PREFACE

The Customs District of Dighton was created on July 31, 1789 as one of twenty such districts and ports of entry in the state of Massachusetts, provided for by an Act of the First Congress of the United States "...to regulate the Collection of the Duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels and on goods, wares and merchandises imported into the United States." The territorial limits of Customs District XI were fixed by the Act to "...include all the waters and shores on Taunton River and in the town of Rehoboth;" while another clause of the same law provided that "...To the district of Dighton shall be annexed Swansea and Freetown as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed to reside at Dighton." (The original customs house used in 1789 is still standing.)

In time the commercial importance of the port of Dighton was surpassed by that of its neighboring town, Fall River, and in 1834 the latter became, as chief port of the district the seat of the collector's residence. For more than three quarters of a century thereafter, the town of Fall River continued to serve as port of entry for the district, "...to which port the vessel must come...before she shall proceed to her port of delivery," which latter might have been Berkley, Dighton, Freetown, Rehoboth, Somerset, Swansea, or Taunton.

In 1913, as a result of a nation-wide reorganization of the customs service, District XI was abolished, and Fall River, with its smaller subports, passed into the jurisdiction of the Collector of Customs, District IV, at Boston. All records of the former District XI, however, remained in the custody of a Deputy Collector at Fall River.

Possibly because some of its early records were destroyed by fire in 1843, or otherwise lost during several changes of location of the custom office between 1834 and 1933, the file of ship registers issued at Dighton-Fall River and now in the custody of the Deputy Collector, does not begin until 1819. From the latter date to the present, however, the local file of these documents, consisting of eight volumes, appears to be complete and is fairly well preserved. The foreign trade of the district declined greatly during the last two decades of the nineteenth century and registers of vessels were issued only at intervals of one or two or even three years.

Fortunately, due to the provisions of the Act of December 31, 1792, requiring that the "...Collector of each district shall progressively number certificates of registry by him granted, beginning anew at commencement of each year; shall preserve exact copies of the same, and once in three months transmit like copies to register of the treasury..." it has been possible to fill in partially the gap (1789-1819) in the file at Fall River by making use of registers now in The National Archives. This institution has received from the Department of the Treasury two volumes of registers issued at Dighton, 1789-1806, which were sent to that Department for use in connection with the adjudication of the French Spoliation Claims. From the Department of Commerce it has received registers issued at Dighton-Fall River since 1813, and those for 1813-1819 have been used for this volume. Unfortunately, the documents for this period are in such poor condition that it has not been possible in every instance to secure from them all the information normally to be secured from a register. Furthermore, it is probable that the file is not complete for these years. No attempt has been made to check the file in The National Archives for the period since 1819 with that at Fall River. When information has been secured from a document in The National Archives, that fact has been indicated by placing the symbol NA within parentheses after such information.

It was decided in the interests of accuracy and efficiency, that the data presented herein should include, as far as possible, every item of information given on each ship register. Across the top of the document "...in a strong engrossing hand in the margin immediately above the number ... the collector shall write ... Permanent or Temporary ..." Thereupon follows the name, rig, and hailing port of the vessel; the date, and place of its building and of its registry; its tonnage and dimensions; and the names of its master and owner "...or... if more than one owner ... the words, 'together with', and the name or names, occupation or occupations, place or places of abode, and parts or proportions of the owner or owners..." The register also carries a brief description of the vessel, and finally, any endorsements concerning its previous documentation, changes of masters, physical alteration or disposition. When, in the case of a newly built vessel or one whose dimensions or rig were altered, the register bears the name of a master carpenter or surveyor, this also has been carefully transcribed and appears in the Index.

Data on the original registration are reproduced in full, but in listing subsequent documentations of the same vessel, information identical with that given in the preceding item has been omitted. Thus, re-registration abstracts in this book show only names, places, dimensions, etc., which differ from those given on the previous or first documentation. To avoid repetition, the word "Massachusetts" has also been deleted, it being understood that unless otherwise specified, all towns and ports mentioned are located either in that state proper or in the district of Maine. (It was not until 1820 that Maine was set apart from Massachusetts as a separate state.)

