INTRODUCTION

Fulton County was settled by persons drawing in the 1821, 1822 and 1823 Land Lotteries and as it emerged as the confluence of five railroad tracts known as “Five Points” was spontaneously developed into thriving businesses and homes. Everything grew from the Five Points. By 1860 Atlanta was a thriving business metropolis which attracted wheelwrights, carpenters, grocers, brick masons, doctors, lawyers, Judges, and just about every occupation you can think of to build a prosperous city. Assembling the family histories of Atlantans is like wading through a lusty green meadow whose seeds are blowing across the South spreading wealth and progress. From the ante-bellum days of Marthasville and the converging railroad at Five Points delivering new residents into a thriving economy, Atlanta has never ceased its sporadic growth. The lure is Atlanta.

Abbott. Benjamin F. Abbott was born July 3, 1839 in Cherokee County. He removed to Atlanta in 1860 where he studied law under the direction of Green H. Haygood, Esq. and was admitted to the bar in October. About the time that he opened his law office in Atlanta, he enlisted as a volunteer in Company F, 30th Reg., Georgia Volunteers, Army of Northern Virginia commanded by Capt. E. M. Seage. This company proceeded to march on foot more than 125 miles into Virginia. In 1863 he had to leave his regiment due to illness. He fought in the battles of Malvern Hill, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Thoroughfare Gap. After the war he resumed the practice of law and formed a partnership with Hon. H. K. McCay when he retired from the bench of the Northern District of Georgia. He also partnered with attorneys J. R. Gray and Alexander W. Smith. He was elected to the house of representatives of Fulton County from 1884 to 1885. He was married twice, first to Miss Isabella Kendrick, the daughter of S. S. Kendrick and second to Mrs. Josephine A. Richards of Atlanta.

The brother of Benjamin F. Abbott was Albert N. Abbott who died September 1862 in Atlanta, naming his mother, Nancy, wife, Mary A.; sisters: Emily F. and Louisa C. Abbott and brothers, William L. and Benjamin F. Abbott.

Adair. George W. Adair, son of John F. Adair and Mary (Slavin) Adair, was born March 1, 1823 in Morgan County. His father was a wheelwright who settled in DeKalb County, five miles south of Decatur. When his mother died in 1835, he removed to Decatur and ultimately to Atlanta where he formed the mercantile firm of Adair & Ezzard in 1860. His claim to fame was establishing the Southern Confederacy, a newspaper issued until the battle of Chickamauga.

Towards the end of the war he was an aid on the staff of General N. B. Forrest and when the war was over returned home to discover his home destroyed. He then established a general commission house of Clayton, Adair & Purse until about 1865 he invested strongly in real estate and in 1870 was a promoter and vice president of the Atlanta Street railway. Colonel Adair was connected with the Atlanta Cotton Factory, the Atlanta Cotton Exposition, and was a director of the Kimball House company, president of the Georgia Western Railway and a director of Mrs. Ballard's Female Seminary.

Candler. Asa Griggs Candler was born 30 December 1851 in Villa Rica, buried in Westview Cemetery, was the son of Samuel Charles Chandler and his wife, Martha Beall. He married on 1/15/1878 at the First Baptist Church in Atlanta, Lucy Elizabeth Howard, the daughter of his employer (9/28/1859-2/22/1919). He was raised in Carroll Co., came to Atlanta in 1873 and went into business as a wholesale druggist, ultimately to become the Coca Cola magnate. The following is a letter published in Atlanta and Its Environs, written to his brother, Warren Candler in Nashville, Tennessee on April 10, 1858:

"...You show how I suffer with headaches. Well some days ago a friend suggested that I try Cola-Cola. I did and was relieved. Somedays later I again tried it and was again relieved. I determined to find out about it.....investigation showed that it was owned by parties unable to put it fairly before the people. I determined to put money into it and a little influence. I put $500 of the first and am putting a goodly portion of what I have of the last. Do you know a dispenser of soda water in Nashville who will take hold of it for me? I enclosed a card. Now to any person who will allow me to issue one hundred twenty eight of these free cards which will require 1 gallon (128 ounces) of Coca-Cola syrup, I will send gratis 2 gallons of Coca-Cola syrup..."

