Camp of 1st Brigade V.A.
July 7th 1862

Capt. I have the honor to report that on the evening of the 2nd June when the brigade started for this battle field, my battery was ordered to halt and await orders. Next day I received orders to join the Brigade, which I did, remaining with it until 1st July, but taking no part in any of the engagements up to that date.

About 10 o'clock on the morning of 1st July while following the brigade on the march near Forge farm, I recd an order from Maj. Gen. Jackson to hurry on to the front and report to Maj. Gen. Whiting, not being able to find the latter officer, by direction of Gen. Jackson I took position in a wheat field on the left of Balthis' battery (Staunton's battery) which had just preceded us. My guns were posted behind the crest of a ridge by which they were to some extent protected from the enemy's fire.

Shortly after opening fire the impression got out by some means that all the batteries were ordered to leave the field, not being able to trace it to an authoritative source I ordered my pieces to continue firing. One or two batteries in the meantime left the field.

Capt. Balthis soon exhausted his ammunition, and shortly afterwards left the field. By this time Lt. Carpenter had gotten two pieces in position and opened fire.

The fire of the enemies' batteries was most terrific and in the main very accurate, that the loss on our side was not much heavier is owing to the protection afforded by our position.

The detachment of the supports was soon so much reduced as not to be able to work the guns. It was sent off the field, and the remainder of the detachment distributed among the other pieces. Finding that the contest was a very unequal one, having the fire of several batteries concentrated upon five guns on our side, our pieces were ordered to cease firing. The gun of Lt Carpenter next to us, also ceased at my suggestion. My object was to induce the enemy to hold up until we could get other batteries to our assistance. Two more batteries were then brought into position. Our guns again opened under direction of Major Whiting, but elicited only a feeble response from the enemy, after a few rounds our batteries ceased firing.

Soon thereafter I was ordered to report with my battery to Maj Genl Hill, but was not called on to go into action again. About 6 o'clock I obtained permission to go to the rear for ammunition.

The following are the casualties which occurred during this Artillery engagement.