Incidentally, some confusion was caused by the names of Wellington and Troy, Massachusetts, and Fall River, Rhode Island, which appeared as ports of registration or building, or residences of owners. Careful research disclosed that Wellington was originally a part of Dighton, but set itself up as a separate town of that name in 1814. Four years later, it returned to its parent town but "seceded" again for another two year period in 1825-27. Similarly, the town of Troy, Massachusetts, was originally known by the less classical name of Fall River. For almost thirty years, from 1804, the town bore the name of Troy; but on February 12, 1834, it resumed its original name - Fall River. Fall River, Rhode Island, was that portion of the town lying across the state line which was not officially ceded to Massachusetts until a decision of the United States Supreme Court in 1862 so decreed.

Antiquated spellings of family, town, or vessel's names have been copied exactly as they were written, but it was felt desirable to correct any other conspicuous misspellings or misleading data on the registers which were obviously mistakes of customs clerks. The few corrections of this nature, however, have been made only after thorough verification of questionable material.

This list of Ship Registers of the Customs District of Fall River has been compiled by the staff of the National Archives Project in Massachusetts, as successor to the nation-wide project, The Survey of Federal Archives. The project gratefully acknowledges the courtesy and cooperation extended by Customs officials in Fall River and Boston, and especially assistance on the historical and technical aspects given by Professor Samuel Eliot Morison of Cambridge, and Mr. Howard I. Chapelle of Ipswich, Massachusetts.

The first part of the paper discusses the general principles of the theory of the atom. It is shown that the atom is a system of particles which are bound together by forces of attraction. The forces of attraction are of two kinds: the forces of attraction between the nucleus and the electrons, and the forces of attraction between the electrons themselves. The forces of attraction between the nucleus and the electrons are of the Coulomb type, and the forces of attraction between the electrons themselves are of the exchange type.

The second part of the paper discusses the general principles of the theory of the molecule. It is shown that the molecule is a system of atoms which are bound together by forces of attraction. The forces of attraction are of two kinds: the forces of attraction between the atoms, and the forces of attraction between the electrons of the atoms. The forces of attraction between the atoms are of the Coulomb type, and the forces of attraction between the electrons of the atoms are of the exchange type.

The third part of the paper discusses the general principles of the theory of the crystal. It is shown that the crystal is a system of molecules which are bound together by forces of attraction. The forces of attraction are of two kinds: the forces of attraction between the molecules, and the forces of attraction between the atoms of the molecules. The forces of attraction between the molecules are of the Coulomb type, and the forces of attraction between the atoms of the molecules are of the exchange type.

The fourth part of the paper discusses the general principles of the theory of the liquid. It is shown that the liquid is a system of molecules which are bound together by forces of attraction. The forces of attraction are of two kinds: the forces of attraction between the molecules, and the forces of attraction between the atoms of the molecules. The forces of attraction between the molecules are of the Coulomb type, and the forces of attraction between the atoms of the molecules are of the exchange type.

The fifth part of the paper discusses the general principles of the theory of the gas. It is shown that the gas is a system of molecules which are bound together by forces of attraction. The forces of attraction are of two kinds: the forces of attraction between the molecules, and the forces of attraction between the atoms of the molecules. The forces of attraction between the molecules are of the Coulomb type, and the forces of attraction between the atoms of the molecules are of the exchange type.

The sixth part of the paper discusses the general principles of the theory of the plasma. It is shown that the plasma is a system of ions and electrons which are bound together by forces of attraction. The forces of attraction are of two kinds: the forces of attraction between the ions, and the forces of attraction between the electrons. The forces of attraction between the ions are of the Coulomb type, and the forces of attraction between the electrons are of the exchange type.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of the study of the history of the United States. It is argued that a knowledge of the past is essential for a full understanding of the present and for the development of a sound policy for the future. The author points out that the study of history is not only a means of acquiring knowledge, but also a means of developing the ability to think critically and to make sound judgments.