The original owner of the receipt was Dr. Pembleton who resided in a red brick home at 107 Marietta Street in Atlanta, and in 1885 he incorporated the Pemberton Chemical Company along with Ed Holland, E. W. Holland, Daniel D. Doe and Frank Mason Robinson. Coca Cola was already available in several drug stores as a tonic. But something happened in 1887 which changed the tonic status. A customer suffering from a headache entered Jacob's Drug Store (at Five Points) and asked Willis E. Venable, soda fountain operator, for a bottle of Coca-Cola. Venable suggested soda water instead of tap water, which the customer enjoyed. At that, the drink was offered by other druggists as a headache remedy. An advertisement appeared in the Evening Journal on June 30, 1887, as follows -

DRINK

The Brain-Tonic and Intellectual Soda Fountain Beverage COCA-COLA

Acclaimed by all who have used it AT ALL FOUNTS."

The price was 5 cents a glass. Incidentally my sister worked at Jacobs Drug Store during the early 1940's. It was demolished in favor of the First National Bank of Atlanta.

When I was a little girl residing in Candler Park, where the Candler mansion stood (Elizabeth Street), coca cola had as an ingredient, cocaine, which was removed during the 1940's. That's what cured Candler's headaches! My grandmother, who resided near Candler Park, told me that one drank coca cola as a headache remedy, or to feel better. He stored the cola in his basement, as well as the "secret" recipe.

The mansion depicted most of the homes in this 1899 neighborhood (the first Atlanta suburb), with honey-dark woodwork, mantles, built-in china cabinets and pantries, round columns which divided the living room and dining areas. The staircase leading to upstairs bedrooms is about five-feet wide, having dark woodwork with fancy lace bannisters. The first stairwell level is adorned with massive eloquently painted stained glass windows....an attractive eye-catcher as one enters the main entry hall, which is the size of two average rooms by today's standards. He later built luxurious home (1916) on the north side of Ponce de Leon Avenue between Oakdale and Lullwater Roads at the cost of $210,000.

Holland.

Archibald Holland (1800-1868). In 1821 Archibald Holland, while a resident of Clarke County, drew in the lottery. The land which he drew was in Marthasville, later Atlanta, then a hole in the road. Had Archibald waited a hundred years, he would have found himself the proud owner of prime Atlanta real estate located at the heart of Terminal Station and surrounding by thriving businesses such as Rich's

Department Store. The property bordered on the North, North Avenue, on the South, Simpson Street, on the East, Northside Drive, and on the West, Luckie Street. It consisted of 202-1/2 acres in Land Lot 82 of the 14th District of then DeKalb, now Fulton County. Archibald was born in Nansemond County, Virginia and came to Georgia with his parents in 1812. In 1824 he was married to Elizabeth Hagin (1809-1840), a daughter of Revolutionary War Soldier, Edward Hagin of Clarke County. They removed to the new farm in Atlanta, taking with them Elizabeth's brother, Edward Hagin. The site is presently considered part of Underground Atlanta. In those days, not too desirable a spot to farm. Archibald's cattle kept getting bogged down in the mud. After his first son was born, William Edward Holland, in 1829, he started looking for greener pastures but did not find one until 1833 when a friend wrote him concerning farm land in Paulding County.

Robert Inman of Maryland married Henrietta Hardin. Issue:

Ezekiel Inman, Sr. born 1730 Frederick County, Maryland, died Rowan County, North Carolina, married Hannah Retta Hardin of Rockbridge County, Virginia. He owned land on the Linville River in Burke County, North Carolina. Records of Burke County have been destroyed. Issue: Susannah; Benjamin; William; Meshach (1749-1767), killed in North Carolina by Indians; Susannah born 1754; Shadrach born 27 Jan 1747, died 30 June 1823 in DeKalb County, Georgia, buried St. Pauls

Church Yard, Hamblen, Tennessee; and Abednego born 1 Jul 1752, died 2 Feb 1831 Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee, buried Hopewell Presbyterian Church, Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee.

