Now my said daughter, Cora T. shall take care of myself and wife so long as we may live. And in case of my death first, she my said daughter shall take care of my wife, so long as ~~she~~ may live or remain my widow, and shall treat us right and kindly, just as a child should treat its parents, seeing that we lack none of the comforts of life during our old age and last days. And should she fail to comply with the requirements of this Will then the same is null and void as to her and her said children. My said daughter shall see that her said children shall treat us right in every respect. My said daughter shall see that all my just debts are paid, and that my funeral and burial expenses are paid and also those of my wife.

By reference to a book of accounts it will be shown the amounts which have been received by my children.

Our beds, bedsteads and bed clothing shall equally divided between by daughters after the death of myself and wife or should I die first or my wife remain, then in that case at the remarriage of my wife, the division of said beds, bedsteads and clothing shall take place at once.

My Executor shall see that there is a fair and proper division of said articles.
