

Captain of the royal artillery. Our effective force opposed to the enemy was about 120 men, of whom not more than 90 were engaged.

The leadership called the Hermes, Commodore Sir. W. H. Piercy, having approached within reach of our guns, our battery opened upon her, the guns of which were fired in succession as they could be brought to bear, and at 20 minutes after 4 P. M. the engagement became general. About this time the enemy on shore, with Col. Nicolls at the head of the marines, Capt. Woodbine at the head of their Allies the Indians, and the Captain of the British Royal Artillery with his battery were put to flight, by two discharges of grape & canister from a nine pounder. At 5 P. M. the commodore's ship swung head on to our battery, when we were enabled to rake her so effectually as to silence her guns. Having cut her cables by our shot, she drifted out and grounded stern on within seven hundred yards, which again afforded us an opportunity of raking her and we continued doing so while there was light enough to see that his colours were flying and about sunset the other vessels cut their cables and stood off with a light breeze, under a most tremendous fire from our battery. At a quarter past seven we discovered the Commodore's ship to be on fire, and at 10 P. M. her magazine blew up. We cannot ascertain the precise loss of the enemy; but from deserters who came in the morning after the battle, we learn that the Commodore and only 20 men escaped from the Hermes; her crew being originally 170. That 85 men were killed and wounded on board the Charon. The loss on board the brig is unknown, but must have been very great, from the circumstance of one of them being infinitely more exposed than the Charon. Our loss was 4 privates killed and 5 wounded. During the hottest of the action our flag staff was shot away. The flag was immediately regained under a heavy fire of grape and canister and hoisted on a sponge staff and planted on the parapet.

This achievement of our brothers in arms is dear to us, and calls for the gratitude of a grateful country. Our arms have triumphed over the enemy. The brave officers, non-commissioned officers and privates under the command of the gallant Major Lawrence have done their duty, and in point of cool and determined courage their conduct cannot be surpassed. There was but one feeling pervading every grade and rank throughout the whole action, and that was who should be foremost in the road to glory. With them the post of danger was the post of honor.

By order of Major Gen. Jackson:
A. P. HAYNE, Insp. Gen.
and acting Adj. Gen. 7th Mil'y. Dis't.

CHRONICLE.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1814

Buffalo, September 27.
On Wednesday the British retreated from their encampment near Fort Erie. They were pressed in their retreat by troops from the fort, and were obliged to destroy the bridges at Frenchman's Creek and burn what stores they had at that place.

They are represented to be fortifying at Chipewa, and at Queenstown mountain.

Gen. Ripley has been removed to Buffalo and is doing well. Major Tremble reported to have died, has been brought to Buffalo, and is doing as well as could be expected from his severe wounds.

From the Plattsburg Repub. of Sept. 24.
The enemy have abandoned the fortifications on Isle La Motte. One brigade of their troops remains at Champlain to protect the artillery, which the badness of the roads prevents their removing.