Abednego Inman born 1 Jul 1752, died 2 Feb 1831 Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee, buried Hopewell Presbyterian Church, Jefferson County, Tennessee married Mary Ritchie, born 16 Nov 1752 Prince Edward County, Virginia, died 23 Jun 1826 Dandridge, buried Hopewell Cemetery, Jefferson County, Tennessee, daughter of John Ritchie and his wife, Jane Davis. 27 Nov 1771 Shadrach, Abednego and Meshach signed a petition to form of Burke County, North Carolina from Rowan County In 1772 Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego were designated, along with Daniel Boone, to explore the country west of the Cumberland mountains (now Tennessee).

"In due season they crossed the mountain ranges lying in the path of travel, and winter soon swept down upon them. For days they had little or no food during this time, for that which they had brought with them had been exhausted. They were therefore compelled to depend upon such game for their subsistence as they could bring down with their rifles, and killing game at that season of the year was not always easily accomplished. When they had arrived near the central part of the present stat of Tennessee and were encamped near a cave, probably the famous Nick-a-Jack cave, they were surprised and attacked one night by Indians. Being asleep at the time, and not having taken the precaution of posting sentinels, nearly all of the little band of adventurers were either killed or wounded. Among the slain was Meshach Inman. Among the wounded were Shadrach Inman and his brother Abednego Inman. The former received a wound in the side from a spear, which weapon is still in the possession of one of his descendants. Abednego Inman received a wound in the forehead from an Indian tomahawk, leaving a scar which he carried for the remainder of his life, but surviving his wound, remained nine days without food and with but little water, at the end of which time he was so far recovered as to be able to leave his strange habitation, and eventually and with extreme difficulty, to make his way back to his home in North Carolina. The company was thus broken up and dispersed, and the expedition abandoned. Among the number of those who escaped were Boone and Shadrach Inman."

Shadrach W. Inman married Jane Martin Hamilton. Shadrach was a prosperous merchant and planter. The Inman family was extensive in Jefferson County, Tennessee. After the Civil Shadrach W. Inman, having lost his wealth, went into business. His brothers, William H. Inman and Walker P. Inman, were businessmen who returned to their lines of business following the war. Other sons of John Ritchie Inman were William H. Inman; C. Walter P. Inman; Hugh T. Inman. born Jefferson County, Tennessee; John Inman of Atlanta was executor of the Samuel M. Inman and John H. Inman, the two eldest sons of Shadrach W. and Jane Martin Inman, were Confederate soldiers who became two of the wealthiest men on the east coast. Hugh T. Inman, youngest son of Shadrach, worked among the various family businesses with his father, uncles and brothers, founding related businesses of his own. As a family unit, they were one of the most influential in Atlanta and in the South during the period. Issue: Mary Inman born Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee; John Hamilton Inman born 23 Oct 1844 Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee; Hugh Theodore Inman born 1846 Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee; Samuel Martin Inman was born on 19 Dec 1842 in Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tennessee. He married twice, 1st, in 1868, to Miss Jennie Dick of Rome, Georgia. She died in 1890, leaving two sons and a daughter. He married (2), December, 1892, Miss Mildred McPheeters, of Raleigh, North Carolina. He removed to Atlanta when a young man and began developing real estate. Samuel M. Inman, a cotton merchant, persuaded Joel Hurt to sell his insurance company and join with him to form the East Atlanta Land Company. In about 1892 they developed the oldest suburb in Atlanta, Inman Park. The electric railroad, Atlanta's first, opened on August 22, 1889 and the tracks ran down Edgewood Avenue, later extended to Clifton Road, in what at the time was the town of Edgewood. Today known as the Candler Park, Edgewood was incorporated into the city of Atlanta in 1908.

