

This beautiful mansion was the home of Major Nathaniel Cheairs. It is situated alongside the main road into Spring Hill and is a short distance south of the village. It was here that Hood ate breakfast with his subordinate commanders on the morning after Schofield's escape. Hood was angry and distraught, filled with frustration and blame for others. He soon called for Cheatham's removal from command, but later rescinded his charges.

Near this house is where Bate first observed Federal troops marching north on the pike. (C#7)