SUBJECT: 1,2-DICHLOROETHANE
1,2-DICHLOROETHANE (1,2-DCE) is a colorless, odorless liquid with a boiling point of 83.5°C and a melting point of -35.6°C. It is a symmetrical molecule with the formula ClCH₂CH₂Cl. It is used as a solvent in many chemical reactions and as a feedstock for the production of vinyl chloride.

1,2-DCE is a member of the haloalkane family and is classified as a chlorinated hydrocarbon. It is a non-flammable, non-toxic liquid that is miscible with water and many organic solvents. It is used in a variety of industrial applications, including as a solvent for paints, varnishes, and resins. It is also used in the production of other chemicals, such as vinyl chloride and 1,1-dichloroethane.

1,2-DCE is produced by the chlorination of ethane. The reaction is exothermic and is carried out in the presence of a catalyst. The product is a mixture of 1,2-DCE and 1,1-dichloroethane. The mixture is then separated by distillation. 1,2-DCE is a colorless, odorless liquid with a boiling point of 83.5°C and a melting point of -35.6°C. It is a symmetrical molecule with the formula ClCH₂CH₂Cl.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the success of any business or organization. The author argues that without reliable records, it is impossible to make informed decisions or to identify areas for improvement.

2. The second part of the paper focuses on the role of the accounting department. It describes how the accounting department acts as a central hub for financial information, providing data to various departments and ensuring that all financial transactions are properly recorded and reported. The author highlights the importance of the accounting department in maintaining the integrity of the organization's financial statements.

3. The third part of the paper discusses the challenges faced by accountants in the modern business environment. It mentions the increasing complexity of financial transactions, the need for continuous learning and adaptation to new technologies, and the pressure to maintain high levels of accuracy and efficiency. The author suggests that accountants should embrace change and seek out opportunities for professional growth.

4. The fourth part of the paper provides a detailed overview of the accounting process. It outlines the steps involved in recording transactions, from identifying the transaction to posting it to the appropriate accounts. The author also discusses the importance of reconciling accounts and preparing financial statements, and how these processes contribute to the overall financial health of the organization.

5. The fifth part of the paper discusses the role of accountants in strategic decision-making. It explains how accountants provide valuable insights into the organization's financial performance, which can be used by management to make informed decisions about the future. The author argues that accountants should not just be passive record-keepers but active participants in the strategic planning process.

6. The sixth part of the paper discusses the importance of ethics in accounting. It emphasizes that accountants have a moral obligation to provide accurate and honest financial information, and that they should always act in the best interests of the organization and its stakeholders. The author suggests that accountants should adhere to a code of ethics and seek out opportunities for professional development in this area.

7. The seventh part of the paper discusses the future of accounting. It mentions the impact of new technologies, such as artificial intelligence and blockchain, on the accounting profession. The author suggests that accountants should embrace these technologies and use them to enhance their services and improve the efficiency of the accounting process. The paper concludes by emphasizing the importance of the accounting profession in the modern business world.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of the study of the history of the United States. It is argued that a knowledge of the past is essential for a full understanding of the present and for the development of a sound policy for the future. The author points out that the study of history is not merely a collection of facts and dates, but a process of critical thinking and analysis. It is through the study of history that we can learn from the mistakes of the past and avoid them in the future.

2. The second part of the paper discusses the role of the government in the development of the United States. It is argued that the government has played a crucial role in the development of the country, from the establishment of the Constitution to the present day. The author points out that the government has been responsible for the creation of the federal system, the establishment of the courts, and the development of the public education system. It is through the government that the United States has been able to achieve its present status as a major power in the world.