Samuel Inman was described as being a "...merchant and philanthropist, was born in Jefferson County, Tennessee.... He was one of the organizers and was also a director of the Southern Railway, the yards of which in Atlanta are named for him. He was director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, of the Atlanta Constitution, and of several banks. He was a close friend and trusted advisor of President Samuel Spencer of the Southern Railway, and of Henry W. Grady, the gifted editor of the Constitution. Earlier he had been financially interested in some of the enterprises of his brother, John Hamilton Inman, to whom sound judgement had been valuable." "While still engaged in active business, he found time to work for the welfare of his city and section. He was treasurer of the International Cotton Exposition held in Atlanta in 1881, and backed it up when failure seemed certain. He also made possible the opening of the Cotton States and International Exposition in Atlanta in 1895.

After his retirement he gave more and more of his time to civic duties, and, though from choice he never held any public office, he was universally acclaimed the "first citizen of Atlanta." He was influential in founding the Georgia School of Technology, to which he contributed largely in money and time, serving as president of the board of trustees; he gave liberally to Agnes Scott Institute (now Agnes Scott College) and through his example interested others. He made donations to Oglethorpe and Emory universities, and was a member of the committee to choose Rhodes scholars for Georgia. He was prominent in the agitation which led to increased appropriations for public schools and the establishment of agricultural high schools. In fact, he allowed hardly an appeal for any educational, religious, or benevolent object to go unheeded. He is known to have given away more than a million dollars in his lifetime, and the total of his benefactions was probably much greater. He was for many years an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Atlanta. The Samuel M. Inman School in that city, erected in 1893-94, was named in his honor. On the day of his funeral courts and schools were closed and business was almost suspended.

His sister, Jane W. Inman, left her property, amounting to about $150,000, to Agnes Scott College as a memorial to her brother. Inman was twice married: first, on 19 February 1868, to Jennie Dick of Rome, Ga., who died in 1890; and, second, on 12 December 1892, to Mildred McPheeters, daughter of Alexander M. McPheeters of Raleigh, North Carolina, who, with three children of the first marriage, survived him."

"The case of Trammell, et al vs. Samuel Inman

Big Ejectment Suit has begun
Copyright 2007 by Jeannette Holland Austin
-- All Rights Reserved --

The trial of the first of the ejectment suits commenced by John Trammell and his two sisters, Mr. Hattie Turner and Mrs. Mattie Neill, as heirs of the late Mrs. Lucinda Trammel, for the recovery of various pieces of valuable real estate in the business portion of Atlanta was begun before Judge J. H. Lumpkin in the superior court this morning. This is the suit against Samuel M. Inman and involves real estate on the west side of Forsyth street just south of Mitchell street, which is valued at $75,000 to $100,000.

The plaintiffs base their claim for recovery on a marriage settlement executed by their father and mother at the date of their marriage in 1846, in which Dickerson H. Walker was appointed trustee. The property has since that time changed hands a number of times, and the defendants claim undisputed title by prescription. The plaintiffs contend that the marriage settlement made Walker trustee for Mrs. Trammell and her children; in other words, that Mrs. Trammell had a life estate in the property only and that upon her death the property was vested in her children. The defendants take issue with this contention and maintain that Mr. Trammell took the whole fee simple estate and that when the property was conveyed by Walker, trustee, the purchaser from him acquired perfect title to the whole estate. In all there is nearly a score of suits. The other defendants are Walker P. Inman, George C. Drummond, V. P. Sisson, Hoke Smith and others, Mary J. Warnock, Lemuel C. Downs, Walter B. Walcott, Helen B. Leavens, Mrs. Eulah Griffin, James F. Hollingsworth, Julian H. Dickson, Mrs. Georgia Dunlap, William A. Downs, East Atlanta Land company, Mary A. Smith, Owen Halleran and Mrs. H. H. Meyers.

This is one of the largest land claims ever filed in Georgia and when it comes down to the legal aspects of the case one of the most complicated. It puts in jeopardy property which has been held in some cases by the present holders, for twenty, thirty, and even forty years. In some cases this property has been acquired recently by various persons from those who had held it for several years believing the titles safe. The first of the cases which is now on trial promises to be a long and hardfought one. The attorneys in the case are Ulyses Lewis and King & Spalding for the plaintiff and Gray, Brown & Randolph and John L. Hopkins & Sons for the defendant."

