The sunflower has been used to ward off malaria in the Middle and Western States for now many years. But its true value was not fully appreciated nor made available from lack of the proper method and extent to which this plant could be used for this protection. Dr. Castle, editor of the New Remedies, in an editorial article, says: An officer of the Engineer Corps of the United States army, recently informed us that, being stationed during the war on the Potomac river, in one of the most malarious portions, he surrounded his quarters with a thick conclusion of sunflowers, and escaped any trouble from ague.

I have read somewhere that a Southern army post had to be a discharged soldier and his family were permitted to occupy the station free of charge. This man, having a good many fowls, sowed a large plot of the grounds immediately around his residence with sunflower seed. This proved a perfect protection from the ague.

This fact coming to the army officer he again occupied the station with his soldiers, who also were protected from the ague.

Mr. Martin read an interesting account of his experiments in preventing malarial diseases by the sowing of sunflower seed before the Societe Therapeutique de France many years ago, which induced the Sanitary Bureau in the Department of the Interior to order in the worst fever-stricken districts, to follow his plan with success. Dr. Cora, of N. York, says that in the fever districts of Italy even the clamorous cry of their waying. Emigrants on their way to the West dropped some sunflower seeds in the ground, which spread in dense growths for hundreds of miles, and now here in that region diseases and fevers prevail.

This plan of sowing the sunflower seed around our dwellings in malarial sections is not only a most valuable sanitary procedure but it furnishes bees the means for producing the most excellent honey, while the stalks make fine material for the manufacture of paper, for making quick kindling for fire, or most excellent manure for the culture of this plant. The seed is good food for all domestic animals, making them sleek and fat. I confidently recommend families to plough deep a space of ground, at least twenty feet wide, on three sides of the dwelling, and not more than five rods from it, and especially on that side of the house towards the swamp, river or creek from which the malarial emanates. Even in front of the house the sunflower grown in a strip of the sunflower grown, if objectionable aesthetically, it may be removed from five to ten rods distant, provided an increased width of the plants be sown—say a strip of 30 feet.

Ashes, potash and sulphate and so as to produce a good crop of sunflowers, and at the same time to keep the soil from becoming impoverished. The seeds should be gathered before frost comes, and when dry, they make excellent food for fowls, and are more fattening than corn. The white seed variety is the richest, and fowls fed upon them more readily than on the black seed kind. This food greatly hastens early and greater yielding qualities of all fowls.

It has long been a truism among observing farmers that it pays to sow the cheapest seed.

By this they mean that as soon as detection it will be neglected by growers until a severe frost precails, and that the wise man's time go in it is when everybody else is going out.

The Venerable Farmer.

Mr. John Johnson, of Geneva, New York, now past eighty years, recently sent the following letter to the New York Club.

I came here in 1821, and bought one hundred and twelve acres of what was called very poor land. I did all my plowing myself for six years. I endeavored to sow my wheat at the same time my neighbors did, and they all commenced early, often in August. I found my first sown Hessian fly. About 1839 or 1840, I commenced to sow on the 15th of September, and I found that I had very little fly in my first sown and none in that sown on the 18th and after, and for many years I never commenced earlier than the 18th or 20th September, and had no fly. After the midge hurl wheat so much, I sowed one barrel of salt per acre immediately made it come in ear all of five or six days earlier, and that saved it from the midge. In 1863 when all crops around me, far and near, were almost ruined, mine yielded twenty-five bushels per acre. I sowed it in the fall, and never sowed less than one barrel per acre. If I could only write, I would tell you much more. I am much interested in talks on deep farming and I cannot write. Salt prevents rust, but there has been no rust in many years.

Practical Ideas.

Keep stock off pastures while they are soft. The poaching will tenfold by summer what the stock may get out of the very early grass. There is nothing to gain, but much to lose, even the feed will not be so good.