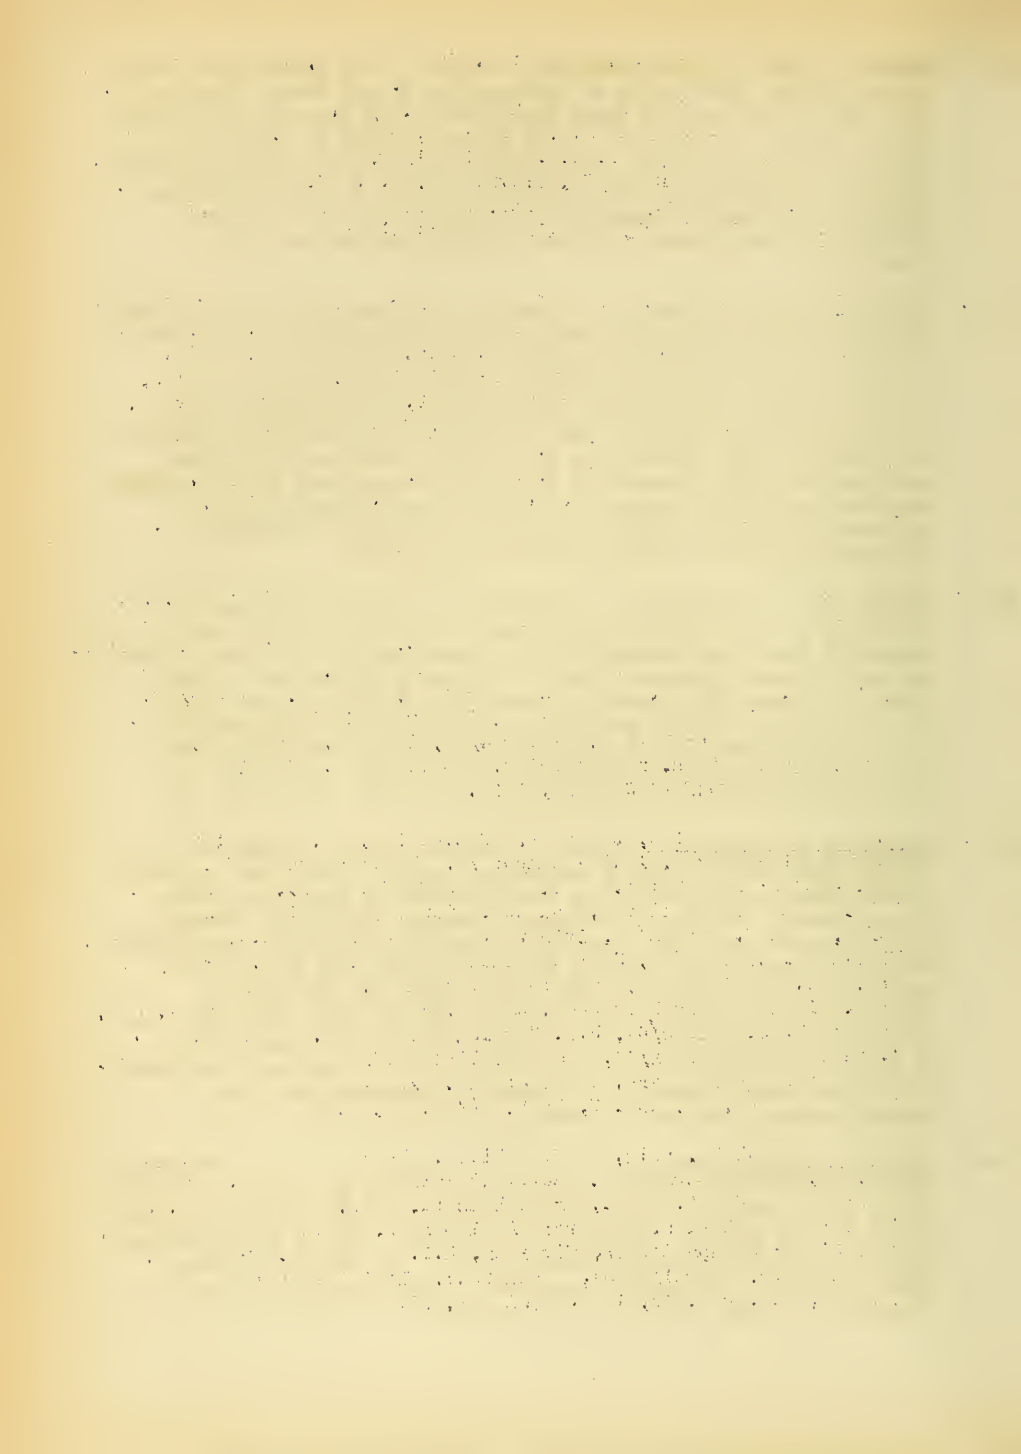

3. The third part of the paper discusses the role of the individual in the development of the United States. It is argued that the individual has played a crucial role in the development of the country, from the early settlers to the present day. The author points out that the individual has been responsible for the creation of the private sector, the establishment of the free market, and the development of the public sector. It is through the individual that the United States has been able to achieve its present status as a major power in the world.