Hannibal I. Kimball was the famous owner of the Kimball House in Atlanta. He purchased a lot of land in 1870 near Union Depot on the site of the old Atlanta Hotel (burned 1864 during the Civil War). It took more than ten years to complete the interior of the six-story building which had sixteen stores, twenty public rooms and 240 hotel rooms, elevators and central heating. Some of his partners and investors were cigar smokers. Charles Beerman, in particular, manufactured cigars. Ironically enough a cigar-smoking lemon dealer started the fire in the southwest corner of the building on April 12, 1883 at 4: 30 a.m. The fire quickly spread and destroyed the hotel but no lives were lost.

In 1890, Charles Beerman, George Adair, Henry Grady and Richard Peters raised money to rebuild the hotel. A new fireproof structure was built on the old site, seven floors, thirty-one stores, twenty-two public rooms and 357 hotel rooms. On New Year's day, one of the owners, Hugh T. Inman's daughter married John W. Grant, banker, and gave the Kimball house to the couple as a wedding present. "In 1959, while I was asleep in my bed at 951 Edgewood Avenue, the Kimball House caught afire again. This time lives were lost as people leapt from hotel rooms into the street."

Rhodes. Amos Giles Rhodes was born 1850 in Henderson, Kentucky and came to Atlanta in 1875 where he married Amanda Dougherty (born 1851) in 1876. They first resided over a small store, the upstairs of 142 Decatur Street. This is where he started the furniture business. A. G. Rhodes & Son. In 1889, he formed a partnership with J. J. Haverty. Between 1894 and 1897, the business was known as the Rhodes-Snook-Haverty and was not dissolved until 1909 when the men divided the assets of their seventeen stores. In the early 1920s, Rhodes and J. J. Haverty formed the Rhodes-Haverty Investment Company which was responsible for construction of the

Rhodes-Haverty Building in 1928-29 and his Atlanta holdings included about half of the buildings and property on Decatur Street between Courtland and Piedmont, 150 acres off South Pryor Road where he maintained the Lakewood Nurseries, a parcel of land on McDonough Boulevard at Sawtell Avenue that in 1928 became the site of the new Chevrolet plant at Lakewood, as well as the 101 Marietta Street block. Between 1901 and 1906, A. G. Rhodes put together an estate of 114 acres on Peachtree Road

A. G. Rhodes home, 1516 Peachtree Street, Atlanta

(at Brookwood Station) stretching across Tanyard Creek. In 1902 he began the construction of a granite castle, still standing today, known as “Rhodes Memorial Hall”. In 1804, Rhodes moved his family from the old house on S. Pryor Street to “La Reve”. Later known as Rhodes Hall was architected by Willis F. Denny II (1974-1905) a native of Louisville, Georgia. Later known as Rhodes Hall, this great home was ultimately used by the Georgia State Archives and is preserved today as a monument to greatness. When the Archives removed to a new building in downtown Atlanta, the circular staircase inside the home was installed in the new edifice as a memorial to the home. Following the deaths of Mrs. Rhodes in 1927 and A. G. Rhodes in 1928, their two children, Joseph D. Rhodes (born 1877 in Atlanta) and Mrs. Luanna O. Bricker (born 1879), deeded the house and just under an acre of the original estate to the State of Georgia. Included in the deed was a restriction that the property could only be used for "historical purposes." In 1930 the building opened as the home of the State Archives and continued as such until completion of the present Archives on Capitol Avenue in 1965, when Rhodes Memorial Hall was designated the Peachtree Branch of the Archives.

In 1983, the Georgia Trust for Historic Preservation, a non-profit organization, began a long-term lease of Rhodes Hall with the State. Serving as headquarters for the Georgia Trust, it is now undergoing a complete restoration. The State is funding restoration of the exterior and the mechanical and electrical systems in the building while the Trust is raising private funds for restoration of the interior. The focal point of the restoration of the interior will be the return of the original main staircase and stained glass windows to the building.

