Zittrouer, Ernest.

Zubley, David; Son of Liberty; member of Provincial Congress.

Zackery, Bartholomew, Captain.

The above list has been compiled from a great number of shorter ones. No doubt it contains numerous repetitions, but these were unavoidable. Two names nearly alike may refer to the same man, but it is not always possible to determine which of two forms was the correct one, hence the spelling has not been altered in any case; but the mere fact that two names are nearly alike is not sufficient evidence that they belong to the same individual. For instance, it is known that "James Aitkin," "James Akens," and "James Akins," were three different persons.

In some instances the first name was not given. Wherever it was possible to add a title as means of identification, this has been done.

It is quite a common occurrence to find a record of two or more men bearing the same name. Names repeated and intended for different persons are marked with figures or indicated by titles.

About half the names in the foregoing list are those of officers and eminent patriots. Unfortunately, it is not always possible to find the records of private and humble heroes who risked their lives and served their country just as faithfully as their better known contemporaries. But even if these records were immediately available, and the list extended so as to include all who actually fought for freedom in Georgia during the whole Revolutionary period, there would still be an undue proportion of officers. No regiment ever included the whole number of privates called for; and, in those days of irregular warfare, it was quite common for one officer to start out upon an independent expedition with less than twenty men under him.

Companies were hurriedly formed as occasion demanded, and frequently disbanded as soon as an emergency was past.

Civil officers as well as military actually bore arms. They were obliged to do so in order to defend their homes and families. During the whole period of British occupancy the various legislative bodies fled from place to place and skirmished with English and Tories in order to keep up the form of republican government.

It is confidently believed that the foregoing list contains no doubtful names. All, except a very few, were repeated a number of times. Every list examined was largely a repetition of others, thus rendering the process of gathering new names exceedingly slow, but at the same time tending to establish the authenticity of all. In a list of ten names one might be new, but that new name was likely to come up again with twenty old ones.