4. The fourth part of the paper discusses the role of the future in the development of the United States. It is argued that the future is a time of great opportunity and challenge. The author points out that the future will be shaped by the decisions that we make today. It is through our actions that we can create a better future for ourselves and for our children.

5. The fifth part of the paper discusses the role of the United States in the world. It is argued that the United States has a special responsibility in the world, as the only superpower. The author points out that the United States has the power to shape the world, and it is through this power that we can create a better world for ourselves and for all people.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the transparency and accountability of the organization. The text also mentions the need for regular audits to ensure that all financial data is correctly recorded and reported.

In the second section, the document outlines the procedures for handling financial data. It details the steps involved in collecting, processing, and analyzing financial information. The text also discusses the importance of data security and the measures taken to protect sensitive financial information from unauthorized access.

The third part of the document focuses on the role of the finance department in the overall operations of the organization. It describes how the finance department provides support to other departments by managing their budgets and ensuring that they have the necessary funds to carry out their activities. The text also mentions the department's involvement in strategic planning and decision-making.

The fourth section discusses the challenges faced by the finance department in its role. It identifies common issues such as budget cuts, increasing costs, and the need for more efficient financial management. The text also provides suggestions for overcoming these challenges and improving the department's performance.

The fifth part of the document concludes with a summary of the key points discussed. It reiterates the importance of accurate record-keeping, proper financial data handling, and the finance department's role in supporting the organization's operations. The text also expresses confidence in the department's ability to meet its responsibilities and contribute to the organization's success.

The document is signed by the Finance Director, who expresses his commitment to ensuring the highest standards of financial management. He also thanks the staff of the finance department for their dedication and hard work. The document is dated and includes a reference to the relevant financial year.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the success of any business or organization. The author argues that without reliable records, it is impossible to make informed decisions or to identify areas for improvement.

2. The second part of the paper focuses on the role of technology in modern record-keeping. It explores how digital tools and software can streamline the process, reduce errors, and provide real-time access to data. The author highlights the benefits of automation and the importance of choosing the right technology for the specific needs of the organization.