Root. Sidney Root, son of Salmon and Elizabeth Carpenter Root, was born in Montague, Massachusetts on March 11, 1824. He was of Puritan ancestry, the family fleeing from Normandy, France to England. The original name was Racine, afterwards anglicized to Rootes, a spelling still preserved in Virginia. After 1836 his father moved to Vermont and purchased the farm of an ex-governor in Craftsbury. In 1843 he borrowed $60 from his brother-in-law, W.

A. Rawson of Atlanta and came to Lumpkin, Stewart, County where he clerked in a general merchandise store, three years later buying an interest in the company. During the war Root went to England and established Beach & Root in Atlanta and Charleston, and Beach, Root & Co. in Liverpool. The value and magnitude of his business transactions enriched him, and he owned Atlanta property. In 1866 he sold his home to ex-Governor Joseph E. Brown and went to New York. Director-General of the International Cotton Exposition in Atlanta, H. I. Kimball said of Root: "Probably none of the officials will be better remembered by visitors to the exposition that Mr. Root, whose painstaking and earnest efforts to accommodate and oblige all who fell within range of his official duties, made him deservedly popular." In 1849 he was married to Miss Mary H Clarke, daughter of Judge James Clarke of Stewart County. Sidney Root's name is also found in the Cobb County deed records, as purchasing and selling property. Standifer. Edward Marion Standifer was born 10/16/1881 in Cassville, Cass County, the son of Walter Scott Standifer and his wife, Kate May Hollingsworth Standifer and grandson of Lemuel Jackson Standifer and Sarah Frances Underwood Standifer. At some point he moved to Atlanta and married a lady called "Willie" and by her had one son. However, Edward's troubles began when he took a lover. And when the lover was Mrs. Standifer's own sister, the 19 year old Chappell Whisenant. When Willie discovered them together on March 9, 1906, she shot and killed her sister. When asked why she did not kill her husband instead, she said that it did not seem fair because he was drunk.

"Mrs. Edward M. Standifer Shoots Down Her Pretty 17-Year-Old Sister. Tragedy Enacted At Home of D. P.

Durham....Maddened with jealousy that even a sister's love could not hold in check, Mrs. Willie Standifer, wife of Edward Marion Standifer, of 203 West Alexander street, shot to death Miss Chapell Whisenant, her youngest sister, at the home of D. P. Durham, 261 South Boulevard, yesterday morning.

The two sisters were alone in a bedroom. The wife had been pleading with the girl to remain away from the husband. The girl was scornful. The infuriated woman drew a pistol and fired six shots. The first crashed into the mirror of the dresser, the second struck the girl in the face and she threw herself upon a lounge and tried to shield herself with a pillow. Determined that only death could satisfy her, the woman lifted the girl's arm and fired four shots into her breast.

Miss Whisenant was later found lying dead upon the lounge. Mrs. Standifer walked from the house with the pistol in her hand. She spoke to Mrs. Durham, who is her sister and told her quietly and calmly of what had been done.

Two hours after the tragedy Mrs. Standifer said that her sister she believed had stolen her husband's love.

Miss Whisenant was to have been married next Tuesday to J. E. Sitton, of Seneca, S. C. Mrs. Standifer has not so far expressed any regrets for what she has done.

Mr. Standifer says boldly that he loved Miss Whisenant more than he did his wife, and adds that she loved him. He swears that their love was pure...." The Atlanta Georgian, March 10, 1906.

Edward Standifer was arrested and incarcerated in the Fulton Tower. His father put up a $1,000 cash bond which guaranteed his presence in court. Afterwards, he left with his parents to go to their home in Gadsden, Alabama. Rumors began that Mrs. Standifer would obtain a divorce, which she denied. Willie Standifer employed attorneys, Madison Bell and George Westmoreland, to ask for an Inquest from Coroner Thompson who'd decided not to have one. A bond of $25,000 was set for Mrs. Standifer and a number of citizens expressed their desire to go on the bond. In the meanwhile, Chappell Whisenant was buried.

