The following is an extract from a speech of Hon. D. W Voor hees, in the House of Represent atives, March 3rd, 1872.

"In 1867, we find it, (W. & A. R.) paying all expenses, and yielding $50,000 per month. At the same rate, there are $500,000 now retained in the hands of Blodgett and his accomplices. (Blodgett only paid $45,000 in (Plodgett and Plodgett K. K.) paying air expenses, it is a specially $250,000 pr month. At the same rate, there are $500,000 now retained in the hands of Blodgett and his accomplices, (Blodgett only paid $45,000 in eleven months.) What answer can be made to this? Will any one pretend that such a vast sum was properly expended in repairing a road already stock, ed? I find one item of expense, which, thowever, may indicate the character of them all. Treenty one thousand dallars were paid as langue's first to partizing favour chanson dallars were paid as langue's first to partizing favour chanson dallars were paid as langue's first to partizing favour chanson dallars were paid as langue's first to partizing favouries for alleged legal services in behalf of this peaceful corporation during these disastrons eleven months of its exist tense. But the word of spellia from the Legislature, of which I have spoken, authorizing the road to be leased in the interest of Bullock and his friends. In der that law, it was leased for $25,000 per month, about one half of its real value. One of the lessees is a member of the present cabinent, (Grant's) and was so when the lease was made, and another is a distinguished Republican member of the other panch of Congress.

You see, dear public, how this matter was looked upon in Wash inston. The Ring candidate, Geo. N. Lester took one thousand dal hars to lobby this road vin the interest of Bullock and his friends. Georgia, poor and down trodden, was robbed by her native citizens to fill their own pockets with the spoils.—Free Press.

Still dwelling on "the music of the looms" in Columbus, the Engirer of Thursday says; "lesterday seventy looms were at work, and one hundred will be moving to day. The entire eight hundred looms and twenty thousand spindles purchased and on hand for this mammoth structure will commence their lively rattlerian few mentls. Then the factory will have in operation in their three mills forty five thousand spindles and one than don't have in operation in their three mills forty five thousand spindles and one thousand five hundred and forty looms. No concern in the South can begin to compare with it in size, or in quality or variety of production. Where these barge edifices stand, twelvey-cars ago there was a pile of rubbish, the remains of Federal destruction. These mills in a short time, will have one thousand into hundred souls. Besides, we have four other cotton mills. They all consume some fifty bales of cotton per day, and soon will take seventy. The consumption of voer twenty one thousand hales of cotton is rather surprising for Linseed, Train, Machine, Lard, Neat's Foot, Sweet, Castor, &c. f cotton is rather surprising for dead town, is it not?"

The Old Home.

The re are bitter threads woven in the lives of all, but to my into the lives of all, but to my mind there is nothing so bitter as giving up the old bone. Whenever look back for the last time strongly the old arenue, with its grand old forest trees, henceath whose shade our childish feet have often straved, blithe and happy as the lark; or when, in our mature years, we have been oppressed with cares, low often our mature years, we have been oppressed with cares, how often it has been work as and the dear old trees, with the wind sighting through them for silent friends. And the old house—shall riends, And the old house—shall we ever forget it? How many dramas in everyday life have frence in so yound has some frence in so yound has some frence in so yound has some surred memory connected with it—memories of happy hours spen with loved ones gone to realms of endless joy. And when, like the shepherds of old, we see the estar of promise, rising in the cast, and are called to that bourne from wheneve in traveler e'er returns," the recollection of the old home will be an oassin memory's desert.