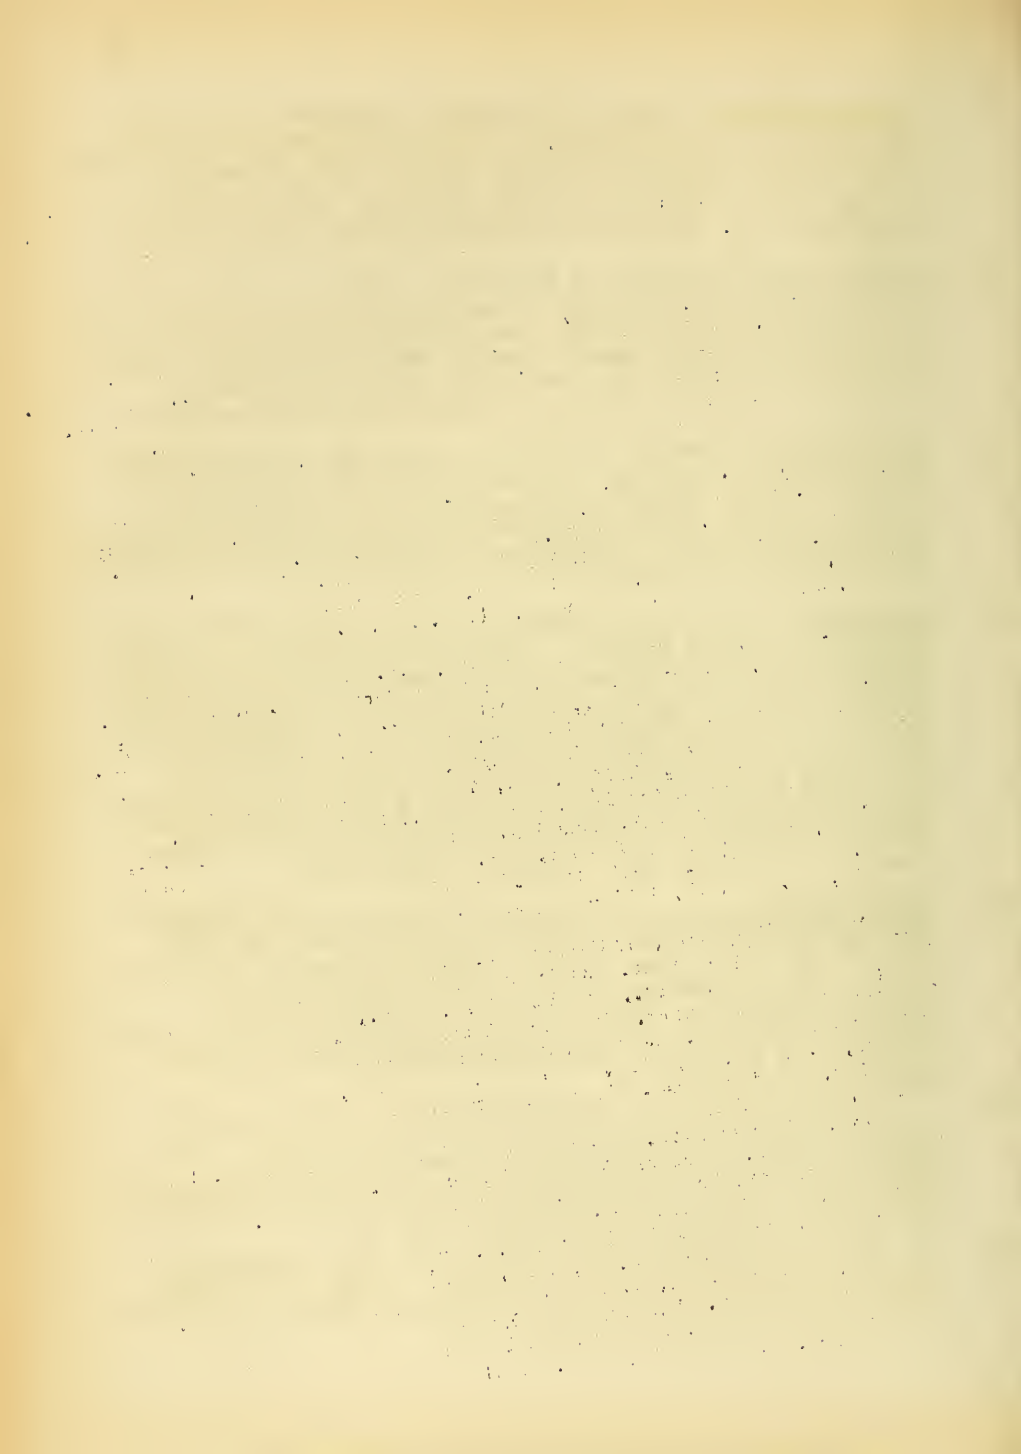

3. The third part of the paper discusses the challenges associated with record-keeping, particularly in large organizations. It addresses issues such as data security, privacy concerns, and the complexity of managing vast amounts of information. The author suggests several strategies to overcome these challenges, including implementing robust security protocols and regular training for staff.

4. The fourth part of the paper provides a detailed look at the legal requirements for record-keeping. It covers various regulations and standards that organizations must adhere to, depending on their industry and location. The author stresses the importance of staying up-to-date with these requirements to avoid legal penalties and ensure compliance.

5. The final part of the paper offers practical advice and best practices for implementing an effective record-keeping system. It includes tips on how to organize records, how often to review them, and how to ensure that the system is scalable and flexible. The author concludes by emphasizing that a well-maintained record-keeping system is not just a administrative task, but a strategic asset that can drive the growth and success of the organization.