A plea of "not guilty" included one of delusional insanity, her attorney maintaining that she was of such condition of mind as not to know that she was committing any offense against the laws of her country, and was laboring under the delusion that she was discharging a Christian duty to herself, her child and her deceased sister by taking life.

"Insanity Plea Made for Mrs. Standifer....Delusional Insanity is Set Forth by Attorneys as Defense to Murder Charge...The court room was crowded. More than twenty five women were in the audience and evincing the keenest interest in the proceedings. Many were standing...Mrs. Standifer was accompanied by her sisters, Mrs. W. U. Cotton of Atlanta and Mrs. J. W. Crowe of Jacksonville, Alaba. Mrs. Standifer led her two year-old son, Edward Marion, by the hand. She was attired in a white shirt waist and black skirt. She looked composed, but her features gave evidence of mental suffering." ...Love Letters Barred. On the solicitor's objection the letters from Edward Standifer to Chappell Whisenant, recently found in the dead girl's trunk, were not admitted into evidence, the court ruling that it appeared that the defendant had taken them prior to the homicide and could not be admitted to show the relationship between Edward Standifer and the dead girl...." The Atlanta Georgian, April 27, 1906.

It did not take long for the jury to find Mrs. Standifer not guilty. The following afternoon, a reporter visited Mrs. Standifer in her home at 203 West Alexander Street in Atlanta. "I Have Only My Child to Love For, and Children Take Up So Much of One's Time," Says Acquitted Woman.

"When I boarded the Luckie Street car I was an enterprising reporter with great expectations. When I reached the humble home of Mrs. Willie Standifer at 203 West Alexander street I was only a woman with pity in my heart, and very weak knees.

My ring was answered by a frail woman with a baby boy tugging at her skirts. Thinking that Mrs. Standifer must be prostrated by the horrible strain of the past six weeks, I asked if this were her sister.

"I am Mrs. Standifer," she said, "and this is my baby."

She led me into her comfortably furnished bed room and introduced me to her feeble, paralytic aunt.

As she seated herself and with effort lifted her two-year-old boy to her knees, I noted her undeveloped chest, delicate hands, and the pallor of her skin.

"Tell me how you feel, how you have felt all along," I said.

She looked surprised at my eagerness, and answered without emotion. "I am tired, of course, but except for that, I feel pretty well."

"What suspense you must have suffered during the trial, although you hoped, of course to be acquitted."

"Well, you see, I knew I had done right: had done my duty and I wasn't afraid. Why, the jury told me they would have acquitted me even if no plea of insanity had been made. I had done my duty, you see," she repeated. And this conviction of her own guiltlessness, this unwavering insistence that in the eyes of God and the angels her sister were better dead than dishonored, is so overwhelming as to give to Mrs. Standifer's deed almost an aspect of sublimity.

"Would you do it again, if you were again placed in the same circumstances?" I asked.

"That I can't tell. No one would do such a thing---why kill one's own flesh and blood. How could they unless one had gotten worked up to just such an unnatural state as I was."

"Did you think, when you went to see your sister that morning, that things would terminate as they did," I asked.

"I wanted to give Chappell every chance. I wanted to be just. For a year I had brooded over it, had suffered everything and yet I could prove nothing until I found the letter. Even then I wanted to be just, and tried to give the girl her chance. People say it would have been better if I had killed Edward, but he was drinking and I stopped to think at what a disadvantage that placed him. It was always in my mind, you see, to do the best I could to be just. Edward was young and had prospects in his business. Chappell was pretty and could have married well. Life held so much for all three of us and there had never been a cross word between Edward and me or between Chappell and me until those two met."

"Now that the trial is ended and you are about to enter upon a new life, what are you going to do?"

"About that I haven't thought yet. I rent all my rooms except two, and that is something. Then you see my child is too young to be under anybody else's care but mine."

"Will you sue for a divorce and will you try to get alimony?"

"I don't think so. The proceedings would cost so much."
